Dr. Taft: Sure. On page 169 of the business plans, not of the estimates but of the business plans, goal 6, under Risk Analysis there's a sentence that reads, "The continued decline of high royalty rate conventional oil revenues will need to be replaced in the long term." Now, the minister and I have discussed this issue in Public Accounts and probably in estimates last year or the year before, and I know that the reassurance that's given me about this issue is that the long-term revenues from heavy oil development will fill in the decline in conventional oil royalties. However, I remain concerned about the rigorousness of a policy that will lead to a long-term rise in royalties from the heavy oil plants. I have elsewhere seen projections of heavy oil royalty income into 2006, and it remains in the hundred million dollar range, which is not going to compensate for anything. I'm trying to think of the best way to put the question to the minister. It is essentially: what guarantees – and I know you'll say that there are no guarantees – or what reassurance will the minister give that heavy oil sands production and the royalties resulting from that will in fact replace the decline in the high-royalty conventional oil production?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Chairman, what I can say is that companies like Suncor don't make a recent announcement, just a couple of weeks ago, of an additional $3 billion capital investment in oil sands if they're not anticipating wealth generation from that investment. Up in the oil sands alone I believe there's roughly about $80 billion of capital investment being invested today and committed that's on the books to develop the oil sands. Companies haven't made that long-term commitment, which is really a commitment of 20 to 40 years, if, in fact, they don't believe there's wealth generation available there. The same applies with the heavy oil development that is going on up in the northeastern part of the province and the northwestern part of the province. They are not making those types of large investments, which they are, if they're not anticipating a return on the investment, which also returns a royalty to the Crown. Based on the best information we have from the Ministry of Energy on the longer term, we believe the forecast of $3.5 billion that we have for sustaining our core programs that we've selected is a reasonable number to have in our budget process.

Now, we have put in place and I've said from the beginning that over the next three years we will review that number to make sure that it holds. You know, I don't know whether the number is too high for our requirements or too low. It may be up a hundred million or down a hundred million from what has to happen. But we're confident – and we've had it reviewed – that that's the number we should choose. So the comfort level for me comes as more companies make announcements about investments. They're doing it because there will be a return on that investment, which means we also will receive a return as the owner of the resource through the royalty payment. So that's where you get the confidence level.

Now, in the longer term we also said that we have to be more strategic in our budget planning process and think beyond the three-year business plan out to the 10- and the 20-year time frame and try and visualize what this province will look like and the shape that it will be in 10 or 20 years out. Are we going to see a shift in the dynamics of our industry? Are we going to be more knowledge-based? Those kinds of dialogues and definitions come from strategic planning, and what we've embraced this year is the longer term visionary concept of: where are we going to be down the road? What will it look like? How do we make sure that we stay in the economic position we hold today of being number one in Canada? How do we get from here to 20 years out and remain at the top within the country? That's the challenge that's before us, and that's why the planning process had to shift and become more strategic as opposed to being simply operational on a year-to-year basis.

The key plan in the business planning process is the last year of the plan. A lot of people think it's the first year, but it's really the last year of the plan, to make sure you meet your goal in that time frame when you're adding a year out. That's really your key year, that last year of your plan. Your current one is one you can manage, but your out-year is the one that you're striving towards. So that always becomes the key in a longer term business planning process.

We're in a scenario now with our strategic planning group to move us into that new arena, and that's where we believe, from what we have, our resource revenues will hold in the longer term. There are a number of analyses that go on to indicate that that would be the case. On the conventional side maybe not so, but on the uptake, on the nonconventional, yes.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Following up, let me be more specific. The generic royalty arrangement on the heavy oil sands development calls for a rise from the 1 percent royalty rate to a 25 percent royalty rate when the investors have fully recovered the cost of the capital that they've invested. So my specific question really, then, to the minister is: approximately when does Alberta Finance expect the royalty rates to rise, to take the jump from the 1 percent to the 25 percent?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, you've got a little bit of that wrong. I'm rather intimately knowledgeable of that framework since I was one of the crafters of it. The 1 percent royalty replaced a number of agreements that had no royalty involved if in fact there was capital that we recovered. The 1 percent royalty is of gross, not net. It flips into the 25 percent after the recovery of capital. So you've always got a minimum of a 1 percent gross royalty to come forward, which is a huge change and commitment for dollars to flow through to the coffers of the Crown to see that development come forward. It was designed to readily admit that there had to be a royalty payment made, and it had to be sufficient to warrant what I call patient capital being allowed to develop over a time frame for development within the oil sands, which required huge amounts of investment to go into those facilities to expand them. In fact, the long-term projections are that there will be 1.2 million barrels of crude coming out of there. I think we're well on our way to seeing that occur.

So you've got to look at the royalty structure as is. It's 1 percent of gross that then moves to 25 percent. You're going to see that occur in different stages as the various projects evolve.

Dr. Taft: I need to continue this because we agree that this is of fundamental importance to the long-term fiscal health of this province. When will we begin to see that flip, as you called it, from 1 percent to the 25 percent occur? I realize that projects are coming on at different stages, but I've looked through the business plans here, and going up to '06 there's no sign that that flip occurs. By '06 we're going to need this. When is this going to happen if it's not by then? When will we start to see the royalties really flow from the oil sands?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of factors that get involved with royalty revenues. One of them is the price in the marketplace. You may see a volume increase. Remember that price is always a factor in the royalty calculation, so it depends on where the market goes. The key to looking at the long-term sustainability of our resource base is the continual investment that is occurring in those sands. As I said, with the turmoil that the market has been in, I was really very encouraged with Suncor's announcement of $3 billion just a couple of weeks ago. Right, Murray?

Mr. Smith: Right.

Mrs. Nelson: And that to me is an indication that there's absolute commitment to the long-term planning of the development of the oil sands, which is a long-term benefit for the province. I can tell you that with the billions of dollars of investment we're already reaping huge benefits from that investment in the province that you can tangibly put your hands on right today. You can do that, and you should be able to see that.

Now, I can't give you that long-term forecast because I don't have that. What I can tell you is that based on the investment and the economics that we believe are there, we have a secure position on our resource base of 3.5.

Dr. Taft: I understand that price affects all this. My concern is that the key is not just continual investment, as the minister said – that's obviously important – but that at some point the continual investment should lead to the higher flow of royalties. We're down, although production has increased substantially through heavy oil – I forget the exact figure – but the royalties are in the $120 million a year range. In the long term the key to our prosperity is not just continual investment; it's getting the royalty up to that 25 percent level. Frankly, the royalty is what's due to the citizens of this province. It's the economic rent on that resource, as the minister knows. My concern is that if we get into a program of continual investment, we will never get out of the 1 percent royalty. I feel like we're struggling here.

Mr. Smith: And maybe you'll want to bring it up when we do my estimates.

Dr. Taft: Well, maybe we do. That may help it. Sure. Okay. That's fine.

Mrs. Nelson: I don't want you to leave today feeling . . .

Mr. Smith: Left out.

Mrs. Nelson: No. Insecure.

Under the old setup the agreements were all one-off agreements, and a lot of them had no provision for minimum royalties at all, so there were a vast number of years where there was no royalty paid. When we renegotiated the agreements, we said that there has to be a minimum paid, so 1 percent of gross was the number. You could measure the effectiveness of the capital investment in the project. You'd take that project, capital is invested, it's allowed to recover, and it's project by project. It doesn't extend to the next one. When the Mildred Lake expansion is done, you can visibly see that the capital investment for the Mildred Lake area is a project that then ramps up. So you'll be able to trace that and determine that that 1 percent gross then ramps up on a stand-alone so that each one has its own structure. Just because you're starting to make revenues that are beyond the capital cost, you can't put in another project to avoid paying royalties. You can't do that. You have to follow the program through.

So it's specific, and it's boxed in. It's a good project because Albertans do receive what you call the rent; I call it the huge benefit of the capital investment. I can tell you that this program has been so successful at drawing investment to this province that not only is the direct investment in the sands critically important, but all the spin-off it has brought with it has been phenomenal and can't be matched anywhere else. We're pretty lucky to have it.

Anything else specific you'll maybe wait until Energy is up.

Dr. Taft: Fair enough.

Let's see. On page 152 of the estimates there is a reference to premiums, fees, and licences, various. I've got to make sure I'm lining the lines up correctly here. It's estimated this year at almost $25 million, up from about 19 and a half million dollars last year, a 20 or 25 percent increase. I would like some details from the minister or a breakdown of how much money is collected from which fees. "Various" is a wonderfully vague term, and I'd like a little detail to fill in that vagueness. That may be something that needs to follow in written response.

Mrs. Nelson: No. The $24,825,000, is that the one you're talking about?

Dr. Taft: That's right. Yes.

Mrs. Nelson: That's up about $5.2 million from the previous year, and it's due to the growth in the deposit guarantee fee assessed on Alberta Treasury Branches. They were estimated at $23.4 million.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the strategic priorities for your ministry you talked about the recommendations that you adopted from the Financial Management Commission, 22 of 25. What were the three that you did not adopt, and why did you reject them?

Mrs. Nelson: I'm trying to think of the numbers of them. One of the recommendations – and I can't remember the number; I don't know if that's important or not – was to have the heritage trust fund serve as the sustainability fund, and our caucus did not agree with that approach. Our feeling was neither did Albertans, so we did not accept that recommendation.

Another was to use a benchmark to allocate dollars for capital on an annual basis. The benchmark was that the allocation should be tied to the GDP of the province on an annual basis, which resulted in $1.2 billion or $1.3 billion of allocation, somewhere in there, depending on the annual base into the capital account. We weren't happy with the benchmark of GDP being used, but the dollar amount was the acceptable side.

I'm trying to think of what the third one was, and I can't think of what it was off the top of my head. I'm sorry. I'll think about it in a minute. But basically it was that using the trust fund was not accepted. [interjection] Oh, the collective bargaining process. That was the other one that wasn't accepted either, so we didn't deal with that in the recommendations.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman and Madam Minister, we see a new focus in this budget on stability, which is a good thing, yet what we saw two days after the budget process was a new $64 million allocated for schools. So I would expect that between now and then you put something in place, the $64 million for an additional school that wasn't in the budget process. So if you're looking at providing stability in the budgeting process and then we see a change like that happen so soon after, we would expect there to be some checks and balances that you put in place now so that something like that can't happen. Could you comment on that for us?

Mrs. Nelson: First of all, there was no reallocation or no dollars added to this budget. The budget plan is very clear. In the budget there's $450 million for new schools and school modernizations and upgrades. That number has not changed at all. That's the number. Now, how it's allocated within that is something I don't get involved with, but that's the number. There's nothing more.

Ms Carlson: Okay. So am I reading that what you're saying there is that the Minister of Infrastructure would have to figure that out within the confines of the dollars he was allocated?

Mrs. Nelson: Exactly.

Ms Carlson: Okay.

My next question then is on maintaining the value of the sustainability fund at $2.5 billion being as we see it as dependent on oil and gas. Can you tell us what you're expecting to see for projected natural resource revenues that you use to predict that? You talked about that a little bit in the beginning, but if you could comment on that for us.

Mrs. Nelson: I think the forecast for oil and gas revenues we'll let the Minister of Energy deal with in his estimates, but what I can tell you is that the $2.5 billion for the sustainability fund is a number we believe will take us through a turbulent time in the event that we have a huge decline in our resource revenues. We're not anticipating that, and we expect to build the fund to $2.5 billion fairly quickly over the next few years. This fund is clearly different from what other funds have been from the standpoint that it can only be used for certain things. So it's not a matter of beefing up operating costs or expenses by borrowing from this fund. It's a matter of dealing with a situation where if in fact in a given year resource revenues go below the $3.5 billion that we forecast, we're able to make up the difference from the fund, but it has to be replaced. So the fund must sit at $2.5 billion as a safeguard, and I think that's the right number. I'm going to be honest with you. We'll be assessing that over the next couple of years to give a better comfort level to all of us that we've picked the right number that has to be in that fund.

Beyond the $2.5 billion if there are additional dollars that come over from surpluses or additional resource revenues, et cetera, those dollars can only again be used for certain things, mainly on the balance sheet side of the equation; in other words, to further pay off our debt, to enhance our capital plan, or to enhance other assets of the government such as endowment funds, foundations, et cetera. It cannot be transferred over to operations, and that's the big distinguishing factor between it and other funds that don't put the discipline on the spending level into their governments. I think that's the key for the long-term sustainability of the core programs, that we don't ramp them up and pull them back so we have a level, predictable, process that moves forward, and that's fundamental I think.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll ask a few questions now with regard to taxes and tax cuts. You talked in your opening comments about this province having the lowest tax rate for families, and I'm wondering when you make those estimates why you don't factor user fees into that equation because by most recognized definitions a user fee is a tax, and it does add to the cost of average family expenses. So if you could comment on that.

Then, also, what is your projected tax cut for the upcoming year and for the years after that? Do you have a plan to reduce the taxes to 8 percent and 3 percent respectively by 2006? That's what we heard about before in the business plans. [interjection] Corporate taxes. So the projected tax cut for both individual and corporate taxes, and then are we going to see the small business reduction?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have already lowered personal taxes in this province by $1.5 billion that Albertans are paying less year after year after year. It's a huge advantage for Albertans. The key is to maintain the attractive level of that – i.e. inflation-proofing the program – but making sure that the personal exemption gives Albertans the best advantage and maintaining that position.

The other side of the equation is that when we announced originally the business or corporate tax reductions, we said that we would move on a path to lower those to 8 and 3 as affordable. As you know, we did experience some difficulty a year ago in the fall that didn't allow us to proceed in that particular year with the reduction. We did proceed with some of it on the small business side. This year we were able to continue on that path, and it would be our goal to get there as quickly as we can, but again it's as affordable. Our goal would be to move as quickly as we could because we think that that is a huge economic advantage in the overall structural framework of the province that again attracts people to Alberta.

The other thing that's key – and we quite often are hard on ourselves in Alberta – is that Alberta's tax advantage is huge when you consider that we don't have a payroll tax, we don't have a capital tax, we don't have a sales tax. Those all factor in.

Dr. Taft: Health care premiums.

Mrs. Nelson: The hon. member over there is talking about health care premiums. It doesn't matter how you shake the cat. When you take fees and services and taxes, we still have the best advantage in all of Canada. While there are only two provinces that physically go out and send a bill to people for health care premiums, the rest of them build it into their system. It doesn't matter how you shake it. The taxpayer is paying for it either directly – I much prefer for government to be up front and say: this is what the cost is. I would like people to know exactly what the cost is.

We're going to be spending over $8 billion in 2005 on health care, and as a taxpayer I'd like to have a fair idea as to what that cost is and why. I could hide it. That would probably get me off the hook from a lot of questions from the opposition. I could hide it, but who are you kidding? You're not kidding the neighbours that they're not paying for their health care, because then you'd have to put it in somewhere else, and you could put it in as an extra fee here or one over there. So you can do that, and that's easy. They still have to pay for it because health care is not free. It costs a whole lot of money. I think at least Alberta is up front enough to send out a bill to make people realize that it in fact does cost money. The costs have gone up, so the bills have gone up. So I don't have any qualms about that.

Our competitive tax advantage is huge in this province. In my opening comments I talked about the comparison if we lived in other provinces, and I was amazed when my department sent me a note that said that if you took the tax structure in British Columbia, everything, and you transplanted it across the mountains and plunked it on Albertans, with the demographics we have, we as Albertans would be paying $5 billion a year more in taxes. I thought: somebody's made a mistake; it can't possibly be that much. Then I found out that I think it was $3.2 billion was in provincial sales tax alone. That's usury. Then they did the same thing; they went to Ontario and plunked their system on top of Alberta with all of their types of payroll taxes, et cetera. Again, we would be paying just over $5 billion if we adopted their system. Quebec was even worse. I thought that these numbers had to be wrong. I couldn't believe there would be that much of a difference in what it would cost Albertans if we had these other systems.

So I think we need to be grateful for what we have in this system. We all would like our taxes to go down. I mean, if you asked a hundred people, "Would you like your taxes to go down?" a hundred would say yes. If you asked them if they'd like to go without those services, a hundred of them would say, "Probably not," and 75 would say, "Definitely not" because they're critical services that they require.

So I think that by and large Albertans are comfortable with the tax structure we have. They're not complaining. They realize the advantage they have. They realize the benefit they have. They definitely don't want their taxes to go up; that much we do know. So I think that as long as we maintain that taxable advantage, then we're doing the right thing and we're striking that right balance.

We will continue with the corporate reductions as affordable, but I will not put core programs in jeopardy to do it. That's the balancing, and that's a tough balance to do, but that's the one we're committed to.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. My first comment to the minister is that basically what we have in Alberta is revenue from oil and gas that allows us to not have a sales tax.

My second comment to the minister is that that was the closest I've heard anyone from the government come to admitting that health care premiums really are a tax. She didn't quite say that, but she was very close.

Mr. Vandermeer: I said that all the time.

Dr. Taft: Okay, and you will be a minister someday.

I'm on page 165 of the business plans: "A fair and competitive provincial tax system," goal 2. It says, "The tax system must be fair," and I agree. We all agree. There are, however, different definitions of fairness. When I read that, the first thing that occurred to me in fact was the fundamental unfairness that I see with health care premiums. When you combine health care premiums with the 10 percent flat tax, what occurs is that the most heavily taxed citizens in Alberta are basically the working poor, those people who are just above the low-income exemption for paying health care premiums, because they have to pay the 10 percent of their income in tax, and they have to pay the same full amount in health care premiums that a millionaire pays. So to me this is fundamentally unfair. In fact, by percentage of income the heaviest tax load in Alberta falls on the working poor and the lower middle class.

So really that's more a comment, indeed I would go so far as to say a statement of fact, than it is a question, but the minister might want to comment on that. There has been talk both in the government and in the Tory Party, the PC Party, that someday health care premiums would be phased out. Is the minister aware of any progress on that issue, or are we looking at continuing them at the level at which they stand now?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Chairman, I guess I would say to the hon. member in response that insofar as health care premiums the key thing is that when you need the system, it's there. The system is expensive, and I would say that you can have a bill or you can have some sort of – you have to pay for it somewhere. So it doesn't matter how you shake the cat. As a Canadian citizen you're going to pay for health care in one form or another.

At this point I prefer as an Albertan to see something come in the mail that tells me that I am participating in protecting a system that I think is very important and fundamentally key. I can tell you that if you've ever used the system, which a number of us have had to use, it has responded, and it's far more than what we would pay on an annual basis in a premium of any sort when that system responds. When you consider what's there in the system and available to us in this country, we are the envy of the world to have the health system that we do have. Maintaining it is going to be very costly. Is it sustainable? Yes. But trying to play the idea of getting rid of the premium – for what? Do you want me to bury it somewhere? I'd rather be up front with people and say: this is what the system costs. If we have hardship cases, we deal with those. That's a different issue. But to try and get rid of it and say that we're not going to charge for health care: who are you kidding?

This is an $8 billion a year system. It has to be paid for in one form or another, so you have to deal with that reality. You can't get away with it. You can't hide your head in the sand and say: somebody else is going to do it, the other guy. There isn't any other guy; it's you. You have to pay for it. You have to pay for the privilege of having the system. Hopefully you don't have to access it, but if you do, it better be there and respond when you need it. That's the key, and this system does do that, and it responds a heck of a lot more than what we pay on an annual premium; I can tell you that right now. It's a very, very good system.

So we can play the game of hide-and-seek, but I'm not really much for hide-and-seek on these costs. I'd rather be up front with people and tell them what it is. So I wouldn't be pushing that analysis. I like it to be front and centre.

Dr. Taft: Okay. I agree with a number of the comments from the minister, that the system is good, that it needs to be there, that it isn't free, but I'm going to say two things. One, it would be more fair, in my view, to abolish health care premiums and fold it into the tax rate so that people earning $30,000 a year aren't paying a higher tax rate than people earning $300,000 a year, which is patently unfair, in my view, right now. So my preference would be to abolish the health care premiums and fold it into the tax rate.

My second point on that. It's a suggestion here, and I couldn't find the figure right at my fingertips, but the government could save tens of millions of dollars a year, because that's what it's costing to collect the health care premiums. So you could save tens of millions of dollars a year by doing away with those and folding them into the general tax structure.

I can tell from the expressions of the minister that she doesn't agree with me.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, I'll take your words of wisdom under advisement and remember them. Thank you.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, we have a number of questions left. We haven't even started to talk about Kyoto and some of the other important decisions that were made within this department. But the minister has been very co-operative this afternoon in answering our questions, not always with the kinds of answers we like to hear but has given us a great deal of information. So with that, we will submit the rest of our questions in writing to the minister and would now call for the vote.

The Chair: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Finance for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$83,677,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$82,529,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Hancock: You know, it occurs to me that we don't have to rise and report now. We could rise and report at 10 o'clock tonight, but I move that we rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Finance: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $83,677,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $82,529,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we'll return in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:09 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 23, 2003 8:00 p.m.

Date: 03/04/23

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the committee to order. Before I recognize the Minister of Municipal Affairs, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce an individual from my constituency. In the members' gallery we have Lawrence Ference, who is the second vice-chairman of United Farmers of Alberta.

Just to tell you a couple of things about United Farmers of Alberta, the organization, they are presently closing in on a billion dollars in sales for each year. Also, in 2009 they're looking forward to their hundredth year anniversary of existence. Presently they run 115 petroleum centres and have 34 farm outlets. I would also like to say that they are the eighth largest co-operative in Canada. In Alberta they have 120 active members. If I could ask Lawrence Ference to please stand and get the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Chair: Does anybody else have any introductions?

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Municipal Affairs

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed my pleasure this evening to present the estimates for Alberta Municipal Affairs. I might also add that clearly our ministry is committed to working with a variety of stakeholders to ensure that Albertans live in safe, sustainable, and enhanced communities and are served by an open, effective, and accountable government.

In the coming year we will pursue six additional goals, building on our successes, taking a continuous improvement approach in dealing with municipalities but also enhancing an already effective, responsive, co-operative, and well-managed local government sector, continuing to build on the successes over this next year but also enhancing the financial sustainability and accountability of municipalities.

It's also equally important to talk about a well-managed and effective assessment and property tax system in which stakeholders have confidence, which, I'm very pleased to say, is taking place; also a comprehensive safety system that provides an appropriate level of public safety, and I'm very pleased to add some more detail about that later on tonight; also an emergency management program that enables effective preparation for, response to, and recovery from major emergencies and disasters in the province at the local level and working in partnership with first responders; and also an independent appeal system that issues timely and impartial decisions of high quality.

I mentioned earlier that our Municipal Affairs budget this year, in case you may not be aware, is a grand sum of $133.7 million. Now, that supports the operation of four key, main areas within our ministry: local government services as well as our public safety division as well as the Municipal Government Board and, of course, our ministry support services.

Now, when we look at the revenues within our budget for 2003-04, the ministry's statement of operations by program indicates that our revenues will be approximately $42.3 million. I think it's important to recognize this, and you may not be aware. Did you know that we have in the province of Alberta 357 municipalities? I know a question you're going to ask me is this: how many cities? Fifteen cities. How many towns? One hundred and ten towns. How many villages? I'll tell you how many villages: 103 villages. How many rural municipalities? Sixty-four counties and municipal districts. In addition, we have two specialized municipalities. Of course, as well as not only Fort McMurray and Strathcona and those specialized areas, we have special areas. I know the Deputy Premier is very aware of the specialized areas that fall into her area as well as the Attorney General's area.

So we have a total of 357 municipalities. Do you know how many mayors and Reeves that makes? Three hundred and fifty-seven. Do you know how many elected councillors and aldermen that makes? One thousand, nine hundred and forty-four elected officials. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that many of the people in this very Assembly started their political careers at the local government level. In fact, how many in here? Raise your hand if you in fact in some way, shape, or form were in there. I can see that the number that have put up their hands here is almost unanimous, which really tells me and convinces me that this government has a good understanding of local government, municipalities.

Now, with that, just to give you some insight into what makes up our $133,703,000, from an expenditures perspective let's talk about the minister's expenditures: first of all, local government services, which is an important division of our ministry, as well as our public safety, as I mentioned earlier, and the Municipal Government Board. As we look at the revenues, we're going to generate about $42.3 million. We'll receive about $40 million from lottery revenues. To the hon. minister of lotteries, who is here tonight, I'd like to specifically say how much we appreciate the $12 million to support financial assistance provided under our municipal sponsorship program. I would like to comment as well on the $28 million that we use to support unconditional municipal grant programs. Unconditional means that we don't believe the province knows best where the money can be spent. We have trust in our elected municipal officials to determine how they best can serve that same taxpayer that we all serve here. As well, the remaining $2.3 million, of course, also comes from lotteries, which is very important.

I would like to say, though, which I think is very important, that in our local government services program a number of key initiatives are made up, and in actual fact if you look in our local government services budget for the upcoming year, it's important to recognize that we have a budget of about $106.7 million. I don't know if you're aware that that makes up over 82 and a half percent of the total grants that go directly to municipalities. I think it's important to recognize that in many ways we take that money that we get from within this Legislature and distribute it to municipalities in delivering local services, which I believe are so important. What I would like to do, though, is say that the six goals that I mentioned earlier are built around these four main areas: local government services, public sector and public safety, Municipal Government Board, and ministry support.

I would like to talk about some of the key initiatives in this upcoming year. We've worked very closely on roles, responsibilities, and resources, which is the minister's council. The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne sit on the committee as well as the presidents of the AUMA and the AAMD and C as well as the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary and Economic Development.

I just want to talk about our municipal program and initiatives to improve the knowledge of elected officials and administrators by working in partnership with the University of Alberta. As you often have heard, it's said that in politics we don't have to be smart; we just have to be popular every three or four years. But we know differently, and that's why we have this excellence program with the University of Alberta. Often I've heard from many local officials that it's the city managers and the administrators that are supposed to be the smart people, that we just have to be popular, and that's simply not true. We have elected officials, mayors and reeves and councillors, that are running multimillion-dollar organizations, serving the public very well. Ultimately this partnership at the university with administration and the elected officials has been truly one of the key successes over the past year, and I'm very proud to say that. In fact, a former member of this Assembly, the dean of business today, Dr. Mike Percy, heads up this program and does a very good job relative to the municipal excellence program, and I want to say that it's indeed a pleasure working in partnership with the University of Alberta.

I want to also say that we have conducted some assessment audits of 89 municipalities this past year to help ensure that the properties are being assessed fairly and consistently and continue along that principle of fairness, updating the regulated rates of industrial properties to ensure that they reflect an appropriate relationship to the assessment of properties and market value. As you know, the province of Alberta utilizes market value, and that is very important relative to the growth that we're seeing take place in this province of Alberta, what we refer to as the Alberta advantage.

I want to say that under grants to municipalities, just to go back for a moment, of the $87.5 million that is in our estimates, the major grant programs are the unconditional, the municipal debenture interest rebates program, the grants in place of taxes program, and also the municipal sponsorship program. I know that many of the members in this Assembly, in fact all members, have received notice of the sponsorship program, that helps well. I see that the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul is here. In speaking with both him and the reeve and the affected municipalities, he recognized just recently in fact one of those sponsorship grants that has helped his municipality and how pleased they are.

I want to also say that financial support to local authorities has been reallocated this year. About a $900,000 increase, just under a million dollars, will assist municipalities to continue to facilitate dispute resolutions and improve their assessment systems. Now, to the hon. Member for Sherwood Park, who at one point, of course, held this ministry, I want to say that the dispute resolution that comes out today is such an important mediation process, that works so well in helping municipalities work with their neighbours. I want to also say that the hon. Member for Leduc, who was a key architect of that program, as a former reeve indeed played a key role in working with our ministry.

I would also like to say that you can see up in the Speaker's gallery tonight all of my staff from Municipal Affairs, all the chairs that are up there. They are working so closely in partnership with our municipalities. I know the Deputy Premier is looking. In the Speaker's gallery are all my Municipal Affairs staff tonight, and I just want to thank them so very, very much.

The hon. Member for Leduc is very familiar with dispute resolution. He played a key role in terms of what we are doing and helped play a mediation role with municipalities. I want to say how important that is and continues to be as one of the highlights of our ministry in terms of dispute resolution that takes place.

Moving on just ever so briefly before I conclude, I want to say that the Municipal Government Board, as you know, accounts for about $2.6 million of our ministry estimates. With these services that are rendered through the Municipal Government Board, I want you to know that the board has jurisdiction to decide property, linear, and equalized assessment appeals. Now, I know that many people get excited when they hear about linear, equalized, and property assessments.

Mrs. Nelson: Oh, yeah.

Mr. Boutilier: I hear the Minister of Finance just trying to control her enthusiasm tonight because of what that means. We've seen that reflected in the budget that was announced recently.

I want to also say that we deal with subdivision appeals. We deal with annexations and intermunicipal disputes, that I mentioned earlier. It continues to provide an independent appeal system that issues high-quality, impartial, and timely decisions.

Let me just conclude relative to our ministry support services. The last area of the ministry that I want to touch on briefly is the ministry support. This deals with and provides the local government services and public safety divisions with legal, financial, and information technology, communications, human resources, business, and administration support. This area accounts for about $10.7 million including these types of areas that are very invaluable within the ministry. Now, this increase, again, this year in terms of some of the areas I mentioned makes up a total of $133,700,000.

In our whole scheme of dealing with, as I mentioned, just under 2,000 elected officials, I believe that Municipal Affairs has a very good game plan. We work closely in partnership with our municipal partners, and at the end of the day we want to build on the successes of our past year. I am certainly prepared at this time to answer any questions that may arise from our discussions tonight.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister for his opening remarks as well as the department here tonight who are certainly here to answer questions or provide further detail to our questions and queries. We all realize, particularly after the introductory comments by the minister, how very important this ministry is because it is the ministry that provides a direct link to municipal government. In the order of government municipal government is the level of government that has a direct influence on the day-to-day operations of our towns, villages, and cities as well as the level of government that influences people on a daily basis. I was also very impressed with the comments by the minister in commending these people for a job well done, and they certainly do a great job. It's easy to see why they do have the confidence of the minister.

When we look at the mandate for the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, two very important bullets are under the mandate, and that is "to ensure Albertans live in safe and sustainable communities," and the second bullet is to ensure Albertans "are served by open, effective, accountable and well-managed local governments." Having attended various conventions of the AAMD and C and the AUMA, I can certainly say that at that level these people work very, very hard to fulfill this particular bullet.

Under the core business plans of the ministry from 2001 to 2004 there are three core businesses that are described: the local government services, providing support services, policies, and legislation to assist the local government sector; safety services, including fire protection, which is administering a safety system that provides uniform application of safety standards throughout the province; and, finally, disaster services, managing provincial disaster planning and recovery programs and supporting municipalities to ensure their preparedness to deal with major emergencies and disasters. This is one of the areas that was identified by the Auditor General and I think one of those areas, Mr. Chairman, that was taken very seriously. From all I've heard and seen of these plans, they are second to none in North America. So it was a challenge that was put forth. There was a shortfall and, in my estimation, one that has been met and met well.

In looking at the strategic priorities of the ministry, we certainly look at roles, responsibilities, and resources, and of course that's been referred to as the three Rs and fits in very well with the minister's provincial/municipal council on the three Rs in the 21st century. Emergency management; partnerships; codes and standards; growth, smart growth and growth pressures. Of course, this last strategic priority is a challenge for Alberta particularly in this period of strong economic growth, and while we do have many people moving into the province to seek employment, we certainly don't have the infrastructure to fulfill all of their needs, so it does place a tremendous pressure on municipalities to provide for these people.

In looking at the highlights of the budget, I see that there is a reduction of $28.8 million over last year. One of the things that does draw some concern when we have a reduction of this amount in the budget I think is outlined in a letter that I received from Mayor Bill Smith of the city of Edmonton dated March 20, 2003, and he is referring, of course, to the document on the working relationship agreement between the minister's provincial/municipal council. In it he refers to:

This document represented a milestone in provincial/municipal relations and clearly establishing Alberta as leaders nationally in acknowledging the critical need to address the financial crisis facing Canadian municipalities.

Certainly, I don't think there's any other region in the country, Mr. Chairman, that is facing these great challenges. So one of the questions I'd like the minister to expound upon when he gets a chance to reply is: exactly how are you addressing this shortfall in funding for municipalities?

As well, along the same lines it was said recently by the chief of police, Bob Wasylyshen, that the city of Edmonton is currently providing somewhere in the neighbourhood of $13 million to $14 million worth of police work that really is for the province and not the city of Edmonton. He certainly wanted to look at the possibility of the province paying their fair share of the policing responsibilities that they are doing on behalf of the province. If Edmonton has this need, then I think that Calgary would probably also have a very similar need.

Now, as well, looking at other issues that do involve our AUMA, I also received a letter from Mayor George Rogers, the president of AUMA. In the letter he goes on to say that the AUMA "is concerned with the principle of allowing private business to borrow out of the same pool of money earmarked for public municipal institutions." If the minister could please just enlighten us as to whether this is an issue that has been rectified or if he could let us know if in fact private business is going to be able to borrow out of the same pool of money that is earmarked for public municipal institutions.

As well, I notice in the budget under highlights that we have an increase in full-time equivalent employees, rising from 311 to 319. Does the minister have an explanation for this increase, particularly when we are looking at a decrease of $28.8 million? I also notice under highlights that the amount of money in different municipal granting programs is changing but in total remains approximately the same, and particularly with the growth that we've experienced in the province, I would have expected this amount to increase.

As I mentioned earlier, the economic growth in the province has been immense, and where in some respects it certainly is a great advantage to the province, it does put a tremendous strain on municipalities and particularly, I think, in fitting in with the bullet under the mandate that ensures that "Albertans live in safe and sustainable communities."

I was quite interested to see in the news today that two of the people that were involved with running the water plant in Walkerton were charged because of the events that took place there. It was brought to my attention that a community in southern Alberta, Bragg Creek, has had a tremendous increase in population. They've gone from about 200 to a thousand families, and they find themselves in a similar situation to what Cochrane was a few years ago in that they don't have any type of water treatment or sewage plant, and they rely on their wells for their water. Some of the figures that have been mentioned to me are that at least 60 percent of the wells in this area are contaminated. So it is a huge issue because Bragg Creek does have a very close proximity to the Elbow River, which, of course, is upstream from Calgary. Their concern is that they desperately require a water treatment and sewage plant to rectify the problem that they're experiencing where a number of their wells are being contaminated.

Another area that brings a lot of concern is the great increase in costs of utilities that are faced by our municipalities. I was reading through a handout today, and it was quite explicit as to what the requirements are. As part of the AUMA they designed a program called MEET, which is the municipal energy efficiency trust. Certainly, it's a great program that's going to address the problem of the high cost of utilities to our municipalities. As well, one of the great outcomes of this program is a reduction in the amount of greenhouse gases that are escaping into the atmosphere. So, actually, just an excellent program. In reading through their information, approximately 50 percent of the costs for municipalities is for water and sewage collection, treatment, and distribution. That's extremely high.

As well, recreation centres use approximately 15 percent of the electrical load. In speaking with the mayor of Leduc, he was indicating how their curling club, which built a beautiful facility – and their mortgage was backed by the city of Leduc – was looking at either paying their utility bills or their mortgage. That's the sort of situation they were put in. So I know they will certainly be looking at this program, but whether it is enough to keep that facility afloat, I don't know. I know that if they're facing this in Leduc, they're facing it all over. I know, for example, that the increase in running our twin arena over the course of the year was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $61,000. So it is huge.

Another high usage of the electrical load is streetlights, again required to keep our communities safe, and 20 percent of the electrical load is going to the lighting of our streets and communities. I know they've instituted a number of programs in trying to deal with this particular situation. It is huge for municipalities.

One of the questions in their handout was, "Where does the money come from?" They talk about the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation, and they indicate that it does have a surplus, and it was developed through interest payments that municipalities have made on debt repayment. So what they were looking at was to use the surplus of this, but as well what they were looking at was what sort of assistance they can expect from the department to also assist them in these costs because they are huge. So when looking at ways that we can make these facilities much more cost efficient, of course, there are many; for example, low E ceilings for ice rinks, dehumidification of ice rinks, and the list goes on. Some of the more expensive ones are lighting refits and chiller controls, and when you're looking at the cost of a chiller, for example, for a twin ice arena - and we happen to be installing one right now - you're looking at $81,000.

The Deputy Chair: I regret to interject, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry; however, the noise level is fairly high. Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry has the floor. I'd hope that you'd respect his privilege to speak at this time.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, you may proceed.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. What I'd like to do now in the remaining time I have in this particular session is to start to deal with the business plan of the ministry. On page 312 of the business plan it indicates that the ministry will be facing a number of new challenges. What I would like the minister to do is certainly to outline to the members here what those new challenges are. If he could also indicate what is dedicated to meeting these new challenges in the budget.

Also on page 312 of the business plans the plans say that it is important "to clarify the roles, responsibilities and resource commitments of all orders of government," but it seems that the province has stopped this exact initiative in its tracks by refusing to sign the working agreement on roles, responsibilities, and resources. I know we've had an extensive discussion about this in question period. As well, there is a fiscal framework here, and I know that the cities, which we all I think agree are cash strapped, would like this agreement signed. I think they are looking for more dollars because their opportunities to fund their needs are much more limited than what we have here.

As well, I'd like to ask the minister: what is the ministry doing to help municipalities that face immense growth pressures and need dollars for new infrastructure and the repair and replacement of existing infrastructure? I know that he will have firsthand information on this because for the past decade Fort McMurray has been growing in leaps and bounds, and certainly I look forward to hearing his comments on how we are going to address these needs not only for that region of the province but all regions, the Bragg Creeks and the Grande Prairies and even the cities of Edmonton and Calgary and all the others.

Now, again, looking at the mandate where certainly a goal was strong and safe communities, there have been a number of complaints, especially from the Calgary chief of police - also, I mentioned earlier the chief of police from Edmonton - that municipal police forces don't have the resources to cope with biological, chemical, or nuclear attack. I know that as part of the disaster plan certainly these issues would have been raised. If the minister could please let us know what he's doing to increase the resources municipal police forces have to deal with chemical, biological, and nuclear threats.

Now, as well, on page 314 of the business plan it indicates that there was consultation between jurisdictions and that this is very important to the ministry. So if the minister could explain why extensive consultations were not done with municipalities on the change to the Municipal Financing Corporation that came before this House in a bill this spring - and, again, I've mentioned that earlier - particularly from the standpoint of the president of the AUMA.

As well, I know that when the minister was back in municipal politics, he certainly did a great job in getting municipalities to co-operate. If you could indicate what strategies are being used now and what will be in the future in order to get our municipalities to co-operate and stretch that dwindling tax dollar even more and more.

My final question will be: what development and co-ordination of education and information services is the ministry planning for this year, what initiatives has the ministry taken in this area in the past, and how successful were these initiatives?

So with those questions and comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my chair and certainly listen to the questions of others. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the minister, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise in the House tonight to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the 101st Scout troop from south Edmonton. There are nine Scouts here to learn about citizenship, and they're accompanied by their Scout leaders Gerald Kastendik, Nolan Steed, and Andy Muñoz. I might mention that Nolan Steed works in the Department of Justice and does a very fine job for the citizens of Alberta and is very qualified to teach citizenship to Scouts. I'd like you to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Municipal Affairs (continued)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I thank the hon. member for some very good questions, which I would like to address in reverse order.

First of all, he was asking about some of the initiatives, and I appreciate him asking that. I want to just ever so quickly talk about our muni university, which I covered, dealing with administrators and elected officials, also our municipal excellence program, which we deal with at both the AUMA as well as the AAMD and C. I want to say that the municipal excellence program has been something that we're so very pleased with. At the conventions, which I know the hon. member as well as other members attend, what we do is talk about best practices, and we demonstrate to other municipalities the best practices that are taking place. I want to say that it certainly has been a very positive initiative. As well, I would like to say that we're investing considerable money this year in subdivision as well as development appeal and assessment review panels, which I also think are very important initiatives. So I want to say that I'm very pleased with the work that we're doing in partnership with the AUMA as well as the AAMD and C.

Now, what I would like to do, though, in terms of talking about key strategies is to talk just every so briefly about what some of our key strategies are relative to an effective, responsive, and co-operative well-managed local government sector. I want to say that we are in our key strategies this year continuing to encourage municipalities to cooperate with their neighbours to develop, finance and implement improved growth management and more [effective and] efficient service delivery systems.

I also want to say that we're going to be continuing to promote the self-evaluation of excellence to assist municipalities and citizens in developing innovative strategies for more effective governance, administration, financial management, and service delivery [systems], also of course maintaining a program to recognize this municipal excellence that the hon. member had asked about.

We want to continue to work with municipalities to establish effective and efficient regional partnerships that create an atmosphere to attract and retain investment, compete globally, and contribute to a high quality of life.

Also, developing and co-ordinating "education and information services that include training programs, job exchanges, on-line information, and workshops for local elected officials," that I mentioned, with one example being the muni university. I also want to say that we continue to provide management and administrative services, as I mentioned earlier, to our special areas but also in the national park improvement district areas, which I think is very important.

As well, we're going to continue to pursue the resolution of local and intermunicipal governance and management issues through strategies this upcoming year. Relative to a co-ordinated provincial government approach in dealing with municipalities, I mentioned earlier our roles, responsibilities, and resources and also a legislative framework that's going to enable municipalities to operate successfully and meet the local needs of Albertans.

In some of the other I think very good questions that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry has asked, he talked about the issue of safety. This past year I'm very pleased to say that we have been able to put just under a half a million dollars to deal with some of the radiological, biological, and nuclear issues, and they're going to be going to what we call seven regional hubs, where that money is going to specifically the bigger centres like Edmonton and Calgary but also dealing with Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Grande Prairie, Red Deer, as well as the greater Edmonton area, the capital region, as well as the Wood Buffalo area. These are the seven regional hubs that we have, and I'm pleased to say that this new initiative this year has been received very positively by the municipalities.

Now, if I could just for a moment go back to the issue that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry mentioned relative to MEET, I want to say that it really speaks well of the initiatives of the AUMA, the AAMD and C, and our ministry. They have come forward with a program, and you've read about it just recently. I want to say that I take my hat off to their initiative. We're working with them, but we're just starting this program on how we can build on energy efficiency, and what I have always said is that it makes good sense and good cents. That's something that we are pursuing, and I want to say to the hon. member that it's a very positive initiative.

I know that we've got the attention of the Minister of Finance in our meeting that we've had, and we'll be pursuing that actively, and over the months to come I think that you're going to be hearing more of that. It has to go through the process within our internal workings of government, and I want to say that we're going to continue to pursue this actively, and I want to say that as minister I certainly intend to do that as well.

Three of the last questions that the hon. member brought up were on the issue of wastewater. The member may not be aware, but the wastewater program we're pursuing under private sewage systems is a high priority. The hon. member mentioned Walkerton this past year and the situation in Ontario. He mentioned the issue of Bragg Creek, and that is something that we're working very closely with. He may not be aware that we have provided almost a half a million dollars this year to the wastewater association in dealing with the issue of private sewage systems, which I believe are very important.

Dealing with the Alberta finance corporation board, which is under the purview of the Minister of Finance, I mentioned earlier that as we go forward – the shareholders of the Alberta finance corporation board, you may not be aware, are made up of school board shareholders as well as municipalities representing AUMA. I want to also say that my deputy minister also sits on that important Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation board, which I think is very important in helping municipalities. They borrow money at low interest and ultimately benefit substantially, be it municipalities or school boards, and I want to say that that board is certainly one of a kind. It's certainly a model that other provinces are trying to model.

Let me conclude to the hon. member. In his final questions he asked about the fact that there's about a $30 million difference from last year, and I'm glad he recognized that. I would like to say that the $30 million difference essentially is made up of about $20 million, which were onetime, be it fire or floods, which were dealt with in the supplemental estimates, and as well $10 million, which is dealing with the underground petroleum program. You may not be aware, but the underground petroleum tank program – I see the Minister of Energy. At the time, I know that he was the Minister of Labour when in fact he came forward to the standing policy committee, which is, again, a committee . . .

Mr. Smith: August body.

Mr. Boutilier: It is certainly a one-of-a-kind program in Canada.

I want to say to the hon. member that in the difference of about $30 million, $10 million is for the underground petroleum and almost $20 million is dealing with the flooding and forest fires that we dealt with. So that really hopefully provides some insight into the difference of the 160-some million dollars versus the $133 million. It was those onetime events that we dealt with last year that we dealt with during supplemental estimates.

With that, I'll take my seat, and I thank the hon. member for some very good questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in the estimates debate this evening for the Department of Municipal Affairs. Certainly I, too, am disappointed that there doesn't seem to be much apparent new help for some of the cash-strapped municipalities in this province. There is a lot of information certainly within the documents that have been presented in the budget for the Department of Municipal Affairs, but there seems to be a lot of contradictions in this department from one year to the next.

When we see that there has been a reduction of $28.8 million in spending, one would only wonder if all that money, that reduction, comes from the fact that the department is no longer going to have to organize the election of regional health authority members. Certainly, we go back one year, and incredibly this department, with a legislative framework that "enables municipalities to operate successfully and meet the local needs of Albertans" – and in this case we're talking about bringing democracy – was responsible for bringing democracy to the election of regional health authority members from across the province. Now, incredibly, through their efforts it was seen fit that this initiative would win a silver Premier's award of excellence for 2002, and then we canceled the results of the election. This is not, in my view, very democratic. I'm sorry. This is incredible.

There were 118 regional health authority members elected and only eight seats were acclaimed, for a total of 126 seats. The department stated – and they seemed to be quite proud of this – that there were no court challenges to the results or to the process, and I suppose that's a significant achievement, but they didn't wait long for the results to be analyzed before the election was canceled. I find this incredible. You know, we all talk about the democratic deficiencies in this province. Certainly, one of the leading newspapers in the province recognized that in an editorial this weekend, and to think that one department last year, Municipal Affairs, got the Premier's award of excellence, the silver award – I can't imagine what the gold one would be for. That would be like wiping out the entire appointments I suppose. The silver Premier's award of excellence for 2002 went to this department, and then all that work went for nothing, because the democratic wishes of the citizens were ignored by, unbelievable to this member, a democratically elected government.

Now, how much of this money was wasted? It's obviously wasted if we canceled the election. How much did this election cost, and what percentage of that $28 million is it? That would certainly be my first question.

I'm going to jump from democratic elections to sand and gravel. I find it incredible that the year before the election there seems to have been a significant price spike not only in electricity and not only in natural gas but in sand and gravel. If the hon. minister could please direct me to where I could find the information on the revenue that's raised for the special areas trust accounts in this budget – I have an idea where they are, but I'm not sure – I would be quite interested. Why is there such a variation in revenue between one year and the next? In fact, I'm going to be very anxious to receive that information.

On page 293, Mr. Chairman, of the government and lottery fund estimates I think I'll start with the deputy minister's office, reference element 1.0.2. Now, how confident is the minister in that estimate of close to half a million dollars to run the deputy minister's office when the year before there was an overexpenditure of $122,000? What is being done to ensure that we're not going to run over budget this year, as there was according to my research last year? You know, there have been problems certainly in other ministers' departments, and I want to know what this hon. minister is doing to ensure that those problems are isolated.

Now, in support services, the next operating expense, could I please have a breakdown of operating expenses and capital investment for that $9.9 million estimate?

At this time I have some questions in regard to the Auditor General's report. I had a briefing from the hon. minister at Public Accounts recently. Certainly, the Auditor General in the last report, the annual report for 2002, noted that there were three main problems in the ministry. "Significant deficiencies in the capabilities of the Government Emergency Operation Centre": there was quite a discussion on that at Public Accounts. Another area of concern that was identified was that provincial departments had not prepared adequate emergency plans. There seemed to be some inconsistencies with cross-departmental co-ordination. If the minister could for the record just briefly explain to the House the progress that's been made. Also, the Auditor General identified that "controls to ensure consistency in review and testing of municipal plans by the Disaster Services Branch are lacking." What steps are being made to improve this? When can we expect to have these deficiencies corrected?

Now, the minister has a council. There are a lot of committees and councils. You almost need a military style map to keep the councils and committees of this government on track. The Minister's Council on Roles, Responsibilities and Resources in the 21st Century was struck in 2001.

An Hon. Member: An excellent council. Excellent.

Mr. MacDonald: I understand that it's an excellent council. I can only imagine that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford would be the chair of that. I'm just taking a guess. But what has the council done so far? When can we expect the results? What will these results include? What is the council's mandate, and where could an individual taxpayer in this province find out more if they were interested? When will the new rule changes allow the Alberta Capital Finance Authority to lend to private institutions, and why were some large municipality stakeholders not consulted on the changes to the Alberta Capital Finance Authority?

Now, another question I have for the minister at this time is: what is the ministry doing to represent municipalities' interests better to other departments within the provincial government, and are there any specific programs in place, and when will there be these programs? Finally, in regard to these issues, what guarantees are there that grants get disbursed to municipalities on a fair and equitable basis? Is there any statement of principle or intent that ensures that all municipalities are treated equally?

Mr. Chairman, I also have some questions from the business plans, and I don't want to get into any detail on the pine shake disaster or fiasco. We talked about that in this Assembly last week, I believe. The delegated administrative organization process that was devised, the dangerous arm's-length organizations that they are – and certainly when we consider the administration of the Safety Codes Act, we need an update from the department on just exactly how the administration of the Safety Codes Act is working out.

We are building homes at a record pace in this province, and some consumers are complaining. Inspections are inadequate. The building code, they feel, is being ignored, and some of these homes are in the $200,000 to $300,000 range. We have condos springing up here in this city, and I talked to the hon. Member for Medicine Hat earlier before question period, and one of the problems in Medicine Hat is that they can't get enough serviced lots. Across this province we need to ensure that when people either put their money down or apply for a mortgage to buy a home, whether it's a single-family dwelling or a condo or whatever they're buying, it is built to standard. Is the Safety Codes Act working in the minister's opinion to ensure that those home buyers are getting everything that they are promised? There are a couple of specific issues that perhaps may come up later on in debate, but I get complaints to my constituency office all the time particularly in regard to condos. Consumers now feel ripped off because they feel the inspection process is failing. How is this working?

Who is looking after – I believe it's Municipal Affairs, but I'm not sure these days – the records in regard to the asbestos abatement programs that used to be a part of the Safety Codes Act? Now, I don't know where they are these days, and if I don't know, that means a lot of consumers and a lot of people who work in public buildings also probably don't know either. I would be very grateful for that information if the minister could provide it at this time.

With those questions, I will cede the floor to the hon. minister.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you very much, and I thank the hon. member for the good questions. Relative to the asbestos you may not be aware – but I'll refresh that – that actually it does fall under HR and E in dealing with the issue of asbestos. I'm going to try to go backwards again.

Thank you for recognizing the Safety Codes Act and the major review we did back in '95. The hon. member may not be aware; we just actually completed a safety review. It's been now over seven years, and we thought it was very important to review what it is we're doing well, and in actual fact over the last year the members would have had a copy of the safety review, of what it was that the stakeholders have said. We consulted with over 1,500 Albertans and municipal associations as well as building codes and people that are involved, the Home Builders' Association. They were all part of the safety review, and I'm very pleased to be able to report back to this Assembly the positive comments that have come back on what we are doing right. I want to say that we have always taken the approach, certainly in how I run my life, both my family and I, that we have an attitude that we can always do better. That's why we're doing the review, and I'm very pleased to say that the important initiative that the safety review has done in consultation with the 1,500 stakeholders has been confirmed.

Now, I would like to also go back to the issue of EOC. The hon. member mentioned that the Auditor General talked about some improvements and, yes, absolutely so. We all are aware that since September 11 the world has changed, but I'm very pleased, and I want to invite the hon. member and other members of this Assembly to the official opening of our new Emergency Operations Centre that will be taking place this summer, and that was on the recommendation of the Auditor General. It's going to be taking place in an existing structure with the Minister of Infrastructure. We have a new building. In fact, we're going to be relocating 36 members of the Municipal Affairs staff from Commerce Place in downtown Edmonton to the new operations centre, where they're going to be all the time. I think it's an important initiative. It's going to be actually located in the west end of Edmonton. Sorry to the hon. member, the Attorney General, but it's not located in his constituency. In fact, it may actually be in the constituency of the hon. member across the way, but maybe not as well. Certainly, the point is that the Emergency Operations Centre as a forum of Emergency Management Alberta I think is an important new initiative, and I'm going to invite all members of this Assembly to tour the new facility when it is complete. In fact, right now the Ministry of Infrastructure is dealing with the renovations to relocate the 36 members from the old existing Commerce Place to the new operations centre, which used to be called GEOC, which will now be referred to as Emergency Operations Centre.

I would also like to indicate on the topic of Emergency Management Alberta. As you know, we were once called disaster services, and as you may not be aware, I didn't like my wife when she used to say that I was the minister of disasters. So in working closely with our stakeholders, we have decided that the new name, the appropriate name, is Emergency Management Alberta, referred to as EMA. In fact, EMA really talks about planning for, responding to, and recovering from any potential emergency. You may not be aware, but in fact in my own constituency today we had just learned relative to the river about the flooding that potentially can take place.

I'm pleased to say that the operations centre called me today, that up in both the Peace River area and the Athabasca River area things are in fact beginning to take the course that nature provides, but we certainly have been prepared. We are prepared to respond to and recover from any type of disaster that may happen.

Just for the hon. member's information we actually have an increase this year in the Emergency Operations Centre. The EMA branch management program is going up essentially by about $476,000. I'm pleased to say that this program will ensure that Albertans' communities are prepared to respond to and recover from any potential disasters but also to deal with major emergencies and disasters.

Dealing with terrorist threats. We work very closely with the Solicitor General's office. As you know, the Premier was the only Premier in Canada who implemented a security team just less than 24 hours after September 11 took place. Certainly, the EMA, as I refer to it now, Emergency Management Alberta, is working very closely with that. I'm very proud to say that I invite members of the Assembly to attend the opening when it takes place later on this summer.

The hon. member, as I see he looks my way, asked the question about the mandate of roles, responsibilities, and resources, and I want to share with him what his leader actually shared with me. This is publicly quoted. In fact, it came up in the House the other day. This is from the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, and I quote: the mandate this council will do will be in trying to redefine the roles and responsibilities of two orders of government and working on a mechanism for resolving disagreements that may arise; this is a good mandate. Please pass on to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that I'm so pleased that he shared in our enthusiasm of our mandate, and I'm so pleased that I was able to read that from the hon. member when, in fact, he stated that. That was back actually about six months ago that he made that comment, and I'm very appreciative of that, and I appreciate the question in recognizing that.

Relative to special places you may not be aware, but that is not reflected in the department budget. That is actually an own-source revenue because the property tax that they generate in special areas actually cover the budget. That's why it's not reflected in our department budget, so I want you also to be aware of that.

Regarding the elections, I can say that the elections in the province of Alberta run smoothly, efficiently, and effectively. Obviously, they do. I see from all the members in this House today how effectively the elections do run. To the hon. member: I know how pleased he is of the fact he's sitting there because obviously it's demonstrating the effectiveness of elections in Alberta.

Dealing with what is fair and equitable, well, obviously that is somewhat of a subjective evaluation, but let me best describe Municipal Affairs in this way: in the unconditional and conditional grant programs we have never received complaints about the fairness in equity. Okay? I think that's a very good guide. Over the last eight years it hasn't risen, but clearly the fact of how we administer an evaluation of our grant mechanism is something that I think is fair to every one of the 1,944 elected officials that we do deal with in delivering good, local, effective government services.

Just looking at other questions. I mentioned the safety review. Actually, I've answered all the questions that were posed to me. So with that, I'll take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to ask a few questions as we look at the estimates for the Municipal Affairs budget. If I might, I'd like to start on page 292 I guess it is. I'm sorry that I missed part of the minister's introductory remarks, but I'm going to pose the questions anyhow. Will the minister explain exactly what the onetime costs of the 2002-2003 disaster recovery program were which will not be incurred this year? I think that, according to a press release that we had, this accounts for the spending decrease of this year from last. I wonder if we might have a bit of an explanation in terms of what's not going to be recovered or incurred this year.

Can the minister table the document explaining each of the lines in the budget, including which programs exactly fall under each line with respect to the costs? I'm referring to the line items on page 292. I guess all we're asking for is a better explanation of what those line items entail.

On the ministry's support services on page 293 the operation expense of support services is going up from $9,453,000 to $9,992,000. What is that extra money going to be used for? Could we have, again, an explanation?

There's an item for $287,000 in the minister's budget. Again, might we have an explanation as to the salaries for the positions that are included there and the bonuses? Could we have some information about the traveling and hosting expenses and advertising that would be included in that item? I may be remiss because I haven't checked to see if the ministry's annual report actually includes that full-time equivalent information. I know that I've checked some of the other annual reports, and they're very detailed. They save that kind of detail for their annual report and don't include it in the budget. I apologize if that information is already available in the minister's annual report.

Can you indicate what is the breakdown of the $487,000 deputy minister's budget, again, by the kind of detail that we find in some of the other annual reports? The salaries for each position, the bonuses, the travel and hosting expenses, and advertising.

Under local government services why is the division receiving $600,000 more this year than last? Do we have a list of the new programs that are being put in place as a result of these funds or that these funds are dedicated to?

Why is municipal services receiving $700,000 more? What does that $700,000 include? What programs will this be used to support? I guess the other question is: are there actually new programs, or is this just further support for continuing programs?

Why is assessment services receiving $387,000, 6 and a half percent more than it received last year? I guess the basic question is: why does assessment require more money than a simple inflation-level increase?

On page 294 of the estimates it shows that there's going to be $1.1 million less for unconditional municipal grants this year. Can the minister explain that? Why is the government increasing the financial pressure on municipalities when many of them are in financial difficulties? This seems to be a reduction in the amount of grants there to receive. Or is there a balancing off in the budget that goes against that item?

If I can ask: what safeguards are in place to ensure that all municipalities receive a fair share of the grant money? Does this money from this fund constitute a blank cheque to municipalities to do as they please? You know, if that's the case, are there any accountability measures in place to make sure that the money is best spent in the interests of Albertans?

Another question: why will municipal debenture interest rebates be receiving $2 million less this year than last? I think I know the answer to that, but I'd be interested in hearing from the minister.

Under financial support for local authorities it's receiving $900,000 more than last year. Again, where's the money going? What's it going to be used for? What distinguishes this program from unconditional municipal grants and municipal sponsorship? Again, municipal sponsorship is receiving a million dollars more than last year. Where is the extra million going?

The equipment/inventory purchases division support is receiving close to half a million dollars more than it did last year. It seems like quite a bit, and there must be a reason. I wonder if the minister could explain that increase.

Under safety services and fire protection it shows that program management will receive $200,000 less than it used last year, almost a 40 percent reduction. What accounts for such a large proportional decrease? I guess that the ultimate question is: is this going to have an effect on the service level of safety and fire protection services in the province? Under safety services and fire protection it shows that technical services will receive nearly half a million dollars more than it used last year, a 25 percent increase. Again, can we have some information on why technical services require so much more than the previous year's allocation? Why did technical services use so much less money, $383,000, than it was budgeted last year? What's the explanation for that?

Another question: why are underground petroleum storage tanks receiving no funding this year when they received more than $10 million last year? We have some information on that. Again I think I know the explanation, but I'd be interested in hearing from the minister. Is that program over? Has the job been completed? Nothing was budgeted for the underground petroleum storage tanks program last year, but more than $10 million ended up being spent. Is there going to be an unexpected expenditure later this year, as was the case last year? Again, going back to the previous question, how many tanks are still out there waiting for the next round to come so they can be cleaned up? Just what is the state of the cleanup?

Under Emergency Management Alberta, branch management and programs will receive $700,000 less, almost a 20 percent decrease. Why is this line item getting less than it needed last year? Why did branch management programs go over budget last year by, if I'm reading the figures right, $1.3 million? Disaster recovery is receiving $19 million less, 98 percent less than it used last year. Will this line item really need $19 million less this year? What are the specific cost breakdowns of these extra projects or programs? Why is disaster recovery budgeted for $500,000 less than it was budgeted for last year? What is the reason for that decrease?

Under the Municipal Government Board what is the current backlog of cases for the Municipal Government Board? Why are transfers from the federal government for 2003-2004 being reduced by nearly $8.3 million to next to nothing?

A couple of last questions, I guess, Mr. Chairman. What is the reason that the refunds of expense are anticipated to go up $240,000 in 2003-2004? The last question. The full-time equivalents are going up from 311 to 319, certainly not a large increase. What is the reason for the staffing increase?

So I think that with those questions, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude. Thank you.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to go in descending order back to the questions that the hon. member asked, and they were very good questions. I want to again compliment him.

First of all, I would like to say that, as you know, I talked in my opening comments about the Municipal Government Board. You may not be aware that last year the board completed all the backlog of property appeals for the years prior to 2002 with the exception of a few cases that are primarily delayed due to pending court decisions. The total number of appeals was down in 2002-03 from a high in 1999, but the numbers have remained level with the previous two years. The total number of hearings, to the hon. member – he may not be aware – have leveled off at about 700 a year, and the total hearings are higher than that peak of 1999. I would also like to say that the number of complex appeals is on the increase as well. Currently between 20 and 25 percent of our appeal hearings require significant financial and staff resources in preparing and conducting hearings and of course delivering decisions.

I would also like to say that the Municipal Government Board agreed to a $100,000 reduction in each of the next three fiscal years. In the 2003 budget the MGB has included all of the staff salary increases and additional costs that are projected as a result of the order in council that was put through for board member honoraria. I would like to say that they are truly hardworking Albertans that are without question contributing to the Municipal Government Board. So I hope that addresses the questions on the MGB.

If I could just for a moment go back to the next question that the hon. member was asking relative to this issue of public safety, let me reiterate. At the very outset of his questions I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry did ask the original question, but just so you are aware, let me repeat that the onetime difference of almost $28.8 million was one time, that specifically went towards forest fire and flooding relative to our situation over the past year. Also, about $10 million was in fact for underground petroleum tanks that was included in our supplemental estimate, which makes up the $28 million. So from the forest fires or flooding about $18 million, and $10 million was for the underground petroleum tanks. I wanted to share that with the hon. member as well.

In dealing with emergency disaster recovery, there is a decrease of about $505,000 in this particular area, but the 2003-2004 estimates decrease is really due to the new accounting treatment of cost recovery revenue that's associated with federally funded programs. I also want you to be aware that during the west-central Alberta flood program last year it made up about $19.1 million. Of course, God willing, this year we will not have to experience that type of natural phenomena that took place during the past year.

Also, if I could, the hon. member asked some very good questions relative to the increase in the estimates that are taking place in the EMA branch management programs. I think it's a very good question, but it's important to recognize that the increase in the estimates reflects the cost of the projected salary settlement increases and the addition of new employees for the crisis management program of course and branch support. As you know, the crisis management program did not receive budgetary funding from the time it was formed, and we have done some internal transfers and are providing this increase within our budget, I'm pleased to say, in light of the fact, as I mentioned, that the world has changed.

As well, dealing with the issue of underground petroleum tanks, I think I covered off the hon. member's question. Essentially, the $10.7 million decrease is a result of the program being completed. I want to say to the hon. member: you may not be aware that the $60 million that we originally provided covered just under a thousand sites, actually 931 sites, that were accepted into the program. The program, of course, now is being monitored and being administered under the Safety Codes Council. I want to say that clearly it continues to be a program one of a kind in Canada in the fact that we've dealt with the most serious sites in Alberta with just under a thousand, some 930, that in fact were remediated, I'm proud to say.

Also, dealing with a question that was asked, actually, on an increase in technical services, it's about 21 percent. Just so you are aware, the increase in the estimates on the forecast is primarily related to the litigation costs for the pine shakes that are being delayed into 2003-2004. So I wanted to have the hon. member be aware of that.

Again, on other questions dealing with a decrease of almost $200,000 in program management. It makes up about 56.8 percent as a result of onetime expenditures for implementation of enhancements to the electronic permitting system. In addition to making the system more user friendly, these enhancements have increased the functionality of the system for municipalities in many areas such as preparation of automated on-site inspections. I want to say that, clearly, within the municipality and the quality management planning performance, that was requested by the Auditor General. I'm very pleased to say that this work is coming forward, and the Auditor General recognized it. We have acted on his recommendations and have moved forward, but I want to say that this was a onetime expenditure that took place in the 2002-2003 year.

Dealing with interest rebates just for a moment, the interest rebate program, as the hon. member I'm quite certain is very aware, deals with the municipal debenture interest. The reduction in the estimates is due to the high interest rate debentures being repaid at their term's end, and ultimately so few high-interest debentures that require this subsidy remained. I see the hon. member nodding. Despite this budget reduction, the municipalities are receiving everything they are entitled to under the program, and the reduction is solely the result of certain debentures expiring or at least being paid off. So I wanted the hon. member to be aware, and I appreciate the question, because it's a very good question as well.

Dealing with the issue of the unconditional municipal grants, I want to say that the almost $2.4 million is ultimately – it may not be clear, and I would like to elaborate on it – restructuring of the grant. These grants are for actual restructuring costs, grants that may be provided to address critical infrastructure deficiencies in these communities. This component also included funding for the regional partnerships initiative, which contributes to establishing, expanding intermunicipal partnerships that involve shared services. So I would like to say that the ministry has decreased the estimates for the restructuring component to $4.5 million from $7 million, of which $1 million has been redirected to the municipal sponsorship program and just under a million, about $900,000, has been allocated to the financial support to the local authorities. About a hundred thousand has been actually allocated to the grants in place of taxes. So the ministry estimate is lower because fewer restructuring activities are expected in the 2003-2004 out-years. I appreciate the hon. member asking the question to provide some clear and articulate clarity to what you're asking.

There is an increase in municipal services, and that increase is essentially allowing for increased workforce in response to the subsidiary two union agreements and potential salary increases and also to provide for expenditures in support of the ministry's roles and responsibilities, that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry had mentioned earlier. I'm very pleased with the mandate, but essentially we're also going to continue forward to provide expenditures related to the extended support as well as what's called ESP, which is the extended support program, under the municipal infrastructure management, which is called the MIMS program, and also continue to provide for ongoing expenditures related to our municipal excellence program and the muni university. So that falls under municipal services.

Just continuing to go backward, I'm trying to get every question the hon. member has asked. Relative to the increase in municipal services dealing by comparison, in the 2003-2004 estimates we show an increase to allow a response to these types of initiatives. I want to say that this branch provides grants to municipalities that facilitate municipal restructuring, but it also monitors and recommends changes to municipal legislation. The branch also provided information and advisory services and continues to do a very good job in dealing with our municipal councillors, reeves, mayors, and administrators and staff in order to strengthen Alberta's local governments in accordance with our ministry's mandate.

The hon. member, if I caught the question, talked about FTEs earlier, and I would like to just briefly for a moment give him a quick overview. In the estimates '03 and '04 under the comparison of the '02-03 budget and the '03-04 budget we're going to an increase of two FTEs in local government services, from 141.5 to 143.5. Under public safety we're moving from 103.4 to 109.4. I did mention earlier to the hon. member that we're opening a new operations centre. [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, if you want to laugh, you can take that noise outside the Chamber, please.

Mr. Boutilier: And we will continue to relocate 35 members from Commerce Place, that are now going to be in the new op centre on the west side of Edmonton in an existing Infrastructure building that actually used to belong to registries that we're now going to tap into to be our op center, which we refer to as operations centre. So we go from 103.4 to 109.4, an increase of six members in public safety.

As well, we are increasing the ministry support from 48.8 to 49, so .2 of our workforce. On the Municipal Government Board we're offering half a position. As we mentioned earlier, with the number of cases we have, we're going from 16.5 to 17. A total of 310 in the '02-03 year, which will go to 318.9, an increase of just under nine full-time equivalents in my ministry. So I would hopefully say that this answers the hon. member's questions relative to that.

Dealing with some of the other support services, the ministry support: if I wrote the question down correctly, you were asking about that. I would like to just talk about the minister's budget, an increase of about $6,000, about 2.1 percent. Basically it is made up, of course, of components no different than what made up the previous year, so no significant increase there, and ultimately it makes up 2.1 percent. That hopefully will answer the hon. member's question relative to that.

I would also indicate if I could, which again I think is very important, in terms of the breakdown in the deputy minister's office – in fact let me go back just for a moment to the deputy minister's office. In terms of salary the total for the budget again is negligible. The breakdown of the $487,000: $142,000 is in wage and salary and also payment to contract employees, telephone and communications is $16,000, $6,400 in travel, $6,500 in hosting – we deal with the AUMA convention and things like that as you are aware – and other, which makes up the total amount that is, of course, not much different than last year.

I'm just, again, trying to gather every question. On computer services a question was asked as well, again another good question. You were asking about what is happening with the computer services area. I would like to say that we have an increase of about 3.2 percent. It's about $308,000. I can say that the majority of that $308,000 is broken down, if I could, as follows. Under financial information and technology services, computer services is about $185,000, which makes up the bulk. Business services makes up the difference, which is $67,000. Human resources is about $40,000.

And, actually, legal and communications are $8,000 each. That makes up the $308,000. The increase is due to some of our higher workforce costs as a result of potential salary settlements and increases related to information technology. That ultimately makes up essentially a large portion of that change. So hopefully that answers the member's question there.

Just three other points that were mentioned that I would like to address before I take my seat. One was on underground petroleum, but actually I think I've already answered the hon. member's question on underground petroleum.

At this time what I'll do is take my seat.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. I just have one brief question at this time for the minister that I omitted when I was going through the business plans and recommendations from the Auditor General's report, and that concerns disaster services. I know that particularly after 9-11 we were rapped quite hard because of our disaster plans, and it seems that particularly in terms of this building here we went from perhaps maybe a little too lax security to a code red position. I know, Mr. Minister, that in the United States we've been hearing over the last couple of months how they have different levels of security, and I certainly would like the minister to clarify whether in fact our levels of security in this building are going to be reduced now that it seems that the threat of any terrorism is certainly greatly diminished from what it was over the past two years.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you very much. I know that to the many members that are participating in our budget estimates tonight, the security of this building is very important. As you know, it's under the purview of the Solicitor General, but I want to say that without question – and I understand from speaking with the Solicitor General that she had indicated that she is reviewing with the intelligence people and the police service and Alberta Justice – as you know, in Alberta we are not at any significant threat level. I indicate that one of the things we do enjoy in Alberta is our access to the Alberta Legislature. That's something that all Albertans are privileged with and without question enjoy that access. It's my understanding that the Solicitor General continues to monitor the situation, and that as the world continues to evolve, it's something that is never carved in stone. The Solicitor General, I do know, has made a commitment to this House as well that that is being reviewed, and at some point it is hoped that we'll be able to get back to what we all enjoyed many, many years ago in terms of what we know the world to be. So I thank the hon. member, and I do know that it's something that is of keen interest to the Solicitor General as well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to say at the outset that I missed the minister's introductory remarks. Had I been in attendance at the time, I'm sure it would have spared me asking the minister some questions, but he will forgive me if I therefore ask some questions that he may have already addressed either in his initial introduction or in some of the questions that were posed to him by some other members on this side of the House in the last hour or so.

Let me first of all thank the minister for giving detailed answers. I was watching and listening to him as he was trying to address some questions in the last little while and was pleased to see a minister pay attention to some detail with respect to the questions asked and then answer them.

I just want to start with making a reference to the business plans of the ministry. On pages 312 and 313 in the business plan I noticed that the ministry outlines its business plan, features its business plan setting, and then outlines some risks and challenges. One of those challenges that caught my attention in particular that's outlined here is the limits to growth. The statement related to limits to growth says that the capacity of all orders of government and partners to deliver services to Albertans could be strained by increasing growth and bottlenecks to growth. Municipalities continue to face financial pressures for repair or replacement of existing infrastructure. Some municipal assessment bases are declining while others face rapid growth pressures. Municipalities continue to express concern that current funding levels and revenue sources may not be adequate to meet service or infrastructure demands.

So that's the first one. I think it's a fair statement, acknowledgment of some of the bottlenecks and challenges that the ministry faces. Obviously, once it's acknowledged that there are these challenges, then one looks for some attempts either in the budget or in other budget documents to see if any solutions are proposed or outlined in a plan, which could be a multiyear plan, in which to address that.

Now, those limits to growth parallel in an interesting way some of the observations that are made in the TD Economics Special Report of April 22, 2003.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I regret to interject here, but once again the noise level in this Assembly is very, very high. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has the floor. Can you please kindly accord him the due courtesy to be able to speak.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that. I was finding it hard to in fact communicate with the minister through both eye contact and through voice in watching other members engage in, I'm sure, interesting conversation, but it certainly was distracting. Thank you.

The Calgary-Edmonton Corridor report is the one that I'm referring to here for the minister's attention. On page 25 I read in the report challenge 4, that's mentioned there, urban sprawl. I think I don't need to go into what urban sprawl means. We have seen both the cities of Edmonton and Calgary grow outwards very rapidly, moving into former rural areas and taking over agricultural land and creating the need for new roads, new sewers, thereby creating tremendous new pressures on the cities to provide services associated with suburban growth.

The adverse impacts of the sprawl are outlined in this report quite clearly, and I want to just draw attention to some of them by reading from the report. It says that the adverse impact of sprawl on a society is considerable. Because public transit is relatively expensive in low-density suburban areas, sprawl contributes to increased reliance on roads, worsening overall transit problems, and increased congestion and pollution.

Then it goes on to talk about how the urban density in Calgary and Edmonton compared to some other cities is quite low, including Ottawa, and how it puts new and very expensive pressures on the cities for providing the infrastructure needed for this kind of sprawl.

I want to ask the minister what his response is to this. He acknowledges himself in the business plan the challenges to growth that cities face, and what he says is certainly supported strongly by the TD report. So the question is: where is the action plan that the minister can draw our attention to in his business plan or in the budget? In both documents there has to be some relationship with respect to how to address these challenges.

In the next section in the TD report on page 26 challenge 5 is "infrastructure bursting at the seams." Again, the report draws attention to the deteriorating condition of roads and crumbling sidewalks, and I can certainly speak to that with respect to my experience in my own neighbourhood in the city of Edmonton. Some of those are quite visible. The observation made by the author of this report is: "the need to build extends to virtually all types of infrastructure, including transit, water, waste water, bridges and buildings" et cetera. The author continues to say, "Unfortunately, there are few studies that estimate the overall investment required to rehabilitate the aging infrastructure and to support its growth." Mention is made there of Edmonton's investment of $3.2 billion. Calgary's numbers are not available to the writer, so they're not mentioned.

I wonder if the ministry has such an estimate with respect to the infrastructure deficit that our municipalities are faced with given the investment in infrastructure over the last 10 years both in terms of its maintenance and additions to it and given both the growth in population and the urban sprawl around our cities and municipalities, what his department's estimate is and how the minister proposes to address that challenge. I'm trying to find some numbers here that would speak to that particular problem and challenge, but unfortunately I'm unsuccessful in finding any real commitment in terms of dollars and cents to that.

The author concludes that section on infrastructure bursting at the seams by drawing attention to the fact that while the strains on the infrastructure foundation in the Corridor may be tolerable at the moment, the economic and social cost of not replacing the infrastructure will begin to mount quickly, weighing on the quality of life of the residents. An eroding transportation system and congestion could soon lead to costs in the hundreds of millions of dollars in lost time and impeded trade flows, not to mention an increasing toll on the health of the residents.

So there are several very important observations here that I wanted to draw the minister's attention to, observations that are made by the TD report with respect to what needs to be done, among other things, in the area of municipal development.

Without going through the several line items here in the budget document under programs, I would request the minister to perhaps address those, and then once I've heard the minister address those questions, I'll have a few others. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutillier: Yeah. Thank you very much, and I thank the hon. member for some very good questions as well relative to the Municipal Affairs budget estimates. I would like to first and foremost acknowledge that I certainly appreciate his advice and help on many of the things we've dealt with, I might also say, as a former professor at the University of Alberta. The municipal excellence program that we're working on with the dean of the School of Business and local government services is something that's working very well.

What I would like to say ever so briefly is that, as you know, the Minister of Finance released and tabled in this Assembly the budget, and clearly that budget is without question dealing with some of the municipal infrastructure pressures that we're having. I want to say to the hon. member that the feedback I'm receiving from the municipal leaders – the 1,944 councillors, mayors, and Reeves that make up the municipal bodies within Alberta have expressed, certainly without question, to the Minister of Finance and to the government how pleased they are with how we're dealing with some of the infrastructure programs.

What I would like to do, though, is specifically deal with MIMS, which is an acronym that we use for the municipal infrastructure management system. We're increasing this program by just under a million dollars, and the reason why is because we're inventorying, we're working with municipalities. It's about a 9.4 percent increase in our budget this year, a line item. This ultimately is dealing with the issue of our extended support program and our municipal infrastructure management system program.

The hon. member I know is aware that in the Ministry of Transportation our $60 per capita has been announced again dealing with transportation infrastructure, and also the 5 cents a litre to both the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, making up two-thirds of our population, continues to go forward. It's interesting to note that the mayor of Toronto, the mayor of Montreal, the mayor of Quebec City, and the mayor of Vancouver are all extremely envious of what Alberta offers to our cities, something that they could only dream of. I want to say that this all is part and parcel, hand in glove of dealing with the issue of municipal infrastructure. So I would like to take the opportunity to recognize how important those initiatives are in the budget estimates for this year.

The hon. member also talked about limits to growth. I would say that these are examples of how we're dealing with limits to growth, but also I would like to make reference to the issue about smart growth. The member may be aware – and I'm quite certain he probably is – but I would like to reiterate what I mentioned earlier tonight. In dealing with the issue of smart growth the ministry is and will continue to increase its focus on the development of policies which enable municipalities to better manage continued growth, update land use policies which will incorporate smart growth strategies and principles that will continue to allow municipalities to better deal with increasing growth pressures and bottlenecks.

If I could, just for a moment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford also sits on our Roles, Responsibilities and Resources, and one of the products that you're going to be seeing coming to this Assembly in the weeks and months ahead is enabling legislation to deal with the exact question that the hon. member has asked dealing with growth.

You may not be aware, but in the Municipal Government Act today it says that municipalities have the authority to deal with issues of water, storm, and sewer. There has been a municipal practice over the last 50 years where they also are able to capture dollars working in partnership with developers to deal with roadways. What we are proposing to do based on stakeholder support is to look at: how do we grow the pie and grow the pie smartly, and how are we going to be able to do that? We don't want to see developments being put on hold because municipalities do not have the infrastructure wherewithal to be able to deal with it. So what I'm very pleased to say is that developers, homebuilders are working closely with municipalities.

The ultimate role and responsibility of the Ministry of Municipal Affairs is to deal with the authority, but what I'm pleased to say is that one of the products of roles and responsibilities will be this enabling legislation in terms of how to allow municipalities to better meet the growth, to deal with roadways, and at the same time provide that opportunity of their continuing to negotiate and to partner with developers. Many of the former Reeves, mayors, and councillors that sit in this Assembly are very much aware of the negotiation that goes on between developers who want to come to a community and how they negotiate with the particular developers and homebuilders who want to invest in their community. That takes place not at the ministry level. We provide the overall umbrella of authority, but we're looking at enhancing it through this enabling legislation. I want to say that that is certainly without question a very important product of the roles, responsibilities, and resources committee that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford participates in as well as the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne as well as the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

I would like to say that as we go forward with the smart growth pressures, I think it's going to be very, very important to continue to grow the pie but to grow the pie by working together. Rather than forcing anything on anyone, it is really about working hand in hand with your neighbours. It's interesting; the mayor of Calgary had made comment relative to the fact that they have developments now in Calgary - Symons Valley is one of them - where in fact they're on hold, where no one benefits. The developer has land that's tied up; the city cannot issue a development permit because of the fact that there's not enough wherewithal. So this enabling legislation would be able to accommodate that, and really what it would be doing is validating a code of practice that has been going on for years and years and years. But it really is about meeting, as the hon. member has mentioned, the incredible infrastructure pressures in growing communities that are taking place across Alberta.

You know, one of the surprises that I think we all see today is that the Alberta economy hasn't slowed down in the last 10 years. Eventually, we always think we can catch our breath, but the fact is that we continue to meet the demands based on the many people that come to Alberta who don't bring their highways or their roads or their schools or their hospitals as has been mentioned by many members in this Assembly. But at the same time we're meeting the growing demands working in partnership with municipalities.

I hope I have addressed the questions that the hon. member has asked. With that, I will take my seat. If I've missed anything, I apologize, and at this time if I have missed any questions, please feel free to reiterate. I was trying to write as quickly as possible, but I don't take shorthand as well as I should. I'll endeavour to answer any other questions the hon. member may have or anyone else may have, even from my side.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the minister for addressing some of the questions. The question is: am I satisfied? I think there's a big question mark there, but certainly I appreciate the minister attempting to address some of the questions.

A couple of other questions that I have for the minister I again draw from the TD Economics report, although the observations made there are not new. We have raised questions on those issues in the House before. Let me go back to that Calgary-Edmonton Corridor report, where again the report says:

Above all, there were no new revenue sources or tools added to municipalities' arsenal. Instead, the provincial government's decision to raise the education portion of property taxes in its 2003 budget will put pressure on local governments to significantly restrain increases in municipal property taxes over the near term.

This is on page 34. We have been saying that over and over again over the last week, with no satisfactory explanation either from the minister or from other members of the government as to why the government has all of a sudden chosen to change that policy so dramatically.

The Edmonton Journal draws attention to the same thing, that last year the government in fact did decide to lower by one percentage point the school levy tax rate to offset the increase in real estate values. This year the government makes the exact opposite argument, that because the property values have gone up, it's going to freeze the mill rate, and if that means drawing more revenues out of the municipalities into the government coffers, so be it. It makes no sense, and certainly the TD report supports the position that we have taken in the House that the government ought not to have done it. There's still time for the government to reverse itself on it and put that $100 million back in the hands of municipalities for them to be able to use to either develop new infrastructure or invest that money into green energy alternatives or conservation measures. So what's the minister's response to that one?

The report also suggests that allowing municipalities new powers to tax is important. To avoid an increase in the overall tax burden, the province would need to free up fiscal room by lowering taxes. Suggested revenue sources of municipalities include, of course, gasoline tax, hotel tax, restaurant tax, and car rental tax. I want the position of the minister on that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you. I apologize on the Toronto-Dominion report. Actually, I had the pleasure of meeting Derek Burlington on Bay Street just a few months ago. In fact, when he had called me, he was very interested in a role or responsibility because as he indicated to us, it was the first of its kind in Canada, recognizing that Alberta is not only out in front of every other province, but we're around the corner in terms of what the permissiveness of the Municipal Government Act is. I actually give credit to my predecessor . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates unless there are no members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the two hours, I must now put the question on the proposed estimates for the Department of Municipal Affairs for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$133,703,000
--	---------------

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following

Municipal Affairs: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $133,703,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

Securities Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Well, thank you, Chair. I appreciate that. It's great for me to be back here in Committee of the Whole to have this discussion. I did have some questions from the members for Edmonton-Ellerslie and Edmonton-Centre that I would like to quickly answer that they asked in second reading, and hopefully that will move this through the process quickly tonight.

One of the questions that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie had asked during second reading was in regard to the fact that the federal government has put together a committee and why we were not part of that process. Mr. Chairman, we chose not to be involved in that process because securities regulation is a provincial jurisdiction. With the Minister of Revenue for the province here what we have done is we have actually created another group across the country through the ministers of finance or revenue that are responsible for securities law, and what they're doing is going through the process to make sure that there is a harmonization going on. So that process is going on. I think that what they will do is they will take the information from the federal committee and use that if there are some good things that come out of that. So we look forward to hearing what comes out of the federal committee and working it in with what the Revenue minister is putting together as well.

The second main question that the Edmonton-Ellerslie member had asked was in regard to corporate boards and for the Alberta Securities Commission to have more power over corporate boards. With some of the major scandals that have gone on in the last couple of years, especially in the U.S., we're seeing a lot of changes in governance through the SEC in the United States, which is their main securities commission, and we are looking to see how we align our decision-making to be similar to that and making sure that we have a better control or better understanding from the Securities Commission level on publicly-traded companies. So that is being taken care of. We will see that happening in the changes here, and I think that's a very positive thing that the Securities Commission will be able to make happen.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre had also asked a few questions, again, around the harmonization. I think what we will see, as I mentioned before somewhere in my first answer to Edmonton-Ellerslie, is that the harmonization will happen through the process that the Minister of Revenue is working on, and we will take the information into consideration in regard to what comes out of the federal committee.

I had one more question from the Member for Edmonton-Centre as well, and this was dealing with how the funds collected from the administrative penalties were spent. Currently moneys received from administrative penalties cannot be used for normal operating expenses, Mr. Chairman, but rather must be used for the enhancement of the Alberta capital markets. They've been used in the form of education for investors and for market participants, along that line. So that's the main focus of where it's been, and by putting the money back into those areas we believe that we will have a public better educated to understand how to use the markets. That is a good piece of it.

There was one more question, and it was in regard to the registration section. It's also being amended, and it's eliminating the clause that lists the criteria that have to be met before the registration of a person or a company can take effect, so she was wondering about what would happen now. This provision is being amended to facilitate the move to electronic filing, Mr. Chairman, of applications for registration, renewal reinstatement, or amendments to registration with the establishment of the national registration database, the NRD, later this spring. So what this will do is really speed it up and make the securities much more effective. We're looking forward to seeing that happen.

One of the complaints from companies that have been registering and trying to become new companies out there today is the length of time that it's taking to look at the directors, to check them out, and that's all part of a process that happens through the Ontario Securities Commission as well as the Alberta Securities Commission, the B.C. Securities Commission, and so on. So this process of being on-line is going to hopefully speed that up, and we will see the ability to get companies up and running in a much more timely manner.

Mr. Chairman, with those comments I will sit down and see what we can do in moving toward the questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly it was with interest that I listened to the answers to the questions that were earlier put before this House by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I appreciate the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View's response. Certainly when – and the hon. member touched on that earlier – we consider some of the difficulties that have occurred, unfortunately, and as a result the lack of confidence investors can have in corporate governance in North America, perhaps this bill is of considerable merit and should be endorsed or supported by as many members of this Assembly as possible.

Now, does this bill provide the greatest amount of protection for investors as possible? This certainly remains to be seen. Does this bill as it's drafted allow Albertans improved access to capital markets? I would like further explanation from the hon. member as to precisely how this bill is going to improve access to capital markets. Certainly, when we consider that this bill is part of the ongoing project between securities commissions across the country to harmonize Canada's securities regulatory system, if this bill represents the initial phase of these changes, then why are we going in this direction? Is there not an interest in working with the federal government more?

I know other people have asked if this bill or these legislative changes may not be premature and if we should wait until the federal Minister of Finance reports. But when you look at what has gone on and why investors would be cautious, the hon. member may be doing more than was initially attempted here, and that is to improve investor confidence by providing greater protection for investors and also allowing Alberta businesses improved access. Now, how this is going to work I will wait and hear the explanation myself. Certainly to streamline or to make regulatory environments more efficient is noteworthy, but it cannot be at the expense of investor confidence, and investors are sick and tired of the word "reinstatement" on financial annual reports. It doesn't bode well. It didn't work for Enron. It didn't work for WorldCom and several others.

Now, if you look at the collapse of Enron, investor confidence has been shattered across the world. It doesn't matter whether it's a Japanese investor, a European investor, or an American investor. And it's so important for the Americans because their economic prosperity is based on foreign investment in their country. Up to this time there has been a fairly good return for that investment, but now that is not the case. When we're debating this provincial legislation, that confidence affects us because the Americans were our largest trading partner, and they are growing even larger because of their thirst for our energy products.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the collapse of Enron, as an example, illustrates the various loopholes that existed under securities legislation and tax evasion schemes that not only Enron but other companies and certainly Arthur Anderson could and did use, unfortunately, to deceive shareholders. If you can't look at a company's annual report before you invest and have confidence in the numbers there, then our entire system is jeopardized. If there's a silver lining behind the dark cloud in the collapse of Enron, it would be this. It raised awareness among investors and stakeholders that something had to be done and that there had to be changes made.

Securities commissions. The hon. member mentioned them earlier in his remarks. Securities commissions, the SEC and others but mostly in the United States, began to make small changes that would hopefully prevent another Enron from occurring, but last summer WorldCom collapsed. Others may have touched on this subject in this Assembly, but this cannot repeat itself, Mr. Chairman. The collapse of WorldCom was even more spectacular and shed light on even larger loopholes that existed in the electricity market. We look at others in the electricity and the energy markets and at some of the shenanigans that were going on. I think this episode or episodes was a reminder to us all that regulations are important, and not only are they important, but we must adhere to them.

Now, once a sham is discovered, the stock plummets to next to nothing, and you can have, as an example, some good stocks that are caught up with the bad. I'm told that Calpine is one of those stocks that is undervalued just because of the lack of confidence people can have or investors can have in the energy sector. By the energy sector I mean the electricity-generating sector and some of the natural gas marketers, not every one but some. Everyone, unfortunately, is being tarred with the brush here, Mr. Chairman. The Americans have gone to great lengths to try to restore confidence. You can have all the legislation in the world, but the passage of time is going to be needed to restore investor confidence.

You know, we have new investment vehicles all the time, and I'm curious at this time in committee, Mr. Chairman, how they're going to be affected, if at all, by Bill 14. We look at income trusts, and they certainly have surged in popularity in Canada and are being offered even on the New York Stock Exchange as antidotes to shrinking stock portfolios and tiny fixed-income returns. Hon. members of this Assembly, those who have laptop computers, could certainly look at the Canadian Oil Sands trust and their annual report or their quarterly report that's on there if you'd like to have a look at an income trust in this province. The income trusts generally provide rich income streams, as high-yield bonds do, but the trusts are actually equity investments, and their value, as I understand it, can change. Some of these changes can be dramatic, and the payouts – I don't know how this will work here for Bill 14 – are not in any way, shape, or form guaranteed.

Now, despite these shifts a number of investors in Canada have been drawn to these income trusts because of the prospect of high yields that are consistent over a period of time. When we consider that a large number of baby boom investors are nearing retirement, they're looking for stability of income. Some investment advisers have stated that baby boomers may be more attracted to this sort of structure because if they are to invest in stocks, they may not be able to wait the long period of time to acquire or to attain capital gains.

What role is this Securities Amendment Act going to play in these income trusts in Alberta? You know, we mentioned energy income trusts, real estate income trusts. There are many forms of this investment vehicle. How many people in this Assembly would know that the Fording Canadian Coal Trust controls North America's biggest exporter of coal for making steel? This trust, as I understand, replaced Fording common stock as part of a merger with two other Canadian coal producers. Fording's shares closed last week, I believe, at a little over $19, roughly the level at which they were listed.

Now, there are three other Canadian trusts – the Enerplus Resources Fund, the Pengrowth Energy Trust, and the PrimeWest Energy Trust – that have a listing in New York City. There were more than a hundred trusts set up in Canada in the last two years. They account for 57 percent of the value of new listings on the Toronto Stock Exchange, and I understand that the trusts account for about 7 percent of the market value of the Standard & Poor's Toronto Stock Exchange composite index. Canadian income trusts were initially confined, as I understand it, largely to the oil and gas and the real estate sectors but are being set up now in industries such as food processing, cheque printing, telecommunications, and horticulture. Some of the most suitable candidates, naturally, would be well-established businesses with stable cash flow that is not required for new capital investment.

Now, there are those that warn, and these are some individuals from BMO Nesbitt Burns in Calgary that say, and I quote: beware of businesses with significant reinvestment needs. Again I have to question Bill 14, the Securities Amendment Act. How much, if any, enhanced protection do we have for Alberta investors in these trusts?

These trusts, as I understand it, are sort of unique to Canada. They receive very little time or attention from other investors. There are various reasons for this: the small size of most of the offerings. Research indicates that typically these offerings are around 250 million Canadian dollars each. Because of uncertainties of investing in foreign securities, other nationals, in this case Americans, may be reluctant to invest in them. Is Bill 14 going to encourage American investment in these trusts? Will this bill ensure that as we proceed along with income trusts, there will be a greater number of foreign investors participating in this investment vehicle? What will we do here with Bill 14 to see that that happens? It's going to be interesting to see. As I understand it, American companies have not formed income trusts because they would be regulated as mutual funds with strict reporting requirements and limits on the fees that are paid.

When we look at changing business conditions and the fact that some investors may not be as aware or as sophisticated as others, how will Bill 14, we have to question in committee, protect those investors that may not be as interested in checking out income trusts as others? What are we going to do to ensure, not only for energy income trusts but for real estate and for various other industries that are being set up in this form, that Bill 14 can protect? I think it is important, Mr. Chairman, if this is going to be an investment vehicle that's going to grow for whatever reason, whether it be tax law or tax savings as a result of tax law, that these trusts are fully valued and that they are mechanisms for Albertans and Canadians to invest their money. When we look at the provincial jurisdiction here, we want to ensure that regardless of what kind of investment it is, there is public confidence.

In conclusion, I would remind all members of this House that since the federal Minister of Finance struck a committee and there is talk of harmonizing and reforming securities commissions across Canada, perhaps we should table this legislation until the federal Parliament has an opportunity to make their suggestions after their consultation process.

Now, before I conclude, I do have one question in regard to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View's remarks, and I'll perhaps have to get it on the record later.

Thank you.

Bill 16
Agricultural Dispositions Statutes
Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes, Mr. Chair. It is indeed a pleasure to speak this evening to Bill 16, the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. At this time I would like to propose an amendment, and I will give all members an opportunity to get a copy of the bill and to read it.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just hold for a minute until the amendment is at least brought to the table.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. I will. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The amendment is being circulated. We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, you may proceed.

Mr. Bonner: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am proposing amendment A1 to the Agricultural Dispositions Statutes Amendment Act, and in moving this amendment, I would like it to be amended as follows: in section 2(3) in the proposed section 1.1 by striking out "within the meaning of the regulations under section 62.1 of the Public Lands Act" and substituting "within the meaning of section 62.1 of the Public Lands Act and the regulations under that section."

As well, in section 3(23) in the proposed section 62.1 by adding the following after (1). Section 1.1 would read: "Access to an agricultural disposition by foot for recreational purposes shall not be restricted in the regulations under this section."

Now, then, in proposing these amendments to the bill, the purpose of the amendment is to ensure that hikers and the like are not restricted from an agricultural disposition. The idea here is not to allow hunting per se on these dispositions. Rather, the goal of the amendment here is to allow Martha and Henry to go for a walk on these lands. This would be done at their own risk and also at their own liability. This whole amendment is designed to take hiking and walking out of regulations and put it in the legislation. The reason for this is the fact that it is certainly not open to interpretation, and as well it will be clearly defined so that all members in the Assembly will know what they are voting on, and this will not be left up to the whims of those making the regulations.

Now, then, part A of the amendment changes the wording around to reflect that this is part of the act and not the regulations. Again, for the reasons I stated, we would like the legislation to indicate our proposed purpose.

Part B basically lays out that people entering an agricultural disposition for the purpose of hiking, et cetera, would be considered recreational users. Again, these are excellent amendments because it will allow those people who are simply out for a walk and are not intending to hunt on that land to certainly have the freedom to use that land for those purposes at their own risk.

I would urge all members to support this amendment. It's a very good amendment, and it is an amendment that will strengthen this bill. With that, I will cede the floor to see what other members have to say in regard to these amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Health Information Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Bill 10, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2003, is certainly legislation that comes to mind as not being without controversy. When we look even as recently as February of this year, the Alberta Information and Privacy Commissioner issued a report on the investigation into a complaint regarding disclosure and collection of health information. So the whole issue of health information, its collection and disclosure, is certainly very important to Albertans.

We look at this bill and this idea of removing the need for health professionals to proactively gain consent from patients prior to disclosing their health records via electronic means. Also, when we consider that we are going to provide authority for custodians to provide access to and disclosure of health records and information of deceased individuals, we have to approach all of this with a great deal of caution, to say the least. To explain this bill, we have to divide it or look at the issues and the purposes of these issues.

What exactly are we proposing here in removing the need for health professionals to gain consent to disclose electronic health information? Now, Mr. Chairman, patients are not the only ones that are potentially harmed by a confidentiality or a security breach. Health care providers who have been shown to be responsible for such breaches through the actions of their employees have on occasion been successfully sued and subject to administrative penalties or sanctions. Now, health care providers must recognize that maintaining their patients' confidentiality is a matter of trust and an important factor in maintaining good public relations and a good public reputation.

Now, what are the implications of a confidentiality breach? Just why should we be so concerned in this province about confidentiality? Should patients expect to give away some of their privacy whenever they seek, you know, consultation from a doctor or treatment at a hospital? I don't think so. But to the extent that information is shared so that the government in this case can pay the bill, it is important. I have to remind the Assembly that patients can be harmed by careless or inappropriate disclosures of health information. When the government is proposing to withdraw section 59, which removes the requirement of health professionals to get patients' consent before information can be shared through electronic means, I get concerned.

Maybe all this, Mr. Chairman, is hypothetical; maybe it's not. Could a banker, for instance, cross-reference a list of sick patients or cancer patients against a list of outstanding loans at his or her bank and then call in the loans? This is just one example of something that could go wrong. That's only one example. I'm looking forward to continuing not only as freedom of information and protection of privacy critic, and this is, I believe, a companion piece of legislation to that act. I'm going to look forward to participating in debate later on.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would, please, like to adjourn debate on Bill 10, the Health Information Amendment Act, 2003.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 14 and Bill 16.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Government House Leader, I presume that you also meant to report progress on Bill 10.

Mr. Hancock: And progress on Bill 10.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 14 and Bill 16. The committee reports progress on Bill 10. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:46 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 24, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/24

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen. Please be seated.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. What a distinct pleasure and honour it is for me today to rise and announce the presence of students from Bev Facey high school. It is a very solid academic high school with other specialty programs for the children of Sherwood Park and the region of Strathcona county. I'd like to welcome their teachers Mr. Barclay Spady and Mr. Allan Milne. Would they please rise and this Assembly give them the warm welcome they deserve.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 11 students who are joining us in the public gallery. They are from NorQuest College, and they're accompanied today by their instructor Mr. Bruce Huebener. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege today to stand and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature Gordon and Lorraine Tocher. They're from Hinton, and they've been very concerned this spring about the cost of their energy bills out there. They came in today to watch the petition that they circulated be tabled later on in the day. I would like to ask them to stand today and have the House give them a warm welcome.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce today to you and through you to members of the Assembly three visitors from Janssen-Ortho Incorporated: Mr. Jim Mitchell, president of Janssen-Ortho, a member of the Johnson & Johnson group of Canadian companies; Judy Keyser, who's the regional director from Bragg Creek, Alberta; and Michael Lohner, well known to members of this Assembly, a regional manager who is from the city of Edmonton. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very important person in my life. She's a single parent, an education student with the U of A program, and a part-time receptionist with Summit Strategies in Red Deer. She's my daughter, and she's a great mom and a great daughter. I would ask Krystin to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Natural Gas Rebates

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, temperatures have warmed up, but the discontent Albertans feel over high energy costs has not cooled off. At the appropriate time we will table another 2,343 signatures to a petition demanding natural gas rebates, bringing the total number of Albertans that have signed this petition to over 7,500. One thousand, five hundred and fifty-six of today's signatures came from the Hinton-Jasper-Edson area. All this winter we've listened to the Premier dismiss our calls for natural gas rebates as Liberal negativity. My question is to the Premier. Does the Premier plan to dismiss the 1,556 voters in Hinton, Edson, and Jasper as being negative when they demand these rebates that this Premier promised during the 2001 election and express their discontent with the government's current energy policy?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's reasonable to assume that people are discontent when they have to pay high prices. People are discontent with the premiums they pay for insurance, especially car insurance, and that's going to be a big issue. People are discontent when they have to pay high mortgage rates, high interest rates, and indeed that was the case back in the '80s when interest rates reached 19, 20, 21, 22 percent. People are upset when natural gas prices go up. That's why we put in place a reasonably thought out, intelligently thought out rebate program that averages the price of natural gas over a one-year period and sets a price of $5.50 a gigajoule. If that $5.50 average price is reached, then the trigger is pulled and the rebates kick in.

Dr. Nicol: My question to the Premier: does the Premier not recognize the difference between discontent over market-driven prices and prices that are because of a broken promise that he made to Albertans that he would protect them from natural gas increases?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this was not a broken promise. They were not on the campaign trail with me. Mind you, they had some of their functionaries follow me around to try and bug me but to no avail obviously, because we have 74 and they have seven. But they have no idea. They weren't at my campaign rallies. Maybe they were. If they wanted to see how it's really done, maybe they were.

What I said that we would do during that time – and that was a time of extremely high gas prices – is we would bring in a program to shield Albertans. It wouldn't be on an ad hoc basis; it would be on a sustainable basis. That's exactly what we did. You know, Mr. Speaker, these people are misleading the Alberta public because the regulations pursuant to the rebate program were made in August, publicly announced, put on the Internet, the government web page, not the Liberal web page obviously, for all people to see and to learn about. But to say that people didn't know is absolutely wrong. We went to great lengths to inform people of the regulations relative to the terms and conditions of the rebate program.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: will the Premier not admit that the regulations put on that web site were way different than the trigger point that was based on your analogy of a thermostat when you passed that legislation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the hon. member to go back first of all to the election and quote me on any trigger price or any specific program other than to say that we would develop a program. The legislation was thoroughly debated on the floor of this Legislative Assembly. They supported the bill. The Liberals supported the bill. The Liberals supported the legislation. Now, in a way that – I know it's unparliamentary – could be construed as hypocritical, they stand up and say, "Oh, the legislation was all wrong," when they supported it at the time. They have to stand up and admit that. They supported the legislation, and the regulations associated with that legislation were well publicized so that people would know the terms and the conditions of this very sustainable rebate program.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, we supported the legislation based on his analogy of a thermostat, not the regulations that were passed.

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: My second question. In Alberta expectations of our education system are high, which is why we're disappointed when not as many students as we'd hoped finish high school or go on to postsecondary studies. These are warning signs to the government that if they want one of North America's best education systems, they'd better find out how much funding is enough to deliver that. To the Premier: is your education funding enough to ensure that 90 percent of 18 year olds graduate from high school?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can't answer the question right now because our budgets are predicated on what we reasonably expect in terms of K to 12 education and postsecondary education, but I'm sure that these are questions that will be put to the learning commission. One of the questions to be posed to the learning commission, I presume, is that of funding and the adequacy of funding and the whole issue of dropout rates and how people proceed to postsecondary institutions, not just universities but NAIT, SAIT, Grant MacEwan College, Mount Royal, Lakeland, Grande Prairie College, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge College, and so on. I can tell the hon. member that it goes without saying that we do have the best educated workforce in Canada. We have all the opportunities available for people to proceed to postsecondary education. As I understand it, there is such pressure on the part of the labour market to get people into the workforce that a lot of people leave high school, go into the workforce, then at a later age go to university.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in my own case, you know – this is many, many years ago – I dropped out of high school, went back, tried to get as much of my education as I possibly could, and I'm going to university right now, as we speak. I'm 60 years old, so am I classed as one of those people? Well, I feel good about going to university. I wish I could have gone when the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition was a young man and went to university. I wish I could have gone then, but I had to wait until I was 60 years old. But, you know, in all that time I learned a lot that I could apply.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the Premier just spoke about dropouts. Is your education funding enough to ensure that our high school dropout rate falls from the current 13 percent to the target of 5 percent?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of concern. As I said, the learning commission will look at this because this indeed is one of the major issues related to education. Certainly, we have identified lifelong learning as a priority of this government, and lifelong learning starts with learning not only at my age but the ability to continue from high school through postsecondary education. If it is a problem, we will address that problem as a government as best we possibly can.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: is your education funding enough to ensure that over 60 percent of our high school students get a chance to go on to some kind of postsecondary education?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we believe it is. Yes.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of local boards losing their ability to tax, school funding adequacy has become a problem. Boards may no longer make up provincial government shortfalls in support by turning to local ratepayers, and as a result school boards across the province, including three of the four largest urban boards in the province, are facing deficits. My questions are to the Premier. Why, if a 2 percent instructional-based budget increase was deemed sufficient, are boards across the province projecting such deficits?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday in this Legislative Assembly, that is purely speculative. The budgets of the school boards have not been confirmed. The budget we presented as a government was predicated on the best estimates available to us relative to sustaining the education system. I would remind the hon. member that subject to a plebiscite school boards still have the potential to raise an additional 3 percent through property tax through a local requisition, but that of course depends on the mood and the will of the ratepayers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the Premier: what does the Premier suggest that schools who are setting school budgets as we meet in this Legislature – they're setting them right now, Mr. Premier – are to do to avoid teacher layoffs and increased class sizes?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, basically, most of those school board budgets I think are set in May. They may need to find out who's going to retire, what their staff requirements are going to be, what their student growth is going to be. There are a number of factors that need to be considered, including what we have set in our own budget to accommodate education, so it's too early to speculate and to make statements or assertions relative to what might or might not happen with respect to the various school districts.

Dr. Massey: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given that boards have no funds to replace retiring teachers, leading to further increases in class size, how is this seen as a solution to the inadequate funding?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know. I don't get involved in the day-to-day operations of the 61 or 62 or 63 school boards, but certainly when people retire from the system at maximum salary, it stands to reason that they will hire young, bright, educated teachers coming out of university at starting salaries. I mean, that is simple math, and that's the way it should be done unless the school board has a policy – and I would hope that they don't have a policy – of hiring nothing but top-of-the-scale teachers. I would think that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, especially coming from Lethbridge, where they have one of the finest faculties of education, would support wholeheartedly the hiring of young graduates coming out of the University of Lethbridge and into the system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome and West Nile Virus

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's public health system is facing the twin challenges of the ongoing SARS outbreak and the likely arrival of the West Nile virus. Years of funding restraint and an ongoing shortage of health care professionals have left Alberta's public health system stretched and hard-pressed to respond to these twin emergencies. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why has the government this year increased by only 1 percent its spending on health protection, promotion, and prevention when these programs are key to dealing with SARS and West Nile virus outbreaks?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I want to say first of all that our public health officials have an outstanding track record in this province. For some number of years we have been anticipating a pandemic influenza coming. We don't know when and we don't know exactly where, but it's coming. As a consequence, some number of years ago we started to work on a plan to ensure that we can deal with issues of communicable diseases including things like SARS.

Now, if anybody wants to test how well that's worked, look at our experience with meningitis, Mr. Speaker. We were the first province in Canada to react appropriately to provide a vaccine that protected our young people against meningitis. So we don't have anything to be ashamed about, and in fact we should be very proud of the public health system, that has been so responsive to things like meningitis and will be to SARS.

With respect to SARS, Mr. Speaker, there were five suspected cases of SARS in the province of Alberta. I am happy to report to this Assembly, to Albertans that all five people have recovered completely. We never did have a probable case of SARS, nor did we ever have a confirmed case of SARS, and as of today there has not been a new SARS case reported for the last 21 days. So we've dealt with SARS appropriately, although we remain vigilant in all circumstances with respect to SARS.

With respect to West Nile virus we have not had a single case of West Nile virus here in the province of Alberta. There have been two Albertans that contracted West Nile virus from another place and then came back to Alberta, and I can say that those two people have also recovered from their virus. So we are vigilant, Mr. Speaker. We do have a plan in place. We do take the health of the people of Alberta very, very seriously, and we do an excellent job.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, whose answer is very, very worrisome because it's very complacent: why is the government allowing the provincial health authorities to spend up to a million dollars on newspaper, radio, and TV ads putting their spin on the nurses' negotiations when that money could well have been used far better in strengthening the capacity of Alberta's public health system to respond to the twin challenges of SARS and West Nile virus?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have taken appropriate measures with respect to SARS, with respect to West Nile virus. Today – and perhaps the hon. member is not aware of this – we did announce a program with respect to West Nile virus, our response to it, some $2.5 million, working in collaboration with the department of environmental protection and the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. We do have a response program where we are co-ordinated in a very serious way with all of our regional health authorities, who have also devoted resources to this, for monitoring and surveillance of the presence of West Nile virus. When West Nile virus does come to Alberta – and we expect that it will sometime this summer – we're ready just like we were ready with meningitis.

Dr. Pannu: A final question to the minister, Mr. Speaker: why is the government attacking our frontline health care workers by passing punitive legislation like Bill 27 at the very time – at the very time – that we most need these health professionals to deal with these challenges of SARS and West Nile virus?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we place a great deal of value on our health care professionals in the province of Alberta. We have an outstanding system in this province. Again, don't take my word for it. Look at the results from the Canadian Institute for Health Information. Look at the results from Maclean's magazine. Look at what has been said about our health care system by Senator Kirby or by former Premier Romanow about how outstanding a system we have in this province. It is in large measure because of the frontline people who dedicate themselves to the benefit of Albertans for the purposes of delivering a health care system that provides Albertans what they need when they need it at an appropriate place and time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Safety of Police and Emergency Workers

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recently had the opportunity to attend a meeting of the Alberta Federation of Police Associations where I heard concerns about the safety of its members when in contact with individuals with transmittable diseases. I heard that in many situations after the police make an arrest, there is concern that the officer may have been exposed to a transmittable disease such as AIDS. They have no way of knowing whether or not they should seek medical attention. Ontario recently passed legislation requiring blood samples to be taken whenever emergency response personnel believe they may have been contaminated with a transmittable disease. Alberta police would like to see similar legislation passed in Alberta. My question is to the Solicitor General. What is your department doing to address this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Solicitor General I believe that this is a logical request and one that I support. I believe that the health and safety of the men and women who put their lives at risk for us should be our collective priority. Ontario legislation comes into effect on May 1, and it allows the local medical officer of health to order blood samples from someone who accidentally or deliberately exposes a frontline emergency worker, victim of crime, or Good Samaritan to his or her bodily fluids. We'll be keeping a close eye on how this issue unfolds in Ontario. I'll be discussing the matter with my Ontario counterpart, and I'll be working with the minister of health on this particular issue. However, this is a complex issue. It requires that we balance privacy issues with public health and personal protection. While the confidentiality of patient records is important, so too are the lives and health of our emergency workers.

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is also to the Solicitor General. What steps can police, corrections officers, and emergency workers take to protect themselves now?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, thank you. It's a good policy for our police and our emergency workers and our corrections officers to assume that anyone that they come in contact with could potentially be carrying an infectious disease and for them to take the appropriate precautions. We have clear policies in place in our correctional centres. Alberta's police services also utilize procedures to help police officers protect themselves from communicable diseases.

In our corrections centres screening is conducted on all offenders by qualified health care staff to identify potential communicable diseases. Reportable diseases such as HIV, AIDS, and hepatitis A, B, and C are reported in accordance with the Public Health Act to the local public authorities. Mr. Speaker, inmates who are suspected of having an infectious disease are tested, and appropriate measures are taken to treat the disease and to prevent transmission. Our corrections officers are provided with stab-proof Kevlar gloves and other protective equipment to use when they are handling potentially infected inmates.

If there are any other measures that can be taken to protect our frontline workers, I'm open to any suggestions.

Mr. Vandermeer: Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is Alberta Health doing to address this issue?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say first of all that it's very important that we do everything that is reasonably possible to help protect our emergency workers from bad health effects as a result of communicable diseases. What we do right now is we provide them with information on how they can best protect themselves against getting communicable diseases during the course of their work. In the event of an accidental exposure, of course, a notification is put in place immediately so that the worker can be quickly assessed and appropriate measures taken to mitigate or to treat their particular condition. We do conduct ongoing monitoring of diseases and infectious conditions in communities throughout the province. This is part of our government department's role in ensuring public health.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we will commit whatever resources are required to working with the Solicitor General on this particular issue, and we certainly will be watching the experience in Ontario with a great deal of interest.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the eve of the last provincial election the Alberta government announced a natural gas rebate program for natural gas commercial operations that lasted roughly from the time of enumeration until the time the last vote was counted. The provincial government took this step to hide the expensive failures of energy deregulation and delay the true costs of energy deregulation until after Albertans voted. My first question is to the Premier. If a $5 gigajoule credit on natural gas was good enough during an election year, why is it not good enough now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the very, extremely, extraordinary spike in the price of natural gas was coincidental with the election. We had no control. We didn't tell gas to go up just because it was an election. We had to do something. These people, you know, complained loud and long about giving rebates and helping Albertans. They screamed: "Oh, my gosh. This is just political."

Mr. Smith: You didn't send yours back.

Mr. Klein: Yeah. That's right. They gladly took the rebates; right? They gladly took the rebates.

Mr. Speaker, I take exception to this program lasting only as long as the time it took to cast the last vote. This was a three-month program.

An Hon. Member: A four-month program.

Mr. Klein: I'm sorry. Maybe it was a four-month program. Okay. It was a three- or four-month program – I'm not quite sure – that really went a great distance to alleviate hardships on a lot of Albertans. It was during that election that we said: lookit; we understand that the price of natural gas is extremely high. I believe it had reached something like $10, $11 a gigajoule. It was extremely high at that particular time, and we said that we would introduce a program. If I recall, I said that we would introduce a program that would be akin or similar to the interest rebate program. [interjection] Will you please instruct the hon. member for wherever to keep his yippy yap shut.

Mr. Speaker, we said that we would bring in – and this is a quote. As I said, they weren't on the campaign trail with me. They were on their own campaign trail, you know, telling people a bunch of baloney. So they weren't on the campaign trail with me where we had to deal with the real issues and the realities. Along the campaign trail I was asked: well, what do you plan to do on a more permanent basis? I said: we will consider a program similar to the interest rebate program introduced by then Premier Lougheed where interest was shielded down to 12 percent from about 19 to 20 percent. I instructed the Minister of Energy to get to work on a program. He brought through legislation to bring about the program. The regulations relative to the legislation were announced, and now the Liberals are complaining. So what's new?

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given that the election promise from 2001 was broken by this government, did this government refuse to give Albertans rebates earlier this winter when there was a huge price spike because they knew it would interfere with the high-pressure sales tactics used by energy marketers like Direct Energy selling three- and five-year contracts to Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I just went through the process. As I said, unless the hon. member tells me otherwise, I would assume that he was not on my campaign trail.

Mr. MacDonald: You bet I wasn't.

Mr. Klein: Right. I would assume that he was not on the campaign trail. I would assume that he did not visit the numerous constituencies, practically every constituency in the province, where I gave the same speech over and over and over again. [interjection] If he was there, then stand up and say that he was there and that he heard all this; in other words, that he heard the malarkey that he just spouted off, because he didn't. What he would have heard is exactly what I explained: that, yes, there is an emergency problem right now; the price of gas is extremely high; that, yes, we will bring in a sustainable program; that, yes, it will be a program, and the best I can think of at this particular time is a program similar to the mortgage interest rebate program brought in by Premier Lougheed; and that I will instruct the Minister of Energy to get to work on it. And I did all of those things. That is not breaking a promise. That is fulfilling a promise.

Mr. MacDonald: To the Premier: given that an election promise from the last election, in 2001, was broken by this government, why is it government policy that consumers come first only during election years?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I just pointed out the difference between keeping a promise and breaking a promise. The statement that I broke a promise is entirely misleading. It is wrong. It is wrong for them to say that I broke a promise when in fact I kept a promise. I will explain it one more time. Here's what I said.

Dr. Massey: It doesn't matter how many times you say it.

Mr. Klein: Well, it doesn't matter how many times they say it. They say that I broke a promise. I say that I kept a promise, and I kept the promise. I kept the promise, and here's how I kept the promise.

Mrs. Nelson: People know they can trust you.

Mr. Klein: Right.

Again, I would ask him, because he doesn't have an opportunity to stand up and ask another question: will he go outside the House and tell the press that either he was a fly on the wall or he wasn't? All you need to do is get your researchers, which the government pays for, go into the morgues of the newspapers and find out exactly what I said.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Clean Coal Technology

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this province coal is still the number one fuel used to generate electricity. We all know that the burning of coal does create carbon dioxide, which creates global warming. One of the strategies of the government plan to address this issue was supposed to be speeding up the development of clean coal technology. My first question is to the Minister of Environment, whose department is responsible for Alberta's climate change plan. Mr. Minister, it would appear that you haven't taken active steps to accelerate the development of clean coal technology. What is the holdup?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm a little surprised by that question, but let me say that we have taken action. We've taken action long before Kyoto. As I pointed out to another member in the House this week, you know, Alberta is first and foremost in the country in taking action on many areas around climate change, and certainly clean coal technology is one that is important to Alberta. As you know, we've got 70 percent of the coal resources in the country in this province, and if we can learn to develop it cleanly and burn it cleanly, there's a huge opportunity for energy in this province.

We're doing a number of things, Mr. Speaker. In the first place, I've asked the Clean Air Strategic Alliance to look at our electricity generation and the emissions that come out of those plants, and about 60 to 70 percent of that is from coal. So I'm expecting a report from them, hopefully in June or perhaps September, once they get their group together again. That's one thing that we're doing.

Then as a government we announced a $30 million investment in research, and certainly much of that will go to the Alberta Energy Research Institute, which is under the purview of the Minister of Innovation and Science, and it's my understanding that he might want to supplement, Mr. Speaker. A lot of that money will be spent on clean coal. I'd ask the minister to supplement on exactly where that money is going.

The Speaker: No. We'll go on to the member.

Ms Graham: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to ask the Minister of Innovation and Science just what in fact his ministry is doing to accelerate clean coal technology.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, with the assistance of the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Environment we have implemented an Alberta energy research strategy. In fact, through the good work of the Alberta Energy Research Institute, if you look at it on the web site at www.innovation.gov.ab.ca, you can read the whole energy research strategy. One of the key elements of that strategy is the development of technology that will enable us to develop our huge resources of coal so that it will be effective and we won't strand it, and we'll be able to use it to further our economy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question will be to the Minister of Environment. In that you, Mr. Minister, have the lead in developing our climate change plan, when are we going to start doing something other than talk about all the things that we can do? When are we actually going to do it?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly we are doing. As I've indicated in the past, we're about 24 percent below our 1990 target. It's supposed to be 6 percent. Other things that we're doing, actual concrete actions that we're taking, are things like 90 percent of our power is going to be generated by green power. Half of that 90 percent will come from biomass; half will come from wind.

Of the 140 new wind turbines that are being put up in Fort Macleod, roughly 70 of those will produce power for the government. So by doing a purchase of green power like that, the Minister of Infrastructure has created a huge new market for green power, Mr. Speaker, and I would say that that is the largest purchase of green power in North America.

So we are taking action. We will continue to take action. As we move forward, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all the members to take a look at the climate change plan, which is also on the government of Alberta web site.

Health Authorities' Advertising Campaign

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the United Nurses of Alberta are currently in negotiations with the provincial health authorities. During these negotiations the health authorities have invested a significant amount of money and resources into launching a glitzy ad campaign to sway public opinion. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why are the health authorities spending valuable tax dollars on ad campaigns rather than investing that money into hiring badly needed frontline staff?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have had a dramatic increase in the number of health professionals in this province over the last three years. There has been a significant investment in health care made by this government, and it has been passed on by way of grants to regional health authorities. They have benefited from the hiring of hundreds of new nurses over the last three years. In fact, with respect to physicians it's gone up by about 600 new physicians over the last three years. So we have invested, as have regional health authorities invested, in dramatically increasing our frontline staff in nurses, physicians, and other health care professionals.

Now, with respect to an ad campaign being paid for by the regional health authorities, they are in negotiations with nurses. The nurses have taken steps to indicate their position in this matter. I think it's entirely appropriate that what's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, and if the employees during the course of their negotiations choose to make public their position on their bargaining, then it's an entirely appropriate measure for employers to do the same thing, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the estimates range as high as $1 million for the cost of this campaign, will the minister commit to informing the public of just how much this PR campaign has cost Albertans?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it will all come out in the matter of public accounts when it's all accounted for at the end of the year.

Ms Carlson: The minister knows that that isn't true.

How about this question: given that this PR campaign has had no effect upon continuing negotiations, does the minister know if this fruitless campaign will continue and how much more it will cost? A figure?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, we entrust our health care system to regional health authorities, who make important decisions about what's appropriate for them. That includes the matter of negotiations with their nurses. It's not my intention to interfere in this particular area. I wouldn't consider myself to be a micromanager. Perhaps the hon. member would.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Municipal Taxation

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Tuesday in Edmonton the Toronto-Dominion Bank released its third report on Canada's cities. This report dealt specifically with the Edmonton/Calgary trade corridor and is full of good news, including the fact that the gross domestic product of the corridor is by far the highest in Canada and is in fact higher than the United States' average. There are, however, challenges, challenges identified in the report to do with municipal financing. My question: will the minister advocate vacating tax room to allow municipalities direct taxation powers as recommended in the report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to say at the outset that I think that perhaps the title of the report, which I have here, should be more than just simply The Calgary-Edmonton Corridor. As we know, with the resource that's taking place in northern Alberta, $87 billion is being spent there. That is very important to this corridor as well, and I'm proud to say that the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary and Red Deer recognize that as well.

Relative to the issue of what we do in the future, our roles and responsibilities are investigating that with the mayors and the presidents of the AUMA and AAMDC. But I would like to say – and I add this word of caution though – that at the end of the day, as we all know, there is only one taxpayer. One of the things that was highlighted in the report was that the province of Alberta has the lowest tax regime of any other Canadian province, and that's certainly a strength we want to build on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you. My first supplementary: will the provincial government pressure the federal government to remove GST entirely from municipal purchases as one order of government does not tax another?

Mr. Boutilier: Where do I sign up? Let me just simply say this. This province was the only province in Canada that took the federal government to court over the issue of the GST, and I'm very proud to say that we launched a very aggressive campaign. We all know that the best example would be on the issue that affects municipalities. To those who may not be aware in the Assembly, relative to transportation did you know that over the past 10 years when we filled up at the pumps in the province of Alberta, we contributed to the federal government $7 billion? Do you know how much we got back?

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Boutilier: You asked how much we got back. About $70 million. You know, the province of Alberta collects over $700 million a year – and the Minister of Transportation wanted to supplement. We spend over $2 billion a year relative to transportation. That's another good example of some of the inequities that take place across this Confederation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question. The report indicated that the regions must seek efficiencies. Has the minister's 3R committee a set of priorities for the municipalities to reach these efficiencies?

Mr. Boutilier: A good question. Absolutely, yes. In fact, in our ministry goals, that we talked about in estimates last night, we talked about the strategies of regional partnerships, how we can take a dollar and stretch it into $3 by sharing. I want to compliment the capital region, just one good example of 22 municipalities. They're coming together, they're working together, and they're serving their taxpayers as a whole, but what they're doing is they want to get the best value out of that one dollar to ensure that we perhaps can get even greater value. One thing that I've heard – and the hon. member may be aware – is that the last thing we want to do in this province, though, is create a tax jungle.

Toxic Mold in Foothills Medical Centre

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the Minister of Health and Wellness implied that there was no evidence that mold found in the Foothills hospital was toxic. However, tests done on mold found in the fall did indeed indicate toxic mold near the renal dialysis unit of the Foothills hospital. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Where did the minister get his information that the mold in the Foothills hospital was not toxic?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to send me a letter last week indicating that he would be asking these questions about toxic mold, and the best advice that I had available from the regional health authority was that there is the presence of molds in some facilities. You'll find them in schools. You'll find them in office towers. You'll find them quite likely in this building. But I did express the caution in answering his question last week to refer to the issue of the word "toxic." There are many kinds of molds that may appear in buildings as a result of different types of HVAC systems, heating and ventilation systems, but there has to be caution expressed when he uses the word "toxic." There has been, to the best of my knowledge, no evidence of any toxic molds, and those things which are toxic molds, that sometimes do appear in buildings, are only harmful to individuals if breathed in or if ingested through the mouth.

So, again, the best advice that I have available from the regional health authority is that there is no evidence of a toxic mold in that facility.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement?

Mr. Dunford: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Unless something has happened in the last 24 hours, I would like to indicate to the House that from a workplace health and safety standpoint as well we are not aware that there's been a definition of a toxic mold at this point in time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our information is that last fall it indeed was found to be toxic mold, and I'll send that material to them.

If the two ministers are so sure that the environment is that clean at the Foothills hospital and that there's no toxic mold, can either one of them or the Premier explain why an independent evaluator is being blocked from entering the hospital and conducting air quality tests?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I can say that if an independent investigator has been blocked and thrown out and bodily prevented from going into the hospital, I'll find out why. I'm sure the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness will find out why. Unless, of course, the so-called investigator was sent in, hired by the Liberal Party, to do a job or a number. Then I can understand it. I can understand it. But I would accept any day the evidence and the word of people who work in the Department of Health and Wellness and occupational health and safety, who are professionals charged with the responsibility of investigating very serious situations such as this and make their findings in an unbiased fashion, that there is no evidence of toxic mold in the facility; that is, the Foothills hospital in Calgary. I put my faith in these professionals. I put much more faith in these professionals than I would in someone hired by the Liberals.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If it turns out, then, that the Premier and the minister have been misinformed by the Calgary health region and there really is toxic mold, will they not finally admit that this is just another example of the CHR treating a serious health concern as nothing more than public relations?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the regional health authority in Calgary has an exemplary record of patients who come in, get diagnosed and treated, and are released. They don't have anything to be ashamed about with respect to their track record in treating patients with the treatment that they require so they get better. That's not to say that any such large organization can be perfect, and there are efforts that are being made by the regional health authority to deal with issues in a better way that may relate to matters of, for lack of a better expression, public relations.

If there is a genuine situation with toxic mold in such a facility, I'm not aware of it. But if there is, then certainly the regional health authority takes the safety of its staff and the patients in the facility at the Foothills hospital very seriously, and I am certain that they will do everything that is necessary in order to remedy the situation. But again, Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence of toxic mold in that facility that I'm aware of.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement?

Mr. Dunford: Yes. I think it deserves a comment here. Occupational health and safety is the impartial third party in this investigation. We as an operation have been working with employers right across this province for many years on many issues, but we stand independent of any employer group or any employee group. We have a job to do. We have a legislated, mandated job to do, and at the Foothills hospital we are doing that job and performing that function. If there is toxic mold at some point in time, we'll be reporting it. I think that this line of questioning has really made some inferences that need not be made at this time.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling on the first of several members to participate today, might I extend on behalf of all members of the House congratulations and best wishes to two members who have celebrated milestones this week. First of all, to the Member for Little Bow, who has arrived at a certain age, and to the hon. Member for Highwood on reaching a real milestone in his life this week.

The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Apex Youth Awards

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in this Assembly today to recognize four exceptional individuals from southern Alberta. On Thursday, April 10, Stacy Smith, Denica Farough, Jordan Williams, and Jordan Litchfield were honoured as winners at the second annual Apex youth awards. These awards were developed by the Taber Rotary Club and the Taber Times, which now sponsor the award every year. The Apex awards are a unique honour in Alberta that go beyond recognizing sports and academics. These awards are presented to youth that exemplify dedication and commitment to serving their community and their families. They are granted to students who represent the best qualities in youth, youth that unselfishly give themselves in the service of others.

Stacy Smith, a grade 11 student from Vauxhall, has shown the skills needed to be a lifelong learner with a strong desire to pursue a university education. Denica Farough, a grade 12 student from St. Mary's high school, surrounds her life with her family, school, and church. Her volunteerism illustrates her kind and caring nature. Jordan Williams, a grade 11 student from St. Mary's, puts others and their needs as well as the greater needs of the community before himself. Jordan Litchfield, a grade 11 student from W.R. Myers, has always expressed love and devotion to his parents. Jordan has grown from assisting his father, who suffers from a serious chronic illness.

I must stress, however, Mr. Speaker, that there is a common thread among all four winners and the 22 nominees: they are all outstanding individuals. Growing up as a kid today is not an easy task, but there are individuals who strive and stand out above the rest to make life more enjoyable and gratifying for themselves and those around them. The Apex youth awards were created to recognize these remarkable people.

I feel that it is important to acknowledge those that devote themselves to the betterment of our communities. I would ask that members of this Assembly join me in congratulating the four winners of the Apex youth awards and the 22 nominees for their accomplishments and dedication to their communities and their families.

Thank you.

Ecological Footprint

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, John McConnell, who is the 86-year-old founder of Earth Day, stated the following:

From its beginning the purpose of the authentic Earth Day was to provide an annual date on which the whole world (people of every creed and culture) would rededicate themselves to the care of Earth. The March Equinox (nature's special day of equilibrium) provided an appropriate time to celebrate the wonder of life on our planet. This could be a special day for the human family to focus on a common cause that would appeal to all – stewardship of Earth.

Mr. Speaker, we traditionally celebrate Earth Day on April 22. One way we can participate is to calculate our ecological footprint. The ecological footprint is an accounting tool for ecological resources. Categories of human consumption are translated into areas of productive land required to provide resources and assimilate waste products. This footprint is a measure of how sustainable our lifestyles are.

The footprint of the average Canadian adds up to 4.8 hectares. This is the total amount of land required for food, housing, transport, consumer goods and services. If everyone on Earth lived like us, it would require at least three Earths to provide all the material and energy she or he currently uses. Preliminary estimates show that the ecological footprint of today's consumption in food, forestry products, and fossil fuels alone might already exceed global carrying capacity by roughly 30 percent.

So what can we do? We can recognize that all of our actions have consequences for the natural world. We can focus on becoming responsible consumers. Take an ecological footprint quiz and determine your family's impact on our Earth. Then think about what actions you can take to become a more responsible consumer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

National Soil Conservation Week

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and bring attention to National Soil Conservation Week, which is currently under way. National Soil Conservation Week helps promote soil conservation among farmers across Canada.

I don't think there is a rural member in this House that doesn't understand the need to conserve Alberta's fertile topsoil, a vital part of agriculture production. Without the topsoil layer, a scant five to 20 centimetres deep, agriculture production in Alberta would be an impossibility.

That's why National Soil Conservation Week is so important. All week promotional events are taking place across Canada to highlight the importance of conserving vital topsoil. Fortunately for the future of agriculture in our province our producers are listening. In the past decade the reduced tillage and direct seeding acres have grown dramatically as more and more producers realize the benefits of conserving topsoil. In fact, there has been significantly less wind erosion after the past drought than there has been since the recording of wind erosion began. This can be directly linked to the prudent soil management practices employed by Alberta's producers as they continually increase the practice of reduced tillage.

There are many benefits to soil conservation. Not only is the topsoil saved, but reduced tillage and direct seeding mean that more moisture is retained in the soil, helping producers grow their crops. As well, reduced tillage means that less carbon, mostly from dead plant matter, enters the air, reducing overall greenhouse gas emissions in the province. In short, it's better for the earth and better for the air.

I applaud the efforts of Alberta's producers, the best in the world, and I'm happy to recognize National Soil Conservation Week. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Living in Harmony with the Natural World

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Nearly 200 years ago William Wordsworth expressed his frustration with humanity and human nature when he wrote:

The World is too much with us;
late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste
our powers:
Little we see in Nature that is ours;
We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!

Wordsworth saw in the world around him that greed, materialism, and acquisitiveness had supplanted many of the more virtuous characteristics of mankind. Indeed, Wordsworth observed that people had effectively divorced themselves from the surrounding world, instead choosing to focus on their own interests and problems.

Although Wordsworth's message was delivered nearly two centuries ago, it retains its power today because, if anything, humanity has only furthered its separation from the natural world. Rather than viewing ourselves as important and influential actors in a complex system, we prefer to downplay our importance and ignore our influence.

My point today is this: we, humankind, can no longer afford to view ourselves as being distinct or separate from the natural world. All of our actions have consequences for it just as its actions have consequences for us. I urge all members of this House to remember the words of Wordsworth and act with consideration for the greater world around us. Let us no longer "lay waste our powers" but rather see in nature what is truly ours.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions 13 and 14 be dealt with on that day.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that Motion for a Return 14 be dealt with on that day.

There being no further written questions or motions for returns at this time, there are none left to stand and retain their places.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter penned to me by Mr. Don Fleming, chairman of the board of trustees, thanking all members of the capital region caucus for being strong advocates of public education and particularly for being instrumental in obtaining the $51 million infrastructure grant recently released by the Minister of Infrastructure to the Edmonton public school board.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a presentation given by Aldergrove elementary school at a March 13 ward C and E school council meeting attended by five west Edmonton MLAs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter from Mr. Gordon Tocher of Hinton, Alberta. He is upset with high utility costs and is tired of hearing the hon. Premier "stand in the House and constantly deflect the Opposition's questions by discussing other jurisdictions."

The second tabling is 1,556 more signatures on the Alberta Liberal petition calling for natural gas rebates from the Hinton area, and these were kindly collected by many citizens, but it was spearheaded, again, by Mr. and Mrs. Tocher.

The third tabling I have this afternoon is an additional 787 signatures from all over the province on the Alberta Liberal petition calling for the reinstatement of natural gas rebates. That brings the total number of signatures on this Alberta Liberal petition to over 7,300.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask at this time that the Deputy Government House Leader share next week's projected government business with us.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very happy to do that. On Monday, April 28, we will begin the afternoon with private members' business, Written Questions, and Motions for Returns, followed by Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders. From 8 p.m. until 9 p.m. we'll be dealing with Motions Other than Government Motions, and at 9 p.m. we'll deal with Private Bills, second reading likely and if possible Committee of the Whole – we'll see – on Bill Pr. 1, Bill Pr. 2. Thereafter, we hope to move to Government Bills and Orders in second reading, including bills 33, 34, 36, 37, and possibly even get to Committee of the Whole on Bill 10 and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

Tuesday will be Committee of Supply day 14 of 24, and I believe the opposition has designated Health and Wellness, so we will discuss those estimates. On Tuesday evening, Government Bills and Orders under Committee of Supply, which will be day 15 of 24, the designated committee will look at Government Services. Committee of the Whole should follow thereafter if time permits on bills 23, 24, 25, 35, 6, 26, and 10 and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday afternoon Committee of Supply will consider Children's Services and otherwise as per the Order Paper, and on Wednesday evening Committee of Supply will consider Transportation. Time permitting, Committee of the Whole may also wish to look at bills 6, 20, 26, 12, and 10 and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, which will be the 1st of May, that afternoon the Committee of Supply will be considering the estimates of the Department of Justice.

Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Infrastructure

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I start, I'd like to introduce some of my staff in the gallery. First, Eric McGhan, the deputy minister; Jim Bauer, the chief financial officer; and David Bray, the communications director.

Mr. Chairman, this year's Infrastructure three-year business plan and the 2003-04 estimates indicate how we plan to contribute to Alberta's economic prosperity by ensuring efficient planning, design, construction, rehabilitation, operation, maintenance, and land management of government-owned facilities; developing innovative partnerships to ensure supported infrastructure meets the overall needs of Albertans, including health care, learning, and community service facilities and seniors' lodges; and managing central services to all departments, including accommodation requirements, property acquisition and disposal, air transportation on government fleet operations.

Before going over our budget targets, I would like to outline the new capital initiatives in our business plan. New funding was provided to reinstate projects deferred in October of 2001 as a result of the global economic slowdown. A total of 22 capital projects were reinstated. This includes nine health care facility projects, the Victoria school of performing and visual arts project, the Edmonton and Calgary health research innovation centres, along with various centennial projects such as the Northern and Southern Alberta Jubilee Auditorium refurbishments. When the deferrals were first announced, the government made a commitment that when the fiscal situation of the province improved, these projects would proceed. The government has kept that promise, and I'm anxious to see these projects begin.

Alberta Infrastructure's total budget increased by some 49 percent from $838 million to over $1.2 billion. These are much-needed funds to help us address Alberta's aging infrastructure. Now, I'd like to discuss how we prioritized and allocated our dollars. We prioritized spending based on what's needed to cover the day-to-day operations of government infrastructure. As well, we prioritized our capital commitments for schools and postsecondary institutions, health facilities, and seniors' lodges. Some projects are under construction, and others are just being completed. Then we looked at allocating dollars needed to undertake priority maintenance projects to protect the integrity of existing infrastructure and taxpayer investment.

From the $1.2 billion operating budget funding was allocated to the four main functions of Infrastructure: operations, preservation, expansion, and ongoing commitments. Infrastructure operations received $581 million for lights-on costs, and that includes caretaking, grounds maintenance, utilities, and routine repairs. Of the $581 million, $331 million will support the day-to-day facility operations of the 1,466 schools in the province; $123.8 million will keep more than 2,000 government-owned buildings open; lease funding of $99.9 million for more than 500 leases will accommodate government programs.

The operating budget for infrastructure preservation is $232 million, of which $122.7 million is for preserving our health care facilities, $48 million for school facilities, $24.8 million for postsecondary facilities, $31.6 million for government facilities, with the balance of $4.8 million going to seniors' lodges and site environmental services.

We have allocated some 285 million dollars to expand or replace existing infrastructure, including $97.7 million for health care facilities expansion, $67.6 million for school facilities, $100 million for postsecondary facilities, and $12.5 million going towards centennial projects, legacy grants that are administered in conjunction with Alberta Community Development. The legacy grants program will provide funding for municipalities and not-for-profit groups who wish to undertake major publicly accessible capital projects commemorating Alberta's centennial.

The last part of our operating budget is to address ongoing commitments which total some $107.4 million, ongoing commitments including the day-to-day administration costs, program support costs, and noncash items such as amortization and consumption of inventories. Sixty million dollars, or 55 percent, of ongoing commitments is allocated towards noncash items such as amortization and consumption of inventories with the balance designated for support service and air and vehicle transportation services.

I believe that the budget estimates for this year will allow us to meet our business plan goals and help maintain the government's commitment to fiscal responsibility.

So with those brief comments, Mr. Chairman, I would be only too happy get into the discussions of our estimates. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to the estimates for the Infrastructure ministry and also to thank the minister for his opening comments and also his staff who are here today to listen to questions that we have for the minister. They've certainly been very good in the past at providing answers when either the minister didn't have the information with him in the Assembly at that time or more work was required. So I thank them for being here today.

Infrastructure, quickly glancing through the budget this year, I believe is the third largest ministry according to dollars, a very large responsibility, falling right behind education, which is second, and, first, health, and certainly a department that has a direct influence on the lives of Albertans. So we cannot mitigate in anyway the tremendous influence that Infrastructure has on the lives of Albertans.

Now then, in looking over the budget for Infrastructure for this year, the budget calls for nearly $400 million more in spending than last year, and I think that's great. I think it helps in so . . .

An Hon. Member: Those free-spending Liberals again.

Mr. Bonner: Oh, this is not free spending. This is wise spending. Well, most of it is wise spending. But we will look at other issues here as well.

This certainly will provide those structures that'll help Albertans in their day-to-day living. It will certainly keep our business sector strong and vibrant, and of course that is one of the things that's happening in this province right now. While we love the great economic success, it certainly puts a tremendous amount of pressure on infrastructure. It's something that cannot be addressed overnight. We certainly realize that. So it does take a long-term commitment and long-term plans in order to satisfy those needs.

I was looking in a little publication that was sent to me here, Review of Infrastructure, and it certainly – there was a particular phrase in there that struck me – indicated the magnitude of infrastructure not only in the province but in the country. Just to quote from that particular bulletin, it goes on to say, "The Canadian Society of Civil Engineering, through their Technology Road Map project, estimates municipal infrastructure in Canada is a $1.6 trillion asset." So it is absolutely enormous in this country as well as in this province, and I look to that last word in that particular little quote, which is "asset."

In the constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry in 1959 we had Queen Elizabeth high school completed at a cost of $1.8 million. Now, getting close to 45 years later, the replacement costs on that school would probably be in the neighbourhood of $15 million – it is a huge composite high school – certainly an investment that the province made in that school 45 years ago. We still have a structure there today that is worth in the neighbourhood of $15 million. It was a well-constructed school. I think it could easily be used for another 30, 40 years. So, certainly, infrastructure can provide a huge investment for Albertans. One of the great advantages is that we own it, that we are getting top value for our dollar.

Traditionally when we look at infrastructure in the province, infrastructure projects in Alberta have been built by a series of public tenders, private construction, and public ownership and operation, and this has proven to be over a great span in Alberta a very, very efficient, very, very wise use of taxpayer dollars. When we look at Edmonton, where we are rapidly approaching the point where half of our schools are going to be 50 years or older, it certainly indicates that by spending wisely with a long-term plan, the needs of Albertans are met, and they continue to have great value for their dollar. So in the opposition we certainly endorse this type of spending in Infrastructure.

Now, then, I also noticed that the minister had indicated that municipalities are going to have moneys to share in order to participate. I think the recreational facility that was built between the towns of Spruce Grove and Stony Plain, just a magnificent facility and certainly a facility that I believe follows along this same design – it is one of those, I think, that more municipalities in the province would like to see and to work with the provincial government to provide these types of services and facilities.

In looking at the highlights of the budget, there is a three-year capital plan, which calls for $5.5 billion to be spent. That is again a much needed stability in the construction sector of this province. I was also very happy to hear the minister announce that construction was going ahead on a number of projects that had been deferred from previous budgets. So there are a lot of good things happening in Infrastructure. Of course, some we will be questioning as we move through the debate this afternoon regarding estimates.

Where I would like to start today with my questions is in regard to the business plan. Again, as I indicated, Mr. Minister, if you require some time to get back to us with answers if you don't have the information here, that would be fine. We'd certainly appreciate hearing any responses that you're able to provide us today as well.

I'm looking at page 238 of the business plan, where it says in relation to the province's infrastructure debt that "the backlog of unfunded work is in the order of $2.4 billion." Earlier this year in a response to the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Infrastructure was quoted as saying that the infrastructure debt of the province could be as high as $7 billion. This is quite an enormous difference, $4.5 billion.

Now, then, as well, along these same lines, I think we have to look at not only the infrastructure debt but the Alberta debt. What we have done in focusing on paying off the debt over the last few years is that there have been other programs that haven't been funded adequately, so we do have what I like to call the Alberta debt. But we will stick this afternoon to discussing the infrastructure debt, so my first question to the minister would be: could he give us an actual figure of what the infrastructure debt is? Could he clear up this difference of the $2.4 billion that was announced and the $7 billion he announced earlier? If the minister would please table all documents that he has relating to Alberta's infrastructure debt and any documents relating to the methodology of calculating this number.

Moving forward in the business plan to page 239, it says that "the ratification of the Kyoto Protocol by the federal government will have a significant impact on Alberta's economy." The passage continues: there will be "higher energy and operating costs." In spite of this, Suncor has gone ahead with a $3 billion project and estimates that Kyoto will only add a few cents to the extraction price of each barrel of oil.

Again, this is certainly another situation where we look at private enterprise and we give them a challenge, and they certainly respond to that challenge. They do it much quicker, much more efficiently, and certainly much better than we can in government. So my question to the minister in regard to this would be: can the minister reconcile the statements in his business plan to reality? How can the Ministry of Infrastructure see an extra few pennies per barrel of oil as making energy prices significantly higher? Considering that these statements appear to be in conflict, how will the Minister of Infrastructure's budgeting have to be changed to compensate for these statements?

Moving along to page 240 of the business plan, it says that the ministry plans on implementing "infrastructure management systems." If the minister could please indicate what systems he proposes to implement. How much will these systems cost, and what will be the tangible return on their implementation? As well, when will the policy framework for alternative service delivery and financing be available?

On page 240 of the business plan it says that the ministry wants to "ensure the facilities are kept in good or fair condition," but on pages 244 and 245 it shows that between 5 and 10 percent of all facilities are anticipated to continue to be in poor condition. Can the minister resolve this conflict between these two differing statements? Does the ministry plan on ensuring that no facilities are in poor condition or plan on having between 5 and 10 percent of facilities in poor condition?

On page 241 of the business plan it says that the ministry plans on continuing "to sell or divest surplus and underutilized properties." Is the ministry planning long enough into the future so that it does not divest itself of land that may be needed in five to 10 years, and what decision-making process does the ministry use to decide which lands it should sell off?

As well, what will be the components of the program the ministry plans to implement to address environmental concerns at highway maintenance yards?

To continue on page 240 of the business plan, what decision-making process does the ministry use to decide which lands it should sell? If the minister could please indicate to us when this program will be implemented.

The ministry has indicated that it is taking steps to improve the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of the government's transportation provisions and if he could please indicate what those plans will include.

As well, what plans does the ministry have for streamlining and improving procedures and processes in the ministry?

Now, then, on pages 244 and 245 of the business plan it shows the evaluated conditions of provincial infrastructure, and it goes on to say that anywhere between 3 and 10 percent of provincial facilities rank as being in poor condition. According to the business plan poor condition indicates that a facility does not comply with the minimum codes or standards. If this is in fact the case, then this would be quite alarming. Could the minister explain why buildings that don't meet minimal codes or standards are not being immediately upgraded, and as well why does the ministry accept such a large number of buildings that do not meet code or standards? Do any of these buildings violate safety codes and standards?

Now, again, when we look at the manner in which utilization rates are calculated in this province, we certainly realize that this is controversial and depends on which side of the fence you're looking at this particular issue. How does the ministry compensate for older and irregular school buildings in its calculation of utilization in schools, and are there any plans to change the method of calculating utilization in schools? This is a case, I think, that you'll find particularly in the larger cities in the province. We do have schools that are very, very old that are in the inner city that no longer have the populations attending them that they were built for. It certainly is a situation where in Edmonton last night at St. Patrick school there was quite a large gathering of parents and concerned citizens. That is one of the schools that could possibly be shut down, and it is extremely difficult for these people in the inner city as they see school after school close and new schools being built out in the suburbs. It's a huge issue, so if the minister could please comment on the utilization rates and particularly those in older or irregular schools.

The table showing the average operating cost per square metre of the ministry's facilities indicates that the ministry currently operates its facilities at a rate well below the industry average. My question to the minister would be: why is the ministry content as long as its operating cost does not exceed the industry average when it has shown that it can beat those values?

The business plan also indicates that the ministry is happy maintaining the average energy consumption in its buildings, and my question would be: why isn't the ministry planning to engage in further energy efficiency initiatives to reduce their energy consumption? Shouldn't new facilities reduce the average energy consumption with time? Why is this not shown in the targets?

As well, respecting the client satisfaction survey who does the ministry consider to be its clients, what complaints are most often heard about the ministry's services, and what is the ministry doing to address the concerns of clients?

With those questions I will take my seat and give the minister an opportunity to respond to those questions that he's prepared to at this time and look forward to his comments. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for the comments relative to the overall budget and what we are trying to accomplish and what we are doing. Unfortunately, it would help me a lot when you were asking those questions if you would be more specific. For example, I missed what you were talking about on Kyoto because, quite frankly, it was just the one bullet, and I couldn't follow exactly your question. But we'll be visiting Hansard and get you the answers where I wasn't able to follow completely what you were mentioning.

This isn't the first time that I've heard the hon. member mention that somehow we had talked about a $7 billion debt in infrastructure. We never, ever said a $7 billion debt. What we did say is that there were requests for infrastructure. When we took all of the health regions, the school boards, the postsecondaries and we asked them for their capital plans, the requests amounted to $7 billion. There's a difference between a request and debt.

We have said all the time that the debt is about $2.4 billion, and as a matter of fact I can give you a very detailed breakdown of how we arrived at that. Looking at some 10,858 projects, it totals some $2.4 billion, and the breakdown is: in mechanical, $885,997; the interior, $455,110; electrical, $339,688; building envelope, $232,292; functional upgrading, $183,203; site, $147,046; roofs, $107,293; and structural, $23,708. As a matter of fact, we've got it broken down into school facilities, health facilities, postsecondary facilities, and government facilities, so we've got the complete breakdown. I think it's a result of a lot of very detailed work that we got these, so we'd be only too happy to share that with you.

Facility conditions, the comments that you made there. Part of the reason that you see the number of facilities that are in poor condition relates right back to this debt. As we try to pick up the modernization in schools and the preservation of the other structures, we will see the numbers increase, and of course that's what we're reflecting in some of our school and health facilities. We want to see the number that are in good condition, excellent condition coming up and, of course, a decrease in the number that are in poor or fair.

The issue about divesting of land and building. This process started very vigorously about three years ago. As a matter of fact, if you go back and look at the three-year business plans going back three years, you'll see that it was an objective to sell 100 million dollars' worth over those three years. We exceeded that. The way the process works, if a department has land and/or buildings and they declare them surplus to their needs, they are turned over to us. The first thing we do then is canvass all of the government departments and see if they have any use for those lands and/or buildings. If they don't, then we go to the host municipality. We see if they are interested in purchasing those at the market value. If they say they're not interested in it, then we put it on the market. That's how the process works.

A lot of the barren land that you may have seen often relates to the corridors that are around both Calgary and Edmonton. When Transportation does their more detailed analysis and design, we find that there are parcels scattered around that are not necessary that we purchased some time back, so those will go up for sale, and that's why you maybe have seen some of those lands. Certainly, it's our objective to make sure that we aren't disposing of land that we're going to need in the future. We're trying to prevent that, but at the same time it makes absolutely no sense that we would continue to have a lot of land that we're never going to use on the books, and for buildings the same thing applies. So that's the way we look after that.

You commented on the environmental concerns on the Transportation yards. As you see in the budget – and I mentioned it in my opening comments – we do have some money set aside to look after the environmental situations that we find. What we are also finding is that depending on the use of the site – for example, say we have a site that has some creosote contamination – if the proponent or someone that's going to buy it is going to pave it over, that stuff is going nowhere. So we are able to move the property with the understanding that they will be only allowed to use it as, like, a parking lot.

With the situation with salt and contamination from their salt piles we do the perimeter testing, then do some testing internally. Sometimes we will sell the land as is with the notation that there is that contamination there. Sometimes we'll go in and clean it up, but it depends on the groundwater level, the danger of it migrating off site, if there is a danger. In some cases, of course, when we go in and test, we find that, in fact, it has migrated off site, and we then become responsible for some property outside of the old Transportation site.

I lost track of where you were on something, so we'll have to go to Hansard and find that.

Then you talked about the procedures within the ministry, and I assume that what you're getting at there was back on the questions that you asked in question period relative to the procedures for hiring contractors and consultants. We, as I said before, are in the process of fulfilling what the Auditor General asked us to do in developing a new procedure. We are very anxious and up front that the procedure be such that someone that has just graduated and maybe isn't a member of a big firm or is operating out of a basement even has an opportunity within Infrastructure to get their foot in the door and to at least have an opportunity to present their credentials to us.

Then we move forward to the tender process on any contracts that are of any size. As I mentioned to you in answers before on this issue, there are times when it simply is not practical for us to put out a tender: on a very small consulting project. In another case where you may have hired a consultant to do certain work and they get into the project and find that there's a bit more to do, it would make no sense, then, to send out another proposal. So we are working with the whole process and hope to have it refined so that the Auditor General is pleased with it.

You asked why buildings that don't meet codes and this sort of thing aren't updated immediately. It's a case of money. It goes back to this debt that we have, and how much money we can spend on the preservation and upgrading. The fact is that about 50,000 people came to the province over the last five years. They don't bring their schools or their hospitals or any of their infrastructure with them, so in our balance, in our prioritization we do have to address that issue and do have to build some new. We can't spend it all on preservation.

If you look at our business plan, you will see that we are moving a lot over to the preservation side to try to make sure that we do bring the buildings up to a standard, but it does cost a lot of money, and it does take a bit of time. So we will continue to have some buildings that could be called substandard because of not meeting the codes entirely, but I can assure you that we are aware of them and we're working on them. Actually, the good work that the staff did in getting this full analysis of where our debt and where our problems are is of great assistance to us as we target money.

Now utilization. Let me tell you right up front that we have a committee working on this because it does cause some heartburn as we find cases where it just simply is not working properly. I find that a little bit frustrating because this was done in consultation with superintendents, with school boards. The formula wasn't just dreamt up in our department. I am a little disappointed that it doesn't work better than it does, but I acknowledge that we are having some problems. We're having problems particularly in the older schools, the way they're designed. You know, you just simply can't chop off a little bit out of each room to make it fit.

Another area where we're finding problems – we've moved in many situations to building what we call a core school. The reason for building a core school is that you know that as the community grows, there are going to be students coming there. You can put portables on it to get you past when the population starts going down. The problem is that when you build a core school, you oversize in a number of areas for the number of students that are going to be there. Of course, you could have all the classrooms full and still have a utilization rate of maybe 70 percent, but that's because you have to get the portables on before you can get it up to 100 percent. So we're addressing those issues because those are two areas that are causing some difficulty.

I want to also tell you that we're aware of these things. When we look at a school that may have the score on utilization, we do take into consideration some of these other factors. While a lot of people think that we make major decisions strictly on that utilization number, it's not so. It's a number. It's a valuable number, but the decision isn't totally made on utilization. The operating and maintenance formula, for example, does include a utilization factor, but it's only one of a number of factors. So it does have an impact but not quite to the extent that some feel.

I think you had one or two that I missed, but we'll pick those up out of Hansard.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in the estimates debate this afternoon for the Department of Infrastructure. Certainly, when one considers the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar and some of the infrastructure needs of that community, particularly the schools and the streets, it is vital that this government through long-term planning initiate policies that are going to bring the entire infrastructure of this province up to standard.

If we were to leave this Assembly and drive directly to Edmonton-Gold Bar, of course we would go over the McDonald bridge. You could either look to the left or to the right and see where the concrete is eroded, worn away. Describe it as you wish, but you can see the rebar. I believe that is the infrastructure deficit that has been referred to by so many people. The traffic is going slower and slower and slower every morning and every evening on that bridge, and it gives the citizens so much more time to look at the rebar poking out from the concrete. It is symbolic of the lack of attention that has been paid certainly not only in Edmonton but in Calgary as well. The minister and his staff are to be commended for recognizing that this is a problem, and if I had a hat, Mr. Chairman, I would have to tip it for acknowledging that we have significant infrastructure deficits in this province and at least attempting to try to solve those issues.

Now, I see in the business plans on page 248 and then again on page 249 a mention of money that we are setting aside for centennial projects. We are looking at roughly $9 million and then next year we're going to $29 million for centennial projects, and if the minister could share, please, with all members of the House exactly how these projects are going to be allocated. Are they going to be sort of orchestrated ribbon-cutting ceremonies, hopefully not, leading up to the next election? I suspect the next election will be long over by that time.

Why not consider this? I will use two schools that are long overdue in the community of Edmonton-Gold Bar for retrofits. For instance, Kenilworth school has been on and off the list, stop and go, for a number of years now, and the price for the retrofit because of this stop-and-go practice has increased by at least 25 percent to a handy $4 million or a little bit better than $4 million. Kenilworth needs a lot of work, but so does McNally. McNally high school needs a lot of work. Instead of some elaborate projects designed to bring attention to our centennial year, which is important, why not have a bricks-and-mortar campaign to fix the public schools that we have, the public hospitals, the roads that we have? Let's bring everything up to snuff as a centennial project, and if the minister wanted to come over to the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar and have a ribbon-cutting ceremony after the gymnasium in McNally is fixed, I hope I would get invited, and if there was a little plaque up on the wall that said, "Gym fixed . . ."

Mr. McClelland: A big plaque on the wall.

Mr. MacDonald: A big plaque up on the wall. As long as it didn't cost any more than 300 bucks, I don't care what size it is but a plaque indicating that the hon. Minister of Infrastructure was by and rededicated the gym as part of our centennial year projects and that $50,000 or $70,000 was used to retrofit an existing public school. I think that's one of the ways we should celebrate our centennial.

I have some other ideas, but that would be certainly one of them. No grand schemes. Let's just fix up what we have and be proud of it so it will last well into the next century of our prosperity and participation in the Canadian dominion.

I'm not at all fond of this notion of P3s that is being discussed. You know, I hear the argument between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry and the hon. minister, and I don't have a great deal of confidence that this P3 idea will work and will save money and make things better for us. In fact, I think the government should devote its attention to public health care, public education, and enhancing the public service, that works for all Albertans. I see this P3 as just private political pork. Yes, that's what I'm afraid this is going to wind up as: private political pork, P3.

Now, this is quite an interesting department, Mr. Chairman, the Department of Infrastructure. If we were to downsize the cabinet to what it used to be, say 16 portfolios instead of 24 and Executive Council, Infrastructure would be one of the ones that would remain, definitely. It is vital to the long-term prosperity, the well-being of all Albertans.

Getting directly to the government and lottery fund estimates, it is interesting to note, before I start there, that we indicate in the budget that the total request for the budget is up $414 million from last year. That's sort of in the same range as the amount of money that was lapsed in the natural gas rebate program. I'm just going to look that up, Mr. Chairman. I thought it was $396 million that was lapsed. Yes, on page 57 of last year's annual report, at the very bottom of the financial analysis: "Due to favorable energy prices experienced last year" – and this is in regard to the natural gas shielding program – "$396 million was lapsed." So was this $396 million squirreled away somewhere and brought out this year? Now, I would like to know and so would other Albertans, because certainly there was a need for another natural gas shielding program this winter, and of course there didn't appear to be any political will nor any government money for this. It's odd that we would have $396 million lapsed, that was budgeted last year, and the increase in this department's budget for this year is a little bit better than that by roughly 20 some odd million dollars. I would like to know at this time if that's where the money came from for the budget increase this year.

Will the minister table a document that describes each budget line item, including all the specific plans and projects that fall under each line? Program 1 – and I've got a lot of interest in that – the ministry support services. The budget for the minister's office is staying the same, but the budget for the deputy minister's office is increasing by $25,000. Why? If one was to go back and look at previous years, I would think we'd see that that deputy minister's office budget increased quite a bit. If anyone in the Assembly is interested, I have last year's annual report, and when I conclude my questioning, I will look it up.

Again, what is the breakdown of the minister's and deputy minister's office budgets by salaries, including salaries for the top officials, travel expenses, and hosting? Also, what is the average salary of employees in the ministry as well as the highest and lowest salaries in the ministry? How much was spent on bonuses last year? What is anticipated to be spent on bonuses this year? What was the amount of the largest bonus given out, and to whom was it given? I see that last year's annual report, the end of 2002, includes achievement bonuses of I believe it's $459,000. I don't know whether that amount is for the entire department. When you look at last year, if that is the amount from last year, that's about 2 percent of the total salary budget, or maybe it's a little bit better than that. An explanation on that would be appreciated by this side of the House.

Now, on page 227, also of the estimates, it states that strategic services is budgeting for $3.1 million, up from $2.5 million spent last year. What's the reason for this increase?

Information management is getting $2.2 million more than it spent last year. Why is this increase necessary at this time? Now, again, the estimates show that information management went over budget by nearly $5 million. They spent – I'm just figuring this out – it looks like close to 500 percent more than last year, than they were budgeted for. What is the reason for this colossal budget overrun, if my calculations are correct? Information management is budgeted to receive more than $1 million more than they received last year for capital investment. What is the extra million dollars being spent on?

Program 2: infrastructure operations, preservation, and expansion. School facilities operations are receiving an extra $8 million. What is the $8 million for, and will this cover the added expenses of higher utility costs, unlike this year?

Now, leases are receiving an extra $9 million. Why is the government paying out 10 percent more for leasing next year? Would it not be more cost-effective to build or buy new infrastructure rather than to lease space?

The Swan Hills waste treatment plant. Over the years I've had various questions and various exchanges with the hon. minister, and for a government that pledged to get out of the business of being in business, this waste treatment plant certainly contradicts that pledge. We know where the minister stands on this. There has to be a place for waste in this province, but where's the private sector in all of this? You're talking about having P3s. You're talking about having the private sector play an increased role in the delivery of health care and in education. Why do we not pursue the private sector more as far as waste management goes?

Again in regard to Swan Hills, why doesn't this government let ordinary market forces run and sell the plant or simply close it? What makes Swan Hills, again, an exception to this government's free market policies? You know, in this case the invisible hand is dipping into the pockets of the taxpayers. Why are Albertans subsidizing other jurisdictions' waste processing? What is the total amount of money in which Alberta taxpayers have subsidized the treatment of other jurisdictions' waste? Why will Infrastructure not get a $13 million credit or recovery next year for Swan Hills, like it received this year?

Now, health care facilities, as I understand it, are receiving more than $90 million more for infrastructure preservation than they spent last year. Again this is noteworthy, and the only thing I can say on behalf of Albertans is: thank you; it's about time. But what projects does this money go to? Is this money meant to catch up on previous work that was never done? Will this be only a onetime cash infusion, or will subsequent budgets allocate similar amounts?

We know that it's going to be very tempting for this government in the run-up to the next election to announce a lot of projects and have some ribbon-cutting ceremonies and hope that the citizens forget that energy rebates only seem to occur during election years. There's going to have to be something done, and I'm wondering if there's not going to be a whole series of projects announced like the stop/go measures that the hon. Premier talks about in the business plan. But precisely how much long-term planning is going to go into this, or are we just going to have long-term planning replaced by a re-election strategy?

Now, school facilities are only receiving an extra $5 million for infrastructure preservation. Again, what projects will this go towards? What is the reason that health care facilities are receiving a much larger absolute and proportional increase in funds for infrastructure preservation? Postsecondary facilities are receiving nearly $23 million in new funding for infrastructure preservation. Again, what projects is this money going to? Is this money to make up for projects not completed in the past? Once this money is spent, how much work will remain to be done on infrastructure preservation for postsecondary facilities?

The money for infrastructure preservation for seniors' lodges is being slashed by approximately 70 percent. I don't know how many times in question period I've heard the hon. Premier stand up and say: "We have an aging population in Alberta. It's a crisis. It's driving up the costs of health care." If that were true, then why are we not going out of our way to not only look after the seniors' lodges now but, say, in 20 years, when the hon. minister is getting ready to retire and might want a place in one of those seniors' lodges? You know, we've got to start calculating and planning for when the baby boomers retire. If we are to slash budgets, I would urge the government to perhaps have another look at this. Why is this line item being reduced so drastically? I think and the hon. minister would agree that seniors' lodges require maintenance almost monthly, whether they're new or whether they're 30 years old. What is this slash of infrastructure preservation for seniors' lodges? What is the anticipated effect of these cuts on the quality of all seniors' lodges? Would it not be cheaper to maintain stable funding for lodge preservation rather than have that large yearly fluctuation?

I hope I get an opportunity later, Mr. Chairman, to continue. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to hear that the opposition agrees with us on how important the infrastructure is in this province because in fact there are about 1 million people daily who either work in and/or use facilities that are under our jurisdiction. That's a pretty impressive number, and it certainly does indicate the need to keep these projects going.

The hon. member certainly didn't disappoint me in some of his comments. Of course, they're way off base, but I would have expected that.

The comments about centennial projects. You know, if you would look at, like, the press release, you would see that we talked about all of these school projects, the hospitals projects, all of those great projects being centennial projects, so I was very pleased to hear you suggest that because in fact that's what we've already done. So I'm very, very pleased to hear that. I'm sure that when it comes time to actually do these, you'll then be right behind us and totally agree with what we're doing.

I should maybe get back to the smaller centennial projects that you talked about. There are a number of them, things like the Jubilee Auditorium. There are things like Lougheed House in Calgary. There are things like completing the move of the archives, looking at what we might do at the museum, and the list goes on. There are a number of those kinds of projects that we're talking about for centennial.

Your comments about the P3s. You know, I really find it interesting. One of your kissing cousins, David Collette, made some interesting comments about P3s. I don't very often quote a Liberal, but seeing as how I seem to be having some difficulty across the floor and there is one Liberal in Ottawa that does seem to get it, I want to read a couple things to you. Of course, he is Minister of Transport, but it applies well to our infrastructure. "Governments everywhere realize that the massive investment required in transportation infrastructure and services can only be made by infusions of private-sector money."

An Hon. Member: A Liberal said that?

Mr. Lund: A Liberal cabinet minister said that. It's interesting.

I think you'll find this rather interesting because I think it's probably part of the problem we're having here.

For some, any type of change is unnerving. Many people are more comfortable doing things the way they've always been done, especially with regard to the provision of services and infrastructure offered traditionally by the public sector.

So we'll leave it rest. I know I could say a lot more about your P3s, but I do have to mention what a great success P3s have been, particularly in the health care field so far. As we move forward, you will see more of these coming forward that will be of a great deal of assistance.

Maybe I need to give you a little bit of a lesson in how budgets work because this isn't the first time you've talked about that $396 million lapse in 2001.

Mr. MacDonald: No, I haven't.

Mr. Lund: Well, one of you over there did. I don't remember which one. Well, it could be you.

Nevertheless, what happened in 2001. Yes, there was money in the budget, but the fact is that when September 11 hit, when the economy was going sour, when all our income was dropping, we had to in this department find over $700 million. Well, part of it is the $396 million. That's part of it. We had to find a lot more money as it relates to the cancellation of capital projects. But that money, while it was in the budget, wasn't set aside and kept; it was used for other programs. So it's got nothing to do with the capital increase that you see here today. That's got nothing to do with it.

We'll get into some of your comments about things like the increase in the deputy's office. I just have to find where we're at there. As you can probably recognize, the budget of some 385,000 dollars, where it was at in the previous year – the increase in demand in the deputy's office does require some increase in staff. So this is a manpower pressure issue, and we found it necessary to increase that number by that $25,000, a 6.5 percent increase.

You wanted to know about strategic services. Once again, that increase is to address strategic initiatives and the manpower pressures. As you can appreciate, as we go forward with the aggressive program that we're operating this year, we do have those kinds of increases.

I think you asked about information management. The increase of $4.8 million was as a result of information technology enhancements to support corporate governmentwide initiatives, corporate technology releases, and operational requirements such as software licensing and network and technology support. That's the reason for those increases.

I think you skipped the shared services increase, although that one is a small one. It's $1.4 million and is primarily due to establishing an appropriate budget to reflect the costs incurred.

Then you went on to the increased costs of leases, some $15,576,000. Of course, those increases are the increase in lease rates. As you can appreciate, Edmonton was where we had the largest number of leases, and if you check with any of the real estate people or anyone else, you'll find that lease rates have gone up in Edmonton. So of course we've got no choice but to pay those. We have to have the space. Also, in some of our leases we have to pay for the utilities, so of course those have increased. That does affect our budget.

Then I think you jumped over to the increase in the preservation of health facilities, and there we see a very large increase. The additional funding to the health care facilities for this budget are for such things as the health sustainability initiative; the Royal Alexandra here in Edmonton, a very large project; the Bow River forensic centre; the Red Deer regional hospital development, a big project that we're doing down there; the long-term care facilities in Wetaskiwin and Vegreville. So that's where some of those increases are coming from.

I think you mentioned something about the school increases as well. No, you didn't touch those, so we won't respond to anything there.

Now Swan Hills. I must remind you again how important it is that we have that facility. Being a former Environment minister, I'm sure the current Environment minister would agree that the Swan Hills facility is an absolutely necessary plant to be operated in the province to protect the environment, to enhance and protect. So we believe that it's similar to a utility. If you look at any of the cities, they subsidize things like garbage collection. They subsidize it. They also subsidize wastewater management, wastewater treatment. They subsidize it out of tax dollars. So if you look at the Swan Hills plant and how it is an absolutely necessary component of the infrastructure in the province to handle those kinds of wastes that can only be handled in a facility like that, it's going to cost some money. We are using the private sector. As a matter of fact, we just signed a contract with Earth Tech (Canada) to operate that plant. So the private sector is in there.

One of the things that I knew you would ask sometime is to be able to show that we are not subsidizing out-of-province waste for treatment. We will be able to show you that because that is one of the things that we're going to make sure doesn't happen. It's not as easy as it sounds. A good manager of a plant takes advantage of the heat units that are available in various types of waste, so they've got to feed their incinerator a specific diet, and that may be a combination of out-of-province versus in-province waste, depending on things like the heat value. That was one of the things that we were going to make sure doesn't happen, that Alberta tax dollars are not subsidizing out-of-province waste.

I think that that pretty well covers the questions that I got, so we'll continue.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I guess what I'd like to do is just go over a few things with the Minister of Infrastructure. As you realize, the audit that we had on schools was our school century audit, and of course then in 2001 we had the slump in our dollars and cents when the market crashed on us. We had a couple projects in the town of Edson that were looked at for the aspects of two schools. One was an addition on Pine Grove so that we could finally close the A.H. Dakin school and bring them in there. Then of course we had the high school, which was Parkland high school, and we're looking at modernizing that because it's a very old school but a very solid and good one.

So then on April 11 this year the hon. Minister of Learning and the hon. Minister of Infrastructure made a press release in Edson to try and alleviate aspects of the space in the town of Edson. My understanding when the announcement was made was that we were going to look at Pine Grove elementary school, that we were going to look at $4 million to go to upgrade that school so that we could have the other students from A.H. Dakin come in there. Then there was a transfer of a school; Jubilee junior high school was going to the Living Waters division No. 35 because of their high utilization in the Vanier school in the town of Edson.

Since then, there's been quite a bit of change and upset people in the town of Edson. When you made that announcement with the other hon. minister, there was the mention on the aspect of the $5 million for Parkland high school to get its renovation and upgrading, and it was not in that press release. As I look at your budget, on page 248 you have school facilities, and then of course for '03-04 you've got $67.6 million. With your budget three years out, with '04-05, where you've got $86.8 million, I'm just wondering if we're looking at the aspect of modernizing Parkland high school in that year. I don't really want to put that to you, but I'm just wondering, being that it was on the audit as a high priority, if there's some way we can lean towards that. I know that what's transpiring has got the community quite upset for the simple reason that we're looking at September 1 as the rollout for the transfer of schools and the public is saying that it's not really practical.

Then there have been some other aspects of moving portables and that down from Grande Cache and putting them on Pine Grove school and on Parkland school. I realize that when we made the announcement, Parkland high school was going to have a high utilization but that that hopefully was only going to be for a short while. That's I guess my big concern: whether we're going to look at it for the next fiscal budget.

I have another question. We had done an audit on the aspect of the Edson and District Health Care Centre. We did a complete study on that building, and it was turned over to Infrastructure, and what had transpired at that time was that we were looking at the aspect of building a new one. I've looked at different publications coming out of Economic Development where they're showing a new health facility in the town of Edson, and there was a quote, if my memory serves me right, for $4 million for the year 2004.

I guess the other aspect of that, too, is that with the present facility we have 50 long-term care beds in the town of Edson, and of course, as you know, they're hooked up with the hospital, but the hospital was built in very many stages. With the aspect of the long-term care needs in that community there was also a functional plan looking at that in the aspects that maybe we could do some conversion and have extended long-term care beds in that hospital. As you realize, in the fall of last year and then this year we had extra beds built in West Yellowhead in the town of Hinton, and of course we transferred some people from Edson's long-term care there, and then also the other aspect was the one in Evansburg that looked after the area. So there was some shuffling there, but the need still shows that we have a need for more long-term care beds.

So I'm just wondering if you can sort of give me any kind of update on where we're at with these projects on the school side and the hospital side in the town of Edson. Thank you.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't have before me the announcement that we made in Edson. It was a very complicated situation, as the hon. member knows. Both the separate and the public boards operate schools in Edson and in Hinton, and we had to do things in Hinton with both boards and things in Edson with both boards, and some funds would flow from one town to the other. In Edson as far as Pine Grove elementary school, though, we did in the last announcement under the capital centennial program announce $4 million for that particular school.

As we move out into this fiscal year, on the school side we have very, very little room. The money is pretty well all allocated, so we'll have to see what we can work out. As I said at the meeting in Edson, we want to move it ahead as fast as we can, but the fact is that we may not have the dollars to do some of the work that needs to be done. We will do it as quickly as we can.

As far as the long-term care situation in Edson, as you all know, we get the recommendations from the regional health authority, and I simply don't have that one right offhand, so I can't answer where we're at on the long-term care. If the new regional health authority still deems that it's necessary, I would really encourage them to be looking at a P3 because that seems to be working very well.

I now have how this is all going to work in Hinton and Edson, so maybe I'll just quickly run through it. In the Edson project for the Grande Yellowhead division, which is public: the transfer of Jubilee junior high school for the depreciated value of $2.698 million, and that would happen immediately; Pine Grove elementary addition and modernization to increase capacity to 625 as a result of the closure of the A.H. Dakin elementary school, and that was the $4 million that I mentioned earlier; the Parkland composite high school modernization rightsizing from 695 to a capacity of 500, and that one was for a little over $5 million, but that could not happen until the budget became available. Now, one of the things that I have received since this announcement is that folks are concerned that Parkland would be crowded even if we left it at the 695, so I'm not sure just how that will all work out.

With the Living Waters, the Catholic division in Edson, as many know, there was a contract already let to build a new junior/senior high in Edson for the separate board. We canceled that contract – so there will not be a new junior/senior high Catholic school in Edson – but then we'll transfer the Jubilee junior high school. The board may use the $6.4 million that was allocated to the contract and funding approved for the junior/senior high school and $400,000 in interest, the $466,971 for the costs associated with abandoning the project, and the balance of the funding in the amount of $3.644 million for any necessary modernization to accommodate the transfer of Jubilee junior high school students. Of the funding $2.698 million will be allocated to Grande Yellowhead school division for the transfer of Jubilee junior high.

In Hinton the public board will transfer the Roche Miette school for the depreciated value of $3.16 million, and that would happen immediately. The public board will have to upgrade the Mountain View school to accommodate the transfer of students from the Roche Miette school. The funding for the transfer could be used to accommodate the transfer of students to the Mountain View school. This was to happen immediately as well.

The Living Waters Catholic regional division, the transfer of the Roche Miette school, $5.5 million has been set aside for the Hinton multicampus project. The majority of the $5.5 million will be used to address the conversion of the Gerard Redmond school to a junior/senior high school and remove six freestanding portables. Some of the funding may be required to address limited needs at Roche Miette, and that $5.5 million was held and we have that money from last year, so that could be used in this whole thing.

So we have $9.8 million to Grande Yellowhead and $9.1 million to Living Waters.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, I regret to interject. The level of noise in that corner is getting very, very high. Kindly respect the opportunity that the minister has to speak.

Hon. minister, you may proceed.

Mr. Lund: I've answered the questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few more comments here, and I see that there are other members that would like to participate in the debate, so we hope that we will get the opportunity to hear all of these in this important ministry.

Quickly to get back to Swan Hills and the huge amount of public moneys that have been put into that particular facility. I don't think there's a member in the House that wouldn't say that we do have to have some way of disposing of hazardous waste. Certainly, there was a time when Swan Hills was an excellent alternative or maybe even the only alternative we had, but since that time new technologies have been developed. They are much more efficient, they're a great alternative, and it certainly would allow us in this province to get out of the business of being in business by supplying or helping to fund a facility such as Swan Hills.

I look at one in particular called Eco Logic. Now, Eco Logic is a Canadian company, and one of its strengths is that it is portable, so the great advantage of this is that it would be able to travel to the various sites instead of us having to transport waste across this country and North America. It would certainly allow us to avoid the possibility of hazardous waste spills. As well, one of the great advantages to their particular process is that it is an alternative to incineration. It involves the gas phase chemical reduction of organic compounds using hydrogen at temperatures of approximately 850 degrees Celsius and ambient pressure. What this certainly does is it allows a breakdown of hazardous waste in a much more efficient way. One of the problems, of course, when we do use the technology that is at Swan Hills is that we do use much cooler temperatures, and the possibility of those wastes not being broken down completely is much greater.

Now, as well, in getting back to the general overview of the ministry, I look under Core Businesses, and one of the bullets there is, "Working with partners to provide cost-effective, innovative and sustainable building infrastructure to support the delivery of government services." Under operating divisions, one of the bullets, property development: works with partners to provide, preserve, and upgrade owned and supported capital infrastructure. Under Strategic Priorities:

- preserving taxpayer investment in infrastructure;
- balancing preservation and growth needs;
- ensuring health and safety in government facilities;

Under major goals in that department: work with partners to provide quality building infrastructure.

Now, then, when this whole concept of using P3s came about, we had looked at this issue and had certainly done research to see if in fact these were an acceptable alternative to the present system that I had mentioned earlier involving tenders to provide these, and we saw problems with the P3 infrastructure solution from a number of different perspectives, certainly financing rates, corporate profits – and when we're looking at corporate profits, we're not only looking at the profits that these companies would make from building the structure, and certainly we have to have those, but the profits down the road that we would have to pay, and I will mention a few examples as we go – certainly higher procurement costs, forgone ownership interest, failure to transfer risk, project quality considerations, the myth of private-sector efficiencies. So there are a whole number of issues that certainly would have to be satisfied to indicate that P3s are in fact a wise use of taxpayer dollars and that they will be getting the greatest return for their tax dollars that they can.

We do have, for example, one situation in Calgary where the Hampton school was built using the P3 model. Certainly, in the building of this school it was determined later that construction materials and details were of residential grade and are already starting to show signs of age and deterioration. Now, this is a school that was built I believe in 1999, and here are some of the problems that are occurring in that new school: cracking tiles in the gymnasium, drywall cracks in the main corridor, roof leaks in the portable, low-quality, high-maintenance mechanical systems, low-quality light fixtures that are expected to fail in a few years, and steep slopes near the school's entrance, where there are no guardrails. So that is one of the examples that we have.

Now, as well, we had in the city of Edmonton a proposal by Carma Developments to build a $5.3 million school. Under the lease agreement the province would pay $390,000 for the first five years of the agreement and then $490,000 for each of the next 15 years. This would mean that taxpayers were on the hook for $9.3 million for a $5.3 million school, and at the end of the lease agreement the school is still the property of the private developer. When I compare that type of scenario to what we paid for Queen Elizabeth school, in the example I quoted earlier, there isn't any comparison. There certainly isn't a savings and a wise use of taxpayer dollars.

I would like to put on the record, particularly in estimates here, some issues that we have tried to address in question period and are certainly still looking for satisfactory answers. When we look at the P3 financing, how can this be cheaper when private firms borrow at a higher rate and include a profit margin in their price? My next question would be: what evidence is there that P3 financing is superior to conventional financing? What I would like to know is: what studies has the government done on P3s to evaluate their viability in Alberta?

Certainly, in looking at where P3s have been tried in other jurisdictions, we have some examples of where P3s did not work: in the United Kingdom, particularly private finance and value for money in NHS hospitals. "A policy in search of a rationale?" a very good paper that indicates that in that particular case these did not work. As well, I believe it is in New Brunswick where P3s were used to try to alleviate the stress of the shortage of schools, certainly a problem in that situation. Again, we are looking for studies that the government has done which would show the opposite of studies that I have mentioned here.

As well, I would like to see the minister table the government's cost-benefit analysis that it generated before proceeding with the Calgary courthouse project, one that he has used as an example of P3s and their effectiveness. So we certainly would be most interested if you could provide us with that information.

Along the line of P3s how can the minister guarantee that P3-financed projects are not going to turn out like the Hampton school in Calgary? Obviously, having had the opportunity to look at that situation and the shortfalls in the construction of that school, the minister will be able to show us how plans along those lines have been altered to ensure that the construction standards that we have enjoyed in our old system are going to be protected in new ones and that cost-cutting measures are not going to be there just to provide profit.

Why is it not possible for the public sector to use private-sector efficiencies to develop infrastructure without charging the public for corporate profit margins? Again, I think that we have in the history of this province been very fortunate to have staff in the Infrastructure department that have served the people of Alberta extremely well. I think that they have certainly demonstrated that and the record stands. For example, even if we want to look at the school system, if we wish to look at the medical system, if we want to look at the excellent highway system that we have in this province, those are a testament to the work that these people have done and continue to do, and to drop a system like that would certainly be wrong. As well, I think the minister would not want the public to lose control of its buildings to the private sector or profit-motivated corporations.

Again, to use the example of Queen Elizabeth high school, if, for example, after the first 20 years that we had that school – if it had been built with P3s, could you imagine how much more we would have paid to use that same facility over the past 25 years? So it would have been an enormous cost over the $1.8 million that it originally cost. That certainly was an investment and a wise investment, particularly when we look at the rate of inflation, which continues to average about 3 percent and has averaged about 3 percent for many years. Certainly, the value of any of those buildings appreciates, and it is a wise investment for Albertans.

Will the minister admit that when the government borrows money to develop infrastructure, as it proposes in the business plan, it will be adding to the provincial debt load rather than reducing it?

Finally, one area I would like some more clarification on – and I know that we've tried to get this in other times during question period. The minister has never given us records of the sole source contracts mentioned in the AG's report. Why won't the minister release those records of the sole source contracts? The estimate was that it would cost only $5,000, and when they are talking about a budget that is the size of Infrastructure's, certainly $5,000 is not much to inform Albertans of where the money for these contracts is going.

Just a couple more questions here. How can Albertans be confident that their money is being spent wisely if some contracts don't go through a tendering process and aren't made public? Again, I can see the minister's point that not all contracts are large enough to be tendered, but certainly there should be some public record that is available so that they can be perused by the public. Will the minister commit to public documentation and justification of all new sole source contracts?

I know that there are other members that would like to participate in our discussions today on the ministry, so at this time I'll take my seat, and if there's time later, I'll add some more.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. You know, the member talked about Swan Hills to start with. I don't know how many times we've got to go over this. Maybe the hon. member could tell me: if there are all these new technologies and there are all these portables and there are all these cheap ways of doing this, why is it that Ontario hasn't moved in? Ontario has a stockpile of PCBs. Why did they spend some $160 million trying to find a site, just to try to find a site, to build a plant? Why are they doing those things?

We had a call for a proposal some time back relative to Swan Hills, and an international company was very interested in it. I had the opportunity to meet with them a couple of times. This is a company that has plants all over the world, hazardous waste plants for the destruction of hazardous material. They told me that there is no plant that they know of that's state of the art like Swan Hills and that can do a complete destruction of hazardous materials. So if the hon. member has a technology that is proven, bring it forward. I'm sure that we and the Minister of Environment would be very anxious to look at it. But I've still got to go back to the question: if this is out there and it is so good, why aren't other provinces in Canada using it?

The comment about going portable and it being safer because there's a danger of spills, how many spills have there been of material being transported to Swan Hills? Even before you attempt to answer that one, how many accidents have there been by vehicles going there? You can count them on one hand. In all of the years that that plant has been operating, not once was there product spilled. Not once. It's never happened. The accidents actually were very minor, but there was no product that was spilled. I don't buy the argument that we should be looking at portables because of the hazard of moving the material around.

Of course, once again I wasn't disappointed when the hon. member brought up P3s. I expected that that would happen, and he didn't disappoint me. I'm not going to stand here and try to defend the Hampton school. I don't know the details about that particular project, I mean, as far as how it happened. I will acknowledge that there were mistakes made, like using residential standard versus commercial standard, and that comes back to haunt you. You know, we know that. We know some of the things that were wrong there. We're not talking about going down that road. That's not what we're talking about. As a matter of fact, if a proposal came forward similar to that, we wouldn't accept it.

If anybody thinks that P3s are the answer to all infrastructure, no, we've never said that. As a matter of fact, we've always said that the application would be very specific and will not suit every situation. We acknowledge that, but we think there are areas where it can work and it will work. As far as your comment about some proposed project that Carma Developments brought forward, I'm not aware of it. I don't know where it was. Obviously, it was not accepted if there was such a thing. I'm not at all aware of it, so I don't know where that came from.

The contracts. Well, be specific. What is it that you want? Just a quick estimate of the time and the dollars that it would cost to go through – when you say contracts, we have hundreds of contracts, thousands of contracts. We don't know what you're talking about, but if you'd be specific, we maybe – maybe – could help you. But I refuse to spend good taxpayers' dollars going through the thousands of contracts that we have to satisfy your fishing trip. I'm just not going to go there. So unless you get specific, and you ask us exactly what it is you're looking for, then . . . [A buzzer sounded] Oh, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar wants to get in on the fishing trip? [interjection] Well, we're not going to provide one for either one of you, so forget it.

An Hon. Member: They're obviously not interested in what you're saying.

Mr. Lund: No. Well, that's fine.

Chair's Ruling

Use of Electronic Devices in the Assembly

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I regret interjecting once again, but lately I've noticed that quite often we have people using electronic devices in this Assembly, and you know that that is not permissible. I caution all members to please respect the rules under which we operate. It's happened one too many times, and it's happened to a number of different people, so please be aware of that.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. During the last little debate I heard the word "P3" being used again in vain. I know that some people are perplexed at the process to the point of going apoplectic in opposing the province's participation, but the problem is that we have to have the background and intellectual capacity to be able to understand complex issues like P3s. If you had a pragmatic, progressive perspective, if you could recognize and analyze partnerships with performance potential, performance that people perceive, if you had that, then at election time you would be the most popular political party because P3s can work. Pity the poor people who don't have that. Some have it; some don't.

I will observe, however, that in some jurisdictions P3s in fact did not work, but I did notice that that jurisdiction had a Liberal government in power at the time. Coincidence? I think not. One could observe the major successes of P3s worldwide, particularly in free enterprise, capitalist jurisdictions where they know how to do them and understand them. They also succeeded even in jurisdictions that didn't have that and were much less supportive of the private sector and leaned more towards government interventionist monopolies. So it does seem that P3s have a bit of a mixed record, very much dependent on the competence of the government administration and leadership. I think we have an excellent government and leadership and competence in this province.

Speaking of P3s that can work, one in particular, which I'm quite fond of, is performance contracting, in which you have to perform or you don't get paid. That has no risk to the public, to the taxpayers, and frankly what better model could you imagine than a performance contract, especially in the area of energy conservation?

Now, we know that the city of Calgary some years ago embarked on a program which is saving some hundred million dollars at $10 million a year in energy savings and retrofits. We know that the province is also leading the way in this through the Department of Infrastructure. I believe we're now doing energy retrofits somewhere in the order of 190 buildings, saving millions and millions of dollars in doing so.

I'm wondering if the minister could discuss schools across the province and school boards across the province. This is technology that's been available for at least 10 years, if not longer. I'm wondering how the school boards and schools across the province are doing in terms of having already done energy retrofits, whether or not they've managed to save a bunch of money, whether we've calculated those savings into school funding in this province. When we talk about how much money we put into school funding, well, a penny saved is a penny earned. So school boards could have been saving millions of dollars. I'm wondering if they have done so, where we're at with that, and if those dollars have been included in the amount of money that we are sending to education in the province. That's the first question I would have of the minister, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, hon. member. That is a very good point. As a matter of fact, I have been talking to some of the boards about what we in government did as far as our energy retrofit program and how that operated and how effective it was and how it reduced our consumption of energy and therefore helped immensely on the emission side of the equation. Of course, for the benefit of those that don't know the way the energy retrofit program worked, we identified areas where the payback would be in about three years. We simply signed a contract with the private sector to come in, do the work. We paid for the work, and then over the period of three years by us paying him what we would have paid had we not done the retrofit, they got their money back and made some profit, which is not, in my opinion, a bad word. Then we moved forward to the five-year, and as a matter of fact a year ago now you probably saw people in here changing the light fixtures and light bulbs and the lighting situation. I've had some complaints that it's not as bright as it used to be, but I'm not sure that that has anything to do with the electricity.

The fact is that that was a five-year estimated payback. I've encouraged school boards, hospital boards, and others to look at that and see what they could do, because I firmly believe they could in fact be helping themselves a lot. As far as when we're constructing new buildings, we are ensuring that incorporated into the design are the most cost-efficient systems that we can put in so that we reduce our consumption and make them efficient, and the payback is great over time. So we're trying to encourage people to do it. So far I haven't heard of any of them actually taking it up. It's interesting that the AUMA now are asking for a fund, money that would be lent to them at low interest or interest free over a period of time to retrofit, and I would throw the challenge out to them: do what we did first and see how it works, because you may very well find that the payback is as great and as rapid.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Just be patient.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

An Hon. Member: I hear that every night.

Dr. Taft: No comment.

Mr. Chairman, I have a series of question for the minister. I appreciate his responses here. I'll be as clear as possible, and he can answer as much as he can here and perhaps follow up with some written responses.

Some of mine focus on health facilities, given that I'm the critic for that area, although not all of my questions do. It would be helpful to me if the minister could explain the working relationship between his department and the regional health authorities when it comes to building new facilities. I'll be honest with you; I don't understand the details of how these projects are managed, who designs, how that process works. That would be useful information for me. There's a particular example that's of real concern to tens of thousands of Albertans or even maybe hundreds of thousands, and that's the need for a new hospital in southeast Calgary. We understand that although that has been identified as a priority in some circles for five or six years, it's still not even on your department's books in terms of: you haven't received a request for it. That makes me wonder what's going on in the process generally between the RHAs and the department. So some enlightenment on that would be very helpful.

Also, I'm not sure if this is even appropriate for this particular minister, but the issue of energy contracts between RHAs, say for electricity and natural gas and so on. Does that have anything to do with Infrastructure? No? Well, if there are comments there from this minister on that, I'd appreciate that. What contracts have been signed regarding electricity and natural gas supplies to the health facilities?

I have raised the next one in this Assembly before, and I am going to persist because I think it's a very, very important issue, and that's the issue of asbestos in buildings. I was saying in this Assembly yesterday that the number of major multinational corporations that have gone bankrupt because of asbestos litigation is very significant. Companies like Johns-Manville, gone. Kaiser Aluminum, gone. W.R. Grace, gone. These are huge, huge companies that were put under because they came under such financial stress from litigation about asbestos. I am going to persist in encouraging this government to manage this risk as effectively as possible, and it seems to me that one of the ways to do that would be to develop a list of all the public buildings which currently contain asbestos and a list including details of the nature of the asbestos, where it is, and how it will need to be managed in the future. I think that at some point – and I was making this point to the Minister of Finance yesterday – we need to probably record some kind of liability for that risk on our government books somewhere because I'm concerned that in the future it's going to become a real liability if it's not properly managed. So there's that concern about asbestos.

Another issue that's come up even today and will come up, I expect, again and has come up before is the concern over the toxic molds in public buildings. We discussed the school in Sundre in the last couple of days, and my impression is that the department did the right thing there and acted very decisively. We are going to need to watch this issue as well.

So I'd love to hear about any initiatives the department is taking to stay on top of that problem, and if there's something here in these business plans like a risk management office for asbestos and molds or something – I'm sure there isn't, but some idea like that – I'd be interested in that.

Now, shifting to the estimates themselves, one of the things that I like to do with departments is to lean heavily on the business plans and compare this year's estimates to what were predicted to be this year's estimates when the business plans were put out last year. In other words, we had a target last year of where we would be this year. Now that we're in this year, how are we doing compared to that target? It raises a number of questions. Right now I'm looking at page 248 of the business plans document. I'm looking for the title for the ministry business plans for this year, page 248, which has Ministry Statement of Operations on it. Then I'm looking at the equivalent document from last year on page 247, so almost exactly the same page even, and I notice that in some categories we're very close to where we expected to be last year, and that's good. In some categories we're very significantly off, and that needs some explanation. It's not necessarily bad, but it does suggest to us that the plan over a 12-month period got pretty drastically changed.

My first comment to the minister would be just one of noting a bit of difficulty in comparing last year and this year because they're somewhat different formats in terms of the presentation of the statement of operations. But I notice, for example, that the school facilities target put forward in the 2002 document for this year is, as I read it, $140,000,000. Then for school operations and maintenance, $331,000,000. It's pretty difficult to compare directly because of a bit different format. But the school facilities operations figure looks to be right on the money. School facilities: there may be some significant differences.

Let me just put my question in general. You aren't going to be able to answer this now. For the sake of this Legislature's ability to hold your department accountable to its business plans, I would appreciate it if your officials could do a comparison between where you were planning to be this year and where we actually are this year by the couple of dozen major categories that are presented in the ministry's statement of operations. So I'm looking for something that would say: "Okay. We planned to be at this figure in health care facilities, and we're actually at a different figure, and here's why." To me that's a fundamental exercise in making the business plans work, you know, the old adage: you plan your work and then you work your plan. This is a process where I'm asking the minister to work his plan. Show me how the business plan is on target, as it clearly is, and where it's different. If it's a significant difference, some explanation for that would be helpful. I would hope the minister and his staff could take the time to do that. I think it would be a useful exercise for all of us.

I know that there are a number of other MLAs who would like to comment or ask questions of the minister, but if he has something he can tell me right now, that would be helpful.

Thank you.

Mr. Lund: Thanks to the hon. member for the questions. The first one dealt with the health facilities and the relationship and how the expanded facilities are dealt with. We asked for the regional health authorities to give us a capital plan similar to the school boards, where we asked them to give us their capital plan, the three- and five-year plan of what their needs are. Then once we've got those, we internally prioritize those using very extensive criteria. The primary one, of course, though, is health and safety. That is on the school side, and of course the functionality of the building, the need for the building to fill the government's programs are some of the factors that all go into prioritization as we go through.

Once we've got the prioritization and we have our target numbers as far what we have to spend, we come down the list, and that's how they're determined. Even though they send in their targets, there's a lot of consultation that goes back and forth between staff in Infrastructure and the regional health authorities to determine the need. If in fact the facility is what you really do need, the area that's being asked for – is it excessive or is it sufficient or just where does that all fit in? So it's a long process between the regional health authorities. We try to work very closely with them because there's no point in us going out and building something that doesn't meet their needs. Plus we bring in Health and Wellness because once again there's no point in us building something if in fact they're not going to have the money to turn the lights on.

You also asked something about energy contracts. We are working closely with the school boards on this because it has more of a direct impact through our operating and maintenance grant. That's how they pay for the utilities. It's not the same in the operation of a hospital or an extended care facility or at the university or any of the postsecondary institutions. Incidentally, I shouldn't have just talked about health and schools. We also do the same process for the postsecondary institutions to determine their needs.

The energy contracts. I know that a lot of the school boards signed up for five-year contracts as far as the electricity side. They are wrestling with the gas side, though, because they didn't have those kinds of contracts. I'm not familiar with what the regional health authorities have done relative to their structures and their energy costs because we're not closely related to those, but it would be interesting to find out what they've done.

The asbestos issue. I'm not sure. With the very detailed work that has been done to assess the condition of our buildings, we may very well have a pretty good idea – I don't know if we've got, you know, a list of the detail that you suggested – but we'll get back to you on that one. I think that is a worthwhile suggestion, though, because I agree with you. That could be a problem for us down the way with the asbestos in these buildings. Now, when we're doing renovations and/or demolishing a building that has asbestos, we have a very defined process that the contractors have to use in order that it's handled properly at that stage, but of course the asbestos can probably cause other problems.

With the toxic mold situation on the health side and on the school side as well the operating authorities are the ones that are responsible to handle the issue. Now, we do assist in air monitoring, for example. We do have experts on staff so that we can do some of this work, so we do assist them. However, the process is driven by the authority. There are some interesting things about the air quality as we get into some of these issues; for example, the school in Sundre that you asked about the other day. We discovered that probably an even bigger issue than the mold was the air quality in the carbon monoxide reading, for example. Those older schools simply were not built to – the air conditioning was opening the windows, and that was the air circulation. Well, Sundre is a good example. I've been in that school, and when they did some renovation on it a number of years ago, they boarded up most of the windows so you can't get air circulation, so we are looking at those kinds of things.

Your comments about last year's business plan and projections versus what is in this year's plan. This year with the infusion of all that money through the centennial program, the $5.5 billion – and out of that we end up with around $2 billion – that makes a big difference on the numbers that we have got for this year. I'm not sure when we're comparing last year versus this year whether that was the status of the structures and where we're at as far as filling the need or if it was just the dollars that you were looking at.

Dr. Taft: Actually, mostly on the dollars.

Mr. Lund: Yeah. Okay. We will make it a more thorough answer, but that's basically why the difference.

Mr. VanderBurg: Just two short issues, and one deals with the Northern Gateway school division. They had two priorities. One was a school in Whitecourt that had 109 percent occupancy. That was addressed in last year's budget, and I thank the minister and his department for taking such quick action on that. Also their second request, and that's dealing with a school in Onoway that has just under 90 percent occupancy but rates very high because the original part of the school built in 1921 is in need of some major work. You know, I'd like to know the status of that project, but knowing that every issue relates to financing, I have a suggestion for the minister of maybe a possible way to help finance this needy project in Onoway, and that is similar to what the Member for Redwater was talking about on surplus land.

I do believe that there are surplus buildings that fall under your ministry, and surely white elephants like the federal building have high utility costs, security costs, grants in lieu of taxes, and I'm sure that those things are major line items on your budget. I think those major line items could be easily removed by putting up the for-sale sign, and I think that we should be a little more aggressive when it comes to these surplus buildings that we have that we have no intention of using. Surely your department and all the great staff that they have can come up with a way to find some additional dollars in your budget from these surplus buildings to put into projects that are much needed.

So just those comments I'd ask the minister to address.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, hon. member, for those questions. I'll have to get back to you on the school situation. I just simply don't have the details of all the projects we have out there.

As far as the federal building is concerned, we'll certainly take your comments forward. Currently the way the process works, of course, is the proceeds go into general revenues, so they don't flow right back into our department, but I think you had two very good suggestions in your comments there, and we'll be taking those forward.

Thank you.

[Several members rose]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: It's good to see that everybody wants to participate in this ministry. It is a very interesting ministry, and certainly we are appreciating the comments made by the minister today.

Earlier on in debate the minister had asked me to provide some examples of what other alternatives would be to Swan Hills, and of course one is Eco Logic, a Canadian company, and they have a robust technology for the treatment of chlorinated hydrocarbons in various matrices, and this is extremely important. This is the part of the breakdown of PCBs that we have to be very, very careful about. It's the new compounds that are formed, and certainly if it isn't done at a high enough temperature or under the correct conditions, we end up with more problems than we had with the PCBs. So they do a marvelous job with this particular technology. Now, Eco Logic has operated large-scale systems at sites worldwide, so they are internationally known.

One of the other questions that the minister had asked me was: what type of hazardous waste can they handle? They can handle chemical weapons that have been stockpiled in the United States. They've had experience with that. They've also done military waste, energetic materials and munitions, pollution prevention, waste minimization, industrial hazardous wastes including PCBs. They have done site remediation, and I know that's a huge issue here in the province, and last night in estimates with Municipal Affairs we were discussing this particular issue when it comes to the underground storage tanks. So those are a few of the answers that I can provide for the minister in regard to alternatives to Swan Hills and a huge cost that Albertans continue to face to keep that particular plant functional.

Now, then, as well, other questions I had today. I would certainly like the minister to update us on the status of our fleet of airplanes here in the province. It's my understanding that some of those have had extensive use – they have served us very well – and there are plans to perhaps purchase new planes, and if he could please indicate to us if in fact there are plans to purchase a new corporate jet or new planes and what the procedure will be for selling off the old ones.

As well, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne was talking about the federal building, and one of my questions to the minister would be: is there a problem with the federal building in that it is an older building? It was one that was probably constructed when the use of asbestos would have been quite prevalent. Is there an asbestos problem with that building? Could we sell it even if we wanted to? Also, if we can't, has the ministry ever looked at what the cost would be for the demolition of that building? Of course, before we could demolish it, we would have to remove the asbestos products.

I would like to refer to a news item, and this was written by Lewis Auerbach. The title is Building for Profit Costs a Bundle: Objective Analysis Needed to See Whether Proposed P3 Hospitals Save or Lose Money for the Public. He goes on in this, and I'll quote part of the first paragraph.

The Ontario government has given cabinet approval to proceed with two public-private partnerships (P3s), to build and provide all non-medical services at a new Royal Ottawa Hospital (an estimated capital cost of $95 million), and at the Osler Hospital in Brampton. All indications are that the P3s will cost more, not less, than the same project publicly owned. My estimate is at least $14 million more for the [Royal Ottawa Hospital].

Now, then, in looking at this $14 million more on $95 million is an increase in price of somewhere between 14 and 15 percent. Certainly, with these additional costs by using a P3 model this is not cost-effective. And this isn't a contract that was given out by a Liberal government. It was given out by your Conservative cousins in Ottawa, and perhaps this is the reason why they are currently trailing the Liberals in that particular province in the polls. They have not made wise use of their taxpayer dollars, and if it's costing an extra 14 to 15 percent on projects, we can certainly see why.

So those are just a few comments and clarifications I wanted to make. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister.

Mr. Lund: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, hon. member, for your questions. Relative to the airplanes. We, of course, have three King Airs – one 350 and two 200s – and the Dash 8. There's currently no plan to expand the fleet or replace any portions of it, but we know that particularly the 200s are getting up in age, so the maintenance costs start going up. If the members have had an opportunity to use them lately, they will have seen that we did do major interior work to both of those aircraft. So we just simply are not looking for and/or planning to do anything with them.

The federal building. Yes, it does have asbestos. We don't believe that it's insurmountable for someone to do something with that building. As a matter of fact, there have been some tire kickers, but we haven't really gone out with a call for proposal or hung up the for-sale sign, as the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne suggested, but I will be pursuing that.

Back to our favourite topic of P3s. It might be interesting for the member to know that the last time I looked, the Liberals were still in government in British Columbia. And guess what? They're in the process currently of a major P3 project where they are going to build a facility that is going to be a health facility.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Lund: Yeah, a health facility. The concept is that the regional health authority will rent about 40 percent of the space in the building, and the rest of the building will be used by doctors, by an MRI, by diagnostics, and all of those good things, a true P3.

I think I walked through once in question period how we are going to be dealing with proposals that come forward. Internally we have set up a committee, that's chaired by one of the assistant deputy ministers, that will look at these and assess them and work with people as they're going through, because we don't want people to spend a bunch of money only to bring something to us that is unacceptable.

Then under Treasury they are setting up an independent group of people that will assess these and come back with recommendations to us whether in fact it's an acceptable alternate way of doing things. As I have said before, one of the things that has to happen: you have to be able to take the lifetime cost, bring it back to present-day value, and compare that with what we are doing. There are things like off-loading risk. There are things like getting the building done early, things like if you get someone to own, operate, finance, and build over the period of the contract, they possibly can operate even more efficiently.

I can't resist the temptation to give you a little bit more of what Collette said. He's talking about defining our role. That would be the role of government.

It's true that there are many functions best left in the hands of government, but these tend to lie in the field of policy and regulation. . . . private-sector organizations that have taken over the operation of parts of the transportation system have much more freedom to be innovative in how they run the business. I am sure most of you will agree that day-to-day operations are best left to the private sector, which has the freedom and the expertise to respond quickly to market forces.

An Hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Lund: Minister Collette, the Minister of Transport for the federal Liberal government.

An Hon. Member: How low can you get, quoting from a Liberal in here.

Mr. Lund: One hon. member asked me why I would quote a Liberal federal minister. The reason I'm doing it is because – and I don't know just why it's happening – somehow our Liberal opposition doesn't seem to want to get the blinders off and look at what it is we're trying to do here.

He went on to say:

At the same time, the new market-driven approach brings to the private sector greater accountability. Costs that were once hidden – paid for by government – are coming out in the open. Of course, the costs have always been there, but they were paid by the taxpayers. Now they are paid by those that benefit from the service. Going on, here he talks about the new approach.

We're not alone in this trend. Many European countries are restructuring services using the vehicle of public-private partnerships. During a recent trip to Europe, I was impressed by the role public-private partnerships are playing in servicing infrastructure and other transportation needs.

This is from Minister Collenette as he talked about P3s and how they can work. I guess that one of the best examples right now is the Confederation Bridge and what a tremendous P3 that is and how it can work. They can work, and we are going to continue to pursue them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to follow up briefly on the thread of the federal building here in Edmonton. As the minister and members are aware, that building has been empty for many, many, many years. I understand that the annual cost to heat it, to maintain it, to keep it from falling into disrepair is very substantial. Because it occupies such a privileged and great location and because of the development that's taking place in that part of the city and because of the potential of the site, I'm wondering if we would not be better disposing of it in some fashion for a dollar and have it turned into something positive. We would have to be very, very careful how we did it and make sure that whatever party was involved carried out their end of the bargain, but would we not be better getting positive revenue from it in one fashion or other rather than paying and having it carried on the books as an expense?

Mr. Lund: Thanks to the hon. member for the suggestion, and as I commented earlier, we will certainly take these comments forward and see what we can do with them. I assure you that we'll pursue it.

Dr. Taft: I know the hour is drawing late. It's a shame it's going to end so soon, but I have some very specific questions for the minister which he'll need to follow up on in writing.

In the statement of operations there's a specific line around air transportation services. My questions are the following: could the minister provide us the estimated number of miles planned to be flown by the aircraft, the amount of fuel that's estimated to be consumed, and could the minister provide us the price per litre of that fuel that's paid under the contracts that the government has with the fuel suppliers? That's for aviation fuel.

You don't have to have it right now, but if you have it, that's great. Thank you.

Mr. Lund: No. I don't have it. But having been a former owner of an aircraft myself, I want to tell you that the distance flown isn't that important. Probably what you'd find more useful would be the cost for the operation of each aircraft. Distance flown isn't a big measure of anything. We can get you the issues about the fuel and the cost of the fuel.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have some additional questions at this time that I certainly did not get on the record, and certainly it applies to all hon. members of this Assembly, whether they're from Edmonton-Glenora or Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, who are present in the Assembly at this time.

All across the province, regardless of whether it's a school, a hospital, or a lodge, there is an important, significant deficit in the infrastructure. We discussed that earlier. On page 239 of the business plan – and I don't know if in the course of this afternoon's events there was any discussion on the ratification of the Kyoto protocol. There have been claims that the ratification of this by the federal government will certainly "have a significant impact on Alberta's economy." When we consider that the passage of this legislation is for the future, not so much for today or yesterday but for the future, we have to ask: can the minister reconcile the statements in the business plan to the reality of the situation of Kyoto? With Kyoto, according to this government, the world as we know it was going to end, yet we find out that in spite of this Suncor has gone ahead with a $3 million project, and there are estimates that Kyoto will only add a few cents to the extraction price of each barrel of oil. How can the Minister of Infrastructure see a few extra pennies per barrel of oil as making energy prices significantly higher?

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question on the proposed estimates for the Department of Infrastructure for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	1,209,415,000
Capital Investment	42,416,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report the estimates of the Department of Infrastructure and beg leave to sit again at a later date.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Infrastructure: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $1,209,415,000; capital investment, $42,416,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that in view of the hour I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 1:30 on Monday next.

[Motion carried; at 5:15 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Monday, April 28, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome. Hon. members, today's prayer contains a moment of silence, and at the conclusion of the prayer would we all remain standing for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. On this day let each of us pray in our own way for all who have been killed or injured in the workplace. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted. In a moment of silent contemplation may we now allow our thoughts to remember those taken before their time, those who have suffered through tragedies, and reach out to the families, friends, neighbours, and communities most immediately impacted. May God provide them eternal peace. Amen.

Now would you please participate in the language of your choice in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and to Members of the Legislative Assembly a special group of people walking from Nanaimo to Ottawa. I hosted this group of elders and youth for lunch today. Their walk is a result of a vision that one of the members, Gina Meldrum, dreamt to raise awareness about the tragic problem of aboriginal youth suicide, which is five times higher than among nonaboriginal youth. They left Nanaimo on Vancouver Island on April 1, and they will arrive in Ottawa on June 21.

Mr. Speaker, they're seated in the members' gallery, and I ask that they stand as I call their names: Mr. Paul Laliberte of Nanaimo, B.C., the leader; Reno Trimble from Prince Rupert, B.C.; Thomas Watts from Vancouver Island; Gina Meldrum, Williams Lake, B.C.; David Elliott, Cowichan Tribe, Duncan, B.C.; Candice Faith Clappis, Vancouver Island, B.C.; Vincent Watts, Vancouver Island, B.C.; Greg Brown, Denman Island; Moves Far Women, Northern Ireland; Mary Whitehorse, Hinton; Mary Ann Whitehorse, Hinton; Channelle Plante, Hinton; Damien Plante, Hinton; Jonas Whitehorse, Hinton; John Bremner, Hinton; Steve Rush, Kildonan, B.C. I ask the members to give a warm welcome to this group of wonderful people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly two classes of grade 6 students from Win Ferguson school in Fort Saskatchewan. They're accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Joanne Simpson and Mr. Jeff Spady and also by parent helpers Mrs. Candace Kereliuk, Mrs. Gloria Govenlock, Mrs. Barb Hansen, Mrs. Allison Tucker-Lamour-eux, and Mrs. Cindee Robertson. They're in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two people who are very near and dear to me. We have with us today one of my three sisters, Judith Ada Brown, who is one of the hardest working and most energetic people that I know, along with my nephew Lonny Nathaniel Brown, who's a student here at the University of Alberta and one heck of a guitar player, I might add. I would ask them to stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 20 students who are here from Keenooshayo elementary school in St. Albert. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Barb Hubbard, and by an assistant, Mrs. Sylvie Martinson. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd like also to recognize the fact that if not all of them certainly most of them are graduates of the DARE program most recently. I would like them all to please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a young constituent from Edmonton now, formerly from Vegreville. His name is Mr. Curtis Litun, and he is seated in the members' gallery. This young lad is multiskilled and multitalented, not only completing his degree at the University of Alberta in agribusiness, but he was the 4-H member who served on the judging committee in Saskatoon at Agribition and is also an ambassador for the Alberta food products council. I would ask Curtis to please rise in our gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

National Day of Mourning

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 28th day of April is our National Day of Mourning for workers who have been killed or injured on the job. Over 100 people die from job-related injuries or illness each year in this province. Someone is injured on the job every three and a half minutes. This is simply too many deaths and injuries and too many devastated families and friends. We owe it to ourselves, to our families, and to our communities to make sure all Albertans are safe at work. Nobody in this province should ever have to say that they feel that their workplace is unsafe.

If government could legislate away workplace injuries, Mr.

Speaker, you can be sure we would have done it long ago. We all need to make workplace safety part of our culture. This year we launched the WorkSafe Alberta initiative in conjunction with labour, employers, and safety associations to make substantial improvement in workplace safety. We need kids to question their parents before they leave for work. We need parents to question their kids when they get their first job. We need unions to put safety first, and we need employers to realize that the investment they make in a safety program will pay dividends many times over.

We in this Assembly have the privilege and responsibility of leading our society. When it comes to societal change, we all have to accept that it is up to us to lead that change. If we will not do it, then we cannot expect anyone else to. The change that we have to make is to eliminate the idea of an accident. Even the use of that word is unacceptable because it implies that there was no way of anticipating or preventing tragedy, and that just is not true. With all the investigations that we have conducted, we know that safety comes down to making the right choice every time.

We honour our fallen workers by remembering them at ceremonies that are being held in communities across this province and by renewing our commitment to safer workplaces.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Seventeen fewer families were devastated by the loss of a loved one to a senseless work-related death last year compared to 2001, but we can only truly celebrate when no one dies on the job in this province. People working to make a living for themselves and their families should not be robbed of the natural expectation that they will go home to a family and a future. Every three and a half minutes an Albertan is injured or killed in the workplace. Hopefully, industry, safety associations, labour, and government will be able to meet the challenge from Alberta's Human Resources and Employment minister to work together and reduce workplace incidents by 40 percent by the year 2004, and at this time on behalf of the Official Opposition I would like to thank the hon. minister and his staff for their commitment to improve workplace safety in this province.

Setting a good example to be followed is Syncrude. Syncrude and its contractors achieved excellent safety performance in 2002 while achieving a record production level, which is also reflected in lower operating costs. The combined lost-time injury rate was less than one injury for every 2 million hours worked. This compares very favourably to the Alberta mining and petroleum sector average of 14 injuries for every 2 million hours worked. Syncrude and all its contractors, union and non-union, are setting an example for the rest of the workplace in this province. I would be honoured and pleased to stand here next year and congratulate the minister on successfully sending far more Alberta workers home to their families for another year.

The National Day of Mourning was officially recognized by the federal government in 1991, eight years after the day of remembrance was launched by the Canadian Labour Congress. On this day we must take a moment to remember workers who have been killed, disabled, or become ill as a result of their work, but on every day of the year we must remain vigilant to prevent tragedy. This is how we must honour those who have had their lives taken or forever changed as the result of a workplace trauma. Mr. Speaker, hug your family a little longer tonight when you get home and remember those who were not so fortunate.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent of the House to read a statement in response to the minister's statement.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the eighth annual International Day of Mourning for workers killed and injured on the job. Last year 101 Albertans were killed at work. This was the sixth year in a row that a hundred or more Alberta workers were killed. No one goes to work expecting not to come home. They expect and their families expect that they're going to go to work, that they're going to work safely, and that when their shift is over, they're going to come home and have dinner with their family. That has not been the case for too many people. Our hearts go out to their families and friends. They will not be forgotten.

Last year 155,000 Alberta workers were also injured on the job. It is essential that we ensure that people injured while working to support their families receive reliable workers' compensation services. We again urge the government to establish a long-standing claims tribunal so that injured workers do not face the additional burden of losing their homes and their independence. We should not sacrifice justice and leave workers and their families to carry the costs of their workplace injury.

In the last session of this Legislature we passed the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act to prevent workplace injuries. This Legislature will have to remain vigilant to determine what additional steps must be taken. Government, employers, and workers must work together to eliminate sources of workplace injuries and strive for injury-free work sites.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The basic instructional grant given to schools increased by only 2 percent in the last budget. This gives an instructional grant for schools of $4,454 per student for the next year. To the Minister of Learning: how did the government decide that an increase in the basic instruction grant of only 2 percent was enough?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would say at the outset that school boards received much more than 2 percent. As the hon. Leader of the Opposition fully knows, there was an 8 percent increase in special needs, there was a 3 percent increase in transportation, and the increase to my department on the basic learning side averaged out at a 4.9 percent increase. So, first of all, to say that the school boards only received 2 percent is absolutely wrong.

Second of all, Mr. Speaker, what we pride ourselves on when giving out the dollars to the school boards is allowing the school boards to have the flexibility in how they spend those dollars. Indeed, it is up to the school boards how they spend those dollars. When it comes to the actual amount, as to why it was 2 percent, there are economic issues that are concerned. We full well know that there are special-needs children which are built into the formula. There are sparsity and distance components in the formula, and that all determines what a school board receives when it comes to the actual funding.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the minister: has your department ever costed out what a school can buy with the $4,454 and whether or not that's enough to give them a quality education?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I'll use the example. That $4,454 is only the basic amount per student. But even if it was only $4,454, which it isn't, but if it were that, each particular classroom of roughly 25 students would have around $120,000 to work with. The realistic amount is closer to $7,000 that a school has actually to deal with. Seven thousand times 25 is very close to $200,000 per classroom.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the minister: when will your department fund education based on the school's actual costs rather than this mix that you're talking about?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, if a student were just a student were just a student, it would be relatively easy to fund education. We have students in parts of this province where the cost of living is extremely high. We have students in parts of this province where there are only 10 or 15 students, and we have to educate them. That is our job, to educate those students, and that's something we take extremely, extremely seriously. So to say that it is a simple process, simply to say, "Well, this student costs $1,000, this one $5,000," is an absolute fallacy.

Municipal Funding

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, rural recreation centres may be forced to close their doors because increasing energy costs have made it impossible to make ends meet. Without energy rebates rural municipalities will have to find ways to further subsidize recreation centres just to keep them open. To the Premier: is it the policy of this government to force ice arenas to close and children to go out on the streets to play hockey?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Nicol: Why did the Premier stand up in this House and claim that the natural gas rebate program is reasonable and intelligently thought out when recreation centres and all other facilities working on fixed budgets throughout the province face closure?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy supplement, but the rebate program as it now stands has been reasonably and intelligently thought out. Back in 2001, of course, we had to deal with the situation on an ad hoc basis, and we gave an undertaking to the Alberta public that we would come up with a program to deal with the issue in future years on a sustainable basis, and that's why the rebate program was brought in, to arrive at a yearly average of $5.50 a gigajoule. So I don't know what to say to those communities other than that they do have opportunities to enter into budget programs, and on that point I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a well-thought-out and responsible program. In fact, if we can go back to the Leader of the Opposition's comments on the bill in 2001, it says:

If we go ahead and estimate the price of natural gas for our budgeting process at $7 . . . and . . . start protecting the price at $5, what we've got is a $2 margin there that we . . . either have to put into our budget [or] debate the dollars that are necessary to cover that difference between what we're expecting out of revenues . . . Otherwise we'll end up running a deficit budget, and in Alberta we don't want to do that.

So I thank the member of the opposition for his comments. In fact, if he would again go through the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, he would find that the regulations embed his comments.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To give that quote that I gave in 2001 really shows how little the minister understood about the question I asked.

To the Premier: why does the government insist on downloading its funding responsibilities to rural municipalities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we don't. We provide a reasonable amount of money to municipalities through various grant program, including the municipal grants and transportation grants, and there are numerous programs, I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, that go to support community organizations. There's the community facilities enhancement program, the community initiatives program, so there are many programs available for municipalities. We do more than our part to assist and partner with municipalities. One of the more recent initiatives is one that was alluded to by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. It hasn't been finalized yet, but this is a program to joint venture with municipalities to achieve conservation measures. So there is yet one more example of how this government participates and co-operates with municipalities to achieve things that are for the common good of Albertans.

Toxic Mold in Foothills Medical Centre

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday in this House the Minister of Health and Wellness said, "The best advice that I have . . . from the [Calgary] regional health authority is that there is no evidence of a toxic mold in [the Foothills]." The minister of human resources said, "We are not aware that there's been a definition of a toxic mold at this point." The Premier said, "There is no evidence of toxic mold in . . . the Foothills hospital." To the Premier: given that I have in my hand lab tests, which I will table this afternoon, showing that three kinds of toxic mold were found in the Foothills and that these were fully known by the Calgary health region, will the Premier withdraw his statements from Thursday and admit that this Assembly was misinformed?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to see the documentation. I'd like to see who prepared the documentation. The hon. member did not answer a question that I posed nor is he required to answer a question, but I asked him: would he stand up in the House and name the person who identified the toxic mold and whether or not that person was acting for the Liberal Party and in the interests of the Liberal Party?

Dr. Taft: They were legitimate tests conducted for the Calgary health region.

The medical officer from the Foothills said earlier this month that the molds recently found in the renal dialysis unit were probably the same toxic varieties shown in these tests, which the Calgary health region has. To the Premier: is the Calgary health region not telling you this information, or is your government just not listening?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment are much closer to this situation, and I'll have either one or both of them respond.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there has been some concern expressed by employees with the regional health authority, and today Alberta workplace health and safety and the Calgary health region and unions representing the hospital employees are meeting to discuss this particular issue.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said last Thursday, which is that the best advice that we have at this time is that there is no evidence of toxic mold in the Foothills hospital. However, I of course will undertake to the member and to all members of the Assembly a review of the material that he wishes to table later on this afternoon. I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that the people who work with the regional health authority do take the safety of their patients and their employees seriously. There has been comprehensiveness in the review of this issue undertaken by the regional health authority, but again if the hon. member has material that is meritorious of further consideration, then we'll certainly take that into account and raise that with the regional health authority.

Dr. Taft: Well, to the Minister of Health and Wellness I repeat the obvious request. If this government is so confident that there is nothing to hide, will he order an independent test for toxic mold at the Foothills immediately?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I do have confidence in the regional health authority, but I don't know anything about this report that the hon. member wishes to table later on today. He has the advantage of all of the information and speaking about it as if it were gospel. I can't say that. Neither myself nor the hon. member is a microbiologist. We are not experts in this area. We do rely upon solid individuals with the proper credentials to determine whether or not this is, in fact, a dangerous situation. All I can say, again, is that I have confidence in the regional health authority taking the issue of the safety of their patients and their staff seriously.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the Premier gave universities and school boards 24 hours to come up with a plan to prevent SARS from entering the province through student exchanges. This from a government that has yet to come up with its own detailed action plan to deal with the threat of the SARS virus. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. With the confirmation of another case of suspect SARS in the Capital health region, why has the government failed to come up with its own detailed action plan to address the threat posed by the SARS virus in this province?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I would refer the hon. member to Hansard of Thursday of last week, I believe, where we talked about how the province has been working for some number of years and continues to improve a program as it relates to infectious diseases. Now, you won't find a line item in our budget relating to SARS. You won't find a line item in our budget referring to West Nile virus, but they all fall within an appropriate category of infectious diseases that we have to be prepared for, and we are prepared for it. I indicated to the House last week that if one needs to see how successful this is, one need only look at how quick our response was to meningitis. So we do have a plan in place.

I should comment on this to the hon. member. We do as of today have six suspect cases of SARS in this province. Now, suspect cases by definition are those cases where individuals are showing SARS-like symptoms, but there is no diagnostic test for SARS. Of those six cases, five of them have fully recovered. They're at home now, and they've fully recovered. The sixth one, the most recent one, which was brought to our attention earlier this week, is an individual who is now at home and has not shown any worsening of the symptoms. You move from a suspect case to being a probable case when your symptoms continue to worsen and there's no other medical explanation available. We have not had a probable case of SARS in this province, nor have we had a confirmed case of SARS in this province, Mr. Speaker.

So we do have an appropriate plan in place. We ask individuals to take appropriate precautions. When individuals do think that they have SARS-like symptoms, there is a process by which they can be appropriately looked after by the right kind of health professionals. In this way we can minimize the danger of SARS to Albertans, and we can protect their health as best we can.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that what the minister released last Thursday was a list of symptoms that Albertans should look for to see whether or not they're infected by SARS, when is this minister going to stop being complacent and instead impose a 24-hour deadline on himself by tabling a government SARS action plan in the Legislature no later than tomorrow afternoon?

2:00

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we of course have taken this matter of SARS very seriously. Ministers of health from across Canada have been talking about the appropriate measures that we can all take, and we have learned much from the experience of the province of Ontario. We have been in regular contact, myself with my counterpart, the Hon. Tony Clement, minister of health from Ontario, and our provincial medical officers and public health officials have been in contact with their counterparts in other parts of Canada. We do have a plan in place, and it is solid.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the same minister: given that in this year's budget funding for provincial health laboratories was frozen and funding for vaccines cut by 20 percent, how can the minister assure Albertans that Alberta's public health care system won't be overwhelmed by SARS or the West Nile virus?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the subject of the Provincial Laboratory I can say, for example, in response to the issue of West Nile virus, that we will by this summer be able to test for that in our own provincial laboratory for microbiology. Our public health laboratory will be able to do that this summer instead of relying on the federal laboratory that's located in the province of Manitoba. That laboratory in Manitoba has done very, very good work for us in the past, but the speed of return on this will be quite a bit improved by being able to do this within the province of Alberta. So our laboratory is appropriately resourced, and we will take the necessary measures to ensure that we can maximize the protection of Albertans through surveillance and through education. Again, we do have a solid plan in place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alberta's Relationship with the U.S.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the hon. Minister of Economic Development announced that he was traveling to Washington, D.C., in an attempt to strengthen ties with our good friends and neighbours to the south, the United States of America. My question is to the hon. Minister of Economic Development. Can the minister tell us whom he met with and what they spoke about?

Mr. Norris: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question and say at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that it was an absolute honour to go and represent Alberta. Contrary to reports these meetings were not secretive, and they weren't ultra right-wing groups at all. They were members of the Bush administration that we met with to talk about Alberta. Things that were discussed, obviously, were: now that the conflict in Iraq is coming to a close, where does Alberta fit in that rebuilding process? I would like to make it very, very clear to the members of the House that the leadership that our Premier showed was not only courageous and at the right time, but the message got through loud and clear, and our American friends and trading partners are more than willing to continue doing business with Alberta. To that end, we talked about the role Alberta will have in the continental energy program that President Bush and Vice-President Cheney have talked about. I'm very, very pleased to respond that, most significantly, Alberta is front and foremost in that process, and we will continue to be a good friend and ally. That was the message we gave, and they heard it loud and clear.

Mr. Shariff: Can the minister tell us if those meetings were successful in strengthening Alberta's relationship with the U.S., and how does he measure it? [interjections]

Mr. Norris: Well, you know, I hear the members opposite talking about puffball questions. Quite frankly, I find it offensive that they don't even want to hear the answer, because guess who's driving the economy, Mr. Speaker? It's the businesses of Alberta. It's not these people right here. I can tell you that for darn sure. If you want to actually find out what's going on in the world, open your eyes and go take a trade mission with our biggest trading partner, who is extremely offended by comments of a personal nature, which you guys seem to do on a regular basis, attacking people rather than policies. I don't understand that. I still don't understand that. It's nonsense, absolute nonsense.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that there were personal attacks made by people in Canada on our biggest and best trading partner, the United States. So if you think it's a puffball when people are losing their jobs in Alberta, that's probably what you should go out and campaign on. We don't think that; we don't feel that way. Businesses are driving this economy. That was the message we wanted to get out, and they got it loud and clear. [interjections] You still rattle on. You still don't get it; do you?

The bottom line is that jobs are very vitally important to Albertans. The oil sands represent untold fortune, and we are going to get the Senate house committee on oil and energy supply as well as, hopefully, the Secretary of Energy to come tour the oil sands in the fall and see what's going on in Alberta, because it's sure not getting out from those guys.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On page 17 of the 2003-2006 fiscal plan it says that alternative financing, P3s and privately borrowed money, will cost Albertans $76 million in interest costs alone. It would be immensely foolish to spend all this money on interest payments when this province has endless surpluses and there will likely be a multibillion dollar sustainability fund. It would be cheaper just to spend the money we already have or borrow the money ourselves rather than pay the private corporation premium. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why is this government willing to spend $76 million in interest costs for alternative financing when this province has plenty of money to finance these projects itself?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I thought on Thursday, when our budget was before the House, that we went through this very thoroughly, but obviously the hon. member is very slow at picking up what exactly P3s are all about and what alternate financing might be about. I have explained to him on numerous occasions that the P3 concept is not just about the financing or getting capital to build a project. There are a whole host of other areas where we see an advantage, and so does the private sector see an advantage in doing partnerships and making sure that our projects are built in a timely fashion.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what proportion of the $76 million in interest costs will be a premium paid to private corporations above what Albertans would have to pay if they borrowed the money themselves?

Mr. Lund: On and on it goes, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure what angle to approach it from because, obviously, he hasn't picked up what we're talking about. There's not even a P3 coming forward. At this point we don't want to have one before us if we can demonstrate once again that, in fact, we're not paying a premium for the dollars. I've given the member many times in the House examples where we have the likes of Good Sam and Caritas and Bethany Care and others in P3 partnerships with us, or go down to Olds College and look at what Greenleaf has done. Look at what the John Deere corporation has done at Olds College, and the list goes on and on and on. We could cite so many examples. This is not about paying a premium for the dollars that are invested.

Mr. Bonner: Why is this minister willing to unnecessarily spend $76 million in interest payments when that money could be used to purchase more than 14 new schools?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I guess he must be figuring that if he says it often enough or reads it often enough, he's actually going to believe it. [interjection] Well, there is one good thing about having him in here: at least he's not telling students these kinds of economics, because it doesn't make any sense.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Video Lottery Terminals

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Gaming. I would like to talk about the constitutional challenge initiated by VLT retailers in 1997-98 in those municipalities that voted by plebiscite in favour of VLT removal. Seven municipalities – namely, the county of Lethbridge No. 26, the MD of Opportunity No. 17, the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, the towns of Lacombe, Canmore, Coaldale, and Stony Plain – will be affected by the outcome of today's court decision to dismiss the constitutional challenge of Bill 36, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, and the lifting of the lengthy injunction. Mr. Minister, why has it taken four years for this government to take action and finally remove the VLTs from these municipalities?

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member has rightly indicated, in '97-98 there were a number of votes throughout the province of Alberta where communities determined whether or not they wanted VLTs to continue within their communities. At that time, the government indicated that we would honour those votes. In '97 a number of the communities had votes that led to removal. In '98 there was a challenge of the legislation under which we were operating, which led to a court decision indicating that we would have to amend it. Amendment to the legislation was done in the spring of 1999, and the following day an application was made to the courts for an injunction pending a determination of the constitutionality of that legislation.

We have been pursuing this matter. In the intervening period there was a Supreme Court decision, which originated in the province of Manitoba, called the Siemens case, which was very similar to ours. Alberta Justice lawyers intervened in that. The Supreme Court ruled last fall verbally and gave written reasons this past January. The decision, therefore, was adjourned until the end of April in order that the court that would hear this matter would have the benefit of the Supreme Court decision. Because of the Supreme Court decision, Mr. Speaker, I'm reasonably satisfied that this matter was resolved quickly and finally today.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just for the sake of the retailers could the minister please answer: are there any further appeals possible, and when will the machines be removed from these municipalities?

Mr. Stevens: The decision today, Mr. Speaker, was based on a consent judgment. Specifically, it indicated that the actions against the government would be discontinued and the injunction that has prohibited the government from relying on its legislation to remove the VLTs from the seven communities would be lifted. Because it is a consent judgment, that brings the matter to a final conclusion as of today, and therefore within 48 hours from today the VLTs will be removed from all the locations in the seven communities which are affected.

Mrs. Gordon: Will the community groups, associations, and organizations that live and volunteer their time in these municipalities still be able to access lottery funds?

Mr. Stevens: The short answer to this question, Mr. Speaker, is yes. We have in the province a number of communities where there has never been gambling, where there has never been VLTs. In '97 we removed VLTs from a number of communities. In all those situations community groups in those affected areas have been able to make application for and receive grants if they wish, and we intend to maintain that policy going forward.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Legal Representation for Children in Care

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently a judge in Calgary ruled that 439 children who were allegedly abused while in government care are entitled to legal representation. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Why did government lawyers argue that these children should not have legal representation?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be very difficult to abbreviate some 32 pages of court findings and all the testimony and all the interaction in the court and give sufficient response here. Suffice it to say that we made representation, and we have considered the representation that was made and the judge's comments relative to jurisdiction, his instructions further to the parties. I'd be very pleased to sit with the hon. member and arrange for a thorough debriefing on it, but I will not fetter the judgment with a very quick response to it. You would be aware that in this House previously I have responded to the hon. member's question on the John Doe cases and indicated that where children need legal representation, we do provide it.

Dr. Massey: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why hasn't the minister provided the files of these children to their legal representatives so that a fair assessment of their plight can be made?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, the Crown has reviewed the files, and it would be less than responsible for us simply on the applicant's request to provide files that are confidential, files that belong to the children and families and guardians in question.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Justice would care to comment on the appropriate disposition of files in Children's Services when anybody makes an application and tries to render a judgment in opposition to the Crown.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, from a sub judice point of view is this okay? Only you know if there is an ongoing court case here or not.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think we're talking about the policy of when it's appropriate to release information by the Minister of Children's Services. I think that if the situation were reversed and the Minister of Children's Services took it upon herself to release files of individual children to somebody who came along and purported to be an advocate on behalf of those children, the opposition would be screaming foul under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. I think it behooves the Minister of Children's Services to be completely circumspect with respect to how she handles children's information, information in files of the government, and to do so until such time as a court may determine whether there is somebody who is appropriate to be placed as a next friend or in any other way act on behalf of those children.

Dr. Massey: Well, if that's the case and given that neither the Public Trustee nor the Children's Advocate will legally represent children abused in government care, who will protect these children?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, currently we are protecting these children. The Crown is protecting these children, and the blanket statement that these children may not be protected is false. We clearly provide that protection. We provide legal representation. We provide review by the Children's Advocate, and we receive advice from the Children's Advocate if further consideration is needed. Earlier this year we indicated that we had a much faster turnaround on abuse cases, immediate turnaround where those occur, and should the Children's Advocate determine that there was a necessity for representation, that would be brought forward, and from time to time that, in fact, has happened.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Health Regions' Funding Formula

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Members of the health region boards in my area have expressed some concern about the funding levels they're receiving for providing services in this coming year. While the overall provincial funding for health care seems adequate, it looks like there's a disproportionate amount of the funding going to metro regions and the rural regions are having to struggle for the funds for providing a proper level of service. Also, there's concern that the amalgamation of the rural boards doesn't seem to have helped the situation all that much. I wonder if the minister could tell us what the overall financial picture is regarding the delivery of health services in all the rural regions compared to the metro regions.

The Speaker: I'm going to accept that question, but I also caution the members as well. We have to be very brief on this, and tomorrow we have designated estimates of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll say right off the top that, in fact, the largest increase to a health authority was to a rural region, and that was region 9, centred around Fort McMurray, receiving an increase of 9.9 percent.

Mr. Speaker, a year ago in Budget 2002 we anticipated keeping overall health spending at a 4 percent increase, in line with projected increases in provincial revenues. In Budget 2003 we were pleased to announce an increase in health funding of 7.2 percent. That included $248 million in federal transfers. The nine health regions received an average of a 6.1 percent increase, for a total base operating budget of $3.868 billion. It is true that the regional health authority in Calgary received a slightly larger increase than the average, at 7 percent. The new Capital health region is at about the average, at 6 percent. No health region throughout the province received less than 4.2 percent.

There is recognition in our funding formula, Mr. Speaker, for population growth, so the faster your population is growing, obviously the larger the increase you'll get. Funding also recognizes the demographics of aboriginal Albertans, seniors, and women of childbearing age, who tend to use more health services. There is a funding adjustment for doing that. Finally, there's a funding adjustment for doing business in more remote areas. For example, again, the region surrounding Fort McMurray received the highest increase in the province, at 9.9 percent.

Mr. Friedel: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if he could tell us where we're at relative to the definition of a minimum level of ensured health services no matter where you live in the province.

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the legal side of it I can say that there is a standard that is established through regulations and legislation that would include the Hospitals Act, the Public Health Act, the Health Professions Act, and the Nursing Homes Act. Of course, the standard of quality for professional standards is established by the various health professional colleges.

With respect to the delivery of services, Mr. Speaker, it would be correct to say that there is not equal access but that there is equitable access to services throughout the province. An example of that would be that nobody would expect pediatric cardiac surgery to be done in a facility in Fort Macleod, but a mother who has a child who is in need of such surgery would certainly have equitable access to that service that is performed in the city of Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker, we are embarking on further refining our definition of what are the reasonable expectations of services regardless of where people live in the province. Primary health care initiatives are an important part of that, and as people know, the Health Link line will be up and running throughout the entire province by the summer of this year. We are also engaged in a process of a Rural Health Strategy Committee, that will have its work completed by May of this year, and we certainly look forward to the results of that in terms of better defining what are the reasonable expectations for health care regardless of where people live in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: when these changes are implemented, will the funding formula be adjusted to adequately cover any of the necessary changes?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, our population-based funding formula has been the subject matter of a number of different independent evaluations and most recently in 2001 by Ernst & Young. This review and the previous reviews have confirmed the integrity of our funding formula. The answer in short to the hon. member's question is no. The answer is not more health funding or reallocating what we have, but each region should allocate wisely to implement new models of delivery for delivering services in better ways.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Natural Gas Prices

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Natural gas storage levels have dipped to historic lows, which means historic high natural gas prices for Albertans. Although ATCO Gas's proposed May rate is about $5 a gigajoule – and that's more than double the seasonal average price of $2 a gigajoule – the true shock of rising prices will hit consumers again when they receive their home heating bills next winter. Thanks to this government's flawed Natural Gas Price Protection Act Albertans will have to struggle through another winter of high heating bills before any help is perhaps available. My first question is to the Premier. Is it government policy that Albertans have to start saving now so they can afford to heat their homes next winter given that there is very little likelihood that there will be an election next year and that home heating bills will remain high as a result of that?

The Speaker: There's a lot of speculation here.

Mr. Klein: All speculation. Mr. Speaker, I heard the word "perhaps" even from the hon. member: perhaps next year; perhaps this might happen; perhaps that might happen. Perhaps that might happen: I mean, that is good political doublespeak, but it doesn't mean anything.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that there is to be a review of the regulations associated with the legislation at the end of June this year to determine whether the assessment period for setting the rate is the right rate, whether the floor price is the right price, and all of that will be reviewed. I don't know when the hon. minister is planning on bringing in the recommendations, and I'll have him supplement my answer relative to that particular situation.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, the regulation will be under review in accordance with this government's timely and orderly regulation review process. It will be a vigorous review. It will be one that outlines previous experience. It will also be one that's mindful that it takes some two months from the time a royalty is assessed on a producing gas well to the time that the government actually collects that royalty on behalf of the province. It will also reflect the fact that royalties per gigajoule average in the 23 to 33 percent range. In fact, you know, if you had a $12 per gigajoule price, the maximum amount of revenue the Crown would receive out of that would be as low as $4. So it's one where the review is planned. It's orderly. The hon. member should also remember that last August the price of gas was $1.84 per gigajoule.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why is this government waiting until June to conduct its review of this flawed trigger in the Natural Gas Price Protection Act given that Alberta consumers need protection now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I take very strong exception to the word "flawed." It was well thought out, and for this hon. member to use the word "flawed," what he is doing is he is insulting literally hundreds of professional public service employees who spent hours and hours within the Department of Energy, professional people – economists, lawyers, petroleum engineers – people whose profession depends on their knowledge of the situation. He has insulted them by saying that they have come up with a flawed formula for a process to provide rebates, and I'd ask him to stand up and apologize to those people for suggesting that they came up with a flawed process. It is not flawed, but those same professionals, not Liberals but professionals, will be reviewing the regulations to see if we can fine-tune it and make it more acceptable to the Alberta public.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm glad the Premier doesn't consider me a professional Liberal.

Now, again to the Premier: what plans has this government made to ensure that energy rebates will be available for Albertans next winter given that industry analysts expect the price of natural gas to average over $6 a gigajoule for the 2003-2004 winter heating season?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll defer to the hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the member has been the last two months, but let's take him back to Bill 19, that delivers clear choice to the marketplace, that allows Albertans ways of determining how they want to purchase their natural gas, how they want to combine that with the purchase of their electricity. Let's take the hon. member back to when ATCO announced, when the prices started to move in January, that they would put an equalization payment together so that Albertans could pay on a 12-month basis. The budget program had been around long before this member decided to find the green pastures of Alberta from his previous home province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Speaker, it's very clear. Albertans will look at a commodity. They know that this commodity provides tremendous benefits on a

North American basis, it provides tremendous benefits to Albertans, and in fact they are well served by the processes that are in place, and we have a protection act that is under review for this summer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Calgary Health Region Review

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Justice Manfred Delong's inquiry into the death of Vince Motta included a recommendation that the province should hold a judicial inquiry into the state of the Calgary health authority and into Mr. Motta's death. Last week I asked the Minister of Justice if he would use his prerogative to accept that recommendation and hold a judicial inquiry. My question is to the Minister of Justice. Will the Minister of Justice use his prerogative under the legislation that empowers him to call a judicial inquiry and accept the recommendation of the justice in this case and call a judicial inquiry into Vince Motta's death?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Judge Delong in his recommendation in the report on the fatality inquiry actually indicated that a judicial inquiry could be called if it was found that steps had not been taken to improve the situation – I don't have the exact language in front of me right now – but it wasn't a definitive recommendation that there be a judicial inquiry held. It was a recommendation that an inquiry be held if certain things hadn't happened. That's what the hon. minister of health over the last week and a half has been explaining in great detail in this House in answers in question period about what actually has happened, what is happening, and what's going to be happening. So I think it would be premature to take any steps with respect to a judicial inquiry.

I would however want to indicate to the member that it's not the prerogative of the Minister of Justice to call an inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act but rather the prerogative of Executive Council on the recommendation of any minister or the Crown. The act happens to fall within the purview of the Ministry of Justice, but it would be imprudent of the Minister of Justice just to step forward and call public inquiries at any time. The response that the minister of health has given in this House time after time after time in answer to questions on this matter is that we're thoroughly and carefully looking at everything that's happened with respect to emergency services in Calgary relative to that matter and, I think, fulfilling entirely the recommendation that was given by Judge Delong in this case.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why has the Minister of Justice decided that a corporate lawyer hired by the same Calgary health region that was so severely criticized by Judge Delong will be able to provide findings that address the deep-seated public mistrust of this problem-plagued organization?

Mr. Hancock: Well, the fact of the matter is that the Minister of Justice didn't decide that. It's not in his purview to decide that. I don't think anybody decided that, but the minister of health last week gave a perfectly good and lengthy response to what the Calgary health authority is doing and how they're reviewing their situation.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why is the Minister of Justice failing to act to protect Calgarians and find answers for the Motta family when he knows that asking the CHR to investigate itself is akin to asking the fox to investigate what happened to all the chickens?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that question itself is insulting to the people of Calgary and the people who are operating the Calgary regional health authority as well as to all the individuals involved. The fatality review process is a very substantive process, a very carefully thought out process. It starts with the role of the medical examiner in this province, who looks at any death situation to determine whether further investigation is warranted. If further investigation is warranted, it goes to the Fatality Review Board. The Fatality Review Board then turns and makes a recommendation to the minister as to whether an inquiry should be called. In this case an inquiry was called. The inquiry has gone through all the evidence, has called the witnesses, has dealt with all the issues, and a report has come out. Now, within five days of the report coming out, these people want us to call a public inquiry and redo that whole process. The minister of health has answered at length and completely.

Order of the Sisters of St. Louis

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with some good news and some very sad news. The good news is that next month the Order of the Sisters of St. Louis will be celebrating their 200th anniversary. The order was founded those many years ago in the wake of the French revolution in order to provide charity and assistance to the vulnerable and the needy, particularly young single mothers.

Since then the order has grown around the world where the good nuns these past 200 years have provided their humble, selfless but immeasurably helpful, and badly needed services to tens of thousands of the world's people.

The loss in Calgary a week ago of Sister Norma Basso, Sister Theresa Tetrault, Sister Joan Flaherty, and Sister Rita Proulx has been a very hard experience for all in the order, the diocese, and the larger community across southern Alberta, particularly for those who have been helped over the past many decades by the sisters in their good work at Elizabeth House in Calgary. Our deepest condolences to the order, to their many, many friends and loved ones and our prayers for a speedy recovery to Sister Helen Hengel.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

World Irish Dance Championships

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Irish dancers from Alberta who returned recently from Killarney after competing in the world's Irish dancing championships. Rebecca Bell, a 12 year old who dances with Mattierin School of Irish Dancing in Edmonton, won a world medal.

To demonstrate the high quality of the performers and the calibre of the international competition, I would note that there were only two other world medals won in Canada, and they went to Toronto. The Mattierin School of Irish Dancing won a recall medal in the 13 to 16 years age group in the ceildh competition. These dancers were the only Canadians to achieve this honour, and I would say congratulations to all of the competitors.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

National Volunteer Week

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The volunteer sector is extremely important to our society. This week we pay tribute to that sector through National Volunteer Week, and we salute the valuable and significant contribution of our volunteers. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Community Development, who is responsible for the Wild Rose Foundation and for Alberta's volunteer sector, I ask all Albertans to support April 27 to May 3 as volunteer week in Alberta.

Across our province events and activities will recognize and thank our volunteers. The Wild Rose Foundation in collaboration with Volunteer Alberta helps facilitate volunteer week. This week a record number 148 Alberta communities representing more than 2 million Albertans is participating. Volunteers contribute over $1 billion annually to Alberta's economy and over $14 billion nationally. Through the Wild Rose Foundation, which receives support from the Alberta lottery fund, our government proudly assists many volunteer-driven activities.

Please join me in thanking our Alberta volunteers. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Alberta's High Schools

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Fraser Institute's recent report on Alberta's high schools. To no one's surprise Edmonton's Old Scona academic high came out on top again. Congratulations to students, teachers, and the Edmonton public school board, who had the foresight to create the learning opportunity that exists there at Old Strathcona. That that particular school came out on top of a survey of academic achievement is not news. Had it not come out on top, now, that would have been news.

Alberta and Edmonton particularly have many excellent schools and teachers who help create excellent citizens. Today I want to especially recognize those teachers and their schools that achieve excellence who did not start out with the cream of the academic crop, schools and teachers that start out with those of us in the middle of the pack and inspire us to be more than we thought we could be or would be. Is that also not a demonstration of excellence? High schools serve a diverse cultural and academic mainstream as well as small tributaries of special interest and need. Yes, we recognize the excellence of Old Scona and also of Strathcona, of Harry Ainlay, Louis St. Laurent, and Victoria.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

School Parent Volunteers

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This National Volunteer Week I wish to recognize the work of a special group of helpers, school parent volunteers. Where do you find them? You'll find them in classrooms listening to children, in hallways helping students put up displays, in workrooms copying materials, and in lunchrooms keeping order. You'll find them sitting on school councils struggling with school budgets, organizing school events from read-ins to spring concerts, and tracking down guest speakers. You'll find the more courageous among them setting up Internet networks to advocate for our public schools, at public forums appealing for more resources, and in all kinds of community meetings advancing the needs of students and youth in our schools. You'll find them at bake sales, bingos, and casinos raising dollars for library books, computers, and, yes, even for textbooks and copying paper.

These parents deserve our heartfelt thanks and our protection. They must be protected from being pushed into doing tasks for which they are ill prepared, and they must be protected so that we no longer hear them describe themselves as burnt out, volunteer dropouts, or fund-raising fatigued.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Rosemary Brown

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to celebrate the life of Rosemary Brown, the first woman from Jamaica to be elected to political office in Canada. Miss Brown passed away in Vancouver of an apparent heart attack at the age of 72.

As a British Columbia MLA from 1972 till 1986 Rosemary Brown fought for human rights and equality as well as social justice. She created a committee to eliminate sexism in textbooks and educational curriculums as well as helping to introduce legislation prohibiting discrimination based on sex or marital status. The mother of three's efforts led to an increase in the number of women represented on boards, commissions, and directorates. Her determination and hard work has inspired many Canadians, and this country is better for having been served by Rosemary Brown.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Camrose Kodiaks

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to recognize the Camrose junior A hockey Kodiaks, who won the Alberta/B.C. Doyle Cup on Saturday after a 5 to 4 overtime win over the B.C. champions, the Vernon Vipers. This is the second time in three years that the Kodiaks have won the Doyle Cup, and it will also be the second time in three years that the Kodiaks will be fighting for the Royal Bank Cup, the national championship.

From May 3 to May 11 the Kodiaks will travel to Charlottetown to represent Alberta and B.C., and if the Doyle Cup playoffs are any indication, the Kodiaks should be extremely tough to beat. They won the Canadian championship in their last attempt, in 2001.

I'd like to take this opportunity to congratulate all the players, coaches, managers, and everyone involved in the organization on the success of the Kodiaks. As well, I wish the Kodiaks continued success in their upcoming national championship bid, and I know that all of Alberta will be cheering them on.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and present a petition signed by 299 Calgaryans requesting that the government "withdraw the draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and . . . disallow any further commercial or residential development of the Kananaskis Valley."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I corresponded with your office by letter, and this is in regard to a question of privilege I would like to raise later this afternoon.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 38, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to ensure that dependent children of deceased workers will receive WCB pension benefits. Bill 38 applies specifically to cases where a deceased worker's dependent children do not live with the worker's surviving spouse or adult interdependent partner.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move that Bill 38 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of the TD Bank Financial Group report, Calgary-Edmonton Corridor: Take Action. It's certainly a great news story about Alberta. According to the information, the Calgary/Edmonton corridor has become Canada's western tiger. The report says, and I quote . . .

The Speaker: Just table it. It's not a government document. It's somebody else's paper.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a report about a new technology called thermal depolymerization, which is proving capable of turning the 600 million tonnes of turkey guts and other waste produced each year into 4 billion barrels of Texas light crude oil at a cost of $8 to $12 a barrel. It's called Anything into Oil.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the required number of copies of letters sent from 51 Edmontonians supporting Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a news release which I'm releasing today congratulating our many parks volunteers who were honoured at the annual volunteer conference held in William A. Switzer provincial park. There are numerous outstanding individuals and organizations including the Wagner Natural Area Society from Spruce Grove, district conservation officer Glenn Naylor from Kananaskis Country, Riverlot 56 Natural Area Society, the J.J. Collett Foundation of Ponoka/Lacombe, Margot Hervieux of Grande Prairie, Gladys Pennock of Elnora, Casey Bizon of Boyle, Mike and Jean Kliparchuk of Edmonton, and Roy and Edith Middleton of Plamondon along with Scotty and Murri Spence of Innisfail.

Thank you very much to our volunteers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a brochure, The Edmonton May Week Festival. This multidisciplinary festival brings together labour movement and arts communities to celebrate and affirm their contributions to society. The brochure highlights various . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, again, it's not a government document, so table it.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table correspondence dated between April 16 and April 25 from this hon. member to the office of the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly in regard to the question of privilege that will be dealt with later on this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of tests at the Foothills medical centre for toxic molds.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a Standing Order 15 petition?

Mr. MacDonald: I have no petition.

The Speaker: You do under Standing Order 15(2). You sent me a letter and basically said that you wanted to make a petition with respect to a point of privilege; correct?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Speaker's Ruling Imputing Motives Allegations against Members

The Speaker: The chair is going to make just one brief comment before he recognizes the hon. member. Before the hon. member commences with his purported question of privilege, the chair wants to caution the member and all members who wish to participate in this debate about imputing false or unavowed motives to another member or making allegations against another member. This is prohibited under Standing Orders 23(h) and (i), and in short the chair will not tolerate any allegations impugning the reputation or motives of a member. On this subject the chair would refer members to the section in chapter 3 of Marleau and Montpetit's House of Commons Procedure and Practice found on pages 83 to 95 of that work.

Hon. members, it is important to remember that only the Assembly itself can place limits on what is said in here. One of the great freedoms we enjoy as legislators in the British parliamentary system is to be free from lawsuits for what is said in this Assembly. This means that it is the traditional and accepted role of the chair to enforce the rules and practices concerning allegations against other members as there is no other recourse.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Privilege Contempt of the Assembly

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great disappointment that I rise today at the earliest possible opportunity and after providing you the appropriate written notice in accordance with Standing Order 15 on a question of privilege regarding certain repugnant materials that have been circulating in the parliamentary precincts and which have been in the possession of a certain member of the government caucus while that member was present in the House. I am raising this point of privilege and hope that you will find that there is a prima facie case of privilege.

I will first briefly outline the events that gave rise to this question of privilege. I will then turn to relevant legislation passed by this Assembly. Finally, I will refer to the definition of contempt, followed by recent precedents established by the House of Commons, and conclude with a reference to the Criminal Code of Canada. Members who wish to review the material I'm referring to can review the correspondence between Mr. Speaker and me which I tabled earlier today. I felt shame tabling this document, photocopied at the taxpayers' expense, knowing that it would be circulated further. It was, however, I decided, the right thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that I wrote to you on April 16, 2003. In that letter I informed you that I found a photocopied document by the photocopy machine by the west corridor leading to this Chamber. I consider the document, How True Canadians Really Feel, to be hate literature. Hate literature has no place in this Legislative Assembly let alone the province.

In a letter dated the same day you informed me that "this is indeed a very disturbing matter and this document is certainly inappropriate material to be in the Legislature Building, grounds or Annex." You also informed me that the Sergeant-at-Arms was currently conducting an investigation into the matter. I met with the Sergeant-at-Arms on April 17, 2003, to discuss the matter. I looked forward to receiving and I have received the Sergeant-at-Arms' findings.

Mr. Speaker, please let me remind all hon. members that in 1980 this Assembly spoke out forcefully against hate in moving words contained in the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, words that still stand true today. The preamble to the act reads as follows:

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all persons is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world;

Whereas it is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle and as a matter of public policy that all persons are equal in: dignity, rights and responsibilities without regard to race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income or family status;

Whereas multiculturalism describes the diverse racial and cultural composition of Alberta society and its importance is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle and a matter of public policy;

Whereas it is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle and as a matter of public policy that all Albertans should share in an awareness and appreciation of the diverse racial and cultural composition of society and that the richness of life in Alberta is enhanced by sharing that diversity; and

Whereas it is fitting that these principles be affirmed by the Legislature of Alberta in an enactment whereby those equality rights and that diversity may be protected.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we in this Assembly have not been afraid to speak against tyranny. In the preamble to the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act, passed in 2002, this Assembly spoke out against those who persecuted and murdered millions of people "because of their race, religion, level of physical or mental ability or sexual orientation."

Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege that I rise on today is regarding the aforementioned article, How True Canadians Really Feel, being in the possession of a member in this Chamber. As I informed you in the letter dated April 25, 2003, I regret that two of my colleagues, the members for Edmonton-Riverview and Edmonton-Glenora, and I witnessed this inappropriate material in the possession of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora while in the Chamber at 5:08 p.m. on Thursday, April 24, 2003. In accordance with a request from the Sergeant-at-Arms that I continue to keep him informed about related incidents, I wrote to you about this very incident in a letter dated April 25, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this material amounts to a contempt of parliament, which, as you know, is any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions; obstructs or impedes any Member or Officer of the House in the discharge of their duties; or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House, such as disobedience of its legitimate commands or libels upon itself, its Members, or its Officers.

Furthermore, Erskine May defines contempt as being any act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of his [or her] duty, or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly, to produce such results.

Mr. Speaker, I also note that the House of Commons unequivocally denounced hate propaganda on November 25, 2002, after a question of privilege was raised. Speaker Peter Milliken of the House of Commons placed serious sanctions on Jim Pankiw, the Member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, who had uttered hateful statements. I would also add that the Criminal Code of Canada in sections 318, 319, and 320 clearly outlaws hate propaganda be it spoken or written.

The most fundamental parliamentary privilege we have as Members of the Legislative Assembly is the right of free expression and free speech. However, I think that we must also recognize that even the most fundamental privilege is confined by the limits imposed upon us by reasonableness and decency. It is most inappropriate for hate propaganda to be floating around in this Assembly and in the parliamentary precincts, and it is most inappropriate for a member of this Assembly to have possession of the same. Freedom of expression and speech does not give members the right to be hateful. Mr. Speaker, my point is this: if we abuse our freedom of expression and speech, we risk the erosion of our parliamentary privileges because Albertans will view members of this Assembly with suspicion, and rightly so.

Mr. Speaker, I have spent considerable time this weekend contemplating this question of privilege. After much reflection and deliberation I cannot imagine any valid justification for the presence of such an extremely racist, sexist, vile document within the guarded confines of this Assembly. I could not legitimately stand here today and call myself a member of this Assembly if I did not raise this question of privilege to deal with the possession of this document by a member of this Assembly in this very Chamber. It is the most difficult thing I have done in the years that I've been here.

I would expect, Mr. Speaker, that you will allow the member that I have named an opportunity to provide justification for his possession of the document. The member has always been, inside and outside this House, a compliment to this Assembly and this province. He has been gracious and has dealt with this member with dignity on occasions that I have had to meet with him. However, at the same time, on the eve of Yom ha-Shoah, the day of the Holocaust, I am certain that you will agree with me that this is a matter of the utmost serious nature and that steps will be taken by the Assembly and each individual member to prevent such hate literature from gaining a foothold in this Assembly ever again.

At this time, the earliest opportunity afforded to me, I have briefly set out the facts as well as the relevant quotes from parliamentary authorities that show that there is a prima facie case with respect to this most serious matter. Page 227 of Maingot states that the Speaker asks simply, "Has the Member an arguable point?" If the Speaker feels any doubt on the question, he should leave it to the House by finding that there is indeed such a case.

Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to move the appropriate motion if you find this to be a prima facie question of privilege. Thank you and all hon. members of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, just on a point of clarification: the member that you named in your statement was the Member for Edmonton-Glenora?

Mr. MacDonald: That is correct.

The Speaker: To assist the chair should this matter have to be reviewed further, was any discussion held with the Member for Edmonton-Glenora prior to your statement in the House today?

Mr. MacDonald: No. There was no discussion with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

The Speaker: Okay. So, then, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, this is the first you've heard of this?

Mr. Hutton: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: However, Mr. Speaker, to clarify, please, I did send the hon. member a note in regard to this matter at 25 after 2 today.

Mr. Hutton: Mr. Speaker, I did receive a note from the hon. member saying that he had provided you with a written submission. I asked the hon. member what it was about, and he would not provide me with that information. So until he stood up and spoke right now, I did not know what the matter was about.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on the matter.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, precisely on the matter you've raised, this member raising the purported point of privilege this afternoon has obviously given a considerable amount of thought to it, including preparing a written text, but hasn't had the courtesy of following rule 15(2), which suggests: "written notice containing a brief statement of the question to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question." This is a most grievous assault on the character of a member of the House without any notice.

The purported notice that I see says: I've given written notice for a question of privilege after question period today; this concerns the conduct of the Assembly around 5 p.m. on Thursday, April 24; you are involved in this matter. Absolutely no notice of the allegation that was to be made. It's totally inappropriate to handle the matter in this fashion and to expect any member of this House to be able to respond to that type of an allegation without having any advance notice that the allegation was being brought up, what the content of it was, or what the purported question of privilege was.

The hon. member has tabled now a copy of the very document that he complains about, so it's now on the official record of the Assembly. He had actually provided to me a copy of a letter some time ago raising a concern about finding the document in the photocopy machine, I believe. It is a terrible document, not a document that I would want to have around, but I can say to the hon. member and members of this House that in my mail almost daily I get vile documents. They get sent to us. I bring mail into the House to read. So there can be any one of a number of explanations that a person might give, but one cannot even be expected to appropriately respond to those types of allegations without having had the courtesy of being given advance notice of what was going to be raised and what was going to be complained about.

This note is not advance notice. It does nothing to allow the member to know what action is being complained about. It would be in my view inappropriate to call upon the member to defend himself in these circumstances. In fact, Mr. Speaker, there has been really no allegation at all against the member other than the fact that he had in his possession a piece of paper which has got vile content.

I can assure members of this House that I have had in my possession – and in fact I do now courtesy of the hon. member having tabled it today – a piece of paper with vile material on it. I bring my mail folders into the House without any knowledge of what's in them before I read them, so there's vile stuff sometimes in that. The type of mail that the Minister of Justice gets and, I assume, some other ministers in this House get can have all types of content, so one should not be raising into question the conduct of a member just because they've seen him or her having possession of a document, and if they're going to, they should give the courtesy of advance notice.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, to interrupt you for just a moment, there's one point here that has to be made very clear on this, and that is that under section 15(2) it says:

A member wishing to raise a question of privilege shall give written notice containing a brief statement of the question to the Speaker . . .

That was done. That was done by 11 o'clock this morning.

. . . and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question.

What is not contained in the statement, however, is who the individual might be. So when the chair received this letter just a few minutes after 11 o'clock this morning, the chair, the Speaker, had no knowledge of which member might be being talked about. Until the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rose a few minutes ago, I was unclear as to who it would be. So in fairness, absolutely and totally in fairness, I would not expect the Member for Edmonton-Glenora to be in a position to be able to respond today.

So the interruption, hon. minister, is that should this matter now be held over till tomorrow, the argument in terms of a response need not be given today, if that's where the Minister of Justice and Attorney General was going. On the other hand, if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora would like to make some comments, that's a choice in consultation between the hon. member and the Government House Leader, if the hon. member chooses to do that. It's the hon. member's choice.

Mr. Hutton: Mr. Speaker, with regard to this matter I was in possession of a document, and I, too, found it repugnant and offensive. The fact, as the hon. Government House Leader stated, is that we receive many pieces of material, articles, and papers within this House. What I did with that document was throw it in the trash. A point of privilege against my good name I take very, very seriously, as anyone should in this House, and I would ask that the hon. member retract that. The fact that I'm in possession of a document does not mean that I am doing anything or that my assessment of that document has anything to do with my character in this House. I would ask that the member kindly retract his statement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, it probably would be most prudent if one dealt with one of these matters first and, depending on the resolution of the first matter, see if in fact there is a second matter.

The chair again will refer to Standing Order 23: "makes allegations against another member; . . . imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." It may be most prudent to just wait until tomorrow to give the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora an opportunity to reflect and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to think as well.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View on this point.

Ms Haley: On this narrow point, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: What's the narrow point, member?

Ms Haley: Well, you are suggesting that they wait until tomorrow, and I wanted to raise my concern about leaving this out overnight for the media to take exception to and accuse my colleague of having some kind of reprehensible document in his possession. I think this is awful. I'm horrified by what I'm hearing in here. To not conclude this today I think is a miscarriage of justice against my colleague, and I want his name cleared.

The Speaker: Hon. member, we're not having a debate with the chair. The chair gave the hon. member the option to do what he wants to do. It is up to the hon. member to make that choice of what he wants to do. Now, if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora would like to proceed today, the chair will hear it. This Assembly will hear it. That is the choice of the hon. member, but we'll deal with the point raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Hutton: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I want my name cleared. I did have in my possession said document. I looked at it, and I put it in the trash. I don't see how that is a point of privilege. We receive many, many things in our mail and that are handed to us on a regular basis that we find offensive. In particular, I come from a home where three-quarters of my family are Jewish, and to raise it the day before the Holocaust memorial is totally offensive to me, and that is why I would like my name cleared today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I take it, then, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, that it's now we're going to deal with this matter.

Mr. Hutton: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. The chair will recognize other participants. The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rarely rise to speak on such matters in the Assembly, but I feel very compelled to stand and speak to this point of privilege. On Thursday at 5:08 the Assembly was in committee, and this member was sitting as the chair of the committee. Therefore, I feel very compelled to rise and speak to this matter.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, in Beauchesne 27 it states that "a genuine question of privilege is a most serious matter and should be taken seriously by the House." This is a very serious matter. While I was seated in this Assembly, there was no commotion that I noticed at that point in time. There was no observance reported to me of any inappropriate behaviour or action in that quadrant of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, anybody can have in their possession a piece of paper that is offensive. But let me quote once again, from Beauchesne 69. This is a ruling made by the Speaker.

The Speaker has reminded the House, "It is very important . . . to indicate that something can be inflammatory, can be disagreeable, can even be offensive, but it may not be a question of privilege unless the comment actually impinges upon the ability of Members of Parliament to do their job properly."

That, in my opinion, didn't happen.

This colleague of mine is an honourable man, and today his reputation is being tarnished by innuendos. I as a member of this Assembly will not tolerate this, and I will join him in saying that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had better withdraw those remarks and deal with this issue today.

The Speaker: We are on a point of privilege as raised by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. We will deal with that matter.

Who else wants to participate on this matter with quotations from citations? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'm also quoting from our Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, 23(h), (i), and (j). They talk about:

- (h) makes allegations against another member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another member; [and]
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and I happen to be what we call Legislature buddies. We share the same legislative assistant, and I have been working side by side with this hon. member for two years and have never heard a single derogatory comment. I've never seen any ill literature.

The Speaker: Hon. member, character testimonials are not required here at this point.

Rev. Abbott: This is an attack on his character.

The Speaker: No. Character testimonials are not required on this point. Do you have something to add?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In reference to Standing Order 23(h), "makes allegations against another member," I'm having a bit of a difficulty with the allegation, which basically states that the member has offended either this Chamber or members of this Chamber and has rendered their work impossible or difficult in this Chamber with some of the materials in question. The matter that I would like to bring to you – and I think it's the principal question of this matter – is: has the Member for Edmonton-Glenora been the originator of this particular document in question, or has he been a recipient of this document?

Mr. Speaker, you have given us the privilege in this Chamber of having laptop computers, which we can use in this Chamber at certain times during the proceedings, and I must advise you that because of this technology, which indeed was a positive move – they are very helpful to us as MLAs in serving our constituents – there is an aspect which the Speaker perhaps may not have anticipated and that I'm certain no member of this Assembly wants to partake in, and that pertains to spam e-mail.

Mr. Speaker, I must advise you that daily I receive on my Legislature-issued computer through my Legislature-issued e-mail address materials which I find to be offensive and that probably all members of this House would find offensive. Now, does having those materials in this Chamber before me displayed on a screen put me in a position of being in possession of materials which are discriminatory or perhaps offensive, or does it not? I would suggest to you that by being in receipt of those materials and having no active role in producing or generating those materials, I would not be considered to be a guilty party in any way. One cannot predict what one will receive until one opens it and one then is in possession. So there is the issue of, I would suggest, mens rea. Was there any intent for this individual to produce those materials and pass them on? I have not received any of those materials from this member, and as far as I know, he hasn't circulated those materials throughout the House. Therefore, if he was only a recipient of those materials, no allegations can be made against him in this House.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, a citation, please.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. By way of clarification, in the Assembly on Thursday afternoon the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had returned to the Assembly, and at that point, when passing by the seat of the Member for Calgary-Bow, where the Member for Edmonton-Glenora at that particular point in committee was sitting, he did notice that the member was in possession of the article How True Canadians Really Feel. Upon returning to his seat here, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had asked me if I would check to make certain that he did see the correct title on this piece of information, particularly as he had brought this point to the attention of yourself at a previous time. At that time I did go. I did notice that indeed that was what was in possession of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

When the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was done in his part of the debate, he also had asked the Member for Edmonton-Riverview to check to see if in fact the Member for Edmonton-Glenora did have How True Canadians Really Feel in his possession. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview did go and did confirm that, yes, that was in fact what he was reading. So by way of clarification, that is what the three members from the Official Opposition saw at that particular time.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question before you right now is whether there's been a prima facie case of privilege made out, and with respect there has been no such thing. All that has been suggested by both the members of the opposition and certainly by the member that raised the point of privilege is that a particular document was seen in the possession of the member against whom he's made the allegation. I would suggest that there is no information or evidence before the House as to how the document got in the member's possession, what he was doing with the document, whether he was circulating the document, whether he was doing anything with it, or if in fact simple possession of the document or doing any of those other things abridges the privileges of members of the House.

What does abridge the privileges of the members of the House is in section 64 of Beauchesne; that is, Reflections on Members. "The House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members." I won't go through the detail of it because it's an old citation, but reflection on the character of a member – now, that is a breach of the privileges of this House. The allegation that's been made by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar against the Member for Edmonton-Glenora violates all the rules of this House, as far as I'm concerned, but brings absolutely no prima facie case of privilege because it does not deal with the question of how the document came into the House, what was being done with it, what the motives or intentions were. Every member, as the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs mentioned – and I have to agree with him – received vile and offensive things on their computer virtually every day until at the end of March legislative services put a screen on which cuts down most of it but not all of it. We bring in file folders with mail from constituents and mail from people who want to send us things, sometimes anonymously, and you read it, and you have it in your possession.

To make out a prima facie case of breach of privilege, one has to go far beyond what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has done in terms of alleging that somebody brought an offensive piece of paper into the House or had an offensive piece of paper in their hands in the House. All of us can agree that the paper itself is obnoxious, vile, and no right-thinking person would agree with its contents. That is something far different than impugning the character of a member in the manner which has been raised this afternoon without even the courtesy of a notice to the member. Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to rule that there's no prima facie case of privilege such as brought by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and ask us to move on with a question of privilege against the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview with citation.

Dr. Taft: It's a clarification of the facts.

The Speaker: No. You're participating now on a very important point of privilege. Do you wish to participate?

Dr. Taft: I wish to participate.

The Speaker: You have a citation to participate on this point of privilege?

Dr. Taft: Beauchesne 67. It's a question of: "It is always the responsibility of the House to decide if reflections on Members are sufficiently serious to justify action." So the point becomes then: what action did the member take? I rise with real angst because there are huge issues of all kinds here ranging from freedom of speech to the vileness of the document to the honour of the member. But for point of clarification what the three of us clearly saw was the Member for Edmonton-Glenora sharing this document with the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and at that point – and goodness knows, as much as anybody here I hope that there's an innocent explanation – it appeared to us that there was in fact the circulation of this document among the members of the Assembly, and as a result of that there was a breach of privilege.

Thank you. [interjection]

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, please.

Now, look; this thing is getting a permutation here. We've heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow mentioned, and now we've just heard the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert mentioned. Would either of the two members like to participate on this point?

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to cite 23(h) and (i) because I feel that both the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and now myself have been accused of motives or accused of thoughts or accused of agreement with a document which may or may not have been on our desks as the members walked by and evidently wanted to read the documents that we leave on our desks. It is true that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and I were involved in a conversation here at the desk, and he was sitting in the Member for Calgary-Bow's chair because it's adjacent to mine. There don't appear to be any listening devices here for the hon. members opposite to understand what we were talking about, which had nothing to do with the document that is at hand in the citation today. I just find it absolutely repugnant that I'm being accused of agreement with a document which I also find abhorrent and that I know the Member for Edmonton-Glenora finds abhorrent. I'm flabbergasted that this is even being brought to this House, and I agree with the House leader in that I believe that a case of privilege should be brought against the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, are you interested?

Ms DeLong: I wasn't here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I cite Beauchesne 25, and to paraphrase that particular reference, it has to do with the prima facie case of privilege brought by a member. That means that the member who has brought the particular notice of privilege is somehow saying that his or her capacity as a member has been in some way abridged and seeks remedy for that. Therefore, whether this document is offensive or not offensive is not the question. The question is: has a document in the possession of someone else caused the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to question his privilege of carrying out his duties as a legislator? It does not. Therefore, under the definitions placed in Beauchesne 25, sixth edition, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar does not in my opinion have a prima facie case of privilege.

Thank you.

[Two members rose]

The Speaker: Well, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I've already recognized you. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, I thought I already recognized you too. That having been said, I think we're going to come to a conclusion with respect to this matter.

Two separate strains seem to have come through here. First of all, there was a tabling in the Assembly of correspondence between the Speaker and a member. That's highly irregular, very irregular. Members convey thoughts to the chair or the Speaker. As the impartial, nonpartisan chair of the Assembly the chair recognizes the privileged information he is receiving, and it is very irregular for members to make public, then, correspondence that the Speaker would give to that particular hon. member. But having done that, we now have these documents to play with, so let's just deal with the involvement of the chair in this matter first.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar sent the chair a memo – and I believe it was April 15 – and basically took exception to finding a photocopied document in the Legislative Assembly that afternoon. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has his own opinions with respect to the piece of paper. I responded back to the hon. member the following day saying the following:

Thank you for your letter of April 16, 2003, and the attached document, regarding the photocopied document which you found in the west corridor leading into the Chamber on April 15, 2003.

This is indeed a very disturbing matter and this document is certainly inappropriate material to be in the Legislature Building, grounds or Annex.

I appreciate you bringing this matter to my attention.

I have put a handwritten note: "I will have the Sergeant-at-Arms investigate." Copies were sent to the Government House Leader, the Official Opposition House Leader, and the third party House leader. The matter was investigated, and a report was provided to the chair.

On April 25, 2003, in a memo from myself to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I write the following:

Further to your letter of April 16, 2003 I can advise that an extensive investigation was conducted by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

While it is not our practise to discuss the operational details of the Sergeant's inquiries, please be assured that the exercise was complete, thorough and consistent with the seriousness of the matter.

Regrettably, we were unable to determine who may have placed the documents within the precincts on April 15th, 2003.

Again, I appreciate you bringing your concerns to my attention.

Copies went to the Government House Leader, the Official Opposition House Leader, the third party House leader, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Now, hand-delivered to my office at approximately 11 o'clock this morning was a letter that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar alluded to earlier. Then we heard what happened at 2:35, when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar got up and identified the member and some aspersions, suspect, that were taking place. Let me make it very, very clear that my involvement in this matter had simply to do with the administrative duties of the chair with respect to the utilization of photocopy machines in and about the precincts. There seems to be general agreement, at least with the chair and for other people who've spoken, on words such as "vile," "inappropriate," "offensive" material and no ascribing to anyone about belief with respect to the validity of the document itself. Most of us appear to have simply discarded it. It's just another piece of paper among the hundreds and thousands that Members of the Legislative Assembly will receive at any given time.

Now, what's really important in here is the statement. I think that if there was an allegation made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and ascribing motives, when identifying the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and in hearing from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, at least what the chair heard was that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora had basically found no merit in the document whatsoever, discarded it. The chair has heard nothing and knows nothing further beyond that in terms of what anybody would think about it, would feel about, would want to think about it. As far as the chair understands, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora discarded the paper, and even if he had not discarded the paper, what would the point have been? All members receive countless numbers of documents. There's nothing in the document with respect to a certain group that's identified in there, and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised it, and then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora raised it. It was this Assembly who basically passed very important legislation with the Holocaust memorial day, and this is a very important part of our history that we want to commemorate. That disturbs the chair. That very, very much disturbs the chair with respect to this.

I'm reminded as well that one has to be very, very careful about imputing motives to anyone. That is a very serious matter. I would also like to remind hon. members that there's an old saying – and I forget who it was who said it – that gentlemen do not read other gentlemen's mail. It always strikes me as funny how what an hon. member may have on his or her desk should become the purview of other hon. members. It strikes me that one of the great safeguards we have as legislators is the responsibility, coupled with the need to have availability of whatever documentation or paper we want, to arrive at the best conclusions that we have. I'd hate to think that certain documents, certain books would be burned. We've certainly gone far beyond the McCarthyism times of the early 1950s. I don't like the document, but that's not the point. Simply because it is someplace, how can one ascribe a motive to anyone who may be near it? Heaven knows that in the 23 years that I've been a privileged member of this Assembly, I have received papers from people that I'm 180 degrees away from and 12,500 miles away from. If the circumference of the Earth is 25,000, that puts me at the exact opposite side of the equator, yet we get them.

I heard what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora said. I think he is truly shocked by what has transpired here today. I think he's truly embarrassed by what has transpired here today. This is not a point of privilege, and the chair regrets that he even entertained opening this subject matter as a point of privilege.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 24, it is my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper be dealt with today.

[Motion carried]

Sports Lottery Sales

Q13. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

What were the total sales numbers broken down by individual game for the sports lottery products Pro-Line, Over/Under, and Point Spread for the calendar years 2000 through 2002 inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Yes. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Gaming I'm pleased to respond to this. This ministry is characterized by and the hallmark of his ministry is openness and clarity, so he's very pleased to respond and indicate that the government is prepared to accept the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude the debate.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for providing the information that was requested.

[Written Question 13 carried]

Sports Lottery Payouts

Q14. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.
What was the total payout to customers in the form of winnings from tickets purchased, broken down individually by game, from the sports lottery products Pro-Line, Over/Under, and Point Spread for the fiscal years 1999-2000 to 2001-2002 inclusive?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you. Once again, Mr. Speaker, a characteristic of the front bench is openness and clarity.

An Hon. Member: And monitoring.

Dr. Taylor: And monitoring of course. Once again, on behalf of this minister we're pleased to indicate that we will respond to the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude the debate.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Again we thank the minister for allowing us to do our job of monitoring. Thank you.

[Written Question 14 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 24, it is my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper also be dealt with today.

[Motion carried]

Alberta Career Computer Center Inc. Audit

M14. Dr. Pannu moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the financial audit of the Alberta Career Computer Center Inc. prepared in late 2002 or early 2003 for the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment by Doug Courts, chartered accountant.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission if I may provide a bit of background to the motion. This morning my office received a fax from the Minister of Human Resources and Employment with a proposed amendment to this motion. I wish to thank the minister for his courtesy in providing me with a copy of his proposed amendment in advance. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a few moments to give some background to the motion, and if it's also appropriate, I'll seek your advice to make a few comments on the amendment now or later.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the chair does not know if an amendment is going to be moved, so speak to the question, just to your question. That's all we're doing here right now.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll speak to the motion then, yes.

Since last fall our office has received numerous complaints from former and current students attending the Alberta Career Computer Center, a provincially licensed private vocational school located in Edmonton. Our involvement with these students has been a real eye-opener, Mr. Speaker. Through our involvement we have discovered that students attending private vocational schools have no rights and few protections compared to, for example, students attending public postsecondary institutions. For example, many private vocational schools either make no provision for or, in the case of Alberta Career Computer Center Inc., outright prohibit the formation of student organizations on their campuses. Students are subject to disciplinary action and even expulsion if they even discuss problems with the school with their fellow students.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, the students have provided us with documentation which, were it to be a public institution, would likely be found to violate the Charter rights of freedom of speech and association. Because schools like ACCC are considered to be private, they are not required to meet standards of transparency and accountability that apply to public institutions. Not only are private vocational schools not audited by Alberta's Auditor General, but many schools don't even make their audited financial statements public. Students cannot take their complaints to the Ombudsman for investigation. Conflicts of interest and ethics rules do not apply to private vocational schools. Neither do freedom of information and protection of personal privacy rules.

Yet private vocational schools indirectly receive most of their funding from the provincial government. Students attending these schools are eligible for Students Finance Board grants and loans. In many cases Students Finance Board funding is forwarded directly to the school by Alberta Learning to cover tuition and book costs. Under a federal/provincial agreement these schools also receive employment insurance training dollars for those students who are EI eligible. Tuition at these schools is often a hundred percent paid for by government, and we are talking about 15,000 or more dollars for a six-month course, so the public dollars involved are very substantial.

Very few, if any, private vocational schools would survive in the absence of government funding, Mr. Speaker. In order to be eligible for government funding, private vocational schools require a licence from the private institutions branch of Alberta Learning, yet from documentation that has been provided to my office, little accountability is demanded by the private institutions branch of private vocational schools in general and ACCC in particular. Students have been making formal complaints to the private institutions branch about ACCC for at least five years. There's no evidence that these complaints were ever acted on. More recently a former ACCC student filed a formal written complaint over six months ago. He has yet to receive anything other than a brief acknowledgment letter. To be frank, it appears, at least in this case, that the private institutions branch of Alberta Learning exists to protect the interests of private vocational schools rather than the interests of students attending those schools.

The Ministry of Human Resources and Employment has been more responsive than Alberta Learning to student complaints about ACCC. One of the actions that the HRE ministry took was to ask Doug Courts, an Edmonton chartered accountant, to conduct a financial audit of the school. I'm informed that as a result of the findings of this audit the Minister of Human Resources and Employment has suspended funding to the ACCC from the skills development and labour market development programs. I'm pleased about that. A number of former ACCC students co-operated with Mr. Courts' investigation. However, HRE, the Human Resources and Employment department, has refused to provide a copy of the financial audit report to these students. That is why I'm requesting a copy of the audit report both on behalf of the students and on behalf of all Albertans, who have a right to know whether they received value for money in terms of the public dollars that have flowed to ACCC.

So I conclude my comments here, Mr. Speaker, and the minister may want to speak about his amendment at this moment.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I know that our attention this afternoon has been somewhat diverted because of a previous issue, but I just can't believe that after sending over this morning an indication, for which the hon. member has already thanked me, in terms of the amendments that I was bringing up, the hon. member would go ahead and make the comments that he has just done. I could see that if in some way a member of our government was trying to stonewall him on this particular issue or some matter, but we had clearly indicated to him that we would be able to comply with his request by making some amendments. There was no need, in my view, for all of the comments that now form part of the record. I might as well have shown absolutely no co-operation towards you. I might as well have kept this thing entirely to myself, because what is the use? What is the use of trying to co-operate and collaborate with the hon. member when he pulls these kinds of stunts?

I'm in a position now, Mr. Speaker, of moving ahead with something that I thought was warranted, was generous. He's made comments about what HR and E has done. Those issues are currently under dispute with the party that's been mentioned. There might be legal cases that will come out of this – I have no idea – but we still have these comments now on the record by this hon. member. I want to say, then, with the greatest hesitation possible, which a half an hour ago would have been within the greatest feeling of wanting to collaborate and co-operate with people within this House, that I hesitate with the greatest hesitation possible to even move these amendments. I can't tell you how frustrated and angry I am at this particular moment in time.

But I move that MR 14 be amended in two ways: first of all, by substituting "a copy of those portions" for "a copy"; and secondly, by adding "that may be disclosed under [FOIP]." So the amended motion for a return will read:

A copy of those portions of the financial audit of the Alberta Career Computer Center Inc. prepared in late 2002 or early 2003 for the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment by Doug Courts, chartered accountant, that may be disclosed under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Now, these amendments, Mr. Speaker, are proposed in the spirit of being open and transparent about our contracting processes while recognizing that we have a commitment to protecting students' privacy through FOIP, and I hope that all members will support these amendments.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will limit my comments to the substance of the amendment. I want to thank the minister for offering his co-operation in the fullest, and I had absolutely no reason to believe that what I was saying in any way was to be treated by the minister as offensive.

As to the amendment I understand that the purpose of the amendment is to remove personal information that would identify former or current students at ACC. Assuming that that's indeed what the intent of part of the motion is, I certainly support this, Mr. Speaker. The possible difficulty with the amendment might be that because the commercial interests of the school are also involved here, some of the information concerning the audit may be held back. That needs to be made public to make sure that we get the ends that we seek to achieve by way of my request in the form of my motion and the minister's amendment to that motion.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to receiving a copy of the audit report as soon as possible. I hope that the audit report will have as little information deleted from it as possible to make sure that the privacy rights of students are fully protected. So it's with some delight and a feeling of thanks that I accept the minister's amendment and look forward to receiving the information that his department will be offering.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: On the motion?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to conclude the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to add. Thank you for the opportunity.

[Motion for a Return 14 as amended carried]

Bill 205
Citizens' Empowerment Act

[Adjourned debate April 14: Mr. Broda]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the merits of Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act. To begin with, I would like to extend my gratitude to the Leader of the Official Opposition for introducing the bill. It is, as ever, important to remember that as members of the Alberta Legislature we were elected to represent our constituents and to give their concerns a voice in a forum where they can be heard. This is all part and parcel of a democracy: letting the public's view and concerns be heard, thereby giving everyone in society a stake in our common progress as a society. For this reason more than any other, I am very grateful that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has sponsored Bill 205. What he is doing by introducing this measure is democracy in action.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I am unable to support Bill 205. While I can appreciate the spirit with which the bill is imbued, Bill 205 is just not practical. If we look at the etymological origins of the word "democracy," we see that it comes from two Greek words: on the one hand, the word "demos," meaning people, so that would account for the first half; and "kratos," on the other hand, meaning strength or authority. Combining the two, then, we see that democracy means strength of the people or rule of the people, the very essence of our society.

Not to trivialize anything, but we probably would not think of what was practised in the old city-states of ancient Greece as democracy. For instance, as a woman I would never have been able to stand here and speak to you let alone be able to represent anyone in the ancient Greek state. The Greeks, however, were clearly onto something when they chose to let society be governed by the people rather than by a dictator, an emperor, or some other supreme rule.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't want this to seem like a history lesson; however, it is instructive to take a look back to see how far we've come as well as to see how the concept of democracy has evolved. For starters let's recall that it wasn't really until sometime during the latter half of the 20th century that we could say that democracy had gained widespread recognition as the most efficient, fair, and egalitarian way of running a society. To this very day we all know that around the world there are many people, far too many people, for whom the concept of democracy and the rights we normally associate with democracy remain elusive.

So, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we can sit in this House today and discuss how or whether to engage in a particular activity that may or may not further the ends of democracy is really quite remarkable and shows us and, I might add, others too how fortunate we are. As our societies have grown larger and increasingly complex, adjustments have been made to the manner in which we practise democracy. Some of these are, shall we say, convenience oriented. For instance, whenever an election rolls around, we allow people to vote in advance of election day if they prefer or by absentee ballot if they will be unable to vote in their respective precinct on the day the election is held.

As time has passed, democratic rights have also been extended to encompass more and more citizens, and this is clearly the case here in Canada. For instance, in 1916 Alberta was the third province to enfranchise women. On the other hand, it wasn't until 1960 that aboriginal people were allowed to vote in federal elections. Of course, casting ballots in support of nominees isn't the only way we can express our wishes. To be sure, this was not necessary the way things were done in the past. Quite the contrary.

In its early stages common expressions of the democratic process were Quaker meetings and the legendary town hall meetings. Suffice it to say that at these gatherings all those assembled had the opportunity to express their views and opinions, particularly so at the Quaker's meetings, as no restrictions were placed on who could express his or her views regardless of race, gender, or status in society. Once everyone had a chance to speak, and only then, a vote was taken and a decision made. In a sense, Mr. Speaker, this was perhaps a truer or purer form of democracy than what we have now in that it afforded anyone who cared to do so an opportunity to express an opinion.

However, that it worked as well as it did had, I believe, a lot to do with the number of participants. There is or was a limit to the number of people who could be reasonably squeezed into a meeting hall. Cities, to the extent that they existed, were smaller, and the landscape tended to be dotted with towns, villages, and hamlets. As societies have grown, therefore, the form of democracy practised these days is representative democracy. Ours is obviously one.

As I said at the outset of these remarks, all of us in this House were elected to represent the residents of our districts. They chose us to speak for them and give voice to their concerns in the Legislature. Ideally, it would be of course preferable if everyone's concerns could be heard on every issue, but it is easy to see that today such a system would collapse on the basis of its unwieldiness and its lack of manageability.

A representative form of democracy, therefore, seems to offer the best opportunity for citizens to freely vote for those whom they want to represent them. Furthermore, if those who are elected do not live up to the expectations, the public can be assured that they will have the opportunity to vote them out of office within a finite period of time. By selecting representatives, Mr. Speaker, those who are elected are given the mandate to act on behalf of their constituents. The assumption that all of us make is that those who are elected will act in the best interests of their constituents.

The ability of elected officials vis-à-vis Bill 205 to fulfill their mandate may be undermined by citizen initiatives, and this could in turn make politicians reluctant to make difficult and controversial decisions. Moreover, I believe that those who run for office, certainly those whom I have met in our provincial jurisdiction, tend to be driven by a deeply held belief in the importance of public service and have a wish to be of assistance to others.

This, Mr. Speaker, leads me to another point. Not all members of society are interested in participating in the democratic process, and while this is very disturbing, it is only realistic to acknowledge this. Voter participation rates have dropped considerably and for the most part consistently in the last 25 years. In the most recent federal election in 2000 only 60.2 percent of Albertans chose to participate, whereas in the provincial election two years ago fewer than 53 percent of Albertans voted at all. While these numbers may not be low enough to speak of, quote, voter apathy, unquote, it is nonetheless unfortunate that less than two-thirds of Albertans consider it important enough to participate in elections. If, however, the term voter apathy is too severe, it might still be appropriate to speak of voter fatigue. In the last three years there has been a federal election, a provincial election, and civic elections. It may not seem like much of a commitment to go and cast a ballot three times in the course of a three-year period, and the casting of the ballot doesn't take much time or a whole lot of effort. On the other side of that, though, there is the consideration that we want voters to be able to make informed choices. Indeed, it is desirable that all of us always make informed decisions regardless of the situation.

Having said that, we all know that staying informed takes time and effort, and aside from the fact that not everyone considers it a worthwhile endeavor to make such an investment, if we are unable to secure more than a 60 percent participation level with one election a year, how can we expect any higher levels of participation for what will most likely be special-interest issues?

So I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I urge everybody here not to vote in favour of Bill 205 as it is an intrusion in what we are about here in the Legislature.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak this afternoon to Bill 205, the Citizens'

Empowerment Act. Certainly, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is to be congratulated for bringing this legislation forward. It's thoughtful and timely in this province, and I believe it would further reduce what has been known as the democratic deficit. Regardless of what area of the province they live in, people are concerned about democracy and how they can play a role in it, and I think it is a step in the right direction for people to have a more direct role in influencing the laws that govern their lives. Alberta has always had a long tradition of grassroots democracy, and in fact at one time the recall of Assembly members was part of the political process here. When we look at legislators and ourselves and that we should be more receptive to initiatives for direct democracy, well, I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to consider Bill 205 and pass it because I think we would certainly have a better province as a result.

If we look at Bill 205, it's divided into two parts: the democratic guarantee petitions and initiative petitions. The first is the establishment of the provision where Albertans can start a petition to trigger a referendum to allow the citizens to improve or express their disapproval of the legislation that has been passed by the Legislature.

Well, some would say that the current petition that's going around on the lack of natural gas rebates by this government could be an example of this, Mr. Speaker. Thousands and thousands of Albertans have certainly accessed www.altaliberals.ab.ca to download a copy of a petition and have signed it and organized various campaigns throughout the province to express in this case their disapproval of legislation that has been passed by this Assembly, and that's the Natural Gas Price Protection Act.

So in one way or another perhaps if we had Bill 205, citizens would have a direct voice or a say in what's going on. When we're talking about petitions, certainly they are an expression in any democratic society, but whenever you have a set number of names on a petition or a size of a petition, then that is a mark, or a bar so to speak, for democracy.

The second part of this bill is the establishment of a provision where Albertans can start a petition to have a piece of legislation introduced in the Alberta Legislature. There's probably not a member here that doesn't at one time or another get the idea that it's perhaps suitable that some research be done on a specific topic and that there be thought put into the idea of bringing forward a bill. Time permitting, every hon. member can have a voice in the merits or the negative aspects of a certain legislative idea. To incorporate this so that citizens can start a petition to have a piece of legislation introduced into the Alberta Legislature would certainly strengthen the democratic process in this province.

Now, the hon. member is to be again congratulated when you think that this could be the first part of a whole series of initiatives to enhance democratic renewal in this province. The main focus of initiative processes and the whole idea of referendums – the first place people think of is B.C., and this legislation is different from the B.C. legislation in several ways. The legislation as proposed here, Bill 205, does not allow an initiative petition to deal with money at all whereas in the province of B.C. there are provisions and remedies so that they can do that. In British Columbia any citizen initiative must go to a standing committee of MLAs and then either to an election process or to the House, and certainly the bill here, Bill 205, cuts out that middle person, Mr. Speaker.

B.C.'s legislation has a unique formula for determining if a petition passes a referendum. It states that more than 50 percent of the votes and two-thirds of the electoral districts must be in the affirmative for the legislation to pass. Here ours is going to be simply, Mr. Speaker, 50 percent plus one vote of those who voted in the affirmative means that the entire initiative is successful. In the

B.C. legislation if the initiative is successful, then the bill is introduced in the Legislature. That's it. Whether it's passed or defeated is unimportant. That is the end of the process. In our legislation as proposed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, the bill is introduced, and if the bill isn't passed by the Legislature, then it goes to a referendum. If the referendum is successful, then the bill is reintroduced in the Legislature, and the cycle goes on and on.

Mr. Speaker, when we're talking about the referendum and legislation, this portion of the bill essentially attaches the condition onto every bill that comes to the Legislature. It establishes that no act can come into force until 90 days have passed from the date of royal assent. The exceptions to this provision are, again, money bills, bills which impose a tax, private acts, or acts which are meant to deal with an emergency situation. Within the 90-day period a citizen can apply to the Chief Electoral Officer to start a petition, the purpose of which is to call a referendum with the question being whether or not the bill in question should come into law. As part of the conditions the petition must be completed within 90 days after royal assent is given. Further, the petition must have a number of signatures equal to 5 percent of the total number of electors eligible to vote in the most recent general election. This would amount to approximately 95,000 signatures. I understand that South Dakota, as one example, uses this 5 percent formula.

Now, if the petition is in order, the process states that "the Lieutenant Governor in Council must set a date for a democratic guarantee election," or, as we all know, a referendum. The date must be no later than 6 months from the date the Chief Electoral Officer reports that the petition is in order. This part is similar to the South Dakota example where legislation except that which is urgently needed by the state can be the subject of a referendum when a proper petition is presented.

An Albertan can apply to the Chief Electoral Officer to start a petition, and these are the initiative petitions under part 2, Mr. Speaker. If one has an interest in proposing that a piece of legislation be introduced in the Legislature, they can go ahead and do this. Now, again, no proposed petition for legislation to deal with money can ask for the cutting of public funds, impose a tax, or be contrary to the Charter of human rights legislation.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to join debate in second reading on Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the spirit behind the Citizens' Empowerment Act. If passed, Bill 205 would certainly enhance our government's commitment to openness and accountability, and it would back our promise to listen to Albertans by giving them an avenue to affect legislation in a much more direct manner. I believe in grassroots democracy. I've seen it work in the past, and it's surely one of the cornerstones of this government's philosophy. I believe that citizens have good ideas and that they want an opportunity from time to time to have a more active voice in government.

The citizens' initiative aspect of Bill 205 will enhance our present system of democracy by allowing citizens a different level of participation and a more direct role in our democratic system. It is a measure that allows citizens to bring forward and vote on a legislative proposal in a very grassroots, bottom-to-top way. In fact, Mr. Speaker, it looks an awful lot like my Bill 211 from the First Session of the 25th Legislature, the Citizens' Initiative Act, 2001, which I admittedly borrowed from the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. So here we go again.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 gives Albertans a new avenue by which issues of great importance can be brought to this Legislature. Currently citizens have the right to vote in favour of the political party or candidate whom they feel has the most policies, ideas, and philosophies that are closest to their own, but we all know that not every Albertan likes every party's entire platform come election time. Thus, Bill 205 will allow citizens the opportunity to add to or possibly even omit an item or two on the government agenda.

Citizens' initiatives are not a new or radical idea. Some of our friends in the U.S.A. have enjoyed citizens' initiative opportunities for over 100 years. We can learn lessons both good and not so good from our neighbours to the south. Since 1898 Americans in 24 different states have voted on issues including giving women the right to vote, reducing property taxes, physician-assisted suicide, defining marriage, racial preference in hiring, Sunday shopping, legalizing the medicinal use of marijuana, outlawing steel traps in hunting, campaign finance reform, the minimum wage, the eight-hour workday, limiting government spending increases to inflation and population growth, controlling pollution, funding for private schools, banning cockfighting, and raising tobacco taxes.

On average only 40 percent of citizens' initiatives in the United States are approved by the voters. In fact, since 1904 citizens in those 24 states that have the initiative process have been able to get approximately 1,900 statewide referendum questions on the ballot. Of those 1,900 questions put to the voters, about 850 were actually adopted by the citizens. So in about 100 years' time citizens have enacted about 850 laws. The high water mark came in 1996 when there were 102 referendum questions on the ballot spread over 24 different states, and of course of those 102 questions citizens adopted only 42. Now, to put this into perspective, Mr. Speaker, during that same year the state legislators in those same 24 states enacted approximately 17,000 laws. That's 17,000 compared to 42. So you can see that the fear of representative democracy being stifled or undermined is just not true.

Now, Albertans also enjoy an interesting history on citizens-initiated referendums. In 1913 our province enacted the Direct Legislation Act, which provided the means for submitting legislation to electors for their approval as well as initiation of legislation by electors. An initiative under this act could come about by a petition of voters but could not expend public funds or go beyond the legislative jurisdiction of the province. Albertans never used the Direct Legislation Act, and Premier Manning repealed it in 1958 due to a court challenge in another province upon similar legislation that may – not would but may – have implicated Alberta's bill if so challenged.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the core theme of Bill 205 will help enhance democracy in Alberta and complement the work we do as elected members of the provincial Legislature. The citizens' initiative in theory will not threaten the powers of the Legislature or impinge upon the authority of the Lieutenant Governor. In no way does it seek to replace or interfere with the fine work done by this Legislative Assembly and especially the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View. However, it has been said that the very presence of the citizens' initiative process in a given jurisdiction helps to prevent the misuse of power. It helps with public opinion and encourages public involvement in legislative issues. With the citizens' initiative Alberta voters will have a voice all the time, not just one day every four years. Citizens will no longer have to beg politicians to address concerns because voters will be able to initiate legislation themselves if their concerns are ignored.

As with any piece of government-initiated legislation, the input of average Albertans has an influence. Public consultation has become a very important part of developing legislation here in Alberta under this government. Most of our bills have been through extensive consultation with either the general public or the stakeholder groups. This is, Mr. Speaker, due to our government's commitment to openness and accountability as well as recognition of the valuable input that Albertans can provide on important issues. Bill 205 carries the philosophy behind public consultation one step further. It is a bottom-to-top process which gives Albertans the power to initiate legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the citizens' initiative will make politicians more responsive to voters' concerns rather than to special-interest groups. By empowering voters, the citizens' initiative will reduce the power of lobby groups to make specific demands on government. The electorate will have an avenue to voice their displeasure to legislation more quickly and efficiently. At the same time, the citizens' initiative will give voters more choice by allowing them to accept or reject laws in a referendum in addition to voting for candidates for the Legislature.

Average Albertans will have a tool for directly promoting good policies. Voters will be able to force debate on issues that some politicians may want to avoid, like changes to our health care system or issues on the economy or the environment. Voters will also have a real say on new issues that were not discussed in the election. In a participant democracy all citizens are involved in deciding important issues. I believe that this bill will restore faith in democracy and get people more involved with what's going on under the dome. It is also likely to increase the ever declining voter turnout ratios during election time, as we've heard from the member opposite.

Some people say that we don't need citizens-initiated referendums because we already have government-initiated referendums through our plebiscite provisions in the Election Act, but this is not addressing the real grassroots movement of the people. Alberta was founded and built by ordinary, grassroots people. We must not ever let that slip away. It was the grass roots that made us what we are, and this bill will help us stay close to the people as a province and as a government.

Others may criticize that referendums stop government from doing its job or that it's an all-out assault on representative government. The truth is that referendums enhance democracy by enabling voters to have a real and direct say on issues that affect them. Referendums are not a substitute for the day-to-day running of our province, which is left to the hon. Premier, the hon. cabinet ministers and their departments, as well as private members. With the citizens' initiative MLAs will continue to vote for or against different laws in the Legislature. Albertans would not run the ministries of Health and Wellness, no, Learning, or Infrastructure, nor would they manage the details of putting together the province's annual budget. I believe that Albertans appreciate elected government officials setting policy and budgets and proposing and voting on legislation. They simply see the initiative process as a check and a balance if the government does not respond to voters' concerns.

Now, another criticism may be that referendums oversimplify issues. In fact, referendums enable real debate on specific issues. This debate involves all citizens, not just politicians and media elites. In contrast, elections themselves may oversimplify issues by forcing voters to consider a myriad of candidates, parties, personalities, policies, and issues and limiting the voter to place one X beside one candidate. By voting for that one candidate, the voter cannot express any disagreement with particular policies of that candidate or their party.

Some people say that referendums will erode the social fabric. That's another charge, but the truth is that referendums will actually strengthen the social fabric by getting citizens to communicate with each other rather than just lobbying their politicians.

The final criticism that I will address, Mr. Speaker, talks about the money spent. Well, the truth is that in Canada's 1992 referendum on the Charlottetown accord, the yes side outspent the no side by a large margin and still lost.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I do support the spirit of Bill 205. I see nothing wrong with more political participation. However, I have concerns with the level of participation proposed in Bill 205. To me 5 percent seems to be too low a figure, and I wonder if the hon. member would consider increasing the participation rate to 10 percent of eligible voters. I also believe that the hon. member may want to reconsider the provision that allows a citizens' initiative to block legislation. If these changes were made, then I could support Bill 205 because then it would encourage more political participation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Bill 205 – or we probably lovingly refer to it as the came-in-second-again bill – is the process that people that can't relate to voters on the voting stage have to relate to the things they can: confusion, bureaucracy, things that can stifle the legislative process or stop it. So this happens quite often with parties that haven't had success with the voters.

There is a process to bring private bills into the system, and we've dealt this year with two private bills that were introduced. One only has to watch what a referendum process that doesn't include money would accomplish. It would become a never-ending process or, as this should probably be referred to, the dum-dum process. Having 95 percent of 5 percent be able to turn over 50 percent plus one of 100 percent only makes sense to the opposition. That you could stop bills by a democratically elected House is astounding. If you're going to create legislation that isn't connected to money, you have to really think what you're doing here. Morality isn't the issue in this House; it's how we spend people's tax dollars, and that's where it should end. It's when we get off that rail that we start to get ourselves in trouble.

The idea that we couldn't do an expenditure of public funds – I'm wondering: what would you accomplish? We can't stop at taxes, what most people would want to do, and it's all contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights. Probably most people would take issue with some of those, and they would like to have the discussion about it, which they can't do under this act.

This bill isn't what it's being left to the voters to be, somehow empowering democracy. This is an attempt to attract support for something that is unworkable, irresponsible, very costly, and probably unmanageable, and I think this good House will in due course give it its appropriate position in the garbage, where it belongs.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to speak this afternoon on Bill 205, the Citizens' Empowerment Act. Certainly, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East for bringing this particular bill forward.

We did hear a little bit earlier about the history of this type of legislation, and this piece of legislation is certainly a modernized version of the Direct Legislation Act. This piece of legislation, by way of history, was brought in under the Liberal government of Art Sifton in 1913. This act remained on the Statutes of Alberta for over four decades and was repealed by the Social Credit government in 1958. Now, the Direct Legislation Act was never used to the fullest extent. So certainly the fears that people will have about this type of legislation slowing down the process of this House or being overused or whatever are fears that are unfounded. The original process was started, Mr. Speaker, when the debates over liquor came up in the 1920s. However, the government did capitulate by bringing in the Liquor Act.

Now, then, as well, when we look at legislation that we pass in this House, we had an example earlier this year, particularly . . . [Mr. Bonner's speaking time expired]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to close debate.

Bill 206

Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to as well recognize individuals that are here in the gallery this afternoon to take part in listening to our debate on Bill 206. In the gallery today, Mr. Speaker, we have three detectives from Calgary and Edmonton. Detective Len Dafoe is from the Calgary Police Service in the vice unit. Detective Jim Morrissey and Detective Randy Wikens are both here as well from the Edmonton Police Service. Last but not least, Ed Campbell is here, and Ed is with the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton. So I want to welcome and ask the members of the Assembly to provide them with the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to begin debate in second reading of Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to talk about the importance of this bill to Alberta's inner-city neighbourhoods and how Bill 206 could make living and raising families easier for these people living in Alberta's major urban centres. Bill 206 would allow police officers the discretion to seize vehicles from sex trade offenders when prostitution charges are laid. If they were found guilty, their vehicle would be sold.

The question most people ask is if I really think that taking away vehicles from johns will have an impact on eliminating prostitution. Based on my 25 years of experience as a police officer, I can say that on its own Bill 206 will not end prostitution. The goal of this bill isn't to provide a surefire solution to the problems associated with street prostitution. The intent of this bill is to target sex trade offenders as the main contributors of street prostitution and provide police services with another tool to fight street prostitution.

After living and working in downtown Calgary for nearly 20 years, I have watched communities literally crumble due to the criminal activity that follows street prostitution. I know that children who play in inner-city neighbourhoods and communities are vulnerable to the debris of this trade, including dirty needles and used condoms, as well as sexual predators lurking in the playgrounds and streets. I also know of the dramatic increase in drug activity in communities with street prostitution problems.

There are two objectives I hope to achieve by moving ahead with Bill 206. First of all, by singling out the sex trade offender, I hope to convince people that prostitutes are not the problem. Sex trade offenders are. There has always been some form of prostitution, be it in a bawdy house, from an escort agency, or on the street. The daunting task of eliminating street prostitution would be made easier by removing the main tool from offenders.

The second objective I hope to achieve is to take the issue of street prostitution from the municipal to the provincial level. Municipal governments should be congratulated for the creation of successful programs that have reduced the number of prostitutes walking the streets, but the reduced number of prostitutes has not necessarily reduced the number of johns cruising inner-city neighbourhoods.

I also believe that we must get away from this notion that prostitutes are part of a sex trade. Based on my experience and the experience of hundreds of citizens, 99.9 percent of prostitutes are addicted to some form of substance. What other trade has those sorts of statistics? Whether it's liquor, drugs, or other narcotics, these men, women, and children are selling their bodies on the street to feed their addictions. They are not part of a trade. They are tragic victims of violence. There's only one loose similarity between trades and street prostitution: once you remove the customer, the business will fail.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 has two major highlights for law enforcement: removing the main tool for prostitution from offenders and giving offenders strong incentive to rehabilitate. There is a growing demand for a stronger deterrence for people involved in prostitution-related activities, especially in inner-city communities. Here's how Bill 206 works. Vehicles would be seized when prostitution-related charges are laid and the offender refuses to participate in an alternative measures program. The vehicle is stored in a municipal hold lot and would become the property of the Crown after a guilty plea or a conviction. However, vehicles would be returned if a first-time offender participates in an alternative measures program or a diversion program. This is an extremely important part of Bill 206.

An alternative measures program developed by the community and the Police Service and the Crown prosecutor's office has proven its effectiveness both as a deterrent and as a rehabilitation tool here in Edmonton. John school is one example of an alternative measures program. According to statistics between 1996 and 2000 1,026 men have attended john school here in Edmonton, and only nine have reoffended. Nine have reoffended out of 1,026 men who entered the program willingly.

There are three additional highlights to Bill 206 based on comments from members in this caucus, government departments, police services, and community groups. First, police officers will have the ability to seize and release the vehicle. The intent of this bill is to reduce the instances of street prostitution and ensure that offenders are punished for the criminal activity, not entire families. It is not my intention to infringe on the jurisdiction and effectiveness of police services in Alberta. Police officers are in a much better position to decide if a vehicle should be seized or if a family has been harmed by the actions of the offender.

The second change states that a peace officer may release the vehicle to the registered owner or someone authorized by the registered owner if the officer is satisfied that seizure of the vehicle is causing or will cause undue financial hardship. Again, Mr. Speaker, the intent of this bill is not to penalize the mom or the wife, the son or the daughter. The intent is to build safer and healthier communities for families and children, Mr. Speaker, by providing community service work, possibly in the same community the offence has occurred in. I firmly believe as well that education is required to provide sex trade offenders with the reality of the criminal act they were or are going to be involved in.

Bill 206 would be an effective tool against street prostitution only when added to the existing infrastructure of law enforcement and prostitution control programs. A lot of work has been done to reduce the number of prostitutes walking the streets. This bill, combined with other programs that the policing community in Alberta has been working with, will make further progress to remove sex trade offenders and allow communities to rebuild into safe places for children and families.

I'm confident that seizing vehicles as proposed in Bill 206 would be a very effective deterrent for first, second, and repeat offenders. In fact, combining vehicle seizure with an alternative measures program has been successfully implemented before. Bill 206 is based on legislation passed in Manitoba in 1998. The government of Manitoba went through extensive debate and consultation to ensure the bill's effectiveness. The idea of seizing vehicles related to prostitution-related offences was one of the government's campaign promises. The bill, now an act, continues to be a strong deterrent for prostitution offenders. Recently Saskatchewan passed similar legislation. I realize that street prostitution problems in Manitoba and Saskatchewan differ in comparison to Alberta's; however, a precedent has been set, and people opposed to this bill cannot say that this sort of legislation is too strong and infringes on the rights of citizens.

It's also important to note that very few vehicles that have been seized are actually sold. Saskatchewan and Manitoba governments have learned that taking someone's vehicle away encourages them to rehabilitate. Therefore, the worst case scenario is that second offenders or repeat offenders will have their vehicle seized if they don't learn the first time. Police services in Alberta may use this as they wish. Some vice units may want to use this tool as an alternative measure to deter johns, while others may want to use the tool to its fullest intent, subjecting johns to media embarrassment and penalty.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to remind Albertans that street prostitution is illegal and destructive. I think we need to introduce a strong deterrent to reduce street prostitution in Alberta's major centres. I have found that prostitution evokes strong and wide-ranging reactions and opinions. Some people strongly oppose the exploitation and violence associated with prostitution while others resent the damage inflicted on their neighbourhoods. A number of these people want stronger laws enacted and fewer leniencies shown by the courts. Prostitution is openly carried out in residential neighbourhoods near schools, playgrounds, and in my riding of Calgary-Buffalo. For families living in these neighbourhoods, raising children gets that much tougher when the world of prostitution meets school-age children who see prostitution near their homes, outside their schools. Dealing with these concerns requires special initiatives, particularly when it comes to their effect on children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak to Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. Now, I listened with interest to the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who has brought forward this bill, and his background before he entered this Assembly would certainly give him considerable authority and background on this issue. When one considers the merits of this bill, certainly they are noteworthy and worth while, but in the course of debate – and I certainly hope this will proceed through the Legislative Assembly – perhaps the hon. member could explain the fact – and their concerns are valid – that Bill 206 undermines one of the main principles of our Canadian judicial system, and that is that one is innocent until proven guilty. The fact that these cars are going to be taken right away certainly flies in the face of that.

This bill has received wide support. I myself certainly saw the hon. member consulting with the local neighbourhoods, with community groups, with residents in regard to this, and I appreciate that effort. It is legislation that certainly has its merits, but it also has its drawbacks. I think the best thing to do, Mr. Speaker, would be to proceed with this legislation and see if we can improve not only the neighbourhoods but see if there are any ideas that could be brought forward that would satisfy the ideas of one of the tenets of our justice system, which is that one is innocent until proven guilty.

Now, I understand that if someone is caught soliciting for prostitution, there are many conditions, which the hon. member indicated, that would prohibit the vehicle from being seized: certainly, if the owner can demonstrate that they didn't know that they were involved in solicitation – I at this time, as well as others, would be interested, hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, if there is an example in regard to this that we could have – if the vehicle being used was stolen, or if it's a person's first time being charged with prostitution or related offences.

I'm of the impression that this seizure is going to be instantaneous – and in the course of debate I'm sure we will find out – but the vehicle, as I understand it, may be released by a police officer if the offender might be eligible for or consents to being punished by alternate measures. The hon. member I think discussed this earlier, but I think the whole idea, including taking a course for johns, is a step in the right direction. Certainly, there are considerations being attempted here if the seizure of the vehicle is going to put undue financial hardship on the person that got caught. The vehicle may be released. But how quick are these decisions going to be made? Is there a hearing process involved in this? How does all this work? I would appreciate an explanation of this from the hon. member for the benefit of myself and other members.

When you consider that targeting johns is basically the whole idea behind this bill, I would have to say that it is about time. It amazes me. I think Manitoba and Saskatchewan have already tried similar ideas, and they have been met with a little bit of success at least, if not considerable success, but at some point I think that the name of anyone caught with solicitation offences should be published. They should be printed in a newspaper, or I don't know where you'd print this, but I think that would also be a significant deterrent to this sort of behaviour.

Certainly, with those questions, I at this time will cede the floor to another colleague, Mr. Speaker. In conclusion, I think all hon. members of this Assembly should have a good look at Bill 206 in considering making this bill law. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and join debate on Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. I believe that this bill must be passed. It is imperative that all members realize the importance and the implications of this bill. After all our debate I hope that all of us vote favourably for it.

Mr. Speaker, when I first started studying this bill, I did not support it. In fact, I did not think it was a proper area for this government to be delving into. I thought that it might infringe on too many rights and was too vulnerable to constitutional challenges because it seemed to step into federal jurisdiction, but then I learned a little bit more about some of the issues that this bill is trying to solve, and I realized how important Bill 206 could be in this province.

The goal of this bill is to amend the Traffic Safety Act so that police officers will be able to seize the vehicle of a person who attempts to become involved in a prostitute-related offence. At first glance that seems heavy handed. When I first learned of this bill, I was not in favour until I learned of the startling statistic which was that the average age of a street prostitute is 15 years old.

An Hon. Member: How old?

Mr. Vandermeer: Fifteen years old.

Mr. Speaker, when the standing policy committee met with a number of detectives from Edmonton and Calgary and I questioned them on some of the issues, I asked: what is your main purpose behind pushing ahead this kind of legislation? They explained to me that their main purpose is to get kids off the street, and that was when I changed my mind and decided I would support this bill.

I don't know if members of this Legislature realize what that means. I will repeat it: the average age of a streetwalking prostitute is 15 years of age. A 15 year old is a child, a child who has no business being on the street for any reason, but the worst bit is that if 15 is the average age, that means there are children on the street selling themselves who are younger than 15. That is why I support this bill. It is a good way of going after the men who pursue children for sex. I have heard disturbing reports of men prowling the streets for young girls for sex. To me that is child abuse of the worst kind. There is no excuse for a person who pays a child to have sex with him.

I agree wholeheartedly with this bill, and I agree that this is another great step in trying to curb prostitution on Alberta streets. We must continue to battle the problem. It is not going away on its own, so we must come up with solutions such as this one, which goes after not the prostitute but those seeking the prostitute.

Mr. Speaker, there are many programs in Alberta which are designed to help prostitutes leave the curbside, to help the young streetwalkers leave a dangerous life and return to a safe environment. These programs target the prostitute. What this bill does is target the john, the reason for street prostitution, because without the john it is tough for pimps and prostitutes to make any money. The impact of johns harassing innocent women and children in neighbourhoods is an ongoing problem here in the city of Edmonton itself. What happens is that johns go through communities, propositioning anybody they find. The reason for it is because they have had success obtaining sex for cash in those communities. After we pass the bill, if a john happens to proposition an undercover police officer, the police will be able to take their car away.

This government has championed many programs to curb prostitution. We have especially tried our very best to get the young streetwalking children off the corner with the creation of the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. All the efforts we have made to curb prostitution have been small but important steps in fighting a large problem. Bill 206 is another step in fighting a significant problem, a step which could have a significant impact on the problem. By forcing johns away from the prostitutes, many will have to find new areas to work. They will clean up many of our streets and make many communities safer. As well, it may keep johns from searching out sexual activity in our cities and towns.

Our Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act is a great example of a working program this government has championed to help children. Since the act has been brought in, over 894 referrals have been made and over 426 children from across Alberta have been given protection under the act. Mr. Speaker, that number is phenomenal: 426 children have been taken off the streets for selling their bodies. That is an extremely sad situation in this province. Children should not be on the street and being subjected to that kind of abuse. Under the act the youngest child that was taken off the street was 12 years of age, which is so terribly sad. I can't imagine the pain it must cause the family of a child involved in the sex trade, because with prostitution comes other dangers including drug use, physical abuse, and the likelihood that death is not too far away.

The Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act has had a remarkable impact on street prostitution in urban communities. In the first year of implementation of the act police and social workers utilized the apprehension authority under the act 273 times in Alberta. In this past year it was reduced to 81. This shows that our effects are working, but more still needs to be done. There are still children out on the street selling themselves to make money for their pimps. One of the biggest impacts of the act was a shift in understanding that the legislation created in the public. This was a large success as it became clear to all Albertans that children involved in prostitution are victims of sexual abuse, which is completely unacceptable. No child deserves that.

We have programs to help prostitutes, and now it's time for us to begin a program that will stop prostitution at the root of the problem: the buyer. Without the buyer there will be no seller, and if we have no seller, that means we will have less children in a very distasteful and dangerous environment.

Albertans know that there is a problem in our province with child prostitution, and they have asked and expect us to do something about it. We have done plenty in the past, and we will continue to do more, and I applaud the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for his dedication to this issue. I know that he has seen many of the horrors of the business of prostitution by being a former police officer. I believe that we as legislators in this House should recognize that this bill is an attempt to deal with the problem of getting rid of the buyers, and this is a problem that we should be confronting in our positions. I implore all members to vote in favour of Bill 206.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate an opportunity to make some comments about Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. We've already heard some of the issues that the bill raises. I think the two main principles that come into conflict with the proposed legislation are the fact that the bill denies the assumption of innocence by denying due process and allowing any police officer to act as judge, jury, and bailiff. That very important principle that we all honour and protect in our country is put up against the principle that the communities and neighbours in communities must be safe and secure and live in as healthy an environment as possible in which to raise their families. So we have two really conflicting principles, and it's trying to mediate our way between those and come up with a solution to a problem that others I think have characterized in many ways as being a horrendous problem for those that are involved in the trade and that those such as the communities where the trade is plied must put up with. So it's a bit of a balancing act.

We've been down this road before in the Legislature. A few years ago there was a bill that allowed the police to take action against intoxicated drivers, that has given them powers similar to the ones that we see in Bill 206, and again the same issues were raised. In the case of the intoxicated drivers I think the decision that came down on the side of allowing the officer the latitude to make decisions that are usually reserved for juries and courts was that there was a human safety issue, that to allow an intoxicated driver to continue would endanger the lives of others and, in fact, could endanger the very life of the driver himself or herself. So, in that case, I think the danger was rather clear.

I think that on this bill you might get – and I think we've already heard that – some similar arguments, that by allowing johns into the neighbourhood, by allowing them to cruise the streets, we are in fact endangering the lives of the people that are involved in the trade and in many cases I think, as already has been pointed out, of children who by force of circumstance find themselves forced to do some rather reprehensible things. So it's a difficult problem, and I think, again, the community would argue that there is a safety issue just for them as some of the characters that are involved in this trade are, to say the least, unsavoury and do present a real physical menace to innocent citizens who are trying to go about their normal daily business. So I guess that if you're going to come down on any side, you have to come down on the side of trying to make communities safer for individuals and to take our risks in terms of the freedoms that we enjoy.

I think we've been provided with some data from other provinces that have gone down a similar road and have enacted similar laws, and to this point there hasn't been a challenge to the legislation based on an individual's rights being abrogated. So the fact that it hasn't been challenged maybe speaks to the care with which it has been applied and that officers are careful not to abuse the right that the legislation gives them. So I think that that is some assurance that the legislation won't be abused. I guess the question as it becomes more widespread and is no longer under the microscope – this law will be certainly here initially and I'm sure was in other provinces – is that after that initial period it won't be looked at as carefully, and are there opportunities for it to be abused.

There are provisions here that allow the owner of the vehicle to make his or her case if the vehicle was being used without their permission or was being used to take part in the prostitution without their knowledge. It allows them some ways out via attending john school, and I think that if nothing else it can be looked at as a measure that can be taken in the interim while we try to seek some other solutions to a really, really difficult problem. It is a piece of legislation that can be revisited should we end up finding that there are difficulties with it. It's not written in stone. We are constantly amending laws in this Legislature.

So I think that on balance, although it makes me uneasy in some areas, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to support the bill and hope that the kinds of reservations that others have raised – I think there was a rather strong editorial in one of the local newspapers that raised some serious reservations about the bill. Even with those reservations in place, some immediate solution to the problem is needed, and until we can think of other measures and put those in place, then I think this bill deserves support.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

5:00

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join in the debate today on Bill 206, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Speaker, our communities are the backbone that holds this province intact. Without the support and backing of the various community groups and police services across this province Albertans would not enjoy the current standard of living that they do. An example of community support is occurring in the city of Calgary. The Calgary Police Service vice unit in conjunction with an organization called Communities for Awareness & Action on Prostitution Issues have joined forces to educate the public in the areas of crime and street prostitution. This committee, CAAPI, was formed in September of 1997 under the direction of the Calgary Police Service, community volunteers, representatives from various social agencies in the city of Calgary, the city of Calgary Department of Community and Neighbourhood Services, as well as city council members.

CAAPI's main goal is to educate the public on how street prostitution affects all citizens of Calgary, and it's their goal to work towards a safer city. The organization is working toward protecting the rights of women, children, and families, not just the rights of sex-trade offenders such as sexual exploiters and pimps. I think it's essential that communities are aware of the harmful effects prostitution has on Alberta's cities. Community groups such as CAAPI desperately want to work together with governments and police services to make their inner-city communities safer places to live, work, and play.

Mr. Speaker, there are many angles that a community can implement to prevent and eliminate street prostitution. The effective multilevel approach is one in which the police work closely with the local residents in the community and the local authorities to develop a response that involves new styles of intense policing and a combined traffic management scheme that is designed to remove or at least significantly reduce the incidence of cruising and soliciting in a particular area. Low-level strategies of intervention may be enough to deter clients, but intensive strategies on the part of both law enforcement and affected residents may be necessary to deter the committed street prostitute.

To produce maximum benefits, the interventions have to be implemented in a particular sequence with a great deal of thought, care, and commitment. If the police's effectiveness is to be noticeably improved, relationships with the community organizations and with a range of relevant agencies need to be developed. This is paramount to a successful campaign. A multilevel approach involves two things. First of all, there must be a shift from the position of reactive to proactive, and the second element for successfully reducing street prostitution is the sharing of responsibility for crime prevention and control with other agencies and communities.

It's important that the community as a whole address a couple of different points as it pertains to defining a successful strategy, the first being an improved flow of information between the police and the public. The level of commitment on both sides must be underpinned in order to mount a proper defence.

The second involves a traffic management plan. Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 speaks to this very notion. The purpose of Bill 206 is exactly what might be considered a traffic plan. By allowing peace officers to seize vehicles involved in prostitution-related offences, this will give communities an increased sense of security, a reduction in the volume of prostitution-related traffic, and a reduction in the level of crimes reported as well as ultimately an improved relationship amongst the public, the police, and local authorities.

Many communities across this country and across North America have taken these initiatives on themselves to improve their area of living. Having a regular neighbourhood meeting is an excellent method to accomplish many things, the most important of which is keeping a community safe. By individuals getting involved in creative strategies with other members of the community, it creates an atmosphere of proactivity, not reactivity, in the community. It's been suggested by members of the Calgary police vice unit to use incident reports by community individuals in order to keep notes on any action or actions that they may have witnessed in their area. These reports can then be turned in to your community liaison officer for their review. This is an excellent way to promote involvement in the community and have written hard copy proof of any witnessed improprieties in the neighbourhood.

Another creative strategy is to identify sex-trade offenders via a web site. One particular group of individuals in the Victoria Park area of Calgary did just this. They identified individuals who were causing problems in the neighbourhood and publicly raised their profiles by publishing their names and photographs for everyone to see. This type of program focuses the attention on the real offenders behind a community's concerns.

CAAPI has made it abundantly clear that these are some of the primary means to rid the streets in their community of these problems. The organization also strongly suggests that members of the community compose letters to municipal, provincial, and federal politicians to support changes to current legislation that will help police to curtail prostitution in the area.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 should be commended for this initiative. Many inner-city communities in Edmonton and in Calgary as well as both Edmonton's mayor and city council as well as the mayor of Calgary have expressed strong support for the idea of seizing and selling vehicles involved in this type of prostitution-related crime. The vehicle seizure proposed in this bill would be a very effective deterrent for first, second, and longer repeat offenders.

The Calgary Police Service for one has gone to great lengths to be proactive in this fight against prostitution-related offences. In October of 1998 they launched a strategic plan to develop short- and long-term solutions to the issue of prostitution and its collateral safety issues. Additionally, the Calgary Police Service continues to focus on a holistic strategy that combines efforts with committed agencies to assist in mobilizing citizens from the community to address the issue and to make the city of Calgary a safe place to live. As mentioned earlier, with the involvement of the community this problem can be overcome.

As a longtime rural constituent I understand the meaning of community. The meaning of the word is somewhat exemplified in its definition: "a unified body of individuals." It's knowing that your neighbour is looking out for you and your well-being as much as you're looking out for them and theirs. It's about trust, friendship, and common values and goals. Many rural Albertans know exactly what I'm referring to as this has been the hallmark of the rural setting for many generations. Urban constituents, thanks to programs like these offered through the Calgary Police Service, are also finding true value in the word "community," looking out for neighbours and their children, knowing that the favour will be returned one day.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 206 is a move in the right direction of reducing prostitution-related offences, reducing the crime that always follows, and in the same token strengthening the communities that so many of us here in Alberta pride ourselves on. In closing, I'd urge this Assembly to support this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. I want to first of all thank the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for his extensive work in bringing forth this piece of legislation to the Assembly. This bill is designed to seize vehicles of johns caught soliciting someone for the purposes of prostitution.

Particularly when you're looking at prostitution, as the Member for Edmonton-Manning had indicated, the majority of our prostitutes on the street are minors, average age of 15 years. So this type of behaviour of prostitution certainly does have a huge impact not only on our communities but on families that are involved. In looking at the piece of legislation that we are debating here this afternoon, I think we also have to consider all families and the impact that they do have on communities.

Early in my first term, after being elected in 1997, the Department of Justice had put together a trip where we got to tour numerous facilities under their jurisdiction. We started at the Edmonton Police Service jail. We went to the Law Courts, back to the Remand Centre, and finally we went out to the youth detention centre. As events unfolded that day, we followed a 14-year-old girl who had been picked up soliciting officers for prostitution. She was soliciting two undercover officers, and this occurred at 4 a.m. Now, we saw her in the police holding cells awaiting her time in court, and at that particular time she was certainly not very concerned about the charges in front of her.

When we went to court, we were quite surprised to see that this same individual was appearing in front of the judge as we were there. Again, her attitude was certainly not one that you would think was a good attitude at that particular point. When the judge had put what he thought would be a good sentence on her, he asked the mother to reply. The mother did, and she said: really, even with these conditions you've placed upon her, I have a great fear that she'll be back on the streets again tonight. So, at that time, what the judge did was recommend that she spend three weeks in the youth detention centre until they could move forward with this particular thing.

As we left the courts and went over to the Remand Centre, we saw this same girl, and she was distraught, quite upset. Obviously, an impact had finally been made upon her. Later in the day when we were touring the youth detention centre, we saw her again, and I think that the impact on her was extremely strong.

This particular bill is a bill that would focus on the crime, and the crime is certainly against this youth, and the crime is certainly being committed by the johns who take advantage of this young person and put her in a position where it has a huge impact on her family.

Now, Bill 206 certainly does target the johns, but I do have some problems with the discretionary power that this particular bill does give to police officers. I certainly have absolutely no trouble if the cars of johns are seized under this particular bill. I do have some questions, though, if the car belongs to the mother of a family and she has no indication that the car is being used for the purpose it is.

I think that, as well, we have to look at the situation as to whether the same vehicle is being used in both situations – when the offence is committed, is it the same car that is used in both occasions? – and whether in fact the owner did have an understanding that the car was going to be used for these purposes or that the owner of the car certainly gave the individual permission to use this vehicle for whatever reasons. I think that if we are truly looking at a law that is going to cut down on the impact of prostitution on our communities and on families, we also have to look at the huge impact that this will have on families whose car was used, particularly if the car was registered to the mother or, in the case of common-law relationships, where the car of the mother of the family is being used by her common-law.

So those are my major concerns with this bill. I think that overall it is a very good bill. I also think that even if this issue cannot be cleared up, I will be supporting this bill because I think that for too long we have allowed johns to travel freely in our communities, and there is no doubt about the serious nature of prostitution and how it does affect our communities.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and certainly listen to the arguments of others on this bill and once again thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing this piece of legislation forward. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. I wish to speak in support of Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. When my devoted colleague for Calgary-Buffalo first introduced this bill, I thought of how lucky my constituents in Whitecourt-St. Anne are that we don't have to deal with these types of issues as do my colleagues from the urban ridings. In fact, I thought I'd just sit and listen to the debate and just keep out of the proceedings because it really didn't impact Whitecourt-St. Anne.

I changed my mind when I read an article in the Calgary Herald on March 7. The article really caught my attention, and I want to share the story that was in the article. The heading of the article that caught my attention was: "Daddy, can you blow up this balloon?" In the article it states that a young girl was playing in the backyard last fall when she picked up what she thought was a balloon. Her dad was inside the house when his four-year-old daughter walked in. She said: Daddy, can you blow up this balloon? Well, she had a condom in her mouth that was filled with sperm. The rest is history from there. I don't have to get into the details. It's believed that the used condom was thrown over the high backyard fence in a neighbourhood in southwest Calgary, and this area was working to get rid of the prostitution problem in Calgary. Well, six months later this little girl is still getting needles to test for HIV, hepatitis B, and other diseases. This little girl has gone through five sets of testing, but it may take up to six or nine months before anything shows up. You can only imagine what this family is dealing with and feels like.

Colleagues, this could be your child or, for some of you, your grandchild. Bill 206 is another tool in the toolbox needed to assist our larger communities get rid of street prostitution and discourage johns from soliciting prostitutes in any neighbourhood.

I encourage all of you to support Bill 206. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much the opportunity to rise in the House today and speak to Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. I'd like to thank my colleague the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing this initiative forward as it is clear that his intentions are very genuine. However, I have to respectfully register my disagreement with the proposed legislation as I see a number of problems with the bill if it is passed.

We always try to provide police officers with any additional tools that can help them deal with criminal activity. In particular, the ability to seize vehicles used in prostitution-related offences would seem to give law enforcement officers yet another option when dealing with such cases. What I find difficult to support about Bill 206 is not the idea behind it but rather the fact that the bill encroaches into the jurisdiction of the Criminal Code of Canada, which falls under the judicial umbrella of the federal government.

Bill 206 calls for an expansion of provincial powers under the Traffic Safety Act. Presently the act limits provincial powers to prescribing things like the maximum allowable speed of vehicles, traffic control devices, or signs at railway crossings. It remains to be seen whether there would be a constitutional challenge if this bill should be passed.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the seizure of vehicles as punishment for a crime presents a number of problems as well; namely, that the punishment can be unequal for an identical offence. To illustrate my point a little better, imagine that two vehicles are seized from individuals that are found guilty of the exact same offence. Each vehicle is valued at $15,000. For the first individual the vehicle is the only means of transportation for an entire family and cannot easily be replaced due to financial constraints. In the case of the second individual the second car is used sparingly. The impact on the two families involved is extremely different. Similarly, if we were to seize a $110,000 Mercedes Benz, is that a reasonable penalty for picking up a street prostitute? This becomes especially questionable since we are doing it on the presumption of guilt rather than on the premise of innocent until proven guilty.

As many of us already know, Manitoba and Saskatchewan have passed similar legislation in the recent past, and although this would seem to support Bill 206, I must disagree. As I already mentioned, 206 is vulnerable to constitutional challenges, and should such a challenge be successful in either Manitoba or Saskatchewan, it would likely mean that our Alberta law would also be subject to the outcomes of that court decision. But here's where I am most concerned. If these constitutional concerns are not addressed and such a challenge comes at some point in time, would the government then be responsible for reimbursing all of those who had their vehicles auctioned off? Would we also be liable for punitive damages?

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned at the outset of my speech, I understand and sympathize with this bill, which is why I supported the Solicitor General on the child prostitution act. It is why I support the john school and why I support the youth project ranch in my constituency. However, I am unable to support a piece of legislation that presents real concerns with the equality of punishment and is so open to constitutional challenge. These questions must be addressed before we can proceed with legislation in this area.

Further, this particular piece of legislation seems to have considerably weakened as it has progressed through our process. While I oppose this bill, I also oppose prostitution, but I don't believe that this bill addresses that emotional issue. Despite my opposition to the proposed legislation, I'd still like to thank my colleague for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing it forward, generating more awareness about the seriousness of an issue relating to street prostitution.

I would also like to say that every time we do something like this, we drive prostitution to a different level, and this bill does nothing to address real issues like diseases, drug use, the blatant use of the term "escort services" that everybody gets to hide behind now. They're so commonplace that they get freely advertised in every mainstream newspaper in this province.

Creating legislation that only raises questions about jurisdiction and equality of punishment is not an effective way of dealing with the problem. We sit in here and we talk about children; I totally concur. You know, people that abuse children this way should be dealt with harshly, but I don't believe that taking somebody's car addresses that issue.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry that I can't support this bill. I know that it was brought forward with nothing but the best intentions, but I think it's flawed legislation. I hope everyone will carefully consider not just hyperbole, not just emotional gut reaction to a child being abused – nobody appreciates that; nobody in here condones that – but don't pass laws that aren't going to hold up or achieve what it was that you were trying to accomplish in the first place.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that Bill 206 enjoys a fair degree of support among members, and I know that its aims are laudable. However, with respect to the sponsor of Bill 206 I must vote against the bill and encourage other members to do so as well.

Nobody denies that prostitution is harmful to society, johns, and prostitutes as well as to the communities in which it takes place. It is even more true when we look at cases of child prostitution. There's nothing more sickening than forcing or inducing a child to become a prostitute. No kids should have to go through that, and anyone that forces a child to go through that should be punished to the full extent of the law. I don't want this john to go into john school; I want him to go to jail.

Also, we all agree that it would be a good thing if we were able to clean up neighbourhoods where prostitution takes place, especially if young children live in that neighbourhood. However, we need to consider whether or not Bill 206 is the best way to handle this problem. In Canada we are rightly blessed with the presumption of innocence until being proved of guilt. Bill 206 rearranges this presumption. Under Bill 206 a driver is considered guilty until he can prove his innocence. This is unfair to the driver, who has a right to a fair trial. It is also an affront to our legal system, which works only if the presumption of innocence is granted.

The sponsor of the bill and many of those members who have supported it today suggest that it will simply be another tool in the box of law enforcement officials which can be used to rid our street of prostitution, and they might be right. However, I'm going to argue that the method by which this bill is used, when truly considered, should prevent us from passing Bill 206 into law.

In short, I believe that the method is an infringement on the sanctity of due process. We have heard the member talk about the likely method through which a vehicle would be seized. Many members may argue that if someone gets caught red-handed, it would be okay to take away his vehicle. I disagree. The suspect – and until he's proven guilty, he is still a suspect – hasn't spent one second with his lawyer. He has not spent one second learning about how this may proceed through the legal system. It is why this bill makes me afraid. We have courts to determine guilt, not police officers.

A police officer's job is to ensure peace and safety and to charge offenders with a crime. At that point, it is a judge or jury's role to determine guilt and assign a penalty. If we alter this arrangement and allow police officers to take the role of judge and jury, then we seriously jeopardize the integrity of our legal system. It could be compared to asking what other powers we're prepared to hand over to police officers and in what other ways we are willing to compromise the impartiality of the law. That is what we would be doing by passing this law. We would be making the assumption that the police officer's description of events is the definitive description of events and that this description would be good enough to seize a vehicle. However, I would argue that a simple hearing of the police officer's description does not provide enough evidence to seize a vehicle from a suspected john. What about the story provided by the suspect? Is this to be given any weight?

We know from past experience that more than one police officer has made mistakes. There's enough reason to suspect that it will happen again, and as long as that suspicion exists, we should be very wary of giving more power to police officers. Because these things happen, we need to ensure that a full hearing in a court of law takes place. If the evidence from a hearing shows that the suspect was in fact guilty of soliciting for the purpose of prostitution, then the suspect should be fully punished.

Now, I know that a lot of members may suggest that this bill doesn't extend the powers of police officers to such a great extent. After all, a police officer can seize the vehicles of people who they suspect of drinking and driving or driving recklessly. In those cases, police officers can take away vehicles, so why not in prostitution-related cases? This argument does not hold water, Mr. Speaker. First, the police officer's job is to ensure the safety of others in the face of a direct threat. If a driver is drunk or reckless, he's directly endangering others. The officer's duty as an upholder of peace and safety is to take that car away for a brief period until a court makes a judgment. In these cases, citizens feel comfortable with a certain degree of police power. However, they should feel uncomfortable with the cop being the final arbitrator.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the intentions of the Member for Calgary-Buffalo are good. I, like him, want to see prostitution eradicated, and I want to see those neighbourhoods where prostitution is rampant cleaned up. However, I'm not willing to bypass the law or jurisprudence to see it happen. In a society which promotes the supremacy of liberty and individualism, we need to be able to sort out if the individual has in fact broken the law before we limit his or her freedom. This gives rights to the suspect, and inheriting that right provides some really scummy people with their rights within the legal system. Sometimes we do not want to do this, but we do it to ensure that a fair trial is had, and we do it to ensure that these people who are innocent and are charged with a crime are afforded every possibility to prove their innocence.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but it's 5:30. The House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 28, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise at the earliest moment as a courtesy. Pursuant to Standing Order 15 I am giving notice that I wish to raise a point of privilege tomorrow on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Disposal of Public Lands

507. Mr. Broda moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to sell or dispose of lands that are declared surplus to the needs of the province.

[Debate adjourned April 14: Mr. Strang speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and join the debate on Motion 507 regarding the disposal of Alberta's surplus public lands sponsored by the hon. Member for Redwater. Motion 507 is designed to urge the government of Alberta to sell or dispose of any public lands which the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development deems could be better utilized by the private sector, especially those public lands situated in the white areas.

Lands for potential sale include grazing lands under lease, vacant lands, or lands that are currently not being utilized to their full economic potential. By encouraging the sale of such lands, Motion 507 aims to encourage the consolidation of farmlands, increase land development, and increase the generation of tax revenue by the province and municipalities. In my constituency of Dunvegan I have many parcels of land that are public lands, yet the majority of the neighbours are unaware that these are public lands. Most feel that these quarters or sections are in fact already private lands.

On March 26, 1997, the government appointed the Agricultural Lease Review Committee to conduct a review of public land policies in the agricultural land and multiple use areas, which are also known as the white areas. The main attempt of the review was to examine the public's viewpoint on current land management policies and to develop actions to resolve several long-standing issues regarding public land management. When the committee's report was released in 1998, Mr. Speaker, it outlined that Albertans were generally in favour of continued use and conservation of public lands under provincial ownership. However, the report did note that Albertans were generally in agreement with disposing of agricultural lands situated in the white areas if the lands are being cultivated, if no conservation reasons exist to preclude the sale, if the existing disposition holder agrees to the sale, and if fragmented or fractional pieces of public land are too small to provide a conservation value and are inefficient to manage. If the land was under lease, the general consensus was that the existing disposition holder must agree to the cancellation of the disposition before the land was to be sold.

On April 1, 1999, the government of Alberta introduced Bill 31, the Agricultural Disposition Statutes Amendment Act, to the Alberta Legislature. The bill was designed to implement the provisions of the Agricultural Lease Review Committee report by striking a balance between the interests of leaseholders, industry, recreational users, and the people of Alberta, who own the land. The bill was passed in the House on May 18, 1999. [interjections]

The Speaker: There's a group of hon. members along with the deputy whip that I would ask the deputy whip to encourage some degree of decorum in the House among his colleagues.

Please continue, hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. However, it was never proclaimed and thus never became law. As a result, the provisions outlined in the agricultural lease review were never implemented.

The current policy of the Department of Sustainable Resource Development regarding public land sales is to balance the need related to economic growth with the Alberta public's long-term interests. However, the department does sell public lands situated in the white areas in order to facilitate agricultural expansion and certain types of commercial, industrial, and recreational uses, thereby supporting the growth of the provincial economy, to provide land for essential services like public works projects or community and institutional needs that benefit Albertans, and they do that if they are not needed to meet the government's resource management commitments or for other government programs.

Mr. Speaker, public lands are sold by two different methods, public land sales and private land sales. Public land sales are administered by a public auction that takes place when a particular parcel of public land is vacant or has been released from a disposition by the disposition holder. When land is sold via auction, the appraisal process is used in order to determine the set price. Private land sales take place without public competition and are administered when leaseholders have the option to purchase the land, leaseholders hold a miscellaneous or recreational lease for the purpose of a commercial recreational development, and land under lease has been already developed by the leaseholder. When land is sold via private land sales, the land price is based on its actual market value.

Overall sales of public lands in Alberta have been at a steady decrease. For example, in 1997-1998 there were 126 sales involving 13,800 acres of public lands, while in 2001-2002 there were only 48 sales involving 6,000 acres. Sale or disposal of Alberta's surplus public lands would lead to increased land productivity, consolidation of existing private farming operations, increased development of the land, and increased tax revenue. By selling or disposing of surplus public lands, the government of Alberta would also free up valuable resources, which could be used for other more important priorities such as health and education.

Mr. Speaker, there is a risk that the sale of public lands, specifically the agricultural grazing lands, would encourage overgrazing. This could happen due to the fact that the government would no longer have the jurisdiction over public land that it has sold. There is a chance that Motion 507 could face strong opposition from current leaseholders as many of them would not be able to come up with the necessary funds to purchase the land. Motion 507 may also face close scrutiny from the general public as the public is commonly opposed to the widespread sale of public lands. Many Albertans feel that when public lands are sold to a private operator, those lands lose their value to the province as a whole. However, I still contend that when public lands are created as private lands, if they look like private lands and are managed like private lands would be, then that land should be disposed of and the resources used elsewhere to benefit all Albertans.

I would encourage everyone to support the hon. Member for Redwater on his Motion 507. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak to Motion 507, which in its amended form I believe now reads: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to sell or dispose of public lands that do not possess any economic potential for the province." This is one of those interesting proposals that you see brought forward in this Assembly from to time and which you think: well, on the face of it I suppose it doesn't sound that awful; perhaps it's harmless. But the more you look at it, the more you think: hmm, this is opening what could be a great big Pandora's box. And who knows? The truth probably lies somewhere in between those two.

Just in looking at what's being proposed and listening to the member who spoke previous to me and considering this a little bit as I went about my business today, a couple of things occur to me, and it's one of those where I pose three questions to myself. Is there a problem right now? Is there an immediate, glaring, urgent problem right now in the province of Alberta with public lands that "do not possess any economic potential for the province"? I'd have to say: not that I've noticed. I haven't seen any front-page headlines. No protests; no marches. I'm not getting a lot of e-mails or letters on the urgency of the public lands and a great need to do something about them, so I don't know that there's any crying need. Well, if there was a need – and I think we can agree that there wasn't – would a motion fix it, and more specifically would this motion or the resulting action coming out of it fix whatever is the problem before us today? I don't know that it would fix the problem for us today, if the problem is essentially that there are little bits and tags around, funny little pieces of land, which is how the sponsoring member first explained it to me, you know, just a little kind of inconvenience, a little bit of a right-of-way or a little tag of land that gets cut off when roads get put into place, and it would just be easier if we could sell that little bit to the closest neighbour.

Who would be benefiting from that? Well, one presumes the closest neighbour who gets to buy that little bit of land. But this motion doesn't actually spell out that we're talking about those sorts of little funny tag ends and oddly positioned bits of land. It doesn't say that. It talks about public land, and when we're talking about public land – well, this will tell you something about my age – I think of it as Crown land that's administered under the Public Lands Act of Alberta. We have the white areas, the green areas. Then, of course, there are the protected areas, which are the national parks or the areas that are already set aside in things like the eastern slopes policy. So the motion hasn't said specifically that it's talking about these little odds and ends. It just says public lands.

Well, that opens the door for all kinds of things like the selling of general Crown land, either the white land or in the green area, and as the member prior to me said, the public does not like that idea. They like the idea of Crown land that's there and kept for future generations, so I think there would be some resistance to selling that off. I think there's also the potential here for selling off parks because it could be argued probably by someone – I'm sure there's a silver-tongued speaker out there – that could put up a good argument that there's no economic potential for parkland or perhaps no economic potential for recreational land. I mean, people just go there and ride their snowmobiles or their horses or walk or whatever, so there's no economic potential for that land unless there was some sort of trail permit system developed, and that's still not going to generate enormous sums of money.

Grazing leases, though – and this is where we start to wander into the, hmm, isn't-that-interesting place. Well, now, this motion is too large. Having gone from talking about little tiny odds and ends, we're now talking about potentially large tracts of land, particularly when you wander in and start talking about grazing leases, and none of this is clearly defined. I often have problems with motions because they are too loose. They're just not specific as to what we're talking about.

So when I'm asked to speak either for myself or on behalf of my constituents in Edmonton-Centre, it's very difficult to do so. Would constituents in Edmonton-Centre mind selling off funny little odds and ends, you know, a couple hundred square metres, the result of various roads going through, right-of-ways and things? No, probably not. But would they object to land being sold that's potentially recreational land or parkland or Crown land in Alberta? Yes, very much they would object to that. They want that land held, and they don't want it sliced up and sold to private users where the rest of the citizens of the province can't get access to it.

A perfect example of that is the struggles that we've had in Alberta trying to put in place the Alberta Trailnet system, which is the Alberta extension of the Trans Canada Trail. Because we didn't start off here by taking the unused or no longer used railway lines for our trail system, we're having a much harder time pegging together that trail and linking it, and a number of times we're having to cross over or make agreements to cross over and make use of private land. Potentially, this motion going through makes that kind of a scheme or a future trail even more difficult if we're having to patchwork through a number of other private owners of little bits of land or larger bits of land. It's very interesting that if you're selling a land that doesn't possess any economic potential, in the very act of selling it you've now given it economic potential. So there's an odd little sort of marketing economic glitch that you get into there.

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. I think your time now has evaporated.

I will now call on the hon. Member for Redwater to conclude debate on this motion.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had several calls after introducing this motion, Motion 507. I want to make it clear that this is only a motion. It's not a bill, as it has been referred to by some of the people that have phoned. It's urging the government to look at disposal of some of our public lands which the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development deems could be utilized better by the private sector. Let's make it clear that this does not mean large tracts of grazing leases. An example may be where somebody may have deeded land that's surrounding some public land that might be right in the middle of deeded land, and we have to administer it. Once or twice or three times a year somebody has to go out there and review it, and we have to look at it. If there is economic potential, well, then we don't dispose of it, but it gives the minister the right to go out there and have a look. As the Member for Dunvegan in his speaking as well indicated, surplus public lands could be parcels or grazing lands under lease, vacant lands, and lands that are currently not being utilized to their fullest economic potential.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I'm not referring to valuable forest lands, areas with historic natural grasslands, lands which have reserves for conservation, or even, as mentioned by the Member for Edmonton-Centre, the potential of parklands being sold. I don't think that's what we're referring to. We're just saying: let's review our policies; let's look at the administrative costs of smaller parcels. I've got some in my own constituency where my constituents have asked: why can't I buy it? Going back and checking out: well, we can't because it's set out in regulation that you can't dispose of it. It might be a 28-acre parcel like in this one situation where a road crosscuts it through, but it's also a fence line where there are trees already in there. So the fellow is saying: I'm leasing that little 28-acre chunk of land, but I have to take my equipment to go around the road to farm it. The rest of the land, of course, is reserve; leave it be so. But we have to look and see how we can address some of those issues.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just say that this is what the motion is there for: to have the minister of sustainable resources review some of our policies. Certainly, I personally wouldn't want to see large tracts of land sold off either, but I think we have to look at: what are the administrative costs? Does it make economic sense to let the landowner that's leasing it have it or buy it? I'm not saying: let's give it a fire sale. Let's put it on fair market value. It doesn't mean even that that individual farmer might be the one buying it. That's open to the public, whether it be by public auction or by market value through real estate. I think we've sold other lands here which maybe the highways department had already some buildings on site. We've disposed of it because there was no need for it, or in this case maybe the municipality could utilize it more efficiently.

So this is what Motion 507 is all about, Mr. Speaker, and I urge everybody of the Assembly to vote for Motion 507. Thank you.

Organized Crime and Terrorism

508. Mr. Cenaiko moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta to enhance collaborative partnerships and co-ordinated programs with various levels of government, policing agencies, and the public to effectively combat organized crime and terrorism.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and pleasure to begin debate on Motion 508. The purpose of Motion 508 is to encourage this government to continue working with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta. I believe that it is important to continue existing projects and develop new ways to battle organized gangs and serious crime in Alberta. It's been said that crime used to be based only on brutal, solitary, and personal impulses, but more criminals are forming ranks. They are disciplined. They have given themselves a code and a morality, and they work in gangs with well-devised schemes.

Before I explain the need for CISA, I would like to highlight several important tasks that Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta provides for police services. First of all, training sessions are planned and provided to teach police officers about new technology and crime trends. With the emergence of serious crime the expectations on law enforcement have increased dramatically. Criminal Intelligence Service researches new techniques for battling terrorism and organized crime. Alberta's police services can learn a great deal about crime-fighting techniques and strategies from other jurisdictions. Criminals have become more mobile, which has increased the need to share information about organized crime.

Second, there are joint force operations targeted at the numerous organized crime operations throughout Alberta. These joint force operations have resulted in the arrest and conviction of dozens of dangerous criminals. Obviously, the benefit from these operations is the removal of dangerous people from Alberta's communities. However, they also help break up large and powerful criminal networks.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, CISA helps police officers track down suspects involved in major criminal activities.

No single government agency or police service can keep up with the growing size and threat of organized crime. All three levels of government work together to reduce the chances of serious crime and make communities safer for all Albertans. In total, Mr. Speaker, there are 27 organizations with membership in CISA, including law enforcement agencies and other federal and provincial government departments that have an intelligence or enforcement component. On their own these member organizations successfully carry out their own day-to-day activities. However, combining all of their unique knowledge, wisdom, and experience into one body creates an awesome tool to help police services battle and defeat organized crime. Governance of this association is provided by an executive committee consisting of chiefs of police from the Calgary, Edmonton, Lethbridge, and Medicine Hat police services as well as the commanding officer of the RCMP K Division.

I would like to stress that CISA is part of a national intelligence infrastructure and does not provide law enforcement. CISA is part of a national system of provincial bureaus that operates under the umbrella of Criminal Intelligence Service Canada, which also provides access to Interpol and other international enforcement and intelligence agencies.

Mr. Speaker, there are two other government agencies that include counterterrorism and national security as part of their mandate similar to CISA. For example, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service is responsible for protecting the national security interests of Canada and safeguarding its citizens. The national security investigation section of the RCMP has the primary jurisdiction for investigating offences related to national security. It is not the intention of this motion or CISA to infringe on the existing mandates of those two organizations. One of the goals of CISA is to build on the work already being done by these agencies along with the other 27 members to provide a clear picture of what criminals are planning in Alberta. It only makes sense to use the intelligence-sharing contacts that are already in place. Better sharing of this broader body of crime-related intelligence should significantly improve the capacity of police officers to protect the public.

All of the partners in CISA understand the need to provide and maintain safe communities, but they also appreciate that this is something that cannot be accomplished in isolation. One of the greatest weapons in the battle against organized crime is an informed public. Albertans need to know that CISA exists and that there is a great deal of work being done to preserve the safety of Albertans. Informing the public about CISA will at the very least offer peace of mind for those concerned about the threat of serious crime and terrorism in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, as we all know, Alberta is a growing province. As our economy expands and diversifies, so too does Alberta's population. The upside to growth is an influx of more people from different backgrounds, experience, and skills. However, one of the major downsides to growth is the increased prevalence of crime. There are more homes to break into, more people to terrorize, and more children to exploit. These are the growing pains of an expanding economy, and they must be addressed. The question for law enforcement is: how do we solve these problems effectively? How do we know which businesses are owned and operated by organized gangs? What technology are criminals using to outmanoeuvre the average police officer? Where are organized gangs operating? Are they higher in number in Edmonton or in Calgary? Are they in smaller urban centres such as Red Deer, Fort McMurray, or Lethbridge? There are hundreds of dangerous people in this province who have and will break the law. The problem for law enforcement is that criminals are getting smarter, methodical, and more sophisticated.

Although traditional crime rates in Alberta remain fairly consistent, criminals remain active in other ways. Criminals, especially organized crime members, carefully plot their moves and plan their attacks. There are several very large and very dangerous organized crime gangs operating throughout Alberta. Results from CISA investigations have revealed aboriginal, Asian, and outlaw motorcycle gangs as the three main criminal organizations in Alberta. Realistically, police officers on their own cannot compete with the size and sophistication of these organized gangs. There is a great deal that remains unknown about the scope and influence of organized crime in Alberta's communities. However, information sharing with different levels of government, police services, and the RCMP helps preserve peace and thwart criminal activity.

Mr. Speaker, since September 11, 2001, concern for potential terrorist activities throughout North America and specifically Alberta has been on the minds of all of us. However, there is work being done to ensure that we are not attacked by terrorists or organized crime. One of the most critical factors to prevent serious criminal activity is sharing information and intelligence. Information is scattered bits of raw data. Intelligence, on the other hand, is information that has been put through the process of collection, evaluation, analysis, dissemination, and re-evaluation. Relevant, credible information plus quality analysis equals useful intelligence. CISA assists the exchange of criminal intelligence.

Currently Alberta and Ontario are the only two provinces that provide provincial funding to their respective criminal intelligence agencies. I believe it's important to recognize the success of their work and pursue more projects with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, the RCMP, and with the Calgary and Edmonton police services. This agency has had success establishing profile, gaining exposure, and creating legitimacy among other law enforcement bodies. However, few Albertans know about CISA, and I believe that there is a need to create a much higher public profile for this organization.

Mr. Speaker, several barriers including time, finances, and human resources prevent CISA from getting a clear understanding of the known criminal networks operating in Alberta. There is more work to be done, and it's vital that the government of Alberta build on the partnership with CISA. I was fortunate to have spent nearly five years of my life working with dedicated and committed individuals who are sincere and passionate about the work they do. Working hand in hand with members of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta was an incredible honour for me and a part of my life I will never forget. They have sacrificed their lives and extended periods of time from their families to help preserve our safe and democratic and free society. The potential threat to the people and critical infrastructure of Alberta represents a public risk that is shared by all Albertans. I encourage all members of this Assembly to urge the Alberta government to work harder and commit more time and funding for criminal intelligence efforts.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened carefully to what the Member for Calgary-Buffalo was saying. I was trying to figure out why he brought this motion forward. In the last few sentences that became a little clearer to me. He's in fact worked with the organization that is the centre theme of the motion here. I can't speak to the work that the member did before he was elected here, but certainly he's made every effort while he has been in this Assembly to remain true to his roots, but once again I'm looking at a motion that does not seem to reflect what the proposing member actually has in mind. The motion that is on the books urges the government to work with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta to enhance collaborative partnerships and co-ordinated programs with various levels of government, policing agencies, and the public to effectively combat organized crime and terrorism.

As I listened to the member, I heard him talk about committing more time and funding to fight organized crime, creating a higher public profile for CISA, and a number of other activities that the member seemed to be contemplating would be fulfilled through this motion but in fact are not reflected in the motion. So the lack of specificity continues to be a problem with the motions that I see private members of the government bring forward.

I was looking to see what is the point of this. Why are we talking about it? From what I can see and indeed from the opening introductory sentences of the sponsoring member, this seems to be, "We want to keep on doing what we're doing," and that seems to be the motion that was brought before us, which strikes me as a bit odd. So once again I have to default to my question. Is there a problem here? Yes. I think it can be argued that we do have a problem with increasing levels of activity in organized crime, and now we have this overlaid with concerns about national or international terrorism activities. I didn't hear it argued, but I think that it could be argued that there is a problem right now. Okay. Then is government activity that is contemplated in a motion going to address that need? Well, I guess it could if it was laid out, but I didn't hear it laid out in what the member wanted this particular organization to do by way of activity that would be addressing whatever is the problem and, specific to this motion, laying out what he wished to have addressed.

We have a motion that says: same old, same old; let's keep doing the same thing. I don't understand what the urgency is in that motion or what the member was looking to accomplish in bringing that motion before this House. Just keep doing what you're doing: I think that could be put towards a number of departments, but that's not making us any safer here or making Alberta more prosperous or any number of other activities.

Let me take a different tack on this. If we're really looking to address the issues particularly around youth recruitment into organized crime, into gangs in other words, then I think there's a fair amount of stock, of proof that's out there, studies that have been done, statistics that show for younger people particularly that the threat of more punishment does not work. It does not stop youth organized crime, youth gang activity. They are young. They are immortal. It's not going to happen to them. So threats of additional sanctions of some kind, which perhaps might be contemplated by the wording of this motion, don't help these kids in organized crime. It doesn't reduce it. If you really want to reduce youth activity in organized crime, get them involved doing something else.

You know, we can look to our neighbours to the south, where they have had terrible problems with youth gangs, and look to dedicate resources. That's where they have found they can be effective. They provide enough activities for young people to get involved in, and they get involved in it, and that does keep them out of those organized gangs. That is the best solution that they've found, and it's by no means perfect either. If what's being contemplated here is less youth involvement in crime, then this motion is not addressing where that needs to go.

My second issue around counterintelligence and policing and organized crime and terrorism is the ability to measure this. Recently I've been in the position to question the Solicitor General in Public Accounts and then again two weeks ago in the budget debates, and every time we come around to this issue of counterintelligence, of gangs, of organized crime, and of terrorism, the Solicitor General is regrettably unable to give me any information because, well, it's secret. They are specialized units. She can't tell us what's being planned. She can't tell us what's being measured. She can't tell us if it's successful or unsuccessful because that would be giving it all away. But at a certain point on behalf of Albertans you've got to say: how are you measuring this? Otherwise, what are you spending money for? How do you know what you're actually getting if you have no way of measuring it because it's all secret and behind closed doors? How do we assure Albertans that they are in fact getting value for the money that they're spending on whatever these activities are?

I'll take my place and listen to other members who hopefully will be able to support the proposing member and elucidate on what exactly is being contemplated aside from "Let's keep doing the same thing we've been doing," which is what this motion says. I know that my colleague for Edmonton-Ellerslie has some additional information that she would like to bring up, and as well she's got more experience with youth crime in her area, that I'm sure she wants to talk about in connection with this particular motion.

Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak on Motion 508 this evening. I'd like to begin by thanking the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing forward this motion and for his continued efforts to see increased support for Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, which works to make Alberta a safer and more secure place to live.

For members who do not know, Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, or CISA, is an organization that exists to facilitate the exchange of criminal intelligence between intelligence units and enforcement units. Motion 508 serves to highlight the important work that they do and encourage the government to continue to provide support. CISA exists as a centre of excellence to support the efforts of law enforcement and government in the battle against organized crime. CISA is also responsible for implementing the Alberta government's provincial strategy for organized crime and serious crime. To accomplish this, CISA has identified four main areas of focus: intelligence sharing, strategic analysis, operational support, and training. This motion proposes that the Alberta government increase its support of CISA so it can continue to be an aggressive force in the fight against organized crime.

Mr. Speaker, based on what we know right now, there's a lot of work to be done in the fight against criminal networks. The main organized crime groups that CISA focuses its resources on are outlaw motorcycle gangs, Asian-based gangs, aboriginal gangs, and eastern European based gangs.

Outlaw motorcycle gangs are involved in money laundering, prostitution, assaults, murder, fraud, thefts, counterfeiting, and extortion. They continue to be involved in the importing and trafficking of cocaine as well as the growing and selling of high-grade marijuana. There are three chapters of motorcycle gangs in the province, stationed in Edmonton, Calgary, and Red Deer. While these groups primarily operate within these three municipalities, their criminal activities extend throughout Alberta, from Medicine Hat in the southeast and Lethbridge in the south to Grande Prairie in the northwest and Fort McMurray in the north.

Asian-based organized crime groups are based in the urban centres of Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto, Montreal, but smaller cities in rural areas are increasingly being used to conduct their criminal activities. Asian gangs continue to be extensively involved in drug trafficking, extortion, prostitution, home invasions, illegal migrant smuggling, kidnapping, illegal gambling, and money laundering. Asian organized crime groups associate with youth and street gangs from mixed ethnic backgrounds and use these groups as sources of labour and recruits and as an insulation to shield their senior members from the attention of rival gangs and law enforcement agencies.

Enforcement agencies have identified nine aboriginal-based gangs or criminal organizations. While some of the recruitment of gangs has occurred in various areas of Alberta, considerable recruitment of gang members has occurred within provincial and federal corrections facilities. Once these individuals are released back into society, they continue to recruit in their local communities. The primary illegal activities of aboriginal gangs have been drug trafficking, prostitution, and the sale of black-market cigarettes.

The fourth group, Mr. Speaker, is eastern European gangs. Since the breakup of the former Soviet Union eastern European organized crime groups have increasingly moved into North American cities. Calgary and Edmonton are no exception, and they are home to some of these groups, who use very sophisticated technologies. Eastern European organized crime groups specialize in diamond smuggling, drug trafficking, fraud, extortion, prostitution, and money laundering. It's clear to see that organized crime is not just a big-city problem. It's a problem that faces small- and medium-sized communities as well, and without continued support for institutions like CISA, the grasp of organized crime will only increase and tighten.

Between April of 1999 and March of 2002 the CISA executive committee approved a total of 15 joint forces operations targeting a variety of organized crime groups. Nine of the 15 have been completed. These multiagency investigations have all utilized a diverse approach with the ultimate goal of dismantling the groups that were targeted. Two of the most successful operations are Project Kachou and Operation Pitbull. Operation Pitbull in late '99 resulted in 19 suspected gang members charged with 58 criminal offences. As a result, an aboriginal gang in the southern part of the province no longer appears to be structured or criminally active.

Project Kachou was a yearlong investigation conducted by the RCMP and the Edmonton police into alleged illegal activities of an Asian-based organized crime group operating right here out of Edmonton. In excess of 60 accused were subsequently arrested and charged for a variety of drug trafficking and criminal offences. Approximately $1.7 million in alleged illegal proceeds of crime have been restrained, of which $225,000 has been forfeited to the Crown. Significant quantities of illegal drugs have also been seized. To date 18 accused have pled guilty to a variety of offences, receiving sentences ranging from fines to five years in jail. Three of these accused have since been deported from Canada. Two different groups of accused, eight in one group and 18 in the second group, are proceeding through the court process right now.

Overall, the nine completed operations have produced impressive enforcement results which include criminal charges against 203 key figures operating within criminal organizations. Of those charged, 37 have already been convicted, receiving sentences ranging from fines to seven years in prison. Approximately $4 million in street value of illegal drugs have been seized during the course of these operations. Numerous handguns, rifles, and automatic weapons have also been seized and forfeited. Also, approximately $3,600,000 in alleged illegal proceeds of crime have been restrained, with over $500,000 already being forfeited to the Crown.

Organized crime is a problem that continues to plague societies around the world. There's no solution to defeating organized crime other than well-trained, well-funded, and well-informed enforcement agencies. Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta is vital in the fight against organized crime, and I strongly urge the government to continue to work with and support CISA and increase funding to this impressive institution so Alberta's communities can remain safe and secure.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. I have read this motion intently and listened to the two speakers and can't understand why we have a motion. It isn't actually the proper use of this legislative time. What I heard members say was that they want to see more or at least continuing support for Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, and everybody in this Assembly would agree with that, Mr. Speaker, but motions are more properly used to urge the government to take some kind of action. I don't see any action here being urged by this particular motion.

If the member wants to congratulate all the integrated intelligence units working together co-operatively in Alberta, then a couple of things could be done. The minister could do a ministerial statement. Each and every time they have a successful crime completion rate or something outstanding happens, the members that have spoken so far could get up and give private members' statements outlining their support for this organization. Recognitions could be done at appropriate times. Those would be the proper uses of this Legislative Assembly, not a motion urging them to keep up the good work and: yes, pat, pat, pat on the back, you've done an excellent job, and we're going to continue to support you. That is not a proper use of this time.

It is true that the integrated intelligence units work hard and do a very good job. I know this for a fact because my ex-husband worked in this particular unit for a long time with the RCMP, and I know that the integrated intelligence unit with the RCMP and the Edmonton police force has been at work for more than 30 years. My ex-husband worked there as an undercover operator, covering an undercover operator, doing strategic development, focusing particularly on biker gangs, on stolen property rings, on Asian organized crime units. Yes, all of these things are happening in this province. Yes, they are flourishing in this province. Yes, all of these police services could use way more resources to combat this. But there is existing wonderful co-operation. They send in undercover operators from different jurisdictions all the time. They have joint meetings and studies and training sessions and shared information all the time. Unless this member is seriously urging the government to give them more resources, then this motion is a waste of time from this perspective.

Also, knowing what I know about these organizations and how they work, they don't want specifics of their cases broadcast everywhere. Do they want people to know that we have a very effective organized crime unit here in this province? Yes. And we do, and you've said that, and say it again as many times as you want to in a recognition or a private member's statement, but save motions to do what they were meant to do, and that is to urge the government to action in some course and not waste the Assembly's time in this particular fashion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Good evening, Mr. Speaker, and thank you. I'm very pleased to be here tonight to speak in favour of Motion 508. I'd like to begin my remarks by commending my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for introducing this motion. We live in a time of increasing uncertainty, where organized crime and terrorism pose real threats to safety, security, and our collective well-being as a society.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, but the time limit for consideration of this matter of business is now concluded.

9:00head: Private Bills

head: Second Reading

Bill Pr. 1

Sisters of St. Joseph of the Province of Alberta Statutes Repeal Act

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, Sisters of St. Joseph of the Province of Alberta Statutes Repeal Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright to close debate, or should we call the question?

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 2

Forest Lawn Bible College Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I now move second reading of Bill Pr. 2, Forest Lawn Bible College Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to express some concerns about this particular bill. I've been looking through the bill and reading the minutes of the Private Bills Committee, and as I say, I have some uneasiness about what we would be doing under this bill.

There are, it seems to me, a number of open aspects to this legislation which make me concerned that we really have no grip on where this particular organization, the Forest Lawn Bible College, may go and what it may metamorphose into. I start with the very first line of the bill, which is the preamble and reads:

Whereas Forest Lawn Bible College proposes to carry on its endeavours together with other organizations who may from time to time agree to associate and co-operate with them under the name Forest Lawn Bible College . . .

That certainly gives me the impression that we're creating an umbrella organization here that may bring all kinds of other organizations under that umbrella. We just have no idea what they'll be as far as I understand this legislation.

I'm also concerned about a trend in which we create more and more institutions which grant degrees. Admittedly in this case there's only one kind of degree that will be granted, and that's a degree in divinity, but the organization that we would be creating under this act would have the capacity to provide certificates and diploma programs in education, arts, science, and other fields as the board may from time to time determine. That's enormous. That's without limit. I am very uneasy about creating an organization like this over which we would have very, very little public control, which would have the capacity to provide diplomas in education or diplomas in science. It says here:

the College has all the powers, privileges and immunities vested by law in a corporation . . . and more particularly, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the College may provide these diplomas. So in my interpretation it is up to the college to determine the standards that would be required for these diplomas. I think we need to be very careful as a society to protect the integrity of the notion of a diploma and even more so of a degree and that we have taken some steps and continue to take steps in Alberta to ensure that happens. So I am also concerned about that sort of principle of this bill.

I also note that the bill, if it is passed, will allow Forest Lawn Bible College to "draw, make, accept, endorse, execute or issue promissory notes, bills of exchange and other negotiable instruments." Again, an enormous privilege that we would be granting this organization, a privilege potentially to issue any kind of negotiable instrument, which means a negotiable financial instrument. I am uneasy about that sort of legislation as well for an organization of this type. This feels like a sweeping and general and extraordinarily generous response to a very specific lobbying effort by a handful of people, some of whom are actually I believe named in the act.

I just feel that as a Legislature and as legislators we have a responsibility to be exceedingly careful in who we grant these kinds of powers to and what organizations we grant these kinds of powers to to protect the integrity of the entire education system and indeed also to protect the integrity and protect the welfare of the people who may be attending this sort of a college. There is no particular provision in here to ensure that people who might apply to this college – and they might come from anywhere in the world. It certainly has an international flavour to it. There's no provision in here to protect their interests, no sort of consumer orientation here, and I do think that at times we have a responsibility.

Canadian educational institutions have a fine reputation around the world, and we need to ensure that there aren't any opportunities for people, either through mismanagement or through other problematic initiatives, other activities, to take advantage of people who put their trust in a Canadian organization because it's Canadian and then land here and realize: gosh; my diploma in science or my diploma in arts or my diploma in whatever field it may be really isn't going to be worth very much.

So I am uneasy to the point of personally having to oppose this bill, Mr. Speaker, for those reasons. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Yes. I'm very pleased to stand and make a few comments in response to the hon. member from the other side and certainly in support of the private bill submitted by the Forest Lawn Bible College. As a member of the committee I was there and participated in the discussions, and certainly in the last meeting of the committee there was a fairly full discussion that did occur on this topic, and the recommendation of the committee was to approve the passing of this bill for second reading.

I think that the hon. member makes much ado about nothing, basically, in his comments, and I have to say that I would ascribe that to some of the comments that were made during the discussion. Of course, that's only my opinion, but I felt that the members that are setting up this Bible college – it's a very multicultural group of people – appear to be very honourable and well-intentioned. As far as I could see and understand from what they presented, their intent of establishing the Bible college is to educate and train students in spiritual matters in order that they may build a church and provide preachers or pastors – I understand that the word would be "pastor" – in the local setting, especially for older members of the multicultural community who cannot speak or understand English.

I think that to me that is a very basic need for immigrants. We welcome them to our society, and most of them have fled their motherland, where religion is suppressed, the religion that they have traditionally practised. I understand also that possibly some of these people who have been trained or educated here may return to the motherland and again try, where possible, to provide the religious teachings to people, as I say, whose religion for many years has been suppressed. As far as I'm concerned, in the area of divinity this was a really good learning experience for me. I was raised in the United Church, and in fact at one point in time I considered going into theology myself, but other aspirations beckoned.

I did not realize that with Alberta Learning you can grant degrees in divinity, and Alberta Learning does not have to approve that. Certainly also with certificates and diplomas the same applies, and we had a representative from Alberta Learning at our first meeting who certainly stressed that point. So I guess what I'm saying is: divinity is in a different category.

There was some discussion around members of the Bible college who would teach, and again they were from many varied multicultural backgrounds and countries but people who have degrees, certainly postsecondary education and degrees from their country. So personally I didn't really take issue with any of their presentation. I think that the committee also decided that seeing as this same Private Bills Committee had approved a similar application in 1996, there had been a precedent set.

So basically those are all my comments that I would like to make in support of approval of this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. member, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is now available. Is this what you're pursuing, hon. member?

Ms Blakeman: No, thank you.

The Speaker: No questions?

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm prompted to rise and put my concerns or hesitations on the record. Having listened to the speakers speaking in favour of this, I'm wondering if we're not confusing the issue of the practice of one's choice of religion with setting up a teaching postsecondary institution in Alberta. What's being contemplated by this private member's bill is outside of the accreditation process, which is what is making it necessary to approach it through the private members' private bills format that is available through this Assembly. If in fact this was an accredited institution and met the criteria set out by Alberta Learning, this bill would not be before us, but they are not able to meet that accreditation, and therefore they are going a different route and approaching through the private members' private bills to have this learning institution, teaching institution, set up.

Now, the only degree that they are able to grant is a divinity degree. I'm looking at the Hansard from the meeting of the Private Bills Committee on Tuesday, April 8, and it is explained in these minutes by the staff person.

By and large, these programs over the years have been programs that have been designed by specific religious groups to train people to teach in that particular faith, so the department has not interfered with the content, the feeling being that members of that faith are the individuals who would be best prepared to design a program of that nature.

That's the rationale for why the department doesn't require program approval for these divinity programs from these colleges.

I agree with my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview. I, too, have concerns, and I'm even more concerned when I hear that part of the rationale for supporting this is that we supported a similar bill in 1996, and I think that simply can become just self-perpetuating. There may well have been a problem with the institution that was accredited in 1996. I don't know if the Member for Calgary-West went back and investigated that. Perhaps she did, but she didn't mention that in her remarks, and therefore we're now potentially perpetuating that problem by referring back and going: well, we did it before, so now we'll have to do it again. I don't think that's a good reason for coming before this Assembly and creating an academic institution through an act of legislation. I think there are too many problems that were brought up, too many questions that were not answered where members of the committee went back and repeatedly asked the questions again and were not satisfied with the answers themselves.

You know, I have a lot of respect for the committee deciding in the end to bring forward the bill to this Assembly, but that doesn't mean that this Assembly then rubber-stamps it. If that were the case, I would not have the freedom to get up and debate it. So there is another process that these bills pass through in allowing them to be debated in this House, and I'm taking this opportunity, then, with that parliamentary process that is in fact granted to me to express my concerns about this Legislature through an act of legislation setting up a Bible college which would be granting this divinity degree plus unspecified other diploma and certificate programs. Those questions were not satisfactorily answered during the debate with them. I don't think that we need an act of legislation to practise religion freely. We don't. What's being anticipated in this is the ability to teach that.

Now, because it's not accredited, there should not be any taxpayer money involved with this institution nor should students be able to apply for a government-sponsored loan program to help subsidize any tuition that would be involved here. So any liability or risk for the Alberta taxpayer would not be involved in this particular endeavour. Nonetheless, I think it raises some troubling questions, and I'm not at this point willing to support the creation of what's being contemplated here.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose to close the debate.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have listened very carefully to the three speakers. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the Member for Edmonton-Centre have raised some concerns about the bill. I also would like to thank the Member for Calgary-West for her comments, and I believe that some of her comments have addressed some of the questions raised by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. However, there are still some questions I would like to address at this time. The first one is that there is a concern raised about foreign students and the fear that this Bible college somehow will attract foreign students and will give them a bad deal for their money. I would like to let those members know that for a foreign student to obtain a student visa to come to Canada to study, they have to register in an accredited program in an accredited institution. Because this is not an accredited institution, students, for instance, who want to go to this Bible college will not be able to obtain a student visa. That's number one.

Secondly, as a long tradition of the House we have the Private Bills Committee where members with concerns can bring their concerns. I remind the members that is an all-party committee. This committee has reviewed this bill extensively, and I urge the members opposite to go back and review the Hansard of those meetings.

Another question that was raised by the member opposite. I sponsored a similar bill in 1996, the Evangel Bible College Act, and there was some reference made to it as to there may be some problems with that college. That college is right inside my riding. It's still functioning very well today, and there have been no problems at all. The content of this bill is almost exactly like the other bill, word for word. So all I can say is that up to now the college that had the bill passed in 1996 has functioned very well.

There will be an amendment proposed at the Committee of the Whole stage that may address some of the concerns brought forward by the members opposite. Basically, that amendment will narrow the scope of the field that the Bible college may be able to grant degrees in.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I close debate on Bill Pr. 2 and ask for the question to be called.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a second time]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Committee of the Whole is called to order.

Bill Pr. 1
Sisters of St. Joseph of the Province of Alberta Statutes Repeal Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: I move that the question be put.

The Chair: That's okay. If there are no people wishing, then to the question.

[Title and preamble agreed to]

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 1 agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill Pr. 2
Forest Lawn Bible College Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill Pr. 2 be amended as follows: section 3(a) is amended by striking out "in such fields as the Board may from time to time determine" and substituting "in the fields outlined in section 5(1)(a)" and would ask the pages to now circulate the amendment.

The Chair: We'll call this amendment A1. Hon. member, if you'd just pause for a moment, we will hopefully get these distributed throughout the Chamber.

Okay. Hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, having moved, would you like to explain further anything on amendment A1?

Mr. Pham: This is a very simple amendment, Mr. Chairman. All it does is try to narrow down the field that the college may be able to grant degrees in, and this amendment is recommended by staff from Alberta Learning.

The Chair: Any comments with regard to amendment A1?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Further comments or questions with respect to the contents of the bill?

[Title and preamble agreed to]

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 2 as amended agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would now move that the committee rise and report bills Pr. 1 and Pr. 2.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill Pr. 1. The committee reports the following with some amendments: Bill Pr. 2. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: All those who concur in this report, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: The motion is carried.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Second Reading

Bill 33
Insurance Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and move second reading of Bill 33, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003.

The proposed bill contains two amendments to the Insurance Act that will ensure that awards resulting from an automobile accident return an individual to the same financial position they existed in before the accident occurred. These amendments are, one, to eliminate the potential for double-dipping, or recovering compensation for the same expenses from more than one insurer and, two, to ensure that income replacement awards are based on an individual's net versus gross pay.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments are the result of the government hearing the concerns that have been expressed by the public regarding the current state of our automobile insurance system. We've all had letters and calls from shocked constituents when they open their latest insurance bills. In the past year premiums have increased significantly. Many Albertans have had difficulties finding insurance that fits within their budgets, and because automobile insurance is mandatory, they have voiced their dissatisfaction to the government. In many cases premium rates have increased on average by almost 15 percent since 2001. During 2002 figures from the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board show that five insurance companies obtained approval for premium increases that range from 15 percent to just over 31 percent. That's five out of approximately 70 companies, Mr. Speaker. Indications are that these increases will continue in the coming year.

In responding to this public issue, Alberta Finance identified a review of our automobile insurance system in its 2003-2006 business plan. The amendments in Bill 33 constitute the completion of the first step of this review. The amendments are not a panacea intended to address all the issues that exist in Alberta with automobile insurance. However, they are an attempt to respond with some immediacy with solutions to two pressing issues, which could assist in helping to stabilize premiums. Later this year Alberta Finance will conduct a more comprehensive review of the automobile insurance system to identify long-term solutions. Our plan is completion of the review this calendar year and government consideration next spring.

Mr. Speaker, a point that needs to be made is that the issues that Alberta motorists are facing with rising automobile insurance premiums are not unique to our province. Provinces across this country are experiencing the same public pressures that result from rising premiums. We are talking to these provinces and sharing information. We have learned from their experiences as well. The two amendments that are contained in this bill have already been adopted and implemented in New Brunswick and Ontario. Recently New Brunswick announced further amendments to its Insurance Act that go far beyond what is being proposed by Bill 33. For example, New Brunswick is proposing to define soft-tissue injury, to cap pain and suffering awards for soft-tissue injuries and minor personal injuries, to require insurers to obtain government approval for rate increases in excess of 3 percent, and, finally, to prohibit insurers from refusing to insure due to age, age of the vehicle, past no-fault accident history, lapse in coverage, or past cancellation or nonrenewal of a policy. Now Alberta insurers are already required to file rate increases for approval with the Automobile Insurance Board. This has been the practice since 1972, when insurance became compulsory in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take some time to talk in a little more detail about the proposed amendments in this bill. First, I would like to talk about the amendment that bases financial compensation on an individual's net versus gross income. As it presently stands today, the loss-of-income claim is based on a person's gross pay, and the end result is that that individual takes home more money than they did prior to the accident. For example, an individual earning $5,800 a month takes home about $4,113 after deductions of almost $1,600 for income tax, CPP, and EI premiums. Under the current system if an individual were injured in an automobile accident, the court would award gross pay, which in this case would be $5,800. No deductions would be taken off.

Mr. Speaker, the principle that is being applied to the amendments in this bill is that an individual that is injured in an automobile accident should be returned to the same financial position as before the collision occurred, nothing more and nothing less. Bill 33 proposes that income replacement awards be reduced by the same amounts that would have been taken off an individual's gross pay before they were injured, making them eligible now for the $4,113 instead of $5,800, as is the case in our current awards practice.

As I mentioned earlier, the second amendment deals with eliminating the potential for double-dipping for the same expenses from more than one insurer. Currently a person injured in an auto accident may receive double payment for medical rehabilitation and income replacement benefits. A person may receive these benefits from their employee benefit plan or private insurance, and they can collect the same amount of these benefits from the auto insurer of the person who caused the accident. In these instances claimants find themselves in a more favourable financial position in comparison to the position they were in before the accident occurred. For example again, an individual injured in an automobile accident may have a claim for, let's say, $5,000 in lost wages. If this person has private disability insurance, they can apply to that disability plan for income replacement. Typically, this is equivalent to 66 percent of their lost wages. The claimant, for the purposes of this example, would receive, then, $3,300 from their private insurer. Now, when they settle their injury claim, they would also then receive an additional $5,000 in compensation for lost wages from the automobile insurer. In total, the individual would recover $8,300; in other words, a full $3,300 more than the amount of their real wage loss. Bill 33 addresses this situation of overcompensation by requiring the automobile insurer to only pay the injured party $2,000 or, in other words, the amount that remains uncompensated from the $5,000 in their real lost wages.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to state that nothing in these amendments affects the right of subrogation. Currently insurance companies have subrogation rights for the payments made to their clients. If a wrongdoer caused the accident, the insurer providing the benefit has the right to collect from the wrongdoer. Those rights remain under this bill. The amendments relating to collateral benefits also ensure that where a collateral benefit is payable net of tax, the award will not be taxed a second time. Again, the principle that is being applied here is simple and straightforward, and at the risk of repeating myself, that principle is that an individual that is injured in an automobile accident should be returned to the same financial position as before the collision occurred; nothing more, nothing less.

During the consultation process done by Alberta Finance with industry stakeholders last December, concerns were raised that these proposed amendments will result in unfair treatment or will disadvantage individuals whose income fluctuates on a year-to-year basis, such as for self-employed individuals, farmers, or business owners. Mr. Speaker, this is simply not the case. The bill does not affect how loss-of-income claims are settled. Income compensation will be evaluated in the same manner after this bill as it is currently evaluated today. Whether an individual is self-employed, a farmer, or an employee of an organization, the determination of the appropriate compensation will not change. However, once the compensation has been determined, it will be adjusted so that it is paid on a net income basis rather than a gross income basis. The only difference that this bill will make to this process will be that income replacement awards will now be awarded on net versus gross pay. Also, if that individual has received income replacement or payments for medical and rehabilitation expenses prior to the resolution of their claim against an automobile insurer, these payments will be deducted from their settlement.

While I acknowledge that the two amendments proposed in this bill do not solve all the issues in the automobile insurance system, they are an important first step. If adopted, they will bring Alberta in line with other jurisdictions that are facing similar problems and have moved forward with similar amendments. These amendments also allow the government the opportunity to move to engage insurance industry stakeholders in a more comprehensive discussion on long-term solutions that will help bring long-term stability to insurance premiums for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, those poor insurance companies standing on those cold street corners, clutching about them their tattered rags, their little noses running from the cold, and their cheeks gaunt from the lack of nutrition that they'd had. My goodness, I feel so bad about those insurance companies.

Mr. McClelland: Those poor injury lawyers.

Ms Blakeman: Those poor injury lawyers. Yeah, this is going to be a fun debate; I can tell.

I am struggling to work up a great amount of sympathy for those undernourished Prudentials and Sun Lifes and Great-Wests and Manulifes, as I say, shivering in the cold on the corner from the lack of profits because their stock market holdings have not been great. So now they don't want to pay out insurance premiums to people. My question is: who benefits from this bill? Not Albertans, that's for sure. Who benefits? These huge insurance companies. I'm supposed to feel sorry for Prudential and Great-West and Sun Life and Manulife and Peace Hills and whoever heck else? These are monumentally large companies that make stupendous profits and don't want to pay them out.

That's what insurance is. You're betting against an insurance company on who will be right and that if you're wrong, somehow you will get compensation, and they're betting that they'll be right. That's what the actuarial tables are about. Who usually wins here? The insurance companies. That's why they're so big. That's why they're so rich. So try as I might, I can't ring out even one tiny little tear of sadness for these poor, downtrodden, starving, tattered, multinational insurance companies. Give me a break.

Who benefits here? This is the third suggested motion or parliamentary process I've seen brought forward here tonight in which Albertans are not the primary beneficiary of what's being proposed. I think we should all look at what kind of work we're doing in this Assembly on behalf of regular Albertans, because this is about making the insurance companies happy. I'm wondering: were the insurance companies one of the Wednesday night sponsors within the last couple of months? That sure is what it looks like to me.

Now, I will say that I don't have that much trouble with the section that says: income tax will be reduced; Canada pension plan will be reduced. And if in fact employment insurance would honour a premium that was paid under such a scheme and would allow someone to collect further down the line when this was money that was not actually income from work but revenue from another source – and I think there's an argument to be made there that EI would not allow the person to later collect EI benefits, even though the payment was made. Nonetheless, I can accept the argument that that's reasonable, that if someone is given an award, those deductions should be taken off.

Where I cannot and will not accept what is being proposed by members of government is the idea that if someone has paid one, two, three, or four insurance premiums – I don't care how many they had, frankly – if they have paid the insurance premiums on all of them, they should be able to collect on all of them. They've paid it. They should be able to collect. The government is now in the business, this government who doesn't want to be in the business of interfering with people's lives – well, the only lives they seem to be willing to interfere with is plain old Albertans', those that want to have more than one premium for whatever reason, and the government now wants to say: no, you can't have that.

Well, there are darn good reasons why people have more than one set of premiums, and I'll give you a couple of examples. Those people that work in the arts, for example, need to carry their own disability and life insurance. It's hard to get as an artist, and if you can manage to get it when you're young, which is the time to get it, and you're locked into your standard payments every five years – you pay the same amount for five years; then they're going to up it a little bit – you don't want to drop that premium. If for some reason you did get employed by someone else who said, "All our employees are covered by so-and-so insurance plan and you all must pay this and we'll pay half the premium, but you must take it, no choice," well, that artist would not be a wise person if they dropped the initial insurance that they'd been carrying, because after they leave this job that's insisting they take a second insurance, they won't be able to get the premium back at the first rate that they were paying. So they're better off to keep paying that. Now, there's a situation where you've got someone with not a lot of resources that's now having to pay those two insurances to make sure that the one is there for them at the end and the employer saying, "You must pay this insurance premium," whether they like it or not.

This government would now say: "You don't get to collect on those. Even though you're in a position where you must pay for both of them, we're going to determine that you can't collect on both of them." Well, why not? What kind of consumer protection is this?

Dr. Taft: It's corporate protection.

Ms Blakeman: Well, yeah. It's not consumer protection; it's corporate protection.

I remember there was a very well chosen phrase called corporate welfare. We now have a different version of corporate welfare here, and it's coming through the insurance industry. We won't protect the individuals who wish to have a benefit plan to protect themselves. No, no, no. We're going to protect – can you believe this? – multinational insurance companies. Oh, those poor starving insurance companies. They invested in the stock market and have lost some money in it, so now they're going to hike up their insurance premiums. Quick, everybody rush around and try to help the insurance companies. This is outrageous. It does not benefit average Albertans. It doesn't. It only benefits those insurance companies. So who is the government really concerned about here?

We have not only self-employed people like actors, for example. Farmers would be another one. I suppose there could be fisher people in Alberta, seasonal workers, part-time workers, contractors, self-employed. All of those people may well be in the same position that I just described to you. Consultants is another one. This government has been very keen on letting go a lot of their employees over the years and then hiring them back as a consultant, for which they're paid a flat rate. Well, that consultant would be in the position where they'd have to be carrying their own insurance now and may well be told: sorry, you're not going to be able to collect on it because we the government are more concerned about an insurance company than we are about you, an Albertan.

Now, I listened, and I hope that the member is going to clarify this. I thought that he said in the beginning that insurance rates were rising and that five out of 70 companies had raised their rates, so, oh, my gosh, we'd better bring this bill in. I cannot believe that. I'm going to ask that member to come back and answer me now or through another one of his colleagues as to whether he's basing this whole bill on five out of 70 insurance companies raising their rates by whatever he said, between 15 and 30 percent.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to rise on a point of order, if I may.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Zwodzesky: Beauchesne 459 on relevance. My recollection of the bill before us is that it deals with car and motor vehicle insurance, and while I'm sure that there are some compelling arguments that the hon. member speaking has about life insurance and other related insurance mechanisms, perhaps we could zero in on specifically what this bill is about.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member on the point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. It's exactly about that because in subsection (4) it talks about out of province no-fault insurers and other insurers, CPP disability pensions, WCB, et cetera. So all of those issues that I was talking about are encapsulated in those phrases, which I took in fact directly out of the legislation. So if anything I'm even more on point than I thought I was.

Mr. McClelland: Even more?

Ms Blakeman: Even more on point than I thought I was.
Would the Speaker like to rule on the point of order?

The Deputy Speaker: Well, it occurs to the Speaker in trying to read it – and the chair cannot be intimately knowledgeable on each and every bill that comes before it – that the bill deals with accident claims and awards under them, and presumably in life insurance the only accident is death itself, so one would wonder about that.

In terms of relevance, that would be something for in part the hon. proposer of the bill to determine, whether or not all of the comments are relevant given that you think they are not. It would seem to me that it is about car insurance, motor vehicle insurance, and not about life insurance.

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, sorry. If I've said life insurance, then I agree that I should be chastised for misleading people. I was really talking about disability insurance, which certainly would come into play if we were talking about car accidents and someone being injured, being off work, the kind of insurance that people carry, which is income replacement, that kind of insurance. So I'm sorry.

In the particular policy that I have, the life insurance and the disability are part of the same policy, so that's how I approach it. I've just done the same thing that I've accused the members opposite of doing, which is putting their own circumstances onto everyone else. So I'll certainly agree to be guilty on that point. Nonetheless, I will not take back one word that I have said. Well, the life insurance stuff I'll take back. But this thing about these poor insurance companies – I mean, please, Mr. Speaker.

My underlying concern about what's being proposed here is: who does this bill benefit? Not citizens, not the people that we're elected to be here to look after. I'm not elected to look after the interests of the insurance companies. I'm elected to look after the interests of the people that live in Edmonton-Centre, and those are my concerns. If they have this kind of – now, be careful here, Laurie – work replacement insurance and disability insurance and are in a car accident or something where this particular bill would come into play, I want to make sure that my constituents and the people of Alberta are going to come out ahead here. If it's going to be a race between insurance companies and the people of Alberta, it's the people of Alberta that I'm more concerned about. So there's a question about who benefits, and I think it's not Albertans.

There's a question about consumer protection. If you pay for more than one policy, then you should be able to collect on more than one policy. If the government is going to start determining what policies people can buy and what they can't buy, then we're into a whole other ball game here, and this is a whole other discussion with a much larger bill that needs to be brought in in which the government is going to start telling people exactly what kind of insurance they may or may not buy, which seems to be what's happening.

Mr. Mason: Like in Albania.

Ms Blakeman: I'll let you go there.

I reiterate that I think it's important that people who draw a salary that goes into their bank account by direct deposit every two weeks should be very careful when they start passing legislation that is going to affect Albertans who work under very different circumstances – those who are self-employed, who are contractors, who are part-time workers, who are seasonal workers – who for a number of reasons may have to have other policies that they keep up in order to have at least one policy that they can fall back on and may be required at other times to be paying for all or part of another policy given an employer's wishes. So there's good reason why people may have more than one policy at a time that they would be drawing on in the event of a car accident or something else that's anticipated by this legislation.

I've gone at this debate with as much levity as I can muster given my absolute sense of outrage at what this government is attempting to perpetrate upon the citizens of Alberta. I think it is unforgivable what is being contemplated here and demonstrates an attitude of this government against regular Albertans that is unconscionable.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to Bill 33, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003. You know, I think that the bill is very timely – it speaks volumes about the government's priorities – because there is a serious problem with auto insurance in this province. There is a serious problem. We have a situation now where many young people, in fact many people who aren't so young, have an awful time affording car insurance. We have a situation where rates have been skyrocketing in this province for some time, and the number of complaints that I'm getting, I'm sure that even members opposite are getting, are multiplying.

We have a real problem with auto insurance in this province right now, Mr. Speaker. We have people having their policies arbitrarily canceled after one or two claims. We have all sorts of difficulties: people with reasonably good driving records finding it very difficult to get automobile insurance. We have gross discrimination on the basis of age and of sex in the provision of coverage for insurance.

Mrs. O'Neill: Gender.

Mr. Mason: Gender. Thank you, hon. member.

All in all, we have a real difficulty because the insurance industry is no longer meeting the needs of the people of this province when it comes to car insurance, but on this problem, Mr. Speaker, the government is silent. It doesn't propose any bills to fix that problem because it believes in the marketplace even when the marketplace has demonstrably failed to meet the needs of Albertans.

On the other hand, the insurance industry itself has coasted for some time by taking the money that we pay to them in premiums and investing it in the stock market and earning substantial amounts of money from dividends. Well, we all know that in the last couple of years the free enterprise economy of the United States and Canada in particular and Asia and Latin America and most other places has gone to hell in a handbasket. People have lost a lot of money on their investments because they thought, as countless generations before them have thought, that the market will continue to grow and increase in value and it'll never come down. This has happened to the insurance industry of this country, and the excess profits that they have been able to generate by taking our money and investing it has dried up or shrunk or diminished, and now they're hurting a little bit. They claim that they're paying more out in claims than they receive in premiums. Of course, they completely ignore the fact that for many, many years they made far more money on premiums than they paid out in claims. So they've got a market adjustment, a cycle they're going through, and instead of just sucking it up and admitting that this is just part of a business cycle that benefits them on average over the long run, they're asking the government to come and help them.

So you have on the one hand the people that depend on car insurance companies for insurance that are being gouged, that are being thrown off of their coverage, that can't get the coverage, and the government ignores those people. Then you get these poor insurance companies that are having a bit of a market correction, and they come to the government, and the government introduces a piece of legislation to limit claims. So now not only do we get gouged on premiums, not only do people lose their coverage, but now when they actually have a claim, the government is intervening to limit the amount that they can receive. Whose side is the government on, Mr. Speaker? Certainly not on the side of the people of Alberta. Certainly not on the side of the young drivers. Certainly not on the side of the motoring public, which comprises most people 16 years of age and older in this province. No, they're not on their side. They're on the side of the insurance companies because they're not making as much money as they're used to making. Well, nothing shows the priorities of this government better than this bill. This bill speaks volumes about who this government represents, who the government speaks for, and who they act for when they make laws.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge the government to withdraw this bill, let the insurance companies go through this part of the cycle where they've lost some money on their investments, and bring forward another bill, a bill that sets out rights for people who have car insurance, a bill that guarantees insurance at a reasonable rate, that oversees the insurance industry, that regulates the insurance industry and makes sure that they provide value for money to the people of Alberta for their car insurance and that people are not denied coverage on an unreasonable basis just because the insurance company doesn't want to take the risk with them. Why doesn't the government do that? Withdraw this bill and bring in another one that actually protects people from the insurance companies rather than protecting the insurance companies from the stock market. This bill is repulsive. It should be withdrawn. This bill is absolutely a condemnation of what the government claims to be doing in this province, which is looking out for Martha and Henry, which is looking out for ordinary Albertans.

I see the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar with his hands over his ears, saying: we're not listening. Well, I hope that some people are listening in this House tonight, Mr. Speaker, because this bill is not representative, and nothing could be more symbolic than the sponsor of the bill calling out during debate: we're not listening. We know they're not listening; that's the problem. You know, I wish the government would listen to Albertans and not listen to big insurance companies who are crying wolf and crying crocodile tears.

So, Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say on this matter tonight. I would encourage all members to vote down this piece of legislation, which should rightly be called the insurance industry crutch act. With that, I will take my seat.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Are you asking a question under Standing Order 29?

Dr. Taft: I don't see anybody rising to ask a question, but I'm sure they would be welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: If there are no questions or comments, then we will move on to the next speaker. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Yeah, I do have a question. It's a very important one. I'm wondering why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands did not listen to my speech, because I made it very clear that I was talking to Albertans and that I was listening to Albertans and that we consulted with Albertans and that the whole prompting of this bill was because of letters and calls from Albertans. I'm wondering why he would accuse me of having my hands over my ears when that absolutely was not true, Mr. Speaker. That's my question.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. member claims to have consulted with Albertans, and I'm sure that there was some sort of consultation, but we certainly haven't heard on our side from people demanding that the payments to people who are legitimate claimants be reduced. The insurance industry is trying to make the claim that if you can reduce the amount of payouts on claims, you will actually be able to reduce insurance rates. If someone believes that if insurance companies get more money, they're going to be more generous in terms of reductions for claims, then I certainly have a deal for them on a bridge.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Riverview then.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill obviously is drawing sharp debate, and I look forward to a good deal more of it. I think there are a number of serious problems with the bill as it stands now. Fundamentally it protects big business from people, and we should be protecting people from these big insurance companies. The cause of the problem of skyrocketing insurance rates seems generally accepted to be that insurance companies have lost massively in their investments in the stock market, and we see this from research from Statistics Canada, research from industry observers, even in anecdotal evidence. I was just speaking this weekend to somebody who wanted to make a minor claim on their policy, and the insurance agent urged them: don't do it. Because the insurance companies have lost so much money on the stock market, the agent explained, if you make any kind of claim at all, they're going to jack your premium through the roof. The poor fellow ignored that advice, made the small claim, and is now considered a high risk for insurance. The agents themselves are saying that this is a problem stemming from losses in the stock market.

Now, the sponsoring member, the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, has used the term "double-dipping," which in this case I think is a seriously misleading term, a misrepresentation of what's going on. If people happen to purchase two insurance policies or have disability coverage independently and then have disability coverage under their auto insurance, that's no different than buying two television sets or two hamburgers at McDonald's or anything else. It's not double-dipping; it's simply buying two independent products. I think the choice of the term "double-dipping" is deliberate, and it's taken very much from the insurance industry, which is trying to create a particular image of consumers taking advantage of the companies, when in fact what we have is companies trying to take advantage of this government's complacency to put the squeeze on consumers.

It should be understood by this member that this is in some ways an issue of personal freedom and consumer choice. If people want to buy more than one policy, why don't we let them? What's to prevent them from doing that? If they have disability coverage in one form and disability coverage under their auto policy, what's your problem with that? It's a free world. They're paying for the products. In fact, I would say to you that the insurance companies will be guaranteeing that those products are actuarially sound, and if they aren't guaranteeing that, they're failing their mandate as insurance companies. So insurance companies should be insuring that their second policy is solid.

In fact, I'd like to propose something here. If this bill goes forward, Mr. Speaker, in this form, I think that we should propose an amendment to prevent insurance companies from double-selling. We should make it illegal for insurance companies to sell to anybody who already has an insurance policy covering that purpose. After all, wouldn't that only be fair? Wouldn't that be saying to consumers, "Yes, we're really out looking after you; we're going to prevent insurance companies from selling you products that you'll never be able to use"? I completely believe that insurance companies will go on day after day, month after month, year after year selling all the policies they can without informing consumers that there may be opportunities or chances when those policies will be invalid. So let's prevent insurance companies from double-selling.

Let's also look at the reality of this problem. How big is this problem really? I understand from information from the Insurance Bureau of Canada that claims costs in Alberta over the last 15 years have risen from $160 million to $800 million. Now, that sounds like a lot over 15 years, but if we adjust for inflation, if we adjust for a larger population, number of cars on the road, number of policies and so on, is this really such a bad problem after all? Let's be honest about the figures here and over time look at the trend and adjust that trend for things like inflation, population growth, the quality of the roads. How much of this might be due to deteriorating maintenance of the roads because road maintenance has been privatized? How about we look into that issue?

I'd also like to raise an issue for fundamental moral debate with the government members on this. Time and time again the government, and particularly the sponsoring member from Drayton Valley-Calmar, has said that people should be no better off financially after an accident than they were before. Let's take apart that principle and look at it. I can tell you right now that there are all kinds of people in all corners of this province who would gladly trade all the benefits they've ever received from all the insurance policies they've ever owned if only they could walk again or if only they could speak again or if only their child's brain injury were reversed. There isn't a person in this province, in this country, I'm sure, who wouldn't plead to have those kinds of injuries taken back and gladly return all the payouts from all the insurance companies here. Maybe there's in fact a point of natural justice here that somebody whose life has been utterly and permanently devastated by a car accident actually deserves more than they had before to at least symbolically compensate for the tragic loss.

I think, for example, of family friends of ours. The wife was a schoolteacher, and she was traveling with a class. She was chaperoning a class of students on a ski trip to Lake Louise. The bus left the road. She was sitting in the front passenger seat. She went through the front windshield. She has for years and years now been a complete quadriplegic, and certainly the insurance company paid ultimately for a new house and has provided all kinds of benefits. But you know what? I can't imagine that there was a moment in her life – and she is still alive today after all these years – that she wouldn't have given up all the payouts from all the insurance companies to be able to walk again, to be able to feel her fingers and her toes, to be able to feel her breath coming in and going out. She has lost all of that, and to me there's a moral and human principle here that we should be considering: those people deserve more than just what they had before financially. So I challenge the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar and all the other members of this Assembly to consider the moral issues here and to engage us in some meaningful debate on this issue.

Finally, because this is going to come up again, I would ask the government to consider undertaking a systematic comparison of auto insurance in the four western provinces. How are they functioning, one compared to the other, in terms of premiums and in terms of efficiency and in terms of payouts? Let's see. In B.C. it's publicly operated, but there's a fault system, I believe, in B.C. Saskatchewan and Manitoba have significantly different public systems, and in Alberta we have an entirely private system. Why don't we strike a truly independent group to review which system is working better? It would be a great comparison. I don't know; maybe it's working as well as possible in Alberta, but I'm not convinced. Let's seek the facts.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that handful of points, the challenge to this government – this notion of double-dipping is phony and misleading, and if we're serious about that, then let's be serious about preventing companies from double-selling. Let's really look at the real cost of this problem. Let's question the moral principle that this government seems to stick to that no matter how devastating the consequence, a person should be no better off financially afterwards than they were before. Let's engage in this debate. Let's be open. Let's consider amending this act or perhaps even withdrawing it.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments, I would like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 34

Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure of rising tonight to move second reading of Bill 34, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act.

This is an important bill that will help Alberta's diversified livestock industry become more stable by simplifying the rules for handling and slaughter of diversified livestock while maintaining the division between wild and domesticated cervids. Just to clarify for some of our urban members, a cervid is essentially deer or elk.

Alberta has an extensive diversified livestock industry, one that we can be proud of. This bill will help Alberta's diversified livestock industry to become more successful domestically and internationally. This bill has undergone extensive consultations with the industry to make it responsive to their needs while ensuring the separation between domesticated and wild cervid populations. I want all members of this Assembly to understand the extent to which we have consulted with industry on this bill. Countless hours have been spent going over the ins and outs of this piece of legislation so that it meets the needs of our diversified livestock industry.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is only one small step to making this industry more viable by eliminating some of the restrictions and clarifying some of the rules around diversified livestock, or cervids. It will also reduce the risk of crossbreeding between wild and domesticated cervids, reducing the risks of disease migration in both directions.

There are many parts to this bill, and I'll go over some of the highlights for you tonight. One of the more important changes is to amend the definition of cervid and cervid farms. The Livestock Industry Diversification Act, or LIDA as we will call it, will amend the definition to domestic cervid animals and the facilities they are held on as domestic cervid farms. There will be consequential amendments to the Wildlife Act to ensure that current government policy is maintained.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry to interrupt, but we seem to have a lively either conversation or debate which is not to the benefit of the other members because it becomes difficult to hear the hon. member who has been recognized. So would the hon. minister and the hon. member over here cease and desist or, better yet, go and carry on your debate in the outside rooms. That's perfectly fine, but not in here, hon. members.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Debate Continued

Rev. Abbott: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There will also be changes to how and where a domesticated cervid can be held.

The Deputy Speaker: Once again I'll just ask the hon. Minister of Environment and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to go outside and carry on your debate now, not behind your back.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These changes will make it easier for producers to move their animals while ensuring that there is no contact between domesticated and wild cervid populations. To further ensure that there is little to no contact between domesticated and wild cervid populations, the act will be clear that no person shall release a domestic cervid into the wild. Where an animal escapes from a licensed facility, the operator or operators must report the incident and have an opportunity to recapture their animals within a reasonable time frame. If the animal is not recaptured, the elk or deer becomes wildlife as defined by the Wildlife Act.

The amendment to the LIDA with the consequential amendment to the Wildlife Act will maintain current government policy, so it will not be necessary to undertake a major stakeholder review of the Wildlife Act. Animals from other jurisdictions in Canada or elsewhere do not become domestic cervid animals until they are registered and identified on a domestic cervid farm. These animals are subject to the importation legislation provided by the Wildlife Act.

Mr. Speaker, there are significant changes to where domesticated cervid can be slaughtered and who can do the slaughtering. Previously they could only be slaughtered at licensed abattoirs in accordance with the Meat Inspection Act. This was to ensure that all animals were slaughtered in accordance with the rules governing slaughtering and processing of carcasses that were going to be sold. The changed legislation will now allow the person who is the licensed operator of the cervid farm to slaughter the animals on his or her own farm for personal use, which is to say a use that falls outside the Meat Inspection Act.

Closely related to the on-farm slaughter changes is the ribbon branding of the carcass. Carcass ribbon branding isn't the hot branding of a live animal for identification purposes. The carcass is ribbon branded with ink to identify it and ensure that the provincial and federal approval stamps are evident. Current levels of inspection and food safety standards provide adequate levels of protections to ensure that meat from wild big game does not enter the domestic meat market unlawfully.

Mr. Speaker, there also have been other minor changes to the act. These include allowing cervid farm operators to submit their records and reports to Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development either electronically or through hard copy. This amendment fits in with the Alberta government one-window approach. It makes it easier for producers to keep their paperwork in order. There have also been changes to the eligibility for a licence to operate a cervid farm.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as you can see, these amendments are small but important steps in helping our diversified livestock industry move forward. There is still much work to be done, and I know that our producers, who are the best in the world, will continue to meet any challenges they face and succeed. In order to ensure that Alberta's diversified livestock industry remains sustainable over the long term, I encourage all members of this Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 34, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003. I'm surprised that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is delighted to introduce this bill because it looks like he got the short end of the straw on the last two bills, both being bills that pay homage to industry and don't really do what we need them . . . [interjection] Would you like to put that on the record there, hon. minister? Both of these bills are patchwork solutions to industry lobby, not the requirements of Albertans or other consumers who are looking to use these products or are speaking against these products for some reason.

The Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar talked about the extensive consultation they did with the industry, but what about the consultation you should have done with all the other groups who are also directly affected by the decisions you make with this particular industry? I didn't hear you say anything about them. When I take a look at the consultation that we did, I can see that some people are very, very concerned about what's happened here, not the least of which is the Canadian Wildlife Federation, who we wouldn't normally say is a really extremely green group, so you wouldn't normally think that they'd be speaking out against government actions, but they certainly have a strong perspective on game farming and on where this particular bill takes us.

So if we take a look at the bill, it looks to me like it's a hodge-podge of combining more responsibility for livestock owners and, at the same time, less in some cases. We see that the bill loosens up the way an operator can get rid of his cervid while laying out more explicitly how that happens, and it looks like it puts together a framework where people can be operating hunt farms without actually being registered as hunt farm owners, so we need some of that information discussed in this particular House.

This is a bill that deals with both the slaughtering of the animals and the consumption of the animals and the transportation of the cervids. We've heard for years in this Assembly how game farm operators are not taking wildlife from the wild to integrate into their own stock and boosting their stock or increasing the base that they can raise them from. Yet the member who introduced this bill said that that's exactly what they were doing, and now this bill brings in changes so that that can't happen anymore. So which was it? It didn't happen before or it happened frequently before? It's hard to trust what this government is saying with regard to this.

This is an industry, this hunt farm industry, where we've seen millions drop out of the industry in the past couple of years. A couple of reasons. There's a lack of interest in buying the meat. There are the costs and perceptions of dangers to humans from infested cervids with a variety of different kinds of diseases. There's been a huge increase in the number of operators in the province, and we've seen over the last few years millions of dollars being paid out to game farmers in compensation for necessary eradication procedures when these animals get diseases. It didn't go into taxpayers' hands. It went to these operators who were set up by the government in the first place to put these farms in place, and now we're seeing another level of legislation to assist them further. So it's interesting to see what's happening here.

What has happened in the most recent history is that we see that with the drought many of the game farm operators have found it difficult to keep their animals, and we've seen some threats of them being let into the wild. Apparently, this legislation is supposed to try to deal with that issue instead of just severely fining the people when you find out who they're registered to, which is possible with the kind of branding that's done. Then there's the other side of the concern, where we see the operators apparently slaughtering animals on a larger than average basis to cull their herds. So what's happening here, then, is we're seeing more of the animals being sent in for testing for CWD, chronic wasting disease, even when the game farm operators are saying that they don't believe they have it on their land, but they're slaughtering the animals and sending them in for testing. That is a cheap way to cull their herds. What we see are more expenses put on the operators' side, who have to pay for the testing, and no logical reason for having done that.

What we see really is an industry that is at the end of its rope who is trying to salvage what they can out of something that was artificially built up by this government in the first place, and now the government is once again bailing them out in a number of areas. So I have a lot of questions about this particular piece of legislation.

I think this is two in a row. He's batting zero both times, on bills 33 and 34, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps in the next session Drayton Valley-Calmar can get a little better legislation to introduce, because these two are crummy pieces of legislation and neither of them deserve the support of anyone in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: Ready for the question? Well, I have two members wishing to speak. Inasmuch as the hon. member wants to ask questions or make comments, it's only been the second person that's spoken. So you'd have to be the third. Then Edmonton-Highlands on Bill 34.

Mr. Mason: I am pleased to speak to Bill 34, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003. This bill makes an attempt to prevent the mixing of domesticated and wild cervid animals such as elk and deer by strictly prohibiting their release into the wild and regulating the conditions under which they're slaughtered. Cervid harvest preserves, as shooting galleries for domesticated animals are called, will continue to be illegal as only the game farm producer will be allowed to slaughter the animals and then only for personal use. Furthermore, such animals will no longer be kept "captive"; they will be "in a domesticated condition," which I am sure they will appreciate, Mr. Speaker.

The government has, I think, made a real mess of this industry, Mr. Speaker, and it's finally come crashing down with the slaughter of these animals. The government attempts to bill the act as reducing the regulatory burden for the diversified livestock industry, but according to the Alberta Wilderness Association the government is desperate to prop up an untenable industry which should actually be dismantled immediately. It was only when we got cases of chronic wasting disease that the government finally decided that something had to be done. Then at that point people wanted to promote the use of penned hunts.

Last year's drought, Mr. Speaker, raised the spectre of ranchers releasing domesticated cervid animals into the wild. This, of course, raised the risk of adding to the spread of foot-and-mouth disease and other illnesses. So it's important that domestic-in-the-wild cervids should be strictly prohibited. However, while the government is attempting to close the pen door, many of the animals have already escaped. I think that the government has made a real mess and is now trying to fix it. I made that comment, hon. members, not to be taken literally; it was in speaking more rhetorically. The government has created a very, very bad situation in their misguided attempts to diversify agriculture in this province.

I think that the Livestock Industry Diversification Act can be supported as long as we bear in mind that it is almost a deathbed confession of the industry and a confession of the government's failure in respect to cervids in the agricultural policy that they've set out.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my place.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments under 29(2)?

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a second time]

Bill 36

Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2003

Dr. Taylor: Due to the lateness of the hour, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be relatively brief in my comments. That's to reassure everybody.

Essentially, the bill does several things. It allows Alberta Environment to adopt and enforce consistent provincewide standards through codes of practice. I had a discussion and had some concern raised about reporting, and there was some concern that the results might just be reported verbally. That was a concern that was raised at an earlier meeting. In that earlier meeting we assured the people we were talking with at the time that we didn't know exactly what the comment was in the bill, but we clarified that issue.

I need to move second reading, which I've done. Thank you.

What this bill does as well is allow the companies to report electronically. As well as traditional methodologies, it allows electronic reporting, which is quicker.

If I might give a quick example of why codes of practice are important, Mr. Speaker, we might take an application for a gravel pit that comes into Alberta Environment. I want to assure all members that every application will continue to be reviewed individually, as will every reclamation certificate. So a gravel pit operator makes an application for a gravel pit. What we want to do in the permit of approval is we want to put in the codes of practice that regard the operation and the reclamation of that site. This will very clearly indicate to the operators up front and beforehand what they must do, so they cannot come back to Alberta Environment after and say: well, you didn't say this, and you didn't say that, and we didn't expect this, and we didn't expect that. It'll be very clear up front to the public what the code of practice is, to the gravel pit operator what the code of practice is, and to the people in the affected area what the reclamation must be.

As well, Mr. Speaker, this bill allows for any violation of the code of practice to be enforced with an EPO, environmental protection order. So it strengthens the hand of Alberta Environment in getting these reclamations completed at the end when the pit has to be reclaimed. We can say: "Well, look back at your approval. Your approval says that you must do such and such. Now you must do it, and if you don't do it, we can immediately go to an EPO, which will shorten drastically the reclamation time."

Mr. Speaker, there's going to be plenty of time to debate this bill during second reading and as we go forward in the House, and I will have the opportunity to comment further. With that, I'll conclude my comments this evening.

Mr. Broda: Mr. Speaker, this is indeed an interesting bill that does require further study and discussion. However, at this point I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 36.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 37

Climate Change and Emissions Management Act

Dr. Taylor: I'm pleased to move Bill 37, Mr. Speaker.

Like with Bill 36, again because of the hour I'll be relatively brief in my comments. As I said earlier, as we move forward, there'll be plenty of time for all members including myself to debate, so just a few comments.

As you know, this government is firmly committed to taking action on climate change. Bill 37, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, will enable the province to set regulations to allow us to put many of the key areas of our plan into law. It allows us to set targets, negotiate sectoral agreements; provides a flexible tool kit on how to meet these targets; and facilitates private-sector investment in technology and deployment in energy efficiency. Bill 37 also clearly reinforces our position that the government of Alberta on behalf of all Albertans owns and is responsible for the exploration, development, and production of natural resources in the province.

With that brief summary, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude my remarks this evening and look forward to making further remarks at an earlier hour.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This bill, just as the previous bill, is a very interesting bill and requires further study and debate. At this time I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 37.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very interesting evening of great progress, and therefore I would move that the House now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:40 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 29, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/29

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

On the Holocaust remembrance monument located on the grounds of the Alberta Legislature are found the following words: "I swore never to be silent whenever and wherever human beings endure suffering and humiliation. We must always take sides. Neutrality helps the oppressor, never the tormented." Those are the words of Elie Wiesel, a survivor, poet, and Nobel Peace Prize recipient.

May God provide all innocent victims of racism and genocide eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a delegation that includes visitors from our Russian sister province, Tyumen, in Siberia. With them are representatives from Grant MacEwan College. This delegation is involved in the internationally recognized health education link project based on Grant MacEwan's programs. Originally designed to facilitate health reform in Tyumen province, the project has set a standard for nursing education across Russia and earned accolades from international organizations. The delegation is here to see our nursing education system firsthand and look at how nurses are working in our health system.

In your gallery, Mr. Speaker, are Valentina Sarkisova, president of the Russian Nurses' Association; Ludmila Suptova, vice-president, Tyumen State Medical Academy; Sharon Bookhalter, associate dean, health and community studies at Grant MacEwan Community College; and Yuri Konkin, manager of the health education link project. There are also in the members' gallery some 23 nurses and physicians from Tyumen and two of their colleagues and counterparts from the province of Alberta. I would ask all of this delegation to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wayne Jacques served this House for two terms as the MLA for Grande Prairie-Wapiti. He continues to do a lot of volunteer work in the community and in the region, and he's a valuable mentor to myself on the weekends, when he gives me good advice from time to time. He's seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask all members to give him the welcome he deserves.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a delight to rise on this glorious Alberta day and introduce to you and through you to the House 69 of the best and brightest Edmonton-McClung has to offer. With us today are parents and visitors and students from Michael Kostek school. I would like to take a moment to introduce the teachers: Mrs. Carol Anne Konkin, Mr. Bret Johnson, Mrs. Andrea Brodeur. The parent helpers are Mrs. Karen Holub, Ms Susan Dobinson, Mrs. Zohreh Sabbaghi, Mrs. Judy Silver, Mrs. Kim Wilson, Mrs. Mike Olson, Mrs. Brenda Chokka, Mrs. Michelle Davis, and Mrs. Laurel McMurdo. Obviously, education is a vital concern to the constituents of Edmonton-McClung as well as all the province, and I would ask that they rise and receive the extreme warm welcome of this House today.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, members of this House have been becoming aware of the rising concern about skills deficit here in the province. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a couple of women that are trying to do something about this. Today we have with us JudyLynn Archer, the executive director, and Ms Shelley Wegner, job development professional, of Women Building Futures. These two ladies are committed to improving the recruitment, the training, and the retention of women entering the workplace but specifically entering the workplace within the construction trades industry. They're in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome from the members of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to introduce to yourself and to the members of the Assembly two very good friends of mine from Peace River, Mr. Norm Boucher and Mr. Berry Heinen. I found out this morning that they've been in this building many, many times but have never been in question period, so I thought we would fix that. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of guests that we have here today who were instrumental in one of the province's most successful energy savings initiatives, which I'll be speaking about later today. They're all from the University of Alberta. They're in the public gallery. I would ask Len Sereda, director of facilities management; Geoff Hurly, associate director; Dennis Gibeau, senior systems engineer; Karen Wichuk, director of government relations; and Sheree Drummond, government relations associate, to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you three gentlemen from my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. They are Mr. Robin Carm, Mr. William Hughson, Mr. Gary Goudreau. They are particularly interested in the government's agenda with respect to children, are here to observe the proceedings of the House, and I would ask that they rise and that the members of the Assembly give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a former page in the Chamber, Cheryl Pereira. Cheryl is returning for the second year as my STEP student. She has just completed her second year of political science at the University of Alberta. I'd ask now that Cheryl please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

Energy Deregulation

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, this winter Albertans have been writing to the Minister of Energy about the hardship that deregulation has brought them. This includes seniors, individuals, students, families having to beg for relief from high utility bills. It includes municipalities having difficulty keeping service and recreation facilities available for the community, and it includes small businesses being forced to close when utility bills become excessive. They're asking for help. To the Minister of Energy: what's your response to these Albertans?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the response remains consistent today, as it was last week, last month, and last year. These individuals, who we communicate with on a regular basis, form the part of Alberta society that sees changes in their commodity prices, whether they're engaged in the agriculture industry and they watch the price of canola, wheat, oats, barley move up and down. They watch the price of oil move up and down. It was at a high of $36 a barrel two weeks ago. It's trading at $25 a barrel today. Natural gas has been at $12 a gigajoule. It's at just over $6 today. What we are seeing is that Alberta is dependent on and very knowledgeable about a commodity-based economy. So these individuals and these collective groups are often caught at a time when prices increase and they pay more just as at the time when they're also in a position where they sell their product for a higher price and they receive more.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Energy: why do you continue to throw away good money to fix deregulation when Albertans have said that it is not in their best interest due to lack of competition in the marketplace?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess that as the Liberal plan points out, they would spend $3 billion to save $1 billion. We don't see it quite as the same format. The move to a competitive market structure has resulted in some 3,000 more megawatts of generation that's been put into this grid. That grid has resulted in electricity prices that have been in some areas the same as or lower than they were prior to the change in the regulation. In the Aquila/EPCOR marketplace they have been the highest in Alberta. These also have deferral accounts that will expire at the end of this year, and the price of power should be cheaper in that area. So we do know that as that new megawatt generation comes on, the coal-fired generation will be very important as it comes on in the Genesee area but that gas generation without a reasonable transmission policy that brings on cheap natural gas cogeneration will in fact influence electrical prices.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Energy: when will you do the right thing for Alberta consumers and unplug deregulation?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've been doing the right thing since June 15, 1993, and that right thing has resulted in unprecedented prosperity for this province and unprecedented decimation for the Liberal Party in this House.

Energy Efficiency Initiatives

Dr. Nicol: Yesterday the National Report Card on Energy Efficiency was released. After being graded across 10 different criteria, the government of Alberta received a grade of C plus, not exactly stellar, Mr. Speaker. In fact, of 13 Canadian jurisdictions that were graded, Alberta ranked ninth. To the Minister of Environment: what new initiatives is this government going to undertake so that Alberta leads this country in energy efficiency rather than just follows the pack?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we certainly aren't just following the pack. I would like to point out that we have received a number of voluntary challenge awards for being one of the most energy-efficient governments in the country. Secondly, we are the only jurisdiction, the only government to receive those awards in the country. Thirdly, I would point out that we have as a government made the largest green power purchase in the history of North America, over $200 million of green power.

Mr. Cardinal: How much?

Dr. Taylor: Over $200 million. This is the largest, as I said, purchase of green power in history in the private or public sector in North America. We are a leader.

Dr. Nicol: Ninth out of 13 is not leadership, Mr. Speaker.

Why has this government let down Albertans by leaving them behind in energy efficiency programs?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we haven't let down Albertans. I've just pointed out how we're the leader and setting a model for Albertans. I might also point out that the green power purchase that we have made is allowing 140 new windmills to be built in Crowsnest Pass. Without that green power purchase those 140-some windmills would not be built. We will be consuming the power from approximately 50 percent of those.

I can give you another example, Mr. Speaker. In Grande Prairie with the green power purchase that we've made, there's a new I believe it's a $40 million or $50 million plant being built that is going to produce power from biomass, no emissions, and part of that power is going to be going to the city of Grande Prairie. Without the government doing that green power purchase, there would not be that green power plant being built in Grande Prairie. We continue to be leaders.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, he's talking about energy supply. My questions were on energy efficiency.

When are the people in this province going to see programs that are standard in other jurisdictions like energy efficiency, retrofit programs, and tough new standards for efficient products and buildings?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, he mentioned tough new standards. Right now we have the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, a nongovernmental body, looking at tough new standards for emissions from electrical generation plants. We will have the toughest new standards. I'm expecting a report from them sometime this summer as to what our new standards should look like.

The other thing I would say, Mr. Speaker, is it is not the provincial government's role to give loans to people to make energy efficiency improvements in their housing. There are other agencies that will do that. The MEET program that we're looking at is one, and the Minister of Finance might like to comment further on that program.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I'm really pleased to talk about the MEET program. This is an initiative that came to us via the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, and it's an excellent idea of having municipalities have the ability with the support of our government to retrofit some of the municipal buildings that will not only bring efficiency into it but will lower their cost of operation and bring down the cost for the communities to support the municipal governments. We're working on this. The Minister of Municipal Affairs is working now and will bring forward a plan soon this year, and we're quite keen on it. This again will lead the way in Canada. This was something we announced in the budget, and we're well ahead of other provinces in this country, so it's a successful program.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

School Utilization Rates

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's concern with efficiency over learning leads to the space utilization rate being used as the prime factor in closing small schools. Last evening Edmonton Catholic voted to close St. Patrick school and like boards elsewhere is looking at others. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Given the research evidence that indicates that students perform better in small schools, why is student success not used as the major criterion?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There was a recent Stats Canada document that came out that analyzed rural versus urban students and rural versus urban student outcomes. It was very interesting that right across Canada what we saw is that rural students did not do as well as urban students. One of the issues, obviously, is that in rural Alberta these students are typically – typically – in smaller schools. This is something we have a very difficult time explaining as to exactly why this happens, but it does raise some really interesting questions such as, for example, the small school issue. There are some small schools that do extremely well, but there are some that certainly do not do as well. Can I say that all small schools do poorly? No. Do all small schools do extremely well? The answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will the minister consider reintroducing funding for community schools which would allow at least some of these small schools to continue in operation?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, one of the components of our funding formula that is coming out this September is a thing called small schools by necessity, and this recognizes the whole issue of what the hon. member was just talking about. There are some areas in geographic parts of this province where quite literally you cannot put a student on the bus for an hour or two hours. There are some schools that purely by geography are going to be in the range of 30 to 50 students. What we have used in the formula is the criterion of a 30-kilometre radius of the school. If there is no corresponding school with the same grades within a 30-kilometre radius, then they will qualify for a small school subsidy. I'll certainly send the information over to the hon. member because it is a very good grant. I believe it really isolates the situation of some of these small geographic community schools that are present in rural Alberta that everyone here knows simply cannot close but must continue on.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Given that using the utilization rate pits neighbour against neighbour and neighbourhood against neighbourhood in providing education, what other solutions have been offered to Albertans?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the member gets that we're so-called pitting neighbour against neighbour because that just simply is not true. What is happening in some locations is we look at the geographic area. We look at the number of students going to school. We look at the total capacity within the community, and I'm sure that all of the taxpayers in Alberta would be very anxious that we utilize the facilities we have to the maximum. Not only is it good to have more students in a particular school so that you can offer more programs and more opportunity for them, but it also, when you look at the operation and maintenance of schools, is important that you utilize that space. So in some communities where we have the two separate boards, the public and the separate boards, we have had to realign some of the schools so that we maximize the capacity in the community and, in fact, increase the utilization. That's simply what we are doing in more than one location.

Mr. Speaker, I know that when a parent's children have to move to another school that does cause some disturbance, but we know that in the long run that is the best thing for the community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Softwood Lumber Policy

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to an internal government document, which I will table later today, the Alberta government is prepared or at least was prepared to trade away the job livelihoods of Albertans living in forest-dependent communities like Hinton, Whitecourt, and Slave Lake in order to settle the softwood lumber dispute with the U.S. According to this document and contrary to what the minister told the House last week, the government seems to be prepared to trade away provincial forestry policies that require companies to build sawmills and other processing facilities in nearby communities in exchange for the right to cut timber on Crown land. My question is to the minister of international and intergovernmental affairs. Why did the minister tell the House last week that these types of changes to forestry tenure were not being considered when, according to this internal document, they have formed the basis of the government's negotiating position?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member across the way for a document that made its way over here a few minutes ago, and I notice that it is dated December 2001.

I can certainly speak in terms of what is occurring today in terms of our ongoing negotiations with the United States relative to the softwood lumber issue. We have been working very closely, as I've indicated before in this Assembly, with the industry and the MLAs. The Members of the Legislative Assembly representing that area of the province have been very much in touch with their constituents, I'm sure. We have clearly stated in these negotiations that there are two things that are very, very definite, things that we want to make sure are still part of our overall forestry industry, and those are long-term tenure being provided for and also – and this seems to be an item on which there is agreement with the United States – that there is protection for the viability for our small lumber producers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister then saying that the concepts and proposals put forward in the December 2001 policy paper no longer form the basis for a resolution of the softwood lumber dispute as Alberta's position, and if so, what specific changes now do form the basis of the government's negotiating position?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of items being discussed as possible solutions to this overall debate; for instance, the whole area of being able to set aside a particular area in northern Alberta in which the timber rights are not yet committed. We were looking for areas of that type that could be put up for public auction which would set a benchmark whereby we could set the stumpage price for the industry across northern Alberta. Those are some of the things that we've got under consideration.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the document says, "Alberta's policy initiatives to address these concerns would eliminate all references to mills, communities, lumber production, and processing facilities as requirements in long-term tenure," can the minister tell the House whether or not this still represents the government's position?

Mr. Jonson: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should make sure I indicate that I'm not aware of this particular document or what its origin was. There is no indication that it was ever approved in any shape or fashion. It looks like kind of a shopping list of possibilities that someone has developed, and therefore I would not be able to reflect upon its validity.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Special Constable Program

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The county of Wetaskiwin has concerns with unclear roles of special constables in the county. They're worried that undefined roles and confusion between the RCMP and special constables will create policing problems in the Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency. My questions are to the Solicitor General. What is the exact role of special constables in Wetaskiwin county?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The special constable program was created to allow municipalities and municipal districts to supplement the enforcement of provincial statutes. The role in the county of Wetaskiwin is to enforce provincial statutes such as the Highway Traffic Act, the Motor Vehicle Administration Act, and the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. They do not have the authority to respond to police calls and should not be involved in criminal matters. That is the role of the RCMP. Special constables provide a valuable service to the communities that they serve, but they must keep in mind that they are not police officers.

Mr. Johnson: Can the Solicitor General give myself and my constituents a time line for when a new memorandum of understanding between the RCMP and the Wetaskiwin county special constables will be completed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'm aware of the need for a new memorandum of understanding between the RCMP and the special constables in Wetaskiwin county. However, this is a matter between the county and the RCMP. I will close by saying that my door is always open, and if they need to discuss something, I'll be happy to help them.

Mr. Johnson: My final question to the same minister: can the Solicitor General clarify what authority the special constables in the Wetaskiwin county have when dealing with impaired drivers?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, the authority to investigate and charge impaired drivers rests with the police and it's not with the special constables. When a special constable encounters a suspected impaired driver, they are to contact the RCMP and request their attendance at the scene. If Wetaskiwin county has experienced problems with their impaired drivers, I encourage them to talk to county officials and the RCMP on that matter.

Toxic Mold in Foothills Medical Centre

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, last September construction damage on the third floor of the Foothills hospital led to significant flooding of the hemodialysis unit on the floor below. A few weeks later the ceiling tiles on this unit began to collapse exposing extensive amounts of foul, black, toxic mold. People in the vicinity immediately became ill with respiratory problems, and three required emergency room attention. Since that time other cases of toxic mold contamination have occurred at the Foothills, and there's actually evidence that this problem goes back several years. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why didn't the government know that a serious problem of toxic mold existed at the Foothills hospital? Was the CHR withholding information?

Mr. Mar: Well, the simple answer, Mr. Speaker, is because there was no serious problem associated with mold, and I'm pleased to have the opportunity today to clarify the record for the benefit of the hon. member and for members of this Assembly.

Now, the hon. member did table a document yesterday at the end of question period outlining some results from a review that was done of molds. Had he, of course, done that earlier, then I would have had the opportunity to have raised this reply yesterday. So instead of playing holdout politics, I would have preferred to have answered this question yesterday.

I undertook as at question period yesterday afternoon that I would look into this matter. I've had 24 hours now to look into this, and here's what I can inform you and the Assembly, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the Calgary health region has confirmed that there has been mold in the facility that we call the Foothills hospital. If the hon. member were being fully candid and frank, he would know from the report that he waved in the Assembly that although mold was present, based on Health Canada standards, it was below their level for concern. To the credit of the health region they took the sort of action that was beyond that which was required. So even though the mold that was present did not present a health risk, they removed the sources of the mold, and this is the incomplete part of the allegations made by the hon. member.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the medical director of infection prevention and control assessed the risk to patients and to staff, and remedial action was taken immediately. Drywall was removed; cabinetry was removed; sinks were removed. Subsequent testing of this particular area has shown that in all but one case the mold levels continued to be below the Health Canada standard. In the one case where it is above the standard, the mold is contained in a ceiling area that's subject to negative air pressure, which means that the mold is contained and is not spreading to other parts of the buildings. So the decision was made . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please. Let us continue. We have two things going on in here. We have estimates this afternoon. This matter can be raised then.

The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought we were making progress, but we're going backwards.

To the same minister: given that 65 registered nurses and a large number of support staff are currently reporting illnesses consistent with toxic mold, why is the Calgary health region and apparently the minister still denying that the concentrations of toxic mold are high enough to be a hazard?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I can advise you and advise this Assembly and advise the hon. member that, in fact, all of this information has been very transparent. Dr. Tom Louie is the medical director of infection prevention and control, a physician of the very highest calibre, who assessed the risk to these individuals. The report has been well known to the unions representing staff of AUPE and UNA. This has been a completely transparent process, and there is a process in place with the regional health authority on the reporting of serious incidents.

Now, I've had the opportunity to speak with the chief executive officer of the regional health authority. I've been advised as to what that process is, as to how information moves up the chain, but if something can be appropriately and competently dealt with and if in the opinion of the medical officer responsible for infection control and prevention this matter can be dealt with safely, then it stays at that level. We do have competent individuals who make these important decisions.

With respect to matters relating to the employees in the regional health authority, as of yesterday afternoon there has been an ongoing and continuing dialogue between the regional health authority and the unions representing AUPE and UNA workers. Mr. Speaker, I can advise you that there's now a committee from occupational health and safety from the department of HR and E, also occupational health and safety from the Calgary health region, and also a representative from AUPE and the United Nurses of Alberta. They are continuing to work together in a collaborative way to ensure that the safety of both staff and patients at this facility is maintained at the highest calibre.

Dr. Taft: To the minister of occupational health and safety: given that his department is involved in these investigations, will he assure this Assembly that they will be following Health Canada guidelines that say that investigations and remediation must continue until symptoms are no longer appearing among occupants?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you very much. You know, once again I think we've seen from this hon. member a strategic . . .

Dr. Massey: Answer the question.

Mr. Dunford: Well, I'll answer however I want, hon. member, and I'll take as much time as I want. You worry about yourself. Don't you worry about me.

The Speaker: Okay. Okay. Please.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Monitoring Medical Errors

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a question in my mind as to whether or not we expect too much of our health care system. Our health care professionals are certainly among the brightest, most capable, and best anywhere, yet mistakes happen and unforeseen events continue to arise. It is reported in an article in the Journal of the American Medical Association that iatrogenic causes – in other words, errors, complications, and infections precipitated by medical treatments – may be the third leading cause of death, a quarter million people a year in the U.S., and that is in one of the very best health systems the world has ever known. Clearly, in spite of the astonishing number of medical successes nothing is perfect yet. My questions are to the minister of health. Do we track iatrogenic complications in Alberta? What kind of statistics do we keep?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. members, in a few minutes from now this afternoon are the estimates of the Department of Health and Wellness. One of the typical rules that we have in here is that we delay these questions on the day the estimates are there. Now, unless this is a broad-range policy question, I'm going to avoid this because I've got a whole list of other members who want to participate and we're going to have at least two uninterrupted hours this afternoon with Health and Wellness.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it is a broad-based policy decision and issue; however, I can keep it short.

The majority of regional health authorities in the province of Alberta do track and monitor the kind of information and statistics that the member has referred to. It is the responsibility of individual health authorities to follow up on incidents. Now, these incidents can range from a medication error or it may be an incident like a patient who is falling. Regions must properly review the incident and implement the necessary actions required to ensure patient safety.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how do Alberta statistics compare to other jurisdictions across Canada and the world?

Mr. Mar: It is difficult to say, Mr. Speaker, because not all jurisdictions across Canada record this type of information, but clearly the idea of trying to formalize a process to collect and share this information across Canada would be a good idea.

Mr. Lord: To the same minister: what formal procedures are in place to ensure accountability, improvement, and peer review whenever iatrogenic complications might be involved?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we do have a number of procedures in place to help ensure patients' safety. The Department of Health and Wellness has developed a quality framework, and one of the components of that framework is safety, which, of course, includes iatrogenic complications. Quality assurance committees are set up in facilities and in health regions throughout the province. The Canadian Council on Health Services Accreditation accredits all publicly funded facilities to help ensure quality throughout the country.

Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, NovAtel, Swan Hills, Gainers, Millar Western, West Edmonton Mall, Vencap: these are only a few examples of P3s that this government has been involved with and that have cost Alberta taxpayers over $2.5 billion. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why doesn't the minister cite these examples when he talks about P3s?

Mr. Lund: Well, we're back on the P3 thing, and I think that possibly we need to consider them as a P3, a pathetic puffball party. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how many times we've got to go over this, but the member just doesn't seem to get it. There are so many different ways that the private sector can assist in delivering services, and I've given many examples, so I'm not going to go over them again. Quite frankly, it is getting very pathetic that the hon. member just can't seem to get it.

Mr. Bonner: Can the Minister of Infrastructure tell us why, after all the P3 problems I've mentioned, Alberta should trust this government with P3 financing? And that's private political pork.

The Speaker: I have no idea how that question meets the test in this Assembly. Go to your third one, hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, when will this minister release a document that fully describes, justifies, and defends this government's plan for P3 financing?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as we have indicated in this Assembly before, we are setting up internally within the department a mechanism that will assess and see that, in fact, these proposed P3s, when they come forward, do make sense. Beyond that, for any of the alternate financing through the Treasury department there's an independent group who is going to also assess any proposal that comes in, and they will be looking at the lifetime costs and how that relates to if we built it and did it ourselves.

I know that there are a number of issues that the member is going to have difficulty with like: what is the value of off-loading the risk? What is the value of having a facility built now and the ability of the citizens of Alberta to use that facility? What is the value of being able to use the income tax system to write off some parts that could possibly be written off by the private sector but can't be written off by government? There are so many of those kinds of issues. I know that it will be well over his head, but we are going to be trying to move forward anyway.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Bicycle Safety

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During a recent trade show which was held in the city of Spruce Grove at the TransAlta leisure centre, which, I might add, is a wonderful example of a public/public partnership with three communities and the province involved, I had a number of constituents come to me and ask me questions about the use of bicycle helmets for children in trailers that are pulled behind a bike, particularly kids who are under a year of age. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. Does a child in a trailer pulled by a bike or riding on the bike in a child carrier seat require a helmet?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. The reason the chair hesitates is that one of the rules is that no question should ask for interpretation of statutes.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Alberta law prohibits any person without a helmet from riding on a bike or being in a trailer pulled by a bike, basically meaning that everyone less than 18 years of age that is on a bike requires a helmet. That is the law.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second and final question, then, would be to the same minister. Did the Transportation department do any studies on the safety of children under one year of age and whether a helmet would in fact be safe for them?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this bill came forward as a result of a private member's bill. Before the bill came to this Legislature, there was quite extensive consultation by the private member with a number of safety groups and, of course, enforcement agencies.

Now, with respect to the safety groups one of them recommends that parents do not put a helmet on a child that's less than one year of age because they insist that the muscle structure will not be able to support the helmet and will lead to greater danger. So, as a result, I would say that if you're going to take your child of less than one year of age for a ride on a bike, the best is to give serious consideration to the safety of that child and maybe not do that. Period.

Forest Management Practices

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, four reputable scientists have released a damning study about this government's forest management practices. The study concludes that at current rates Alberta's boreal forest won't be able to sustain the forestry industry and that wildlife habitat will be devastated. This problem stems from the fact that the oil patch cuts as many trees as the forestry industry but doesn't have the same obligation to reforest. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why has this government insisted on using archaic forest management practices when industry has been asking for changes for more than a decade?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think that's a very unfair statement to the industry because we have one of the best managed forests in North America right here in Alberta. Over 60 percent of our province, in fact, is forested area.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Cardinal: Over 60 percent. We manage over a hundred million acres of public land, and we do very well. We're working very closely, of course, with the scientists, with their recommendations. We're also working very closely with industry. In fact, we have some leaders. For an example, in my riding Alberta-Pacific Forest Industries, with their large FMA in northeastern Alberta, work very closely with the oil and gas industry. We work very closely with the municipalities, the First Nations, the trappers, the outfitters, et cetera, to develop a plan where we will minimize the imprint we leave as we move forward.

In fact, the area of seismic lines is one good example. Just a number of years ago most seismic lines were 10 metres. Today, Mr. Speaker, they are 25 percent of that on average. In fact, 75 percent of the seismic lines out there – and maybe the Minister of Energy will want to expand on that – are low-impact seismic lines, where they do a very little amount of damage.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we're in good hands. We're doing the right thing. Forestry is a thriving industry in Alberta. It continues to employ over 50,000 people. In fact, some of the member's constituents no doubt work in the forest industry. We do very well.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the minister missed the whole point of the question. The forest companies are doing a good job and are asking for changes.

Why don't oil companies have to reforest to the same standard as forestry companies?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, this member does not understand what she's talking about. When it comes to seismic lines, for an example, some of the seismic lines that are developed, which are a lot narrower now, may be there for 20 or 30 years. They're there. They're used by the companies on an ongoing basis. Not only the forest companies but the trappers use those. The outfitters use those, and other people that want to travel in some of those jurisdictions use those seismic lines also. So they're there for a long period of time. They're under licence of occupation, so we manage them very closely.

I would invite the hon. member to come up north and travel. The next time I go flying in northern Alberta, come fly over and see how much forest we have in Alberta and how well it is managed.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, given that it's clear that I need to send this study to the minister to read, when are we going to see a regulatory framework that requires the oil and forestry industries to work in concert to manage Alberta's forests?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of integrated resource plans that are being worked on by a number of departments and industry, and they do look after those areas the member is concerned about. Again I stress the fact that I don't believe this member knows maybe what a tree looks like in northern Alberta. I would invite her to come and travel and tour next time I tour northern Alberta to see how much forest is there and how well it is managed, how little impact the oil and forest industries have up there. The area is forested.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Long-standing WCB Claims Review

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Injured workers and other stakeholders are being told by Human Resources and Employment ministry staff that the tribunal on long-standing contentious WCB claims will not proceed without agreement by employer groups. Later today I will table a letter from the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers and three other oil and gas industry employer groups attacking the tribunal and expressing their opposition to the recommendation for the establishment of the tribunal. This opposition by CAPP and other groups is puzzling in light of the fact that the CAPP representative co-chaired the very task force that made the recommendation to establish the tribunal in the first place. A question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: why are employer groups being allowed to dictate a government decision at the expense of injured workers who were promised a tribunal to re-examine their claims?

Mr. Dunford: I think that if the hon. member would have recalled the release of the Doerksen report and the Friedman report and the government response to that report, he would have noticed that on the recommendation for an independent tribunal that recommendation is still under review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the minister received the letter from CAPP and three other organizations dated April 11, has the minister told CAPP that he is now prepared to reject the recommendations of the tribunal task force and will deliver the tribunal as promised to injured workers?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I haven't made any official response to the letter that I can think of off the top of my head, Mr. Speaker. I've been quite public, though, in this matter since the issue first came up, that if we were going to look into long-term contentious claims, I was looking for a way in which some sort of consensus could be achieved in order to do this. I think there are a number of ways in which old claims, you know, could be looked at. But, clearly, from the letter that the hon. member is talking about, I think we have to consider it a bit of a setback. As a matter of fact, the signatures to that letter had indicated at one time a potential way in which the review could be done. I wanted to reject that, however, because with the recommendation I thought that we'd end up in the courts of this province. I don't think injured workers want that, and of course neither do I.

Dr. Pannu: My second supplementary to the minister: given that the minister has indicated recently to stakeholders that a decision on the tribunal would be announced soon, how much longer will injured workers have to wait to learn what actions this government will be taking?

Mr. Dunford: Well, as I recall, when we were discussing Bill 26 I think it was in this particular House, when we brought forward the bill and it provided, then, a number of changes that were to be made to the workers' compensation system, including what we might provide for in terms of a tribunal, I didn't have the support of injured workers. As a matter of fact, they were here in this House and were displaying their displeasure with the minister's position, and it became quite clear to me, of course, that they did not support it. So I find it interesting now, today, that we would have a presentation of something that they were rejecting as now to be considered something that they entirely need, and now I'm being criticized because it's taking this long to try to reach a consensus.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Patient Safety and Medical Error Reduction Centre

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent estimates show there's an extremely high death rate of Albertans each year due to medical errors that are preventable. I have two questions for the hon. minister of health this afternoon. The first: will you establish a patient safety and medical error reduction centre in Alberta that would provide a health care quality improvement annual report to this Legislature?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

The Speaker: Hon. members, for the second time or third time today. In a few minutes from now we're going to go into the estimates of the Department of Health and Wellness for two hours uninterrupted. I think we'll move on. You'll have an opportunity, hon. member, in a few minutes.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Court Transcripts

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Justice has suggested that he is concerned about increasing fairness, timeliness, and streamlining the justice process. Part of the process that people find prohibitive is the cost of legal transcripts. My questions are all to the Minister of Justice today. Mr. Minister, what criteria are used to determine if a case is of sufficient public interest to merit a fee waiver for the cost of court transcripts?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, those aren't decisions that I routinely make, so I have to suggest that I don't honestly know the answer to that. As to what criteria would be used by the people who do make those decisions, I presume that it's something I could look into and get back to the member with a response.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: if court proceedings have been transcribed, will the minister commit to posting them on the Internet for a lower fee?

Mr. Hancock: No, Mr. Speaker. There's a real issue that we have to deal with with respect to the question of not even transcripts of court proceedings but decisions of the courts. Sometimes court proceedings are intensely personal to the parties, and while they are done in public, in the current genre people would have to go down and attend at court to see what's going on and to hear what's happening, so there is a bit of privacy afforded the participants even though it's done in a public context. Posting on the Net takes those proceedings out of the context of the courtroom and makes them available entirely to the public to peruse at their will.

We have found, for example, with the publication of decisions, not transcripts but decisions, of the court in family law matters that people can pull up those decisions and find details in the decisions which can be embarrassing to other people who are related; in other words, children, for example, who are related to participants in a court. It's not found to be prudent to publish in that manner by putting those decisions directly on the Net for full availability of the public even though those decisions may be published in written form and be in law reports. So that's an issue that we have been struggling with with respect to decisions. I certainly think it would be much more problematic if you took it all the way down to transcripts.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Finally, will the minister look into lowering the fees for the hard copy transcripts?

Mr. Hancock: I think the short answer to that, Mr. Speaker, would be no. I will respond to that in more detail when my estimates come up on Thursday if the hon. member wants to ask the question or raise the question in that context. The fact of the matter is that we have a number of resource issues that we need to deal with in the Department of Justice, and if I had resources, it wouldn't be applied so much to lowering the cost of obtaining transcripts. It would probably be applied more to areas like improving the fees that we pay to interpreters and those sorts of people, because I think we would get a better improvement of the access to justice for Albertans by applying resources in that manner.

Transcripts and obtaining transcripts are a cost of doing business. We are moving, I might say, Mr. Speaker, to more electronic formats so that people can get transcripts on CD-ROM, and hopefully within the next two to three years we will be seeing a move to electronic filing processes and using a lot of documents in electronic format, which should deal with that issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Single Trial Court

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For some time now the Minister of Justice has been promoting the idea of a single trial court as a catalyst for judicial reform. However, this model has many detractors, including the Criminal Trial Lawyers Association and the Chief Justice of the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench. My questions are for the Attorney General. Why is the minister pandering to special-interest groups by offering a host of specialized courts within the single trial court model?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I wouldn't agree with that preamble with respect to what is actually being proposed. What we are talking about in the context of a single trial court is creating a horizontally organized court rather than a vertically organized court. Instead of the Provincial Court and proceeding up to Court of Queen's Bench, we would have a court with section 96 powers and organized, as I say, horizontally, so you would have a criminal division, a commercial division, a family division, and you would be able to deal within those divisions with the specialized needs of groups. We have, for example, the domestic violence court in Calgary. Now, if that is pandering to a specialized interest group, that kind of description boggles the mind. What we're actually doing there is dealing with an issue in our society which is extremely important: reducing the recidivism rate, getting treatment for people so that they don't continue to abuse their spouses. That's the type of thing you can do when you focus the resources in an appropriate way.

Going to a single trial court model, which we're looking at – we haven't made the decision to do it but are looking at it – will allow us to re-enter our resources so we can have specific types of courts to deal with domestic violence, for example, with offences involving weapons, drugs, perhaps even issues relative to youth using drugs or skipping school, as they do in some places in the States, dealing with youth issues. So what we're looking at is a single trial court which would give one area of jurisdiction and that would allow the court, then, to specialize in particular areas to achieve better results for Albertans.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize for boggling the minister's mind.

Given that section 92(14) of the Constitution gives the provinces exclusive jurisdiction over the organization of the provincial courts, why is the minister abrogating this right to the federal government?

Mr. Hancock: Again, we're not abrogating any rights to the federal government. In fact, I would suggest that we're doing exactly the opposite. What happens right now is that the federal government under that section of the Constitution has the right to appoint section 96 judges, as they're called. These are the judges in Alberta of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal. But the Court of Queen's Bench judges, which deal with a lot of the constitutional issues that we deal with, as I say, right now are appointed by the federal government. We appoint Provincial Court judges as a statutory court rather than a constitutional court.

What we are proposing is that there be one court. So, yes, we would no longer appoint judges to the Provincial Court, but we would as part of the proposal have to engage in a protocol with the federal government so that we would have even greater involvement in the appointment of all of the judges. The net effect would be that we would have an impact on the appointment of judges to the section 96 courts even though they would have the right to make the appointment. That is an improvement of our process and an improvement in our ability, in my view, to have an effect on who is appointed to the bench.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the obvious noncollaboration between Alberta and Ottawa over Senate appointments, why is the Minister of Justice hopeful that he can collaborate with Ottawa with respect to judicial appointments?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, nobody said that it was going to be easy, but we have to always, I think, strive to do the right thing with taxpayers' resources and the right thing with respect to getting the best access to justice for Albertans on the most cost-effective basis. So even though it's going to require some work to develop a protocol with the federal government, I think that in the area of justice there has actually been considerable co-operation historically. We do have dual areas of jurisdiction where they appoint and pay for the Federal Court judges and they pass the Criminal Code, for example, and we have to do the administration of justice at all levels of court.

So we have had some considerable success in that in the past. There are obviously areas where we haven't had success. It's not going to be easy, but it is part and parcel of trying to make the court system better so that we have a 21st century dispute resolution process for Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before moving to the first of four statements, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will ask for some latitude as I may want to preambule my introduction.

The Speaker: Hon. member, the House gave the hon. member permission to proceed. Do it with dignity and courtesy to the House.

Mr. Lukaszuk: As intended, Mr. Speaker.

The communications and electronics branch of the Canadian forces is organizing events to celebrate the centennial anniversary of military communications in Canada. The Mercury Trek consists of a team of 21 riders and eight support staff who will cycle through each province carrying a heraldic proclamation outlining the significant contributions of military communications to Canada. The trek members, consisting of active military members and Colonel Lackonick, retired, have entered Edmonton today, and I had the pleasure of cohosting a ceremony with the Lieutenant Governor and inviting them to our distinguished Chamber here at the Legislative Assembly of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that they are probably carrying one of the most important messages they ever could, and that is one of pride in Canada and unity, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Thank you.

University of Alberta Energy Management Program

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to highlight an excellent example of what can be done by Albertans and Alberta institutions to save energy and reduce costs of utility bills. Since 1975 the University of Alberta has had an active energy management program that currently saves the U of A over $12 million a year. Amazingly, over the course of the program the accumulated savings total over $139 million – that's $139 million of taxpayers' money saved – and that's not all. The program has also eliminated 1.65 million metric tonnes of carbon dioxide, 2,000 tonnes of nitrogen oxide, and 1,500 tonnes of sulphur dioxide.

This energy management program is a significant contributor to sustainability on the U of A campus. Not only is it helping to significantly reduce utility bills. It reduces the consumption of nonrenewable resources as well and also reduces the associated amount of pollution and greenhouse gas emissions. Some of the main elements of how they accomplish this include lighting retrofits, heating recovery systems, variable-speed drives, optimizing operating schedules, downsizing equipment, and piping and ductwork insulation. These types of initiatives have helped to reduce electrical consumption per square metre by 26 percent, steam consumption per square metre by 49 percent, and water consumption per square metre by 62 percent since 1975. At the same time their building area has increased by 27 percent.

For almost three decades now the U of A has been a leader and has made a concerted effort to introduce changes and implement practices that enable it to operate in an energy-efficient and environmentally responsible manner. A seven-year program has just been developed which will guide the university's further energy conservation activities until the year 2010. The University of Alberta serves as an excellent model of how a large institution can make a significant difference in the quest for sustainability and energy conservation, and I would encourage other institutions in the province to look to the University of Alberta and others for concrete examples of how energy conservation measures can have a significant impact on environmental and economic sustainability.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Volunteer Calgary Leadership Awards

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday, April 24, I had the honour of bringing greetings from the province on behalf of the Premier and my Legislature colleagues at Volunteer Calgary's seventh annual leadership awards, presented by Suncor Energy Inc., held at the Hyatt Regency. Over 400 people attended the celebration to honour excellence in community volunteerism and its valuable contribution to improve the quality of life for many, many Calgaryans. The leaders of tomorrow awards, which salute the outstanding efforts of youth in the community and are sponsored by EnCana Corporation, were awarded to Mahrukh Tahir, elementary school; Lauren Mendis, junior high school; and to brothers Shaqil Peermohamed and Nabeel Peermohamed, senior high school.

The leaders in business awards, which recognize excellence in workplace volunteerism and are sponsored by Chevron Canada Resources, presented the gold award to Imperial Oil Limited and Exxon Mobil Canada for their work with Hull family services. The silver award went to Fluor Canada Ltd. and the bronze award to BP Canada Energy volunteers, Calgary retirees.

The leader in the community award, recognizing local nonprofit organizations and sponsored by the Calgary Herald, was awarded to the Fort Calgary community garden out of 25 nominations. The community garden engages homeless people to help grow vegetables for the Salvation Army Centre of Hope.

But the absolute highlight of the celebration was recognizing Simon Adamson with the VIP, or volunteer in profile, award by CFCN/CTV for his outstanding work with the Schizophrenia Society of Alberta over the past six years. Simon was diagnosed with schizophrenia at 17 and at 26 daily helps people who are newly diagnosed with schizophrenia reintegrate into the community. He also educates the public about its effects. Last year Simon volunteered over 1,700 hours. During his emotional acceptance speech Simon expressed his pride in being able to make a difference.

Mr. Speaker, it was truly a privilege to be part of Volunteer Calgary's seventh annual leadership awards celebration this year. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Holocaust Remembrance Day

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I invite members of this Legislature and all Albertans to join me and the Minister of Community Development in a day of reflection and remembrance for Yom ha-Shoah, the Holocaust Remembrance Day. This day is recognized worldwide as a time to remember the crimes against humanity committed between 1933 and 1945 and to ensure that victims of this tragedy and other victims of genocide, hatred, and ethnic cleansing are never forgotten. We are thankful that Canada has not experienced such atrocities. However, none of us should ignore them. Many Albertans have friends or relatives who lived through disturbing times or who lived in oppressive countries. We know that, unfortunately, hatred and discrimination exist. Therefore, these feelings, which are commonly based on a lack of understanding, do find their way into our communities and affect all of us.

In 2000 the Alberta Legislature unanimously passed the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act to formally recognize this day each year and to remind us of the need to uphold the human rights of everyone and to value the diversity and multicultural richness of Alberta society. Each one of us can do our part by raising an awareness of these issues, by educating those around us, by speaking up, and by doing whatever we can to eliminate hatred, criticism, and discrimination. Today I ask everyone to reflect on the meaning of Yom ha-Shoah, the Holocaust Remembrance Day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Holocaust Remembrance Day

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning I attended along with many members of this House, including yourself and the Premier, a memorial and candle-lighting ceremony on the official day of Holocaust remembrance in the province of Alberta. A special monument was unveiled on the grounds of the provincial Legislature. This monument will remain forever as a reminder of the Holocaust, a most tragic and horrifying episode of the 20th century. This monument will raise awareness and understanding of the events of the Holocaust, when during the Second World War a wave of mass murder swept across Europe. By the end the death toll had risen to approximately 6 million people, including among them 1.5 million children.

The theme of Holocaust memorial day 2003 is Children and the Holocaust. Only an estimated 11 percent of the Jewish children alive in 1933 in Germany were still alive by 1945. Disabled children, Roma children, and children of occupied territories were also victims of this senseless and criminal slaughter. To survivors and indeed to all of us the Holocaust remains a real and ever-present historical moment.

When the people of Alberta view this memorial, it will remind them of how real and ever-present the experience remains to these survivors and us. It will speak those stories about people who were killed by the Nazis and help all of us to understand what can happen if we do not stand up to oppression, if we do not confront those who would act in this manner. Each of us has a responsibility to take whatever action we can to ensure that the horrendous crimes, racism, and victimization committed during the Holocaust are never forgotten nor repeated anywhere in the world. Ceremonies such as the one we attended this morning are about both past and present and about commemorating and continuing to learn from the events of the Holocaust and about relating those lessons to the ever changing world around us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have some additional visitors with us. Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: First, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my great honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the House 85 bright and energetic students from Queen Elizabeth high school, which is located in the snowbound constituency of Calgary-Bow. The students, who are seated in the public gallery, are accompanied this afternoon by Ms Janice Lowe, Ms Ann Walker, Mr. Stephen Ditchburn, and Ms Tanya Snow, who are teachers at the school and parents. I would ask them all now to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, at this moment you're just giving notice to the House. That's all you're doing at this point in time.

Mr. Hutton: Yes, I am. I'm giving notice of my intention to raise a question of privilege.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table with the Assembly today the required number of copies of Alberta Transportation's three-year highway construction project list.

As well, as per the recommendation from the Financial Management Commission I'm also pleased to table the list of major construction projects deferred beyond 2005.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with three brief tablings. The requisite number of copies of a report from American Scientist on reward deficiency syndrome, which is the best explanation of drug and alcohol addictions that I'm familiar with.

The second report is an article on 18-MC, or 18-methoxycoronaridine, a potential new miracle drug that seems to stop all drug addictions cold perhaps in as little as one dose.

The third is the article in the Journal of the American Medical Association that I referred to in question period regarding iatrogenic complications as perhaps being the third leading cause of death.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter that I received from four different oil and gas and petroleum industry associations. The signatories to this letter are the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, the Petroleum Services Association of Canada, the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, and the Canadian Association of Geophysical Contractors. All of these associations, of course, are opposed to the establishment of the tribunal to look at the long-standing cases of the WCB clients.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table this afternoon five copies of the Day of Mourning Candlelight Ceremony program from yesterday evening at city hall. This was put on by the Alberta Federation of Labour, the Alberta Workers' Health Centre, and the Alberta Building Trades Council, again in recognition of the International Day of Mourning for workers killed and injured on the job.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My tabling today is from Alice Williamson, who is objecting to the Capstone Energy application to divert fresh water for oil well injections. We share her concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three tablings today that continue the correspondence on education. The first is a postcard saying that "we need government leadership committed to the future of our children" from Lisa McDermott, the second is calling for more funding for education from Alyssa Stryker – these are tabled with permission – and the third is talking about the need to spend more funding on education from A. Espinaco-Virseda.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling a document entitled Canada-United States Softwood Lumber Trade: Alberta Summary of Forest Policy Discussions dated December 2001. This sets out policy options for the government of Alberta with respect to Canada/United States softwood lumber negotiations.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the Minister of Government Services: erratum to the Government Services 2003-2006 business plan.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Privilege
Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've thought of little else but this matter for the last 24 hours. I provided verbal notice to this House and written notice to your office before 11:30 this morning of my intention to raise a question of privilege, a courtesy the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did not afford me yesterday.

from Hansard yesterday, page 1252: “. . . one of the tenets of our justice system, which is that one is innocent until proven guilty.” Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Monday, April 28, 2003, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rose on a purported point of privilege and accused me of contempt of this Assembly because he says that he saw me with a piece of paper he found offensive. Yes, I had that piece of paper in my hand, and I clearly indicated to this Assembly yesterday that once I saw what it was, I threw it away without another thought as to where it came from. Yesterday, once the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar knew this to be the truth and once the Speaker had ruled that there was not a point of privilege regarding contempt, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar refused the opportunity to apologize to me and this Assembly and refused to do the honourable thing and withdraw unconditionally his accusation that I am a hateful bigot because I held that material briefly in my hand.

Mr. Speaker, in a parliamentary sense I feel intimidated and harassed. The hon. member made comments that were offensive, intimidating, prejudicial, and hateful and somehow connected them to me. I have never been so maligned and misrepresented in my life. Both Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition, at 24 and 25 and Erskine May, 21st edition, page 69, clearly confirm that a member should never feel intimidated or harassed in the performance of their duties. My ability to perform my duties as a duly elected member of a parliamentary democracy has been compromised because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has left on the record this intimidating and harassing accusation that I distribute hate literature. This is totally and completely unacceptable.

What the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did on Monday afternoon was try to dismantle my reputation, which I have worked so hard to build in the past 20 years. I have spent my career assisting the disabled, working with wonderfully diverse multicultural communities and for the disadvantaged across this province. Mr. Speaker, I sat yesterday in total disbelief as to why and how this member could do this and what this will mean to me moving forward as an MLA and representing the great constituents of Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Speaker, I respect every member in this House no matter where they sit in this Assembly. We all have a job to do, and that is to do the best we can for the people we represent, and I am shaken by the premeditated surprise attack by this member. He clearly brought into suspect my character, values, and beliefs, and I feel that is totally unacceptable.

When I got up this morning, my daughter had read the Edmonton Journal before I had, and she came to me and she said: what did you do, Daddy? This is from my Jewish daughter. In my home we do not speak of hate because of my wife's and children's ancestry, having endured centuries of persecution. In my home we live by the golden rule: do unto others as you would have them do unto you. In my home if my children have a conflict, I ask them to consider why the person or persons would be in conflict with them and to try to walk a mile in their shoes and to have a little empathy for others before you judge.

My point here, Mr. Speaker, is that had the hon. member across the way stopped for one moment Thursday last and asked me what the document was in my hand, I would have responded: “I don't know. I haven't looked at it yet.” I would probably after that have realized, as I did coming back to this seat, what it was and threw it in the garbage.

I ask that a prima facie case of privilege be declared so that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar can have an additional opportunity to do the gentlemanly thing and withdraw his remark and apologize. I also ask that should a prima facie case be declared and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar continues to leave this cowardly accusation on the floor, I be afforded the opportunity to move a motion today in this Assembly that would begin the process of clearing my name, a motion that this be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections or a motion of censure that compels the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to appear before the bar of this Assembly and face the consequences of a breach of privilege that he was so eager yesterday to stab me with.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The issue to be considered is whether certain comments by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar have obstructed or interfered with the Member for Edmonton-Glenora's ability to perform his duties or alternately whether the dignity and authority of the Assembly has been offended. The chair would refer members to chapter 3 of Marleau and Montpetit.

After hearing now from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora and prior to hearing submissions on the purported point of privilege from other speakers, the chair wishes to caution members that the issue for discussion today pertains to the question of privilege raised by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. The chair will not – I repeat: not – allow a reiteration of the discussion that transpired yesterday afternoon. The chair ruled that that purported question of privilege did not meet the test for a prima facie case of privilege. That concluded that matter.

As this is primarily an issue between the two members and as the chair does not intend to revisit yesterday's debate, the chair under the provisions of Standing Order 15(6) will allow the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to participate, will allow the Government House Leader to participate, will allow the Opposition House Leader to participate, and will judge later, at the conclusion of their remarks, whether other speakers will be recognized as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, if you wish.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In regards to Standing Orders 15(3) and (4) I would like to request if it's possible, with your permission, to defer this matter until tomorrow. I would like an opportunity to review the Blues as to what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has stated.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I think the chair would like to receive some advice perhaps from the two House leaders, the Government House Leader and the Opposition House Leader, in this matter.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting that the hon. member opposite brought his motion yesterday with no notice, without even previously discussing the matter with the member, and we dealt with it at that time because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora couldn't live with the issue hanging over his head for another day. So I think it would be inappropriate to leave this matter over for another day.

Now, the member in question knows exactly what went on yesterday. He knows exactly what he's being accused of. There's no surprise for him here, and he ought to be in a position to respond today.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, we have always taken cases of privilege very seriously in this Assembly.

An Hon. Member: Until yesterday.

Ms Carlson: I don't think that those are appropriate remarks,

Member for Calgary-Mountain View, at this time. I think that what's appropriate here is to ensure that as we move forward with what have been serious allegations, members have enough opportunity to reflect on them, to reflect on what their course of action will be in the future, so I would support the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's request to postpone any further discussion on this until tomorrow.

The Speaker: The chair would like to hear from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Last evening at 8 o'clock notice was given, and notice was given this morning again. Will the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar come back to the House tomorrow and say that he wants another deferral? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, can you assist the chair in this?

Mr. MacDonald: No. Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. I would be quite willing to present this issue tomorrow. There have been previous precedents set. Yesterday the hon. member was certainly given an opportunity to delay the procedures until today if he so chose. Also, going back to November 19, 2002, on page 1387 on a matter that I brought before this Assembly in regard to advertisements with the crest of the House on it, there was also at that time opportunity given so that people could get their thoughts organized. Those are two precedents from the recent history of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we'll return to this matter tomorrow afternoon.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Health and Wellness

The Chair: I would invite any comments or questions that might be brought forward on these estimates. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to present the Alberta Health and Wellness budget for 2003-2004. Last year at this time I said that we were entering into a year of transition for health care, and this past year was all of that and more. We implemented a simpler, more effective regional structure, moving from 17 to 9 health regions and moving mental health services to regional responsibility for better integration with health care. We piloted electronic health records through the pharmaceutical information network in Westlock and Leduc. We launched the Healthy U campaign and web site to encourage healthy food choices and promote active living. I'm pleased to say that to date that web site has had over 300,000 hits.

Now we continue the work with a public commitment to partnership. My ministry's business plan gives our mission as: "To maintain and improve the health and wellness of Albertans by leading and working collaboratively with citizens and stakeholders." We do that, Mr. Chairman, by directing our work in two core businesses. The first core business is to "lead and support a system for the delivery of quality health services." Mostly this is about providing treatment, and it takes the majority of our health budget.

We allocate $6.5 billion alone just to health authorities, physician services, provincewide services, and nongroup health benefits, primarily drugs.

The second core business is to "encourage and support healthy living." This, Mr. Chairman, is aimed at reducing the need for treatment by helping Albertans enjoy a high quality of health well into their senior years. Health authorities allocate some of their funding to wellness programs, but the majority comes from our protection, promotion, and prevention budget, $169.8 million. You also will see $23 million under equipment/inventory purchases for vaccines. Vaccines are an essential aspect of our illness prevention program. Our commitment to health reform also continues to focus on wellness as the first strategy to manage demand for services in the future.

Now, before I get into the budget itself, Mr. Chairman, I want to comment on two emerging issues of health protection and illness prevention: SARS and West Nile virus. Endemic and emergency response plans are in place regionally and provincially and are being applied to both SARS and West Nile virus. We are in daily contact with Health Canada and are co-ordinating our provincial and regional efforts with the latest international and national information. We encourage the members of this Assembly and all Albertans to check our web site for the most up-to-date information and links on both conditions, including how they can protect themselves and what their government is doing.

Our current protection, promotion, and prevention budget anticipates unplanned threats to public health. An example was the recent provincial vaccination program to control a meningococcal outbreak. If either SARS or West Nile virus develops into situations that require actions beyond our budget capacity, we will not hesitate to ask for a special dispensation for additional funds. This House and all Albertans can be assured that budget considerations will not limit our response if either condition becomes a public health emergency.

Now returning, Mr. Chairman, to my budget presentation, in total we are dedicating $7.35 billion to Health and Wellness this fiscal year. That is an increase of 7.2 percent over last year's third-quarter forecast. With the addition of $492 million this year health funding has doubled in just the past eight years, up from $3.7 billion in 1995-1996. This reflects a growth in demand due to a growing and aging population, in the use of technologies like MRIs, in the rising costs of drugs, and in compensation to attract and retain the best health professionals in a highly competitive environment and in numbers that will meet the need.

This is the second year of single-digit increases. Last year we increased health funding by 8.5 percent, but this year there are no increases in health premiums and no further increase in tobacco taxes. Current tobacco taxes are doing the job they're intended to do; tobacco sales are down 21 percent. A year ago in Budget 2002 we anticipated keeping overall health increases in line with projected increases in provincial revenues. It is basic economic management that expenses cannot continue to grow beyond the growth in income, which is one reason health reform is so urgent. That commitment to smaller increases remains. In year 2 of this business plan the plan increases 4.3 percent. In year 3 it is 5.8 percent, when health funding will exceed $8.1 billion.

This year, Mr. Chairman, we achieved a 7.2 percent increase because our Premier and Premiers across the country negotiated a new health arrangement with the federal government. At February's first ministers' meeting the Premiers were united in their concern over the shrinking federal share of health funding, and they were backed by the federally sponsored Romanow report, which recommended that the federal government honour a greater share of its obligations to health care. Under the health arrangement the federal commitment increases from 14 percent to 16 percent of health funding over the next three years. That of course, Mr. Chairman, is still far short of the 50 percent promise made when medicare was born, but it certainly is moving in the right direction. To Alberta the outcome of that first ministers' meeting is $248 million this fiscal year.

Over half of all health funding is allocated to our health authorities, the nine regions, plus the cancer and mental health boards. It makes sense, therefore, that health authorities also receive half the increase in health funding. The Alberta Cancer Board's additional $19.5 million includes $11 million for cancer drugs. The Alberta Mental Health Board receives an added $1.5 million for the four provincial services and programs that it retained: forensic psychiatry, suicide prevention, aboriginal mental health, and telemental health. All other mental health services are being transferred to the nine health regions with their 2003-2004 funding levels.

Now, before I go into health authority funding, Mr. Chairman, I want to clarify that for the purposes of comparison we recalculated last year's allocation along the boundaries for the new regions and included each region's share of mental health service into the base. In all, the nine regions received an average of a 6.1 percent increase for a total allocation of $3.916 billion, including $48.7 million to buy new medical equipment. No region in the province received less than a 3 percent increase of its base budget or less than 4.2 percent including the equipment funding. I expect that the nine expanded regions are better able to be effective and efficient with the use of their funds.

Most of the new regional boundaries are based on patient flow patterns. Reducing the flow of patients and money out of rural regions will help them retain more resources. Larger regions have the population and resources to meet a wider range of health care needs, attract and retain health professionals, and achieve cost efficiencies. An MLA strategy committee is developing a rural health strategy to ensure that needs in rural regions are met appropriately.

I also want to comment, Mr. Chairman, on region 7, which stretches from the Saskatchewan border to Jasper and encompasses most of what used to be the WestView, Aspen, Lakeland, and Keeweenaw Lakes regions. We made this one of the largest regions to compensate for its lack of a large regional hospital. However, it does have 16 hospitals, more than any other regional health authority. With 16 hospitals region 7 can more easily develop local centres of expertise and capitalize on greater collaboration with other regions, just as recommended by the Premier's Advisory Council on Health.

While the number of regions has changed, the formula we use to allocate regional funds has not. Allocations are based on the region's population and population growth. A region with faster population growth receives a larger increase. Funding is adjusted for the needs of demographic groups. So, for example, aboriginal Albertans, seniors, and women of childbearing age tend to use more services and are funded accordingly.

Funding also is adjusted for the higher cost of doing business in remote areas of the province. That explains the fact that the largest regional increase does not go to either of the two major urban regions. In fact, the 6 percent increase for the new Capital region is slightly below the provincial average of 6.1 percent. The expanded Calgary region receives a larger increase than Capital and at 7 percent is a slightly larger increase than the average. Its population growth is still almost 1 percent higher than the Capital region's.

Region 8, centred on Grande Prairie, also received a larger increase than Edmonton, 6.3 percent, in large part because of the more remote population it serves.

Region 9, centred on Fort McMurray, received the largest increase at 9.9 percent. Region 9 is one of the largest and most remote health regions. It has limited road connections, and the fast-growing community of Fort McMurray is within that region. The almost 10 percent increase to its budget allocation this year reflects those conditions in the Northern Lights region. I also want to note that we reviewed the issue of the so-called shadow population with the former regional health authority. This referred to temporary workers to whom the region supplied care but who were not calculated as part of the population in the funding formula. We concluded that funding transfers from the workers' home regions and provinces provided adequate compensation to region 9.

In central and southern Alberta, with smaller regions and more concentrated populations, the increases are less dramatic. In regions 1 and 2 Chinook and Palliser each received over 5 percent. In region 4 the enlarged David Thompson region received 4.6 percent. Region 7, while covering a large geographic area, also has a large network of community hospitals to serve its residents and lower population growth. That region receives an increase of 4.9 percent.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to note that about 80 percent of regional budgets are devoted to human resources, including contracted services. It is reasonable to expect that a portion of their additional funding this year also will be devoted to human resources. However, health regions have obligations to provide resources and programs outside of staffing. The increased allocation to health regions should not be interpreted as a mandate for the regions' current negotiations with their nurses.

Funding for medical equipment is substantial in this budget. This $49.6 million for the regions and the Cancer Board can be used for any equipment need that directly supports patient care. This includes everything from patient lifts to intravenous poles to diagnostic equipment to the upgrade training so that staff can operate it.

Another budget item also provides direct support to health regions. Some highly specialized services are largely located centrally, but they serve all Albertans. Examples are cardiovascular surgery, neurosurgery, major organ transplants, and renal dialysis. In this budget funding for these provincewide services increases by $23 million, or 6 percent, bringing the total to $415 million this fiscal year. In the past provincewide services funding went solely to the Capital and Calgary regions because these had the capacity and infrastructure to provide these highly specialized services. Now we've expanded provincewide services to include the Rosehaven psychogeriatric facility in Camrose in region 5.

Other increases that address access to health services include $52 million to meet the increased costs for human tissue and blood products, ambulance services, out-of-province health care, and allied health services like chiropractic, optometry, podiatry, and oral surgery. An increase of $87 million is budgeted for physician services. As with the nurses this should not be taken as a mandate for current negotiations. We continue, Mr. Chairman, to negotiate in good faith with the Alberta Medical Association.

Despite an average increase in drug costs of 17 percent, this budget increases nongroup health benefits, mostly drugs, by less than 1 percent. I do not expect the cost of drugs to dramatically decrease. We cover over 3,500 drugs and just added Remicade and Enbrel to the drug benefit list at an estimated cost of $14 million to $18 million a year. However, if spending on drugs continues to increase, our drug benefit plan this year will cost more than last year. Clearly, this rate of increase is not sustainable. My department has made a commitment to finding ways to contain these costs. The limited increase to our drug budget reflects that commitment. We continue to investigate options that will contain the rate of increase in drug costs while ensuring Albertans have the therapeutic drugs that they require.

A growing component in this year's Health and Wellness budget is support for health reform. The $122 million allocated this fiscal year does not seem much compared to the billions and hundreds of millions allocated elsewhere. However, the $85 million increase this year triples last year's allocation. The increase in funding for health reform is in line with the increased urgency to implement change.

Every year our population grows by more than the combined total of Airdrie, Camrose, and Grande Prairie together. Five years ago, in 1998, just under 10 percent of our population was over the age of 65. By the year 2016 it will be almost 15 percent, and by 2021 it will be one in four Albertans who will be seniors, over the age of 65. Based on our own Alberta health care insurance plan data, by 2024 the number of seniors will equal the number of children in this province under the age of 15. We are seeing an increase in age-related care like heart surgery, joint replacement, and cancer treatment. More than 300,000 Albertans have diagnosed heart disease. Another 110,000 are diagnosed with diabetes. Of those, 99,000, about 90 percent, are type 2 diabetics, the kind that can be prevented.

Another cost driver is technology. In 1999 we covered 35,000 MRIs. In 2002-2003 we doubled that to 75,000 MRIs. In the 1960s, when medicare was designed, MRIs did not exist yet. Neither did regular organ transplants, major joint replacements, or a host of other treatments that we now expect from our health care system.

Health reviews from across the country from Fyke to Claire, from Kirby to Romanow agree with our own Premier's Advisory Council on Health that health care must change. The status quo is not an option. Since January of last year we have been working in Alberta to implement the Premier's advisory council recommendations.

The Health and Wellness business plan shows what changes we will introduce over the next three years. Those reforms include new delivery for primary health care. Before year-end we will have a provincewide health telephone service. By this summer wait times for most surgeries in major health facilities will be posted on-line, and we will continue to promote healthy lifestyle choices and wise use of the health system.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, these reform initiatives will help achieve our vision for health care in Alberta. That vision is recorded in my ministry's three-year business plan: "Citizens of a healthy Alberta achieve optimal health and wellness." This vision is greater than my department. It is a cross-government commitment that includes Learning, Children's Services, Aboriginal Affairs, Human Resources and Employment, and Infrastructure. My business plan calls for an aboriginal diabetes strategy to address the higher incidence of that disease in the aboriginal community. The Department of Infrastructure is allocating over three-quarters of a billion dollars over three years to health infrastructure. Work is going ahead on a new children's hospital in Calgary, completion of the Red Deer regional hospital, upgrades to the Royal Alex hospital in Edmonton, two new provincial centres of excellence for cardiac care, and a bone and joint institute. Students from kindergarten to grade 9 are learning about health and life skills in a new curriculum launched in September of 2002. Our postsecondary institutions are preparing more students to take on challenging roles as health professionals.

Health care remains Albertans' number one priority. We have daunting challenges still to overcome. Health reform continues to move forward to redefine our health system for the future. This budget, Mr. Chairman, allows us to move forward, and I ask the members of this committee for their approval.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the minister's quite extensive comments, comments that have touched on many highlights and addressed some of the issues I was considering raising, but of course in a budget of this size there's no shortage of questions to raise. I'm assuming that we can do a sort of back-and-forth discussion with the minister, if that's okay with the minister.

This department is responsible for the issue that is most consistently the number one concern of the citizens of this province. Health care in fact has been the top issue in this province and in this country for many years, and as a result it's always a sensitive one for discussion. Everybody has an opinion on every issue, it seems, including me.

I'll begin by asking about one of the changes that occurred – well, it's being implemented – in this particular budget year, which is the switch to the new regional health authorities and the reconfiguration from, well, at one point 17, now down to nine. I will start with a fundamental kind of question on the process through which the regional health authorities' business plans and specific budgets are prepared. As the minister undoubtedly knows, I find it out of sync or at least frustrating that we have a situation in which the regional health authorities, which account for over half of the department's expenditure, often don't have their budgets and business plans approved until, say, the second quarter of the fiscal year. So I suppose my question off the bat to the minister with the regional health authorities is a very specific one: when will the regional health authorities' new business plans be ready?

The second is a more general one: if he could describe the process through which the regional health authorities' business plans and budgets are sorted out and finally settled with his department, because I know that there is a lot of uncertainty in the regional health authorities over exactly what the details of the business plans will be. I'd love it if we can minimize that. That's my first round of questions.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, we are embarking, consistent with recommendations made from some of our committees including the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, to put in place service contracts and arrangements between the Department of Health and Wellness and various regional health authorities. We're moving well on that, making good progress. It's my expectation that the contracts and business plans that will flow out of those contracts should be done some time in the short months to come. We're trying to target May or June. I recognize the concern expressed by the hon. member with respect to having business plans that come out too late in the fiscal year.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Well, I'll read into that, then.

My questions weren't just about timing but about the process. It sounds like it's essentially one of the RHAs negotiating a contract with the minister based on a business plan. I take it that that's the general process?

Mr. Mar: Correct.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Part of those negotiations presumably will have to address wage settlements or make some provision for wage settlements in the current round of negotiations. I'm sure none of us want the regional health authorities to end up in the position that the school boards find themselves in, where they are caught with a responsibility for a wage settlement that is tough for them to meet. I'm wondering if the minister could provide any detail or any projection for – I should rephrase that because I don't want to ask the minister to violate collective bargaining processes here. How does the minister expect the regional health authorities to cope with the unknown factor of the wage settlements given that about 80 percent of their budgets are tied up in wages?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated in my opening comments, the average increase to the nine health regions is 6.1 percent. Of course, a portion of that has to go to salaries, but as I indicated, there is much more that regional health authorities are responsible for, so I wouldn't want anybody to think that the 6.1 percent average increase to regional health authorities is somehow a bargaining mandate. Our best advice from the employers, that being the regional health authorities, is that negotiations are ongoing with their nurses and other health care professionals, and we continue to encourage that process to go on between employer and employee in a proper collective bargaining process.

With respect to the Alberta Medical Association, Mr. Chairman, negotiations continue to go on well with that with some progress, I should say, it seems being made in the area of different ways of being able to remunerate physicians and making progress on matters as they relate to primary health care reform.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to ask a few questions of the minister on departmental estimates. I was listening intently to his introductory remarks.

I will begin, I guess, by making a reference to a news story today. I'm sure the minister has seen the story about the number of hours in emergency rooms that it takes for a patient to get to be seen by medical professionals in Edmonton and Calgary. I guess they've got in the story that Edmonton is about seven hours on the average, and Calgary, I understand, is longer.

3:30

Mr. Mar: Shorter.

Dr. Pannu: Okay. In light of Vince Motta's death in the Calgary region and in light of the recommendations of Judge Delong about how these waiting times can jeopardize the life of patients who need quicker care, in the department's performance indicators and the minister's business plan, unless I'm missing it, I don't see any target for reducing the waiting time in emergency rooms in our major hospitals, so maybe a simple question. The minister can perhaps address this.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, that appears, as characterized by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, to be a simple question, but perhaps there is not a simple answer.

Mr. Chairman, wait times for emergency care change from time to time, and the most recent data that we have, to the best of my recollection, is for the second quarter of the year. The regional health authority in Edmonton has experienced some changes in their wait times partly because of changes of season. There does appear to be some seasonality to this. I can say that the number of emergency room visits for the Capital health region would be in the range of 330,000 visits a year. By comparison, in Calgary the number of emergency room visits would be in the range of 250,000 visits a year.

Some efforts are being made to reduce wait times in emergency rooms. There's no, I should say, silver bullet to solving this problem. The Health Link line, though, has been one important aspect in helping reduce the number of unnecessary visits to emergency rooms, and I want to again restate my commitment to ensuring that Health Link is available throughout this entire province this year.

Mr. Chairman, other efforts are being made to look at processes. For example, to the best of my recollection the average wait time in Calgary emergency rooms is about half of that which it is in Edmonton. It's partly a reflection of the fewer number of visits that they get, but I think that they have also made some good efforts at reducing the number of hours of waiting. In both cases, though, and in emergency rooms throughout the province I should say that the most urgent cases are dealt with immediately. Obviously, if you've got a sprained ankle and you come into an emergency room in any hospital, really, in the province of Alberta, it would be a reasonable expectation that you would wait longer than somebody who had an acute myocardial infarction, as an example.

So the whole idea that we need to look at better ways of dealing with emergency systems particularly in rural Alberta I can say is a subject matter of the Rural Health Strategy Committee. They're looking at the role of, for example, ambulances and what they can do and what they can appropriately do to provide treatment to individuals so that unnecessary visits to an emergency room are not required.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the hon. member asked this as a simple question, but there is, regrettably, not a simple reply to it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Along the same lines, looking at the key performance measures in the business plan, I notice that for some diagnostic procedures there are no targets other than a commitment to decrease wait lists if not wait times. MRI is one of them that I notice here. The minister did in his introductory remarks make comments to the Mazankowski report recommendations as well as to the Romanow commission report recommendations and drew the attention of the House to the new federal money that the budget of the department this year reflects I think to the tune of – what? – $428 million.

Mr. Mar: To $248 million.

Dr. Pannu: Yeah, $248 million this year.

Now, one of the important recommendations, I guess, for immediate action by the provincial government in co-operation with the federal government had to do with the diagnostics and with putting money at the diagnostic end so that waiting times for treatment can be reduced. I wonder whether the minister has agreed with this recommendation of the Romanow commission that the diagnostic times need to be reduced. The reference to MRI waiting lists here in the business plan would seem to suggest to me that perhaps at this stage the minister has decided not to seriously address this issue, although he may have agreed with the overall general thrust of the Romanow commission report that in order to reduce waiting times for treatment, the governments need to commit resources to providing quicker diagnostic services. Is that somewhere in the business plans, or is the minister attempting to address it in some other ways in this budget?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, there was some requirement for some detail that I may not have the complete reply to, and as with all questions, including the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's questions, if I fail to address them in the fullness that they require and they deserve, I will certainly undertake to review the record in Hansard to reply appropriately to all hon. members with respect to their questions.

Specifically on the subject matter of MRIs, Mr. Chairman, we do have a provincial imaging committee that is made up of experts who are trying to determine an appropriate number of scans. We do have the highest scan rate right now in the country, at least in the most recent of my information, so we do perform more MRI scans on a per capita basis than any other place in the country.

Now, money has been set aside in the arrangement between the federal government and the provinces with respect to putting money into this important area of diagnostics. That I would agree with this particular part of it, though, should not be taken by the hon. member as a wholehearted endorsement to the Romanow report because, as he well knows, there are many areas in the Romanow report that I have been very critical of, but this is one area where I think that Mr. Romanow did hit one of the nails on the head.

The federal government has recognized the importance of diagnostics, and in our arrangements with the federal government now falling upon the responsibility of the federal Minister of Health and ministers of health across Canada, money has been set aside for diagnostics. I should say that in its original iteration my understanding was that the federal money was to be applied only to the purchase of capital equipment for diagnostics. It is now also available to train people to use this equipment. Now, we have quite a number of MRIs in this province. It's quite likely that we don't need to purchase more capital equipment, but perhaps we do need some operating money in order to run those machines more fully than they are currently being operated at. So, Mr. Chairman, we are making every reasonable effort toward increasing the number of diagnostic tests performed in order to reduce wait times.

I should say that there is some work that's being done to suggest that some of the MRIs that are currently being performed don't seem to provide much in the way of being medically beneficial. People seem to assume that if it is requested, it is going to actually be a diagnostic test that will provide additional information that may change the nature of treatment that is given by a physician. In fact, it appears that in some cases diagnostic tests are being performed but do not provide any additional information other than that which could be provided by another alternative and less expensive diagnostic or even an examination in person by a qualified individual. So this is one area that we also need to look at, Mr. Chairman, to ensure that those individuals who will actually benefit from additional information that would be disclosed through a diagnostic test, be it an MRI or another type of test, would get the highest priority.

Dr. Taft: Well, following up on this discussion, the minister in his opening remarks talked about the importance of managing demand for services as well as ensuring a good supply and in the long term controlling health spending by spending it more wisely, and I think we would all share concerns that the demand for MRIs seems right now to be more or less limitless.

I have concerns about the application of clinical guidelines for MRIs, and I have had physicians call me raising these concerns. There are clinical guidelines for when an MRI is useful and when it's not, which the minister alluded to a minute ago. The concern that has been brought to my attention by some physicians is that the people applying the clinical guidelines may not be entirely free of interest in whether the test is approved or not. The request was put to me to encourage a process through which clinical guidelines are applied by entirely disinterested individuals; in other words, expert radiologists, or whatever, who have no vested interest in whether the test is approved or not.

This isn't simply an issue I'm raising. It's an issue being brought to me by physicians who are feeling pressured or marketed to by radiologists who encourage them to use MRIs more and more. These are physicians who are saying: sure, it's nice to have an MRI, but it doesn't tell me anything I wouldn't have known anyway, so it doesn't have any impact on my treatment regime. So it's a nice-to-have but not a need-to-have, and let me say that there's a momentum in the radiology business to make the nice-to-have MRIs seem like they're need-to-have MRIs.

So my question, after that rather convoluted commentary, to the minister would be: in terms of managing demand for MRIs and ensuring that public taxpayer money goes only to those that are reasonably necessary, what steps or plans is he or his department considering?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that there are perhaps two different panels that could be looking at this particular issue, one of which has already taken some effort to discuss when something is necessary and when it is not, and that would be the expert panel chaired by Dr. Bob Westbury. I think that the people who are on that panel could be described as being quite objective in terms of their analysis of separating the useful from the not so useful. Secondly, we could put that question to the committee chaired by a former member of this Assembly, Bonnie Laing, who is the current chair of the Health Services Utilization and Outcomes Commission. But in both cases the object of the exercise would clearly be, as described by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, to try and separate that which is useful and provides something of benefit to the diagnosis or to the treatment of an individual from things that are either not useful or not advancing the diagnostic information available to the treatment of a patient.

Dr. Taft: Just a brief follow-up to that, Mr. Chairman. I would encourage the minister to consider getting the application of the clinical guidelines pushed further down the system towards the front line so it's not just committee members but it's actually right at the point where the decision is made: yes, this test is necessary or, no, this test is not necessary.

I know the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is under some time constraints, so I'm allowing him to jump in as he needs to.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview for allowing me this opportunity. I do have some time constraints. I need to meet with these bright and wonderful high school students. Today is my turn this afternoon around 4 o'clock, so I really appreciate this accommodation.

Three questions. One quick one is sort of a residual question from the MRI observations that the minister made. The minister I think indicated that perhaps we have enough MRI machines around the province. The question is: can we operate them 24 hours if we need to? If we want to do that, then we'll need people who can operate those machines. In his judgment is the availability of trained, skilled people who operate these machines a bottleneck? Is that a problem? I wonder if he would comment on that. He has indicated that the funds that the province has received from the federal side would allow the flexibility to use those funds for the training of a larger number of the needed additional people who can work on these MRI machines. So I wonder if he sees the bottleneck at the level of training of these people to increase their supply, not at the level of availability of funds. I just wonder if he agrees with it and if he'll make a commitment to address that issue as we go through this year.

One other question. I was prompted by the minister's observations on the drug benefit plan and how the costs of that plan are moving at such a pace upwards. The sustainability is an issue that he raised. I wonder if – and it may already be the case, but I'm going to find out from the minister who can confirm this or add some information to it – there is a provincial-level drug formulary that's presently used to reduce costs of drugs that are available to patients at least when they are entitled to receive them free; that is, when they are in the hospitals. If not, would moving in that direction be a partial answer to the problem related to the increasing costs of the drug benefit plan that he is referring to?

The second question related to drug costs. Drug costs are increasing, as you said, by 17 percent, which is a very, very rapid increase, if not the fastest item with this kind of increase in drug costs. The Romanow commission – and I think the minister made it very clear he doesn't agree with many parts of it – I think talks about the catastrophic drug coverage and makes recommendations about broader consideration of prescription drug coverage perhaps in the medium to long run. Certainly, we have taken the position both in our appearance before the Romanow commission and in other places that the prescription drug coverage is something that we should seriously consider in conjunction with establishing national drug formulary or at least pursuing it seriously at the provincial level to reduce costs of drugs, which will allow us to give priority to include prescription drugs in the coverage. While we are doing this, the first priority should be given, of course, to those Albertans who are not covered, are not insured through employer health plans. I wonder: what's the position of the minister and the government on this?

My last question before I perhaps have to leave the House has to do with home care. Any plans to move in the direction of coverage of home care in order to relieve pressure which families now have to face, given that early releases from hospital have become possible, both in terms of providing care and also in terms of the costs of prescription drugs, which in some cases are very, very high during the period of home care when patients are convalescing?

So I'd ask the minister to address these questions, and if there's time remaining, I may ask another one.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, one of the challenges of dealing with the Romanow report is that it made blanket recommendations across the country. While there are some common issues ranging from home care to drugs to primary care, we're all as provinces at different starting points, and this is one of the difficulties in trying to say that we wholeheartedly agree with all of the comments and recommendations made in Mr. Romanow's report. I would say that Mr. Romanow was very thoughtful in his report, but there are a number of other reports of equal value: Senator Kirby's report, our own Mazankowski report, the Claire report in the province of Quebec, the Fyke commission report in the province of Saskatchewan, all of which are meritorious of consideration.

With respect to drugs, Mr. Chairman, you know, one of the examples that I raised in the House earlier this afternoon was the coverage of drugs that we've added to the provincial formulary, drugs called Remecade and Enbrel. These are anti-inflammatory drugs that can help benefit individuals and have been demonstra-tively shown now to help individuals suffering from rheumatoid arthritis and fistulizing Crohn's disease. Now, the costs of these drugs can be quite dramatic. They can be up to $50,000 per patient per year, and that's not for the next year. That's for the rest of an individual's life. So the costs of these drugs can be quite high, and one of the ways that we try and help reduce the costs is that both of these drugs, while on the provincial formulary, are not going to be listed generally. They're going to be under a special authorization. So individuals who suffer from rheumatoid arthritis or fistulizing Crohn's disease may find relief in another less expensive drug, but if their physician is able to provide evidence that the other drugs don't work, that only Enbrel or Remecade can provide the individual with relief, then we won't hesitate to approve that in the appropriate circumstances.

On the subject of: is there a bottleneck for the training of individuals? Clearly, Mr. Chairman, with our current system of health care as it is presently iterated, we don't have enough health professionals. We don't have enough physicians, nurses, MRI technicians, technologists, and so on. But the good news is that this is one of the areas that was addressed in both the Mazankowski report and to some degree in Senator Kirby's report dealing with health workforce issues, and we have not been slow off the mark in this. In fact, I would suggest that we have been among the fastest off the mark, some three years ago, when we increased the number of people training in health care professions dramatically. We increased enrollments in medical schools and in nursing schools, and we have produced more technologists, technicians, and other health care professionals. So we do have a commitment to increasing the number of people that we train. Specifically are there enough MRI techs? I don't know what the answer is, and I have not formulated an opinion as to whether or not that is, in fact, a bottleneck as characterized by the hon. member.

With respect to home care, Mr. Chairman, I think that while home care differs from regional health authority to regional health authority in this province, by and large it works pretty good the way it is now. So, again, one of the criticisms of the Romanow report that I think is legitimate is that if you look at our home care and compare it to other jurisdictions, we're doing pretty good. Is that to say that it's perfect? By no means is it perfect, but it would not be highest on the list of priorities for us to deal with. Our highest things on the priority list are those things that deal with other issues within the broad rubric of primary health care reform.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Go ahead.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for giving me the last chance before I leave.

The minister I think made some reference to moving ahead in the direction of establishing primary health care centres in the province. How high is this item in terms of priorities? He already made some moves in that direction, which are welcome, but I just want to get some more detail from the minister on this. And to what degree do private, for-profit operators come into the picture as the primary health care provision is expanded in the province? Do they have a role, and what's the scope of that role if they have a role in the development of the primary health care system?

Mr. Mar: Actually, in reviewing my notes, Mr. Chairman, I realized that I failed to address a question raised by the hon. member about a national drug approval process. I can report to him that in the fall of 2001 first ministers agreed that there should be a process put in place whereby we could avoid having our own approval processes and individual formularies set up province by province. There are some examples already where regionally there's been some co-operation; for example, in Atlantic Canada. My advice is that they don't have their own provincial formularies but they in fact co-ordinate with each other, and there have been some efforts made to make sure this happens nationally. That would of course have to be done carefully, but I think the consensus appears to be that the benefits of doing so would outweigh the drawbacks of having a national system.

On primary health care, Mr. Chairman, I want to express a vision for what primary health care is all about. What we want is a publicly paid for, publicly administered, high-quality, accessible health care system that provides Albertans with the services that they need when they need them in the most accountable, efficient manner possible. I note that the hon. member is concerned about whether or not there would be a role for the private sector to provide services within such a vision, and the answer is yes. There is a role. But the difference is that what we're talking about as a government is the ability to have publicly paid for services delivered under contract by private health entities, as it were. If you go into, say, a private surgical facility which would have a contract with a regional health authority to provide services to the public, such a facility is not going to be providing services to individuals because they produce a credit card at the door. Now, within such a facility, Mr. Chairman, the operative question that ought to be asked is: does this place have the people and the skills and the equipment to diagnose me and treat me so I get better? People are not going to be asking: I wonder what the rate of return on this place is; I wonder who owns it. Really, from the perspective of a patient using the services in such a facility, in my strong opinion that is a nonissue.

Dr. Pannu: Just to follow up on the last part of the answer of the minister. Thank you, Minister, for being quick and candid about this. Any plans on the part of the department to have a firm handle on the relative costs of such delivery by private providers – I understand fully when you say that the vision that you articulated includes public administration and public funding for these services delivered by whoever delivers them, and you used the word “efficiently” of course of the services to be delivered. But the issue of the cost-effectiveness of different modes by which those services are delivered is one that you have not addressed, and I hear it less and less in the comments that I hear from you and others. Is there a process in place which will tell Albertans that we get the best value for our dollar if we go the private delivery route versus the public delivery route?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, the issue of cost-effectiveness, while an important element in a decision to contract out a service, while relevant and important, is by no means the only criterion that we would use in granting an approval for a private surgical facility to provide services to a regional health authority. An example would be the services that can be safely and appropriately provided in a private surgical facility. Let us take, for example, cataract surgery. If that surgery can be done in a private surgical facility at roughly the same cost as within a public hospital but provides the benefit of being able to free up the public hospital operating suite for a more serious type of procedure, then there's surely a benefit to the individual who is waiting in line, in the queue, for the more serious surgery.

So we first of all have to say that paramount in all this is ensuring that patients are safe in having their surgeries done in facilities outside hospitals. That goes without saying. Are we experts in this? The answer is no, but surely to goodness we can place some faith in the College of Physicians and Surgeons to determine those procedures which can safely be performed outside hospitals and in private surgical facilities.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Earlier today in question period I had my questions referred by the Speaker to estimates, and I would like to address what that issue was about with the minister. The National Academy for State Health Policy in February of 2002 released a report titled State Responses to the Problem of Medical Errors. It was an analysis of recent state legislative proposals, and I'd like to just read a bit of the introduction of that report and how it relates to the questions I was going to ask earlier. It says:

It has been more than two years since the Institute of Medicine . . . released its ground breaking report To Err is Human: Building a Safer Healthcare System. The report's most conservative estimate placed the annual death toll from medical errors at 44,000 Americans per year. Even more shocking was the report's finding that the medical error epidemic claims more lives each year than do other, more recognized, leading causes of death such as motor vehicle accidents, breast cancer, or AIDS.

Also, collectively, out of this report were proposed a variety of creative strategies that were to reduce medical errors. I know I've discussed this with the minister on occasion, but among them are proposals to require mandatory reporting of pharmaceutical errors, establish patient safety centres to study the problem and proposed solutions, and to protect individuals who report errors to authorities from employer retaliation. Also, it felt that if a proposal such as this – and I know you just discussed earlier in your previous answer, Mr. Minister, off-site surgical procedures – if all of these kinds of proposals were enacted, it would be actually quite instructive. They'd provide insight, I feel, into how these problems of medical errors in the future could be addressed.

Having said that, Mr. Minister, I know that recently we've had questions as well in the Legislature about the Motta inquiry, and I think it was recommendation 4 that I read in the inquiry that reflected that annual reports were no longer being written to medical advisory boards.

So having taken just the whole picture in the context of what seems to be coming forward regarding medical error and regarding patient safety and if we extrapolate data from the United States even to Alberta, what that would mean, you know, for us as to how we would estimate what our annual death rate would be in Alberta of people that are dying each year through medical errors that are said to be preventable – I know, Mr. Minister, just from talking with you that you have a real understanding of this issue and also a passion about how we really should take the initiative to protect Albertans from avoidable harm, and that is during their encounters with the health care system.

So the questions that I was going to ask you earlier today that were referred to estimates were actually three. I had reduced it to two, but there are three, so I'd like to just put them on the record. Will you mandate and create a medical error and patient safety reporting and prevention system for Alberta? The reason I put that in the context of an Alberta-wide system is because I know that in many of our acute care facilities or long-term care facilities and whatnot there are policies and procedures in place that do address the system overall but really contained on-site. Each system can be different for medical errors and patient safety.

Also, another question I had wanted to ask you was if you would establish standards for informing patients. Well, actually, I'm not going to ask that question. I'm going to ask this other question.

An Hon. Member: Oh, ask it. Come on.

Mrs. Fritz: No. I think I'm just going to ask this other question. That had more to do with physician qualifications, but I think I'll save that one.

The other question I did want to ask you, though, was if you'd establish a regional health authority medical errors and patient safety task force, and that was to conduct a systemwide analysis of this issue and to develop interventions that would reduce medical errors. I think that overall, as we've heard from regional health authorities, they too are very interested in how this situation can be addressed. Also, I wanted to ask you if you would consider establishing in Alberta a centre that would deal with patient safety and medical errors, and in that way it could look at research, data collection, educational information, that kind of thing for Albertans, but more importantly if you would then take that as a health care quality initiative overall and report back on that to the Legislature in an annual report.

So those are just some of my questions in regard to this issue. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I could speak at some length on the subject of patient safety because it is something that I have a passion for. Let me give you an example of a patient safety issue. Eric Martinez is a six-month-old child who has a congenital heart problem. The individual, Eric, is prescribed 0.10 units of a drug called digoxin. Now, keep in mind that I'm not a physician and I don't purport to be, but the facts of this case haunt me when I think about patient safety. The writing on the prescription pad by the physician was difficult to read, and instead of getting .1 unit of digoxin, the prescription pad actually read one unit. So young Eric got 10 times the amount of digoxin that he was supposed to get for his particular condition, and Eric died.

A young girl in Medicine Hat was supposed to get surgery, and she was supposed to get oxygen hooked up to her mask. Instead of oxygen being hooked up to her mask, formaldehyde was hooked up, and the result was permanent brain damage to this little girl. In both cases, Mr. Chairman, they were medical errors that could have been prevented.

In the case of Eric Martinez what ended up happening was that the facility that allowed this error to occur started a new protocol with respect to how you write out a prescription pad. So all prescriptions must now be printed out; they cannot be handwritten. There is a protocol that if it is a point of a unit, the point has to be preceded by a zero, so it would be 0.10. So individuals would know that there's a decimal point even if it doesn't show up particularly well on the prescription pad. In this facility any pharmacist filling that prescription has the ability to call back the prescribing physician and ask whether this was the appropriate drug in the appropriate units.

In the case of hooking up an oxygen line to a formaldehyde tank, the kind of patient safety recommendation that would be made in such a case is that you have to change the couplings on your oxygen tank so that an oxygen line can only hook up to an oxygen tank and can never hook up to a formaldehyde tank. So no matter how tired or how exhausted a health care professional might be, systematically you take away the ability to make that error.

Mr. Chairman, one of the people who has been very influential in this province on the subject of patient safety is Dr. Larry Ohlhauser, who is an individual of the very highest calibre, who while registrar of the College of Physicians and Surgeons for the province of Alberta really has spearheaded initiatives with the college to improve patient safety. One of the results of that was that the royal college in Ottawa had put together a gathering of individuals to which I was invited to speak on the subject of patient safety initiatives. Also, Dr. Peter Norton, a member of the Faculty of Medicine at the University of Calgary, has written a cover paper in a periodical known as Health Care Papers on the subject of patient error, and he has been influential in this province in dealing with the issue of patient safety.

The issue of patient safety also was put on the agenda by me in my capacity as chair of the ministers of health from across Canada in our last meeting, in the fall of last year, where we brought in the heads of the patient safety foundations from Australia and the United Kingdom to speak to ministers of health on the subject of patient safety and the work done by the foundations in those two jurisdictions. I've also, Mr. Chairman, gone to the city of Chicago with Dr. Dennis Furlong, who at that time was the minister of health for the province of New Brunswick, where we took the opportunity to meet with the Patient Safety Foundation in the United States.

As a consequence, Mr. Chairman, this is a very important issue to ministers of health across Canada, and it is reflected in the recent federal budget wherein some $10 million has been set aside for the creation of a national patient safety foundation here in Canada. So I'm pleased to report that there has been some recognition of this issue by the federal government.

In answering the specific questions of the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, I'll try to answer them all together because they are somewhat related.

Mr. Chairman, I am a strong advocate of a national patient safety foundation, but even if there is not a national patient safety foundation formed, it would be my intention to do that type of work within the province of Alberta, and work done within this province should be co-ordinated with jurisdictions across Canada including, if it does come about, a national patient safety foundation. All of the elements that a patient safety foundation would have, from what we've learned from the U.K. and Australia and the United States, are that there have to be reporting procedures put in place. The hon. member asked: would we put in reporting procedures of incidents? The answer is yes. One of the important learnings from all of these foundations is that we have to take away the culture of blame as it is framed by these experts in patient safety. We need to be able to report these things without a culture of blame, that instead it be for the purposes of greater learnings to prevent such incidents from happening again in the future.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

On the specific question: would we want a patient safety foundation centre – I think that was the word used by the hon. member – located here in Alberta? I think the answer is yes. Would we put together a task force to help create the types of interventions that would prevent bad medical errors from occurring? The short answer is yes, and I think that would be part and parcel with the work that would be done by a patient safety foundation.

I thank the hon. member for raising these important questions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. There are about four areas that I would like to cover with the minister: maintaining costs of service, midwifery, active lifestyles, and then a series of questions around seniors' health care and long-term care, questions which were asked of the Minister of Seniors. It was rightly pointed out that the questions actually belong to the Minister of Health and Wellness. So that's what I'm going to try to do in the next 20 minutes or less.

I listened to the beginning of the minister's presentation in which he was talking about the increases that he had planned for his department. I'm sorry. I didn't catch the first one, but I think it was around 3 percent and then 4 percent and then around 5 percent. My concern here is: will those increases be enough to cover the increases necessary to maintain the cost of service, maintain the level of service that is currently being given? When one considers inflation, increased population, and even increased labour costs, that amounts to a certain increase every year just to keep delivering the same level of service when you look at those additional costs. So when I look at a 3 percent, a 4 percent, and a 5 percent, again give or take, is the minister confident that there is enough increase in there to maintain the level of service that we have currently, or do we have to start anticipating that there would be a budget cutback creep or a creep cutback? I don't know how you wish to phrase it, but essentially that's what would be happening if you're not putting in enough of an increase to cover those increased costs that are coming, including increased population or increased demand upon the service. Sorry; let me take that back. I don't mean the increased demand. I mean the increased population draw on the service. Then, in fact, we have less money in the whole program, and there would have to be cutbacks one way or another. So that's my first issue.

My second issue is around midwifery. Let's see; I'm now in my 14th year of lobbying this government for midwifery services. Of course, I started this when I was with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues as the executive director for that council in 1989. The council made a series of recommendations to this government, and there were in fact three specific to midwifery. This was to recognize midwifery as a profession – at that time it was in fact illegal – and that had to go through what was then professions and occupations, I think, and in fact happened. The second part of that was that there would be self-regulation, that there would be a licensing and criteria that would be set up – and that happened as well – that there was a procedure that was recognized. You have to go through certain things or take certain courses in order to be recognized as a professional in this province. We set up our own criteria for it. The third recommendation under that cluster was to cover the services of midwives under health care, and we have not achieved that yet.

I notice that on the questions that were asked of the minister on April 16, it was noted that British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec are all now covering midwifery services for women under their health care programs. I have a few other questions under that and, of course, my usual advocacy.

I continue to be frustrated because I don't understand what the holdup is with this minister and with the previous minister. We have studies. We have literally centuries of statistics and backup material from other countries, even other parts of Canada as to the success of midwifery services and incorporating that into a health care system. The minister now has the benefit of a long-running pilot project in Calgary. I believe that there was also a pilot project that was run in Edmonton. Now I note in the minister's response to the question of April 16 that he has asked for another review of funding of this and is awaiting a report or the outcome of that one way or another. What does this minister require before he will fund midwifery services? How many more studies, how many more pilot projects will be required before women in this province have access to services that have been enjoyed by women in other countries for centuries? What is the holdup here?

The third topic, Mr. Minister: active lifestyle. I have raised this same issue with the Minister of Gaming, and I will be raising it with the Minister of Community Development, but I've also raised it in this House through a series of questions, and that is the issue around granting of licences to adult athletic organizations to run casinos or bingos and thereby raise money to subsidize their activity. On the one hand, I have the Minister of Health and Wellness promoting healthy, active lifestyles not only for youth and under 18 but also for adults, and it appears at odds with the restrictions and protocol that are appearing in other departments like the Department of Gaming, where adult athletic events cannot get access to licences in order to be able to fund their activities, which are healthy lifestyle activities. So my question is to the minister. What is the dialogue? Or is there a dialogue? Are there discussions between himself, the Minister of Gaming, and the Minister of Community Development to resolve these issues around funding and promotion of healthy lifestyle activities?

Now, moving specifically into questions around seniors, I think the minister was using horizon numbers that are slightly closer in than what I have here, because I'm looking at that by 2026 one in five Albertans, 20 percent, will be 65 or older. So at this point that is a doubling of the senior population. We currently sit at around 10 percent, although we do have some pockets in Alberta where that is higher. We have waiting lists for eldercare facilities, and I'm wondering: what is the minister doing in concrete terms to plan for this increase in the senior population and the increase in the number of seniors who will be requiring long-term care? I believe the figure is that 4 percent of the senior population at any time is in a long-term care facility or in a care facility, so those numbers start to add up for us. We don't appear to have enough space now. Every day that goes on we have more seniors who are in need of those care facilities. What concrete plans does the minister have to provide the funding, particularly around staffing?

I'd like to know what the health component is that the ministry has in place to detect, handle, and stop elder abuse in care centres. I'm also interested in what action the minister is contemplating to expand that to include boarding situations and private homes. We know that most seniors who experience some kind of abuse experience it from people who are very close to them. As repugnant as it is to us to contemplate having to interfere in someone's life in that intimate a way, that's where they're abused. It's not enough to just be covering and monitoring and to have legislation available for people that are in institutional care. We have to look at the group homes, the boarding house situations, and seniors being cared for in private homes.

Last year the extended health care benefits were completely eliminated under the seniors' health care program. I'm wondering if the ministry has done any kind of follow-up evaluation to determine the effect of the cuts of that program. I mean, I know the kind of response I'm getting into my office. I'm wondering if the ministry has heard from denturists, for example, who are saying that fewer seniors are coming because the subsidy program isn't available to them in a universal program. It's only available to the most destitute seniors, who would have to apply through the special-needs program and successfully get the money to go forward. Has the ministry been tracking whether there have been problems around seniors getting dental health, dentures, eye care, et cetera? I'm interested and I would like an answer, please, on whether the minister's department is investigating any reduction or anything specific to age-related benefits that are currently available through the minister's department.

I'm wondering if there is any formal process that has been instituted so that the minister of health is working more closely with the Minister of Seniors on seniors' health issues. In the past we've had communication breakdown. The most recent and glaring example was around the elimination of the extended health care benefits program in last year's budget in which the Minister of Seniors did not appear to be aware of the eradication of that program. So I'm wondering: in the last year and, of course, now where are we with a very strong communications plan between the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Minister of Seniors?

I'm interested in what plans are contemplated, if any, around seniors and the Alberta Blue Cross program.

I'm interested in the specifics around staffing and long-term care. Is there anticipation of increasing the staffing levels or staffing ratios? At the same time I'm interested in whether the number of hours that are allocated for each resident are going to be increased. That can sound really good to someone that's not familiar with this program. Generally, I think you're told that it's something like an hour and a quarter . . . [A note was handed to the member] I can't stop now or I will lose my time. I'm sorry. You'll have to wait until I'm done, whoever this is coming from.

You're told that you've got about an hour and a quarter a day of staff time that's attending to residents, but when you consider the time to get someone up and dressed and get them down the hall for breakfast and then again for lunch and again for dinner and then bed, that's it. You've probably exceeded your time, your hour and a quarter, right there. So there's no additional care that's being offered to people. I now have way more stories than I ever wanted to know about seniors who are left in hallways of senior care facilities. Believe me; I have my own anecdotal experiences around that now because my mother is in a care facility and way more experiences than I ever wanted to have around that. So is the minister looking at increasing that time allotment?

I also ask the same question to this minister that I put to the Minister of Seniors: where is it written, where is the policy that allows senior care facilities to dictate that one bath a week is upholding the dignity and personal respect of a senior? I'd also like to know: where is the policy, where is the support documentation for seniors' care facilities who will say that it is okay or common policy to diaper seniors who are not incontinent? They're doing it because it's convenient or they are understaffed or their staff ratio is not high enough or they don't have enough time allocation. I've heard all of these. I do not understand how the ministry can claim that this is upholding a senior's dignity and personal respect to diaper a senior who does not require it for medical purposes, yet that is happening. I'd like to hear from this minister what in his department upholds that, and if he doesn't uphold it, then why is it going on?

I'd like to talk to the minister about establishment of standards of care. We don't have standards of care. We don't have standards of care legislation. As a matter of fact, when the Member for Calgary-West brought forward a motion to establish a committee to even look at standards of care, it was defeated by this Assembly. It was certainly supported by members of the opposition, so given the overwhelming numbers, I have to assume that the people that voted against it were on the government side. Why do we have no standards of care for those seniors' facilities? Is the minister contemplating standards of care anytime in the near future, within this next year, or within this three-year rolling business plan? If the minister is not contemplating legislation to bring in standards of care, why not? I think we need it.

Can the minister describe what's being anticipated in the Alberta Blue Cross review? It looks like there's an attempt to level the playing field, that Alberta Blue Cross would no longer enjoy an exemption from the 2 percent premium on private insurance programs. Can he explain that, please, and could I also have an explanation as to why the minister is not in favour or not accepting the recommendations that some board members be government nominees? Currently there are appointments of between five and nine members to the board of directors for the Alberta Blue Cross Benefits Corporation, and none of these positions is nominated by the provincial government. I'm assuming that this is an ideology of the minister not to appoint people to these positions, and I'm interested as to why.

I'm interested in what discussions have taken place between the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Minister of Seniors around provision of new accommodations, new places or new beds, for seniors particularly in the rural areas, but I'm also interested in the programs that exist in the urban areas and whether the minister has any influence on the amount of money that's being given differentially to the larger and smaller lodge management programs.

Now, I'm also noting that in the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta's second semiannual report for 2001-2002 there were some questions to the Minister of Seniors around health and wellness. There are four recommendations. Did the minister formally respond to these recommendations, and if so, could he please table a copy of his response in the House so that it can be shared with other people?

I'm aware that there is someone who's waiting to do an introduction, so I will at this point cut my remarks short to allow him to do that. I will await the response from the minister either now or, of course, in writing if he chooses to do so with the support of his staff.

Thank you.

The Chair: Before I recognize the hon. minister, I wonder if we might have the committee's agreement to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I'd also like to thank my MLA when I'm in Edmonton, Edmonton-Centre, for allowing me the opportunity to introduce some very important guests, some friends of mine from the town of Three Hills, Alberta. In the public gallery we have the mayor of the town of Three Hills, Mrs. Myrna Bauman, and the chief administrative officer, Jack Ramsden. I would ask that they rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, Edmonton-Centre asked quite a number of questions, and I'm not trained in the art of stenography, so I wasn't able to keep up with her particularly well. So it is my commitment to her that I will review Hansard and reply in writing accordingly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity here. The subject I was talking about before so many other topics came up was the regional health authorities and the boundaries of the regional health authorities and a particular concern with regional health authority No. 7, which the minister actually addressed in his opening comments. He mentioned that there were, I think, 16 different hospitals and that that would allow some development of local centres of expertise.

Nonetheless, I noticed on page 201 of the estimates that region 7's budget increase is 4.9 percent, if I've got that correct here. In principle that may be workable except that region 7 absorbs two of the most fiscally challenged of the former regional health authorities: Lakeland and WestView. I know that there is a concern that by having to absorb the problems that Lakeland and WestView faced and by virtue of not having a clear centre of operations and, in addition, by virtue of being spread literally across the province, region 7 perhaps faces – I wouldn't be surprised – the most difficult fiscal challenges of all the regions. So I'm just wondering if the minister might be able to provide some rationale for the boundaries of region 7 and any comments on its fiscal health. Do you want to do that now? Sure. Thank you.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, in looking at regional health authority boundaries, it's difficult to come up with a solution or a map that satisfies all individuals, all stakeholders, and so on, but we tried our very, very best to look at boundaries that were based upon patient flow patterns to try and minimize the difficulties associated with, for example, inflow and outflow or patient exports. There was some desire on the part of the individuals who were within the previous regions known as Aspen, Lakeland, and WestView to move things together.

It would be premature, Mr. Chairman, for us to say that there will be a financial challenge there. We don't know yet, because until such time as the regional health authority starts to work on its business plan and presents it, it will be difficult to say whether or not they will have a financial challenge. But certainly we have always expressed that we want regional health authorities to succeed, and we'll take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the plans that they put in place are appropriate ones and that they are ones which are sustainable and affordable.

Dr. Taft: All right. Well, I guess this illustrates the problem with establishing a budget for the regional health authority without the business plan in place, but we have visited that issue several times.

Another big change in the health care system this year is the integration of the Mental Health Board with the regional health authorities, and that raises questions around the two large mental health hospitals: Alberta Hospital Edmonton and Alberta Hospital Ponoka. I'll be honest with you. I'm not on top of the status of those two particular facilities, but I am very interested in particular about the future of Alberta Hospital Ponoka. Will it continue with the sort of range of services it has now? Are there significant changes being considered for its use and its organization or administration? I would value the minister's response to that in particular.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I indicated in my opening comments the four areas where there would be a continuing role for a provincewide Mental Health Board, things like, for example, aboriginal mental health, and another example would be forensic psychiatry. All the other services are being devolved into the regional health authorities, and here's the reason why. What we want to make sure is that mental health issues are integrated into the so-called physical health system so that hopefully someday we'll never consider looking at the treatment of a broken mind any differently than we would treat a broken arm, and it's for that reason that we want to integrate mental health services into the regional health authorities.

With respect to the operations of Alberta Hospital Edmonton and Alberta Hospital Ponoka they will be under the purview of the regional health authorities that are covered in those areas, but they will continue to provide services to Albertans throughout the province. That would also be the case with our facilities in places like Claresholm and Raymond, Mr. Chairman.

So, yes, there will be an ongoing, continuing role for the important services being done at Alberta Hospital Ponoka and Alberta Hospital Edmonton. They will come under the purview of the regional health authorities, but we want to assure the hon. member and Albertans that money which we presently spend on mental health will continue to be spent on mental health and that with this integration of mental health services into regional health authorities by no means should people draw the conclusion that we're going to allow resources devoted to the treatment of mental health issues to be simply diverted to the balance of the system. That is not the intention.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. To specifically follow up with Alberta Hospital Ponoka, there have been some reports to me that some aspects of this facility may be being considered for some aspects of privatization of one way or another. I assume that that would be a decision under the regional health authority and that would have to come forward in the business plan. Does this budget take that issue into consideration? Are there moves afoot to contract out Alberta Hospital Ponoka or otherwise privatize some of that facility?

Mr. Mar: Not that I'm aware of, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Taft: Looking over my notes and over the estimates, there's some particular reference to Alberta Wellnet. I'm on page 199 of the estimates. Alberta Wellnet has consumed millions and millions of dollars of public money. I understand that there was an audit being done of Wellnet – that's my understanding at least – and there are some curious shifts in the numbers for Alberta Wellnet which, frankly, at least on page 199, make it a bit hard to follow from year to year. It looks like there's a significant increase in the investment in Alberta Wellnet this year. Could the minister elaborate somewhat on how we are to interpret the details behind these numbers on page 199 with Wellnet? What's happening there? If there is an audit under way, how is the audit proceeding?

Thank you.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I am not able to provide details for the presentation of the numbers before you as asked for by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, but I can say that we are increasing our commitment to electronic health records, which, of course, are part of Wellnet, and that we hope to have an electronic health record that will be up and running by March of 2004. We are devoting necessary resources to make sure that happens.

Now, many people would ask: why is an electronic health record important? I think that when people see the applications of how it would work, they would understand why it's important to do. We want to be able to ensure that if an individual gets injured in a car accident in Pincher Creek, Alberta, but they're a resident of Red Deer, the emergency team that sees them in Pincher Creek is able to call up a portion of their health record, see what their blood type is, see what kinds of medications they're on, find out that they are an epileptic and so on, and that would have a profound influence on the type of treatment that is being given to them.

We want to make sure that we try to reduce the number of unnecessary diagnostic tests. Whenever we hear the expression "Mrs. Smith, we need a new X-ray," that's often an euphuism for "We can't find the old one, so let's take another one." An electronic health record would make that diagnostic test available immediately.

In the area of the pharmacy information network if you get a prescription prescribed by another physician who is not familiar with your file, a pharmacist should be able to access that portion of your health record that would show that you are already on an existing medication that conflicts with what you've been prescribed. That conflict can result in a serious conflict where you can have a bad medical error. As a result, the ability to use an electronic health record to flag those types of errors would be very important.

I can try to provide the information that the hon. member is looking for. I know that it was much more specific than the outline that I've given, but I'll be happy to do that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the offer from the minister. Just on Wellnet, which is one of many health initiatives that the minister is leading, to his credit, from page 199 it does look like about $6.3 million is being spent on equipment this year for Wellnet, so I would ask the minister to provide I guess in writing subsequent to today a list with some detail of what equipment is being purchased for Alberta Wellnet and from whom and for what purpose.

Among other health initiatives and innovations the minister is pursuing is the Alberta wait list registry, which I think you mentioned in your opening remarks earlier today in question period or sometime very recently. I'm wondering if the minister or his department has evidence from other jurisdictions or models from elsewhere that it's following for this service that would indicate that this kind of a registry (a) is workable and (b) is going to presumably shorten wait lists or improve efficiencies. Or let me put it the other way around: are we so far out ahead of the rest of the world on this one that we're blazing the trail alone? But if there are precedents or models that we're following, I'd be quite interested in those. How will we know if the wait list is actually working? Are there some performance measures that we will be able to judge it against when we come to this point next year? Those kinds of things would be helpful. Of course, how much is it going to cost? I don't believe that it's specifically itemized in here.

Last year the minister set a very bold goal for himself which was to have 50 percent of physicians on alternate payment programs within I think it was three years. Some progress on how that's going would be much appreciated. What kinds of alternate payment programs are we looking at? Are we looking at models through which clinics are set up which are not just run by physicians but are actually run on a community health model where perhaps the key decisions are made by a team of people or by nurse practitioners? What's the range of models or alternate programs that we're following? How's progress coming on that? I felt at the time that it was a very ambitious goal for the minister to set, and I'm sure he's pursued it vigorously. I'd be interested in any reports on that.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, on the subject of a wait list registry I can't claim that we've blazed a trail, in the words of the hon. member, in every single area. We do our very best to try to find good ideas whether they are also within Canada or in other jurisdictions, and we ask ourselves whether they are adaptable to our own situation in this province. Some effort was made to look closely at the wait list registry that has been set up in the province of British Columbia. People would ask: well, why does that provide assistance in terms of shortening wait lists, or why would the information being available on the Internet be of importance? Perhaps I can best illustrate it by an example.

One of our colleagues in the Legislature was in need of a particular type of surgery. The wait list in the city of Edmonton at a facility was something in the range of nine months, but this individual, who had some knowledge of services that were provided in other parts of the province, found out that the very same service could be provided in Camrose, and instead of waiting nine months it could've been done in two weeks. So the individual was perfectly happy driving out to Camrose, getting the service done, reported 100 percent satisfaction with the particular service. Without the benefit of a wait list it would be difficult for Albertans to know where they might go if they chose. We are of course not compelling people or telling you: you must go to a particular place. But if you have the information in front of you, you may want to choose to do that.

People sometimes – and this was the experience in British Columbia – would say: look; I'm waiting 12 months to see a specialist. In fact, they weren't waiting to see a specialist. They were waiting 12 months to see a particular specialist. An individual may choose to wait for Dr. Brown for 12 months, or they might want to see another physician. Now, if they think that Dr. Brown is the only physician that can provide them the kind of special services that they require, then perhaps at least they would understand that Dr. Brown cannot be duplicated and cannot do more services than are available in the schedule of Dr. Brown the physician. So that's the reason why the wait list registry is an important point in terms of giving Albertans information about who it is they're waiting for, and if they choose, they can go to a shorter wait list being provided by another physician or specialist.

With respect to APPs, yes, it is an aggressive goal to have 50 percent of our doctors on an APP, and I should say that the goal of having that many physicians on an alternative payment plan is not in and of itself a goal. It is a tool for getting to a more important goal of helping facilitate multidisciplinary practices of health care providers, including physicians working in teams and remunerating physicians appropriately for working within that team.

An example that I often use, Mr. Chairman, is my two doctors named Wong, doctors Wong and Wong. My dentist in Calgary is Leo. My physician here in Edmonton is Paul. When I see Leo in Calgary, nobody ever questions the fact that we pay Leo's office for services provided by someone other than Leo. His dental hygienist is very competent and capable of cleaning the teeth in my mouth – and perhaps she even does it better than Leo – and nobody every questions the fact that we remunerate his office for services provided by someone other than Leo. Of course, those things which Leo needs to see he works on in my mouth. When I see Paul, on the other hand, the only time that we remunerate Paul's office, my physician, is when Paul actually sees me, even though there may be certain types of things that I could use that could be perfectly and competently dealt with by a physiotherapist or by a pharmacist or by an occupational therapist, or it might be a licensed practical nurse giving me my annual flu shot.

So that's the reason why we want to be aggressive in our targets with APPs. It's not because we want doctors on an APP. It's because it provides a way of remunerating physicians that encourages them to work within multidisciplinary teams.

I don't have statistics actually at my fingertips on the number of doctors who have expressed an interest in moving in this direction. Of course, it is part of our negotiations with the Alberta Medical Association. I can share, though, with the hon. member a survey that was done I believe about a year ago that was found in the Canadian Medical Association Journal about physicians looking for different ways to be remunerated. In the survey of the CMA's membership it was found that some 30 percent, roughly a third of doctors, liked fee for service, which meant that some two-thirds were looking for some other way of being remunerated for their services, either by salary or by some combination of salary and fee for service. So, again, for some types of practice fee for service should continue, and it would be appropriate. In other types of practice physicians themselves may choose to have some other form of payment. If the CMA survey results appear to be accurate, then the 50 percent mark of getting doctors in APPs perhaps should be looked at in context and is perhaps not out of the range of possibilities.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to confirm our process this afternoon – I genuinely appreciate the minister's comments – when you haven't responded for obvious reasons to specific questions, can I assume that your staff will have a look at Hansard and respond?

Mr. Mar: Yes, sir.

Dr. Taft: That's great. Thank you very much.

Moving on to the sensitive topic of public/private partnerships, I understand that this has come up a few times with other ministers, the Minister of Infrastructure in particular. There are literally volumes of experience with public/private partnerships in health facilities in other jurisdictions. Britain and Australia come to mind, for example. I am hoping that issues around considerations of public/private partnerships in health care aren't simply left to the Department of Infrastructure but also would involve the Department of Health and Wellness and, I suppose, the regional health authorities as well. So I'm wondering if the minister could tell us what work his department has done on examining public/private partnerships as feasible or not, as wise or unwise, what circumstances they have failed in, what circumstances perhaps they have succeeded in, a sort of cost-benefit assessment of public/private partnerships that we would hope will be done throughout the government. If there is work done by his department on that, some summary or file or something on that would be quite interesting to see.

I will move on to other subjects related directly to the estimates, given that we're starting to run down on time. On page 198 there's a whole series of questions that come out of the estimates. One that jumps out is ambulance services. There is a marked increase in funding for ambulance services from, well, basically $43 million last year to almost $57 million this year, an increase of $14 million, or about a third. I'm wondering how this dramatic increase is to be explained and if the minister could provide any more detail subsequently to explain why the increase in ambulance services.

Continuing on the same page, some interesting shifts in the funding for the human tissue and blood services, line 2.2.3. It looks like there's been a complete shift in the funding of that service from general revenues now to lotteries, and my fundamental concern there is: how reliable is that? That seems to take what is a core health service out of the stable funding that's provided by general revenue and put it under the kind of year-to-year allocation of lottery funding. So we lose some security there. I do recall a commitment made some years ago by this government that lottery funds would not be used for core services, so I find I'm getting a bit nervous around that particular trend.

The health innovation fund, which is 2.2.10, has run its three-year cycle; it's finished. There are no more funds this year, so we're down this year to zero from almost $6 million last year. It seems to be somewhat similar to – well, I won't draw on any other parallels, but it makes me wonder what's happened to those projects that were funded through the health innovation fund. Have they found funding homes somewhere else in the department or in the regional authorities, or are we simply leaving them behind? Are they being entirely scrapped? Some explanation of how that innovation fund is playing out would be particularly valuable.

Would you like to respond now, Mr. Minister?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: I'll be quick. Mr. Chairman, I'll be happy to again commit on the record to the hon. member that any details that I don't have at my fingertips with respect to presentations of numbers I'll be happy to have my department review and reply to the hon. member in writing.

On the subject of private/public partnerships I can say that the hon. member is correct that there are some experiences in other jurisdictions that have not been particularly good, but there have been others that have been good. In this regard, Mr. Chairman, you know, I have met personally with the minister of health from Sweden. He indicated to me that one of the great difficulties that they had in one of their privatization initiatives was with respect to one of their hospitals, which he described as the crown jewel of their health care system. He was quite impressed with our own legislation here in Alberta that prohibited the privatization of hospitals, but he did indicate that in other areas there were some successes with respect to using private capital facilities, or what we would call private surgical facilities, in terms of being able to have the private sector provide services under contract to the public sector.

More recently, Mr. Chairman, the Hon. John Hutton, the Secretary of Health for the United Kingdom, was passing through Alberta, and I took the opportunity to meet with him to discuss some of their initiatives in the U.K. Again, there have been some things that have been done in the NHS in the last 40 years, some of which have been successful and some of which have not. We have taken the benefit of their experience in formulating our own policy.

Dr. Taft: In view of the time that satisfies my questions for the day. I appreciate the responses from the minister and look forward to his written answers.

Thank you.

The Chair: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
 Operating Expense and
 Equipment/Inventory Purchases $7,343,791,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.
 The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Health and Wellness: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $7,343,791,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Those members who would concur with this report, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those who are opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: The motion is carried.
 The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 this evening, at which time we'll return in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:10 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 29, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/29

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Before I recognize the hon. minister, is anybody here wanting to introduce anyone in the gallery today?

Hon. members, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Well, thank you very much. I think we'd be remiss if we didn't introduce an absolutely wonderful crowd of young Albertans from all over Alberta that are here with us and that we were very capably entertained and hosted with this evening with the Speaker. They're seated up in the members' gallery and in the public gallery, I understand. I think we should say thank you for just a wonderful time with some of the greatest, brightest, best, and our future leaders.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Government Services

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am certainly pleased to see that the Minister of Children's Services did introduce all those folks because I take a little bit of pride in knowing all the people that are in my department by name, and I was searching for names as I was looking at the faces up there. They were awfully young to be in some of the areas of our department, but we certainly welcome them to the Legislature here tonight.

There are some folks sitting in front of the youth that were just introduced that are part of my staff, and I'd like to take the opportunity to introduce them this evening. My deputy minister, of course, Roger Jackson, who I have introduced in this Assembly many times. Along with him tonight is Mike Reynolds, who is the executive director of our private agents registry and support division of the department. We have also Wilma Haas, as the managing director of Service Alberta, and Sue Bohaichuk, who is our senior financial officer. As well, we have Tom Thackeray with us, who is the executive director of information management, access and privacy, a very important part of our department. As well, we have Dave Rehill, who is the CEO of the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, and for her first time in the Legislature – this is really something – Megan Parker, my director of communications. Megan, why don't you just stand up so that we all know who you are. Her first time in the Legislature, and she was looking rather forward to seeing the activities that are going on here this evening. As well, at the very opposite end my executive assistant, David Keto, is up there too.

Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity, and tonight I'll be providing, first of all, a brief overview of our business plan and our financial plan and how it reflects on the two major core businesses that we have in Government Services. I look forward to the next two hours of questions and answers. I will provide as many answers as I possibly can through the dialogue back and forth. If the opposition and members of the government side after the first hour want to ask a few questions or series of questions, I'll certainly try my best to answer those. Any that we're not successful in answering this evening, we'll make sure that we review Hansard, and we also have our staff up there taking notes, and we will get as many answers as we can back to the individuals who ask questions on behalf of their constituents.

I'd like to, first of all, as I said, take a look at the two major core businesses in Government Services. First, we provide Albertans with a full range of licensing, registry, and consumer protection services. Our second mandate is to lead service improvement initiatives on behalf of the government of Alberta, so we'll have an external service to Albertans and we'll have an internal service to government and government agencies and government departments.

Our ministry is focused on providing top quality customer service, and in keeping with that philosophy, we have clarified our vision to read, "Albertans served with excellence through innovative leadership." Our mission remains to serve Albertans by providing effective access to government information and services, protecting their privacy, and promoting a fair marketplace. To achieve this mission, we have carefully prioritized our programs and our services to focus our resources in the most critical goals.

Licensing and registration services is our first goal, and it is the very basic foundation of our business. It is accessible and secure and accurate and competitively placed licensing and registry services to the people of Alberta. While some of these services are delivered directly by the ministry, most are delivered through neighbourhood registry agents or the very strength of our service to Albertans on Main Street Alberta or through the Internet. One of the ways in which we measure success is by ensuring that clients are satisfied with the quality of these services. For the past year I'm happy to report that client satisfaction with these services remains very high, and it ranges anywhere from 80 percent to 94 percent.

A key upcoming initiative is the new Alberta driver's licence that employs advanced technology to protect against counterfeit and fraud. I am proud to say that as a result of this initiative, Albertans will soon be carrying the most secure drivers' licences in North America. Additional funding for this project has been provided in our 2003-2004 budget, and we look forward to rolling out the first new licences in the coming months. This will not – let me repeat that, Mr. Chairman – this will not result in any fee increase nor will other registry fees be increased through this budget. In fact, we actually strive to keep these fees affordable, and all of our services remain competitively priced in comparison to other jurisdictions.

Another key initiative is the continuing renewal of the personal property, land titles, and motor vehicle registries, which process approximately 35 million transactions a year, Mr. Chairman. The size and complexity of these systems means several implementation phases spanning a number of years as we update obsolete technology and strive to keep pace with the growing demands that are placed upon us. Our registry and licensing program is expected to generate over $317 million in revenue in the year 2003-2004 and consume 82 percent, or $58.6 million, of our resources.

When it comes to consumer protection, Mr. Chairman, informed consumers and businesses and a high standard of marketplace conduct is our second goal. Marketplace issues range from charitable fund-raising to home renovation to loan and collection practices. A key initiative this particular year is a review of the Residential Tenancies Act and Mobile Home Sites Tenancies Act. Nearly one-third of all Albertans rent their accommodation, and if you figure that out, it's just under a million people in this province who rent their accommodation. We need to ensure that tenancy legislation remains relevant to today's challenges in the marketplace. To this end we have entered into significant consultation with Albertans and will continue to solicit feedback on whatever options or mechanisms for an appropriate . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, hon. members. I'm sorry, hon. minister, to interject on you, but the noise level in the room is getting fairly high. Members who want to listen to the debate are unable to hear the minister speak, so kindly afford him the courtesy to continue speaking with silence.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I could speak louder if that was necessary.

We will continue look for options such as a mechanism for appropriate dispute resolution outside the court system.

Investigative services will continue to focus on the most serious violations such as deceptive marketing practices that may be practised by unscrupulous dealers. These violations often cause considerable losses to vulnerable consumers, and probably the biggest example we have of that is our seniors. Some of those losses are recovered as a result of our ministry's investigation efforts. For an example, in 2002-2003 there were over 2,300 investigations that were completed. Those investigations that were completed resulted in more than $2.8 million being recovered and turned back to Albertans.

Our call centre will continue to respond to approximately 90,000 consumer-related calls from Albertans in all areas of the province, and our measures of success are based on client satisfaction with investigative services and our call centres as well as consumer tip sheets. Those successes range from 76 to 86 percent. The consumer programs account for 12 percent, or $8.8 million, of our resources.

The Service Alberta initiative is our third goal, and this provides a service environment that enables Albertans to access government information and services using the methods that they are most comfortable with. When fully implemented, Albertans will be able to conveniently and easily access all government of Alberta services either through the Internet, telephone, mail, fax, and even over the counter, all the while ensuring that their privacy is protected. Service Alberta's primary measure of success is client satisfaction with services. As we move forward, we will also track the increase in the number of transactions of services that are available on-line. Overall, resources dedicated to the Service Alberta initiative account for just under 2 percent, or $1.3 million, of our expenses.

Under government support services our fourth goal is effective access to information, protection of privacy, and management of government information. Key initiatives include the new privacy legislation for the private sector and amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, that are presently before this House. Specifically, we need to ensure that these acts are understood and administered appropriately. We will also continue to promote effective ways of managing the government's records by providing advice on standards and best practices. We will offer training and encourage cross-government co-ordination and co-operation in these efforts. This program uses nearly 4 percent, or $2.6 million, of our resources.

The Alberta Corporate Service Centre reflects this government's commitment to a shared services model for internal administrative services. A detailed business plan has been prepared, which you will find on page 197, and the vision of ACSC, as it's known, is to become a globally recognized leader in the delivery of shared services while delivering cost savings for ministries and obtaining a high level of client satisfaction. The bulk of ACSC's direct service delivery costs, or $144.3 million, is billed back to the ministries that we do the service for on a cost recovery, user-pay basis. The remaining expenditures of $11.3 million are for central services such as supply management, telecommunications, and records management. We will continue to implement best practices and streamline the way services are delivered so that they will be essential to ACSC's success in achieving those cost savings.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, our ministry has a major impact on the lives of Albertans, and we are proud of our service levels. This business plan and budget represents our best effort to maintain the services that Albertans have come to expect. I want to thank the Assembly for this opportunity to present our priorities, and I look forward to addressing those questions and the series of questions that may come from the members in the House. As I said, I will do my best to answer as many as I can this evening, and for any that we do not answer, we'll review Hansard and get the written answers back to those people that are representing their constituents here this evening.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to participate in these estimates this evening on Government Services, and I'd like to thank all of the minister's staff who are here this evening and congratulate them on a job well done over the year. I've had an opportunity to work with some of them on the FOIP committee, and that was a distinct pleasure. They were very professional. They were very good at providing information and were really just generally a pleasure to work with.

An Hon. Member: They're outstanding.

Ms Carlson: Yeah, they were outstanding; they were very good.

So that was a great experience, as was the experience of working with this particular minister. While I don't work with him as often now that he's a minister in this department, when he was the chair of PNWER, Pacific Northwest Economic Region, we had an excellent working relationship, and that was a good example of how all parties in the Legislature can achieve objectives that are good for the province of Alberta, so I thank him for that in the past.

My first comments are on the performance measures as I see them here in the budget. For the 10 years since this government has started to introduce performance measures and tried to introduce performance measures, I finally see some that actually measure something concrete that we can compare year-to-year performance and other jurisdictional performance. So I would really congratulate the minister and his staff on the way they have laid out these performance measures and what they're actually measuring, which is something tangible, which is not what happens in many other departments. So I would urge other ministries to take a look at this particular presentation and consider using it in the future because it actually gives us usable information and I have something here that I can compare year-to-year work done in the ministry. So I think that's a very good thing and a positive move forward.

I'll ask questions for about 15 or 20 minutes, questions the minister can answer, and then my colleague will ask some questions at that time. My first one is on the comments you made on tenancy registration. Mr. Minister, are you expecting to include at some time some kind of protection for people who are involved in lifelong leases, which really are a form of rental agreement which are for the most part entered into by seniors? In some cases we have already seen with this new tenancy kind of agreement problems in the marketplace, so if you could comment on that.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, did you want to comment?

Mr. Coutts: Well, first of all, Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for the compliments to our staff. I have a great staff; I really do. I appreciate your comments because everything that you say is stuff that they do every day not just for me as minister, but they do it for Albertans. As I said in my comments, I think we do about 35 million transactions a year both for Albertans and within government. They have developed systems; they have developed processes to handle all the calls that come in. It's encouraging to see people with that kind of dedication. I know that our ladies in the call centre sometimes stay over just to make sure that they handle all the calls, and of course those are the kinds of things that help our performance measures.

I also want to say how much I appreciate your comment regarding the performance measures that have been developed by the staff. It's kind of easy for us in Government Services because we have some fairly hard data that we can call upon from year to year to compare to, to make the comparisons that we need to decide whether or not we're actually doing the job. Our staff up there also go ahead, go out and do telephone calls and forums and focus groups as well as making sure that they follow up on some of the call centre's inquiries to see if people are really, really satisfied with our performance. That's what helps us in developing these performance measures, and that's what helps us in getting some of the satisfaction that you see up to 96 percent, between the high 80s and the low 90s percentage of satisfaction with our services. So I want to thank you very, very much for that. Again, the performance measures that we've developed are based on pretty sound hard data.

In terms of your question on life leases this is a new area of accommodation. Yes, we've had a few calls to the office, to our call centres, and to our department. I believe we've tracked about 24 of them to this date. The majority of those calls ask things like, "Is there legislation in place, and what type of legislation would cover this?" making general inquiries as to the life leases. Basically, because it's so new, we're continuing to monitor the whole process of how life leases are developing. If it becomes a problem and there's a need for legislation, we'll certainly take a look at what legislation we have that could fit life leases. As a matter of fact, we're doing that now. If there's no legislation that will fit that, then we will look down the road – if there's a need for life lease legislation, we'll put together a stakeholder group and we'll go out there and do some consultation, like we've always done on these matters, and we'll put together and develop the appropriate legislation, but only if it's needed.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My next set of questions is around registries. The first is with regard to the concern of a constituent who came into my office. An elderly fellow, a fellow in his early 90s, came in and brought copies of a new registration certificate he had for a vehicle that he had purchased, and he was very upset. What had happened was that about 10 years ago his wife had died and he had remarried and the car had been in his former wife's name and his name. He never thought to go and change the registration after she died. They drove that car for about 10 years, sold it, bought a new one, and went in to get the new one registered. He goes in with his wife of now just over 10 years, gives the owner of the registry shop both of their licences and all of their particulars, and the fellow gives them the new registration and new licence plate. They go home and then take a good look at it. What happened? It's in the deceased wife's name.

Now, this is an elderly couple. The new wife was very upset, and the elderly gentleman was also very upset. He took a couple of days to calm himself down, went back to the registry, talked to the owner, who got mad at him and said: you had an obligation to take a look at these papers before you signed them and now it's a big problem for us to fix this and this is what you have to do. Well, once again, he got so upset he couldn't talk to the fellow. He went home and settled down for a couple of days and then thought he'd just come and tell me what happened. He didn't want me to call the owner of the registry service or anything of that nature, but he really wanted his representative to know and understand the problem that had occurred and the service that he had gotten. Having been a lifelong resident of Alberta, he was very used to the old system, which really wasn't very efficient in terms of lineups and so on and so forth, but he said that at least there he knew who to complain to where he could get some sort of tangible results. What advice would you give to this gentleman in the future and to anybody whom I have to advise in terms of when they have an issue with registry companies and they're dealing with the owner in the first instance? Who do they go to with concerns and complaints?

Mr. Coutts: Well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie knows me well enough that I would hope she would have given me a call in this kind of a situation. The competent staff that we have – Laurie Beveridge, the assistant deputy minister in charge of registries, and Mike Reynolds, who is here tonight, in charge of registry agents' support – would have handled a situation like that very, very quickly.

As a matter of fact, I'm going to say at the outset that we provide manuals to every one of our registry agents. I've sat in front of some registry agents' offices, and they have shown me the manuals that they have to comply with. The manuals – there are about four or five of them, about this high stacked one on top of the other – have all the rules and all the regulations and all the things that registry agents should be doing in terms of making sure that that customer that is coming to their door will be looked after in a proper manner and that the processes are put in place for that. If that doesn't happen, then of course our office would take the phone call, and we would turn it over to our staff to handle the situation. We do that on a daily basis.

In addition to that mechanism that's in place, we also have a call centre for registry agents with a staff of around 20 people across this province. If they have a particular problem or any of their staff have a particular problem, they can phone that call centre. It's an actual registry agents' support. They will go through the manuals and help a registry agent or their staff through any kind of difficulty. Whether it be through land titles, for personal property, for corporate registries, for a driver's licence, for automobile registration, they would help them through that. So the mechanisms are in place. It's just a matter of our making sure that the registry agents' offices follow those procedures, and if they don't, well then certainly come back to us.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. I will share this information with this gentleman, and I'm sure he'll be quite satisfied with that.

Now, the second question on registries is that we've had some incidents in the past year where the security of office premises and the conduct of the employees have come into question. So could you expand for us this evening on what you have done to address those particular issues?

If you could give us some more information on the new secure driver's licence that you talked about. Why did you do it now? What did you see as the need to do it? When are other jurisdictions going to also follow suit? Those kinds of things.

Mr. Coutts: Actually a very, very good question, your first question, on some of the activities that we found in registry agents' offices and also some of the things that were happening outside registry agents' offices and people with break-ins and that type of thing. If I can just take a moment to outline what we do when we set up a registry agent, some of the things that we do on the security side. To become an agent, the applicants must provide a criminal record check and business references, and they must go through financial disclosures, because we want to make sure that the owner and the people that we're under contract with are the most reputable people and have the dollars behind them to make that a successful business. When it comes to staff, staff hired by agents must undergo a criminal record check. That's one of the things that we've implemented. Registry agents also must sign a code of conduct and ethics, and there are penalties for noncompliance. Those penalties include dismissal, and we've had some instances of late where those penalties have been put in place.

What we've also undertaken in the last six months is an enhanced training and accreditation program. Those particular programs are now going to be enhanced, and we're progressing on them as we speak. We want to make sure that the registry agents' employees are the very, very best in the province because they're handling some very, very sensitive information.

We've also advised all registry agents in terms of security of their premises of a mandatory alarm requirement policy, and that came into effect in October of 2002. That's going to require all agents to have a monitored security alarm system to improve protection against the theft of their equipment, which is specialized equipment although it be old. At this point in time definitely the materials that are being used to produce drivers' licences are about 20 years old, and we can't get any more parts when this equipment breaks down. That's why we're getting into a new driver's licence, which I'll talk about in just a moment.

We continue to monitor also an agent's performance through compliance audits. We do monthly samplings of their transactions, and we do assessments against our performance standards and our best practices. We've set up a new investigative unit. It's going to be headed by a senior law enforcement official, and we're putting that in place early this year, in 2003, so that we can investigate and respond to fraud vulnerability. We think that this investigative unit will help us when it comes to dealing with security within our registry agents' offices.

When we had a number of break-ins, we acted immediately with random security patrols, particularly in our major centres in our downtown cores, and that continues to be implemented. The other thing that I thought was important is that – and I determined this when I was in my own business – sometimes the front-end staff don't always identify or are not aware of unscrupulous individuals. So we're doing some staff training. Our investigative unit is looking at staff training to help people identify unscrupulous people that may be coming into a registry agent's office. We will be continuing to conduct these workshops for staff well into September of this year.

Now, when it comes to the driver's licence, with this old equipment that we had, we knew that we needed to strengthen our existing security on drivers' licences. We wanted to protect the integrity of our driver's licence. You say: why now? Well, it's because the equipment that we have is very, very old, and we had to upgrade and replace it. As a result, we put a request for proposals out there based on a very, very secure card. We've done some investigations, and we know that a laser-imprinted card on polycarbonate stock is the most secure card that we can get, and that's what we went out with the request for proposal on. When will it happen? As I said in my opening comments, we have the RFP process out there, and it hasn't been completed yet, so I'm not at liberty to give details on that. However, we're hoping to roll that out in mid to late summer so that Albertans can get the most secure card in North America.

Ms Carlson: A follow-up question on that. Will people be expected to get a new driver's licence immediately, or will it follow the traditional renewal process?

My last question in this set would be on lobbyist registration. If we had a lobbyist registration program in this province, I would expect it to be run out of this ministry. Could you give us your comments on why you think one isn't necessary?

Mr. Coutts: Your first question was on the driver's licence?

Ms Carlson: Do people have to renew immediately or over the regular period of time?

Mr. Coutts: When we roll out with the new driver's licence, if everyone in the province was to get one immediately, we couldn't handle the volume. So what we're suggesting is that when your licence comes up for renewal, that would be the time when you could go ahead, just during the normal time of renewal. When your licence expires, you can go ahead and get a new one because that will keep the flow going and keep things going well for us and keep the service up, those performance measures that we're used to.

A lobbyist registry would not affect our department if you're thinking of our department being involved in registering and having the equipment to have a lobbyist registry. Our department was asked to do a review of lobbyist registries, and we found a couple of things. The expense to set up a lobbyist registry in comparison to the results of that lobbyist registry would not be warranted, and therefore the recommendation was made that we do not do a lobbyist registry. It would not come under my department to do that anyway, but we did the research on it and determined that.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, just one small follow-up. Is that information on the study you did public, or are parts of it available to be shared with the Legislature?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Chairman, I do believe that we tabled that right in this House. I believe it was in the spring of 2002. But I'll tell you what I will do. I will make sure that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie gets a copy of that directly from our office over to her office. The staff are nodding, and they say: it will be done.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few questions on Government Services. There's been a lot of concern about the registries, and I wonder just exactly how many main street registries we now have in the province. What is the number?

The minister talked about some actions that have been taken to try to ensure that the registries are operating openly and honestly and dealing appropriately with information. He mentioned a number of things. But with respect to the accreditation is that going to be a prerequisite for working in a registry, that you be accredited by the department? I think the public confidence in registries has been somewhat shaken with the events with respect to break-ins and subsequent events.

What other kinds of things is the government doing to ensure that down the road they're warding off any potential problems? It seems that we've had to react to things as they've happened. The minister did mention a couple of things, but there are some other worries about registries and the integrity of those people operating registries. I don't think I'm assured by knowing that they're people with big bank accounts, that that is a prerequisite. My concern is that they are reputable individuals. Is there any bonding, or is there any penalty if their registry somehow or other falls into disrepute or fails to carry out the mandate? I know that it may be difficult. We talked about the alarm system that's now in place for the registries, the mandatory alarm system I think I heard him say, but what other security arrangements are there in terms of the backup information that's available for the operations of those registry offices? A few questions there about the registries and my concerns. I think the public does need reassurance that things are as they should be.

Moving on, if I might, a huge area of concern is marketplace conduct. There have been some real problems the last little while and for us in our constituency a continuing problem with condominiums and their builders and the people that are involved in constructing them and in selling them. I can give you the example – and it's been around for a long time now – of the builder that came into the constituency and built a condominium that subsequently rotted and started to fall apart. Despite the best efforts of the owners they were left with huge bills to replace and repair a building that was less than 10 years old, and the places that they looked to for assurance, where they thought they had some security and would bail them out if they ran into this kind of trouble, the new home warranty, failed them. They find themselves now in court suing everyone: the engineers on the project, the architect, the owner. But what really has rubbed salt into the wound is that they find that the builder is now off in another city in the province building condominiums under another name.

So there's that whole issue of consumer protection, and it's an area where I don't think "buyer beware" is good enough. A number of these individuals were people on fixed incomes who had sold their homes and moved into what they thought was going to be a brand-new facility that would carry them for the rest of their days only to find themselves facing huge, huge outlays of money and no one that really would come in and take charge of the situation and help them out. So I wonder what's being done in this area and if there's any kind of hope that groups that may find themselves in similar situations in the future can look forward to.

The second one, of course, is electricity. I was looking through the material. Where in the department's performance objectives would we see reflected – or would we? – the public dissatisfaction with the handling of electricity bills and the marketing that's gone on and the general confusion that prevails? Again, it seems that consumers have been left out there with just having to take some really strong and outrageous actions to get the attention of the government, and it would seem to me that consumer protection in the province would not force that kind of action on citizens.

I have some questions about the privacy legislation and the consistent application of that legislation. I note that the government requires school boards and I believe health authorities to publish the salaries of superintendents and CEOs. I know they do of superintendents. Yet when we had some, I believe, written questions in this House, similar questions about deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers in government departments, the government retreated behind the FOIP Act and said that that information isn't available. Interestingly enough, it appears in some of the government departments' annual reports. So in terms of consistency what is the rule that's followed in terms of making that information public? Again, we're going to be looking at Children's Services this evening and their provisions in the Children's Services Bill 24 that would say: notwithstanding the FOIP Act this act prevails. So where in the hierarchy does the FOIP Act stand? Can it be set aside by departments and by other legislation in the Assembly?

I think that's a number of questions that I wouldn't mind having some response to, where it's possible, from the minister. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods brings a number of questions relating to our department, some which don't, and I hope that over the next few minutes I can relate to some of those.

His first comments were about the registry agents. How many registry agents do we have in the province? Well, right now we have 227. There are over a thousand employees. These are private sector doing the work on Main Street Alberta. We've got a thousand employees being employed by the 227 registry agents across the province, and these people do an awful lot of transactions. As I said, just on the registry agents' side alone it's over 24 million transactions, so they handle a lot of work for Albertans.

We talked about the accreditation and some of the things that we're doing on the security side in my answers to Edmonton-Ellerslie, and those answers still apply. We work very, very hard and very, very close on a regular basis with our registry agents to make sure that they know that they're doing the business in the right way, and to be accredited by the department is certainly a lot better process and a lot better procedure than us just willy-nilly allowing a registry agent to set up on any corner.

Now, there's a tremendous investment being made by government in some of the equipment that we need to do our business for the information that we're collecting and the service that we're providing, so it's very, very important that we are dealing with people who do have not only the desire to provide a good service but also the credibility behind them as well as the financial means behind them to maintain a business. The last thing we need in this province is to have registry agents opening and closing and us having to go in and pull out our equipment and place it in some other registry agent's office. That does get expensive to do. The assurance that he's looking for – we will continue to monitor registry agents, we will continue to do monthly audits where applicable, and we will make sure that our registry agents system is the best in Canada if not North America.

He asked a question about whether our agents or their staff are bonded. We've looked at that whole situation of having staff bonded, and that's work that's going on with our various committees and with the Alberta Registry Agents Association, and we're looking at those kinds of things.

In terms of security, where are we going for the future? Well, security is one of those things – if you give too much information about security, then the bad guys know exactly what's happening, so I'm going to be very careful with some of my response. You know, we make sure that all the appropriate documentation that needs high security is put in safes, in special rooms and has special monitoring on it and that type of thing, and that's something that we've added. As well, we will take a look at technology in the future and how it applies to making a more secure registry agent's office. Our investigative unit, that's going to enter into training this year, will make sure that those kinds of things and the products that we need in the future will be incorporated because we do want to make sure that the integrity of this system is kept up in Alberta.

I think that pretty well covers most of the things that we were talking about with the registry agents.

In terms of your marketplace conduct I know what you're talking about in terms of builders coming in and maybe not completing a job properly, et cetera, et cetera. You mentioned that it's not enough just to say, "Buyer beware," but it is something that buyers do have to do. They have to do their due diligence in choosing a building that they may want to live in or purchase. They have to do their due diligence in making sure that they're dealing with a contractor that is reputable. If they contact us and ask those kinds of questions, we can give them the best information that we possibly have in terms of whether or not a builder is a member of the Alberta new home warranty program.

The new home warranty program should look after a number of those situations where a purchaser feels that they have not been given the building or the product that they had originally thought that they were buying or if there are structural problems or even if there are problems that a builder should come back to and take a look at repairing. The Alberta new home warranty program should look after that. Our staff works very, very closely with them. If a builder is not a member of the Alberta new home warranty program, then the national home warranty program takes over, and we've also referred people to that national home warranty program. But people do have to do their due diligence when picking and choosing their builder, and if they do contact us, we can help them as best we can.

You were mentioning real estate transactions in the marketplace. We have in the province set up a delegated authority called the Real Estate Council of Alberta. They are the licensing and the regulatory and disciplinary body on the consumer protection side. They work very, very closely with us to keep up with the trends in real estate, and they also work very, very closely with the real estate industry on the licensing side and the disciplinary side. If there is someone out there that is not doing the job, then that particular body takes over.

One other thing that I should have mentioned is also under the Fair Trading Act. I apologize for being a little disjointed on this, but I go back to the builders. We also have the Fair Trading Act, that could apply to anyone who didn't get the product that they really thought that they should be getting.

Also, when it comes to consumers, if the hon. member would call our office, we have tip sheets that we can give out to constituents. They can put them in their constituency offices, and we would gladly provide those tip sheets on the consumer side. They cover a number of areas, and I would gladly share those with you so that you can let your constituents know that, yes, there is legislation in place; yes, there are regulations in place. But at the end of the day there is some responsibility on behalf of the purchaser to make sure that they're dealing with a reputable company.

You mentioned electricity. I wasn't quite sure where the hon. member was coming from on that side of things. However, in terms of electricity I'm sure it meant on the consumer protection side. Our department along with the Department of Energy co-chaired a task force on the billing inaccuracies that were out there this last summer. It took our staff almost a full summer along with Energy staff to work with the five companies and the rural electrification associations – and the EUB was at the table – to talk about billing inaccuracies and standardizing bills and making sure that bills were properly presented and properly prepared, and we dealt with disconnect policies amongst the companies. We talked to the companies about making sure that their consumer service departments in each company were acting responsibly to their customers. We actually made them more accountable, and I think that a number of those particular problems have been solved.

In terms of the pricing of electricity, that was different. That's under the regulator. That's under the EUB and the Department of Energy, so that does not affect our department.

It's interesting. The hon. member talked about some of the inquiries that were coming into our call centre. I don't mind sharing with the hon. member that this last year the consumer calls that came into our office – we had a total of 33,539 calls – were up about a thousand calls over the previous year. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was asking earlier in terms of how we reach our performance measures, and I just want to throw this stat out. This is how technical we're getting: the average speed of an answer is one minute and 52 seconds, and the average length of a call is about three minutes and 20 seconds. So we have that down to a pretty fair science.

Let's just look here at some of the things that we deal with in those calls. Out of those 33,000 calls, we only had 207 calls on energy prices. We had 231 calls on natural gas direct marketers. However, on electricity marketing – there are marketers out there which we regulate under Government Services – we did have 3,302 calls on marketers but not on electricity pricing. It's rather interesting with some of the calls that did come through. So those are the kinds of calls that we're getting.

Now, regarding the privacy legislation, some of the details on FOIP, I'm going to be really honest with you, Edmonton-Mill Woods, that I'm not familiar with the details on that, but we will definitely provide you that in writing. The FOIP Act, as you know, is there to get access to information but at the same time to protect privacy. That's been the premise of the act, and that's what we live by. Each department has its own freedom of information and protection of privacy co-ordinator, that we help train. Tom Thackeray and his staff up there help train all of the FOIP co-ordinators in all of the departments so that they are compliant with the act, and we try to make sure that it's standardized. I understand that there are different interpretations of the act. However, we try to make sure that each FOIP co-ordinator gets the same information through our department. We'll respond to you in writing on some of the details of your inquiries.

Thank you.

9:00

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, I just want to caution members once again that the noise level is starting to get high.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, and thank you to the minister. I look forward to the FOIP information.

If I might just go back to the condo act. That was a huge builder that was building in both major cities. This wasn't just a small, fly-by-night operator. This was a huge, huge builder building, I would think, thousands of units in the city, and it still seems to me unsatisfactory that these people didn't have any recourse except to the courts to get satisfaction. I went to a meeting with the owners and with the representative from the new home warranty program, and the arguments ended up basically about whether they were covered or whether they weren't covered. It didn't seem to be the kind of problem solving that I'd hoped it might be when I asked the owners to get together with a representative of the warranty program.

So I still think it's very unsatisfactory, and it's really a hardship on people who are seniors or are going to soon be seniors with respect to the investing of their, in many cases, life savings into something that starts off promising to be a really bright and great retirement in a brand-new facility and fast turns into a nightmare. Somehow or other I think that we have a responsibility to try to help them through that. I believe that everyone is being sued at this point, and it's tied up in the courts in such knots that it's going to be years and years and years before it's ever resolved, if it ever is. That just doesn't seem to me to be a healthy marketplace.

I have a couple of other questions, if I might, about licensing and registration. I've noticed that I can go on-line – and maybe you can't here. The last time I needed some vital statistics work done, where I had to get a couple of death certificates, I went into a registry and was able to get them that way. Can you obtain that kind of information now on-line, like births and deaths? Is that available on-line?

Just one other small and very minor point: what about the licence plates? I think we've asked this before. Many license plates in the province look like they're as old as they really are, and they're falling apart. Is there an intention that there will be new plates for the province's centennial?

Ms Carlson: And how about putting them on both sides?

Dr. Massey: My colleague asks: are they going to be on both the front and the back? But they really are a mess. I'm embarrassed that my own licence plates look just ugly, to say the least.

So I guess with those final two questions – I'm not sure if one was a comment more than a question. I think the condo owners have tried to address some of the problems, but it really is a huge, huge problem. It's gone on for a long time, and it seems to me that someone has to take hold and do something about it.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for the caution on the condos and, as you say, a major builder of a major number of units. You know, the condo act was debated in this House, it had extensive consultation, and we'll continue to monitor the condo act in terms of how it applies to condominiums, how they're managed, and that type of thing. As well, we'll take heed of your words in terms of the building side of things too.

You talked about death and birth certificates: are they available in registry agents' offices? I looked up, and I got no. The answer is no. We will get you the details as to why that is so. Probably it's very sensitive information that is required and quite technical, but we'll get you that information, Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Your question about licence plates. One of my hobbies driving up and down the road between Edmonton and my constituency in southwest Alberta is to look at licence plates. [interjections] Yeah, it's really exciting. It kind of breaks the monotony of the five and a half hour drive.

I noticed that there are a few licence plates out there that are in awfully bad shape. When you take a look at the series number, you find that these licence plates are very old. There was a series of licence plates where we had a reflector image in it so that it would show up at night, and that particular reflector image or process didn't really work that well. It provided us with a lot of cracks and gave us a lot of problems in terms of the length or the lifetime of the licence plate. You can go into registry agents' offices and you can apply for a new licence plate. I believe that we can even get you the old number. I believe we can, but I'll confirm that for you.

From a police enforcement standpoint it's important that you be able to read your licence plate, and it is our responsibility as owners of that vehicle, owners of that licence plate to replace it if it is not identifiable. We get a few inquiries about that every year. Sometimes some people get fines for not having a licence plate that the RCMP or any city police or any bylaw enforcement officer can read. It's a particular problem, but the onus is on us as the owner of that car and the owner of that plate to replace it.

I've got an answer to your comment about the FOIP Act. For salaries of school boards and RHAs, et cetera, the FOIP Act allows for the disclosure of that, and they are released under the Financial Administration Act. I just got that note sent down from my staff, so that answers that particular portion of that question.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Massey: Just if I may follow up. I knew that the superintendents' and the CEOs' information could be made public. My question was: is the same information about government employees to be made public? As I indicated, when we asked under Motions for Returns or Written Questions – I'm not sure which it was – there was a response given that in terms of the privacy act that information was not to be shared.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will take that question under advisement, and we will get back to you in writing.

Thank you.

9:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to rise this evening and speak to the estimates of Government Services. I have a few questions. I do apologize for being a little late, so if the minister has answered these questions, he could just pass them on by and I can read them in Hansard.

I'm looking at page 184 of the government and lottery fund estimates. Under operating expense, item 2, we see that licensing, registry, and consumer services this year are budgeted at $44.8 million, 36 percent more than the $32.9 million budgeted in 2002-2003, and the forecast for 2002-2003 was $39.8 million. Again, that is quite a significant increase in the moneys that were budgeted in 2002-2003.

As well, on page 186 I'm looking under operating expense, 2.0.7, registries information systems. When we look at the gross comparable 2002-2003 budget, the amount is $6,504,000, and when we look at the gross for registries information systems for 2003-2004, we see that it is $9,502,000. Again, quite a significant difference. It's roughly a 46 percent difference in those two.

Further down on the same page under equipment/inventory purchases we see 2.0.2, private agent services/general registry, and we see that the budget is $19.4 million – this is 65 percent more than the $11.7 million in last year's budget – and the forecasted actual for 2002-2003 is $14.3 million. Of course, when we are talking about licensing and registries and registries information systems and private agent services/general registry, we are looking at a field that is I think influenced quite heavily by technology. If the minister could please inform us which company holds the contract with the government for the information technology in this particular case. Are these quite significant increased costs due to costs that we pay the contractor of those information services? Has the contract somehow adjusted for differences to account for these increased costs?

As well, I'm flipping back to page 184 under operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases. Under the program in 5, Alberta Corporate Service Centre, I see that our credit or recovery for the 2003-2004 estimates is $144,327,000. Quite a significant amount here, so if the minister could please expound on that amount. If he would like an opportunity to respond to that now, I do have a few more questions later.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry has given a number of statistics and percentages, and some of the details on that I will provide in writing. What the member is referring to in terms of contracts that are given out – we're looking at an upgrading of our legacy system for our registry services, and our first priority has been to upgrade our personal property and, of course, our land titles because we're dealing with equipment that's 20 years old and high volumes that that equipment was never ever, ever intended to handle. As a result, last year we were able to get a $13 million allocation of funds to upgrade that legacy system, and this year we will also receive a $12.9 million allocation to upgrade those systems. There's going to be an ongoing process in upgrading this renewal to actually make sure that these systems are completed and up to date to handle the volumes of transactions that we're going to have to handle in the future. We're looking at making sure that we have continuing funds to upgrade our systems, to make it service Albertans' needs. Those are in the forecasts for the future, and we're looking at probably about a $16 million infusion of dollars in the future to make sure that those happen.

What we've done is that with the vendors that we use in upgrading this system for our registry renewal projects, known as legacy, we have prequalified vendors such as Accenture, Inc.; Fujitsu Consulting; Sierra Systems; and CGI. Each of these prime vendors have a number of local and/or subcontractors, you might say, to help them deliver on these systems. These vendors work very, very closely with our existing systems maintenance outsourcers – that's EDS Canada – and we want to take, you know, the best advantage of their knowledge and their expertise to make sure that these systems satisfy Albertans and look after their plans in the future. So we will continue to improve our access, and some of those dollars that you were talking about are included in this renewal.

The additional information on the percentages and the differences: I'll definitely provide that to you in writing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, Minister, for those responses. You were discussing vendors and that of course some of these vendors do outsource some of their contract work to other companies. In those contracts is it specified that any of the outsourcing has to be done with Alberta companies, or is the vendor allowed to outsource to anyone in the United States or Canada or around the world? When these contracts are outsourced, is there any way that the department knows whether in fact Albertans are getting the best bang for their taxpayer dollar in the outsourcing of these contracts?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Chairman, we may not be dealing with Alberta-based companies, but we will be dealing with companies that would give us the best product for the best price. We want to make sure that we're accountable for the dollars to Albertans and not just spend for the sake of having a Cadillac system that we don't necessarily need.

In terms of not necessarily being an Alberta-based company, we do like to deal with companies that do have at least an Alberta presence or an Alberta office. We make sure that that's the type of business that we do in our department because there's nothing better than to have the company that we're dealing with right here on the ground to help us. When we have problems with a system that is down, we need their expertise and we need to have their knowledge to make sure that the system can get up and running as quickly as possible and make sure that we continue the business of doing business for Albertans and for the government.

Mr. Bonner: Again, I'd like to thank the minister for those responses. Just some general questions. In Public Accounts last fall the minister conceded that the government could save money by having the government's 7,000 cell phones under one contract instead of under several different ones. My question to the minister in this particular instance would be: have the government's 7,000 cellular phones since been put under one contract to save money, as he had indicated in Public Accounts?

Again, just the number of cell phones. It would appear that apparently one in three government employees has a cell phone. Is there really a need for one in three employees to have a cell phone?

I would have another question in regard to this. To the minister: are any controls in place, similar to the recent procurement card policy, to ensure that government cell phones are used for work purposes only?

Thank you.

Mr. Coutts: The item that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry is referring to is an initiative that ACSC took over on shared services, trying to take a look at all the contracts across government – and particularly the cell phone analogy is probably one of the best ones – and go back to the suppliers to see if we can't get a better deal for volumes, not only volumes of phones that are out there and the contracts to get those phones but also volumes in terms of the use of those phones. That's what shared service is all about, getting a better deal. Saving those kinds of dollars is something that we all should be aware of.

In terms of controls on what people do with a cell phone that may be under that contract, that's very, very hard to monitor, and it's up to the discretion of not only everyone on the floor of this Assembly but also within the civil service to make sure that they're using those phones for business purposes.

Now, I remember when I first became an MLA. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie mentioned a PNWER trip that we used to go on. I would phone my wife and put it on my own credit card, and I remember that one of the people from the department of at that time intergovernmental affairs – FIGA I believe it was called – said something about: you know, letting your wife know every night that you're safe and that everything's fine and what day you'll be home, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera and just touching base was part of the job. So sometimes there's a gray area there. I never did do that when I was on the PNWER thing; I always paid for it myself. But it's one of those things that is left up to the individual, I'm sure. Those are my comments on that particular thing.

ACSC will continue to explore opportunities through the shared services concept of how we can save money and how we can make our dollars more accountable to Albertans.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much. Just a few more questions for the minister. In the last year to 18 months we've had situations where registry offices have been broken into, and one of the items that was stolen was driver's licence blanks so that people could manufacture counterfeit drivers' licences for people. Certainly, events in the last year and a half have indicated that we do have to control not only drivers' licences to make certain that the person who has one of these is the person who it says it is, particularly since events such as 9-11, where we had talk back and forth across the Canadian/American border of people being able to move back and forth with relative ease.

So certainly I think it indicated that we have a great need to change to a new, more secure driver's licence system in response to events of 9-11 as well as the stealing of blanks. I would like to know if the minister could please tell us how the ministry is moving forward on its plans to change to a more secure driver's licence system, how much it will cost, and what all it will entail. If he could also indicate at what point he thinks he will be able to institute these changes.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much. The hon. member's comment about the driver's licence and making sure that it is secure and safe – not only secure and safe, but it must be reliable as well – is a very, very good point as a result of two factors.

You mentioned 9-11. You mentioned the need for more security, a securer card. The other factor is that we've got 20-year-old equipment doing our drivers' licences right now, and although it is a good driver's licence, the needs of today require a more secure card and thus the technology behind that. Particularly, the laser-imprinted card that we're looking at doing requires new technology. This is the right time to do it. We'll be rolling that new driver's licence out some time this mid to late summer. The dollars that are required for that are in this budget. We've got an $8 million expenditure allocated for the new driver's licence program. We're in the middle of the request for proposals at this particular time, Mr. Chairman, and the details of that proposal and the contracts that will eventually be signed around that proposal I don't think would serve us well at this particular time to divulge, because we are completing the request for proposal process out there.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry asked about other details regarding financing. In the third quarter of this year we also received a $4.7 million allocation from the third quarter that was debated on the floor of this House, and that was for new camera equipment that would go along with providing the licensing as well as the investigative unit. I don't believe the member was in the House when I talked about a new investigation unit that we're looking at to help train security within our registry agents' offices and to help with fraud and that type of thing. So those are the kinds of things that the dollars will be going for: new equipment to handle the new driver's licence at the registry agents' offices for photo-taking and signature procurement and that type of thing. That's where the dollars are coming from, and that's where the dollars will be going.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If the minister could please provide some information on another area of concern. When it comes to the cost of service contracts, these had plummeted to $39,294,000 in the ministry's 2001-2002 annual report compared to $57,531,000 the previous year. Are these actual savings, or is the cost being shouldered somewhere else?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Chairman, I apologize. Can he repeat the question? I'm sorry; I was reading.

Mr. Bonner: I was referring to service contracts, and I was asking specifically what caused the cost of service contracts to plummet to $39,294,000 in the ministry's 2001-2002 annual report compared to $57,531,000 the previous year. My other question associated with this: are these actual savings, or is the cost being shouldered somewhere else?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you very much. The details of that I'll provide in writing, if that's all right, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

If I could go back and just talk a little bit about cell phones. I just got some information that the new policy on cell phone acquisition recently approved by deputies and by ministries – they're accountable for the implementation of that – includes eligibility criteria to ensure that there is valid need. We actually had a saving of $1.1 million in the service plan contracts and the changes regarding canceling some phone services that were not necessarily needed, so it's really good to see that there are some things that we can actually have benchmarked and actually can show that we've made those kinds of savings on.

In terms of ACSC's costs in our budget of $155 million, the cost of administration, finance, human resources, and information technology support services are across government. Manpower is 40 percent of that, and supplies and services are 60 percent of that. That's an actual of what we have been able to show as a decrease of almost 3.6 percent in administration of ACSC from the last year. So that answers that question for you.

In terms of your last question, I'll make sure that we respond in writing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. One final area that I would like the minister to provide some explanation on if he could, please. The ministry had announced last October that it was looking for input on any rules or policies that would benefit from a review. If the minister could please tell us what rules and policies were identified, which will be reviewed, and what is the time frame for the results, and if he could also provide us with the cost of the MLA Government Rules Review Committee.

Thank you.

Mr. Coutts: I will provide that in writing as well at that time, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to rise at this moment to commend the minister and his department for two areas that I consider very valuable in consumer protection in response to consumers, particularly those within my community. I think it is appropriate at this time, first of all, to express appreciation for your department's response to the consumer billing disputes that arose with respect to some power companies, not only the billings coming from one company but with respect to the readings and the reconciling of those and resolving those disputes. So I'd like to, as I say, take this opportunity to thank you for the ability to refer constituents to your department, who did address this in what I think was a very objective way. It wasn't always to their satisfaction with respect to being able to reduce the bottom line of the bills, but it was indeed in most cases a clarification at least of the process, which indeed is not a simple process. So thank you very much for that.

The other one is an area that we have not dwelled on a great deal lately but something that I think again is highlighted by the emphasis, if you will, or the concern for consumer protection. That has to do with the condominium act, and it's the surveillance of it to make sure that it is properly attended to by those who are members of condominium associations. It does not play well to many people because they don't like to have their lives, their personal finances, and their assets organized collectively. On the other hand, I think the condominium act and certainly the assistance that your department has provided to those volunteer boards who are working to make sure that the governance and the allocation of resources within their condominium complex are fairly and clearly looked after—your department has been exceptional in responding to the concerns that my constituents have had.

Again, it's onerous for individuals to serve on their respective condominium property boards. They volunteer to do that on behalf of the greater collective good. I think that the condominium amendment act in its most recent version looked to the future in making sure that everybody's investment was looked after.

I return, Mr. Chairman, to address the department and to again say thank you for your clarification, for your direction, for your assistance in making sure that these volunteer boards have the resources, have the clarity, and have the ability to act within the act for the greater good of their community. So I just wanted to take that opportunity to say that to you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Chairman, thank you very much. I wanted to thank the Member for St. Albert for those remarks, and I'll certainly make sure, either through Hansard or when I personally attend functions in the department or make my tours in the department, that I pass those words along.

Regarding the condominium act, it's a complicated act. There are different types of condominiums out there, and sometimes there's not a total understanding, when going into a condominium, of what your rights are or even what you're buying. We always look forward to the opportunity – and I believe it's Joanne Burns from our department who goes out and will talk to condominium boards at any particular time. We've even had situations where a number of condominiums have come together almost like a public forum type of thing. It also happened in your constituency; I remember that. It's also happened in Calgary-West constituency. She's gone out and explained the situation, explained how the boards are set up and what the responsibilities of the boards are in order to manage the condominium on a day-to-day basis but also make sure that that condominium and that investment is protected and continues to get upgraded for the future so that their investment is protected and when they want to pass it on or move or sell, they get full value out of that particular condominium. As we go through, I'm glad to see that in our assessment the condominium act is working in a number of ways. So I'll pass that on. We want to make sure that all Albertans who get into condominiums have the proper information, and we'll continue to work on that with your help.

In terms of the reconciliation of some of the power systems that were out there and the different types of bills that were coming from all over, yes, we worked hard with the companies. I have to congratulate all the companies that were involved – EPCOR and Aquila and ATCO and Enmax and the EUB and the rural electrification associations – for coming to the table and being very, very open and understanding that they needed to give a better understanding bill, a simpler bill, a bill that people could understand when it was explained in simple terms and also the fact that there was a confusion between the wire service provider and the actual biller, the one who provided the energy and the one that actually made the bill out to the particular residents. That association between those two was made a lot clearer and a lot simpler for people. It was a difficult process, and it still is continuing to evolve. We spent a lot of resources on that particular task force to make sure that that part of consumer protection was put in place.

So I want to thank you very much for those comments, and I'll certainly pass those along to our staff. I appreciate that.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question? After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Government Services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$231,158,000
--	---------------

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Government Services: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $231,158,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 23Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to stand and speak in support of Bill 23, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act, and address some of the issues that were raised during second reading on April 7.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie expressed concern about therapeutic services and whether the director of child welfare is able to seek out either assessments or treatments which rely on evidence-based research. Mr. Chairman, the nature and level of therapeutic services that will be available to children under this legislation will be set out in regulations. We will be working closely with medical professionals, parents, experts in the field of disabilities, and other stakeholders to determine what therapeutic interventions are in fact appropriate and effective for inclusion in the regulated listing. Therapeutic interventions available to families under this legislation will be based on research and best practice evidence. Inclusion of therapeutic services in regulations rather than in the act will enable us to respond appropriately as new research and new treatments become available. The proposed legislation very clearly articulates a role for medical professionals and other experts to work with the director and the parents of a disabled child in the development of a therapeutic services plan that best meets the needs of the child. The involvement of these professionals will provide additional assurance that interventions are appropriate and effective.

There was also a concern that because of regionalization there is no comprehensive framework within which program decisions are made. Mr. Chairman, regionalization allows flexibility to meet the needs of children and families and to build community capacity. The proposed legislation will assist in ensuring that families have consistent and equitable access to the supports and services they require. Consistency of decision-making across the province will be enhanced through the appointment of a program director and through the development of regulations that clearly articulate the nature and levels of services available to children and families.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think what the member has indicated is part of the concern with the bill, and that's that the devil is in the detail and the regulations aren't here for us to see. The government has set a precedent in other areas by posting those regulations on the Internet well in advance of the bill being passed in the Legislature, and I suggest that that would've been a wise thing to do with Bill 23.

You get two diametrically opposed views about the bill. One viewpoint is that the bill is a backwards step, that it medicalizes disabilities and that it's a poor service to children, and you get the other view that says that it's a framework that they can work with, but the anxiety rests around the regulations and what they're going to be. So that's the basic problem, I think, with Bill 23, and, as I see it, a way out, if there could even be a draft of the regulations made available, people might feel much easier.

I think that there are just a couple of things I'd like to mention before I conclude, Mr. Chairman. One is on page 3, section 3(1), under Family Support Services: "If a medical diagnosis, in a format satisfactory to the director, of a child's condition or impairment indicates that the child has a disability, the director may . . ." The troubling part is "in a format satisfactory to the director." This is vague and it's arbitrary and it leads to the exclusive direction of the director without appeal. For example, a specific chronic diagnosis will not be considered for support intervention. I think that these have to be defined so that there's a standard that can be objectively identified and applied and appealed.

The same problem plagues the bill on further sections of that page, 4(1)(a) and (b). The same phrase is repeated: "in a format satisfactory to the director," and then in (b), "in a manner satisfactory to the director." It's the same problem as there is in 3(1). It leaves the discretion entirely to the director. For people who are having difficulties, this isn't a satisfactory state of affairs.

On page 5 under section 7(4), the time lines for commencing an appeal under those circumstances, I think it would be helpful if they were more clearly defined. It says, "the time for commencing an appeal is suspended until the conclusion or abandonment of the mediation." It seems to me that there's need for more definition there.

Again on that page, 8(1), "The Minister may establish one or more appeal committees each consisting of not fewer than 3 nor more than 7 persons appointed by the Minister." It seems again that there are few checks on the minister's authority, and the bill would be better served if there was a process set out where the minister's decisions could be questioned.

I guess the last comment would be on page 6, section 10(c): "The minister may make regulations respecting the nature and amount of family support services and therapeutic services that may be provided by a director under the terms of an agreement." It seems that there's a need for more accountability of the department, some review by an external body, but this just leaves it wide open, and individuals are at the mercy of the minister or the minister's staff. Given the nature of the individuals that this bill is dealing with, I don't think that that's good enough.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I would call the question.

[The clauses of Bill 23 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 24Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and speak during committee considerations of Bill 24. Prior to discussing some of the issues that were raised during second reading, I would like to introduce and move an amendment to the bill, which I would ask to table and distribute at this time.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendments, which I wish to be treated as one amendment and voted on as a package, are minor and will close the loop on a number of issues to further protect abused children in family violence situations and also put safeguards in place regarding disclosure of information to adult adoptees.

There are two parts to the amendment, in the areas of adoption and family violence. In the Matters to be Considered section we are proposing an addition that where a child has been exposed to domestic violence within his or her family, intervention services should be provided to the family in a way that supports the abused family members and prevents the need to remove the child from the custody of an abused family member. This proposed addition highlights the special circumstances of a family where family violence is an issue. A decision-maker under the act is encouraged to consider the provision of support services to the abused parent, which would prevent the removal of the child from the custody of the parent.

In the area of adoption, Mr. Chairman, a proposed House amendment will allow for the minister to deem a veto having been filed by an adult adoptee if the minister is satisfied of two things: (1) the adult adoptee is not aware of the adoption and (2) the release of identifying information about the adult adoptee would be extremely detrimental to the adult adoptee. This provision would apply only to adoptions granted prior to January 2005, including adoptions granted prior to passage of Bill 24. The open process for post-January 1, 2005, adoptions would not be affected. There is a provision in the amendment that if an adult adoptee subsequently becomes aware that they are adopted, the minister may reverse the veto at the request of the adult adoptee.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is being included because concern has been expressed that in situations where adoptive parents have chosen not to inform their adopted child of his or her adoption, when the adoptee reaches adulthood, he or she will not be in a position to exercise their right to register a veto. This approach has been criticized as failing to respect the interests of adoptive parents and failing to consider the effect disclosure to a birth parent may have on an adult adoptee who does not know he or she was adopted.

A proposed House amendment attempts to address this concern through a deeming provision that would allow the minister to deem the filing of a veto by an adult adoptee where the adoptive parents have satisfied the minister that the adoptee does not know about the adoption and that the disclosure of information to the birth parents would be extremely detrimental to the adult adoptee. Policy guidelines would be developed to assist in identifying situations where release of information may be extremely detrimental; for example, in situations involving incest or rape. This House amendment would be accompanied by a public communications strategy to advise adoptive parents that they may provide information to the minister for the purpose of invoking the deeming provision.

Mr. Chairman, following consideration and passage of this amendment, I would like to briefly address issues that were raised during second reading debate on April 7.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the minister for circulating the amendment a couple of days ago so that I've had a chance to look at it and to concur with it. But I would, if I might, put forth a reservation about the amendment and the bill itself. The legislation is directed to parents and to children, to adoptees, and to adopting families. This amendment along with a number of the clauses of the bill are really difficult sledding in terms of reading. I think they represent some really very obscure writing, and I think they violate every rule of plain language legislation that you could possibly violate. I think it's unfortunate because this is an important act. It's one that should be readily accessible to all who are interested. The people who access the act are often under duress and having difficulties in life, and to be put up against a piece of legislation such as this and to try to work your way through it really, really is a task that is most challenging and I think really unnecessary.

It's too late at this point, but the speaker said that there is going to be a public relations effort to notify interested individuals in terms of the amendment and its implications. I certainly hope that that communication is written in language that people can understand because this is really, really very obscure. When we come to the bill, there have to be some sections that are classic in terms of how to obscure what you really mean to say.

So I guess with that caution about the amendment, that I hope that it's delivered in language that ordinary Albertans can understand, I'll be supporting the amendment. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Any further speakers on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to make some comments. Again – and the minister has said as much – the detail in the legislation rests in the regulations. I think to quote the minister: what the large print giveth, the small taketh away. This is another bill where having the regulations or a draft of the regulations would have been such a great service to Albertans and to those people who are interested in the Child Welfare Act and the amendments that are before us.

The references to regulations are found throughout the act. In many cases they make the subject matter of the act inaccessible for an independent review beyond child welfare, and they limit the accountability of child welfare. I think that if there's a general comment, again it's with respect to the child and youth advocate's office. The very independence of this office, I think, is compromised by the act. It's an area where the suggestions that we've made over the years that the advocate be an officer of the Legislature and report to the Legislature have been ignored, I think at a disservice to children and youth in the province. The control of the advocate and the advocate's work by the ministry is, I think, completely inappropriate, and this act does nothing to alleviate that.

I think that there has to be put in place some process for reviewing the regulations to have them scrutinized by broader interests when they are available. There has to be some way in which those regulations and the matters that they deal with are subject to appeal. So those are some general comments about the bill, Mr. Speaker.

But, again, I'd like to preface it with my concern about plain language. Let me give you an example of what I mean. On page 83 of the bill there's a section that talks about decisions of the director, and this is what it says.

If a copy of the decision is not received under subsection (4)(b) within 15 days of the making of the request under subsection (1), the person who requested the review is deemed to have received a copy of the decision stating that the director has confirmed the decision that was reviewed.

Well, what that really means is that if you don't get a letter, the answer is no. Why can't the bill simply say that? I mean, this is a terrible, terrible example, and it's not the only example in this piece of legislation.

Having said that, because we are in committee I'd like to go through and make some comments about specific sections of the bill. On page 3, the implications of changing the terms "protective" and "intervention," it appears that by limiting protection to court orders, it allows child welfare resources and supportive involvement in support to children and families on early intervention. They previously had to demonstrate the safety and development of children to justify and obligate protective involvement. I'm not sure that that was the intention, but that seems to be the implication of that change.

On page 4, subsection (2.1)(b), this is the section where for the purposes of subsection (2)(c), a child is neglected if the guardian

- (b) is unable or unwilling to obtain for the child, or to permit the child to receive, essential medical, surgical or other remedial treatment that is necessary for the health or well-being of the child.

It seems to me that there needs to be more added to that clause, and that is: as recommended by a medical professional with legitimate knowledge and authority specific to that identified health issue. I think the reasons for that kind of addition are self-evident, Mr. Chairman, and the recent case in Calgary serves as an example where that kind of wording would have been useful.

I look at page 4 and the repeal of section (2)(i). Again, in the bill – and it's not the only place – there seems to be the creation of a gap in intervention especially to older youths and in this case unable to live at home and being refused care by a guardian, and that condition ends up with the likelihood of those kids being on the street and being forced into prostitution and drugs and all the other unsavory things that happen when they are forced onto the street because they still are not eligible for adult financial resources, and the same is true in section 8.

On page 8, section 2.1: "A director, when it is appropriate, must inform a child of the child's procedural rights under this Act." It seems to me, again, that "when it is appropriate" is subject to self-interest issues by the ministry and detracts from "must inform," that it is a basic right to be informed. So I question the appropriateness of having the phrase "when it is appropriate." Youngsters have to be informed, and the "must" is the important part of that. Again, we've heard in the report of the Children's Advocate of youngsters not being informed of decisions that were being made about their lives.

On page 9, amending clause 3(5)(c) by deleting "investigate" and limiting disclosure of information to the Children's Advocate and the child's ability to consent to disclosure of his own information, the ministry is effectively immobilizing the only body in the system speaking and acting on behalf of the child. The Children's Advocate office is a critical part of ensuring the rights of the child and that the child is heard and respected, and this is unfortunate. If you look at page 8, (d.1) – I'm sorry that this is so detailed, Mr. Chairman, but it's the nature of a 94-page bill. I think there's need for explicitly specified required accountability of child welfare to respond and implement findings as based on the findings of the Children's Advocate as indicated in their report. So it's the accountability of the department to the recommendations of the Children's Advocate that is missing, and it goes back to the control that Children's Services has over the Children's Advocate that is the bone of contention.

If you look at pages 14 and 15, the amendments to section 10 deleting "child," section 8(2) repealed, and amendments to section 9(2)(3)(4) and (5), these serve to speed the processing of the child through the system and limit child welfare's financial support commitment to a child and family of origin. That's really what happens as a result of those changes. They also limit the ability of a child to enter an agreement with the department to provide support services or even be consulted about decisions affecting them. Again, I think there's a likelihood of older youths falling between the cracks with respect to resources and support provision.

Also, an amendment to section 18(2) on page 16, with children being provided with adequate resources when the parents are not able to manage. Again, this is open to arbitrary decisions by the department regarding support and involvement, and there are similar citations throughout the bill.

If you look at page 18, the amendments to section 20(3) provide one more barrier to protecting people from the absence of their rights by not requiring the ministry to directly advise them. With the ministry's power to intervene so intrusively should also come an obligation to inform people who are subject to their intrusions of their rights. So it's the counterobligation. If the ministry is going to be intruding into affairs, then they have an obligation to tell the individuals involved what their rights are.

I'm skipping quickly over the bill, Mr. Chairman. If you look at the amendments on page 25, the amendments on page 90, and the amendments on page 88, these amendments permit disclosure to the broader public of personal information concerning kids beyond the scope of what should be legitimately permitted as it pertains to kids' rights to privacy. I guess you could say that they're really preying on vulnerable children. This is, of course, with respect to the web site. I know there have been some changes to the web site, but why can't the web site be restricted to individuals who have previously been screened and approved as potential adoptive applicants? We've been through this before, and I'm not sure of all the changes that have been made, but it did seem that there was need to somehow or other make sure that the site wasn't being abused and used inappropriately.

If I look on pages 28 and 29 at the amendments to 33(1), (2), (3), and (7), they represent significant changes with impact on children and family. It's less due process and early intervention from supportive involvement with the child and family and processes younger children into adoption streams sooner, and it ultimately depletes or lessens the department's financial commitment. Is that the intention? Is that the reason for those changes? In some cases, of course, this would be good, with long-term stability provided for children earlier, but it may be at the expense of early intervention support to families. There's conflicting motivation of debt, financial divestment through truncating the process. Rather, the arbitrary time lines should be dictated by continuity of care in the best interests of the child. It seems that flexibility is really the most important aspect of dealing with youngsters.

On page 30, the amendment to 34(2), removing child welfare from their responsibility for involvement under condition of child, is a gap in state responsibility for meeting older youths' basic needs who may not yet have or may have limited eligibility for SFI resources. It goes back to the theme that seems to run through the bill, and that's a concern for older children and what's going to happen to them, that they seem to be under the bill receiving less service or at least not the appropriate service given the conditions they may find themselves in.

On page 31 the amendment to section 35(2). It is repealed. Does that mean that there's no post 18 year old follow-up support? This is critically needed for particular groups of children: FAS and related to a prenatal substance abuse diagnosis in which independent living is often delayed and occurring past 18 so that there are some developmental issues and some learning issues. On page 50 the amendment to section 57.3 permits it at the discretion of the department, and again it seems arbitrary. Who's accountable? Again, it's something that's going to be found in regulations.

On page 37 the amendments to 44(7), (8), and (9). Removing the department responsibility for providing treatment resources required to alleviate or resolve a problem and the substitution of intervention services is, I think, questionable. Is that really what we want, and does that fully respond to the needs of youngsters? Why would we make that change?

On page 44 section 52(1) – and this is under Private Guardianship – says, “Any adult who for a period of at least one month has had the continuous care of a child who is in the custody of a director.” Is this really permitting the downloading of youngsters onto extended families without providing sufficient support and services and a way of getting children out of the care of child welfare by placing them with an external family for a sufficient period and then being able to proceed with a provincial guardian application and the department required to provide placement? It's a questionable provision.

Again, below there in section (1.1): “An application under subsection (1) must include a report in the prescribed form prepared by a qualified person respecting,” and then it lists . . . [Dr. Massey's speaking time expired]

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and to just advise him that we've made note of some of the issues that he's mentioned tonight. I'd also briefly like to address some issues that were raised during second reading debate on April 7.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods expressed concern that several of the principles outlined in the Child Welfare Act review report Strengthening Families, Children and Youth have not been fully incorporated into the legislation. In making decisions impacting children and families, the matters to be considered must be adhered to. The matters to be considered incorporate the principles identified in the Strengthening Families, Children and Youth report.

The following principles are specifically identified in the legislation. In making any decisions during the investigative stage and subsequent to a determination that the child is in need of intervention, the best interests of the child must be considered in section 2. In addition, the best interests of the child as well as additional matters to be considered are identified and must be adhered to in decisions concerning the adoption of a child in section 58.1.

Parental responsibility and accountability are also addressed in section 2(e). Division 7, Guardian's Financial Responsibility, highlights the importance of parental responsibility through financial contribution when their child is placed in government care. This is based on the parents' ability to contribute. As well, the director is required to inform a child of the child's procedural rights under the act, section 2.1. Policy will be further developed to ensure that children are informed of their rights and families of their responsibilities. This policy will be developed in conjunction with the Children's Advocate.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie raised a concern that the office of the Children's Advocate may be eliminated because of the belief that there is no longer a need for a formal, centralized advocacy office under the new regionalization system of children's services. The office of the Children's Advocate is certainly not being eliminated. The proposed amendments not only retain the role of the Children's Advocate but also enhance that role by authorizing the advocate to facilitate the involvement of natural advocates within the child's family or community. The utilization of natural advocates allows for the development of a sustained relationship between the child and the advocate even after the child leaves the child welfare system. This approach will clearly be of significant benefit to children. Natural advocates will not replace the role of the Children's Advocate. Rather, they will supplement that role for the benefit of children.

The member indicated that the mandate of the Children's Advocate should be expanded to include children who have applied for but have been denied protective services. Mr. Chairman, the role of the Children's Advocate is to assist children who have been brought into the child protection system. These children often need assistance in understanding how the system works and what their rights are within that system. The determination of whether or not a child is in need of child welfare intervention will continue to be a determination by the director and ultimately by the courts. The role of the Children's Advocate will continue to focus on the needs of children who are in care.

It was mentioned that section 2 of the act should be strengthened to reflect that the best interests of children should be the overarching consideration when making decisions under the act. Mr. Chairman, section 2 has in fact been strengthened to clarify that the best interest of the child is the overarching consideration when making decisions concerning a child in need of intervention. The other matters set out in section 2 must be taken into account when making decisions affecting a child. These matters include such fundamental considerations as the child's familial, cultural, social, and religious heritage and the importance of stability and continuity of care and relationships in the child's life. While these fundamental considerations may inform the determination of best interests, they do not override that determination.

In regard to the views of children being enshrined in legislation, the proposed amendments very clearly enshrine in legislation respect for the views and opinions of children. A fundamental matter which must be considered when making a decision affecting a child is the opinion of the child. This is clearly articulated in the section on matters to be considered. Mr. Chairman, a child's views and wishes must also be considered when making decisions relating to the adoption of the child. This requirement is clearly set out in the new adoption provisions.

Throughout the act procedural rights are provided to children in terms of requesting alternative dispute resolution, consenting to terms of agreements and court orders, receiving notices of court applications, having legal representation in court, and appealing matters to the Child Welfare Appeal Panel. A new provision requires the director to inform children of their procedural rights under the act. As well, new provisions dealing specifically with youth in care acknowledge the emerging independence of youth and provide youth with an enhanced role in determining the services that they require.

The issue of having a minimum standard of qualifications for frontline child welfare workers was raised, and, Mr. Chairman, there currently is a high minimum standard for frontline child welfare workers. In addition to having either a diploma or a degree in social work, frontline workers are required to take a comprehensive child protection training course. The proposed amendments provide the ability to regulate the qualifications required of the director of child welfare. These new qualification requirements will reinforce the importance of high minimum standards for individuals working in this field.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie suggested that the legislation should contain a clear and distinct statement of the rights of children in care. The child welfare legislation provides children with a number of procedural rights. These procedural rights will continue under the proposed amendments. A new provision will require the director to inform children of these procedural rights in order that children have an opportunity to exercise those rights. Rights such as freedom of thought, expression, and association are rights that all children in care currently have under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

A concern was raised that establishing a rigid age limit for children to participate in child welfare processes precludes the participation of younger children who have sufficient understanding of the matters at issue. The fact that children 12 years of age and over have specific procedural rights does not preclude the involvement of younger children in the decision-making process. There is a clearly articulated requirement in the act that the opinions of a child should be considered if the child is capable of forming an opinion. This requirement applies to all children, not just children 12 years of age and over. As well, children under the age of 12 may be represented in child welfare proceedings by their own lawyer and may appeal decisions of the director to the Child Welfare Appeal Panel, with the assistance of an advocate if necessary.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry raised a concern that there are not enough safeguards in place to ensure that children who are adopted through the new direct adoption process will be provided with adequate care. The changes are consistent with the principles of parental responsibility and accountability. The potential adoptive parent will still be required to complete a criminal record check and child welfare information check. As well, the birth parent or the courts can request the completion of a home assessment report. The direct adoption process is a nonintrusive and cost-effective option for birth parents and potential adoptive parents. The process respects the individual rights of the birth parent to place her child with someone with whom she has a close relationship or with a relative. The process is culturally sensitive to aboriginal families.

Eliminating the requirement for agency involvement will eliminate processing costs and encourage finalization of the adoption, thus securing permanency for children. Birth parents who are not comfortable with the direct adoption placement also have the option of placing their child through the ministry or through a private licensed adoption agency. Similarly, Mr. Chairman, adoptive parents who are not comfortable with the direct adoption placement also have the option of adopting through the ministry or through a private licensed adoption agency.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At this time I'd like to call for the question.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If I might, I would like to finish my comments about Bill 24. I apologize if they have been a little disjointed, but following through the act and then trying to read your notes that you haven't looked at for several weeks is a bit of a challenge.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

I'd like to look, if I could, on page 46 and the amendment to section 55(2), and that is:

Notwithstanding subsection (1), the Court may make an order dispensing with the consent of

- (a) a guardian of the child other than a director, or
- (b) the child,

if the Court is satisfied that it is in the best interests of the child to do so.

That has been amended

- (i) by repealing clause (a) and substituting the following:

- (a) the guardian of the child,

- (ii) by adding "or" at the end of clause (b) and adding the following after clause (b):

- (c) a director, unless a director is the guardian of the child.

I guess that what all of that is about is it raises some questions. If the court is able to dispense with the consent of the guardian and child, just what are the implications of that, and is this a good provision? You have raised the possibility of the court being in a position of making a judgment without the presentation of sufficient information or possibly with misleading information by way of evidence, resulting in the end in a poor decision and certainly no recording of dissent. So it's a section that I think is risky, to permit court judgments or hearings in the absence of those individuals that are so intimately involved in the case.

On page 59, looking at section 64(5), if no notice of objection is filed within 10 days after service on all the persons required to be served under subsection (1), the Court may consider the petition in the absence of the applicant and all the persons referred to in subsection (1).

Again, it seems risky to permit the court judgment or hearing after an absence or even the applicant not being there. It just doesn't seem to be a satisfactory way to proceed.

Pages 65 and 66, 74.2(4), "in a form satisfactory to the Minister." Again, that seems to be arbitrary, and it's one that should be consistently defined. I think the circumstances under which it'll be satisfactory to the minister need to be made explicit, and again I suspect that we'll be told that that's going to appear in regulations, and the problem of course is that we don't have the regulations.

Page 83, the amendment to 117.1(5). This is, again, the example I used at the opening, Mr. Chairman. It just doesn't make sense to say it this way, and it could have been said so much more plainly to be more easily understood by the readers.

Page 84, section 120. This has to do with 2(d), "the provision of or refusal to provide any support services to a child 16 years of age or older by entering into a support agreement or custody agreement." It's repealed, and it again removes older youths' ability to appeal the arbitrary denial of services by the ministry and again feeds into our concern of what's happening to older children under the revisions in the act.

Page 86, the amendment to 124.1(2), "pursuant to a permanent guardianship order." The suggestion is that orders should be amended to indicate agreement. As no court order is in place, the department is simply agreeing to assume guardianship.

Those are some of the detailed comments and questions we had about the bill, Mr. Chairman. I have to say that given the length of the bill and the topics that were covered and the changes that we find here, there was surprisingly little contact with our office about it. The contact we had was from a number of individuals who were concerned about one or more particular sections of the bill, but we really actually received very few comments, and I attribute that in part to the department and to the manner in which the review of the act was carried out across the province. I think people have had an opportunity to have their say and to check to see if their concerns are reflected in the legislation, and I think that is a tribute to the hard work of the department.

But having said that, that in no way dismisses the kinds of concerns we've had about the regulations and what's going to happen when those regulations are available. We feel that it would be appropriate for draft regulations to be made available on-line as quickly as possible so people can look at them and make some comments. The overall feeling is that there is a centralization of decision-making into the department, and that's done at some risk to children, and it's done without the assurance that there is going to be an openness and that the appeal process is in place that will allow decisions to be challenged.

Just one other question, Mr. Chairman. One other concern is in terms of reference to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. There are references in the bill. I asked the question in estimates earlier this evening, and I expect that when I get that response, it may answer the question, but I do have some concerns about the primacy of legislation. When an act conflicts with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which act prevails? I think that that has implications for what we have before us this evening.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments on this particular bill that I would like to share with the Assembly, and they are e-mails I got from persons who were interested in the part of the bill that talks about opening up adoption records. I think it is important to share with the House what was said, because this is the first time in my experience that a bill in this Legislature has drawn so much attention from out of province.

I won't name the names because I didn't get permission, but I will name the provinces. The first one is from Quebec, who writes to "support the concept of open adoption records" but is "disappointed that an information veto is permitted for past adoptions." This person states, "There are no valid reasons to prevent adopted adults and their natural families access to each other's identifying information." This person goes on to state:

A recent study by Dr. Charlene Miall, an associate professor of sociology at McMaster University, and Dr. Karen March, a sociologist at Carleton University, proves that a majority of Canadians, 77%, support open adoption records.

The usual argument against open records is that natural mothers were promised confidentiality. As a mother who lost her child to adoption, I can assure you that I have never requested nor was I promised confidentiality. To the contrary, it was my understanding that I would be able to contact my daughter when she came of age.

Many other jurisdictions worldwide function satisfactorily with a policy of open adoption records with no untoward effects. This person urges you "to treat all persons equally and fairly by allowing open records for past, present and future adoptions."

The next one is from Ontario. This person urges all of us to vote no on Bill 24. Open records are certainly needed, however there should be no disclosure veto as described in Section 74.2(4), "prohibiting the release of personal information in the orders, certificates and documents."

This person states:

It is a civil and human right for everyone to be able to access their birth records. Adults should not need their parents' permission to do so. Unrestricted open records is the norm in most of the rest of the free world, and no problems have arisen.

The next person talks about the disclosure veto again.

Section 74.2(4) of the above titled bill purports to open records to adoptees that prohibits the release of personal information in the orders, certificates and documents. This provision in Bill 24 treats adult adoptees as if they are perpetual children who must have their birth parents' permission to access their own birth certificates. This provision is demeaning and prevents all citizens of Canada an equal right to their own birth information. I urge you to vote NO to Bill 24 as long as this provision exists within the bill.

Finally, this person is in full support of open past adoption records in Alberta, stating that they are an Adult Adoptee who has been waiting a long time for changes to the Adoptions records. It's long overdue . . . I have watched other provinces move ahead and I'm hoping Alberta will do the same and follow through. It's been a long 10 years of waiting patiently. Please, Please listen to our voices and grant us our Records.

So, Mr. Chairman, those are my comments on this particular bill. I hope some comment will be made on these in third reading, and I believe we're calling for the question now.

Bill 25 Class Proceedings Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise and speak at committee with respect to Bill 25, the Class Proceedings Act. During second reading certain members of the opposition expressed concerns and asked questions about the issue of costs, specifically why Bill 25 does not create a no-cost provision in the event that a representative plaintiff is unsuccessful in carrying out a lawsuit. As a result, I will limit my comments at committee to the issue of costs generally and as to why Bill 25 does what it does or doesn't do what it doesn't do with respect to costs.

Mr. Chairman, in Alberta costs can be awarded generally, and it is the purview of the court, depending on the outcome of the litigation. The general rule in Alberta is that costs are in the cause, and what that means is that if the cause of action is successful, the successful litigant is entitled to taxable court costs from the unsuccessful party. As a necessary corollary of the principle that costs are in the cause, the unsuccessful litigant is liable to pay court costs to the successful party. There is no deviation from this general principle in Bill 25. Costs may be awarded under Bill 25 as they are in any other civil matter currently before the Alberta courts. Bill 25 does not change the current law on costs. The rules that will apply to actions under Bill 25 are the same rules that apply today to those types of actions and all other civil actions.

Currently rule 42 of the Alberta Rules of Court provides for limited representative actions, and that too, Mr. Chairman, allows for costs to be awarded. Costs can be awarded in class actions that are currently before a court under rule 42 of the Alberta Rules of Court. The decision to award costs or not award costs rests with the court. The rules do not restrict the power of the courts to decide who pays costs, who gets costs, and how much those costs will be. The courts, depending on the circumstances, including depending on the litigant's ability to pay or not pay, may decide not to award costs.

This is common in matrimonial cases, even though the usual cost rules do apply. What I'm trying to say is that the court can deviate from the rules if the circumstances mandate that the costs are not to be awarded in any particular case.

When no order for costs is made, costs can generally be claimed by the successful party. Most cost issues depend on the specific circumstances of the claim and the details surrounding those applications. If costs are awarded to a party, these costs are not based on the total amount of what that party actually paid to bring or defend the action. The actual costs awarded typically are provided in the schedule to the Alberta Rules of Court.

Mr. Chair, while there may be a perception that the plaintiffs are weaker and of modest means and the defendants are all-powerful and well-funded corporations, this is not an actual reality. Justice Nordheimer of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice recently commented on the reality of the position of parties in awarding costs. The case that I'm quoting from is Garipey versus Shell Oil Company in August 2002, where Justice Nordheimer stated:

It is easy in theory to portray the representative plaintiff as the weak party of modest or little means taking the battle to the powerful and well-funded corporate defendant but the reality is frequently not so simple and straightforward. As the experience in the United States shows, and which the Canadian experience has begun to emulate, plaintiff's counsel is very often as capable, as well-funded and with equal access to resources, both financial and evidentiary, as does defendant's counsel . . . Put simply, the David against Goliath scenario does not necessarily represent an accurate portrayal of the real conflict.

Following the ordinary cost rules allows the court to consider the specific circumstances of each case and make a decision based on those circumstances. This is consistent with the discretion given to the court to make decisions throughout Bill 25.

Now, as members opposite in second reading correctly pointed out, other provinces do in their class action legislation provide for a no-cost regime, but not every province has followed this model. Ontario and Quebec allow for the awarding of costs. Ontario has a fund for class proceedings; however, the ability of a plaintiff to seek financial assistance for disbursements or for the defendants to obtain payment of costs awarded to them is extremely limited. In addition, Mr. Chair, the fund is entitled to a levy which includes repayment of any funding provided and 10 percent of the total award or settlement when a class proceeding has received any funding.

Quebec has a novel concept called the Fonds. The Fonds is entitled to a percentage of all awards or settlements in all class proceedings in the province regardless of whether they received any assistance from the Fonds.

So these so-called no-cost regimes actually only limit but do not entirely prohibit cost awards. The courts retain the discretion to make cost awards where frivolous or abusive conduct has occurred or improper or unnecessary steps were taken or if there have been any other exceptional circumstances.

While British Columbia does have a no-cost regime, the province of British Columbia is currently reviewing the issue of the no-cost regime as part of its civil liability review.

The Alberta Law Reform Institute did a large amount of work on weighing the pros and cons of a cost/no-cost regime in report 85, titled Class Actions. The institute reported that the topic raised "difficult and important issues" and that it is difficult to choose between the two regimes. While the institute did prefer the no-cost option, it also reported that access to justice is taking place in Canada under both regimes.

So, specifically, Mr. Chairman, with respect to Bill 25 this legislation allows for agreements to be entered into between the representative plaintiff and the class members to share responsibility for costs associated with the claim. Bill 25 specifically does not include a provision found in other provinces that states that a class member is not liable for costs except in determining their own individual claim. Further, in giving notice to class members of the action, a representative plaintiff with the leave of the court may ask for "contributions from class members to assist in paying lawyers' fees and disbursements." This is found in section 20(8).

As well, one of the significant costs to a plaintiff will be the cost of giving the notice to all class members of a claim. In this area, Mr. Chairman, the legislation specifically allows the court to apportion the cost of notice between the parties. This is contained in section 25. This does not depend upon who is successful in the action.

Finally, Mr. Chairman . . . [some applause] Thank you for that smattering of applause.

Bill 25 allows the court to appoint "a nonprofit organization that is incorporated" to act as a representative plaintiff. This allows class members to participate in the corporation and to share responsibility for costs. This is found in section 2(6). Generally, Mr. Chairman, in a cost regime both parties have motivation to try to settle their dispute outside the courtroom. If costs cannot be awarded, there is the perception that there is nothing for either party to lose if the case has to go to court for a final ruling. So it's the prospect of facing court costs that forces many litigants to settle. The cost regime encourages parties to litigation in Alberta to have direct input into resolving their disputes. This is consistent with a variety of dispute resolution programs such as judicial dispute resolution and mediation.

So Bill 25 is consistent with the general cost regime in Alberta. The costs follow the cause. It is fair, and the courts have the discretion in the appropriate circumstances to waive the payment of costs if the litigants can show that the awarding of costs would be unfair to them.

I encourage all members of this House to support Bill 25 as it is currently written.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Chairman, we support Bill 25, but we certainly don't support the explanation for legitimizing the costs that we just heard from that particular member.

Mr. Rathgeber: You didn't understand it.

Ms Carlson: Well, I did understand it, maybe not so honourable member. In fact, what I saw was a justification for a government that has very deep pockets to be able to push anybody in a class action suit against them into a corner where they're forced to settle rather than go to court. That's what I saw was the justification for your getting your own way.

What would be wrong with the province of Alberta coming up with a novel idea? Oh, excuse me; they would have to be able to think of a novel idea, of a way to be able to explain this, as other provinces and other jurisdictions have, like Quebec and Ontario. So we don't think that your explanation for the justification of having to have a cost structure like we see here is reasonable. There's been lots of work done on class action proceedings acts by other jurisdictions, as you pointed out, that have very good points about them and very good options. If you can't come up with a bright idea on your own, you could cherry-pick from other places and put one together. We could help you with that if you needed the help. You could take an idea that we could come up with like we have in other areas, and we'd be happy to do that because it would improve the legislation. Given this particular sponsor's record in this House, that's not likely to happen. So we'll hold our nose and vote for this bill because most of it . . . [interjection] I haven't even got started yet. We don't have that much time. It's late. I'll save it for another bill, I think, perhaps the FOIP bill.

So we will hold our nose and vote for this one because overall the legislation is good, although certainly it's going to be potentially expensive, which will definitely put a damper on some proceedings going forward.

Bill 35 Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, are you rising to speak?

Mr. Cao: Yes. Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure to speak this evening on Bill 35, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003. I would also like to offer my sincere thanks to all the hon. members who offered comments during second reading of this bill.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to table and move the following amendment to the bill.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just hold on for a minute, please. Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1. Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, you may proceed.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe my colleagues in the opposition were consulted in regard to this amendment earlier today. I would like to ask that the table please distribute it now.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is simple, a minor technical change in order to update our legislation to the Canada Excise Tax Act. This amendment will provide continuity for the Alberta Tobacco Tax Act and the Canada Excise Tax Act, and for that I thank you.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Chairman, on the amendment I guess we're going to have to take the hon. member's word for it that people were consulted because no information was shared on this side of the House. So what can we say about this amendment? It looks simple enough, and if you're stating that it's just putting it in line with other regulations, then I guess we're going to support it.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the vote on this amendment?

Mr. Cao: I want to call the question on this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the amendment?

Ms Carlson: On the bill.

The Deputy Chair: Well, we haven't had a vote on the amendment as yet.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: On the bill now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: I'm hoping the sponsor will answer some of the questions that were raised by members in second reading.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. Well, as we look at the time, it's late, but I will continue on. I'm proud to have the opportunity to bring forth an act that will further discourage smoking and make Alberta a healthier province in which to live. All indications are that my colleagues in the Legislature regardless of their political affiliation are also keen to see Bill 35 proclaimed. For that, I thank you, but there are a few questions that the hon. member of the opposition raised during second reading and wants me to address today, so I am pleased to respond to each of them.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie asked why a section of the Tobacco Tax Act had not yet been proclaimed into law and what the delay might be. The section of the Tobacco Tax Act that has not been proclaimed related to a limitation on possession of any tobacco, however much. It will be proclaimed in force when the regulations are passed that provide for possession of larger amounts for legitimate reasons. The decision was made to hold those regulation amendments and put them in place at the same time as the amendments relating to Bill 35 are done.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie also wanted to know how the changes proposed in Bill 35 affect unproclaimed changes that are currently on the record and what guarantees Albertans have that the changes proposed in the bill will eventually become law. I'm very pleased to report that there will be no impact on the unproclaimed changes and that all of the amendments will be proclaimed later this year.

There was also a question about how 200 grams was chosen as a new limit and how current practices might change. The new legislation mirrors the exemption from payment of taxes upon importation found in the federal legislation. It was necessary for us to put the same 200-gram limit in place in order to obtain agreement from the federal government to collect the taxes at the border. The impact of the change is that the tax will be collected at the border.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie also discussed the tobacco tax that was put in place in 2002 and mentioned that 1.5 million more dollars had been allocated at the time for increased enforcement. The member wanted to know why today's amendments weren't just put into place at that time instead. Bill 35 closes a loophole by which tax can be legally avoided at the duty-free stores. It also assists the enforcement effort by providing a better paper trail for tax-free purchases. It does not eliminate the need for enforcement to protect against tobacco smuggling and importation of counterfeit tobacco.

On a similar note, the member also wanted to know whether the changes proposed to this bill would save money with respect to enforcement costs. There is not expected to be any savings in the enforcement costs. The benefit of Bill 35 is to close the loopholes that allowed for tax to be avoided. We expect the changes to improve enforcement capability but not eliminate the need for it. The cost of cigarettes is still substantially higher than it was prior to Budget 2002. The cost is not going to be reduced. As a result, there will be some trying to beat the system. Enforcement includes recognizing and responding to changing patterns of abuse on an ongoing basis, a key component to ensuring the tax collection system is effective.

There was also the question of why section 7 doesn't come into force with the rest of the act, why we would prefer an earlier date and suddenly the earlier the better. The federal government requires significant lead time in order to implement the collection of Alberta tobacco tax at the border, so September 1 is the earliest possible time for the Canada Customs and Revenue Agency to begin the new collection method. As for co-operation with the federal government I am pleased to tell you that a proposed agreement with CCRA has already been reached and that we look forward to working with CCRA.

The last question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie had to do with the collection of taxes and how that will affect companies like FedEx and Purolator, who are now making deliveries. There was also a question about NAFTA and whether there were any problems in that regard. The tax will be collected from the couriers at the Canadian border, and this is part of the proposed agreement with the CCRA. There is nothing in Bill 35 that violates any provision of NAFTA.

I would also like to respond to a few questions from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, who was interested in knowing how government would enforce the collection of taxes on tobacco coming into Alberta from Saskatchewan and B.C. since there are no customs locations at the border. In the interest of fairness we included provisions for a levy of tax on tobacco coming across provincial borders as well as tobacco coming across the border from the U.S. Tobacco coming from the other provinces is marked differently, and this helps enforcement to identify cases where it is coming into Alberta from other provinces. Of course, enforcement cannot track down all tobacco coming from other provinces, but consumers are by law required to remit Alberta tobacco taxes on any amount of tobacco above the maximum allowable quantities that are purchased in the other provinces.

The hon. member also noted the importation of tobacco through mail and the use of postal agents. The member was curious about how government could enforce this in a practical way. Canada Post is a subagent of CCRA and will collect tax on any tobacco being brought into Canada from the U.S. through the mail. Meanwhile, the movement of tobacco within Canada through the mail is illegal under federal legislation, and Canada Post will reject packages that contain tobacco.

Finally, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands also talked at some length about harmonizing tobacco taxes in this country and developing a co-operative approach. Alberta does co-operate with other provinces and with the federal government on a host of tobacco issues such as tobacco marketing, regulation, and enforcement. Of course, we look forward to continue working in this area just as we look forward to moving Bill 35 forward.

With that, thank you, and I ask for the question.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member did such a good job of answering all our questions, what can I do but ask for the question.

Bill 26

Corrections Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise at this early hour and speak to Bill 26, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2003, in Committee of the Whole. This is one of those bills that, although it isn't long, will have a huge impact on what is happening in our prisons, and in some respects I have to agree with the bill. One of the purposes of this bill is certainly to provide better protection for inmates and for guards and as well to protect these people against intimidations, assault, and blood-borne diseases like HIV in prisons. So from that respect and that point of view I certainly like the bill, but at the same time I think that from what I see in the bill, it is unlikely to happen.

This bill does fail to address some areas. Certainly, when we're looking at these recommendations – and we do want to provide a much safer environment for inmates and guards in prison – then we have to consider this whole idea that when we do have drug addicts in prison, they are going to get their drugs in prison. If we wish to stop the spread of HIV and other diseases that are associated with blood exchange between people, then certainly there must be a needle exchange, and I don't see anywhere in Bill 26 where this provision is made. Certainly, it is one of those where although we don't agree with the use of drugs, we have to be realistic in realizing that people with drug dependency that do go to prison are not going to stop immediately. So this would be one way that we can make prisons safer.

Another, certainly, is to provide bleach kits for inmates that continue to have a drug problem, and once again this is a proactive step. It is a step that will certainly stop the spread of those diseases that are transmitted back and forth with the use of shared needles, and that is definitely one of the things that we have to do, particularly when we have inmates in this situation. We also in the bill don't address the issue of programs that are going to assist inmates in curing drug addiction. So in those respects I think the bill falls short.

Now, as well, in looking at the sections of the bill and particularly section 2(i), it indicates that alcohol in this situation is going to be an illicit drug. Certainly, again, there is an inconsistency when we sell alcohol outside prisons, yet inside prisons we are going to make it an illicit drug. So I do have some concerns with this particular provision.

Now, as well, section 4 brings in the conditions for drug testing programs, and certainly under section 14.1 the wording of this particular section does give me quite a bit of concern. I think that with the present wording we have under section 14.1, the illicit-drug testing programs could lead to a potential Charter challenge by the way we seem to have this awkward reading that tries to go around the fact that even inmates have rights in prison.

The second part, 14.2(1), is a good idea because the idea of a random drug test isn't a bad idea, and I think that in this particular situation it is good. I still have the concern that while this is a much more reasonable section of this particular bill compared to 14.1, I think that we have to do some work on 14.1 to tighten up that particular section.

Section 5 deals with punishment, and the larger part of this provision states that when a disciplinary board is considering punishment, they must consider “imposing the loss of earned remission.” This provision, Mr. Chairman, also says that regardless of whether they are alleged to have committed an offence or not or whether they’ve been charged or not, inmates are still subject to internal disciplinary action. I certainly have some questions in regard to this. It would seem to me that this sets up a separate judicial system within the prison. If inmates can be charged and punished, why is it that we are still proceeding with this provision? So I do have some concerns there.

Section 6 allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations regarding the inmates to submit to “searches, illicit-drug tests and illicit-drug testing programs.” This section also gives the Lieutenant Governor the power to list illicit substances and to set out regulations regarding illicit drug tests and testing programs.

I have a few questions in regard to this particular section. Why can’t we have the testing program provisions in the act out in the open and move them away from the regulations? How far can the government go in listing illicit substances? Again, we had the example earlier of how alcohol in this particular bill is listed as an illicit substance, yet at the same time as a province and as a government we are involved in the sale of liquor. There’s an inconsistency here.

So with those few concerns, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and certainly listen to any comments other members may have on this particular bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d move that the committee rise and report bills 23, 24, 25, 35, and 26.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 23, Bill 25, and Bill 26. The committee reports the following with some amendments: Bill 24 and Bill 35. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are some members calling for us to go on to third reading, but I think I’ll move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:24 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 30, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/30

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us in all of our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mrs. Binarti Sumirat, consul general of the Republic of Indonesia. She is accompanied today by Bebeb Djundjungan, vice-consul of the Republic of Indonesia.

The consul general represents the world's most populous Islamic nation and the fourth most populous country in the world. Indonesia is also a large export market for Alberta. Our province has strong links to Indonesia's oil and gas sector. Those links go far beyond trade as well. In 2001, for example, Indonesian culture was on display at Klondike Days here in Edmonton. Through the Wild Rose Foundation Alberta helped establish a blood bank in Indonesia and helped small business operators through microloans.

I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce today to you and through you to members of the Assembly 53 participants in the Forum for Young Albertans. These are students from a number of high schools across the province who are spending the week learning about the Legislature and the inner workings of government. They have met with several members of the Assembly, and earlier this week they visited the Court of Queen's Bench to see the judicial system firsthand. On Friday they'll be holding a model parliament here in this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker, for more than 20 years the Forum for Young Albertans has been bringing young people from across the province together for these kinds of educational experiences. It provides an excellent opportunity for Alberta's future leaders to get up close and personal with their government and to learn more about the traditions and procedures of this Assembly. Who knows? Amongst these students may be some of Alberta's future MLAs.

Now, I would ask that our honoured guests – and I believe they're in the public gallery – rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a great pleasure for me to introduce to you and to the Members of the Legislative Assembly a very special person who I haven't seen for a while but who is very active in the community of High Prairie. She's here today passing through, and I just happened to see that she's sitting in the members' gallery. Her name is Irene Salisbury. She sits on a number of boards, the citizens appeal board and the Students Finance Board, and she's always one of those individuals who likes to listen to all sides and is very fair in whatever she does. So I'd like her to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two classes of grade 6 students from St. Patrick community school in Red Deer. These students are enthusiastic, very bright, and are in awe of the beauty of the architecture of this beautiful building. They are accompanied by their teachers, Irene Pickle, Gayle Currie, Rachel Letts-Trentham, Teresa Ruffle, and parent helpers Charleen Pfeil, Glenda Malsbury, and Yolanda Richards. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to rise to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 32 visitors from Bob Edwards junior high school in the community of Marlborough in the constituency of Calgary-East. We have 27 bright and intelligent students and five adults. The adults are their teacher, Mr. David Siemens, and the assistant principal, Ms Michelle Wills, and parent helpers Margaret Moen, Lori Stark, and Leonard Sieben. They're seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I don't know if my guests have arrived or not, but I understand that Orest Porayko is here with a visitor as well, and if they're present, I'd sure like to welcome them to the Assembly and ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of all members here.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Letters, faxes, phone calls, e-mails, and the first of many town hall meetings, last night in Camrose organized by the Official Opposition, have shown that this government's botched deregulation scheme has left Albertans broke, confused, frustrated, and angry. Larry Grenier, an Albertan whose utility bills have more than doubled, stated, quote: I'm really disappointed living in Alberta. To me it's no longer anything great. It's not an advantage at all. End of quote. My first question is to the Premier. Why is it government policy to wait until an election to provide Albertans relief from high utility costs?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that Albertans feel that they are broke and frustrated and angry. As a matter of fact, when I go out and about in this province, I find that people are reasonably pleased. Yesterday I had the opportunity of being in Crowsnest Pass to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Frank tragedy, the Frank slide, and there wasn't one complaint.

Now, I can understand that people will complain at a Liberal-organized forum. They go out and they advertise and they say: anyone with a complaint, please come out to the forum. Naturally, you know, there are about 30 percent of the people in this province who are unhappy, and they won't vote for us, the Conservatives. They'll vote for either the NDs or the Liberals, and that's a known fact, but we have to as a government pay attention to the majority and do what is in the best interests of the majority.

Relative to electricity and utility costs we do the best we can to make sure that laws are in place through corporate and consumer affairs, through the Department of Energy, through the Energy and Utilities Board to make sure that the citizens of this province are being treated fairly. In addition to that and relative to natural gas, Mr. Speaker, we put in a program where based on a yearly average, a rebate will kick in when the price on average reaches $5.50 a gigajoule.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that most Albertans can no longer afford to wait for the low energy prices that this government promised, when will energy deregulation kick in for the benefit of all consumers in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it has in some regions already. I can tell the hon. member that more power production has come onstream. We see more competition at the retail level, and over time as competition and more power come onstream – and hopefully we aren't hampered by the Kyoto protocol relative to our ability to generate more power through the use of coal – the price, naturally, will come down.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: can the Premier please explain why this government still blindly pursues energy deregulation when it has destroyed the economic advantage Albertans used to enjoy?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the Minister of Economic Development supplement my answer. We have not in any way, shape, or form destroyed the Alberta advantage. As a matter of fact, people are coming to this province in droves. We still have one of the lowest, if not the lowest, unemployment rates in the country. We're the only province without a multitude of taxes such as sales tax, payroll tax, capital tax. We have the lowest corporate and business tax rate in the country. We have the lowest personal tax rate in the country. People – that is, the majority of people – say to me: am I ever happy that I moved to Alberta. These are people from all across the country.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Holy Cross Hospital

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Since charges were laid against the owners of the Holy Cross hospital in December, have any further violations been reported by occupational health and safety officers at the Holy Cross site?

Mr. Dunford: I don't have any information in front of me, and if the hon. member does, certainly if he wishes to send it over, I'd be glad to look into it.

Dr. Taft: Is the minister aware of public health or workplace hazards other than asbestos at the former Holy Cross hospital?

Mr. Dunford: Same answer.

Dr. Taft: Okay. We'll try a different approach. To the same minister: given that occupational health and safety officers have been at the Holy Cross for two years, can the minister assure Calgarians and all Albertans that the Holy Cross is a safe environment?

Mr. Dunford: Well, it puts me in a difficult situation, of course, to try to answer that when the hon. member knows very well that an investigation is ongoing, and of course who knows the outcome of that investigation? So it's very clever of him, but I'm not in a position to respond.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The TD Bank report identified weaknesses in Alberta's education system, and a recent study by the students' union at the University of Alberta may help explain why that weakness exists. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Why in constant dollars has there been an average $2,000 drop in per student operating grants at our two biggest research universities over this last decade?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, back in 1993-94 there was approximately a 19 to 20 percent decrease in the amount of dollars that were given to the postsecondary institutions. For those of us who were in the Legislative Assembly and for those of us who lived in Alberta at that time, obviously we had a problem with the deficit. There were numerous departments that showed a significant decrease in the amount of dollars that they received. Since 1995 the dollar amounts that have gone to postsecondary education from, first of all, the minister of advanced education and, secondly, from myself as the Minister of Learning have increased quite dramatically. As a matter of fact, at the University of Alberta over the last three years the increase has been in the range of 12 to 15 percent.

So we fully recognize that there was the decrease at that time, in the '93-94 era. We are continuing to put dollars back into the postsecondary system, Mr. Speaker. This year alone there was around 4.2, 4.3 percent that went back into the postsecondary system. This is money, from my point of view, that is extremely, extremely well spent.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given the TD report, what is the government doing to avoid the cuts in staff and in service that are being proposed at these two major universities?

Dr. Oberg: Well, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker. Today in a couple of the papers there was an article about the arts department at the University of Calgary, I believe it was, that was going to have to decrease $5 million. What in actual fact happened is they were given instructions to decrease 2 and a half million dollars from their wish list. This was not a $5 million decrease in their department.

We continue to fund the universities. We continue to put as much money as possible into the universities because, as I say again, I do believe that money in the postsecondary system is money that is extremely well spent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: does the minister see any relationship between the Learning department budget and the $10.5 million cuts being proposed at the University of Alberta?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I'll reiterate. There has been approximately a 12 to 15 percent increase in the University of Alberta over the past three to four years. One of the other things that you must remember is that included in my budget is a 2 percent increase that is yet to be allocated. There is $10 million for the performance fund, and there's another $10 million for the access fund. Those are dollars that have yet to be allocated to the system. The University of Alberta from time to time goes through looking in their particular organization for efficiencies, and that's one of the situations that has happened here now. Again, I feel that it's important enough that I will reiterate for the third time that money in postsecondary education is money that is extremely well spent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Toxic Mold in Foothills Medical Centre

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The first documented complaint of mold contamination in the renal dialysis unit at Calgary's Foothills hospital was made over six months ago. Since then, 62 out of about 100 staff who work in this unit have been exhibiting symptoms consistent with toxic mold contamination. After months of foot-dragging the first independent testing for mold contamination is finally taking place this week. Contrast that to the swift action taken by the Minister of Children's Services. She moved staff out of the Hunterhorn facility in Calgary shortly after the possibility of mold contamination was first suspected. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why has the Calgary health region been allowed to stonewall for months on repeated requests for an investigation into mold contamination at the Foothills when Children's Services took immediate action to protect its staff and clients in similar circumstances?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that mold exists. It is naturally occurring, and in fact the levels outside, the natural environment, tested higher for the presence of mold than within the Foothills medical centre.

Mr. Speaker, I'm here today to say that Albertans should have confidence in their health care system, and furthermore when a problem arises, Albertans should have confidence that the right steps are being taken in order to correct it. I've stood in this House; I've answered questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I did that yesterday. I spent two hours yesterday afternoon answering questions in estimates. I'm happy to stand here to answer questions today, tomorrow, and for every single day of this session if necessary in order to make sure that Albertans know what the score is and what's happening with the Calgary health region and the Foothills hospital.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Calgary region responded to an incident and took remedial action. The amount of mold that was present was below the levels prescribed as being dangerous by Health Canada, not our standards but by Health Canada. In the expert medical opinion of Dr. Thomas Louie, who is the medical director of infection control and prevention for the regional health authority, the facility is safe. The hon. member may be a doctor, but he is not a physician who is qualified to replace and displace the expert medical opinion of Dr. Louie with respect to the safety of the Foothills facility. I can assure the hon. member and all Albertans that Dr. Louie and members of the regional health authority are concerned about ensuring the safety of patients and staff.

When the mold was discovered, remedial action was taken. The mold occurred because of construction that was taking place and some leaking of water. Now, the mold was found in the drywall, in cabinetry and sinks in one of the units at the facility. Those things were removed forthwith. They did more than they were required to do, and it ought not be within the needs of this member to make a political issue out of what really amounted to the right steps being taken by the regional health authority to ensure the safety of staff and patients at that facility.

Dr. Pannu: Will this minister explain why he failed to act with the same promptness as the Children's Services minister, who took decisive action to relocate staff and clients from a children's facility that was suspected of mold contamination? The question is of promptness. Would you explain that, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it is not the responsibility of the minister of health to review incident reports on every issue that turn out to be a nonthreat to the health of patients and staff at the Foothills hospital. I reiterate that the regional health authority has a process in place to respond to incidents appropriately. It would be untenable for the operation of any organization the size of the Department of Health and Wellness and regional health authorities for every incident of a nonthreatening nature to be reviewed by me. That's simply not an appropriate role for the minister of health.

Again I repeat: it is not appropriate for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to try and displace the expert opinion of an expert on matters of infection control and prevention. It ought not be his responsibility to try and displace an expert opinion in that regard.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final question to the same minister: why did it take the threat of legal action from the United Nurses of Alberta's solicitors to finally get the Calgary health region and this minister to take more contamination problems at the Foothills seriously?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, at all steps the regional health authority has been completely transparent with the United Nurses of Alberta and AUPE members who expressed concerns about this. When this first arose in October of last year, remedial steps were taken, new tests were taken. It was again found that with the exception of one case, all of the mold levels were below the standards established by Health Canada. In the one case where the mold was above that standard, it was found in an area that was in a ceiling area that was subject to negative air pressure, meaning that the mold was contained in that particular area. In the best advice of Dr. Louie it was best to leave that mold there rather than disturb it and allow it to migrate into the balance of the unit.

So the regional health authority has worked with its staff members. It has been completely candid and open about the remedial actions that have been taken. It has been completely open and transparent about the risk which resulted as a result of this, and they assessed the risk to be very low. All the right steps have been taken, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Education Property Taxes

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was my understanding that the portion of education property taxes collected by municipalities, then sent on to the provincial government was at one time capped at $1.2 billion with the intent to eventually eliminate the provincial portion of property taxes altogether, giving municipalities more flexibility on how much taxes they may collect. For the last two years that cap has been removed, and provincial revenues have increased because of this. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Is it still the intent of this government to eventually eliminate the provincial portion of the property taxes dedicated to education?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, we made a decision in 1994 in this government to collect school property taxes across the province so that every child no matter where they lived in Alberta would have the same benefit of dollars to go into education to provide an equal education from north to south to east to west. I think that was a very good decision for the children and for the school districts that were having difficulty. The use of the property assessment has been a good stable basis for providing a vehicle to collect a property school tax formula.

In putting that framework together, there has been an ongoing debate as to how much of the school tax should be levied at the property level. With the cap on the mill rate that we've put in place at 8 percent, we've seen that portion move from being almost a 50-50 split to something less than that so that the school property assessment makes up roughly 35, 36 percent today. In fact, it means in the city of Edmonton, as an example, Mr. Speaker, that it is estimated that the Edmonton school boards will receive about $638 million in education funding. From the school property assessment they will receive $235 million, so they'll receive 2 to 1 on their education. So $235 million would come from the school property assessment side of the equation, and the balance would come from the general revenue fund.

To make a move, Mr. Speaker – and this is important – to move away from that type of program, you would have to replace that revenue in some other form of taxation. It's not a matter of getting rid of it; it's a matter of: where does it fit best in our assessment? At this point we have found that the property is the most stable vehicle for collecting that tax.

Mr. Vandermeer: My first supplemental is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that it has been said that the only way taxes are going is down in Alberta, why have you allowed for a tax increase for property owners?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much. Let me reiterate this to put it in perspective. In the city of Edmonton, a city that was recognized as the most growing city in Canada, this year in education property taxes we will collect $235 million for the province.

The city of Edmonton will receive over $638 million because we believe in this province that we need the necessary funds to educate our children to make it the great province that it is, and in doing so, we want to continue to do that.

What I'm also proud to say, though, is that we do have a formula in place to mitigate any jolts in the system, and I truly do believe that people in this province believe that we need to fund our education system in a very, very important way. You may not be aware, but, members of the Assembly, what we collect in education property taxes in municipalities makes up about one-third of the total fund of education funding.

Mr. Vandermeer: My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Seniors. What are you doing for seniors on low fixed incomes who are negatively affected by increases in their property taxes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People on fixed incomes, including seniors, have unfortunately been facing increasing costs in rent and property tax and utilities and food and health care products and transportation and the list goes on and on. We have a very good program for the lower end seniors. My concerns are with people in the mid area.

With respect to property taxes specifically I hope to be entering into discussions with the AUMA and the AAMD and C and others to see if we can devise some sort of program that will at least stabilize or make the property taxes predictable when the seniors enter into that time of life that's marked by the age of 65.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Program

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, according to financial statements from the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board, PDD achieved a marginal surplus last year thanks to "managing uptake of new individuals," "implementing across-the-board reductions to all programs," and "instituting other discretionary cuts." These phrases are government-speak for limiting access and cutting programs and services. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Given that this year's increase in PDD funding is comparable to last year's, how can the minister assure disabled Albertans and their families that they won't be faced with another year of cuts and program cancellations?

2:00

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, any reference to cuts or program cancellations is rather false, and I take some exception to that. If there are some specific cases where some of the agencies providing these services have decided to move on or reduce their load or whatever, that's a separate matter. I can tell you that during the three budgets that I've been privileged to work with for PDD, we've seen increases of 8 percent, 8 percent, and this year it's about 8 or 9 percent again. It provides for ample dollars through our community agencies who hire their own people to provide outstanding services for over 8,000 individuals whom we refer to as persons with developmental disabilities. We're very proud of that record because this is a needs-based, demand-driven program. For those individuals who cannot do for themselves, we're very proud to help them out, and we will continue doing that to the very best of our abilities.

Dr. Taft: Well, if funding for PDD is adequate and, indeed, in the minister's words "ample" and if management is appropriate, how does the minister explain that there are individuals in Edmonton and Calgary waiting anywhere from five months to over a year for PDD services?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the answer is that there is an intake assessment process, which is extremely thorough and geared to each individual's particular case and each individual's circumstances. I want to make it very clear that those individuals who are the highest priority, who might be at risk for health, safety, or other concerns, are dealt with first and, generally speaking, immediately, and I'm talking within days. There might be others who are not in as dire a circumstance who might be waiting a short period of time, but in fairness to that question those individuals are also being taken in faster, and the additional moneys, $30 million to $40 million more that we've added this year, will help speed up that process as well.

Dr. Taft: Can the minister explain why spending last year on PDD administration and governance grew faster than funding for programs in direct operations?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be clear that when we're talking about administration, we're talking, by and large, about administration that is carried out mostly by volunteer, not-for-profit organizations, organizations like Goodwill and Robin Hood, Winnifred Stewart, and other organizations like that. So administration costs are really at the local level.

The member has raised an interesting question, because I myself have looked into some of the admin costs. Quite frankly, I can tell the House that there are some agencies that operate with about a 15 percent administration overhead, and there are some that are up over 30 and 40 percent. Now, it's not that simple or that clear cut, because we have to remember that we're dealing with human beings who have very specific needs, and they will vary, Mr. Speaker, from person to person. So it does take some additional administration for those who are in the higher level needs area than those who are at the lower end of the needs equation.

The short answer to the whole issue is that there has been much more money provided again this year to specifically address the needs of those individuals who are in those circumstances and need the help the most, and we're very proud of what we're doing there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alberta Film and Television Industry

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Alberta film community heard very disturbing news regarding the Canadian television fund and that cuts of $25 million to the funding level will mean the end of many Canadian and Alberta television shows and series. I was wondering if the Minister of Community Development could possibly tell us what the anticipated impact on the Alberta film and television industry may be from these cuts.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the film and television industry in this province is alive and well and has just enjoyed an increase in its budget as well. However, the federal government's recent move to reduce the Canadian television fund income by about $25 million courtesy of the federal government will have a devastating impact on our television programs that are created here in the province. In fact, from conversations with the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association as well as with individual film producers I can tell you that six out of seven films for television which were to have been created in this province will likely not go ahead; in fact, it's almost certain that they won't. That will further translate into a huge loss to the industry while we as a province are trying so hard to bolster it. So, in short, it will have a devastating effect on films for television such as 100 Days in the Jungle, which people will remember as the story of Edmonton oil workers who were abducted down south, and other excellent documentary films similar to that.

Ms Haley: In light of your answer, Minister, what are you doing to ensure that the Alberta film industry is not unfairly impacted by these cuts?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have written to the minister at the federal level, the Minister of Canadian Heritage, and asked for a review of this decision, possibly a rescindment of the decision, reinstatement of the funds so that this important industry not only in our province but throughout the great Dominion of Canada can be bolstered to the levels that it's been enjoying. I know that in the province of Alberta through grants that we provide for film development, we've seen activity directly connected to that investment in excess of $70 million. This withdrawal of federal funds for television programs will likely have an impact of a loss of about $20 million in terms of jobs and wages and creative services. That includes about a $10 million impact to the hotel industry and the food industry and related industries. So I have already written to that minister, and I hope to speak with her about this very shortly, try to get her to change that decision so that our film industry in this province can continue with the great support that it needs and as a bolstering of our national identity in the process.

Ms Haley: My last question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Economic Development. Given that the Film Commission is under his department's responsibility, I'm wondering if he has any idea what our film commissioner or the Film Commission in total would be doing to help market our product better so that the impact of the federal cut is less severe on Alberta film producers.

Mr. Norris: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. member for that great question. We are doing a number of things, Mr. Speaker. At the outset this industry has had some challenges, to be sure, and this federal government decision is yet another challenge. To that end, we've written the Minister of Finance, the Hon. John Manley, asking him to reconsider that decision immediately.

Our Film Commission is now focused on getting out the message about Alberta producers and Alberta backlots. The industry calls it God's backlot because of the remarkable opportunities throughout Alberta, from Drumheller to Crownsnest Pass to the mountains to the beautiful Cold Lake area. So our commission is now traveling around the world to various shows, certainly the one coming up in Banff that we're hosting, and there's another one in Paris that's going to be attended. This is where the industry gets together and says: "What are the opportunities? What can we do?" We have to be there as Alberta, first and foremost, to let them know what the opportunities are, and under our department and our commission we are doing that.

We can obviously do a lot more, but it's a very easy thing to sell because, clearly, Alberta is a remarkable backlot. We have great producers and great directors, and the number of projects that have been done here is second to none, so we're going to keep working on it, understanding the challenges.

Thanks.

Lethbridge County Airport

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, since September 2001 Lethbridge airport's port of entry status has been suspended. This has resulted in a devastating economic impact on the community. Regional, national, and international corporations are feeling the pinch as a result of the cost to the community of Lethbridge, and this easily reaches into the millions of dollars every year. To the Minister of Transportation: what is the minister doing to resolve this transportation crisis?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, we have made numerous, numerous contacts with the federal minister, actually with a number of federal ministers, not only the minister responsible for treasury but transportation as well, security. We've looked at all kinds of ways of creating some resolution to the problem over a period of time, but the most important thing is that even with the council of western transportation ministers, all four western provinces, getting together and having a joint submission, the federal government still hasn't come forward with at least a reasonable response and at least telling us where the $24 that originally was taken – every person that got on a plane to fly even from Vancouver to Alberta paid $24 as a security fee, creating a billion dollar fund, and nobody knows where this money is going. When we get that answer, I'll be glad to transfer and communicate that response to the hon. member.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning to supplement.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In my capacity as minister responsible for immigration I have also taken this task forward to the minister responsible for customs and immigration. As a matter of fact, I hand delivered a note from the county of Lethbridge to Minister Denis Coderre, who is responsible for customs and immigration. I gave him that letter from the county back in October of last year. The federal government has certainly been made aware of the issue, and to date we have not received any answer back on this.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the minister of intergovernmental affairs: what has the minister done to get Lethbridge airport's port of entry status reinstated?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, as indicated, we have certainly added our voice through our department to the whole matter of getting the status for the Lethbridge airport changed. The ministers involved have been contacted. There have been meetings with them. It's my understanding that recently one of the ministers, in fact, was in the area of southern Alberta and had some discussions. However, I have to admit that to this point in time we've only had very general responses, which would indicate that they are reviewing the situation. Certainly, this decision is one that is long overdue, and we should have that airport situation resolved.

Mr. Bonner: To the Minister of Economic Development: what is this minister doing to alleviate the effects of this crisis on the corporations who are affected in southern Alberta?

Mr. Norris: Well, obviously, air access is crucial to any economy. We have been working with the Minister of Transportation. We have also written to the federal minister responsible for the security tax that the minister referred to. I guess what we're looking at in general is air access throughout the province as an economic development initiative to understand and have an inventory, if you will, of where those points of entry are. The city of Red Deer is now attempting to get that same status, so we work together with the Minister of Transportation and our federal counterparts under the Transportation department, who have the key influence in that.

I have to say that the good people of Lethbridge and the MLA for that particular riding have been tireless about bringing this matter to our attention, and we're going to continue on it until the federal government relents and gets it back to where it should be.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Centennial Celebrations

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's 100th year anniversary is about two years away, and I have been receiving calls from my constituents and school classes who want to know how they can participate in the celebration aspect of Alberta's centennial, not just the centennial legacy projects but specifically the celebratory events. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. Can the minister tell us more specifically what celebration components are being planned for 2005, how Albertans and in particular how Alberta schoolchildren are going to be involved?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of programs being planned right now for Alberta's schoolchildren. I think it's important at the outset to delineate between so-called legacy projects versus celebrations projects. Legacy projects were started almost three years ago because we did recognize at the time that it'll take longer for that infrastructure to be built, be it community halls or swimming pools or ice arenas or whatever it is that the community wanted.

The other side of that, of course, is the celebrations side, and specific to Alberta schoolchildren, along with projects that specifically focus and rivet their attention on the proud history of this province during our 100th year, we will certainly have essay contests and poetry contests and research contests and displays and all those kinds of things. In fact, we also hope to include at least 100 young Alberta schoolchildren in a special audience with a royal family member, should we be fortunate enough to receive a visit from a royal family member, as well as medallions for all the schoolchildren. Of course, the official song will be out, and it will be scored and orchestrated and arranged for children's choirs and for high school bands and so on.

In addition to that, of course, we invite a lot of local initiatives to occur, homecomings and reunions and the like, where municipalities will be actively involved, as will all of our extremely very, very capable volunteer, community-driven projects.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: which other ministries are involved in the centennial celebrations, and what kind of cross-ministry initiatives are you planning?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, almost every government department is going to be involved in the centennial one way or another. Some of the obvious examples would be Alberta Learning, Economic Development, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, certainly the Seniors department with special recognitions for the pioneers and some who might even be turning 100 in Alberta's 100th year. There will be special initiatives along those lines, but we'll also have projects that include Environment, obviously Children's Services. There's just a whole potpourri of cross-ministry government initiatives that will be rolled out, again, as we get closer to about two years out, which will be later this fall.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what kind of lasting legacy can Albertans expect from these centennial celebrations, and how much will they cost?

Mr. Zwoddesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the legacies will be many and varied. Obviously, we will have some vertical infrastructure projects, places where they can visit, wonderful projects such as the swimming pool in Olds, such as the Tri Leisure Centre in Spruce Grove, such as the updated bus barns here in Edmonton or the incredible project to revamp Calgary Heritage Park, and the list goes on and on. In total there will be at least 50 or so of those types of projects. When we roll into that other centennial projects such as the Alberta Heart Institute or the bone and joint centre of excellence down in Calgary, there will be some hospital-type facilities. I'm sure there will be some schools and so on. All of those that will be inaugurated or completed in 2005 will be viewed as centennial projects.

So in total, Mr. Speaker, we've spent $58 million on centennial legacy projects that are community based so far. We added another $19 million for 31 projects here a couple of weeks ago, and we still have a little ways to go. But you'd have to add up all of those figures to get an exact answer to the last part of the hon. member's question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Homeless Initiatives

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last fall's count of homeless people in the city of Edmonton found over 1,900 individuals living on the street including 267 children under 15, enough kids to fill an elementary school and meet a full utilization rate. The count showed that 65 percent more people lived on Edmonton streets now than just two years ago. My questions today are to the Minister of Seniors, responsible for housing. Given that the city of Edmonton had to open an LRT station for the homeless this winter, does the minister still believe that the province is doing enough?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, first of all, 1,900 homeless are not living on the streets and were not living on the streets in Edmonton last fall or now or at any other time.

Secondly, with respect to what the province is doing, I do believe we have some 16 shelters that cover a whole myriad of different people with different needs whose needs we are trying to meet in conjunction with a lot of other authorities such as the Salvation Army and the Mustard Seed and whomever else. We have in the last three years invested millions of dollars in addressing this problem. Further, we have entered into housing agreements with the federal government where we will hopefully have some transition housing to further alleviate the situation.

With respect to the LRT being open for some emergency shelter space, I do thank the city of Edmonton for doing that. It was an appropriate action. There was a temporary need, and that need is no longer there. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, if you relate the event of a particular rooming house being closed for health reasons just prior to this need, you would see the relationship of the sudden need.

In short answer to her question "Are we doing enough?" I would say that we're doing what is humanly possible, and we will continue to address the problem and hopefully at some point resolve it on a long-term basis.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Seniors, responsible for housing: why is the province continuing to download responsibilities onto municipalities?

Mr. Woloshyn: There again, you know, I find it rather interesting, a question coming out of the sky. This ministry is not downloading onto municipalities. We are working with municipalities. With respect to the homeless two years ago we had the municipalities draw up their needs for the homeless, and that policy became a basis under which we've been working. Edmonton has got a group which they go under, Calgary has, and so have the other five cities. I would like to relate that very recently, Mr. Speaker, we opened up a significant facility for the Canadian Mental Health Association in Grande Prairie. This was under a new affordable housing program that will help the homeless in Grande Prairie.

We work with the municipalities. They contribute. We appreciate the contribution. We also work with the federal government, whose contribution I also appreciate. It's on 50-cent dollars. This province has taken the lead, and quite frankly at the conference lately in Winnipeg we were touted as being leaders in the field. We are the province that has the first – the first – facilities being occupied in Canada under a new Canada affordable housing program. We only signed the agreement last June. If that isn't doing everything we can, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what more we can do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Given that in December 2001 the Premier promised to report on homelessness but neither the offices of the Minister of Seniors and housing nor the Minister of Community Development can give me an answer about what happened to it, will the minister commit to finding out the status of this report and to sharing it with the Assembly?

Mr. Woloshyn: The report alluded to was a report to cabinet, which has been done, and it's there. No, I will not commit to sharing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Municipal Policing Grants

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to a document I will table later this afternoon, the city of Edmonton subsidizes the province of Alberta for $13 million in policing costs by providing services that are provincial responsibilities. Downloading of senior government responsibilities such as serving documents, conducting bail hearings, and inspecting commercial vehicles is creating major expenses for municipal police services. The government, of course, canceled municipal policing grants in 1995, to top it all off. My question is to the Solicitor General. Given that the province gets $1 billion from gambling and over $500 million from liquor, why has the province failed municipalities by not contributing to the policing costs related to these activities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say, first of all, that we provide $109 million in policing. We provide $16 million in an unconditional grant. The city of Edmonton, I believe, receives approximately $21 million, $22 million in fine revenues. That does not exclude all of the other grants that they have applied for and received from this province.

I'm aware of some of their concerns in regard to policing, Mr. Speaker. We're working on that. We provide also $2.4 million to CISA in regard to working on gang activities. Our door is open. We're willing to work with the police and will continue to do so.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given the frustration of the police service personnel as evidenced by the threat that they will stop providing services in provincial jurisdiction to get more constables on the street, will the minister commit to immediate action to resolve this matter?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear here. Under the Police Act it is the responsibility of the police commissioner along with city council to determine the police budget. We can see in the paper today that the mayor of the city of Edmonton has asked for a $2 million cut within the police budget. It is up to the council and the mayor and the police commission to determine the police budget.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, the question to the minister is this. Will the government stop downloading its responsibilities for matters in provincial jurisdiction onto municipal police forces, or will it alternatively supply them with the funds necessary to carry out those activities?

Mrs. Forsyth: Again, Mr. Speaker, the government is not downloading. What the hon. member is referring to is part and parcel of a policeman's job, and the police in this province do a very, very good job. Again I want to say one thing. It is the police commissioner for the particular city along with the city council who determines the police budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Electricity Supply

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Calgary-Fort includes a large business and industrial park. The ensured and low-cost supply of energy, electricity particularly, is vital to the growth of my business constituents and also vital to Alberta's economic diversification activity. A good supply of electricity depends on both the generation capacity and the transmission network capacity. First, I want to ask the Minister of Energy about the generation capacity. Could the minister update the House on the generation capacity of electricity in Alberta?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, yes, I can. It is an important piece to recognize that in the Member for Calgary-Fort's constituency there is a thriving industrial industry, and in fact it's an industrial industry, an industrial sector, and an industrial neighbourhood that's grown as a result of the Alberta advantage. In Calgary-Fort there's absolutely proof positive that debunks and makes artifice of the continued comments from the opposition that electricity deregulation is inhibiting Alberta's growth. So I would invite those members who are concerned to simply visit Calgary-Fort, a good constituency in the city of Calgary, and look at that industrial area and see the benefits that accrue to all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, it's very important in the component of low pricing for electricity that we have ample supply. Ample supply means good signals for generation, generation that will be delivered in a timely fashion, in a timely manner to the place where it's needed in this province. Subsequent to 1998 when the EUB no longer made decisions on market need, some 3,000 megawatts, or about 35 percent of the Alberta grid, have been added to the Alberta grid without an additional capital cost to the Alberta rate base.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister, and it's about transmission. I learned that the Fort McMurray area has high industrial activity, but there seems to be a lack of transmission capacity to and from the area. So my question is again to the minister about what he's doing in this area.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is important, and it's another fundamental question. You can't have generation without transmission and you can't have transmission without generation in order to meet the growing needs of a growing Alberta and the growing demands from consumers. In fact, this has been an object of some considerable debate, consideration, and challenge not only to the government but to members in the marketplace. What actually has transpired in the province of Alberta is that we are a small market in comparative terms to world markets. We need to find ways to promote generation in an orderly, timely fashion in the marketplace, and that means that we don't want to put up speed bumps or artificial barriers to investment in generation. Generation is about five times more expensive than transmission, and in fact just as there's only one taxpayer, there's really only one ratepayer group.

We are examining the fact that we have a transmission system that has had no substantial investment over the past 15 years and that one area of generation, albeit far from the growing consumer demands, is the Fort McMurray oil sands area. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to rightsize this generation, we have to send a signal that it would be in Albertans' public interest to metaphorically burn this gas twice; in other words, to use this gas not only to generate steam to extract bitumen from the oil sands but also to generate electricity for the benefit of all Albertans.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Minister. My second supplemental question is: looking at the province as a whole and in terms of transmission development, could the minister tell us about the progress?

Mr. Smith: I'll just give a brief update on progress, Mr. Speaker, given the confines of time in question period. I can say that the Department of Energy is working on a transmission policy that takes into account delivering maximum generation benefit and maximum consumer benefit in the public interest of all Albertans. To that end we're directing the system operator, the independent system operator, the Alberta electrical system operator to hold a policy roundtable with involved parties. We will also convene the Premier's advisory council on electrical issues, and we're going to develop a transmission policy that maximizes Albertans' benefits.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before I introduce and recognize the first of seven recognitions today, I guess, might I convey congratulations on behalf of all members to the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, who is celebrating a rather significant anniversary today. [interjection] Forty-nine would be rather erroneous, hon. member.

Might we revert briefly as well to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I look up into the members' gallery this afternoon it behooves me to introduce a special guest, one who is no stranger to this Assembly. In fact, he is the president of PC Youth of Alberta, and I understand that he's in the area to kick start a youth recruitment in a certain Edmonton riding, and I know that any riding he has recruited in in the past has been successful in the provincial elections, so we do wish him well. Could we please ask Blake Robert to stand and receive the warm welcome.

Thank you.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Isadore Burstyn

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to recognize a great Albertan, a great Jewish Canadian, and a Holocaust survivor, Isadore Burstyn, who spearheaded the construction of the Holocaust memorial just outside this Legislature.

As you all know, yesterday was Holocaust Memorial Day. Izzy was unable to attend the ceremony yesterday because he is over in Poland to commemorate the 60th anniversary of the Warsaw uprising. His daughter Nora Lyman attended the Holocaust memorial on her father's behalf.

I want to pay tribute to this man for his perseverance on having this memorial built. It is important that members and people everywhere remember the atrocities a madman's regime inflicted on the Jewish people. To my friend Izzy Burstyn, l'chaim.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Leaders of Tomorrow Awards

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to acknowledge the recipients and nominees of the leaders of tomorrow awards in my constituency. These awards are given to young volunteers in four age categories between six and 21 years of age who have demonstrated outstanding dedication and excellence in their community service work.

In the Wetaskiwin area 19 outstanding young people were nominated and given a certificate and an invitation to a reception in their honour. At the reception held in Wetaskiwin on Monday, Megan Krause, Justin McKay, Dylan Weir, and Kristin York were named as the recipients of the 2003 awards.

In the Camrose area out of 14 nominees Carlee Dobos, Brad Field, Renee Burkard, Christina Belsheim, and Breanna Dashney were named as the recipients of the award.

These recipients were given an engraved plaque to recognize their efforts and a $100 cheque that they contributed to a nonprofit organization of their choice.

Congratulations to all the nominees and award winners for the contributions they have made to our communities and for the important work they do as volunteers. Their leadership today will assure them to be leaders of tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Hepatitis C Awareness

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize the efforts of the Canadian Hepatitis C Activist Network to convince the Premier of Alberta along with the Minister of Health and Wellness to proclaim the following: whereas hepatitis C is a treatable illness infecting thousands of Albertans and it is a preventable illness that can be effectively beaten through awareness and early detection; whereas the financial cost in terms of family budgets, public health care, and social services along with the intangible costs of mental anguish and unfulfilled potential are costs that are borne by all citizens; and whereas it is in the interests of all citizens to heighten awareness and understanding of problems and programs connected with hep C to reduce stigma and to support research, delivery of treatments, and a cure. Given all of the above, I support the designation of May 2003 as hepatitis awareness month and May 1, 2003, as hepatitis C awareness day, and I urge the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness to do the same.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer North.

Frank Slide Centennial

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Turtle Mountain, east of the Crowsnest Pass, was known as the Mountain That Walked by the First Nations people who lived in the area. At 4:10 a.m. on April 29, 1903, the mountain walked as 90 million tonnes of rock fell from Turtle Mountain. In 100 seconds people's lives were shattered by an event that changed the Crowsnest Pass and the history of our province forever. At least 70 people in the town of Frank perished in what became known as Canada's deadliest rockslide.

Yesterday our Premier and the ministers of Community Development, Government Services, and Municipal Affairs attended a commemoration ceremony in the town of Frank to honour those who lost their lives and to recognize the courage of the survivors and those involved in rescue operations. In demonstrating the courage, determination, and will to survive that Albertans have become known for, the community of Frank endured the tragedy, rebuilt the schools, homes, and businesses, and restored the town of Frank to its present day.

On behalf of the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod I ask all Albertans to join us in remembering this historic, albeit tragic, event as we all prepare and plan for a great future for the brave community of Frank.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Octagon Club

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in our Legislative Assembly to publicly recognize the Octagon Club of Paul Kane high school and teacher Dale Smith, who in conjunction with the Optimist Club honoured 12 remarkable high school students from the four high schools in St. Albert. At the 2003 Youth Appreciation Night last Wednesday the following very accomplished young volunteers were honoured by their school administrators, their families, and friends: Brooke Menegozzo, Gabrielle Riches, and Evelyn Ding from Paul Kane high school; Saleena Haworth, Candice Thorpe, and Brent Francis from l'école secondaire Sainte Marguerite d'Youville; Brittney White, Chantel Kinahan, and Catherine Chee from St. Albert Catholic high school; and Nikki Gordey, David Roper, and Jackie Hallet from Bellerose composite high school.

I know the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert would join me in congratulating all of them but especially those three from Bellerose composite high school. It is within his constituency.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St Paul.

Portage College Sports and Education Dinners

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to recognize Portage College sports and education dinners, which were held in St. Paul and Lac La Biche on April 25 and 26. Lac La Biche sold out within five days with a waiting list, and both events raised over $65,000 for scholarship trust funds for students in need at Portage College.

We were honoured by having two guest speakers: George Chuvalo, who was the Canadian heavyweight champion for 20 years and who also fought six world champions, and the other guest speaker was Beckie Scott, the pride of Vermilion, who holds both the bronze and silver medals and hopefully the gold in cross-country skiing.

I would like to congratulate all those involved in this third annual event. The successful efforts and commitment shown by these constituents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul who attended will be appreciated by many future students.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands

May Day Movement

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. By May 1, 1886, over 250,000 workers had joined the May Day movement in the United States and were ever more vocal demanding recognition of workers' rights. Their demand for an eight-hour workday, safer working conditions, and the right to collective bargaining could not be silenced. On May 3, 1886, Chicago police fired into a crowd of striking workers. Four were killed.

Since that time the labour movement in Canada, the United States, and other countries has continuously fought for things like medicare, women's rights, health and safety legislation, free public education, peace, and the protection of children. Here in Edmonton a committee forms yearly to plan a multidisciplinary festival that brings together labour and the arts communities to celebrate and affirm workers' contributions to society.

It is an honour for my colleague for Edmonton-Strathcona and myself on behalf of the New Democrat opposition to take part in the ongoing struggle for justice and democracy in Alberta. It is truly an honour for me to recognize the tireless efforts of the May week organizing community, the labour movement, and all working Albertans.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly once again to Introduction of Guests?

2:40head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Reverend Dr. Bruce Miller, who is the minister for Robertson-Wesley United Church. The reverend is a great advocate for human rights and for the vulnerable here in Edmonton and in Alberta, and he was recently the recipient of the Queen's jubilee medal upon my nomination. I see that he's joined us in the public gallery. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the warm support of the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure of presenting a petition signed by 126 grandparents from Calgary who are petitioning this Assembly to "urge the Government of Alberta to make the necessary changes to legislation and enable the grandparents to maintain ongoing contact with their grand-children."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I provided written notice to your office of my intention to raise a question of privilege in this Assembly later this afternoon involving the decision of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to boycott a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee this morning as well as the decision of all government members of that committee to not attend.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter of congratulations to Mr. Fred Bradley, president of the Crownsnest Historical Society, who was so integrally involved in the commemoration ceremonies yesterday which the Premier and myself and the members for Livingstone-Macleod and Fort McMurray attended. So congratulations to the Frank community.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and table the required number of copies of the response to Motion for a Return 11 regarding the Department of Transportation's policy on its contract management process.

Also, I wish to table the Department of Transportation's contracting and tendering process for both construction and maintenance, also available on our Transportation web site, and the following manuals: Project Administration Manual; Engineering Consultant Guidelines for Highway and Bridge Projects, volume 1: Design and Tender; and Engineering Consultant Guidelines for Highway and Bridge Projects, volume 2: Construction Contract Administration.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of three reports on public/private partnerships. The first is a white paper on the subject exploding myths and addressing concerns about P3s; it's called For the Good of the People. The second is a brief on articles available explaining how partnerships work, and the third is a presentation on P3s entitled Why Don't They Understand?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter addressed to the hon. Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness from Bill Buckels, the secretariat with the Canadian Hepatitis C Activist Network, asking those two individuals to proclaim May as hepatitis C awareness month.

My second tabling is from the same individual, Bill Buckels, in his position as vice-president of HepCURE, Hepatitis C United Resources Exchange, addressed to all Members of the Legislative Assembly asking for us to support the Premier and the minister of health in proclaiming May 2003 hepatitis C awareness month.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have more tablings on education funding, all with permission. A postcard from Antje Espinaco-Virseda opposing having to be desperate and fund-raising through casinos for public education.

The second, with permission, from Pat Stryker, saying, "The Alberta advantage depends on high quality fully funded public education."

The third from Ian Mercer expressing concerns over the Minister of Learning's positions on learning.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My tabling today is from the Sundre Fish and Game Association and talks about promoting fishing, hunting, and proper management of the resource and its habitat for today and tomorrow.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of the document I referred to in my question earlier this afternoon in question period, prepared by the Students' Union at the University of Alberta, indicating a 28 percent loss in constant dollars in terms of per student funding for the university and a 20 percent loss at the University of Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a document entitled Edmonton Police Service Perspective on Equitable Relationship outlining various provincially mandated services that are costing the municipal service over $13 million annually.

Privilege

Allegations against a Member

The Speaker: Hon. members, yesterday at the conclusion of this section of the Routine we were dealing with a purported point of privilege raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. We had arrived at a certain point in the proceedings whereby a request was made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to have this matter delayed one day. I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in a moment, but as there was a delay for a day, I would first of all ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora if he has anything further to advise the Assembly with respect to this matter.

Mr. Hutton: Mr. Speaker, all I am asking through you to this member is that he categorically and unconditionally apologize to me for the remarks he made on Monday.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I indicated yesterday that I would recognize a prescribed number of parliamentarians who might want to participate in this point of privilege this afternoon. I did indicate that I would certainly call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and afford an opportunity to the Government House Leader and the Opposition House Leader and did also ask if there were any additional members that might feel that they are party to this particular proceeding. I did receive the written confirmation of the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, who felt a participant or named in what was transpiring. At this point in time that's exactly the procedure that I will follow unless motivated a little later with respect to additional members.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, do you wish to participate?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue that must be addressed here is whether certain documents by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had obstructed or interfered with the Member for Edmonton-Glenora's ability to perform his duties or, alternatively, whether the dignity and the authority of the Assembly has been offended. This implies an issue of contempt for the House and/or, in the alternative, an issue of privilege against the member. Given the Speaker's parameters, my arguments will focus on the comments made on Monday regarding the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Marleau and Montpetit on page 52 define contempt.

Any conduct which offends the authority or dignity of the House, even though no breach of any specific privilege may have been committed, is referred to as a contempt of the House. Contempt may be an act or an omission; it does not have to actually obstruct or impede the House or a Member, it merely has to have the tendency to produce such results.

Maingot on page 234 states, when referring to an issue of contempt:

It must be shown that the Member was obstructed in his work relating to a proceeding in Parliament and not simply while he was performing his representative duties in his constituency or in other . . . areas . . . nor simply in his private capacity.

It is important to note that my comments were not a question of privilege against the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. This is the reason why I did not notify the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, as some have argued under Standing Order 15(2). This was a question of privilege dealing with a situation of the material being in the precincts of this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, my comments, which are at the heart of this matter, were not about placing blame on or maligning any individual member of this Assembly, nor was there any intention on my part to obstruct this member in his parliamentary duties. Neither was there any intention to offend the authority or dignity of this House. The objective of my comments were quite to the contrary.

The hon. member in his statement yesterday said that I accused him of being a hateful bigot. I believe that if you look at what I actually did say, you will find no such reference or no such allegation. The Government House Leader in his comments stated on page 1241 of Hansard:

In fact, Mr. Speaker, there has been really no allegation at all against the member other than the fact that he had in his possession a piece of paper which has got vile content.

This shows that my comments were perceived by the Government House Leader as not attaching any individual judgments or allegations to any member of this House. However, this whole issue has developed into something much different than I ever wanted it to and no doubt anything the Member for Edmonton-Glenora ever wanted.

Mr. Speaker, at no time did I allude to the member producing, reproducing, or circulating the material in question. Neither did I attach any judgment statement to the member holding the document. What I said was that I saw him in possession of it. Hansard will confirm these facts. I even went as far as to state on page 1240 of Hansard: "The member has always been, inside and outside this House, a compliment to this Assembly and this province." These words are far from impugning. I believe that my comments were taken to be something they were not by certain members of this House. I would certainly argue that words which I never uttered are being used against me. For this I am tremendously offended.

I urge you to carefully review what I said during debate on Monday. In Hansard you will find that I did not at any time make allegations against another member, impute false or unavowed motives to another member, or use abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder. What I did state in the House on Monday was the fact that I had witnessed the repugnant material in the possession of the member. I said on page 1239 of Hansard that I am raising "a question of privilege regarding certain repugnant materials that have been circulating in the parliamentary precincts." While it is true that I made mention that a member of the government caucus had the material, the statement clearly indicates that I was raising a question of privilege regarding certain repugnant materials that I had witnessed in the parliamentary precincts, not about an individual member.

As Mr. Speaker will certainly know, privilege and contempt do not have to be against another member. They are about the infringements of rights of the House as a whole. One example where a case of privilege was not against a member was on November 19, 2002, when I raised a question of privilege about the use of the term "Legislative Assembly" on government advertisements.

Additionally, I stated on page 1240 of Hansard that "I would expect, Mr. Speaker, that you will allow the member that I have named an opportunity to provide justification for his possession of the document." I merely asked that you afford an opportunity to the member to add his comments about my question of privilege and how he came to be in possession of it, so he could simply identify the source. As I have stated both inside and outside this House, I know the Member for Edmonton-Glenora to be an honourable man who would never produce such material.

During my statement on Monday I indicated that the question of privilege I raised was the most difficult thing I had ever done during my years as a member. I raised the question of privilege with great reflection and contemplation. Anyone reading Hansard will clearly see that my comments were focused on the main point and not to bring any case of malice against the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to look at the facts of this issue, to understand my words for what they say, and to not read in allegations that simply aren't there.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I will make two final points. First, I would like to work with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and the Government House Leader to combat hate literature. I want to put a stop to this. To that end I will be bringing forward a motion at the appropriate time to establish a committee, co-chaired, hopefully, by myself and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, to identify and to fight the spread of hate literature not only in this Assembly but across the entire province. Secondly, I am sorry if the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was implicated in this issue, and I truly apologize to him for that, but at the same time I would like to see that I could work together with him in the future to combat hate literature across this province.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this matter is not about the integrity of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. He is a fine individual and a very good representative in this Assembly. This is about hate literature in this Assembly. I would make every effort to work with this hon. member and the Government House Leader in the future to combat and halt this abhorrent practice.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, with the greatest of regret, I was hoping that we would hear this afternoon a full and complete apology for the damage that has been done to the reputation and the name of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. While I appreciate the words of Edmonton-Gold Bar – and I think all members of the House do appreciate those portions of his participation today which attempted to somewhat mitigate the damage that's been done by referring to the fine character of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, which we all agree with – what was necessary to purge what I believe is a contempt of this House, not just of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora but all members of this House, was a full and complete apology, and we didn't hear that.

With your permission I'll proceed, then, to argue that there is a prima facie case. If you'll bear with me, I was preparing not to argue it, so I will ask for a little bit of latitude in reorganizing myself. Under Marleau and Montpetit, page 86:

The unjust damaging of a Member's good name might also be seen as constituting an obstruction. In ruling on a question of privilege, Speaker Fraser stated: "The privileges of a Member are violated by any action which might impede him or her in the fulfillment of his or her duties and functions. It is obvious that the unjust damaging of a reputation could constitute such an impediment."

Mr. Speaker, it's also apparent from Erskine May Parliamentary Practice at page 117.

Indignities offered to the House by words spoken of writings published reflecting on its character or proceedings have been punished by both the Lords and the Commons upon the principle that such acts tend to obstruct the Houses in the performance of their functions by diminishing the respect due to them.

Reflections upon Members, the particular individuals not being named or otherwise indicated, are equivalent to reflections on the House.

It is also indicated that other acts besides words spoken or writings published . . . though they do not tend directly to obstruct or impede either House in the performance of its functions, yet have a tendency to produce this result indirectly by bringing such House into odium, contempt or ridicule or by lowering its authority may constitute contempts.

Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, citation 64, and I quoted this on Monday: “The House has occasionally taken notice of attacks on individual Members.”

Mr. Speaker, I refer you also to Standing Orders 23(h), “makes allegations against another member,” and (i), “imputes false or unavowed motives to another member.”

Then, Mr. Speaker, I would go to Hansard. On page 1239, issue 35, Monday afternoon, April 28, the Speaker, yourself, prior to hearing the presentation from Edmonton-Gold Bar on the purported question of privilege that he had raised, admonished members of the House, admonished the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Before the hon. member commences with his purported question of privilege, the chair wants to caution the member and all members who wish to participate in this debate about imputing false or unavowed motives to another member or making allegations against another member. This is prohibited under Standing Orders 23(h) and (i), and in short the chair will not tolerate any allegations impugning the reputation or motives of a member.

Then you referred members to chapter 3 of Marleau and Montpetit. Immediately thereafter the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar rose in his place and precisely did what you had just admonished him not to do.

Now, in bringing forward his statement today – and he may well have been trying to correct that error, and if he was doing so, I appreciate that, but I don’t think he completed it – he tried to suggest that he did not say anything about the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, that his true purpose was to raise the issue in the House, and I wish he had done just that. I wish that in his statement today he had made it clear, but he did not.

He indicated in his remarks on Monday, “I witnessed this inappropriate material in the possession of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora while in the Chamber at 5:08 p.m. on Thursday, April 24.” By making that statement, he has now connected imputed motive to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora. He didn’t need to do that to raise the issue of offensive material in the House. He did not need to make that statement. He did not need to mention any member of this House.

I quote from page 1240 of Hansard where he also indicated:

It is most inappropriate for hate propaganda to be floating around in this Assembly and in the parliamentary precincts, and it is most inappropriate for a member of this Assembly

And I stop the quote there, Mr. Speaker, to remind you that he had previously named the member of the Assembly.

to have possession of the same.

He then goes on to say:

Freedom of expression and speech does not give members the right to be hateful.

There can be no other interpretation than he was imputing motives and making allegations against a member. So to say today that he in no way impugned the integrity of the member is nonsense. He may not have specifically called the member a hateful bigot, but that was the clear interpretation that any reasonable person would take from the words that he made.

Now, he indicated today: I did not raise this question of privilege to deal with the possession of this document by a member in the Assembly. That was clear on the face of it, and then he went on to quote myself and my comments to say that no allegation was made. I was indicating that at the time he had not specifically made an allegation that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora had circulated the documents, but certainly in the context of his remarks he was imputing motives to the member because he in his remarks named the member and then went on to indicate that the document that the member had in his possession should not be circulated in the House, and there’s no other clear interpretation of this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it’s clear. I think it’s unequivocal. Whether the language directly makes a comment about an individual member or not, the language clearly brought the Member for Edmonton-Glenora into the context of the hate literature and into the context that the hate literature, as described by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, ought not to be circulated in this House or floating around. There can be no separation or disassociation of those comments at a later date other than by a complete, unequivocal apology to Edmonton-Glenora, which he could have done and still maintained the point that I believe he was actually trying to make, which was that none of us ought to agree with documents of a vile nature. But that’s not the issue now. The issue now is if there was contempt and whether he’s purged that, and I do not believe that he has by that statement.

Mr. Speaker, this question goes even further than that, in fact, because as a result of the point of privilege being raised and as a result of the statements being made, there was discussion in this House. In the debate in this House with the presentations of various members, interventions by various members on the point of privilege it became apparent to the House, I believe, that the contempt was even further than the actual statements against Edmonton-Glenora. The contempt was that people were not respecting the privileges of members by reading documents that they had in their possession, and that’s inappropriate. We are all entitled to have documents in our possession and on our desks, and we’re entitled to do our work. People have the ability to move around this House freely when we’re in committee and sit at each other’s desks. Even sitting at someone’s desk does not give me the right to read what they have on their desk. That’s their information.

I take it one step further, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar today suggests that there ought to be a committee to review I don’t know what. Again, I respect the member for what I believe he was trying to do, which was to deal with what he felt was an inappropriate document, but I would repeat again what I said earlier in this House, that all of us receive materials, submissions – call them what you will – from constituents, from Albertans and, in fact, from other parts of the country. Some of the stuff that we receive is not very nice. We are elected here to be representatives of Alberta, and I presume that our constituents imbue us with the confidence that we will know the difference between appropriate submissions to legislators to encourage the debate on public policy and those things which should be treated as the garbage that they are. But we as legislators, we as citizens have the right to look at what our constituents send us and to make that determination, not some committee, not somebody else.

It is the essence of our privileges in this House to have the freedom of speech to be able to receive material, discuss it if we wish with someone else. Who knows what the contents of that discussion might be. One is not entitled to ask what I was discussing with one of my colleagues, on what point, whether I was discussing because I was in agreement, whether I was discussing because I was in disagreement, whether I was discussing because I couldn’t believe the foul nature of what somebody had sent me. All of that is within my purview as a member and in my purview as a citizen to discuss with other people.

I understand why the member brought the point of privilege, but there was a clear admonition from you, Mr. Speaker, at the beginning not to impugn motives, not to violate 23(h) and (i). Clearly, it couldn’t have been clearer that if a person wanted to raise a question of privilege about a document, that’s within their right to raise, but they ought not do it in a manner which so clearly draws into question the character of another member, if not directly stating, clearly suggesting that a member of this House and a member who was named was not just holding a document but was holding it with intent to do something with it. I think that's clear on the face of it.

I think that there's a prima facie case of privilege. I don't think the member has helped his case by participating in a discussion rather than doing the right thing and standing and simply apologizing. All that was required was that he simply stand, clarify that his intent was to deal with the document, and then apologize. That was not what I heard. I would ask you to find a prima facie case and allow us to move a motion to refer it to committee.

The Speaker: Hon. Opposition House Leader, do you choose to participate?

Ms Carlson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't know how much more complete and unequivocal an apology can be than what we heard from this member when he says that he's sorry if the member under discussion was implicated in this matter, when he says that he is sorry for any of the ramifications that might have occurred here, when he says once again, not for the first time and not just inside this House, that he has the greatest respect for this member and his abilities and his ability to represent his constituency.

The topic under discussion here is a very serious topic. It is a topic of hate literature. It is a topic that had been in discussion with yourself and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for 10 days prior to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora having it in his possession. In that letter that you sent to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar you not only talked about the seriousness of the piece of material that's under discussion, but you CCed that letter to House leaders of all parties and to the Sergeant-at-Arms and to the Clerk. The expectation then is that House leaders have a responsibility to share that information with their caucuses so that people know what is construed and what is an example of, if they don't understand it when they first see it, hate literature.

When we know that we have hate literature floating around this Legislative Assembly not for one day or for two days but for at this point in time 10 days, then we also have some responsibility to speak to why we have it in our possession. That is in fact what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked for when he talked about it. He stated that it was in the possession of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, which the Member for Edmonton-Glenora agreed was the case. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar then asked for an explanation for that, and at that time the Government House Leader said that that in itself doesn't constitute a privilege. That is as far as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar went. He asked for an explanation. That other interpretations were made of that outside of this House in media reports or anywhere else is taking and really creating an allegation.

For this Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to not have an apology accepted and to not be able to bring forward an issue about hate literature and how it is managed and handled within the precincts of this Assembly is a very grave concern. I think that it really impinges on our ability for freedom of speech in this Legislature. If we look at Marleau and Montpetit, which is who we usually go to for referencing in this particular Assembly, it speaks very strongly that the freedom to make allegations which the member genuinely believes at the time to be true or at least worthy of investigation is fundamental.

So what do we have here? We have a situation where the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar genuinely believes that there is a problem that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora has had access to the same information that House leaders have had, that the Speaker has had, that the Sergeant-at-Arms has had, that the Clerk has had, and that what he asked for, then, is not an investigation but a report, just a report from the Member for Edmonton-Glenora in terms of why he has the material. That was the beginning and the end of it in terms of Edmonton-Glenora.

Throughout that process when I read what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had said, I felt that made it clear that he spoke highly of this particular member, and he wanted to know why he had it in possession and, more widely based, why it was still circulating in this Legislative Assembly while there had been an investigation ongoing about the origin of this paper. Everybody should have been made aware in this Assembly that this was a piece of information that, in your own words, Mr. Speaker, should not be in the precincts of the Assembly, the grounds, or the Annex, that it was "certainly inappropriate material." So this is where this went.

That it took on a life of its own is very regrettable on all sides; there is absolutely no doubt about that. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar cannot be held responsible for interpretations made by peoples or groups or companies or media outside of this Assembly. In this Assembly today he has asked members for their acceptance of his statement that he was sorry that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was implicated and that he apologized. Now, what else can you ask for from a person when you're talking about such a serious issue?

If this Assembly wishes to stifle anybody's ability to participate in freedom of speech, then to find a contempt in this particular matter would be the process to follow. I do not believe that there is a contempt. I believe that this apology should be accepted and that we should deal with hate literature in the manner in which people of this province expect us to conduct ourselves.

The Speaker: The chair had indicated earlier that he was prepared to recognize the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. Does the hon. member wish to proceed?

Mr. Horner: Yes, I do. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I may have to check the Blues, but I did not hear the member apologize for dragging our colleague the Member for Edmonton-Glenora into this in the first place.

I would like to rise to speak to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora's question of privilege arising from the debate in this House concerning an allegation made by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I rise, Mr. Speaker, because I was also indicated in this allegation by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. It is necessary to give a brief description of the situation which gave rise to the serious allegations and to show the reasons why I believe a prima facie case of privilege exists.

It was during a time when the Member for Edmonton-Glenora had come to sit beside me in this House during Committee of the Whole, which is an accepted practice under our rules. The intent of the member when he came to sit beside me was to discuss a subject of mutual interest to both of us, that of troubled youth and ways we might be able to help them: community conferencing, Clean Scene, AADAC, and a number of other issues.

Mr. Speaker, the piece of paper which the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has cited in previous debate was on the desks in front of us. We did not discuss it. If memory serves, it ended up in the trash before the hon. member returned to his seat in this House. It's important for me to relay this to the House for several reasons; they relate to the current issue at hand. It relates for two important reasons. One, has what has been brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar impinged upon the ability of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to do his job properly?

As to section 69 of Beauchesne's, Mr. Speaker, we are representatives of a broad spectrum of peoples in this great province. We in this Assembly must be above reproach in all that we do inasmuch as is humanly possible. We have led our lives and try to lead our lives in an honourable fashion, and we have strived to be fair to all members of our constituency. The perception of this is as important as the reality. If it is perceived that this is not the case, that we are not fair and equitable to all members of our constituency, then we are indeed at a point where our abilities to represent those constituents are impaired and obstructed.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar presented a document to this House, a document that was described by him as hate literature. Then this same member gave the impression through innuendo to this House in Hansard, Mr. Speaker, for all to see and hear, that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora somehow agreed with the sentiments of this document, possibly even distributed it. I refer to Hansard page 1239, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

... on a question of privilege regarding certain repugnant materials that have been circulating in the parliamentary precincts and which have been in the possession of a certain member...

He goes on to name the Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

... of the government caucus while that member was present in the House.

On page 1240 of Hansard: he raises this question of privilege to deal with the possession of this document by a member of this Assembly in this very Chamber... I would expect, Mr. Speaker, that you will allow the member that I have named an opportunity to provide justification for his possession of the document.

On page 1243 of Hansard of the same day, April 28, 2003, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview is speaking, and he points out:

But for point of clarification what the three of us clearly saw was the Member for Edmonton-Glenora sharing this document with the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and at that point – and goodness knows, as much as anybody here I hope that there's an innocent explanation – it appeared to us that there was in fact the circulation of this document among the members of the Assembly, and as a result of that there was a breach of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, by your own comments you stated that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had brought this issue of a document forward for investigation. It was investigated and it was dealt with by your good offices. This started on the 16th of April, a number of days ago, yet the member continued to bring forward an accusation in the form of a question of privilege against the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

I would like to expand a little bit further on what our Government House Leader said through the House of Commons Procedure and Practice. It's very clear as to the serious nature of a question of privilege, and it is a grave insult to the practice to bring spurious intervention to this House. Chapter 3, page 86, the second paragraph of the book states:

The unjust damaging of a Member's good name might also be seen as constituting an obstruction. In ruling on a question of privilege, Speaker Fraser stated: "The privileges of a member are violated by any action which might impede him or her in the fulfillment of his or her duties and functions. It is obvious that the unjust damaging of a reputation could constitute such an impediment. The normal course of a Member who felt himself or herself to be defamed would be the same as that available to any other citizen, recourse to the courts under the laws of defamation with the possibility of damages to substitute for the harm that might be done. However, should the alleged defamation take place on the floor of the House, this recourse is not available."

Mr. Speaker, you have stated many times in this House that imputing motives to another member is a very, very serious matter.

The second reason my story relates, Mr. Speaker, is that obstruction can happen in other ways. It can also be through surveillance of the member, which could impede the ability of the member to perform his duties in this House. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar made it very clear in his statements Monday that not only did he covertly look at documents in the Member for Edmonton-Glenora's possession, but he also convinced his colleagues to make a determined effort to review the contents of my desk and documents in the possession of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Speaker, again from the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, chapter 3, in a ruling by Speaker Francis on February 20, '84:

an action which amounts to a form of intimidation does not need to be directed at the Member in person in order to constitute an offence... of privilege.

Beauchesne's 96 states:

The privacy which surrounds Members' office files also extends to computer-based data in the equipment used by Members. That confidentiality must be respect.

That's from Debates, February 9, 1988.

Mr. Speaker, while we are in the House, it could be said that these desks are our offices. We do a good deal of work in this House, and the privacy of our documents should be respected regardless of their content. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has made it very difficult for all members of this House to continue to perform our duties in the House because we will be under the threat of documents on our desk being discussed in Hansard by this member wandering by in the Committee of the Whole, truly an intimidating prospect.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe strongly that a prima facie case of privilege has occurred for not one but three reasons. First, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has wasted the time of this House by bringing forward an obviously spurious point of privilege against a member of this House with what I would argue is malicious intent. And I said "malicious intent." Second, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I argue, has intentionally defamed a member of this House and, by association, several others including myself.

I said "intent" because in order to determine this, we should look at what was the intent the member had in mind. Did the member investigate this accusation before making it? Did he really believe that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora was agreeable to the literature involved? No. Did he stop on his way by our desks to ask what we thought of the contents of the piece of paper? No, Mr. Speaker, he did not. Did the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar look into the character of the member he was about to defame to see if that member might fit that type of characterization? No, Mr. Speaker, he did not.

The Member for Edmonton-Glenora has worked hard to be respected for his support of our multicultural heritage in this province. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has worked hard to be known in this province for his fight against FAS, fetal alcohol syndrome. The Member for Edmonton-Glenora has worked hard to be known in this province for his wide support and fund-raising for a wide number of charities through his athletic ability.

Mr. Speaker, 20 years of hard work to build trust, respect, and service are all wiped away in one afternoon for the political interests and malicious innuendo of another member of this House. Did the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar look into the character and the integrity of the member he was about to accuse? I think not. The fact that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did none of this investigation proves, in my opinion, that the intent was malicious, and it was an attack on a member of this House. All of these terrible charges against the Member for Edmonton-Glenora have seriously damaged his ability to face the multicultural constituents he represents. Obstruction? Intimidation? Definitely, in my view.

Thirdly and lastly, Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has broken the respect we all hold for this House. He has broken the respect of privacy when we are in this House by clandestine snooping, for lack of a better word, on the privacy of our desks. The intimidating factor of this is very serious to all members on their ability to function in this House. This wasn't a case of: oh, I just happened to be walking by and noticed. No. This was a deliberate attempt to discover the contents of a document on another member's desk without his permission, in and of itself a strong argument for a prima facie case of privilege. Had he asked, we would have shown him the document. We would have told him exactly what we thought of it. He chose not to. He didn't want the truth. He chose instead to elicit the help of his colleagues to do exactly the same thing he did, a shameful thing in its own right.

Mr. Speaker, I cite a serious breach of our Standing Order 23(h) and (i) and Beauchesne 69 and 96 with not one but three reasons why this member is being called on a point of privilege. In my opinion there is a prima facie case of privilege.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Would there be additional members who might wish to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has already participated. Additional members? No further ones then?

The chair is prepared to rule on the purported question of privilege raised by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora yesterday concerning the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

First, notice of the purported question of privilege was given by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora on the evening of Monday, April 28, found at page 1259 of Hansard. The member also provided written notice to the Speaker's office yesterday morning of his intention to raise a question of privilege. Accordingly, the notice requirements of Standing Order 15(2) and (5) have been met. The chair finds that this matter was raised in a timely fashion.

The subject of the purported question of privilege arises from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's comments made on Monday at pages 1239 and 1240 of Hansard. In essence the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's purported question of privilege was that the presence of a document in the possession of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora constituted a contempt of the Assembly. The chair does not intend to discuss the contents of the document, which is generally agreed to be objectionable. At pages 1243 and 1244 of Hansard for that day the chair held that there was no prima facie case of privilege.

The chair wants to note that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora had no advance notice of the nature of the purported question of privilege. Nevertheless, he chose to have the matter decided on Monday. At page 1241 of Hansard he indicated that he found the document "repugnant and offensive." He said that "what I did with that document was throw it in the trash." Despite the hon. member's uncontroverted statement there was no apology or retraction from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

In raising his question of privilege yesterday, the Member for Edmonton-Glenora argued that he felt "intimidated and harassed" by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's comments. By extension he was arguing that the words constituted an improper obstruction to him performing his parliamentary work, which is part of the classic test for a breach of privilege found at page 14 of Joseph Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition.

Members may recall that on Monday afternoon prior to hearing the question of privilege from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the chair specifically warned members from making "any allegations impugning the reputation or motives of a member," yet here we are.

3:30

Members may recall recent incidents involving unparliamentary language of such a nature that have given rise to a purported question of privilege. The chair refers to rulings on May 28, 2001, at page 806 of Hansard and April 17, 2002, at pages 762 and 763 of Hansard. In both those rulings the chair quoted Maingot where he says the following at page 254:

Language spoken during a parliamentary proceeding that impugns the integrity of Members would be unparliamentary and a breach of order contrary to the Standing Orders, but not a breach of privilege.

On April 17, 2002, although there was not a prima facie case of privilege, the Leader of the Official Opposition apologized, and the Deputy Premier accepted the apology.

It is true that Marleau and Montpetit state at page 86 that "the unjust damaging of a Member's good name might also be seen as constituting an obstruction." The example they give is from a May 5, 1987, ruling by Speaker Fraser of the Canadian House of Commons where he ruled that the hon. Otto Jelinek's ability to function as a member had not been impaired by certain allegations involving conflict of interest.

The difficulty in this case is that if one dissects the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, there is not a specific phrase that is particularly unparliamentary. He accuses the Member for Edmonton-Glenora by association with the document. He states at page 1240 of Hansard for April 28, 2003:

It is most inappropriate for hate propaganda to be floating around in this Assembly and in the parliamentary precincts, and it is most inappropriate for a member of this Assembly to have possession of the same. Freedom of expression and speech does not give members the right to be hateful.

It appears to the chair that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora's case really relates to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's entire purported question of privilege, which the chair found not to be a prima facie question of privilege and expressed regret about it even being brought up. Frankly, the chair found the innuendo odious.

Although the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did not directly say so, the conclusion one could draw from his purported question of privilege is that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora was in some fashion promoting discrimination. Despite the fact that any such notions were put to rest by the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, there was no apology forthcoming. Although the Member for Edmonton-Glenora has unmistakably clarified the record, the fact that he had to even address the issue is a matter of grave concern.

There are few allegations that could be made against a member that could be more damaging than that he or she was promoting or condoning discrimination. As the chair has said over and over again, freedom of speech carries with it great responsibility. The events on Monday bring no honour to this Assembly, which is extremely regrettable not just for the chair but for each and every member of this Assembly.

The chair will give the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar one more chance to do the honourable thing and do a thorough apology.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, earlier in my remarks I apologized to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. I thought that was clear, and I'm very sorry that he was implicated in this matter, and that was also very clear. Okay? [interjections] I withdraw any remarks that I made that in any way, shape, or form impugned the character of the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, and I apologize.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as the chair did on April 17, 2002, at page 763 of Hansard, the chair will quote from Speaker Schumacher's September 23, 1993, ruling where he talked about what constitutes an apology.

If a member intends to apologize for and withdraw any remark, whether as a result of a point of order or a question of privilege, the apology should be sincere and the withdrawal unequivocal.

In light of this, is the apology offered by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar acceptable to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora?

Mr. Hutton: Mr. Speaker, I truly want to accept the apology of this hon. member today, but what I heard was reference to earlier statements and a form of a retraction. That is not an unconditional apology, and that is what I require.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: All right. Then we shall proceed.

The chair finds that this is a very unusual situation where the incident that gave rise to this question of privilege was one member complaining about documents in another member's possession. While the chair is not implying in the least any agreement to the document that was the subject of Monday's question of privilege, the chair does not condone censorship in terms of what members read. It is beyond dispute, in the chair's mind, that the mere possession of a document hardly constitutes agreement or approval, yet this is precisely the impression left by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's comments on April 28, 2003.

As the chair has commented, there are few allegations that can be more detrimental to a member's reputation than one of promoting or condoning discrimination. Furthermore, these allegations against the Member for Edmonton-Glenora have done nothing to raise the esteem of this Assembly in the eyes of the public. The distinguishing feature of this question is that it's difficult to find a precise unparliamentary expression. It is the innuendo left by the entire speech. The chair finds it appropriate to quote from Maingot at page 227, where the following reference is made to the report of the United Kingdom Select Committee on Parliamentary Privileges.

In the final analysis, in areas of doubt, the Speaker asks simply:

Does the act complained of appear at first sight to be a breach of privilege . . . or to put it shortly, has the Member an arguable point? If the Speaker feels any doubt on the question, he should . . . leave it to the House.

This is the situation the chair finds itself in.

Accordingly, the chair finds that there is a prima facie question of privilege. It is up to the members of the Assembly to determine whether a case of privilege is ultimately made out. Under Standing Order 15(6) any member may give notice of a motion not later than at the conclusion of the next sitting day. The chair would strongly encourage members to examine the traditions surrounding these motions.

Furthermore, the chair would ask all members to respect the process for addressing these matters in the House. It would be in keeping with parliamentary traditions and the respect owed this institution for comments to be made in this Assembly and its committees rather than outside it.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, in light of your ruling I believe it would be in order to give notice to the House of intention to move a motion to refer this matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, Standing Orders and Printing to determine whether there was a breach of privilege and what appropriate action ought to be taken.

The Speaker: Notice has been given.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Privilege

Contempt of the Assembly

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising on this second question of privilege today pursuant to section 15 of our Standing Orders. In doing so, I'm asking you to rule that the actions taken this morning by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment as well as government members of the Public Accounts Committee constituted a prima facie breach of privilege of the Assembly and of my rights as an individual member.

This morning at the Public Accounts Committee of the Legislature all 13 members of the government caucus were absent from the committee. Also absent was the witness that was scheduled to appear before the committee this morning, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Section 53(4) of our Standing Orders states that a quorum for a standing or special committee is one-third of the members. With only four of the 17 members present, by definition the Public Accounts Committee lacked a quorum and could not proceed with this morning's meeting.

The Public Accounts Committee is established according to section 49(1)(b) of our Standing Orders, and section 50 states that "public accounts, when tabled, stand referred to the Public Accounts Committee." Public Accounts is a critical committee of this Legislature responsible for oversight of the financial affairs of the government. It is the only standing committee of this Legislature chaired by a member of the opposition. It is charged with the responsibility of providing oversight of the expenditure of public funds, and it is the only forum that we as members of the Assembly have to ask ministers and senior officials detailed questions about their annual reports as well as the audited financial statements of their ministries. As such, Mr. Speaker, it is a key, fundamental committee of this Assembly and of the legislative branch with oversight over the use of public funds by the executive branch.

The scheduling of government ministers as witnesses to appear before the Public Accounts Committee is done months in advance. Ministers appear before the Public Accounts Committee at most once per year. I am aware that committees of this Legislature are responsible for governing their own affairs. I would have raised the matter of the nonattendance of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment at the committee except that with no government members present, it was not possible for the committee to meet or take any decisions. Moreover, in making my decision to raise this matter in the whole House, I was also guided by our Standing Orders, section 62(3), which states that any question of privilege or disorder should be reported to the Assembly if it is sitting. So that is why I believe I have acted appropriately by bringing this matter to your attention and the Assembly's attention at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, I point to Maingot's Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, second edition, where it says on page 14 that the House of Commons and its members have certain enumerated rights and immunities. In the event that a situation arises that attacks or disregards these rights and immunities, the House may treat this as a breach of its privileges. Maingot continues:

The Senate and House of Commons have the power or right to punish actions that, while not appearing to be breaches of any specific privilege, are offences against their authority or dignity . . . Such actions, though often called "breaches of privilege," should more properly be considered "contempts."

Maingot states on page 193:

Nor is it necessary that there should have been a breach of one of the privileges enjoyed, collectively or individually, by either House:

anything done or omitted that may fall within the definition of contempt . . . even if there is no precedent, may be punished.

I next wish to address whether the minister's nonattendance could be considered a contempt of the Assembly. Chapter 4 of the House of Commons Précis of Procedure states:

Thus, for example, the refusal of a witness to appear or to testify when summoned before a committee of the House could be regarded as a contempt.

Clearly, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment was scheduled well in advance to appear as a witness before the Public Accounts Committee. The minister's decision to not attend was therefore, in my view, a contempt of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, while I must be careful not to attribute motives to either the minister, who failed to attend, or all government members, who simultaneously failed to attend, I cannot say directly whether or not this action was related to the privilege question involving the chair of the Public Accounts Committee, who is the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. However, the Premier has indicated today publicly that the government members boycotted the Public Accounts meeting because they were mad at its chair for accusing one of their colleagues of being a bigot. He said, and I quote: when you get mad, you sometimes throw a few water buckets.

Mr. Speaker, clearly, if the government members do not attend this committee, this committee cannot meet, and therefore this has in my view very long, far-reaching potential to cause problems. As the committee that is established to oversee government accounts and to deal with the Auditor General's reports, this committee is fundamental to the oversight by this Assembly of the operations of government and particularly its expenditure of public funds. That means that the government caucus if it chooses to boycott the committee can effectively prevent it from ever meeting at all or can prevent it from meeting in any given particular circumstance when a particular ministry is under scrutiny. So it has significant importance, and we take this matter to be a very serious one. Similarly, if ministers are allowed to absent themselves on some pretext, they can then be permitted to escape the scrutiny of this Assembly as delegated to the Public Accounts Committee. In both cases this is a fundamental issue relative to the power of this Assembly to have oversight on the expenditure of public dollars by the government, so we believe that it's a grave and most serious issue.

I would say that the question of privilege had not been decided this morning. It's not finally decided yet, but you, Mr. Speaker, had not even ruled on the matter at the time that this boycott of the Public Accounts Committee took place. I was prepared to question the minister on his ministry's activities. This ministry spends I believe in excess of a billion dollars of public funds and is responsible for programs of vital interest to my constituents. I have many people in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands who are in one way or another dependent on programs offered through this ministry, and I'm sure other members are in the same position.

Mr. Speaker, the nonattendance of the minister and the nonmeeting of the Public Accounts Committee I believe has interfered not just with individual members' rights and my individual member's rights but with the rights of the Assembly as a whole. Apparently, in conversation with the chairman and the clerk notice was received just a very few minutes before the beginning of the meeting that the minister would not be in attendance, and it took a call from the clerk to the deputy chair of the committee some minutes after the meeting was supposed to have been called to order, who indicated to her that no government members would be in attendance. Hansard staff were called in for this meeting. The Auditor General's staff were there. The committee staff were there and all prepared to do work and will have to be paid for their attendance at the meeting. So there are costs and inconveniences to people beyond individual members.

I would say in conclusion that the actions of the minister and his government colleagues who sit on the Public Accounts Committee have interfered with my ability to do my job as a member and that of the Assembly as a whole. Mr. Speaker, the political games that are being played in this Assembly have now begun to seriously affect the work of this Assembly. It's time, in our view, that they stop. If you are prepared to rule that a prima facie breach of privilege both to myself and to members of the Assembly as a whole has occurred, then I am prepared to move a motion that will offer a remedy to the matter.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:50

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the circumstances that hon. member has outlined are clearly an important issue for members and for the House, they do not constitute a point of privilege or a breach of the member's privileges. I do thank the member for having provided notice of his intention to bring this forward earlier so that one might prepare for it.

I think that it ought to be clear from, again, Marleau and Montpetit, on page 128.

Since the House has not given its committees the power to punish any misconduct, breach of privilege, or contempt directly, committees cannot decide such matters; they can only report them to the House. Only the House can decide if an offence has been committed. Speakers have consistently ruled that, except in the most extreme situations, they will only hear questions of privilege arising from committee proceedings upon presentation of a report from the committee which directly deals with the matter and not as a question of privilege raised by an individual Member.

So, clearly, what we have here is an individual member raising a question of privilege. The appropriate procedure, in my humble submission, would be for the member to take his concern to the committee when next it meets or when it's called specifically to deal with that, and if the committee doesn't meet, for the chairman of the committee to then report back to the House that he is having trouble getting the committee to meet and ask the House to deal with that matter. That would be the appropriate way to deal with this matter.

Beauchesne's 107, "Breaches of privilege in committee may be dealt with only by the House itself on report from the committee." So it's clear that an individual member of a committee cannot bring a question of a breach of privilege in the committee to the House on his own motion. It must be through the committee, and as I say, one would assume that if the committee cannot do it, then it would be at the behest of the chair to bring it to the House to indicate that he can't call the committee together.

However, I would take it a little bit further. The committee itself did not meet today. It didn't have quorum. It wasn't called to order. So if there was any question about the minister who had been designated to appear not appearing before the committee, I would submit that there was no committee for him to appear before and therefore he cannot be held in contempt.

An Hon. Member: That's a circular argument.

Mr. Hancock: No. It's not a circular argument. It's a very important argument. The committee ought to have been called to order, and if it can't meet for some reason . . . [interjection] So there's no breach of privilege re the minister not attending, regardless of why he didn't attend, because there was no committee to attend. As to government members attending, each member is responsible for his or her own actions, but failing or refusing to attend a meeting is not a breach of privilege.

I would indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, that if it's a breach of privilege not to attend a committee meeting, it is certainly a breach of privilege not to attend the House, and I recall on a certain occasion when a whole group of members left the House in protest for a certain action. Whether or not you agreed with their action, nobody suggests that they breached the privilege of members of the House by not attending the House. There are rules with respect to that, but if a member or a number of members don't attend the committee, that's not a breach of privilege.

In any event, the committee is in complete charge of its own affairs as per Beauchesne's 760, page 222.

(1) Committees are . . . creatures of the House. The Standing Orders of the House of Commons apply to committees, so far as they may be applicable, with certain exceptions. . .

(3) The Speaker has ruled on many occasions that it is not competent for the Speaker to exercise procedural control over the committees. Committees are and must remain masters of their own procedure. . .

(4) On one occasion, after a grievance was raised in the House concerning procedure in a committee, the Speaker undertook to write to all committee chairmen pointing out that when a grievance is not resolved satisfactorily in committee it often results in time of the House being taken when the grievance is raised in the guise of a question of privilege.

I do take this very seriously. Obviously, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts must meet and must do its job, and there's no suggestion that it won't continue to meet. But if it does not continue to meet for some reason, then the appropriate procedure is for the chairman of the committee to come to the House, advise the House that the committee can't meet, because it doesn't get quorum, and ask the House to provide a solution. That's one thing to do. The chair of the committee can at any time call a meeting of the committee in the appropriate manner, and if people do attend, then the committee is functioning, and it then will have the option or the obligation to deal with any of the issues which might be before it as to why members may or may not be there, as to why witnesses may or may not attend. Those are issues for the committee when called to deal with, and I think the rules are clear both in Marleau and Montpetit and in Beauchesne's that if the committee cannot deal with its event, then its option is to report to the House, at which time the House can deal with it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've listened with close attention to the argument brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands – and thank you for doing that – and to the response from the Government House Leader. I think that what I can do is offer my observations as a member who was at the meeting in the morning and I believe the longest sitting member of the current committee.

As I try and work my way through the arguments that are offered, I note the argument offered by the House leader that the committee should bring its concerns forward to the larger Assembly, but a majority of the committee's members are members of the government caucus, and when the government caucus makes a choice not to appear, the committee cannot assemble itself, because it does not have quorum. Therefore, I think the only avenue open to it is to bring the question before the House. So I'm speaking, I believe, in favour of the motion from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

As I said, I've been on the Public Accounts Committee since my election in 1997. I am the longest sitting member of this current incarceration or incarnation of the committee. [interjection] Yes. Well, it's not a popular committee. I believe that in seven years I have only missed one meeting, so I feel confident that I can speak about what has been the habit of this committee. With this committee I have never experienced both a scheduled minister and every single government MLA being absent from the meeting at the same time on the same occasion. Memory does call up one other occasion when a minister canceled their appearance with such short notice that the committee was not able to reschedule another minister and, in fact, did not meet. That was the occasion in May of 2001 when the House sat throughout a night and throughout the following day. The minister at that point canceled his appearance, and we were not able to reschedule another, and the committee didn't meet. That is the only other example in my memory in my seventh year of sitting on this committee now.

My point is that this morning was a unique event. I don't tend to believe in coincidences, so I would tend to take it that this unique event was meant to have intended meaning to those of us who were in attendance at the meeting this morning. I note that the minister did in fact send a messenger, although the government caucus representative did not, and we had to contact them by phone. Neither the minister nor the government caucus representative gave a reason for this shunning of this all-party legislative committee, and neither, I also note, did either party send out that it was not a deliberate act, that it was not intended to have significant meaning. I wonder whether it wasn't to have significant meaning for the chair of the committee, who is the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and at the time the subject of a point of privilege that was held over.

So I wonder, Mr. Speaker – and your advice, of course, is always paramount – if this was the case and the nonappearance was intended to have meaning, was intended to show disapproval for the actions and statements of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, then I think it could be taken that there was an attempt to prejudice Edmonton-Gold Bar's ability to have a fair hearing and a fair process around the events of the last couple of days.

If I apply a reasonable-person test to determine why both the minister and every member of the government chose to absent themselves from this all-party legislative committee, I look at possible reasons why they could not have been there this morning, such as a terrible illness or a situation of disaster or a situation of civil insurrection or war, even having sat very late or into the wee hours of the morning, that would cause everyone to be absent, and none of these excuses seem to come into play. I did check the media for announcements of various kinds of illnesses and disasters, and none of those come into play, and the House in fact adjourned last night at 11:24, which is a late hour but not an unreasonably late hour. So I think that a reasonable person could come to believe that this was a deliberate act by both parties, the minister and all of the government MLAs appointed to this committee, and that they were in fact acting in collusion. In that I think it is inappropriate and was showing contempt for the process, and as these all-party legislative committees are creatures of this Assembly, it was showing contempt for this Assembly. I think it was using that parliamentary process, that of a legislative committee, to attempt to control and punish the behaviour of another member of this House.

There are legitimate processes both in and out of this Assembly that were available. They could certainly have called upon the Speaker's advice if they wanted information about what other legitimate avenues were open for them, if they wished to somehow express their disapproval in some way, but what I saw was collusion between a minister and every member of the government caucus that was appointed to this. To use the occasion of a regularly scheduled all-party legislative committee to send a message, to shun a member of this Assembly and, as has been pointed out, to waste the time of the other members who did appear – the Auditor General and his staff, the committee clerk, and the Hansard staff – I think is unacceptable to me.

Missing a meeting becomes very important to this particular committee, because as I've noted, the majority of the members on the committee are members of the government and they have consistently voted in the past to not allow the committee to meet outside the Assembly. So missing one meeting out of the nine or 10 meetings that we get a year to scrutinize the public accounts of the government – the government now has 24 some odd ministries – we're not even making half of them. To miss one day and not be able to replace that day is significant, I think, in terms of our ability to examine a particular ministry and overall to examine the public accounts of the government. In this case the programs and services that are offered by the minister who was to appear before us cover programs for vulnerable Albertans and I think would have been of great interest to my constituents and to others.

I think that what happened this morning was an attempt at intimidation. It was a contempt of what should be happening in this Assembly and those committees which are creatures of this Assembly and should not be tolerated by the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, did you want to participate in this point of privilege? It's your choice.

Mr. Dunford: I think, Mr. Speaker, but not having access to the Blues, that there might be a Standing Order 23(h) in the sense that I heard the word "collusion" in reference to me as minister.

The Speaker: I think the hon. member was wondering out loud if there was collusion. The chair was listening very intently, and I think she was musing out loud that she was wondering if there was collusion. I moved in my chair when I heard that word too, but I think that clarifies it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mr. Shariff: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to begin by first saying that I concur with the comments that have been made by the Government House Leader. I won't take much time of the Assembly, but I'd like to cite at least three references here that you should take into consideration.

Beauchesne 760(3) clearly indicates that "committees are and must remain masters of their own procedure." We establish procedure in this parliamentary system to follow, and the correct procedure is to take this issue up at the next meeting where it can be debated and issues can be raised and answers can be sought. The second reference was already made by the Government House Leader, so I'm not going to repeat it, and that's 760(4). Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to make one other reference, and I'm extending this analogy a little further. Beauchesne 31(4) says, "Many matters, such as the absence of a Minister from a committee studying Estimates, may constitute grievances but not a question of privilege."

Mr. Speaker, I feel that this debate that's going on is a slippery slope where people may start imputing false motives on others, and I hope that we don't go through that path. I do not see this as a point of privilege. I see this as a procedural matter that has to be dealt with in the Public Accounts Committee, and that's where it belongs.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The chair wants to deal with this matter now. For the record, the hon. member provided notice to the Speaker's office this morning of his intention to raise his purported question of privilege relating to events that transpired this morning in relation to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, so the requirements of Standing Order 15(2) have been met. I think I received notification around 10 o'clock, 10:30, or something to that effect.

It has been cited now by several members, but as all members may be aware, there are a host of authorities on the procedure for raising as a question of privilege matters that arise in or from standing committees. It's very, very clear. This is a case of black or white. The chair would like to refer the members to Beauchesne's 6th edition at paragraph 107, where it clearly states that the business of committees must be dealt with in committees, Marleau and Montpetit House of Commons Procedure and Practice at pages 128 and 129, and of course our own Standing Order 62(3). The bottom line is that there first must be a report by the committee before the House will address the question of privilege arising in the committee. Now, having said that, this morning there was no meeting of the committee, which makes the purported question of privilege akin to the situation of a tree falling in the forest and there being no one there to hear it.

Recently the chair was in fact anticipating such things happening so has spent some time reviewing such rulings, so I had this available when it did arise this morning. On November 27, 2002, at page 1950 of the Commons Debates for that day the Speaker of the House of Commons said this about a purported question of privilege about what went on in a committee:

In the present case the Speaker has been asked to reach into the proceedings of the committee to overturn something that was done there. Such requests have occurred on many occasions in the past and previous Speakers have, without exception, resisted the temptation to intervene.

On numerous occasions in the past there have been issues that have arisen out of committee, the Committee of Supply, or some other committee. Either the Deputy Chairman of Committees or others have said: well, we think it should come back into the Assembly and you should deal with it. I have consistently looked at them and said: "No. That remains the business of the committee, and that's where it should be dealt with."

So there is no prima facie case of privilege. However, the Speaker wants to encourage all members to work to ensure that the Public Accounts Committee continues its important work and sincerely hopes that a meeting will be scheduled according to the routine schedule, which presumably would be next Wednesday morning at 8:30.

Children's Services

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have a practice in this Assembly where we have at least two hours to speak on budget debates. Given the events of the day and the hour it is now, we are proposing that we still call the question for budget debates at 5:15. The minister has agreed to take all questions under advisement, and while we treat this time as very important to us and have a great number of questions to ask, we will submit the rest of them in writing and propose that this one time only in this Assembly we limit debate until 5:15 today.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, with the agreement of the House we would certainly concur and appreciate the co-operation of the hon. Opposition House Leader in that.

The Deputy Chair: I believe we don't need a resolution for that, so we'll proceed.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the members opposite. To my colleagues today who may also wish to submit written questions: have those available and we'll so entertain.

I'd like to introduce here today to listen to the questions and assist me, no doubt, in responses to those that I may not be able to answer our assistant deputy minister of support services, Keray Henke; my executive assistant, Kim Endres; and the communication director, Mark Kastner. Mr. Chairman, these are wonderful people that will always be pleased to help respond to the questions of all members on all sides of the House in this Assembly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to go entirely through every remark I had because of the time, but I want to just mention this. The chance of a lifetime is not something to be taken lightly, and to be a Minister of Children's Services in this government is something that has been a privilege. So today I'll just briefly highlight some of the goals of the budget for 2003-04, the goals for the coming year.

Children are a priority of this government. From the throne speech on February 18 we heard that "this government's highest priority must be to secure a bright future for children and youth." The Speech from the Throne pledged that the government will demonstrate its commitment to that priority by undertaking a range of initiatives to ensure that Alberta's most precious resource, its children, is protected and enabled to develop to its fullest potential.

As we heard in the budget announcement by the Finance minister on April 8, the Children's Services budget for this fiscal will increase by $36 million to $701.8 million, a 5.4 percent increase from the 2002-03 budget. With the additional $36 million this fiscal year Children's Services will be making further investment in Alberta's children and families. The funding will go towards direct services to children and families in areas such as child welfare, early intervention, and particularly services for children with disabilities. We demonstrate through this budget our commitment not only to the children but to the local communities who will help and assist in the delivery of services and the expanded role of the Alberta response model.

Mr. Chairman, Children's Services envisions an Alberta of strong children, families, and communities with a regional system respectful and responsive to service delivery required. Our goal is to do more than protect vulnerable children from neglect and abuse. Our goals in fact put children first and put families first through prevention, preservation, protection, and permanency planning for children in care and through community partnerships.

Some of the areas are as follows. The Alberta response model, commonly known as ARM, is a key initiative that has been developed to build on successful child protective services and improve community-based supports for families at risk. This model is the tool our ministry is using to transform child welfare in this province. The child welfare budget for 2003-04 is $373 million. The increased funding of $8 million will support the Alberta response model and implementation of amendments to the Child Welfare Act that will work hand in hand with the new model for child welfare service delivery. Legislative amendments are aimed at preserving families and protecting the children in need, providing also children and youth residence in permanent, nurturing homes.

A hypothetical case about how the Alberta response model will work in everyday life. A single mother calls the local office, her local CFSA authority, to ask for help for her teenaged daughter. The teen has been a handful all her life but in the past two years has become what she describes as a nightmare. She has been skipping school, becoming very involved with drugs, and starting to steal. After screening to rule out any possible child protection concerns, a family assessment is done, and the mother is referred to an appropriate agency to deal with parent/teen conflict. The mother along with a parent resource co-ordinator and the teen school counselor work together to develop an action plan. They agree that substance abuse is the first critical issue needing to be addressed, and they work together with the teenager to involve a local treatment program and help her to continue her education, working with the family, with the teen, and with the agency. Mr. Chairman, through this model, through this very tailored response to children and families in need, families feel better supported and better connected in a nonadversarial process.

I'd like to just briefly comment on the adoption web site since it has attracted the attention of members – actually, probably worldwide, with over a million hits. We have 43 children that have been adopted since the onset of that web site. Some 11 would not have been placed on the web site, but the expanded interest has also attracted an additional 400 new adoptive families, who've registered and are taking training courses to become prepared for parenting. We've had 248 inquiries – serious inquiries – from adoptive parents residing in other provinces who want to become a part of adopting. In Canada, Mr. Chairman, this has been recognized as one of the most successful endeavours.

Our resources in this budget, Mr. Chairman, for the children with disabilities are $72 million, an increase of $8 million from the 2003 forecast. You've heard me talk about the potential for a hundred new cases of autism this year. The other areas, of course, are those extraordinary needs, some of them multiple needs, that affect children with disabilities. I've spoken many times about the various ways that children are now kept alive and become healthy yet disabled children that require family supports within this ministry and will also through the new Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. Through this new legislation we hope to work on family-centred supports and serve to empower families of children with disabilities so that they will be able to access services and target those services that are most in need for their complex high-needs children.

Clearly, the average cost per case of accessing ministry resources for the children with disabilities program went up approximately 3 percent over the previous year, costs being due, as I've said, to new treatments and therapies, so the average annual cost of the RCD caseload is approximately $7,148. In contrast, caseloads for those with autism who receive intensive behavioural intervention is approximately $39,000 per year. Mr. Chairman, we have complex caseloads that are indeed high-cost. It is estimated that this year, in 2003, 420 children will receive IBI services, a 27 percent increase from 2002, predominantly because of work that's being done identifying and assessing those cases with health and also with Learning.

Our early intervention budget this year is $62 million, an increase of $4 million over the 2003 forecast. Approximately $2.2 million is the result of funding under the new federal/provincial/territorial early learning and child care initiative. Alberta's child care initiative was announced in December and is designed to build quality child care. Three components of this initiative include child care accreditation, respite options for families in need, and a child care nutritional program. This year's increase to the funding will be used to implement the child care initiative through all three phases: pre-accreditation, pilot review of an accreditation process, and full implementation of the model by March 31, 2004.

We also anticipate improving outcomes for children at risk in supporting parents and providing quality care for their children. Programs like roots of empathy, that were launched in southern Alberta and in Calgary, add to the bench strength we're trying to build for Alberta's children. Our early intervention budget this year is $50 million, an increase of $4 million from the 2002-03 forecast. In addition, municipalities will receive $61 million for family and community support services, an increase of $3.3 million. Mr. Chairman: $1.3 million accounting for a population increase as per the funding formula, $2 million for new initiatives for children and families to improve the response to potential risks.

Mr. Chairman, the regions have allocated $11 million for early child development initiatives – and I think this is extremely positive – with an additional $1.75 million that's being added for fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, bringing that total to approximately $5 million. Regional child and family services authorities will be allotted $2.4 million for regional programs, a 100 percent funding increase from last year, again trying to improve the community capacity, and $1.8 million will fund 10 demonstration projects for an additional 200,000 towards a provincewide FASD program. We're really going to target and almost double up the work we're doing for children and trying to prevent fetal alcohol spectrum disorder.

Our aboriginal services are extremely important. Co-championing the aboriginal policy initiative, we're working to partner to improve prevention and early intervention services, again, Mr. Chairman, trying to get federal supports to those aboriginal families, something that we're still struggling to make sure are in place simply because those have not been forthcoming yet from the federal government: dollars promised but yet to be delivered. We've established agreements to support First Nations and child protection and permanency with Métis Nation and Métis settlements.

Our family violence protection has grown to $15.4 million. Mr. Chairman, the additional $4 million over the last three years has really gone a long way to improving the service delivery and the advocacy for prevention of family violence.

Alberta's promise and the new $2 million to be available to go towards the research centre have added approximately $3 million to the corporate administration of our department, but I do note that the $2 million for the research is to be provided through a nonprofit agency that is being developed. A launch is expected later this year.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, as rapidly as I can speak so that I can get as much of this out for the hon. members opposite, I would just like to say that our budget this year reflects an overall commitment to the children so that they will in fact reach their greatest potential. With that, I'll await the questions from the member opposite, and perhaps just to expedite it, the member opposite would like to give me them in clusters. I'll stand up and give a very brief response, and then we can fulfill the obligation of giving more detailed responses later.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you to the minister for agreeing to expedite the examination of the estimates the way we have this afternoon. I think that if we're doing this another year, the minister will have to make sure that there isn't a hundred-page amendment to the act that precedes the discussion of the budget. It's timing that I think is leaving all of us a little exhausted.

I wanted to start with the ARM and the minister's comment about ARM and to ask: is there an ongoing evaluation of the Alberta response model, and what is the nature of that evaluation? It would seem to me to be a necessary component, and it would be unfortunate if we got down the road a number of years and there wasn't in place a plan, at least, for determining how effective the model is in responding to the needs of Alberta families. So that's my first question.

The second question is an accountability one. I wonder if the minister can tell us . . . Mr. Chairman, I'm finding it a little difficult to hear myself think.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has the floor. He is experiencing difficulty with the noise level in the Assembly. I urge all members to give him the due courtesy that he deserves to be able to speak.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. I wonder if the minister could give us an update on the co-management of the Kasohkewew children's services on the Samson reserve. Where in the budget do we see the finances dedicated to that particular project?

The minister mentioned intensive behavioural intervention, and I think we discussed this last year. There's been some controversy raised about the method, and it seems to me from the remarks of the minister that the department has made some decisions about using intensive behavioural intervention programs. I wondered if she might spend a few minutes talking about the background to that and how the department has met the criticisms from some quarters. I know that I had a professional visit my office and lay out some reasons why IBI shouldn't be used with autistic children, and I wondered how the government was responding to those criticisms, because there still is a great deal of enthusiasm for IBI on the part of a significant number of parents.

Just another question with respect to the student health initiative. Again, there are some comments in the annual report about the student health initiative. Could we get some information about the administrative costs of that initiative and where they are located? I imagine that they're in more than one budget, but that may not be true, and I wonder about the success of the initiative. I continue to hear, for instance, from parents in this city that the initiative is not providing the kind of service, especially to children with disabilities, that the parents thought was going to be there when the initiative was undertaken. So, again, if we might have some comments on the success of the initiative.

If I might, some questions about early childhood care and education. Again, with this great emphasis in the ministry and cross-ministry objectives and trying to bring everyone to bear, what is the interface with Learning with respect to the provision of early childhood care and education? Are there plans that are being developed? Is there consideration to extending kindergarten to make it available in some cases for younger children? Are there plans for further expansion of early childhood programs? I noticed in the annual report that the department reports on the project in Rocky View where they were looking at the readiness to learn of 2,800 kindergarten children and the kind of activity there. I look at jurisdictions elsewhere. I look at states that now have moved to full-day kindergarten for five year olds and an optional kindergarten for four year olds and selective programs for younger children, and I would like some information, if I might, from the minister with respect to whether there are any initiatives in this area, particularly ones that would affect the co-operation with Alberta Learning.

Maybe a last question in this first group, Mr. Chairman. In the annual report the department indicates that over the past year 2,015 people were trained in the Protection against Family Violence Act, and it indicates that 285 of those people were child welfare workers. My question is: is this kind of training compulsory for all child welfare workers? Is the intent that every worker will be trained in this area? A related question: how is the safety of workers who are working with families in violent situations assured? We had some comment from the minister of human resources in question period last week or the week previous about the provisions they have in place, but I have a concern about safety and how it might be addressed.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the first instance, the ARM evaluation is being conducted through two vehicles. The University of Calgary's is through Dr. Gayla Rogers and her department. They have put together a framework and a protocol for evaluating that, and we've already had some results, some dialogue with them. Dr. Nico Trocme from the University of Toronto and the Child Welfare League of Canada have participated as well in looking at the indicators, not only the federal indicators but some of the indicators that they have felt would most clearly direct themselves to neglect and abuse. So at this stage, in the very preliminary stages, we are very satisfied that we've got some outside sources to come forward and provide us an unbiased look at how those programs are being affected, and we'll look forward to tabling in this House some of the results of some of those early evaluations. I'm glad that that was asked about.

In terms of, particularly, the Kasohkowew situation and the comanagement, which we're still undertaking with the child welfare authority, the delegated First Nations authority of Kasohkowew, and Samson Hobbema, we are providing resources. Clearly, those are human resources that have been seconded from elsewhere, but essentially that funding for that authority still comes federally. Kasohkowew through the Samson Hobbema tribe has provided additional supports I believe in the amount of some 300,000 dollars to support additional community supports in trying to build a strategy, Mr. Chairman, to improve the circumstances there. Predominantly those dollars come from our First Nations liaison unit budgets and would be the secondment of at least one codirector and from time to time other consultants. We can provide you more exact figures, but they would be not found so much in the budget for the dominant work that's done there, because the dominant work that's done there is still federally funded.

With the tabling of our new resources for children with disabilities legislation, that we've just had the Committee of the Whole discussion on last night, I think that questions that have arisen in the past about IBI reports or performance for various children will be clarified because it will be very clear what the director's role will be in allocating service delivery for children who require these very specialized services and for families in receiving services. To the hon. member opposite, we are looking at a model where the parents can actually choose to have more hands-on involvement in receiving the dollars and providing those dollars for service themselves, if that be their preference, or in fact having us provide those services in consultation with themselves. Some very strong proponents for children have felt that they could broker those services on their own, and we're looking at that model as we speak: something that gives a little more parental choice in the delivery of those services once the assessment is done.

My vision is that ultimately everybody with a special-needs child will receive a proper assessment at the outset no matter where they live in Alberta, that they will get an absolutely thorough assessment. Their needs will be understood. The families will have what understanding they need to have for supports. Then if there are physicians or care workers in other communities who will actually deliver that service, they will have that kind of template from a centre of excellence in this distribution, which could be the new Children's hospital, the Glenrose centre here, or the centre in Grande Prairie, and we will avoid what currently seems to happen. I recognized when my own son was sick as a newborn that you're tempted to go to every doctor until they give you the answer that you want to hear and that you feel confident in. We want to make sure that parents don't fight to find out about the diagnosis, that they get that diagnosis. We work with our partners in Health and then get working on a better plan for the child in the service delivery plan right from square one. I think you'll see that the new legislation will clearly do that, but we are trying to practise very strongly to improve so that you don't receive letters from people who wonder if they've been denied program supports.

I think also that the circumstances we find ourselves in with a better diagnosis of autism, for example, mean that we have to bridge where families may be coming from, that road of discovery, what is wrong in this situation, and try to find out what they can get, what best treatments are provided. I believe in our performance measures. Although we may not achieve that objective this year, there will certainly be some support.

If I may, SHIP in here really predominantly appears from the fact that the people that are in number administering the SHIP initiative across Alberta are counted in our budget but are funded elsewhere, sometimes from the Learning budget and sometimes from other areas. So we may be showing the FTEs in our budget, but those FTEs that are delivering that service are accountable, through the funds that we receive, sometimes to entirely different authorities; for example, the schools. Some schools, of course, have had hugely satisfactory performance issues. Some may have had issues as well with that actual service delivery. As you know, we are a partner in this, and it would behoove me to defer to the Minister of Learning and the minister of health about the actual success. Many parents have expressed extreme satisfaction. Many expressed to me the desire to have more funding in particular schools on particular issues dealing with their own specific children. So that's something that I think we can always look at.

Early child care and the articulation with Learning. Very recently through the Alberta children and youth initiative we have been looking at a partnership in the protocols of assessing children. In that assessment I think that both Health and Learning are very much partners. We've been looking at how we can look at indicators that show effective approaches, public reporting of that, and that's something that even on a national basis we've looked at. Our early child care accreditation model will also help illustrate some of the successes.

Mr. Chairman, the roots of empathy, that I referenced in my opening remarks, are beginning to show better parent/child liaison, better nurturing of children. In terms of how we articulate in prekindergarten and something that precipitates it, the hon. member and I, albeit years ago, discussed the merits of PUF funding for those that are younger than five to make sure we had a proper school readiness model, and I think that's as valid today as it was then. So we are very anxious to see that through the additional supports through FCSS, for example, in the Taber-Warner constituency and through other models through various child and family services authorities we start to make some headway on improving the outcomes for children, and hopefully that will show up.

The annual report referencing the family violence act is a reference to our training of not only child welfare workers but police, particularly in outlying areas, for that legislative framework for protecting families where violence is involved by removing the perpetrator from the home, and we have been expanding our training capacity there throughout.

You've asked about satisfaction with the safety of child care workers. Mr. Chairman, there are protocols in every single authority identifying their need, where necessary or where perceived risk is there, to address various responses on emergency teams with both police and social worker in tow. Social workers are strongly counseled not to put themselves in any compromising situation, and we can provide you more detail on that program if you wish.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Well, I'm sure that the minister in seeing me rise will know that the questions that follow are going to be on funding and on women's shelters. I'd really like not to have to do this every year. I wish that I could see some concrete changes. I'm sure that the minister will be able to detail for me some smaller changes that she feels have been implemented – and I look forward to hearing those from her – that are in support of the work that is being done in the shelter movement, but there are a couple of questions that I would specifically like to discuss with her.

The statistics we get continue to rise, and we're now in a position where more people, more women and their children, are turned away from women's shelters than are able to be served in the women's shelters. I know that the minister will say, "Oh, but we don't totally abandon them; we do look after them," but it's not the same thing. They are put in a hotel if the person wants. A lot of the people return home; let's be frank. They just go back home and back into a situation of abuse. The ministry will put them in a hotel, but that's not the same as being in the shelter. That's not the same as having other women in like circumstances around for group support. It's not the same as having the social worker right there in the house. Being in a hotel room with a flimsy door and a lock in between you and whatever is out there is not the same as being in the safety and the security and the anonymous location of a women's shelter. It is not the same. So we're now in a position where we have more women and their children being turned away from women's shelters than being served by women's shelters. Is this the benchmark? Is this the mark, the line that we're going to work from now? Is this our baseline where the government says: "Okay. This is the way the world is, and we will fund from here?"

My frustration is that every year I stand up and I look and the numbers are worse. There are more people not being served here. I don't see a co-ordinated government effort going on. I don't even see things that used to happen, like the television ads or the posters or the radio ads or the sponsorship of the plays, theatrical productions and other sorts of performance art that used to get out into the communities that would help people be aware of the situation. I see us going backwards in this whole thing. There have been some improvements that have come forward with a sort of co-ordination between police and social workers and shelters and that sort of thing that I think have been an improvement around the whole issue of violence against women and their children, but overall I come back to the same statistic: there are more women and children being turned away than are finding service in these shelters.

So is this the benchmark, the baseline that we work from now? I don't see the government putting huge effort or thought or energy or money – and you notice that money was last here. It wasn't first. It was last in the list of how to approach this. So I want to hear the minister on the record. Just tell the truth. If this is where it is, this is the baseline, this is where we're going to work from, okay, fine. Then I think that myself and other people would have a different approach and could adjust our strategies to what the government is doing. But if we keep thinking, "Well, the government is going to come through; they're going to pitch strikes; something is going to happen here; it's going to get better somehow," then we adjust our strategies to that, and we're all failing as a result of it in my opinion. So I just want to know what the real truth is. What's the real strategy here?

The second issue is around second-stage housing. I don't know if people in the Assembly are aware that generally a stay in a women's shelter is three weeks or less. Twenty-one days and you're out. So if you've left in the middle of the night in your pyjamas if you're lucky with a kid under either arm, you've left your wallet, you've left your credit cards, you've left your slippers, you've left your toothbrush, you've left the kids' teddy bears, you've left their clothing, their lunch box, their toys, their bicycle, everything. You're out there with a kid under either arm in your pj's, no toothbrush, no money, no car keys, no passport, and you've arrived at a women's shelter. You've got three weeks. Boy, they zip by in a blink of an eye, and now you have to find second-stage housing.

Well, I notice in a recent newspaper article that the director of the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters is saying: you know, we try to work to a point where there should be three second-stage beds for every emergency place. Well, we've got a hundred emergency places, so we should have a heck of a lot of second-stage beds, and at this point when we have the new building opened in Edmonton, we'll have 20.

So we are so far out of line and out of whack with second-stage housing that again, you know, is this the benchmark, is this the baseline, is this where we work from? There doesn't seem to be any great movement here, any coalitions building, any great meetings of the minds with the Minister of Children's Services. I just loath vulnerable women, women in a dire situation, battered women, being under Children's Services. I will loath that till the day I die. But I don't see the Minister of Children's services putting her head together and coming up with concrete plans with the minister of housing. Maybe it's happening. She's going to have an opportunity to get up and tell me what's going on, but I just don't see it, and I'm looking.

There's also an issue around the staff that work in the women's shelters, and there's a larger issue for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment as well. But, you know, every time the government workers get a raise – and all power to them, and that's a negotiated settlement through a proper collective bargaining process, we hope, still – their equivalents in the nonprofit sector, like those working in the women's shelters, do not get an automatic raise. I'm wondering why the minister isn't looking at putting in place a policy that says that there's an automatic review every year or there's an automatic increase that goes: if there's a raise to the government workers, it happens to the workers in the shelters as well.

I mean, let's face it; that's what the members of this Assembly enjoy. On the 1st of April, according to a process that was put in place by the Members' Services Committee, the average weekly wage is looked at, averaged out across the previous year, and if there has been an increase in that, bingo, there is an equivalent increase for the MLA's salary. So if we can enjoy that here, why are we not extending that to the groups that we work with and that we oversee in the communities?

I urge the minister – I actually challenge her – to put that in place because I keep hearing back from the shelter workers, and I'm sure the minister does, too, because they just barely get caught up and they'll be caught up for, you know, two weeks, three months, six months, and all of a sudden there's another settlement, everything has changed, and they're falling behind again. If we're really serious about the support here, then we need to be supporting these workers.

So those are the three issues that I want to raise. You know, what seriously is going to be done? If there's going to be no increase in trying to alleviate the number of women and children turned away from shelter spaces versus those that are able to find accommodation, (a) if you're going to improve the money there, good. Let's hear it. If you're not, then that becomes the benchmark. What's the government's long-term look at this? You've got a three-year rolling business plan in front of you. What exactly is going to happen to allow the community to adjust their strategy in how we support those shelters, the women that work in them, and the women and children that come to them? The second issue about the second-stage beds and the third issue about linking the salaries.

Thanks.

4:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of days ago I looked at a November report about turn-aways in shelters. One of the things that we've discovered is that sometimes turn-aways – if a woman, for example, in this city visited two shelters the same evening, they would be counted as a turn-away in both shelters. We have to try and manage more clearly what our turn-aways are.

I'm not saying that I don't agree with the member opposite. We're always concerned when we turn people away, but we have not only the capacity through the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to provide emergency shelter; we have found that unlicensed beds within the facility often provide some reprieve for those people so that they are not put out in the cold. I think that the point I'd like to make is that we are concerned when children and families come to shelters and don't have appropriate accommodation. We're looking at a number of those issues with both the women's shelter association, the society, CWS, as well as some of our ministerial partners.

We had a most excellent presentation from the Council of Women's Shelters talking about second-stage housing and a number of other things. At that time, six of the ministers, including Community Development, housing, Human Resources and Employment, the Solicitor General, the Justice minister, all came together at Government House and had a very extensive meeting with shelter directors across this province and talked about the issue of second-stage housing, which my colleague the Minister of Seniors has discussed at some length in this House.

I can only assure the member opposite that in terms of evaluating the needs for second-stage housing, we are doing that both in southern Alberta in the Taber area and in various places in Alberta. There are some plans, which are perhaps fragile at best because they're in their beginning stages but which I hold some optimism will yield some better benefit. I am going to surprise the member opposite: I do agree that there is a strong need for second-stage housing in Alberta.

The question really remains, Mr. Chairman, about who shall answer that call. Who is responsible? We know we've got shelters on reserves that are funded by the federal government. We have federal dollars in housing and affordable housing supports, and I think it's all partners, including the local jurisdiction, that have to be involved.

So to my third point, relative to the salaries. The hon. member opposite would be aware that we did provide some supports to salary adjustments, which I agree needed to be made throughout Alberta on the women's shelters, but I was also given some caution that these shelters have traditionally operated under societies and under auspices which are self-directed and that I can't simply go in and supplant without having to consider what they've already got in place, increases they may have made.

Should we have some type of formula, perhaps, that could be in place for all places? I look at the various partners that government does have. We have numerous partners, and some would argue with us just making arbitrary allocations, but what we are attempting to do to overcome some of the problems we've had in the past where shelters have not received adequate compensation is consolidate the supports for shelters within the department so that they will not be at the whim of the child and family services authority directors so that centrally we will be able to make sure – and I hope that the hon. member is listening – that we will see those inflationary increases go on the basic salary amounts that should be available to those people in the shelters. It is important to have that support.

We are working further, and you'll see in the shelter budget not the amounts that are supporting the child delivery at the local level, but you'll see in these budgets dollars that will go directly to shelters, and additional dollars in support of children and youth that come to shelters will be provided through the protocols of agreement between the shelters and the various children's authorities. So there's significant work in the last four years both financially and in dollar support.

Finally, I think the biggest issue that I'm supporting in the shelters and the area of domestic violence with the women's shelter groups is inviting them to the table to talk to those members of the judiciary and other people that can help us with what I perceive as current needs for families who have been victims of domestic violence and where children are held vulnerable.

Furthermore, I will provide that turn-away report from November so that the minister's reports on that can be distributed to the members opposite.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. There was one other issue that I wanted to raise with the minister, and that is the issue of the aboriginal pillar. When I first went to some of the meetings that were held around designing a new approach to delivering children's services, there were four pillars. What was really, really innovative about that new approach, which was instituted by this government – I mean, this was not something that was brought forward and plunked down by the community; this in fact was driven by the government – was this insistence on a fourth pillar that was the aboriginal pillar.

Now, I've seen the establishment of the children's authorities. We've now seen a redrawing of those boundaries to bring them – what's the word I'm looking for? – as a corollary, adjacent to, along the same lines of the health authorities, and as I read the literature and I hear people talking and I listen to the minister's responses to questions directed at her from members of the Assembly, the aboriginal pillar seems to have disappeared like smoke. What happened there? Was it too difficult to implement?

There is an undercurrent of annoyance to my voice here because I'm aware that there were a number of agencies in the community providing children's services, the many different children's services that are provided there, that had to absorb the cost of training people in cultural sensitivity with aboriginal issues. So there was sensitivity training and training on how to deal with all this. Those agencies had to bear the cost of that themselves. They covered the cost of that. There was no reimbursement through any contract that was available or through any granting program through the government. They covered that. They've now gone through all of that, and this aboriginal pillar seems to have disappeared. So what the heck happened there? Why isn't this being upheld? Why has it disappeared from all of the literature?

Thank you.

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Chairman, far from disappearing. Co-chairs, one nonaboriginal and one aboriginal, in every authority. At least, the Métis authority is still intact to provide services to Métis settlements. The aboriginal issue, where the fourth pillar is, is as alive and well as it was at the very beginning. What the aboriginal pillar implies is how we do something, not what we do. How we look after people through the aboriginal pillar and not necessarily what we do. What we do is provide culturally appropriate supports. Whether you're a Vietnamese immigrant family in the downtown part of Calgary, it's as important as if you're an immigrant family in Fort McMurray from another province. The aboriginal pillar is still alive and well. Our native liaison units are still in place. They have expanded. We have a full complement of staff there, and we have been working to expand the training for aboriginal people and those that are serving aboriginal people.

Now, agencies that have covered the cost for some of the training issues. Very specifically I'd like to indicate that when we retain agencies to deliver child welfare service, there is an expectation that part of that will be as the contract itself decrees, and training may become a part of that if there are new practices, new things like the ARM model. Obviously, we provide a lot of that training within the ministry. Clearly, agencies have an expectation, depending upon their contract, that they will have to cover the cost of some of those because that is exactly how the contract has been structured: different for a variety of different people.

If the hon. member opposite has any specific area that she'd like me to profile or come back to on costs of support for staff development – I'd also, in conclusion, draw the hon. member's attention to page 76 of the business plan, which identifies "improving services for Aboriginal children [and] youth," acknowledging the presence of aboriginal children and youth in the child care cadre as well as the disability rates, which are significant, and noting that throughout Alberta, throughout the authorities themselves we're working hard with the aboriginal communities to make sure that we have appropriate responses to their issues.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to ask a few questions of the minister given that we have very limited time, but I want to thank the minister for her introductory remarks. Given the fact that we have 10 or so minutes left at our disposal, I will focus on two issues.

The one that I'd like the minister to address a bit, that caught my attention as I was looking through her business plans, is a rather significant statistic here that 40 percent of the child welfare caseload is from the aboriginal children communities. I wonder: when it's translated into numbers, what's the total number, then, of children of which 40 percent would be? Then I can get a sense of the numbers involved here. That's one.

More important, however, is that since this observation, this particular attempt to draw attention to the fact that the aboriginal children in particular are in need of services that the ministry provides, and when you relate it to goal 3 in the business plan, which talks about "the well-being and self-reliance of Aboriginal children, families and communities will be promoted, supported and comparable to that of other [children]," there's an emphasis on capacity-building in aboriginal communities. That raises the question of how these aboriginal children in care are distributed between the urban population of aboriginals in Alberta and the non-urban, or reserve-based perhaps, communities. I suspect that the whole question of capacity-building will be of a different nature when dealing with, say, communities which are self-contained, are independent, and aboriginal populations that are scattered in an urban setting such as Edmonton or Calgary. So how is the issue of community capacity-building addressed in these two distinct and different settings? That's why the numbers are important. I want to know what percentage of the aboriginal children in care are urban based as distinct from those who may be based in aboriginal communities themselves outside of the urban areas.

The other question related to it – and this may be simply a matter of juggling numbers from one line to the other. Under the budget program 2, line 2.2.2, early childhood intervention on reserve, the amount I guess in the last year was close to $1.85 million. There's none indicated in the budget for this year. Where does that amount appear? I'm sure there's an allocation of budgeted resources to early intervention on reserves. What's the amount, and under what line? Would the minister draw my attention so that I can find it to make an assessment of whether or not it's comparable to last year or if it's increased or decreased?

One other question and then I'll sit down so that we can give the minister a few minutes to address this. In the introductory remarks the minister, Mr. Chairman, referred to the extended role of the Alberta response model. Obviously, that's in the works. When I look at the budgetary allocation again under program 2, line 2.1.2, Alberta response model implementation, the dollars provided are the same this year as they were last year. So I'm wondering what form the extension of the role of the Alberta response model will take. Is it independent of the number of dollars available? If that is the case, how so?

So I'll just stop at these two or three questions for the moment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you. Just briefly. I will get the complete breakdown of the urban aboriginal versus the rural aboriginal. You know our specific challenges, that intake on a delegated First Nations authority is paid while a child stays on the First Nations authority, but if they move to an urban area, we don't get those dollars from the Canadian government in support of that intake, on the other hand, in urban Alberta. Then when the child moves back to the reserve, we still for the province retain that funding responsibility. So it's a real source of frustration for us. In the aboriginal funding framework they, like ourselves, have sought our support, and I visited the minister of Indian and northern affairs talking about just that fact.

In this budget we do not see any dollars for the early intervention on reserves simply because those dollars have been promised by the federal government, first of all, to be available by March 31, 2003.

They did not arrive. The chiefs have contacted our office. We are working with them to the end of this month, that is today, continuing to support the programs but telling them that we will continue to push very hard. I've made contact with my colleagues in intergovernmental and interdepartmental affairs in government. As well, the deputy has made contact with the federal deputy saying: get those dollars out here; they were promised before the end of last year. That's why in the development of this budget it was not a line item. It was taken out of that budget because of our belief that it would compel the federal government to come forward and provide those dollars.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I fully intend to not see those programs lapse, but we must put pressure on the government. We've been waiting two years now for those early intervention dollars for those programs on reserve along with the fetal alcohol, FASD, funding, and hopefully by the end of this coming week we'll have some good news there. We are not going to let the children fall through the cracks, but we're going to play a little hardball right now. We were told, actually, when I went down to the most recent federal/provincial/territorial meeting that we would be getting those dollars.

Quickly, the last question that you had was . . .

Dr. Pannu: On the Alberta response model and the extended role and the budget relation.

Ms Evans: There's an additional $8 million for the implementation of the Alberta response model also with the Child Welfare Act, and I'll make sure that we send you a briefing note just on exactly where that is at this time. It would take me a minute to look back through and find it, but it's part of the tutorial that we're going to have to do over the next year and a half to make sure that we're fully ready for proclamation, to make sure that the staff are trained so that everybody throughout has additional supports to understand the intake. There is approximately $8 million for the overall implementation of the new Child Welfare Act, and through that allocation there will be additional supports for training on the Alberta response model. I'm sorry; just at the moment it would take me a minute to look for it. Perhaps by the time the next question comes, I'll be able to give you that answer. I think I might have it here.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the next person, I just want to clarify my understanding as the chair of this committee. Earlier both House leaders got up and had an agreement that we would finish today before 5:15. Normally, when we do that, we go until about 5:12 and then have the vote and report. Looking at the clock, we only have about a minute, a minute and a half, so I'm just wondering: is anybody else wanting to speak on this matter, or are you going to be submitting questions in writing to which the minister has agreed to respond in writing?

Dr. Massey: Yes, that's the agreement. I understood we would go till 5:15, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: We have to report before 5:15, so we need the vote by 5:12.

Mr. Hancock: My understanding, Mr. Chair, was that we had agreed to waive that standard rule and take the vote at 5:15, so I would concur with the understanding.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. That helps clarify the matter.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just, if I might, to the minister. The annual report has a section on page 28 entitled Report of the Auditor General. It's a fairly curious selection in terms of inclusion in the annual report, because at the end of it he says, "I express no opinion on the performance measures included in the 2001-2002 Annual Report of the Ministry." I guess my question is: given the number of questions that the Auditor General raised about the department, is there not a place in the annual report where those concerns might be addressed? It would seem to me a place that that might happen, and I don't quite understand why it would be this rather than some of the concerns that the Auditor General raised.

If I might, maybe one last question. That's again the performance measures with respect to child care centres meeting critical standards. In 2001-2002 there were 93.4 percent. It seems to me that if we don't have a hundred percent of those child care centres meeting critical standards, it must be of concern. I wonder if the minister might comment upon it. It's really a very, very important measure with respect to young children, and I wonder if we could have some information with respect to those centres that don't meet care.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, did you want to put a question on record? The minister will respond in writing to you.

Dr. Pannu: Just quickly I want to draw the minister's attention to the notion of capacity-building and if there's any allocation in the budget to undertake these measures and what those measures are to build community capacities on aboriginal sites. That was a question that didn't get addressed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, do you want to respond or respond in writing?

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, in part I'll respond and then a fuller response in writing. Clearly, the FCSS model in our full funding last year moved a great deal of the way towards an additional community capacity-building, and that was recognized just yesterday in Calgary.

If I may, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods raised the point about standards for children in child care situations. It's a huge concern of mine. That's why this accreditation program hopefully will help us weed out those where we would agree that children who are receiving operational subsidies from government would actually be able to gain those subsidies, and we're working very hard. People that don't qualify for that, in my view, probably don't qualify to be delivering child care services to anybody, and that's a part of the standards development that is implicit with this model.

Further to the capacity-building and to the improvement of those areas which have been cited, we will . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, thank you very much.

As per the agreement arrived at earlier today, after considering the business plans and proposed estimates for the Department of Children's Services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases

$701,824,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the Committee of Supply rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Children's Services: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $701,824,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 this evening, at which time we will reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:17 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 30, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/30

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I would like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Transportation

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this fine set of estimates? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and good evening, everyone. It is a real pleasure to present the estimates this evening for the upcoming fiscal year. I can certainly tell you with great sincerity that it's also a real pleasure and an honour to serve as this great province's Transportation minister.

I'd like to provide some details and information on the ministry's programs and activities, but before we begin, I'd like to introduce the ministry's senior staff who are with me tonight. The reason being is that in our department many of our senior officials interface directly with the elected officials in this Assembly, answering questions directly as they may come up on certain projects throughout the province or some of the other regulatory functions that we have in the department. It speeds up the process and gets the information back to the constituent as quickly as possible.

So to begin with, I'd like to introduce my deputy minister, Jay Ramotar. Sitting in the gallery next to Jay is Rob Penny, our ADM of transportation and civil engineering. We have Brian Marcotte, who is the assistant deputy minister of policy and planning; Jeanette Espie-Lefebvre, acting assistant deputy minister of transportation safety services; Gary Boddez, chair of the Transportation Safety Board. We have Winnie Yiu-Yeung, who is the executive director of the finance and business management branch. Just back from a bit of a maternity leave is Leanne Stangeland, director of communications, and sitting next to Leanne is of course Ron Glen, my executive assistant. I wish to publicly thank these people and all the Transportation staff for their outstanding work. I do get a lot of kudos from colleagues here in the House and constituents across the province, and really it's because of the excellent service and work we receive from our staff in Transportation. They're a great group to work with and hard working.

Mr. Chairman, the 2003-04 fiscal year marks a significant departure from past budgeting and planning practices, and I must say that it's a welcome departure for Alberta Transportation. Previously the department saw radical swings in funding from year to year and even within the same year. The past two fiscal years are a prime example. With the events of 9-11 and a sudden downturn in revenues the department trimmed roughly 20 percent of its budget midyear in 2001-02. This was achieved mainly by deferring capital projects in future years. Quite frankly, that was done when we were through most of the construction season, so it was quite difficult to achieve the 20 percent saving. It was more like 40 percent.

In the next fiscal year the department's budget and business plan were significantly adjusted mere days after being tabled in the Legislature, and you can see how the former financial management system created problems for the budgeting and planning processes. It wasn't only hard on the department staff. It was certainly difficult on municipal construction engineering partners, who felt the same effects in this province. As a former county reeve I appreciate the challenges of municipal budgeting and know firsthand that there's not much room to manoeuvre in a municipal budget. When you're not sure what grant levels may be from year to year, it makes the budgeting process even more challenging. Our construction and engineering partners geared up for certain amounts of anticipated work only to be told scant months later that a lot of the work wasn't going to materialize. However, they still had equipment to pay for and other costs to absorb. The boom and bust cycle of capital spending caused a lot of instability in the industry.

As you know, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act was passed recently. I'm confident that the new budgeting and planning process will be much better, especially for capital-intensive ministries like Transportation. Department staff and our construction, consulting, engineering, and municipal partners can now make plans based on stable and predictable assumptions. This stability is important to the ministry because transportation is vital to Alberta's economy and Albertans' quality of life. Safe, efficient, and effective transportation systems are the lifeblood of a prosperous province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I mentioned changes to the financial system a few minutes ago. The changes will directly affect this committee. This year you will have two votes: one for the ministry's operating expense and equipment or inventory purchases and a second vote for capital investment. Overall, the ministry's operating expense and equipment or inventory purchases will be $924 million with a capital investment of $372 million. So the ministry's overall budget is just under $1.3 billion for 2003-04. Now, this is an increase of $403 million from last year's budget, primarily to continue the Premier's task force commitments to municipalities and to allow construction of the north/south trade corridor and the ring roads in both Edmonton and Calgary.

Mr. Chairman, safety is the ministry's number one priority. The new Traffic Safety Act comes into effect May 20, and it amalgamates four existing acts into one, and I think we condense about 35 regulations into 18 as well. This new act also introduces new initiatives such as graduated driver licensing for new drivers and measures aimed at reducing impaired driving.

Graduated driver licensing – or I'll refer to it as GDL for short – will apply to all new drivers regardless of age. It is geared to giving new drivers more experience behind the wheel in less demanding situations before unrestricted licences are granted. New drivers will earn licences through a stage process over at least three years. The most important thing is that collision rates for new drivers have fallen in other provinces with graduated licence programs, in some cases as much as 30 percent. I'm confident that such reductions are certainly possible in Alberta once GDL takes effect.

The new act also updates fines and penalties, and certainly a lot of people have commented that the revised fines are another form of taxation. Well, the truth is that Alberta had not done a comprehensive review of fines and penalties in over a decade. The latest review for the new act revealed that Alberta's fines and penalties were either the lowest in Canada or among the lowest. In fact, fines were as low as $5 for some offences, which didn't even cover the cost of writing or even processing the ticket. Alberta's fines and penalties are now in line with other Canadian provinces, and unless you break the law, you don't have to worry about the cost of the ticket.

A final note about the new act: it combines the Driver Control Board and Motor Transport Board into the Transportation Safety Board. The new board will have responsibilities related to both drivers and commercial vehicles.

Now is a good time to talk more about capital construction and maintenance because they go hand in hand with safety. On average highway infrastructure improvements lead to reductions of 40 to 50 percent in collision rates depending on the particular improvement. So building up and maintaining transportation infrastructure is about more than just getting somewhere easier or faster. The ministry's construction priority remains completing the north/south trade corridor. When completed, the corridor will be a continuous four-lane highway link from the Alberta/Montana border, at Coumts, to the Alberta/B.C. border west of Grande Prairie. The corridor is a priority because it corresponds to significant increases in Alberta trade with both the United States and Mexico. I believe the trade to the United States has increased something like 300 percent in the last 10 years and Mexico about 400 percent. The department will invest $205 million in corridor related projects in 2003-04. The projects include twinning rural sections, continuing work on Anthony Henday, and completing the Deerfoot Trail extension.

Speaking of Edmonton and Calgary, work continues on ring roads in both cities. The estimated cost on these two projects is around $2 billion. Alberta Transportation has been working closely with the federal government to secure more funding for the roads – that's the ring roads – and to that end Ottawa has tentatively agreed to provide $150 million for the two ring road projects over the next five years through the $2 billion Canada strategic infrastructure fund.

In this fiscal year Transportation will also invest $131 million in infrastructure on other parts of Alberta's highway network. This includes grade widening, base paving, intersection improvements. While these capital investments are important, it's equally vital that the department continues to protect that investment and enhance safety through regular maintenance. To this end we'll spend $187 million to maintain provincial highways including work of snow removal, ice control, line painting, dust and weed control, and filling holes and pavement cracks.

We're also responsible for capital construction and maintenance of provincially owned water management infrastructures such as dams, canals, and spillways. We budgeted $34 million for these activities for this fiscal year. The Little Bow project is almost complete, as the new dam and spillway were finished earlier this year, and rehabilitation of the canal through High River will be finished soon. As well, work will continue on the Carseland/Bow River headworks system in southern Alberta.

Alberta Transportation also administers a number of dam programs to assist municipalities with transportation and water/wastewater infrastructure, and one of these is the cities transportation partnership. Under this program the cities of Edmonton and Calgary receive funding equivalent to 5 cents per litre of road fuel delivered to outlets within the city limits. That's approximately $75 million to Edmonton, $90 million to Calgary, and that's to be used for transportation and transit system infrastructure and capital purchases. Cities other than Edmonton and Calgary continue to receive $60 per capita under the basic grants.

Under the street improvement program, sometimes referred to as SIP, towns, villages, summer villages, and eligible hamlets also receive $60 per capita. Rural municipalities continue to receive grants for local roads and bridges, and we've also introduced two new grant programs: one to help cities other than Edmonton and Calgary to address growth, and one to help municipalities deal with increased resource and industrial traffic on local roads. Approximately $10 million and $17 million respectively are allocated to these two programs this year, and both are project-specific programs.

The Alberta municipal water/wastewater partnership helps municipalities with population under 45,000 to secure safe, reliable sources of drinking water and wastewater treatment. This program is also project specific, and funding for approved projects is delivered on a sliding scale, depending on the size of the municipality involved. In total we'll allocate $265 million to provincial/municipal grant programs.

We also administer ICAP, the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, in partnership with the federal/municipal governments. Municipalities may receive up to two-thirds of eligible costs for municipal infrastructure from the federal and provincial governments. We're in the third year, and we have committed $171 million to ICAP. To date 453 projects worth $371 million have been approved. ICAP provincial funding for this year is $18 million.

So, as you can see, this will be a busy year for Transportation related activities which will greatly enhance the movement of goods and people in this province. This now concludes my comments, and I'm looking forward to answering whatever questions might come forward tonight.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and it is indeed a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to estimates for the Department of Transportation. I'd like to thank the minister for his opening comments and as well thank his staff who are present here this evening to assist in any questions that we may have in the opposition or members of the government. Certainly, Albertans have for many decades enjoyed excellent highways. The demand and the increased traffic on our highways puts a strain on any budget, and it does certainly cause us to improve various sections for safety. It also increases the amount of maintenance, and we do require that to keep this province on the move and to keep our economy going strong.

In looking at the estimates for this particular year, I see that in the core business plans the ministry for 2003-2006 has four core businesses, and these are to manage transportation and safety problems, to manage the provincial highway network, to support economic development, and to represent Alberta's interest in transportation policy. Along those lines, I will have some questions for the minister as we proceed through the estimates. As well, we have strategic priorities that the ministry has identified, and these are included and identified in five priorities. One is to enhance "driver, road, and vehicle safety by managing high-risk drivers and carriers, and implementing the new Traffic Safety Act." A second priority is "protecting the integrity of highway and water management infrastructure." A third is to support "economic development and growth." A fourth is "leading the Capital Planning Initiative to enhance capital planning and management of infrastructure" across the country. And the fifth is "managing the environmental impact of our actions."

Now, as well, last week a number of us had the opportunity to hear economists speak about the great economic success which is centred around highway 2, the Edmonton/Calgary corridor, and certainly a lot of that success has to do with the ability of us to move products to export in the United States and to import products. We all know that Alberta more than any other province certainly does have a trade surplus with the United States, and Canada as a whole has a trade surplus somewhere in the neighbourhood of $90 billion. We certainly could not do that without a very good transportation system. So my questions tonight are going to cover a number of the strategic priorities and the core businesses and certainly look at how we fit in and how harmonized our regulations are with those across Canada and as well with those of other countries.

I do have a number of issues that I would like to certainly bring to the minister's attention and see if he could handle those first of all.

A while back in the Assembly I asked the minister about a situation here where U-Haul trailers certainly have a predominance of Arizona licence plates. I know that at that time, he was going to check into it to see why this particular company would have so many Arizona plates and if in fact there was any type of agreement whereby they could have their Arizona plates and as well, Mr. Chairman, to see if in fact these vehicles were properly registered in the province, if there was any system involved whereby we could check as to how long those vehicles have been in the province if they're displaying Arizona plates. Addressing the safety issue, when those vehicles enter this province and remain here for any period of time, is there any type of inspection required on those trucks to make certain they are roadworthy?

Those concerns were brought to my attention by a letter I received, and unfortunately there wasn't an address on that letter so that we could contact Mr. Peterson, but he was extremely interested at that time to have answers to those problems and those issues that he had raised. This was certainly a concern of his after renting a U-Haul truck in Calgary to assist his daughter in moving, so he was quite concerned about the licence plates. He was also very concerned about that particular vehicle that he had rented and to know that it was roadworthy because he certainly didn't seem to think so.

This afternoon in the Legislature we asked the minister questions about Lethbridge airport's port of entry status. If he did have any more information on that or if the department does have the opportunity to look into this issue more, it would certainly be welcome because, again, the status of this airport, particularly its port of entry, has a huge impact on that region.

Another question that was brought to my attention by a constituent was the fact that in Alberta it is legal to equip cars with nitrous oxide. Of course, when you equip cars with nitrous oxide, it simply gives them a boost in horsepower of anywhere between 30 and 50 percent. It's very short-lived, but the only purpose that cars would require that type of a boost in horsepower certainly is in street racing or if in fact those cars were being pursued and they were trying to get away. One of the core business plans is to manage transportation safety programs. When we have these types of additions to cars, which certainly do not lead to safety but lead to a situation that drastically increases for a short period of time the horsepower of those cars, then I would like to hear the minister's comments on this particular subject.

Now, as well, another issue that has come to my attention in regard to traffic safety is the maximum driving shifts that drivers can work per shift in Canada, and when compared to the United States, these are 17 percent higher, and they are 56 percent higher than those in Europe. I'm looking at the maximum driving shift in Canada, which is proposed for 14 hours per day compared to the U.S., which is 12, and Europe, which is nine. So if the minister could provide some comment as to why this discrepancy and, particularly when we are putting so much attention on the north/south trade corridor and we are going to be having a lot of exports and imports that travel along this particular route, why we would not want to harmonize those hours with the United States.

As well, I am extremely concerned about the maximum number of hours per week that drivers can be at the wheel. Certainly in Canada – I don't know if this has been passed, and perhaps the minister could enlighten us on that – the maximum number of hours proposed is 95 hours, it is my understanding, compared to 60 hours in the United States and 55 hours in Europe. I think that's a situation that really in Alberta if one of our core business plans is to manage transportation and safety programs, I guess that this adds a greater concern to me when we think of the number of branch lines of the railroad that have shut down over the last few years. Certainly they had to do that because they were no longer efficient, yet so many of the dangerous goods that were once hauled by the railroads are now being transported by truck. I think of the situation where the fuel at Cold Lake for the military facility at that point would all be trucked up there now, and certainly for a driver that's approaching his 95-hour maximum per week or a driver that's had a number of 14-hour shifts in a row, this is just nothing more than a missile heading down the highway. I think that when we do look at the safety issue, this is one that we should certainly look at very, very closely.

In looking at this issue of safety and highway maintenance, we have a situation where over the past number of years perhaps we did not have the type of maintenance on our roads that we would've liked to. In speaking with the minister some time ago, he was indicating that when we have road deterioration, as the time increases between when that road should be maintained or seek a level of maintenance, as that time increases that the road does not get the proper maintenance, then certainly the cost in the end of repairing that road is not a linear cost but it also increases very rapidly. So if the minister could give us some idea as to if in recent years the backlog of roads that should've been maintained has been caught up, and if it hasn't been caught up, if the minister could please indicate in his business plans how we are progressing with catching up on that particular backlog.

As well, if the minister could indicate how costs are for maintenance on the roads. I know that back in 2001, I believe, the average cost at that time for maintenance was $5,300 per kilometre. If the minister could also indicate how much of the budget this year is going to be dedicated to resurfacing and repaving.

In looking at this year's budget, we have certainly a great amount of stress on transportation as far as moving products to market. If the minister could please indicate how much of our exports are moved to market on our roadways, on our highways. I know that he had a breakdown of that compared to rail, compared to marine, compared to air, and certainly compared to pipeline. I also noted that the transportation costs for moving products to market average somewhere in the neighbourhood of 16 percent of the final selling price, and if the minister could indicate if that has remained constant or if in fact it has increased or decreased.

As well, there are a number of strategic economic corridors that we have identified in the province, and these economic corridors certainly are, I think, switching more and more from an east/west flow to a north/south flow, and if the minister could please indicate if there has been a significant shift in the amount of goods that we are moving east to west as compared to north to south.

I would like to ask the minister some other questions in regard to water grants. Municipalities think that the water grants they receive from the ministry are good, but they are worried about how the Ministry of Environment makes the regulations but it's the Transportation ministry who pays out the money. My question for the minister this evening is: what is the ministry going to do to ensure that stricter regulations from Environment are matched with more money for municipalities from Transportation?

As well, another main concern for municipalities is that they are unable to keep up with the maintenance on their transportation infrastructure. In fact, most cities are building up a transportation infrastructure debt, and this is certainly compounded by the fact that we have had in some areas of the province some very strong economic growth, and people that come to Alberta to work don't bring their infrastructure with them. So, in regard to this, if the minister could please outline what his department is doing to help and encourage these cities to eliminate their yearly infrastructure deficits and aggregate infrastructure debt.

Another concern. When we do have this growth that we have experienced in Alberta and new housing subdivisions are built, cities are not allowed to charge a levy for commuter roads that become necessary because of new population. Unfortunately, the cities cannot afford to build these roads themselves either. This is exactly the case in Calgary. So if the minister could please inform us what his department is doing to alleviate this crisis. Will the ministry introduce legislation that would allow cities to raise a development levy for the building of commuter roads?

As well, have there been any further considerations about requiring the use of electronic onboard recorders for commercial vehicles? Of course, this would be an added expense to truckers, but it would certainly eliminate the dual log books that we hear some drivers do employ so that they can drive more hours than they should throughout the week or per day. Of course, this is one of those factors that we touched upon earlier in the core business plan in regard to the issue of safety, and we certainly wish to encourage the safe conduct of commercial carriers and drivers. When we think back just a short time ago to the horrific accident in Calgary involving a truck and a car which had a number of nuns in it, it is a tragic reminder that passenger cars are certainly no match when they get into a collision with vehicles of that size.

Now, as well, something that seems to keep cropping up every year and just doesn't seem to go away is this whole notion of toll roads in the province, and I know it's something that the ministry from time to time does look at.

With those comments, I will take my seat. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll try and answer as many of the questions that were raised by the hon. member. He covered quite a variety of goals and measurements and actually referred to the budget before us as well. With respect to trade I'll try and capture in terms of the trucks and trade and some of the other issues.

There's about a billion and half dollars worth of trade between Canada and the United States every year. In the province of Alberta 21 percent of the exports and greater than 50 percent of the imports coming into Canada, meaning what we would receive from the United States, would be by truck. When we measure exports in terms of the total economy – of course, some would be marine and a considerable amount by rail – we're finding that it's an interesting statistic, that we do bring in more goods by truck than we export. But that's a percentage, Mr. Chairman, of the total output of the economy.

With respect to investment in trade corridors and trucking the Americans are investing $218 billion, and it's all dedicated to their transportation system. It's going to put additional pressure on us, there's no doubt, and that is why the western ministers of transportation have jointly submitted a number of options to the federal minister asking for a substantial return of the 10 cents a litre of fuel excise tax which is sent to Ottawa. The other proposal is that if you're going to tax fuel but not spend it on roads, just reduce the tax federally and allow us to pick up that tax. We will promise that it will be spent on road infrastructure. So whatever they pay in fuel tax will go directly into roads. It won't be siphoned off to other departments.

With respect to the question raised by the hon. member and also the letter that he received some time ago with respect to U-Haul, car rental agencies and trucking companies must register under the international registration plan. What they do is retain their licence plates, but we would prorate the cost for the registration fee based on kilometres traveled. In the case of U-Haul, rather than changing plates every time they come in and then leave the province and go to another jurisdiction, they would pay us an equivalency prorated on the number of kilometres traveled in the province. However, they all must go through a commercial vehicle inspection program. That's a policy that we apply similar to our commercial vehicles. So even though they're registered out of province or to an out-of-country state, we would still ensure that they do obtain the safety certificate and also have the proper insurance while they operate in Alberta.

Inspection on commercial vehicles. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has rightfully mentioned that we've seen a phenomenal increase in the number of trucks in the province. From 1991 to 2001 – that's not including the last two years of growth – we have seen a 270 percent increase in the number of large trucks, commercial vehicles. This is just in the 41,000-kilogram range and up, so that's the five-axle trucks. Just in that one category, from 9,000 to 25,000 some odd trucks. So that in itself tells us that there's been a huge increase.

When we measure the number of incidents – and I don't call them accidents, because most of them are preventable I think – we're actually holding our own. It's not increasing relative to the huge increase in the number of vehicles. But there are a few statistics that have shown that we have had more single vehicle trucks coming off the road, you know, no other vehicles involved, just the one vehicle coming off the road. We've also had a slight increase where people have been walking on the side of the highway late at night and have been unfortunately struck by a truck.

We could probably have, I believe, a commendable safety record, that we could compare to any jurisdiction. Whether it be the same number of trucks or rules or however we'd want to measure, we have a very commendable safety record because we have the only motor transport officer program in North America, not only in Canada but in North America, where our officers are all accredited. In fact, it's a bit of a problem because they have substantial training before they're hired in the province of Alberta. We do lose a number of them on a regular basis to police forces because they have much of the training already before they start with us. So it is something that Albertans are very proud of certainly, and I think it relates to a very respectable level of incidents in the trucking industry. However, there is room for improvement. We know that. Even one accident is unacceptable.

I do want to say that further down when we talked about the trucking safety record, yes, there is a possibility of drivers being tired. We've had one unfortunate incident in Lethbridge where the driver was arrested, was allegedly impaired. But another issue and what the western transportation ministers are working on is some sort of open communication, an exchange of information, of driver records between the provinces. That is paramount. In this particular case in this one incident when an RCMP officer was killed while sitting in his car with the flashing lights on, the driver was from British Columbia and had a record attached to him, one that wasn't very complimentary. Of course, we wouldn't know about it because we had no means of accessing that information.

With respect to the Lethbridge point of entry, unfortunately after September 11 the federal government had changed some of its policies under the veil of safety and removed all customs services from Lethbridge. So now if a person wants to do business in Lethbridge and they're flying from the United States, they have to fly to Calgary and then go through customs in Calgary and then come back to Lethbridge. We have had a number of submissions, and I will provide to the hon. member and table with the House some of the letters that we have sent.

I think there's even a little larger area of concern here. It's not only the point of entry. Without wanting to point fingers and lay blame with anyone, I just want to state the facts. At the last two meetings transportation ministers from across Canada had, airports were quite a significant discussion item. They were of significant concern, especially the smaller airports and the viability of those airports. The position taken by the federal minister was that one should consider a drive to an airport in excess of three hours something that is unacceptable. Many people in this country drive more than three hours to an airport. Those were kind of the opening remarks that were delivered at the meeting. Well, in some provinces, of course, in three hours you would reach an important airport, I guess, and in some cases you can't. As a result, we're trying to work with the federal government to find some balance.

We are working on this issue in Lethbridge and trying to restore the point of entry services because I do believe – and I support what the hon. member has said – it is a vital entry point, a huge value-added component, especially in agriculture. We have had quite a significant investment in the two potato plants. We sell mustard out of there, a whole bunch of things. I forget a lot of it because I haven't been in agriculture for a while, but there is a significant investment in that area by American companies. We travel back and forth, and it would be great if we could fly to the place of business as efficiently and as effectively as we can.

The hours of service regulations. This is one area that's had huge debates for at least three years. I've attended the federal meetings, and it took a fair amount of discussion, co-operation, and collaboration amongst all the provinces and the federal government to agree on the hours of service for truckers. I firmly believe it's an improvement from what it was before, but to try and standardize it with the States – eastern Canada had separate issues than what we had here in the province of Alberta. There were some issues particular to certain industries, like oil, forestry, and I believe we've got the balance. A fair amount of discussion is necessary with our stakeholders in Alberta, but generally speaking, it is a reduction in . . .

The Chair: Unfortunately, hon. member, one of the hon. members' voices down there is coming through on the Department of Transportation microphone rather clearly, so it gets hard to follow. It may be the nature of the microphone or the nature of the other voice. Were you finished, hon. Minister of Transportation? I was trying to signal those other voices.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, no. There were a lot of questions raised.

Now, the hours of service would limit the hours of work for a commercial vehicle driver to 13 hours of driving but a 14-hour work shift and 10 hours off duty in one day. It's a very complex regulation to explain, and I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that even if I were to walk out to the street and explain it to somebody very quickly – what's the difference, what are the reductions, et cetera, and how do you apply it? – I wouldn't be able to explain it in a 15-second sound bite, I can tell you that, but generally speaking, it will improve safety. We're still looking at those areas of exemptions that we had before, but we will work those out. We have consulted. We waited for the federal government to do its own consultations. Those have not happened in this province, but we do have the information that we had before, and we're going to carry forward.

Maintenance of roads. The issue was raised: what are the cost differences? Maintenance of a regular highway, one lane, done most appropriately according to engineering tests would cost roughly a hundred thousand dollars per kilometre, and if we were to not do it and proceed with the maintenance after the road has failed, well, certainly, that will increase to even in excess of $500,000 a kilometre. So we don't want to do that on our provincial highways, because, as you know, Mr. Chairman, it's quite difficult to rebuild a road once we have a road in place. It's even more costly than starting with a new grade.

The cost of maintenance in the budget. We're going to be investing in this province in excess of $265 million, a rough increase of about 15 percent from last year. We're trying to catch up with a backlog, but we still do have a fair amount, and the reason is that in the very late '70s, early '80s a considerable amount of highways in this province were paved. In 2003 and on from now some of those highways' life cycles will be coming to an end, and as a result we'll have to get back to them to maintain and repave. So there will be those additional pressures coming forward.

As well, we are putting in an increase in bridge repair and bridge maintenance this year. There are about 3,800 structures that we are responsible for directly in Transportation, but about 8,800 structures, rural and urban, are municipally owned, but we grant resources for maintenance. As you know, some of those were built back in the mid-40s, many of them in the '50s into the '60s, so we will have to maintain a very aggressive program ensuring that those bridges don't fail. The other is that you could build and upgrade a road to a higher standard, to a higher load limit, but if your bridge does not allow you to convey that load across, what's the sense of putting in that particular investment?

Approximately 16 percent of the cost of goods in this province is related to transportation. It's holding firm, although we would have to revisit that really to see if that has increased. What I'm hearing from industry is that it's more difficult to be competitive all the way into the Maritimes with their manufactured goods, and it's not only more expensive to get them there, but it's more expensive to get the product to a manufacturer's plant by truck. So it's a bit of a double whammy, and as a result we want to ensure that we move quickly on the corridors so that manufacturers can get their products out more in a free-flow, nonstop way.

There are a number of other questions, but I'll work on them in the next period because I think my time is running out. [interjection] I have one minute?

Okay. With respect to housing subdivisions and whether we're prepared to pass legislation, that is within Municipal Affairs. However, part of the 5 cents a litre, the increase in the grant, which used to be about $60 per capita and now the 5 cents gives the cities about $100 per capita – that's to be expended on their own city streets.

Economic corridors. Yes, north/south is important, but we also have to be mindful of the fact that we want to connect the east and west to the north and south so that we don't have all the growth along the north/south trade corridor and forget about the rest of this province. The rest of this province is important, and if we can tie to the north/south trade corridor, we will ensure competitiveness in the future.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Dr. Massey: The dead fish minister wants the question called.

I'm pleased to have the opportunity to raise some questions with respect to the Transportation estimates. I listened with interest to the minister's explanations. I start off with an apology. I'm not that familiar with the ministry and its operations, so if some of the questions I ask are very obvious, I apologize for that. I would like to stick, if I might, to the programs in the budget and to ask a series of specific questions about those program items.

I wonder if we could have a breakdown of the minister's and the deputy minister's office budgets by salary, including the salaries for all employees. Mr. Chairman, we get varying responses, it seems, almost dependent upon the department. I've gone through some of the annual reports and found very specific information there, and in other departments we get it in the budget, and I'm not quite sure. When we submitted a series of written questions about this item, not about the Transportation department, I don't believe, but about some other departments, we were told that the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act prevented this kind of information from being made public, yet I know that the FOIP Act allows the government to make public the salaries of superintendents and CEOs of the health authorities. So I guess we're looking for the same kind of specific information that is available about those organizations with respect to the Transportation department. Again, in the same line how much was spent on bonuses last year and is anticipated to be spent on bonuses this year, and can we have an indication of the size of those bonuses?

The operating expenses for the ministry are going up by nearly a million dollars this year. What will the new money be used to purchase? Could we have a breakdown of the $25.716 million operating estimate for support services in 2003-04 by the business planning and corporate support, communications, financial services, human resource services, information and technology, and legal services? How do the numbers for the above categories compare to previous years? When there are large differences, could we have some accounting for that difference?

Why is the equipment and inventory purchase budget for ministry support services $1.3 million less than it was last year? Does this indicate that last year's budget was an anomaly? There must have been some reason for this kind of a difference, and any information that will shed light on that difference would be appreciated.

In program 2, construction, upgrading, and operation of transportation infrastructure, the transportation safety services line item is increasing by approximately $2.5 million from last year's budget and approximately $2.3 million from last year's spending. Could we have an indication of why this is so? What programs are going to get this money, and how will the spending of this added money benefit Albertans?

The Transportation Safety Board's budget is increasing from $859,000 to a million dollars. What is the reason for the increase? Is it because of an increased caseload? Just what is the reason behind this? What is the Transportation Safety Board's caseload? Does it differ from past years, and are there trends here that we can be made aware of?

Provincial highways will be receiving an operating expense. The expense is about $20 million more than they received last year. We had some indication just in the previous comments from the minister, but can we have some detail in terms of where this money is going, and is it really $20 million more expensive to operate Alberta highways this year than it was last?

Other road infrastructure will receive in operating expenses about $2 million more than was spent last year. Can we have an indication of where the money is going, and why is it going to be $2 million more expensive to operate Alberta highways this year than it was last? The operating expense for other road infrastructure was a million dollars more than was budgeted. Can we have some indication of what caused this increase?

The rural transportation partnership money is increasing by about $19 million. What partnerships does the minister plan for the use of the money? How do you decide which partnerships are going to be entered upon? Who retains responsibility for these projects, the rural jurisdiction or the province? How does the ministry ensure that all rural jurisdictions will be given fair and equitable access to these funds?

Can the minister explain what operating expenses resource roads and new industry receive and why? Why is this line item receiving $2 million more than it spent last year? That's quite a difference, and there must be a reason behind it.

Alberta cities transportation partnerships is receiving approximately $115 million more than it spent last year. What projects is the ministry looking at funding with these dollars? How are the partnerships, again, decided upon? The same questions as with the rural. Who retains responsibilities for these projects; is it the city or the province? How does the ministry ensure that all cities are given fair and equitable access to these funds? So, again, the same questions but with the concern about fairness and the distribution of them across the province.

The streets improvement program budget is being nearly doubled. Where is this money going to specifically? How is it portioned? What was the impetus for giving the program $14 million more?

The budget amount for municipal water and wastewater grants is staying the same as last year despite some communities in Alberta needing more help in purifying and treating their sewage, Mr. Chairman. I guess the question is: how did the ministry decide not to increase the amount of grants when there seems to be a significant need for this crucial service? There's a growing public sensitivity to this kind of service. Again, how will the $25 million be apportioned? What type of projects will the money go to fund?

The infrastructure Canada/Alberta program is losing about $14 million in this budget. Was this a decision of the ministry? What is the relationship with the federal government with respect to this budget item? Is there actually going to be a loss of funding? Just what are the particulars surrounding this item?

Sections 2.5 and 2.5.1 on page 368 of the estimates show program services. Could we have an indication of exactly what this line item includes and why there is a $900,000 increase over last year's allocations?

The amortization of capital assets is budgeted for $19 million more than was spent last year. Again, can the minister explain why this item requires $19 million more this year than the past year? Why was the amortization of capital assets $32 million over last year's budget? What happened to account for that difference?

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Under equipment/inventory purchases highway systems is receiving 4 and a half million dollars more this year than last. Could we have an indication of where this line item is going and why there is an extra $4.5 million included in the budget this year over last year?

The capital investment for provincial highways is going down by approximately $9 million from what was spent last year. Could we have an explanation of why the ministry is spending less on this item when spending as a whole has increased? Why was the line item more than $50 million over budget last year? Is there really an overrun, or is it something to do with the budgeting process that explains that difference?

Again, it just appears that there's some instability in capital investment on highway systems over time and between budgeted and forecasted values. Can the minister give us some indication of what he is doing to eliminate this and how he's trying to mitigate the effect of roller-coaster budgets on construction companies? I know that the minister made some comments in his opening remarks with respect to this item.

The strategic economic investment corridor initiative is receiving $98 million more than it received last year. Could we have some explanation in terms of the detail and the information about this item? The increase is large. It's a great increase over last year. Can we have some indication of why this is so? Can the minister give a specific cost breakdown of where all the money allocated to this line item goes?

Water management infrastructure will not see any more capital investment dollars. Again, how did the ministry decide not to give any more money to this line item when there are communities in the province that are having an exceedingly difficult time bringing fresh water to their residents; for example, Camrose, Ponoka, Blackfalds, Okotoks, Wabamun, and Barrhead?

The transfers from the government of Canada are budgeted to rise from $2 million to $9.4 million. What is the agreement under which this is happening?

The revenue from premiums, fees, and licences is budgeted to drop from 14 and a half million dollars to 11 and a half million dollars. Can we have an explanation of why this decrease is occurring?

The number of full-time equivalent employees of the ministry is being increased from 862 last year to 877. Could we have a brief explanation of why there are these differences?

So I think that with that long series of questions, Mr. Chairman, which require a lot of detail – and I can appreciate that the minister may not have it with him this evening – I'll conclude.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to try to catch up with where I left off with the original questions raised by my critic and then proceed to the next list of questions. I know that I won't be able to answer them all, because we won't have the time, but I'll try to do some of them, and then others we'll definitely respond to in writing in much greater detail.

With respect to water grants – and it was raised twice – we do have certainly more people in the province of Alberta which puts pressure on existing infrastructure, but as well we have infrastructure that's been in place for some time and does require renewal, and coupled with that, of course, is the fact that we're always raising the bar, raising the standards in the province. It does require more funding for water and wastewater for those particular reasons, and the reason that there hasn't been a change in water and wastewater grants and a change in the size of our budget is that it is one area that is untouchable. We did not lower any of those grants or reduce those grants when we had to find the 20 percent because of the September 11 event.

I'm proud to say that we are the only jurisdiction, the only province in Canada, that partnered with the municipalities and with the federal government in a very unique way where we asked municipalities to sit on two committees: the first one is to establish the criteria on how the Canada/Alberta infrastructure money will be spent and, secondly, sit on the approval committee. So no decisions were made independently by Transportation. They were made by the committee, which included the AUMA, AAMD and C, Transportation, Municipal Affairs, and the federal government. Thanks to the input from municipalities we're the only jurisdiction that said: we want the majority of this money to go into hard infrastructure, green infrastructure, either into a waterline, sewer, or a road. Some of that went to creating better efficiencies in the buildings: better insulating, better air movement in the buildings, et cetera. Again, a worthwhile project.

A component of the $171 million – if I recall, it's about $23 million – went to an area where both the federal government and the province could nominate projects. Some of that went to, like, the hall D at the Convention Centre, and some of that went to similar projects where it was invested in buildings or improvements to current structures. Fort Edmonton Park and others I believe were nominated.

That is why in water and wastewater we not only expended all of the grants in the previous years of $25 million and the same grant this year, but we've also caught up with all of the smaller projects because we've had the opportunity to partner with the federal government and actually invest some of their infrastructure money in hard infrastructure. So I think it was a win/win situation.

With respect to some of the other questions. There was a question – and I had a hard time remembering – with respect to, I think, a line item on deputy minister salaries and some other salaries, and my response is simply that I did respond to a written question, I believe, in the House, and that form will be tabled at some date. I'm not quite sure when, but it'll be coming across.

Transportation Safety Board. We've collapsed two boards into one. The expenses are more because we're doing more. We collapsed four different acts into one, the Traffic Safety Act. Coupled with that is a lower commercial vehicle threshold where the Transportation Safety Board will be involved. There's more activity. They sit as an appeal board to the Alberta administrative licence suspension program. This is when a driver blows .08 and we suspend their driver's licence for 90 days. They're in light of and notwithstanding the tough rules that were passed by this House. There hasn't been a significant drop in the number of incidents. In fact, I hate to say that it's actually trending slightly up overall, at least in the appeals that are coming forward to board. As well, there will be greater costs in the area of – again, that's all the vehicle inspection. There will be more done. We also opened up an office in Fort McMurray just to improve the service, so we'll have a couple of people on the board assigned to look after those Albertans that come before the board rather than always driving from Fort McMurray to Edmonton for the hearing. We'll be able to dispatch members there and conduct a hearing there, and it's all an improvement of service to Albertans.

Other road infrastructure. I think it was 2.2.2. It is a $3 million increase, about a 30 percent increase, there's no doubt, but it covers maintenance of approximately 300 kilometres of public roads and bridges on Indian reserves; the maintenance and operation of rest areas, vehicle inspection stations, and ferries; maintenance of roads, parking areas, and bridges in provincial parks; maintenance of minor capital improvements of water management infrastructure; and there's also the provision of grants to various municipalities for runway maintenance, runway rehabilitation for smaller airports. So that's been captured in that line as other road infrastructure. After the election of 2001 and the restructuring the Department of Transportation was responsible for the maintenance of roads and bridges in provincial parks, so we're like the contractors for those departments.

Rural transportation partnerships. It's a word that actually is better put just as "grants." They're grants to counties and MDs. They're based on relationship, the number of kilometres, assessment in that particular municipality, and it does vary from one municipality to another, but it does reflect the number of kilometres of road that they have to maintain, really the infrastructure they have to maintain, and also assessment. It may – I don't think that in the formula there's population, but we'll double-check on that. In fact, no, it isn't the population. It's just roads and assessment.

On the resource roads there is an increase really because that is one area we had reduced going into the aftermath of September 11. This program allows municipalities to apply to the Department of Transportation for a resource road grant, the criteria established again by partnership with the department and AUMA and AAMD and C, members of which will also be sitting on the committee that will be approving the applications under this particular program. Basically the criteria is to partner with municipalities and the private sector to build roads to assist with resource extraction. They won't be roads in the inventory of the province; they will be roads in the inventory of the municipality.

We've adjusted the formula a bit. It was 75/25 before, and now it's going to be 50/25/25: 50 percent from the department, 25 from the private sector, and 25 from the municipality, knowing that at the end of the day the value of that road will still be with the municipality. The reason we did it is that the 25 percent that we saved will still be spent in rural Alberta, but it will go to maintenance of bridges, and some of it was also redirected to secondaries. It is a program that has been extremely positive. It's allowed us to build roads into areas to help extend the window of opportunity for resource extraction well beyond a narrow window perhaps because of weather, like, you know, before spring thaw, before you can pull out your rig or access oil and gas.

The cities transportation partnership. There is an increase in that. What's happened is that it's the 5 cents a litre, and as you know, in the last budget and business plan that was reduced. It will require further explanation because we have also prepaid the two cities before. You know, if we knew that we couldn't expend the money – let's say that we, for instance, had a difficult construction season – then we could prepay in one year the 5 cents a litre so that the cities had the use of that money, and then we would pay them less in the following year. So there are those other reasons for the differences. In fact, the year before we prepaid the two cities $45 million in the last fiscal year, and as a result it does create some differences in terms of what is increased or decreased in terms of the way we report the estimates.

Street improvement. That has increased. It's $60 per capita, and we want to ensure that smaller communities have a reasonable amount of funding, again for their infrastructure. It's also now extended to hamlets. So if a rural municipality, a rural municipal district, an improvement district, a county, or a municipal district is taken over – let's say that village A decided to become a hamlet. The hamlet would qualify for the $60 per capita grant as well.

ICAP. There is a little bit of difference there simply because we are really paying similar to what the federal government is doing: pay as you go. So as the projects are completed by a municipality, we would pay them together with the federal government. Again, because it's a three-way partnership, you rely on the municipality to manage the project, and some were not ready to go with some projects. It could have been because they didn't have the necessary permits in place, especially environmental permits, or they didn't have their money allocated in that year's budget and they had to roll the project over to another year. So we forecast, look ahead, see what projects are going to go forward, and then pretty well that's what we will put into the budget to offset our one-third expense.

Program services. There is an increase primarily because of manpower increases, the costs of the various contracts. Most of that money – and I believe it's $34 million – goes to information technology, both tier 1 and 2. Tier 1 is really the cost of maintenance – you know, troubleshooting – and tier 2 is the design of information technology that relates to transportation. Some of it we actually share with municipalities: TIMS, TRAVIS, and I believe there's another one. To give you an example, if we're going to be tendering on a stretch of highway, let's say from Fort Saskatchewan to Lamont, every contractor would have to go and see where the line is painted, how many stop signs, where all the gas lines and telephone lines are, et cetera. Well, this would all now be captured on an information system database so that when we go to contract, to tender, respective contractors have that information handy, and it does lead to greater efficiencies. That's just one small component off of it, but it is something that other jurisdictions are looking at as well.

There was one with respect to amortization, 2.6.1 and 2.6.2, which is the consumption of inventories. I'm not an accountant, but I will make an attempt to explain. Basically, it is the amortization of the assets. A number of years ago we assumed responsibility for all of the secondary highways, and there is a 30 percent increase in that as a result of redoing the value of those highways for amortization. The increase is $50 million. It's really assuming the additional responsibility of former secondary highways. We took them over from municipalities, and the exact value wasn't known until this particular year, so we've made some adjustments.

Consumption of the inventory. It just pertains to salt, sand, and gravel inventories that are used on our infrastructure and our highways, and we are going to be doing a little more. We also need more salt and gravel because we will be using it on the 15,000 kilometres of secondary highway that we assumed responsibility for from municipalities.

With respect to licence fees and permits that is down. That simply reflects a forecast on activity. Whenever there's a large rig being moved or a large vessel moved from let's say Edmonton to Fort McMurray, the trucking company would buy a permit for that move, and all of that is not really dedicated to Transportation, but certainly it's taken in as revenue into the department. With a lot of the construction complete in Fort McMurray there will be less of a movement there. That's not to say that there won't be a fair amount of movement with large vessels across Alberta, but it won't be the same as it was a few years ago. If it does increase, if there is more activity, we'll just reflect that in the final report of our revenue.

The Chair: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make some very brief comments on the Transportation estimates. First of all, I want to compliment the minister and his staff for their ability to manage under rather tight resources to continue to improve our transportation infrastructure over the last years. Certainly a strong supporter of having funding that is assured so that we can move forward in a very orderly fashion. I say that because the matter of moving goods and services in this province is absolutely integral to us being successful in continuing to grow our value-added industry in a number of sectors whether it's forestry, agriculture, energy, and the many other things we do. The loss of rail services in this province has impacted our industries in a very significant way, so the need for the transportation system to move those goods and services from where they are produced or value is added to market is incredibly important.

In agriculture we have a strategy to grow our value-added industry to $20 billion from $9.9 billion over the next 10 years. Obviously, that strategy cannot be successful if we can't move those goods and services to the market. I'm certainly encouraged to see the work on Canamex, the trade corridor that's critical to us, and a commitment to the minister that we'll continue support through PNWER, through our Montana/Alberta Agricultural Opportunities Conference that we hold each year to work with you wherever it's appropriate to try and achieve regulations that are comparable on both sides of the border so that our trucks can move.

I am encouraged that the resource road program is still in the ministry. I will add my support for increased support for that for the very reasons I've just outlined.

I will also encourage the minister to continue to work with the federal government to pass some of the tax collected – just some – back to Infrastructure. I read with interest some information the minister provided to me on how the U.S. government works with the tax that they collect on energy and putting it back into roads. A fraction of that commitment from the federal government would mean a huge amount to this province. I cannot understand how a government can collect the type of tax that they do on a transportation fuel and put so little of it back into transportation. I think we have to continue to support you in encouraging them to do the right thing and pass more of that back to our provinces, but certainly here.

I said that I would be brief. I intend to be that way. I am going to close with this comment: minister, you have a great staff. Not only are they dedicated to ensuring that we have a well-managed transportation system, that safety is of prime importance, and that good planning is there, but I do want to put on the record to members in this House that these people who work in that department do more than that. They're great community members, and they're great community supporters.

I want to acknowledge that for the first time Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Alberta Infrastructure, and Alberta Transportation came together to do the Take It All Off for Cancer head shave. It was a great event. Members, they raised $41,205 for cancer research. I think this is commendable. I do believe, Mr. Chairman, that we could probably raise quite a bit to see the deputy minister and the ADM in particular in the front row next year with much less hair after that event, and I will personally make the commitment to lobby for that.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. One quick issue that I didn't touch on, Mr. Minister, that I wish I had. I also want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for allowing me to ask this. On the strategic economic corridors we have highway 63 north, which has had the unfortunate situation on more than one occasion of having to be closed because of forest fires, and the community becomes isolated. We also have 881 that goes to Fort McMurray. Particularly with the increased economic activity in Fort McMurray, what are the plans of the department to get an alternate route to Fort McMurray so that they don't experience this situation?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. If the hon. member would permit me, I neglected to make some comments on toll roads, so I'd like to do that. I'm going to leave the one on nitrous oxide for more information.

With respect to the electronic onboard recorders, many of the trucking companies monitor speed and time that drivers rest with electronic surveillance equipment. These are large carriers, and I believe that with most of these when the drivers are hired on, they are aware of the kind of restrictions or the surveillance they'll be under. But a lot of the trucking industry is one or two large trucks owned by, maybe, an owner who then hires a driver as well. I'm not quite sure who would be monitoring the smaller trucking firms in the end, but we'll get some response on that and take it further. Technology is one area that's increasing all the time, and I believe that sooner or later we're going to have to have a good debate on how much of the technology is acceptable in our society and how much of it isn't. That's with respect to traffic safety as well.

With respect to toll roads, after doing a number of studies before on this particular subject, the maximum return on a percentage of the total capital cost going in is about 25 percent. It's really a reflection of the population that we have. Other than looking at some projects, mostly in northern Alberta, that may fall into this category where the toll itself would be paid by one or two single users, mostly resource extraction companies – their policy is that if we are to put in a toll road, we would have to have an alternate route. If you look at your busiest roads that are traveled today – take Edmonton and Calgary – what portion would you toll? People would say: well, you know, you built three-quarters of this road, and then for the last quarter you want us to pay a toll on it. You bleed the traffic off someplace and move the problem someplace else.

It will require further study in this regard. However, there may be in some applications a shadow toll, where the province would pay a fixed rate per vehicle traveled to offset the costs to a company that might have built the road. That's still in the discussion stages, and sometime we'll come back to that whole topic. But for now about 25 percent is the maximum return on the capital based on a toll that would be acceptable to the traveling public.

Highways 63 and secondary 881. I tabled the three-year capital plan for Transportation yesterday just to give members an opportunity to review where we will be expending a lot of our money on our provincial highway system. With respect to highway 63 we will have – one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine – 10 projects. Those projects not only include preservation and overlay but also four-lane and two-stage paving contracts. It also includes interchanges and some erosion control and four-lane grading; that would be the Suncor access to north of Mildred Lake. So there's a fair amount of work being done there.

Then on secondary 881 there will be a 24-kilometre stretch of base-stage paving south of Wiau Lake to north of Wiau Lake, 68 kilometres of grading from north of Conklin to north of Cottonwood Creek, a further 23 kilometres south of Kettle River to north of Cottonwood Creek – that's base-stage paving – and then 13 kilometres of second-stage paving, which is north of Cheecham to south of Anzac, 23 kilometres of second-stage paving north from Cottonwood Creek to Cheecham, another 23 of side slope improvement. So there's a considerable amount of work being done on those important roads, highways leading to Fort McMurray.

Just an additional item of information on secondary 881. When highway 63 was closed, there were over a thousand cars an hour passing through Lac La Biche using 881 as the only exit. Our information is that the first service station in the row through Lac La Biche ran out of gas within the hour. That's how many cars were passing through, so obviously there's a considerable amount of traffic. There are a number of buses on that road every day moving people to work, and it's one that does have an important priority in terms of the whole strategic economic borders in the province of Alberta.

The Chair: It was a government member the last time, now it's an opposition member, and then the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister for his comments and information. This evening I have a number of questions for the minister, and I guess I'll start with P3s, which are referenced in the core business plan on page 377. I'd like to know if there is some objective criteria, a decision-making matrix or something like that that will determine objectively whether or not a P3 approach to a given project is the most beneficial as opposed to other more traditional alternatives of the government doing that.

My concern is, of course, that there could be a lot of subjective or even ideological factors taken into account. My experience tells me that generally and not universally the public sector has high-quality individuals, a great deal of built-in expertise, great resources, and access to fairly inexpensive capital. So in some particular cases there may be advantages to be gleaned, but very often P3s are not the best. So the question really is: is there some way that an objective assessment can be made that could be reported so that anyone, even an opposition member, could read it and figure it out and get a good, clear understanding of where the advantages and disadvantages lie with a given project?

I want to ask also about municipal issues, and I see that in goals and strategies, the core goals of the department, there is a section, goal 7, to "continue to support municipalities in addressing local transportation and water/wastewater needs." The first point deals with the cities of Edmonton and Calgary and the annual transportation funding based on 5 cents per litre of fuel delivered for road use. I'm wondering if this has been an extension to the contractual arrangement that was made a few years ago with those cities, what the format of that agreement is, and whether or not the government has a long-term commitment to that. There was a lot of concern a couple of years ago when the government in the provincial budget took that back. The municipalities were very concerned about that. The minister acted quite promptly to address that little fire that was burning, and the municipalities got their funding back. So I'd like to know the basis of that funding and how long a term that agreement is for.

Then under that I have a concern about, really, the lack of mention of public transportation in the goals of the department and in the numbers that we have. The numbers are quite large numbers and may include many things. Under Operating Expense, Municipal Partnerships, on page 368 of the estimates, there is $264 million for that subprogram. What's the government's plan especially with respect to funding for Edmonton and Calgary LRT systems? The Edmonton system has just passed its 25-year anniversary, and I'm assuming that the Calgary system is more or less the same age. Of course we know that there are differences between the two systems, and Edmonton's decision to go underground in the downtown portion has meant that its system has lagged behind. But what role does public transportation and especially rapid transit play in the government's plans?

There's mention here of green infrastructure. In my view, there's nothing more green as far as an infrastructure thing as that kind of system. I think the payoff in reducing CO₂ emissions and other emissions of supporting a modern and fairly extensive public transportation system can't be matched by other things, and there are, of course, other dramatic benefits including improvements in quality of life for the community. I also think – and I know that the Minister of Economic Development would probably agree with me – that a good, well-balanced municipal transportation system within a large metropolitan area has big economic payoffs as well. So I would like to know if the government has a long-term commitment to fund capital costs for LRT expansion.

I know that Calgary's plan places the extension of their system of LRT at the core of their strategies to reduce congestion and provide transportation within the city, but when I look at the government's numbers and their goals, I see pretty much reliance on roads and vehicles as a transportation solution. So I'd like the minister's comments on that as well.

With those questions, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. minister, do you wish to speak? There are a couple of other members here that have been bouncing up and down.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to say how pleased I am that the Minister of Transportation has committed to come to visit highway 881 and highway 63, which he often refers to as corridors of wealth. I think that is very apropos. Obviously, one of the dilemmas we have faced, specifically the hon. Member for Athabasca-Wabasca, is the issue of highway 881 in terms of access. We have only one access in and out of a city of 60,000 people. I do recall when we had a major fire that ultimately posed a risk to the continued production of Suncor and Shell because they were unable to move and transport chemicals, and the plants were going to shut down because we didn't have any access. I always remember the executives of the companies indicating that we really need an alternate way in and out.

Now, with 881 we're making good progress. Needless to say, the question would be how we can escalate that priority, and I see many people in the Assembly shaking their heads in an affirmative action relative to that priority and meeting that priority because we never want to have that risk. We want to be able to mitigate it. I know the hon. minister is mitigating the risk, but we have the attitude in northeastern Alberta that we can always do better. I'd be interested in the minister's words on how we can do better to expedite that. In fact, the Minister of Finance met with some of the aboriginal chiefs with me just not that long ago where they indicated what the risk posed to, again, that corridor of wealth transporting people to jobs. One way in and one way out for a city of 60,000 is very difficult, and I know that the minister agrees that we need an alternative route. How can we get that moved up on the priority list to deal with such pressures?

The Chair: Actually, hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, there was another minister, but apparently he's changed his mind.

The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much. I, too, would like to thank the Minister of Transportation for his foresight and planning in the development of northern roads because they are critical to our economy in Alberta. I'd like to also put the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs at ease in relation to a connector road from Fort McMurray. He would be pleased to know that we are working on not only 881 and 63; we're also working on 813, which takes off from Athabasca to Wabasca, and eventually that road will connect to Fort McMurray. So, Mr. Minister, you'll be pleased that the Minister of Transportation met with the MD of Opportunity. We're looking at the possibility of paving more this summer, and eventually that road will connect to Fort McMurray and, no doubt, will be paved, so we will have a third connector to Fort McMurray, and I'd like to thank the minister for that.

The Chair: The Minister of Finance is wanting to speak.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just very briefly.

The Chair: Another minister was called a few moments ago, but he was busily engaged.

The Minister of Finance, very briefly. Yes.

Mrs. Nelson: Yes, Mr. Chairman. What I wanted to say was that this is one of the most important portfolios in the government because, quite frankly, for the generation of wealth and the continued growth and economic prosperity within the province, there is no point in encouraging people to go out and produce new product lines if you don't have the ability to get the product to market, and with the lack of transportation, particularly from the rail that we've experienced lately and now with the air, we clearly need to have a road system that is very much enhanced and expanded. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and I did meet with the aboriginal people in regard to 881. It is an area of growth and pressure, and having only one exit in and out of that community is just not sufficient.

I also wanted to make mention of another area, which is in a different sector of the province, that has been very important, I believe, actually for our tourism industry, and I know our Minister of Economic Development would want me to mention this. One of the tourist attractions in this province is, of course, the Tyrrell museum, and the access into that area is highway 9, which has, from what I understand, the greatest amount of traffic by visitors of almost any road within the province, and highway 9 is in desperate need of expansion and shoulders so that it remains safe and doesn't become detrimental to enhancing the tourism travel into that sector of the province.

I would ask the hon. Minister of Transportation to be sure and give consideration to those areas that are a part of the economic growth and sustainability of this province and be sure that we don't have ourselves in a position where we're developing economic entities and adding value to our natural resources and then not being able to get to market. That doesn't make any sense at all. So transporting goods and services through air and rail and road and pipeline is critically important. So I would encourage the hon. minister to make sure he beats us up at Treasury Board for lots of money to put transportation networks in there, particularly 881 and highway 9.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Minister of Economic Development, and then the Minister of Transportation in the few moments we have left.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm referring to the business plans, a couple of different pages where I have questions. Page 383 has the ministry's statement of operations. There's a line here for amortization. It's quite a significant figure, $160 million up to $200 million, $220 million, $240 million. I'd just like you to explain that if you could.

Page 377. There are some questions raised for me by goal 5 that would be great for the minister to explain. The first bullet under goal 5 talks about:

Lead the cross-ministry Capital Planning Initiative in partnership with . . . Infrastructure and . . . Finance to ensure long-term capital plans and effective infrastructure management systems are in place . . .

And then the key point for me.

. . . alternative financing options such as public-private (P3) opportunities are considered, and performance is measured.

Now, I'm wondering what is being considered here. They actually mixed the symbols here. It says P3 and calls them "public-private opportunities" instead of public/private partnerships. What options are we looking at here? Are we looking at toll roads? Are we looking at maybe entirely private roadways? What's being considered? If the minister would be so kind as to provide us with the analyses, pro and con, on that. I know that in the last several years highway maintenance was privatized. That's not really a P3. That's a contracted service. What is counting here as a public/private opportunity, and what are the costs and benefits that have been found in this? I'm sure the Minister of Infrastructure will be interested in that too, but I'm asking you in particular.

Further down that goal it says, "Continue to undertake research focused on safety, engineering, and intelligent transportation systems." How much money is tied to that research? Where is the research done? Is this research done in the department? Is the research done with, say, engineering faculties at universities? Is that research done with who? So some details on that would be great. How much are you spending on research? I'm not objecting to this. In fact, I think research is great. Is the Department of Transportation becoming a bit of a research centre for the government? I don't know. I have no idea.

The next two points are connected together. The first one, "Ensure environmental practices are integrated into short and long-term planning," and then the final point under goal 5, "Support provincial and cross-ministry initiatives related to transportation and its role in climate change." Those are admirable goals, but I'm wondering what resources relate to this. We have the goals on the paper. What resources is the minister committing to achieve those goals, and how do the two link together? I'm getting a lot of sneezing and coughing over there. I hope it's not a reaction to my questions. I'd like to know how these goals are going to be implemented, basically, the connection between the resources, the actions, and the goal. How much money is involved?

I'm also very interested to know of any support from the department for alternatives to roads. Might we be looking at support for railway, support for LRT within the cities? I know there was even consideration of a maglev, magnetic levitation, rail system between Edmonton and Calgary. Is that what we're talking about when we're looking at alternatives to roads, that kind of green infrastructure, as it would be called? Related to that also with the development of fuel cell technology . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates unless there are no members who wish to speak prior to the conclusion of the two hours – and that hasn't occurred – I must now put the question on the proposed estimates for the Department of Transportation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$924,118,000
Capital Investment	$372,080,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Hon. Government House Leader, would you say the magic words?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that we rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Transportation: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $924,118,000; capital investment, $372,080,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: The Committee of the Whole is called to order.

Bill 20
Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation
Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I wanted to make sure I got an opportunity to speak here. I know that the Minister of Finance would certainly appreciate that we have open and frank discussions in the Assembly, particularly in dealing with the Ministry of Municipal Affairs.

In speaking to Bill 20, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Amendment Act, 2003, we have to look at this particular bill and see that it certainly as a highlight gives greater flexibility to the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation to distribute loans. It also changes the name of the corporation. It does a significant amount of housekeeping, and it does put term limits on directors of the corporation.

Now, in looking at the bill and particularly by way of a sectional analysis, I'm looking at section 3. This section reorganizes the definitions of the act. Most of these definitions are only a slight modification of those of the original act, and new definitions are introduced for improvement district, minister, and special area. Other new definitions are simple modifications of the old act. In looking at this particular issue, most of these changes, Mr. Chairman, are innocuous as they are amalgamations or reorganizations of items.

A question I do have is: why is the board of the Northland school division No. 61 under the Northland School Division Act specifically cited as an educational authority? If the minister could provide an explanation for this particular question, it would be deeply appreciated.

The definition of health authority is "a person, other than a regional health authority, that owns an approved hospital under the Hospitals Act." Is this possibly a reference to privately owned hospitals?

The term "resolution" in section 3 is also introduced, and this term will replace "bylaws" in many portions of the bill. According to the ministry this is to reflect that these are approved by the board and not by the shareholders, and this is understandable.

In looking at section 4, the name of the corporation is changed to Alberta Capital Finance Authority. This also gives the corporation the capacity and powers of a natural person but allows cabinet to make restrictions on these powers, rights, and privileges. The section also states that the corporation is not to engage in activity outside the business of the corporation.

Section 7 repeals section 5 of the original act. One of the questions I would have is: why would this section be edited out entirely and not replaced? This is dealing with common shares. Some of these original sections here are not intuitive and should be in the amended act. For example, improvement districts' rights are exercised on their behalf by the minister responsible for the Municipal Government Act. Under the amendment how do we know who is supposed to exercise the rights for the shareholders? This section should have been amended to conform with the new sections of the act, not deleted.

Again, in section 8 I see that this is just housekeeping. There are also some housekeeping provisions in section 9. Section 10: I don't see any concerns with this particular section.

Under section 11 sections 10 to 13 of the original act are repealed, and several new sections replace them. One of the things that I do note here: there is no longer the provision that establishes how a person may establish the right to vote.

Section 12 simply repeals sections 15 to 17 of the old act.

In going through this, Mr. Chairman, I do believe that the majority of the other changes that I have noted are more of a housekeeping nature and certainly clean up the act. In looking at this particular bill, I do have those few questions that I did bring up.

At this point in time I will take my seat and allow others to participate in debate in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

10:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I just rise on one particular issue to ensure for the record that our understanding is clear on this. There have been issues raised by members of the AUMA and others that there are some alarm bells rung by this legislation, and the sponsor may be able to address these. I'm counting on that in any case. I'll be as prompt as I can.

Section 21 of Bill 20 describes the business of the corporation, the corporation in question being the Municipal Financing Corporation.

(a) to provide local authorities that are its shareholders . . .

And I hope that's a key clause here.

. . . with financing for capital projects;

(b) to act as financial agent or otherwise for a local authority that is its shareholder in negotiating loans or refinancing securities of the local authority or in any other capacity authorized by the regulations.

And so on it goes. Now, the key point I want to draw attention to here is the term "local authorities." The definition of local authority under section 3(g) is "a city, an educational authority, a health authority, a municipal authority, a regional authority or a town."

Then if we follow this further through the legalistic trail, section 3(e) defines health authority. This is where the alarm bell goes off for many people.

(c) "health authority" means

- (i) a person, other than a regional health authority, that owns an approved hospital under the Hospitals Act;
- (ii) a person, other than a regional health authority, that owns a mental health hospital under the Hospitals Act.

Those two subclauses are of great concern because they potentially open the door for this new corporation to provide financing to, say, businesses that may be in the health or the hospital industry.

So with all of that as background I am wondering what assurances the sponsor of the bill or other members may be able to provide to Albertans that in fact that is not a loophole or is not a provision that will allow businesses in the health industry to obtain this favourable financing. In fact, I don't know why those clauses are there, so maybe that could be explained to me if it's not for that reason.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate the question from Edmonton-Riverview, and I will clarify it for him right away. On the questions that were asked by the previous member, I will look at those in Hansard, and at the beginning of third reading I will have those answers for you and take care of that for you.

On this last point I do understand the question that has been raised by Edmonton-Riverview. The AUMA had raised the fear themselves and were very concerned about this and put it in writing to a number of people in questioning. This is going to be taken care of, Mr. Chairman, under the regulation in regard to the fact that the concern under these particular sections is that if there was ever a private hospital, they would be able to go to the corporation and borrow money, and that was really the sense of the concern.

This is being taken care of, and that will never happen, because under regulations you have to be a shareholder of the corporation to be able to borrow from the corporation. A private hospital would never get the ability to become a shareholder of the corporation and therefore would never have the right or the ability to borrow from the AMFC. So if that helps you to clarify. That will never happen simply for that reason, and that really answers the question for you.

Dr. Taft: Do you know why those clauses are in there?

Mr. Hlady: Because this is speaking in the general terms of staying in the public sector. It doesn't refer to private. I think what people have done is they've taken read of this to say: oh, this could mean private. But it does not state and nowhere in the areas referenced by yourself did it state that we actually had private in this area, if you read it. Now, people chose to write that in themselves, that it could mean private. It does not mean private. It is protected from being private by maintaining under the regulations that they will never be shareholders. Okay?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 10

Health Information Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Yes, I have several comments on this, Mr. Chairman. This is a small bill, a short bill but one that I think is important. It raises some important issues, and I find that I'm divided completely on this bill because one component of it I'm strongly supporting, and our caucus, the opposition, in fact raised this issue last fall. The other component of the bill I'm very uneasy with.

So I guess we can deal with the good news first, which is section 2 of this bill, which is to amend section 35(1) of the Health Information Act to sort out a problem which is really an inadvertent effect of the legislation as it stands right now. It led to some heart-wrenching moments in people's lives. The effect of the legislation as it is now is that if an underage child dies, the parents of that child are unable legally to have access to the medical records of that child. You can understand easily where that could be the cause of great grief and confusion to parents, parents who are wanting to bring some closure, at least some understanding to what's happened to their child. They want to have information on the diagnosis or the procedures or the injuries or whatever the cause of death was. Through an accident of legislation the act as it stands right now prohibited that. This particular amendment, as it's proposed here in Bill 10, will correct that problem; clearly, I'm sure we'll all agree, a simple gesture of humanity and one to be supported. So that's the good news.

much broader issues, issues that I have real concerns about. Speaking, first of all, broadly from the trends in our society, I am concerned about issues of individual liberty and individual privacy. Through the development of electronic technology we have moved into an age where all of us suddenly find enormous amounts of personal information circulating through dozens and dozens of probably now hundreds of databases of one kind or another. So everyone of us would probably be a bit startled if we knew how much private information was collected in so many different databases. All kinds of financial information, any legal or criminal information about us, educational information, what we borrow from the library, what books we buy, absolutely enormous amounts of consumer information, down to the tiniest detail of what kinds of toilet paper we might use or what kinds or colours of paint we use in our house: all of that is collected on every one of us and compiled into electronic databases and shared and sold back and forth. The amount of that information and the extent to which it flows back and forth increases year after year relentlessly, and indeed the fineness of the net through which this information is collected grows or intensifies every year. So that's the general picture.

Specifically here we're dealing with health information, and health information, as we all are aware, is among the most sensitive information in our lives for many of us. It could be information on anything. It could be something we're embarrassed about or something that people would hold as a liability against us in seeking employment or something that might disqualify us from insurance. All that kind of information and much, much more is held in health records, and to the extent that those health records are turned into electronic vehicles or electronic documents, that information suddenly can be shared. We can readily, readily lose control of that information.

All of us, I'm sure, can appreciate the difference between having information on a piece of paper, that can only really be shared either by passing around or photocopying, versus information that's stored electronically, which with the push of a button can be sent out to endless numbers of people, who can in turn through another push of a button distribute it to endless further numbers of people. So we're into a whole different quality of information. It's not just quantity; it's the quality, the very nature of the information we're discussing here.

Specifically to clause 3 of Bill 10, the effect of clause 3 is to remove one of the fundamental safeguards that have been put in place by legislation to give people some – some – modicum of control over their health information. That safeguard is to require health professionals to specifically ask a patient if their medical records can be shared electronically. So the way it is right now, a health professional needs to ask a patient: will you give me consent to record and potentially share your personal health records in electronic form?

Now, there's an interesting twist here. If the patient says no, even then the health professional doesn't necessarily have to respect that request. There are circumstances, some of them very understandable, in which a medical professional can actually overrule that request from a patient, but by and large there is at the very least a moral obligation on the health professional to respect the request of the patient.

The effect of this bill is to remove the requirement on the health professional to ask permission and instead flip the responsibility around so that the patient has to through their own volition and initiative say: I do not want this information shared electronically. If they fail to do so, the assumption is made that they have given permission. A very big and significant step here.

I have received a number of concerns around this which I want to get on the record and which I would like the government to consider in this. I understand some of the reasons for this. One reason that's put forward is that it was time consuming for health professionals to go through the consent-seeking process. Well, I'm not convinced by that argument. I think that too often we are prepared to sacrifice personal privacy and personal freedom for the sake of efficiency. Efficiency on its own is not a terribly compelling reason for me to see personal privacy sacrificed, yet that is in many cases the biggest reason that's put forward for this activity.

Really in many ways I'm concerned that Bill 10 is an issue of big state powers being created even while we have a party that likes to talk about small government. We can have small government but a big state and a state that collects far more information than we would have ever allowed a state to collect 10 or 15 or 20 years ago. So this is a bill in which big state becomes an issue. I know that I'll get more than one chance if I run up the time here. I think it's worth contemplating this.

Every day busy and well-intentioned health professionals collect and document the intimate details of lives of patients in their care to help with diagnosis and to help co-ordinate treatment, and these professionals reassure those patients. Any of them who might be reluctant to expose sensitive information are reassured: don't worry; this is confidential. But we have to ask ourselves: what does that really mean, especially when that is recorded electronically? One of the key points here is that once people lose confidence that the information they provide will be respected confidentially, then in some cases they're going to become reluctant to share crucial information about their health that not only may affect their own health but may affect the health of others.

We must be particularly sensitive to this sort of thing in the wake of the recent SARS epidemic. By sharing information on where they travel or what their temperature might have been or what some symptoms might have been, they might not just be threatening themselves. By disclosing that information, a patient might threaten the ability of family members or colleagues to earn their living because they could all find themselves in quarantine.

So these are complicated issues. We want people to feel confident that they can come forward and share information without fear of being embarrassed or without fear of losing control of that information. Albertans, Mr. Chairman, are very sensitive about this. There was a public opinion survey conducted by the Alberta Medical Association in the late 1980s, and it found that 62 percent of Albertans, 62 percent, say that Alberta Health and Wellness should not have access to their medical records. Beyond that, 84 percent say that regional health authorities should not have access to patients' private information without consent, yet we are putting forward a bill here that will not require consent from patients. So I think we need to be careful that we respect public opinion on this.

This also ties into other issues. One of the concerns that this links to is: who owns health information? One of the concerns I have in this province is that the Alberta government has not at all taken steps to ensure that the patient owns this information. In fact, it looks very much like the government has gone to great lengths to avoid any suggestion that people actually own their own personal health information, and the reason for that is that once people are given ownership of their personal health information, then they will get control. I concede that if that were to happen, then some of the health information systems and, indeed, perhaps some crucial information would be made more difficult, but the point here is that people ultimately need control over what information is collected on them. At least we need to be very, very reluctant to ignore that principle of people having control over information that's collected on them.

Now, there is one other point that is between the lines here of this particular clause, clause 3, and that is this: under this legislation even if I am active in asking that my information be kept confidential, not be shared, not be turned into electronic information or, if it is made electronic, not be distributed, there's no requirement for that to be respected. Information can be shared electronically by health professionals despite requests from patients for that not to happen, and we all know, as I mentioned earlier, that that could lead to the loss of control of that information.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am very ambivalent about Bill 10. On the one hand, clause 2 is a good clause, sorts out a problem. On the other hand, clause 3 reduces people's control over some of the most sensitive information they are ever asked to share with others. While I understand that this may move Alberta and help move Canada towards a better health information system, from which there are many benefits, I think that when this is combined with the fact that people are not given ownership of that information, I remain very, very uneasy. I think on a point of principle, a point of respecting patients' rights to control their personal information, I for one, I guess, will have to oppose Bill 10.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 10 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report Bill 20, Bill 12, and Bill 10.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 20, Bill 12, Bill 10.

The Deputy Speaker: Those who concur in this report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:37 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 1, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/01

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly seven constituents from the Cereal-Acadia Valley area of my constituency. Six of these members are members of the C.J. Peacock school parent council. They're in Edmonton today along with the chairman of the Prairie Rose board to visit with our minister of education and talk about the opportunities of continuing delivering quality education to our rural communities. I would ask them to stand as I call their names and to remain standing. We have Maxine Girtletz, Pam Kulyk, Shari and Stephen Muzyka, Debbie Salik, Marian Peers, and a special person to me – these are all special people – the last one I'll introduce, my brother John Peacock. Please give them a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you 19 grade 6 students from the Busby school, which is located in the Barrhead-Westlock constituency. They are accompanied this afternoon by teacher Nancy Zeise, parents Claire Stitsen, Ken Mead, Shirley Mead, and Marie Bourque. They are seated in the gallery this afternoon. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 37 visitors from the Islamic school of Calgary. The Islamic school is located in my constituency, the constituency of Calgary-East. We have 31 bright, intelligent, and well-behaved grade 6 students. Along with the students there are two teachers, Mrs. Angela Mentis and Miss Rychelle Gibson, and four parent helpers: Mrs. Nahda Thraya, Mrs. Amina Hassan, Mr. Ryan Katchur, and Mr. Said. I say to them [remarks in Lebanese]. They are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little-Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm indeed honoured today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly for at least the 12th consecutive year Vauxhall elementary school. They've come all the way up, probably left around 6:30 this morning. They came up with a number of teachers and parents that I would like to introduce. I want to thank them for taking the time and effort to be involved in coming up here each and every year to show the young students the Legislative Assembly and the building and the things that you have to offer them, what is available to them. We have Mrs. Lori Jo Plotzki; Ms Trina Mantler; Mr. Terry Olfert, who's been up with the group as long as I can remember; principal Dale Cummings; mom and dads Mrs. Paula Olfert, Mr. Harold Unruh, Mr. Cliff Meier, and Mr. Robert Kress; as well as all the students from grade 6 at Vauxhall elementary. I'd ask that they please stand, receive the warm welcome of the Assembly, and have a good trip.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly five people who are seated in the public gallery. I'm going to mention their names, and I'd ask them each to stand, and then I'll tell you why they are such valued guests for us today. First of all, I'd like to introduce Ji Hyun Park and Elly Dalmaijer and Jack Dalmaijer, who are the hosts of George Zondervan and Betty Zondervan. George Zondervan is walking across Canada from Vancouver to Halifax, began on March 29, and he's doing it to create awareness for the problem of world hunger. They are standing in the public gallery, and I would ask everyone to extend to them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly three guests who are in the Assembly: first of all, Louise Papaiani – her significance will become evident very soon – as well as her boyfriend, Ian Manyfingers, and Pam Sparklingeyes, who is the project manager for Edmonton Catholic schools. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Aboriginal Educational Programs

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to read a speech that Louise Papaiani gave yesterday at the Edmonton Catholic school Rainbow Spirit project, and I will read this speech verbatim.

Good Morning! . . . My name is Louise Papaiani . . . and I am 18 years old. I just completed my first year in the School of Native Studies at the University of Alberta. I was born and raised here in Edmonton. My mother is from Frog Lake Cree First Nation and my father is from Calabria, Cosenza, Italy. I am honored to be here today and to speak on behalf of Urban Aboriginal Students. This morning, I would like to speak about the importance of Aboriginal education and the building of cultural identity as part of the contemporary educational system.

For myself, Aboriginal education and cultural identity began in my grade seven year. Before then, I felt deprived of a belief system that I craved for. The only Aboriginal people I saw were my mother and other family members. From kindergarten to grade six, I had two or three other Aboriginal classmates. Being a minority is difficult, and being a minority, as an Aboriginal person seems even more challenging because of the stereotypes we face. As a child, I didn't really know my culture. I became stuck, between craving the knowledge of my culture and being shameful, because of the stereotypes that come along with being an Indian, or Native person. As I experienced the oppression of being an Aboriginal person, my strength in my heritage became stronger and stronger, as I learned about who I was.

In grade seven, I attended Ben Calf Robe here in Edmonton. The school had an Aboriginal educational based system, cultural access and cultural development. In this school, my classmates, mentors and many teachers were Aboriginal. The opportunity to learn from these people opened a door to a belief in a higher power and a strong cultural identity for myself. Cultural identity such as learning my Cree language, experiencing and learning the concepts of pow-wow dancing, listening to Aboriginal elders, and attending sweats and sharing circles. These new learning opportunities not only allowed me to experience what I was thirsting for, but introduced me to a world where I was free to find myself and learn to believe in the Creator, the great grandmothers and grandfathers. And finally, I built a strong sense of pride and identity in myself.

In high school, I attended St. Joseph. The Aboriginal education and cultural components were integrated and offered to Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal students. Educating non-Aboriginal people about Aboriginal history and culture builds tolerance and understanding between nations, thereby creating a better society for all. Building cultural identity in schools is important to the spiritual care and education of Urban Aboriginal Students. Cultural identity for Urban Aboriginal Students gives self-determination, confidence, and a reminder that we belong to a strong, surviving culture. A culture once known and lived by our ancestors, now passed on to us. As the Aboriginal author Esther Supernault says, "We can't understand where we are going until we know where we came from!" In today's school system, having access to learning the Cree language . . . and cultural teachings gave me a sense of belonging to what my grandparents and ancestors knew. Cultural access offers a sense of hope, courage and determination to face the future.

Over a hundred years ago, when the treaties were signed, our ancestors thought about our future. Today, let us think about the future of our Urban Aboriginal Students. There are many successful Aboriginal people and leaders in our communities. To make a difference and to strive for excellence, we must also acknowledge the social problems. Our Aboriginal communities are rampant with alcohol, drugs, gangs, crime and abuse. These problems cannot be ignored. For Aboriginal students in a school setting, cultural access offers learning and experience, but most importantly [it] offers identity, pride and healing. Healing is the solution that gives direction to overcome the social problems that rob and swallow our Aboriginal people. It is not easy living or leaving a life rampant with negative behaviour. Knowing there are people and guidance through these cultural programs offers direction for Urban Aboriginal Students. To be offered a comforting place to identify with and belong to, the journey of healing does not become easy, but becomes possible.

Access to cultural teachings in our contemporary school systems offers education and a fulfilling experience. Cultural development offers strength and determination for healing and facing the future. We must believe in the power of our Creator and prepare the world for our future Aboriginal children and students by integrating the best of both worlds. Success today means having the education needed to survive and the belief instilled to strive.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Official Opposition I am pleased to respond to the minister's statement. We offer our congratulations to the Edmonton Catholic school board for responding to the learning needs of urban aboriginal children with the Rainbow Spirit project at St. Francis Xavier school. May I compliment Louise for her powerful story, for it is in the stories of people like Louise that we find both the need, the inspiration, and the direction for future action.

The paper presented to the council of ministers addressed the education gap between aboriginal people and the general population. Closing that gap requires sensitivity to the relationships among cultures, education systems and the social context in which schooling is situated . . .

While unique cultural resources are important to the education of Aboriginal students, Aboriginal people also wish to be equipped with knowledge and skills required for success by conventional standards. Fulfillment of these objectives requires a combination of basic and special initiatives.

The president of the Saskatchewan Indian Federated College framed the problem this way.

Historically, First Nations' people have viewed education as a lifelong learning process that prepared individuals for their responsibilities and roles in life. While there were no physical buildings, education was based on learning from example, from . . . experiences and from Elders.

Across the country we see projects, big and small, designed to address the special case of aboriginal learning. The Ontario aboriginal education and training strategy saw $34 million invested to respond to the need to increase aboriginal student access and retention to universities and colleges in that province. In Saskatchewan the elders envisioned building a postsecondary institution that combined cultural traditions and teachings with education and technology relevant to the global economy. Working with the University of Regina, the Saskatchewan Indian Federated College was created.

The Edmonton Catholic school board, too, has recognized the unique nature of aboriginal education with ongoing programs at St. Joseph's and now the Rainbow Spirit project. The project is recognition that local school boards are in the best position to recognize local needs. We are pleased that the province, too, has used its position to best advantage by providing financial resources for the board to carry out their mandate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona would like to participate but will require unanimous consent. Will it be given?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank members for the opportunity for me to participate and respond to the ministerial statement.

First of all, let me add my thanks to Louise Papianni for her heartfelt and inspiring statement. I wish to echo Louise in her belief that pride in aboriginal culture and identity is fundamental to ensuring future success for aboriginal children and youth in the learning system. As a society we are still scarred by the history of residential schools and similar attempts to force aboriginal peoples to give up their language and culture. These failed policies had disastrous consequences for aboriginal peoples and left a terrible legacy of injustice, abuse, and broken lives. I therefore commend the minister for the decision to provide continued funding to the Rainbow Spirit project. I echo the minister in his hope that initiatives like these will lead to increased academic success for our aboriginal youth and students.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I once again thank and applaud Louise for her inspiring words and the minister for sharing them with this Assembly. Thank you.

The Speaker: Louise, you've moved pretty dramatically 83 rather wonderful people from throughout the province of Alberta in this Assembly. You've also moved everybody in the galleries and everybody listening to this question period this afternoon. Would you stand again and take another bow with our appreciation. [applause]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise on a point of personal privilege. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar advised me a few minutes ago that he would like to do such. I will recognize him at the conclusion of the Routine this afternoon as well as recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

head: Oral Question Period

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Calgary board of education is warning that next Tuesday's budget will lead to significant staffing cuts. He says that if the current funding pattern continues, the Calgary board will become, and I quote: a system for the disadvantaged. The chairman talks about how public schools might soon be used only by special-needs children or by children from families with financial difficulties while anyone wanting a well-rounded education will have to go to a private or charter school. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Why hasn't your government fully funded the teachers' arbitrated settlement so that Calgary's public schools do not have to lay off teachers this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the arbitration settlement that was brought in in June of last year has been fully funded. There was $298 million that was made available for the funding of $260 million. The other issue that we did for Calgary public is we also provided an extra $7 million as they had an arbitration agreement that gave them a clause and a condition that no other school board in the province had. So we did fund them with $7 million.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that Calgary public will be bringing out a budget next week that will potentially show a deficit. We are looking at how we can work with them. We're looking at where exactly that is. Included in the budget this year was an increase of $17 million for Calgary public. This is very interesting because they are predicting anywhere from 700 to 1,000 fewer students than they had last year yet an increase of $17 million as well as a considerable amount on top of that. So we are going to have to see exactly what's going on. Calgary public in the past has been extremely good to work with and extremely forthcoming. So we will be contacting them and seeing exactly what is going on there.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: what are you doing to make sure that your government fully funds its own arbitrated settlement?

Mr. Dunford: I believe that the hon. Minister of Learning has already answered that question.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Learning: how many teachers is the minister prepared to see laid off in Calgary before he does something to fully fund the arbitrated settlement for the teachers in this province?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have fully funded the arbitration settlement. I will say that the arbitration settlement was higher than what we initially anticipated. Fourteen percent is a significant amount. Teachers in Alberta are now being paid approximately 8 to 10 percent higher than any place else across Canada. There's been a huge amount of money put into the system, and we certainly will work with our school boards. We will certainly work with the Calgary public to see exactly where these dollars are spent, and we're hoping that everything will work out for them.

1:50

Infrastructure Funding

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, years of government stop-and-go infrastructure funding have taken their toll on Alberta's economy. Government policy is contributing to an overheated economy. As a result, Petro-Canada has hit the brakes on its $5 billion oil sands expansion in Fort McMurray. To the Minister of Infrastructure: will the minister finally admit that his government's use of stop-and-go infrastructure funding has made it impossible for businesses to plan capital projects on an ongoing basis?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it's a huge leap to suggest that because we are not spending an equal amount of money annually for capital projects in Infrastructure somehow that is having such a major impact on the private sector that they cannot continue to go ahead with projects. It certainly is our desire to have a more even flow of capital funds for the infrastructure that we're responsible for, and certainly with the new capital fund plus a sustainability fund that is currently being set up, we are very hopeful that will address this issue of having an uneven amount of dollars to spend on various years.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you. To the Minister of Finance: have industry consultations been done to determine how to manage the capital fund to make sure that we're working publicly and privately for the best interests of growth in the province?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the key elements of this year's budget plan that was presented is the new fiscal framework. It's one that provides for predictability and sustainability. It provides an opportunity also for planning to take place at the local level whether it's in the municipality or even with the road builders so that they can predict when to let contracts or bid on contracts, et cetera.

The other thing that's very important, which I think the hon. member opposite should always remember when he's thinking of the new plan, is that we've done one key thing. We've allowed capital to be carried over from year to year. So if, in fact, it's not the right time to move forward on a project, the dollars can be moved to the subsequent year, so you're not hitting on a time frame that didn't have reality built into it. In other words, on March 31 everything doesn't stop and then start again. So we've carried it so that you can go from year to year and do better planning and better predictability. We consulted with the various construction people prior to putting this plan in place, and they thought it was going to be beneficial not only for government but for the industry as a whole. So I think we've moved in the right direction, and we've put the right balance in place.

Let's be very clear, Mr. Speaker. We've put forward a plan that is quite aggressive. It's a plan that will see $5.5 billion of capital investment come into this province from government funding over the next three years. That's a very aggressive capital plan, but it's one that we need and one that I think will be beneficial to all from every part of this province.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: what steps has the government taken to increase construction capacity, especially in the area of qualified workforce, to prevent more delays in economic growth in Alberta?

Mr. Dunford: This is an excellent question, and of course it brings the opportunity to start to talk in this province about a skills deficit. One of the things that we find with this government is that we're very good at dealing with deficits as they present themselves to us. Those of us that were elected in 1993 were presented with a financial deficit, and we worked very hard to overcome that and, of course, were successful. Later on what has taken place to some extent, Mr. Speaker, was a recognition that perhaps there was an infrastructure deficit, and now this government in this last budget has responded very, very well to that infrastructure deficit, and I think that if I'm not mistaken, we have something in the order of $5.5 billion that are now recognized and will move into that particular area.

So now the deficit that we're concerned with, Mr. Speaker – and I think the hon. member has quite rightly recognized this – is the skills deficit, and we're going to have to be as astute and as energetic in overcoming that deficit as well.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Toxic Mold in Foothills Medical Centre

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by congratulating the Minister of Health and Wellness for canceling a trip to Ottawa to ensure that the issue of toxic mold at the Foothills hospital that has been raised in this Assembly is properly managed. About 65 registered nurses, roughly two-thirds of the total, and a large number of support staff at the renal unit at the Foothills have registered health complaints that are consistent with toxic mold contamination. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: since the government's position has been that these symptoms are not a result of toxic molds, can the minister give a different explanation for so many people getting ill? Is it psychological, or is there some other problem at the Foothills?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, a committee of workforce, safety, and union representatives has been called, and they will be conducting their own independent test. Each representative – for example, on behalf of the union – will be able to call their own expert to review the situation with respect to the presence of these molds in the affected area, and I think that the regional health authority has taken the right steps from the very outset to look at this and treat it seriously.

I remind the hon. member and all members of the Assembly that the level of mold that was found in the particular area under question here, unit 27 at the Foothills hospital, was below Health Canada recommended safety levels. Notwithstanding that it was below the safety levels established by Health Canada, the regional health authority took the appropriate steps to remove the drywall, the cabinetry, and the sink areas where this mold was present.

Now, I should note that no patients have indicated any indications or complaints of mold associated with this, and my understanding is that the nurses who made the complaints, in fact, were from the unit that was adjacent to and not part of the area that had the mold, but again the regional health authority is working with its staff to resolve this in an appropriate way.

Dr. Taft: Given that equipment is due to be transferred from the Foothills to other facilities in Calgary and that this equipment has not been tested for mold contamination, will the minister – and I want to be very clear here – ensure that the equipment itself is thoroughly tested for toxic molds before it is transferred?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I would refer to the expertise of the people who work within the facility and for the regional health authority. Again, I'm not a microbiologist. I'm not an expert on the subject matter of infection prevention and control, but Dr. Tom Louie, who is the medical director, a physician trained in these matters, has been the adviser to this committee on appropriate steps to be taken. I'm certain that Dr. Louie and the regional health authority would take the necessary steps to ensure that any risk associated with mold in the movement of this equipment would be taken. Again, though, as I said earlier this week, Dr. Louie has indicated that the risk associated with the mold in this particular unit is very, very low.

Dr. Taft: Given his interest in the issue, I assume that the minister is aware of an incident of flooding or plumbing damage in March, so my question finally is: has the mold found in March at the Foothills been tested, and if so, will the minister immediately make those test results public?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons why the issue of mold arising from October of last year was not brought to my attention was because it was an incident that was dealt with within the regional health authority. Again, Dr. Louie indicated that the risk was low and that the level of mold was below Health Canada standards. That is not something that would ordinarily come to the attention of the minister of health, nor would it perhaps even come to the attention of the chief executive officer of the regional health authority. There are experts within the regional health authority who make their evaluations and have their expert opinions. It would not be for the minister of health to displace the judgment of such an individual. That is the case here.

I know that on previous occasions, Mr. Speaker, when there have been molds in health facilities in this province, sometimes the risk associated with it was higher and wards have been closed down as a consequence of it until it could be rectified. But, again, in this case, whether it's the March incident or the October incident of last year, which also was the result of water leaking from an area that was being renovated, I think that the regional health authority has demonstrated that they take all the proper steps because patient safety and staff safety are the number one concern.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Postsecondary Education

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two separate reports from institutions at opposite ends of the political spectrum have come to exactly the same conclusion: Alberta needs to provide more support for postsecondary education. The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives has joined TD Economics in raising serious concerns about the accessibility of postsecondary education in Alberta. Specifically, the CCPA ranked Alberta dead last for accessibility, affordability, and opportunity because of high tuition fees and low and declining participation rates. To the Minister of Learning: in light of what these two studies conclude about Alberta, what steps does the minister propose to take to improve accessibility, affordability, and opportunity for postsecondary education in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll just make a couple of comments, if I can, about tuition. First of all, the report that came out today showed that we were number 6 out of 10 on the province side when it came to the tuition amount. When you actually look at the individual institutions, the University of Alberta is 25th out of 53 institutions, the University of Calgary is 23rd, and the University of Lethbridge is 16th, having the lowest tuition.

The other really interesting point, though, is when you start looking at participation rates, because under the tuition amount the lowest province in Canada is Quebec, and the reason it is the lowest is because they have taken the tack of actually subsidizing their tuition for their own students within their province. The tuition for people from outside of Quebec is significantly higher and, indeed, is the average of all the other provinces. The interesting point: if tuition was the main reason why students did not go to university, what you would expect to see is a much higher rate of actual university participation in Quebec, but what you in reality see is that the university participation rate in Quebec for 18 to 21 year olds is 12 percent. In Alberta it is 15 percent.

An Hon. Member: CEGEPs?

Dr. Oberg: CEGEPs are not university.

In Canada the average is 17 percent. So is tuition important? Yeah, absolutely tuition is important; affordability is important. But is it the only reason? Is it causally related? The answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's participation rates remain lower than the national average. Why doesn't the minister and this government make the same commitment as the provinces of Newfoundland, Manitoba, and Quebec to lower tuition fees and increase accessibility and thereby prevent the loss of comparative-ness of Alberta and provide opportunity to young Albertans who otherwise can't go to school?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the hon. member has raised those three examples. First of all, in Newfoundland something very interesting is happening. This will be the first year in Newfoundland that there are actually more spaces available than there are students willing to go into their universities, and for that reason they are going far and wide, around the world, to attempt to get students to come to their universities in Newfoundland because their participation rates are going down dramatically. Before anyone jumps on me, a lot of it is because their number of students – their number of students – has gone down by very close to 20 percent over the last four years. So there are very significant problems that are occurring in Newfoundland.

In Manitoba they have announced that they have frozen tuition.

I do not have the absolute participation rates right now at my fingertips, but again I'll reiterate that the participation rate in Quebec, which has the lowest tuition fees, is actually significantly lower than in Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the minister: what action or actions is the minister proposing to take to increase university participation rates among youths aged 18 to 24 in Alberta, which are well below the national average and declining according to these studies?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised an excellent issue. What we do see is that our participation rates are lower than the national average, and I think there are a lot of reasons for that. First of all, what we're seeing is an economy where there are a lot of jobs available. In talking to the students, what is happening is that a lot of students coming out of high school have chosen to work for a year or two and then go back to school because the jobs are available now. Another thing that we're seeing is a huge participation rate in apprenticeship programs. We're up to 40,000, which is significantly higher than anywhere else across Canada. That being said, we still want more and more students to go into postsecondary education, and that is the thrust of our department.

One of the things that we did in this budget, for example, is announce a $10 million access fund. It is something that we're going to increase. We're going to be pushing forward. We have to make more communication to the high schools to let the high schools know exactly what the benefits of a postsecondary education are, and we're doing that at this moment.

Farm Income Disaster Program

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many hog producers, who have been experiencing high energy costs along with increased feed costs and the current low commodity prices, are again applying for assistance through the farm income disaster program. They're concerned that the highest reference years used in the payment calculations will be disregarded if it's been used before. This would result in a decreased payment. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What would be the benefits to producers if the cap were removed for reference margin calculations?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, explaining the farm income disaster program would not be easy in the time we have allowed. To try to just outline the issue around the reference margin, I want to start by saying that the reference margin that we use in Alberta in the FIDP program is the most producer-friendly program in Canada, and indeed I would say the world. The World Trade Organization requires a reference margin system to use Olympic margins, which means the average of five years, dropping the highest and lowest years, or just simply the last three years. Our reference margins are a very broad interpretation of the WTO rules.

I do want to clear up one misconception that seems to be there in the industry, and I think this is an important point. After the highest margin year has been used for a prior FIDP claim, the margin year is not dropped. It is capped at the level of the next highest margin. That has been a concern that's been raised to the hon. member, I am sure by his question, and certainly has come to my office and to other members who have hog producers in their area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what would be the cost to the province if the reference margin cap were eliminated?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, my department did a sample study. As I've indicated in the House, we've had two excellent meetings with the hog producers in this province to look at solutions to their issues. One was a commitment to look at changing the cap and just simply using five years or the best of seven. It made, I would say, almost an insignificant difference to those producers, and hence changing the margin would have to happen across the whole industry. Our look at that is that it would have an effect of about 2.5 percent.

Of more concern, Mr. Speaker, is that if we were to change those reference years, in today's trade climate we would stand a very good chance of a challenge, and I think that that would be a very, very huge detriment to the industry compared to the minimal amount of increased income they could receive.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: what resources are available to producers who want to pursue a FIDP application this year?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I certainly recommend to all members who have queries in this area and to producers that might be listening today to contact Ag Financial Services. They can find them on the web site at www.afsc.ca.

We have made some changes in our farm disaster loan program. We've extended it to two years. We've increased the cash call from $20,000 to $50,000, and that is available on a personal guarantee rather than going through the rather lengthy process of a term loan or a longer term loan.

I do want to point out that although the issue that's raised here today, Mr. Speaker, is of the hog industry, our farm income disaster loan program, our FIDP program, is applicable to all our farm commodities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Electricity Billing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Right from the get-go this government's energy deregulation scheme was a failure as the government was forced to cap the price of electricity to prevent it from spiraling out of control. Albertans are still literally paying the price for this mistake through shortfall charges which make costly energy bills even more expensive. Yesterday the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board announced that EPCOR would refund $12.8 million to customers whose shortfall charges were not properly collected. To the Minister of Energy: will the government investigate rate rider collection in other areas of the province as well to make sure that other Albertans are not paying for costly mistakes given that government policy created the rate rider in the first place?

Mr. Smith: No, Mr. Speaker, we will not. The EUB has clearly defined its role in the examination of this issue and has, as it has on many other occasions, reflected the decisions in the public interest to benefit consumers, all consumers of Alberta.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: will the minister now require energy firms to display all the information necessary for consumers to calculate shortfall charges on monthly bills so that consumers can protect themselves against future errors?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the EUB is known as one of the most adversarial systems in Canada for rate action. It has a reputation of having fair, open, transparent, scripted hearings. All records are in the public domain. We would invite the hon. member or any other Albertan to attend hearings, appear at hearings, intervene in hearings, read the record, and see an open, transparent process.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why didn't this government's electricity billing task force, which examined billing accuracy, include this problem in the report presented last fall?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, in the collection of bills – and this is another benefit of the new competitive market structure – no longer do electricity companies and transmission companies have a convenient ability of allocating charges in certain unreported files. In fact, what comes forward is accurate load settlement.

Now, clearly load settlement is an important issue, and it's the commercial errors of the past 20 months of these two companies involved, that had adequate and ample prior advance notice and warning to take commercially corrective actions to settle this. This is not an issue of a competitive market structure. This is an issue of commercial shortcomings.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Energy Conservation Initiatives

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has proposed yet another excellent idea to encourage municipalities throughout the province to undertake energy efficiency retrofits in municipal infrastructure through the mechanism of an interest-free AMFC loan. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is it proposed that municipalities will be able to access this pool of funds to initiate energy conservation programs of their own; for example, in partnerships with community associations or other nonprofit groups, the recreational centres, ice arenas, and so on?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to just clarify for the hon. member. As much as I would love to be able to take credit for this idea, it wasn't my idea. In actual fact, it is an important partner of our government; it's the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association. The president, George Rogers, presented his team of people, and they presented to our government. I might also add that the Minister of Finance, of course, under whose purview falls the Alberta finance corporation, in which the proposal and the idea, which is what it is at this point – at this point I would ask the Minister of Finance if she may want to supplement on the initiative, but I can say that it's certainly received a positive response.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you. To the same minister. I'm wondering about the potential savings in dollars as well as greenhouse gas credits. How would these savings be tracked? Do we have any sort of ballpark figures as to what they might amount to?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As well, not only the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, but also the Minister of Environment was there, and of course under his purview is Climate Change Central, where we did discuss that initiative, which the Premier initiated under his leadership over four years ago. I'll ask the Minister of Environment to supplement on this specific question.

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to supplement. Let me congratulate the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Just several weeks ago he made a massive financial commitment in the press to this program, and it was very good to hear that. In terms of measuring – the program is not in effect yet – certainly Climate Change Central would be in the position as an independent body to both measure and track the reductions in greenhouse gas emissions. You know, it's an organization that's partially funded by government, but for every dollar that we give them, they get between $4 and $10 from the private sector. So Climate Change Central would be the ideal organization to monitor this situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question again to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what I'm wondering is who would own the greenhouse gas credits that could be potentially generated under this program and those credits which could be of significant financial benefit in light of the Kyoto situation?

Mr. Boutilier: Well, my initial response would be that certainly I believe the people of Alberta would own the credits because it is their initiative in working with the partnerships from municipalities. That is yet to be determined, but I can say that the idea is an Alberta idea through the AUMA. Like any new idea it's like a newborn child. We've got to feed it. We've got to nurture it. We've got to protect it and allow it an opportunity to grow. I'm pleased to say that the Minister of Finance is allowing it to grow from the meeting that we had, and I know it's going to be a positive one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Health Care Funding

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, every Thursday the Alberta Liberals will ask a question that a member of the public has asked us to pose. Today Edmonton senior Don Perdue wants to ask questions about his seven-month wait for an MRI, three-month wait to see a surgeon, and the estimated wait of four months to try the recommended cortisone injections for a pinched nerve in his back. This is the result of what he calls mangled medicare. So on behalf of Mr. Perdue I ask the Minister of Health and Wellness: is it true that medicare is being slow in delivery to seniors in the hope that they will pass away?

The Speaker: I'm sorry; that's not a question. Next question.

Ms Blakeman: Fine. Again on behalf of Mr. Perdue I ask the Minister of Health and Wellness: where is all the money being spent that's paid into the medical system? How much is bureaucracy, and how much goes toward patient care?

Mr. Mar: Let me say, first of all, that I'm not interested in speaking to an individual case, although the member opposite has suggested that there has been reportedly some permission to ask such a question on behalf of this individual. It would not be appropriate for reasons relating to personal privacy to address questions of an individual nature on the floor of the Legislature. But, Mr. Speaker, we do have significant amounts of money that go into our health care system, and the hon. member was present and would know that in the budget that was approved earlier this week is $7.35 billion for the current fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker, I've spoken much in the Assembly earlier this week during estimates talking about where that money goes, and certainly if the hon. member would like to review Hansard to see that the majority of money goes to, really, three main areas. One, regional health authorities received some 6.1 percent average increase this year. Roughly $3.8 billion went to regional health authorities, and they're involved in patient care. Another significant amount of money – and the exact figure escapes me – something in the magnitude of $1.3 billion goes to physician services. Those are the services that are provided to individuals when they see their doctors or their specialists. The other large area is in the area of pharmaceuticals. So, clearly, the overwhelming majority of the amount of money that is spent on health care is spent specifically where it should be spent, and that is with respect to patient care.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again on behalf of Mr. Perdue, and his final question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: is the government making policy choices so that private health care becomes more viable?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. We think that there is a role for the private sector to be providing services under contract to the public service.

Now, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that there is a vision that the hon. member should be aware of, and that is that we want a publicly paid for, publicly administered, high-quality, accessible health care service that gives Albertans the services that they need when they need them in the most accountable, efficient way possible. Part of that vision may be that in some cases there may be a role for the private sector to be providing services to the public health system, as they do now.

So, for example, in the case of physicians who set up their own offices, these offices generally are not owned by regional health authorities or by the province of Alberta. They are independent businesses set up by physicians that provide services that are paid for by the public system. That, Mr. Speaker, ought not come as any surprise to anyone. Most of us who would attend our own physician's offices or attend a medi-centre, for example – those are privately owned, but they deliver services to the public system. Is our policy to allow that? The answer is categorically yes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Alberta SuperNet

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased and thankful to hear that the Sylvan Lake SuperNet connection has been completed. However, recently I have received many calls from other areas in my constituency and in the province not yet connected. They need this connection to give them the same opportunities as urban areas. My question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. When will the SuperNet be available to the small more out of the way rural areas?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member raises a very important question, and the recent TD Economics report on the Edmonton/Red Deer/Calgary corridor talked in glowing terms about the economy in that area of the province. We all know that all of Alberta contributes, and the rollout of the Alberta SuperNet will enable the rural communities and, in fact, all people of Alberta to participate in the knowledge economy. That SuperNet will be substantially completed to all schools, all hospitals, all libraries, all government buildings by the end of 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my next question to the same minister: what is being done now to ensure that the network is built by the deadline?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, as previously disclosed in the Assembly, it's no secret that there was a commercial dispute that was in place. We also informed the Assembly that this dispute had been resolved a number of weeks ago. I'm pleased to announce that since that time there have been a number of significant developments, not the least a 3,000 kilometre fibre purchase from Telus, and it's important to note here that the contract that we signed stipulated that wherever possible we would use existing infrastructure, and this is an important step forward, that Telus has in fact co-operated in the sale of this infrastructure which will accelerate and allow the rollout of Alberta's SuperNet to take place in a more expeditious fashion.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. I've had some people calling, asking me if we were building a white elephant because of the cost of our connection. What is the comparison of the cost to connect to the Alberta SuperNet versus high-speed connection through Telus or Shaw?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the member answered his own question in the preamble to the first question, where he talks about the people that are asking for this connection to come to their communities. As the member full well knows, as does the Member for Wainwright, who is involved in the rural economic development committee, the rural electrification was important in the advent of private telephones, and they would not wish to see that disappear. Furthermore, the important point here is that the Alberta SuperNet provides the infrastructure, the main pipeline for the services to be delivered, and any Internet service provider or operator can purchase access to the infrastructure at wholesale prices. The wholesale prices are the exact same wholesale prices that can be purchased anywhere in the province. From there they can then distribute it out to all of the other people that want to participate at rates that will be competitive.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans watched as the government sleepwalked into the first provincewide teachers' strike, and now as school board after school board raises a red flag, the government seems to be in a similar trance. My first questions are to the Minister of Learning. How many more school program cuts for September must be planned before the minister takes action?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the insinuation there is that we have not been taking action. I will say that we have examined several budgets directly. We just did the operational review on Edmonton public. Yesterday I had the opportunity of meeting with Greater St. Albert Catholic. We talked about their budget, and we certainly looked at everything that they had been doing. In about 10 minutes I will be talking to the chairman of Calgary public, so we certainly are working with our school boards. Again, I will say that the arbitration settlement was significantly higher than what we had anticipated, but we are working with them, and I'm hoping that there will be no program cuts.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister: how many more students must be added to September classes before the minister takes action? It's being done now.

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the issues that occurred with some of the school boards was that the 3 percent and 3 and a half percent that were set aside were utilized in the classroom. They were utilized to hire more teachers, et cetera. This is where a lot of the money has gone. One of the issues, for example, in Edmonton public is that they hired 82 teachers for a net increase of 300 students, a net increase of 82 teachers. So we are looking at it. Again, we are working closely with our school boards to ensure that things will be fine for next year.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how many more teaching positions for September must be eliminated before the minister takes the needed action?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, I will reiterate that we are working with them, but there's a very interesting thing that's happened in Edmonton, for example. On one hand, we have the Edmonton public school board who has a lot of issues with their budget. On the other hand, we have Edmonton Catholic, who is perfectly fine with their budget, so there are some significant issues around the province. Again, I'll reiterate that we are working with them, and we hope that everything will be worked out by the time September rolls around.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Natural Gas Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are getting tired of increases in their energy bills, Albertans are getting tired of repeated increases in electricity bills, and they are getting tired of paying through the nose for wildly fluctuating natural gas prices. ATCO Pipelines is adding insult to injury by proposing to add yet another $2 per month to customer bills by hiking their transmission costs. My question is to the Minister of Energy. When is the nickel-and-diming of the consumers of this province on energy prices going to stop, and when will this minister do something about these repeated increases in natural gas?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, today would be a good day to start. In fact, the EUB has tabled ATCO's prices today that indicate a 40 percent drop – 40 percent drop - in the price of natural gas to be charged to consumers next month. Of course, it's not entirely surprising that neither opposition group brought that up. Not surprising.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen now that prices have abated. We've seen the actions of a commodity in a North American market work. It's a commodity that's not unlike canola, that's not unlike wheat, that's not unlike propane, that's not unlike the products and commodities Albertans work and trade with every day. What Bill 3 and Bill 19 have done is bring some order and some templates into the marketplace that Alberta customers will be able to use to determine what price their natural gas can be purchased at for their home consumption or their business consumption in the next year, what price electricity they would like to choose from, and whom they would like to choose to supply them with electricity.

So, Mr. Speaker, progress is being made on a daily basis, and I would encourage the member, particularly on a spring day that's as warm and as nice as this, to step outside the Assembly, read a couple of press releases, and get up to date.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the weather is warming up, won't the minister simply admit that these are cyclical changes in the price of natural gas, and won't he answer the question about the increase in transmission costs?

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, yes, the member is correct when he refers to cyclical changes, seasonal changes in the commodity. We've just talked about commodity pricing. That's how a commodity behaves. It also behaves on supply and demand.

Mr. Speaker, I met yesterday with one of the largest natural gas producers in Alberta, BP Amoco. Everybody I talk to in the oil and gas industry indicates that there is increased pressure on the price of this commodity. Storage of natural gas is at some of its lowest historical levels. People are using natural gas for more and more purposes than ever before. The western Canadian sedimentary basin is not producing a great deal more gas. Last year in August the price of gas was $1.84 an mcf. Drilling did not pick up based on that price signal. This year, 2003, because of the price increases, drilling has picked up. Hopefully, we'll be fortunate enough to find natural gas supplies that will help the supply side of the commodity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the devices, the infrastructure that moves our electricity and our natural gas throughout this great province and allows this province to be the number one exporter of energy products in Canada to the United States, this structure is a dynamic structure. It depreciates. It gets older each year, just as the member gets older, just as I get older. It requires some changes, new markets to hook up from new connections, and all of this is embodied in an amount of information put forward by proponents for rate changes delivered to the EUB. I won't repeat what the EUB does, because I have covered that in an earlier question.

I would again invite the member to attend that to hear what happens with transmission, what happens with natural gas infrastructure. Mr. Speaker, we've got the best natural gas and electricity infrastructure in Canada, and it is the intention of this government to keep it that way not only for today's Albertans but for tomorrow's Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We appreciate that the minister is depreciating.

Why has the government through its disastrous deregulation scheme turned a formerly integrated system into an unbundled mess where gas production, transmission . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the last time you asked two questions. The minister answered them. We've now gone six minutes in this set of questions, and that's disproportionate.

You're only answering one question this time, Minister. Okay?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it is not an unbundled mess.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Propane Prices

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are concerned about the consistently high price of propane, especially when gasoline prices fluctuate. Gasoline has recently decreased in price while propane remains high. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Hon. minister, is there price-fixing going on, or what determines propane prices?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, a cleverly crafted question that in fact asks the same point twice, and I would give the member full marks for his careful construction.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say that gasoline is traded at the New York Mercantile Exchange, the NYMEX marketplace. It's traded as a commodity, and commodities in fact trade up and down depending on the driving season. In the United States there are over 88 boutique fuels. Those inventories must be emptied before new summer fuel can fill the pipeline. So there is no price-fixing, nor has there been any price-fixing found by the Competition Bureau of Canada with respect to gasoline prices. They are unregulated; they are not regulated by this government at all.

Now, propane for use inside that vehicle is a much different market. It is tied to natural gas. It has in fact increased as natural gas prices have increased, and we have seen that not only is propane used for vehicles, but it is used for space heating, petrochemical feedstock, grain drying, and of course in vehicles. So, Mr. Speaker, it too has its own price track as a naturally traded commodity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Revenue. Given that some propane is used for home heating and other is used for road vehicles, how does this province determine the provincial tax on propane, and how is it determined when that tax is applied?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd first like to report that I'm pleased to say that propane taxes in this province have not been raised in over 12 years. They remain even at this stage at only 6.5 cents per litre. Part of the Alberta advantage is to ensure that we see that continues.

He is correct in stating that there are some exemptions to the propane fuel tax. Not all users have to have it. For example, those that would buy propane at a dispensing station for commercial, industrial, or recreational use would not be taxed, nor for home heating. So in those instances, there are no taxes at all applied to propane.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given that propane is the main fuel source for many farms in Alberta, what is your department doing to help producers who use propane in their operations and are facing rising costs?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I would clarify that in the general scope of things not a large number of agricultural operations use propane. It is primarily used for grain drying in some areas and for heating in some hog barns with limited use in some other areas. However, to those who do use it, this is an important subject.

I would first indicate that people who use propane for farm consumption are exempted from the 6.5 cents a litre tax. I think that's significant. Lastly, I would say that I'll continue as will my fellow ministers to lobby the federal government – the federal government – to remove their excise tax on farm fuel, which would, if they did that, Mr. Speaker, amount to over $50 million to the agricultural community in this province.

2:40head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Allegorical Statement

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to recite from one of the most well-known speeches in English literature, when Mark Antony gave his eulogy on the death of Julius Caesar.

Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;
I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him.
The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones;
So let it be with Caesar. The noble Brutus
Hath told you Caesar was ambitious:
If it were so, it was a grievous fault,
And grievously hath Caesar answer'd it.
Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest –
For Brutus is an honourable man;
So are they all, all honourable men –
Come I to speak in Caesar's funeral.
He was my friend, faithful and just to me:
But Brutus says he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honourable man.
He hath brought many captives home to Rome
Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:
Did this in Caesar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Caesar hath wept:
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff:
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honourable man.

Although this was written by William Shakespeare some 400 years ago, Mr. Speaker, I think it has some meaning today. In his speech Mark Antony said that he was not going to praise Caesar, but he did. He said that Brutus was an honourable man, but the speech by inference and innuendo clearly condemned Brutus. Finally, who benefited from this speech? You guessed it. Mark Antony. Is this an allegorical tragedy?

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alternative Financing

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On numerous occasions I've asked the Minister of Infrastructure a question about this government's alternative financing plan to fund infrastructure. The question was: why is this government willing to borrow money and incur interest costs when it routinely generates multibillion-dollar surpluses? Albertans are still waiting for a straightforward answer to this question. One thing, however, is clear. Strategies like alternative financing are going to lead our province back into debt.

Every homeowner knows that it is cheaper to buy a house outright than to take out a mortgage. By paying the money up front, you avoid paying interest and financing fees, which every homeowner knows can be very substantial. In other words, when you finance your home out of pocket, you get the same home but at less cost than if you borrowed the money.

Buying a home is analogous to our province investing in infrastructure. If we pay for it out of pocket, it comes cheaper than if we borrow the money to do it. It has just been demonstrated that it's more expensive to borrow money, or alternately finance as the government puts it, than to just pay for infrastructure out of the money we already have. The only question is: do we have the money to pay for infrastructure projects without borrowing? The answer to this question should be obvious to all members. Our province has been blessed with substantial surpluses for nearly a decade, and now that our debt is nearly eliminated, we can afford to spend this money on programs like infrastructure.

Quite frankly, I can't see any reason at present to borrow money for infrastructure projects. This isn't complex financial analysis we're talking about here; it's simply common sense. Just ask any homeowner.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Asian Heritage Month

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans keep enriching our society with their valuable diverse backgrounds, experiences, and global connections. All of us living here today have historical roots either in faraway lands or in other locations in our large nation. Regardless of where we came from, we all seek to make a better life for ourselves and our families, for our fellow citizens, and for the world in many cases.

Our multicultural Alberta Legislature exemplifies what honour and respect truly are. It's a beacon of democracy with strong principles of parliamentary traditions and rules. It is my distinct honour to be part of the Alberta Legislature along with members representing various world heritages. It's my great privilege to serve my diverse constituents in our multicultural government caucus.

Mr. Speaker, today I want to speak particularly about Canada's Asian Heritage Month. Asian Heritage Month has been celebrated in the U.S.A. since 1979. In 2001 the Senate of Canada passed a motion officially designating May as Canada's Asian Heritage Month.

The Asian continent is very diverse in itself with a long history of human civilization and richness in culture. It is where many philosophies of life and major world religions have their roots. Geographically Asia stretches from the Mediterranean coast of the Middle East to the coast of the Black Sea and all the way to the Bering Sea, from the north Arctic land to the South Pacific islands.

Asian Heritage Month is for all Canadians to celebrate the beauty and wisdom of various Asian cultures. It acknowledges the contribution of Asian Canadians, from the historical railroad construction and forestry development to the scientific discoveries and global economic development in our current times and from artistic endeavour to living moral values.

Tonight the Minister of Community Development and I will join to start the Asian Heritage Month celebrations in Calgary. The Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra will host the entertainment, performing various selections of music from Asian cultures.

So let us share and enjoy our diverse Canadian culture and be a model for our world. Thank you.

Holocaust Memorial Monument

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, Holocaust Memorial Day is a time to reflect on the Holocaust and remember the nearly 6 million Jews and the millions of others who perished in death camps during the Second World War. However, the Holocaust is not something that should be remembered only once during the year. It is a tragedy which must remain forever in our hearts and minds so that we may do our best to prevent its repetition.

To ensure that Edmontonians don't forget, Edmonton's Jewish community unveiled a memorial monument to the 6 million Jews who died. That monument, Mr. Speaker, now sits on the Legislature Grounds. This sculpture is a fitting monument.

Through the prayer cup, which makes up the bulk of the sculpture, the artist has symbolized not only the Jewish faith but also the celebration of life and hope that the prayer cup represents. Out of the cup rise branches, wire, and copper to signify the flames of the Holocaust and the sacrifice made by millions of Jews. The prayer cup is cracked, fractured, and entwined with pieces of barbed wire, chain, and railroad track. This symbolizes the attack made on the Jewish faith and the brutality that the Jewish people have endured, but despite this attack the prayer cup, like the Jewish faith, remains firm. It has been battered, it has been bruised, but it has persevered. Around the prayer cup on the base of the sculpture are three symbols that used to be found on ancient Jewish tombstones. The first, a broken branch, is used to signify a life cut short. The second is a menorah, symbolizing hope, and the last is a butterfly, symbolizing metamorphosis and the changing of one life into another.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of Albertans come to the Legislature Grounds every year. This sculpture will ensure that the Holocaust is remembered not just one day of the year but every day. In remembering the Holocaust, it is hoped that we will each do our part to fight intolerance, hatred, and racism whenever and wherever it rises.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Normally at this time I would be moving a motion respecting that written questions and motions for returns would stand and retain their places, but there are none on the Order Paper, so no motion in advance is necessary.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to table five copies of a document provided to me from a constituent, Mr. Mants. He's asked that I send this to the Minister of Finance. It's his ideas on how to improve retirement planning for Albertans, and I've already sent her a copy through the mail.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with even more tablings, postcards concerning education. The first one, with permission, is from a Mike Norris, who is expressing concern about the current situation regarding the funding of public schools in Edmonton.

The second is from Emily Stryker, who is raising concerns about classroom crowding.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. The first one is the relevant pages from the report that I quoted from in asking my questions this afternoon. I'm tabling relevant pages from the Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives report titled Missing Pieces IV: An Alternative Guide to Canadian Post-Secondary Education, released this morning.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker: appropriate copies of 136 cards signed by University of Alberta students underlining to the Minister of Learning the grave concerns that they have with respect to the rising tuition fees and their negative impact on postsecondary education accessibility.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Others?

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. If I could now ask the House leader for the government side to please provide us with information on projected government business for next week.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the week of May 5 to May 8 we anticipate on Monday, May 5, at 9 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of the Whole for Bill 18, Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, and Bill 32, Income and Employment Supports Act, and third reading of bills 5, 7, 4, 9, 11, 8, and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, May 6, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders, of course, in Committee of Supply the designated Department of Energy. At 8 p.m. under Committee of Supply the Department of Community Development and then Committee of the Whole for bills 16, 18, 32, 29, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, May 7, under Government Bills and Orders in the afternoon the designated department of agriculture and at 8 p.m. in Committee of Supply the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations and then Committee of the Whole for bills 28, 34, 35, third reading for bills 5, 7, 4, 9, 11, 8, and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, May 8, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply the designated Department of Sustainable Resource Development.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Privilege
Member's Apology

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Upon reflection last night I would like to make a sincere, categorical, and unconditional apology to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora for associating him with any form of repugnant materials which have been circulating in the precincts of this Legislature. I have the highest regard for this member, and I know that he would not be party to such materials, and I unconditionally withdraw any of my words which brought the hon. member's name into association with these materials.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to this member, I will accept the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's complete and sincere apology and retraction today. I want to thank the member on behalf of my constituents, my family, and myself for doing the honourable thing and restoring my good name in this very precious and democratic Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Government House Leader, we have by erratum under Orders of the Day in the Order Paper a government motion known as Motion 20, and then an addendum paper, an errata paper, was put out earlier today clarifying this. Would you have a comment with respect to this?

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to withdraw from the Order Paper the motion under Standing Order 15(6) in my name.

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you for enduring this week. As we leave, let's return here on Monday with a positive attitude of what it is to be a parliamentarian, one of the highest esteemed and one of the highest callings that we all have. It's a unique responsibility, and with it comes the privilege of absolute, total, professional responsibility.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to now call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Justice

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to these estimates? The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased today in Committee of Supply to present Alberta Justice's 2003-06 business plan and estimates. I'd like to start, as many of my colleagues have done, by introducing members of the executive management committee and senior officials for the department who are meeting with us here today, in fact in the members' gallery. I'd like particularly to introduce them to the House because this is the team of people who do all the work to make sure that our department works smoothly, that the services that Albertans require in the area of justice are provided, and who really give their all and then some to make Alberta a better place. I'd ask that you rise when I call your name and remain standing, if you would.

Terry Matchett, the deputy minister. I've worked with Terry now for several years, and I can assure members of this House that as deputy minister he has done yeoman's service to improve morale in the department, to make sure that every employee in the Department of Justice knows that they're valued and that they make a powerful contribution to our community. I'd just like to say publicly on the record thank you for the work you've done in the past years in service. Previous to being deputy minister, he of course was the ADM for criminal prosecutions and has provided yeoman's service over the years to Albertans.

Peggy Hartman, who is our assistant deputy minister in the legal services division, has again worked very hard to create a corporate culture in that department, which provides services to all departments of government, to make sure that they have the type of legal advice that they need at an appropriate time so that they can understand the risks and make appropriate decisions conscious of those risks. She provides legal advice when required when departments have problems and generally leads a team of people who are second to none, I would suggest, in this country in terms of their ability and competency and the types of advice that they provide to us in many, many areas of importance to Albertans, not just providing advice on day-to-day matters to government departments but helping in policy development by understanding risks, by leading a team of constitutional lawyers which, I would suggest, is second to none in any law firm or government across this country. She will be helping with the aboriginal policy initiative process and does yeoman's work in the area of aboriginal policy and many, many other areas. Thanks to Peggy for the work that she and her team do for Albertans and for Alberta.

Ken Tjosvold is our assistant deputy minister of the criminal justice division. That's the division which includes all of our Crown prosecutors. The Crown prosecutors, as everyone knows, are the people who go to court on a day-to-day basis to prosecute people who have been accused of crime, but I would want to say that it's a much larger role than people imagine. It's not only providing their expertise in court. It's providing their expertise in the community to help deal with issues like domestic violence, issues like fetal alcohol syndrome, working on committees to find better ways to deal with the issues of the public so that the public could feel safer because we're dealing with the root causes of crime and not just dealing with the crime itself. So I'd like to thank Ken for the work that he's done since taking over as assistant deputy minister and for the team that he leads on behalf of Albertans.

Dan Mercer is the assistant deputy minister of strategic services division, and Shawkat Sabur is the SFO, which I guess probably means senior financial officer, and executive director of financial services, two people who at this time of year particularly but throughout the year provide services not only to the Department of Justice but to the Department of the Solicitor General – advice, direction on financial matters, on technology matters, and on a wide range of issues – and generally have to know the department just as well as the deputy minister or myself or anyone else needs to know it. They provide the advice and direction with respect to financial services and, again, lead a team of dedicated people who work day and night on this business. At this time of year I can assure you that it is day and night. Thank you very much for the work that you do.

Bart Johnson, director of communications. The communications department has really changed direction dramatically under Bart's leadership. So we no longer wait to explain what's happening after it's happened but have taken a very proactive approach so that the public of Alberta can have a better understanding of the courts, of the judicial system, of Justice and what our department does. I'd like to thank Bart for the work that he's done with his communications department not only in communication but also with our education officer to bring the whole scope of Justice into our school system and to provide more of an education and learning process through our web site and many other ways to improve public access to and understanding of the justice system. So I would like to thank Bart and his team for the work that they do.

Manuel da Costa, the director of maintenance enforcement. Manuel has probably one of the most unenviable jobs in government because he leads the process called maintenance enforcement. For many Albertans that's a debt collection job, and nobody likes the debt collector. But I can tell you that through the process of time that I've been associated with maintenance enforcement and with Manuel da Costa, we've come through a process of making sure that maintenance enforcement personnel understand that all Albertans are to be treated with respect and dignity notwithstanding their place or position, but they are to be treated with firmness with respect to living up to their obligations to children and making their maintenance payments. I have to commend Manuel and his whole team for the work that they've put in to make sure that the maintenance enforcement program is fair but effective. They've done that in a great way.

Betty Ann Hicks as well is with us. Betty Ann Hicks is my executive assistant. Nothing actually gets done in my office without Betty Ann actually doing it or arranging for somebody to do it, and I could tell you that with all the things that go on on a day-to-day basis that we as legislators do – running from one committee to another or working on a variety of issues at a variety of times – there is nothing more important to me in terms of the work that I do than to make sure that I have the right file at the right time and understand what topic we're on and where we're going. So I'd like to thank Betty Ann. [some applause] Mr. Chairman, you can tell from the response from MLAs here that Betty Ann is also the person in my office who makes sure that queries from members get answered promptly and that if they have an issue, it gets dealt with, that the department is made aware of it and often without even my knowledge of it or only peripheral knowledge of it. So I'd like to thank Betty Ann and through Betty Ann all the staff in my office, because they do yeoman's service. As I go in and listen from time to time to the phone calls that are being taken, sometimes not polite ones from people who have a grievance or aggravation or just want to vent to somebody, the whole staff in my office does yeoman's service for the people of Alberta in that context. So through Betty Ann I'd like to thank the staff.

We have a couple of members that I'd like to mention who haven't been able to join us today: Jack Janssen in my office, who deals with communication issues and shares, I think, in the comments that I just made about Betty Ann and the minister's office; the Public Trustee, Jack Klinck, who leads a public trustee system which provides services to Albertans in need and leads a whole team in that area; our medical examiner, Graeme Dowling. I can't speak more highly of our medical examiner service. In fact, we have medical examiners in our province who are taking leadership roles among medical examiners in North America, who have been to the former Yugoslavia to help with the work that was needed there, who have gone beyond our province because of their expertise and knowledge both to help others with their knowledge but also to gain more knowledge and bring it back. And, of course, our ADM of human resources, Shirley Perras, who, as I mentioned earlier, with our deputy minister, Terry Matchett, has worked so hard to make sure that every Department of Justice employee knows that they have a role to play in making Alberta a safe place and that they are valued for the role that they play in that process.

I've taken a little bit of time to introduce and to thank all the members of the executive team and through them the members of the department, because I can't say strongly enough – it's probably the most important thing I could say this afternoon in terms of the estimates. The team that we have helping Albertans and being part of the justice system is a team that we can be immensely proud of. They provide great service. They often go above and beyond the call of duty, and they're doing yeoman's service to make our community a safer place. After all, that's what it's about. So thank you.

I want to take a few minutes at the end to respond to questions. I may run out of time because I've taken that time, but I'll come back and add on later, and I will be happy to of course answer any questions in writing that I don't get to this afternoon.

There's a trend, Mr. Chairman, and I think a very positive and valuable trend in the Alberta government to move away from a pure service delivery model to a policy-focused role. It's been something that I advocate. I firmly believe that the government's job is to set the policy, to set the direction after consultation with Albertans, and then to find the most effective way to deliver, whether that's the public sector, the private sector, or nongovernmental organizations, and then of course to audit that delivery to ensure that we're achieving the policy objectives that we set. So as we move into the 2003-2006 cycle, we're also setting a policy-driven course rooted in research and analysis and one that's guided by best practices and lessons learned, one that provides policy advice and recommendations not just to our own department but, as I indicated earlier in talking about the civil law branch, right across government.

While we are to a certain extent a policy-governed organization already, we need to go further so that a policy focus is culturally embedded into the department. We are well on our way with this transformation with the development of a policy secretariat, whose roles and responsibilities include the co-ordination of policy resources and divisional expertise to develop the departmental policy framework. From this foundation we can focus on the outcomes of all the programs and services that we provide.

One area that we will continue to develop in future business plans is the definition of our core businesses and goals. Our efforts continue to be guided by the results of the 1999 justice summit, which helps us to ensure that everything we do is based on the priorities of Albertans. Through this year's strategic planning activities we've revised our goals and included a new goal 6, that directly reflects one of the summit's themes. At the same time, our business plan reflects our ongoing partnerships with the Solicitor General, Health and Wellness, Children's Services, Aboriginal Affairs, and all other ministries to achieve our goals not only in our business plan but also in cross-ministry priority policy initiatives.

Ensuring that Alberta communities are safe places to live and raise families is a governmentwide goal and a priority that requires efforts from all of us. In particular, we continue to work closely with the ministry of the Solicitor General in terms of our business planning process, environmental scanning, and the many joint initiatives that are currently under way and highlighted in our business plan for 2003-2006.

I'll briefly outline our core businesses. We will prosecute criminal and other offences, giving priority to the prosecution of serious and violent crime. That is $41 million of our budget, 16 percent. We'll provide Albertans access to the courts and other dispute resolution processes: $116 million, or 44 percent of our budget. Alberta Justice will work to provide excellent corporate advice and legal services to government ministries: $23 million, 9 percent of our budget. The ministry will provide support and protection to some of the province's most vulnerable citizens such as families who depend on court-ordered maintenance, individuals unable to protect their financial interests, and individuals who cannot afford legal counsel: $82.5 million, 31 percent of our budget.

I know that members have had an opportunity to review the six key goals in the business plan, so I won't go into them in detail. Instead, I'd like to highlight a few of the strategic directions that we're pursuing over the next three years. First is our organization renewal project. As I mentioned, we're moving toward a more formal policy function within the department. As the first step towards this formalization the department has undertaken a multiyear organizational renewal project.

It just occurs to me in saying that, Mr. Chairman, that I don't think I introduced Rod Wacowich. I didn't. That was a key oversight on my part, and I must stop what I'm doing and go back and introduce Rod Wacowich, who's our assistant deputy minister of court services. Rod Wacowich has had a wonderful year this year with many projects on his table, projects such as working with our Calgary court strategy, which I'm sure I'll get to sometime in my remarks, if not in my first 20 minutes then the second part. He's been working with the Provincial Court on many initiatives that have been taken, including some of the initiatives which, again, I'll mention later. He's working on bringing in electronic filing and electronic processing and using technology. There are many, many areas that are happening in court services. Rod's job this year has not been an easy one, but he too works with a phenomenal team of people. I do apologize for not mentioning that with the other group at the beginning, Rod. It was an oversight. Thank you for the work that you're doing and the work that your team is doing. This year has been a very exciting one in that area.

So I was mentioning that we were undertaking organization renewal, which is what reminded me. The focus of the project is to identify, develop, and complete initiatives that will improve the workplace environment, improve the effectiveness and efficiency of our day-to-day operations, build organizational capacity and improve service delivery, and ensure the long-term sustainability of the department. Many of these initiatives are incorporated into our 2003-2006 business plan.

Early case resolution continues to be one of our important priorities in this business plan. We're working to resolve criminal cases at the earliest possible time, saving court and prosecutors' time as well as reducing unnecessary court attendance for witnesses, victims, and police. Mr. Chairman, this has a real impact for witnesses, and it has an enormous benefit for victims of crime, for families and friends of the victims, for the accused, and for legal counsel. We have also expanded services in mediation and alternative dispute resolution over the past year to improve access to our courts and provide efficient forums for resolving disputes. I'm pleased to say that both of these initiatives have had a tremendous benefit in making our courts more efficient.

Public education and information about the justice system continues to be a key strategy for 2003-2006, and this is the focus of our new goal 6. Improving public knowledge, education, and awareness was a key theme from the justice summit, and we'll be working to identify and respond to gaps in current resources and programs aimed at helping Albertans better understand and access the justice system. Technology such as the Internet can assist us in this area, and we will continue to integrate web-based technology into our day-to-day businesses.

This brings me to information management. We will continue to explore the use of technology in a number of other areas both to improve access to justice as well as to improve the efficiency of our programs and services. For example, through initiatives such as videoconferencing we can enhance access to justice in remote communities.

We also heard a great deal at the justice summit about the need to simplify the justice system, and we've begun implementing a number of strategies to do just that. As was announced last week, an implementation committee has been struck, chaired by our own Member for Calgary-Lougheed, to establish a unified family court in Alberta and to improve access and provide a more positive experience for families involved in family law litigation. I believe that the unified family court is an important initiative that will both benefit Albertans involved in the family court system and improve our efficiency. In addition, we are looking at the feasibility of a unified or a single trial court, which will also lead to improved efficiency in the future.

Strong partnerships, Mr. Chairman, are necessary to build a strong justice system, so an important component of this year's business plan is our continued work with community organizations, local government, the judiciary, other government departments, and our partners and stakeholders in policing and the legal community. Our business plan contains a number of initiatives that will be implemented in partnership with Alberta's Solicitor General, including our work on the serious and violent crime strategy, the provincial impaired driving enforcement strategy, community justice initiatives, and court initiatives to address domestic violence.

This year our goals have been updated to better reflect the core businesses of Alberta Justice. As part of these changes the wording of goal 4 now includes the concept of fairness as well as access to the justice system. In goal 5 the wording has been changed to more specifically focus on providing strategic corporate advice that assists other ministries in achieving their policy objectives. Additionally, the new goal 6 has been developed to focus on the ministry's public education and information strategies and highlight the need to coordinate initiatives and ensure effective communication to the public.

The financial content of our business plan reflects Treasury Board approvals over the past year, federally funded programs, and funds for continuing initiatives. The spending profile on the last page of the business plans shows our spending targets of $262.5 million, $261.1 million, and $262.9 million over the next three years. The 2003-2004 budget of $262.5 million represents a $23.3 million increase over last year's budget.

A substantial portion of this amount is related to recent salary increases. For example, from 2002 to 2003 program expenses included an increase of $8.5 million in general manpower expenses and an increase of $5.8 million in justice of the peace and hearing officer compensation.

Mr. Chairman, there is just so much more activity in this department to be spoken about, but I hope I'll be able to answer the questions from members of the House this afternoon and provide even more detail.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to start out by acknowledging the staff from the Department of Justice as well. I have to say that every time I have approached staff, they have been without exception helpful, responsive, and most interestingly of all, speaking as an opposition member, unflaggingly pleasant, and I would like to thank them for that. It's a real joy to work with them, and I appreciate their commitment.

Now, this afternoon the first hour is always set aside for questions from the opposition. I understand that the third party will not have any questions today. I have a series of themes, if you like, and according to the signs that the minister gives me, I will either do 20 minutes and then the minister can respond to whatever I get through, or I can cluster these. The clusters are maintenance enforcement, issues around justices of the peace, adult interdependent relationship proclamations, the Calgary courthouse and the Calgary court strategy, court resources, a group that is just sort of one or two questions each around the diversion projects, matrimonial property, and conditional sentences – that's one – restorative justice, performance measures, medical examiner, and then some odds and ends around the justice summit recommendations, early case resolutions, single court.

Mr. Hancock: By theme.

Ms Blakeman: By theme? Okay. I think what I'll do, then, is the maintenance enforcement first. I'll just go in the order, more or less, that I gave you.

For some time I've been asking about the integration of the computer programs. We had a situation at the time that the maintenance enforcement review was done in '98 where it was pointed out that the computers that existed in the department were of differing brand names. They had different programs on them. They weren't able to interface and speak to one another in computer language. There were a number of different databases, it seemed, and all of this was to come into one. I've been inquiring throughout the years through the use of written questions and motions for returns to check the progress of this and also, of course, using the budget debates. So I'm wondering if the minister can tell me exactly where we are with the progress of this. When I was looking for equipment and inventory purchases, I'm actually seeing decreases in different areas, so I'm wondering exactly how much money has been set aside and where we are with the integration of these new computer systems and all the databases that go along with them.

This is important for a number of reasons, but it certainly affects, probably still disproportionately, women who are heads of families and who are the recipients of court orders against the noncustodial parent, still disproportionately the father, to receive court payments for the support and maintenance of the children. We've had some issues noted by the Auditor General where there was a lag in payments where the government continued to draw payments from the noncustodial parent and was keeping them because the amounts were subrogated to the government, while the custodial parent, usually the mother, was on welfare or supports for independence. The government, of course, keeps those payments, but where we had situations where the custodial parent was moving off supports for independence, the government wasn't sending the money on to them at that point. So I'd like an update on whether that's been addressed and how it was addressed and the time lines that it took to do it.

In the ministry business plan on page 285, goal 3.3.5, it says, "Identify opportunities to share MEP file information with the ministries of Children's Services and Human Resources and Employment to increase administrative fairness." This was in the business plan last year as well. So I'm wondering if I can get an update on the status of that.

Now, when I look at the ministry's annual report from last year, I'm looking under goal 3, "Provide access to justice services for Albertans in need." A key measure was the amount collected on the maintenance enforcement program files, and I'm noting very particularly the methodology, which I will read out and put on record for you: "Collections per file are derived by dividing the amount collected by the file volume." Now, I'm looking for clarification here, but I'm pretty sure that the method that I have been repeatedly advocating for is not what's being described here.

Just briefly, the situation is that if you have a court order that there should be $300 a month paid over and there's, let's say, $5 paid over, when you go to look at your success in collection, what I want to see the department look at is what percentage of the actual court-ordered payment is being collected, that $5 out of the $300. What I see repeatedly is some other measurement used; you know, $5 collected against a thousand case files, which seems to be what's being discussed here.

So is the minister not going to investigate other performance measurements? Is he satisfied with the information he's getting on this performance measurement, and why? I'd like to hear the reasoning behind why he will not move to the performance measurement that I've been advocating for. Maybe he has and the language doesn't come off the page for me, but I'm pretty sure he has not. So, once again, that's a question of the percentage collected against the amount ordered as compared to the per file, dividing the amount collected by the file volume. I think those are two different things.

Those are the issues around the maintenance enforcement program, and I'll take my seat and allow the minister to answer that first cluster.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should start by saying that I was praising my office for the good work they do keeping me on track, and I had no sooner sat down than I got a note saying that I had missed Rod. So the proof is in the pudding. I'd like to start by just reversing it a little bit and asking a question of the Member for Edmonton-Centre as to whether she intended the comment about the Department of Justice's personnel being unflaggingly pleasant to include the minister.

I go on to the comments that were raised with respect to the MIMS, the maintenance information management system, that we have been developing and has taken some time to develop in the maintenance enforcement area. The project is on budget. It is on time, and it will be up and running in the fall of 2004. Some modules have been completed and are going through the rigorous testing process. It is a complex design, I'm told. I don't know about computer design, but I'm told that speeding the process up would not be helpful and that it would raise the margin of error in terms of whether the process actually does the job it's intended to do at the end of the game. I'm satisfied with that, so I'm satisfied that we will continue on the scale that we have.

There's $1.75 million in the budget this year to do this year's portion of the development, which should bring it almost to completion, because that takes us up to April 1 of next year. The overall project cost has been about $6.75 million, so it's a considerable investment in the structure. It will take us off a mainframe system and into a server-based system, which will provide, as I understand it, a great deal more flexibility in how we manage the data and the type of management information that we can get from the system, which is not available to us now.

This goes some way to addressing the other question which was raised by the hon. member, with respect to performance measures. You have to be able to bring out the data in a reliable way, to exhibit that. I'm confident that once we have the MIMS in place, we can look at our whole reporting system to determine what's the most effective way of measuring based on the information that we can actually pull out of the computer.

So I wish to assure the member that the project is ongoing. Testing is happening in those areas that are ready for testing. The interesting part about the process, of course, is that I continue to make the department's life miserable. As we move forward, we're always looking at new and better ways of doing things and new and different opportunities, and sometimes that then has to be taken back to test against what we're actually building in the computer system to see whether or not it will be capable of handling the new things that we're adding to it.

Issues that we may be exploring through the course of this year in maintenance enforcement in terms of how to improve the system so that we can collect larger amounts of money on each file and know that we're collecting the maximum possible on each file will be coming forward through the course of this year. We've been doing a review of the Maintenance Enforcement Act to see whether there are other ways that we can improve it, and we'll have the opportunity to have policy discussions as we go forward this year on issues of whether we should be collecting interest on late payments, how we measure that, under what circumstances we should be able to waive interest payments if people are prepared to bring their arrears up to date, and those types of issues.

I think that goes some way to address the issues that were raised. The only one that I think I haven't touched on is the question of the Auditor General's concerns about when the program was continuing to collect payments when people had gone off SFI and caught them and delivered them to government on a subrogated basis. I'm comfortable assuring the hon. member that that has been dealt with. The Auditor General had reported about a $1.4 million liability in support payments that should have been forwarded to creditors. We engaged over the past year or so in a complete review first of all of active files – we were able to get the information from the department – and then historical files. We were able to get a flat file of data from the department of human resources so that we could check against our database and make sure that we knew who fell into that category and then quantify how much and then make sure that those moneys were returned to the people that ought to have them. One point two million dollars of incorrectly subrogated funds have been withdrawn from the Crown and have been paid out to clients. As well, we now have better information sharing so that we can make sure that this type of problem is not recurring in the future.

I think that addresses the questions you've raised.

3:30

The Chair: Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Okay. I'm interested in the review, that seems to be an internal department review at this point, and I'm certainly interested in any findings that come out of that, and if the minister would be willing to share them with me, I'd appreciate it. I must say that actually all of the changes that were implemented as a result of the review in 1998 I think have been very helpful, particularly the ones that gave the director more flexibility around things like lifting the driver's licence immediately or upon the discretion of the director. Before, it used to be only when the licence was renewed. Now it can be done as the director feels appropriate, and that kind of flexibility has really helped to get people to understand how important it is that they honour their court-ordered maintenance payments. So thank you for that.

Moving on to the issue of the justices of the peace. Our justices of the peace preside over issues of provincial jurisdiction, including the Highway Traffic Act, bail hearings, search warrants, emergency protection orders under the Protection against Family Violence Act. The government established an independent Judicial Compensation Commission, which presented recommendations in February of 2000, and this commission was to make recommendations around salaries and benefits for Alberta justices of the peace. The government responded with OC 174/2000, which modified the recommendations for the annual increases in salaries for the full-time justices of the peace so that their increase was $15,000 to $20,000 less than was recommended by the commission and also for the part-time justices of the peace.

Since then, there have been additional legal proceedings, the most recent being a decision by Hon. Madam Justice Paperny in which she notes:

(4) In reasons dated November 22, 2002, this Court dismissed the appeal, agreeing with the conclusions of the learned chambers judge that the reasons offered by the government to reject the Commission's recommendations failed to meet the constitutional standard of justification.

(5) As a result, the government owes the justices of the peace the recommended increase from April 1, 1998 until March 31, 2003 totaling $3.29 million.

Now, I'm very interested in the discussion from the minister about the choices the department has made on this one.

I'm also interested in: if the department is considering additional legal challenges, how much money has it budgeted for taking this case further along, or what are the anticipated additional legal costs of doing that? How much money, for example, has the department set aside for a Supreme Court challenge, if that's where they're going to go with it?

I am most interested to know whether the department has budgeted for a settlement in this budget. As well, did the department budget for interest on money that was unpaid and accruing? Has that interest money been budgeted as well? Part of the exchange going on was that the government couldn't pay this or wasn't in a position to pay it, because in fact it wasn't budgeted. Well, we're in a new fiscal year. We have a budget in front of us. I'd like to know if the increase for the justices of the peace is in fact budgeted here.

I would also like to know if there's a new agreement that would be starting this year with those justices of the peace. What process is being followed, or in fact has there been a new agreement? That's the cluster of questions around the justices of the peace.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of questions there, but I think they revolve around the whole issue of the compensation equation with respect to justices of the peace.

I'd like to just briefly to the extent that it is possible touch on the court challenge that we currently have an application for leave to the Supreme Court on. Obviously, I can't get into the details of the court case as it still is before the court, but I certainly have no problem talking about why.

The hon. member indicated quite rightly that there was a Justice of the Peace Compensation Commission which came down with some recommendations. We then went forward and varied those recommendations through the order in council, as is the process that we understood and understand to be available to government in terms of being the protector of the public's resources and making appropriate determinations.

The member will know that there have been a series of court cases over the years since the concept of judicial compensation commissions came into being as a result of the Supreme Court of Canada decision. I think the root decision in that actually came out of Alberta in R. vs. Wickman. But since that time there has been, I think the Supreme Court has called it in other cases, the dialogue between the courts and the governments with respect to what the law means and what the law is. It's very important for governments to know what constitutes their ability to vary a judicial compensation commission's report and what types of reasons are appropriate. Unfortunately, from our perspective the decisions have become more and more narrowing over time to the extent where if one leaves it in the situation it is now, one could see that nothing short of an earthquake and a whirlwind together would allow government to vary a compensation commission report. It is important to delineate that and to understand.

It is, of course, our viewpoint as a government and I think one shared by all governments across the country that in allocating resources, not dealing with any specific individual affected but in dealing with the whole group and in allocating resources to a whole system, the protection of and the priority for and the utilization of the public's resources are in the government's hands and ought to be in the government's hands. So it's very important to find out where that line is with respect to: what are the powers and authorities of a judicial compensation commission, and under what circumstances can they be varied? It is for that reason that we continue to pursue the case at hand to the Supreme Court, if we're allowed to do so, so that we can deal with that issue.

It should be said that there's no shortage of people who apply for and would like to have the position of a justice of the peace. In looking at a number of factors at the time – and this is now some time ago – we made the determination that the award by the Justice of the Peace Compensation Commission was outside what we felt was appropriate, given the resources of the department and the government at the time and for the reasons that we explained at the time, and settled on a number close to $85,000 rather than $110,000. I think in that range at least.

So we are proceeding to request leave and to proceed to the Supreme Court on that case. I can't advise the member of a specific line item relative to the amount that that appeal will cost or what's been budgeted for it. I can in response to her question indicate that should we be unsuccessful in that process, we have made provision in the budget for payment of any and all liabilities that we might have arising out of the decisions in that case.

With respect to new process, effective April 1 we're into a new process for the next three years, a new three-year Judicial Compensation Commission, both for the justices of the peace and for the Provincial Court. We're in the process of determining the criteria mandate for those, and we'll move on immediately to appointments of personnel and moving into that new process.

Ms Blakeman: That was a very interesting exchange. I'm going to probe a little bit here. The minister is not one to throw phrases about wildly – and I'm pretty sure I heard him say this; of course I don't have the benefit of the Blues – but I'm just wondering how I am to take the comment about there's no shortage of people applying for the position of justice of the peace. Is this an attempt at a judicial version of "if they don't like it, there are plenty more justice of the peace fish in the sea"? I'm hoping that I'm misunderstanding him about that.

In addition – and some of my questions around this weren't answered, so I'm assuming that he's going to get this out of Hansard and answer them – I heard him answer the question about: was the funding for the Supreme Court challenge budgeted? But I didn't hear whether the actual salary increase or supposed designated amount was budgeted. Part of the justice's comments at the time was that she felt she couldn't continue, because the minister had indicated that if money was going to be used to pay the justices, it would have to be taken out of other court operations, and she felt that that tied her hands to make a decision. So I'm looking for clarification on those two subjects, around the no shortage of people applying for the position and around whether the payments would indeed come out of other areas of funding for court processes and access to justice and therefore not have a zero-out effect. You know, you want the same amount of funding going into the court structure. If you're going to be paying this money owed, we don't want to see it coming out of other court services. So I'm just looking for clarification on that.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to clarify those areas.

First of all, I had absolutely no intention of suggesting what the hon. member has interpreted it to mean at all. I should've anticipated that in her unflaggingly pleasant demeanour she would've taken it in that direction and made sure that it didn't. My comment was simply that in determining how much is appropriate in terms of compensation, one of the criteria ought to be whether people are wanting the job. In the justice of the peace case it should be perfectly clear that once appointed, people have the job for the term and in the case of a Provincial Court until age 70 or up to 75 in certain circumstances.

So there is no and can be no and ought to be no insinuation or any other interpretation which suggests that we would want to in any manner interfere with the ability of those people to do their jobs and their independence to do their jobs. That ought to be fully and completely on the record and understood by every member of this House and all members of the public. Judicial independence is a very, very important concept. We cannot interfere with their independence and do not wish to interfere with their judicial independence. We may sometimes discuss whether judicial independence is caught up with the question of judicial compensation and to what effect the two are intertwined. I think that that's certainly in our purview because we are the ones who are responsible for accountability to the public for the public purse. So that's entirely appropriate. I want to make it perfectly clear on that point.

Seeing as the member has again raised the reasons given in court just recently, I want to be perfectly clear. First of all, she indicated that the minister had indicated – and it's got to be perfectly clear on the record that I was not in that courtroom either personally or by affidavit, so the minister did not indicate anything. But in making submissions to the court, presumably comments were put into affidavit evidence.

It should be perfectly clear to all Albertans that the Department of Justice in no way intimidates the court – in no way intimidates the court – that we have utmost respect for the courts' function and for their independence, that we have also utmost respect for the public's dollar. We have an absolute need to make sure that the public's dollar is used wisely, allocated appropriately, and we don't spend it when we don't have the authority to do so.

So in making submission to the court, it was entirely appropriate for a member going into court to indicate that we did not have the authority. That was one of the things that was put forward with respect to a stay application on that matter because the matter is still before the courts, and usually those matters are determined on the balance of convenience, I believe. However, maybe I should steer clear of that because I haven't practised in that area for a long time.

It should be on the record and it should be clear that the Department of Justice, the government of Alberta, does not intend to, did not intend to, has no intention of attempting to intimidate the court in any way through the use of resources. It is always our function to try and provide the best access to justice possible. Now, does that mean that we can provide all the resources that every branch of the Department of Justice would like to have and perhaps even ought to have to pursue very worthwhile opportunities? No. We can't. We're like everyone else. We have to fit into priorities. The public wants a priority on health and education. The government uses the public resources in that area. We get our share of resources, and then we have to make use of those resources most efficiently. But in no way should that be interpreted as being intimidating toward the court.

I'll reiterate what I said before: we have enough budgeted in this budget to cover all the liabilities of government with respect to that matter.

Ms Blakeman: Good. Thanks for the clarification.

The next was the proclamation of the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, as the minister knows, a piece of legislation very important to me. I notice that some of the sections are not going to be proclaimed, and I'm wondering if we can get some discussion from the minister as to why they're not being proclaimed. I'm sorry; the order in council came out within the last couple of days, and I don't have it with me. What I have is a notation about what's not being proclaimed, and that would include income tax amendment, Conflicts of Interest Act, local elections authority, Métis settlement, motor vehicle registration, municipal government, the School Act, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, Social Development Act, and 83(2), coming-into-force provisions.

I'm wondering why these sections are not able to be proclaimed at this time. He may wish to give me this in writing afterwards because it's fairly detailed, and I can pass it on to the people that are interested. I am interested in the specific reasons why that's not possible.

That was a short one and so I'll – oh, no. He's going to answer it. Okay. Go.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes. If the hon. member peruses most of the sections that she referred to, such as the Conflicts of Interest Act, the Local Authorities Election Act, the School Act, those acts will determine that those are provisions which provide for essentially disclosure provisions or conflict of interest provisions. We've said from the beginning that we don't anticipate making those conflict provisions apply to people who had not bargained for them, and therefore those come into effect when the next elections are held rather than immediately. For example, a member of the Legislature – I don't know if we're covered by those. A member of a school board who did not want to make a disclosure with respect to the assets or liabilities of an adult interdependent partner would not be forced to do so simply because this act came into effect now and there's another two years or another year before the election. That's true of the Metis Settlements Act as well. Those all have to do with offices and people and the requirement of people to make disclosures of some nature.

The motor vehicle act is a question of registry capacity. It is a technology issue. I believe that one comes into effect January 1, 2004, but we can get you the details of all of those. That's really just a question of how it can be accommodated on the computer in terms of registration of it.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

The Social Development Act. We have before the House right now the Income and Employment Supports Act, which in essence will replace that act, and rather than have the confusion of a series of jurisdictions, it would be our intention to have the provisions come into effect through the Income and Employment Supports Act when that comes into effect rather than having a two-stage process and the change of forms and processes and those sorts of things.

I think that deals with most of the ones raised, but I can certainly provide detail on any of the acts in writing.

Income tax. Most of the income tax provisions are not covered under the general definition of adult interdependent partner, because they have to comply with the federal definitions, and the federal definition is not quite as broad as our provincial definition. I'll have to get back to you on what the issue is with respect to the coming into force.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. Next section: Calgary courthouse. In January of 2002 the Court of Appeal in Calgary was closed due to the presence of – dare I say it? – toxic molds, and there were also concerns expressed at the same time about appropriate space for staff in the facility. We had a number of staff and judges complaining of being sick. The process for establishing a new courthouse, perhaps in a consolidated model to house the provincial, the QB, and the appeal courts in the same building, has been under way for some time. I think that's what the minister refers to as the Calgary courthouse strategy. I'm under the understanding that the government is going to build this courthouse under a P3 model. So there are a couple of issues there.

I'm probing the ministry's philosophy or ideology around their interest in participating in a P3. I'm wondering if other models were examined or any other suggestions were entertained, other ways of coming up with a new courthouse. I've heard from people – so I'm sure the minister has – with different cost analyses about whether the P3 is the best deal, you know, between the P3 and a government-owned building. So if there's a cost analysis that's been done on this – I don't think so; it's pretty early in the game to have done that. I'm hoping that the ministry would be doing it, and I'd like the minister's commitment that he would table that analysis in the Assembly. I'm wondering: has there been a budget set aside for investigation into this, either some sort of an investigation or a cost-benefit analysis?

Two remaining questions around the Calgary courthouse. I've been approached by some members of the legal profession who feel quite strongly that a courthouse is more than the facility where trials take place. They feel that it is a symbol of access to justice and the upholding of justice in a given area. Not that there aren't innovative ways to include symbols or institutions that are symbolic inside of new buildings, but I'm wondering if the ministry has considered this. When you visit certain cities or you go to a new city, you go and look at the legislative building, you look at the town hall, and you look at the courthouse. As a piece of architecture it's important in what it says in being a courthouse. So there's some concern that if our courthouse is, you know, floors 16 through 25 in some glass cube downtown, it doesn't have the same effect.

Not that I'm proposing that we would spend a lot of money for effect, but there's a larger question here around what a courthouse looks like, not just what its function is. I'd like to hear the minister's thoughts on that or if there's been any discussion in the department around it, if there's anything being considered around it, if there are any provisos being put into any RFPs, requests for proposals, that have to incorporate that. Or, you know, do we just have floors 16 through 25 in some glass/concrete building in downtown Calgary, and that's justice in Alberta?

Actually, it was interesting because when I raised that whole subject with the Minister of Infrastructure, his reaction was swift and condemnatory. He did not see any place for talking about the importance of a symbol of a building along with this discussion at all. So very interesting to see his reaction to that. I'm interested in this minister's reaction to that. It is important not only to people in the legal profession but to many others who may never even go inside of a courtroom, but to them it says justice in Alberta.

The last piece of that is that the Court of Appeal is temporarily in the TransCanada Pipelines building. There have been some concerns that the cost of using this temporary facility for an extended period of time could meet or even exceed establishing a new court facility. Could I get some facts and figures around that from the minister?

Thanks.

The Acting Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Most of the questions that the hon. member raises are more appropriately raised in the Infrastructure estimates because building of government facilities are Infrastructure. But I'm happy to have the opportunity to discuss one of my favourite topics, the Calgary courthouse and the Calgary court strategy.

We have in Calgary right now six or seven locations where court is held depending on the court and the division of the court. That involves people who want to access the court needing to know which court to go to at what particular time for what particular matter, so there's confusion, I think, for the public. It involves the legal community moving back and forth between the two, and that causes cost in terms of lost time, but also it causes problems where people have to be in two places more or less at the same time. Getting back and forth is a problem. Prisoner movement has to go to various facilities. So there's a lot to be said operationally for consolidating all of the courts into one building and the better use of resources in terms of the better ability to allocate personnel, to operate the administration of the process, to handle prisoners, the better access for the public in terms of knowing where to go and being able to move back and forth.

For those and just countless other reasons, the question of a Calgary court strategy has been the topic of conversation and discussion and in-depth analysis for some 20 years, with varying solutions. But for the past four years that I've been in this department, we have made a focus the question of finding a resolution, getting a resolution to this issue, and building an appropriate facility.

So the question is then: what is that facility? I think an appropriate question to raise as to whether or not in this day and age building of the classic courthouse as a centrepiece of the downtown area in a town is still something that we should be looking for. Of course, I have often said: thank goodness for an era of grandeur. We have some wonderful buildings that have been built in times past for various purposes, including this building.

The most important thing from my perspective is to get the facility built, whatever it ends up looking like. Obviously, it can't be just anything. It has to fit within appropriate parameters. It has to have, as one justice said to me, the appropriate gravitas for a court, and those are certainly things that anybody involved in the project I think understands, that there does have to be an appropriate ability for the public to recognize the facility as a court facility, as a justice facility, as a place where they go for justice and as a symbol of justice.

That does not necessarily mean that it has to be exclusive to the courts, because there are many services that people in need of access to justice want to have access to, whether that's family court mediation services or whether it's information centres which assist them in their use and access of the courts, whether it's access to prosecutors in order to obtain disclosure on their file so that they can know what they're facing in terms of the evidentiary burden, whether it's access to legal aid, whether it's attending a family law clinic. I mean, the question then becomes: to what extent should those types of services, those types of associated justice matters that people also want to access and also associate with the delivery of justice in their community and that also perhaps are even more important to them sometimes than the court itself – and where are they located? Is there room in a justice facility or court facility for these types of associated services?

One also might look to the question of whether there might be appropriate associated business services. You have, for example, people using more technology in the courts, and I mentioned earlier about e-filing and technology, and that's certainly one of my favourite topics. Certainly, if this facility is built, it will have to have access to the best technology. But sometimes people still need a hard copy, so if you're in court and you want to download something and get a printed copy of it, what do you do? Well, maybe you need to have access to a facility nearby where you can print that out. The questions of how that's provided or if that's provided or whether it should be or ought to be in a facility are open for discussion, all the time respecting the fact that whatever we end up with has to be a symbol to the community of being the centre of justice.

I don't think we need close our minds to what is appropriately juxtaposed with the courts in a justice facility which serves the public and provides them the best access to the services that they need in order to have the complete range in order to pursue a solution to their problems. Mediation services. Do we make a distinction between publicly funded mediation services and private mediation services or arbitration services? Those are issues that need to be dealt with.

There's another issue which needs to be dealt with in the context of a building and space, and that is: how do you build a building, which is a substantial commitment in capital and space, but you want it to survive for a 35- to 50-year time frame? What do you do? Do you build the whole thing and keep the space empty, or do you build it in some manner in which you can accommodate alternate uses of space until you need them, or do you build it in such a manner that you can build additional space when you need it? Those are appropriate questions to be asked.

If one of the answers is that it makes more sense to make maximum use of the land to build the maximum capacity or at least to maximize the effective use of the capacity of the land, you may end up actually wanting to build a larger building than you need, and then you have to answer questions as to: how do you appropriately use the other space? Now, I would ask that people not prejudge that question but rather look at the designs that come forward and say: does this work? Obviously, you're not going to put a massage parlour next to the judges' office or perhaps even anywhere near the building, hopefully. Of any type. I don't mean to disparage any type of massage parlour in that. It's just that none of them of whatever type ought to be in a justice building, because they're not associated with justice. But there may be a design which allows you to use the extra space which might otherwise be termed commercial space until it's needed and to take it over in an appropriate fashion when it is needed.

So you come to the question then of: is a triple P, or public/private partnership, the most appropriate methodology? Well, quite frankly, my first priority is to build the building, to get the courts together. I will promote getting them together in whatever way accomplishes that result and is appropriate.

Now, is direct financing available? Well, capital priorities tend to be difficult to meet. When you have huge amounts of capital priorities – we're a growing province, and we have a huge increase in our population, increase in business; we have roads to resources to build so that we can drive the economy; we have to provide schools and hospitals – getting a sufficient amount of money in the capital budget to build a facility of this size can be difficult.

So one ought to look at the other ways of accomplishing the same goal. In looking at it, we've pushed and said: we should look at the question of whether the private sector can do this better than government. That means that you have to understand what it would cost government to do it and have something to test it against. You can look to the private sector to bring some ingenuity to the project, some private-sector ideas, the question of whether or not they can get long-term financing at competitive rates, recognizing it's going to be very difficult for them to compete with government. There are some long-term pension funds and other investment funds that are looking for a stable home and can come fairly close to competing with government, particularly if there's some ingenuity with respect to what the tax structure that they have is.

So I would suggest that people who say that the private sector can't compete with government haven't sat down and looked at all the permutations and combinations. I'm not going to sit down and look at all the permutations and combinations, but I think a private sector coming to the table, wanting to make a proposal, and hoping to be able to build it will put forward those sorts of suggestions. If they work and if they make sense and if they can deliver what we want and if they can assure the quality and if they will take some of the risk and all sorts of other things, if it makes sense, then we ought to do it that way. We ought not to step back and say: "No. That's abhorrent. We won't consider that type of ownership."

In the final analysis it doesn't really matter who builds it. What matters is that it's built right, that it is providing the right service, that it's properly located, that it's doing the job that it's intended to do, that we have the ability to control the maintenance and operation, and that we can make sure that the quality of delivery and the quality standards are upheld.

The question about being able to see justice in your community is very important, but as important as being able to see justice in your community through the symbol of the courthouse is being able to access justice in all of its dimensions in a reasonable way. So I don't shy away from the discussion of what justice services ought to be or could be appropriately associated with a court facility.

I hope that goes some way to addressing the question of philosophy and analysis. As I say, the actual concept of whether or not we proceed that way is a question for Infrastructure. The analysis as to whether or not it's the most cost-effective and fits all the criteria is an analysis which will be conducted through Infrastructure with the assistance, of course, of Justice and many other people.

We've heard incessantly in the House through question period and otherwise about the open analysis processes which will be available on any public/private partnership which proceeds, but I can tell the hon. member that I'm absolutely delighted that we have been moving through this process. We've set some time frames for us. We've gone out to a request for qualification process. We had a large number of groups with good qualifications and good talents that have been brought to the table to show that they can do a project of this nature. A request for qualification was done, shortlisted to three that had brought the combination of talent, expertise, and financial wherewithal to the table to be actually able to accommodate it. It's now gone out to an RFP, and we hope to hear back by June 20, I think it is, but some time in that time frame with respect to proposals.

I'm very eager to look at those proposals to see whether they have understood the project and understood some of the intricacies of the issues that we're talking about and have designed a project which will work for Alberta and for Calgarians and people in the Calgary vicinity so that they will not only see justice in their community; they will have access to justice in their community, they will know where they need to go to get it, and they will be able to be accommodated appropriately.

4:10

The Chair: Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. That was worthwhile and what I wanted to get. Thank you.

Okay. Court resources. I was struggling to remember whether I had brought this quote forward last year, because the document was written in late February 2002 but I think I didn't receive it to be able to incorporate it into the discussion last year. We're talking about court resources, and I'm just going to put this quote to sort of bookend what I'm looking for. This is directed toward the Premier from the Canadian Bar Association, Alberta branch.

We are witnessing a deterioration of our system: fewer people can be accommodated in the court system, services have eroded, and it takes more time to get routine matters heard.

The reason is simple: this government has chosen to cut judicial administration to the bone. There is a restriction on the hiring of necessary staff, clerks and assistants resulting in a serious shortage of staff; there is a desperate need for computerization; support is so inadequate that there are only 2.5 judicial assistants to 19 judges on the Provincial Court, Edmonton Criminal Division; and in Queen's Bench, there is such a shortage of clerks that Trials sometimes do not go ahead even though there is a Courtroom, a judge, clients and lawyers. Further, desk divorces and probates now take 8-10 weeks even though four years ago, they took far less time.

Now, there is a significant increase in the line item here for court services, so I'm probing what that is, what the minister anticipates that's going to cover.

I also want to go back, and one of the issues that I have followed for some time is around Crown prosecutors: how many of them, their pay, and their workload. So what is the status of the caseload for the Crown prosecutors? What is the average caseload this year compared to last year? What's in this budget? Is the minister trying to bring it down to 400 cases for each Crown prosecutor from where it was last year and where it was the year before? Can I get those numbers, please? If it's the reverse, if it's actually going up and the caseload is getting heavier, then I'd want to know that too.

I'm also interested in what was happening with the salaries, because we had a couple of things there. There are different grids about starting salaries and number of years of experience, et cetera, et cetera. But then there's also, you know, the number of years you've been there; you start to move through a pay grid. There was very little movement in a number of those, and that was causing some experienced Crown prosecutors to leave, in some cases literally to walk across the street to the feds. In 2001 it was announced that Crown prosecutors would be receiving anywhere between a 5 and 22 percent increase in salary, but that still left us behind the pack or particularly behind Ontario, which is the major comparison. So I'm wondering where we're at for that grid and where we're at with the other issues that came up around Crown prosecutor salaries. I don't have to detail all of that. The minister is very aware of it, I'm sure.

I notice that there are 42 new FTEs. Where are those FTEs being distributed? I sort of picked it up as I was searching to see what the status of Crown prosecutors was and picked up those 42 new FTEs, so I'm just wondering where they are.

Now, I read you the quote from the Bar Association with the lack of staffing resources, clerks, assistants to the courts. With the increase that I'm seeing in the budget, exactly how are all of these concerns being addressed? What's the increase for? How's it being divided out between the different courts? Will there be new staff brought in or better payment for the existing staff or a move to technology? I don't want to take up a lot of time by giving the minister a million questions to dig out all the details on this. I know he knows what I'm looking for here, so if he can just tell us what they are anticipating with that. I'll leave that for him to answer, and then I can go on to the other ones.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think the quote that the hon. member raised was from a letter which came to us – and I stand to be corrected on this – I believe during a time when there were freezes on government hiring, freezes being particularly difficult to manage, particularly in markets that are volatile, and as a result there were some problems that we had to deal with. When I talk about volatile markets, I talk about Calgary, where pay scales were going up, and we were not paying judicial clerks, for example, at a level commensurate with what they could achieve in the private sector, so people were leaving. That was a problem. We were in a position where we couldn't fill the positions, and we were in a bit of a budget crunch, so that caused some service delivery problems, which we worked very, very hard and worked with the courts to try and improve.

I'm pleased to say that those service problems have been improved, and in fact I'm quite confident in saying – I stand to be corrected – that service delivery times in terms of turnaround for deaths, divorces, for estates, and those sorts of things are within reasonable parameters, within the expectations of Albertans. While we do not have the luxury of unlimited personnel, the changes that were made over the course of the last two years as a result of the improved compensation have gone a significant way to allowing us to restructure the way we compensate in the department to deal with some of the longstanding issues, again, particularly with judicial clerks and others, and put us into a competitive mode where we can actually retain experienced personnel. So I'm very satisfied with the management the department has put in place, that we've really achieved some good progress in those areas.

We have, as the member will know, a justice renewal strategy, which I mentioned briefly in my opening remarks, and the root of that was started when we were talking about dealing with the concern of Crown prosecutors with respect to both workload and pay. At that time, we sat down with the Crown prosecutors to talk about how we could appropriately deal with the circumstance, and we set up a committee. It included prosecutors, it included lawyers from civil division, it included our human resources department, and it included some outside people so that we could look at how we could best deal with the appropriate use of our resources, given that we had finite resources, and accommodate some of the issues that were causing problems, in fact, causing huge morale problems in the department and costing us some of our experienced people that we could not well afford to lose. I asked that committee to make one promise, and that was to not just come back and say: well, the solution to this is more money. In fact, they came back and said: before we can get on to the other solutions, the solution is more money. Part of the justice renewal strategy was to go back to Treasury Board and say: there is a problem that needs to be addressed. And it was addressed. It met the expectations of all involved in terms of a three-year strategy to hire more Crown prosecutors, to pay Crown prosecutors better, to deal with the workload issues.

Now, I'm not going to provide details of the workload issues today. We can get you that kind of detail in writing, but I can say that from my perspective and from the feedback that I've been getting, morale in the department and particularly among prosecutors is high, that people are generally satisfied that we've met the commitment we made when we embarked on the justice renewal project in terms of hiring more people, in terms of making sure that the workloads were manageable, in terms of addressing the pay scale issues and the issue of people being able to progress through the pay scales. While issues of pay and workload are never finite – they're never done – we've certainly developed a spirit of co-operation and collaboration within the department to address these issues and have achieved success in turning that around substantially so that we can focus on the true issues, which are providing better access to justice and helping to create safe communities.

I'm really quite delighted that the hon. member asked that question because the good work of – again, I alluded to it in the introduction of the deputy minister, who's put heart and soul into this justice renewal project to make sure that not just the Crown prosecutors but all those people who work within the department are valued, are paid at appropriate levels. It's been a struggle because the increase of five and four over the last two years as a general rule across government translated to a much larger increase in the department, and that meant we had to find those resources from the various corners. That's not an easy thing to do. I think the management team of the department are to be commended for the work that they've done to not just say, "well, we need more," but not to be afraid to say, "we need more when it is appropriate" and to make do with what we have and to request more funds where they are needed. We've been able to achieve that I think in a stellar form.

We can provide any detail that you might need with respect to loads and that sort of thing at a later date.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Okay. Those were the larger clusters that I had. I'm now going to move into a series of smaller ones where I will group some of them together.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

First category is diversion projects. I hope I'm wrong on this, but as far as I can tell, there are two kinds of diversion projects that are running right now. One is the aboriginal diversion project where cases of minor infractions are diverted before they reach the court system and are dealt with outside of the court. What's the status of the aboriginal diversion project? What's the analysis of it? Has it been successful? Is there any written analysis that's been done that could be tabled in the House or provided to me? Will this program be changed from where it currently is? Will it be expanded if it's successful? Is there a restraint on the amount of money available so that there would in fact be – not expanded, not shrunk – less of it? Sorry, I'm getting tired here.

The second diversion project. I had asked this question to the Solicitor General, who I thought was the lead on the mental health diversion project, but I'm getting the feeling that perhaps she's not the lead, because I'm not getting much information there. So I'm trying again with the Minister of Justice. This is the diversion project where if police officers or, frankly, street workers, social workers, et cetera come into contact with individuals who have committed some kind of crime but there's a great case presented that there is a mental illness issue present that may have in fact caused the commission of this crime or contributed to it in a major way, the thought is that locking a person up isn't going to get us any further ahead here. The person actually needs treatment.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

So, again, they are assessed, and if they are a good candidate for the project, they are diverted away from the court system. A plan is worked out with the individual about, you know, getting treatment, staying on their medication, changing where they live. Some concrete step is taken to get the person in a better position of health, particularly better position of mental health, and of course the agreement is sealed in court in front of the judge saying: okay; do you understand that if you do not follow through on all of these things, you will in fact be brought before this court to go through the whole process on whatever is the crime that you were charged with?

We had a pilot project that was, probably still is, running in Calgary. I think there was a smaller and slightly different pilot project that ran in Edmonton. Where does the buck stop? I want to know whether this project has been deemed successful. Is it going to be implemented? Where is it going to be implemented? Of all the departments that are involved in this, I can't quite find out where the buck stops, so I'm trying again with the Minister of Justice to see if I can get an answer here. It's Solicitor General, Health, Justice, social services. There are a number of possibilities, and I'm just trying to find someone that can answer the question for me.

So I'm looking for: what's the status of it? Can it move into a full-fledged project? Where would it be implemented? It may not be possible to implement this in some of the smaller centres – there just may not be the additional support services that could supervise and assist an individual – but perhaps in some of the larger centres that we have, the metropolitan areas. Plus, centres like Grande Prairie and Lethbridge and Fort McMurray and Red Deer could certainly handle that kind of thing. So I'm just looking for some sort of status, update, direction on that one.

The next question around the issue of matrimonial property on death has been around for a while. Recent court decisions have stalled the process. The Member for Calgary-Lougheed in fact had two bills, I think, brought forward over the last couple of years regarding division of property on death. This was supported by the Alberta Law Reform Institute. I don't see the bill coming this time. Changes would involve updating existing statutes so that surviving spouses would receive the same allotment of property that they would have under circumstances of divorce. My question here is: will we see this come forward again? Are we expecting it again, or has there been a decision to try doing this another way? Is someone else sponsoring it? Are we looking at next year? Where is this? It sort of disappeared off the radar screen, and I'm wondering what happened to it.

The final one that I'll add to this particular grouping is around conditional sentencing. Now, under the Criminal Code of Canada there are provisions to allow judges to sentence a person convicted of a crime to serve their time in a community as long as they follow outlined conditions. This is becoming increasingly popular with judges, and I think it could be argued as now being applied to persons that are convicted of more serious offences. The minister has commented with vigour on this issue, and he's talked about addressing it with the feds. I'm wondering where we are at with this whole issue. Part of the issue around this, I think, is that we want to get best value for money.

Do we really want to be putting people in jail? That costs taxpayers a certain amount of money. Are we getting the best resolution on behalf of society if we put them in jail? On the other hand, there's also a group of people out there that are going: "This government is soft on crime. They don't put people in jail. I see so-and-so go forward, the judge says 'blah, blah,' and the person is walking away that day. They're going home to have supper, and I don't get to go home to my lost family member or lost property or whatever."

It's an interesting dilemma. What's happening in provision of what? Provision of justice? Provision of punishment? Provision of rehabilitation? I'm interested in the philosophy, again, of what arguments the department has looked at, the minister has looked at with where we think this is going to go. I know that he has strong feelings on it. It does affect the way justice is provided in this province. It does affect the way money is spent on the provision of justice, and frankly it obviously affects the Solicitor General's budget with whether we're going to lock people up or we're going to put a little electronic bracelet on them or whether we're going to have them involved in some sort of justice circle or have some other kind of justice put in place. So it's quite a large discussion. I'm not asking the minister to hold that discussion here, but I am asking for the record and for those that follow and read Hansard to get some indication of where this issue is headed.

So those are the three that I'm kind of clustering this time. Following this, probably just one more to talk about. Well, you could even include restorative justice in this conversation. But performance measurements, mediation, medical examiner, justice summit, early case resolution, and single courts are still to come.

Thanks.

4:30

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A number of interesting questions there with respect to diversion. Diversion is a very important part of the justice system, and my comments on this might well come full circle to the comments on the last question with respect to restorative justice initiatives and when it's appropriate to use jail versus other methods of dealing with offenders or alleged offenders. Diversion has always been part of the system. Police make determination early on in some cases whether or not a charge would be appropriate or whether there's another way to deal with the matter, whether to call the parents and ask them to come pick up the kid. Historically, in many cases parents were asked to be the diversion model; in other words, take the child home and administer the appropriate admonitions.

You know, we've moved further in the process now so that we have in our system and particularly under the new Youth Criminal Justice Act more ways of using diversion in the system, and that's whether it's aboriginal or nonaboriginal. The whole concept of sentencing circles or community conferencing or other ways of bringing an offender and a victim together to achieve closure and to find some way of both accepting responsibility and atoning for action are important parts of the system.

Specifically relative to aboriginal diversion I'm not aware, off the top of my head – and maybe I ought to be – of a specific aboriginal diversion project. However, we do have various mechanisms, aboriginal courts in the province; for example, the Tsuu T'ina court, which has caseworkers and processes and ways of dealing with things. The Provincial Court has been very innovative over the years in terms of how it's approached providing court on various reserves, First Nations, and how it's worked with the community to find appropriate ways to deal with issues. I guess at the root of this is the necessity not just to convict and punish but to deal with the root causes of crime so that one can reduce the recidivism and the cycle of people coming back and back. It's a question of getting into some of the issues like fetal alcohol syndrome and issues of how to deal with children that are involved with the law for the first time and the second time and what can be done to divert them through a process which will teach them not to come back as opposed to introducing them to people who will teach them more about how to do it better.

The mental health diversion project specifically is a very important project, and I think the hon. member is looking for Alberta Health and particularly the Mental Health Board in terms of taking some initiative with the Solicitor General and Alberta Justice and others to make a true cross-government initiative work. This is the type of project which is extremely important. I don't know the exact number, but I think it's probably safe to say that 65 to 70 percent of the people who are incarcerated at any given time or come into contact with the law have either a mental health or an addiction problem, a drug or alcohol problem. So we need to deal with some of those root causes, or you're going to continue to use the system, use resources, and not achieve what has to be at the root of what we're trying to achieve, and that is creating safe communities. The community may be safer if you lock somebody up for 45 or 65 days or whatever, but it's not safer in the long term, so we have to make more effective use of our resources.

I'm glad that the member mentioned the issue of how you look like you're not being hard on crime if you're not locking people up, because it really comes to this whole question of how you deal with people. Obviously, the public wants the justice system to deal with people who are engaged in serious and violent crime in a very serious way. People who are incorrigible, who are recidivists, who will not understand that they can't break society's rules with respect to serious and violent crime have to be dealt with in that context, and imprisonment is an appropriate way to make the community safer.

But for those people who are not serious and violent criminals and are going to learn and are not going to be incarcerated for any lengthy period of time, if you want to make the community safer, you have to actually deal with the root cause. You have to have diversion programs. You have to be able to deal with the mental health issues. You have to be able to deal with the drug addictions and the alcohol addictions, and that's not to say that people ought not to be held accountable for their actions. That's not to say that they ought not atone for their actions, and that's not to say that victims' rights and victims' feelings ought not to be taken into account. If we truly want to make our communities safer, we have to deal with those root causes.

The mental health diversion project has been piloted in Calgary, as the member mentioned. It seems to be anecdotally very successful with community partnerships engaged in making sure that mental health programs are delivered. These sorts of projects have to be piloted to determine whether they actually achieve the outcomes desired because they do require a commitment of resources. To expand it across the province will require us to find resources. Whether they're found in the mental health budget or they're found in the health budget or they're found in the Justice budget really is immaterial. It's all public money, and it has to be found if you're going to expand these programs, but the first thing is to test to make sure that what you're doing achieves the outcome or the desire that you want. I think it makes sense. We expect that it will in this case. All the expectations are that they're there.

I might just take the opportunity to mention the Calgary Home Front project because it's one of my favourites. It deals with domestic violence, and it deals with domestic violence from the context of domestic violence involving a mental health problem. It's been anecdotally very successful. There's an analysis happening now, a review of it to determine how successful and whether it should be expanded and carried on in other areas. One of the real successes of that project is that it started as a community-driven project by people coming together and saying: domestic violence is a problem in our community; we need to deal with its root causes. Its root causes tend to be in many cases mental health issues, and to the extent that those mental health issues can be dealt with, you can help families over the long term.

That's far better than the process that we had with charges laid, and six months later or whenever it happens to come to court, the wounds have been healed and you end up essentially reopening up old wounds and doing all sorts of things and not getting the acceptance of responsibility and the ability or agreement to atone with responsibility and you're not getting the treatment which is necessary to make sure that there's an ongoing improvement in the health and safety of the family and the health and safety of the community.

So diversion projects: very important. The mental health project in Calgary, the pilot project, I think is a very important project. The other ones like the domestic violence project, Home Front, very important. You can't take a cookie-cutter approach, but the various initiatives on aboriginal justice: there have been great successes in those areas. We have to be open to alternative measures, open to diversion, open to dealing with the root causes of crime, and in many cases we have to work very hard to find the resources necessary to provide the mental treatment or the drug and alcohol addiction treatment or in other ways deal with the root causes.

I want to end where I started by saying that that doesn't mean we're not hard on crime. We have to be hard on crime by making our communities safer as an outcome, which means dealing with root causes where we can but coming down hard on people who won't follow the rules or who are recidivists or who are engaged in serious and violent crime, which brings me to conditional sentences.

Since the R. versus Proulx decision from the Supreme Court there has been a proliferation of conditional sentences and I think a sense in the community that conditional sentences are being used in areas where the community would rather they were not: in more serious cases. We've had that discussion as justice ministers across the country over the course of the last couple of years, and I'm proud to say that since I've been Justice minister, at least, and I'm sure before that, Alberta has taken a leading role in talking about appropriate sentencing, including conditional sentences and intermittent sentences, which do have a huge impact on the Solicitor General's budget, obviously, but also are very important for the public's faith in the justice system, because they want to know that people are being dealt with appropriately in the justice system and that the community is being made safer. They want to know that sex offenders are not being sent home on conditional sentences, that people who are engaged in violence are not being sent home on conditional sentences.

The fact that the Criminal Code says that you can get a sentence of less than two years for an offence does not mean that all offences that have the availability of a sentence of less than two years ought to be open to conditional sentences. So we've been in that discussion, leading that discussion, working with other partners in the justice system across the country to try and raise the desire for us to put limitations around that use, because when conditional sentences were put in the Criminal Code, it is our submission that it was never intended to be a wide-open thing.

Now, it's a difficult issue because there are circumstances where conditional sentences are appropriate. There may even be circumstances in some of those offences where you might not normally think conditional sentences are appropriate where you'd want the courts to have the latitude, given the circumstances before them, to use a conditional sentence. So making a change is not as easy as it sounds and hence the reason why we haven't been totally successful in convincing all jurisdictions to change the Criminal Code to limit and delimit and set out the specific criteria as to where conditional sentences ought to be used.

That I think deals with most of the issues except matrimonial property on death. The hon. member will know that over the past year we've been dealing with two major items – well, many more major items but two particularly on the legislative front. One is the family law review. I hope we will be introducing a bill in the House within the next two weeks and holding it over until the fall session so that people can have a look at it. It brings together a lot of family law into one statute and hopefully makes it simpler and easier for people to understand how family law applies to them. The other one, of course, is the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, which the member mentioned earlier. One can only really carry on a number of major projects at a time.

In the context of the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act we specifically did not deal with the Matrimonial Property Act because there were issues before the Supreme Court at that time, and the decision came down in December. I think the decision that came down in December essentially confirmed that it was a good idea for us not to have rolled that one in, but now we have to decide what if anything we ought to do with the Matrimonial Property Act. Of course, the hon. member has mentioned that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed has brought forward this whole issue of matrimonial property division on death.

Now, I can say that from a personal perspective I don't understand the logic of requiring somebody to file a divorce action before your spouse dies so that you get your share of the family assets rather than waiting until death and taking a chance. But, again, it's an issue that doesn't have an easy resolution. The Law Reform Commission had a look at it. There are issues as to if you are to provide for a split of matrimonial property on death, then do you preclude access to the Family Relief Act? Do you preclude other avenues that a spouse might utilize in order to assert a claim to an estate? Again, it's an easy one conceptually to say, "Well, a spouse ought to be dealt with fairly," but when you bring into play all the various statutes by which a spouse may go to the courts to ensure that they've been dealt with fairly, then you have to make sure that they're not stacked inappropriately.

So that's the issue around the Matrimonial Property Act and one which is still the subject of discussion and needs, I think, a wider consultation before it can actually be concluded whether or not we can do something appropriate with that. Having said that, I wouldn't be surprised if we were to see another version of a private member's bill on that subject, and I think that would be a good place to start to get the issue out on the table for discussion. In any event, I think we need to get it on the table for discussion over the course of the next year at least.

I think that deals in general terms with most of the questions that were raised.

Mr. Cao: Minister, I must commend you and your department on maintaining a safe community in Alberta and a high quality of life in our society here. I also commend you on the notion of prevention at the front end of all the problems and also the effort on mediation of conflicts. Those are the things that my constituents appreciate a lot.

I also commend you on the foresight of providing translation and interpretation court services. This is a very good notion. As we move into the global scene, people are born outside of Canada – and particularly in Alberta it's ranging up to 25 percent in some locations – so providing translation and interpretation is very, very good. In fact, I commend you for the foresight on that.

I also want to bring up the point that the courts are not only the place to administer justice but also a place where we can educate people about the law of our land. The language subject is quite important, because to me language is the means to convey a certain message and to be understood. So I'll just come to the point that I have raised in the past regarding the rate of fee or the pay for the court translators and interpreters. I found that some attention needs to be put into that effort. Particularly, I was told that nothing has been touched or changed in the rate for 18 years.

Rev. Abbott: How long?

Mr. Cao: Eighteen years. Relative to other jurisdictions in our province, even an organization like the WCB or the RCMP or even the city of Calgary, I learned that they were paid at higher rates than the provincial rate.

My concern is not just the dollars and cents but the quality of the people doing such work and the service they can provide. To be an interpreter at court, it's not just knowing the language, but you have to know the procedure, the legal matters. Those are people who have very high skills. It's not just conversational English or other languages. They have to learn the procedures and legalese, I should say. Some of those I talked to know more about that than I do. I would just like to draw your attention to somehow look at that situation and put some action to it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments from Calgary-Fort with respect to the focus on prevention. Every fall I sponsor a golf tournament for Success by Six which raises some money for a very important organization to help children get ready for success, but more important than the money is raising the profile and attracting new people to a network to understand that Success by Six is there and operating but, more importantly, that children need to be successful. Successful children is truly a justice prevention program. If children have good health, if they have a good education, if they have a good start in life, then hopefully in the future the provision of court services and the provision of supervision under the Solicitor General's department and diversion programs and all those things will be diminished.

I do believe very strongly that prevention is important, that we need to look to the front end, that we need to look to the root causes, and we need to be able to deal with, for example, the prevalence of fetal alcohol syndrome, which is causing so many problems in our society and with so many costs. Whether you measure it on a loss of human resources basis, a quality of life basis, an economic basis, a fiscal basis – it doesn't really matter how you measure it. It's important that we get control of those problems and that we deal with those issues up front, because otherwise we're going to lose the human potential, most importantly, but we're going to spend a lot of resources on courts and justice systems, which are really the acute care side. So I appreciate those comments and that support for the manner in which we've engaged in preventative justice.

I also appreciate your continuing to highlight the need for all of the people who participate in our justice system to be appropriately valued and to be paid appropriately. That's not to say that we don't struggle from time to time with the allocation of resources and how we make the best use of the resources we have available. It would be great to be able to say that we're in a process of increasing all the fees. All I can really say is that we're very cognizant of the issue, that we've been trying to find the resources to deal with that issue, and we will try to make a priority on finding resources, because it is important not only to have translators but to have the best translators in court processes.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've got two sets of questions. I'm asking one set on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre right now. They have to do with issues of restorative justice. The first one is: what's going to be done to support existing organizations that deal with restorative justice issues? My understanding is that organizations working in this field have been anticipating some funding or resources coming their way, and they are starting to pull out of that activity or change their focus in anticipation that some kind of government funding may be starting soon.

On a related issue, questions are coming up around the community justice policy initiative grant, which seems to have been an on-again, off-again, on-again grant. This is the one that provides money for groups dealing with restorative justice issues. So what's happened to that grant? Will the money be there? If it will be, when?

In that same bundle of questions. Certainly, we've seen youth as part of the restorative justice programs through the youth criminal court, but what's on the agenda for adults in this area? So that's one set of questions.

My other set of questions has to do with the comments made by the minister in his opening remarks about a shift to an approach that is policy driven as opposed to service delivery driven. I'm capturing the notion there that perhaps the Department of Justice is first and foremost a policymaking vehicle, and whether or not it actually delivers services is open for review. I have three particular questions on that. The minister's comments on the underlying theory of that approach, if I can put it in those kinds of academic terms, would be interesting. I don't want this focused on, for example, the Calgary courthouse issue, which you talked about earlier, but more general. Is this the way that you see your department going? Is this the way that you see justice most effectively delivered, and why? What's the theory there?

Related to that, then, how does that translate into actual activities? What does this mean when you get this off the paper and into the organization and the budget? When you talk about reviewing the department's role in service delivery, translate it into real terms for me. Related to this, how much of the budget of the department is outsourced, to use the terminology, whether that's for legal work or other work, and what's the long-term trend in that?

So what are the principles? What's the theory we're dealing with here? What does that mean in real activities, and related to that, what does that mean in terms of resources? How much of your budget is now outsourced?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the questions, because they perhaps allow me to make clearer some of the remarks that I made earlier.

First of all, restorative justice. I dealt with that somewhat in the answers to the earlier question. The member ought to be aware that we work collaboratively with other departments, in this case the Solicitor General's department because the whole question of incarceration and probation and programs of that nature, including crime prevention programs and most of the granting programs, actually fall within the Department of Solicitor General. We don't have a significant granting budget in the Department of Justice. Working with those organizations, I can say with some confidence – and the Solicitor General may wish to correct me at some date – that through the Youth Criminal Justice Act, for example, the youth justice committees across the province have been involved in doing more learning towards the conferencing processes. They've been involved in the restorative justice process, so there's a great engagement in that area. But those are areas that are really more within the area of the Solicitor General than our area.

Our approach to those areas is really our commitment through Crown prosecutors and through working with the courts, working in collaboration to find new and better ways to deal with issues as they come forward to achieve effective results. I go back to use the Home Front project in Calgary as an example where the courts, the Department of Justice through prosecutors and others, the Solicitor General, and the police have all come to the same table to help make that work.

So we're committed to those areas, but as in so many of the areas that we deal with, they're not exclusive to Justice. They require working in collaboration and partnership with Health through mental health, with the Solicitor General particularly, with Children's Services most particularly, with Aboriginal Affairs, and with many other government departments but then also with the community, the police, and other institutions.

Personally, I'm very highly committed to the concepts of restorative justice. I think there are community organizations that do valuable work. The Community Conferencing society in Edmonton is one that I've had something to do with over the last number of years, and I have a high regard for the individuals involved and for the work that can be done through those sorts of processes. I have certainly encouraged them, too, and I'm delighted with what they've been doing with the Edmonton public school system, for example, in providing conferencing in that area. We have to find ways to work with groups like that to make sure that they're appropriately resourced so that they continue their good work. Having said that, it's not my budget. It's somebody else's budget. We provide some moral commitment to the concept of finding better ways to achieve the outcomes, which takes me into the second part of your question.

What does it mean to be a policy-driven organization? I didn't mean in my opening remarks to suggest that we were going to be privatizing Justice, if that's your concern, or even turning it over to nongovernmental organizations. There is certainly a service delivery component in the Justice department which will always be there, whether it's the provision of Crown prosecution services, or at least the vast majority of them because some of them are done by agents, or whether it's the administration and operation of the courts. There's a lot of service delivery that the Department of Justice is going to do, and I'm by no means suggesting that we ought to move into that mode.

What I was suggesting in my remarks is that when we look with respect to the policymaking and then the service delivery, we're generally overarching relative to government itself. But when it comes to the Department of Justice and when I talk about being a policy-driven organization, what I'm really talking about is that every employee of the Department of Justice ought to be able to see in themselves how they affect the outcomes that we're trying to achieve. They ought to be able to come to work every day and say: what am I doing to make communities a safer place? Our object ought not to be simply to move from A to B on a given day, although that might be what we actually do to accomplish it, but we ought to be able to see ourselves in the policy results that we're trying to achieve. Those policy results that we're trying to achieve ought to be measurable in terms of outcomes, not simply in terms of those things that we can count but in terms of the effect that we're having on the community to meet the goal of making our community a safer place.

It's my view that in government when we're looking at how we set up government, how we determine our department processes, and how we operate, we need to have operational plans, we need to have service delivery models, and we need to make sure that we make efficient and effective use of resources, but we always ought to do it in the context of what outcomes we're trying to achieve for society and where we're trying to go in the long term. So we ought to be looking at an outcomes-based process and have our eye on what we're doing on a daily basis to achieve a safer community.

How does that drive into the practical operation of the department? Well, my favourite example, although I'm not sure they like it, is in the prosecution service. Historically – I'm not picking on the Alberta prosecution service here – as a prosecutor your job was seen, I think, to be to take a file, to review it, to go to court, and to achieve a conviction if it was appropriate to do so. So you'd done your job. If you took your pile of files and you worked through them and you got as many convictions as possible, you had achieved your result. In a policy-driven organization you ought to be able to look at your files and say: what is the best outcome to achieve a safer community? So you've got somebody that you're dealing with. First of all, there's a victim involved. What do we have to do to make sure the victim gets closure? How can we minimize the impact on the victim of the court process so they don't get revictimized through the process itself? How can they be safe in their communities and feel safe when they go home? How do they get closure on that basis? So you have to take into account the impact on the victim. You have to take a look at the accused and say: is getting a conviction and a jail sentence going to be the way we make our community safer?

Now, in some cases it's important to achieve a result, a very strong result, in order to say to society: these are types of offences that we find reprehensible. Therefore, the primary goal here is to achieve a strong sentence and a long period of incarceration so that it can be very clear to everybody that murder, that violence, that sexual offences, whatever, are not permitted in our society. That may be the primary goal that you want to achieve. In other cases you might want to look at it and say: well, this is a person who has fetal alcohol syndrome, and no matter what we do, they're not going to understand it; they are not going to appreciate that they need to take responsibility for their actions. The fact that we put them through the process and we take them off the street for a period of time will make our community safer for the period of time that we've taken them off the street, but it doesn't deal with the issue on a long-term basis.

In a policy-driven organization a prosecutor would look at the file and look at it from the context of: what's the societal outcome that we want to achieve in terms of creating a safer community, and how can I play my part with respect to this file to achieve that societal outcome? So now we have prosecutors who are working on domestic violence projects in Lethbridge, in Lloydminster, in Calgary. We have Crown prosecutors who are working on fetal alcohol syndrome projects across the province. We have Crown prosecutors who as part of their job and part of their commitment to their community – because oftentimes they're donating their time – are working extra hours to work with community groups to achieve some successes which they wouldn't achieve if they simply adhered to the old paradigm of: pick up your file, look at it, and achieve the conviction. I hope that goes some way to explain what I mean by a policy-driven organization and its outcomes.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I understand that we've probably got about seven minutes left. I'll just put a number of questions on the record for the minister to answer. I think my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview might, if I leave him enough time, be up to follow through on his question. Yeah; I'm right on that. Okay. A couple of questions then.

Financial questions. A standard question I'm asking everyone: are the minister's offices being renovated this year? There's also $350,000 going to a policy secretariat. This looks to be a new project. I'm wondering what it's for.

I already asked the minister about the 42 additional FTEs and specifics about what that is.

The communications budget of the department is up by $9,000. Could I get a breakdown, please, of how that money is being spent?

The performance measurements. Looking at the '01-02 annual report, the ministry did not meet the target for the number of eligible persons receiving legal aid services. If we can get a description of what was the problem and whether it's been addressed and how that appears in this year's performance measurements.

Client satisfaction with legal services. This target was also not met.

Finally, according to the discussion paper recently released for the single trial court, 18 percent of Albertans had very little confidence in this system and 60 percent had only some confidence in the system. I'm interested in what the minister is doing. I'm not keen and I'm on the record often about these sorts of popularity polls, these customer satisfaction polls. I'm very cautious around them. Nonetheless, it seems to have led through to the larger discussion that the minister is holding on the single trial court. So is there an anticipation of a performance measurement being included around that?

Mediation. I'm wondering if the minister is looking at increasing the payments to mediators that are available around the court system. That had traditionally been lawyers, and increasingly we're training people through a fairly rigorous system, I might add, to become mediators and arbitrators and do interest-based negotiation without the benefit of a legal degree. So that's good. We've got laypeople doing this. But the amounts that are offered are really low. Like, we're talking 50 bucks I think in a number of cases, which is very poor compensation for people who are expected to spend a fair amount of time preparing for the actual mediation outside of the time that they spend with the client. I'm looking for what's being anticipated there and whether there's any long-term idea to increase that amount of money.

The medical examiner's office. There was a capital budget that seems to have completely disappeared, and I'm wondering: was that a special project that's now been completed and has disappeared? I think it was $109 million possibly. Anyway, if you can find it and respond to me in writing.

I also wanted to make a point of congratulations to the medical examiner for going the extra mile to incorporate additional information that people had given around gambling and whether gambling influenced a death, which has allowed us to start to take a wider look at the issue of gambling in society, and that was pretty prescient of them to start including that in the notes. [interjection]

A hundred and nine thousand. That's the one. It was in there last year and has completely disappeared, and it did exist prior to that as well, I think. So I'm just wondering what happened there.

The minister referred to the justice summit in his opening comments. I'm wondering how many of the recommendations that originally came out of the justice summit are still waiting to be dealt with or have some action taken on them. Where are we with that sort of checklist? Additionally, where are we with the recommendations that came out of the all-party committee that traveled about over one summer? I think it was chaired by the Member for Calgary-North Hill. There were a number of recommendations that came out of that. Where are we on that checklist as well?

The single court. Again this is a longer discussion. I did read the documents, but this is interesting because all of the discussion that had taken place was around the unified family court system. I don't recall anything that I had seen – now, I'm not privy to everything; I'm actually privy to very little. Why the investigating to move beyond the unified family court system to moving to a complete single court system? Do we not stand to lose some of our provincial autonomy? I'm very surprised to see this move coming out of this particular government given its ideology of, you know, fire walls and we want to do more in Alberta. A single court system I think – now, correct me if I'm wrong – is going to end up having to deal on a higher court than a lower court, so I'm interested in those choices. I'm also interested in what resources are being committed to the study or committee or whatever's going on here and whether these resources appear under the three-year rolling budget. What's in there? How do I pull it out? What resources exactly have been contributed to that?

So I think I've left about two minutes for my colleague, and I'll turn it over to him. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'll take the same approach with two or three questions here. If you could indicate to us how much of the budget is outsourced, as it were, to legal firms and for what kind of activities. Maybe some agents, prosecutions, legal advice, that sort of thing. Are we talking how many dollars are going to law firms?

5:10

The second question is on page 264 of estimates, line 2.1.5. Provincial civil claims is a very significant increase from last year, well over doubling of that line item. Some explanation would be helpful there.

Last but not least is communications, page 263 of estimates, line 1.0.3. Communications expenditures by the department, $356,000. It's not a huge amount, but I'd just be interested to know: what's that going to? Is that going to some staff or programs or what? The second part of that question is, I suppose, how many Public Affairs Bureau staff are assigned to work with your own communications staff? So that's it.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General, the chair would advise you that you have one and a half seconds.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think that should about do it.

The Chair: Otherwise, I'd have to go to another script and say that I hesitate to interrupt you.

After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases $236,991,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Chair: Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Justice: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $236,991,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Those who concur with this report, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, May 5.

[Motion carried; at 5:15 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 5, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/05

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, welcome back. Please remain standing after the prayer for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. As we begin our deliberations in the Legislature today, we ask You, O God, to surround us with the insight we need to do Your will to the benefit of our province and its people and to the benefit of our country. Amen.

Now I would invite all hon. members to join in the singing of our national anthem in the language of your choice. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Joao De Abreu, consul of Portugal. The consul was only recently appointed, and this is his first official visit to Alberta.

About $26 million in bilateral trade flows back and forth between Portugal and Alberta each year. Alberta's exports to Portugal include wheat, steel products, and building materials. Among Portugal's exports to Alberta are fine wines, cork, and footwear. Our relationship certainly extends beyond trade. More than 14,000 people of Portuguese descent now proudly call Alberta home.

I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly and to all Albertans tuned in a very special guest who is in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon. I'm referring to the Canadian ambassador to Ukraine, Mr. Andrew Robinson, who today is making his first official visit in that capacity to our province.

As members here will know, Alberta and Ukraine share a very strong and a very special relationship, and I'm very pleased that the ambassador and his staff in Ukraine have played a very vital role in helping shape our province's direction and the strengthening of ties with Ukraine. I'd also like to express our thanks to the ambassador for his very generous hospitality in hosting our Premier last year, almost on this very day, when he and I and the Member for Redwater were over there visiting. Later today the ambassador will join our Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations for a very special meeting.

So with just about 300,000 Albertans of Ukrainian ancestry in this province – I think I can speak on behalf of most of them, being one of them myself – I would say thank you to the ambassador and ask that he now rise with Melanie McCallum, who is here as his escort from International and Intergovernmental Relations, and receive a very warm round of thanks from all members present.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature a group of very, very special visitors from Newfoundland, from a community called Botwood. They're from L.P. Purchase Academy, and they're here on an exchange, a co-operation between their school in Newfoundland and of course Vegreville composite high in Vegreville, Alberta. They are seated in the members' gallery. There are 35 students from grades 7, 8, and 9, and they are accompanied by the vice-principal of Vegreville composite, Mr. Roy Mills; Ray Jenkins; Shelly Whiteway; the principal from L.P. Purchase Academy, Paulette Colbourne; and parent Tess Greening. We had a wonderful lunch here in the Legislature just a few minutes ago. We're so proud to have visitors from that far away visiting here in Edmonton and especially the community of Vegreville, which was as a result of good communication between the two provinces. I would ask all the students and parents and teachers to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. So much for sunny Alberta.

The second introduction. Again I wish to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature a special visitor from the town of Lamont, Mr. Ernie Sledz, who is seated in the members' gallery, a tremendous volunteer, a 4-H member from the days when we were involved in 4-H, and also a Lions Club member and past president. So I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Michael Lobsinger Jr. Michael has completed his third year in business and is majoring in political science at Carleton University in Ottawa. He's begun his first day today as my summer student constituency assistant and is here this week for orientation at the Legislative Assembly. I'd like to ask Michael to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the Member for Lesser Slave Lake to introduce a very special individual. Her name is Andrea Calahasen from High Prairie. She's here doing some volunteering for the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake. She's in the members' gallery, and I'd ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through to the members of this Legislature 20 members of the Westend Seniors Activity Centre accompanied by their executive director, Janice Monfries. The Westend Seniors group numbers more than 700 and growing, and they're in the process of building a new $1.2 million centre in Edmonton-Meadowlark. We thought that today would be a great day to tour the Legislature with its beautiful gardens and lawns, but instead we have a winter wonderland. West Edmonton seniors, my dear friends, would you please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 21 students and two assistants from Keenooshayo elementary school in St. Albert. They are here for the School at the Legislature. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Barbara Hubbard, and Mrs. Rosemarie Grosul, who will be with them all week as they learn much about the building and certainly about government. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

1:40head: Oral Question Period

University of Calgary

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is growing, but under this government educational opportunities are shrinking. In a memo sent to all staff last Friday, the University of Calgary president, Harvey Weingarten, said:

The University is now in the most difficult part of the budget restructuring process and it is fair to say that the impact is being felt across the institution. Many positions are being abolished and the process unfortunately means job losses for many of our colleagues.

To the Minister of Learning: does this sound like the Alberta advantage?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the University of Calgary is going through some significant restructuring. They have chosen, for example, to look at potentially cutting around $50 million out of their budget. One of the things that they will do with those dollars is take some of the dollars that are saved and put them into student bursaries, things like that. They have also restructured what they do. They are attempting to go into four or five key areas and have the courses there. They are also attempting to get more into the postgraduate programs such as masters' and doctoral degrees.

Anytime you change the status quo, it is very trying, but they are doing it. They are going through a very good process of looking at exactly what they're going to do. They're visioning for the next 10 to 20 years, and I commend them for doing it.

Dr. Nicol: Why has the University of Calgary been forced to cut 64 support staff positions?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, over the last four years since I've been minister, we've increased the University of Calgary's budget by very close to 25 to 28 percent. Included this year, as I answered the hon. Leader of the Opposition last week, is a 4.1 percent increase. What is not known to the university yet is exactly how the $10 million from the performance fund and the $10 million from the access fund are going to be given out to our postsecondary facilities. I'm assuming that when that is known, that obviously will be good news for them. But they are going through a restructuring process and looking at everything – absolutely everything – in great detail.

I will say that one of the things that I credit the University of Calgary with is that they're even looking at administrative offices.

The president of the University of Calgary is actually moving his office into a much smaller area. So these are the kinds of things that they're doing. They're looking at everything.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Learning: Mr. Minister, how much of that restructuring and that cost cutting is due to the fact that you didn't give them as much money as they need to cover their internalized cost increases?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member approximately two months ago was asking me about tuition increases. He was saying: why tuition increases? Well, there is money being raised through tuition; the postsecondaries are receiving in total 4.1 percent this year. As I stated in my last response, $20 million has not been allocated yet, and I would assume that the University of Calgary will get a significant portion of that. What they are doing is looking at how they do business, why they do business, and where they do business. So I commend them on that visioning exercise that they're going through right now.

Education Property Taxes

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, last week the city of Edmonton announced that a typical homeowner will pay an additional $57 for education property taxes next year. To the Minister of Revenue: why didn't the government lower the mill rate to keep the total amount of education property tax collected constant given that the mill rate was lowered last year to sustain a fixed amount?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to respond that with respect to all our taxation it's important that all taxes, regardless of the amount that we collect, are there to support the key priorities of this province. This one in particular supports Learning and its budget. I would ask that maybe the Minister of Learning supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much for that. I would like to say that the dollar amount that is raised by freezing the mill rate, Mr. Speaker, goes exactly where the opposition has been asking us to put the money. It goes only to education. Statutorily that is where the education property tax has to go. We have seen significant growth in this province. We have seen significant increase in the value of a person's house, but realistically if your house was worth a hundred thousand dollars last year and it's worth a hundred thousand dollars this year, you pay exactly the same property tax.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Revenue: isn't keeping the mill rate constant just another way of getting more taxes, a tax grab for the government?

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to first clarify a couple of things. Education property taxes are not the purview or responsibility specifically of the Department of Revenue, and I might actually have the Minister of Municipal Affairs respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, in this province as it grows, we have to capture the growth. The hon. Leader of the Opposition knows full well that as people come to our province, they don't bring the schools with them. So we're capturing a growing province. But ultimately it's important to clarify that if your assessment has not gone up in this past year, your education property tax will not go up either.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Municipal Affairs then: what has this minister done to prevent the government from forcing municipalities to raise taxes after this government promised that the school property tax would be frozen?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, let me again clarify. I know it's a very complex issue, that of assessment, but one thing is for certain: in our province we are growing. Assessments are going up in fact in certain communities, but it's important to note that if your assessment doesn't go up, your tax bill stays the same. In fact, if your assessment goes down, your actual education property tax bill will go down as well.

Calgary Courthouse

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, in 1924 Lord Hewart famously said: justice must not only be done but should manifestly and undoubtedly be seen to be done. I believe that all members of this Assembly would agree with this sentiment. However, the P3 courthouse in Calgary clearly violates a principle of this statement. To the Minister of Infrastructure: did the minister give any thought to the judicial optics of a corporation owning and leasing a courthouse before it decided to proceed with this P3?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm having great difficulty understanding what difference it makes who owns the building. What difference does it make? As a matter of fact, right today the Court of Appeal is in leased space. They do not own the building; we do not own the building. We lease the space. We find situations where in other locations they are owned. For that matter, I don't understand what difference it makes who owns the building, who operates the building. What difference does it make on those scores as long as the building meets the standards that are necessary for the function that's being performed in the building and it's kept up to the proper standards? We will make sure that that happens.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what safeguards did the minister put in place to deal with the potential conflict of interest when company X is taken to court but company X owns the courthouse?

Mr. Lund: Well, I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the member has thought of what happens if TransCanada PipeLines is taken to court, because quite frankly that's where one of the courts is situated today.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: what is this minister going to do to preserve the integrity of Alberta's justice system with respect to this courthouse?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, once again, I don't think the structure affects the integrity of the justice system. To respond more fully on how we are protecting the justice system, I would ask the Minister of Justice to supplement the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The key element here is that once the court is appointed, it operates independently and without any control by the government or any other party whatsoever.

With respect to where a court sits, the issue of whether or not there is any potential conflict can be dealt with in terms of the arrangement that's made between the government and the owner of the building. Quite frankly, we have courthouses across this province that are situated either in publicly owned buildings or in privately owned buildings. They've operated well. They do not impugn in any way, shape, or form the integrity of the court, the ability of the court, or the independence of the court to carry out its duty.

If a P3 proceeds in Calgary and we end up with a state-of-the-art facility in Calgary to house all of the justice needs of Calgary and area so that people know where to access justice, where to go to the courts, where to get the services they need relative to the justice system, that will be an improvement for the courts in Calgary and will not be a denigration to the courts in any way, shape, or form.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Health Care Waiting Lists

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Tory government has allowed wait times for a range of surgical procedures and diagnostic tests to steadily grow over the last year. Longer wait times erode confidence in the public health care system and create pressure towards a two-tier, privatized health care system. The government has clearly broken its promise made a year ago to guarantee timely diagnosis and treatment by reducing wait times. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why did the government break its promise and let wait times for open-heart surgery, cataract surgery, hip and knee replacements, and MRI diagnostic tests steadily increase over the past year?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have a plan in place. We recognize that the issue of access is an important one for Albertans. They also say that quality is an important issue, but mostly Albertans are telling us that issues of access to important health care services are their priority. What are we doing? Well, we're following through on a plan. That plan is found in the Mazankowski report. It's found in our three-year business plans. It's found in the business plans of regional health authorities.

What are we doing? Well, look at our infrastructure plan as an example, Mr. Speaker. We'll have over the next three years $750 million of new infrastructure that includes issues like dealing with the cardiac centre of excellence in the city of Edmonton, the bone and joint centre of excellence in the city of Calgary, each of those projects being in the range of $125 million. We have a new children's hospital, again somewhere in the range of $200 million; redevelopment of the Royal Alex hospital, something in the range overall of $200 million. We're dealing with matters of important diagnostic tests. We're moving forward on primary health care initiatives. We're moving forward on wait list registries that are found on-line. We're moving forward on improving our access to frontline health care services. We're moving forward on a province-wide Health Link line. We're moving forward on a number of different initiatives that I think will give us a leading-edge role for moving forward on important health care initiatives in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Assuming that the government has a plan that works, why did this minister fail to act when it became obvious months ago that wait times for public MRI tests were growing and reaching crisis levels?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have the highest scan rate in the country for MRIs – it's 24 per thousand – that I'm aware of. I could stand to be corrected. There's no other jurisdiction anywhere in Canada that has a scan rate for MRIs at the same rate that we do.

Now, the number of MRIs over recent years, over the last two or three years, has somewhat doubled, Mr. Speaker. We now do about 75,000 or 80,000 MRIs a year, yet the demand continues to increase. We have to seriously examine whether all of these MRIs are in fact necessary. This is an important diagnostic tool. Nobody is questioning that, and I assume that the hon. member doesn't question that. But having said that it's an important tool, in some cases we have to be asking whether or not this important tool is being used properly, and that is something that we plan on investigating.

Mr. Speaker, on the overall issue of wait lists, we're dealing with them, and it doesn't matter whether it's in the diagnostics or if it's in the actual procedures themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last question to the minister: given that the wait times for MRI tests have been going up, why is the government letting 50 million federal government dollars earmarked for diagnostic and medical equipment sit unused in a bank account somewhere instead of immediately applying these dollars to buy equipment and train personnel to reduce the overly long wait times . . .

The Speaker: Hon. leader, you've got about four questions in one. The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Because we have a plan to use this important resource properly, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Federal Public Building

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I continue to get questions regarding the status of what we call the old federal building, which is owned by the province. I'm also being asked about the interior condition of the building, which, rumour has it, has been used by movie producers and by police for training. Other questions I keep hearing are "Is it for sale?" and "Why hasn't the government renovated it to house government offices instead of paying high rent in private facilities?" My questions are all to the Minister of Infrastructure. Would the minister tell this Assembly what really is the condition of this building?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is true that the police service does use it for some of their training, and, yes, there has been some activity in the building relative to the movie industry, but of course that's not why we would continue to own it. There have been proposals come before us to renovate and incorporate it into the whole Legislature Grounds. Those seem to run at a very high rate. We have had some interest in purchasing it, but at this point we do not have a for-sale sign hanging on it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Yankowsky: I have no further questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Service-level cuts including fewer teachers and larger classes are being planned by three of our four largest school boards in the province. The minister's reaction thus far includes an audit of Edmonton public and talking to Calgary public. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Did the audit of Edmonton public eliminate the need for service cuts next September?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have not seen the final budget from Edmonton public. As a matter of fact, I will be meeting with Edmonton public within the next couple of weeks to go over their response to the audit, but quite frankly they have not done their final budget, and I have not seen it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: did the talk with Calgary public eliminate the need for service cuts there next September?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, essentially the same answer. Calgary public will be bringing out their preliminary budget tomorrow. We will obviously work with them. We've been working with them since October. It allowed Calgary public to run a balanced budget this year. Our talks with Edmonton public allowed Edmonton public to run a balanced budget this year, and we'll continue to work with them to ensure that their budgets are balanced with as few upsets in the system as possible.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister: is the minister confident that school allocations will not result in school service-level cuts in September?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I find it absolutely amazing that on one hand we're asked why there's more money going into education from the education property tax and, on the other hand, we get another question that says that there's not enough money going into education. On one hand, they say: "Well, you shouldn't be taxing anymore. You shouldn't be putting any more money into education from the property taxes." On the other hand, they're saying that they want more money into the education system.

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is that we will continue to work with them. Calgary public, for example, this year has received a $17 million increase for 700 fewer students. They're anticipating that there will be a drop in enrollment of about 700. We will certainly work with them. We're waiting for their budget, which will come down tomorrow. Over the next two to three weeks they will finalize their budget, and I believe that it will be voted on towards the end of May, first part of June.

Mr. Speaker, as I've said in this Assembly numerous times, the school boards will deliver to me their budgets by June 30 of this year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Youth Criminal Justice Act

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, over the past few years I have often heard concerns from my constituents in Red Deer about young offenders and youth crime. Albertans have been calling for many years for better, stronger youth justice laws. Many of us believe that the Youth Criminal Justice Act, although not perfect, was a step in the right direction. Over the weekend I heard the Justice minister mention that the federal government is planning to soften the act's ability to deal with serious violent young offenders just one month after the bill has come into force. To the Minister of Justice: can the Minister of Justice clarify for the House what exactly the federal government is considering and what it might mean for youths charged with serious violent offences?

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Youth Criminal Justice Act, which just came in, there had been, as members may know, about a five-year period when provinces and the federal government were working on trying to find an appropriate replacement for the Young Offenders Act, which had been seriously flawed and was in serious disrepute among the public. When the Youth Criminal Justice Act was passed, it included provisions which allowed youths convicted of serious and violent crimes to be subject to adult sentences, and we considered that to be a very important step forward in youth criminal law. It also allowed under certain circumstances the names of young offenders to be released to those who needed to have that information.

The Quebec government took a reference to their courts with respect to those sections. In a decision the Quebec Court of Appeal has found those provisions to be unconstitutional. We fully expected that the federal government would stand behind its act and appeal that decision, particularly in light of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that for many years jurisdictions across this country have been wanting to strengthen the Young Offenders Act and deal with issues of serious and violent crime with respect to youth. Late last week we learned that the federal government had decided not to appeal the decision even though, in our view, case law from other provinces and other courts suggests that there's a very good likelihood of success at the Supreme Court of Canada. We are outraged that the federal government was willing to abandon this provision without even consulting the provinces that were at the table when the whole Youth Criminal Justice Act was discussed and when it went forward. So there's a very serious change which could affect not only youth criminal justice in this province but how justice ministers across this country work together.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what role did Alberta have in developing this provision?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, this provision in particular, the provision with respect to adult sentences, was a very hard-fought question at justice ministers' meetings, as I say, over the last four years that I've been there. The need for a new Youth Criminal Justice Act was very apparent. We needed to move forward. None of us agreed with the total content of the new act that came in. It was very much a compromise position and very much a cobbling together of various issues because different jurisdictions across the country had different views on youth justice law. In particular, Quebec was at one end of the spectrum and Ontario and Alberta were at the other end of the spectrum with respect to some of these issues. What we came together with was a solution which could be used on a variable basis. In other words, provinces could determine between the ages of 14 and 16 at what age an adult presumption would take place, and that was found to be an acceptable compromise, which then went forward into the act.

This is something that legislators have worked together on, have recommended, have agreed upon, and Alberta, I'm pleased to say, took a leading role in achieving that breakthrough because it was necessary to move away from the old Young Offenders Act, which, as I said, was under serious disrepute, and move into a new element of how we deal with youth criminal justice in this country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Can the minister advise us what steps he's taken to address this issue?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, we had the communication late Thursday from the federal government that they were not appealing. We immediately sent a letter to the federal minister demanding that he reconsider, pointing out that he has another 30 days to consider appealing the decision. We've also contacted the federal ministers from Alberta, particularly the Member for Edmonton West, who was so much a part of the discussions when she was Minister of Justice, to ask that they contact their colleague to remind him of the work that went in and the collaborative federalism that went in to create this act. We've also sent letters to each of the provincial justice ministers across the country, and I'm in the process of having discussions with them so that we can get together again to put pressure on the federal minister to reverse his decision, to appeal that Quebec decision, and to defend the provisions of the act which were pursued with such vigour over the past four years.

The Speaker: The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Alberta Insurance Council

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been serious changes recently in the structure of the Alberta Insurance Council. It has taken many years for the Alberta Insurance Council to evolve into the organization it is today. It is an independent, formal association representative of its membership with regulatory power over its members. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Given that until now the Alberta Insurance Council elected amongst themselves the chairperson, why did the government decide to appoint the chair?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly this isn't something that is new. We've been working with the Insurance Council now for a number of months, and it is not unusual, when the government appoints public members to these councils, that we do in fact appoint one of those public members as the chair of council. This is not unusual. We have an excellent chair who is in place right now and are working with her. Her term is completed in June of this year.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: given that the majority of other boards and committees that operate in a manner as the Alberta Insurance Council are structured with a majority industry representation and they elect their own chair, why is it government policy to jeopardize the independence of the Alberta Insurance Council at this time?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, we work very closely with the councils, and it is our intention to continue to work with them, but it is also our intention when we do appoint public members to these councils that one of those appointments will clearly be the chair. This is not an unusual process. It's standard for what we do within our government.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: when the order in council was passed in January of 2003 by the government to appoint the chair, why was this policy change not debated publicly through the standing policy committee process?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, our norm has been to appoint public members to these councils. It's not an unusual situation. It's usually agreed upon. Again, the norm has been to have one of those appointments sit as the chair. That's not to say that one of the appointments from the government can't be someone who's had the experience level in that particular industry, and they could in fact be chosen as the chair. So there are options that are there, but clearly when the government appoints people to these councils, they usually take one of those appointments and appoint them as the chair. This is not unusual.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Gang Violence

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents of Edmonton-Castle Downs witnessed a gang-style murder over the last weekend, the third such incident in the past few weeks. My constituents are particularly concerned because this most recent incident happened in broad daylight and was witnessed by a group of children playing in a park. They are worried that next time there is a gang shooting, an innocent bystander or perhaps even a child will be caught in the cross fire, and frankly my constituents deserve better than that. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Gang violence is a growing problem in Edmonton. Are the police properly funded by your ministry to handle this type of problem?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, our government takes the threat of gang violence very seriously, and we've been working with our police partners to combat this threat. In fact, I have to say that today I met with police officials to discuss ongoing gang problems, organized crime, including potential funding needs that they will require. At the time we provide $2.4 million annually to the Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, which is commonly known as CISA, to target organized crime. There's no question, however, that police resources are being stretched to the limits in many areas and we need to be innovative. Alberta's population is growing. The nature of crime is changing. We need to address many of the issues that are the results of organized crime; for example, the increase in meth labs and grow operations. It's an ongoing problem.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, my second and last question is to the same minister. While the recent spree of shootings makes gang violence seem more prevalent in Edmonton, we all know that gangs do not operate within local jurisdictions. Therefore, isn't it time to strike a gang task force to address this issue not only within Edmonton but within the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The province already has a coordinated approach to organized crime in place through the Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta. Since 1999 CISA has been coordinating provincewide policing efforts through the gathering, analyzing, and sharing of criminal intelligence among police services, but I'm also looking at other opportunities with other levels of governments to address the violence that we see with gangs. I spoke today with the chiefs in regard to a federal/provincial partnership, and I've spoken to the federal Solicitor General about this, and he seemed quite excited. At the meeting today with the police officials we discussed options for further co-operation, and that could go as far as international, national, provincial, and municipal needs. At this point it's a little too early for me to comment, but I can assure the member that we are working with our policing agencies, and we are working on an approach on how to address it.

Bow River Fish Ladder

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I told this House about a fish ladder at Carseland that was obstructing the ability of the trout to spawn in the upper reaches of the Bow Valley. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development said that he'd deal with the issue immediately. Well, it looks like the minister has failed again, because I've learned that while water is now running through the fish ladder, the trout are blocked by a fine metal screen. They just can't get it right. Will the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development please tell us what went wrong this time?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, and the hon. member did bring this up in the House recently. I indicated at the time that I would look into it immediately, and I did. I had assurance from Transportation, who was doing the construction at the time, that by that weekend, which was, I believe, the 26th and 27th of April, the issue would be dealt with. Unfortunately, the weather turned bad, and they had to move machines actually in that area, but the concern, of course, was spawning of fish both above and below the fish ladder.

You can be assured that we know that normal spawning is taking place below the ladder and also that normal spawning is taking place above the ladder. It is very unfortunate. We have not too much control on the weather anymore, and when the weather changes, sometimes construction activities have to be adjusted accordingly. That's what happened here, the issue of weather and not getting machines in there on time to be able to finish the project, but you can be assured it'll be done.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, can this minister tell us what planning his department goes through to ensure that fish ladders are not blocked off by metal screens making it impossible for the fish to get up the ladder?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, like I say, we hadn't planned on the weather going bad. Maybe the hon. member does not understand. The spawning season does not go on year-round. It's a short period of time, and if it happens that you have to make some adjustment in any river, any waterway – if the weather gets bad for a day or two or three or four, it may impact the spawning season. That's the challenge we're faced with. There are only certain times we can deal with issues like that, and what we are doing is the right thing.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, can the minister at least tell us this: what impact will this bungling by your department have on the fish population this year in that area?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, you can be assured, as far as we know, that the impact will be very little because the normal spawning continues to take place below the ladder like before. That doesn't change. The normal spawning continues to take place above the ladder. That doesn't change. The only impact is that little process where the ladder is. There is no change. There's no impact there.

The Speaker: It surely must be spring.

West Edmonton Mall

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last December a few days before Christmas the government announced an out-of-court settlement of the lawsuit against the Ghermezian family and West Edmonton Mall. As part of the settlement the government dropped a civil suit which alleged that former ATB superintendent Elmer Leahy received hundreds of thousands of dollars in bribes from the Ghermezians as an inducement to sign a $420 million sweetheart financing deal. The ATB uncovered powerful evidence including money orders drawn on foreign banks. My question is to the Minister of Finance. In the interests of openness and transparency will the minister table in this Assembly the settlement agreement with Elmer Leahy and the Ghermezians, and if not, can she tell us what the government is attempting to hide?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, what I am able to say on the West Edmonton Mall situation is that the case has been settled, and all costs to the Crown have been recovered.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if the government has nothing to hide, why is the Ministry of Finance stonewalling a New Democrat freedom of information request by refusing to disclose the financial terms of its settlement with the Ghermezians and Elmer Leahy?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, there is a process for freedom of information requests, that I'm sure the hon. member has followed through on. Insofar as the case goes, what I am able to say quite clearly is that the case that was there was settled out of court, and all costs to the Crown were recovered, and that's all there is to say about the case.

Mr. Mason: I don't think so, Mr. Speaker.

Why would the government spend four years and an estimated $20 million in legal actions alleging wrongdoing and bribes in the West Edmonton Mall fiasco only to quietly settle it out of court when it became clear that evidence about political involvement at the highest levels was about to be revealed?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, once again, Mr. Speaker – and I'll say it a little slower for the hon. member opposite – the case was resolved, and the Crown was refunded all out-of-pocket costs, which include the legal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Graduated Drivers' Licences

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday I had the opportunity to visit a class at Sir George Simpson school in St. Albert. They were a grade 6 class, like the group from Keenooshayo school who are here at the Legislature this week attending this question period. The students in those grades are ages 11 to 12. They are about two years away from getting their learner's permit to drive. So my question is to the Minister of Transportation. Could you please explain to us what the changes are in the way in which they will apply for and finally get their permanent driver's licence in graduated licensing?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The GDL, or graduated driver's licence, program has been introduced in the province to ensure that all drivers, regardless of age, get the support and experience necessary to handle the complex task of driving. If young people 14 years of age obtain their learner's permit at 14, they'll have to wait the necessary two years before they can apply for their probationary driver's licence, and then it will be a further two years before they will complete and receive their full driving privileges through an exit exam. The exit exam is really an exam that will test the very skills of the individual handling a vehicle under difficult driving conditions.

Now, as a learner 14 to 16 or as a person older, whatever age they are – it could even be at 24 or 40 years old – if they haven't had a learner's before, they will have to obtain their learner's and hold that learner's for at least one year. During that period of time there is a curfew, no driving between 12 and 5; zero tolerance for alcohol – it doesn't matter what your age is – as well, must be accompanied by a licensed driver 18 years of age or more. Also, that particular individual cannot have more people in the car than there are seat belts provided.

Then, after 16, once they get their probationary driver's licence, still very strict demerit points, half of the allotted amount, which is eight, again zero tolerance for alcohol, and their licence will be suspended for a period of 30 days if they exceed the number of demerits, and that will be added onto their probationary period. So that just extends the amount of time for their driver's licence.

Mrs. O'Neill: Just a supplemental question to the minister, and that is: if a young person who is 14 applies for their learner's prior to May 20, will they fall under the rules of the new graduated licensing, or will they be grandfathered or grandmothers with respect to the previous rules?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, all learners 14 years of age, if they've received their learner's permit prior to May 20, will still have to fall under the program. There are no exemptions, no grandfathering. They will still have to go through the two years' probationary period and then do their exit exam upon the successful completion of two years of their probationary licence.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Program

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Community Development said that "any reference to cuts or program cancellations" in PDD services was "false." However, financial statements for PDD clearly indicate that a balanced budget was achieved last year through

- ongoing reductions in PDD board and agency administration,
- reducing of agency staff salaries . . .
- implementing across-the-board reductions to all programs,
- instituting other discretionary cuts.

To the Minister of Community Development: given the proof from PDD financial statements that balanced budgets were achieved through cuts and program cancellations, will the minister retract his comments from last week and admit that these cuts are occurring?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's always some streamlining that occurs. I think the member was referencing something to do with administrative matters and referencing some increases that had occurred. What I'm talking about are the programs right where the individuals need them. Those kinds of programs have not been cut, but again let's remember that the individual programs are designed, hon. member, by and large by the community agencies providing them, and I did say that if some of those agencies have taken some of those kinds of measures, that's entirely up to them. From our point of view, we have not cut any of those kinds of programs to my knowledge.

Dr. Taft: Well, you've cut their budgets.

Given that last week the minister claimed that some people wait "a short period of time" for PDD services, does the minister consider a wait of over a year in Calgary a short period of time?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, obviously not, Mr. Speaker. If there is somebody who is on a waiting list or whatever they may be calling it in that area and it's taking up to a year, there must be some additional reasons or circumstances behind that, but what I can tell you is that we have increased the funding this year with the specific objective in mind of ensuring that any kind of catch-up that needs to be done to allow for faster intake and faster processing will be done.

It's important to remember that individuals who wish to come into the PDD program, have met the eligibility requirements, have gone through the assessment process and been determined to be at any kind of significant risk or safety factors that might impact them that would be of a negative nature are taken in as immediately as possible, and there is virtually no waiting list in that regard. But with some of the other cases which might be a little bit more complicated or where additional information might be required, yes, it's true; there might be a bit of a lengthier process in evaluating their applications, so to speak. However, I would certainly hope that no one is waiting an exorbitantly long period of time to get into the system. That's not what it's all about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. We'll see how the agencies and clients react.

Can the minister tell us whether community boards this year will be pursuing strategies for service reductions that include eliminating one-to-one arrangements and replacing 24-hour support with on-call support?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that the six regional community PDD boards that we have are going to be looking at that type of a strategy especially since they're going to be receiving a share of the 9 percent increase. I want to remind this hon. member that when I started this portfolio looking after PDD four years ago, we were spending $283 million on PDD. Today and with the passage of our budget estimates, I hope, tomorrow, we will see PDD funding going up over $440 million, so that is a huge increase of over 50 percent, from $283 million up to 440-odd million dollars.

I think it speaks volumes for what we as a government and for what this department are trying to do to provide the maximum services possible for those individuals so that they can feel as inclusive in the community as possible, so that they can maximize their potential. I would hope that the hon. member isn't trying to do any kind of fear mongering to scare that very vulnerable community the way that we have seen some activities do in the past. We are doing everything possible to provide the necessary funds. We will address the specifics of any kind of waits that are there, we will be addressing some of the wage increases that are necessary for community agencies, and we'll be looking at better and more complementary and fuller programming needs for the specific individuals that we're trying so hard to help.

Agribusiness Incubation Facility

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. There is located in the city of Leduc a food processing and development centre. For many years there's been discussion about building an incubator in conjunction with this facility. Now, many of us are familiar with the role of incubators in the production of chickens, but I'm told that this has nothing to do with chickens. So I want to ask the minister to tell us just what this incubator is and what purpose it might serve.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to expound a bit on the incubator that is going to be built beside the Leduc Food Processing Centre. There are some incubation activities occurring at the centre now. However, what we are finding is that many businesses require a bit longer. What a business incubator does is really provide some hands-on management, some technical advice, some help with accessing different methods of financing, marketing, help with acquiring consultants, and many services like that for the company. It is well documented that 80 percent of companies who use the incubator process are successful past five years whereas about 80 percent who don't experience difficulties. So I believe it's a great endeavour that will complement the Leduc processing centre, which incidentally produces with Alberta entrepreneurs about 100 new food products per year.

Mr. Klapstein: My first supplementary is: how would an entrepreneur access this incubator?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, typically an entrepreneur would have a good idea, a bright idea. They would approach the Leduc Food Processing Centre for support. That support would be given at the centre, and the scale-up work would be done at the centre, and the entrepreneur would establish their company. However, once the company has begun that process, they may need more market development, and that would move them on into the incubator facility. When they're there, they would achieve a market presence that would be satisfactory for their business, and then they'd move on and move out.

Mr. Klapstein: How are the costs of this incubator paid, or who funds it?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the cost of the incubator building and the start-up will be shared by my department, Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and I'm pleased to say that the Alberta Value-added Corporation has seen fit to invest in this. So the cost will be pretty much shared there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

School Construction

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Infrastructure. On Friday we had a wonderful opening of a brand-new school in Chestermere, and I was very lucky to have the minister accompany me for that opening. However, the truth is that that school had to open with 12 portables attached to it. I have as much as 18 to 20 percent growth in Chestermere and Langdon and about 6 percent in Airdrie, yet in this capital plan that was just announced, there are no new schools for Airdrie or Chestermere or Langdon or anywhere in my riding, as a matter of fact. The school board out there is very concerned about what it is that we have to do to get the minister's attention on the capital project side. I'd like him to explain to the Assembly and to my constituents why 35 percent of the kids in my riding are going to school in portables yet we don't have any new schools in the next budget.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is true that we did have the opportunity to be with the hon. member last Friday evening and open another new school and it is true that there are a number of portables connected to that school and it is true that there's tremendous growth in the area. Mind you, this isn't the only area in the province that has very large growth. I will admit that certainly the composition of the people moving in lends itself to families and therefore a lot more children coming into the system. What we often do in locations is build what we call a core school so that we can add portables, and then as the population matures and the number of children drops off, we can move the portables away.

It's true that the Rocky View school division does have about 35 percent of their students in portables. I must point out that the Calgary Catholic school board, though, does have about 39 percent of their students in portables. So while it looks like a situation that may be somewhat unique, there are other areas that do have a lot of portables.

We are taking a very serious look at these areas that are growing very rapidly and who do not have the luxury of shutting down some schools and/or amalgamating schools to see just how that fits into our measurement of where a new school should go. Currently one of the things that weighs very heavily when you look at a school and the audit score is what condition that school is in and then of course what the utilization of that school is. So we are looking at some of those criteria, and we hope that we are able to address some of these issues, particularly in the very rapidly growing areas.

Ms Haley: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to hear that the minister is going to review that portion of it. However, the truth is that in Airdrie between last September and this September we have over 600 more children that need to go to school, and I'm wondering where he's going to put them.

Mr. Lund: I'll readily admit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a serious problem, and we will have to be looking at how we can accommodate those students, because certainly it will be necessary that we do find a way of accommodating them. We will be studying the issue. I don't know how much opportunity there is to put in more portables, but we will be looking at the overall situation.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Frank Janett

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize Frank Janett for his many colourful contributions to Canadian motorsport. Frank began bike racing in Calgary in 1934. He continued in this sport until 1940 when he became involved with the Model Ts, competing against such notables as Wetaskiwin's Stan Reynolds. In 1941 the Canadian government heard about Frank's success at racing and decided that he'd make a fine naval officer. Although Frank did rise to the rank of petty officer, he said that his only activity as a fighting man was when he fought to get in and when he fought to get out.

By 1946 he'd returned to racing his Model T. He vividly recalls the time at Lethbridge when he was banned from racing for life in that city because during one race he suddenly veered his car into the town's brand spanking new aluminum infield fence just as he came out of a turn. He admits that there was plenty of damage to his car and some to his bruised ego. By 1948 Frank had graduated to sprint cars, and this was when the trouble really started. He tells about when he, Jim Ward, and George Lemay were escorted out of the town of Olds for rerunning a race on main street after midnight.

Paul Jefferies

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, it's always a pleasure for me to rise to brag a little about some of the outstanding people we have in Calgary-Currie. One such person is Paul Jefferies, proprietor of the Smilin' Buddha Tattoo shop located in the Marda Loop. Paul started in Vancouver, graduating as an honours student at Vancouver Technical high school, but he was denied entrance to the Vancouver School of Art, so he went into automotive refinishing instead but eventually got into tattooing.

He opened his store in Calgary in 1978. Since then, Paul has twice won the world championship, as voted by his peers in 60 countries. Customers wait for weeks, even months to get a tattoo with Paul, paying hundreds of dollars per hour, and the lineups – indeed, the people sleeping on the sidewalks to get in on the first-come, first-served Saturday mornings – are well known to Calgary-Curriens. Paul is famous worldwide, receives government invitations, and has tattooed on every continent except Antarctica. His art is sold in major galleries worldwide. His T-shirt sales are thriving worldwide.

Congratulations to a big small-business success story, Mr. Paul Jefferies of Smilin' Buddha Tattoo.

Bell Walk for Kids

Mrs. O'Neill: Mr. Speaker, yesterday, on May 4, many of us enjoyed participating in the second annual Bell Walk for Kids in support of the Kids Help Phone, which operates across the country. To my knowledge Edmonton, Calgary, Red Deer, Fort McMurray, and Lethbridge were among the more than 30 communities across Canada. Kids Help Phone is Canada's only 24-hour, toll-free, bilingual, and anonymous phone counseling, referral, and Internet service for youth and children, who can call for help any time.

Yesterday's walkers numbered in the thousands across Alberta, and I would like especially to note that Claudia, age 8, and Jack, age 7, Claudia and Jack Norris, were among those who completed the five-kilometre walk. These walkers and their sponsors joined the major sponsors of Bell Canada, CTV, the Globe and Mail, Sympatico.ca, and members of the Canadian business community to support the provision of a sympathetic ear and professional advice to the nearly 1,000 Canadian children who call for help each day.

National Forest Week

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, this week is National Forest Week, an opportunity for all Canadians to learn about and consider the tremendous value of our forests. Today I would like to acknowledge National Forest Week by reminding the members of this House of the value of forests to Albertans.

For many people, especially in Alberta, forests are a means of making a living. Whether it is by harvesting the trees or trapping, hunting or tourism and ecotourism opportunities, forests contribute enormously to Alberta's economy. They are also an integral part of sustaining our ecosystem. From majestic old growth to newly planted seedlings, all have a role in ensuring the long-term viability of Alberta's ecosystem.

We also all have a responsibility to ensure that we preserve this viability for the long-term future. Our forests are a finite resource if they are not properly managed. They require our care and a commitment to ensure not just their economic but also their ecological sustainability for now and into the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Danielle Schnurer

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize Danielle Schnurer, who just this morning was awarded the highest honour bestowed by Alberta's 4-H program. Danielle was chosen as the Premier's award recipient from 133 of the province's top 4-H members during the annual 4-H selections program at Olds College, May 2 to 5. It was my distinct pleasure to present Danielle with the award and trophy on behalf of our Premier.

Danielle is a 17-year-old high school student from Elk Point, and she has excelled in Alberta's 4-H program. Danielle demonstrates the leadership, communication, and personal development skills that the 4-H program holds in high regard. For the last eight years Danielle has been an active member of the Elk Point Saddle Slickers and the Elk Point Multiclubs and has held positions at the executive level. She's also an avid participant in various regional and 4-H provincial activities. Danielle is an example of strength and leadership that will continue to take Alberta's agriculture industry forward for generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Gwen Klint

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to share with this Assembly today a heartfelt letter from Gwen Klint, who is a very special constituent that I am proud to know.

Tears of happiness are flowing down my face right now as I write this letter. I have just read the exciting news that the Alberta Government will pay for the cost of two drugs, Enbrel and Remicade, for those affected with rheumatoid arthritis. I am one of those people, and I have been paying for this drug without insurance.

I am 41 years old and I have had RA for ten years, two months after my baby was born. Prior to taking Enbrel, I was slowly becoming crippled. I was struggling to maintain my hopes and dreams, the role of a wife, mother, daughter, and community volunteer. After taking Enbrel, my life came back and my handicap is now irrelevant.

Paying for the drug without insurance has been a burden. I can't tell you enough how much I appreciate your valuable input that [may have] assisted the Minister of Health's decision; not only for me but for all of those unfortunate people who have been affected by this terrible disease, a disease not by choice. You have given us the Alberta Advantage and the key to life. Thank you, Mr. Bougher, Honourable Minister, and [to] the taxpayers of Alberta. Thank you, Gwen, for taking the time to write this beautiful letter.

Foothills Medical Centre

Dr. Taft: I rise today, Mr. Speaker, to recognize the hard work and dedication of the nurses and other support staff at the Foothills hospital in Calgary. Over the past few months the opposition has helped bring to light a number of health issues such as asbestos and toxic mold at the Foothills hospital. Despite the health risks involved in working in this environment, many nurses and other staff have continued to come to work and care for their patients. They come to work despite the fact that many of these workers have reported negative health effects. On unit 27 of the Foothills, where toxic mold was found, 62 out of a hundred nurses have reported health problems consistent with exposure to toxic molds.

Not only are many workers at the Foothills working through difficult conditions; they have also taken it upon themselves to fight for a cleaner and safer work environment. They do this not only for themselves but for the sake of their patients. This shows a willingness to go above and beyond the call of duty. Some of these workers have put their jobs on the line fighting for what they believe is in the best interests of the patients.

I believe this dedication should be commended. It is an example to all Albertans of the importance of fighting for worker and public health.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table an Alberta Health and Wellness document dated January 10, 2003, showing a steady increase in the number of Albertans waiting for MRI scans, this number jumping very radically during the year 2002.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May 1, of course, is also International Workers' Day.

I'm tabling copies of a New Democrat FOIP request dated January 3, 2003, addressed to Alberta Finance and Alberta Treasury Branches.

The Speaker: Hon. member, no need to correct the chair. The chair is aware that May 1 was that, but today is May 5. That was four days ago.

Mr. Mason: I was just adding. Sorry. I apologize.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today, and both of them are related. The first is 192 signatures on the Alberta Liberal petition to reinstate natural gas rebates from citizens from Okotoks, Turner Valley, Calgary, and Lethbridge.

The additional tabling is also in regard to this matter, and this is 322 signatures from Redwater and Elk Point.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four letters to table today. The first is a copy of a letter to the Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark from Allison Jackson and Shannan Vig, Aldergrove parent advocates, urging the members to voice their concerns about education funding in the Legislature.

The second is from Darlene Boyer, who is concerned about the future of education given the proposed education budget.

The third is from Tammy Rachynski, who is concerned and wants to know why we can't have a needs-based budget allocation instead of splitting a defined fiscal amount.

The fourth is from Shandell Switzer, who is concerned about the budget announcements and the impact that it's going to have on education, and this is a letter to the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter to the Premier from Linda Wilson, who is very concerned about the province's school funding and is asking for the Minister of Learning's resignation because she feels he is "inadequately prepared to deal with such a critical and important portfolio."

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document has been deposited with the office of the Clerk by the Hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness: response to questions raised during Oral Question Period on April 22, 2003, by Dr. Pannu, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Bill 206

Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003

[Debate adjourned April 28: Mr. Pham speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I was making the point as to why I oppose this bill before my time ran out. Bill 206 if passed may not respect due process and individual rights, things that are very important to all of us. When we talk about due process and protecting rights, we have to talk about it seriously, and this means giving rights to people we may not necessarily want to give rights to. It means raising reasons and rationality above our emotions. Bill 206 fails this test.

Bill 206 has no process through which a full airing of evidence will take place. It punishes without trial. It raises expediency above justice. Mr. Speaker, justice is not about expediency, and it is not a lower priority than expediency. Justice is the highest priority. It is the guiding principle which requires our legal system to do the right things for the right reasons. This means time for a fair hearing. It means impartiality, and it means due process. Bill 206 forsakes all of these, and accordingly this House should not support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, thank you for allowing me to enter debate on Bill 206. I support this bill, and it's my sincere hope that it passes second reading today. I would like to thank the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo for having the courage and the compassion to introduce this bill. This bill is a commonsense approach to getting rid of at least some prostitution-related activity in our communities, and I want to stress that prostitution isn't a problem that is located only within the districts of Edmonton and Calgary. It's a problem that directly or indirectly touches every community in Alberta.

While it's true that most of the prostitution in the province takes place in larger cities, we shouldn't believe that smaller cities like Red Deer are untouched by prostitution, and we should also realize that many of the prostitutes that walk the streets of our province have been ripped away from their families in smaller communities, either by the lure and addiction of drugs and alcohol or by kidnapping or by the empty promises made by gang leaders and pimps or by running away and getting caught on the streets with no money or, finally, by a misguided sense of the things one must do to support themselves or their family.

A story in the March 15 edition of the Red Deer Advocate entitled Girls at Risk outlines the concerns that many have about prostitution, especially the well-being of young teenagers who are lured and forced into this world. As the article notes, it isn't uncommon for young girls from Red Deer who are lured into prostitution to end up on the streets of Calgary, Edmonton, and Vancouver. Many young girls also end up working as prostitutes right in Red Deer with escort services that, in reality, are only cover-ups for prostitution-related activities. As it stands, Bill 206 would have little effect on this sort of prostitution. However, Bill 206 would have the positive effect of reducing street prostitution and, thus, would have the effect of reducing the amount of young girls who are lured away from Red Deer or other smaller cities and towns in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, many families across Alberta have experienced the pain and suffering of watching a loved one ruin his or her life by succumbing to the world of drugs, crime, and prostitution. We also know that none of this would continue were it not for johns who by hiring and exploiting prostitutes are complicit in their degradation. We know that we're never going to get rid of prostitution, and we know that whatever steps we take, pimps and johns are going to be enterprising enough to work around them to a certain extent. That being the case, however, we need to think about what sorts of steps we can take to both reduce street prostitution and make communities where prostitutes and johns traditionally interact safer for Albertans and their families. It is in this light that I think we ought to consider Bill 206.

It is hardly a sweeping piece of legislation, but it is something that our police services can use as a deterrent against engaging in those sorts of activities. As I understand it, it isn't as though we will have police officers patrolling the streets, trying to catch johns in the act on a nightly basis. Instead, as is done in other jurisdictions, this sort of legislation would be used more to facilitate sting operations. An undercover police officer would be wearing a wiretap and patrolling the streets in the guise of a prostitute. When a john propositions the officer, that's when the police would apprehend the john and remove him from his vehicle. We know that these sorts of sting operations wouldn't happen on a nightly basis. Instead, at times and places that the police choose, they would put officers out there to nab johns in the act. Johns would know that cops wouldn't be out every night, but they wouldn't know when the cops would be out. They could take their chances, but we know that many will decide to just stay away, perhaps even to stay home with their families.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that these johns will think twice. The increased risk of going to jail, losing their vehicle, or having to endure the shame and humiliation of being a known john will be enough to keep some at home, and for those who continue, the best thing we can do is to get them into john school, where they can see firsthand the harmful effects of the whole prostitution industry. After all, I would imagine that johns would pick up prostitutes because of a need to satisfy sexual addiction and not consciously for vicious purposes and haven't done much thinking about the hidden side of prostitution. They're there for sex and for their own gratification. They will rarely think about the trauma and loss of self-esteem of that single sex act for the prostitute, let alone the fact that the prostitute is likely there because she is indebted to a drug dealer or is enslaved to a pimp.

A john wouldn't think about the fact that prostitutes who work for gangs not only help prop up moneymaking prostitution rings but drug and crime rings as well. A john likely does not think about the abortions that this prostitute has had to get from all the times she has become pregnant on the streets or the numerous assaults inflicted on her from johns who not only have a penchant for sex but for abuse as well or the prostitutes that get driven out to secluded lands near Ardrossan or the outskirts of Sherwood Park or Gibbons and are sexually abused, beaten, and left for dead in the middle of winter at the mercy of the weather, wild animals, and whomever finds them or the fact that many of these women walk out the door at 6 o'clock every evening with their kids at home either wondering where their mom is going or, worse, knowing full well where their mom is going. The john, I'll bet, rarely has thoughts about the fact that a street prostitute will spend many of her days either crying alone or making sure she is in a drug-induced stupor so that she can forget about the nightly abuse her body and mind are put through.

Mr. Speaker, the john is there for sex, but he's complicit in everything else that goes along with it, and it is all of this information that they learn in john school. If they aren't aware of or haven't taken the time to reflect upon the harm they cause and the seediness of the world they are involved in, they sure will be when they leave. At that point, it will be up to them to resist the urge to get back in the car and pick up another prostitute, but at least we've done our best to show them the morally objectionable content of picking up a prostitute.

Mr. Speaker, Theodore Roosevelt once said, "In any moment of decision the best thing you can do is the right thing, the next best thing is the wrong thing, and the worst thing you can do is nothing." Bill 206 doesn't solve the problem, but it puts one more tool in the box of our police services and has the potential to reduce prostitution to a greater degree. To do nothing is the worst thing we could do. This is a decisive moment. Bill 206 is the right thing to do. I therefore support this bill and urge all members to do so as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 206, which is a private member's bill dealing with the seizure of vehicles in prostitution-related events. There are a number of individuals who work in the community in my constituency and the constituency of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood and the constituency of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre who have been struggling with the impact of this problem for many years, and they, in general, are quite supportive of this bill. Mr. Michael Walters from the Community Action Project has indicated that this would be "a . . . useful tool to deal with these people who choose to disrespect our communities and endanger us as residents." That's a quote of another individual that he's passed on to us.

There are concerns relative to this bill. The foremost among those is the potential for someone to suffer a sanction without having an opportunity to have their day in court, and that is to say that the vehicle can be seized without a finding by a court of law. This is a troubling aspect of the bill. However, the research that we have done indicates that this has not been a significant problem where this legislation has existed in other jurisdictions, and there are opportunities for the release of the vehicle, including if the seizure of the vehicle will cause financial hardship.

We believe that the Legislature must strike a fine balance between supporting communities who are affected by prostitution and crime and at the same time continuing to advocate for proper controls on the activities of police and to propose real solutions to the root causes of prostitution and other activities in low-income neighbourhoods.

The income issue, the poverty issue, is a significant factor that we need to go much further towards addressing. We need to use a variety of tools. I recollect that the Cromdale beat office – it's not in Edmonton-Highlands; I believe it's in Edmonton-Norwood, but it certainly was in ward 3 when I represented ward 3 at the municipal level – had what I thought was a very simple, elegant, moving, and effective approach. They asked people in the community to donate things like disposable diapers at Christmastime, things that young mothers would need in their homes so that they did not have to go out on the street. The police collected the necessities of life for women who were working the street in order to provide for their children, and they provided them to these women at Christmastime. I thought that that was a really striking, simple, but profoundly effective bit of community policing at work. There are many approaches that need to be taken. Certainly, I think it's fair to say that communities are fed up to their teeth with the activities of johns in their communities, and they want some action.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to speak particularly long on this bill other than to indicate that it may in fact be an effective tool for communities and for police in order to deal with this problem, and we must provide these communities with real solutions. I am prepared to support this bill with a reservation that there is a concern about people being convicted or suffering a sanction without being convicted by a court. I think we need to monitor the results of this bill carefully should it be passed by this Assembly and make sure that it is used with discretion by police and that people's rights are not violated and see if, in fact, it can be an effective tool to help these communities with the serious problems they have. I believe that it has the potential to be an effective tool. I know that communities that face this problem every day believe that it can be an effective tool. On that basis, I am pleased to support Bill 206 at this time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to extend my appreciation to the two previous speakers this afternoon. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for bringing forward this important piece of legislation.

The issue of street prostitution hits very close to home for me and my constituents in Edmonton. Edmonton-Norwood, of course, we all know is inner city. I welcome any legislation that will deter or reduce prostitution, which continues to be a problem in my constituency of Edmonton-Norwood.

Even though I fully support Bill 206, I do believe Edmonton-Norwood has made tremendous strides in overcoming its problems associated with street prostitution, maybe as well as Edmonton-Highlands. For the community to progress even further, I believe that the citizens must make a conscious decision on what kind of community they want and to become even more active voicing their concerns.

Mr. Speaker, the members that spoke before me have described what Bill 206 will do and how it will help preserve and restore our communities. I would like to switch gears a little and talk today about what is currently going on to reduce street prostitution in my constituency and my community and how concerned individuals are making a difference in the lives of many women. Specifically, I want to discuss three organizations who support Bill 206 and the valuable work that they do. Before I talk on what community groups are doing to reduce prostitution, I would like to discuss what street prostitution does to a community and how individuals have taken responsibility for their society.

With prostitution often comes drug addiction. The two drugs most often related to prostitution are heroin and crack cocaine, which is both highly addictive and potentially deadly. The sex trade provides quick income for drug abusers. Most prostitutes are trapped in a cycle of violence, abuse that is detrimental not only to the individuals involved but to the entire community. Needles, crack pipes, used condoms are littered across neighbourhoods, and also they've been known to be found in schoolyards and playgrounds. Parents are constantly worrying about their children's well-being and that they might pick up some of these dangerous objects.

With all of the problems related to street prostitution and drug abuse, citizens of my constituency over the last couple of years have begun to organize and take back control of their neighbourhoods. Mr. Speaker, they do have to look a little further. One of the biggest things that citizens can do is not support pawnshops and not support triple X video outlets, and that comes from the heart of the community. It is this sense of community and responsibility at the grassroots level which will make the most positive effects in Edmonton-Norwood and similar constituencies and communities. Mr. Speaker, as a Legislature we must give much support to individuals and groups attempting to make a difference. Bill 206 does exactly that. It helps a strong network of groups battle to restore and preserve their communities.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of organizations that help prevent prostitution and help make a real difference in the lives of many dysfunctional and disenfranchised women. However, due to the time restrictions I'm only going to mention and describe some organizations that I personally know of who support Bill 206. The first organization I'd like to recognize is Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton, or the PAAFE. The PAAFE works with existing agencies to provide support for those in need of outreach services, transitional housing, and a connection to community resources. Also, community awareness is promoted through a number of initiatives, education, fund disbursement.

Mr. Speaker, the PAAFE, along with the Edmonton Police Service and Crown prosecutors, runs a prostitution awareness offenders' program or john school. It is an alternative measures program for first-time offenders charged with soliciting for the purposes of prostitution. The offender pays a $400 fee for a one-day course. Up until the day of the john school most johns think prostitution is a victimless crime. The perception usually changes once they're lectured for eight hours by former prostitutes and parents whose children have become ensnared in prostitution, along with inner-city residents who cope with the ugly reality of sex sold in their neighbourhoods. Out of the 1,524 men who have completed the course since 1996, only 20 have been charged again. These numbers are amazing, and I would like to commend the PAAFE for their great work. Alternative measures are a large component of Bill 206, and in Edmonton john school is the most popular form of alternative measure for the first-time offenders. Therefore, the PAAFE and their programs are a major part of the rehabilitation process of Bill 206.

The money from john school goes to fund a number of programs provided by the PAAFE. Some of these programs include counseling, recovery, educational supports, and the Individual Development Account project. All of these programs are aimed at women attempting to get out of the violent world of prostitution. Another important program provided by the PAAFE is COARSE, or Creating Options Aimed at Reducing Sexual Exploitation. This program is offered to women convicted of solicitation and who are ready to end their involvement in street prostitution. The PAAFE and a network of community and government partners work together with women to identify and overcome their barriers.

Mr. Speaker, the second organization I would like to recognize is the Edmonton City Centre Church Corporation and their program called Crossroads. The first aspect of the Crossroads program is street and community outreach. Working directly on streets and within the community, Crossroads staff become familiar with people engaged in street prostitution. Staff provide information on sex offenders, street safety and health, counseling, referrals, beverages, snacks, and warm clothing.

The second stage of this program is support and follow-up. Outreach workers maintain relationships with people they meet and provide ongoing support. This means such things as support at court hearings or hospitals, helping to find housing, providing access to community services, parental outreach, and encouragement.

The third aspect is transitional housing, which provides support, assistance, and shelter for youth, women, single mothers, and transgendered individuals involved in prostitution. The housing service provides residents with the stability and supports necessary to address the issues that lead to prostitution.

Mr. Speaker, the fourth and final aspect of the Crossroads program is prevention, information, and education. Through presentations and workshops Crossroads educates youth and professionals about myths and dangers surrounding prostitution.

Each year Crossroads provides supports, safety, and hope to over 500 youths and adults trapped in abuse, health risk, and sexual exploitation involved with prostitution. I would also like to add that over 10 percent of the people in the program are children. Crossroads fully supports Bill 206 because it is legislation that addresses the demand side of sexual exploitation. Bill 206 gives law enforcement another tool for battling street prostitution, something that Crossroads has been doing for years.

Another organization that is an excellent example of citizens taking responsibility for their neighbourhoods is Alberta Avenue. Through the neighbourhood patrol program my constituency has seen a number of positive effects, a reduction of crime being one of them. The Alberta Avenue patrol started in 1997 in response to community concerns about increased crime in the area. East of 97th Street 118th Avenue is characterized by pawnshops, bars, tattoo parlours, prostitution, and drug-related activities. These activities naturally spill over into the surrounding residential neighbourhoods. Neighbourhood patrol is a community-based initiative where citizens patrol their own neighbourhoods observing and reporting suspicious activity. The mission of the group is crime prevention leading to a safer community.

It is organizations like PAAFE, Edmonton City Centre Church Corporation, Alberta Avenue, the grassroots level that are making a real difference in the complicated battle against street prostitution. Bill 206 is a piece of legislation that will help these and similar organizations in their pursuit of stronger and safer communities by discouraging johns from cruising their streets. It should be noted that all three of these organizations are fully supporting Bill 206. Bill 206 is seen as a fundamental tool in restoring and preserving communities ruined by street prostitution, and for that reason I urge all of my colleagues to support Bill 206.

Mr. Speaker, I want to point out what I've noticed from some beat police that I never knew. Some of the transport trucks that come in, dolly off their trailer at a truck stop, and come up and down with their tractor trailer, and they pick up prostitutes.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and speak to the bill which is before us today and join in the debate on Bill 206. I'd like to take this opportunity as well to express my gratitude to the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for all the hard work that he has done in order to put forward what I consider to be a very important piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, for as long as there have been people in this world of ours, there have always been those who prey on others. There are those who make others in our society weak and vulnerable targets for their own pleasure, and in many circumstances they are willing to put others in very dangerous, life-threatening situations. This happens when johns commit acts of violence against women and others that are involved in prostitution. These horrific acts, I believe, can be emotionally and physically damaging. So that's why, quite frankly, I regard Bill 206 to be very useful in that it will over time make basic needed changes to the structures and attitudes within our community so that we can assist in overcoming the societal dysfunctions that cause men to commit violent acts against others through prostitution.

This issue in itself is very saddening, Mr. Speaker. We just heard the previous speaker speak about a situation that he saw in his community in regard to this issue. I know that we don't often like to mention too much about the media in the Legislature, but I found it very sad to listen to the radio on my drive up here this morning bright and early about the children that went to play in a playground in a community in Calgary who experienced some items very threatening to their health, like condoms and used needles and whatnot, and of course parents have become very angry about that. That's very current; that's today. As I said, we heard another community issue here earlier, and I find that to be very sad.

Those working in the prostitution industry I think experience daily horror in their lives too. I think that through this bill the Member for Calgary-Buffalo has put forward his view as a former police officer about what we must do to end this type of violence but also to help make our communities safer, especially safer for our children. He examined, I believe, a situation that he saw firsthand on the streets, and he's endeavouring to change it in the most practical, cost-efficient manner possible. I also think that we must address the many gaps that exist within the current legal system that allow this type of violence to occur. The result of the act, of this legislation will substantially improve the issues that are involved in prostitution.

Mr. Speaker, when I was asked to speak to this bill by the hon. member, I was trying to think of an analogy that I thought may reflect in some way why I view the principles of this bill to be important. I thought of the proceeds of crime legislation, where money that is obtained through crime by drug dealers and is used by those same dealers to purchase cars, yachts, elaborate homes, or whatever – and I don't really want to oversimplify what the legislation is about, but my understanding is that those proceeds of crime may be seized through a long process. Eventually, at the end of the day, they become the property of the government, and then that property can be sold, and the money can be put back into the community for good use. I believe that this would be very much like this bill, where I understand from the member that on the second and repeat offences vehicles of johns would be seized and be auctioned, and the proceeds would be returned to the community, and they would be returned, I think the hon. member had said, for victims services initiatives in the community.

Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I think that many police sources would tell you that an automobile that is used by johns to commit the offence of prostitution not only takes the johns to the prostitutes but is also the place where the sexual liaison occurs. So taking the ability for the john to go to the offence and commit the offence by virtually taking away his vehicle I believe makes good sense.

Also, Mr. Speaker, when I was thinking about this bill, I thought about 15 or 20 years ago. From what I recall, in Calgary in many cases massage parlours were considered to be houses of prostitution, and laws were put in place at that time to reduce prostitution through the removal of a legal massage parlor that was illegal, and to some extent I think that that forced the whole industry out on to the street, which is what we're experiencing today. From what I recall, I think there was a sidetrack to that as well, though I think that the escort industry had flourished as well. Now what we see is that the sex trade has evolved to the point where other measures through legislation are necessary if we're going to reduce the problem even further. I know that where we create one action, we create other reactions to that, and that may be what we're dealing with even these 15 or 20 years later.

In some smaller communities, as well, Mr. Speaker, I know that people know each other very, very well. They know which church a person happens to go to, they know whether or not that person drinks or doesn't drink, they even know which ball team that person may cheer for, and the list goes on because people know each other so well. I believe that this all has an effect on that person's behaviour because if you do something wrong in a small community and you do something that's very, very wrong in a small community, you're often shunned.

Nowadays as our cities become larger and larger, people tend to become isolated from one another, and I'm quite distressed about what I see, you know, even the anonymous way that people can procure others into acts that can be criminal acts or violent acts against others, even through the Internet. With our cities becoming larger and larger and more complex, people often don't even know their next-door neighbour. So I think we need to be more creative in our legislation to curb or limit activities and behaviours that are seriously detrimental to others, and that is what this legislation does. It creates some accountability for people. I believe that taking cars from johns, Mr. Speaker, will bring back an element of shunning to the community in larger, complex cities.

I know that there's been a lot of debate on this bill. You know, I've listened in the House as people said to proceed slowly with the way that this legislation would be enacted, and I think the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has been very prudent and forthright in saying that that's exactly what his intent will be.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that people support this bill and would urge my colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 206. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a few concerns about Bill 206, and before I outline those for the members of this Assembly, I wish to start out by saying that I think the Member for Calgary-Buffalo certainly deserves some applause for the work that he's done in this area. I think Bill 206 is certainly well intentioned. However, I would caution members of this Assembly to look very seriously at the wording of Bill 206 before they decide how they're going to vote with respect to Bill 206.

Certainly, prostitution, street crime, drug trafficking are endemic in the inner cities in Alberta's two larger cities and to a lesser extent in the other major urban areas. However, notwithstanding the gravity of this problem, we must look very carefully at how we eradicate these problems. As a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned any time we tinker with the presumption of innocence. Presumption of innocence is a hallmark of our criminal justice system, and one ought not tinker with this without very seriously contemplating what the manifestations and what the potential outcomes will be when one tinkers with the presumption of innocence.

This bill, as I understand it – and I've talked to the hon. member, and I've talked to the police representatives who are lobbying in favour of this bill – certainly does modify the presumption of innocence. Potentially one's mode of transportation will be seized before one is given the opportunity to go to court and explain to a trier of fact what one was doing when the alleged offence occurred. I think this is serious. This is serious when guilt is determined before a trial, when guilt is determined before one has been able to seek proper legal representation. These are serious matters, Mr. Speaker, and I think we need to look at these very seriously.

My other big concern with respect to Bill 206 is – and I think the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View talked about this last week – the potential inequality of penalties. Potentially two individuals who are alleged to have committed the same offence could face drastically different economic penalty with respect to what they would forfeit. Theoretically an individual who's cruising the streets looking for prostitutes in an old beat-up jalopy may forfeit a vehicle of minimal or nominal value. Conversely, a person with higher means could forfeit a very expensive luxury sedan automobile.

One of the principles of law is that the outcome and the penalty ought to be similar for a similar offence. We see with Bill 206 potentially huge disparity, Mr. Speaker, where a person alleged to have committed an offence could forfeit a very valuable automobile as opposed to another individual charged with the identical offence at the identical time could forfeit a vehicle of nominal or insignificant value.

I support what the Member for Calgary-Buffalo is trying to do. I have a problem because I still haven't decided how I'm going to vote on this particular bill. I think this bill is well intentioned, and I believe it addresses a very serious problem, a problem that needs to be addressed, but I'm not entirely convinced that this is the appropriate way to do it. As a person who believes in the presumption of innocence and a person who believes that individuals charged with offences ought to be convicted before punished and that the punishment ought to be similar, I have concerns about this bill. I encourage all hon. members to think very carefully about those matters before they decide how they're going to vote this afternoon.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity also to rise today and offer some of my comments with regard to Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. Before I begin, I'd like to thank my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo for the hard work that he's put in in order to introduce this piece of legislation in our province.

Prostitution, Mr. Speaker, is a problem which has plagued almost all nations and communities around the world. It's an issue which does not discriminate between rich and poor countries, developed or nondeveloped. Some countries have chosen to tolerate it while others have chosen to combat it, and they've realized that problems associated with prostitution are just too great to be ignored. I am pleased that our country and our province are among those who have not shied away from dealing with prostitution, because it is truly one of the biggest issues which affects not only the people who partake in these activities but also the communities in which these activities take place. Problems associated with prostitution directly and indirectly affect all of those involved: the prostitutes, the johns, and the local citizens.

In my comments today I would like to talk about some of the biggest victims of prostitution, the prostitutes themselves. Prostitutes, Mr. Speaker, are no different than any other individual found within our neighbourhoods. They are someone else's daughter, sister, cousin, and in some cases mother. The vast majority of them enter the prostitution trade not by choice but, rather, because they see it as a means which enables them to make ends meet. However, many young prostitutes are not mature enough to realize how dangerous the trade can really be when they get involved. By that time, most of them become so financially dependent on the lifestyle that they find it impossible to reform and pursue other safer avenues.

Most prostitutes in Alberta enter the trade at a very young age. The vast majority of these girls suffer from social and family-related problems including childhood sexual abuse, leaving home early, poor financial situations, and substance abuse. Most of them suffer from extremely low self-esteem, which only is worsened by the abuse that they incur as the result of the lifestyle that is associated with prostitution.

According to numerous studies conducted all across Canada, age is not a factor which determines whether young girls decide to enter the prostitution business. However, it has been proven that most prostitutes enter the business during their mid teens. One study conducted in Manitoba in 1998 entitled Antecedents to Prostitution determined that the average age at which girls entered the trade in that province was 14.1. A similar study conducted in British Columbia estimated that the average at which young girls entered the trade in the city of Vancouver was approximately 16.3. Alberta's Department of Children's Services estimates that 10 to 12 percent of those involved in street prostitution within our province are children. This figure is not much different than the average age of new prostitutes found all across Canada.

Even though there are some different regional issues associated with the age when young girls enter the trade, the average age in Canada is found to be between 14 and 16. This is a time, Mr. Speaker, when young teenage girls are beginning to discover themselves, as many members in this House who have teenage daughters already know. It is an age when young girls become somewhat rebellious towards their parents. At this stage in their life, they're undergoing an important phase during which they are in need of committed and caring parents who can provide them and guide them towards bright and successful futures. Mr. Speaker, not all families provide this kind of necessary support for their children.

As we know, there are parents within our communities who either don't know how to or in other instances simply don't provide the care their children need in order to become healthy and happy. As a result, many young girls who turn to prostitution come from broken homes or dysfunctional family environments in which they are physically or sexually molested by their parents or other relatives. Also as a result, many of them run away from their homes in order to escape their abusers and in search of a better living environment. Their new home usually becomes the street, and prostitution becomes their only avenue for survival.

The Antecedents to Prostitution study conducted in Manitoba revealed some very chilling figures which indicate that 68 percent of all prostitutes in that province are victims of childhood abuse. The same study also indicates that children who come from sexually abusive households are twice as likely to engage in prostitution as compared to children who have not experienced childhood sexual abuse. Once on the street these young girls usually find that their employment opportunities are extremely limited due to the fact that many of them lack even the basic high school education. Without having any hope of attaining a proper job and acquiring even a basic form of shelter, these already vulnerable young girls turn to prostitution as an easy way to make money.

The heartbreaking factor, Mr. Speaker, about the unfortunate circumstances in which these young girls find themselves is that while many of them leave their homes in order to escape sexual or other forms of abuse, they find that in the streets it is no less of a forgiving environment. What is worse is that many of these girls find that they are no longer abused by their parents or relatives but, rather, by sexual predators, many of whom are commonly referred to as johns. It seems that the only difference in this case is that the abuser is now a stranger who has even less regard for their welfare than their parents or relative.

To make matters worse, while living in abusive family environments, many young girls become habitual abusers of alcohol, drugs, and other dangerous substances. One of the reasons why they turn to substance abuse while living at home is because they find that it helps them deal with the stresses related to physical and sexual violence. Many young girls leave their homes and turn to prostitution in order to support their habits. Once on the street many of them become even worse substance addicts who find that alcohol and drugs are the only ways that they can deal with the mental and physical degradation associated with prostitution. As a result, prostitutes find themselves caught up in a vicious circle highlighted by substance and sexual abuse. Substance abuse leads to prostitution, Mr. Speaker, and prostitution leads to further substance abuse.

Prostitutes in Alberta are no exception to this rule. According to a study administered by the Edmonton Social Planning Council in 1993, only 8 percent of those interviewed said that they do not use drugs or alcohol, while 29 percent use a substance in order to work, and 44 percent say that they are working in order to pay for their drug and alcohol addiction.

Some may say that even though this is a horrible lifestyle, we don't have a really big prostitution problem in Alberta. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, we have a serious prostitution problem especially within our urban communities, and I believe that it is time that this government did something to seriously address it. According to last year's interprovincial crime statistics accumulated by the University of British Columbia's Faculty of Commerce and Business, when it comes to prostitution-related crimes, Alberta fares very badly when compared to our other Canadian counterparts. The statistics indicate that on a per capita basis there were 159 instances of prostitution-related crime in Alberta in the year 2000. This places Alberta a close second to Saskatchewan, which during the same year had 166.5 instances of prostitution-related crime. What is even scarier is that prostitution in Alberta has been on the upswing since the mid-90s. In 1994-95 Alberta ranked fourth with regard to prostitution-related crimes on a per capita scale. I'm not certain exactly why Alberta has become so attractive to street prostitutes over the past seven years. I'm sure that our economic prosperity has something to do with it, but I'm certain that we have to do everything in our power to curb the problem before it gets out of hand.

In order to accomplish this goal, Mr. Speaker, we have to focus our attention on the root of the problem: the johns. Just as any other business, prostitution itself is based on the basic principle of supply and demand. In this case, I believe that if we're going to try and minimize prostitution-related crimes in Alberta, we need to focus on discouraging the demand, which is again represented by the johns.

Bill 206 is an excellent avenue which this government can use to combat prostitution, because it allows peace officers to seize the vehicles of those who are found guilty of soliciting prostitutes. By threatening to take away one of their essential tools and modes of transportation, I believe this piece of legislation will provide the necessary deterrent, which will make johns think twice about their dangerous activities. Just as any other sexual predators, Mr. Speaker, johns not only take advantage of young and vulnerable girls who suffer from previous physical and sexual abuse, but they also have a very destructive effect upon our communities. They prey upon other people's weaknesses and misfortunes, and they create a dangerous and unhealthy environment in which no child should have to grow up.

In the final analysis, I believe that Bill 206 will help us to ensure that we have some of the necessary tools in place to discourage sexual offenders and protect vulnerable young girls and curb the threat of prostitution and keep our communities safe. In light of this I urge all my colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 206.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 206. I will support this bill in second reading largely because it provides a new step that law enforcement officers can take in the reduction of prostitution. The bill will give law enforcement officers the ability to confiscate vehicles of johns caught in the act of propositioning a street prostitute from their vehicle. The bill will encourage these johns to agree to take part in an alternative measure program like john school, where they will realize the full social cost of prostitution, especially as it relates to the exploitation of women and young girls, the proliferation of gangs, and the spread of various sorts of crime. When the offender completes john school, his vehicle will be returned to him.

One of the red flags that has been raised about Bill 206 both within the Legislature and in the local media is that the bill holds the potential to trample the rights of citizens and take away due process for those citizens. I would like to suggest that while these concerns are valid, there are equally valid reasons and precedents for removing johns from their vehicle immediately if they are caught in the act of propositioning a prostitute.

First, the obvious precedent we have is drunk driving. If a police officer suspects that a driver has been drinking and is over the legal limit, he can remove the driver from the vehicle and impound the vehicle. The reason for this: the potential harm that the driver may cause far outweighs their right to drive or their right to take their car home, at least temporarily. It is true that a driver will get the car back, but if they are found guilty of drunk driving, they will be forced to hand over their driver's licence and will be unable to drive legally for a set amount of time.

Given this, we now have a standard by which we can judge Bill 206. If the police officer feels that the potential harm that may be caused by the driver should they be allowed to continue on far outweighs the right of the driver to continue on, then the police officer ought to be allowed to apprehend the vehicle of the driver.

Well, then let's talk about the potential harm that may be caused by the john: harm to the prostitute, harm to the members of the community that the john is cruising. First, harm to the prostitute. Oftentimes we are talking about young women, still girls in many aspects, who are abused nightly. We are talking about people who likely have physical, psychological, and emotional problems. These individuals are people who lose control of their lives and are put in compromising situations.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, it might be pertinent to consider some statistics, all taken from the report by the Federal/Provincial/Territorial Working Group on Prostitution. Forty percent of sex-trade workers interviewed carried a weapon while working on the street. Between 1991 and 1995 18 prostitutes were implicated in the deaths of 10 johns, one pimp, and five other individuals in Canada. The final information from consultants appeared to support the assumption that roughly 10 to 15 percent of prostitutes on the street are youth. These stats clearly show that harm is done to prostitutes and by prostitutes.

Second, let's consider the harm to members of the community where street prostitution is pervasive. We all read the story of the young Calgarian girl who asked her dad to help her blow up a balloon, and when the father went to help, he realized the balloon was a used condom she had picked up in the backyard. I don't think I could begin to imagine the rage that this young girl's parents feel, but I know that it is something they should not have to put up with in the community. We also heard the numerous stories of mothers who, while walking down the street with their children, have to put up with the humiliation of johns pulling over and asking them how much they charge for a certain sexual service.

One of the roles of the government is to ensure that we provide a safe and healthy atmosphere in which parents can raise their children. Our job is not to make choices for those parents but to ensure that we take steps which (a) do not interfere with the parents' ability to make good choices and (b) set the legal ground rules for action within our communities. These laws must be laws which in the end allow our communities to flourish. Getting tougher on street prostitution is one way to do this.

A short look at the Edmonton Police Service web site shows that most johns who cruise known strips do not come from the area. They come from other areas of the city or from outside the city and denigrate the community around the strip. I guess someone forgot to tell the johns that these communities are not there just to provide sex. I guess someone forgot to tell the johns that these communities are filled with earnest . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a)(i) our rules now provide for up to five minutes for the hon. sponsor of the bill to conclude debate. So I now want to call on the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to briefly provide the Assembly with some highlights of Bill 206. Bill 206 will create safer and healthier communities for children and families. It'll assist young females and males in prostitution, removing them from the street through the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. It'll reduce sexual assaults and physical abuse of women and children trapped in a world of drug and alcohol abuse. It'll provide a deterrent that is strong enough to make the offender think of his actions and the criminal offence he's about to commit. It provides an alternative measures program to educate sex-trade offenders on the realities of the sex-trade industry. It provides the community with an opportunity for offenders to help clean up the very community they've committed the criminal offence in. It provides for the release of the vehicle if the seizure created a financial hardship to a family, including a mom or a child. As well, it provides a strong and harsh deterrent in the seizure of one's motor vehicle on second or subsequent offences. It provides the policing community with another tool for enforcement and provides community associations or community leagues with the ability to partner with the police and Crown prosecutors in removing the sex-trade drug industry from their communities. Again, it creates safer and healthier communities for our children and families to live and reside in.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to provide you with some recent statistics from the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton, which held a prostitution offender program, which is the john school that they hold here in Edmonton. The last school was held on April 26, and I received some statistics from them when they advised the group of individuals that were attending, having been picked up for communication for the purpose of prostitution here in Edmonton. After they had been given a brief outline of Bill 206, 69 percent of these individuals were in favour of Bill 206. The question was asked of them: would knowing of Bill 206 deter you? Ninety-four percent of these offenders said that, yes, it would deter them. They were asked: what was most effective for first-time offenders? Ninety-four percent of them agreed that a prostitution offender program or alternative measures program would be very successful.

So, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I'd just like to state that prostitution teaches several wrong messages, among them the legitimization of females as victims. These women are stigmatized and disdained while their customers seem to be forgiven of any involvement in the current climate of public opinion. Prostitution also seems to create an attitude among men that women are inherently inferior. Any antiprostitution activity should include a re-educational component that counters this attitude. One of the main goals of this government is to provide safe communities to live and raise families in. I strongly believe that Bill 206 will contribute to this goal and urge all members to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank all the hon. members who rose in debate on Bill 206 as well as the over 1,500 submissions from residents, community associations, and community leagues throughout the province who submitted letters to MLAs and to myself regarding Bill 206.

I would like to now call the question.

Bill 207

Municipal Government (Councillor Disclosure and Protection) Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to begin the debate on Bill 207, the Municipal Government (Councillor Disclosure and Protection) Amendment Act, 2003. I believe that Bill 207 is a very important bill, and I hope all members will give it full consideration. I realize that this bill may be a little difficult to explain properly, at least for me anyway, and I admit right up front that I haven't perhaps done the best job of explaining it, and as a result there has been some confusion and objections to it accordingly. I mean, just look at the title. The title itself is confusing.

Let me just start by assuring everyone that this bill is empowering legislation only. It is not forcing anything on or requiring anything of anybody. Those municipalities that wish to take advantage of its benefits have to accept a few concomitant responsibilities along with those benefits as basically a package deal, but no one has to take any deal at all. They're free to ignore it and continue on as they always have if they choose to do so.

Secondly, Bill 207 does not propose sweeping changes but in fact only relatively minor changes. Basically, the two responsibilities I will talk about are already in the MGA, but since few municipalities have implemented these responsibilities themselves, it appears that there is insufficient incentive for them to do so. Bill 207 proposes to increase that incentive to encourage municipalities to voluntarily implement these two responsibilities, which in my view would be very beneficial to all Albertans. In return for that, they get an important benefit.

A third important point to remember in this debate is that Bill 207 merely asks for essentially one of the same rights, one of the same benefits, and two of the same responsibilities that we as MLAs already have.

The purpose of Bill 207 is really just to encourage within municipalities some of the fundamental notions underlying modern democracy and good governance such as how to create and maintain public trust and confidence in public servants. Mr. Speaker, whether we are here in this House in the capacity of an MLA or in Ottawa as an MP or at city hall as a councillor or reeve or alderman, what we have in common is that we were elected by our peers to serve them and to safeguard their interests. We earned their trust and received their votes, and now it is our responsibility to act in such a way that we can retain the electorate's confidence that we can represent it well. This is true at all levels of government, whether federal, provincial, or municipal.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that Bill 207 by and large does not in any way attempt to introduce new untried or untested legislation that would in any way fundamentally alter how the municipalities are governed or how municipalities govern themselves. No, to the contrary. Most of the provisions of Bill 207 are already incorporated in the Municipal Government Act. The one extension proposed that does not already exist would be to give municipal councillors the opportunity to have the same degree of protection from legal threat and therefore the same peace of mind that we currently give ourselves as provincial politicians and that MPs have as well, and that is the protection of qualified privilege.

Let me begin by taking a few moments to discuss those provisions of the bill which are already in the books, the MG Act, the disclosure and to a degree the immunity prongs. First of all, Mr. Speaker, everyone here is familiar with the disclosure statements MLAs have to file once a year. While we may grumble a bit at the paperwork, I would like us to look at it as something that is to our benefit. In addition to submitting these forms, we also meet with the Ethics Commissioner, and all this is done to make sure that there cannot even be the perception of any conflict of interest. It builds up the public's confidence in us as their provincial government. This is an integral part of our government's business plan, goal 9 in fact, which reads in part that "Alberta will have a financially stable, open and accountable government." Put differently, the ethics and disclosure requirements which we as MLAs must comply with are part and parcel of the trust the public has invested in us.

Now, there's already a similar provision in the Municipal Government Act. Section 171 authorizes municipal councillors to pass bylaws requiring that each councillor file disclosure statements. What section 171 does not do is mandate that each municipality pass such a bylaw. Rather, it leaves that decision to the discretion of each individual municipality and its residents, and this does not change under Bill 207.

By the same token, Mr. Speaker, section 535 of the MGA also remains largely the same under Bill 207. This section frees councillors from liability for loss or damage caused by anything they say or do as long as they are acting in what they believe is the best interests of the public and the cause of action is not an accusation of defamation. This is where I would like us to bestow upon municipal councillors something that's akin to the kind of protection with strings attached that we have in the House.

Let me explain why I view this as a needed change. It is well documented and a much-lamented fact that ours is an increasingly litigious society. Whether it's due to oversensitivity, political correctness, or some other factor, I don't know. I don't think that going into great detail about this is necessary, and I'm sure that each and every one of us in the House this afternoon can think of several major lawsuits that we've heard of or read about in recent years accusing people of doing all sorts of things, some that had merit but many that did not. Having said that, it does seem to me that the chances of finding yourself in a whole lot of financial trouble because of something you might have let slip out without thinking first or because of what someone thought you said or just because someone is trying to bully you or threaten you into doing what they want are much greater today than, say, 10 or 20 years ago. This is a problem for individuals, for corporations, and for government. Even if you didn't say what you're being accused of having said, the mere fact that someone thinks so and decides to take legal action is going to cause you a great deal of trouble for quite some time as well as cost you a lot of money to defend yourself.

Those of us who are in politics are well aware of how in the heat of the moment, as they say, a tongue might slip, and all of a sudden you realize that you've said something that perhaps you really ought not to have said at all. It might have been something hurtful, something mean-spirited, or, in a worst-case scenario, something you thought was true but later turned out not to be so. In public life, where so much of what we say and do is subject to public scrutiny, careers in the public service can be severely damaged or even destroyed by such accusations, true or not.

As MLAs we have processes and procedures that allow for retractions, apologies, and so on and let us move on with government business. Not so for our municipal counterparts. They might be faced with people wanting a large sum of money, wishing to drag out an issue for political reasons, trying to force them from office. Also, they are not protected with a government fund for legal expenses as we are, and they might not be able to defend themselves properly.

With this in mind, how might a councillor react given this threat? Well, quite frankly, I know that in today's litigious climate councillors sometimes opt not to speak up at all during council meetings for fear that what they say can or will be taken out of context, misinterpreted, or used against them in a frivolous and baseless lawsuit. If they do speak up and offer their honest questions or opinions, how could they ever be able to prove what they said or didn't say if someone ever accused them of anything? How would they be able to prove their innocence against an aggressive attack where no record exists of what was actually said. It would basically be the word of the accuser against that of the accused, which leaves the damage done to the accused in most cases if there is no record of what was said and no apology is forthcoming. This could easily become a lengthy court proceeding, not to mention costly in more ways than one with the poor councillor in a very difficult and personally expensive position all the way through.

So how do you avoid such situations to the greatest extent possible? Well, as I mentioned, one way is for councillors to decide to just not speak. This is, of course, not a very good or practical solution. It is most definitely anathema to even the most basic of notions of representative democracy. Another way which I believe would solve much of the dilemma at hand is to establish a publicly accessible record of what was actually said during council proceedings, which is what this bill proposes and encourages.

Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that there are some concerns that to create and maintain such a public record would be a costly affair. For the record I'd like to appease everyone's fears and assure you that actually establishing a public record is not necessarily all that expensive at all. We rely on technology in much of our daily routines and activities, and I think we all have some awareness of how prices always become more reasonable as time passes. So it is with a variety of modern voice-recognition software that could create printed transcripts almost as fast as a person speaks or video and similar equipment. A video tape of proceedings would suffice, and the cost of this would be very minimal. Again, it is up to the municipalities to decide what is needed, in what format, and to what extent if they want to do this at all. A public record doesn't have to be a verbatim written transcript. An audio or video recording would be just as useful and would accomplish the same thing as would a Hansard-like transcript.

Well, at this point I'm out of time, so I'm going to listen to the rest of the debate, Mr. Speaker, and I'll make some closing comments after. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise today and join the debate on Bill 207. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie for bringing forward this innovative piece of legislation. Bill 207 proposes three main objectives: first, that municipal councillors file disclosure statements similar to disclosure requirements for Members of the Legislative Assembly; second, that municipal councillors maintain a public record of proceedings either in a Hansard-like format or through audio or video recordings similar to what we do as well; finally, if they voluntarily meet these two requirements, municipal councillors would then be given limited protection from civil prosecution for remarks made during debates similar to the limited qualified immunity enjoyed by Members of this Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, over the past 15 or 20 years we have seen a decline in voter participation. In the last federal election only 60 percent of eligible Alberta voters participated. The numbers in civic elections are even more discouraging. In the last Edmonton civic election voter participation sat at a lowly 35 percent. In some Calgary ridings it was only about 23 percent. These dwindling numbers have puzzled public policymakers since they started to decline. One explanation of the decline is that the public has become cynical of politicians and the political process. An American study exemplifies today's public opinion. Prior to the Vietnam war and Watergate eight out of 10 people said that they trusted people in government to do what was right most of the time. In 1994 less than one-third of the people felt that way.

This is precisely why I am supporting Bill 207. I believe that by filing disclosure statements and maintaining a public record of proceedings, a level of trust will be built between the public and elected officials. This trust is one of the cornerstones of democracy as we know it. Trust holds society together. It has been described as an integrative mechanism that creates and sustains solidarity in the social system. Nothing happens without trust. It provides the foundation that makes it possible for society to work. Basic trust cannot be established with the public unless elected officials are open and honest with voters. Disclosing relevant private interests is a first and essential step in obtaining the public's trust. It is the right of the public to know if the officials they elect have conflicting interests in public policy matters.

Mr. Speaker, the problem of public cynicism is not a problem that will be solved overnight. Indeed, it may take an entire generation to rebuild public trust to its old form. Small steps are therefore needed in the reconstruction of public trust, and Bill 207 is one such small step. There is no reason why civic politicians should not be held to the same standards as provincial and federal officials. In many respects policies that civic politicians influence are more directly related to the everyday lives of the public. Issues such as community planning and zoning have a more direct impact on people and businesses than do, say, federal issues such as foreign policy and military spending. For this reason, some knowledge of individual municipal politicians' private business interests seems all the more appropriate, more so than MLAs or MPs, yet few have any disclosure requirements at all. Bill 207 does not require this but at least offers an incentive to encourage municipalities to enact disclosure bylaws.

Mr. Speaker, municipal councillors are elected officials and public servants, which means that they must be prepared to be subject to public scrutiny. Public servants at the provincial and federal levels must meet these demands, and it is time that municipal officials should consider facing this same responsibility. By bringing on these increased responsibilities, municipalities may see an increase in credibility and accountability. Increases in these matters will undoubtedly lead to a greater standing in regard to their counterparts at the provincial and federal levels.

With more and more people moving to Alberta cities, especially Edmonton and Calgary, aligning municipal governance policies with those of federal and provincial governments has become even more important. Major cities are making more demands for funds from the provincial and federal governments, and many public policy thinkers are calling the 21st century the city-state century. Yet with all these changes, cities are so far failing to change with the times in this area yet still demand the same responsibilities as their counterparts provincially and federally.

Having strong and economically lucrative cities is a definite asset to the well-being of our province. Ensuring that these cities are politically responsible is another asset that should be a priority of this government.

To this point, Mr. Speaker, I've mainly discussed the importance of disclosure statements. At this point I would like to shift gears a little and discuss the importance of keeping public records of proceedings. I cannot overstate the need to maintain a public record of the proceedings or debate either in a Hansard-like format or through audio or video recordings. Knowing and understanding how an elected official represents you is a basic and fundamental principle of democracy. The public should not have to rely on the potentially biased media to find out how a city councillor represented them on a certain issue. This information should be readily available to the public free of charge or for a nominal fee. Having proceedings recorded will create a more open and transparent local government. The public will be able to hold politicians to their word by having documentation of any promises made or not made.

Another aspect of having proceedings recorded is that it may increase the level of civility in city council proceedings. This is important because city councillors are looked upon and respected as leaders of our community. It is imperative that they are held accountable and treat each other in a civil manner. If there was a record of what was said, people could not make untoward remarks and later deny that they said any such thing.

In an age of declining public trust and growing cynicism toward politicians, democracies all over the world are trying to find ways to battle this problem. Here in Alberta we have a unique opportunity to make a small dent in this phenomenon. It is small dents that will lead to major change a generation from now. I believe that by mandating that disclosure statements be filed and maintaining public records of proceedings, trust will be restored between the public and elected officials, accountability will be increased, and municipal governance will increase its standing in comparison to its provincial and federal counterparts.

I strongly urge all of my colleagues here today to stand in support of Bill 207, which offers the opportunity to strengthen our cities and towns and prepare them for the 21st century. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and join the debate on Bill 207, the Municipal Government (Councillor Disclosure and Protection) Amendment Act, 2003.

While I appreciate all the hard work that my colleague from Calgary-Currie has dedicated towards bringing forward this piece of legislation, I have serious reservations regarding some of the provisions outlined in this bill and their potential effects on our municipalities. More specifically, I believe that the provisions outlined in Bill 207 would not only create problems at the municipal level, but they could potentially damage the long-established and effective partnership between the province and municipalities. I have always been in favour of strong, accountable, and independent municipal governments.

I'm pleased to note that the current Municipal Government Act has continued to ensure that all Albertans enjoy effective and responsible municipal level representation and that their interests and aspirations are addressed by their local administration in a sound and responsive manner. Our municipal government system has produced some of our communities' most committed and selfless individuals whose tireless work has helped Alberta to have some of the strongest and most prosperous municipalities in the entire country. Unlike their counterparts in Ottawa and here in Edmonton our municipal councillors spend virtually all of their time among their fellow constituents, and it is their direct responsibility to help manage their local community and provide programs and services to its residents.

They are an integral part of a well-established and highly effective system of government that requires them to remain in close proximity to their constituents and which helps councillors to remain responsive to their needs and concerns.

This is especially true within our rural communities, Mr. Speaker. In many ways their livelihood depends on the livelihood of their constituents, their neighbours, and their friends. As a result, when an issue or a problem arises, they're not only affected in the same manner as the rest of the community, but they're also in the position to respond and find a solution to the problem by working together with other local representatives. The seemingly limitless energy and resourcefulness of our municipalities and the ability of their citizens and local representatives to come together and solve common issues is one of the cornerstones of our municipal government system. It is a system which is extremely well suited to Alberta's political landscape. Just as we in this House don't look to Ottawa every time a crisis within our border arises, Albertans, especially those in rural communities, don't automatically look towards Edmonton whenever they are faced with a problem.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a province of practical and resourceful individuals who are capable of addressing and solving problems on their own. Our current municipal government system and the act that governs it are reflective of those values. They have in turn been sculpted in order to mirror the autonomous nature and spirit of our communities. As a result, this government has always recognized the importance of working with the local authorities to make certain that social and economic needs of all citizens of our province are met as well as possible.

Our commitment to working with the various municipal councils has produced some extremely sound policies and initiatives which have benefited our province on both the social and economic levels. However, Mr. Speaker, while this government has worked closely with the local governments on issues facing the communities, it has always maintained and respected the separate and autonomous nature of local governments. In this spirit our government has always opted to create certain guidelines and principles by which the municipal governments should operate rather than always impose our will upon the municipalities and their elected representatives. To sum up, the relationship between the province and municipalities has always been one of partnership and co-operation rather than imposition and inequality.

Unfortunately, Bill 207 may change the very nature of this long-established and highly effective partnership. As my colleague from Calgary-Currie has already mentioned, the intention of Bill 207 is to enhance and strengthen the credibility of municipal governments and to protect municipal councillors from lawsuits resulting from remarks made during municipal council debates. Bill 207 hopes to accomplish this by giving municipalities the opportunity to pass bylaws which would introduce a Hansard type of audio or video system by which council proceedings would be recorded and introduce a provision which would require councillors to give full disclosure statements similar to those given by Members of this Legislative Assembly.

My first concern with Bill 207, Mr. Speaker, is that it will have a detrimental effect upon the partnership established between the province and municipal governments, and as I have mentioned before, this relationship is based upon the mutual respect for the autonomy of municipalities. By requiring municipal councillors to file disclosure statements in which they have to outline their assets, liabilities, and financial interests and by requiring that the municipal council sessions be recorded and made public, this government would undoubtedly compromise the autonomous status of our province's municipal governments. No longer would the provincial government be viewed as a partner but as a big brother who does not trust its younger sibling to adequately run its own affairs. As we all know, Alberta has often made it clear to Ottawa that it will not tolerate the federal government's meddling in provincial affairs. It is my belief that by passing Bill 207, this government would be committing a similar mistake. Just as Ottawa needs to respect our jurisdictional rights, we should also respect the autonomy and the ability of our municipalities to govern themselves in a responsible and effective manner.

Bill 207 is redundant anyway because there are already provisions within the Municipal Government Act that allow municipalities to introduce bylaws which require municipal councillors to file disclosure statements. More specifically, section 171 of the act allows municipalities the right to pass bylaws which would require their municipal councillors to file disclosure statements before they take office. Furthermore, section 535 gives municipal councillors liability protection. As a result, Mr. Speaker, I find that Bill 207 is redundant because the Municipal Government Act has already addressed these issues.

Mr. Speaker, I also find Bill 207 redundant with regard to the matter of recording municipal council sessions. Some municipalities within the province have already passed bylaws which mandate that certain aspects of council meetings be recorded and made public. Furthermore, the Municipal Government Act stipulates that all motions and votes must be made public. However, it is important to note that these recordings do not protect councillors from potential civil prosecution for remarks given during the council sessions. It is also important to note that to date there have been a handful of such lawsuits in urban areas and virtually none in rural areas. Therefore, I don't think that there is a need to introduce a law which would protect municipal councillors from civil prosecution by having their remarks recorded and made public if the problem itself does not even exist.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that a law which would recommend that municipal councillors, especially those within rural communities, file disclosure statements and which would require that municipal council proceedings be recorded would only serve to discourage potential candidates from running for municipal office. Not only that, but by having municipal council sessions recorded verbatim, many councillors who, unlike most MLAs, are part-time politicians may choose to hold their discussions and debates away from the municipal hall. This is because many may feel uncomfortable with their remarks being recorded and made public. As a result, the council sessions could become a mere formality while taverns, coffee shops, or other gathering establishments could become the places where the real decisions are made. As a result, Bill 207 could potentially render council proceedings useless and a waste of the public's time and money.

As I've said before, Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate all the work that my colleague from Calgary-Currie has dedicated in bringing forward this piece of legislation. However, while I understand the purpose of this bill, I'm compelled to vote against it as I believe that it will only serve to create rather than solve problems.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to join debate on Bill 207, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. I support the overall purpose of this bill. I agree that transparency and accountability are two very important pillars of any effective government, and this bill would strengthen both.

First of all, I would like to talk about the importance of creating a public record for municipal proceedings proposed in Bill 207. Although one or two municipalities provide audio or video of municipal proceedings as requested and for the costs of reproduction, most municipalities do not. Some only record the actual vote while others provide almost nothing for public display. This part of the bill would add consistency to public accessibility of the verbal debate by municipal councillors across Alberta in addition to protecting councillors from frivolous and vexatious legal actions or threats of action.

I understand that some may be concerned with the added cost of publishing debates for easier public access, but I believe that the benefits are well worth the minor expenses. A town council or city hall meeting shouldn't be a place where people fear that their words will be twisted or misinterpreted. An accurate recording of the debate would be a way councillors would clarify what was said if an instance of misunderstanding ever arose. Elected members must have the freedom and capacity to fully express their own opinions and the views of their constituents.

It is unlikely that large numbers of people would flock to download such debate on a regular basis, but the content would be available for public review, which in turn would protect the elected officials from lawsuits and have a verbal debate available if someone did want to know more about an issue.

The second part of this bill is a bit more complicated but also very important. Voter turnout is in a declining trend, especially in municipal elections, and there is always a need to find ways to improve and revitalize the public perception of government. The fact is that elected officials are not looked upon as trustworthy. Recent polls indicate that politicians are slightly more popular than used car salesmen, and I have nothing against used car salesmen of course, but the stereotype of both professions is that they are corrupt, devious, and dishonest.

For the vast majority of elected officials the judgment is both unfair and untrue, but perception is reality, and all elected officials face an uphill battle to build and maintain the trust of voters. This bill could reduce concerns and improve perceptions regarding conflict of interest and could therefore play a role in restoring faith in elected members of municipal councils.

Currently the federal and provincial governments each have systems to monitor disclosure and settle conflicts of interest questions. The federal government has an Ethics Counselor, and the Alberta government appoints an Ethics Commissioner. When we look at the federal government, the Ethics Counselor is more or less a sounding board who offers advice to settle sticky conflict matters for Members of Parliament, cabinet ministers, and the Prime Minister.

On the other hand, Alberta's Ethics Commissioner is an independent body that has final say on conflict of interest matters. The important difference is that Alberta's commissioner has real authority while the federal counselor merely offers suggestions. Other levels of government have established ethics officers to monitor or rule on instances of conflicts of interest.

This bill is a small, very low-cost approach to take the first steps in addressing conflicts of interest questions by helping reduce any questions from arising in the first place. It doesn't call for a civic ethics commissioner, merely a disclosure to the city clerk's office in a form which municipalities themselves are already empowered to do under the current MGA, although few have done so. While it isn't common at all, clearly there have been some instances where such concerns as conflicts of interest have in fact been raised in the past, which continues to reflect on us all in the public's mind.

For example, we all know about the case of one of Edmonton's most popular mayors in the '50s and '60s. While this mayor was in office, Edmonton saw the construction of a new city hall, a new police headquarters, the Centennial Library, Storyland Valley Zoo, the Alexandra hospital complex, the Riverside Golf Course, and the Borden, Coronation, and Queen Elizabeth parks. A great deal was accomplished in Edmonton on his watch. He was well known across Canada as the biggest booster for the city of Edmonton, the first Ukrainian mayor of a major Canadian city, and the second youngest mayor in the history of Edmonton. His popularity was also amazing as he was elected five times, which included two acclamations.

Mr. Speaker, I won't turn this into a member's statement, but needless to say, this man was an incredible person and a very colourful and effective politician. However, he was also removed twice from the mayor's office for conflicts of interest related to land deals in which he played a role. I realize that times have changed and the political climate today is much different than the '50s or '60s. I am also aware that the media plays a much larger role in politics today. But I also know that many people are too busy to follow every single issue and every single elected official and watch them closely, so they leap to generalizations and sweeping conclusions about us all, after even one such incident from many years ago. We do have to admit that the reality is that municipal leaders are in a pretty good position to influence local decisions that can have a positive impact on themselves or their families. Bill Hawrelak was an extreme example of this.

Providing the opportunity to strengthen conflict of interest checks and balances for municipal governments should not be seen as a statement about the honesty or integrity of municipal leaders. It is merely prudent housekeeping designed to strengthen integrity and perceptions. So, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the goals of Bill 207 as a prudent and professional measure to ensure the continuing avoidance of any problems and to ensure the continuing excellent record of almost all municipal councils across the province.

Now, it is true that municipalities are already under the MGA, capable of imposing conflict of interest and disclosure regulations through their own bylaws, but few have done so, relying on the honour system mostly. So this bill does not call for sweeping changes, only strengthening what is already there, and again it is voluntary, not mandatory. If it were mandatory, there might be perceptions that this is interfering with the autonomy of municipal government, but since it is voluntary, Bill 207 is empowering legislation only. It does not impose on municipalities. Municipalities that want it can enact it, while others can ignore it completely if they so choose. It is only there for those who want it.

Second, I know that a reasonable amount of consultation has been done with municipalities and their elected representatives to ensure that this bill has good support across the province, which it seems to have, although such support isn't unanimous. But what is? I believe we should definitely move forward with this bill, but we should also be sensitive in proceeding with this bill to ensure that it isn't perceived as negative but just as a prudent measure. It really isn't very different from what MLAs already have and no different from what we as MLAs are required to do. In fact, this should be seen as helping municipal councillors.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 207, the Municipal Government (Councillor Disclosure and Protection) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the Member for Calgary-Currie. Bill 207 is positive legislation which municipal governments will be free to take advantage of. There can be attitudes in our communities of mistrust. These attitudes stem from highly publicized scandals and unethical dealings by top officials in governments from around the world. The mistrust can be combated by allowing all elected officials disclosure of information that would or could potentially be considered a conflict of interest in order that the public can be assured that their officials can be trusted.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 207 is a good step forward for municipalities around Alberta. It will elevate their status to being one of more like the big boys in politics. Currently municipal councils do not require their members to disclose information which may involve pecuniary interests. This sort of practice does not elevate the trust of citizens in their government and keeps the feelings of secrecy high. We at the provincial level are required to disclose information to ensure that we're not in a conflict of interest when we make decisions. This brings our government credibility, accountability, and responsibility. I'm sure that the action of disclosure gives Albertans a sense of assurance that their officials truly are working for the public interest. Bill 207 attempts to bring that same credibility to the municipal systems. If the citizens trust the government they're most closely involved with, they're also more likely to trust the next level of government, in other words us. That's a goal that we should strive towards. People need to be able to trust those they put into decision-making positions. Bill 207 is a step in that direction.

The Research Institute of the Finnish Economy found that disclosure benefits corporations on a large scale. They found that firms with better quality disclosures found it easier to grow faster and more successfully. The study showed that disclosure of the employees of private corporations, especially the leaders of the business, made it possible for companies to grow faster. This is a report that can be given to the municipalities. Many corporations experience high growth because of high-level disclosure. There's no reason to think that this would not also happen at the government level.

Mr. Speaker, the main benefit of Bill 207 is that it will create far more openness and transparency that municipal councils throughout our province are perceived as lacking at the present. It would eliminate the secrecy that's perceived to be prevalent in the system now, and it's a huge step forward for municipalities to take. Disclosure is a natural progression for municipal governments to take. When an elected official discloses information, he or she is rewarded for that action. The reward in this case is that the trust of that politician is increased, and it benefits all stakeholders involved. As I mentioned earlier, many other businesses and governments already mandate disclosure. Specifically, we as MLAs do so, and quite successfully I might add. Yes, it is a bit of a hassle. It's sort of like having to do your income tax two more times a year.

The disclosure process is not something that causes problems; to the contrary, it helps people avoid them. Facts that are disclosed are usually friendly anyhow, especially if pecuniary interests are in question. It's far better to deal with them in an open fashion than in private. It takes the secrecy away from people's minds. It's all about perception, Mr. Speaker. Our municipal governments consist of extremely talented, dedicated, and gifted people. Our Premier was at one time among those involved in the municipal system, as were so many of our other members. It's not the goal of this bill for the province to have their fingers in the affairs of municipalities. That's the beauty of this bill. Bill 207 gives municipalities the opportunity if they wish to follow what can be of great benefit to them.

A municipality has to pass a bylaw which would be tailored to their own council and conducive to their own needs for this legislation to take effect. They continue to keep their autonomy. Therefore, if there are bits that municipalities do not want to be a part of, they don't have to be. The decision is completely up to them if they accept both prongs of the legislation. Doing so will be a benefit to them in many ways. Again, Bill 207 is all about bringing municipal governments even more credibility than they already have. It gives local governments an opportunity to step up in the political world to a position that they might find gives them more power, more leadership, and more responsible government.

I urge all hon. members to vote in favour of Bill 207.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and join the debate on Bill 207, the Municipal Government (Councillor Disclosure and Protection) Amendment Act, 2003. I would agree with the hon. Member for Calgary-Curry. That title is something else. It's been sponsored by him, and I just wanted to say today that passage of Bill 207 would be a step to reinforce councillors' position in council as well as increase the accountability and credibility of municipal governments. Bill 207 would also provide safeguards for councillors against lawsuits pertaining to remarks they make during debates in council.

The amendments that would be made to the Municipal Government Act by Bill 207 would give municipal councillors the authority to pass bylaws requiring municipal councils to retain records of their proceedings. The records would be available to the public in an audio, video, or written format. The amendment would also allow municipal councillors to pass bylaws requiring councillors to file disclosure statements much like the ones MLAs have to submit to the Ethics Commissioner.

Mr. Speaker, I view Bill 207 as somewhat of a controversial bill, and I'm sure that many of our constituents would agree. I see certain similarities between the issues raised by Bill 207 and a long-standing issue that concerns a number of Albertans: federal influence in provincial politics. I find Bill 207 controversial because to some people it might appear that provincially we are attempting to influence municipal politics. Some worry that it is Father Knows Best or Big Brother looking out for his best interests approach, and it begs the question: to what degree does a provincial jurisdiction extend to municipal government politics? However, it's important to remember that Bill 207 is voluntary. It's not mandatory. It is only empowering those that want it.

In August of 1989 a review panel was established by order in council to review Alberta's legislation and guidelines that relate to the conflict of interest guidelines applicable to members of Executive Council, Members of the Legislative Assembly, and senior public servants in Alberta. This was done because the government of Alberta at that time felt that it was in Alberta's best interest to establish a conflict of interest act. Bill 40, the Conflicts of Interest Act, received royal assent June 25, 1991. Members must thus file complete disclosure information with the Ethics Commissioner. To ensure that the information is up to date, the members and the Ethics Commissioner must review these forms on a yearly basis. A public disclosure statement is produced based on the information in these forms and made available for public viewing through the office of the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly. I would like to state that my husband hates filling out these forms, but it does give accountability.

Mr. Speaker, in 1989 the government of Alberta took it upon itself, as it felt it was in the best interests of Albertans to do so, to introduce conflict of interest legislation based on that of other jurisdictions. In doing so, members have provided public disclosure statements to ensure that there are no conflicts of interest and that the opinions they express within this House are, in fact, the opinions of their constituents and not personal opinions. However, this does not mean that we cannot play a role in the process. The experience we have gained through our own conflict of interest legislation should be passed on to ensure that municipalities understand the important conflict of interest legislation in the political process.

The fundamental premise of holding public office in a representative democracy is that the power of that office is derived from the people; in other words, there is a trusteeship created between the people and those who serve in public office. This trusteeship requires that power and authority be exercised for the welfare of the people; that is, in the public interest. For legislators, ministers, councillors, and other public officials to decide a matter even partly on the basis that it will benefit his or her private interest is to betray the trust of the people. The decision must be made solely on the basis that it is in the best interests of society. Allowing any other consideration may result in a decision that is not the most appropriate in the public interest.

When it comes time for a public official to make a decision or take a stand on an issue, it can be viewed as a personal test. The primary test is subjective; that is, it is a test that the politician or official must apply personally according to his or her own conscience. But even if this test is satisfied, there is also an objective assessment to be made: might the decision be viewed by the people as one made other than solely on the basis of their welfare? Legislators, ministers, councillors, and other public officials must also consider this, but unlike the subjective test the ultimate judgment on this issue rests with the people.

Mr. Speaker, it is essential that any discussion of safeguarding the integrity of legislators, ministers, councillors, and other public officials occurs in a positive atmosphere which recognizes the privilege and honour which is attached to those vested with the public trust, the desire to assist those in public office vested with that awesome responsibility to act in the public interest at all times. It is crucial to the relationship between representative and represented that integrity, accountability, credibility, and trust remain at a high level. While disclosure does not necessarily avoid or resolve a conflict between the private interest and the public interest, it should at the very least reveal the existence of a conflict. Indeed, it ought to be the natural response of any legislator, minister, councillor, or other public official to disclose to the appropriate authority the existence of a conflict of interest. I know that personally I faced this issue recently when it came to a private member's bill presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill regarding firefighters. I very much wanted to participate in the debate as my husband is a firefighter and I felt quite strongly but was advised by the Ethics Commissioner that I should not participate.

Bill 207 also requests that municipal councillors keep a record of their debates and proceedings for reference and public access. Some people worry that this might be an expensive procedure that requires resources that are not necessarily on hand. However, the debates and proceedings contain information that affects the public, and thus it should be available to the public. With today's technology, whether it be through the Internet or the sale of taped proceedings, I believe that such documentation could be made available cheaply and effectively. The record would not only give the public access to the proceedings, but it would also provide safeguards for councillors against civil prosecution for remarks made during the proceedings. This is something that is very important as a heated debate can result in comments that might be regretted or taken in the wrong way. A record of those comments would allow for a simple solution to what otherwise could become a complicated issue.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude my remarks, I would like to remind all members that although the province has authority over the Municipal Government Act, that does not necessarily give us the right to push legislation upon municipalities. As I'm sure we all agree, having policy pushed on the province is not something that we take lightly. That is why Bill 207 is empowering voluntary legislation only. They don't have to enact it if they don't agree with it. I do not feel that we morally have the right to push legislation such as Bill 207 upon a body that has the capability of proceeding with this issue with their own agenda. If the Assembly wishes to play a role in the process, that role should be one of influencing municipalities that such legislation is in their best interests, not by forcing that legislation upon them. However, at this time municipalities do not have the power to grant themselves qualified privilege, which can only be done by the province, which is what Bill 207 proposes.

I feel that the ideas behind this legislation such as outlined in Bill 207 should be mandatory for all elected positions, whether it be federal, provincial, or municipal. However, this is their jurisdiction, and thus it is up to municipalities to take this step if we pass this bill. I would urge all members to support Bill 207.

Thank you.

4:50

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you. It's with great pleasure that I rise today in the Assembly to join debate and discussion of Bill 207, the Municipal Government (Councillor Disclosure and Protection) Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to commend the Member for Calgary-Currie for his hard work and dedication to this amendment. This is an important issue that needs to be brought forward to address the accountability, openness, and standing of municipal governments' policies and procedures.

The purpose of Bill 207 is to bring the policies of municipal councillors in line with federal and provincial levels of government. This bill would amend the Municipal Government Act to enhance the credibility and accountability of municipal governments while protecting municipal councillors against outrageous lawsuits. With the passage of Bill 207 municipal councillors would have the ability to pass bylaws that mandate that a public record of proceedings be made and bylaws mandating that disclosure statements be filed by councillors. However, Mr. Speaker, both of these provisions must be adopted together in order that municipal councillors receive qualified immunity from prosecution. Municipalities cannot choose to adopt one provision and not the other.

According to Bill 207 councillors would have to file disclosure statements. These would be similar to statements that all members of this Assembly file. These disclosure statements, as we all know, list income, assets, liabilities, and financial interests of the member and the member's spouse, minor children, and private corporations. Councillors are elected representatives; therefore, they should be required to file disclosure statements similar to other elected officials. Individuals who are elected must be accountable to the citizens who elect them. Representatives have to be open and transparent in both their actions and intentions. Mr. Speaker, it should also be mentioned that this bill would not interrupt current council procedures as these new policies would take effect after the next municipal election. I may add there that you do know the rules, so when you do get elected or if you do run, there's really no excuse.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to shift my focus and address the remainder of my remarks on the importance of maintaining open and transparent government procurement practices. This government is committed to ensuring accountability, openness, honesty, and fairness in government actions while protecting the privacy of individuals who contact and interact with government. Under our concept of open government we must protect the public from anyone who might use government for his own interest and protect those interests that may be unfairly prejudiced by the actions of elected officials.

Mr. Speaker, we live in a democracy where the rule is by the people. People empower the government to run the country or in this case the province or municipality. Citizens have the opportunity to choose through their right to vote the people who will represent them in government. This occurs through regular, free, and fair elections. However, democracy also means that officials who have been elected are accountable in various ways to the citizens who elected them. They have to be open and transparent in their actions.

Transparency is fundamental to public confidence. Transparency in public-sector policies and procedures results in public-sector accountability by demonstrating that elected officials are open in their decision-making and the debate surrounding the issues. It proves that they have nothing to hide and nothing to cover up. The concept of transparency incorporates the same values underlying democratic accountability and those associated with open government. Open government provisions require public government proceedings and access to government documents and information.

Mr. Speaker, elected representatives, whether they are Members of Parliament, Members of the Legislative Assembly, or municipal councillors, must be accountable to the public for their actions. This should include the discourse revolving around the laws that are passed, including bylaws and how they are implemented. Elected representatives must be open to the public about proceedings and actions. Closed-door and limited access translates into less accountable government and a less informed public. Municipal councillors need to render certain that their work is open to public scrutiny. Providing transcripts of government meetings and debates for public review and analysis is consistent with the policy of open government. Minutes of meetings generally record only the wording of the motions voted on and the results of the votes by councillors. These minutes do not include a summary or transcript of the discussions held on each motion. The public not only has a right to know the outcome of the decision but why the decisions were formed and how the decisions came about. Access to information permits citizens to challenge government actions with which they disagree and seek redress of official misconduct. Access to proceedings also deters official misconduct by constantly reminding public officials of their accountability to those they serve.

Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge that costs would be associated with the implementation and maintenance of a public record. However, the cost is significantly dependent upon the type of public record implemented. I recognize that producing a Hansard document would be costly and that smaller centres may be unable to assume the cost of developing public transcripts, but there are other methods of providing a public record that would reduce costs. An electronic or audio record of proceedings would be more cost-effective. Furthermore, a fee structure could also be implemented. The important issue is that the public have an ability to access these proceedings whether they are on-line, in print, or through audio or audio recording.

Other municipalities have implemented methods to provide the public with a record of council proceedings without using a Hansard document. For example, council meetings in St. John's, Newfoundland, and Labrador are televised live on the local cable station and are also recorded on audiotapes. Copies of these tapes are available to the public on request. In Charlottetown city council meetings are transmitted live via web cast. These web casts get archived and can be accessed by the public. Municipal council meetings are recorded on videotape and broadcast on a local cable channel in Toronto. These tapes are kept in record archives and are available to the public for a fee. The city of Winnipeg produces a verbatim transcript of council proceedings along with audio and video recording. Other municipalities have employed similar methods to provide the public with access to council proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, if this legislation is adopted, a policy to improve transparency on information would emerge. Bill 207 is consistent with the government's policy of open government and accountability. The measures outlined in Bill 207 would bring the procedures and policies of municipal governments closer in line with provincial and federal governments. This legislation would create a sense of greater equality between municipal councillors and their federal and provincial counterparts. By granting the ability to establish similar requirements and policies, municipalities would have an enhanced stature. Elected public servants represent those who voted them into office. The public, the people they serve and represent, have a right to know where their representatives' interests lie.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all my colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 207. Thank you so very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, I'm delighted to have the opportunity today to join the debate on Bill 207, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. It has been mentioned, but it's worth reiterating that there is a dual purpose to bringing forward Bill 207. The first is to bring municipal governance policies to a level that is equivalent to those of the federal and provincial governments. The second purpose of this bill is to augment the protection that municipal politicians deserve to have from lawsuits filed during their time in public service.

What exactly does this mean, Mr. Speaker? How does Bill 207 aim to achieve this? First, Bill 207 would make public a record of proceedings either in a Hansard-like format, that we use here at the Legislature, or through an audio or video recording, something we also do. Second, Bill 207 would require that municipal councillors file disclosure statements similar to those filed by MLAs provincially or MPs and their federal seats. It must be possible to hold elected public servants in the highest regard as we the electing public hold them to the highest of standards. Elected and appointed officials wield the power of government and serve as stewards of the public's resources. For this reason, the public must hold its elected and appointed officials to high standards of ethical conduct.

In North America, Europe, and Japan during the past several decades we have grown accustomed to seeing politicians and other public officials being accused of abusing their office in order to further their financial, political, or social goals or those of others, not to mention their own personal goals. Far too many people say that there is just no room for ethics in politics. This notion is completely false, but it's nevertheless frighteningly common. Fundamental to these ethical standards is the notion that the public expects elected or appointed officials to make responsible decisions with the public's best interest in mind. Such decisions must always take precedence over those of a private, narrow perspective, not to mention public officials' own self-interests for that matter. The legal requirements relevant to the ethical standards of public officials generally fall into two categories: first, those intended to prevent conflicts of interest and, secondly, those regarding corruption and/or criminal activity.

Mr. Speaker, for the balance of my time this afternoon I would like to concentrate on the first point, discerning whether or not an elected or appointed official does indeed have a conflict of interest. Generally speaking, conflict of interest laws and restrictions protect against both actual impropriety and the appearance of impropriety. For this reason, these restrictions may seem to go further than necessary to prevent improper considerations from being drawn into public decision-making.

In reality, the goal of all conflict of interest laws is to promote public confidence in public officials and public agencies by assuring the general public that official conduct is beyond reprimand. The law currently requires candidates in our provincially and federally elected systems to disclose to the public the sources of financial and an in-kind support for their campaigns. Once an individual becomes an elected official, he or she must disclose his or her economic interests to the electorate. The purpose of these requirements is to alert and make the public aware of any personal, economic, or political interests that may be affected during the public official's performance of their official duties.

Mr. Speaker, there are various kinds of scrutiny that public officials undergo, and all of my colleagues here in this Assembly can testify to that. There are five main areas of economic interest that must be disclosed: first, interests in real property; second, investments; third, business positions; fourth, sources of income; and fifth, gifts.

In our short time of discussion here it has become quite evident where a conflict of interest might exist for an individual who is in charge of running a large corporation or business. Unfortunately, it appears that there may be more of a challenge to see the advantage in holding municipal councillors to the same standards. Mr. Speaker, this indeed is unfortunate. It is unfortunate because a person in the public eye should be held to the highest levels of disclosure regardless of position, without consideration for whether the person is full-time politician such as MLAs are or if he or she is a part-time legislator as some city councillors are. So this begs the question: why should we deem it so important to establish or determine whether an elected official does not have a conflict of interest?

One suggestion to alleviate this concern over disclosure, conflicts of interest, and part-time legislators is to make them fully salaried employees of the government they serve. This would in effect cut the cord, so to speak, potentially reducing or limiting any conflicts of interest that might otherwise become an issue of concern. If a public figure were to establish a type of blind trust where he or she would transfer all investments so as to potentially minimize the possibility of a problem, that would further reduce the potential for conflict of interest charges being laid. It does not take a genius to figure out that unless there is a complete cutting of the cord, Mr. Speaker, there will be lingering doubts of conflicting interests. We need only look at the current leadership race with the federal Liberal Party to see this. The front-runner in this race, Mr. Paul Martin, in his association with Canada Steamship Lines, has been questioned recently about his involvement in the company.

Whether it be a federal political candidate divulging his or her interests outside of the political arena or a municipal councillor serving on a town council, the premise holds: there needs to be a code of conduct that is consistent across all lines of financial, ethical, and philosophical disclosure for the proper restoration of the public's trust for those elected officials. This proposed legislation hits at the heart of all that is perceived as being wrong with politics today: that all or most politicians and public officials are individuals who are in a position to better their own standings rather than doing the work of the constituents and thus representing the interests of the electorate.

Mr. Speaker, we have a long way to go to repair the damage that has been done over the years and thereby restore the public's confidence. One way to do this is to establish consistent demands of each level of government in Canada, from the federal government all the way down to the municipal government. By creating a level playing field, a trust level amongst the public can be restored. Ethics are not static truths; they are constantly evolving social perception. It is for this reason that we all must push for new and tough legislation. In short, the best and surest way to restore Canadian's faith in the honesty of our politicians is tough and far-reaching legislation such as Bill 207.

For these reasons outlined, I support Bill 207, and I urge my colleagues to support it as well. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 207 has a certain flavour to it that you can see the merit from one point that of course, we should have transparency in politics. Unfortunately, most of our politicians these days are transparent enough that we can see right through them.

It's unfortunate that we have a level of government here who feels they somehow have the exclusive domain of providing integrity for elected people. I was on the elected council in Vermilion for two terms, and I was in business in Vermilion, probably one of the biggest businesses in Vermilion that did business with the town, and it certainly presents problems to ensure that there is transparency and fairness and that the tendering process is isolated to the point that there cannot be influence or tampering with it. I very dearly took to heart the fact that that transparency and that openness and the accountability is absolutely paramount. What you should do with people who don't live by those rules is just put them in jail. They're not politicians then; they're crooks. That's where they should go. We don't need any more laws to do that. The municipal act now looks pretty clearly at that.

The problem with politicians wanting protection for what they might say or do – if that means that you want to provide protection for municipal councillors that could stand up in their meetings and make slanderous or scurrilous statements about other members of council or the public and then simply offer a halfhearted apology and be completely absolved of blame, then I certainly don't want any part of that kind of legislation. Not only would it be wrong for them; it's wrong for us. So dragging them down to our level isn't a step in the right direction. Trust me. There is much more honour in town councils that I have associated with and been on then many days in here.

Where we seem to lose the focus on councils or in government is when we start to dabble in micromanaging or meddling in other departments. When we come into a council chamber or a Chamber like this, we should be here as policymakers, as priority-setters. If you keep in that context of government, it is very difficult to have a personal vested interest in that. If a policy surrounding school construction, road construction, health facility operations is proper and fair for all Albertans, then the ability for it to be manipulated by someone isn't there. If we were to sit in this Chamber and start to decide individually which hospital should get built or which school should get built, then you start to run the prospect of influence, of maybe losing objectivity, of what we're here for.

So the best protection we can give our municipal governments is maybe giving them an example. You know, as long as we live under honest and honourable rules and we deal with issues on a policy basis, on a priority basis and municipal councils do the same, we've put ourselves ahead of the problem. So by simply not getting there, not putting yourselves in a position of having to make choices that may affect you financially, you've eliminated a lot of the problem.

I know that coming to this Assembly, for my family business to do any work for the government, I was required to sell all shares in that business. Now, we've been in business since the '50s, and there's never been a hint of any impropriety in anything we've done, yet that stands for nothing. Under the rules of the House you must sell, and in my case there was over 25 years in the business. But for them to continue to tender, work for the government, you must sell.

Now, I never really thought about that when I ran. I wasn't aware of the guidelines, and that's no one's fault but my own. We all have to live under those rules, and so be it. But when you start to get into smaller towns, if you're going to start the same kind of disclosure and the same kind of ethical commitments you must make, you will find that there are very few people left – in the town I come from, it's been many, many years since we had more than one person on council of the seven, including the mayor, that are from a business background. In many elections we find ourselves completely with retired people or people that have never been in a business setting because they don't want the hassle of trying to justify what gets done on their street or in front of their business, whether it's normal course or not. So you kind of imply through legislation like this that municipal councillors somehow need to be protected from themselves in what they might say or do. The only person who should really be doing that is you and the laws of the government that we all live under.

Mr. Speaker, you could imagine what we in this Chamber would think if the federal government dictated or decided that somehow we needed to be more ethical or more protected. I mean, that most definitely would be the pot calling the kettle every colour except white; that's for darn sure. Now, we would not only resent that; I think we would take that as a very clear indication that they thought there was something wrong with what we did. I think most of Alberta would say: "Well, there must be fire, because there's smoke. The federal government is coming in to give them a whole new set of rules, so there must be something wrong." Now, I understand the hon. member has said that this bill is voluntary. That doesn't do anything to allay the thoughts of people: "Well, you know what? If they're making this law and if that council doesn't put it in, there must be something crooked going on in that kitchen." We have to be very cognizant of the fact that in my lifetime I've never been approached by someone at a council level who said: "We need tougher rules surrounding the membership on this council. We need protection from the things we say or things we might say. We need to keep a Hansard." You know, that's a two-edged sword.

I would like to think that when we're in a committee or on council or in this Chamber, we can be as open and honest about the issue as we can be. I think that if we're going to have people write or record all the statements that are made in many of the very sensitive areas that we deal with, people simply won't participate. It puts them in a position of: well, I don't know who could take it this way. The written word is exactly that; it says verbatim what you said. It doesn't say how you said it. It doesn't say what context it's done in. We've all seen newspaper reports or reports from a conference or a press release that simply aren't what was the text or what was the context of what was there, yet someone could take those words, take parts of them or delete them or add, however they want to do. That happens now in the press from probably every level of government. So whereas you may be protected by what you've said, there is nothing saying that you won't be harmed equally by what you said in the context that you said it.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Snelgrove: We're just about there.

Well, you know, they wrote this speech here, but it wasn't with us when we sat on council and it wasn't with us when we dealt with all these issues. So I would ask the hon. members of this Legislative Assembly to really consider: do we want to start to get involved in a level of government where we're working very hard to make bridges to and with each other in the communities they're in? I would urge hon. members to just – let's shelve this.

With that, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Very, very quickly, Mr. Speaker, and thank you very much. I think the one thing that I see in this bill is that it is voluntary, and I appreciate the hon. member that just spoke ahead of me, and he did bring it up. [interjection] Pardon? From Vermilion-Lloydminster.

There's a very big difference between municipal councils, and I think that more and more as the province changes and more people come to the province and decide exactly where they want to live and what they want in their communities, you will see these differences. So I think it's up to a council to decide what level they want to put into their proceedings as to how they are fully accountable or transparent to their ratepayers and their taxpayers.

So I would like to see us continue with this bill because I do have several questions for the sponsor as to the AUMA and municipalities in that organization and the AAMD and C, which ones supported this, and hear of some of the problem areas in the province that predicated this piece of legislation coming forward.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will say thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to close debate.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make a few closing comments here, and I'll try not to take too long to do it. Clearly, from the debate I guess we've certainly heard some of the confusions and the complexities of this very important issue.

I guess to start with just some of the objections and issues that were brought forward, we heard why there should not be a recording, there shouldn't be disclosure, there shouldn't be qualified privilege. I guess I would ask which members of this Assembly – I'm sure that some of us may have various opinions on this – would actually consider getting rid of the Hansard here? Would we get rid of disclosure here, and would we also vote to get rid of qualified privilege here so that we can all get into lawsuits? I mean, if it's so bad, then why do we do it? Why don't we just go in the other direction and get rid of it?

I should remind people that the AUMA in fact did support this, and they did support it on the basis that it was voluntary, which it is.

Voluntary. For those members of municipal councils that simply don't want to do this, they don't have to. No one is forcing anyone to do anything here. Most municipalities may think that this is not applicable, and they simply can continue on and completely ignore this. For those councils that do feel that it would be good to get qualified privilege, well, this is how they can get it. Qualified privilege is a very important privilege not to be taken lightly. Consequently, I have suggested that there should be checks and balances and responsibilities put in place concurrently if we were to consider granting qualified privilege.

Qualified privilege is not in the Municipal Government Act now.

This is the one issue of this bill which is not allowed in the Municipal Government Act and which municipalities cannot provide to themselves. The other provisions are already there. Municipalities can enact bylaws to have disclosure, and they can enact bylaws to have a Hansard or any other type of permanent recording. Having those provisions already there has not, you know, created all of these issues and problems which some people have spoken about. They've been there all along, and they haven't created any issues.

But the reality is that very few municipalities have actually put those bylaws into place. There isn't sufficient incentive to do so. This bill provides incentive to do so and encourages municipalities to continue along the same lines that provincial and federal governments have. That's why I suggest that, in fact, this would enhance the stature of municipal governments as being the equals of all other elected officials, which is why many municipal councillors are in support of this.

Now, we have heard that there aren't any issues or problems that people are familiar with, but I can tell you – and many of us have been on municipal council; I was on municipal council – that I personally was threatened with a lawsuit for trying to fulfill my responsibilities as an alderman. I was told that if I asked tough questions, I could be potentially sued and there would be no protection. My colleagues there have complained about this as well, as recently as only a few months ago, in regard to the East Village redevelopment proposal. So there are at least some problems in this regard across the province. Are there a lot of problems? No, I don't think so.

I think the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was absolutely correct. We have an exemplary track record in this province of almost all municipal councils and councillors. I don't see that there's a huge problem at all. In fact, I think Albertans should be very pleased with the calibre and quality of their municipal elected officials. However, there clearly have been and continue to be a few problems, and consequently there are some areas and some issues that this Bill 207 could be of assistance in resolving, going forward for those who want it. It's empowering legislation only. It does not require anything.

I'd like to make just two more points, Mr. Speaker, before I finish. You know, it was George Santayana, I believe, that said: those who do not remember their past mistakes are forever condemned to repeat them. Well, having a permanent record of what was said, what was done, how decisions were reached in years past on successful decisions as well as unsuccessful decisions would form an important reference for municipal councillors to find out how to improve their decisions in the future. Without this permanent record, there is no reference of the verbal debate of most municipal councillors, so they don't have that record.

Finally, one last point is that I would have to say that during my experience on council I heard some great speeches by my colleagues. Absolutely great speeches. They're lost to history forever because they were never recorded.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask for the support of all members of this Assembly. Thank you.

[Motion lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour I would move that we now call it 5:30 and reconvene at 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 5, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/05

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated. Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me this evening to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly five guests that we have in the members' gallery this evening. The first is Mr. Peter MacKay, who is running for the leadership of the federal PC Party and is the front-runner today with the most delegates going for him to the convention in Toronto at the end of the month. With any luck we'll be fortunate to be looking at the new leader of the federal PC Party and the future Prime Minister of this country.

Traveling with him is Russ Carrigan, who's been a constant help all along as he travels back and forth across the country. We also have three of our cochairs organizing in northern Alberta: Kerry Mahood, Kori Mahood, and Peter Grewar. I'd ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Organized Crime and Terrorism

508. Mr. Cenaiko moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta to enhance collaborative partnerships and co-ordinated programs with various levels of government, policing agencies, and the public to effectively combat organized crime and terrorism.

[Debate adjourned April 28: Rev. Abbott speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we left off Monday last, I was talking about how we live in a time of increasing uncertainty, where organized crime and terrorism pose real threats to safety, security, and our collective well-being as a society. How or whether you respond to terrorist threats is a bit of a double-edged sword. On the one hand, whenever a threat is made, it would be wrong to ignore it completely. For instance, no matter how unlikely or far-fetched a bomb threat may seem, it would be unthinkable in our society in this day and age to take no action. Even the remotest of possibilities that injury, damage, or even death may be the outcome prompts us to take action. Thankfully, these threats turn out to be empty threats almost all the time, certainly in these parts anyway, and life returns to what we may call normal not long afterwards.

But is this an acceptable norm? I don't think so, Mr. Speaker. It is not acceptable to have everyday life punctuated with threats of murder and mayhem, not even if these threats are made but once a year, not even if they're made but once a decade. This is why Motion 508 is so important in that it recognizes the valuable work of CISA, the Criminal Intelligence Service of Alberta. The temper of the times has now become such that the work of CISA is vital to the safety and security of Albertans, Mr. Speaker.

We must, however, proceed with caution. One of the hallmarks of terrorists and those involved in organized crime is their ability to blend in with the rest of society. We've seen this recently in the news around Edmonton. It allows them to strike when we least expect it. Another concern is how we view organized crime. I would suggest that collectively as a society we have a rather glamourized view of organized crime, which I'm afraid has given it an undeserved mystique and allure. As I will discuss in greater detail, these factors make it necessary for us not to paint with too broad a brush in trying to eliminate this scourge from our society. If we fail to act with caution, the likelihood that innocent individuals will be targeted is great.

Although North America has been spared much of the terrorist activities, other parts of the world have had to accept them as staples of ordinary life. For instance, during the 1970s terrorist actions in Europe ushered in a general awareness among Europeans that, like it or not, there were terrorists in their midst. Mr. Speaker, terrorist activity in Europe was frequent in the 1970s and the early 1980s. To mention just a few, West Germany's Bader-Meinhof, the Basque separatist organization ETA, or Italy's Red Army faction rose to infamy in that time and had become household names by the end of the 1970s. Over time, while the vast majority of the demands for money or the release of convicted terrorists have been rejected, where terrorists have succeeded is in making the concept of terrorism an accepted, albeit unwanted, aspect of daily life in Europe and in many other places around the world.

For this reason alone, Mr. Speaker, we must support the work of CISA to ensure that this does not happen here in Alberta. Terrorist activity has been and continues to be widespread in parts of the Middle East. Prior to September 11 that's probably where its occurrence was most expected and ingrained in our collective consciousness. For better or worse, we'd hear the word "terrorist," and we might have had an immediate association with the Middle East. However, it is imperative that our debate here tonight and at all other times not degenerate to being a matter of stereotypes. This is part of why Motion 508 is so important at this time. Terrorist activity is not unique to any one group of people. We must never lose sight of that fact.

Similarly, when we speak of organized crime, we should not treat that term as being synonymous with any one particular ethnic group, and we should steer clear altogether of the term "Mafia." One of the reasons we still use the latter term, I think, is that over the years it has gained a mysterious, intriguing, and alluring quality or dimension that for all of its ugliness also has a romantic quality. This makes recognizing the work of CISA all the more important.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry to say that thanks to the way organized crime has been glamourized in films and on television, the public at large has gotten a rather one-sided view of what organized crime is all about. For instance, look at The Godfather trilogy, pathbreaking in so many ways. The first installment of the trilogy, The Godfather, is considered by some to be one of the best movies ever made. Meanwhile, the crass television series The Sopranos has been showered with awards ever since it premiered in 1999. Why is this so? Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think there's an easy answer to this question, but what is clear is that we live in a culture where dramatizations of criminal activity are commonplace. It has become a staple of prime-time programming as dramatizations of organized crime tend to be particularly successful. People eat this kind of stuff up like there's no tomorrow. Having said that, it shows why Motion 508 is such a timely initiative.

Collectively as a society we have a rather skewed view of what organized crime is and the toll that it really takes on our communities. For instance, a 2002 Environics survey of adult Albertans showed that about 60 percent of the respondents rated impaired driving as the crime that most concerned them. On the other hand, gang violence, organized crime, fraud, and prostitution were of concern to only 35 percent of Albertans. No matter how entertaining a particular crime show may be and no matter how alluring and beguiling organized crime may seem to some, make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker: in real life it is neither.

There is nothing alluring or entertaining about this destructive phenomenon. With some regularity we hear reports about how organized crime makes its presence known in our communities. It is both unnerving and alarming to know how the arms of organized crime are long enough to spread to such a wide range of areas: drug trafficking, prostitution, illegal gambling, and money laundering to mention but a few. This is not one step but several steps removed from the mob world portrayed in the movies and on television.

Now, personally, I was surprised to learn just how wide a range of activities organized crime is involved in. Knowing what I know now, it is pretty clear to me that it is both unrealistic and short-sighted to fight real organized crimes with methods based on fictional or dramatized accounts. In the long run this will be neither effective nor successful.

What Motion 508 calls for is prudent, reasonable, and proactive. It not only makes good sense to have the government work with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta; it would also strengthen our justice system, Mr. Speaker. By enhancing collaborative partnerships and co-ordinated programs with various levels of government, policing agencies, and the public to effectively combat organized crime and terrorism, I firmly believe that we will have a considerably better chance to preserve the wellness, safety, and security of our communities.

In times of great uncertainty this is a wise move. Lest we think this is not a problem in our province, here are a few figures to show otherwise. I understand that while the overall crime rate in Calgary continues to drop, organized crime is on the rise. The Calgary Police Service reports that the number of counterfeiting investigations have doubled in one year while drug cases are up 85 percent over the past four years. Meanwhile, the Edmonton Police Service estimates that there are about 10 gangs operating in the city, with 700 gang members associated. That's just in the city of Edmonton alone, Mr. Speaker.

Now, I've spent a lot of my time here talking about a skewed and a romanticized view of the mob and how this perception is quite different from what's really going on. Indeed, reality paints a much bleaker and more frightening picture. A 2002 Research Innovations survey showed that adult Albertans mostly associate organized crime with importing and trafficking in drugs. That's not an inaccurate view, Mr. Speaker; however, it is incomplete. As I said a few moments ago, the arms of organized crime reach far and wide, probably even to Drayton Valley, where I live. While Albertans are less likely to associate activities like prostitution and credit card fraud and Internet fraud and homicide with organized crime, these areas are being taught.

So I urge everybody to support Motion 508. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening in the Assembly and join the discussion and debate on Motion 508, which calls for enhanced collaboration with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta. I stand in support of the motion as I feel more co-operation, joint efforts, and partnerships between police forces, various levels of government, and the public will help to improve the safety of Alberta's communities. I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Member for Calgary-Buffalo for his hard work and dedication to this motion. It raises some very important issues that need to be addressed regarding organized criminal acts and the possible threats of terrorist activity.

With the passage of this motion Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta would be encouraged to work more collaboratively and co-operatively through partnerships and programs with a number of different government agencies, police units, as well as the public to fight organized crime and terrorism. Motion 508 supports the present methods and strategies in place but also promotes further co-ordinated programs and initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, organized crime is a growing concern for law enforcement authorities and the public. These activities are occurring across the province and may take a variety of different forms including auto theft, drug trafficking, gang activities, or fraud. I recognize that the Alberta government is committed to taking action on this problem. It has contributed over $8 million during a three-year period to Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta to launch programs that address organized crime and terrorist activities. However, I also feel that these partnerships are essential and that enhanced collaboration would only benefit our efforts at addressing these problems.

Mr. Speaker, we must also remember that organized crime is not an issue that stays within a city or provincial boundaries. It is a unique type of criminal activity that requires a co-operative approach. Certainly, we see it crossing our borders, see it in our schools, see it internationally. I think of all the tracking that we saw in tracing bank accounts during the terrorism that has gone on in the world in the last two years. Seeing moneys moving around the world to promote and support terrorism is something that is only going to be growing in a more major way through the Internet and locally even just through cell phones down to a small basis of children in our schools today.

The Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, CISA, exists as a centre of excellence to support the efforts of law enforcement agencies and government to detect, prevent, combat, and control crime that is organized or has a serious impact on the quality of life here in Alberta and on Albertans. Over the last few years CISA has made significant progress in developing a strategic response to organized crime. Alberta was the first province to introduce an intelligence-led process that co-ordinates the efforts of all partners across the private and public sector as well as orders of government. The Alberta approach stresses the use of intelligence from an array of sources, including the public, to identify and respond to a security threat before it occurs. Motion 508 acknowledges the importance of this approach and urges the government to strengthen these joint ventures as we cannot accomplish the task of providing safe communities in isolation.

Mr. Speaker, investigations have illustrated that more needs to be done to ensure the security and safety of Alberta citizens as well as a critical government and private-sector infrastructure. Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta is an integral part and component in Alberta's strategy to combat organized crime and terrorist acts.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to shift my focus now and address a specific element of CISA. This organization declared terrorism a provincial priority October 2001 in response to the events of September 11 and the affiliated criminality. September 11 was a tragic reminder of the destruction caused by terrorist activities. These events have brought terrorist activities to the foreground and have increased the need for emergency preparedness and response for potential attacks and associated criminal acts. The government has taken action, and we acknowledge that we must continue to work this way to keep from having devastating events like this happen again in the future.

Alberta's counterterrorism process developed from recommendations by the Ministerial Task Force on Security. This strategy calls on the resources of government, law enforcement, fire, and health to protect our province from acts of terrorism. Mr. Speaker, we also know from what we saw printed in the newspapers relatively recently that some international targets that have been identified here in Alberta are our oil and gas industry, be it the refineries, pipelines. As well, the Calgary Stampede is a major international target because it's so well known. These are things that we must be prepared for in the future.

CISA was chosen because of its approach, which encompasses intelligence sharing, strategic analysis, operational support, and training. CISA exists to facilitate the exchange of criminal intelligence where the collection, the evaluation, the collation, and analysis can be made to effectively combat the spread of criminal activities. The imperative to prevent terrorist acts requires the use of accessible co-operation and a joint effort of varying agencies and departments around Alberta and across Canada. Police officers are not dealing with just the activities inside their border, Mr. Speaker.

Terrorist attacks threaten more than just the tragic potential loss of life, Mr. Speaker. They undermine our way of life, our freedoms, and our democracy. These acts inflict fear among the citizenry and are unpredictable, resulting in devastation at many different levels in our society. Therefore, we must adopt counterterrorism policies that are effective and utilize the combined resources of the agencies involved. We must use the full scope of intelligence to detect and prevent terrorist plans. Motion 508 calls for increased co-operation, as I've mentioned before. We will continue to work on this and expand our co-operation through intelligence agencies and police agencies around the world.

Mr. Speaker, again I would like to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and I do support him on this motion. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for giving me the honour of speaking to Motion 508. Before I go any further, I would like to take the opportunity to thank my friend the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for introducing this motion. That he has done so shows a great awareness of some of the most pressing issues and concerns facing our society today.

Mr. Speaker, at the core of any intelligence-gathering effort lies, I believe, fear. This may be a fear of the unknown or a fear of something that's quite well known. What is known is that there are activities of organized crime and terrorist cells in our midst, perhaps not right here and perhaps not at all times, but there is a threat, and there is every reason to believe that Alberta is not free of these elements. What is unknown, then, is where, when, how, and in what manner these elements will strike. To some extent we are also not entirely sure why we may become the targets. This is ample rationale for why it is in every Albertan's interest that we enhance our collaboration with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta to increase that which is known and to keep that which is unknown at a minimum. In times of increased uncertainty and concern about safety this is a baseline requirement.

Fear can be and often is a very disarming sensation. As we all know, it can result in a failure to take action or in what we might call overaction, too much or erratic action. However, fear is at the heart of organized crime and terrorism. You can even hear it in the latter: terror and fear are often synonymous terms. With that in mind, it is hardly surprising that terrorists and those who are engaged in activities of organized crime prey on people's fears. By intimidation, by threats, or through violence they try to frighten and coerce their victims into complicity and silence. Speaking up or alerting the proper authorities in any way can have drastic consequences. That's how much power these individuals can exercise. Fear, therefore, is an essential component in the kinds of criminal activities we're concerned with here: drug trafficking, money laundering, prostitution, kidnapping, and extortion just to mention a few. To say that the success of these operations depends at least to a degree on the ability to strike terror in the hearts of men and women is not, I think, an understatement.

It stands to reason, then, that if fear is an essential component in order that terrorism and organized crime be successful, removing or minimizing fear is likely to have an undermining effect. Mr. Speaker, if we know more, we can take action. We can take steps to prepare ourselves. By knowing more, by having some advance knowledge of what may or may not befall us, we would be in a better position to thwart the ambitions of those who are planning to engage in organized criminal activities or acts of terrorism. Quite simply, by knowing more, we will fear less. Ignorance, as it happens, is not bliss. This is certainly the case in 2003. If anything, ignorance is likely to breed more fear.

Mr. Speaker, in recent years we have learned through several tragic events that those who are engaged in the kinds of criminal activities that CISA investigates are not the kinds of persons who are above sacrificing scores of human lives for particular causes. Whether we talk about bombings, hijackings, or kidnappings, these acts have had three things in common. First, those who have carried out the deeds were highly devout and committed believers in whatever cause brought them to take action. When someone is that committed, he or she tends to have made a significant emotional and psychological investment in the cause. Secondly, many of these operations have been or are highly complex operations. Months or even years of planning and preparations were required before they swung into action. I mention this because the complexity of the operations demonstrates a level of sophistication that local police forces, no matter how dedicated they may be, in all likelihood will not be able to match in the long run.

There is a reason why we have heard the term "terrorist cells" a lot in recent months. A cell is, of course, but one small part of a much larger body, and so it is with organized crime and terrorist activities. Often networked, individual cells or factions work independently of one another while still being committed to the same cause or endeavour. Thus, Mr. Speaker, rendering one such cell or faction inoperable may pre-empt its ability to carry out whatever plan it was fashioning, but it does not scuttle the mission. Chances are that another cell will be ready to step in and pick up where the other left off.

Based on the aftermath of the tragic events of 9-11, we know that this can happen and does happen. We know that individual FBI agents and field offices submitted reports about suspicious activities during the summer of 2001 that seemed to have had at least some connection to 9-11. However, in the absence of a central co-ordinating agency to analyze these reports, no clear pattern emerged that could have forestalled what eventually took place. I don't suspect that anything as tragic is about to, let alone would, happen here in Alberta, but we don't know; do we? In any event, we see how the absence of knowledge can be compounded by an absence of analysis of data, whether we talk about motorcycle gangs, organized crime syndicates, or terrorist groups. However, we can rest assured that they are well organized, well co-ordinated, and well funded. This is where CISA could make the difference in that by enhancing collaboration between it and other law enforcement agencies, whether civic, provincial, or federal, it would raise our level of readiness, our level of preparedness in the event of the unthinkable.

We have a responsibility to ourselves and to future generations of Albertans to rise up to meet the challenges and threats that these criminal elements pose to our way of life. Motion 508 is an example of sound policy-making. It will help us increase the level of safety and security of all Albertans. It will help us to better protect and care for all that which is near and dear to our hearts.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I will support Motion 508, and I urge all my colleagues to do so too. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to rise to speak in favour of Motion 508.

Mr. Speaker, criminal intelligence for a constituency like Edmonton-Norwood would be most beneficial for the citizens. What happens in a constituency like Edmonton-Norwood or one where criminal activity is known to occur is that for people who have homes where a lot of this activity carries on, it causes the real estate to be not so favourable at times to buy. At the same time, if you have the real estate and you have a high level of crime activity going on, there's a chance that you may not get a mortgage. There's a chance that you may have your insurance canceled. There are a lot of things that go on. However, if you had this criminal intelligence, it would give a sense of security to the lenders, it would give a sense of security to the insurance companies, and it also would give a sense of security to the buyer. In a market like we're seeing right now, where there's a high level of housing needs, the inner city is one of the places where people tend to go and buy. Once they get there, they would like to have their children going to and from school safely.

So I'd like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for at least looking at this, and it's our duty to at least give it some consideration if not to pass the thing hands down. Mr. Speaker, that simple fact is why I would encourage everybody to support it. It really does affect the homes of individuals. It really does affect our economy, and children and the elderly are the ones who are mostly impacted by criminal activity. I know an elderly gentleman who was taken down and tackled not too far from my constituency office, and nobody seems to know anything about it. If that individual was tracked, then I think we would probably combat those three or four people who brought him down. Plus, you would have some intelligence on his friends and his friends' friends. That's not only in Edmonton; it's all over. It's not only in the inner city; it's in the different areas.

On that note, I'd like to encourage everybody to support Motion 508 and really have a good look at it. Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Occasionally a motion comes along that makes it just about impossible to vote against it.

The motion says:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta to enhance collaborative partnerships and co-ordinated programs with various levels of government, policing agencies, and the public to effectively combat organized crime and terrorism.

I don't think anybody in Alberta would vote against that.

Some of the speakers have talked about the criminal influence, the gang issue, and I want to go into that a little bit more specifically because I think, quite honestly, that in many parts of Alberta we don't understand how serious the gang or organized crime influence is. I just want to read into the record some of the situations that have actually happened in Alberta.

First off, with regard to aboriginal gangs enforcement agencies in Alberta have identified nine aboriginal-based street gangs or criminal organizations. While some of the recruitment of gangs has occurred in various locales in Alberta, considerable recruitment of gang members has occurred within provincial and federal correctional facilities. Once these individuals are released back into society, they continue to recruit in their local communities. In northern Alberta the Indian Posse, the Redd Alert, the Deuce Mob, and the Manitoba/Alberta Warriors have been identified as the most criminally active street gangs. Their primary illegal activities have been drug trafficking, prostitution, and the sale of black-market cigarettes. While the main centre of gang activity has been in Edmonton, gang members have been identified and in some cases arrested in northern Alberta communities. No one likes to talk about this kind of stuff, but it's important that the public hears. There's some more. At least one group, the Alberta Warriors, has had some association with the Hells Angels. Aboriginal-based groups are criminally active in theft, drug trafficking, prostitution, robberies, assaults, intimidation/extortion activities.

The Asian gangs. I don't know why, but it seems to make the news more when they can connect gangs with some group. The Asian-based organized crime groups continue to be primarily based in the urban centres of Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto, and Montreal, but smaller cities and rural areas are increasingly being used to conduct their criminal activities. The structure of Asian organized crime includes criminal youth and members of street gangs. This membership is fluid, with members often conducting several different criminal enterprises with members of other gangs. The ability for these gangs to work together makes it increasingly difficult for individual police forces to follow up on what they're doing, so the co-operation from within Alberta and province to province or from the federal system to us is absolutely paramount if we want to stop these before they become any worse or grow to become a bigger influence on the people of Alberta.

We know that the outlaw motorcycle gangs are here, particularly the Hells Angels. We know that they're involved in counterfeiting, loan sharking, extortion, escort agencies, strip clubs, possession and trafficking of illegal weapons, stolen goods, contraband, alcohol and cigarettes. You know, we read about these. We see them in the paper, and we'd like to think they're not here. We'd like to think they're in the bigger cities, Toronto, Montreal, and the American cities, but quite honestly they're here now and to not address it is to deny the truth.

So, Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to congratulate the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, someone who's spent a lifetime in criminal enforcement agencies and is completely aware of the problems we face. I hope the Members of the Legislative Assembly can support this motion tonight. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate?

Mr. Cernaiko: Please. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to sum up Motion 508. Since September 11, 2001, concern for potential terrorist activities throughout North America and specifically Alberta has been on the minds of all of us. However, there is work being done to ensure that we are not attacked by terrorists or organized crime. We've heard the Solicitor General through the last few months talk about her relationship with CISA and the $2.4 million a year that is provided from this government to CISA for nonoperational and/or administrative functions with CISA to administer this organization within Alberta. This is truly effective, but we also have to look at: what is the role and responsibility of CISA into the future? Do they have an operational role? Do they have a role that may tie in with policing agencies throughout Alberta and yet a futuristic responsibility in an operational role that will look at the additional mandate that we as the Legislative Assembly may provide them?

The Solicitor General has provided $1 million for IP projects for CISA over the past year which still have not been conceived in the fact that there still are difficulties with the relationships between the municipal policing agencies in Alberta and the RCMP, but we are hopeful that through her office the relationships and the contracts will be conceived over the next year.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most critical factors to prevent serious criminal activities is the sharing of information and intelligence. Information is scattered raw data. Intelligence, on the other hand, is information that has been put through a process of collection, evaluation, analysis, dissemination, and re-evaluation. Relevant credible information plus quality analysis equals useful intelligence. CISA assists in the exchange of criminal intelligence.

The potential threat, Mr. Speaker, to people and the critical infrastructure of Alberta represents a public risk that is shared by all Albertans. I encourage all members in this Assembly to urge the government to work harder and commit more time and funding for criminal intelligence efforts. I ask all members to support this motion.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 carried]

Full-service Gasoline Stations

510. Mr. Masyk moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation requiring every gasoline service station in Alberta to have at least one full-service bay to improve accessibility for the disabled and the elderly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to bring forward Motion 510. Originally I brought forward the motion because of personal experiences. I once witnessed an elderly lady being covered with gasoline while attempting to fill her vehicle. I was appalled that this woman, a member of our generation that built this great province, was humiliated because corporations have overlooked the need of an entire segment of our society.

Mr. Speaker, I have to ask the members of the Assembly to first look at a stage that I'd like to set, and the stage is regarding depth and width, and it's a little analogy of a bricklayer and three people. You'd come to them, and you'd ask the first one what he is doing. He would respond: I'm laying bricks. To link that to what I'm bringing forward would be a no, not to accept this motion. The second would be to ask the person: what are you doing? He'd say:

building a wall. That would be to divide the House 50-50: 50 yes and 50 no. What I'm asking for is for some greater insight and to look at it deeply and for the members to accept and pass Motion 510. When he asked the bricklayer: what are you doing? He would say: I'm building a cathedral. So, members, by passing this you'd have great vision, you'd have great depth, and you'd be building a cathedral, not laying bricks.

Mr. Speaker, after witnessing that incident, I did some personal research into how many full-service stations there are in Edmonton. I found that between three major gasoline providers – Petro-Canada, Shell, Esso – full service was offered at only 20 of 110 stations. Having only 18 percent of the gasoline stations provide this essential service for a city of nearly 1 million people seems outrageous, especially when our population is rapidly aging and the fact that more people with disabilities are driving nowadays. To make matters worse, if a senior citizen or a disabled person wants to find out where the nearest full-service station was located, it's only Shell that has this information readily available to the public by way of the Internet. Currently 10 percent of our population is over 65. By 2026 20 percent of Alberta's population will be in this age group.

As legislators it is our duty to prepare a progressive province for the future. This is exactly what Motion 510 does. It creates equality for those who have contributed a lifetime of hard work to this province and who now deserve society's respect. For many of us it is difficult to imagine that we one day may require assistance as we age, and the way our age is now, on average, as we speak, they're hewing some granite out and chiseling our names on it.

Living independently for as long as possible is a goal that many of us share and many seniors strive for. To not be a burden on anyone in our society is a fundamental aspect for a way of life in Alberta. Part of this strong sense of independence is the right of mobility. In a North American society a life not free from impediments or immobility is no life at all.

Part of our view of freedom of movement or independent living involves having the ability to drive your vehicle when you desire. The ability to drive your vehicle involves, in turn, the ability to obtain fuel. With full-service stations increasingly scarce, it, however, becomes increasingly difficult to achieve and maintain full independence for those who have special needs.

It's true, Mr. Speaker, that some businesses are becoming more aware of the needs of seniors. The senior-friendly program initiated by the Alberta Council on Aging is a good example of how the private sector voluntarily can make a change in existing practices so that businesses become more accessible to seniors. Through the tools and products of this program businesses and organizations that offer services to seniors are provided with information and tips on how they can improve their service to seniors by eliminating barriers and enhancing accessibility. However, gasoline stations in Alberta have yet to make the necessary changes in order to make accessibility an important feature of their business practices.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, Motion 510 also seeks to increase accessibility for disabled Albertans. Seniors will not be the only group that will benefit from this motion. Currently there are half a million people in Alberta living with a disability. Ours is a province that prides itself on equality for all citizens regardless of race, creed, background, or abilities, but when it comes to the issue of mobility, our high standard of equality is not being met at present. It is time we took a step forward toward equality and fairness and grant Albertans with disabilities the freedom which the rest of us have come to take for granted.

Mr. Speaker, advances in technology have made and continue to make driving motor vehicles more accessible for Albertans living with disabilities. However, for all the new technological breakthroughs that automobile manufacturers have made, fuel service providers have not kept up with the advances. With more and more new service stations being built that are self-serve only, we continue leaving persons with disabilities at a disadvantage. If private business cannot meet the needs of Albertans who are already disadvantaged in our society, it is our duty as elected officials to come to their assistance. I was always of the attitude we were elected by the people for the people.

Mr. Speaker, this government through the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities has made tremendous strides in enhancing the lives of the disabled. In December 2002 the council released the Alberta disability strategy, which is currently being reviewed by the Department of Community Development. The Alberta disability strategy has eight major recommendations for immediate implementation. Of these eight, three bear directly on Motion 510.

The first recommendation is that "Albertans should be made more aware of the rights, needs and aspirations of persons with disabilities." If passed, Motion 510 would directly address the issue of equality rights and the needs of disabled Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the second recommendation is that "the Government of Alberta must ensure that the needs of persons with disabilities related to their daily living activities are met." Freedom of mobility is an essential part of daily living. Therefore, by providing equality at gasoline stations, it should be obvious how Motion 510 would assist government in implementing the recommendation of the Alberta disability strategy.

Mr. Speaker the third recommendation of the strategy recommends that a commitment should be made to "universal accessibility and a process put in place to remove physical barriers from public spaces so that all Albertans can fully participate in all community, employment and business activities."

Again, it's clear how Motion 510 is consistent with government's progressive and important recommendations. Albertans with disabilities are currently hampered by disadvantages when it comes to freedom of mobility. If a person living with disabilities is to fully participate in all community, employment, and business activities, there must be full equality in the basic necessity of transportation and mobility.

In conclusion, I would ask you to adopt a little different attitude, Mr. Speaker. Because you can't fill up your tank, it's not time to hang up the keys. It's time to amend our policy and amend our views on the disabled and elderly. I would like to clearly state that the possibilities proposed in Motion 510 are far from impossible. In Oregon and New Jersey full-service gasoline stations are mandatory. In New Jersey the law was passed in 1947, whereas the Oregon statute has been on the books since 1951. These states prove that equality and safety can be at the forefront of government policy without needlessly hampering business.

Mr. Speaker, with static electricity and what I've seen, it wouldn't take much of a spark, and the elderly lady or a disabled person would have some serious burns, not to mention the impact it has on the environment. One ounce of gasoline destroys something like 5,000 square feet of atmosphere. [interjection] Space. That's why the shuttle crashed.

Mr. Speaker, for Alberta's 300,000 seniors and 500,000 Albertans living with disabilities, Motion 510 is a necessity. The fundamental issue of ethics, of equality, and fairness of the issue address Motion 510. Alberta is already a leader in the nation when it comes to progressive legislation. Motion 510 will continue to be a proud legacy. We cannot wait.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge everybody to see the cathedral. Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, Mr. Speaker, there's a great deal to be said for clarity, and I'm really glad that I was able to hear the member that brought forward and proposed Motion 510 speak to his motion because I have to say that recently I've seen a number of motions brought forward that in fact as written on the page do not reflect what the member was trying to achieve. When I was reading this motion, it was not clear to me what the ultimate aim was, and I'm glad that we were able to hear the member clarify his intent around this because I think there are a number of different ways that it's possible to interpret what in fact is on the page.

When I read something that says urge the government to introduce legislation requiring every gasoline service station in Alberta to have at least one full-service bay to improve accessibility for the disabled and the elderly,

I originally thought, where I come from anyway, that a full-service bay is actually where a mechanic works on a car, and I thought: "Okay. I don't quite understand why. The public is not allowed into the actual working environs of a full-service gas station that's providing mechanical expertise." But, no. The member has clarified that he's really talking about offering full-service assistance in gas stations to people who perhaps for a variety of reasons are not able to be operating the self-service pumps. I hope that in the closing that is offered to the member, he will be able to clarify that in fact what he is seeking is special gas pumps, not service bays but gas pumps or full-service attendants to come out and fill the gas tanks in people's vehicles if they are not able to or have some sort of mobility or accessibility restriction to be able to do it themselves.

The member mentioned a number of excellent programs that exist now to encourage people to look around and think how simple changes in the environment or in fact in the way they approach various tasks could be improved so that everyone is able to have better access to it. A simple example is the easier-to-open doors or the electronic doors now where you can push a button or a panel beside the door and the door will open. Originally this was envisioned as being helpful to people who really would be classed as having a disability, but in fact if you stand there and watch, lots of people take advantage of that, and it assists many different kinds of people with access to buildings; for example, moms that are pushing those little pushcarts with toddlers or babies in them, someone with a temporary disability like a broken arm or struggling with crutches or perhaps with a back ailment that's making them a little stiff and it's hard to yank those big heavy doors open, people that are carrying packages. You know, you can sort of whack those buttons with your elbow or even with the package itself, and the door will open.

So what was intended to benefit a fairly small segment of the population in fact a great number of the population takes advantage of: accessibility. In most cases it has not turned out to be an enormous burden upon either the business sector or the public sector to provide this. Now as we build buildings, those are automatically built in mostly because we put the legislation in place to make sure that those things would be considered when buildings were either retrofitted or put in place.

I am always supportive that we are increasing the participation of every Albertan fully in the life of the province. I think that enhances all of our lives and brings into play the talents and brain power and expertise of all Albertans. So anything we can do to make accessibility easier for people, absolutely; I'm more than willing to support it. And my colleagues in the Official Opposition have always been supportive. In fact, one of my former colleagues, the former Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, was a leader and a crusader in that area, and certainly one of the reasons we enjoy such strong accessibility legislation and bylaws in Edmonton is because of him. He has shown us all leadership, and we've all learned a great deal from him. Am I willing to support something that makes it easier for people to gas up either using technology that would make the pump system easier to access somehow or in fact by making sure that there are people there to assist if someone required it? Absolutely.

Just a couple of questions for the member. Is he anticipating that there would eventually be legislation that would require gas service stations to provide that additional staff person that's available to come out and actually operate the pumps for someone that couldn't do it themselves, or is he anticipating some sort of a retrofit program, for instance, like the city of Edmonton has in place where businesses can apply for a grant to help them retrofit buildings for accessibility for persons with disabilities? Exactly how is he anticipating the follow-through in getting this idea in place? I'm interested if he can expand upon that, please.

Now that he's clarified that what he was really talking about is access to the fueling system in gas stations, that makes it much easier for me to support this. If I can get the clarification on whether he's anticipating legislation that would require additional staff or somehow that all staff that are working in gas stations are capable of leaving their cash register and going out and doing this or how he is anticipating the implementation of this.

Good ideas are gratefully received, but if they don't ever make their way to implementation, they just become a frustration for us. So I'm pressing him to follow through on the rest of how he sees this coming to be, and I'm sure that in the time – he will probably have another week before he does his closing comments. It gives him time to seek guidance from some of the excellent agencies that we have working in Alberta, like the ACA or the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities or agencies like the ones in my riding like EmployAbilities or DECSA, all of which I'm sure would be more than willing to give him advice on this very important issue.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak to this. I am willing to vote in favour of Motion 510. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to be able to stand up and speak to Motion 510. My constituents feel that the government already makes too many laws, and really they don't want any more restrictions on how they do their work. Albertans just want to work. Business does not want government to get involved in private business.

I guess one thing that I do want to say is: maybe the situations could be a little different in urban Alberta as opposed to rural Alberta. I need to talk about rural Alberta a little bit because I need to talk about small-town Alberta. Sometimes we only have one service station that's open, and if we are going to legislate business to have to operate with two people on duty, then that provides such a restriction because there isn't enough money being made to be able to support it.

You have to also remember that now we don't have service stations that only serve gas, where you can have an attendant that leaves the service station, goes to serve the gas, and the only thing that's left maybe in the service station is a till. Most of the service stations are a convenience store at the same time. It wouldn't take long for people to realize that if you have one attendant and he has to go outside to serve people, the money that he may make on the gas could be lost on chips and pop that might be underneath the coat.

I also say that, you know, there has been some allusion made to seniors needing assistance, and I would suggest that in my constituency, at least from my experience – and I have seniors coming to my office – they have a tremendous network. They know where there are service stations that have attendants that do pump gas in the daytime. They know exactly where they can go to get the service, and I don't think they need to go to the Internet to find out where those service stations are. It doesn't take them long in the pipeline of knowledge to find out where those places are.

I would also like to say that I really believe that having self-serves teaches kids how to maintain their vehicles a little bit and at least try to identify some of the problems that vehicles may have, checking the oil, looking at the fan belt, doing some of this checking. If you have a situation where you are going to have attendants that are going to take care of this, they are never going to go to the place where they have to do the self-serve. It's just easier to have someone else do it and thereby not have that much information or knowledge gathering.

I believe that we just cannot afford to impose restrictions on businesses on the amount of staff that they need. I think the service stations are operating very well. They want the business, and they are doing the work that is going to acquire the most business possible, and I very much would like to speak against those types of restrictions which are in Motion 510.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the opportunity to rise tonight and speak in favour of Motion 510. I'd like to begin my remarks by commending the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood for introducing this motion. Not only that; a motion such as Motion 510 requires that the sponsor be a caring person as well as someone who is cognizant of the barriers that some members of our society face each and every day. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood is such a person.

Humility is a virtue and one that perhaps we do not accord the status it deserves in daily life. In a society as dependent on the automobile as ours we sometimes forget that driving a car is not a right, but rather it is a privilege, as well it should be. While a car offers great convenience and ease of use, it is also something that requires a great deal of responsibility. In the wrong hands any car can become a deadly weapon. To put it quite simply, Motion 510 deals with matters of fairness and safety. As has already been stated, the purpose of Motion 510 is to enact legislation . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 18

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 18 today. I have listened to the questions and concerns of the members opposite with great interest and would like to take this opportunity to address them.

It's important to keep the intent of this bill in mind as we move forward. This bill is designed to allow the Department of Energy to deal more effectively with land tenure and collection issues. It allows for a more effective collection process by providing certainty around which leaseholder has the natural gas rights when natural gas is found in coal seams or solution gas is found in conjunction with oil sands. This clarifies which leaseholder is responsible for paying royalty and which royalty regime applies. It codifies joint liability so that the Crown will not have to argue the common-law precedents in every case where a lessee defaults on a royalty payment. It clarifies that provisions governing royalty recalculations apply to royalty and to associated interest and penalties, and it sets out reasonable time periods to complete recalculations of royalty and related interest and penalties.

First, I'd like to highlight the fact that the Auditor General's report for the past two years has indicated that the gas royalty calculation and collection process has shown no outstanding issues or concerns. In fact, production data reported to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board and to the Department of Energy has been enhanced through the implementation of the Petroleum Registry of Alberta. Up-front audits and validation processes ensure that only accurate data is accepted. Missing or incomplete data is identified and subject to compliance mechanisms such as penalties.

The Auditor General has also made recommendations with respect to the disclosure of costs related to royalty reduction programs. It's my understanding that the department addressed the Auditor General's concerns regarding these programs as part of the most recent completed audit.

Regarding individual meters on oil and gas wells, in Alberta today there is essentially a meter at every wellhead with some minor exceptions. The main exception is for the very low-producing wells in southern Alberta, where a number of wells can be measured through a common metering site. This means that the combined production for a cluster of wells is measured. There is a second set of metering for virtually all gas production in the province, which is the measurement of natural gas and natural gas liquids leaving natural gas plants. When the gaseous and liquid components have been separated and water and other impurities removed, the plant custody measurement is even more accurate than the wellhead meters. To make wellhead meters as accurate as plant custody meters would require building a miniature gas plant at each well, which is just not feasible.

Regarding new technologies, new technologies could result in better allocations back to the wellhead and could conceivably improve even the highly accurate plant gate custody meters. Metering affects the distribution of revenues between pipeline owners and well owners, so there is a very healthy interest in using the most accurate metering that is practically available. Mr. Chairman, accurate measurement of oil and gas is important to ensure that Albertans receive their fair share of royalties and the government ensures that production and disposition are properly calculated and reported.

Mr. Chairman, a member of the opposition asked about the extent of the problem in recalculating freehold mineral tax. The answer is that the total adjustments are approximately 2 percent of what is collected, or about $2 million; that is, 2 percent of the mineral rights tax that is collected. The Department of Energy is very diligent in collecting all the tax that's due.

Mr. Chairman, a member of the opposition also raised some concern over the use of the word "may" in section 3 of the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Act. The word "may" empowers the minister to recalculate the tax payable. One should look at the entire act along with the regulation under the act to see if there are any conditions prescribing and exercising that power. Section 6 of the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Act clearly states that where the tax owed on a single tract is less than $20, then no tax is owed. The use of the word "may" in the proposed section 3 of the act ensures consistency with section 6 of the regulation.

A question of why the minister is being given the power to determine the order of payment has also been raised. The order of payment to gas accounts is specified in the natural gas royalty regulation, 2002. With respect to freehold mineral tax, allocation to specific tax years may be required to ensure that the oldest outstanding arrears are paid first. This helps ensure that a freehold mineral owner's title does not go into default.

In relation to the legal question a member of the opposition asked in regard to ownership of the gas underneath the tar sands and bitumen mines, the provisions in Bill 18 are proposed to resolve the ownership of gas and solution gas in oil sands areas. The Crown identified the ownership conflict situation and provided industry more clarity surrounding the issue. The new definition is contained in Bill 18. On Crown land Albertans own all the resources: gas, petroleum, and bitumen. Bill 18 explains the issue of which lessee has the right to the solution gas.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised some questions regarding venting and how this will affect the development of coal bed methane. The venting of methane ahead of the mining operation for safety reasons will have a very minor impact on the total volume of coal bed methane that will be developed in Alberta. There are a total of 24 permits to develop a mine in the province, which on an area basis represents only three out of a thousand of the total coal available for coal bed methane development. That's .3 percent. Explosions caused by coal bed methane during mining have historically been a bane to miners. This requirement to vent coal gas ahead of the mining operation is critical for the continued safe mining operations in Alberta.

Coal bed methane is in the early stages of development in Alberta. The Alberta government intends to proceed carefully with the development of this untapped resource so that it can learn from the experience of other jurisdictions and from data collected from Alberta operations. Coal bed methane is natural gas, and it is subject to the same legislation, regulations, and administrative practices as conventional natural gas. Alberta Energy, the EUB, Alberta Environment, and Sustainable Resource Development have existing regulations that apply to coal bed methane development.

In October 2002 the Department of Energy announced a cross-ministry review and external consultation process to determine if the existing regulations and policies are appropriate for responsible coal bed methane development or if any changes should be made. The planned cross-government external consultation process, that includes public input, will address a broad range of issues associated with coal bed methane development, including water, to ensure that recommendations balance industry interests with landowner, resident, and environmental considerations.

The Department of Energy is continuously reviewing its existing rules as well as developing new rules to ensure that the Crown and Albertans receive the intended shares of royalties from the development of energy resources. The royalty regime for oil sands delays taking a large up-front royalty due to the significant investment required to start up a project. The regime is designed to allow the Crown and industry to receive a fair share of the profits from oil sands over the entire cycle of a project. The Department of Energy requires all large oil sands projects to be audited on an annual basis by an external accounting firm. The department also performs its own audits on all projects to ensure accurate collection of royalty revenues.

Regarding water flow, it is a requirement in Alberta to obtain a well licence from the EUB to drill an oil and gas well and to ensure that groundwater resources are protected. As part of the EUB application process, Alberta Environment has input by requiring surface casing, which I'm sure you've all heard of, to be set at a depth below the base of groundwater protection. This cemented surface casing protects any water aquifers that may be in the area from possible damage while the well is being drilled. If anyone suspects that the drilling or production of a well is causing disruptions in their water flow, they should contact the EUB, who will investigate their complaints.

To finish my comments, I strongly support Bill 18 as it advances Alberta's land tenure and collection capabilities. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and participate in the debate on Bill 18 at committee stage. Certainly, I appreciate the answers to my questions from earlier in debate from the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

One cannot find too much fault with this legislation if one is just to look at the intent, which I believe is to provide legislative clarity for investors as well as to ensure that the rules are clear and effective for someone drilling a well. When we think of this and we think of the fact that the hon. member just concluded by saying that the coal bed methane industry is in its early stages of development in this province and that coal bed methane and natural gas are supposedly one and the same and that it's an industry that is in its infancy, I have to question at this time if this legislation is what the coal bed methane industry needs at this point in its development.

Now, there certainly are other initiatives presented here, Mr. Chairman. You know, we are going to amend the Mines and Minerals Act and the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Act. We've already discussed that. We are going to permit the government to enhance its tenure and its collection practices, and at this time I would like to know from the hon. member if this is just for Crown tenure or if it is also for private tenure.

Last week I had the pleasure of attending a public meeting in Camrose with many of the landowners in Camrose, some of whom have rights that are older than the province. These have been passed down from one generation of the family to another. We had quite an interesting discussion. First and foremost, these individuals certainly wanted to talk about electricity and natural gas deregulation but were very interested to also talk about the coal bed methane industry. They recognized that there were a number of wells that could be drilled on a section, sometimes a lot more wells. In some rural areas 64 wells a section were proposed for coal bed methane development, and this number of wells was not, to say the least, popular with the farmers or the landowners. There was the issue of compressor noise. There was the issue of water disposal.

I thought at that time: well, this would be an ideal time to do some research into development in other jurisdictions and just what exactly other jurisdictions have done. The hon. member mentioned that in her remarks, and certainly I would think that this government would not like to lag behind other jurisdictions. I didn't have to go far in my research, encouraged by the farmers, to find out that B.C. in this legislative session has a bill, Bill 16, the Coalbed Gas Act, introduced by the hon. Minister of Energy and Mines in British Columbia, and it's a lot different, I must say, than what we are looking at in this province. After reading through it, it gave this member cause for concern.

Now, it looks like in proposing the Coalbed Gas Act, the British Columbia government has taken the lead as the most coal bed methane-friendly jurisdiction in Canada. The Minister of Energy and Mines in B.C. is developing a coal bed methane strategy. I do know that there are some pilot projects going on on Vancouver Island, and the government has made a commitment to coal bed gas development that is going to encourage and promote confidence for investors and also promote confidence in exploration opportunities throughout B.C.

I don't know what is going to happen with this bill if it is going to be assumed by investors that B.C. is a little bit more friendly towards exploration and investment and if people are going to vote with their feet and go there. That's why I would urge caution on Bill 18, and if there's a way to improve this legislation through amendment, well, perhaps the time is right for this House to consider it.

As I said earlier, we have Bill 18, and British Columbia has Bill 16, and the purpose of Bill 16 in B.C. is simply to promote economic activity in that province by removing any uncertainty that surrounds entitlement to coal bed gas underlying both Crown and freehold lands in that province. Our Bill 18 is going to amend, certainly, section 67 of the Mines and Minerals Act to clarify, as I understand it, that Alberta Crown coal tenure does not include "rights to any natural gas, including coalbed methane." If that is wrong, if the hon. member could clarify that, I would be very grateful.

Now, the proposed Bill 16 in British Columbia is, as I understand it, declaratory legislation that confirms a long-standing B.C. government policy that coal bed gas is a natural gas owned by the owner of the natural gas rights by deeming natural gas to be and to always have been a mineral and deeming coal bed gas to be and to always have been natural gas. It is further confirmed that a natural gas tenure issue pursuant to the Petroleum and Natural Gas Act includes coal bed gas rights and that a coal tenure issue pursuant to the Coal Act does not, regardless of when such tenures were issued.

The Alberta Bill 18 is, on the other hand, much more limited, or it has restrictions. The proposed legislation, as our research indicates and as I've been told, is that the legislation certainly clarifies that coal bed gas is not included in Crown coal tenure but does not specifically include such substances in natural gas tenure although the definition of natural gas leaves little doubt in this regard on a go-forward basis. Significantly, the Alberta legislation is silent as to its retroactive effect on the vested property rights of current tenure holders. Existing natural gas tenure holders must rely on the regulatory incorporation provisions contained in the Crown tenure documents. Mr. Chairman, the contractual provision in Crown dispositions whereby the grantee agrees to incorporate into the contract compliance with further legislation enactments. We also have to consider that the statutory compliance provision in section 4 of the Mines and Minerals Act provides that the act applies to an agreement made, entered into, or renewed under the former act notwithstanding anything in the agreement.

The Mines and Minerals Act here in Alberta applying to an agreement must be recognized as less effective language than, for example, the province of Saskatchewan Crown Minerals Act, which provides that all existing Crown dispositions shall be deemed to be issued under that act. Without specific retroactive enactment language or a stronger statutory compliance provision, it is open for the current holders of Alberta Crown coal tenure to argue that existing agreements are unaffected by the Alberta amendment act. If the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow could confirm this or answer my questions around this, I would be very grateful. There are current holders of Crown coal tenure. Will they want to be compensated in this case?

There are many people with opinions on this, but A.R. Thompson in his article Sovereignty and Natural Resources has studied Canadian petroleum legislation and identifies limitations on the doctrine of regulatory incorporation insofar as it pertains to certain basic or fundamental provisions of a Crown disposition. The first argument is that there are certain entrenched provisions contained in the grant or conveyance language of a Crown disposition which are separate and apart and of a more fundamental nature than the other covenants and conditions contained in the document. This, it is noted, parallels the Supreme Court of Canada's distinction in British Columbia v. Tener between mere regulation and defeating the grantee's entire interest in the land.

A.R. Thompson's second argument is founded on a basic consideration of contract law and recognizes that notwithstanding a clause binding a party to the contract to comply with such changes as may from time to time be introduced by the other party, there is a core of the contract which is unalterable and must be performed. It is open to the court to identify certain fundamental terms of the Crown coal tenure which are unalterable by the Crown, by the corporation of the future, statutory provisions, or regulations. Such fundamental terms might include the basic right to produce and market these substances and to extend the nature of the granted substances themselves.

Now, the proposed Alberta Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, Bill 18, and the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 1978, introduced an expanded definition of oil sands which was discussed earlier. When this happened, it was with the following language: an agreement granting rights to petroleum and natural gas or either of them, whether granted before, on, or after July 1, 1978, does not grant rights to oil sands. I would like to get some of these questions answered in regard to this.

Mr. Chairman, there are several historical examples of Canadian jurisdictions employing legislation to bring about the consistent resolution of mineral ownership ambiguities. While certain of these enactments strictly address Crown tenures that overlap in a substance context, such as section 125 of the British Columbia Petroleum and Natural Gas Act and section 4(2) of the Alberta petroleum and natural gas tenure regulation, which deems petroleum tenure not to include rights to oil sands, others encompass both public and private lands, such as sections 56, 57, and 58 of the Alberta Law of Property Act and the Saskatchewan Sand and Gravel Act.

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding that the British Columbia legislation affects privately held lands, it is important to distinguish its declaratory nature from legislation that affects exploration of the coal bed gas resources in that province. The proposed coal gas act simply seeks to address the uncertainty that surrounds the case-by-case application of the vernacular test for mineral entitlement determination employed by Canadian courts. When taken in context, the proposed coal gas act strikes an equitable balance between the use of legislative power to fulfill public policy objectives with the need for certainty of private mineral tenure.

By way of illustration, research indicates and reminds us of the following historical examples of the exercise of provincial legislative power to affect by way of exploration privately held mineral rights. Saskatchewan's Oil and Gas Conservation Stabilization and Development Act, 1973, vested in the Crown petroleum and natural gas in all producing tracts in Saskatchewan down to and including the producing zones. Nova Scotia's Petroleum Resources Act vests in the province all petroleum including any mineral oil or relative hydrocarbon and any natural gas including coal gas existing in its natural condition in strata. British Columbia's Geothermal Resources Act vests all geothermal resources in the Crown. The Petroleum and Natural Gas (Vancouver Island Railway Lands) Act can be used to vest petroleum and natural gas rights on Vancouver Island in the Crown. Section 128 of the Petroleum and Natural Gas Act permits the Crown to vest storage reservoirs in the Crown.

That's one example of questions that would certainly make one cautious about whether Bill 18 is at this time what the coal bed gas industry needs for further development. When we look at how important this is going to be for the province, not only must we develop this industry in a timely fashion, Mr. Chairman, but it must be done right. We can make an effort not to repeat some of the mistakes that have been made south of the border.

Now, there's no doubt that coal bed methane could in the future supplement Alberta's natural gas supply. The gas is sweet and dry, and generally it's pure methane with small amounts of carbon dioxide and nitrogen. Coal bed methane accounts for 7 percent of total U.S. production, and it's growing. With industry interests in coal bed methane development increasing, the Department of Energy – and I've been following this with a great deal of interest – commissioned a report on the potential of the coal bed methane reserve base and the conditions necessary for the development of such. The report I would think is almost required reading for all hon. members of this Assembly. When we look and we recognize that coal bed methane is a form of natural gas – and as I understand it, here in Alberta coal bed methane royalty is going to be calculated in the same manner as conventional natural gas – we need to ensure that everything that is possible will be done to proceed with development of this natural resource, and everything that's possible means making sure we've got a proper method of disposing of the produced water. How we use that is paramount to public confidence in the development of this industry.

I look forward to participating some more later, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

9:30

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, are you rising to speak?

Dr. Massey: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: Okay.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 18, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. The bill, as my colleague indicated, has been preceded by one in the province to the west, and one of the positions that's being put forward is that this should be treated as a separate resource and not lumped in with others.

Mr. Chairman, I don't have my notes, and I'm going to have to get organized and cede the floor to a colleague.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I want to make just a couple of comments in Committee of the Whole, which is a better sort of working session for us to ask and answer questions here. My continuing struggle when I look at Bill 18 is that it's not going far enough. It's not giving me certainty and clarity in what I'm seeking. It is not clear exactly who it applies to. I listened to the opening remarks from the member, and she mentioned again oil and natural gas but didn't mention coal bed methane. So the struggle that I continue to have with this bill is that it is not talking about the obvious, and I want to know: the coal bed methane rights are assumed under what? Oil rights or natural gas rights?

So I'm going to ask the questions, and then the minister can respond to me, because that's what we do in Committee of the Whole. It's not being spelled out in this bill, and it's not being separated out, which is what I am seeking here. I think it's dangerous to assume that those rights will be picked up under the other two, because it in fact is not spelled out, and the assumption is a wrong way to go about creating certainty in this area. There's a lot of money at stake here. There are a lot of jobs at stake here. Our whole province is built on oil and gas revenues and productions and royalties and all of that. So to sort of not say anything and not provide certainty and clarity is where I am really struggling to be able to support this bill. Is there the possibility of an amendment that would sort this out and make it clear? We've got oil rights; that's one thing. We've got natural gas rights; okay. But there should be a requirement that you would have to negotiate coal bed methane rights outside of whatever is anticipated by those two. I don't want to belabour the point. I hope I've made it as clear as possible that that's my hesitation here.

We are dancing around and not talking about the very thing that to me is most obvious. Now, perhaps it happened that when the impetus for creating this amending act came forward, we still weren't really sure how likely coal bed methane production was going to be in Alberta, and maybe it's progressed so rapidly that the legislation or amending act didn't keep pace with that. I don't know. I don't know what the reasoning is behind it. But it's not acceptable to me to have an assumption about something as important as energy production and its effect upon the whole fibre and fabric and economic well-being of this province.

I think it has to be spelled out, and it's not being spelled out in this bill, and that's my problem with supporting it: that it's just not talked about. I'm looking for that kind of certainty and that kind of clarity that it will be spelled out, and unless I'm seeing some sort of amendment or something very clear that's going to happen that hasn't happened so far, I'm having problems supporting this bill. So that's where my hesitation in supporting it is: that the bill is not going far enough in spelling out who gets what, where, and why and that it's not clear exactly what that is.

Thanks very much.

Ms DeLong: I thought that maybe I should clarify things before we get any further off track here. One first of all has to look at what leases really are. Okay? When you have a lease, you don't have a lease to have all of the gas all the way down to the centre of the Earth or all of the oil all the way down to the centre of the Earth. Each separate formation is a separate lease in terms of what you're producing from. We do not have separate categories for natural gas that comes out of sandstone, natural gas that comes out of shale, natural gas that comes out of all of these different kinds of rock, just the same as we don't have separate types of leases that come out of coal bed strata. So all we're trying to get cleared up here is that if you have a lease for coal, for actually taking coal out of the ground, that does not mean that you have a lease for producing gas. That's the only thing we're trying to clear up here.

So we're not going into some new area here. When we talk about how coal bed methane is new, the only thing new about how we're handling coal bed methane is that it's new technology, and we have new technology that we apply to other kinds of gas wells. For instance, when we first starting fracturing by putting chemicals down there, that was a new technology. When we first produced gas by putting explosives down there, that was a new type of gas. All the tertiary recovery is new technology. Similarly, as we produce natural gas out of this particular seam that just happens to be coal, again, it is new technology, but essentially we have exactly the same kind of lease structure as we always had.

Now, there were also some questions in terms of how water is used. Again, we are producing natural gas. Okay? All of the rules we have that apply to a coal seam or that apply to sandstone or that apply to whatever type of formation we normally get the natural gas out of also apply to coal. So in terms of how we handle the water, in terms of how we handle salt water or if there's any potable water, again, that is just standard natural gas production.

Thank you.

9:40

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now, again to the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow: does Bill 18 limit or restrict coal bed methane production to a certain depth? As I understand it, the potential from coal beds varies in this province anywhere from 20 feet to 3,000 feet, and anything below 3,000 feet would be economically . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'm just being advised that you may want to clear room where your speaker is so that your voice can be picked up for Hansard purposes.

You may proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Sorry. I apologize, Mr. Chairman.

Now, there are many different coal beds that have potential in this province, and I am of the understanding that the only ones that are going to be dealt with in this legislation are the ones that are Crown tenure. Do we also need to address the issue of private tenure at the same time? If we're going to develop this industry, like I hope we do, let's do it right. But I am perplexed as to the definition of – I could be misunderstanding you, and I apologize if I am – a production zone and the gas calculation and the respective royalty calculation that would go along with that. You can have a well with multizone production in different zones, but with coal bed methane gas how exactly is all this going to work?

There are still some technical questions surrounding this bill that I don't feel are satisfactorily answered. Particularly, is Bill 18 here too limited in what it's attempting to do to enhance coal bed methane exploration and production? When we look at all the issues, I don't know if we have addressed them in this bill: the technical issues, the issues of land access and tenure access. I'm not satisfied that this is the answer. Water disposal and diversion issues. Certainly, the farmers in Camrose last week had concerns around the issue of water and water disposal. Fortunately, our research indicates that the coal seams in Alberta do not nearly have the water that they do in America. Hopefully, we won't have any thought even of surface discharge in this province, and we will have injection of this water perhaps into a formation that was producing oil and is now in a mature state of production, and we could use that for enhanced oil recovery.

We discussed this earlier, at second reading, but there are other issues surrounding this. We know that coal bed methane developments at this point are high risk. There's a lot of capital involved. Certainly, I think you can drill a well quite quickly. You're not going to the depth that you're going to, say, in the foothills front area. What would the proximity of one well to another mean to private landowners? I understand that you need vast tracts of land to make all this work.

So when investors look at this, the only thing I can say in conclusion at this time in committee is: where will they take their investment dollars? I think there are still some questions legally that need to be addressed in regard to this bill, and perhaps there is a solution to this. I would certainly be willing to discuss it with the hon. member and all hon. members of this Assembly, because we want to be on a level playing field with our neighbours in British Columbia. Certainly, the hon. Minister of Energy talks of a level playing field in the electricity deregulation market. This is also an application that would be noteworthy, and that is to have a level playing field with the coal bed methane industry in Alberta, the same as what the government of British Columbia is implementing with their Bill 16, the Coalbed Gas Act.

I'm not sure exactly where we're going with this bill, and I think that in order to exercise caution, unless my questions are answered satisfactorily – and if they can't be answered tonight, well, then at the next appropriate time – I don't think we should proceed to move this bill through committee until the questions surrounding the ambiguities are resolved.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 32

Income and Employment Supports Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much. In second reading I think I described basically the idea of this whole bill in the reform of the delivery of social assistance. However, I do at this time want to bring forward a government amendment to Bill 32. I guess it will be circulated; will it?

The Deputy Chair: It is being circulated. If you would just hang on for one minute, please.

Mr. Dunford: Okay.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you may proceed.

Mr. Dunford: Okay. Really, this is a routine amendment in the sense that all we are doing is changing the phraseology as it exists throughout the act. What it is, Mr. Chairman, is that the bill is amended as follows: in the following provisions “family unit” is struck out wherever it occurs and “household unit” is substituted.

Now, it doesn't change the way in which we calculate benefits or infer benefits, anything like that. It is just simply that since the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act has been proclaimed, it's our view that the term “household unit” is more encompassing and more inclusive than “family unit.” It's with that, Mr. Chairman, that we offer this amendment, and I urge all members to support it.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Chairman. If the Minister of Human Resources and Employment at this time could clarify and provide a definition of “household unit.” Or is it going to take the same definition as in part 2, Income Support and Health and Training Benefits, division 1, section 6(3)?

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Anybody wishing to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get to speak on Bill 32. Certainly, there have been indications from some quarters that this is a step in the right direction, but I believe that what the poor and the marginalized in this province need from this government is an increase in their benefit rates. This legislation may be an indication of the hon. minister's efforts to try in some way to improve the legislation for income and employment support programs, but the first thing that needs to be done is to recognize that for the 30,000-plus households in this province a $20 per month increase starting in June is not adequate.

Mr. Chairman, we are looking in this bill at improving the accountability for training service providers, we are attempting to help people on income support move into the workforce, and we are, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has previously stated, eliminating the Widows' Pension Act in about two years. But whenever we look at the training-on-the-job programs and the fact that Alberta and Canada formed the labour market development agreement initially in 1997 – and there have been evaluations, as far as I know, continuing through 1998, 1999. I'm not satisfied that those evaluation programs have been satisfactory. Certainly, there have been hundreds of millions of dollars transferred, and some people have advised me that it is their view that Bill 32, the Income and Employment Supports Act, is a means of enhancing the privatization of the delivery of not only training-on-the-job programs but other portions of the entire income and employment supports programs. Now, I don't think this would be necessary, and if this is not correct, I would appreciate an explanation from the minister in regard to that.

We are looking at the training-on-the-job programs, and we don't know if they are working or whether they're not working. I tried through freedom of information, and I thought the information was so hard to come by that it was inconclusive as to whether or not these programs were working. As I said earlier, we are spending significant amounts of money on them, but I have to accept the fact that the information has not been provided to me. Tax dollars have been spent, and I cannot confirm that the dollars are going to groups that need it the most and that the dollars are being well spent.

There are many other aspects certainly of Bill 32, but like a lot of other pieces of legislation that we deal with here, there are going to be regulations. This is a government that is fond of governing by regulation. Who will write the new regulations for this legislation, Mr. Chairman? As all Albertans well know, this government has no, as they say, set-in-stone process to ensure that the wills, shalls, and mays of regulatory documents meet the needs of Albertans. Will the very individuals that require the assistance have input into the regulations so that their needs are met quickly and efficiently so that these citizens will not have to wait and try to apply a regulation to their individual circumstances? Also, will there be open access to the regulations in a variety of public places so that the public knows and understands what is available?

The market-basket measure: has that been officially adopted by the government? There are many people that have opinions in regard to the market-basket measure, but when we are laying the groundwork for this new bill, I think that the government is trying to find a way to link welfare rates with the actual cost of living in different parts of Alberta. This has been discussed in this Assembly many times by various members. How will this work? Is it actually, Mr. Chairman, government policy? If this is to work and to implement this, a new poverty measure has to be developed by not only the provincial government but the federal government and perhaps even some of the municipal governments. Certainly, the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary, I think, would have interest in this. If we were to have this market-basket measure, it's very important to recognize and to realize that what's more important than the measure is what's in the basket. What exactly are we going to put in this basket?

I understand that there's a motion coming. Hopefully, we'll get a chance to have a discussion and to debate this motion during this current session, Mr. Chairman. This market-basket measure will allow SFI rates to vary from place to place, and it will be based on local costs. Some of these local costs would certainly include rent, transportation, the average cost of a basket of groceries, et cetera. Since this market basket only measures the absolute cost of a particular basket of goods, it is going to allow us to limit our social contract with lower income people.

This concern has been raised by a number of people, including people over at the Edmonton Social Planning Council. They are of the opinion that unlike previous relative measures of poverty, the market basket "doesn't measure how low-income people are fairing in comparison to the average income." They go on to say, "Instead, it helps to free us from any responsibility to equally share Alberta's growing wealth with the poor," and adopting the market-basket measure "will further erode our sense of community and undermine our commitment to equality."

Now, they also caution that "ironically, we will all be worse off with the introduction of this" market-basket measure. "Based on numerous international studies, increasing inequity in Alberta will lead to poorer health outcomes for all Albertans, not just people with low incomes." That's quite interesting because certainly the Edmonton Social Planning Council has a great deal of insight into the whole issue of poverty and poverty-related issues, and I would encourage hon. members to consider their research and perhaps pay heed to some of what they say at least.

Now, if the market-basket measure has been officially adopted by the province, will the government recognize that there are many families and individuals in this province that do not have sufficient funds to provide this nutritious food basket? I can't understand how we can expect people who are receiving minimum wage to be able to provide this nutritious food basket, and if the proposed target, the minimum level of supports to low-income Albertans, is adopted, what about others who are within $50 to $75 of that minimum level? How will this affect them?

The market-basket measure establishes the minimum income required to purchase a basket of goods, and whenever we're talking about housing, food, clothing, transportation, personal hygiene, household supplies, furniture, telephone service, and some reading, recreation, and entertainment, we cannot forget, Mr. Chairman, about the cost of utilities. Natural gas and electricity have just been through the roof, as we all know, skyrocketing prices for electricity and natural gas, and I wonder if any effort is going to be made to reflect those high costs because of energy deregulation in this market-basket measure.

What is the target minimum level in dollar figures? Is there a sliding scale for the location of the individuals or families requiring support? What's the cost of a loaf of bread in Fort McMurray versus a loaf of bread in Medicine Hat or the cost of utilities in Medicine Hat in comparison to Edmonton or Calgary? Certainly, Medicine Hat was wise enough to be cautious about energy deregulation. Many of their utilities are very modest when you compare them to the rest of the province, and that certainly would be interesting.

Now, if one is to look at a recent Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development survey, this shows that SFI clients receive a range anywhere between $524 and $575 for rent or mortgage, taxes, insurance, et cetera, and for food, $379 for one parent and three kids. Now, the cost to feed a family of four in November 2002 averaged between a low of $547 and $580 in four communities in southern Alberta, so something has to give there if that parent and three children are going to have adequate food, and that indicates to me that there's not enough money to go around. This is from Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, a recent survey that's two months old.

Also, in discussing Bill 32, can the minister reveal the five different community types that the market-basket measure has been based on? What assumptions were made? Are there already services provided in these community types? If they are not, will the government make sure that these basic services are available in all communities to fit the community-type profile? Again, can the minister elaborate on what the government believes basic needs are and elaborate on what building block will be in place to meet the different needs?

Now, in regard to shelter can the minister elaborate on what flexible funding will be available to low-income families that are only able to access shelter in older, less energy-efficient housing? Most housing that is available for low-income families is old and often in need of repair. The people least able to pay and least able to change their circumstances are the very ones who find themselves paying the highest bills. Will landlords be providing upgraded facilities with energy-efficient furnaces and appliances at the same low rates as part of the basket measure? I would be surprised if they do. I think not, but I've been surprised before, and maybe they will.

Further, on the whole issue of utilities we need in discussion of the market-basket measure – where are the automatic rebates for these individuals faced today with the decision of food or paying utility bills? How is all this working out? Trickle flow is becoming a reality in this province because of energy deregulation and for no other reason. We are aware that low-income households can receive relief but only if they have received a cutoff notice. I don't think that's necessary or in the public good or in the interest of the public.

The problem is the fact that they have to wait for the cutoff notice to get relief. These notices don't have a long turnaround time before action is taken to proceed with the cutoff. Often individuals cannot make contact with a worker before cutoff happens. The government answering machine suggests another number if it is an emergency. This type of runaround takes energy and adds to a stress level that is often the undoing of most to cope with the problem, and they sink further instead of moving up.

If we are to try to assist these low-income families and we tell them their house is going to be secure, why do they have to go through the mental stress and anxiety of losing their utility services? Why would there not be an automatic government intervention? After all, the government is well aware of the volatility of the cost of these utilities and who should be receiving benefits. These very individuals are hard pressed to meet their basic needs on a daily basis without the pressures that they have no control over.

At the same time, I would like to know, as we're going through this, how many directors' orders have been issued to provide temporary relief to those who cannot pay for their utilities because of the skyrocketing costs and their benefit amounts being so modest. Certainly, I think there are a lot of people within the Department of Human Resources and Employment who are working very, very hard and doing their best with some very limited resources.

Now, the food. We need to ask the following and consider the following in discussions on the Income and Employment Supports Act. Does food include access to healthy eating and nutrition counseling? Will the building blocks factor in the cost of fresh fruits and vegetables when seasonal weather conditions in the production regions affect the price of the products? Study after study is showing that unless the low-income individual can receive or access meats, fresh fruits, and vegetables, they become part of the most expensive users of the health care system. Is the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment prepared to ensure that the hand-up approach meets all the variable needs of the low-income groups in a prevention manner that will decrease the number of people needing food banks and expensive medical interventions?

Mr. Chairman, also the counseling and knowledge of benefits available. Will this legislation ensure that there are enough social workers to meet the demands of those needing assistance? At the present caseloads this is not, in my view, possible. Personal, face-to-face interaction with a worker is needed for the clients. Many need hands-on guidance to fill out forms, access service, and acquire benefits, equipment to best fit their needs. Now, counseling and knowledge of benefits available would also ensure that clients are not kept in the dark regarding benefits that they are legally entitled to but somehow may have been overlooked. If a well-skilled researcher has trouble finding the information, how do those that are struggling with the most basic survival needs find that information? Will there be extra training provided for social workers to know what services are available in each community, and will these services be integrated to meet the individual client needs?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 32, the Income and Employment Supports Act. This bill represents the government's response to the low-income program review, and it allows the creation of regulations to build a replacement program for supports for independence, the skills development program, and the widows' pension. The legislation, as is so typical of government legislation these days, is essentially a shell with most details being established through regulations drawn up by cabinet. It's my understanding that this particular piece of legislation will not affect current benefit levels.

I think that the concern here is that the act does not represent the kind of breakthrough that we were hoping for in assisting people with low incomes. First of all, Mr. Chairman, we need to recollect that it is not an insignificant percentage of Albertans who are poor. In fact, I think roughly 20 percent of Albertans are at or near the poverty line. Notwithstanding the economic benefits for many in our society, there is a significant portion, and it may be somewhat less than 20 percent. Nevertheless, it is a significant fraction of Albertans that live in poverty.

It is not limited to the big cities. They certainly have their share, and a number of us on both sides of the House represent constituencies with a significant number of poor people. We're very familiar with those programs, but it's not limited to that. A study done a few years ago by the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association showed that significant levels of poverty exist throughout Alberta in smaller cities, in towns, and in the countryside. So it's not limited to the big city.

Now, there was a concerted effort made by the government to try and address this through the low-income program review, and we asked a number of organizations that work with various government programs and work with low-income Albertans what they thought of it. The results were interesting. Generally, the concern first and foremost was that key decisions will be in the regulations and that these are not subject to public scrutiny. The question is: does it really mean that the benefits are discretionary, and are they going to be affected, therefore, by budgetary pressures?

We've seen this in this Assembly a number of times when certain programs – for example, some programs directed at at-risk youth and aboriginal children – were cut when the Provincial Treasurer feared about a year ago or so that she was going to face a deficit, and under all of the legislation that Alberta was so proud of at the time, the poor Provincial Treasurer might have to go to jail if she ran a deficit. I'm being a little facetious there, Mr. Chairman, but certainly the act made running a deficit illegal. So these programs were suddenly cut because the price of oil and gas went down.

I will give the government credit; they have taken some steps to mitigate that pattern, but it has been, I think, an appalling pattern in the past that the various programs went up and down like a yo-yo alongside the price of natural gas. So that's a concern to these low-income organizations.

Because things are placed in regulation, it's very difficult for people to launch appeals. Having details in the act is essential for appeals. You can appeal policies and you can appeal decisions but not regulations, and there needs to be some potential in the act for the benefits. Otherwise, you cannot appeal the decision to deny them.

There are a lot of questions about what the benefits are actually going to be, and I'm going to be offering an amendment to help clarify this a bit later, Mr. Chairman. Do benefits include transportation? Do they include recreation? A question the minister might want to ask is whether or not the financial benefits workers will have caseloads such that they will actually be able to address recipients' individual needs.

Now, section 2 defines the purposes of the act as providing "programs for persons in need for . . . requirements." The list does not include things like heat, light, and water, which were explicitly included in section 1 of the Social Development Act. That they have been excluded from this act makes me nervous, Mr. Chairman. Is it deliberate? Again, we will be offering an amendment later this evening on that.

Questions arise about what will be included under health benefits. Will psychological counseling be included? Will substance abuse counseling be included? These are things that I hope the minister can help us with in this.

Now, there's a strong emphasis on training, and that's good in many cases, but it's not appropriate for all recipients. What about people who will never be independent? If someone admits to being able to work, they currently lose benefits, which encourages people to say that they are unemployable. There's no longitudinal commitment to employment support. Recipients receive short-term support and then are expected to be independent. Many of the training programs are not for high-quality jobs and are not readily available to clients who want training. There's a bit of a culture of denial here, Mr. Chairman. The minister overseeing labour and social services I think tends – and it's reflected in the act – to view the recipients of this assistance as a pool of potential labour, and that's not necessarily always appropriate. Some people just need help, and they are not ever going to be in a position where they can move on to being fully self-sufficient.

In section 16 there are some requirements for recipients to pay back benefits. Now, I don't know if this is following the current practice of requiring payment of benefits when other sources of revenue become available for the same time period. I'd like to have the minister clarify this for us, and again we are considering an amendment for this section.

Mr. Chairman, the act will not address the main problems faced by low-income Albertans, and that includes a few things. First of all, the lowest minimum wage in the country. Certainly, we're one of the provinces with among the higher costs of living, yet we have the lowest minimum wage at $5.90. If you compare that with our two neighbouring provinces, it's $8 an hour in B.C. and $6.65 in Saskatchewan. So that's a significant concern. I know that some members have argued in the past. . .

Mr. Smith: What's the unemployment rate?

Mr. Mason: I hear the Minister of Energy making the argument that because there's a low unemployment rate in this province, we don't need to fiddle with the low minimum wage, because everybody is working. Well, not everybody is working, Mr. Chairman, and not everybody is being paid above the minimum wage in Alberta. I could turn the argument around. If the minimum wage in Alberta is irrelevant because the market has already outstripped it and people are paying higher wages than $5.90 an hour, then what's the problem with moving up the minimum wage? The minimum wage should not be set according to how many people are working and for how much at a given point in the economic cycle affecting the province. The minimum wage should be set at a rate that will in effect give people a certain amount of dignity and the bare essentials that they need to survive. That's how it should be set, and any other argument I think is specious.

Of course, we know that the high costs of energy in this province have contributed greatly to problems at all levels. It's like a giant rock which has been cast into a still pool, and the waves are going out in every direction, Mr. Chairman. It's not only affecting the average working person or professional people or businesspeople or farmers. It's affecting every sector. It's affecting the public sector, and they, of course, are forced to pay these high, outrageous prices for electricity as well. For example, some universities have given an indication that recent tuition increases are driven in part due to increases in electricity prices and natural gas.

We did a fairly extensive survey of rural municipalities. I know that when the Minister of Municipal Affairs answered my question, he was somewhat confused about who we had actually sent this to and believed that we'd sent it to all municipalities in the province, over 300. In fact, we sent it only to the rural municipalities, so our response rate was fairly respectable, and I could suggest to the minister that since we asked those questions, we've had a continuing trickle of responses from the rural municipalities in this province. I know the Premier would like to say that we in the New Democrat opposition ignore rural Alberta. Well, it's true that we have only two MLAs, but we're doing our level best to try and represent the people in rural Alberta. They have a set of problems that are serious, and they share with urban dwellers the increasingly intolerable burden of sky-high electricity prices, Mr. Chairman.

We've heard that from the rural municipalities, who've indicated to us that they have had to increase taxes to pay for higher power bills. They've had to cut municipal services to pay for higher power bills. You know, they're closing facilities, they're cutting back on programs, they're jacking up the property taxes, all of which is hitting people in the pocketbook. Of course, this hits the poor among our society the most severely, Mr. Chairman, so I want to get back to this particular question. Energy prices are not only intolerable for middle-class and upper-class Albertans, but in particular they are intolerable for low-income people. Again, this policy error on the part of government with respect to electricity deregulation is reverberating throughout the entire society in Alberta and affecting every government department, including the Minister of Human Resources and Employment and his department. He has to compensate for this, just like the Minister of Learning has to compensate for it, just like the Minister of Municipal Affairs has to compensate for it, just like the Minister of Health and Wellness has to compensate for it in his department. So this mess is being felt right across the government and right across society.

Now, social assistance benefit levels are, of course, a key factor in the problems which are faced by low-income Albertans, and social assistance benefit levels are well below the cost necessary for healthy living in our communities. The cost of healthy living for a single parent with two children has been calculated by the Edmonton Social Planning Council at $1,471.20 per month in the year 2000. This compares to the $851 that same parent would receive from SFI, including the $20 increase announced in April. Of course, Mr. Chairman, people that do work with low-income people consider this $20 almost contemptible, as just totally inadequate to deal with the problems.

Another thing, a serious one, that creates problems for low-income Albertans is the tight housing market, with rental vacancy rates of about 1 percent in many major centres, including Edmonton, Calgary, and Fort McMurray, and rents to match, Mr. Chairman. The average rent for a one-bedroom unit is $533 in Edmonton, and for a two- or three-bedroom unit the average is $742. A single parent with two children would receive $428 for a rental allowance, an affordability gap of $105 even if they live in a one-bedroom unit. Now, that means that those people are forced into substandard accommodation in order to make their rent payments. You know, we've had lots of issues with that, and certainly those of us that have represented inner-city communities or served on municipal councils and so on are well familiar with the role that slum landlords play in assisting the government to maintain rental allowances which are so far below the needs of the people who depend on them.

The main concern of people on SFI and the agencies that work with them is the level of benefits. The lack of attention to this issue in our view represents a clear lack of commitment to address the issues of poor Albertans. The lack of details in the act makes it impossible to address the adequacy of the act to improve low-income programs in any detailed way.

So, Mr. Chairman, those are my general comments with respect to the bill. I have some amendments, and I would like to take your guidance. Shall I let other members speak, or shall I proceed with the amendments at this time?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I don't have a copy of the amendment that you have, so if you wouldn't mind waiting a minute while it's being circulated.

Mr. Mason: Okay. I have four amendments, Mr. Chairman. The first one . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you have to move before you can distribute the amendments.

Mr. Mason: Okay. Then I will move, Mr. Chairman, that Bill 32, the Income and Employment Supports Act, be amended as follows. Section 5 is amended by adding the following after subsection (2):

(3) On or before April 1 each year, the Minister shall review the income support payments provided under this Division in conjunction with the Consumer Price Index for the previous calendar year and make a recommendation to the Lieutenant Governor in Council as to whether a cost of living increase is required.

You told me to move it, so I did.

The Deputy Chair: You may proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment would require that the government review benefits for low-income Albertans each year with consideration to a measure of inflation similar to that used to adjust the remuneration of MLAs. Income support payments would continue to be set by regulation but would not be subject to annual review.

Mr. Chairman, our preference was clearly to require an increase at least equal to inflation for these benefits, but private members cannot propose amendments requiring expenditures by the government. So that approach was excluded, and for that reason we have come up with this proposal, which would require the minister to conduct a review, which specifically mentions the consumer price index as a benchmark that the minister should use and then provides for the minister to make a recommendation to Lieutenant Governor in Council as to whether a cost of living increase is necessary.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, before I recognize any other speakers, I'm just wondering if you have the original copy of the amendment that has been circulated, because that's what I need.

Mr. Mason: It was on the top of the pile, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In regard to the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I would certainly encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to support this amendment. I think it is a very good idea. Certainly, it is very similar to something that was proposed in this Assembly three years ago to enhance and protect the disposable income of those Alberta seniors who were eligible for the Alberta seniors' benefit and were caught in a squeeze at the end of every month because of the diminishing amount of their disposable income.

Certainly, if we were to review income support payments provided on an annual basis, I think it would be a step in the right direction when everyone considers that it's been 10 years, really, since the provincial government cut the supports for independence or welfare rates by 20 percent as a cost-saving measure, and over the same 10 years the poor in this province have suffered tremendously in my view. Their suffering is increased because inflation has robbed them by close to a further, it has been reported, Mr. Chairman, 25 percent in purchasing power.

These statistics alone cannot start to describe the difficulties that are hidden behind these figures. Certainly, many people on SFI feel frustrated and are struggling with rapidly escalating utility prices and rents, and we know that the food bank is being used and visited quite regularly because many of the people who are receiving benefits do not at the end of the month have enough food to provide for their families or their children.

Now, certainly, the answer to this is in legislative initiatives such as this amendment to Bill 32 that has been circulated by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I think it is a very, very good amendment, and I would encourage, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that all Members of the Legislative Assembly consider the merits of this. I guess if it's good enough for the goose, it's good enough for the gander, as they say, and it would certainly make it much better for Albertans when you consider what we've been through in the last 10 years and the fact that in that time the federal government introduced the national child benefit supplement to fight child poverty. Our government here saved more money by clawing back the supplement from some of the SFI cheques, and when you consider that, it is another reason why we should support this amendment.

Thank you.

10:50

Mr. Dunford: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is just so off the mark all the time. He knows very well that we didn't do that. It wasn't allowed to do that. If you took something away from the income support from the federal government, you had to put it right back into children of people of low income. So we need to clear the record on these things.

As far as the amendment, I can understand where the member is going on this, but in the consumer price index he picks an index that has been in use for quite a number of years, and even now Stats Canada recognizes its limitations if it's to be used for certain aspects. So what is contemplated is the fact that we will identify a low-income measure, and then we will start to get into a debate, I would think, both here in this Chamber and also throughout the province about what percentage of that low-income measure should we be basing our income assistance at.

Right now the leading candidate for that low-income measure is something that's called market-basket measurement. Market-basket measurement is being investigated by Stats Canada as we speak, and we are told that we can expect some time later this spring or into the summer some of the first preliminary calculations as to market-basket measurement that would apply, then, to the various categories that would exist here in our province. So I think that there are other measures that are going to be better than a consumer price index.

On that basis, I would urge all members of the House to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Mason: Briefly to close, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the minister's point that there might be better indices that could be used and that they may be in the future. However, we are at least making an effort to find a way in which the benefits for people of low income can be geared to the actual cost to live which they have, and this is I think very important. It's obviously been recognized by the members of this Assembly because they provided the same process for themselves, for their own wages, and we all know that our wages in this place are tied to the average weekly earnings index in the province. We were looking for something that wouldn't be tied so much to what people are earning but to how much they needed to live, which I think is more consistent with the government's philosophy that nobody should get a nickel more than they need if they're dependent on government assistance.

You know, there's no reason we cannot pass this, and then when the minister has better measures, we could amend the bill and we could put those better measures in. I didn't hear the minister say that we would index or tie supports to these better indices. He just says that they're coming along, so we shouldn't pass this now. Well, if he had made a commitment to tie it to the market-basket measure in the future, that would have been very satisfactory to us and we would have been prepared to withdraw the amendment. But I didn't hear that from the minister, and the fact that this is not the very best index in the world should not stop us from trying to establish the principle that when people's living costs rise, their assistance should as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have another amendment, which I will now move, that Bill 32, the Income and Employment Supports Act, be amended as follows: section 2 is amended by adding "heat, light, water, clothing and other" after the word "shelter."

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendment that is now being circulated shall be referred to as amendment A3.

You may proceed.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is quite straightforward. If you read section 2, which is the section dealing with the purpose of the act, it says:

The purpose of this act is to provide programs for persons in need for such of their requirements for food, shelter, personal items and medical and other benefits as are essential to their health and well-being and, in particular, to provide training and other measures to facilitate their movement toward independence and self-sufficiency.

Now, this was one of the points that was brought to our attention, Mr. Chairman, when we consulted with low-income groups and organizations, and they are concerned that while these items contained in the amendment are listed explicitly in section 1(a)(i) of the Social Development Act, they are absent from this act. So in order to make sure that these things are taken into account in the act, in its administration of the program and the calculation of benefits and so on, we believe that it's important to explicitly mention that heat, light, water, and clothing are all essential ingredients for living and ought to be included in the act. I think that if they were, it would give considerably more comfort to people dependent on government financial assistance.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Chairman. At this time I would like to urge all members of this Assembly – I believe this would be amendment A3 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands – to take a great deal of interest in this, and in light of the high cost of utilities I think it is very important that heat and light and water and clothing, particularly in light of the minister urging everyone to wear a sweater, be incorporated into Bill 32.

Mr. Smith: I still have my integrity.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you have the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There are many issues surrounding utilities that everyone in this Assembly is aware of, and the idea of heat and light incorporated into Bill 32 is commendable.

With that, I would urge all members of this Assembly to accept the amendment. Thank you.

Mr. Dunford: I would urge members to not approve A3. It's redundant. Certainly, under personal items you would include, of course, clothing, and shelter could hardly be defined without heat, light, and water. So because of its redundancy I'd urge all members to vote against it.

Mr. Mason: To close on the amendment, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'm disappointed. Obviously, the Social Development Act does not consider these points to be redundant, and I think that the key point here is that if they're explicitly included in the legislation, then they can form a strong basis for an appeal on the part of individuals who need these costs to be covered. Without their explicit presentation in the act, there could in fact be little room for an appeal of the decision if the various appeal bodies did not want to take those into account. So I think there's real value in including this, and I am disappointed that the minister will not support it.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

11:00

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to move. I will move that Bill 32, Income and Employment Supports Act, be amended as follows: section 44 is amended by striking out clause (d). Section 46 is amended by adding the following after subsection (3):

(4) The person who made the decision appealed from is not eligible to sit as a member of an appeal panel considering an appeal respecting that decision.

(5) The Administrative Procedures Act applies to proceedings of an appeal panel under this section.

Section 48 is amended by striking out clause (c).

So, Mr. Chairman, if I can proceed. Again, this is intended to bring the legislation into line with the current practice under the Social Development Act. The amendment will provide additional protection for recipients by ensuring that the person who made the decision being appealed cannot sit on the appeal panel, that the appeal panel has the freedom to change the decision within the confines of the act, and that the government power to exclude matters from appeal is limited to those.

All this is consistent with current practice. Indeed, the wording of part B, amending section 46, is taken directly from the current act, Mr. Chairman, so it's not a wild fantasy of the opposition and, I think, can be supported.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm willing to stand in support of this amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands particularly because it is dealing with what appears to be a conflict of interest, because people are very clear on who is sitting on these panels and what their background is to be sitting on the panels. We don't want any perception of impropriety around these appeal panels. They certainly are dealing with issues that are regarded as very important by those that have come before them, so I think it behooves all of us to make sure that justice is done but also seen to be done. So I'm more than willing to support this amendment as it stands before us.

Thank you.

Mr. Dunford: The opposition seems to have the mistaken notion that it's our employees that sit on appeal panels. It is not. These are people that come from the community, so there's no need for the amendment. I'd urge all members of the Assembly to vote against A4.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendment that is before us is amendment A4.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move my final amendment for this evening, and that is that Bill 32, Income and Employment Supports Act, be amended as follows: section 16 is amended (a) in subsection (2) by adding "Subject to subsection (2.1)," before "The Director may"; (b) by adding the following after subsection (2):

(2.1) A requirement to reimburse the Government under this section shall only be applied to an applicant, a recipient or a member of a household unit when the applicant or recipient has received income from another source for the time period that the applicant or recipient was receiving benefits under this Act.

I will note that this amendment is consistent with the minister's amendment changing "family unit" to "household unit."

Section 16 replaces the following section from the Income

Support Recovery Act. The only difference is that now the repayment could be a condition of eligibility.

Repayment of social allowance

26(1) A person who applies for or is receiving a social allowance under the Social Development Act may be required by the Minister to enter into an agreement with the Director to repay the Government the total value or any portion of the total value of the social allowance provided for that person and that person's dependants.

(2) This Part applies to an agreement made under subsection (1) as if the amount due under the agreement were an overpayment.

I believe this section may be to require SFI recipients to repay benefits when another program should have been supporting them and they received back pay. For example, an injured worker may go on SFI while appealing WCB. When they win, they will receive backdated benefits from WCB and are expected to repay SFI. This is the case now, so at the very least I think the minister should go on record as to what is intended under this section. Without the amendment the next minister could just simply change the practice, Mr. Chairman, and that's a problem.

A number of groups have raised concerns about section 16 without the amendment. They are concerned that the government could require people to pay back benefits in many circumstances, which would force them to carry their poverty forward into the next stage of their lives. So I think the amendment would put those fears to rest, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: For the record this amendment will be amendment A5.

Does anybody else wish to speak on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Deputy Chair: Does anybody else wish to speak on the bill?

[The clauses of Bill 32 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee rise and report bills 18 and 32.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 18. The committee reports the following with some amendments: Bill 32. I wish to table copies of all the amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Third Reading

Bill 5

Line Fence Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Goudreau: It's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 5, the Line Fence Amendment Act, 2003.

As I've pointed out before, the concept of the Line Fence Act is very simple, and I just want to speak on it very, very briefly because the last time we talked about it was on March 5 in Committee of the Whole. The Line Fence Act has been very effectively applied to a great number of instances where a fence has benefited two rural neighbours. This amendment ensures that the Line Fence Act will not be used in situations where it was not intended. This bill, Mr. Speaker, contains clarification which will prevent urban residents from citing the Line Fence Act in urban situations.

I would like to thank all the members for their support and for all the support that this bill has received. Previous debates have covered the nature and purpose of this bill, so I won't expand on them any further. I ask members for their continued support of the Line Fence Amendment Act so that rural Albertans will continue to have access to a cost-sharing and dispute settlement framework for primary livestock fencing issues.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I just want to speak briefly in third reading to indicate the support of the Official Opposition for Bill 5, the Line Fence Amendment Act, 2003. It does restrict the circumstances under which a party to a shared line or fence may seek to have the cost of said fence shared between the parties. This is a very small change, but one that was obviously needed.

I prefer to see this sort of change come through as a bill that can be examined and debated rather than to put it through, for example, under miscellaneous statutes, but once we've had the opportunity to see it and circulate the change amongst the stakeholders that we know of in the community and it comes back with a positive reaction, we're very happy to support it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan to close debate.

Mr. Goudreau: No.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Bill 7

Real Estate Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe there were any questions in committee, strong support from the industry, and I believe the opposition member spoke in favour of this bill, so I would move third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in regard to Bill 7, the Real Estate Amendment Act, 2003, at this time I would like to thank the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for a consultation in regard to this legislation that goes back a couple of months now. When we look at this bill briefly at third reading, I think it is something that can be supported.

To allow the Real Estate Council to require members to retain records for three years after they leave the industry should not in the least be harmful. The notion of extending the length of time the Real Estate Council of Alberta can take disciplinary action against former industry members to two years and also bringing appraisers under the act's licensing and regulating provisions are in the view of this Official Opposition positive steps.

With that, I conclude my remarks at third reading on Bill 7. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to close debate.

Mr. Graydon: No. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Bill 4

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Medicine Hat I'd like to move Bill 4, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2003, for third reading.

It has had discussion at both second reading and in committee. It's a fairly technical act and essentially aligns with the federal Income Tax Act as required for our purposes.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Yes. I have a few comments at third reading of Bill 4, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2003. The majority of the changes, as has been indicated, are editorial in nature and offer some clarification or align the act with legislation.

We did raise a number of questions at second reading and in committee. We asked questions such as: what impact, if any, will this bill have on the amount of taxes that Albertans pay? Will the bill affect how Albertans' taxes are calculated? Will the amendments made to section 39 of this legislation affect the deduction level of an average Albertan? The question of why these editorial changes weren't made during the last session when changes to this same bill were made. We had a question about the impact these changes might have on the amount of revenue taken by the province. Also, a question about consultation: was there consultation with the federal government about the changes to make sure that they are aligned with federal legislation? Our last question was: how are Albertans going to be made aware of the changes? I think that those questions have been answered to our satisfaction, and we'll be supporting the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Member for Medicine Hat to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Bill 9Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move Bill 9, the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003, for third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In regard to Bill 9, the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act, 2003, at third reading this evening, certainly we are looking at three main purposes to this legislation: to mandate unique identifier codes to help the tracking and enforcement of exploration projects, equipment, and companies; to allow inspectors of exploration projects increased powers; and to allow the wholesale adoption of codes from other industries into the exploration regulations. Also, the Mines and Minerals Amendment Act here is going to allow the minister to issue stop orders.

Now, there are certainly some reservations and some cautions in regard to this legislation. The amendment does some good clarification of the Mines and Minerals Act and gives bigger teeth to the enforcement of the act, including giving more power to inspectors. However, there are some problems I would like to note at this time with the amendment, Mr. Speaker. In regard to Bill 9 the automatic adoption of codes from other industries could be trouble, and there are far too many references to regulations whose contents, as usual, are unknown. Further, the amendment allows the minister to exempt virtually anything from the act and its regulations potentially undermining the purpose.

However, there are many positive attributes to the bill. It is unfortunate that it is encumbered with escape clauses and references to unknown regulations.

At this time with those remarks I will cede the floor to any other hon. colleague who would like to speak at third reading in regard to Bill 9. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

Bill 11Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move third reading of Bill 11, the Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003.

The Auditor General Amendment Act mandates a formal oath of office for the Auditor General, enhances the Auditor General's powers to call witnesses and outlines how to deal with those who don't appear, as well as filing of the Auditor General's reports in and out of session, among other things.

In closing, I want to again thank all those who spoke to Bill 11 in second reading and in Committee of the Whole, mostly in support of this important legislation, and I thank you for your anticipated support of Bill 11 in third reading.

11:20

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able as a member of the Public Accounts Committee . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, you're a member of the Public Accounts Committee too.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, I am, and at this point I think I'm the longest sitting member of this current incarnation of it.

A couple of things that this bill was looking to do: establishing that the Auditor General has to take an oath of office, which would be administered by the Speaker. I think that in fact that might have been requested by the Auditor General. Certainly, we're willing to support that. It did clarify language around referring directly to Executive Council and the president of Executive Council instead of the Lieutenant Governor. That kind of clarification is always helpful.

We had sought legal clarification about whether some of the language that was in Bill 11 might have changed the relationship and the operation of the Public Accounts Committee. We have in the Official Opposition received back information that has satisfied our concerns, and we are therefore willing to go forward and support Bill 11, the Auditor General Amendment Act, 2003. We were concerned that there was a change in wording that would have changed both the reporting and the operation of the Public Accounts Committee and the ability of the Auditor General to work with the Public Accounts Committee.

I will note that the current Auditor General has been very active in helping to educate members of the Public Accounts Committee on how to better question and hold the government accountable and how to better be able to readily glean information from the Auditor General's report. He's been very active with that along with his staff, and I commend him for that. I think it's going to give us a better Public Accounts Committee in the long run, and that is going to serve both this Assembly and Albertans better in the future, I think.

So I'm happy to support this amending act, Bill 11, in third reading. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview to close debate.

Mr. Yankowsky: I have no further comment, Mr. Speaker, except to call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a third time]

Bill 8Health Foundations Act Repeal Act

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to now move third reading of Bill 8, being the Health Foundations Act Repeal Act.

Thank you, sir.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We support Bill 8, the Health Foundations Act Repeal Act. As we've been informed, there are no foundations, and this doesn't affect the existing foundations. It's a matter of cleaning the act up, so we support it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:25 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 6, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/06

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure and an honour to rise before the Assembly today to introduce to all members present some very special guests. I know that earlier this morning you hosted a very special tea in the Legislature Library, and we were honoured indeed that librarians and chairs of various library boards from various parts of Alberta attended. On your behalf I would like to introduce three of your constituents who have remained with us after that important session this morning to view question period this afternoon. They are Elaine Dickie, librarian with the Barrhead Public Library; Ms Megan Dickie, Elaine's daughter; Ms Hilda Thompson, the librarian from Barrhead composite high school; and Pauline Despina, librarian at Vimy school. They are seated in your gallery, and I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the very warm traditional welcome of this Assembly. Thank you for being here.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 45 visitors from the Parkland county area. These students are with the Parkland Home Educators and represent grades from preschool right through to grade 12. They're a great group of kids. The parents are to be commended for the great job they do. The students are accompanied by great group leaders Mrs. Ruth McCuaig and Mrs. Sheila Court, parents with the Scope school program in the county of Parkland, as well as a number of parents and grandparents. They're seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and a pleasure for me to rise and introduce two guests from my constituency office. First of all, my summer STEP student, Mr. Michael Colborne, who just completed his third year of political science at the University of Alberta. He will be eventually applying to go to law school. He is well known to the PC Youth of Alberta. Accompanying Michael is my constituency assistant, Mrs. Linda Brown, who has been with me for about a year and a half now and works very hard to look after all the constituent issues and complaints in Edmonton-Calder. I'd ask Michael and Linda to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you 27 students from one of my favourite schools, Anne Fitzgerald, which is located in the constituency that I represent, the constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. The students are here to see the beautiful Legislature Building but, more importantly, to learn about the legislative process. They are accompanied by their teacher, Miss Linda Giampa, and parent helpers Mrs. Anita Bron and Mrs. Sheila Edmonds. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would like to ask them to rise at this time and receive the very warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you two of my constituents from Camrose who are visiting the Legislature today: Wynn McLean and Larry Werner. Wynn McLean is the general manager of the Camrose Regional Exhibition, which is a thriving, event-filled exhibition association in Camrose. Larry Werner is the producer of Big Valley Jamboree and Stage 13, events that will attract probably about 250,000 people to Camrose in a two-week period this summer. Later on the Order Paper I will be talking about the Big Valley Jamboree. Larry and Wynn are seated in the public gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Transmission System

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Electricity deregulation has meant one broken promise after another from this government. Yesterday the Minister of Energy announced in Banff, far away from this Legislative Assembly, that a portion of the 2 billion plus dollars that consumers received in electricity rebates will be clawed back to construct transmission lines. Once again consumers have to dip into their pockets to pay for this government's electricity deregulation boondoggle. My first question is to the Premier. Given that the hon. Premier stated in Hansard on April 10, 2002, that "those who generate and sell the electricity would be responsible for the transmission of that electricity and the construction of the lines," why do consumers have to pick up 100 percent of the tab to pay for the construction of power lines now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member has been for all his years, and I don't know how old he is, but consumers in this province have always paid the cost of transmission. Always paid the cost of transmission. That is the cost of providing power. There are generation costs, there are transmission costs, and consumers have always paid those costs.

What I was talking about – and the hon. member knows full well what I was talking about – was the export of electricity. Our policy on the export of electricity is clear. No power will be exported without Alberta's needs being met first, and number two, all costs for exported power must be paid for by the companies and by the consumers in other jurisdictions.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Premier knows that I was talking about within Alberta, not exports of electricity.

Again to the Premier: why do consumers have to pick up 100 percent of the tab for the construction of power lines when not six months ago the EUB ruled that new transmission line costs would be “shared equally between electricity generators and consumers”?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, on this point the hon. member is absolutely correct. The EUB did issue a decision last fall recommending that the cost for new transmission lines be shared between consumers and the companies, but new information shows that such arrangements would not result in enough investment in new lines. That is the broad generic explanation. For the detailed explanation I’ll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, this member was in the House last Thursday, not far away from this Assembly, to hear me respond to a question from the Member for Calgary-Fort which talked about the impending transmission policy announcement. So we will try to add truth to the distorted preamble by putting that on the record.

Secondly, when you look at a 50-50 policy of the line cost, the portion that goes to the generator is then recouped by the generator generating electricity, adding his costs in, and putting the power into the Power Pool. That is then purchased by consumers. The former policy would contribute to higher electricity prices in Alberta, and it would bring on the most expensive type of power necessary to our province. We didn’t want to do that. We wanted to ensure that there was an equal access for our coal deposits, clean-burning coal power at a low price, for our cogeneration that comes on in the tar sands, this great energy reservoir, and in fact have a rate that was simple, transparent, and easy for everybody but the Liberal Energy critic to understand.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how will the Premier restore public confidence in the independence of the EUB now that the Minister of Energy has overruled their decision in regard to the transmission lines?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this alludes to a policy decision. The EUB has done an outstanding job relative to regulation in the past when it was the ERCB and more recently the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Albertans have the assurances that they will receive fair and equitable treatment from the AEUB. As I said, this was a policy decision. There was an examination of the economics involved in this particular situation, and I’ll have the hon. minister explain once again why the policy decision was made.

Mr. Smith: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we will be brief to a complex answer. Formerly there was a transmission administrator that was hired in the change to the new competitive market model to deliver transmission services to Albertans. At that time the policy created by the transmission administrator was one of congestion management, which said that there are some areas in Alberta that have too little generation or too much transmission. So they then tried to devise a method in order to find charges that would end up with some Albertans paying more for transmission, some Albertans paying less for transmission. It got very confusing. The transmission administrator’s contract was discharged under Bill 3, which was just passed and received royal assent in March.

The new Alberta electrical system operator came on and said that this regulation change is necessary for new transmission. We responded to that. In fact, we did not overturn an EUB decision. The EUB made a good decision with the facts that it had for a previous policy at that time.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The lack of long-term planning for generation and transmission of electricity in Alberta by this government continues to needlessly cost consumers billions and billions of extra dollars. To the Premier: what will be the additional costs to electricity consumers for the government’s latest flip-flop regarding the construction of these new power lines? Will it be $500 million, $600 million, $700 million? What will the total cost be?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the cost of leveling the playing field and treating all Albertans fairly will be about a billion dollars over 20 years. It amounts to less than a 1 percent increase in what consumers pay. In return – and this speaks to the issue of planning and looking ahead and having a vision, unlike the Liberal opposition member – there will be increased transmission capacity, vastly improved transmission capacity. Generally, there will be lower prices. Even with the 1 percent increase on the base, the base will be lower over the long term. There will be greater electricity supply. The hon. minister alluded to cogeneration at the tar sands; the Alberta-Pacific pulp mill project cogeneration with excess power being fed into the grid; the development of new power at Wabamun, coal power; the very substantial development of wind power in the Pincher Creek area, huge. This is the vision, the long-term plan: to bring on more power, as much power as we possibly can. If we can get over the Kyoto uncertainty, which was foisted on us by the federal Liberals, then we can develop even more, using the vast resources of our clean-burning, low-sulphur coal to generate even more power. Basically, the vision in the plan is a long-term, secure supply of electricity for Albertans.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: why under this government’s electricity deregulation policy do generators get all the profit and consumers bear all the risk?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, consumers do not bear all of the risk. I’ll tell you what risk consumers bear under a totally regulated, socialistic enterprise that the Liberals would support. What they would get is a massive amount of debt, the kind of debt that has been accrued in Ontario, the kind of debt that has been accrued in British Columbia. That’s the kind of debt they like, and that’s the kind of debt they want to foist on Albertans.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why is it government policy to tell Albertans that they would have to pay the entire cost of new transmission when the EUB’s cost-sharing decision meant that consumers would only pay half? Why the change in policy?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister – and I’ll have him explain again – explained that this was a policy decision.

An Hon. Member: Flip-flop.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, it was not a flip-flop.

Ms Carlson: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Klein: It was a change in a policy decision that was made by a former administrator who is no longer with the AEUB. The new administrator has provided better and more sound advice, resulting in a policy change. To explain that policy change, again I’ll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: Very briefly.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, unfortunately, for political purposes – and I guess it's legitimate – the member distorts everything that's appropriate to this. First of all, the real question should be: how much in cost savings will be generated to Albertans as a result of this regulation change? That's an important piece. When he refers to cost sharing, he knows full well that a generator who vends his or her power into the marketplace must recoup their costs, their costs of operation and their capital cost, plus a rate of return which the market will bear. There is no way, prior to the new competitive market model, after the introduction of the competitive market model, or today, that the consumer would not be responsible.

What we are doing, Mr. Speaker, is a couple of very important things. One is providing a long-range framework for ample supply of generation. The more electricity we have, the cheaper it will be provided to Albertans. Secondly, a market policy that is transparent. It is regulated by the EUB; it includes all the players in the EUB. Thirdly, a transmission policy that can be easily and clearly understood by everyone but the Liberal Energy critic.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the Calgary board of education inadequate government funding will result in programs being cut, school fees being hiked, and teaching positions lost. Calgary parents are frustrated with the worsening conditions in their schools. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. How many programs will be cut before the government heeds the warning that school quality in Calgary is being seriously compromised?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this last budget there was roughly a 3.4 percent increase that went directly to Calgary public. That amounts to about $17 million. That's given the fact that they're looking at a decrease of 500 students, so 500 fewer students, $17 million more. They are anticipating a fairly significant shortfall in their funding. As a matter of fact, they will be announcing that later on this afternoon. I have not seen the exact details of it, but they are talking that some teachers would not be rehired through attrition. That is what they are attempting to do. I look forward to seeing their budget today, and I look forward to working with them to ensure that it is a budget that can be handled. That's what I'll be doing as soon as they table the budget later on this afternoon.

1:50

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how high must school fees rise before the government listens to those Calgary parents, who are really concerned about accessibility?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, it's actually my understanding that in this budget they have not increased school fees. Again, that's very preliminary, and I have not seen the whole budget, but it is my understanding that they have chosen not to increase school fees.

Dr. Massey: My third question is to the Premier. Given that the minister has talked to Calgary public and the classroom situation worsens anyway, has the government simply decided that a decline in school services in Calgary is just fine?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, the hon. minister pointed out that CBE received a $17 million increase – that's a lot of money – bringing their budget to nearly $700 million. They are, as the minister pointed out, forecasting a reduction in the number of students by about 1 percent, or 500 to 700 students, and some of their proposed adjustments may be in response to this decline in students. The board currently has about 5,400 teachers and 91,000 students.

Mr. Speaker, what we're trying to say here is that funding has gone up significantly; enrollment has gone down. What is the problem here? But I know how the Liberals like to solve problems, and that is to throw money at it. It doesn't matter whether we have the money or not, whether we go into a deficit, whether we borrow the money. The Liberals have a simple solution to everything, and that's to spend more money: spend more on schools, spend more on health care, spend more on rebates, spend more on infrastructure, and spend more on social services.

Mr. Speaker, just for the information of the members, here's a partial list of Liberal spending demands.

The Speaker: Well, I think, hon. the Premier, we might get back to it at another time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy has just said that the EUB decision to split the cost between consumers and power companies 50-50 for new transmission had to be reversed because it failed to ensure that needed transmission capacity would be built. Put another way, unless the government helps shake down power customers even more, the economics of deregulation just won't work, and the minister is still understating the real costs of the new transmission. To the Minister of Energy: how high do electricity prices have to go in this province before the government can make the economics of deregulation work?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the member for the preposterous preamble because it allows me to correct even more fallacies held over there.

Mr. Speaker, the transmission market has never been deregulated. He knows that. We are in fact fine-tuning that marketplace. I never said that the EUB decision was reversed by me. I said that the policy of the new Alberta electrical system operator was one that asked the government to provide clarity on transmission. We've done that. It's a postage-stamp model. If he mails a letter to me, it's charged the same price as if the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti mails a letter to me. Everybody in Alberta benefits. It's a small marketplace. What we're trying to do is deliver the best benefits to the most people. We're delivering a framework of transmission that brings on low-cost generation. We're doing this for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's response, but I would ask him: if you are doing this for Albertans, why have electricity prices in this province doubled, and what are you going to do about it?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I want to thank the member for the question because, as he has been studious in his attendance here, he knows that we have done three things this year. One is the export policy that says that all generators must pay for their own transmission costs out of Alberta. That allows to stimulate generation. The second piece is the market policy. That asks for a level playing field across Alberta. It puts Enmax, EPCOR, Direct Energy all into the same basket, all under the supervision of the EUB. Thirdly and lastly, a small regulation change that delivers transmission on an overall pan-Alberta basis where the north and the south are exactly the same and treated equally.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why is the minister lowballing the cost of new transmission lines as only being $1 billion when Alberta's independent transmission administrator said in August of 2001 in a report that the costs could be as high as $3.5 billion over seven years and . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, you heard it yesterday: you can't have three questions in one. That's just sort of like being a little frivolous with the opportunities we have.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the transmission administrator whom the member quotes is no longer involved in the electricity process in Alberta.

Electricity Supply

Mr. VanderBurg: Earlier questions raised this afternoon talked about the benefits of the expansion of transmission lines, but my constituents in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne have felt taken hostage by not having choice for their electrical supply. The REAs want to know: through this transmission expansion will they have choice? That's to the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, new transmission lines, new generation create jobs for Albertans and in fact create a fundamentally low-priced industrial environment in which we can continue to prosper, so I think that the long-range vision will be very strong for that. From the perspective of the REAs, they will be able to have choice inside the REA. We would look for commercial solutions to be entertained by the membership of that REA, and in fact they will be able to buy either a contract or a hedged power rate or take advantage of the default supply rate that will be available in January of 2004.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, given that explanation, then, can I go back home to Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and expect that consumers in the future will get a reduced rate because of this expansion?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, one, the member's constituents can expect increased choice in his riding with the announced entry of Direct Energy into the marketplace. I don't want to comment too much on it because that application is before the EUB right now.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the transmission side is the regulated side. It will be no different today than it was yesterday. There won't be, as could have occurred, multiple wasteful transmission lines built all across Alberta that would only have resulted in excess costs to the consumer.

Mr. VanderBurg: Again to the same minister: given that all this new generation has been trapped because of lack of expansion, how many more megawatts are we going to see come onstream because of the expansion to the transmission lines?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's always good to have the best questions saved for the last. There are generation opportunities. As we know, there are over 700 years of thermal coal. That's low-priced, thermal-efficient, low-sulphur, low-ash coal. It's the best coal in the world for electrical generation. That is located at Wabamun. We want to ensure that Albertans have access to that. We also want to ensure that they have access to clean burning coal-fired technology, and that's why we're seeing strong standards from the Ministry of Environment, who may wish to comment, as well as a supercritical technology being employed by the generator.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker – and this is an important time – the oil sands, although hit by the uncertainty of Kyoto caused by the federal Liberals, have also an opportunity to bring natural gas generation to the marketplace. Right now that natural gas is being burnt up there. It only is used for steam generation. If we put a turbine beside that steam, it passes through, it generates electricity, and it doesn't create any more pollution. It delivers cheaper electricity; the Canadian Energy Research Institute has estimated as much as 25 percent less for Albertans. We're on the right track, we've got a good long-range plan, and we've got market participants.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Municipal Policing Grants

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Last fall the city of Edmonton released a report identifying and addressing inequities in the city of Edmonton's relationship with the provincial government which cites that Edmonton is owed $13 million for identified legislative and service links between the Edmonton Police Service and the provincial government. At the same time, rural communities continue to voice their concerns with unfair funding formulas for policing from the province. My questions are all to the Solicitor General. When can the city of Edmonton expect to be reimbursed for the $13 million they are owed?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not aware of what the member is referring to, but I can tell you one thing. This government, I believe, does not owe the city of Edmonton any money.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: instead of relying on undesignated municipal grants, will the minister reinstate specific policing grants to the cities of Edmonton and Calgary?

Mrs. Forsyth: That's a good question, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the member asking it. Actually, we did have conditional grants prior to 1993, and it was the municipalities that asked for the unconditional grants at that particular time. So that's the way we've been going.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs may want to comment on the grants.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in speaking with the elected officials, their comment was that they know far better what to do with the unconditional grant money that we give them rather than the province telling them where it would go. Ultimately, what's been happening is that the councils of both the big cities, Edmonton and Calgary, determine how much of that is allocated to police grants. I could give you an example. The city of Calgary receives over $8.5 million of unconditional grant money. Almost $6 million of that is dedicated directly to policing in the city of Calgary.

Ms Blakeman: This government cut policing grants in 1995.

My final question to the Solicitor General: given that the communities of Gibbons, Lac La Biche, High Prairie, and Three Hills, just to name a few, continue to suffer disproportionate funding for police services, when can this House expect to see funding formula changes which are fairer to these medium-sized centres?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the member raises another good question, and we are looking at how to bring fair and equitable funding to all of the communities. I had a meeting with the AUMA and the AAMD and C. Policing is a very, very complicated, complex issue. No one seems to agree on how policing should be funded. I have asked the AAMD and C and the AUMA to sit down and discuss how they think policing can be fair and equitable in regard to some of the towns and communities that the member has mentioned. They are going to report back to me on the 15th of June.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Restricted Feeder Cattle Entry Program

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently some of my colleagues in the Legislature attended a meeting in southern Alberta with a number of ranchers and cattle feeders. They raised a number of issues. Particularly, they were concerned with the restricted cattle feeder entry program, which allows Alberta producers to import cattle from the northwestern United States into Alberta for finishing, and the proposed pilot project that would allow producers to import cattle year-round. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What is the status of this pilot project as we speak?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, first let me clarify that the restricted feeder program does allow cattle to be imported into Alberta from the northwestern U.S. states that are free of bovine tuberculosis and bovine brucellosis in the period from October to March 31. They are not allowed to come in at other times because of concern on insect vectors. With a lot of negotiation with the cattle industry and the Canadian Food Inspection Agency and our departments, we have examined the possibility of a pilot project. What the pilot project would do would limit importation year-round to one or two feedlots – I think currently they're looking at one – where they could have very close control, very close monitoring to ensure that, indeed, it is safe to bring cattle in during that time period. We've given some conditional support to this pilot project from Alberta Agriculture. The CFIA is currently reviewing the rules and the mandate of this program, and we expect to have an answer very soon.

Mr. Jacobs: To the same minister: what other concerns might we have about transfers of feeder cattle into Alberta?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, currently Canada's health status for animals is higher than that of the United States. The diseases that concern us certainly are bluetongue and anaplasmosis, both of which could be spread into Alberta's cattle and sheep herds as well as our wildlife population. That is at least one of the reasons why our restricted feeder cattle program restricts animals to be brought in during the nonvector season, and indeed that's why the Canadian Food Inspection Agency is being very cautious about the new program and making sure that mitigations are in place that would as much as possible prevent those diseases coming into our province.

Mr. Jacobs: My final question to the same minister: what can the minister or the department do to resolve this issue to allow a freer importation of feeder cattle into Alberta?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, one, we can continue to work through the CFIA, Canadian Food Inspection Agency, and our cattle industry to ensure that all of the right processes are in place to mitigate the possibility of disease. The other thing that our industry is working very hard on and that we're assisting in any way we can is the whole issue of country of origin labeling, because frankly there is a big issue around the restricted feeder program. Currently an animal comes in from the U.S., is fed in Canada, goes back and will be on the shelf as U.S. beef. Under the new U.S. farm bill and the country of origin labeling if a U.S. animal comes into Canada and is fed, it can no longer go back on the shelf as U.S. beef and Canada would be considered its country of origin. So we need to work very closely with our counterparts and our industry in both countries to ensure that we continue to have access to this great market.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Fluoride Levels in Waterways

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most people don't know that the fluoride in our toothpaste and drinking water is a highly toxic substance. In fact, just two grams of fluoride can kill an adult human. My concern today is that we dump millions of cubic metres of fluoridated water into the environment every year from our cities and towns usually without thinking about the consequences. My questions today are all to the Minister of Environment. Does this minister monitor the levels of fluoride in Alberta's rivers, lakes, and streams?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, we monitor a number of substances in the lakes and streams. I'm not sure if we monitor fluoride or not, but that's a question I can find out, and I can guarantee you I will let the member know if we monitor fluoride.

She does raise a very valuable issue around the quality of the water going back into our rivers and streams from the various communities. A city like Calgary actually puts more water back into the Bow River than it takes out. It puts more back in than it takes out.

An Hon. Member: They drink more beer.

Dr. Taylor: No. It has nothing to do with beer drinking, hon. member.

It does point out that we have to be very aware of the quality of the water that goes back into the river.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, given that cities in Alberta are fluoridating their water at three times the acceptable level for aquatic life – so it's really toxic to aquatic life – will the minister, after he looks into this event, undertake to reduce the amount of contamination entering into the waterways?

Dr. Taylor: Certainly. We are working with the cities right now to do that. We have a number of projects in both Calgary and Edmonton where they are upgrading their wastewater treatment plants so that the quality of water will be higher, and once again I make the commitment to the member opposite that we will see if we collect that information and get her that information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms. Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his meetings will he undertake to explore any other kinds of contaminants that are going into our waterways that come to his attention?

Dr. Taylor: Yes. Certainly. That's part of the monitoring. We already do look at the different levels of all kinds of chemicals and so on that are leaving the water treatment systems of all urban areas. As you know, Mr. Speaker, they have wastewater treatment systems, and the water that's leaving those wastewater treatment systems in the province needs to be upgraded. I agree with the member absolutely. We need to upgrade the quality of the water that's getting out of the wastewater treatment and into our rivers and thereby improve the aquatic environment of our rivers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Canadian Dollar

Mr. Lougheed: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My question to the Minister of Finance: could she identify the effect of the rising Canadian dollar on the projected revenues in the budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, thank you. Mr. Speaker, every year in the budget we publish our exchange rate assumptions and the sensitivities that are related to picking the exchange rate on our Canadian dollar. In this year's budget we forecast that the exchange rate would be just under 66 cents for the current fiscal year. Currently the dollar is trading at nearly 71 cents, so there is quite a difference of spread. When you average it over the full year, a penny change in the dollar, an increase in value, actually ends up having a negative effect on the government of about a hundred million dollars. That comes mainly from a decline of about $125 million in our natural resource revenues made up by a gain on the U.S. exchange on our debt. So it's basically every cent that the dollar improves in comparison to the U.S., we have a negative impact of about a hundred million dollars. Conversely, when the dollar goes down, we gain back a hundred million dollars the other way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the minister could clarify if there are ways in which the rising Canadian dollar is mitigated to mitigate these reductions in resource revenues and other revenues.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, one thing is important this year with our new fiscal structure that we've put in place. To get away from the volatility and swings within the marketplace, we've set up a sustainability fund and said that out of our resource revenues we will spend $3.5 billion no matter what that resource revenue number will be. In this case, if it's $4.2 billion, we will spend $3.5 billion. So we take the volatility out of the equation when we're delivering core programs such as our health programs and our education programs and our commitments to municipalities, et cetera.

What we've done with this new structure is alleviate the worrisome situation of the volatility of the marketplace and put in place a predictability that can be then counted on by those that deliver services on the front line. So we've tried to mitigate the risk element with the market by putting in place a sustainability fund that says that we'll capture the fluctuation within that market environment. In other words, the core programs will not be disturbed by changes within the swing of the Canadian dollar in comparison to the U.S. dollar.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, could the minister also elaborate on any other hedging strategies that would protect Alberta's interests as the dollar rises or falls in conjunction with changing resource revenues and export prices and, also, the reduced Alberta debt?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, it is a very good question. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we almost have a natural built-in hedge program with this in the fact that we have set up the sustainability fund, but our debt servicing costs as the dollar does firm up go down, so we see a natural hedge occur, and therefore our spending on our debt servicing or interest expense, which we often call dead costs, becomes lowered. So there is a natural hedge built into our system already.

On the other side, we do again have the new sustainability fund, which is, I think, the safeguard for Albertans so that we have the long-term strategic ability to plan what our spending requirements are because of the sustainability fund, and it takes, again, the volatility out of the marketplace. We are not subjected, as we have been in the past, to the swings within the market. So we've got predictability back in, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a very critical comment on government funding the Calgary school board has just now announced 400 – 400 – staff layoffs, 300 of them teachers. Fifty-seven staff cuts alone are a result of government changes to the grade 10 credit funding. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Given that talking to the Calgary board failed, what action does the minister now propose to prevent September service cuts in Calgary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When we started talking to the Calgary public board, it was last October, and what we dealt with was the particular problems that they had in the '02-03 school year. As a matter of fact, they aren't coming forward with a balanced budget this year. Some of those savings that they had were onetime costs, so they aren't carried through till next year.

The hon. member's number is a little inflated in what he has stated for the number of teachers. It's my information that it's more around 197, but again I have not received the complete story from Calgary public at this time, and I hope to see that later on this afternoon, Mr.

Speaker. The bottom line, though, with Calgary public is that we will continue to work with them, and we will continue to do what we can. We will continue to ensure that there's an excellent system. I think the key component here, again, is that there was a $17 million increase to Calgary public for, the estimates are, between 500 and 700 fewer students in the upcoming year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the minister: how can the minister continue to claim that funding is adequate when the Calgary board alone is cutting 400 positions?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I travel around the province, we see a lot of different situations with school boards. In Edmonton Catholic, for example, we see a school board that is completely balanced. They absorbed not directly an arbitration award but the same amount of increase as what the boards that underwent arbitration absorbed. So we are seeing a lot of differences around the province. We're dealing with that.

What has happened in Calgary, as well, is that they have just gone to a different type of allocating the dollars out to the individual schools, and that should work very well. I'm very impressed with how they've started to do that. I think the key component with Calgary public is that they are a very open board, and indeed we will continue to work with them to ensure that what they do is in the best interests of kids.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: when will the government actually start linking funding to school costs? When can we see that linkage?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very interesting when you have school boards around the province that are running balanced budgets, that are running balanced ships. I think what you see is a difference in school boards. As a matter of fact, in our new funding formula that was put out, we actually recognize that there is an economy of scale that is lost when the school boards reach a certain size. Indeed, we've put into this a component for large administrations.

So, again, the bottom line is that we will continue to work with Calgary public. We feel that there are a lot of things that we can do. It's a preliminary budget that was put out today. I have not seen all the details. My people have not gone through the total budget yet, but we hope to do that within the next day or two.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Later today the Calgary board of education will be the first major school board to make public next year's budget. This budget will be balanced on the backs of close to 95,000 students of the CBE. It will feature the loss of hundreds of teaching and support staff positions, ballooning class sizes, and school user fee hikes. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why has the minister put a gun to the heads of members of the school board and told them to impose $32 million worth of cuts and user fee hikes in next year's budget regardless of the consequences?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, his terminology is quite interesting: putting "a gun to the heads" simply because he sees a budget. The school board received a budget that had an increase of $17 million this year, and that's a significant amount of dollars regardless. So, again, we certainly will work with them. My understanding is that the teacher layoffs that they're talking about would all be through attrition. They are looking at several other things in order to streamline what they do. Again, 500 to 700 fewer students than last year is what they're anticipating, so there definitely has to be some streamlining in what they do. We'll work with them over the next few days, over the next couple of weeks. The hon. member is absolutely right: this is the first budget that I have received. All budgets are due to me by June 30 of this year.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: instead of throwing out bland assurances and misleading statistics, will the minister provide a guarantee to Calgary parents that class sizes will not grow and teachers will not be laid off due to cuts being imposed in next year's CBE budget?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, there was a huge increase that was granted to teachers, to the tune of around 14 percent. A first-year teacher will receive about a 25 percent increase this upcoming year. So they have to accommodate those increases. We have given them a significant amount of dollars. They have a significantly smaller number of students that they are budgeting for. So we'll see. I have not seen the details of their budget yet, and I hope to examine it very carefully over the next couple of days. My people will be examining it, and we'll see what we can do to help them.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, my question to the same minister: will the minister give a clear and firm undertaking to the Assembly that programs serving vulnerable children such as early literacy, ESL, and programs for special-needs children will not be cut back or discontinued as a result of draconian cuts being implemented in next year's CBE budget? If not, why not?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, included in this budget is an 8 percent – 8 percent – increase in special-needs funding. There are 2 percent increases in all of the others, English as a Second Language, all of the other services that the hon. member has mentioned. The interesting point, though, about the funding formula – and this is what the school boards have asked us to do. They have asked us to give them flexibility because they feel that they're the best people to look at exactly where the dollars are spent within their own school jurisdictions. So upcoming in the funding formula there is a flexibility.

There have been huge increases, Mr. Speaker, in special needs. In the last three years alone I've increased special-needs funding by 28 percent. That's a very significant amount of dollars. In the last four years it has increased by very close to 50 percent. So there's a lot of money going into it, and it's now up to the school boards how they deliver those programs. We're looking at the outcome of those programs as opposed to the actual input, the amount of dollars that are put in. There are individual program plans that have to be put forward for each special-needs student.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Seismic Activity on Road Allowances

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some rural municipalities are concerned about seismic companies doing their work on the municipal road allowance, and to discourage this, the municipality is charging the seismic company a fee. My question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: is this an allowable practice?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a good question. This issue, of course, is being dealt with through a stakeholders' group which includes certain municipalities, industry, and also provincial representatives from Energy, Sustainable Resource Development, and also Municipal Affairs and Transportation. This group recommended against charging such fees. Instead, this group supported a balanced approach that would include changes to improve the process for notification and inspection of seismic activities along roadways. Of course, these recommendations were made to the stakeholders' group, and we followed through with the changes recommended in 2001.

Some of the members represented in the stakeholders' group include people from AAMD and C, including Strathcona county, Yellowhead county, Saddle Hills county, municipal district of Rocky View, municipal district of Foothills, and Mountain View county also. Of course, there are also the industry associations: the Canadian Association of Geophysical Contractors, the Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, the Canadian Energy Pipeline Association, and only one more, Mr. Speaker, the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Graydon: Well, thank you. To the same minister. Some of these municipalities, despite what you've said, are still looking at the need for a bylaw to allow them to charge this fee. I'm wondering if the minister can address whether there is a need for that kind of a bylaw and whether the municipalities can do that.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, currently there are ample opportunities through the existing process to be able to deal with the issue outside municipal bylaws. There is a good framework for dealing with seismic issues on a provincial basis. We are confident that we can work together – my department, Municipal Affairs, Transportation, and Energy – to deal with that issue.

Mr. Graydon: Finally, briefly to the same minister. There are also concerns that this seismic activity on road allowances could be a safety issue and cause some safety problems. Are we doing anything about those safety concerns?

Mr. Cardinal: Again, Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. We take safety along these roadways very seriously, and we are working very closely with the Minister of Transportation, who works very closely with the counties and other municipalities. In the last 10 years I believe we've only received one complaint in relation to safety or lack of safety on these roads.

head: Members' Statements

Centre 2000

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and make a statement with respect to a phase 1 centennial project that is in service in the city of Grande Prairie and certainly has been a tremendous asset already to the region. We were fortunate enough to have the Minister of Seniors tour briefly, and the museum that is part and parcel of Centre 2000 in Grande Prairie is a project that has been extremely well received.

To point out the regional concept and the regional vision of the museum operators, Mr. Speaker, I would like to allude a bit to a program that they are going to embark on this summer where the museum is going to allow transportation for students to be partially provided by the museum. They're expecting in the neighbourhood of 8,000 visitors to the museum this summer. The program will be started in May and June of 2003. The program is going to be offered on a trial run to students from schools in the northwestern Alberta region. We'll then see an expansion of this program to the grade 5 to grade 11 students, commencing in September of 2003. By the school year beginning in 2004, the program will be offered to all students in the Grande Prairie region from grade 5 to grade 11.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Danielle Schnurer

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The highest honour bestowed by Alberta's 4-H program has been presented to Danielle Schnurer of Elk Point. Danielle was chosen as the Premier's award recipient from 133 of the province's top 4-H members during the annual 4-H selections program at Olds College, May 2 to 5.

Danielle Schnurer is a 17-year-old honours student who exemplifies the leadership, communication, and personal development skills that the 4-H program holds in high regard. Danielle has been an active member of the Elk Point Saddle Slickers and the Elk Point 4-H Multi Club. Her leadership through executive responsibilities and instructing young members has been beneficial to her club. She participated in the leadership-through-counseling seminar and has been a counselor at 4-H camps. Danielle is an articulate and confident young woman. She competed in the 4-H provincial public speaking competition as a northeast regional champion in 2002 and in January of 2003 as a member of the Alberta Hippology Team in the Western 4-H Horse Classic in Denver, Colorado.

Her enthusiasm and energy have not been limited to 4-H. Danielle was a member of the Elk Point Ukrainian Dance Club for 10 years. Removal of Domestic Livestock from Public Lands

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 8, 2003, a resolution was passed by the Sundre Fish and Game Club to take the necessary steps to have domestic livestock removed from public lands. Their intent is to pursue this matter with great intensity, and there are several reasons why they have taken this position.

The first is the decrease of large ungulates in the 400 zones; secondly, a lack of winter forage in some of these zones due to overgrazing by domestic stock driving wildlife further eastward in search of winter pasture. Their third point: the position that most leaseholders have taken with public access is they do not want to share these areas with the general public and are not good stewards of the resource. They believe they are pasturing too many animals too long in most of these areas. Livestock have been allowed to overgraze to the point where there is no feed left for wildlife. They believe that they are abusing the generosity of the general public that allows them access to the grass. Their fourth point is that there has been a decrease in outdoor opportunities for hunting, fishing, viewing, camping due to very limited access on leased lands.

These leaseholders are not very generous when it comes to public access and seem to have taken the position that it belongs to them. They say that they see more and more no trespassing signs being erected on public lands. They no longer seem to be satisfied with cheap access to grass for their livestock but want full control. Elk and moose are increasing at an alarming rate in the private lands due to the availability of winter food and very low predators and the lack of hunting opportunities, which is the main tool for wildlife management control.

This club believes that this will lead to more conflict between wildlife and the farming community and wildlife and vehicle incidents. They believe that lands must be managed for all wildlife and all people. They believe it is the government's job as appointed stewards of the resource by the people of Alberta to manage it properly and for all. They say that we need to make every effort to raise wildlife on public lands by maintaining the existing habitat, better predator control, and increased burns.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Big Valley Jamboree

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I speak today about a very special event that will take place in my constituency in the first few days of August, the Big Valley Jamboree. Since the arrival of the festival nine years ago the Big Valley Jamboree has become one of North America's hottest country music events. Many tens of thousands of people gather at the Camrose Regional Exhibition Grounds, which has recently undergone a million-dollar expansion to accommodate 22,000 people per day to partake in four days of country music, bull riding, trade shows, and other enjoyable activities. The Big Valley Jamboree is a major tourist attraction for my constituency and indeed for all of Alberta. The lineup for this year's festival includes many talented country artists including Albertan Carolyn Dawn Johnson, Tracy Lawrence, Deana Carter, Lonestar, Alan Jackson, Sawyer Brown, the classic country group the Oak Ridge Boys, and many others.

What makes the Big Valley Jamboree one of the best outdoor music festivals is that it is a family experience. The festival atmosphere is perfect for the events that are planned for every age group, including a family stage and a separate family campground available for those with young children. There is the main stage and several festival events which cater to the more adult crowd.

The event is very important to my constituents as there are approximately 1,500 volunteers from the Camrose region who come out to help with this very popular event. With the support of volunteers and sponsors and the participation of outstanding artists the Big Valley Jamboree continues to be popular, wildly entertaining, and a lot of fun for all of those who attend. So from my constituents I would like to say to all of you: we will see you at the Big Valley jamboree.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a petition signed by 82 Albertans from all over the province, from Coaldale to Calgary to Edson to Red Deer to Edmonton to Fort McMurray, Peace River, and other places. They are urging this government to end the funding crisis in education and increase funding so that there are adequate funds for our children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a letter, a copy of which I received. The letter is addressed to the Premier, dated May 1, 2003, and it's from Ms Sally Ferrero of Edmonton. She's expressing concern about education underfunding and questions the priorities of the government's budget when it comes to spending $105 million for upgrading VLTs while the school system is "starved of funds for basics like textbooks."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the executive summary of an ESBI Alberta Ltd. document entitled Facilitating Major New Generation in Alberta: an Overview of the Transmission Infrastructure Requirements. This document is from August 17, 2001, and states that transmission developments which would be required within Alberta and for export to support predicted growth in generation by 2010 would cost in the region of $3.5 billion, and $1.5 billion of this would be for internal Alberta distribution.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of tablings today. The first is entitled Proper Management of the Resource & Access of Public Lands, which I talked about in Members' Statements. It's from the Sunde Fish and Game Club.

The second is a letter from Frank, Shane, and Jean Raymond from Sunde, Alberta, who are very concerned as hunters, outfitters, and outdoors people about the lack of management by government on the issues that were talked about in a private member's statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I table copies, with permission, today of a letter from a Laureen Purkis, a woman who returned to university at age 38 to become a schoolteacher. She just this year became a full-time schoolteacher and is now being laid off because of financial cuts. It's very timely given the announcement in Calgary today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton–Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table for the benefit of all members of this Assembly the program from the 17th annual graduation convocation for the King's University College, which occurred this past Saturday at the Ellerslie Road Baptist Church. This graduation ceremony was well attended, and the class keeps getting larger and larger each year.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The chair would like to table five copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Calgary–Buffalo requesting that Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003, be given early consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The hon. Member for Edmonton–Ellerslie on a purported point of order.

Point of Order

Allegations against Members

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this afternoon in an exchange between the Premier and the Member for Edmonton–Gold Bar – so this is the second set of questions, the second question in the second set – the Premier answered with regard to making a statement where he said: the kind of debt they would – and then I didn't quite hear what he said – like or would approve of. So in terms of how that question was set up and how the Premier answered it, he was making an allegation that people sitting on this side of the House, and particularly the Member for Edmonton–Gold Bar, would approve of any kind of debt, and that is an allegation. He can't make those kinds of statements. They are not parliamentary within this Legislature, and we would like them withdrawn.

Mr. Hancock: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, no point of order at all on this. During the course of campaigns and during the course of questions in the House and during the course of the ongoing to-and-fro, members opposite request that you spend more money on this, you spend more money on that, put more money into education. They have the good fortune, such as it is, of being in opposition so that they can encourage spending on any one of a number of different priorities that they might have without having to allocate the scarce resources of government. One can only assume that if one is to spend in all the priorities that they put forward, there will be some form of debt associated with it because clearly the revenue isn't there.

But, in any event, that's not an allegation but merely in the nature of the regular to-and-fro of discussion in the House. It impugns no motive. It does not suggest anything about character. It's not making an allegation in the sense that allegation is used in 23(h).

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Innisfail–Sylvan Lake, do you want to participate?

Mr. Ouellette: No.

The Speaker: Okay. Others?

The response from the Premier with respect to the question from the hon. Member for Edmonton–Gold Bar:

Mr. Speaker, consumers do not bear all of the risk. I'll tell you what risk consumers bear under a totally regulated, socialistic enterprise that the Liberals would support. What they would get is a massive amount of debt, the kind of debt that has been accrued in Ontario, the kind of debt that has been accrued in British Columbia. That's the kind of debt they like, and that's the kind of debt they want to foist on Albertans.

Of course, 23(h) and (i), imputing motives, refers to individuals, not groups, parties, caucuses, entities and is part of the give-and-take of the Legislative Assembly. I suspect we would have a point of order on every question raised with respect to this particular kind of clarification and probably in many, many of the responses given as well. So, no. I guess we've had it raised and dealt with.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Energy

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to be here today. It's a pleasure to talk about the Department of Energy and its estimates and its business plan. Of course, we all know that energy has a long and bright history in the province of Alberta, one that we wish to continue, and of course it continues to be a driving part of the support in the economy.

Mr. Chairman, resource revenues are forecast to make up almost 30 percent of government revenues in 2002-2003. With Alberta's new fiscal framework when oil and gas prices fluctuate, government revenues will continue to fluctuate but the amount of money available for government spending will be more stable. This does not diminish the importance of the energy sector.

Securing Albertans' share of resource revenues and ensuring that our energy resources are competitive and continue to attract investment and create employment are the Ministry of Energy's most important responsibilities. To sustain future revenues from energy resources, Alberta will need to ensure that it has the right regulatory process and rules to ensure continued exploration and development of conventional resources, increased production from conventional wells, and allow for responsible development of nonconventional energy sources. That means continued oil sands development.

Under our generic oil sands royalty regime – and this is an important question because members asked it before – before an oil sands project has recovered all of its costs, Mr. Chairman, royalty is 1 percent of gross revenue. After costs are recovered, the royalty is the greater of 1 percent of gross or 25 percent of net revenue. Although a barrel of bitumen generates less royalty than a comparable barrel of light sweet crude, oil sands do offer greater potential by volume.

While it is not certain that oil sands royalties in the near term will approach conventional oil royalties, given current oil price and production forecasts, we expect oil sands royalties to significantly increase by the year 2007-2008 and will subsequently show up in the business plans for those years. In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, continued oil sands investment will create employment and help secure Albertans' energy future.

Two key changes, Mr. Chairman, have been made to our overall ministry business plan. We have highlighted the significant contribution the ministry makes to the overall government goals of people, prosperity, and preservation, and we've identified the key strategic priorities for both the department and the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Our business strategies and targets may have to be revised if the bad federal government continues on its path of implementing Kyoto targets and time lines without a plan. Kyoto has impacted and will continue to impact industry investment and commodity prices. Nevertheless, we remain outcome oriented.

But Albertans' share of resource development is more than just royalties. It includes investment, it includes jobs, and it includes the business opportunities that all Albertans enjoy as direct and indirect results of the oil and gas industry. This industry, Mr. Chairman, attracted over $20.6 billion worth of investment in 2001. That is approximately 67 percent of all private investment in Alberta. Now, while we haven't seen the investment numbers for 2002 yet, we expect that they will be slightly lower than the record set in 2001. This investment creates business opportunities and supports some 66,000 direct upstream or in front of the gas pump sector jobs for all Albertans and in fact in front of the refinery operation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Department of Energy's nonrenewable resource revenue stream for 2003-04 is expected to be $4.776 billion, reflecting a return to more historical oil and gas prices. The oil price forecast for 2003-2004 in United States dollars is $23.30 per barrel for west Texas intermediate. Budget 2003 assumes that natural gas prices will average Canadian $4.05 per thousand cubic feet or, if multiplied by 1.512, Canadian $3.84 per gigajoule in this fiscal year. The oil price forecast assumes that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, OPEC, does moderately well at managing the oil market but recognizes internal tension over production quotas causing some oversupply, putting downward pressure on prices.

In terms of natural gas the recent price increase reflects declining North American production, low storage levels, and colder than normal – and may I say colder than normal given today's temperatures – unsettled weather in key consuming regions of eastern North America. The price forecast reflects increasing drilling activity in Canada and the United States that arrests the supply decline, a return to normal weather, and a return to the historical relationship between oil and gas prices. It is expected, Mr. Chairman, that gas prices will drop to levels more in line with the budget once storage begins to recover to historical levels.

This budget will enable the Department of Energy and the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to meet the following opportunities and challenges. One, over the next year we will continue to participate in Alberta's climate change action plan and protect Alberta's interests on the national scene. Two, resolution of First Nations issues. It is very important to provide assurance and certainty for future access and development of energy resources. The department continues to strengthen consultation and promote training, employment, and business opportunities for those First Nations.

To offset long-term declines in conventional reserves, Mr. Chairman, we must intensify the search for remaining oil and gas resources, further enhance the oil recovery, proceed carefully with the responsible development of coal bed methane, and encourage the industry to develop new technology and processes. We may be able to increase recovery and reduce emissions intensity. The department will complete a review of its royalty systems to ensure that Albertans continue to receive a fair share of the value of these commodities.

We are presently working with Environment, the Energy and Utilities Board, and Sustainable Resource Development to develop and improve regulatory processes and reduce the cost of regulatory requirements over time while still maintaining Alberta's high environmental standards. The Ministry of Energy will continue working to eliminate barriers to retail growth and stability of competitive electricity and natural gas markets. In this next three-year period, Mr. Chairman, the key area of focus is further development of the retail market. We intend to advance customer confidence and information and knowledge in the restructured marketplace through our comprehensive Customer Choice awareness education campaign.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am responsible for the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board will continue to act on the recommendations of the Provincial Advisory Committee on Public Safety and Sour Gas. This three-year initiative is the EUB's first priority. Significant progress has already been made on the 87 recommendations: 18 recommendations have been completed, work has begun on 52, and 17 will start by April 2004. The board is also challenged with fulfilling additional regulatory responsibilities regarding municipally owned utilities and the market surveillance administrator function.

The Department of Energy's business plan, Mr. Chairman, contains no major changes, but it is a further refinement of the substantive changes that began in early April 2001. Although the department does not directly control outcomes, it does attempt to achieve desired results through actions and programs and respond to changing business and economic circumstances affecting energy and mineral resource development in this fine province.

Mr. Chairman, while the department's mission, vision, and core businesses aren't changed from last year, our strategies have been refined and our performance measures polished, crowned with the addition of industry investment as a clear indicator of the fairness and competitiveness of our royalty and regulatory regimes.

As with the Department of Energy the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board's mission and vision remain unchanged. However, Mr. Chairman, the EUB's core businesses have changed from four to two. Adjudication and regulation is one; information and knowledge is two. The board, the EUB, has also consolidated strategic priorities and performance measures to focus more on outcomes, less on process.

I am presenting a ministry budget that will enable the department to collect some 5.071 billion dollars in royalties and freehold mineral tax for all Albertans while enabling the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to fulfill its regulatory mandate. Mr. Chairman, the administrative cost of collecting this revenue is less than 2.3 percent. The Department of Energy's business plan targets between 20 and 25 percent of industry's annual net operations' revenue through the royalty system. This is the second largest revenue source for the province in '02-03, just behind the $7.3 billion in expected personal and corporate taxes.

The EUB has identified some pressure and is proposing an increase in funding over the next three years. To this extent, Mr. Chairman, funding has been increased by some 10 million dollars in 2003-2004.

The number of full-time equivalent positions in the Department of Energy will increase to 562 with the addition of six positions for consultation with First Nations while the EUB complement will increase to 800, for a total of 1,362 positions. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board's additional staffing, Mr. Chairman, will provide for additional expertise on public safety, sour gas emissions, the expanded regulatory role in utility regulation and strengthens the board's expertise for oil sands applications and hearings.

Now, Mr. Chairman, our budget estimates do not reflect the transfer of the rural utilities program to Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. This is a management move that has been made over the past year through a lengthy consultation with stakeholders, with the members of rural gas co-ops, with members of rural electrification associations, and with members of our department. In dealing with this, we dealt with the department of agriculture, particularly the rural development component, and it was ascertained through analysis that the granting aspects of the natural gas co-op program, which has attained a 97 percent gas penetration in Alberta, and the rural electrification associations, which deliver some 54 megawatts of power in some 67 organizations, would be best placed there for the purposes of rural development and coincident with the targets and goals of the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development's business plan. Therefore, based on that analysis, a lengthy process was undertaken over the past year, and we now will finalize the movement to the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

This does leave the policy side firmly in the hands of the Department of Energy. They will continue to work hard with natural gas co-ops. Natural gas co-ops under Bill 19, Mr. Chairman, had only one minor change, and that is that if the membership vote by a majority – and I believe it's a two-thirds majority – then that gas co-op is obligated to offer choice. But up until the members themselves make that decision in a democratic environment, the Ministry of Energy remains silent on how the gas co-op wishes to conduct its business.

With respect to the REAs, Mr. Chairman, at this juncture I must thank the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky for the hard work that they undertook over a two-year period to resolve the issues that the REAs had indicated existed between the Ministry of Energy and themselves. These involved certain issues such as how to go about amalgamation of an REA. How would an REA compete with another wire provider? How would REAs amalgamate in areas where they are served by different providers? What are the safety issues surrounding wire repair for REAs that are served by a wire provider? How is membership determined, by negotiation or by arbitration? So these issues were worked on quite diligently by the members of the committee, and a good outcome occurred after some two years of discussion and consultation.

Now, it is important to note, too, Mr. Chairman, that with the passage of Bill 3 REAs will be able to provide customer choice. They will be obligated to provide the default supply option, which is known as the flow-through rate, but of course there will be commercial solutions or what I'll call membership solutions inside the REA where they can take and make a majority decision governing the not-for-profit society and buy hedged power or buy contract power that would be available for all their members. So, in fact, having the default supply option available simply serves as a competitive check and balance on the usually good performance of the REAs in purchasing electricity for their members. I would be more than pleased to comment further on that should there be questions that arise.

Let me say in conclusion – and thank you for your attention, Mr. Chairman and others in the House – that this ministry has a proud past. One of the fundamental components that makes this department the success that it is is the land tenure system that has been so ably and capably administered and has been done without scandal, without corruption, without fault. As I touch the wood of my desk, I can only hope that that will continue as it has continued over the past 50 years.

There's no question as to the significance of the undertaking and the knowledge of the staff members of the Department of Energy and the responsibility that they hold, whether they're continually revising and reviewing the royalty agreements to see if we're extracting the appropriate amount of economic rent from the companies that invest in this province to getting the generic oil sands royalty right and correct to stimulate in the last year I think some $20 billion worth of new construction to building a data warehouse of petroleum information that is second to none in the world.

This program, formally called VIPIR, or volumetric and infrastructure petroleum information registry, is now up and running. It's running for a significantly reduced cost than what was originally contemplated when the first royalty simplification program was initiated. We've found that the private sector is using this Internet-based site multiple times. We have recorded millions of hits in the first quarter of operation. In fact, we are moving the best petroleum data around, managing it correctly, collecting the appropriate amount of royalties, and delivering financial moneys to the Treasurer on a timely, efficient, and appropriate basis.

So with that short introduction, Mr. Chairman, I do look forward to answering any questions that members may bring on the estimates of the Ministry of Energy.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to participate this afternoon in the Department of Energy's annual estimates. Certainly, in the minister's conclusion one cannot underestimate the importance to this government and to all Albertans of the nonrenewable resource revenue of close to 22 percent that is provided by that department to the budget of the province. When one considers how large an amount that is and how important the energy sector is to this province, it is one of the more important portfolios within the government.

I see that as we debate the estimates this afternoon, the minister is attired in a wonderful purple tie, very similar to the Purdy's chocolate boxes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is apt to be asking for one just like it because of course that is her favourite colour.

With that, Mr. Chairman, there are many questions. Certainly, there have been many problems in the Department of Energy, and the problems have to be resolved. There are issues and problems around electricity deregulation, and it should be a very interesting and informative debate in regard to this department.

Whether it's natural gas or electricity, how we're going to enhance the development of the coal bed methane industry for the future of this province, how we're going to develop wind power – certainly that was mentioned in question period earlier this afternoon, and I think that's very, very important, particularly in southern Alberta and west of Calgary. We have to ensure that the Minister of Energy not only manages the development of the oil and natural gas and mineral resources in a responsible manner within a framework of sustainable development that maximizes investment in resource development and benefits for Albertans but also that there is a development of wind power and there is a responsible development of the entire coal bed methane industry.

Now, if we look at the mission of the Department of Energy, it is to "optimize the sustained contribution from Alberta's energy and mineral resources in the interests of Albertans." In other words, to maximize the royalties the government collects from our natural resources, and that is very important. I believe it was the Premier who said that we have to get our pound of flesh. Certainly we have to ensure that all royalties that are due and payable are put into the public treasury, and I'm sure they are. It was with interest that the minister discussed earlier VIPIR, the electronic compliance system to calculate royalty rates, and that's now up and running. I hope it's very, very successful. I hope it is very successful.

The Department of Energy has, as we look here, four core businesses, including securing benefits for Albertans, resource development, informing Albertans about energy and mineral resource development, and ensuring Alberta consumers have a choice of reliable and competitively priced energy. Certainly, when one considers that and you go around and talk to citizens, particularly after a couple of years of electricity deregulation or energy deregulation, consumers are not after choice. They're after affordable electricity and natural gas prices. They have expressed no interest in pursuing two-, three-, or five-year contracts for electricity or natural gas. What they want is reliable, affordable energy to heat and light their homes. They don't want to gamble on a three- or five-year contract for those utilities. They see natural gas and electricity as essential services, not as expensive commodities.

The Minister of Energy has also developed six strategic priorities for the upcoming year including continuing to implement an action plan on climate change. To the minister: specifically, what is the government's action plan on climate change? What is the timetable for the government's implementation of its action plan? What are the Department of Energy's responsibilities in the implementation of this government's action plan, Mr. Chairman?

Now, another of the six strategic priorities for the upcoming year is a focus on developing consultation guidelines and on fostering capacity building in First Nations communities. In regard to that, I have a number of questions. Given that this strategic priority states that "the department continues to focus," what steps did the government take last year?

An additional question, Mr. Chairman: what extra steps is the government going to take in this upcoming year given the developments in the northern Alberta oil patch? What new initiatives have begun as a result of recent developments again in the northern Alberta oil patch? Will the government table in the Legislative Assembly its action plan for developing these strategic priorities? Also, which stakeholders is the government working with in order to achieve these goals?

Another strategic point is to "complete a review of opportunities for new exploration and development" and a resource development regulatory review. Now, as part of this review, is the government going to review its policy around the use of regulations, and will the public be kept up to date on the results of the department's regulatory review?

I see also that we're going to look at reviewing the "royalty systems to ensure Albertans continue to receive a fair share of the maximized value of commodities over the next two decades." Is the royalty tax credit included as part of this review? I'm going to have more to say on this royalty tax credit later on, but will the department also make this review public? Will the minister take into consideration in this review the recommendations the Auditor General has made about this department's royalty programs?

Again, another strategic initiative is to pursue "structural changes to enhance electricity market operations and to ensure that there's a level-playing field" for all customers. Well, I don't know about that. What provisions is the minister taking to ensure that the rights of consumers are not sacrificed for a level playing field? Does the government believe that a level playing field will result in lower utility bills for Albertans? If not, why is the minister pursuing this?

Now, getting to the business plan, on page 123 of the Department of Energy's business plan 2003 through 2006 it states that the ministry will "directly develop, manage and support, in-house, those department information management systems that are critical to ensuring that Albertans continue to receive their share of resource revenues." How did the department determine that "20% to 25% of industry's annual net operating revenue" was Albertans' share of resource revenue? Does the minister foresee Albertans' share of royalties changing over time? Is the royalty rate going to go up? Is it going to go down? Is it going to stay the same? Which department information management systems are being discussed here? Are there new ones being created?

Mr. Chairman, again to the minister: how does the department collect information from energy firms in order to ensure that Albertans are getting their fair share of the revenues? Is the honour system still used?

On page 123 of the Department of Energy's business plan 2003-2006 it states that it has set a target of making audit adjustments less than 2 percent of department revenues. Why didn't the government set its target lower than 2 percent given that the audit adjustments only made up 1.6 percent of department resource revenues last year? How many firms does the department audit in a given year, Mr. Chairman?

Now, moving on to page 124 of this ministry's business plan, it states that the department will "implement Oil and Gas Consultation Guidelines for resource development on Crown land in areas of traditional use" by First Nations people. When does the government plan to have these initiatives implemented? Has the department consulted stakeholders in constructing these guidelines, including both the resource companies, oil and gas companies, and representatives of the First Nations bands? How will these initiatives be enforced, and are they binding?

Again on page 124 of this ministry's business plans it states that the department will "complete a consultation process with stakeholders to identify issues and appropriate strategies for future development of Alberta's coal bed methane resource." Is this consultation process going to be open to the public? Will the results of this consultation process be made public, and will legislation be coming forth to guarantee royalty rights to those looking to develop these new technologies?

At this time I was surprised to note at a meeting that I attended last week in Camrose on electricity rates and natural gas rates – but the meeting also discussed coal bed methane because it was of a great deal of interest to some of the rural landowners that were present. I asked the assembled crowd if they had received from the Department of Energy the study that was released recently by them in regard to coal bed methane. There had been a meeting in the same hotel, I understand, previous to our meeting where coal bed methane had been discussed. To my surprise, these landowners said: no, we were not aware of that study. So I'm making an effort to provide that information to those who expressed an interest in it, but I would urge the minister to make sure the landowners have all the information that the Department of Energy is putting out.

Now, I was astonished that there were some people that thought that there were going to be large, large volumes of water produced in the production of coal bed methane, and I don't know if that's true in this province. The minister can probably correct that. Certainly, I don't think we're going to produce the volumes of water that come from the Powder River basin. We've talked about this many times in the Assembly, but I think that if the landowners have the information, the conclusions that will be reached will be beneficial to all because there is a perception out there that there are vast amounts of water to be produced as a result of the production of this form of natural gas.

If the minister has any knowledge or any information regarding how much water is being produced, where it's going – because the citizens there were concerned that there didn't seem to be any disposal well, there didn't seem to be a great deal of increase in tank truck traffic coming from the leases. The production rates may be confidential business information, but certainly if the minister could share with the good citizens of Camrose and the surrounding areas just how much water is being drawn off in some of those test wells, I think it would benefit the entire province and that industry, which is in its infancy, and I hope it grows to become a very beneficial partner in the energy sector in this province, because we all know that the western Canadian sedimentary basin is maturing for both oil and gas production.

Mr. Chairman, on page 126, moving along two pages in this ministry's business plan, we see the outline here of the Department of Energy's targets for the diversification of energy production. Were environmental concerns taken into consideration when establishing these targets, and what kinds of royalty reduction programs does this government have in mind to help industry meet these targets? Were the interests and needs of Alberta's energy consumers taken into account when establishing these targets?

Further on, on page 127 of the Department of Energy's business plan 2003-06 it indicates that for the next two years the ministry would like to see Albertans' overall knowledge of the role of energy and mineral resources in Alberta's economy "increasing over time." The same phrase is used to describe the ministry's target for doing a good job or a very good job providing Albertans with energy information. Can the minister please describe what "increasing over time" means? How can the Minister of Energy be assured that he is going to make his long-term targets for these performance measures if he does not set targets in the interim? Can the minister please provide us with a ballpark figure for these targets for the upcoming year?

On page 128 of the ministry business plans for 2003-06 it states that the department is going to "provide consumers, industry and other government agencies with clear and timely communication of changes in the natural gas and electric industries." Now, what methods – Internet, phone, fax, mail-outs – is the department planning on using to reach consumers? When is the consumer education program going to start that was advocated in the Navigant report, this $2 million to $3 million education campaign to alert consumers and inform them of the beefs and the bouquets, shall I say, of energy deregulation? Consumers certainly need to have that information. It was suggested in the Navigant report that this go ahead and the cost would be anywhere between 50 cents and a dollar per person in this province. I would like to know how that consumer information campaign is coming along.

Now the ministry's web site. They've got links to all over on this. In some ways it's fascinating. It's a good place to spend a Saturday evening. I can assure all hon. members of the Assembly that the Department of Energy web site is very interesting, but it is also very confusing and technical. Has the minister thought about changing the web site to make it easier for consumers to navigate and find the information that they need; for instance, if an outfit has a licence to sell three- or five-year natural gas contracts or three- or five-year electricity contracts; what to do in case a door-to-door salesperson comes to your neighbourhood. What are the questions to ask?

Also, can the minister please define "timely" in regard to information that may be sought from the department? Does "timely" involve waiting for hours in a phone queue to a call centre located, I suppose, anywhere in North America? I don't know where the Department of Energy would have a call centre.

If at this time, Mr. Chairman, the hon. minister would like to respond in writing, I would certainly be pleased to wait for his letter. Thank you.

Mr. Smith: We'll take the member's questions under advisement and respond in writing, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak to the estimates of the Department of Energy. Of course, this department is responsible for one of the fundamental industries for Alberta's economic health, something that has in many respects defined this province for many, many years.

I want to ask about estimates with respect to the royalties, perhaps deal with that first, Mr. Chairman. The government is projecting that royalties are going to fall dramatically, so I'd like to know why the government has done that. Many forecasters in the industry are expecting natural gas prices, in particular, to stay high due to excess storage capacity in the U.S. and in Canada. For example, the Globe and Mail reports: Mr. Peter Linder, a Calgary-based senior adviser to the Delta One Energy Fund, said he doesn't see gas prices nosediving this year as they have in the past after sharp gains because the continental market for gas has fundamentally changed; the industry's production is falling, and overall demand is up.

So some analysts are expecting benchmark prices to average $6 per thousand cubic feet for the rest of 2003, but the government estimates an average Alberta reference price of $4.05. The question to the minister is: why is the government using a reference price of only 67 percent of other analysts?

Now, the oil royalties from the third-quarter update are projected to be 40 percent lower than in 2000-2001 despite the fact that oil prices have only been about 5 percent lower this year compared to two years ago. This represents a difference, Mr. Chairman, of about $700 million. Natural gas royalties are projected to be 40 percent lower than in 2000-01, though gas prices are only about 20 percent lower compared to two years ago. This represents a difference of $1 billion. Since 1993 the government has underestimated revenues and surpluses to the tune of $23 billion and $20 billion respectively. They seem to be continuing this tradition. So we would like to know what the justification for this will be.

I want to ask some questions about the decision to transmit the costs of building the new transmission in electricity onto the backs of power consumers. I'd like to ask the minister what the basis of that decision is, perhaps in a little more detail than he was able to offer in question period, and particularly would like to know, if the decision of a 50-50 split between consumers and power companies, as the EUB had recommended a year or so ago, had been followed, what the outcome would have been and why the minister has chosen to change that decision and place the full cost on the backs of power consumers.

I'm curious why the target for the percentage of electricity production from renewable sources climbs to 11.4 percent in 2003 and 2004 and then falls off again to 9.8 percent in 2005. That's something I find interesting. I'd like to know, as well, what the minister's view is of the effectiveness of the energy market in Alberta for electricity at this point. Much has been made about the impending entry of Direct Energy. Has the minister got estimates on how this will actually affect the retail price of electricity for small users: homeowners, small business, farms, and so on?

What about the potential of Aquila leaving the Alberta market? There was a piece in the paper the other day which said that Aquila is leaving or may be considering leaving Alberta. How many players does it take to make an effective market? Has the government analyzed that? Have they got a sense of how many retailers of electricity are necessary in order to have a fully functioning effective market in which consumers can benefit? If, in fact, you get a number of retailers active in the province, how far can that reduce prices? This is a question I have for the minister.

So, Mr. Chairman, that concludes my questions for now, and I will wait with great anticipation for the minister's response. Thank you.

Dr. Taft: It's obvious that the minister isn't able to respond right now, so I'll jump up and get some issues on the record. The state of the energy industry in Alberta right now is of really great concern. I am nervous about the long-term future of the industry not just on the petroleum side but on the electricity side as well. It's clear that conventional oil reserves are tailing off, and conventional oil production is tailing off to the point where within a few years it will be barely significant in Alberta. Gas production is in decline although prices are very firm and I think will remain firm, but reserves and production are beginning to show signs of fading out, and we've pegged a tremendous amount of hope on the oil sands, which is fair enough. I mean, we should; they're enormous reserves. But it does beg the question of how well we are going to manage the oil sands.

I have occasionally had the opportunity to ask the minister before now about the structure of royalties from the oil sands, and he did make some comments about them in his opening remarks, saying that the current regime is structured on a 1 percent royalty on gross until the capital costs of the plants are recovered, and then I believe he said that it's a 25 percent royalty on net. He did say, in response to a question that I have raised at other times in this Assembly, that he expects that the oil sands royalties will begin this jump from 1 percent to 25 percent in 2007-08.

So my questions on this particular issue are as follows. Can the minister show us some long-term projections extending to 2007-08 and beyond on what the royalties will be from the oil sands production? It is a concern of mine that royalties from the oil sands dropped from something like $700 million a year two years ago to not much more than $100 million this year despite an increase in production. I want to see the royalties coming from the plants back up at a much higher level as soon as possible. So I'm looking for long-term projections as far out as the government has on expected royalty flow to the provincial coffers from the oil sands production.

I'm also interested in some of the assumptions underlying those projections. How are those projections affected by changes in the price of oil? The price of oil in the last year has been very high, and surely that means that the oil sands companies recover their capital costs at a much higher rate than if the price was low. If the price of oil stays high, how much more quickly will we see the royalty rise to the 25 percent level? I want to have some background explanation of the impact of oil prices on the scheduling of the oil sands royalty payouts.

I would also like to have some analysis – I hope the government has done this – on the impact of oil sands production on the reserves in the oil sands. The essential issue is this. I'm wondering how much of our oil sands reserves will be consumed before we hit the 25 percent royalty rate. In other words, will we have gone through 25 percent of the oil sands reserve before we begin getting the 25 percent royalty rate? Will we go through 10 percent, 50 percent? How much? Of course, I understand that that depends on the price of oil, but surely this department has done that sort of sensitivity analysis so that we can see the impact of prices on the drawdown on our reserves.

The next question on this particular issue has to do with the calculation of the net basis for the 25 percent royalty. I understand from the minister that when we hit the 25 percent royalty rate, it's 25 percent of net. I need to know: net exactly of what? And I want to know who's going to be calculating that net. What is the audit system in place to ensure that the net payout is accurate and fair for the citizens of Alberta? All kinds of licensing and royalty arrangements will tell you that a net basis for calculation is plagued with problems and opportunities for abuse. We need to ensure that those do not arise. I want to know what precautions the government is taking to ensure that. So I have many questions around oil sands royalties.

I'm also wanting to be clear on the minister's position in terms of the construction cost of electricity power plants being built in conjunction with the oil sands. I have at earlier times put this question to the minister, but I would like him just to be clear on the record on his response. The question is essentially this: are the oil sands companies able to write off the cost of electricity power plants against the royalty regime? If they are, it means that in effect the citizens of Alberta are subsidizing the construction of those plants. I hope that's not the case, because it wouldn't be fair to the other electricity producers. I don't believe it is the case. I'd like the minister, though, to confirm that.

We have heard much in recent months about problems with cost overruns at the heavy oil plants coming from a variety of factors: labour shortages, problems with engineering and design, problems with rushed construction schedules. I know from firsthand conversations with project managers at these plants that there have been serious management and design problems from the contractors and from the engineering firms so that in some cases portions of plants have been built and then the engineers have come in and said, "No, you've got to take that down, and we'll rebuild it differently" at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars. So cost overruns from that are a concern. Cost overruns from labour shortages are a concern. Cost overruns due to environmental consideration are a concern. In fact, all cost overruns are a concern, and they are a concern because they jeopardize the long-term financial security and stability of this province. So if there are plans in the minister's business plan or budget to work with industry to minimize cost overruns, I would be very interested to hear what those are.

Staying on the petroleum side but looking at a different kind of petroleum: coal bed methane. Has there been a discussion on coal bed methane?

Mr. Bonner: Slightly.

Dr. Taft: There's been a bit of discussion on coal bed methane, I understand.

The first question I have really is the scale of the potential reserves of coal bed methane, and I understand that they are potentially very significant. Some information on that would be helpful. I know that the minister and his department are very involved in planning, laying the groundwork, no pun intended, for this industry to flourish, so some details on that would be much valued. How much of the budget, how much of the business plan is committed to the development of that resource?

Along the same lines as my questions on heavy oil development any information on work being done on the royalty structure for coal bed methane would be very valuable for every Albertan to have, me included, so I hope the minister can provide that.

Now, I did notice in the estimates of the department that there is a line on communications. I'm always interested in that particular topic. Well, I can't dig it up right now, but there was an increase, more than a doubling in the Department of Energy's communications budget. My hunch is that some of that's going to be committed to public education on electricity deregulation. A little bit more detail on that and on the working relationship between the department's communications staff and the Public Affairs Bureau communications staff. I imagine the Public Affairs Bureau has staff assigned to this department, so some information on that would be helpful, the number of staff involved. What are the details underlining the $776,000 in the communications budget? Is there an advertising buy in there? Are there contracts let out to public relations firms? What's going on there? Some detail on that and, as I say, some explanation of how that budget fits with the budget that the Public Affairs Bureau has assigned to the department would be useful.

I have one particular question on the electricity industry. The regulatory challenges to the minister are enormous, fluid, complex, and unpredictable. One of the unpredictable things is the future or not of a large company like Aquila on the electricity industry in this province. Now, the business plan is driving towards increased competition and retail competition, in particular, in this province, yet when we see companies like Aquila pulling out, it sends off alarm bells for the stability and future of the industry. So what steps is the minister taking? What's laid out in the business plan and the budget to ensure the stability of the electricity industry? What impact does the minister see the potential pullout of Aquila having? Are there concerns if Aquila's assets are sold to, say, an existing player, like EPCOR or Enmax? Will that trigger a regulatory review, and will that raise concerns over the concentration of power in Alberta's electricity market?

So with those questions, I'll take my seat and give someone else the opportunity or the minister the opportunity to respond, and then we can carry on from there. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am going to talk specifically to some of the questions raised by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and then I will also attempt to answer the questions from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I know that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has a good analytical sense with respect to the business plan, and I'm going to start at the end and then try to work my way back.

With respect to the stability of the electricity market, Mr. Chairman, we have now completed the third pillar, if you will, or the third leg, of the full transition to a competitive market model.

The first piece was the export policy principles. These principles are published and are open documentation available to everyone that emphasizes, importantly, that, one, export generation is allowed and, two, those who benefit from that generation must pay for that. On the unregulated piece or the competitive side it's very easy to do that. The generator just generates and sends it down the line and pays for that transmission. On the line if it's used for more than strictly merchant transmission, then cost allocation would have to be determined via a public, transcribed, open Alberta Energy and Utilities Board hearing, but the utilities board will interpret the government policy as it's established.

Secondly, with respect to the market policy the most salient feature of the market policy was to ensure the supervision of a level playing field by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, which included bringing EPCOR and Enmax and their city operations under the purview of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. That's an important piece. A second important piece was to establish a not-for-profit AESO, Alberta electric system operator. That operator is responsible for the movement of all electricity through Alberta as well as the Balancing Pool. That system operator has also taken good steps to put through auction divided segments or strips of the Balancing Pool power into the marketplace, and for the first time since 2000 that power has been sold into the marketplace. It is being used to be vended into the pool.

The third leg is the transmission policy, which has been the topic of much discussion today as well as stemming from a question last Thursday in the House and a speech made in Banff. The transmission policy is one that is very clear; it's simple; it leaves no room for misinterpretation. If we go back, I know there is some alleged concern that we had reversed a decision by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Well, in fact, the former transmission administrator at ESBI – there was a document that was tabled in the House today from a group of consultants out of Ireland. They had developed a congestion management issue and then had devised a policy for congestion management. The new AESO, electric system operator, asked that this policy be examined insofar as it didn't make any sense nor was it realistically workable. We examined it as well. We agreed with the Alberta electric system operator. Then we said that for all transmission that will be built, the cost will be borne by the consumers of Alberta. That's really no change from what was in place prior to the ESBI decision on congestion management.

So let me just read into the record, Mr. Chairman, what it is that we corrected. Now, in the policy before we said simply that all transmission would be paid for by the consumer. Here are excerpts that I'll read into the record from the EUB news release of November 5, 2002.

To encourage electricity generators to build plants in areas that will minimize the delivered cost of energy, zones will be created based on the need for power generation in those zones. Generators in zones with excess generation capacity will be subject to higher transmission charges than generators in zones with insufficient generation capacity.

The EUB also determined that the cost of any additional transmission facilities required for exports would be paid entirely by those parties wishing to export electricity.

Now, that one paragraph is so confusing that I don't know how anybody could ever deliver good, solid transmission policy based on that type of area in need versus area in less need versus generator with more cost versus generator with less cost. So what we have now is extreme clarity and a clarity that can be defined by generator, transmission builder, and consumer.

Mr. Chairman, in this former ESBI congestion management solution a generator would be asked to pay half the cost of the transmission. Now, where would the generator – and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is a respected economist – recoup those revenues? From the sale of his product. Now, where would he sell his product? He would sell his product into the Alberta Power Pool. Who buys the power from the Power Pool? Consumers. So, in fact, consumers are already paying for 100 percent of the transmission costs. It's just that they're paying two different parties at a more complicated price, metric, and they're doing so in such a way that we were going to have price discrimination in Alberta. We were going to have areas in Alberta where there would be a higher price for electricity compared to other areas that had ample supply.

Alberta is characterized, Mr. Chairman, by a small electrical market, some 8,000 megawatts. Compared to the Bonneville Power Administration, that in fact generates over 17,000 megawatts, we're small potatoes, and that was I think one of the concerns about a new competitive market model going in. So now that we have a good export policy, a strong market policy, new entrance into the retail marketing side, and a clear, visible, simple transmission policy, this marketplace is set right to create as much downward pressure as we can on electricity prices, fair and open pricing, and good, easy to interpret regulation.

Mr. Chairman, we continue to feel positive about this step. It's a beneficial step for all Albertans. It is one that will cover this marketplace well into the future. Now, there are a couple of reasons that underlie that. One of the most important reasons is that it sends a strong signal to low-cost generators, low-cost generators located in the Wabamun area who can deliver low-priced electricity manufactured from clean-burning, low-sulphur, low-ash coal. Secondly, it sends a tremendous price signal to the most unique energy reservoir in the world, known as the Alberta oil sands.

These oil sands and the latest thermal technology that's being used to exploit them means that they must generate steam in any event, and they've decided to use natural gas as that fuel of choice. Now, if you're generating steam and then you inject it into the formation to heat the bitumen such that the bitumen then drops into the second annulus on a SAGD project and then is pumped up to surface, why would you not pass that steam through a gas turbine, a right-sized turbine? With a SAGD project that would use about 25 megawatts of power, you can put an F-series generator in there from General Electric to generate 170 megawatts. Pass the steam through that, and you've got about a 145 megawatt surplus. That can be put on the transmission lines and shipped into the marketplace with no added pollution to the Alberta air shed, with no added CO₂ emissions. It's absolutely in the public interest, Mr. Chairman, for us to use that precious natural resource, natural gas, for more than just to generate steam from the oil sands.

Both of these initiatives will put pressure on electricity prices in Alberta. That is why we're doing the transmission policy, the market policy, and the export policy: for the public good.

Now, inside this marketplace there has been some uncertainty, uncertainty that's been caused by global events. I think that the change in the liquidity of the international marketplace and the inability for the continental marketplace to trade large amounts of natural gas has created some upward pressure on gas prices and certainly has contributed to the gas spikes that we saw last year, but inside that is created a tremendous amount of dollar losses to those companies that were involved in energy trading. Of course, the granddaddy of them all is Enron, but Reliant was around and is no more, Duke energy, which had a part of Engage, is gone, and Aquila. Now, Aquila is a large U.S. based multinational that has just declared a $2.4 billion loss, sold its assets in Australia and in England, and after 15 years in the Canadian marketplace said: well, we don't know if our assets are up for sale, but we certainly wouldn't turn down any proposal that we would be required to take to the board for review. So that means that there could be – and I would not speculate on a commercial transaction – a potential change in ownership in the marketplace inside the regulated envelope of transmission. This has nothing to do with free, unregulated generation, only with transmission, and it's regulated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there's often a feeling that when this asset is sold, the consumer pays for it twice. In fact, that's not the case. Any commercial transaction where the ownership of the company moves from owner A to owner B can take place in a regulated environment. What the regulated part is, what the EUB comments on, is, one, the depreciation, which is included in the asset; two, the operating and maintenance costs; and, three, the customer service cost and/or the change to the rate base. It will not allow goodwill to be added to the rate base in terms of the purchase and in fact only comments on the return on investment of that asset. So the asset can change hands at many different prices, but the return is what is really measured by the EUB. On that point, we believe that Albertans are very well protected and that whatever does happen, as has happened in exchanges in the past, there will not be blackouts, there will not be missed deliveries, and there will not be power outages in Alberta.

If I can comment on the communications budget, I'm going to get some more detail on that.

Royalty review. There's an entire department, as the business plan points out, that gas review group that looks diligently at gas royalties at all times. There is also a group that looks at conventional oil royalties and one that looks at oil sands royalties, and of course we look at emerging and different changes. One example would be carbon dioxide. We have a program where for enhanced oil recovery we will provide some royalty relief, not a substantial amount and not for a great length of time but enough royalty relief, we believe, to stimulate examination of the use of CO₂ as a driver for enhanced oil recovery. In comparison, maybe this can replace potable water, which, although the oil and gas industry use such a minor, insignificant amount compared to the agriculture industry, is still something where we want to be conservation oriented. So, you know, we're conducting investigations into those royalty sides at all times.

We've ensured that we extract maximum economic rent for the resource, but we also are fettered by the fact that we want to continue to remain competitive in global markets. That means that when Russia has a finding/lifting cost of $2 a barrel or a BOE, barrel or equivalent, that makes our $8 to $10 Canadian cost a little less competitive.

Now, can we trade off the risk of political certainty, stable government, honest land tenure, property title? Are those sufficient risks to extract the rent? So it's a continual balancing act that we attempt to perform, and it's not one that we'd go long without having a discussion on. It's an important part. You are, we are through this Assembly custodians of this resource for all Albertans, and it's a responsibility that I think we should all take very, very seriously. So I appreciate that question and will ensure that we do turn attention to it, and if there's anything in the business plan that the member thinks we could shore up, beef up, or support, we'd certainly welcome that suggestion.

I want to turn to coal bed methane just for a brief minute. Much is said about little that is done. There have probably been in this latest go-round of coal bed methane 400 to 600 wells drilled, I would say, at this time. This is not new. I'm sure you remember prior to being in this business that Canadian Hunter was down in the Fernie-Coleman area exploring for coal bed methane. It was found, and they found it was difficult to extract under the technology of the day. In Alberta comparisons, where we get anywhere from 7 million to 20 million a day in per thousand cubic feet of production, a hundred thousand cubic feet a day is not considered a substantial flow. So just as coal bed methane started actually in the Warrior basin in the Appalachians in Alabama and then moved to the Powder River basin, where the development was just a shabby mess – and the oil patch should be ashamed of that – it has made substantial gains from that.

One of the things that has been noticed and reported to me informally is that the tectonics of our coal geology is different than that of the Powder River basin. In other words, the cleats are such that the gas that is encased is dry gas and does not have the water secretion and the water flows that have been reported in other areas. So we're continuing to watch, and there is a consultation document out. It's a public document, and people are reporting in on that. We expect changes in the course of time on that.

Mr. Chairman, the member's comments about cost overruns and uncertainty and delays to the oil sands are well taken and ones that give rise to great concern. Particularly on the downstream side, when one looks at a delay in the Petro-Canada refinery conversion, this is the very backbone of what's driven refinery development in the province of Alberta this last 40 years. I was particularly disappointed to see that one put on delay for what I hope will be a short period of time.

Now, what are we doing about it? One, I think what we have done about Kyoto has been an important piece. Kyoto is an ill-thought-out, poor set of public policy that really has not helped anybody. It hasn't cleared up a molecule of smog in Toronto, and it's already, as CNRL has stated, contributed to something that the Prime Minister said would never happen, and that would be a delay in oil sands development. So that has pancaked on top of labour costs that have been increasing at a formidable rate, an inflation rate in Alberta that actually was surprising to Albertans, and everybody wanting to get in there me first.

I'll continue this as we go on to the next step.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise. I have a number of questions that I'd like to put to the minister in regard to his plans. Of course, he may not have all the answers right now, so he could get back to me if not.

Essentially, of course, as a former alderman serving on the city of Calgary's gas and power committee, one of three aldermen sitting there for five years, I was very involved in the creation and formation of Enmax over the years and have obviously had a pretty good chance to learn a lot about the industry and what it was like before deregulation and have been watching with a keen eye during deregulation and afterwards. I have a number of questions about what's been happening there.

For example, I remember that before deregulation we had what I thought was quite an unfair situation, at least in Calgary, a situation in which it seemed apparent that small- and medium-sized businesses were being forced to effectively subsidize large corporate competitors when it came to electricity prices. Apparently, big-volume electricity customers were being sold electricity at well below cost, reportedly about 85 cents on the dollar of cost, and in fact most residents in Calgary were effectively getting a free ride, getting their electricity for about a dollar for each dollar cost of electricity, so they were also being subsidized by small- and medium-sized businesses, but the small- and medium-sized businesses in Calgary were paying about $1.55 per dollar cost of electricity, thereby subsidizing everyone else. I'm just wondering, you know, if the minister could talk about whether this situation has changed much since deregulation. Has it improved any or remained the same?

I realize that everyone now is still trying to get those large customers so that they can keep their volume purchases up, and that was the reason given back then. I'm wondering if large corporations have come closer to paying the true costs of their electrical use and whether consumers are now starting to pay the true costs of their electrical use as opposed to being subsidized so heavily in the past by the small businesses. Obviously, I'd like to see the hard-hit small businesses get a bit of a break over the previous situation. So if the minister could maybe talk to that for a few minutes.

The second issue that I'm wondering about. Yes, we have had, certainly, some higher costs of electricity in the last few years. I'm wondering if the department has done any studies or looked at the issue of whether or not these higher prices may have an inadvertent benefit, in fact, in the area of electricity conservation in helping to create an environment where Albertans have maybe installed or upgraded technology in their houses, buildings, apartments, offices, et cetera, and thereby are not wasting electricity needlessly as much as they have been doing in the past, whether or not there's been a study that's looked at this area and maybe how much it's saved the Alberta economy overall.

The reality is that electricity costs have been volatile. They've been up and down, but perhaps if we studied and captured some of the savings to the environment in the future – for example, savings to society from less individual electricity use, per capita use, reductions in the rate of consumption of nonrenewable resources – what does that add up to in terms of benefits to Alberta? Of course, we've obviously seen economic development in the electrical conservation industry, job creation there, new technology, all of which may create future cash flows, future savings to Albertans in the long run if those cost avoidances and benefits were calculated in the overall equation.

So I guess the second question is: has the department done any studies of the impacts of deregulation in encouraging energy conservation? Is it a case of some short-term pain here for some big long-term gain perhaps, a little bit of higher prices now, but ultimately not only better prices, lower prices, but a better environment and a number of other benefits for society as well.

My third kind of question or area. I'm wondering if the minister could talk about what the situation in Alberta was before deregulation occurred. I was well aware that Alberta, in fact, had some of the lowest electrical prices on the entire planet. We were very blessed, I guess, in one sense to say that we had these incredibly low prices, which, in fact, appeared to be quite artificially low. As I recall, they were somewhere in the range of 3 and half cents, 3.8 cents, at a time when California was hitting 9 cents, and that was American to boot. So really we were about a quarter of the price of California at the time, but there seemed to be some other reasons for that. There were questions about depreciation schedules that were being allowed which were different than what depreciation schedules elsewhere were and so on.

So were our prices, in fact, artificially low and that created a problem of trying to attract new generation? Clearly, Alberta was growing very fast, but with prices that low, why would anybody come in and build generation? It just wouldn't make sense, obviously. You know, it appeared that with those low prices, if you were a large corporation in the electricity business in Alberta before deregulation, clearly you had a pretty good situation. You had a growing province, increasing demand, but no competitors on the horizon, an increasingly tight market for your product.

Clearly, on the other side, the consumers in Alberta were faced with some pretty stark choices in the early '90s before deregulation, likely to be faced with exorbitantly higher prices because we had an oligopolistic industry with little incentive to build new generation and no new competitors on the horizon at the same time as skyrocketing demands. All of that was the result of regulation, and that was all in the environment before deregulation. So I'm kind of wondering if it was the case, in the minister's view, that Albertans, in fact, were going to be faced with substantially higher prices in any scenario going forward and that deregulation, in fact, helped to bring the supply so that we didn't have brownouts and potential blackouts from a choked supply from no new generation coming onboard if we had stayed with regulation. We keep hearing how deregulation we hope would lead to lower prices, but from my analysis, under any scenario going forward, we were going to have much higher prices.

Under deregulation it would appear to me that at least there was some light at the end of the tunnel in terms of greatly increased supply and in the long run a more stable supply, but I don't think, in my view, that we could ever look at lower prices under any scenario.

So I'm wondering if what I'm hearing people saying is that maybe we should have been telling Albertans that the prices were going to go up under any scenario, but under deregulation at least we wouldn't have the brownouts. We would have adequate supply, if not surplus supply, from what we would be experiencing under regulation.

So those are my questions, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you. I'm encouraged by the Member for Calgary-Currie and his understanding of the marketplace and the need for deregulation and, in fact, wish he had got elected maybe a little earlier and had been here to help us through 2000-2001, because it's exactly what the issues were, as he described in the final parts of his remarks.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to return to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, finish with him, and then go to the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and then turn to the Member for Calgary-Currie's comments.

We will respond in writing to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview's detailed questions on oil sands royalties. I think that's important. I also think it's important that he also sees in writing how a cogen set, or a cogeneration natural gas fired electricity generator, is handled in that piece as well. I think that would be good information. We'll put that on paper for you.

The oil sands royalty is an R minus C equation. Somewhere in the business plans is a five-year record of investment in oil sands, and I think that that really shows the importance of the generic oil royalty. I am going to look for it so I can cite it.

Dr. Taft: Page 125.

Mr. Smith: Thank you. On 125, Mr. Chairman, we see the upstream industry investment including oil sands, and I'd just like to point out: 1996, $9.6 billion; '97, $13.5 billion; '98, $11.8 billion; '99, $10.9 billion – and that was the time of the generic royalty initiation – in 2000, $17.07 billion; 2001, $20.6 billion. So it's certainly had an upward pressure on all investment. Mr. Chairman, I may just point out, too, having been in another portfolio at the time, that from 1993 through '96 investment increased from 5.92 to 9.66, and it was the successful elimination of the machinery and equipment tax that assisted in putting upward pressure on that investment.

The R minus C curve continues to bear important examination, though, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has pointed out, and that examination is one that seems to be partly give and take from the industry players. They will ask about what can be included in the C, and we always have to investigate what should be included in the R. So it's a dynamic royalty regime. It's one that has detailed discussion with the players, and it's one which we're satisfied will lead to profit.

One particularly important piece is that you do not get an ever-green deficit. You must draw a fence around your project, determine your project, deliver that project detail to the department, and when the revenues associated with that project are paid out, whether it's a part of Suncor Millennium or some part of Voyageur, that part then gets 25 percent on net revenue royalty charge after payout. So we have drawn fences around each particular project, and we will respond in further detail.

Always a topic of interest, of course, is the communications budget. Everybody says: communicate, communicate, communicate, but please don't spend any money. Because we are spending money, it's spin; it's propaganda; it's whatever. But, of course, it's not when it comes to the Ministry of Energy. It's clear, unfettered, direct truth, and knowing the support that I would get from members opposite in the clarity, the ampleness of the information, the breadth of the web site, the attention to detail, certainly anything we can do to assist them, we intend to do.

Having said that – and inquiring minds need to know, Mr. Chairman – the budget is up on that, and it's a result of accumulating throughout the department a public information centre. Where we had electricity inquiries, we had royalty inquiries, we consolidated all of those into a clear, transparent, accounting unit called the public information centre. That was an identified cost of $404,000 put forward in the plan. It includes salaries and related expenses, very marginal media buys at this stage. Of course, it does reflect some of the increased expense due to the increased activity.

Now, the unit provides communication services on behalf of the department. The budget supports 12 full-time equivalents and the operating cost for the office. In addition, the Public Affairs Bureau provides three FTEs for a total of 15. So I hope that covers the first pass of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview's questions. I thank him for those.

Now I want to turn briefly to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. His questions were on budget forecast versus prices. I can tell you that when I first got into this business in March of 2001, I had an old friend who published the natural gas newsletter, and his name was Brent Friedenberg. So I phoned Brent, and I said: "No doubt I'll be asked to predict the price of gas. What would you offer as good advice for me to repeat?" to which he said: Minister, natural gas prices will fluctuate. And, indeed, he has been right; they have fluctuated.

In fact, I think that if you look at the $15 a gigajoule that you saw in 2001, the low of $1.84 a gigajoule that you saw in 2002, the spiking and movements in the last calendar quarter of '02, the first of '03, this is now a commodity that has volatility because of the reduced liquidity in the continental marketplace as well as reduced drilling activity in 2002, which is now being compensated for but also with records of low storage at this stage. Based on these, as well as on extensive forecasts from other sources, a group of skilled individuals inside the Department of Energy make their best forecast. Of course, with the sustainability fund the fact of the accuracy of estimate or the opposition's continual preference that we overestimate and then spend to that is not going to happen, nor will it be as appropriate. So the new regime attempts to remove some of this uncertainty associated with fluctuating commodity prices.

Now, of course, conventional oil is another interesting bird at this time. Much of what's been discussed about the conflict in Iraq centred around oil production. In fact, Iraq only added about 2 percent to the world's oil supply. As a member of OPEC and under the oil-for-food program it produced about 2 and a half million barrels a day. They have the potential to move to 5 million and then maybe upwards of 6s and 7s. But their infrastructure is so obsolete. There's really nothing been done to that infrastructure in 20 years. Iraq would not be able to ramp up its oil production until well into '06-07. Interestingly enough, there has been much discussion, suggestions in newspapers that the Alberta land tenure model, perhaps administered by the World Bank, would be one that would be fair, open and allow Iraq to reconstruct itself given this regime.

The forecast of oil. Of course, after the conflict Saudi Arabia, under an OPEC agreement, is now pumping 8 million barrels a day. Generally, they've averaged around 4 million to 4 and a half million. So that has put downward pressure on price. But throughout the last year with the conflict, of course, there's been a major strike in Venezuela, and they ship into the United States about a million barrels a day, and most of that is heavy crude. So you'll notice that for the first time in the history of Alberta the spread between heavy and light has never been so narrow as what it's been in the last eight to 10 months, and that's because of the Venezuelan side.

Now, at the same time that this is happening, Nigeria is subject to some strikes. You saw in the paper that there was some hostage-taking on the offshore platform. Their production has dropped dramatically. So all this is combining in an effect where we're starting to see wide fluctuations in that commodity as well.

All of this helps governments and private investors stimulate the desire for energy conservation, one, and alternate fuel technologies as a secondary approach, which we've also seen. In fact, those who listened intently to the Innovation and Science estimates will realize that Alberta has a very good hydrogen strategy under way with the Alberta Energy Research Institute.

Also from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands came some discussion on what's going to happen in coal-fired generation. Of course, he knows full well that EPCOR is coming on, hopefully in 2005, with a supercritical coal-fired technology which meets exacting NO_x, SO_x standards for Alberta. That will add some 500 megawatts plus to the grid and will be able to be delivered with an appropriate transmission policy.

Secondly, there's a second phase that is a joint effort by the EPCOR/TransAlta plant for that area as well, as well as as much as an additional 1,500 to 2,000 megawatts of natural gas cogeneration from the oil sands, which would be very competitive to the price of coal-fired electricity simply because that steam must be generated to heat the bitumen up in that area.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands also asked for more detail on the proposed transmission policy. I think I've explained by dictating to Hansard the EUB press release what was wrong with the EUB approach. It wasn't the EUB approach. It was their interpretation of the decisions made by the former transmission administrator and from the congestion management side that was changed. So that part has been dealt with, and we're moving on that side as well. I think that covers most of what the Member for Edmonton-Highlands said.

Now, let's turn to the Member for Calgary-Currie, that I thought had some excellent comments. I think that from his close scrutiny of city hall the former alderman and now Member for Calgary-Currie would be able to see price changes as a result of load and demand factor and how it can be priced and then how it's priced without being subject to public scrutiny or to the light of day. Now, as the distribution tariff and the regulated rate option from Enmax and from EPCOR for the cities of Calgary and Edmonton will be coming forward to the EUB, that will be able to be determined in a clear, transparent environment, and of course ratepayers and subsequently voters could make their own comments with respect to how much the rate reflects the true cost.

In a second question, about electricity conservation, there's absolutely no question that price delivers a conservation signal. In the first six months that deregulation was in play in Alberta, when the price was varying between 11 and 16 cents, there was actually a 6 to 7 percent conservation effort noted by some of the players in the industry. Secondly, it was also noted in the use of natural gas. ATCO has come up with a set of data that indicates that Albertans are using 10 percent less gas to heat their homes on an annual basis. So we are seeing conservation efforts. I think that certainly the government of Alberta has gone forward in its conservation efforts. I don't know if it can change 670 light bulbs in the Assembly to the new twisted model, but I'm sure that it's one component of the policy. Certainly, the decision made to contract green power is another leading environmentally friendly decision. Of course, throughout all of this, this has also helped to increase jobs in secondary industries as well as help create a new industry.

I think that what the member said with respect to "why deregulation in the first place" is completely accurate, and although I wasn't the minister at the time, it was very clear that during the period of the dot-com growth and 15 to 20 percent returns and you were getting 3 to 4 percent return and 5 to 9 percent return on utility, you couldn't entice anybody to build new generation. It was not economically viable. Secondly, the regulators had declared that there was a large generation surplus, a power surplus in Alberta, so because of that they were not sending out any signals. But we did not know the power of a balanced budget. We didn't know the power of reduced deficits. We didn't know the power of good government, and when '93 occurred and Premier Ralph, Member for Calgary-Elbow, came along, things started to change. The economy started to recover, investments started to recur, taxes were reduced, and the economy took off.

Along with the economy came a growth and a new demand for electricity that sucked up the generation, which then put us in a short supply situation, and there's no such thing as just-in-time electricity or just-in-time natural gas. So with that came a cost squeeze that is reflected in higher prices. From there we move forward to bringing on some 3,000 megawatts of investor-owned generation without adding any debt to the rate base or adding any additional burden on the consumer.

Now, it is true that at the same time there's the uncertainty of Kyoto, the California gas crisis and electricity crisis, as well as the Enron situation. I think all those effects cumulated or pancake-stacked themselves into an impact of higher prices in Alberta in 2000. After 2000, 2001, and now as we move into 2003, deferral accounts for the Aquila/EPCOR network will be struck off the books. Deferral accounts I believe in Edmonton will be terminated, and it will be the last year of a small deferral account at Enmax in Calgary. So we will certainly see downward pressure on electricity prices.

I think that we had to deregulate in order to get more power in here to avoid blackouts. It was simply that simple. Now, 700 days from there, we've gone forward and put three policy legs in place, and we think that we can move forward into an appropriate developed market with good, realistic, real-time pricing of electricity in this province.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman, and I promise to be very quick.

Mr. Minister, I received an e-mail already from a gentleman in my constituency regarding the announcement yesterday on the transmission lines. His concern is that it will in fact lead to unnecessary transmission lines being built because they would be at a subsidized rate.

Now, I would be the first to admit to you that I am not knowledgeable enough on this. I've tried over the years to learn as much about electricity as I possibly can, but the transmission line system I'm a little bit more confused on. I'd really appreciate it if you could give me some indication as to what you actually see happening with the way that you've structured this now.

In light of the EUB coming up with a different conclusion, do you anticipate that there would in fact be unnecessary transmission lines being built because of this? Conversely, do you anticipate that there might be plants being built in places where they would be actually uneconomical because the transmission line access would be made more available because of consumers paying these additional costs?

The other question, going back to my own area, where Aquila/EPCOR is. I know that the rate rider is going to come off in December, and I am very thankful that that rate rider will in fact come off. We look at what happened in California and at the decisions that came down in California in the last maybe six months indicating that there was some collusion amongst the big generators to take plants off for maintenance at the same time, thereby pushing the price of power up a bit more. It impacted British Columbia. It impacted us because of our tie-back with British Columbia when we were short of power ourselves. Are you satisfied, Mr. Minister, that in fact there wasn't anything like that going on here then or now? Is there any way that you can assuage concerns that might be raised by constituents that we still don't have an ability to manage when they do their maintenance so that they are not going down in winter when gas prices might be higher? Then the two competing personas in this would allow prices to be a little bit higher than perhaps they need to be.

The last thing that I guess I wanted to ask is with regard to the original reasons for deregulation. I've always been under the impression that the big reason for deregulating was that there wasn't enough supply in this province, that in fact because of the huge growth over the last decade we would have been 20 to 30 percent short on our power. With an aging infrastructure and plants going offline, without cogeneration we would simply have not been able to handle the types of businesses that are evolving here or just the type of demand that consumers are using, perhaps not even realizing that their own consumption has gone up. Have you done or has your department done any studies on (a) the increase in personal consumption, (b) the increase in overall consumption in the province of Alberta, and (c) what would have happened had we not deregulated to allow cogeneration to come onstream?

Thank you, Minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would say to the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View that she's far too humble in her self-description that she's not knowledgeable on the issues of electricity and would in fact deem by the framing and the asking of the questions that that is indeed not the case.

With respect to the e-mail inquiry from a constituent, that's exactly what the transmission policy is designed to do. It is designed to deliver through the Alberta electrical system operator an appropriately devised transmission system that maximizes generation and minimizes transmission cost. In fact, if we had gone the other way, I think that we would have left ourselves far more open for more lines than what we see under this change.

Again, I must emphasize that it was not a reversal of the EUB policy but a change in the policy of the transmission administrator to the electric system operator that determined the need for a change in government policy. As I said earlier, they've wanted to put different prices of electricity in different markets in Alberta, and Alberta is just too small to have those market segmentations. So this will help deliver the maximum amount of low-cost generation to the marketplace.

The comments with respect to the California crisis and what we've seen come out of there have been quite interesting. It's been the subject of much investigation. I guess that if I were to put it in the vernacular, the Californians were most mad at the producers out of the San Juan basin, the ones who sent gas from the Texas area into California. These were the areas that they focused their examination on. Yes, there was some Enron hanky-panky. There was some Enron lawbreaking going on. So as we went through this in Alberta and watched the impact, we did a couple of things. First of all, we wrote a deficiency correction regulation that said that the import price of power in the year 2000-2001 could not be a determinant factor in the Power Pool price in Alberta. So we firewalled the California experience. That was an important piece.

The second piece we did was we had the market surveillance administrator work diligently and investigate gaming and investigate market manipulation to see if we were subject in Alberta to any of the antics that the private sector had played in California, and that answer to date has been no. In fact, there was some evidence of some gaming, and the market surveillance administrator indicated that it made no difference. They tried it, and it didn't work. So that actually said that the market was stronger. The market surveillance administrator under Bill 3 will go under the supervision of the EUB and will be in fact strengthened.

We believe that with the transmission policy and the fact that we can bring in these generators under this one backbone of transmission, it will actually help the shutdown and turnaround programs resident in the other generators. We're going to be able to organize and rationalize that, I think, a little better with this transmission policy. We watch that. We watch that very carefully because one thing I worry about is spontaneous, unplanned shutdown and turnaround all taking place at the same time. In fact, for them to solicit staff and the people that come in and do the boiler tube cleaning and the turnaround maintenance of the generators, it would make sense that companies would want to plan this. So they have to plan it, but they can't plan it and be in collusion with other generators. So we have to sometimes see market conditions take place on that.

You're absolutely right: without deregulation we'd have blacked out. I think there's no doubt in my mind. They blacked out in California when they froze it. They're blacking out in Ontario. There are two irrefutable examples that once you've moved to a competitive market model, you've burned the boats; you can't go back. In fact, what you see in the Harrisburg model, what you see in the Swedish model where the large power pools exist is that they are getting competitive price electricity.

I must point out that in Sweden and in Europe they're paying 18 cents to 22 cents Canadian per kilowatt. Ireland pays about 15 cents. New York pays anywhere from 9 to 15 cents commercial, U.S. So in real time, real dollars we're getting good pricing. We're getting fair pricing in Alberta. We think what we're doing is going to add more downward pressure on pricing.

If you look at it, everyone says: well, yeah, but what about B.C. and what about Saskatchewan? Well, what about their $7 billion of debt? What about Manitoba's $7 billion of debt? They generate 5,000 megawatts; they use 2,300; they ship 2,700. Something's wrong there. How long can that go on? I don't know. How long can Liberal and ND governments hide from the eyes of an auditor? Just as Premier Charest walked into Quebec and found a $4 billion hole in his budget, I think you'd find the same thing if you examined the books of these administrations who use Crown corporations for dividends that come into government revenues.

One of the things is that in Alberta we have inexorably severed the government relationship with the electrical system, and we have the monitoring and the maintenance through the EUB and the market surveillance administrator to give security and assurances to Albertans that they're not being jobbed or gamed or subject to some of the outrageous preamble that we hear in question period every day from members opposite.

I think that covers those questions, and I would look forward to entertaining others from members.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a privilege to get up and to participate in estimates this afternoon. I have a number of questions in regard to natural gas rebates. Certainly this winter the flaws that were in the Natural Gas Price Protection Act were exposed, and when the price of natural gas spiked this winter, energy rebates were not provided to Albertans even though they felt that this government had promised to protect Albertans from spikes in the price of natural gas.

The price spikes that we did have not only in natural gas but the increased costs of electricity certainly have impacted many, many businesses, many communities. I think of a twin arena that I'm associated with. Over the year from January 2002 to January 2003, compared to the year previous, we had an increase of $65,000 in utility bills alone. Of course, we are the fortunate ones because we can certainly pass these costs on to the users of those facilities.

I'm looking at municipalities. Fifty percent of the energy they use goes towards water treatment. Another 20 percent goes to their buildings or rec facilities, whatever, and another 15 to street lights. Then certainly the only place that those costs are passed on to is the taxpayer. So these have made huge, huge impacts on communities, on groups.

I noticed yesterday – and it was unfortunate – that the people of Leduc chose not to build or expand on their recreation facilities in that particular town. Certainly, I think that part of the reason was what they'd experienced with the Leduc curling club. This was a club that the town, to my understanding, had mortgaged, and it got to the point last fall where they had a $100,000 bill for energy. They also had $100,000 mortgage payments that they had to meet. So their choice at that time was either to pay the mortgage or pay the utility or give it back to the city, because the city were the people that had the mortgage on this facility. It was a huge problem, and it's certainly not unique to Leduc. So given that the Minister of Energy has committed to undertake a review of the regulations surrounding the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, have any funds been allocated to make these changes?

As well, if the minister could please tell us: has any money been allocated in the budget to protect Albertans from future spikes in the price of natural gas? You know, these are questions that certainly Albertans that are on fixed incomes and Albertans who are in the lower income bracket have. These are huge when it comes to paying the mortgage or paying the utility bills. It's having a huge, huge impact even on small business in the province. They're having a great amount of difficulty in setting their costs when the price of energy fluctuates the way it does.

There has been quite a bit of volatility. One of the comments made to me yesterday was by a person who was quite seriously looking at the federal building to examine the viability of it becoming residences. Certainly, the location would be ideal, but this was one of the drawbacks that he was facing. He does own a number of properties, and at one time he owned the LeMarchand Mansion, not far from here. He would be most interested in doing this type of work with that particular building, but it's out of the question, I think. He is certainly going to explore it. Without being able to forecast what his energy costs are, this would certainly be a big part of why he would be cautious in proceeding.

As well, when we look at the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, will the government make the results of its review of the regulations around the Natural Gas Price Protection Act public? As well, I know that Albertans certainly expected the Natural Gas Price Protection Act to work like a thermostat. They certainly expected their rebates when prices spiked. When can they expect this type of help?

In looking at consumer protection, consumers are hardly mentioned in the Department of Energy's budget documents this year, yet energy consumers are the people that elect the minister and who must pay higher utility bills in this province. Furthermore, the government and the Ministry of Energy have a responsibility to be accountable to consumers. The number one question on Albertans' minds is: when am I going to see lower bills? Like this person I was talking to yesterday, they would certainly like to know when they can look for some stability with their energy bills. As well, why is it the policy of this government to put big business ahead of consumers?

When I look at core business 4 on page 129, the target for electricity restructuring is that "Alberta will remain a leader in implementing a competitive marketplace for electricity." It certainly isn't a competitive marketplace right now, and we as consumers are looking at a huge difference in the bills from what we were paying just a few years ago. Certainly, consumers are very, very concerned. As well, they ask: is there any money allocated to a consumer education program that will educate consumers about buying electricity from a retailer, and if not, why not?

Continuing along, I have some financial questions. The total operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases to be voted on next year is $115.256 million. This is up about $10 million from the ministry's actual spending of $105.823 million last year. The Ministry of Energy operates three programs, including ministry support services, resource development and management, and energy and utilities regulation. The amount of money spent in each department can be broken down as follows: ministry support services at $2.355 million, resource development and management at $73.844 million, and energy and utilities regulation at $37.742 million.

On page 113 of Energy's estimates for 2003-2004 it indicates that the department's communications budget is going to increase by $404 million, or 108 percent, quite a huge increase. Just a few questions in regard to this. Is the ministry increasing its communications budget in order to sell deregulation to Albertans? They certainly don't feel at this particular point in time that it is working. Does the minister expect this communications budget to increase in future years, and if so, what are the projections if he has any at this time? Does the increase in the communications budget mean that Albertans will finally get answers to the questions about energy deregulation from this minister?

Now, as well, switching back to page 129 of the business plan, it states that the ministry has set the target that "Alberta will remain a leader in implementing a competitive marketplace for electricity." That, again, was found under core business 4. One of the questions I would have for the minister is: when all other jurisdictions are declaring deregulation to be a failure and working hard to put a stop to it, why does Alberta want to continue with this botched plan? It's a fair question, because we've seen certainly a change in the policy in California. We've seen changes in the policy in Montana. I don't know why and Albertans don't know why we are forging ahead with this plan when it certainly doesn't appear to be working in other jurisdictions. If the minister knows something that they have done wrong that made their short voyages into these waters unsuccessful, I would hope that he would share it with all members in the Assembly here and with Albertans, because at this point people do not have any confidence that deregulation will lead to lower prices in the future. As well, referring to the same bullet, electricity restructuring, on page 129, why isn't there a performance measure in place to measure consumer satisfaction with the implementation of deregulation?

Now, on page 130 of the business plan for 2003-2006 under the heading Stakeholder Consultation it states that the department plans to "continue to provide clear communication and consultation with industry on business rules and processes." Does this mean that the department does not plan to provide clear and open communication with consumers? Again, this certainly is a difficulty that all consumers in this province have. When they get their bill, they shake their head. They cannot figure it out. There's a huge problem here. It's one department that I'm glad my wife handles in our house.

Mr. Smith: I can see that.

Mr. Bonner: Yes, and I'll bet yours does too.

Another question in regards to the business plan, again with the same bullet on page 130: given that consumers are not mentioned under the title Stakeholder Consultation, does this mean that consumers are not considered stakeholders?

Again, moving along to page 132 of the Energy business plan for 2003-2006, it indicates that the EUB is going to "conduct an internal review on a sample of decisions for communication quality." What standards is the department planning on using in order to measure communication quality? What action will the department take if the communication quality is not found to be up to par?

On page 133 of the business plan it states that the EUB is going to "develop mechanisms for effective monitoring of the financial and service performance of regulated utilities." It goes on to state a number of ways that the EUB is planning on achieving this core strategy. If the minister could indicate what the standards are that regulated utilities currently have to follow, given that the business plan indicates that those standards are going to have to be reformed. Has the government consulted energy consumers as to what those standards should be? As well, if the minister could indicate what kinds of enforcement measures are being explored. Mostly fines? Or is the department planning to place a limit on the number of fines that a single utility can be assessed?

I have just a few more questions here for the minister. If we move forward to page 135 of the business plan and look at core business 2, information and knowledge, under goal 2.1 it states, "Ensure accurate, comprehensive and current information is readily available to stakeholders." If the minister could please tell us: who does the EUB consider to be its stakeholders? What is the primary method that the EUB uses to inform Albertans? If the minister could also indicate what other methods the government is considering using, keeping in mind that many Albertans do not have access to the Internet.

Perhaps with those questions, I will cede the floor to the minister and listen to any responses he might have. If there are some questions that he cannot answer at this time, I would appreciate those answers in writing at a later date, and I look forward to his comments at this time.

Thank you.

5:00

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Earlier this year the hon. Minister of Energy raised the level of intense scrutiny of other departments within the government, and I know that the minister would never ask another department or minister to do anything that he was not prepared to do himself. So at this time would the minister commit to us and his department that he would remove the cloak of complacency, the mantle of mediocrity, the pants of pulchritude, and indeed the socks of sobriety?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Aah, Mr. Chairman, as I am the recipient of an auditory avalanche from the member and basically, you know, batons of blustering, I am certainly ready to respond with – oh, I don't know – I would say a cacophony of cries of excellence. I want to thank that member for his instant and appropriate recall from Hansard. I don't know who would have uttered the original comments. They are interesting.

Let me, Mr. Chairman, turn to some of the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. He was doing so well up until the time he asked about putting big business ahead of consumers, which he knows is not true. Also, I had just covered his question about communication budget increases in the comments prior, so I won't repeat those but direct the member to Hansard.

His comments with respect to utility bills and facilities that are so important for the youth of Alberta are important ones and ones that have been taken into account by this government. Also, Mr. Chairman, throughout this process we have always focused on lending and delivering funds to those seniors who may have been hit by variable utility rates. To those folks on low income or fixed incomes who get a sudden price impact, we have always been able to have appropriate funds available to ensure that no one freezes, no one's left out in the cold, and that is an important piece.

In fact, the member, I know, will be wondering what the sound is coming from when he's shaking his head, but in fact when he looks forward to signing that first long-term contract with his new energy provider, he will say, "Will this take the volatility of price out of my bill so that I can budget each month what I'm going to pay?" and that provider is going to say, "Yes, thanks to the government's program." "Thanks to Bill 19, Bill 3 I will be able to have a fixed contract price from a reputable provider, and I will be able to make decisions, my own decisions," because for the most part I have confidence in the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry and how he conducts himself and how he looks after his own affairs, so given the right set of facts on electricity, on natural gas, he's going to make the decision that's in his best economic interest.

He's also going to make a decision that's going to stop his wife of some years from shaking her head at him, and I know that she will probably respond with something – and I may be paraphrasing – that will sound like: "You know, that is good deregulation legislation. That Bill 3 is a winner. Bill 19 really helped us find a provider, nail down our prices, and, Bill, it allows me that extra few dollars for shopping that I find you sometimes consume in the winter months when you come home from a hard day at the Legislature and you have a hearty appetite at supper." Of course, she's very aware that because of this, they're not going to wash the dishes right away. I bet you that in that household in Edmonton-Glengarry the dishes aren't washed until after 8 o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and the reason why is because they want to give back to Albertans and they know that the higher the peak load, the higher the price. So that gentleman is delaying that dishwasher to past 10 o'clock. I know he keeps the thermostat down at night. I know he likes to sleep with fresh air coming in, so that's important. He probably has a preprogrammed thermostat. He's taken the right steps for conservation, and I applaud him for that.

I also know that in his questions he's wondered why there's no provision for rebates. In fact, that's the essence of the Natural Gas Price Protection Act. The average price was struck so that when it was exceeded, 60 days would transpire and then the royalties would be collected and deposited into the coffers of the government of Alberta for all Albertans. It was from that money that then rebates would be paid, so the member is entirely correct, and we accept his compliments on a well-structured and a well-planned program. Humbly we accept those comments, Mr. Chairman.

So that's why there is no provision, and now the landscape has changed a little bit. The sustainability fund has put a certain amount of money in, let's call it, escrow, and in fact if the government deemed that money should be available right away or at a point in time, it is not dependent on the cash flow of natural gas royalty income. So that review is waiting, and I will commit to the member that I will make public to him, to others, to this House the findings that I deem are appropriate and relevant to the natural gas price protection review and, of course, have never, ever been reluctant to put information into the public domain. He knows that. I congratulate him for those concerns with respect to that.

Then he moved on, Mr. Chairman, to talk about a consumer education program. I think what he's saying is: in the household in Edmonton-Glengarry where there's some subsequent head-shaking going on, how do we stop that in that particular household? Now, the department has planned and has made provision for a public education program that explains the market policy of the government of Alberta with respect to the competitive market model, and that is twofold: the purchasing of electricity on a long-term contract or a fixed-term contract or buying an open mortgage and playing the spot market or buying gas on a fixed rate or a long-term rate or playing the flow-through market. It depends. It depends on what your needs are. For example, if I were a senior who has retired and is going to Phoenix for five months of the year, I would turn my hot water tank down, winterize my home in Alberta, move for the four or five months to Phoenix, and I would pay the spot rate of gas because your reduced consumption with a higher price would still come out better on a 12-month period.

But you need some tools to help you make good economic decisions, and that'll be a fundamental part of the customer education program, Mr. Chairman. We will provide on a computer base – we'll also provide hard copy – something such as the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has pointed out. He calls it a dare-to-compare chart, where you put up the questions, the offers that come from the providers, check them off, and then because all that information is right there in front of you, you can make a clear, comparative decision based on a good planning document. So again we've seen and we've heard from a number of members good suggestions on this consumer education program.

We've also seen, Mr. Chairman, some cases where, in fact, you might want to buy your electricity and your gas together from the same provider, and that might provide an additional discount. There is some talk that you would be able to buy your electricity, your natural gas together as well as heating, ventilating, air-conditioning services, cleaning your air conditioner, cleaning out the furnace, making sure it's working. Maybe you want to buy snow shoveling services, home insurance, towing services. So you'll be able to buy a range of services on a vertical basis, or you'll be able to buy them on a horizontal basis. Those are the kinds of things that Albertans have asked for. Big choice. Big flexibility. Reasonable costs. We've done all this under the tablet of transparency, in what we think is an open, decisive fashion, and one that's open to discussion. In some cases, some controversy. But, all in all, a good program that delivers ample supplies of natural gas and electricity to the marketplace in Alberta and where we act as efficient custodians for Albertans on behalf of Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Energy, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the following question.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$115,256,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that we rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, for the following department.

Energy: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases,	$115,256,000.
--	----------------

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and that when we reconvene this evening at 8 o'clock we do so in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:15 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 6, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/05/06

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. As is the rule normally with committees, we'll only have one person standing and talking at a time.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

Community Development

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions to be offered with respect to this? The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Prior to beginning my remarks this evening, I would like to table with the Assembly the appropriate number of copies of the translation for that portion of my speech during which I'll be discussing the Francophone Secretariat. I realize that may be a bit unusual, but with your permission I wanted to assist Hansard and other members here with my brief comments in that regard. Thank you very much.

I'd like to begin by tabling these copies and by introducing some very special guests that I have the privilege to work with. In our gallery: Dr. Bill Byrne – please rise; he's our deputy minister – Mr. Rai Batra, our assistant deputy minister in strategic corporate services; and in that same area, Darlene Andruchuk. Thank you very much and, as well, thank you to my staff who are listening elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, I'm really, truly honoured and pleased and privileged to have the opportunity to present the three-year business plan and the budget estimates for 2003-2004 for the Ministry of Community Development. I'll begin straightaway by turning my attention to the budget for '03-04, which shows $647 million in total expenditures and reflects an increase of approximately 11 percent, or $65 million, from last year's forecast.

Funding to the persons with developmental disabilities boards, or PDD as we commonly refer to them, will increase by $37 million, or 9 percent, for a total PDD budget of $443 million in '03-04. This will provide for growth in the number of PDD recipients, it'll assist also with salary increases for public service and contracted agencies, and it will accommodate growth in the complexity of individual cases. It is my sincere hope that it will also help speed up our intake and assessment process with the intention of minimizing any waiting times that certain individuals may be experiencing in certain parts of the province. We try to ensure that the 8,500 PDD recipients that we serve will have the opportunity to participate in the social, economic, cultural, and community life of our province to the largest extent possible, and I believe we are succeeding in that objective. It should be noted, Mr. Chairman, that last year 94 percent of those individuals receiving PDD services reported satisfaction with services being provided.

Another program area that we're particularly proud of is the Alberta Brain Injury Network, which will receive a $2 million increase, for a total budget of $4.5 million in '03-04 to help build on the success of last year, when a provincial network of support and outreach services to assist individuals with acquired brain injury was first established. I was very pleased to attend the first-ever annual Brain Injury Conference in Calgary on April 11, which marked the first time in Alberta's history that survivors, family members, and service providers were given the opportunity to meet in a provincial conference fashion that was dedicated to brain injury issues.

Mr. Chairman, we're also making good progress in other areas within the broader disability portfolio. The gaps in service project, for example, is aimed at addressing the needs of disabled adults who do not fall into the current responsibilities for PDD nor into the Alberta Brain Injury Network. There is $348,000 in additional funding this year for the gaps in services project, bringing the total budget for the gaps piece alone up to $1.3 million.

We're also continuing our commitment to help the government in its ongoing dialogue with Albertans by providing quality co-ordinated and cost-effective communication services, with the transfer of responsibility and a budget of $224,000 for deaf and hard-of-hearing contracts from PDD boards to the department.

Now I'd like to briefly review funding that comes to us from the Alberta lottery fund. Community Development's 2003-04 budget includes a $19.8 million increase in funding from the Alberta lottery fund, and this total funding for my ministry from the Alberta lottery fund will now be about $76.1 million. This funding supports provincial, regional, and community-based organizations and individuals through Community Development's five lottery-funded agencies.

The first of these five agencies is the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, which will receive an increase of $7.9 million, for a total budget of $29.034 million directly from the Alberta lottery fund plus a further $500,000 from other revenue sources, for a total AFA budget of $29.528 million. I want to point out, Mr. Chairman, that this is the first increase in provincial arts funding in about 14 years. We are very pleased with that, and I want to thank all of my colleagues for their support in that regard.

Of the $7.9 million increase I referenced, $2.9 million will be for arts organizations and individual artists, including a $400,000 increase for Alberta's major performing arts companies, which we commonly refer to as AMPAC. The AMPAC organizations are Alberta Ballet; Alberta Theatre Projects, Calgary; Calgary Opera; Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra; Citadel Theatre; Decidedly Jazz Danceworks, Calgary; Edmonton Opera; the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra; and Theatre Calgary. Their total funding will rise to $4.79 million this year. An increase of $82,000 will go out to our eight provincial arts service organizations, which we refer to as the PASO group. These umbrella organizations provide services to provincewide memberships within specific arts disciplines. We also provide financial support for summer schools under this category. So the total program budget for this area will rise to $1.392 million.

The third area of increase here will be an additional $559,000 for what we call project grants, which will amount to a total budget in this category of $1.74 million to assist approximately 600 individual artists and to enable the AFA to offer grants that are more appropriate for today's cost for art production.

The fourth and final area of increased arts funding will be for the Alberta film development program, whose budget will be doubled from $5 million to $10 million for 2003-2004. This funding will support Alberta's growing creative film and video community. More specifically, this increase will help ensure that film producers, individual artists, and related arts groups will continue to have the best possible opportunities to help them grow and succeed within Alberta's arts sector. The latest available information, Mr. Chairman, demonstrates the impact of a very positive nature on our provincial economy, which for 2001-2002 shows 2,377 film production employment opportunities for Albertans. It also indicates 44 made-in-Alberta productions, totaling 53 million dollars' worth of film production by Albertans in Alberta as a result of this program. Preliminary information for 2002-2003 shows about 70 million plus dollars in film production resulting from our AFDP program.

I will now address the $2.6 million increase that will go to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation, which is the second of our five lottery-funded agencies and whose total budget will rise to $17.67 million directly from the Alberta lottery fund plus a further $2 million from other revenue sources, for a total budget of $19.62 million. This will include an increase of more than $1 million in support for Alberta's provincial sport and recreation associations and will also provide annual operating support to seven additional sport and recreation groups that qualify for funding. As part of this $2.6 million increase the development initiatives program will increase by $184,475. The remaining increases will be allocated to various recreation and sport programs such as active living, future leaders, 3M national coaching certification, the National Training Centre, provincial team selection and training, and amateur athletic games.

The third of our five lottery-funded agencies is the Alberta human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund, which will receive an increase of $203,000, for a total budget of $1.265 million directly from the Alberta lottery fund, plus a further $220,000 from other revenue sources, for a total budget of about $1.4 million. Project funding is provided to organizations that foster equality and promote fairness and access to help Albertans participate in the social, cultural, and economic life of our province. The result will be more grants to community organizations for primarily our vibrant ethnocultural community, which is increasingly diverse in size and nature.

Additional educational programs and resources will also be developed in the areas of diversity, multiculturalism, and women's issues within my ministry. As the minister responsible I attend the federal/provincial/territorial meetings of ministers responsible for the status of women. We continue to work on issues of importance to women such as women's economic equality, women's health, and prevention of violence against women to mention a few. At these meetings we also receive and share information about gender-based analysis, and we are continuing our work on the changing work culture project. Later this fall, Mr. Chairman, it will be my great pleasure to host the next FPT meeting of ministers responsible for the status of women, likely right here in Edmonton.

The fourth of our five lottery-funded agencies is the Wild Rose Foundation, which will receive an increase of about $1.2 million, for a total budget of $7.76 million directly from the Alberta lottery fund, plus a further $737,000 from other revenue sources, for a grand total budget of $8.5 million. This foundation, as we all know, exists to promote and assist volunteerism and to strengthen the relationship among voluntary sector leaders and government. These additional moneys will help them to create and implement a series of training opportunities, tools, and innovative training methods and overall to strengthen the capacity of the voluntary sector in Alberta. Included in this foundation's budget will be a $600,000 increase that will go to the new voluntary sector advancement program.

The fifth of our five lottery-funded agencies is the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, which will receive an increase of $1 million, for a total budget allocation of $6.94 million directly from the Alberta lottery fund, plus a further $216,000 from other revenue sources, for a grand total budget of $7.2 million. These moneys will go to heritage programs and will reflect an increase in annual operating funds for major provincial heritage organizations and for preservation projects. Annual operating funds that we provide for major provincial heritage associations now total almost $1.7 million and include Museums Alberta, the Archives Society of Alberta, the Alberta Genealogical Society, the Archaeological Society of Alberta, and the Historical Society of Alberta. Also included in here is a $125,000 increase for the Glenbow Museum in Calgary. In fact, total funding for the Glenbow will now reach about $2.68 million in 2003-2004.

I also need to mention, Mr. Chairman, that my ministry receives and distributes Alberta lottery funding for certain specific onetime projects. For example, the city of Edmonton's centennial project in 2004 is scheduled to receive $4.2 million over the next three years. The 2005 World Masters Games, also hosted by Edmonton, are scheduled to receive up to $4 million from us over the next three years. Another example is the 2007 Western Canada Games, which will be held in Alberta in that same year. They will receive up to $1.5 million over the next four years. One other example in this area is the 2004 Arctic Winter Games, that will be hosted by the municipal district of Wood Buffalo, or Fort McMurray as most of us know it. They will receive $500,000 from us, again courtesy of the Alberta lottery fund.

Actually, there is one other very specific and significant event that I need to mention that we will be funding, and that is the Juno awards in Edmonton in April 2004. Our provincial contribution will be $250,000 for this first-time-in-Alberta event.

I'd now like to address the Alberta 2005 centennial briefly, and I want to begin by pointing out that the bulk of the centennial legacy program funding will now be found in the Alberta Infrastructure budget, pages 228 and 299 of their estimates to be specific. But it's important to note, Mr. Chairman, that Community Development will continue to manage, administer, and otherwise oversee the centennial legacy grant projects for which we are responsible. This amounts to about $25 million that we're looking at now that will be budgeted over two years for the centennial legacies grant program. On April 11 of this year I was pleased to announce 31 community-based and community-owned projects that will be receiving a total of $19.1 million over these next two years, and I anticipate making additional announcements later this year regarding the remaining allocations.

As well, government-owned centennial projects will receive moneys for certain projects that include the Turner Valley gas plant historic site, Lougheed House in Calgary, the Provincial Archives in Edmonton, and a major new and renewed Provincial Museum of Alberta on its existing site in Edmonton. Several provincial parks will also receive centennial funding for improvements to interpretive centres. Other examples include the major renovations of the Jubilee auditoria in Edmonton and Calgary, which will result in very much improved facilities and a lasting legacy of our centennial year. Over $32 million is budgeted in Alberta Infrastructure for this project over three years, which, again, my staff and I will be helping oversee. The Provincial Museum of Alberta will add another very significant legacy to our province's history, resulting in an internationally recognized facility of world-class standards. Of the approximately $15 million budgeted over the next three years, $1 million will be spent this year to formally begin the consultation and preliminary design processes.

I'd now like to turn briefly to public libraries. Community Development supports financially and otherwise 230 public libraries and seven library systems throughout our province. Operating grants for Alberta's library boards and the seven regional systems will increase by about $1.3 million this year, for a total library grant allocation of about $17.9 million. Mr. Chairman, this includes additional funding of about $730,000 plus $613,000 reallocated from funds held in previous years for establishment grants and special projects.

The increase that I've just alluded to really reflects a restoration of the per capita funding amount that was reduced some 10 years ago, and I will acknowledge that it is not the increase we were all hoping for, but it is an increase nonetheless, and it is a positive start in addressing the increasing costs and needs of libraries throughout this province. The increase specifically provides for per capita funding increases from $4.03 up to $4.29 for public library boards and an increase from $3.07 up to $3.22 for library system boards in conjunction with an adjustment for population growth using the most current statistics available, that being the 2002 population listing.

Et maintenant en français. Le Secrétariat francophone a reçu une augmentation de budget de $110,000 de la part du gouvernement fédéral à l'intention d'assister des communautés dans le projet du Musée Provincial et celui des Archives Provinciales. Le projet du Musée Provincial rendra accessible le programme des émissions du musée à la communauté francophone ainsi qu'aux écoles d'immersion en français. Le projet des Archives Provinciales vise à accroître les contributions de la communauté francophone aux collections. Il vise également à permettre la préservation et la documentation de l'histoire francophone afin de la rendre disponible aux travaux de recherche.

Merci beaucoup.

[Translation] The Francophone Secretariat receives an increase of $110,000 in funding from the government of Canada for community-based initiatives, including the Provincial Museum project and the Provincial Archives. The Provincial Museum project will make programming at the museum available to school groups and tours from Francophone and French immersion schools. The Provincial Archives project aims to increase the Francophone community's contributions to the collections and help to preserve, document, and make Francophone history available for research. [as submitted]

Parks and protected areas is another very special area within Community Development, and my department is reviewing the provision of services at selected provincial parks and provincial recreation areas. We are negotiating the transfer of some sites to local authorities or to local municipalities as an alternative to closure. A number of sites are being reviewed for potential divestiture to local municipalities, and the proposed transfers are largely sites that are recreational in nature and are of direct economic benefit to the local communities in which they are situated. This is not a new initiative, because sites have been successfully transferred to municipalities in the past.

Mr. Chairman, I do regret that we do not yet have the success we were hoping to have in attracting the new provincial dollars that we need to reinvest in our parks infrastructure renewal and upgrading program, but I will remain optimistic about our pursuits in that regard. This year's budget for this area is $29.36 million, or it could also be interpreted as $46 million if you look at the way those numbers come together because of some of the transfers and other obligations of a financial nature. I know that I have a lot of work to do with my staff to maintain and to improve, where we can, our parks infrastructure needs because these parks and protected areas provide enormous benefits to our citizens and to the tourism industries.

I want to quickly highlight a few changes to our business plan. We conducted a major review, and the result is a business plan that is more strategic, less operational, and more valuable as a tool to guide program decisions. The business plan also identifies relevant measures of progress toward achieving the ministry's goals as well as the budget allocated in pursuit of these goals.

Previously the ministry had five core businesses. These have been collapsed into three that better reflect the full scope of the ministry's activities and purpose while at the same time highlighting commonalities across the ministry's divisions. As part of the overall revisions we also conducted a comprehensive review of my ministry's performance measures, and our performance measures will continue to be effective in that they are relevant, understandable, and focused on the ministry's sphere of influence and do meet management information needs. I am pleased to note that the ministry now has 15 performance measures as opposed to 27 last year. Some measures, Mr. Chairman, were far outside the influence of this ministry, and they addressed global issues related to perceptions of quality of life but not the ministry's role in delivering services that affect quality of life. No new measures were added, but you will see that nine of the key performance measures were updated with revised wordings.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I am proud of the quality of programs and activities undertaken by the Ministry of Community Development, and I am exceptionally proud of the individuals who work collaboratively with me and with communities across the province to help realize our vision of a vibrant province where Albertans experience fair opportunity and the quality of life to which they aspire.

This concludes my formal remarks, Mr. Chairman. I would be very pleased to entertain questions and to answer as many of them as time and knowledge and note work will allow, and I will be pleased to respond to others in writing. May I please ask members who anticipate asking questions that they provide a page number first and then a line number or an element number and also tell me if they're referring to the business plan or if they are referring to the estimates plan?

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. There's an old comedy routine called Slow Talkers of America, and tonight, given the hon. minister and myself being so aware of the enormous breadth of this particular department, you are about to hear the fast talkers of America. So I'm just going to get right into this given the wonderful overview that we've just had from the minister.

I'd like to thank the staff that are appearing in the galleries tonight and giving the minister support. I think it's no surprise that this is where my heart lies, and I certainly appreciate the fine work that the staff do in supporting the minister and supporting the ministry.

This is indeed the best ministry in my opinion. This is what makes Alberta home. It's what makes Alberta fun. It's what makes Alberta inspiring, beautiful, gives us our history, tells us our stories and makes us human, and has us uphold other people's humanity. It's a very important ministry in my opinion.

The minister very kindly offered this afternoon to have me give him in advance some of the questions that would have required a great deal of detail to allow him to be able to give me these responses orally tonight, and I have utterly failed. In trying to get my own notes together, I neglected to phone his staff person, and therefore it's my fault.

Now, what I'd like to do tonight, as I have done with other ministries, is address things more or less in clusters. The clusters I have are arts, sports, volunteers, human rights, historical sites, libraries, the effect of bingo changes, a short question on Grant MacEwan College and interpreters for the deaf, general financial questions, women's issues, and the legacy projects. That, Mr. Chairman, is just what I have to say about this ministry. We also have my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie to speak and ask questions about parks and protected areas and my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview to talk about PDD and support for persons with disabilities. So I was kind of joking about fast talkers but not really.

I'd like to start out by talking about some of the feedback that I get every year around budget time from the arts communities. I put out a general e-mail just saying: "I'm going into this budget debate. If you have a question or a point you wanted to raise with the minister, what would it be?" These are artists. They're never short on what they have to say. So I've just gone through, and there are a couple of highlights I'd like to put on the record for you, Mr. Minister, which you can have a look at sometime in the future at your leisure or that your staff can review. These are coming from people like festival producers, from freelancers, artistic directors, festivals, as I said, small theatres, a PASO, and some nonprofessional or semiprofessional organizations as well, so actually not a bad cross section from the arts community.

I want to start out by saying how important it is to everybody that there was in fact an increase into this area, into the department overall but specifically into the arts, and I'll talk about the other increases as I get to them. The $3 million that's going specifically into arts and the $5 million going into film development is a very small amount of money that will have enormous spin-off. This is a good deal for government, and I wish to put it on the record and urge the minister to continue his fine work and continue to encourage his colleagues to support him in increases next year and the year after. I will make no bones about this: after 14 years without an increase $3 million is not catching us up. Let's be clear about that. We need another $3 million next year. As a matter of fact, what the community had been advocating for for some time was an $8 million increase, and that was not including film funds. So we have a ways to go here, but I do appreciate the support of the Treasury Board and of cabinet and of the caucus for getting the increases that in fact were realized. This year you will see the payoff for this.

Now, some of the points that I wanted to raise. We continue to get comments that it's the artists that are subsidizing the arts in Alberta. Most artists working flat out are making $10,000 or $12,000 a year and are subsidizing by working in other jobs, so it is the artists that are continuing to subsidize the arts.

Some people note that the government and AFA are weak partners in the effort to create and sustain a vibrant arts culture in the province, that the arts have been seriously underfunded and underserved for a decade. We've started to catch up. As I said, we need to continue that. Without civic, federal, and community support that's currently sustaining a stressed-out cultural sector, Alberta would have very little in the way of cultural expression.

A point I've made before and I'll continue to make, Mr. Minister, is that if there is no government leadership for support of the arts, there will be no corporate following. In fact, we now have the stats to show us that. The corporations and business have not stepped up to the plate in support of the arts in the same ratio as they exist, corporate giving is well below the national average in this the richest province, arguably, in Canada. A big part of that, I think, is a lack of leadership and direct funding from the government. If they don't put it in, why on earth would the corporations follow suit? It must not be a very good deal, yet the minister and I know that it's a very good deal. So the more that the government can show leadership there, the better off it will be for everyone.

The arts community should not be focused on fulfilling the role of business in the community. The primary benefits of the arts are the creative thinking and inspiration, the lasting artistic legacy. We're certainly aware that the arts continue to be not an economic driver but a creator of a vitality that draws in the economic drivers.

There's a strong feeling that gaming and lottery dollars are no longer being disbursed to the arts community in equitable, effective means, and a great deal of that has to do with the loss of the community lottery boards. The proportion of gaming revenue coming back to the arts is ridiculously small against the whole amount of money that's brought into the province through gaming efforts, and seeing as that's where we started with gaming, that it would go to quality of life and particularly into this department, it is vastly inequitable.

The AFA formula grants for presenters are not working for certain festivals, particularly those that bring a lot of people in, like the Street Performers Festival, the comedy festival, anybody that's bringing in a lot of performers. It doesn't seem to be working as well as the old grant formula, so you might want to have a look at that or perhaps talk to some people that are working directly in that area.

The whole idea of the one grant per organization rule really needs to be examined. I don't know where this is coming from, Mr. Minister, but I think this is going to cost us dearly in the long run. Somehow there's this idea that the arts are scamming or double-dipping or doing something nefarious in having accessed different pots of money to support their endeavours, but when you figure what our demand of them was and where they started from – you know, they started by saying: well, produce a theatre season, but we want you to produce a theatre season with X number of new plays in it. Well, that's an additional amount of money and additional investment and required an additional pot of money to be accessed. Cutting it back now to this one grant per organization is restricting what the organizations themselves can do, and it's also starting to restrict programming and artistic collaboration. I think we need to look to that.

One person is noting the curbing of the ability of arts organizations to respond to special presenting opportunities because project grants aren't available. If you get a project grant, you don't get an operating grant. Why would you go for a project grant? So it's eliminating that level of new endeavours, of exciting new projects, of new work, possible collaborations, new things being brought into Alberta for us to have a look at.

Others note that growth and innovation have been stunted due to a lack of the funding increase over the last 10 to 14 years. It's not even keeping pace with inflation. It's forced companies to spend more time securing funds and less being able to actually produce the work that they're there to do and to nurture their artistic product and their artist.

A comment around the labour market tactics. I've brought up a number of times with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment that we continue to really underpay people here and we just lose them. We get them, we train them, and they just cannot sustain a livelihood. We lose them out of the sector. We're wasting time and resources here, and that's not a good idea in a province like Alberta, that wants to look at moving towards being a smart province.

We need to look to the funding for festivals. For example, the Fringe Theatre is a 2 and a half million dollar a year company. It's in a category of its own, and they are restricted to a $60,000 grant for the entire organization. They provide three streams, if you will: the largest theatre festival in North America, a very successful and artistically credible theatre for young audiences, and they're providing a venue that is in use by a number of other organizations. For all of that, $60,000 is not in keeping, and this is because there was a cap originally before this minister was in there. The cap was raised, but there hasn't been enough money to bring the level of funding up. So that's quite inadequate.

There was quite a campaign over the fall to keep the funding for the Artstrek program, and I've now heard from them that in fact they did get a small increase in their funding. Thank you for that, Mr. Minister, and for listening to the many, many, many people who wrote to you expressing their appreciation for this program. I went through that program in the early '70s along with many others who I know benefited from it. So it's definitely worth the money that is invested in our young people.

I think there are some additional problems around funding and around what could be described as a dysfunction with the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. They've tried for many years to shuffle things around to try and do the best they can with not enough funding, but at this point I think there may need to be a return to the drawing board and a relook at that organization, that agency, and the duties that it performs on behalf of the ministry. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction in the community around that group. I don't know if the agencies feel safe to say that out loud, but they're certainly saying it to me, and I'm free to say it to you. But there's a great feeling that that agency is no longer serving the communities and that it's more interested in sustaining an organization, sustaining an administration, than it is in working towards assisting an artistic product and artists.

We continue to have this I think ridiculous go-round with funding and eligibility requirements. To tell someone that you're eligible for 25 percent of your revenue but no one ever gets that – nobody gets that 25 percent, so why do we keep saying it? Last year I talked about making groups jump through hoops for not very much money. It's the same issue that I'm raising for you again, you know, that nobody gets the 25 percent, and supposedly when the one grant came in and nobody could or would apply for project grants, the formula was increased from 20 percent to 25. But nobody's getting it. For one organization, an excellent organization – very well run, no deficit, never has had, totally aboveboard, very cautious in their spending – the best they can get is 66 percent of that 25 percent.

So, you know, let's be honest about what we're doing here. If it's never going to be 25 percent or not in the foreseeable future, then let's be honest about that and work from it. It's very hard for these organizations when they don't even find out. They have to submit a budget with the projected grant included – of course, they can't figure out what it's going to be, but it ain't gonna be 25 percent – and they don't receive confirmation from AFA for their following season's grant amount until mid-June. Now, most of them start their fiscal year in May, April, June, but you're well into your planning cycle at that point. You should have booked your theatre; you should have contracted your artists by then. So that's very late to be hearing what's going on there, and the government would never allow anyone to do that to them. Why do they insist on enforcing that on other organizations?

A number of agencies noted the difficulties with increasing costs, especially venue costs, because of increasing costs around electricity or energy costs, electricity and heating, and what a strain that's causing for them, especially those that are trying to manage some of these spaces. Some groups talked about what's happening with the Jubilee auditoria and how the rates have gone up there. As the minister knows, those two venues are now going to be out of commission for groups, and there's no assistance for the groups that can only produce there. I'm still concerned about the Edmonton Opera because the Winspear is not suitable for them. They have to get a huge venue where they can get a couple of thousand people in to do their three or four performances. Where are they going to go? The Shaw Conference Centre, the AgriCom? That's what they're going to have to look at, and there's been no assistance offered to them and recognition of how much money that's going to cost them to have to go to a different place to produce. I think that the cost of restoring the auditoria should have included some sort of recognition of cost factors for those groups that have been punted out of there for a couple of years.

Okay. So that's the funding issue. I've talked about the dysfunction of the AFA and the problems around that.

Very quickly, a question about the Film Classification Board. I'm just looking for an update here. How many people are currently working in the film classification area, and are their votes weighted equally? At one point the chairperson I think sort of had two votes, and then there were two additional people who each had a vote. I'm looking to see what the situation is currently with any weighting of the votes and how many people are actually doing film classification.

Cultural spaces. I asked last year about the Cultural Spaces Canada program and whether the government was looking to match any of the $80 million, $13 million of which is available for Alberta-based organizations. The written response from the minister was that they're getting their money from somebody else. There seemed to be no commitment from this department to go in and help agencies that are trying to recover that. I'm questioning again this year to see whether there's any money that's targeted for that or available for that or that the ministry is setting aside to support agencies that are seeking those federal funds.

Just following up on the dysfunction of the AFA board, last year I had asked the minister and he'd responded in writing that the AFA board is revisiting a number of guidelines and things in March. So I'm looking for any update, anything written, anything oral that the minister can give me on policy around the AFA decision-making process, granting process, application process, deadline process, anything they can give me that's new here.

The under-30 survey that was done for Culture Steps Forward: Setting the Stage for Human Resource Development in Alberta's Culture Sector, which was mainly a funding project of the Human Resources and Employment department. I'd like to know what concrete steps the Minister of Community Development is taking to work with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to move the concept of cultural workers and workers in a cultural sector forward as far as labour market development programs. We're missing out here, and I know that the minister can figure out a way to take advantage of that program and what's being offered or what's potential under that program.

Okay. Industries. The film industry. Well, the cultural industries that we have are recording industry – the minister has already talked about the Junos – film industry, book publishing. I'm missing one.

Dr. Taft: Magazines.

Ms Blakeman: Publishing. Thank you.

A very good survey recently came out commissioned by the magazine publishers, and that industry is actually looking pretty good. All of those industries seem to be coming along quite well, and we were certainly taking a large step forward with the film industry. I know that the minister is just as worried as I am about what the feds are going to do if they withdraw funding from the film industry. I could just wring their necks frankly. You know, from where we've managed to come back to in Alberta, this is most disappointing. Anything I can do to assist the minister in wringing their necks, literally, I'm happy to do.

8:40

Dr. Taft: Figuratively. Figuratively, Laurie.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I'm sorry. That's right. Not literally. Figuratively. Oops.

But I am . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] There's not enough time to do this department.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll just respond briefly to a couple of the issues because I know that there are many other speakers who want to get into this particular debate.

To begin with I think the hon. member's passion for the arts area as with several others is much appreciated by the arts community and certainly by me as the minister responsible for that area because it's a passion that quite frankly I share and I know that many, many members if not most in this Assembly also share because it does have impacts throughout the province on all of our citizens.

The festivals that she alluded to, Mr. Chairman – and I don't have all the amounts and figures and so on in front of me, but according to a note I had jotted down here, I think that last I saw, we funded about 36 different festivals across the province, including some that the hon. member mentioned: the Fringe, the Street Performers, Jazz City. I guess the Folk Music Festival would fit in there, the Lethbridge Children's Festival, the St. Albert Children's Festival, the Blueberry Bluegrass Festival, and on and on they go. So we do provide somewhere in the order of $700,000 or whatever to that area last I saw, but perhaps that's not enough. Nonetheless, it is a point that I will pass on to the AFA for a relooking at.

The $3 million increase, however, that is going purely to the arts area will be distributed as best the foundation board is able to. I do acknowledge that it's not a huge increase, hon. member, and I think everybody here would understand that, particularly given the decade and a half or so that we've been waiting. Nonetheless, we are doing the best we can with what we've been given, but I will undertake to the House and to the member asking the question that I will put forward a request again for relooking at that situation also to see what can or can't be done in upcoming budgets. I can't make any promises, hon. member, but I think you know where my heart lies, and I will do my best.

I am pleased that you are pleased and that other members are pleased with the $5 million that did go to the creative film community because that is truly a great growth industry for us and for arts in general in this province. I, too, am very upset and concerned about the rumoured $25 million cut which the federal government has announced it would be making, but I'm equally encouraged by the rumour that says that it may be reversed. It's just a rumour, hon. member. I did write to the federal minister responsible. She knows my feelings about this, and I'm hoping that there might be the rescindment which I alluded to in question period I think it was last week.

The issue of artists subsidizing the arts is one that really caught my attention, and I know exactly what point the hon. member is making here. Having lived as an artist for several years myself, I had my share of spaghetti dinners, and I know what that feels like. Still, I think it's important to point out that while the operating grants that we provide and the grants to individual artists and other forms of grants are available through the AFA, Mr. Chairman, we do see a lot of other areas in government which provide funding for arts infrastructure. I realize that's not the exact funding that the hon. member is talking about, but I think that when you roll all of that into the mix, we're not quite as well off as we'd like but we're not as bad off as it sometimes seems.

For example, the centennial grants program. I remember being at the announcement when we announced $2.5 million for the Citadel plus $2.5 million for the Fringe, the Arts Barns updates. So that has an impact on the arts area, although it doesn't help with the specific point of arts employment or arts engagement, which I think is more where the hon. member is coming from, nor does it offset their costs of operating. It helps them with infrastructure and with building, and I think that the corporate side of the equation, which the hon. member referred to, may be dropping off in some parts, but I don't think we're doing all that badly in this province.

What I do see, however, is increased competition for those same dollars because you have a lot of the traditional funders who would have been funding artistic and cultural endeavours now being asked to fund more health-related endeavours or educational-related endeavours or environmental-related endeavours, so that point is certainly not lost on me. But we do have a number of examples where fortunately we do have a fairly thriving corporate sector in this province. I would like to think that it's largely because of the very friendly economic climate that our government policies and other departments provide.

I would say this for the record: according to the last statistics that I looked at – and I would hope that all members would remember this – for every dollar of government moneys that we put into the arts sector, you can expect an economic spin-off of about $6 to $15 in return. I think that goes back to the StatsCan report of about 1995 or 1996. I remember it quite vividly, and it made a lasting impression on me.

The loss of the community lottery boards: as the hon. member would know, they were replaced by the community initiatives program, albeit for a lesser amount of money. Nonetheless, that funding was restored to about $32 million.

I will undertake to examine again that issue of the one grant per year only for the arts organizations. I think that is a significant factor, and I don't want to see opportunities for collaboration, artistic growth, artistic development being compromised because of one of those kinds of policies. Having said that, however, I think everyone here would know that we don't have as much money as is always requested by the arts and cultural community, so the AFA board is doing the best it can with what it has. There is always room for them to look over their programs, and I can tell you, hon. member, that they will be meeting very soon. I don't know if it's in a day or two or three or in a week, but their next board meeting is coming up in May, so I will take your comments from Hansard and I'll present them directly to them. I'll have them address them to me in a discussion, and then I'll let you know what the outcome is of all of that.

The other comment, very quickly, is in general about eligibility funding criteria and the issue of the 25 percent eligibility factor, which the hon. member raised. This, too, is something that I can appreciate. If they are expecting and applying for a 25 percent grant because they know full well they're eligible for it and they are not receiving it because it's being prorated or marked down, I would agree that that is unfair to the organizations applying. Again, it's a question, however, of us not having unlimited funds to work with, so I think the AFA responded in a way that they saw fit. I will undertake to pursue that one more aggressively, hon. member. I don't think I pursued it as aggressively as I would have liked to last year, but I will look at this differently this year. I just don't know what the outcome will be because I'm working with a board of very creative and individual thinkers there that have a lot to offer, and they have gained quite a bit of experience over the years.

The final point with respect to the Jubilee auditoria and the rates going up, I guess there were expectations that the rates would go down. Unfortunately, the cost of living is going up, and we're all well aware of that. I am sensitive to the issue of those organizations that are being displaced from the Northern Alberta Jubilee Auditoria.

rium and also from the Southern Alberta Jubilee Auditorium, and I have had meetings with them collectively and/or individually several times.

As the member would know, I have inherited this particular turn of events, but I am supportive of the renovations that need to be done to these nearly 50-year-old structures. The improvements that are coming about have been done in consultation with not only the arts groups affected but with the arts community and user groups in general. When we're finished those renovations, which will be approximately $16 million of government dollars in Edmonton, $16 million of government moneys in Calgary matched by about 10 million plus dollars from the foundation that has been established by the two friends-of organizations, we will truly have an incredible facility with far improved sight lines, better ventilation systems, better acoustics, and all of that kind of stuff.

There is the downside, and it is unfortunate, but the groups by and large understand that this is short-term pain for some long-term gain. I'm not saying that they're happy about it, but unfortunately I don't have any budget moneys to compensate for that displacement. I wish I did, and if I did, I would take a look at how we might get to that stage, but unfortunately we're not there.

The film classification question. I believe there are three individuals who work in the film classification area, and I can get you more details about the rest of the question, which I didn't have a chance to jot down.

The Cultural Spaces Canada program. You know, I'm going strictly by memory here, hon. member, but as I recall, there was an allocation made to the province of Alberta. I don't want to be held accountable for this, but it seems to me that it was about $700,000 that was apportioned for Alberta. I don't know if there's somebody that could help me out with the more exact number on the Cultural Spaces, but there was something in that order that either was already brought to the province and spent or was to be spent. I'm not sure, so I'll check into it and give it to you further.

The last point – and then I'll sit down – was the possibility of a cross-ministry initiative, at least that was what it sounded like to me, with respect to the Alberta Department of Human Resources and Employment. I was looking earlier, hon. member, at the cross-ministry policy initiatives we already have in place, and I note here that we have an aboriginal policy initiative, we have an Alberta children and youth initiative with the Minister of Children's Services, we have an economic development strategy cross-ministry initiative, and we have a health sustainability initiative, and so on. But I don't see one with AHR and E. So I will have that discussion with the hon. minister from Alberta Human Resources and Employment to see more fully what it is that you had in mind to help move the labour development issue in the arts area forward. I'm not sure what it'll result in, but it's an interesting idea.

I was struck by the incubator that is going into Leduc for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. In fact, I talked to my deputy minister about it, and I said: wouldn't it be wonderful if we had an incubator program for the arts and cultural area? I think it would be a great idea. I don't know how we would do it, but I realize that that one was funded by the government through the Alberta Value-added Corporation. It's a good one because it will help the producers learn the trade, and they learn marketing techniques, and I think I heard somewhere that there's an average of about 100 new agriculture products that come onstream in this province as a result of initiatives like that. I think that's tremendous. But to liken it to the arts area, I think we could see the same thing potentially in this area. Why not? It would be an innovative idea, and I will take it for what it's worth and see what I can do with it. I don't know where it will go or what support it might have, but I will give it some consideration and visit it with appropriate ministries.

I've just received a note on the film classification from a staff member, and I'll get back to you further with that. I'll take my seat and allow more questions to come, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Before we recognize Edmonton-Centre, I wonder if we might have consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of this House a young man that we're very proud of, my son Jeremy. Jeremy's here in Edmonton this week with the RCMP training in their helicopter for search and rescue. He's the son that everybody wishes for. I'd ask him to stand and receive the traditional warm applause of the House.

head: Main Estimates 2003-04

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: That's a proud mom.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of things to recap on points that the minister raised. You know, he talks about additional funding that comes into the arts, and I have to put him on the hot seat a bit on that one because I know from running arts organizations that you run your eye down the list of grants, and it's really come from your own fund-raising activities for the most part and from different levels of government. So any infrastructure money that comes, really the difference that makes to cultural product and to artists just means you're working in a less drafty location or a nicer location, but, you know, it's not putting artistic product out there. The one exception to that is that there are some artistic endeavours that we can't get into because we don't have the space for it. I know that I heard a plea from Heather Redfern at Catalyst Theatre around that, and I think she's applying for Cultural Spaces money so that they can improve their space and what they're able to offer.

The minister is absolutely right. In my time in the arts the biggest competitors in fund-raising now for the arts community are the health sector and the education sector, and that I will put right back at you because I think that clearly reflects what's happening for funding from government in the health and education sectors, not on the minister's plate specifically but certainly on the government's plate.

Again, around the CIP program, the community initiatives program, let's be fair here. There's less money available overall. There is a cap on the grants of $75,000. Over a certain amount it had to be matched, so that's additional effort from the organizations to come up with more money and more effort to match the funds that are available there, and there was less money in the pot total. So it's quite a different program and comes nowhere near to replacing what we had with the lottery boards.

I'd like to move on now briefly to talking about the sports. Again, very glad to see an almost $2.6 million increase in the sports. A couple of questions. I noticed the expected money going to the NHL teams is up, and I was wondering what would make the minister believe that's a flow-through. Where am I seeing that? I'm sorry that I don't have the vote number for you on that, but it is the NHL ticket money. There it is; sorry. Page 74 of the budget estimates, 2.2.4, and there's an increase there going from $4.834 million to $5.750 million. Is that money coming directly from gaming, or what is giving the ministry the belief that they're going to make 900,000 and some dollars more through that flow-through initiative? What's making them think that that's going to be more money?

I have questioned the minister and corresponded with him about the Masters Games in 2005. I am specifically looking for a commitment from the minister that there will be a contract that will involve some portion of the money coming from the provincial government to the Masters Games 2005, a contract that sets out expectations and outcomes expected for a cultural component. I was impressed with the work that the federal government has in place around contracting for athletic endeavours and the money that they put into the cultural component. We can easily piggyback on the work that they have learned, and I think that we need to because I was not entirely happy with what happened around the last one we had, which has totally gone out of my head. Two years ago. Totally gone out of my head; I'm sorry. If I can remember it, I'll come back to that one.*

The minister mentioned the health and fitness aspect of amateur sports, and a question that I've raised with the Minister of Gaming and I'll raise again here is: why is there such a struggle for adult recreation and athletic organizations to secure licences to hold bingo and casinos to raise funds to offset the cost of their programs? It seems to be a real problem for those organizations to get access to that money, and I think that we need to address that. So, again, it's a cross-departmental initiative, but I'd like to see the minister being aggressive on this one if he can. Again, I'm happy to see the extra money that's going in there. Much needed, and a huge payoff as far as health and wellness for our citizens plus general well-being and stress reducers and all of those things, so congratulations on that.

Moving to the volunteer sector. Again, a small increase there of a million and something. Glad to see it. The board developments section that is in Community Development, particularly those that go out to facilitate conferences and workshops – there are a number of staff in that department that have developed quite an expertise, and I'm wondering how many facilitation projects has the staff from Community Development been involved with in the last year, and how many are they expected to be involved with this year? How many staff and subcontractors or people brought in from outside are involved with that, and how much money is paid back into the ministry when those services are used by other government departments or other organizations?

A couple of questions around human rights, page 100 in the business plan, the section that's called Protect Human Rights, and Promote Fairness and Access. The '01-02 budget was $5.7 million, the '02-03 budget is $4.5 million. Then we're going to $4.8 million, and it stays at $4.8 million across the three years of this business plan. I'm wondering: what caused the dip from $5.7 million to $4.5 million? What reasoning does the ministry have behind settling on the $4.8 million as a reasonable amount of money or an adequate amount of money to be funding the protecting human rights and promoting fairness and access sector?

I have a standard series of questions, which I think the minister already has his hands on, that I tend to do every year around the human rights cases. I'm looking specifically for the number of cases that were brought to the Human Rights Commission, the number of cases that were received or accepted for review and work by the Human Rights Commission, the number of cases that went forward to the commission, the number that were settled, and the number that are outstanding.

I also have noticed quite a difference in the profile of the Human Rights Commission over the last several years. Could the minister please give me some general comments on whether there has been a deliberate change in policy as far as the profile of that particular commission or whether it's just been a sort of general erosion or lack of attention to detail or lack of love from somebody? Why am I seeing less profile from that particular commission? There's quite a change: less advertising, fewer posters, less visibility, fewer staff people sent to conferences, et cetera, so overall a general downgrading in the Human Rights Commission and its visibility in the community.

Historical sites. Specifically, I had a request to raise an issue around a property built by John C. McDougall in 1912-13. It's been put up for sale by the province, and I'm questioning whether the minister would be willing to look at a provincial designation for this house. This is the son of the original McDougall. That original McDougall house was destroyed, so this is the son's house. It's the only one that we have left, and the province has put it up for sale. It is on the B list of protection for the city of Edmonton, but they are really not in a position to upgrade that to an A list, and it's quite possible that the property could be sold and demolished and we would lose McDougall house, the son's, the second one. It's not the original one. The original one is gone. It's the one built in 1912-13. So I'm hoping that I can turn the minister's attention to that, and hopefully we can get some protection provincially under the auspices of the minister for that house. It would be a shame to lose that out of Edmonton's historical archives or historical buildings.
