As I mentioned earlier on in the debate and in my comments this evening, where do we see the benefit to the consumer? The major concern that all consumers have is: what am I going to pay? All I've seen is more and more and higher and higher prices for natural gas, and certainly this comes out of their pockets and leaves them in a position where they have less disposable income. I think that another perhaps measure of this can be the sharp decline that we have seen in the amount of business that our fast-food industry is experiencing right now. Higher energy costs have driven up their prices. The higher energy prices have taken away from the disposable income that families have, and I think in all fairness we have to look at – you know, I think people generally are starting to eat healthier and starting to eat foods with less fat content. There's a whole gamut of issues as to why they have experienced a decrease of business, and I can't help but think, Mr. Chairman, that one of the reasons is that this has not benefited the consumer.

So I think that the position of the federation and the GAI certainly is a very strong position, that there should have been some sort of a cost-benefit analysis to see how all of this deregulation and the changes that we have made in this industry have benefited the consumer. It has to be more than just a choice of who you purchase that through.

Now, then, as well, Mr. Chairman, "if such an analysis has been undertaken," then these groups request that "the Province of Alberta . . . produce it for the benefit of consumers and further understanding of the marketplace." Again, I hearken back to the wise words of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar when he indicated that this certainly is a very complex industry and many, many different types of regulations govern it and many different instances by which the companies arrive at a bill for us. Certainly, for the average person out there they don't have the time nor the resources to look in and try to sort this out. The one thing they do know is that this has not benefited them. They are paying more, and the service has not changed any from the way it previously was. So they don't see the benefit here, and quite frankly neither do I.

The federation and the GAI did ask for an analysis, and they go on to say:

Without this analysis the Federation and GAI suggest this initiative is premature and should be suspended until it is determined that tangible benefits will flow to consumers. Any other action would be irresponsible. The Federation and GAI submit that it is time for the Province of Alberta to take a fall back position, as has been done in many other jurisdictions, and ensure this review is taken before we move forward with any more initiatives promoting or intending to promote a competitive retail market and customer choice.

Certainly, with a more competitive retail market we do know that in that instance where we truly do have competitive marketing, prices as a whole go down. But it is very hard to have a competitive market when we have reserves that – at this particular time we are looking at remaining ultimate potential of 94 trillion cubic feet, yet production is 5 trillion cubic feet. So using these figures – and these figures do come from the government of Alberta – in looking at this, if we do have 94 trillion cubic feet of remaining ultimate potential in this province and at this particular time production is 5 trillion cubic feet per year, that's less than 20 years of ultimate potential of natural gas in this province. When you do have a dwindling supply, it is very, very difficult for us to have a marketplace where we are going to have adequate production to warrant a competitive market and to see prices decrease.

Now, then, as well, the federation and the GAI, Mr. Chairman, only want what is best for their consumers, and as I mentioned earlier, they have a long and proud history in this province of providing excellent service for their consumers. They are certainly interested if there are any tangible benefits to be realized with our new legislation, Bill 19, and one of their other goals is to have their membership properly informed and properly aware of how to take advantage of any benefits that will exist as a result of Bill 19. This is an elementary request on behalf of the federation and the GAI. They just want to see those benefits, and they want to be allowed to educate their consumers on the rationale and objectives of customer choice that will result in a competitive advantage for their members.

They have provided, I think, an excellent report on their position in regard to customer choice. They have also gone on in this report, Mr. Chairman, to provide recommendations that they "request the government to review and implement at their discretion." The federation and the GAI conclude the summary by repeating the question that has been repeatedly put to them by their customers and which they have been asking the government to provide for some time: "Who is asking for these changes?" I think that's a simple question when all things are considered in that it wasn't the consumers in this province who had asked for these changes, and certainly when we consider that it wasn't the consumer that had requested these changes, then it's quite easy to understand why they feel that they are not getting any benefit from these changes. Or if they are getting a benefit, the only benefit would be choice, and choice is no benefit if it isn't accompanied with a decrease in the rates they pay for gas.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to another hon. member to continue with debate on Bill 19. Thank you.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to speak in opposition to Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. Like other members of the Assembly, I have gas to one of our residences supplied by a small gas co-op. The co-op has been delivering gas to our cottage for a number of years now at very, very reasonable rates. The delivery has been reliable.

Mr. MacDonald: What gas co-op is that?

Dr. Massey: That's the Lac Ste. Anne gas co-op. They've been doing a good job, and it's been quite a change to have the utility handled by that co-op. Like others we were on propane for a number of years and all the inconvenience that accompanied being on propane. The gas co-op has provided good service, I think, for our neighbours and for ourselves over a long period of time.

So when we were given a copy of the submission that they had made to the government on this topic, I was particularly interested in what they might have to say. What they have done, I think, is taken what can be a complex topic and set of discussions and put it into everyday language and made the case in language that most Albertans can understand. They make a number of statements and come up with a number of recommendations that I think are certainly worthy of consideration by the government. I think it's unfortunate that their recommendations thus far haven't been reflected in the kind of legislation or the kinds of provisions we see in Bill 19.

One of the tests that they insist the changes have to meet is a prudence test, and they make the claim that customer choice for electricity and for natural gas at the retail level has not really been fully examined, nor are they satisfied that it meets the prudence test. They take issue, as we have, with the fundamental principles of competition or providing customer choice for these particular utilities, and they state quite boldly that deregulation of natural gas has worked well at the wholesale level, but cost-benefit analyses and reference to actual experience in other jurisdictions demonstrates it does not work at the retail or smaller consumer level – and they underline "does not work" – and that when you do introduce customer choice at the retail or smaller consumer level, you end up putting on additional layers of overhead and you introduce a whole set of additional costs and open up a whole new line of work for regulators. I think it's from that premise that customer choice does not work with natural gas and electricity.

They also take issue with the claims that lower prices will prevail, that the competition will drive the price down. They claim that that's simply not true. They don't believe that the changes that we have before us will result in natural gas being delivered to their customers at lower rates.

I think they remind us that small consumers – and we've had examples of that earlier today in the Legislature – have little protection from the marketing community. Most customers, most of us living our ordinary lives really don't understand the complexities of buying commodities such as electricity and natural gas. All you have to do is pick up copies of the government's legislation with respect to electricity and natural gas, and you can understand why most consumers don't understand what's going on and in most cases don't want to wade through the complexities of trying to figure out which direction they should take in terms of buying commodities, which are really very, very important in our province and are complex in terms of trying to understand what is actually happening in the market. We had the example earlier today from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar of a senior in his constituency being high-pressured by salespeople. That aside, just anyone who is interested but not so interested as to want to get into the legislation will have a difficult time understanding the complexities of trying to act as a responsible consumer in the retail market for electricity and natural gas.

I think one of the things that this legislation reflects is the government's overriding enthusiasm for customer choice in the free market economy. It's an enthusiasm that often – and this case, I think, is a good example – is not tempered with good sense. Again, I think, as the gas co-op people point out, most customers don't want the burden of trying to figure out which retailer will provide them with the best and most economical service. They expect, as has been the history in this province, to have gas and electricity supplied at reasonable rates reliably, and I think that that's what the previously regulated market gave them. Many of us are finding it difficult to understand why the government has made the moves that they've made other than this great enthusiasm for the free market economy and believing, almost a religious type of belief, that everything must be operated with the use of the free market as the underlying principle.

Part of the problem with this bill as well as with the previous bill is that the people most affected have been left out of the drafting of the legislation. The consumers really haven't had any say in what's going to happen to them. They don't appear to have had any input in the drafting of the legislation, and they're being asked to be part of an unproven model and in fact a model that in other parts of the world has not been a success, particularly for small consumers. Other places where such a model has been a success, I think, the gas co-ops point out that there's been significant government intervention and some horrendous implementation problems.

That's exactly what's happening here. If you look at electricity deregulation and the number of regulations there were prior to deregulation and you look at the massive regulations now that accompany the supposedly deregulated market, it's quite astounding. This is anything but progress in terms of clarity, and it certainly doesn't follow the simplistic notions of a free market economy that are spouted in defence of what's being done.

The gas co-op people go on to point out that the regulations and the drafting of the law seem to have been undertaken almost exclusively by nonconsumer groups and that nonconsumer groups have dominated discussions and that that's been at the expense of consumers, that they've been left out of the loop. They flatly reject what the government is doing and claim that the changes that we see before us in Bill 3 are unwarranted and will add additional complexity and actually will increase utility and commodity costs.

The gas co-ops speak for a large number of Albertans, 250,000 rural Albertans, and they're finding it very difficult to understand why we're rushing in to change something that has worked very well. They report on surveys that indicate that what customers really want is commodities delivered safely and efficiently at reasonable prices, and the notions and the kind of complexity that's been introduced into their lives by deregulation are not complexities that they wanted.

They go on to raise a number of questions, and I think my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry outlined a bit of what they had asked. The major question they have asked is: "Who is asking for these changes?" It's a question that I think the government is obligated to ask. Who is asking for these changes? Why are we into this mess? Why are we struggling to deliver commodity, natural gas and electricity, to homes and fouling it with all the complexities of a number of retailers going door to door trying to convince us that the way they are going to do it is best? Why are we going through all of this? Who has asked for it? Who wanted it to happen?

They concluded their submission, Mr. Chairman, with a number of recommendations, and my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry referenced one or two of them. One of the things that they wanted was that there be a freeze on legislation and altering the rules and the regulations and amendments to statutes, that there be a freeze on everything until the government has had an opportunity to examine the issues and to clearly demonstrate that small-volume customers can receive tangible benefits that outweigh the costs and the risks. So it's, I think, a very important recommendation. Let's stop this madness until we actually can figure out what's going on.

A second recommendation they make is that things not proceed until there has been significant customer input. Let's hear from Albertans. Let's hear from those people that are going to be affected by the changes, what they want and whether they agree with the directions in which the government is moving.

They also asked – and I think this one has been mentioned before – if the government can conduct studies to "objectively analyze the costs and the benefits which can be realistically delivered." Part of their submission – and it's not their position alone, Mr. Chairman – is that the people have little faith in what's happening. They don't believe that there are going to be benefits. They believe that they're going to be burdened with complexity and forced to deal with issues that many feel incapable of dealing with and many just don't want to be bothered dealing with. So they asked the government for some studies that would at least include the voices of stakeholders.

A further and I guess their final recommendation in their submission was that there be "a 5 year moratorium on any further initiatives on unbundling or restructuring for electrical and natural gas utilities." I'm not sure how realistic that is at this point, Mr. Chairman. We seem to be down the road so far that turning back becomes difficult. Maybe putting a moratorium on it is possible, but there doesn't seem to be much willingness on the part of the government at this point to listen to those kinds of pleas, which is unfortunate.

The association I think raises the question about what happens if all of this fails? Even with the best of intentions, if this doesn't turn out the way that the government is assuring us it will, what's going to happen to consumers and to customers in this province? Where are we going down the road if all of the regulations and all of the laws and all of the changes and all the ideology end up creating a situation that doesn't deliver gas and electricity at a reasonable price to homes and in a reliable fashion? It's a question that should have been raised much earlier. What is the price of failure should this not work?

I started out indicating that I was impressed with the submission of the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops and Gas Alberta Inc., who made the submission, and they raise some excellent points and in language that is certainly welcome after what we're used to in wading through the legislation, Mr. Chairman.

I think that with that, I'll conclude for the moment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: Shall the progress of Bill 19 be reported when the committee rises? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report progress on bills 27 and 19.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on Bill 27 and Bill 19.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:51 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 19, 2003 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 2003/03/19
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Welcome.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui j'ai 10 invités assis dans votre galerie à la suite de la célébration ce matin à la rotonde marquant la cinquième édition des Rendez-vous de la Francophonie et la Journée Internationale de la Francophonie, qui se déroulera le 20 mars. Je leur demanderais de se lever à tour de rôle. Ils sont M. Luketa M'Pindou, vice-président de l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta; Mme Claudette Tardif, doyenne de la Faculté Saint-Jean; M. Paul Pelchat, président de l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta, régionale d'Edmonton; Mme Élane Lafèche, présidente de la Fédération des parents francophones de l'Alberta; Mme Thérèse Conway, présidente de la Fédération des aînés francophones de l'Alberta; Mme Patricia Rijavec, présidente de l'Institut Guy-Lacombe de la famille; M. Richard Murphy, président de la Chambre économique de l'Alberta; Mme Rita Hébert, présidente du Centre d'arts visuels à Edmonton; M. Corey Loranger, président de la Francophonie Jeunesse de l'Alberta; et M. Denis Tardif, directeur du Secrétariat francophone. S'il vous plaît, joignez-vous à moi pour leur souhaiter la bienvenue.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the mayor of Turner Valley, Her Worship Kelly Tuck. Kelly is in your gallery this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask all hon. members to give her the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of individuals who participated in a fund-raising auction held this past November in support of the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation. These very generous farm leaders purchased an auction item in support of that foundation. That auction item was lunch with me and a visit to the Legislative Assembly today. Visiting the Assembly are David Blackwood, chairman of the Alberta Turkey Producers; Bill Feenstra, chairman of the Alberta Milk Producers; Kent Olson, president of the Alberta Cattle Feeders Association; and Bill Wildeboer, chairman of the Alberta Pork Association. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce some teachers and helpers and a few students from the Connections for Learning school, and I do owe them an apology. As they were coming up to the House, I was going down to have our picture taken. I'd like Kim Herbert, Heidi Zwickel, Heather Marrelli, Hilda Hildebrand to stand and receive the welcome along with their students.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Merci, M. le Président. It's my pleasure today to introduce a member of the Northern Alberta Development Council as well as a very longtime resident of the constituency of Fort McMurray, the oil sands capital of the world. He has sat on road committees for years on end and is, indeed, a former bank manager of the Commerce bank in Fort McMurray. It's my pleasure to introduce Mr. Arthur Avery. I'd ask him to rise in the members' gallery and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's a great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you two young women who are visiting us from Ukraine. Our first guest is Daria Koucherets. She's here from Ukraine's capital of Kiev, and for the past five months she's been studying economics at the University of Alberta's Faculté Saint-Jean. She is one of the recipients of the Alberta/Ukraine special recognition award, which our Premier announced during his historic mission to Ukraine last may. She was also a guest at our most recent meeting of the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations, and she's pursuing a PhD. She's already fluent in Ukrainian, English, Russian, and French, and perhaps others that I'm not aware of.

Our second guest is Natalia Mykolska. She arrived here in Edmonton on February 5, and she joins the Alberta International and Intergovernmental Relations department through a six-month internship under the Canada/Ukraine internship program administered by the Centre for Trade Policy and Law at Carleton University. She's providing research support and assistance also to our Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukraine Relations. She has a law degree and a master's degree in European studies, and I'm delighted that she's here joining us.

I see that they are both standing. [remarks in Ukrainian] Please join me in welcoming them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to the members of this Assembly it's my pleasure to introduce 20 residents of the Lions residence in Castle Downs led by group leader Mrs. Gerda Rebekowich. Also, it is impossible for me to name all the individuals, but I must identify one lady who, as it turns out, was my high school teacher, Miss Flaman. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 50 bright and energetic grade 6 students from Lago Lindo elementary school. They're accompanied today by teachers Mrs. Murray and Mr. Peters as well as parents Janice Krill, Greg Mallet, and Barb Kent. They are seated in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of introductions today. First, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly parents who are worried about what the government's budget cuts to our public education will do to their children's future. My guests are seated in the members' gallery. They are Hayley Grundy, Melanie Shapiro. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also thrilled to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly 29 international students from the University of Alberta who are accompanied by their group leader, Miss Constanza Kehling. I believe they are sitting in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine, Marilyn Bercovich. Marilyn is very concerned with services to autistic schoolchildren in our public school system. I'd ask Marilyn to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly parents who are worried about the government's budget cuts and how they will affect their children's school. I believe my guests are seated in the members' gallery. They are Karen Ferrari and Preet Sara. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has replaced democracy with three draconian decrees. Using a political sledgehammer to end debate on controversial bills which this government has no mandate for is an abuse of the trust Albertans have placed in their government. Albertans always demand to know what this government is up to. My first question is to the Premier. Given the high utility bills, that are the number one concern of Albertans, how can this government continue to force their energy deregulation policy on Albertans?

1:40

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that was the most confusing preamble I think I've ever heard.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, he's playing to the audience.

Mr. Klein: He must be playing to the audience, Mr. Speaker. He starts out about the use of time allocation and somehow melds that into the whole utility question. I don't know how one relates to the other in the slightest bit other than one of the pieces of legislation, of course, alludes to energy. To answer the question, I'm not sure even what the question was.

Mr. MacDonald: What Alberta consumers are confused about is your energy deregulation policy.

Again to the Premier: is this government so ashamed of its energy deregulation policy that the Premier and this government are forced to sever and end public discussion on energy deregulation because you're afraid that the consumers are going to find out the truth about your energy deregulation policy?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get into legislation. That is before the Legislative Assembly, and there will be ample time, notwithstanding time allocation, to debate the issue. What the residents of this province want to see is the business of government being done, not dragged out, not talked out time after time after time for purely political reasons. They want to see legislation passed, and the legislation will provide a much better scenario for competition, for customer safety, for access to choice. That's what it's all about.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: if we can't debate energy deregulation policy in this Assembly, will the Premier agree to a provincewide radio debate immediately with the Official Opposition on this issue to let Albertans know what the government is really doing to them and their expensive utility bills?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there have been to my knowledge seven hours of debate already. Seven hours. There's not very much that can't be said in 10 or 15 minutes. It's when the same things are repeated over and over and over again, it's when the Liberals get up and grandstand for purely political reasons that we have to bring in time allocation, which, in my mind, is the responsible thing to do in order to bring about reasonable closure to an issue and to demonstrate to Albertans that we are interested in doing the business of the Alberta people and not political grandstanding.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government has spent over $7 billion on energy deregulation, seven hours of debate is not too much to ask.

Now, headlines also tell the truth, and this says, "Small business grumbles over electricity deregulation." The Premier cannot ignore the truth, so I hope that the Premier has had an opportunity to have a squint at this morning's business section and knows firsthand how small business feels about energy deregulation. To the Premier. Since energy deregulation nearly one-quarter of small businesses surveyed report electricity rate hikes of 50 percent, and this is before the latest price spike. How can the Premier state that electricity deregulation in this province has been successful?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't know what the Official Opposition would like to do. Would they like to go back to regulation, to brownouts, to blackouts, to a situation where there was no incentive to bring new power onstream to provide competition, to have marketers out there offering customers various kinds of deals relative to electricity?

Mr. Speaker, I go back to a comment I made either yesterday or the day before in the Legislature. We heard nothing, absolutely nothing, from the Liberals when the price of electricity was 4.4 cents a kilowatt-hour. You know, if the price is up, then they yell and scream. When the price is down, they say absolutely nothing other than perhaps mislead the Alberta public by going out and saying: we're responsible for the low prices of electricity. So when the price is up, blame the government. When the price is down, they take the credit. That's the way it is, and that's how they like to play politics.

Mr. MacDonald: Let's go back to yesterday. Can the Premier tell Albertans where they can buy electricity for 4.4 cents a kilowatt-hour? I'm sure they will want to phone his office and get in on that deal. Tell us where you can get electricity for that price.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if he would keep his ears open and his mouth shut for a change, he would probably hear what I said. I said that six months ago it was 4.4 cents a kilowatt-hour. Six months ago, not yesterday. They can't buy it today for that particular price, but there's nothing that says that it won't go down in the future. Electricity like any other commodity fluctuates. It goes up, and it goes down. That happens in a regulated market or in a deregulated market. If he needs any more clarification, I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is clearly referring to an article on a survey reported by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Now, I think the Department of Economic Development keeps close figures on what occurs in small business, and I would ask the Minister of Economic Development to supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that as the price of electricity goes up, the government's popularity goes down, can the Premier explain how the lowest offer received for the last unit of generation required to meet demand sets the Power Pool price? This is not a free market. Will the Premier now commit to change the system so that the Power Pool sets one low rate for all Alberta customers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to how the Power Pool operates, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Speaker, in response to the preamble I would like to have the hon. Minister of Economic Development talk a little bit and answer a question relative to the scenario as it exists in Alberta today for small business.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to offer this input. When I got elected with the group in 2001 – and a great group it is – the original premise that was put forth by the opposition is that this province was on its way to economic ruin because of the situation which was then electrical deregulation and gas prices. We listened over and over in that session about how this province was clearly going to lose any kind of Alberta advantage that they talked about. Well, my desk is full of evidence that proves them absolutely wrong – absolutely wrong – and I'd like to share some of it with you.

I would like to start with some of the real indicators of the economy. The capital investment . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please, please, please. We've now had five minutes on this set.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An inner-city Edmonton school must cut close to $300,000 from its budget. Gone is the equivalent of three teachers, gone are the smaller grade 1 classes gained as a result of the small class size project research, and gone is part of the reading recovery program. My questions are to the Premier. How can the government claim that Edmonton schools are adequately funded when this inner-city school must face such devastating cuts?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there are numerous stories from schools throughout this province that tell of the profound success of the students and of the experience of teachers and the experience of parents, and I'd be glad to go through this list. The Liberal opposition, of course, is intent on finding only the negative, pinpointing very specific schools where there might be a problem – we don't know – a school . . .

An Hon. Member: There are lots of schools.

Mr. Klein: Lots of schools, and there are lots of success stories. He said that lots of schools have problems. But that is the purpose of the opposition: to go around and tell Albertans how bad things are. I take great exception to statements that budget cuts – there are no budget cuts. Stay tuned and see what happens when the budget is tabled. As a matter of fact, there's been a 46 percent increase in education funding over the past six or seven years. A 46 percent increase. Where do they get this notion? How can they tell people such untruths as to say that there are budget cuts? And they get away with it. That's the unfortunate thing about it. It's shameful, and they should stand up and apologize to the Alberta public.

Dr. Massey: You might want to ask your Economic Development minister.

How many budget-cutting horror stories does the Premier need to hear before he moves to adequately fund Edmonton schools? How many stories do you need to hear, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, this is absolutely shameful. It is not the truth. There are no budget cuts. As I said, there has been a 46 percent increase in spending over the last six years or seven years. There's been a 6 percent growth in enrollment. There are no budget cuts. They are not telling the truth, and they should be ashamed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. My last supplemental is to the Minister of Learning. Why are grade 1 class sizes increasing in this school given that the government spent half a million dollars in research showing that just exactly the opposite should happen?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I alluded to yesterday, we just finished our class size study, which showed that the size of classes in Edmonton public has actually decreased slightly this year. The average size in kindergarten, I believe, was 19.7. The average size in grades 1 to 6 was in the 23 range, slightly lower than it was last year. When it comes to the individual schools, it is the Edmonton public school board's responsibility how they shift resources around. Those are the facts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents in Edmonton are outraged that core school programs are facing the axe. For example, Windsor Park elementary is facing the loss of three support teachers who provide ESL instruction and work with struggling students. Parents will keep putting the pressure on this government until it relents. To the Minister of Learning: will the minister accept his responsibility and tell this House what concrete actions he will take to prevent the loss of three teachers and an increase in class sizes at Windsor Park elementary?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the actions that we have already taken is the audit of Edmonton public. As I've said in this House before, we have already achieved in the range of approximately $4 million or $5 million. We hope to have the results of that audit done by the end of next week, although it could be a little later than that.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to budget decreases, I have to emphasize that there have been no budget decreases. There have been no budget cuts in Alberta since 1995. Over that time, we've put 46 percent – 46 percent – back into the education system.

Some Hon. Members: How much?

Dr. Oberg: Forty-six percent. There has been an increase in school-age population of around 6 percent over that time frame.

The other point that I really have to say is that the teachers received an increase of around 14 percent, making them the highest paid in Canada by about 8 to 10 percent per year. Our students do the best of anywhere in Canada and, arguably, the world.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister didn't answer my question. Let me repeat it. Let me repeat the question to him. How does the government expect children at Windsor Park to learn in an environment where class sizes already average 27 students even before the loss of three teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that it is the Minister of Learning's responsibility to dictate to each individual school where and how their resources should be allocated. We allocate our resources to the Edmonton public school board. They have subsequently allocated them out to their schools. We have found some issues, we have found some problems with the way that Edmonton public is putting out their dollars, but again it is preliminary data, and we hope to have the final data by the end of next week or the first part of the week after.

Dr. Pannu: My second supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why are parents at Edmonton schools being forced to fund-raise at casinos in order to purchase computers, computers that should be funded by the government as part of the core curriculum?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I think that the real question that needs to be asked in Edmonton is why Edmonton Catholic is doing so well and why Edmonton public is having issues. They have exactly the same funding formula. Edmonton Catholic has signed an agreement. They're doing well. So I believe that that's the real issue that needs to be discussed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Enforcement of Access Orders

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many calls to my constituency office deal with the breakup of families. The problem is further compounded by parents failing or refusing to abide by court-ordered maintenance payments and/or access orders. This government deals with breach of maintenance orders in a number of ways to ensure enforcement. However, the same cannot be said for breach of access orders, leaving court action as the only recourse. Can the Minister of Justice please explain why his department does not take steps to enforce access orders with the same enthusiasm and energy as it does with maintenance orders?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comment being made about the enthusiasm of enforcement with respect to maintenance orders, because that's a very, very important part of government policy in terms of helping children and families in Alberta. The maintenance enforcement program has the legislative authority to enforce court-ordered child maintenance payments but, as the member rightly points out, does not have the same direct involvement in the enforcement of access orders, nor does it have the legislative authority to enforce access orders. Maintenance enforcement provides the program the authority to collect and disburse payments on behalf of the program's creditors and debtors, and it can't be emphasized enough how important that is to children in the province of Alberta. No one need fear the enthusiasm of the maintenance enforcement program if they pay their child support payments as ordered by the courts.

Custody and access are not related issues, however, Mr. Speaker. We've done surveys in terms of bringing forward the new family law, which we promised to bring forward to the House this spring, and in discussion with Albertans they indicated again that they do not believe that maintenance and access ought to be linked. Maintenance is with respect to the obligation of parents to support their children, and that's an important issue. Access is also very important but separate from maintenance issues and shouldn't be linked. The enforcement of access orders is done by people who exert their access rights through the courts. It's an expensive process sometimes. Sometimes it's a very problematic process. But the only way that you can actually have someone ordered to carry out an activity is through the process of the courts.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Obviously, it is very expensive to hire lawyers to do this, to go through the courts, but not very effective because the original order is ignored. So what's the minister prepared to do to bring fairness and equity to this system?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first thing, of course, is the legislative framework for that, and we have the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed and her maintenance review of a few years ago. That committee made some recommendations with respect to access. Of course, the hon. Member for Red Deer-South piloted a bill through this House in 2000 which strengthened the access provisions under the Provincial Court Act and in other legislation which provides parents the opportunity to more easily enforce their access orders. It isn't completely effective at this stage, Mr. Speaker. We do have to do more to look at how we can assist parents in enforcing access, because I can't say strongly enough that children having access to their parents and parents being able to stand in the position of being a parent to their child is extremely important, separate from the issue of maintenance but extremely important. More needs to be done to allow that, but I think we can look to the good work that the hon. Member for Red Deer-South did in bringing forward that amendment in 2000. It is being much more effective than it was in the past. People are finding that they can use that process to enforce their access orders, and we'll do everything we can within reason to streamline that process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

2:00 Legal Guardians' Access to Medical Information

Ms Blakeman: Well, thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Many elderly people who can no longer make decisions about their own health care are fortunate enough to have relatives whom they can appoint as guardians. However, these legal guardians are being denied access to medical information about their relatives and are precluded, therefore, from making a proper decision about their care. My questions today are to the minister of health. Is it a hole in the legislation that's preventing guardians from accessing necessary medical information, or did the government leave the law open to inconsistent interpretation by on-site staff?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, in our review of the Health Information Act we have made some changes as it relates to who may or may not get appropriate health records for the purposes of finding out what's happened to an individual with respect to their medical treatment and so on. If there is a suggestion here that there needs to be a further amendment made, I'm certainly willing to entertain that, but to this point this is the first time that this issue has been raised by this hon. member or by anybody, to my knowledge.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, given that it's been raised a number of times by elder advocacy groups, I'm surprised the minister hasn't heard.

I take it, then, that he will accept an amendment from this side during the debate on the Health Information Act this spring.

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, she's certainly entitled to bring forward an amendment. We are interested in making sure that our legislation is good legislation. We're not unwilling to look at constructive amendments from the hon. member, from her or other hon. members of this Assembly. If it's a constructive amendment, we'd certainly be willing to entertain it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. An additional issue then: given that auxiliary hospital staff told one legal guardian that she would have to pay to see her elderly mother's medical chart, can the minister explain the rationale behind this decision to allow charging for essential information?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'm left at a disadvantage in that I'm not aware of this particular set of circumstances, but if the hon. member wishes to bring it to my attention by way of correspondence and is able to document that this in fact was the case, then I'd be certainly more than happy to look into it for her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Electricity Marketing

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar related an incident in which an employee of an electricity retailer allegedly used unfair pressure tactics to convince an elderly Albertan to sign a long-term electricity contract. Now, the member asked the Premier: "How is this government ensuring that an energy marketer is not abusing the trust of a consumer or exploiting any fear or lack of knowledge or experience of a customer?" Such allegations are of concern to me, Mr. Speaker, and therefore my questions today are for the Premier. Could the Premier please outline for this Assembly and for all Albertans what measures are in place to protect consumers from high pressure or unfair sales tactics in the marketing of electricity?

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the question was asked yesterday, I didn't have all the information before me. Like all members of the government side I was concerned with allegations made in the House, and I was also concerned, more concerned as a matter of fact, to read a Liberal news release yesterday that was maliciously titled Gov't Policy Leaves Seniors Vulnerable to High-Pressure Sales.

No government can guarantee that there will never be unscrupulous salespeople, regardless of what kind of product is being offered for sale. What the Alberta government does do is guarantee that there are strong, effective laws in place to protect Albertans who are approached by salespeople who use inappropriate or illegal pressure tactics. Under the leadership of the Minister of Government Services our government has developed a very strong set of rules to protect consumers in the area of electricity marketing in particular. I'm going to go through it, Mr. Speaker, because it's very important. The allegations raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar were very serious and very misleading.

Under the electricity marketing regulation of the Fair Trading Act all electricity marketing companies must be licensed, must post a $1 million security bond, must ensure that all employees comply with a 17-point code of conduct. Under this code of conduct marketers must show identification when approaching a consumer; make timely, accurate, and truthful comparisons regarding their product or service; and ensure that all data they use to support their claims is reliable. It is also very important for members to know that consumers may cancel any agreement to buy electricity from a marketer within 10 days for any reason and without penalty. So if someone has second thoughts about a contract after signing, they have every right to cancel that contract.

In summary, protection for consumers of electricity is very strong, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Alberta has such strong rules in place to protect consumers, can the Premier tell the Assembly what penalties are in place for anyone who is found guilty of breaking those rules?

Mr. Klein: Again, Mr. Speaker, quite contrary to the very misleading headline, Gov't Policy Leaves Seniors Vulnerable, under our legislation penalties for violating these rules are severe. A marketer found guilty of breaking these rules is subject to a fine of up to $100,000 or two years in jail or both. In the case that was raised in the House yesterday, I understand that Government Services is looking into the practices of the marketer in question to decide if any further action is warranted.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, my second supplemental is to the Premier. Where can Albertans go to get more information about their rights as consumers or to file complaints about marketers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the department has made widely available two very useful publications, which, again, the hon. Liberal Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar failed to mention, purposely and maliciously, in his news release, a consumer tip sheet called Electricity Marketing: What Consumers Should Know and a booklet entitled How to Shop for Electricity. As well, any consumer who requires further information or has complaints about the conduct of an electricity marketer can call the toll-free consumer information line to get immediate assistance. The number is 1-877-427-4088. I hope he took it down, and I would hope also that if members of the opposition are serious about helping consumers, they will pass this information on to constituents. That would do a lot more good than issuing ill-informed, malicious, and misleading and harmful news releases.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Private Surgical Facility Contracts

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, contracts that this government approves for surgical services between health regions and private operators state, "The Operator will comply with all requirements of the Occupational Health and Safety Act." My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What action will the minister take when an operator violates this section of the contract?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, one is not properly posing a question in the House if it is hypothetical. I did ask the hon. member in a very reasonable fashion just yesterday that if he was aware of such circumstances where a private surgical facility operator was breaching a particular occupational health and safety provision, he ought to bring it forward. I did that yesterday: 25th Legislature, Third Session, Tuesday afternoon, March 18, issue 17 at page 559.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I certainly would take the matter up if such an allegation were brought forward and it were demonstrated to be in fact correct. I would take it up with the minister responsible for occupational health and safety, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, and it would depend, of course, on the nature of the breach. Is it a major breach? Is it a minor breach? This is the reason why our House rules say that you cannot ask a hypothetical question. If he does have facts, then he ought to bring them forward in the proper manner.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, it's not credible that this minister doesn't know about this violation. I have raised it repeatedly in this Assembly, and charges have been laid.

What policies exist to deal with senior medical staff of regional health authorities who face charges of endangering the health and safety of their employees?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, again we have an hon. member asking a question based on hypothesis or innuendo. I asked him, again, in a very reasonable fashion just yesterday that if he was aware of such breaches, then he ought to bring them forward. To make such allegations in this House – and he did indicate that he's made them in this House – without providing documentation, without providing any kind of evidence of such allegations in fact being true, it is very difficult to answer. That is exactly the reason why we do not allow in our rules hypothetical questions to be asked.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, charges have been laid.

Can the minister explain – probably not, but I'll try – how a private operator can hold a contract approved by his department while charges are being pursued against that operator by another government department?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, he has not identified who this operator is. He has not identified what the charges are. He has not provided any information or evidence of his allegation. I've asked, a very reasonable request, for this hon. member to provide the evidence of the allegations of which he speaks. To make such insinuations about people who are not in this Assembly and not able to answer those charges themselves is entirely inappropriate.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

International Travel Restrictions

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans travel internationally for pleasure or on business, and I know from my previous working life that this is a favourite time for school field trips to international destinations, and of course it's also a popular time for family travel. As far as the efforts to maintain trade and cultural ties, ministers, government officials, and government of Alberta employees occasionally travel out of the country. My first question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. With the global uncertainty and impending war in Iraq, does the Alberta government plan to restrict travel by Alberta government officials?

Mr. Jonson: The government has indeed approved a temporary travel restriction policy in the event of war with Iraq, and it applies to all government MLAs and public employees on government business. They will be restricted from traveling outside North America after war is declared or under way. This restriction is designed as a safety measure, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government is being cautious in light of what could develop globally, and the travel restriction will be in effect for two weeks to allow us to fully assess the international situation. Exceptions may be considered on a case-by-case basis, depending on the importance of the proposed travel.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Learning. What information has he provided to school groups planning international travel at this time?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday afternoon I sent a letter to all school board chairs, and if I may quote from this, I will be tabling this at a later time.

We do not recommend travel to any countries listed in the travel advisories by the department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade. In addition to Iraq and Afghanistan, as of today, travel is not recommended in much of the Middle East, and a number of countries in Africa and Southeast Asia. I also urge you to exercise caution with travel plans that include stops or travel to the United States and Europe.

Mr. Speaker, ultimately it is up to the school boards, but I do hope that they look at the Department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade web site to determine the day-to-day travel advisories that are being posted on that site.

Mr. Maskell: My second supplemental is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What information can he provide to other Albertans who might be planning trips outside of the country?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government, of course, cannot prevent members of the public from traveling. However, given the current world situation, members of the public are strongly encouraged to ensure that they are fully informed before making international travel plans. As the hon. Minister of Learning has just said, before traveling, everyone should check out the countries with respect to warnings that have been issued by the federal government. It also has been said that information is available on the government of Alberta web site, link to Security, and people should also make sure that they know their rights as consumers and what options are available if they decide to cancel as they go about arranging travel.

Naming of Natural Areas

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, Albertans have been blessed with a province whose natural attributes are both beautiful and eclectic. There are many responsibilities that accompany such blessings. One of these is the responsibility to name our province's natural areas and landmarks. Unfortunately, this government has turned what should be a nonpartisan exercise into a highly political process, with parks named after former but still living high-ranking Tory politicians. Why has the Minister of Community Development refused to consult with the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation on the naming of natural areas even when the explicit mandate of this organization is to be the naming authority in this province?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a good question. Unfortunately, she just has it a little bit wrong. In fact, within the act in question the minister does have the right to consult with whomever he wants, obviously, but more importantly has the right to name whichever provincial parks he or she wishes to. There is a process, however, whereby certain other parts of the Historical Resources Foundation may be consulted with respect to the naming of local areas or other types of geographic parts of the province.

Insofar as provincial parks are concerned, they are exclusively under the act, with the minister having the right to make those appointments. A proper consultation process is followed through that, and that's the process that I followed.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why has the province made the naming of natural areas and landmarks a political process, contrary to former cabinet ministers in this government and to long-standing conventions and traditions adhered to where physical features of provinces are not named after living individuals?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, those can be named after whosoever it's the pleasure of the minister to name, following the consultation he or she undertakes. If the member has a particular case in point that she wishes to raise, I'd be happy to respond more fully to her, but the fact is that the legislation, as far as I remember it anyway, is very clear. That allows the minister to name a certain protected area or protected space howsoever the minister wishes to do so, and we have named many of these. We're very proud of the special places we have. It's been a tremendously successful program, and it came to a successful conclusion on July 24, 2001.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: when is this government going to realize that the natural areas and landmarks in this province should be nonpolitical zones for all Albertans, which was recognized by a former minister of this government? Steve West made that commitment.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, we have some of the most incredible scenery, the most incredible, beautiful parts that any of the world could ever hope to have right here in Alberta. There were a couple of people who come to mind that were very instrumental in ensuring that this particular program of special places came into being. One of them was a former Premier. One of them is the current Premier when he was the Minister of Environment. Another one is a late cabinet minister who was involved in the parks and protected areas. So as you look at some of these very special programs, which, by the way, are sanctioned and endorsed by world-reputed organizations, I don't think it goes too far and it certainly is within keeping to have some of them recognized and named in honour of those people who helped make them happen.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. McCauley school is a high-needs inner-city school in my riding of Edmonton-Highlands. Despite student numbers staying the same, the McCauley school budget will be $280,000 less this September. This is very significant and will mean three fewer teachers at the school, two fewer support staff, and larger class sizes. Meanwhile, another school in my riding, Riverdale elementary, is facing about a 15 percent cut in its budget next year, resulting in the loss of two teachers. My question is to the Minister of Learning: why is the government placing high-needs inner-city children at risk through its refusal to make up the shortfalls caused by the recent teachers' settlement, thereby resulting in these draconian cuts?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, for about the fifth or sixth time in this Legislative Assembly, there was approximately $298 million that was given to school boards for a $260 million settlement. We are currently working with Edmonton public to find out where their issues are, what is going on with them. We have found a considerable amount of money to date. The audit should be done, again, by the end of next week hopefully, and I'll be able to have more answers for you at that time. We are working with Edmonton public, and we're confident that we can get down to some answers.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister stopped to think about how these cuts will negatively impact on vulnerable children, leaving them to fall through the cracks and not become, ultimately, contributing members of our society?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the premise of the question is absolutely wrong because there have been no cuts to Edmonton public, and there will be not be cuts to Edmonton public in the future.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, how can the minister just brush aside the kinds of cuts being faced by Riverdale school, including larger class sizes and the loss of library, math, computer support, and reading recovery programs?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, Edmonton public stated that they were having a deficit of about 13 and a half million dollars. As I've stated, since that time we have found a considerable amount. We have to put this into perspective. This is on a $600 million budget, so you're talking about 1 or 2 percent at the absolute most. What we need to do is work with Edmonton public, which is exactly what we're doing, and I hope to have some answers for you by the end of next week if the audit is finished at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alberta Supernet

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Whitecourt-Ste. Anne my libraries, community offices, and other public facilities have been patiently waiting for the Alberta Supernet services. I read in a news release that the dispute between Bell West and Axia has been resolved. To the Minister of Innovation and Science: what is your department doing to ensure that the construction schedules that are in front of them today are being approved in a timely manner to get on with the work that needs to be done?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Several weeks ago in the House I did report to the Assembly that there was a commercial dispute between Bell and Axia and that my responsibility was to make sure that Supernet was built according to the contract and built on time. Since that time, both of the companies and the government have worked very hard to find a resolution to this issue, and yesterday we reached an agreement that will allow Bell to proceed unimpeded in building both the base network and the extended network and will allow Axia to get on with the business of selling services and operating the network, that will be to the benefit of all Albertans.

Mr. VanderBurg: My final question to the same minister: when will I finally see some work in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne on this project?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question. Every member of this Assembly is desirous to see the Supernet hooked up to the facilities in their community. Because of the agreement that was reached yesterday, we are able to now get to the business of actually building the network. We have confirmed and Bell is committed to delivering the project on time by the end of 2004. We will have some amendments to the build schedule, and as soon as those are finalized, we will be reporting on those publicly so that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne will know definitively when the services will be available in his community.

Emergency Preparedness

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, with war looming in Iraq, it's more important than ever that Albertans know that we are prepared for any type of attack. There are concerns about how ready we really are. In addition to the Auditor General's report last year on this province's preparedness, new concerns have surfaced regarding the funding given to our emergency personnel to counter and react to emergencies. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: how can many Alberta police forces be ready for an emergency when they claim that they are underfunded by millions of dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the question is a timely one and an appropriate one for this Assembly. First and foremost, I want to say that the safety and security of Albertans is this government's top priority. I want to say that over the past year we've provided funding to our emergency responders, first responders, in eight municipalities across Alberta, the big and medium-sized cities, to deal with radiological as well as chemical and nuclear. In fact, that equipment is going to first responders based on what they identified. So we're pursuing, again, that objective of keeping Alberta safe, and certainly we're achieving that.

Mr. Bonner: Back to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the 2001-2002 Auditor General's report says that many provincial departments don't have adequate emergency plans, what has your department done to address these concerns?

Mr. Boutilier: Let me first and foremost, Mr. Speaker, describe Alberta's plan. It's to plan for, respond to, and recover from. I can say that in working closely with what the Auditor General had identified, we have 13 ministries, the top critical infrastructure ministries, that have completed their business resumption plans, and not only that, they are being tested. So I can say that we're planning, we're responding, and certainly, if need be, recovering from any kind of event that may result here in Alberta.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the police chief in Calgary has said that this province still has no protocols or divisions of responsibility in case of an attack, do we have these provisions? If we don't, why not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again another very good question. Every municipality in this province, all 360, has emergency operation plans. That is their responsibility as first responders. We're funding, we're trading intelligence, and without question the province of Alberta is being viewed not only in Canada but across North America as perhaps the best prepared in dealing with emergency operation plans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Agricultural Policy Framework

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are concerned with the speed at which the agricultural policy framework negotiations are progressing. They've heard that a number of farm organizations want to delay the implementation for a year because they feel that the April 1 deadline is too soon. My first question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Will the implementation of the safety net chapter of the APF be delayed until 2004?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the safety net chapter, I believe, can be separated out into a couple of areas. All members understand that in Alberta we announced very significant changes to our crop insurance program some six weeks ago, and producers are busy utilizing those programs and, indeed, signing up for them. The outstanding program is, of course, the net income stabilization account, and that is where some of the uncertainty is.

Mr. Speaker, I have encouraged all of our farm groups – and there's one of the chairmen in the gallery today that would recall that as late as yesterday I encouraged them to look at it from an Alberta perspective, to look at this program on the basis of what is best for Alberta producers, because while it is a national program, certainly we have some interests that we want to have dealt with. My concern is that if it is not concluded by April 1, then what protects our producers over the next year? The government of Canada's agriculture minister has clearly said that they are no longer in the CFIP or the income disaster program. So I don't want to see our producers left without that protection. Now, true, Alberta has a farm income disaster program of its own, which the government of Canada contributes to in part, but because Alberta's program is more enhanced than any other province's, they only contribute to a part of it. We would lose that contribution.

I believe that we have to have our industry look at the program and say, "Does this meet our needs?" and get on with it. I am very concerned about our being one year more without a good net income stabilization program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the same minister. What if negotiations don't produce a finalized NISA agreement by the April 1 deadline?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I prefer to think on the other side and hope that in the next 10 days we will conclude negotiations on that. My understanding is that to conclude this, you have to have seven provinces and 50 percent of the producers in Canada sign off. The preference certainly would be that you would have 10 provinces, the territories, and the government of Canada sign off, and that would give you a hundred percent of the producers. However, as I've indicated and maybe somewhat selfishly, my concern is with the producers in our province and to ensure that they have every protection that they can and the best risk management tools that are available to them to make the best decisions on their operation.

This government has not let our producers down in the past; we won't let our producers down in the future. We'll continue to have programs. Are they the best? Well, I think that we could improve them, and a successful NISA conclusion would do that. So we're going to work hard with our officials, with our industry leaders – our industry leaders, not people from somewhere away that tell us what's best for us. If our industry leaders say that this is a program that'll work for them, we'll be signing that program off.

Royal Canadian Legion, Cadomin Branch

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to congratulate the Royal Canadian Legion, Cadomin branch 124, who will be celebrating their 70th anniversary on March 23. Over the past weekend the Royal Canadian Legion, zone 2, had their rally in Cadomin, and it was well attended by 80 people. This is an interesting note as the community of Cadomin only has 80 permanent residents. At the time of the Royal Canadian Legion branch 124's charter in 1933, the town of Cadomin was thriving, with approximately 2,500 residents. The Legion was the heart of the community, and the community was one of the biggest along what is called the Coal Branch.

The Legion is a meeting place and plays a vital role in the community, offering recreational facilities, and works closely with the recreation board and the volunteer fire department. The Legion presently has 58 members, and they are scattered across Canada. I wish this Royal Canadian Legion branch in Cadomin all the success in the coming years. Congratulations, Legion members.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Richard Christensen

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud and honoured to stand in the House today to tell you about Richard Christensen. Richard Christensen is an 11-year-old boy from G.H. Dawe school in Red Deer-North who paid attention in class when Wes Van Bavel from the Red Deer fire department taught fire safety. Two days after learning about fire safety, Richard went into his kitchen to get a glass of water and saw flames and smoke coming out of the oven door. Richard then saw the fire flare up higher and remembered what to do. Richard remembered not to throw water on a grease fire because it will get bigger and that the first step was to turn off the source of heat, so he switched off the oven and ran to a neighbour for help. The neighbour was able to put out the grease fire and saved Richard's home.

Richard has been awarded the national Gateway Safety Net Publications award and is a hero to his family and his neighbourhood. I want to commend Richard and his neighbour for their quick thinking and for their quick action. I also commend the Red Deer fire department and Wes Van Bavel for an excellent fire safety program that works. Congratulations, Richard. We are all very proud of you.

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. Du 10 au 23 mars, 2003, on célèbre au Canada entier Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie. Durant cette période de temps on célèbre les communautés francophones afin de promouvoir la langue et la culture françaises tant par ses activités sociales et ses célébrations que par sa dimension humaine et communautaire. Les Rendez-vous contribuent à renforcer les liens entre les anglophones et les francophones du Canada et favorisent un plus grand respect entre ces deux communautés. De plus en plus nos municipalités albertaines se joignent aux Rendez-vous en tenant des cérémonies pour reconnaître leurs communautés francophones. Parmi ces municipalités cette année on compte Edmonton, Lethbridge, St. Paul, et Calgary. Félicitations à ces municipalités.

En guise de conclusion, M. le Président, vous me permettez un mot sur l'Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta. L'association a été fondée en 1926, et depuis son établissement l'association maintient un membership imposant qui se chiffre aujourd'hui de plus de 7,000 membres. L'association a toujours encouragé le développement d'un réseau de bénévoles d'un bout à l'autre de la province, comprenant 10 régionales, un regroupement jeunesse fort et actif, une fédération des aînés, une fédération de parents, et de nombreux autres organismes et groupes. L'association a appuyé la fondation de la Faculté Saint-Jean, de la radio française, et de la télévision française en Alberta.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] From March 10 to 23, 2003, Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie are held throughout Canada. During that period of time attention is focused on Francophone communities with the idea of promoting French language and culture as much through community and human relations as through social activities and celebrations.

Les Rendez-vous contribute to the reinforcement of links between Francophones and Anglophones in Canada by fostering greater respect between the two communities. More and more of our municipalities are joining in the Rendez-vous by holding ceremonies to recognize their Francophone communities. Edmonton, Lethbridge, St. Paul, and Calgary are some of the municipalities that did so this year. Congratulations to all of them.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, allow me a word on the French-Canadian association of Alberta. The Association canadienne-française de l'Alberta was founded in 1926. Over the years the association has maintained a strong membership that presently stands at 7,000 members. Also, it has encouraged the development of a full network of volunteer organizations throughout the province, including 10 regional offices, a strong and vibrant youth organization, a parents' federation, a seniors' federation, and many more organizations and groups. The association also supported the foundation of the Faculté Saint-Jean and the French radio and television stations in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [as submitted]

Edmonton Journal Indoor Games

Dr. Taft: The spirit of athletics, the fun of competition, the friendship of teammates, the excitement of victory, the glow of fitness and good health: these were all in ample supply last week during the annual Edmonton Journal games. Now in their 25th consecutive year the Journal games are a mainstay on school calendars and an institution of Alberta's indoor track and field season.

This year over 600 schools from Red Deer and north sent over 6,000 students aged six to 18 to the Journal games. For five days the University of Alberta Butterdome rang with cheers and squeals of excitement as children of all abilities raced their best. To add to the fun, there was a teachers' relay, a masters' mile, and an invitational pole vault match. Twenty-seven different events were staged, and over a hundred sets of medals were presented.

Sponsored and organized by the Edmonton Journal and supported by 60 volunteers, these games are a model of efficiency and fun. As a parent, a spectator, and a citizen I am pleased to have this Assembly recognize the Journal games as a wonderful celebration of the very best spirit of both sport and community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Provincial K1 Ski Competition

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last weekend my husband, Gord, and I spent two exciting days at Sunshine Village in the Banff-Cochrane constituency cheering on skiers racing in the provincial kinder 1, or K1, ski competition. Over 120 11- and 12-year-old boys and girls competed for their area clubs, traveling from Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, Edmonton, Pincher Creek, and from centres along the Bow Valley corridor including Calgary.

Alpine Alberta is a ski racing development program under Alpine Canada, which is very ably headed by Ken Read, Olympic skier. More than a hundred proud parents helped the Sunshine Ski Club host the meeting, including ex Canadian ski team racers Bill and Mike Irwin and lifetime parent volunteer and sponsor and skier Randy Tarchuk. The provincial K1 champions, Tristan Tafel from Canmore and Stephanie Irwin from Calgary, are both members of the Banff Alpine Racers Ski Club. On April 4 to 6 Tristan and Stephanie will be part of the four-member Alberta team to the Whistler Cup and international competition of 150 K1 and K2 racers. Stephanie, your family including very proud grandparents, Karen and Gord, wish you well in Whistler.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

2:40 Lac La Biche Fisheries Enhancement Group

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On March 1, 2003, I had the privilege of attending a fund-raising banquet hosted by the Lac La Biche Fisheries Enhancement Group. This group has been an instrumental force in the development of environmental projects in the Lac La Biche area.

Of note, their vision for the Alexander Hamilton park project with the collaboration of the municipality started out as a fishpond and has evolved into a multi-use activities park, which takes away the fish stocks pressure from the surrounding lakes. The Lac La Biche causeway project can be credited to this group's commitment to fisheries resources. They are currently working together with the county and world-renowned scientist David Schindler on a study of the water quality in the lake of Lac La Biche. This group raises tens of thousands of dollars each year and provides an additional $150,000 in volunteer support.

Congratulations to the banquet organizers and all the other community partners for a job well done and another phenomenal success. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Parent Advocacy Groups

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize parent advocacy groups who spend countless hours working with their local schools alongside the teachers and administrators of the schools. These are parents whose primary commitment and concern is that Alberta's children receive the best possible education from kindergarten to grade 12, groups such as Albertans Promoting Public Education and Learning, the Edmonton Advocates for Public Education, Parents Advocating for Children and Teachers, Whitemud Coalition of Schools, the Riverview coalition of schools, Calgary Association of Parent and School Councils, Support Public Education – Act for Kids, Parents Advocating for a Catholic Education, and numerous others on parent school councils, who deserve our sincere thanks and high praise for their passion, dedication, and very hard work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition that has been organized by Joanne Black of Calgary, and this petition states:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to implement the income recommendations of the 2001 MLA Committee Low Income Programs Review.

This is signed by 31 Calgarians. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter from me as minister responsible for multiculturalism to Dr. Celia Smyth, chair of the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations, on the occasion of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, March 21. It's an effort that I certainly support, and I know that all members in the Assembly do as well. Congratulations and thank you to NAARR.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first is from Darcy Handy from Grande Cache, who is very concerned about caribou management in this province.

The next two are from Aileen Pelzer and Eileen Patterson from different areas in Alberta, and they're very concerned about what's happening in Evan-Thomas in Kananaskis, where there is proposed development.

My last tabling is the required number of copies of approximately 850 letters from people very concerned about grizzly bear management in this province. This is one set, Mr. Speaker, and the other four sets were sent to the Clerk's office earlier. As Albertans will know, the Endangered Species Conservation Committee has been recommending that the status of Alberta's grizzly bears be upgraded from a species that may be at risk to one that is threatened with extinction in Alberta, but this government doesn't seem to agree.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings this afternoon. The first one is a research document from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business entitled Still in the Dark, a second look at the impact of electricity deregulation/pricing on Alberta small and medium-sized business.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is a Profile of Alberta Seniors. This is a document that was put together by many people, but one in particular, Mr. Neil Reimer, is a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The third tabling I have is a letter from a parent, Deborah LePage of Edmonton. It is addressed to our hon. Premier, and she is expressing her concern over classroom size and maintenance of our schools.

The fourth letter is again addressed to the hon. Premier. It is from Vern Griesheimer, and it is a letter expressing displeasure with the way the government is dealing with our children's education.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the letter that I alluded to in the answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. This was a letter that was sent out to all school boards yesterday about international travel.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am proud to stand today to table a letter to the Minister of Learning from Dr. and Mrs. Bercovich expressing concerns over cuts to special-needs students and asking the minister: what are they to do?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two letters to table today. The first letter is addressed to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek and copied to me from Mr. R.H. Foerger. Mr. Foerger admits that he is not an expert in school budgets but expresses frustration at the fact that his son's junior high school turns down the heat, forcing students to wear jackets in school. He asks why this is necessary in a province as blessed with natural resources as ours.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is addressed to the Premier from Roger Abbott. Mr. Abbott is urging the Premier to ask for the resignation of the Minister of Learning for some years ago firing the Calgary school board, antagonizing teachers, and refusing to attend public school meetings about education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. My first tabling is a letter from Katherine Koch and Sharon Enslin. The letter draws attention to the increased class sizes and reductions in teachers that Riverdale school faces due to budget shortfalls. The letter then encourages parents to make their frustration and anger known to the Premier and the Minister of Learning.

My second tabling is a notice from McCauley school which was sent home to parents. It indicates to parents that the school will likely have to eliminate three teaching positions, two support staff positions, and create larger class sizes as a result of budget shortfalls for next year.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to stand and take my place to talk to Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. In fact, this is my first opportunity to speak to this bill seeing as in second reading it went through the Assembly Monday evening after 9, and I was otherwise committed and couldn't speak to it.

This is a situation where we see the heavy hand of a large majority government coming forward to push legislation through this House in the fastest possible time, so you have to ask yourself the question: why do they do that? There's a huge majority: 74 out of a total of 83 seats. What would be wrong with them bringing in legislation and taking some time for all Albertans to be able to study it and for opposition to have the opportunity to thoroughly review the legislation, to send it out to various stakeholder groups, to have perhaps on important pieces of legislation, significant pieces of legislation, like Bill 27 is, the opportunity and the time to be able to do things like hold town hall meetings or other kinds of public hearings so that we can get input and have the maximum amount of feedback on legislation? In fact, what would be wrong with the government doing exactly the same thing? Instead, what do we see with this legislation? We see it coming into the House for second reading Monday of this week after 9 p.m., when most people aren't paying attention to what goes on here under the dome, past midnight of that evening, and then brought back today in committee and brought back under the shadow of closure.

What we see when we look at today's Order Paper for only day 18 of this Legislative Assembly is a government motion under notice. In fact, we see three government motions under notice, all three of them dealing with closure. Mr. Chairman, it's now renamed time allocation by this government because they don't like the thought of closure, but time allocation where debate is limited on a bill is still closure no matter how you dress it up and try to trot it out for people to take a look at.

So now after one evening of debate and by our records less than 140 minutes of debate by the Official Opposition, less than 40 minutes of debate by government, less than 50 minutes of debate by the other opposition party represented here in the Legislature, and less than 25 minutes of debate by the minister we're seeing closure brought in on a bill that is a significant bill for this Assembly to be talking about. So Monday night it comes in. This is only Wednesday. Two days later we see a closure motion come in. The hammer will be brought down at what is likely the most available opportunity, perhaps tomorrow, perhaps Monday night, but certainly before we see the spring recess of this Legislature.

Why would they do that? Why would they give this the bum's rush through the Legislature? Because usually that means, in my experience in this Assembly, that something is wrong with the bill or that a large number of people are not going to like the legislation.

So what is this bill all about? Well, if we take a look at the highlights of the legislation, it talks about making employees of the same employers subject to the same dispute resolution process and taking away the right to strike. So union-busting, really, is what happens, I think, when you take away an individual's right to strike. That's been, in my experience, a place where this government has wanted to go for a long time.

We saw right-to-work legislation rear its ugly head in this Legislature some years ago, and it was abandoned for whatever reasons, but I always see it looming just under the surface with quite a few supporters in terms of taking a look at how we can better see this government drive its agenda with as little possible feedback and input from the people who supply the services and the products in this province, the workers, Mr. Chairman. That's always very much of concern to us and very much of concern to people involved in those particular areas. This time it happens to be the regional health authorities. Perhaps after the spring break we'll see that it's school boards and teachers. It looks like that's the kind of agenda we have here.

Another highlight, if you can call it that – really, it's not a highlight as I see it – is excluding nurse practitioners from labour relations coverage. I find that particularly offensive, Mr. Chairman. It's what we see often happens to professions that are disproportionately represented by women. For many reasons they seem to be less able to organize and bring a strong voice to the table. Many of those reasons are because women are still primary caregivers in most households and in fact lead the largest number of single-parent families in the province and across the country. Here we see another problem surfacing for them, and that is that they are going to be excluded from that kind of coverage.

Why would they do that? It's a divide-and-conquer strategy. We've seen it happen before in this Legislature, and here it goes again. It's a real problem when we see health workers losing the right to strike and a particular group singled out for not being able to access coverage.

Another part that this bill talks about is ensuring that severance isn't paid to a person who continues in the same job even though the name of the employer has changed. That tactic can often be used as a trick, Mr. Chairman, and that's definitely a very bad disadvantage for people. It's not their fault that the business name changes for whatever reason. They should have some consistency. If they have an allegiance to an employer by going to work every day and fulfilling the terms of their contract, then the employer also has the same set of responsibilities to the employee, and that's to provide the kind of coverage that was outlined in the original contract of employment and not to be fooling around with that and jeopardizing a person's current benefits or future rights to benefits.

The other part that this bill talks about is an area that I'm not quite as familiar with, and that's creating the four regionwide bargaining units within each health care region, creating 36 bargaining certificates. I will leave that particular part of the discussion for some of my colleagues who are a little more informed on that particular area.

So what are our major concerns here? We fundamentally believe that the right to strike is a human right and shouldn't be taken away from anybody by any government, and if this government thinks that by taking away that right to strike, they are going to be in any way, shape, or form able to improve relationships between workers and themselves, they are sadly mistaken in that.

We're seeing a stage where we're going back into bargaining with some health care workers, where we're seeing possible massive restructuring and definitely at least some significant changes in health care. So we're already living in an environment of great uncertainty for health care in this province and for health care workers.

Instead of operating on a good-faith basis, what this government does is bring in this kind of legislation. If the government thinks that preventing work stoppage by unhappy unionized health care employees by prohibiting strike action – it's not right. Here they have employees already very upset, very apprehensive, and very concerned about what the government is doing. That's certainly not going to stop the potential for work stoppage.

What would be wrong with the government coming to the table in good faith? What would be wrong with them just saying: "We respect your right to strike as a basic human right. We respect your ability to walk away from the table and decide to take job action if you want to, but we don't think it's going to go there. We think that we can operate in good faith in such a manner that good decisions are made and that striking wouldn't be an option that workers would go to." Instead, this government is confrontational and aggressive right off the bat, and that's not a way to problem solve, particularly when we face what are going to be some of the most important decisions that we will make in this decade in terms of how health care is delivered, who delivers it, and how those services are provided on an individual basis.

We've seen enough strikes in the past to know that prohibiting a strike doesn't mean there won't be one. Taking away the right to strike doesn't prevent work stoppage. It just really impedes any kind of conciliatory or amiable labour relations, and I don't think that should be the starting position for any government regardless of how clever they think they are or regardless of how large a majority they have. The day may come, Mr. Chairman, when they pay the price for that kind of work.

It doesn't take much effort by people of this province to take a look at past election results and analyze them and see that in many cases this large majority has a fragile edge to it. Two hundred votes one way or the other and we could've seen quite a different makeup in this Legislature, and 200 votes one way or the other isn't much for groups to start organizing on. I would suggest that we're going to see different strategies during the next election where people are a lot more targeted in what they do and where they go so that they can have a government that becomes more responsive to what it is they're asking for. I think that this is one group of workers that we could see doing exactly that, Mr. Chairman.

If we took a look at what happened in the last election, we would see that what would've happened is that this government would've still been the majority, but we would've seen around 30 or 35 members making up oppositions, more in the New Democratic opposition, more in the Liberal opposition. What that does is significantly change how accountable the government can be. That comes close to starting to put the government in a minority situation, and it's my personal belief that a minority government is the best government for people. While they, generally speaking, don't last very long, on average about nine months, what happens is that they have to respond to the needs of constituents because nonconfidence votes are very close to the potential of daily operating procedures, and consequently they tend to pass legislation that better meets the needs of people in the province. That is very well where this government could find themselves the next time, and that would be a very happy place for me to be. I'm quite happy to be in opposition, especially with the government operating the way it is, and I'm quite happy to be in a position to hold their feet to the fire on issues. It would be immensely easier if we had a larger opposition in this Assembly, and I think this government is walking itself right into that particular corner, and I personally couldn't be happier. Why? Because this government has done a number of things that I find are not very democratic, and this piece of legislation is an excellent example of that.

The government has yet again proven itself, Mr. Chairman, to be a foe to labour unions by taking this step towards abolishing labour unions in Alberta. We see that pitting labour unions against each other in a competition to represent far fewer bargaining units is not healthy for labour relations in Alberta. It is quite surprising that this is the step they took when we have seen such a lack of consultation with the union officials and the government. Not surprising to us who sit here in the Assembly day after day and see the kind of steamroller tactics that this government brings forward, exemplified this week in many cases: by this legislation, by the closure motions being brought in, by their request for additional funding in appropriations, where the government was completely appalled that we would expect them to answer any questions or provide any detail on their request for a $5 billion advance on their yearly spending. It's the way this government has become accustomed to dealing with people, and I believe that this custom of theirs is going to cost them in the long run. In the short run it hurts the people of the province because the government is not responsive. They're not prepared to go to the table and consult in an open kind of comprehensive fashion.

They talk about roundtables and they talk about consultation processes and they talk about mail-in votes and opinions, but when we pull off the layers of the detail, what we see is a government who gives lip service to those processes. We see mail-in consultations where questions are tailored to deliver a certain kind of response. Much to the chagrin of the government, I think, they didn't get the kind of response they wanted to on the last one, which was the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, so I'm sure that they'll continue to consult over the years until they do get the answer that they want. We see a number of roundtables where people sitting at the table say that if, in fact, there ever are outcomes of the roundtable process, they don't match what they heard at the table, and they find them to be a waste of time, and they opt out of the process.

We've seen, unfortunately, this year that a number of environmental groups agreed that they will not be involved in these consultation processes of the government anymore because the outcomes don't even come close to those decisions that they thought were made at the table. We have seen that many organizations and businesses and people have expressed concern about people opting out of the process because they feel that even if their opinions are contrary to what that group brought to the table, they're an important part of the process and they result in better decisions. But this government doesn't want better decisions. They want a process that gets from A to B as quickly as possible and that meets their political agenda and their particular political filters that they make decisions by. In the long run I don't have a problem with them getting there that way because, of course, they're representing particular positions and they would like to have decisions tailored that way, but often we see much better decisions made when the government is inclusive, when it incorporates other ideas.

We all know that if you put five people around the table who think exactly the same way, you're not going to get nearly as good or innovative or forward-thinking results as you do if you put five people around the table who all have divergent views. That's where we get some real progress in terms of initiative and in terms of good ideas, but those haven't been the kinds of processes that this government has wanted or asked for, even in terms of consultation on a key bill like Bill 27, the labour relations restructuring act. That's a real shame because while at the end of the day I'm quite sure that the labour unions and the government wouldn't have come to agreement on this kind of a bill, we would have seen some provisions in the legislation at least that would have recognized the need of health care workers in this province, but it isn't the way that this government likes to do business. In fact, what we see with this legislation is a whole lot of stakeholder work just going right down the drain.

There was a move in the province to voluntarily reduce the number of bargaining units in the health regions, and it was progressing, not as fast as this government wants, but if there's one thing that I have learned after 10 years in this Legislature, it is that legislation that is rammed through at a quick pace always comes back for revision and often comes back with huge flaws in it that end up being costly for Albertans, costly in terms of financial costs and in this case potentially health costs. So that's a real problem.

This government believes everything can be done better by business and by individuals rather than government, but I think historically we have seen that that has not been the case. Historically we have seen that labour unions have a place in the workplace, and I believe that as time goes on, we will see that they continue to have a function in the workplace that is positive and progressive, that labour unions, too, are evolving to a stage where they are more responsive to the needs of people and this government.

I have more to say, Mr. Chairman. I'll be back.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to mercifully put an end to these ramblings. I have to do a little clarification before I speak to the bill. One of them is the fact that a number of people here have made reference in the last couple of days when speaking to this bill about basic human rights, and they have intimated that basic human rights were being denied when someone does not have the opportunity to strike. I would certainly acknowledge that the right to strike is a democratic right, but it's not a basic human right, and we need to clarify that because we in government are certainly in no way looking to deny anyone their basic human rights. In fact, we spend a great deal of energy working at making sure that people have the opportunity to exercise their basic human rights.

To the point, Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity to speak to Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. It is my observation – and I know of others too – that it's not an easy piece of legislation to debate because it does deal with what some might identify as competing values. I don't see them as competing, but I see them as complementary. The right to be treated fairly as a worker is very, very important, and the right to be treated fairly as a patient is also equally important. The interest behind and the intention behind this particular piece of legislation is to address both of those fair treatment issues. I see this piece of legislation as striking a necessary balance.

The amendments facilitate better operations, fairer working conditions, and, I would say, more effective and seamless patient care. It is important for us to look at it from the perspective, as we all know, of the health care that is provided or those attendant services that surround the direct delivery of health care.

Albertans, I know, should be proud of our health care system, and I receive testimony to that effect frequently from my constituents. I believe that in Alberta we have one of the best and I would say the most progressive in Canada for patients and caregivers alike, but this didn't happen by accident, Mr. Chairman. Since we are leaders in health care, we are that way because we understand that to be the best means to find new ways of delivering health care and being committed to a vision that looks after all that is attendant upon the delivery of health care. When we started down the road towards health reform, we understood that the road was going to get rough from time to time. It's not easy, and indeed we are looking to make sure that they are always decisions that are made for the best of everyone.

We also understand that we must stick to our vision and make the necessary changes that bring us closer to better patient care for all Albertans. In my mind, this means we must be flexible and we must be willing to adapt where we see a need for change, and of course that is what Bill 27, in my estimation, is all about because it, number one, provides the regions with the flexibility they need to use the workforce to the best of its ability. Everybody wants that, those of us in the workforce and those of us who are recipients of the health care provided by the regions. Secondly, it provides a level playing field and fairness for workers. Workers know where they are at as they work within the environment and within the culture and within the, I would even say, ambience of the delivery of health care. Finally, I would argue that it ensures that health care workers are available and that patients can count on those services at all times. We know, number one, that that's what patients and citizens want, and, secondly, we also know that that is what we as workers are interested in providing.

As the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness said in referring to health care reform: it's about being responsive to the needs of Albertans and to the needs of health care workers and providers. I see this legislation as a means to provide that responsiveness. In my mind, Bill 27 is necessary legislation to move health care reform forward for the betterment of everyone, reforms that will see Albertans enjoying improved access, expansion of primary health care, a strong workforce, better collaboration among regions, and ongoing sustainability. I also believe that Bill 27 is not the exclusive answer to health reform, but it is a necessary step on the road to that reform.

So providing our regional health authorities with the flexibility to develop the best team of health professionals helps Alberta's health system remain not only the best place to work but also the best place to receive care. I would urge everyone in this Assembly to vote so that we can have the environment we want in the workplace.

The Chair: Before we proceed further in committee on Bill 27, I wonder if we might have the committee's agreement to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wish to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly two guests sitting in our members' gallery that have come to watch the proceedings of the House this afternoon. They are Robbyn and Dallas Ducheminsky from Tofield. Robbyn participated in Mr. Speaker's parliament I believe two years ago and is a first-year university student in the science program at the University of Alberta. Dallas is working here in Edmonton and is also a tremendous golf enthusiast. They're wonderful members of the Tofield community, and I would like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity. I want to thank the House for allowing me to introduce a guest sitting in the public gallery, Mr. Les Steel, president of the Alberta Federation of Labour. I've known Mr. Steel for many, many years and developed a great deal of respect for his commitment to democracy, for being a model citizen and a highly respected and forceful leader of labour in this province. He's here, of course, to watch us debate Bill 27. Bill 27 is a matter of great concern to labour organizations in this province, so he's here to witness the debate. I'll ask Mr. Steel to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities
Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Bill 27 is a piece of legislation that's going to have a very, very profound impact on the rights of Albertans who work in the front lines of our health care system, provide us the services that we need when we are ill, when our health is in crisis, when we are threatened with serious health consequences if we don't get good treatment, and they do a wonderful job, of course, of providing these services to us if and when we need them. This bill, as I said, will have profound consequences, most of them, from their point of view, negative consequences, consequences that they simply find unacceptable. I think the nurses' organizations and other groups to be affected have made their position very clear. The union movement has found the bill so unacceptable, as a matter of fact, that they have chosen to launch a NAFTA challenge to the proposed labour law.

So when I hear the debate in this House about how good this bill is, how it already has or should have the support of every Albertan because it's going to provide flexibility, it's going to provide improved responsiveness, and it's going to improve accessibility, I really find it hard to believe those statements about what this bill was intended to do and the understanding that some of my hon. colleagues have in this House about the intentions behind this bill. That certainly is not how this bill is seen by the labour movement, by the frontline health care workers, and certainly the New Democrat opposition is in agreement with the thrust of the criticism and the profound concerns that nurses, physiotherapists, X-ray technicians, and other workers who will be affected by this bill, whose democratic rights will be taken away by this bill, have on this bill. Their concerns are real. Their concerns are genuine. Their concerns are important for this House to address.

As I mentioned just a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, the one unacceptable feature of this bill is its most antidemocratic nature. This proposed legislation takes the right to strike from all employees of the regional health authorities. The question then, of course, is: why is the right to belong to a union being taken away from the nurse practitioners? That even goes beyond just taking away the right to strike. So that's the second feature of it: the antidemocratic feature. The right to strike will be taken away, will go, will disappear.

The right to belong to a union will disappear for the nurse practitioners. Nurse practitioners, just to draw attention to who these people are, Mr. Chairman, are people who work very hard in their jobs. They've improved their experience, clinical skills, as well as pursued improvement of their academic qualifications so that they can perform tasks that most of their other colleagues who are not licensed practitioners cannot. It's a strange way to both recognize and acknowledge the efforts of this group of practitioners and the commitments that they have made to their professional activities when we take away from them the right to belong to a union in return for their demonstrated commitment to become better practitioners, invest in the development of their professional skills, seek higher professional qualifications, academic qualifications. It's ironic that the very group that's being targeted here for withdrawal of the right to belong to a union, a very, very drastic, antidemocratic step, are the people who in fact are highly committed clinicians and practitioners and professionals. It makes no sense to me, and I haven't heard any justification of why it is that these nurse practitioners should be punished rather than rewarded for their demonstrated commitment to their work and the demonstrated capacity to learn their skills, to expand the pool of skills that they can have, and in fact the demonstrated evidence that they have done so.

It really boggles the mind to hear someone say in this House that this bill is good for everybody, that it is benign, that it should be welcomed because it will improve the health care system. It won't. The system is improved only when the people who deliver the services are fully respected, are given dignity, and also when their morale is put up front as an issue which may be affected by any changes in legislation or framework of negotiations or whatever. This bill, in a sense, strikes at the very root of those factors, those practices, those provisions in the law which will send a positive message to the frontline practitioners and the people who deliver these services to us. So if the morale is to be hurt by the provisions of this bill, the morale of nurses and licensed practitioners and other technical personnel, then why are we proceeding with it?

This is not to say that we shouldn't pay any attention to people who do the toughest and perhaps in some cases the dirtiest work in our hospitals, who keep our operating rooms clean, keep our hospital floors clean, the custodial service workers and the janitorial service workers. These are men and women who work awfully hard on unpleasant jobs to make sure that the standards of cleanliness in our hospitals and the rooms in the hospitals are up to the mark, and they do everything they can to ensure that there's no problem that arises from lack of cleanliness. How are we rewarding them? We are saying: we will take the right to strike away from you so that you can't bargain with your employers on a level playing field.

I heard that this bill is about making the playing field level. When you take away from employees the right to strike, I ask: how? The ultimate weapon that they have to seek parity with employers when they are negotiating is the very one that's being taken away. So I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this provision of the bill that will take the right to strike away from these workers, will in fact make the playing field highly uneven, uneven to the detriment of the very workers on whose skills and ability to provide services we depend.

So these are some of the questions that I hope the minister of health or the Minister of Human Resources and Employment or anyone else in this Assembly would try seriously to address about how this bill in fact is designed to level the playing field. My contention is that it does the exact opposite. There's something Orwellian about the language we are using here. Are there some misconceptions here which are honest and genuine? If that's the case, I'd like to certainly hear from the other side as to why they are claiming that this is a bill designed, in fact, to level the playing field.

So for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I think that since the bill, flawed as it is, is before us in committee stage, we should do everything we can to improve this flawed bill. I have an amendment that I would like to propose. This amendment is ready to be circulated. As the amendment is being circulated to members of the House, I just want to begin speaking about this.

The Chair: Hon. member, we will call this amendment A1. What I would suggest you do is move it, then wait a moment till the members have received a copy. We would ask the pages to deliver it to people who are actually in their seats and then do the rest later.

So if you'd move it, hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Okay, Mr. Chairman. I am ready to move amendment A1, as you have numbered it, to Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. My motion is as follows: I move on behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Highlands that Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, be amended by striking out section 4.

The Chair: Hon. member, I think most people now have or appear to have their amendment, so if you'd begin your explanation, please.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I suppose you are resetting the clock to start ticking or whatever it needs. [interjection] The hon. Treasurer has something to say, but I guess she'll have her turn in a moment. I'm very glad that she's here and paying attention. Wonderful. It's good to see such a healthy interest in the proceedings of this House by the front benches of the government. I'm delighted, indeed, that she's so interested in the bill. In fact, every Albertan should take an interest and pay attention to what the bill is about and what it's likely to do, what harm it will do.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, is a genuine attempt to limit the harm that this flawed bill will do. It simply is an attempt to make sure that we give this House an opportunity to amend this bill so that one of the main flaws in this bill, one of the most antidemocratic aspects of this bill is simply omitted or eliminated or withdrawn from the bill.

The right to strike, as I submitted a few minutes ago respectfully, Mr. Chairman, to all members of the House, is a fundamental right. It's a right that should not be tampered with except under the most extreme conditions, and even then I would hesitate to withdraw the fundamental democratic right. Democratic rights are to be protected by our Constitution, by our Legislatures, by our Parliament, not eroded, not attacked, not withdrawn, not taken away. As democratically elected representatives of the people, it's our obligation to respect both in letter and in spirit what the Constitution has to say with respect to the rights that we have, which protect us against undue and unreasonable treatment, may it come from our governments, may it be coming from employers or others.

So there is this certain notion of inviolability of certain fundamental rights, and it seems to me this bill if amended as I'm proposing will certainly reaffirm our commitment to the inviolable nature of the right to strike. The right to strike is never used by anyone and certainly by people who provide us with health care services unless they're absolutely pushed into a situation where they must use it as a last resort. There's evidence in this province that the right to strike has been a most rarely used instrument by our health care workers. It's not something that's lightly used. It's not something that is lightly recommended to the union rank and file by union leaders.

I would certainly, therefore, call on the House and invite them to look at evidence with respect to how often that right, while it's legislated, while we have kept it here, has been used by health care workers, any category of them who have this right to strike, in the past 20 years. We'll find that only once or twice, under extreme circumstances where they were unable to get anything by sitting around the bargaining table, was this right ever used by these workers. So if there is very little evidence of abuse of this right, then I see no justification for taking it away from these workers by way of this piece of legislation, Bill 27.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, the right to strike is something that levels the playing field between employers on one hand and employees on the other. Employees exchange their services for remuneration from employers who hire them to provide those services, and whether the workers work in the public sector or the private sector is of little consequence here. What is important is that the playing field be kept level. The terms of employment are best negotiated when the playing field with employers and employees is as level as it can be.

By removing the right to strike, we seriously risk making the relations between employers and employees not better but much worse because were we to approve this bill and including section 4, which I'm trying to convince this House to strike from the bill, we would create conditions of unequal power, extreme inequality of power between employees on the one hand and employers on the other, in this case regional health authorities on the one hand and the health care workers who will be affected by this bill on the other.

Over 7,000 workers will be affected by this provision, and they'll be affected negatively, to the detriment, I submit, Mr. Chairman, of the betterment of not only the workers but of the system of health care that we have as such. It clearly will not serve the interests of those who lose the strike, but it certainly also will not serve us in any way in improving our ability to make our health care system better and make the delivery of the health care services any better or more accessible or more prompt to Albertans, who day in and day out without prior notice at many times need to rush to our health care institutions to receive these very, very important health care services. [Mr. Pannu's speaking time expired] I'm done?

The Chair: Yes. That's 20 minutes.

Dr. Pannu: Okay. So I urge, Mr. Chairman, my colleagues in the House to support this amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm delighted to have the opportunity to rise and speak to the amendment in the context of the bill that's under discussion in this House, a bill which has had some four and a half hours of debate prior to today and will have a considerable amount more debate over the next few days as we deal with a very, very important subject for Albertans and as we deal with it on a timely basis so that when regional health authorities are merged from 17 into nine, effective April 1, they'll have a structure in place to deal with how you appropriately and effectively bring together the people who work for those health authorities in a sane and sensible way. It's very appropriate to have the opportunity to speak to not only the timeliness of the bill and the need to have it dealt with on a timely basis and have it passed in this House within the next week or so in order for it to be in effect for April 1. It needs to be passed with the section which the hon. member is trying to remove by his amendment, and I'll speak specifically to that amendment for the moment because the hon. member is asking that section 4 be struck out.

Well, what is section 4, Mr. Chairman? Section 4 adds subsection (c) to section 96(1), and subsection (c) is, "employers that are regional health authorities and all of their employees to whom clause (b) does not apply." That basically adds to the section which prevents workers from striking and prevents employers from locking out employees. That essentially, then, makes a level playing field for all employees and employers within the regional health authorities system.

The act as it stands now, of course, exempts employers who operate approved hospitals as defined in the Hospitals Act and all the employees of those employers. So this is a relatively modest change, Mr. Chairman, but a modest change which is important. As you will remember from the past number of years, as we go through the labour processes and the negotiation processes in the health field, there has always been question as to whether something is an approved hospital as defined in the Hospitals Act, whether it's on the list or off the list, and who's in and who's out. This amendment makes the act very clear. If you're a regional health authority, you can't lock out your employees, and if you're an employee of a regional health authority, you can't go on strike.

The opposition, and particularly the member who brought the amendment, would have us believe that this is a massive intrusion into the rights of the worker, but the reality is that it's a modest number of people, by my understanding approximately 3,000 to 3,500 people, who will be caught by the amended act who are not already caught under the existing act. Mr. Chairman, each and every employee of the regional health authorities will know who they are, that they're within the Labour Relations Code in that way. There is no question. It's clear, it's concise, it's effective, and it means that all people who are involved in delivering health care services – and the vast majority of them now, under the existing act, are under section 96(1)(b). In terms of this reorganization, that makes it clear that all health care employees paid by regional health authorities now come under the act, and regional health authorities in all instances, not just in cases of approved hospitals, come under the act and can't lock out their employees. So it puts in a fair process. Why is that necessary? I mean, you could just go ahead and leave the existing structure. Well, it becomes necessary because of what's happening in the rest of the act, which brings some rationality to the process.

Now, a member opposite – I don't remember which one; I believe it was Edmonton-Ellerslie – said earlier that there's been a process over the last number of years, a voluntary process where employers and employees working together can rationalize the number of unions and the number of bargaining units and that sort of thing. But it was 1994, I believe, when the regional health authorities were first initiated with 17 regional health authorities instead of in excess of 200 hospitals and health facilities. It's taken almost 10 years, and as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, there are still issues as a result of that regionalization, issues before the Labour Relations Board, and the Labour Relations Board is still looking at how those unions and bargaining units and employer/employee relationships can be rationalized based on the new structure, which is now some eight years old.

So as we move to rationalizing the boundaries of the health authorities and bringing the number of health authorities down from 17 to nine, it behooves us to look more closely with the benefit of hindsight at some of things that were done in the initial regionalization process and to take care of those issues up front and hence, prior to those boards coming into place on April 1, having in place the appropriate bargaining structures so that employers and employees have clarity, know where they stand on that issue. One of those important parts is to know that as health care workers, with all of their sisters and brothers in health care, they are subject to the same rules and that the employer is subject to the same rules with respect to all of their employees regardless of whether they're in an approved hospital or in some other health facility. That, Mr. Chairman, is a very good reason why members of the House should defeat the amendment, support the bill in its current form, and do it on a timely basis.

I just want to mention that again because earlier in debate – and I appreciate that we're on the amendment now, but it has relevance to the amendment – the issue was raised about the lack of debate and the fact that on the Order Paper today appears a motion relative to time allocation. Of course, the opposition would suggest, in fact have suggested I think, that it's the death of democracy as we know it when they know only full well that putting a notice on the Order Paper is not necessarily indicative that the motion will be moved nor is it indicative of when it will be moved. But if it's not on the Order Paper, one thing you can be certain of: it can't be moved. Therefore, it is a prudent process, not the death of democracy, to put a notice on the Order Paper so that it can be utilized at an appropriate time.

Well, when's an appropriate time, Mr. Chairman? An appropriate time is after all members of the House have been afforded an opportunity to participate in debate and to make the statements that they need to make to argue the merits of the bill. How much time does it take to argue the merits of a bill, including bringing forth amendments like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has brought forward this afternoon? Well, this particular bill is a very important bill, but it's not a very big bill. The principles behind this bill are fairly straightforward, fairly simple. We've had about two and a half hours of debate in second reading on the principles of the bill. We're now into the committee stage, and there's been in excess of an hour of debate before we started the debate on the amendment. [interjections] In excess of an hour. Only now is one of the hon. members bringing forward an amendment, and in committee it's the time we look at the line-by-line analysis of the bill.

One would expect that if the hon. members opposite had line-by-line analysis to do, they might bring forward their amendments so we could deal with the line-by-line analysis. But they don't do that, Mr. Chairman. What they do is they continue to debate the principles of the bill, if you can call it that. They complain about lack of time, but they wait for over an hour of debate before they even bring forward any suggested changes to the bill. So I'm pleased that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has now brought forward an amendment because now we can do what we're supposed to be doing in committee, which is a line-by-line analysis.

I just wanted to raise that because it's somewhat disingenuous, I think, for the opposition to call it the death of democracy as we know it – my words probably, not theirs – when they say that they don't have time to review the bill, they don't have time to debate the bill, yet they don't use the debate in the manner in which it's intended: debate on principle in second reading, line-by-line analysis in committee.

In terms of undue haste I think it's fairly straightforward and obvious from the bill that it is necessary to pass this bill, it ought to be passed prior to April 1 so that it can be effective for the health authorities when they come into place.

I have other matters that I'd like to address, Mr. Chair, but they're probably not relevant to the amendment that's before the House no matter how wide I stretch the question of relevancy. I'll save them for when we've dealt with this amendment and perhaps can come back to them when other amendments, if there are other amendments brought forward, are on the table.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is, indeed, a pleasure this afternoon to rise and speak to amendment A1. I don't know how many times we've heard ministers responsible for labour in this province say that we have as a whole enjoyed labour peace in this province, but we also have to look at the right to strike being a fundamental human right, and it should not be taken away by any government or any piece of legislation.

Now, then, we have just heard the minister say that this bill will level the playing field. How does this level the playing field? We have enjoyed in this province excellent health care provided by professionals who certainly go above and beyond to provide the best care that they can for people in hospitals. The problem in this province, Mr. Chairman, is not the care the people get when they finally get to the hospital; it is getting to the hospital, getting past the lineups that have been created by this government because it constantly underfunded health care for the last decade. So this legislation is not going to level any playing field. It certainly will protect the rights of the sick and the injured, but it will also be doing it at the expense of workers' rights.

As well, on this particular amendment the minister also spoke about delivery and how this will improve health care. Now, I think that in the collective bargaining process when we do have two sides that sit down and have open and honest negotiations and those negotiations lead to a settlement, then we certainly do not have the bitterness that occurs after a strike; we do not have the hard feelings of workers against employers or vice versa.

We also have a lot of skepticism on the part of government members as to why anybody would challenge their legislation. Well, I think we have been given in this province many, many examples as to why we would challenge this legislation. I can think of what occurred at the Calgary Herald strike, where strikers were allowed to stay out on strike, and any of the tools available to the minister, any of the processes that were made available, were certainly not instituted at that particular time.

We also have the situation where in a province of many, in a province of great wealth, in a province where we talk about an Alberta advantage, we still have workers who have the lowest minimum wage in Canada, and this is a government that wants us now to remove the right to strike when we have union workers in this province who I'm certain if some employers had their way would be working for minimum wage.

I also find in speaking to this amendment, Mr. Chairman, that when we look at the union movement in this province, there isn't one person in this province that hasn't benefited because of what they stood for, rights for workers and improving the workplace not only in a monetary fashion but in safety and certainly in innovation. So we do have to look at both sides of this coin and say: yes, the unions have contributed much to this province.

As well, when we look at this particular amendment, an amendment I support, we look at comments that were made in debate earlier on this afternoon that we balance the playing field by not allowing the employers to lock people out or by not allowing the workers to strike. This is not a modest change. I'm sorry. This can never, ever be considered a modest change. If I did hear the minister correctly when he was speaking, he said that this would only affect in the neighbourhood of 3,500 workers. Well, 3,500 workers that are affected by legislation which limits their ability for job action certainly is not and can never be considered a modest change. I would think that if I were one of those workers in that position, my right to strike being taken away would have violated the whole idea of labour negotiations.

I can see, as well, why the unions do look at this government with some skepticism and look at this bill with skepticism. We have a situation here where a bill came before this House, and I don't believe the unions were consulted as to what was going to be in this bill. It reminds me of Judge Friedman's report, where the playing field is certainly not balanced but it is tilted in favour of the employers. So can't you see down the road the same situation happening if we go ahead and pass this bill as it now stands? We will be having MLA committees; we will be having someone like Judge Friedman taking a look at this issue and this piece of legislation, which is being ramrodded through this Assembly. It will have to be looked at rather seriously. Again, down the road we will be having to make changes to this legislation to deal with the unjustness to workers who will be denied their right to strike.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a bargaining structure that's going to work. It isn't a bargaining structure that has been successful in this province for many, many years. In looking at the merits of this bill, I cannot see how we can say that this bill removing the right to strike of workers deserves merit. This bill does not deserve merit, because the principles of the bill are wrong. This is poor legislation, and the principles of this bill are not straightforward and simple. There is an undercurrent that flows through this bill which is certainly not going to lead to more harmony in the relationship between employer and employee. It's certainly going to create stress, it's going to create divisions, and it's going to create ugly job action down the road. There is no doubt about it.

All we have to do, Mr. Chairman, is look at what has happened in the history of this province. If this government thinks it's preventing work stoppages by unhappy unionized health care employees by prohibiting strike action, it is sadly mistaken. We only have to look at the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, local 2424, two-day strike in 2000 or the United Nurses of Alberta's 1988 strike to know that prohibiting a strike doesn't mean that it won't happen. Certainly, those types of strikes that occur disrupt the whole labour negotiations that occur in this province. These types of strikes when people are forced into them certainly jeopardize the care that those health care professionals can give to people.

Just before I close, I was listening quite intently as the minister described that this process in the Committee of the Whole is where we examine this bill clause by clause, yet previous speakers in this Assembly today have not done so. So I think that, you know, before he tells the opposition that we are not examining this bill clause by clause, perhaps that would be good advice for him to give members on his own side.

So with those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I will certainly cede the floor at this time and give another hon. member in this Assembly the opportunity to speak to this piece of legislation, which, quite frankly, I cannot support, but I will support the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. So thank you for this opportunity.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to rise in the House today to speak to Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, and to the amendment. Alberta has the lowest rates of lost time due to job action in the country, and because unionized employees in this province do bargain in good faith without resorting to illegal activities, I believe that Bill 27 will ensure patient safety and simplify collective bargaining in the health care sector, and that's why I will not support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, health care is all about healing the patient and keeping him or her healthy. Health care needs to be patient-centered and needs to ensure patient safety. I believe that Bill 27 with section 4 is important. The good delivery of health services is about being patient-centered and ensuring patient's safety. Bill 27 including section 4 will be important to the delivery of health services for many reasons, and I would like to mention three. Bill 27 will streamline bargaining, create flexibility in the health system, and will ensure severance is only used for individuals losing their jobs.

I think that it's obvious how Bill 27 with section 4 will streamline collective bargaining. For employers this will mean that instead of having to negotiate over 400 collective agreements, they will only have to negotiate 36. This means that each of the nine health regions will deal with four sets of negotiations, one for each bargaining unit. For employees it will mean that people doing similar jobs will be treated fairly and consistently. It brings people together by creating bargaining certificates for employees doing similar work: nurses/auxiliary nursing, paramedical, technical and professional services, and general support services.

In the present system in the David Thompson health region there are 96 different agreements that would have to be negotiated. The same types of workers at different hospitals can belong to separate unions and locals. Many employees receive different wages and receive different benefits. In the new legislation with section 4 there will be four sets of agreements and workers doing similar work and being paid the same and having the same terms and conditions. This legislation will make bargaining in the regional health authorities more consistent, more manageable, and more effective.

Bill 27 with section 4 will also ensure that severance is used for the purpose that it was created for. It will assure that severance is only used for individuals who are actually losing their job. Staff who keep essentially the same job but change employers as a result of health authority boundary changes or moving mental health services into the regions will not be eligible for severance. For staff neither the stability nor the existence of their employment is threatened, and their terms and conditions remain substantially the same. This legislation will ensure that severance is not used for purposes it was not intended for. It will protect Alberta taxpayers from potentially paying thousands of dollars in severance to individuals that are continuing to work.

Bill 27 including section 4 ensures that the Labour Relations Board will be granted special temporary powers to ensure that the bargaining units are amalgamated in a manner that is fair to all concerned. This process will be outlined in the regulations if this legislation is passed. This legislation will streamline bargaining in the health care sector for employers, employees, and unions, will ensure all workers are treated fairly and consistently, and ultimately will result in better services for Albertans.

Bill 27 cannot serve these needs without section 4. Therefore, I urge all members to defeat this amendment. Then, Mr. Chairman, we will know that health care in Alberta is patient-centred, ensures patient safety, and meets the needs for the greater good. To quote one of my favourite Star Trek characters, Mr. Spock: the needs of the one do not outweigh the needs of the many. I know that if the very logical Mr. Spock were here today he would agree with me in urging everyone to support Bill 27 with section 4.

The Chair: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on amendment A1.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Speaking to the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I think we have to be clear exactly, again, what the amendment is doing. Section 4 of the government's Bill 27 says:

- Section 96(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (b):
- (c) employers that are regional health authorities and all of their employees to whom clause (b) does not apply.

That's being added to the act under the section that names the essential workers who are not allowed the right to strike, including firefighters and some hospital workers. The intention of this amendment is to wipe out the addition of further employees to that clause that would prevent them from taking job action.

It's a good amendment, Mr. Chairman, I think for a number of reasons. First of all, I don't think it's been demonstrated that there is a problem. The government certainly hasn't come forward with evidence that this addition is needed growing out of some past experience in job action. So it seems curious that it's here. Why would we widen the number of essential workers, take away rights of workers, when the experience has not been such that that action is warranted? I think that one of the largest arguments for supporting this amendment is that there hasn't been any demonstrated reason for having these additional workers labeled as such.

I listened to the Government House Leader claiming that somehow or other this makes all people equal, that they all know exactly how they're being treated, and I'm really finding trouble with that argument. What is the advantage of all workers knowing the status of other workers? There are workplaces all over the province where workers have different status, and just to be able to stand up and say, "Well, now they all know what their status is," seems to me, again, a rather weak argument.

So I guess that for those two reasons I would support the amendment, Mr. Chairman, and hope members of the House do likewise. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on amendment A1.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, support the amendment for all of the reasons outlined by my colleagues and the member who moved this amendment. In the interest of time I would call for the question on the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's too bad that that amendment was defeated. We will shortly try another one because so far I haven't heard anything this afternoon that convinces me that this legislation has been improved. So with that I would like to send an amendment to the table to be distributed to all members.

The Chair: Move it, and then when everybody has got it, we'll give you a signal to go ahead.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar an amendment, that I assume will be called amendment A2, that states that Bill 27 be amended in section 5 in the proposed section 162.1(1) by striking out clause (f).

The Chair: You may proceed with amendment A2.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. For the ease of those members who are following this bill's progression, I would refer them to page 2 of the bill where we go to part 2.1, Special Provisions Regarding Regional Health Authorities, where it talks about the Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations.

So a series of those regulations are listed under 162.1(1), being (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), and (f). Subsection (f) actually shows up on page 4 of the bill, and it reads as such: "authorizing the Board to make binding determinations as to terms and conditions to be included in a receiving collective agreement where the parties are unwilling or unable to do so." That is the specific clause that we would have deleted by this particular amendment. That's a binding arbitration clause, which we think doesn't belong in any kind of a bill or at any table. That role is best left to an arbitrator when two parties who are in negotiations can't come to an agreement, in agreement with each other or as determined by the government, and go into arbitration. This shouldn't be an automatic part of the regulations of any kind of a negotiation when we're talking about health care workers. So we think it's in the best interests of the legislation and the best interests of the workers of this province if that particular clause be deleted.

Mr. Chairman, I will keep my remarks short on this particular amendment, enabling us to get through the number of amendments we do have on this legislation before closure is brought to bear.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, of course, to the members for the amendment, but I would encourage on behalf of the government all members in the House not to support the amendment. Section (f), that is detailed here, is consistent with all of the other provisions, consistent with everything that we have been saying about the specific situation that we're involved with here, which is the regional health authorities' restructuring.

So with that, Mr. Chair, thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I rise to speak in support of amendment A2, that's been moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. It's another part of the bill that I find rather objectionable and regressive that this amendment tries to address and fix. This is the second serious flaw in the bill. Although it looks minor in terms of the number of words used, it seems to change the situation from where it's now to what it'll become. It makes the Labour Relations Code more authoritarian and antidemocratic in that the Labour Relations Board is being given additional powers to be able to make binding decisions all by itself. It may not even be the board as a whole. It may be a wise chair of the board who could make these decisions just in his or her own wisdom. Regardless of whether it's one member of the board or the labour board as a whole which would have the powers to make these arbitrary decisions in the form of binding arbitration, it is something that we don't need. The labour laws of this province are already, I think, somewhat unsympathetic towards the workers, and to add this kind of very, very powerful new element to the powers of the board I think will make things worse, not better. The purpose of any changes in labour legislation, I'm sure members of the House will agree with me, should be to improve our labour laws: make them more fair, make them more just, make them less authoritarian, and make them more democratic. If the changes that are proposed in Bill 27 don't do it, then surely we have the opportunity to amend those elements of the bill one by one to improve what's being proposed as a response to the restructuring of health authorities that's going to be undertaken as of the 1st of April.

So I think the amendment, if passed by this House, will remove from the bill another unwholesome feature of it. Therefore, I will certainly be supporting this amendment and call on other members to consider seriously doing the same, Mr. Chairman.

With those brief remarks I take my seat and let other members speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to add a few brief comments in regard to amendment A2, which was introduced by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. What this particular amendment will do is certainly eliminate one of the clauses in this new bill that is extremely contentious, and in doing so, it will certainly allow the workers of this province a more democratic, fairer situation. When we talk about leveling the playing field, this is one of those amendments that will level the playing field.

I have great difficulty when I read the proposed section (f), "authorizing the Board to make binding determinations." The minute I see the word "binding," I can only harken back to negotiations last year between the Alberta Teachers' Association and this particular government. An arbitrator was appointed, and we passed legislation in this House to tie the hands of the arbitrator, to certainly limit the arbitrator's ability to make a fair and just settlement of the issues that were between the school boards and the teachers at that particular time. It was only through the sheer determination of the arbitrators that they did establish wiggle room, that they were able to come up with an arbitrated settlement that the parties seemed willing to live with. Certainly we have seen through the actions of the government since that arbitrated settlement that this government has not lent its support to that settlement.

I think that when we listen to the comments of the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and we listen to the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, yes, this is a clause that will certainly grate on members when we allow these types of regulations to be authorized by the board.

So with those comments I will take my seat, Mr. Chairman, and certainly encourage all members of the Assembly to vote for this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Speaking in favour of amendment A2, the amendment would strike from Bill 27 the regulation-making capacity of the cabinet, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and it would take away the authority of the cabinet to make regulations "authorizing the Board to make binding determinations as to terms and conditions to be included in a receiving collective agreement where the parties are unwilling or unable to do so."

This isn't the only bill where we've raised as a huge concern the role of regulations. We've asked and we've had a number of speakers ask why we haven't seen the draft regulations for Bill 27 as are available for Bill 19. The draft regulations for Bill 19 have been available on the Internet for some time. It seems to me that that is a sound practice for the government to follow, and I think they have to be given credit for having posted those regulations and allowing people to see what's going to be in the regulations before the legislation is actually passed in the House. Now, they are regulations, and you have to remember that they can be easily changed, much more easily than the bill itself, but it is progress and a move in the right direction to see them. With such an important bill as this, a bill that affects the lives of thousands of Albertans and makes a pretty fundamental shift in terms of how we view certain classes of workers, it seems to me that this is a bill that cries out for the draft regulations to be available to people so that we can see what's intended.

So the intent of this amendment is to limit the regulating capacity of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and I think it's an amendment that deserves support from all members of the Legislature. Again, I would urge the government, as quickly as they can and before this bill is closed in the Legislature, to make available the draft regulations.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

4:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to make a few comments in Committee of the Whole and certainly to look at the role of the Labour Relations Board and how it is tasked with making many decisions on how this new process will work. Yet in doing so, in trying to strengthen legislation to improve this process, which I don't think this bill will do, it allows a single member of the board, the chair or the vice-chair, to make decisions alone.

In this particular case the job of the Labour Relations Board gets even tougher with the way this act is. While they are to be commended for the good work they do in this province – and I think it is because of their work that we have had a relatively good period of employer/union relationships over the last decade – the very nature that we have a Labour Relations Board suggests that it should be the board that makes these decisions and particularly when these decisions impact many, many people. Certainly, I would think that when we have particularly the makeup of the Labour Relations Board that we would get a cross section of views and views that would lead to a settlement long before they would lead to job action.

So, again, in the interests of fairness and impartiality that workers expect when they get this far down the path in labour negotiations, they certainly don't want to turn this responsibility over to one person. So if we are going to do that and if we get a particular individual who does make a ruling that is unfair to one party or the other, does that mean now that we are going to have to also institute an appeals process where the decision that this individual made can be reviewed to ensure fairness to all parties?

In looking at this and on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I would like to move that Bill 27 be amended in section 5 in the proposed section 162.1 by striking out subsection (3).

The Chair: Hon. member, just wait until we all get the copies.

We're now ready, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, so please proceed.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you. Can I correctly assume that this is amendment A3?

The Chair: A3. It is, yes.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I did move this particular amendment on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and it deals primarily with the Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations, section 162.1, by striking out subsection (3). Subsection (3), quite briefly, reads, "The Board may hear any matter or conduct any business under this Part through the chair or a vice-chair sitting alone."

This is another part of this entire bill, Mr. Chairman, that certainly isn't constructive, and it's certainly a part of this bill that will do exactly what we try not to do in labour relations, and that is to create a greater strain. By its very nature the dispute between employer and employee once it reaches this stage is certainly an estranged relationship, and we don't want to further antagonize either party. We certainly don't want to put additional strain on the whole idea of the settlement resolution that both parties are trying to achieve. So this is another very contentious section of the bill.

When we look at the way things are set up here, even though strikes are not allowed under this proposed legislation, with these contentious sections of the bill and particularly with the fact that we are asking one person to make a decision or one person could make a decision on the whole process, again, we are putting a tremendous amount of faith that the person who is in this position is going to be fair and impartial. But I also see that by leaving this particular clause in the bill – this is certainly one of those clauses that will lead to some type of job action – we will see tactics that will be used as an alternative to a full-blown strike. I look at things such as a work slowdown. I look at work-to-rule. I see a refusal to work overtime, and certainly that would impact the health care profession today in a huge manner. We have people in this province right now who have answering machines, and it's to identify callers and to take messages just so that they will not be pressured into having to work unwanted overtime. It also in the way of job action could lead to a tactic such as a sick-out or dress code infractions.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote in favour of this very worthwhile amendment. It certainly isn't a cure for a bad bill, but it will perhaps ease some of the tensions that this bill is currently creating with trade unions.

I thank you for this opportunity to make these comments.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Once again, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all members to vote against this particular amendment. There's some boogie-woogie going on over there in terms of the speech. Basically, it should be recognized and I think the hon. member does recognize that the members of the board are ethical people, well-trained, professional. Whether it's one or three probably wouldn't matter in ordinary situations all that much.

Really, the whole reason for providing this bill is, again, that it's specific, that it's happening in terms of the reorganization of the regional health authorities. We must move this along, and subsection (3) would go a great deal in helping us do that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll take a few minutes to comment on amendment A3, which moves that subsection (3) be struck from the bill. I think there are good reasons why this amendment should be supported. This bill, really, in various provisions that it has in it will, in my best judgment, undermine the collective bargaining process as it will affect these workers. It tightens the noose, as it were, around these workers and their ability to negotiate under reasonable and fair circumstances the terms of their employment, the conditions of their work, and the remuneration that they will ask for. Furthermore, these workers deal with life-and-death issues. They deal with our health care matters under conditions where we ourselves are unable to make judgments in our own best interests, and we defer those judgments to be made by doctors, by nurses, by other health care attendants.

As part of the negotiations that necessarily are part of getting collective agreements in place, these workers find that they have the responsibility to make sure that patient safety, patient rights are not undermined by the desire of employers to change workloads without the consent of the health care deliverers, the people who deliver health care services, because delivery of those services is affected by how many patients a nurse on a ward is charged to take care of. So workloads and the ability of the employee in the health care system to negotiate those workloads are critical. It is fundamental to securing the conditions in hospitals, conditions that would protect patient safety and protect patient well-being and patient rights. Employers, when under financial and fiscal pressure, when excited by new managerial models and ideologies, sometimes tend to think that more can be done with less. Not so, Mr. Chairman, in the case of workers who deal with life-and-death issues.

So to put sort of arbitrary powers in the hands of the Labour Relations Board is not only unfair to the patients; it has the potential of putting in jeopardy the patients' safety and patients' interests and patients' rights. Not only will it bind the hands of health care workers in negotiating conditions which they think are appropriate and necessary, as a matter of fact, to ensure patients' safety, for which they are responsible, but it also in my view is unfair to put this kind of undue burden on the Labour Relations Board, which is a third party unfamiliar with the conditions of work on the ground floor, at the place of work, at the point of delivery, and are asked to make these decisions sometimes.

As I said before, that's what subsection (3) is about, empowering the chair or vice-chair, one or two members of the board, to somehow summon this wisdom to be able to make the decisions contrary to the advice that they may get from the real stakeholders, who in this case are the patients and their families, in the first place, but equally important are the health care delivery workers, whose job it is, whose obligation it is, whose legal obligation it is to ensure patient safety and respect for patient rights.

So for that set of reasons, I support this amendment. I think it will improve this very flawed document, which has very little information in it. It takes away from this Assembly the powers to debate and scrutinize the details of this bill, if it goes forward, but certainly it's an amendment that will make the minimum necessary improvement in the existing legislation that is Bill 27.

With that, I close my comments on this particular amendment, amendment A3.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to this amendment because I think it's appropriate to point out just what's happening with respect to the amendments being brought forward here. Amendments are brought forward on a clause-by-clause basis now to negative virtually everything in the act. And that's appropriate. It's the role of the opposition to do that. One might do it more efficiently by bundling amendments so you could deal with some of these things all together, but to deal with them clause by clause is useful as well.

Just to point out, then, what we're dealing with in this section "by striking out subsection (3)." Well, subsection (3), as the member who moved this amendment points out, allows the board to "hear any matter or conduct any business under this Part through the chair or a vice-chair sitting alone." So what's the problem with that? Well, it gives a single member broad and encompassing authority.

Well, let's look at the Labour Relations Code, section 9(10), which says:

Notwithstanding subsection (6), the Chair or a vice-chair may sit alone to hear and decide a question under section 12(3)(b), (d), (l), (m), (n) or (o), 14(2) or 76(4).

When you look at those sections, of course, you find that those are sections of the act which deal with certain items which would create efficiencies that it makes sense a chair or a vice-chair ought to be able to deal with sitting alone rather than having a panel to deal with those sorts of things.

Then it goes on to say in subsection (11):

The Chair or a vice-chair sitting alone may

- (a) where all of the parties consent, or
- (b) where, after a period of notice determined by the Board, none of the parties object, grant any order or directive within the Board's jurisdiction.

Then you look at subsection (12):

When the Chair or a vice-chair sits alone under subsection (10) or (11) or the Board meets as a panel, the Chair, vice-chair or panel, as the case may be, is deemed to be the Board for the purposes of the Act.

So when we look at the Labour Relations Code, Mr. Chairman, we find that there are quite a broad set of circumstances, some with consent of the parties and some without, where the chair or a vice-chair might sit to make determinations.

Then we go back and see that, well, this section is rather broader than that. It says that it can "for the purposes of this Part" sit on any application. So then you have to really question: is it necessary? Ought this to be taken out and create no circumstances under which a board chair or a vice-chair might sit alone? Or is it necessary to enumerate in exhaustive detail only those areas that perhaps one might determine are appropriate for a board chair or a vice-chair to sit alone? Or is this a circumstance where it might be left to the board chair, which is a very important position, or a vice-chair? We leave the chair and the vice-chair of the Labour Relations Board – very, very important positions; you hire good people to be on those boards – some discretion to decide: is this topic a matter of process which a board chair or a single person sitting alone ought to be able to determine, or is it something that is of such import and substance that you ought to empanel a panel of three or a larger group to hear it?

I think that’s what we’re really talking about here: what discretion is left in the hands of a board chair or a vice-chair? In fact, under the Labour Relations Board it’s the chair who determines when things are heard by a panel or when things are heard by the chair or a vice-chair alone. What discretion ought to be left to that person to determine when it’s appropriate to have a single person hearing it – and usually that’s in a process issue – or when it’s appropriate to empanel something?

This amendment being brought forward and being debated by members of the opposition is saying that this is a fundamental problem and it’s a breach, and it’s actually, really, just carrying forward the terms of the Labour Relations Code perhaps more broadly than it’s expressed in other sections but in the same manner and for the same purposes as it’s expressed for the overall Labour Relations Code and just clarifies that that’s applicable to this particular section. A nefarious amendment, Mr. Chairman. I think not. I’d ask people to vote against it.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, we wouldn’t want the minister to confuse his argument with the facts, and I would refer him to the Labour Relations Board’s own web site, that states:

The courts have held that the Board is not biased simply because the panel is not evenly balanced between labour and management representatives. However, where possible this is done to ensure the appearance of fairness.

So we know that the appearance of fairness is as important as making fair decisions.

I urge everyone in this Assembly to support this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we’ll return in Committee of the Whole.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 19, 2003 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2003/03/19
 head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 27 Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. After at least two hours of the most scintillating debate that I can remember, I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 27.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the chair was remiss in asking the following question. Shall the progress on the bill be reported when the committee rises? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 30 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: I sure hope we're on Bill 30. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: Bill 30, yes.

Ms Blakeman: There was so much enthusiastic chatter.

I'm very pleased to rise in Committee of the Whole on Bill 30, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003. Now, during the supply debates on this bill I expressed my frustration on the lack of detail that was being provided by the government. I am a hopeful person, so I thought: well, I'll wait. I am a hopeful person. I still am. Cynical, yes, but hopeful still. [interjection] Oh, you did. Absolutely. I will put it on the record how excellent the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development was in getting her answers back to me. She has set an extremely high standard for all of her colleagues, and I commend her for it. You get your answers in time to vote the bill, and she answers all the questions. So I hope the rest of you are going to meet the standard that she has set.

So with the exception of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development I was looking into the actual bill to see if perhaps I might get more of the detail that I wasn't getting before, and what's occurred to me in the interim is that this is the first time that we've had an interim appropriation request where we haven't already had the budget tabled, where we couldn't already go to the budget and look at the budget and understand where . . . [interjection] No. We had a budget in front of us then.

An Hon. Member: Not in '98.

Ms Blakeman: Not in '98? I'm sorry. In 1998, then, it happened. This does not excuse anything. We still have before us almost no detail, and I didn't get any more detail when I actually looked at the bill itself, which is now appearing as the appropriation act, Bill 30. There's no additional information in here beyond what was available in the supply budget debate. It is about timing, and I continue to reiterate that this government has the power to make this happen in the order that it should be happening.

Now, during the last debates I said: "Okay. Fine. The government should be able to call us in sooner, get this budget debated, and get it passed in advance of the fiscal year-end." The Minister of Finance said: no; we're waiting for figures from the federal government, and that's why we're delayed. But that really only holds up occasionally because I think previous to this most recent time of presentation of a budget from the federal government, it was 18 months previous to that. So the concept of always waiting for the feds doesn't quite play out. It works in this example, but it doesn't work in other examples.

So I suggested that if they were really waiting for some sort of budget figures expected in sort of winter/spring, then move the year-end so that they could compensate for that wait period, trying to get final figures from the federal government to be able to work them into their own budget and be able to incorporate that. In fact, we have moved the fiscal year-end previously. I think it used to be the end of December, and they moved it to the end of March for similar circumstances. So if that continues to be our issue here, move it again. I really object to having these constant interim supply budgets.

Now, another issue that came up and was not answered, to my dissatisfaction – well, let me go on to something else, and I'll come back to that.

One of the answers that I got back in response to my observation of the lack of detail was: "Well, look at the three-year business plans. All the detail that you could possibly want is in the three-year business plans. Just look at the business plans for the year that we're talking about." So, indeed, I did go and request documents from the library – and they were kind enough to send them up to me – The Future: Meeting Priorities, Sharing Benefits, the budget 2001 business plan book, which would have this current year that we're looking at as its third year of a three-year business plan, and Budget 2002: The Right Decisions for Challenging Times, business plans which would have this current year that we're looking at, 2003-2004, as the second year of a three-year business plan.

When I compared the figures on a sample budget department, which just happened to be one of the departments I'm critic on – and that's the Department of Justice – in fact there were two entirely different sets of figures appearing for this either second or third year of a three-year cycle. One of my colleagues has observed to me that these three-year budget plans are becoming meaningless because every year is the first year. Every year we start over. Every year there's a new set of performance measurements and a new set of targets and a new set of whatevers, and I have made that observation during budget debates. You can't compare back and forth from one year to the next.

Now, I did say that I felt this government had started on the right path, that they were showing leadership. They should be out in front on all of this, and they're not following through with it, and that's a disappointment. It's a huge disappointment. If they were following through, we could in fact look at the second year of a three-year business plan or the third year of a three-year business plan and have more or less the same achievements and targets and numbers in there. Yes, times change, and, yes, you need flexibility, but to have every single figure in every line item totally different, like by $15 million, by $20 million, that's a lot of money to be that out by. Like, you start getting out by 15, 20 percent. [interjection] Yeah, it did. You have some figures that were $80 million, and then the other plan was $95 million. It was different by $15 million. Well, I can look it up again, but I didn't want to embarrass the minister again, because he looked a little red faced last time.

So one of the frustrations here is being able to say: "Okay; it's reasonable. How do we judge whether what the government is asking for by way of this . . ." Well it's not a special warrant, and in fact I think the Premier is on record as saying that he didn't want to do special warrants when he came in because that was done behind closed doors. Everything was going to be done out in the open and debated openly; thus, we were going to have interim appropriations. That whole process becomes a mockery in itself when one minister gets up and delivers a one- or two-line explanation for two different budgets and sits down and refuses to answer further questions. Other people just leave the Assembly. We're not getting information on this, and considering that we had two hours on day 1 and two and a half hours on day 2, we're talking four and a half hours to debate $5 billion. So it's a billion and something an hour that we were able to debate in the supply debates.

Ms Carlson: A billion and a quarter.

Ms Blakeman: A billion and a quarter. That's an enormous amount of money to anybody. It's our responsibility as elected officials to say: "Is this reasonable? Is it needed? What's it being used for? How are we going to be able to measure against this?" Again, this is where I get referred to the three-year business plans, which I've already pointed out just change totally. I mean, missions change totally from one year to the next. How can you totally change your department's mission? There's no consistency between these business plans.

Dr. Taft: Mission impossible.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah, mission impossible.

So one of the things that I did ask for and get was a comparison between what was requested in an interim appropriation last year and what's requested in an interim appropriation this year to see if I can sort of glean some direction or information out of this, and in fact it is pretty informative. I think it is going to tell us some things.

We've got the Legislative Assembly, and I'm just going to round these numbers off. Last year in the 2002-2003 interim requests, so coming into this fiscal year, 13 million and change was asked for; this year, 18 million and change. So 5 million more dollars for the Legislative Assembly. That makes you think: well, hmm, that's interesting. So an increase across the board. What's happening? What's being expected there?

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development going from – now, this is the only one I've found so far that actually goes down. Oh, no. There's another one later on. I'll point that out. But it goes from $11 million down to $10.175 million. Well, still it's going down. Agriculture goes from $102 million to $139.6 million. Children's Services, from $121.9 million to $225 million. That's not quite double. That's a huge increase in what's being asked for here. Community Development, from $125.3 million to $209.7 million. Wow, like, what are they doing with this money? What's this for? There have got to be increases here if they're asking for that much more money in the interim supply. What's being anticipated? Why are we trying to grant them more money for the same period of time for, presumably, according to the tiny iota, the dribble of information we've had thus far, business as usual. "No big deal. Don't worry about it. Just cover your salaries. Buy a few things. Don't worry about it. Trust us." Well, what are you doing with the extra money then? If I'm supposed to trust you, you've got to tell me some of this information.

Economic Development, $8.5 million to $11.4 million. Energy, $40.5 million to $47.1 million. Do you think there are rebates in that? I bet not.

Aah, here's one of the ones that goes down. Environment goes from $34.1 million down to $29.3 million. So that's one of the few that goes down.

Ms Carlson: So much for enforcement and monitoring.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. Perhaps the minister would like to answer the question here while we're in the debate on this. Is it reflective of a loss of more frontline staff that do monitoring and enforcement for our environmental protection? The front line is where they always tend to cut, so is that where it's happening again?

Executive Council, almost exactly the same. Finance, $30.5 million; going to this year's request, $40.5 million. Gaming, holy mackerel, $285.8 million last time; this time, $356.5 million. Like, wow.

Dr. Taft: Could you repeat that?

Ms Blakeman: For Gaming? Yeah. It was $285.8 million; this year's request is $356.5 million.

Dr. Taft: A 25 percent increase.

Ms Blakeman: A 25 percent increase. For what? Are we going to get more VLT machines, more slot machines? Good heavens. [interjection] Interim supply to this year's interim supply. [interjection] No. Actually, your figures are almost all up. I'll keep going. You don't believe me? I'll read the figures out for you.

Ms Carlson: What's the time span between this year's and last year's?

Ms Blakeman: I don't know. I just have the comparison chart here. [interjection] I think the minister is going to join in the debate here, and I'm looking forward to any illumination he might be able to bring to it.

I'm going to continue here. We've got Government Services going from $48.9 million to $58.2 million. Last year Health and Wellness, $1.5 billion; this year, $1.85 billion, and almost no information from the Minister of Health and Wellness, who then refused to answer further questions. That's most disappointing. Human Resources and Employment – oh, this is one of the other ones that goes down. So we've got three so far. Human Resources and Employment: $318.4 million last year, $274 million this year. Infrastructure: $279.5 million last year, $422.19 million this year. Yowza.

You know, I'm still thinking. See, the other information you don't get as part of this is how big that surplus is going to be and where they're going to salt it all away. Like, how do they hide it all so they don't have to admit that they shortchanged schools and hospitals, seniors, the arts, municipalities, infrastructure, transportation? All those things that they did not allocate adequate funds to during the year, they shortchanged so they could come up with this humdinger, sucking-big surplus at the end of the year over and over and over again. I mean, how can a government with this many resources at their disposal be so off in their budgeting? How can you be so wrong? If you worked for someone, you'd be fired for being that far out.

Ms Carlson: Budget sur-preez.

Ms Blakeman: Budget sur-preez, says one of my colleagues, and, yes, indeed, she's right. It's like Sunday night with Kraft Dinner; you never know what you're going to get.

Okay. Let's go back and look. Innovation and Science is another one that's going down. From $64 million last year they request this year $55 million. Well, thank you to Innovation and Science. International and Intergovernmental Relations: $1.8 million last year, $1.94 million this year. Justice: $47.2 million last year; $71.3 million this year. Gee, that's a fair whomping difference. You'd have to be talking about a lot more time that's being included to make up that kind of money. We're talking, like, $25 million more here. We're just talking about a few weeks, by the way. Don't forget, folks: this is for the government to run for 10 weeks. But everybody just kind of rounds it up to the nearest—oh, I don't know—quarter.

So most of the departments have asked for either 25 or 30 percent of their entire budget for the year be allocated for them or to be available to them for 10 weeks. Like, wow. I'm sure glad I don't have children because, boy, if they came to me and said: "Please give me allowance for 10 weeks, but I'd like, you know, four months' worth or three months' worth to spend. No, I'm not going to give you much detail. I'll spend it on the usual things"—that's why I don't want to be a parent.

All right. Learning: $615.5 million; request for this year, $918.8 million. Well, then, why do we have classroom sizes rising? Why do we have the Edmonton school board being put through the wringer while the Minister of Learning tries to shake every dime out of its pocket? And we've got projected deficits from that school board. We've got larger classrooms. Schools are having to look at cutting teachers. One of my schools told me that their tuck shop, which sells chips and granola bars and things like that to the kids, they used to use it to buy, you know, big extras like a digital camera for their school. They're buying photocopy paper with it. They're buying paper for their photocopy machine. That's the level that they are operating at now. That's how tight they are. So how many times can the minister redo his offices on that kind of money? Three hundred million dollars. Wow.

Okay. Municipal Affairs goes down just a bit: $65.4 million to $64.5 million. Revenue going up. Whoa. Whoa. This elevator is going up high: $6.8 million; this year's request, $11.3. Seniors: $47.6; this year, $73.115 million. Yowza. Well, I sure hope that's going to benefit the seniors. And who knows? We have no information about what the request is for. We don't have a budget in front of us. They say: well, don't sweat it; you're going to have a budget within three weeks, so you shouldn't be complaining so loudly, Laurie, because, you know, in three weeks all will be explained. But the point is that I'm sent here by a group of people to watch out for their interests now, and I can't afford to take this government's word on things, because they haven't proved trustworthiness in the past.

Solicitor General: $46.5 million last request; this year's request, $66.84 million. Twenty million dollars more for 10 weeks. Two million dollars more a week.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Ms Blakeman: Two million dollars more a week.

Sustainable Resource Development, it's also going down. So we've got—what?—5 that have gone down out of the 24. Sustainable Resource Development: last year's request, $101.9 million; this year's request, $92.9 million. Finally, Transportation: $139 million requested last year, $220.3 million this year.

Now, the minister was trying to give me signals there that: we're asking for a longer period of time this year, and that's why the money would be higher. But, you know, when you look at some of these and they're getting $20 million more, you start going: well, how much more time? Because, you know, it's 10 weeks this time; what did you ask for last time—two?—to explain that kind of difference?

So I know that my time is running out here, and I really question the ability of this government strongly at times, especially around its finances. It's just so wildly out on its budget projections, and then we have the total arrogance of the government saying: "Well, just trust us. Just give us this money. We're asking for 10 weeks' worth, but we're going to ask for, like, 25 for three or four months' worth of money to cover us for 10 weeks." It's absolutely unacceptable, especially when the government has the total power to call us into this House and get a budget passed before the fiscal year-end. It also has the power to change the fiscal year-end. For shame.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 30, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003. I actually have a great deal of concern, first of all, with the process that we're being asked to follow. The introduction of an interim supply measure is quite unusual, and the government has not been forthcoming, or at least not forthcoming enough for my satisfaction, in explaining why this measure is necessary.

Certainly, there is a great deal of money that is being proposed. If you go through the bill, there's $18 million for the Legislative Assembly, which I don't question. There is just an enormous amount of money if you look at it by department, and the question why the government can't bring forward a budget in a timely way—one reason is, of course, the federal government not bringing forward a budget in a timely way or in a way that suits the provincial government, but there have been instances in the past, Mr. Chairman, where the federal government has done so and the province has managed to cast its budget just fine. It's clear to me that the provincial government must have a very good idea of the federal government's financial contribution to the Alberta budget, and I know that despite all of the posturing about the federal government that goes on, there is a lot of communication that takes place at the government level and at individual department levels.

I suspect that the provincial government may have some good news, be planning some goodies in the upcoming budget. I suppose that that's better than the menu they've been serving up until this point, and I would expect that they want to save that good news to as close to the end of the session as possible. That's a little bit cynical, Mr. Chairman, because it doesn't take into account the responsibility of this Assembly to scrutinize government expenditure.

A third reason I think that the government is doing this is that they want to get some better sense of what oil and gas prices are going to be, but with the launch this evening of the horrible war on Iraq by the United States, any certainty that might have existed with respect to oil prices is gone. Interestingly enough, following the old adage that you sell on rumour and buy on fact, the price of oil has in fact gone down, and the stock market has gone up now that the war is clearly upon us or rather, I should say, upon the Iraqi people.

The Premier has talked on a number of occasions about his support for the American action because he believes that Canada should support the United States, but he does not take into account Alberta's long-term economic interests in making those statements, Mr. Chairman, because it's clear that the objective of the United States is to regain a larger measure of control over the world oil reserves. That's what the war is primarily being fought about. All of the other stuff is dressing, designed to fool those that can't think clearly about world affairs.

We've also seen the American hand in an attempted coup in Yugoslavia. Not Yugoslavia. What am I saying? In Venezuela. I apologize. That's a whole different kettle of fish there. The Americans were clearly behind the failed coup in Venezuela and, I would daresay, were involved up to their necks in the so-called strike in Venezuela, which was really a strike of the wealthy against the poor, and that has failed for the time being.

But what happens, Mr. Chairman, when the Americans do get their hands on the oil of Iraq and perhaps later Iran, perhaps later Saudi Arabia and perhaps Venezuela? Well, I think the first thing that we could say is that OPEC, as we know it, will be dead. It will become an irrelevant organization because the producing countries will no longer have the independence they need to set world oil prices and to control the amount of production that goes into the world market. What does that mean for Alberta? Well, OPEC has meant, as we all know, those of us that can remember back to the '70s, dramatically increased oil prices and, as a result, dramatically increased prosperity for this province. So what does the breaking of the back of OPEC mean? The United States is the world's largest energy consuming country, and it consumes far more energy than it produces itself, so it has an economic interest in lower oil prices, which it has been largely unable to achieve because of OPEC.

So now we have the Premier cheering on from the sidelines and from a safe location here in Edmonton the American aggression against Iraq, which will ultimately mean lower prices in the long run in the world, and that means lower revenues for Alberta in the long run. So here we have the Premier siding with people in the world who are prepared to use any means at their disposal in order to bring down the price of oil. I think that it's the height of folly and irresponsibility, Mr. Chairman, that the Premier is so entranced by our American neighbours and perhaps the American oil industry in Calgary that he can't objectively discern the long-term economic interests of this province. So I think that is a sad indictment of the Premier's leadership of this province.

That brings us to the financial situation facing the province, and it's, I think, an indication that the province doesn't know where to go with respect to oil and gas prices that has contributed to the fact that we have an interim supply act instead of a budget. We'll get the budget, and hopefully the government will get its act together.

I want to talk a little bit about education funding, Mr. Chairman, because we have a situation where there's a crisis in education in this province. The interim supply act provides $888,895,000 for Learning. Now, this doesn't compensate for the shortages. [interjections] You need arousing? Okay. The problem is that I borrowed the Liberal notes tonight because I forgot mine at home. So if I'm a little bit boring tonight, I'm sorry. By the way, their notes didn't include anything about the war in Iraq or American foreign policy. That was my own elaboration. I'll try to pick it up for my Liberal colleagues.

Mr. Chairman, the education situation in this province is appalling, and I know that the government is hinting that they're going to come rushing to the rescue like white knights when the budget finally comes down. I think that that's what they intend. In the meantime, schools throughout this province are going through an agonizing exercise. They are looking at their budgets, and they are trying to figure out what to cut, and the reason is that the Minister of Learning, having provoked the teachers into a strike and setting up an arbitration process which the teachers objected to strongly, which was entirely, entirely under the control of this government, produced a result that the government was not anticipating. Do you remember the droning on of the Minister of Learning in here in question period day after day? "We provided 4 and 2, 6 percent, Mr. Speaker." That's just the best that anybody has ever received in the world, leaving aside, of course, those people lucky enough to settle before the last election, who got dramatically more in way of revenue, closer to 22 percent.

Then the arbitration settlement that the government had custom designed to produce the result that they wanted came in at 14 percent, and then what did the minister do? He told the school boards that they had to take it out of their existing budgets. Well, he provided them, as we know, 4 and 2, and it came in at 14. So the arithmetic doesn't work, and school boards, and particularly Edmonton public school board, were millions and millions of dollars short. These cuts are now being distributed among the schools, and the principals are working through figuring out which teachers they have to lay off, which librarians they have to let go, which programs for needy children they have to cut, or what other changes they have to make with respect to their budgets. They're sharing this with parent councils, and I've attended several in the last week where the principals talked to the parents about what changes he or she has to make to that school budget in order to make do with the shortfall.

So the government is technically correct when they stand up as they did in question period today and berate the opposition for talking about budget cuts. It's not a budget cut, Mr. Chairman, at least in this particular year, but it is a huge unanticipated cost caused by the government which the government won't assist the schools with. So we are seeing parents getting mobilized across the city and, I daresay, across the province, and they are very angry, and they know exactly who they can blame.

You know, it's interesting. When ordinary parents come into this gallery to watch the proceedings and watch legitimate questions put to the Minister of Learning about the financial situation facing their children's school, they are totally unprepared for the kinds of cavalier nonanswers that they're getting. I guess they're really not familiar with our system and with question period, but I think they're particularly unprepared to deal with the blasé and inaccurate responses that we get in connection with school funding. So sometimes they lose control because they're unprepared. Now, hopefully that won't happen again. When we have guests in the Assembly to listen to questions about education, we're now trying to prepare them both with what to expect from the minister and what the rules of the House are so that we won't see that kind of situation again, Mr. Chairman. But it's understandable. They come here, their children's education is at risk, and the person responsible is largely unprepared to deal in a serious manner with legitimate questions about their children's education. So I can understand why they're angry. I'm angry as well.

Bill 30, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003, doesn't deal with this at all. It gives some interim supply, and if there are any little goodies that the government has in mind for education, they're certainly not telling the parents or the principals or the teachers, all of whom are going through a horrendous time trying to come to grips with the intransigent attitude of the provincial government on this matter. I think it's shameful, Mr. Chairman, I think it's reprehensible, and it is not responsible government to let everybody go through that and then to either surprise them with more money in the budget in three weeks or, even worse, to not surprise them with more money in the budget in three weeks. It's completely a negation of what a responsible and in-touch government ought to be doing and how it ought to be acting. So I think we should have seen a proper budget from this government in a timely fashion so that everybody else that has to live within the budgetary decisions of this Assembly could have made their decisions and gone on with life and learning.

Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate that I still have a considerable concern about the government's habit of tilting at windmills, and in this particular case I am referring to Kyoto. Again, the government has got everybody all riled up by talking about the terrible damage that Kyoto is going to do to Alberta and its economy, and then when they have spent who knows how much money and got everybody all upset, Kyoto finally is passed, and what happens is that the government says: well, it really wasn't so bad anyway. I'm reminded of the story of the little boy who cried wolf, but in this case we have a little boy called Ralph who is calling Kyoto. You know, it gets everybody all upset, and then there is no big, bad wolf. Everybody goes back, and the next time this little boy calls wolf, people are not going to come running and get all excited. They're going to wait and see the proof, and the little boy might just get himself turned into a meal in the meantime.

Now, I know that the Minister of Justice has spent half a million dollars on legal fees in order to fight Kyoto notwithstanding the fact that he has indicated that he's got some of the best constitutional brains in his own department, and he still hasn't answered adequately the questions around that particular expenditure. We don't know who got it or what it was spent on, what they did for that money, and we certainly don't know how Albertans benefited by that expenditure. Obviously Kyoto is there. The government isn't challenging it in court and is in fact saying that it's really not so bad after all and that they know that the federal government is not really serious about the reductions that were implied when they originally signed the international agreement. So that's another thing, Mr. Chairman.

With those points, Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to move that we adjourn debate and take my seat. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Chair's Ruling

Referring to a Member by Name

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I call upon the next bill, I just want to caution all members that we have a tradition in this Assembly not to refer to other members by their names. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, the chair did not interject at the time. However, I'm just cautioning all members: that's the tradition of this Assembly.

Bill 3 Electric Utilities Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased once again to rise to speak to Bill 3, which I think is a hugely important bill and a hugely dangerous bill that is going to be part of a long-term acid bath for the Alberta economy. It is corroding what's left of the Alberta advantage year by year as the price of power in this province stays at the highest levels in the country and some of the highest levels on the continent. Before this electricity deregulation mess Alberta enjoyed some of the cheapest and most reliable power in the world in fact, not just on the continent but in the world, and that was widely recognized as a fundamental competitive advantage for Alberta. Indeed, the Alberta government itself trumpeted its cheap, reliable electricity as a building block for economic diversification. Well, those days are long gone, and they're gone for one reason only: the government's bungled deregulation.

So we are facing now Bill 3, and we are facing a situation among many things in which the price of power swings wildly and dramatically. We have seen the price of power in this province since deregulation swing from lows at probably 2 or 3 a.m. on a autumn Sunday of perhaps $25 a megawatt-hour up to highs of $999 a megawatt-hour, and they would have gone higher except that's the limit. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands asked: how much? Nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars a megawatt-hour we paid in Alberta for electricity at times, and it would have gone higher except that that's the maximum amount allowed under the law.

This was entirely foreseeable. You can go back, as I have done, and look at the experience with deregulation in the United States, for example. We all have heard about the disasters with deregulation in California. At least in California they had the common sense to get out of the mess. What we are seeing here in Bill 3 is digging deeper the hole that we are in. There's an old saying: when you find yourself in a hole, stop digging. What this government has done is: it's found itself in a hole and it's digging faster and faster.

Ms Blakeman: It's tunneling. It's brought in heavy-duty equipment to tunnel.

Dr. Taft: They're trying to get all the way to China. They're tunneling aggressively, and we are trying to stop them. Stop, please. Instead, deeper and deeper we go.

It wasn't just California that knew wild swings in electricity prices; the U.S. midwest, for example. In 1998 the Wall Street Journal among many other major media carried a string of articles about a three-day power outage in the midwestern U.S. that forced factories to shut down, and homeowners and businesses had to scale back dramatically their activities. It led to huge spikes in electricity prices, as high as – this is hard to believe, but it's true – $7,000 U.S. a megawatt-hour. Seven thousand dollars U.S. a megawatt-hour for electricity that in that market would normally trade at about $70 – seven, zero – so a hundred times the normal price.

Those are the kinds of swings that were occurring in other deregulated markets well before Alberta embarked on its experiment. We should have learned. We should have looked around and learned what was going on. Of course, some of the effects of that were massive economic dislocation. There were actually companies that went bankrupt. There was a steel mill that had to shut down, and because the molten steel hardened in the mill, they actually had to replace equipment. The molten steel cooled off, and it permanently damaged their steel-making equipment. So there was a massive fallout from electricity price swings in the U.S. midwest because of deregulation.

The same kind of thing happened in Auckland, New Zealand, in February '98, a long, long blackout. Here we're talking about five weeks of blackout.

An Hon. Member: Downtown.

Dr. Taft: Downtown Auckland was shut down for five weeks.

When they did a major investigation, as the people demanded, what did they find? They found that under the deregulated system the main power companies had stopped working to standard. They were consistently lowering their quality standards, their maintenance standards, their equipment standards, and ultimately the whole downtown of Auckland faced a five-week power blackout. Do you know how they coped with it? They actually had to bring a ship into Auckland harbor with a mobile generator and plug the ship into the grid to sustain Auckland.

We have lots of examples of the kinds of problems from electricity deregulation. We should have learned. One of the things that's worth noting is that unreliability in the power system can actually reward power generators. To understand that, we need to back up a little bit and look at how the electricity market works, and I'll speak specifically about Alberta.

As we all know in this Assembly, different fuels are used to power power plants, and each one of those fuels creates different characteristics for the plant. We have coal-fired power plants. Coal-fired power plants provide the majority of the base demand for Alberta's electricity system. In other words, the demand is there 24 hours a day, and we can never go below that base level. The advantage of a coal-fired power plant is that when it's up and running, it can run very, very economically. The disadvantage is that it takes about 12 hours to get it up and running. So you can't respond to short-term, hour-to-hour spikes in demand. Coal is very good for providing the fundamental base of our electrical system.

Supplementing that is hydropower, and there are a series of hydro dams in the foothills and mountains west of Calgary that are in fact less reliable than coal, less and less reliable as the decades go by because the province is drying up and the water in the reservoirs behind these dams is not there in the volume it should be. Nonetheless, when they're running properly, they provide cheap power. So those levels of power can come in at $20 or $25 a megawatt-hour.

We then go up to the brand-new cogeneration plants. As demand for electricity climbs in the early morning hours – 7, 8, 9 o'clock – as the factories kick up, as people cook their breakfast, as the lights in the office buildings go on, cogeneration plants like that at Joffre and a number up in the oil sands come on board, and they can produce power at $40 or $50 a megawatt-hour. So they're selling in.

Then if things really go bad, say it's a cold January day or an extremely hot July day – in the summer the air conditioning is on or in the winter all the furnaces are going – we bring in another level of power for those few hours of peak demand: the stand-alone gas plants like Rosedale, just outside of this building, or Cloverbar, very expensive because they are consuming huge amounts of gas, the energy's not used for anything except producing electricity, and they are old.

When things go worse still, we have to import power through the one big tie-line we have, which is to B.C.. At that point, we may be paying and frequently are paying hundreds of dollars a megawatt-hour because we are having to outbid California and the Pacific Northwest of the U.S. for that power because B.C. sells both south into the U.S. and east into Alberta. So we've got to pay more than California for that power.

So you can see, Mr. Chairman, that Alberta's electrical system has layers and layers of power and layers and layers of prices that come on and meet demand. The old regulated system priced power at the margin of each of those levels and then averaged it out so that in the middle of the night we only paid $20 a megawatt-hour because all we were drawing from was the very efficient, low-cost coal plants. Then as the day went on and each price category was brought in, the price was averaged out. It was a blended price.

What we have in the current system is nothing short of insanity. In the current system the highest priced power, the last power that comes into the market, sets the price for every other supplier. So if the last power to come in is power from B.C., where we're having to outbid California for it and we're having to pay, say, $300 or $400 a megawatt-hour, all the rest of the power is paid out at that rate. As a result, the prices of power have soared in this province.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would like to propose an amendment to Bill 3, an amendment that would help to address this very egregious flaw. I'll have the pages distribute that, and while they're doing that, I will read the amendment into the record. I'm making this amendment on behalf of our energy critic, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and it reads that Bill 3 be amended in section 17(c) by striking out "relative economic merit" and substituting "marginal cost." I'll wait a moment for that to be distributed.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just for the record, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

You may proceed now.

Dr. Taft: So what we are proposing to do with this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is bring a modicum of sense back into the pricing mechanism for electricity in Alberta. What we want to have here is power brought in and priced based on the marginal cost of that power. So if power is coming in from coal-fired plants, we would pay only that price, and if power is being brought in from coal-fired and cogen plants, we would only pay for the cogenerated power at the cogeneration price. We wouldn't pay for the coal power at the cogeneration price. And if we had to import power at hundreds of dollars a megawatt-hour, we would only pay that price for the amount of power that we actually import. So this is a way of ensuring that only the marginal price is paid for each unit of power.

This is, I think, of crucial importance if we are to regain some of the economic advantages that the residents and the businesses and the voluntary groups and the institutions of this province used to enjoy from a cheap electrical system. Frankly, it's only fair; isn't it? What in the world is proper about consumers having to pay hundreds of dollars a megawatt-hour for electricity that only cost $20 to generate? It's insanity. It's insanity. There's no justification for that. There's no fairness to consumers. Frankly, all it is is a way for shareholders of the companies who benefit from this, who own the power purchase arrangements to make a whole lot of money. Nobody else benefits, and that's wrong.

Where's that money going? Well, in a couple of cases it's going to municipally owned power companies, EPCOR and Enmax, and actually in a third case, Medicine Hat. But in other cases it's going to shareholders that may not even live in Alberta or indeed in that case in Canada, shareholders in very large electrical utility corporations. So this is an amendment that will control the price. It will reduce the economic injustice and unfairness that's being perpetrated on Albertans, and it will have many immediate improvements to our society.

We heard in the last couple of days that the single greatest increase in any area of cost that the universities are facing in this province is the increase in utility costs. I think the University of Alberta is facing something like a $16 million increase in its utility bill, the single largest cost increase that it faces. Well, that gets passed on directly to whom? To students, who have very few resources to pay for it.

Last night I was talking to a constituent who is on the board of a sizable nonprofit group, and they're on the brink of going under because of their electricity bills. What's the benefit of the current system for them? There is none. They're on the brink of collapse, and when they go under, if they do go under, thousands of Albertans who enjoy this particular organization's services will be left without. Our community is weakened; our society is weakened.

Hospitals and regional health authorities also are facing huge increases in their electricity rates. As a result, they can't hire the nurses that are needed, they can't do the MRI tests that are needed, they can't provide the service to seniors that seniors need, and on and on.

So, Mr. Chairman, I commend this amendment to the thoughtful consideration of all government members, who, I can see, are hanging on every word I'm saying, waiting to take up the debate, to at least thoughtfully consider the possibility that we could come to a more sensible pricing mechanism than we have now. The fact is that if anybody in this Assembly can explain to me what the benefits are of the current pricing system over what I'm proposing in this amendment, I would listen with great interest. But it may be that the members. . .

Mr. Knight: We don't debate amendments; we'll debate the bill.

Dr. Taft: It may be that one of the members from Grande Prairie will rise to the occasion. I look forward to that.

So thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this amendment to Bill 3, Electric Utilities Act, proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. This amendment changes section 17(c) in order to make marginal cost the driving factor in the dispatch of electric energy and ancillary costs and hence, as I understand the hon. member's speech, will restore the averaging as the basis of price-setting in Alberta. That would in a single blow cut power costs in this province dramatically, and, you know, it makes a lot of sense to me.

Just for example, if we were producing half our power at 10 cents a kilowatt-hour and another 40 percent at 20 cents a kilowatt-hour and the last 10 percent at 50 cents a kilowatt-hour, according to the government system that is now in place for electricity, we would be paying all of our power at 50 cents a kilowatt-hour even though half of it was produced at 10 cents a kilowatt-hour and another 40 percent was at 20 cents. It would be the last 10 percent of the power at 50 cents a kilowatt-hour that would set the price for all of the power produced.

Now, I'm surprised that this system is okay with the government members because it means their constituents are paying twice as much for electricity now as they were before this system was implemented three years ago, and I would be particularly concerned if I were an MLA representing the area within the ATCO distribution area. For example, if I represented a constituency in Grande Prairie or in eastern Alberta, then I would be concerned that with the new flow-through pricing replacing the regulated rate option, my constituents' power rates stood to increase by up to 120 percent from their already very high rates.

You know, Mr. Chairman, the essence of high prices, the cause of high prices in this province that is causing, I'm sure, all MLAs regardless of their affiliation a lot of grief is embedded in this very act. Here it is right in front us, the cause of all our discontent, and I would only hope that all hon. members would be prepared to do something about it. They've got the act in front of them right now, and here's an amendment that will change a key element of the act, that will change the way pricing is set and will in one blow restore a measure of rationality to pricing in this province. So it's offered to all hon. members. All they have to do is take advantage of it.

I'm reminded, Mr. Chairman, that in this province we have had auctions for existing power production. That is to say that the existing primarily coal-fired plants, most of which are partly or entirely depreciated, were subject to an auction process devised by then minister Dr. West. This auctions off the equity, which was owned in his view and mine as well by the ratepayers, and people bought power on 20-year contracts from Sheerness or any number of other plants, the Wabamun plants. Twenty years of power was bought at what is now a very low price, but with the current pricing model we have, the people who've bought that power can resell it at the high prices that exist in the deregulated marketplace today. So they are making enormous profits on those purchases because they can sell the power for a lot more than they paid for it in the first place.

I would commend this particular amendment to all hon. members because it gets at one of the key flaws of the government's system for electricity deregulation that exists today and it makes a great deal of sense. By voting for this, hon. members can do all of their constituents a great favour and cut their power bills dramatically. Here's the vote that will do it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to enter into debate on this particular amendment. As the two speakers prior to me indicated, there are some very worthwhile reasons to support this particular amendment. It's too bad that we haven't heard anyone from the government side outlining why I am sure they will not be prepared to support this, but given that . . . [interjection] Well, I'm saving that for a little later in the night because that's an important debate to have. Given that this is a very poor piece of legislation and that our colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar has worked very hard to try and improve what is very, very flawed legislation by bringing in many amendments that we hope to speak to tonight, this being the first, I would call for the question and ask all people in this Assembly to please support this amendment which will help to improve what is a very flawed bill.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, the amendment will do nothing more than bring closer the opportunity of having blackouts by ensuring that those must-run powers will start gaming the market and will then therefore not bid into the marketplace and thus constrain power, forcing up prices and putting Alberta and the Alberta grid much closer to a blackout condition. Therefore, I'd recommend that members respond in the negative.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, did you want to still speak on the amendment?

Mr. Mason: We're in committee; right?

The Deputy Chair: Yeah. You're allowed to speak if you still want to.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I guess I would like to request more information from the minister. I would like to know how this amendment will allow players to gain the market, as he says, and push us closer to a blackout.

Ms Carlson: Let the record show that the Minister of Energy refused to answer.

Dr. Taft: I did welcome the minister's comments, brief as they were.

Ms Blakeman: You are a generous person.

Dr. Taft: I am a generous person, a generous and good-hearted person. The fact of the matter is that a system using this kind of pricing mechanism that we are proposing here can work. It does work. It worked through the overwhelming length of the history of Alberta's power system. It's what's used in other provinces, it's proven, it's economically sensible, and it's the way to go. It would need to be, and certainly there will be other amendments brought forward tonight. So once this one passes, then we will be bringing forward other amendments which will allow for a complete and sensible restructuring of the electrical industry in Alberta.

If the minister would just recommend that his colleagues support this amendment, then he would see through the fullness of time that it was a very wise move to have done so.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The voice vote indicated that motion on amendment A1 lost]

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure for me to rise tonight in Committee of the Whole and add some comments to the discussion surrounding Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, 2003. I might add that I'm pleased to be able to debate the bill, and perhaps I'm not so pleased at certain times to consider adding to the lack of debate with respect to amendments that may or may not be constructive.

Some of the points with respect to Bill 3 that perhaps might be constructive this evening are to indicate what the Electric Utilities Act will produce in its final form, and certainly there are a number of very important issues that are addressed in Bill 3.

I would like to start this evening with a little discussion surrounding the importance of the independent system operator, and this segment of Bill 3 will establish a corporation, and the corporation will be known as the independent system operator. They consist of a number of members, and they're appointed through a system that leaves this thing arm's length from elected officials, and certainly the ISO and its membership will then take on some very major responsibilities with respect to the full electrical generation and transmission and distribution and retailing system in the province of Alberta. The ISO, Mr. Chairman, will be responsible to lay out a budget for its operations, and along with their budget they will be required to report at the end of each fiscal year. Within 120 days of the end of their fiscal year, they must provide the minister with an annual report that lays out the business and the affairs of the fiscal year and contain with that report an audited financial statement for the fiscal year. So that kind of lays out the groundwork for how the ISO will operate and who it will consist of.

They have certain duties under the act, and they have some authorities under the act. The duties I'm not able to go into in detail and only because it would take certainly all of the 20 minutes of speaking time that I would be allocated or allotted in this initial go-around, but I will lay out the framework of their responsibilities. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, the duties are very important. The ISO will operate the Power Pool in the province of Alberta, and their mandate laid out in the legislation is to operate the power pool in a manner that is fair, efficient and open to all market participants exchanging or wishing to exchange electric energy through the power pool and that gives all market participants a reasonable opportunity to do so.

To expand on that a bit, Mr. Chairman, what that means is that with this new piece of legislation linked to and certainly adding to the already positive results that we have seen from deregulation – this new piece of legislation and the ISO make it possible, Mr. Chairman, for any person, any entity, any corporation in the province of Alberta to be able to generate electrical energy and put it into the system, and that will be guaranteed by the independent system operator, open to all market participants.

A second thing that the ISO will be responsible for is the direct sales agreements and forward contracts. In other words, Mr. Chairman, we have a situation here where the ISO will be able to look at the direct sales agreements relating to the sale or purchase of electric energy in accordance with the terms agreed to by the parties of the agreement. In other words, if two people decide that they want to enter into a contract to purchase or sell electrical energy in the province of Alberta, the ISO will oversee these agreements and arrangements to be sure that they're fair and meet market requirements.

The ISO certainly has, as I indicated, a budget. There are certain fees required, and the independent system operator will establish, for the purpose of operating these processes that I have alluded to, fees payable by the market participants. This again will be part and parcel of the ISO's budgeting process. They have, Mr. Chairman, along with the establishment of fees certain orders that they're able to give to market participants and a mechanism included in this legislation to allow the ISO to have some enforcement of their orders. Again, it's fairly detailed, but at the end of the day what I can tell you is that the ISO has the ability to go to people or a person, corporation, et cetera, that failed to comply with the orders, and they will be liable under this new act to fines of not more than $100,000 per day.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Knight: One hundred thousand dollars per day is the maximum for noncompliance with orders of the ISO.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard rhetoric stacked upon rhetoric that what the Alberta government is doing with respect to this piece of legislation and Bill 19 is we're cutting away at the very ground that the people of the province of Alberta stand on with respect to being somehow guaranteed that their price of power won't go up, that they won't be gouged by unscrupulous people in the marketplace, et cetera, et cetera. One hundred thousand dollars a day, and this is, by the way, just the ISO's compliance. So we're putting some teeth into this legislation that will protect Alberta consumers, full stop.

There is also with respect to that issue a mechanism in the legislation to allow for people that have complaints about the ISO. If the ISO is felt to be heavy handed or leaning too hard on some individual or some person or a corporation, they can make complaints, Mr. Chairman, and the complaints would be lodged at the EUB. So the ISO itself, although it is an independent body, very important with respect to what we're doing in the province, also has someone to answer to. As a matter of fact, in reality when this legislation is complete and in place, it has two people really that it needs to answer to. Certainly, the complaint process through the EUB is one. Another section of the bill, that I would go into at a later point in time if I don't exhaust myself here, is the market surveillance administrator, and that's another story.

Mr. Chairman, another extremely important job that we are putting under the auspices of the ISO is the transmission system. The transmission administrator will operate under the ISO. The ISO under this new legislation and the dealings with the transmission administrator make the ISO the sole provider in the province, the sole provider of system access service. Again, as I alluded to earlier in the legislation, this independent system operator will make it completely accessible to anybody in the province of Alberta that wishes to tie in to the system. The independent system operator must provide system access service on the transmission system in a manner that gives all market participants wishing to exchange electric energy and ancillary services a reasonable opportunity to do so.

The ISO, with respect to transmission administration, Mr. Chairman, also will submit to the board a single tariff that sets out the rates charged with respect to transmission of electrical services in the province of Alberta. So the transmission administration falls under the ISO. More important than the transmission system that we have in place in the province of Alberta today, the ISO will also look forward to what the transmission requirements may be in the province of Alberta in the future with respect to trying to relieve some of the problems in transmission congestion that we have in the province today and also at the possibility that at some point in time Alberta will be in a position to export excess power. The ISO will look at how this could best be done and how the players in the marketplace, including the people of the province of Alberta, would or should be responsible for the investment with respect to those transmission services.

The ISO, Mr. Chairman, will also take a responsibility here with respect to the system planning and the alleviation of constraints, and I did mention that. We will be expecting the ISO to also give direction on receipt of a board approval to the ISO of the needs identification document. In other words, when the ISO, through the board, has been presented with documents that would identify a need for further transmission, the ISO may direct the owner of the transmission facility to submit for board approval a proposal to meet the need identified. So we're looking here at allowing a system where we will have, under the umbrella of the ISO, a much more comprehensive management plan with respect to the province's transmission system as it is and the way it will look in the future. A very important part of our new legislation.

Moving on to the market surveillance administrator, Mr. Chairman, under our new legislation Bill 3 will establish another corporation, and that corporation will be known as the market surveillance administrator. The market surveillance administrator consists of an individual appointed as the administrator under a section of this legislation. Again, Mr. Chairman, this individual will be a person who is not now nor has been connected in any way with the electrical business in the province of Alberta and will be at arm's length from the province and from the business, an independent person that has no material interest in the electric industry. The chair of the EUB will recommend to the minister the name of an individual to appoint as the market surveillance administrator, and the market surveillance administrator will oversee the business of the administrator's section of the act.

Now, again, Mr. Chairman, the MSA is extremely important and is another step that we're putting in place in this legislation. Unfortunately, in discussions that we have heard before the Legislature and certainly in the period of time that we've discussed this situation in committee, nothing good at all has been said about the MSA. The market surveillance administrator is an additional watchdog outside of the ISO that is looking at the whole umbrella of the business of electrical generation, transmission, distribution, and retailing in the province of Alberta, a watchdog to watch over people that I just pointed to in the ISO and others with respect to how they treat customers, how they treat the system, how they do or do not generate at times when it may be more or less convenient for them to do so, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera.

The MSA has been given the mandate to look at the whole umbrella of the electrical industry in the province. Again, they have a budget, and the market surveillance administrator will have his budget approved through the EUB, and the market surveillance administrator's costs and budget will be supported through the ISO. Again, the MSA will have to report, certainly similar to the ISO, within 120 days of their fiscal year. They will report to the minister, and they will provide a budget and other information required by the minister.

The market surveillance administrator, Mr. Chairman, has a very special role to play here. He has the authority and the ability to appoint a tribunal when and if there is a situation that requires what he would consider to be some type of investigation with respect to any player or any stakeholder in this marketplace, and the tribunal will do the investigation on behalf of the MSA. So, again, what we've done here is we've separated this whole system from the market players, from the elected representatives, and put it where it properly belongs, in the hands of an individual that has absolutely no connection with the government or, for that matter, with the marketplace. We've given him the ability to go further than that and in fact establish a tribunal to investigate complaints.

So, Mr. Chairman, those are some of the areas . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the allocated time has elapsed. However, since we are in committee, you will be able to speak to it again if you so choose.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I followed the comments of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky with some interest as he read through the bill. I was particularly interested in his comments on some of the independent bodies or components that make up this new system, and particularly I'm interested in the market surveillance administrator, who is appointed by the minister and who

- (a) is independent of any person who has a material interest in the Alberta electric industry, and
- (b) will enhance the performance of the Market Surveillance Administrator in exercising its mandate.

So it's an interesting structure. It's a very complex structure, and we know that in order to convert a natural monopoly into a profit source for multiple corporations, some complexity is clearly necessary.

It's interesting, Mr. Chairman. You know, I wonder if all of the intricacies of this act are going to be of very much interest to the people in northeastern Alberta and in the constituency of Grande Prairie-Smoky when they get their April power bills and find out that the power prices, which are already the highest in the country, will have doubled. I wonder if the remarks of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky will be of great comfort to them as they try to find a way to readjust their family budget or their budget for their farm or their business in order to pay their utility bills and whether or not they have to pay more in rent for an elderly parent who might be in seniors' housing whose rent will go up or if they have children at the Grande Prairie Regional College whose tuition will have to rise in order to pay for this increase in utilities and so on and so on.

But coming back to the market surveillance administrator, it's clear under the act that it's not to be an agent of the Crown. That may, in the view of that hon. member, mean that it's independent, but it also means, quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, that it's independent of scrutiny. So I'd like to offer the following amendment. If the pages could take it, I will read it. I move that Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, be amended in section 42 by striking out subsections (3), (4), and (5).

Mr. Chairman, subsection (3) of section 42 says that the Market Surveillance Administrator is not a Provincial corporation for the purposes of the Financial Administration Act, the Auditor General Act or any other enactment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just for the record we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

- (4) For the purposes of the Government Accountability Act, the Market Surveillance Administrator is not part of the ministry, as defined in that Act, of any Minister of the Government of Alberta.
- (5) The Market Surveillance Administrator is not an agent of the Crown.

Now, as the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky has said, these sections do make the market surveillance administrator independent. He is so independent that he or she is not accountable to the public in any way. They will not be accountable to the Auditor General. In other words, the Auditor General will have no jurisdiction over the market administrator. As a result, the Committee on Public Accounts cannot examine the financial transactions of the market administrator. In case someone is not treated fairly or in accordance with the laws, the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman is limited, and the market surveillance administrator is not accountable under the Government Accountability Act.

Clearly, what we have is someone who's essentially a free agent and accountable to no one. The result is that the people are losing control to an even greater degree over their electricity system. To simply say that this person is independent of anyone with a material interest in the electric industry of Alberta is cold comfort to those people who believe that, in fact, we should be running the electrical system in the interests of the public rather than in the interests of the corporations, including large American and British corporations that this government hopes to attract into this province by offering them sky-high electricity prices upon which to base their profits.

Yes, we can get big American, British, and even Canadian companies to move into the Alberta electrical industry if we guarantee them sky-high profits as a result of sky-high prices, and that is precisely what this government is doing. So let's not be surprised when they come to this province. The government can pat itself on the back all it wants for that accomplishment, but it's not really much of an accomplishment at all, Mr. Chairman; is it? If you offer people prices for commodities that are two or three times what they should be, they will trip over each other to get into the market. They won't do so because they want to help us bring the prices back down; that's for sure.

I believe that this amendment is a very sound one and recommend it to all members who want to encourage accountability in government, including accountability in the brave new world of electrical deregulation in this province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the amendment.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yeah. I read this amendment with some interest, and I do wonder here why the act is so determined to exempt the market surveillance administrator from any direct accountability to the people it's supposed to serve. Section 42(3) reads: "The Market Surveillance Administrator is not a Provincial corporation for the purposes of the Financial Administration Act, the Auditor General Act or any other enactment." Therefore it doesn't fall under any of those jurisdictions. It's out of the scope of the Auditor General. It's out of his reach. For example, if we were concerned that there were problems, we couldn't ask the Auditor General to investigate. Why not? What could they possibly be worried about finding?

Then the next section, 42(4), reads:

For the purposes of the Government Accountability Act, the Market Surveillance Administrator is not part of the ministry, as defined in that Act, of any Minister of the Government of Alberta.

So we are again deliberately and explicitly exempting the market surveillance administrator from the Government Accountability Act. Again, I can't imagine why. You would think that you would want this to be a very accountable organization. I mean, it is the market surveillance administrator. It's supposed to be keeping an eye on the market to ensure that that market serves the interests of all Albertans. From time to time you might have questions. You might have questions about a worry that the minister raised earlier that somebody was gaming the system, somebody was gaming the market. If you had that concern, you might want the Auditor General to investigate, or you might want to take other steps under the Government Accountability Act. If this bill proceeds as drafted, that wouldn't be possible.

Mr. Mason: What about Enron?

Dr. Taft: Yeah, you might have a concern about Enron. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands asks, “What about Enron?” or something like it, and certainly those would be a profound worry.

I think that it’s highly irresponsible for this piece of legislation, Bill 3, to exempt the market surveillance administrator from the strongest and most effective public watchdogs we have, so I will be supporting this amendment. I think it’s a good idea. I see no drawbacks whatsoever to this. There are no significant added costs. Indeed, I can see no drawback whatsoever. It doesn’t even interfere with the clumsy pricing mechanisms that this government seems to like. It’s just simple, good, accountable public management. So let’s get on with it. Let’s accept this amendment. I’d be interested to hear somebody on the government side justify their opposition to it if they are opposed. Maybe they’ll support it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Chairman, I’ve examined the amendment in detail and word by word, and short of caucusing with colleagues and asking them to review the details of the amendment equally, I’m actually with regret going to have to speak out against the amendment. In fact, if the member were to proceed to the act, he would see that there’s ample public disclosure; there’s ample public scrutiny. In section 45, for example, “the Market Surveillance Administrator [or MSA] must appoint an independent auditor to review and audit its financial statements.” In the MSA budget, section 46(3), “the Market Surveillance Administrator must be managed so that, on an annual basis, no profit or loss results from its operation.”

Mr. Chairman, in Reporting,

48(1) The Market Surveillance Administrator must, within 120 days . . .

Not the two years or long, extended period that public accounts take place but within 120 days, four short months.

. . . after the end of its fiscal year, provide to the chair of the Board an annual report

- (a) reporting on its activities, and
- (b) containing its audited financial statements for the fiscal year.

So, in fact, rather than again go to the hidebound, carefully structured system of government, this act actually brings a much more responsive mode to public scrutiny and a much higher level of transparency in a much faster time frame in this pace of the world today. For those reasons alone, Mr. Chairman – I don’t want to go on further and bore members with other detail – surely those measures stand out far and above the amendment. That’s why, of course, one cannot in all good conscience and faith support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I did hear earlier some comments by some of the members over there in the opposition with respect to: what about Enron? Well, in fact, Enron did hold a power purchase agreement in Alberta, and upon the dissolution of Enron Canada that power purchasing agreement was sold, I believe, to TransCanada and Engage Energy. At no time did the power users of Alberta ever lose one kilowatt-hour of service, nor was one dollar lost in the transaction, nor was anything done in a less than transparent form that was apparent to the market.

Now, market transparency is critical for the success of the marketplace, Mr. Chairman, and structuring it in this way ensures that not only those people who play in the marketplace, who bid in their power in the marketplace in a very well-structured merit order graph, but also those consumers are able to see, because of the market rules that have been established by the Electric Utilities Act, how people play fairly, how people bid into this marketplace, how people collect their money from this marketplace, how they are prosecuted if they err in this marketplace. So, in fact, after two and a half years of really concentrated consultation with stakeholders, well, even to the point where we ensured that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands was included on the consultation list, we’ve brought forward this act in its entirety, and it’s complex. I appreciate the hard work that the opposition has done in taking a careful look at this bill. I know they’ve worked long and hard and diligently at doing this. Although I look forward to hearing other amendments, I must regretfully ask colleagues not to support this one.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to briefly respond to the minister. You know, the fact that there’s going to be an annual report within 120 days and that there’s going to be an independent auditor appointed hardly brings any degree of public scrutiny to this. Any organization can appoint its own auditors, and we know well from the experience in the United States that auditors are sometimes compromised by the people giving them the contracts. The case of Arthur Andersen and Enron comes to mind. These are concrete and real examples. They’re not just socialist fantasies and speculation; they’re free enterprise reality. So, you know, I don’t accept the minister’s comments that there’s adequate surveillance of the surveillance administrator, and it’s far from being transparent.

I would just point out that virtually every prediction made by this government in the whole course – and I don’t just single out this minister. I go back to the minister before and the minister before and the minister before that. Nearly every prediction from the government that’s been made with respect to the results that we could expect from electricity deregulation has not come to pass. Go back to their predictions of what would happen with the power auctions for the existing power production. The power purchase agreement auctions didn’t even come close to the number that was predicted by the government and failed to meet the threshold that they themselves had indicated would be a minimum in order for it to be considered a success. That’s the first thing.

Then look at the predictions made by the Premier and everyone else in the government with respect to price as a result of deregulation. We’ve seen the exact opposite of what was predicted by the government, and so on. You know, we could go into considerable detail. The government’s track record on living up to its promises and the commitments it made for deregulation fails any sort of test, Mr. Chairman. It’s all a matter of the public record. We can see what they promised, we can see what they predicted, and we can see what in fact has come to pass after three years of deregulation. So I take cold comfort in the minister’s assurances that appropriate accountability is built into this act with respect to the market surveillance administrator.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d like to once again enter into debate on this particular bill, and I would like to thank the minister for finally getting on the record in this bill. When we take a look at the debate times we’ve had so far, he has been woefully absent in prior discussions, in fact not at all on the record, which is very interesting because while those who support his party position . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just want to caution you about the practice that we have in this House that we do not comment on a person's presence or absence, and I hope this will be respected both in the Assembly as well as in the committee.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I was hardly commenting on his presence or absence. I was commenting on his absence of speaking to this particular bill. The two are quite different.

The Deputy Chair: It really helps when you clarify that. Thank you.

Ms Carlson: Many members in this Assembly are filling a chair and doing not much else, so it's nice to see that the minister was prepared to get on the record. [interjections] Well, I hear lots of moans and groans from members in this Assembly, and I challenge any of them, other than the one we have seen tonight, from Grande Prairie-Smoky, to get up on his feet and enter into debate.

In fact, what's happening . . . [interjections] Well, if you don't want to listen to me, then stand up and speak, other Mr. Minister who likes to sit and chirp from his seat rather than enter into any kind of legitimate debate in this Assembly, who just likes to sit and heckle. That would be the minister of human resources, who is not very happy with my comments but still isn't prepared to enter into legitimate debate on this. He should because, in fact, on this very substantive bill, which is a cornerstone bill for this government in this Legislative Assembly, we see that up until March 19 the minister himself wasn't present in debate. [interjections] You know quite well what I was speaking to.

Mr. Dunford: You're walking a fine line there; aren't you, my dear?

Ms Carlson: No, I am not walking a fine line, as the minister of human resources was saying, and I have to say quite frankly that I am certainly not your dear or anyone else's in this Assembly. I am a fully elected member of this Assembly, just as you are. [interjections] Thank you. I do see there is some support for that position.

In fact, the reason why you're so crabby about what's going on here is because the members supporting your side of this particular debate have been woefully absent in debate on this particular bill. We see that as of March 19 members supporting the Progressive Conservative Party who were elected in this Assembly spoke less than 15 minutes.

Mr. Dunford: So all these hours and hours and hours have all been you then? What are you whining about?

Ms Carlson: In fact, these hours and hours and hours that we've had in debate, Mr. Chairman, through you . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, it would really help if you would speak through the chair and refrain from a dialogue back and forth across the floor, please.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has been recognized and is being requested to proceed.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I am on my feet and speaking through the chair, I am quite happy to note that this is the first evening that I have entered into debate on Bill 3. In fact, I have yet to put in a full 20 minutes on the substantive parts of this bill. Because of the time allocation motion that we see on the Order Paper, I am now forced to proceed to the series of amendments we have that will try to make a very flawed bill better. It's tough to do when you get this kind of legislation in front of you, but we take our role in this Legislature very responsibly, and as a result of that I will now proceed with the next amendment in the series of many amendments we have.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we have an amendment before us, and we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A3.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you may proceed.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On the debate, through the chair, in spite of the fact that I continue to hear mumblings and grumbings from the Assembly. I know it's past 10 o'clock, so it's past the time that they like to go home, particularly . . .

An Hon. Member: Some of us have been working all day.

Ms Carlson: Well, so have many of the rest of us, Mr. Chairman, as that particular minister would like to comment. I know that particular minister is an early riser and likes to get her work done in the early part of the day, but if we had family friendly hours in this Legislative Assembly, then we wouldn't be entering into debate on amendments at 10 after 10.

An Hon. Member: Family friendly hours?

Ms Carlson: Yes, family friendly hours, which would be a change and would be something we've asked for for many years in this Assembly. It's not something . . .

Mr. Mason: Would it be like having family values?

Ms Carlson: It might be like having family values, Mr. Chairman, which this government talks about supporting but doesn't actually walk the talk.

The amendment which I am moving on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar states that Bill 3 be amended as follows. A. Section 1(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (ii):

- (ii.1) "net metering" means a metering system that
 - (a) measures the flow of electricity both to and from the customer and the interconnected electric system,
 - (b) allows the customer, who produces a surplus of electricity by way of a renewable energy system, to send that surplus back to the interconnected electric system, and
 - (c) credits the customer's meter for the amount of energy sent back to the interconnected electric system.

B. Section 20(1) is amended by adding the following after clause (l):

- (m) the operation of net metering as part of the interconnected electric system.

Now, there's a really good reason why net metering would be a good idea to enter into in this particular legislation, and that is that as costs for electricity and energy in this province in general skyrocket, people need to take a look at finding viable alternatives to provide energy sources to their homes and to their businesses. They need to look to be much more environmentally conscious and friendly than they have been in the past. A very good way of doing that is to set up a net metering system for those people and businesses who are forward thinking enough and are able to put in systems within their establishments that generate energy through alternate sources so that at those times when they are having peak operations – for instance, if they wanted to run their oven during peak time at dinnertime – they could draw out of the system, and in down times, when they had excess capacity, be it through solar panels or something else, they could send that back into the system. We think that those are very good ideas.

Net metering, for those who don't know what that is, is a simplified method of metering the energy consumed and produced at a home or a business, and it's got its own renewable energy generator such as a wind turbine. Under net metering excess electricity produced by the wind turbine will spin the existing home or business electricity meter backwards, effectively banking the electricity until it is needed by the customer. This provides the customer with full retail value for all the electricity produced. There are similar kinds of systems in the megaprojects right now, but we don't have anything at all like this for small producers.

So what would happen is that customers can use the electricity they generate with the wind turbines to supply their own lights and appliances, offsetting electricity they would otherwise have to purchase from the utility at the retail price. If the customer produces any excess electricity beyond what's needed to meet their needs, net metering is not allowed. The utility purchases that excess electricity at a wholesale or an avoided cost price. So that's a simple explanation.

Why is net metering important? There are three reasons why we should be taking a look at it. First, because an ultimate source like wind energy is an intermittent resource. It comes and it goes. They may not be using the power as it's being generated, and net metering allows them to receive the full value for the electricity they produce. Second, net metering reduces installation costs for customers by eliminating the need for a second energy meter. Third, net metering provides a simple, inexpensive, and easily administered mechanism for encouraging the use of small-scale wind energy systems or other alternate systems like solar-powered systems, that provide important local, national, and global benefits to the environment and to the economy.

Are there costs and benefits? Well, there certainly are benefits. Some of those are for both utilities and consumers. Utility benefits. Avoid the administrative and accounting costs of metering and purchasing the small amounts of excess electricity produced by small-scale wind-energy facilities, because when you think about this, your meter just runs backwards during that time. During these very cold times like we've seen in the past couple of months here, wouldn't it be really nice to see your meter running backwards. That would be a benefit for everybody. Consumers get benefits by getting greater value for some of the electricity they generate and by being able to interconnect with the utility using their existing meter. So they get continuous sources while really being forward thinking in terms of what they can provide for their household costs.

There's an indirect cost, Mr. Chairman. We wouldn't want to lead anybody down the garden path in terms of this. They're buying electricity from the utility, so it means that they're collecting less revenue from the consumer. This is a really good idea. The minister of agriculture will know that there are some people in her own constituency who have looked at this very seriously and who have tried to incorporate it, and I would expect to see her support this particular amendment because it's just a great idea. It doesn't derail what they want to do on this particular bill. It doesn't stop or stall deregulation at all. It has a real green benefit to it and fits very well in line with the government's proposal to use green power and to support the costs of bringing . . . [interjections] The cost is that they only have one meter so it's cheaper for the consumer, and the cost is that the consumer is not buying as much electricity from the existing utilities.

The consumer has the start-up cost of installing either wind or solar power, but that becomes very cost-effective for both the individuals and the other operators. You just have one meter and whatever they generate – we know this and the minister of agriculture knows this very well. I remember times on the farms where she and I both grew up where all of the energy on the farm . . .

Mr. Hancock: You both grew up on the same farm?

Ms. Carlson: In the same area, where a lot of the energy was generated by wind turbines. There were no lines out there. It was wind generated. Then they went to a combination system where people couldn't use their excess capacity, but they could buy the power on the grid as they needed it. So this is just one step further in this particular idea, and that is that you connect those two systems. When they use energy from the grid, the meter goes forward, so the energy companies make money. When there's excess capacity and the consumer is generating excess capacity, the meter goes backwards and not in any kind of inflated or deflated price, at exactly the same stable kind of price.

So this is just one step further in the developments that we have seen people in her constituency use for literally decades, since we first saw settlements in those farm areas. My own grandparents in Oyen had this system, and there were good friends of ours in Cereal, where this minister now lives, who used that system until I was at least 15 or 16 years old. It's a really, really good idea. So I'm hoping that we'll see some interest in this particular debate. It's a positive kind of forward-looking innovation, just taking us a step further down the path of being green and looking at cost-effective ways for consumers to generally lower their average monthly electrical cost.

So with that and given the time, I will stop talking about this and hope that the minister of agriculture can convince the Minister of Energy that this might in fact be a good idea for them to take a look at. If we don't see it come up in here, we can see for sure that this is going to be a really good idea for a private member's bill in the future, and from that we'll see the government adopt it. But let them take a step forward. Let them do something that is very progressive here tonight and accept this amendment.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a couple of comments on the amendment. I don't disagree with the intent of the amendment, and certainly I think it's a choice that people might make. However, what I do have a problem with is legislating it. I don't tend to be a person who likes to overlegislate people's lives. What I am going to ask the hon. minister to comment on on this amendment, which will probably have some influence on my final decision, is: is there anything today that would preclude customers from entering into this?

Mr. Mason: Yes. I can answer it. I've got examples.

Mrs. McClellan: I've had an offer from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands to answer my question. I think I would prefer to stick to the free market system and ask the minister rather than the system that sets rates behind closed doors and so on, and that's the experience I think the hon. member has. So I would prefer that we ask the minister.

Mrs. Nelson: That was a cheap shot.

Mrs. McClellan: It wasn't a cheap shot. It was an honest fact. It was just a fact of life.

But it is an interesting concept, and I would like to ask the hon. minister if there is anything in the bill today that would actually preclude using net meters. I do think that down the road we're going to see far more energy produced on farms. In my experience as a minister I do know that there are projects of bioenergy today being implemented, and it is my understanding that those projects can sell the excess energy from their project to the grid.

Ms Carlson: But those are big projects.

Mrs. McClellan: Well, they're not. That's the interesting thing. They're not necessarily big projects. In fact, we have a lot of small projects.

So if there isn't anything that precludes this from happening today, if the customer would bear the cost, and probably should, of the metering, then I don't understand why we would legislate a good idea. If it's a good idea, it'll flow. So I'd ask the hon. minister if he would comment on that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the hon. Minister of Energy deferring to me on this point, but I do have just an example. I know that one constituent of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who has been a candidate for our party federally in the past – and of course that may preclude her from any consideration opposite, but I think it's an interesting case – has put three solar panels on her roof, and the big, bad power company, in this case EPCOR, has refused to let her connect these solar panels into her home. She not only can't connect it so that she can draw power to light her home, but EPCOR won't let her put it into the grid. So there's an example here of where a big power company, in this case EPCOR, has refused to let this individual connect her solar panels into their electrical system. So it might be a good argument for putting this into the legislation. [interjections] I guess they're not listening, so that's fine. That was a clear example of how a power company is refusing to allow this.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Chair, I'm pleased to enter into debate, and I'm particularly pleased to see this amendment. One of the reasons that I'm pleased to see this amendment is that it does talk about the future of metering, and we all know, particularly those who have suffered, I mean, have enjoyed the services of EPCOR in the Aquila service network how important accurate meter readings can be and in fact how much more efficient meter readings can be.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, in Puget Sound today Bonneville Power is undergoing an experiment with wireless meter reading, and you can under this experiment vend power back into the grid. For example, if you were away on holidays and you decided that you weren't going to use the power that you were allocated, you are able to vend back your power. Right now the cost of those real-time meters is about $150 U.S., and I think that technology will move that price down over time, which I think will benefit all of us.

With respect to the present legislation, as the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has asked, there are many, many cases of individual family farms that use wind power now. As a matter of fact, I think that a previous business owned by the member from Fort Macleod actually had a windmill that he would vend back into the grid. So this is achievable without more rules.

The other thing that's important as well, even as the member who did serve as part of the city management team – I guess they would be deemed the shareholder for EPCOR. In Calgary there's a house in the hon. Member for Calgary-North West's constituency that has gone completely off the grid. [interjection] That's not yours? The red one on Nose Creek? [interjection] No. Is it? Well, we don't know because the final boundaries commission hasn't been brought in, Mr. Chairman, and I'm sure that's a topic for a different type of animated debate.

This is a very interesting home. This is a home where an individual has put solar panels in, not unlike the solar panels that the Member for Medicine Hat put in the government yesterday and was shown in a very attractive photo opportunity nattily attired in his green T-shirt. I'm sure that that thing is bolted in and working and I didn't see the EPCOR police down locking off the Legislature. I can only assume that if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands would send us the name of the defeated ND candidate, maybe we could help ameliorate some of the difficulties about hooking up solar panels.

Solar panels as a form of renewable energy have met kind of a technological wall at this stage, Mr. Chairman. Solar panels really only store about 10 percent of the energy that is shone upon them, so the difficulty becomes in the mass that you have to have for storage.

Now, to make it possible to vend back electricity – I was fortunate enough to attend an opening in Calgary – there's also a device that takes solar power and converts it and puts it back onto the grid. That, of course, has been a Calgary company that on its opening stated clearly that this type of innovation, this type of new thought would not have been possible without deregulation.

With this competitive market structure, Mr. Chairman, not only do we get the good and wise minds of the opposition peering through legislation and responding with amendments, but we also get people who generate natural gas, who generate steam and then want to bolt the generator between where the steam is generated and where the bitumen is heated up. That generates copious amounts of new electrical generation without adding measurably to the emissions in this province, without adding measurably to the carbon dioxide that's emitted, and in fact the only cost is the capital cost one incurs in installing one of these large turbines.

So, Mr. Chairman, what we have seen with the advent of a competitive market in electricity is some 3,000 new megawatts, but contrary to the old Crown model or the old socialist model, this power has come on in a variety of new and different and innovative and creative forms. The government of Alberta, which is important to note, has just executed the largest green power contract ever executed in North America, which will then provide, I believe, 90 percent of its power requirements, which is in excess of some 23 megawatts annually, via a biomass and a wind project. I mean, that puts us in the forefront of energy innovation. In fact, if I were living in Grande Prairie-Wapiti or if I were the member representing Grande Prairie-Wapiti, I would be exceedingly proud of the investment, of the opportunity, of the jobs that are going to be created by this project that Canadian Hydro is undertaking with Canfor. Mr. Chairman, not only is it going to provide electricity; it's going to provide heat. It's going to heat those areas in those cold winters and, in fact, use less natural gas.

Now, the other benefit of this particular project is that it's in Grande Prairie. One of the things about Grande Prairie, Mr. Chairman, is that it is not well-served by transmission lines. So if you had an option of taking it under the socialist model, you'd run a transmission line up from your coal-generated plant in Wabamun, you would pay for the new plant there, then you'd pay for the new transmission up there, in the rate base for everyone, and then finally, some day, 14, 20, 30, 40 years – who knows how long the approval rates take? – you might be able to flip on a light switch in Grande Prairie, but by then it would be too late. Everybody will have moved out and be living in B.C.

What this does, what the competitive market structure does is it gives residents of Grande Prairie an opportunity to be innovative, save money, to be conservative. I guess if you conserve energy, you're conservative, and I guess you could be progressive in doing that too. So you could live in Grande Prairie and in fact be progressive and conservative at the same time. I think most people in Grande Prairie probably are Progressive Conservative. Mr. Chairman, I digress.

The amendment itself has of substance things that can already be undertaken in the electricity grid of today. It also brings up the importance of net metering in the future, because as we see in Europe – and as you see in the appliances that are being shipped from Europe now, they have timers on them – people run their dishwashers, their dryers, their washing machines, these devices now after midnight, when the price of power is at the lowest. Albertans, by reducing their demands on our power surge period, our peak power period, between 4 and 7, can actually reduce power consumption in this province and also reduce price. In fact, in the first six months of 2001 electrical consumption was reduced by some 6 to 7 percent.

Certainly, I will keep this amendment on file with me. I think it's an interesting piece. We're going to watch continued power vending back and forth in the rural areas onto the grid. One thing you do have to remember, Mr. Chairman, is that if you do have a line, though, your net metering would also have a demand charge because once you are on the grid, there has to be firm power or power available for you should you make that decision to turn the lights on.

So as interesting as this amendment is and as diligently as the work has been done by the opposition to put it forward, I must regretfully ask colleagues to vote against it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Regretfully, with regard to net metering the minister doesn't know what he's talking about, and he really needs to do some research on the issue. At the very least, he should have listened to what we said in the first description, and that is that there are three very distinct benefits for people who have net metering, and that is because consumers can't always consume all of what they have in terms of power because solar and wind power are intermittent power sources. So if they have net metering, then they get full value for the electricity without installing expensive battery storage systems. That's important because that affects the payback period for the person who's installed both the solar or the wind energy. Secondly, it reduces installation costs for customers by eliminating the need for a second energy meter. Third, it provides a simple, inexpensive, and easy to administer mechanism for encouraging small-scale use of alternate energy sources. In fact, the minister should know this. You can use your existing meter to take advantage of net metering because all of those meters go forward and go backwards, so this is a very interesting thing to do.

The minister should also know that 30 states already legislate the requirement for there to be net metering options. They require at least some of the utilities that are providing services in their areas to offer net metering for small wind systems, and the rules are enacted by state utility regulators. So as we have heard from the member here: that is not an option allowed by most of the providers in this province. In fact, we haven't been able to find a case where it has been, and then the States has found that it's got to be enacted by state utility regulators, and these rules apply to utilities whose rates and services are regulated at the state level. So this is a perfect little piece to tuck into this bill in a regulation.

For Alberta this would be very forward legislation, but it isn't news in the States because in recent years we have seen many states enacting net metering laws legislatively, including California, Connecticut, Delaware, Massachusetts, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Vermont, Virginia, and Washington. In most of these states with net metering statutes all utilities are required to offer net metering for some wind systems and some solar systems, and many of them limit eligibility to just small systems.

So, in fact, this minister needs to get off his soapbox and onto a little bit of research and development and get with the program. If they're going to provide high energy costs to this province, then they've also got to provide alternate sources.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, since I spoke before, it occurs to me that I should speak to this rather than attempt to answer questions. You know, I think this is a good amendment. I think this is a very good amendment, and I think that the government could move quickly, not just take it under advisement but actually say: listen; we can do this. This could be done under a regulated system, just as it can be done under this system. This particular amendment is neutral when it comes to the type of system of electricity and would work very well.

I mentioned the case of the individual who tried to get EPCOR to hook in her solar panels on her roof, and they refused. They wouldn't do it. I know I get accused of just defending EPCOR all the time and not supporting deregulation because I'm supposedly supporting EPCOR, but in this case EPCOR is the bad guy, and it needs the government to enforce this. It's simple to do.

I recently spoke to a group of students at Harry Ainlay high school. Some of our pages actually belong to a student club there that's interested in politics. One of the things that was of most interest to them is the idea that you could produce power in your own house through a variety of means and your meter would actually go backwards because what it means is that the power grid is buying the power from you because you're producing more power than you're using.

There are lots of ways you can do it. Solar panels are just one; heat pumps are another. I'm thinking of agricultural applications. We know that the Premier wants us to have 17 million hogs in this province, and we know from previous debates just how much pig manure that would produce, Mr. Chairman, and there's a lot of heat in that pig manure. There's an awful lot of heat, and through the use of heat pumps you can actually convert that into energy that's usable and can be put back into the grid. Wind power has been suggested. There's small-scale water power. You can actually produce small amounts of electricity from streams that may be running through your property and so on. There's no end to the ways that people can produce their own electricity, so this amendment would allow that, and it's certainly something that we've been talking about for some time.

Now, I just want to get onto some of the things that the minister has talked about because he talks about the socialist system, by which he means the regulated system as opposed to the system we have here. I think that it's fair to say that the kind of system that's proposed by this government, that's emerging in this province, will produce a certain amount of innovation because there'll be a considerable amount of desperation. People will be desperate to find ways to save on their power bills, so they'll be prepared to try things, and I suppose that that is the silver lining in the government's direction, but it comes at an enormous cost, and it's so unnecessary. If you want to find ways to innovate, amendments like this one would certainly allow that, and this kind of innovation could take place in the kind of system that we support, which is a regulated system, which this province has had. It was not socialists that brought this into existence, Mr. Chairman. I'd remind the hon. Minister of Energy that it is not socialists that brought about the regulated system in Alberta. It was Social Credit, and that's about as close as you can get. It was, of course, supported and maintained by the Lougheed administration, which was a conservative government, as well as the Getty government, which was also a conservative government. In Ontario they've turned back towards this, and this decision was made by Premier Eves, who is of course a Progressive Conservative Premier. So it's a kind of a system that has not only served people very well for many years, but it's been broadly supported politically, and to call it a socialist system is to completely misrepresent the actual fact.

Here in Alberta while it was a regulated system, the majority of the production and distribution of electricity was in the hands of private companies being Alberta Power, which then became ATCO Electric, and also Calgary Power, which then became TransAlta. The third player, which was a fairly small player but one of the big three, was, of course, EPCOR, which was owned by the people of Edmonton. So it works very well in an entirely publicly-owned electrical system as they have in some provinces, which you could probably call a socialist system. But in Alberta we never had a socialist system. We had a mixed system that was predominantly free enterprise but was regulated by the government.

I guess the other point that I'd like to make is that at the time that the economy was growing very rapidly in Alberta, more rapidly than today, in the late '70s, they were able to plan and bring on new generation in a timely fashion. There were not brownouts. There were not blackouts. In fact, the system was quite well planned, and prices were kept low because supply was balanced with demand, not through market forces but through planning. It did work very well. I think the suggestion that that system didn't work for Alberta is not true.

I know that allegations have been made, too, about how long it took to bring Genesee on-line. You know, I have some familiarity with that too, Mr. Chairman, because the provincial government refused to allow Genesee to be brought into rate base even though it had been deemed to be necessary and its supply was required, and it kept it out of rate base for a long time. The result is that the utility borrowed money in order to operate the generation and to pay a dividend back to the city, and this was added to the allowance for funds used during this construction. Of course, that was all then paid back when it was put into rate base because it was all eligible under the rules, and the result is that there was considerably more capital that had to be put onto the rate base and repaid in that fashion than would have been necessary.

So delays in getting Genesee into the rate base were the result of government opposition and particularly agitation from TransAlta Utilities which was picked up particularly by some of the Calgary representatives, who discriminated, frankly, against EPCOR in that case. You know, I look back and I remember meeting, as a member of city council, with Dr. West, who at the time was the Minister of Energy. He told us that this system would replace the cumbersome and expensive regulated system and that this would . . .

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, but under Standing Order 61(4) I must put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for consideration by the Committee of the Whole. Does the committee approve the following appropriation bill: Bill 30, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chair: Carried.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:44 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

[Motion carried]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chair: Carried.

Bill 3
Electric Utilities Act

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 3.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee now rise and report progress on Bill 3 and Bill 27 and report Bill 30.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports Bill 30. The committee reports progress on Bill 27 and Bill 3. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Some Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker: So ordered.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:59 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 20, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/20

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the staff of the communications branch of Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. We rely on these individuals day in and day out for a wide range of communication services. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to stand and remain standing as I introduce them. First, director Terry Willock; assistant director David Hennig; public affairs officers Kerilyn Hamilton, Andrew Horton, Sharon Jensen, Marie McDonnell, and Michael Norris; and Louise McGinnis, branch administrator. I would ask that all members of the Assembly give our guests a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Deputy Premier just indicated, we also have some members of Municipal Affairs here as well as members of our intern program, perhaps the youngest staff of any part of Canada, and it's my pleasure to introduce those youthful-looking people that are part of Municipal Affairs today. We have – and I'd ask them to rise as I introduce them – Laura Buckingham, Cathy McEnaney, Christine Kendrick, Ian McCormack, Terry Brown, and Wendy Peters, and our interns are Rispah Kiptoo from Red Deer, Jayne McPhee from Spruce Grove, Brandy Cox from Beaver county, and June Wilson from the town of Millet. Please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We always talk about what a wonderful, glorious province Alberta is, and in that context I think we have to recognize the people who built and left us this glorious province, our seniors. Today it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you 24 members of MATT, which stands for the Mature Adults Third Thursday of Rio Terrace Moravian church. They are joining us here today. They're forming a group for the west end of Edmonton, which is going to be a remarkable benefit for all of us. They're here in the members' gallery and public gallery, and I would like all our colleagues to thank them for joining us and thank them for leaving us such a wonderful province.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to introduce through you and to the Assembly two wonderful people, John Buie and his son Nicolas Buie. John is the director of human resources and organizational effectiveness for the Department of Energy. I'd ask them to both rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly a visitor from New Brunswick. His name is Claude Laberge, and he is the principal of James M. Hill Memorial high school in Miramichi. Mr. Laberge has been here for the last two weeks, and in talking to him just prior to the session, I asked him why he had come here, and quite simply it was to see why Alberta students do so well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 31 visitors from Sir George Simpson school in St. Albert. They are seated in the public galley, and they are accompanied by their teachers, Mme Gabourie and Miss Walker, and by parent helpers Mr. St. Pierre, Ms Rowland, Mrs. Heatley, Mrs. Zimmel, Mrs. Thompson, and Mr. Wilkie. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all of the Assembly a group of students from Calgary. They are from the Queen Elizabeth high school. They're in grade 10. There are 42 of them here. They're accompanied by their teacher, Sarah MacLeod, and by two interpreters, since the school also includes people that are hard of hearing. So we have two interpreters. We have Dee-Dee Kay, and we have Laurel Villegas-Pryde and also a grandparent helper, Mrs. Roberta Leaver. So if these young people and their accompanying adults would stand, we would love to show you our appreciation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two guests who are seated in the public gallery this afternoon. Shirley Saunders, who hails from Kelowna, B.C., was asked to participate in an intercessory prayer team at the G-8 summit held in Kananaskis, Alberta, on June 26 and 27, 2002. The second guest is my brain trust at the constituency office, my assistant, Joan Wynnyk. I would ask Joan and Shirley to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the great things about Canada is the success stories, and I'd like to introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a fine Canadian success story today. Mr. Ernest Schultz is seated with two guests in the public gallery, and I'd ask him and his guests to rise if they could, please. Mr. Schultz was born into a pioneering homestead family in the Bashaw-Ponoka area. He grew up on a farm, served in the RCMP, and then went on to become a very successful car dealer and owner of car dealerships in both Alberta and B.C. He also happens to be my wife's uncle. I would ask all of you to give him and his guests a very warm welcome.

Mr. Loughheed: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and the members assembled Mr. Tom Pearson from Dow Chemical, a resident of Fort Saskatchewan and member of the chamber of commerce.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Old Strathcona Fire

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and others. A week ago today a terrible thing happened in Edmonton. I'm talking, of course, about the fire in Old Strathcona. As you know, small business owners are the backbone of the Alberta economy, and our province is renowned as a land of risk-takers, entrepreneurs, and pioneers. As a former small business owner myself I know the passion with which these individuals pursue their business. It is truly a labour of love.

So today I'd like to extend our heartfelt condolences on behalf of the government to all those Old Strathcona business owners who lost their establishments last week in this tragic fire. I'm sure no words that I could say would accurately describe the loss that they feel. The neighbourhood is dear to all of us in Edmonton and, indeed, Alberta.

I would also like to comment on the bravery that was demonstrated by the firefighters of Edmonton in dealing with this, one of the most major fires we've had in a long time in the city of Edmonton and, indeed, the province of Alberta.

I'd like to leave you with a thought, though, Mr. Speaker. To the people of Strathcona. You've certainly lost the bricks and mortars but not the heart and passion that drove those small businesses. You will begin again, and when you do, know full well that the Alberta government will be supporting you in everything you do. In the meantime, our thoughts and prayers are with you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition agrees that small business owners are the backbone of the Alberta economy. Also as a former small business owner I understand the dedication, commitment, and hard work these individuals undergo. The vibrancy that small businesses bring to our communities does not go unnoticed. The Old Strathcona small business owners who lost their businesses in last week's tragic fire played the additional role of preserving the extraordinary historical significance of this community in Edmonton.

We in the Official Opposition would like to extend our deepest condolences to the Old Strathcona business owners and their families who lost their businesses in the tragic fire. Also, we extend our condolences to the employees of these businesses who find themselves without employment after this horrible incident. Our thoughts and support are with them as they begin the process of rebuilding.

Additionally, we would like to thank all of the police and firefighters who worked so hard to save a real historic area of this city.

Thank you.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would like to request unanimous consent from the Assembly for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to make a brief response to the minister's statement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank my colleagues for the consent that they have so generously granted.

Like all Edmontonians I was shocked and distressed by last week's fire that destroyed several buildings and family run businesses in Old Strathcona. Thankfully, no one was hurt or injured, though a number of animals at the Scales & Tails pet shop were lost.

Whyte Avenue is special. It's the cultural and artistic centre of the city. There's a piece of our history, and it's the pride of the south side neighbourhood that I'm proud to represent. It pains me that the heart of this vibrant area has a huge hole in it.

I salute the efforts of the firefighters who courageously fought the fire under extremely difficult circumstances and stopped it from destroying even more of our heritage.

As the MLA for the area I want residents and business owners in the area to know that I will work with the city, Old Strathcona Foundation, and the province to do whatever I can to assist the area and the business owners to rebuild. This setback will only be temporary. The spirit of Edmontonians is strong. I'm sure we will rebuild this part of Whyte Avenue in a way that reflects the history and vitality of Old Strathcona.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

Time Allocation

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, on December 4, 2002, the Premier told this House "that opposition, really dissent, is the essence of democracy. It is the fundamental underpinning of democracy." This government isn't practising what it preaches. It has invoked closure on controversial legislation at least 30 times since the Premier has come to power. My question to the Government House Leader: given that not all opposition members have had a chance to speak to Bill 3 and fairly represent their constituents, why is this government invoking closure through time allocation?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a novel concept that a Government House Leader might be called to account in question period, but I'm certainly happy to respond to the question on behalf of the government. Time allocation is a rule of this Assembly and, quite frankly, the rule of a number of Legislative Assemblies, including the federal House. I might just, in response to the question, point out that in the federal House time allocation is used routinely on almost every piece of business by the federal Liberal government. Time allocation, which is not closure but which is fair warning in significant advance of an event that there's going to be a limited amount of time left in committee, is an appropriate tool to let all members of the House know that once a sufficient amount of debate has occurred or a sufficient amount of time has been allowed for debate, there has to be an opportunity to move on. As all members know, debate is unlimited, potentially, in committee. A member can speak as many times as they wish to speak.

Now, if you take a look at, for example, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, which is one of the motions that's been put on notice for time allocation, there have been seven and a quarter hours of debate on the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act. In that debate two members of the opposition have participated once, three members have participated twice, two members have participated three times, and two members have participated four times. In all that time, Mr. Speaker, particularly in committee – Liberal members participated for 187 minutes in committee, which is a line-by-line analysis of a bill – not one amendment has been introduced.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Energy: is it the policy of this government to always limit debate about energy deregulation since the government also invoked closure on deregulation when it was last brought before this House, in 1998? [interjections]

The Speaker: I hope the Minister of Energy was able to hear that question.

Mr. Smith: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the Ministry of Energy has been actively involved in consultation on Bill 3 for a two-year period, culminating in this legislation brought before the House. As has been brought up in the House, a part of the consultation process was even to include the Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the consultation list. It has been discussed through various committees: the Alberta Advisory Council on Electricity, that was a multistakeholder group; the business improvement group subcommittee; the retail businesses subcommittee. This is the most consulted-on bill that I have ever been involved in.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given that this government neglected to hold proper consultation and then went behind union's back and now threatens to stop debate, is it the policy of this government to trample the rights of workers without any input from the labour community?

Mr. Dunford: No, Mr. Speaker. I think there have been many times that the record would show where we've engaged in quite an extensive consultation. This time is different. There's no question about that. I think I've been open and candid with everyone, including the members of this House, that a request was made by one of the parties to a collective agreement process. We have responded to various requests that were made. As a matter of fact, to try to at least provide for information – I don't know that I could say consultation – hon. member, immediately after the joint press conference that we had with the Minister of Health and Wellness, I immediately proceeded upstairs in this building to a room where there were quite a number of union leaders in this province present. I think it was a half hour or more that we were able to then discuss some of the aspects of this particular bill.

I'd like to congratulate all of the people, then, that have spoken inside this Legislature about Bill 27. I think they've been very direct on what their opposition was. The positions have been articulated in a very forthright and clear manner, and I believe that most things that could be said in opposition to this bill probably already have been said.

Tuition Fees

Dr. Nicol: Tomorrow the University of Calgary makes an important decision. The board of governors will decide whether to make up for years of government underfunding by going to students for yet more tuition money, this time over 200 percent more money from some faculties. To the Minister of Learning: is it the minister's policy to put the faculties of law, medicine, and business out of the reach of middle- and low-income Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The University of Toronto just underwent a very interesting study. The University of Toronto has the highest tuition fee in the country for law, at $16,000 per year. What they subsequently did was took a look at the socioeconomic status of the people who were entering law, and they actually found that there was absolutely no difference from before they had increased tuition to now, when it is at $16,000, what it actually is. In all fairness, the number of visible minorities was actually increased over this study, and it looks like it had no effect.

What the University of Calgary is doing is basically looking at differential tuition fees for three separate faculties. They're looking at it in business, law, and medicine. With regard to medicine the average yearly cost of a medical degree is very close to the $75,000 to $100,000 range, of which they will be paying – I believe that they looked at the number of around $10,000. Typically what we tend to do, Mr. Speaker, is that university students would pay approximately, at most, 30 percent of the actual cost of their degree. The average in Alberta is around 24, 25 percent, so the government and every other funding source will be paying about 76 percent. What they are looking to do is bring medicine, for example, in line with the other faculties.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, we won't get into the corrupt formula they use for calculating that 30 percent.

My next question is: why is increasing student debt the only solution this minister has to the problem of underfunding of universities?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta and the province of Alberta have about the second lowest student debt level in the country. It is roughly $18,000 for a four-year undergraduate degree. We have by far the most generous student loan program, where those students that need it can achieve somewhere around $11,000 per year, of which they will only pay back approximately $5,000.

The other point that I will make is that the Liberal government in Ottawa also works with us in their student loan program, Mr. Speaker, and their remission to the students, to those kids that have gone through university and are now out working, is absolutely zero.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the minister: why doesn't the minister target funding to reduce tuition instead of increasing student loans, which only burdens students with a higher debt payment?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, the actual number – and I have found it – for university undergraduates is $18,871, which is the second lowest in the country. It has been our goal in this government to provide dollars through the student loan program to those students who need it to attend university, and that's something that we have taken very strongly. We've increased the funding to student loans, to student financial assistance by very close to 50 percent over the last three years. In talking to the students, in talking to the student groups, they will certainly identify that the student loan program in Alberta is the number one student loan program right across Canada, and that's something we're very proud of.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Angele Beaudoin, a parent in Edmonton-Whitemud, wrote to her MLA to let him know that her school plans to cut four full-time teachers, one half-time kindergarten teacher, as well as administrative and custodial support. She blames these cuts directly on the government's refusal to fund the arbitrated settlement with teachers and the lack of budget flexibility allowed Edmonton public schools. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why, if the budget has been increased as much as the government claims it has, are such severe cuts being made at this school?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to reiterate what was said yesterday. There were two schools that were brought up in question period yesterday, Windsor Park school and McCauley school, and I believe that these two schools really illustrate the issue that is happening with Edmonton public today. Windsor Park school has 179 students, which is a small increase over last year. They employ 8.7 teachers. Their class size, according to the 2002-2003 class size study, which is a self-reported study, is 26.7 students. The utilization rate for that school is 82 percent, which is right in the range that we're looking for.

In contrast to that, Mr. Speaker, McCauley school, which is in Edmonton-Highlands, has 210 students, with a relatively flat enrollment growth. Their grades 1 to 6 size is 14.7 students, and the utilization rate for the school is 35 percent. So that's what's happening in the school.

What we're looking at with the audit of Edmonton public is how they distribute their dollars out. Obviously, there are some issues with that, but hopefully we will be able to elucidate more to the hon. member following the audit of Edmonton public.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why, if the budget has increased, as the government claims, is it highly likely that over 200 schools in Edmonton public will be reducing staff next September?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to increasing money, I think the hon. member is very capable of looking in the budget and seeing what has happened over the past two years. We've seen a huge amount of increase, but in all fairness we have had a 14 percent increase to the teachers, which has put a strain on some of the districts. What you take a look at, the point that I just illustrated, is the problem with Edmonton public in how they distribute the dollars out to their schools. When we have one school that has a class size of 14.7 versus another school that has a class size of 26.7, what we have to do is ask the question: why? There may be a very valid reason. With school utilization, for example, 35 percent versus 82 percent, again we have to ask the question: why? That's what we are attempting to do in the audit of Edmonton public.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that parents like Mrs. Beaudoin hold the government responsible, when will the minister, who found $2 million to renovate his offices and $7 million for Calgary public, find the $13 million needed to prevent these cuts in Edmonton public schools?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, with the Edmonton public audit, as I've stated – maybe this member has got something in his ears and can't hear – we are already down approximately $4 million to $5 million, so it is not $13.5 million.

On the other comment that the member made, I would invite the hon. Minister of Infrastructure to comment on the $2 million that was used to renovate the offices and the amount of money that that has saved my department.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, Old Scona academic high, in my riding of Edmonton-Strathcona, is the top ranked high school in Alberta. However, projected budget cuts threaten many of the programs that contribute to Old Scona's worldwide reputation for excellence. Every time the minister is confronted about the reality of these cuts, all he does is deny, deny, deny. Instead of Minister Lyle, we have Minister Denial. Once again my questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why is Old Scona academic high, a shining example of success in public education, facing a quarter million dollar shortfall in next year's budget?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I just gave you two examples of schools that are occurring in Edmonton public as we speak today. Old Scona – I found it very interesting because the hon. member over there usually does not like to rank schools, but all of a sudden he says that it is the number one school in the province, and it is – is very high in its scholastic achievement. But, again, there is a huge difference as to what is happening school to school in Edmonton, and what the audit of Edmonton public is attempting to do is look at why there is this difference. Why are some schools at 32 percent? Why are some schools at 90 percent or above? Why are they receiving similar amounts of dollars? This is one of the most intimate questions that we have to ask Edmonton public, and I'm hoping that by the end of next week we will be able to have the answer for the hon. member as well as for all the members of this Assembly and the general public.

The Speaker: The hon. member. No names.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There were a hundred members present at the school council meeting last night, and they asked me to remind the minister of what's at stake, what you're risking in this school.

The Speaker: Work with me; okay? The hon. member knows that first of all he doesn't mention names of hon. members. Secondly, the hon. member knows that there are no preambles on the second question. The hon. member signed the agreement. Let's get the question, and let's move forward.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Other than deny, deny, deny, what's the minister going to do to fix the quarter million dollar hole in Old Scona academic high's budget? That's the question. Answer the question, Mr. Minister.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, you know, again – I've said this probably 15 times in the Legislature – we are taking a look at Edmonton public, the total Edmonton public. We will have those audit results in, again, hopefully by the end of next week.

With regard to the $13.5 million they don't have a $13.5 million deficit. We have brought that down by a minimum of $4 million to $5 million. Hopefully, we will be able to have a firmer number by the end of next week and that we will be able to tell. What has happened in Edmonton public is that the superintendent has asked the schools to go down to 85 percent staffing level in their staffing. This is a level that is very consistent with what is across the province of Alberta. It's dropped. There were some schools that were running as high as 92, 93 percent. As I've already stated, one school had a class size of 14.7 students. So we'll wait and see. We'll see what happens at the end of next week. Hopefully, I'll be able to give the Assembly more answers.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the same minister: why has the minister placed an arbitrary cap on grade 10 credits thereby denying high-achieving students an opportunity to reach their potential and leaving a $100,000 hole in Old Scona's budget? Will he remove this cap?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'll reiterate the answer that one of the hon. members asked me a few days ago. When it came to CEU funding in grade 10, what we saw was that at one point around the province there were over 200 students that were taking over 70 credits per year. There is not enough physical time in the school week to take 70 credits. We were seeing some schools that would award one credit for simply attending a school assembly. What that did is it allowed the schools to recoup approximately $125 per student for having an assembly. So a thousand students, for example, would be $125,000 that some of these schools were doing. As a matter of fact, for one particular school in Edmonton public – and I by no means state that that is the only school – we drew back $250,000 a year ago. There was a huge problem.

What we have done since that time is we have looked at the funding formula, and we will be putting back CEUs come this fall, but there's going to be a significant difference. That difference is that the superintendent has to sign off the number of credits that each school brings forward. The board chairman has to sign off the number of credits that are coming from each school. The other thing that will happen is that as soon as there is a school that is more than two standard deviation units away from the norm, we will go in and investigate and ensure, quite simply, that the schools are telling the truth. We saw a huge difference in school jurisdictions, from 47 CEUs in some school jurisdictions to a low of around 32, with Calgary being at 37 or 38 and areas like Edmonton public being at 45 or 46.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Emergency Preparedness

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The missiles and bombs have begun to rain down on Baghdad. U.S. marines have entered southern Iraq. People around the world are glued to television and radio. Saddam Hussein has threatened retribution in the event Iraq was attacked. He stated that no place is safe. It's alleged that al-Qaeda has made similar threats. There has been intelligence that has listed possible terrorist targets in Canada, including sites in Alberta. We need to assure Albertans that we're doing everything possible to ensure their safety and security. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. As chair of the Ministerial Task Force on Security what steps have you taken in light of this information?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to assure the Assembly that a number of steps have been taken to ensure that Alberta has well prepared and well co-ordinated emergency and security plans in light of world events. We have improved our communication links with the federal government, the RCMP, and CSIS and with industry to ensure that information related to possible threats is shared with appropriate officials.

Coincidentally, cabinet approved Alberta's counterterrorism crisis management plan earlier this week. The plan is the result of long hours of work by a number of ministries in co-operation with other orders of government, intelligence agencies, and the private sector. Also, Mr. Speaker, it includes a comprehensive method of identifying critical infrastructure in the province and putting in place appropriate security measures. The plan also includes a system for co-ordinating intelligence information.

Alberta, I think, Mr. Speaker, is more prepared than anyone else in the country at this point in time. To illustrate this, other provinces have been seeking information about what we're doing in Alberta so they can use our plan as a model for their security preparations.

Mr. Maskell: I have only one supplementary, and that's to the Solicitor General. What is the role of the security information management unit in Alberta's counterterrorism process?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to reassure the members of this Assembly that at this time there is no identified threat in Alberta. My department is in continuous contact with intelligence agencies to ensure that we are informed of any information that could affect security in this province. As the minister mentioned, we are well ahead of everybody across this country and are getting calls from across this country.

We have created the security and information management unit, or SIM, as it is referred to, which co-ordinates intelligence and information about the threat level in Alberta in consultation with Alberta law enforcement services, Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, and the RCMP. We are in continuous contact with these agencies at all times.

Mr. Maskell: On second thought I do have a supplemental, and that's to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. How have you responded to the Auditor General's 2000-2001 report, which expressed concern over the co-ordination of government and municipal emergency plans in the province?

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A very good question. I want to say that we've made tremendous progress, as the hon. ministers have mentioned. I would like to say that we are upgrading our security systems on a continuous basis, ah, basis, and in fact we've installed . . . [interjection] No. That's where the secret bomb shelter is, but I'll comment on that at another time.

Ultimately, our existing emergency operation centre, the op centre – we've been working in partnership with municipalities from across all of Alberta, including, for example, the Vermilion fire school in partnership with Lakeland College.

As well, I want to just conclude by saying, Mr. Speaker, that we can never be one hundred percent ready, but what we can do is be best prepared in planning for, responding to, and recovering from. Our new op centre is opening in early spring. In fact, it will accommodate up to 75 members of our emergency management operation centre.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Asbestos Abatement at the Foothills Hospital

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About 30 Alberta workers died last year from asbestos-related diseases. Thirty Alberta workers dead. We've been hammering away at this government for months on safe asbestos abatement in hospitals. Now we learn that last Friday, just days after the Calgary health region assured the public that there were no asbestos dangers at the Foothills, two stop-work orders were issued at the Foothills for unsafe asbestos removal. There have now been, I believe, 26 asbestos-related orders against the Foothills in two years. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given the Foothills' abysmal track record on asbestos removal, will the minister finally admit that the Foothills management is not taking this issue seriously?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, with the situation last Friday the department was notified, as they were supposed to be, that a renovation was in progress that might involve asbestos. So there was a site inspection that did in fact take place, and from that two work orders were then issued. A worker was actually performing some activities in the ceiling space, where suspected asbestos-containing fireproofing was present. Now, this renovation area was not accessible to the public or to patients. As a matter of fact, we had a situation there where I think the worker was actually working alone.

In any event, what we have is an ongoing renovation of aged facilities, and asbestos is there. For every occasion where the inspection has called for an order or in fact placed a stop-work order and then asked for remedial activity, that has been done. So we have a situation where the employer in this particular case is responding, as employers should, to direction from workplace health and safety.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, responding after the fact is too late. There have been 26 orders in two years.

So given there have been 26 orders in two years, is his department finally considering occupational health and safety charges against Foothills management?

Mr. Dunford: No, not at this time because the normal series of events is that we get notified about the work that's in progress. We take a look at what is happening. The orders provide for the activity then to be done in a safe manner and to prevent, of course, exposure in the air of any workers or any people associated with the Foothills situation. So they have hired an abatement supervisor that is working with them as well, and we'll continue to monitor it.

I think I mentioned here in the House some time ago that this was a major project and it was something that workplace health and safety in the Calgary division were focused on and probably taking up more of our resources, Mr. Speaker, than what ordinarily would happen.

So as long as we have compliance, there's no room, then, for charges.

Dr. Taft: Very disappointing.

To the Minister of Infrastructure: given the taxpayers' risk of huge liability costs from asbestos exposure, has this government done the prudent thing and followed other Canadian governments in filing a claim to recover costs from the bankruptcy of several U.S. asbestos manufacturers?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, when we are dealing with a building that has asbestos in it, depending on the project we will first of all make sure that there is somebody on-site that is expert as far as the handling of asbestos and what needs to be done with it. If it's a major thing like a demolition and depending, once again, on the magnitude of it – the General hospital in Calgary is a good example. The firm that was part of the demolition had to have that expertise. But to go one step further to protect the workers and the public, we hired another firm to watch the firm that was doing the removal.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Soil Contamination Cleanup

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week many of my constituents are following with great interest a judicial review hearing related to the cleanup of hydrocarbon and lead contamination that was discovered almost two years ago in Lynnview Ridge in my constituency of Calgary-Fort. It is my understanding that the review revolves around the scope of the cleanup. Imperial Oil, who used to operate an oil refinery at the site until the late 1970s, is being required by Alberta Environment to remove and replace the contaminated soil. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Environment. While I know that we can't go into the specific details while the hearing is going on, can the minister please explain what is involved in a judicial review?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As correctly identified, the hearing is going on, and I can't comment, obviously, on any specifics.

In terms of a judicial review what is happening is that the department has made a decision, and the court is reviewing the decision. Perhaps the Minister of Justice would like to comment further on the legal issues around a judicial review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. As my constituents are very anxious to see the situation resolved, could this judicial review result in any further delay in resolving this situation?

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

The Speaker: Well, I think the hon. minister was quite correct. If there's a judicial review going on here – and it can only be substantiated by a response from the Minister of Justice and Attorney General – these questions could be quite sub judice and outside the mandate of this Assembly. I can't respond to that, but we've had two questions. Proceed with your third one, hon. member. You may get nothing out of it.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Justice. Is there another way, such as arbitration or mediation, that the residents can have their interests addressed without having to take the matters to court?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, when a matter is before a judicial review, that's the same as any other matter being before the courts, and the content of the matter itself ought not to be commented upon, but I can provide some comment with respect to processes. We, of course, have the regulatory processes and the provisions under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act which allow for people to take decisions of that nature through a judicial review process, and that, as I understand it, is what's happening in this case. But, of course, there's also the opportunity for anyone who has any grievance relative to a wrongful act of somebody or a perceived wrongful act which has caused them damage to bring a tort action in the civil courts.

Of course, we have been very strongly advocating that people use what is commonly known as alternative dispute resolutions in terms of going to mediation if all parties will agree to participate. So we would strongly encourage individuals who do not wish to use the judicial review process or find that that process is not effective for their particular dispute area to examine the opportunities to use alternative dispute resolutions such as mediation, and if necessary they can always go through the acute care system of the courts to have any issues determined in that manner. Alternative dispute resolution, mediation, arbitration processes have proved very successful for many people, and where the regulatory process is inappropriate or cumbersome or doesn't provide an effective result, those alternative processes can be very effective.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every Thursday the Alberta Liberals will ask a question that members of the public have asked us to pose. Albertans can send us their questions by phoning our office or visiting our web site at altaliberals.ab.ca. Today's question about energy deregulation comes from Mr. Bruce Thomas of Edmonton. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that the provincial government's legislation promises rebates whenever natural gas prices average $5.50 over a year, would Albertans who sign a contract for five years at the current rate of $7.25 automatically qualify for rebates?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the preamble is wrong. The Natural Gas Price Protection Act does not relate to energy deregulation. The average annual price is one that's calculated triggered at $5.50, and in fact for January it was $5.88. The important part about the rebates that are triggered in the natural gas price protection plan is that when that price occurs, the rebate is made to everyone regardless of whether they've entered into a long-term contract or they're on spot rate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why isn't the trigger for natural gas rebates based on a price that consumers actually see on their bills?

Mr. Smith: That's actually a very good question. A very good question, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I'm in fact glad the member gave his proper credit due to a member of the public for putting that question in. That specific part is one that we want to examine when the regulation expires in July. So we will undertake that examination for Mr. Thomas.

Secondly, one of the reasons why it's structured with the amount that's in there is because that's how we collect the money from royalties so that we have the proper amount of funds that we are in fact able to rebate to Albertans across the province.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that as a result of this government's energy deregulation consumers in this province have seen nothing but their utility bills skyrocket, can the minister please explain who benefits economically from energy deregulation?

Mr. Smith: I would strongly like to see proof that Mr. Thomas wrote the preamble for the last question. Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the benefits economically are many, and they're to all Albertans. In fact, they accrue from investment; they accrue in the small business sector.

Now, maybe the Minister of Economic Development could better outline what happens to the small business sector.

Mr. Norris: Recognizing the time constraints, Mr. Speaker, I'll be brief on this, but, yes, I would like to say at the outset that businesses in Alberta are facing challenges of a number of different natures: insurance costs, high prices of labour, and things of that nature. But the facts of the matter are that Alberta is a remarkable place and continues to be the best place in the nation for all of the various economic indicators, and I'll just list a few of them that are facts. They're not fiction. As far as capital investment, the highest in Canada for the last five years. As far as GDP growth, the highest in Canada for the last five years. As far as net in-migration into the province, the highest in Canada. Net interprovincial migration, the highest in Canada. On and on it goes.

You can feel it in the economy. It's growing. It continues to grow. As I said two years ago, electrical deregulation and prices are one part of the equation. The Alberta advantage is a major, major advantage in low, broad-based taxes, a government that works and respects business, a government that understands that business drives the economy. It is working, Mr. Speaker, because our economy continues to grow and does not falter even though there are these challenges. Alberta businesses are the best in the world.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Learning, you want to rise at the conclusion of question period on a point of order?

Dr. Oberg: That's right.

The Speaker: Okay. The appropriate procedure is to do it at the time. I need to know what exchange there was with other members.

Dr. Oberg: Edmonton-Mill Woods.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Okay. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Graduated Drivers' Licences

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the May 20 deadline approaches for the new graduated licence program, I've been receiving many questions from 15- and 16-year-old constituents as well as their parents. My understanding is that there will be three stages to this program: the learner, the probationary driver, and the fully licensed driver. My questions are for the Minister of Transportation. The confusion seems to surround the curfew. Can the minister tell me at what stage there will be a curfew for drivers that says that they cannot drive between midnight and 5 a.m.?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in the province of Alberta the curfew will only apply to the learner stage. So regardless of age, if it's an inexperienced driver filing for a driver's licence, they will go through a learner stage. It's during the learner stage only that is from the midnight to 5 a.m. In the second stage, the probationary stage, there is no curfew.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you. My first supplemental goes again to the Minister of Transportation. If you were to receive your learner's permit before May 20, you could go and get a probationary licence almost immediately. After May 20 how long before you can receive a probationary licence?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, again, depending on age. If you were over 16 years old and you entered into the process in terms of applying for a licence, you would go through the learner stage and then, of course, proceed into the probationary. All of those individuals that have their learner's permit at this particular time will go through the regular process, including at the end of the probationary period an exit exam.

Mrs. Ady: My final supplemental again to the same minister: for clarification does this mean that my constituents will now be taking two road tests and paying for it twice?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, clearly, evidence across this country shows that new drivers are twice as likely to be involved in an accident as experienced drivers, and given the huge cost to society – I believe the Alberta Motor Association has pegged it at about $3.8 billion to this province on an annual basis – we are as a result of some good work done by many members here, in fact the Member for Red Deer-South, introducing the graduated driver's licence for that very specific purpose, and that is to save lives.

There will be two exams. There will be the actual exam for the probationary licence at the completion of the probationary period. Again, it has to be suspension free for the last 12 months of the period. Then they will write what is called the exit exam. We are just developing and designing the exit exam at this particular time, consulting with all stakeholders, looking at the experiences of exit exams in other provinces like British Columbia and Nova Scotia. Mr. Speaker, I'm looking forward to the day that we can reduce the number of incidents in this province similar to the history in B.C. and Nova Scotia, which is about 30 percent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Canada/U.S. Relations

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are compelling economic and security reasons for Canada and the United States to ensure that the Canada/U.S. border remains open for trade, tourism, and investment but becomes less vulnerable to disruption by terrorists and other threats. My questions today are to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What is this minister doing to ensure that this province, this country, and the States are developing long-term policy on security and immigration where there would be broad agreement between all parties?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Jonson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I would just like to note that immigration is a federal responsibility. However, it is very important to our cultural and economic fabric here in the province, and it is something that we are certainly giving priority to and keeping an eye on with respect to recent developments.

Now, with regard to border security I can say that officials from my ministry recently met with representatives from the federal department of Foreign Affairs and International Trade. Alberta made it very clear to the federal government that keeping border disruptions to a minimum is our highest priority, and we expect the federal government to do all it can to ensure that that happens. Also, we very clearly told federal officials that continued co-operation between the U.S. and Canada is essential to ensure the free movement of goods and products between our two countries.

Alberta continues to insist on more co-operation from the federal government on priority issues like border security and infrastructure security and continental defence and bilateral trade. Ottawa assured us at this recent meeting that the smart border accord with the U.S. is minimizing border delays, and that accord is an agreement between the United States and Canada to ensure potential border disruptions do not jeopardize the health of our economies.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, what is this minister doing to ensure that border restrictions are functional and don't necessarily harass people who need to cross the borders frequently?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, we would certainly share the hon. member's concerns because that is a very critical matter that needs to be addressed. I can say that the people who developed Alberta's counterterrorism crisis management plan worked very closely with the RCMP, CSIS, and the Department of National Defence. Those organizations are in close contact with the FBI and Homeland Security in the United States as is our federal government and the American government. Alberta is making its counterterrorism crisis management plan available to other provinces, and we are working in that regard.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, we feel that the federal government is making a major effort. They are putting resources into working with the province of Ontario, in particular, where there are border crossing challenges and difficulties, and we are also monitoring the situation with respect to our access to the United States, basically through, for the most part, Montana, to make sure that every effort is being made to keep the trade, the trucks, the vehicles moving, the tourists moving, the immigration matter being kept up to date and moving smoothly.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell us what he's doing at this time to discuss with businesses how they are going to facilitate their business transfers across the borders during this next crucial time period?

Mr. Jonson: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that this is an issue our federal government has been working on closely with the United States through the smart border accord, and Alberta certainly supports any efforts that are being made in that regard to ensure, as I've said, the free movement of goods and people across our border with the United States. However, we have to acknowledge that we are living in some very troubled times with some issues in this particular area being very touchy, so to speak, and they have to be dealt with very carefully.

The Alberta government does recognize the right of the United States to take appropriate steps to ensure their border security, and the Alberta government will continue to monitor the situation to ensure that there is as little disruption as possible in the passage of people and goods between the United States and Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning to supplement?

Dr. Oberg: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the minister responsible for immigration in this government I would bring to the hon. member's attention that I will be meeting with my federal counterpart tomorrow morning to discuss some of these very issues.

Mr. Mason: Maybe he's also the defence minister, Mr. Speaker.

Energy Rebates

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are receiving their natural gas bills this week, and their reaction is probably unprintable and unparliamentary. Most Albertans paid more for natural gas this winter than ever before. For example, one Edmonton homeowner had bills this winter of over $748 for a three-month period, higher than he would have paid in the year 2001 without rebates. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Why won't the minister just admit that the only reason homeowners received rebates in 2001, when bills were even lower than today, was because an election was just on the horizon?

An Hon. Member: Patently untrue.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a comment on the bench here is that it's patently untrue, and it is patently untrue. In fact, if I remember correctly that turbulent time of the year 2000, there was also an Alberta dividend paid to all Albertans in the preceding period, November-December, that was two times $150. This was the first experience that this government had with a spiraling gas cost, the commodity price itself. They responded, and they responded appropriately. It occurred at a time when other events were taking place as well, but the government certainly responded.

Afterward, Mr. Speaker, we were asked to put a program in place. We have put a program in place. We've maintained our belief in market forces, but we have not lost our compassion, our compassion for seniors, our compassion for those who do need the assistance. Those programs have been put in place this year, and they have benefited people in their time of need.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, can the minister please tell the Assembly if the cost of giving consumers a $1 billion rebate program in 2001 has been declared as an election expense by the Conservative Party?

The Speaker: The hon. member, third question.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Well, since the minister chooses not to answer that question, Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Please, please. Party matters are not part of the question period routine. Hon. member, it wasn't a question of the minister not answering the question. The minister could not answer the question.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know from this government whether or not they are willing to repay the Alberta treasury the $1 billion in election payoffs that they offered before the last election since it clearly wasn't a rebate program. They don't have one now.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the time for question period has now elapsed. Let me just indicate that on Monday of this week the House dealt with 15 sets of questions; on Tuesday, 15 sets of questions; on Wednesday, 14 sets of questions; and today, 11 sets of questions. So, all in all, pretty good. We could've had a few more today; that would've been good.

Fourteenth Anniversary of Election

The Speaker: I would also like to point out before we call on the first member for Members' Statements that 14 years ago today, March 20, 1989, the following members earned their right to participate in this House: first of all, the hon. the Premier, the MLA for Calgary-Bow; the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, the Member for Lesser Slave Lake; the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and the MLA for Athabasca-Wabasca; the hon. Minister of Infrastructure and the MLA for Rocky Mountain House; the hon. Minister of Finance and MLA for Calgary-Foothills; the hon. Minister of Seniors and the MLA for Stony Plain; and the hon. Deputy Speaker and the MLA for Highwood.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Water Strategy

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pause for a moment if you will and think about where our province would be if it were not for our water resources. Farming and ranching in our province would be dead, the forest industry closed down, power generation would be crippled, and our now vibrant cities would be emptied of their people.

Life in this province, in all provinces, depends on water. For too long this government has taken Alberta's water resources for granted. Water has been an issue in this province for more than one decade, and what does this government have to show? No strategy, no management plan, no conservation plan. Nothing. And what does the Minister of Environment tell us? He says that there has not been enough time. He says that this government needs more than a decade to produce a water strategy for this province. In fact, when I questioned the minister in this House, he wouldn't even commit to have the water policy by next year. Meanwhile, Albertans struggle with their water shortage problems, living with stopgap measures from their government.

At the same time, the Official Opposition has presented numerous plans and solutions to address Alberta's water crisis. The opposition has repeatedly pressed for a water resource inventory, universal metering, a clean water strategy alliance, and water conservation incentives. Our solutions would ensure that Albertans have a plentiful supply of clean water now and into the future. Our solutions would also ensure that Alberta's ecosystems are treated in a manner that promotes sustainability and conservation.

Despite all of our suggestions this government has dragged its heels on a meaningful water policy for the last 10 years and has instead relied on stopgap measures. Finally, after much prompting, the Minister of Environment promised to show Albertans at the end of this month a draft of a provincial water strategy. We have waited for more than a decade. It had better be a good one.

Thank you.

Dr. Taylor: Your plan wasn't very good, Kevin. There are only seven of you.

Mr. Bonner: Without interruption?

The Speaker: Was that the cat calling the kettle black? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry without any interruptions? Rather aggressive this week. I think it has something to do with the full moon.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

International Day for Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, March 21.

The United Nations first recognized this day in 1966 and designated it in memory of the anti-apartheid demonstrators killed or injured in Sharpeville, South Africa, in 1960. Canada was one of the first countries to support this United Nations declaration, and it began recognizing the day on a national basis in 1989.

Recognition of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination is particularly important this year considering the international terrorist crisis around the globe and the major conflict in the Middle East. Social harmony and peace are important and are only possible if we find ways to understand, value, and respect people of all races, religions, and ethnicity.

We are fortunate in Canada to have people with a wide variety of skills and experience who contribute to our communities and to have a rich mosaic of cultures woven into the strong fabric of our province and our nation. Let us celebrate the uniqueness of each individual and culture. Let us embrace a vision of Alberta where everyone has access to social, economic, and cultural opportunities on a fair and equal basis regardless of cultural or visible differences. We can, by working together, create an Alberta free of racial discrimination.

As chair of the Advisory Committee on the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund, I ask you join the community and the committee in working toward this goal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Dave Irwin

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to recognize a constituent and friend, Mr. Dave Irwin, one-time Olympian, an original Crazy Canuck, and a member of the Canadian downhill ski team from 1971 to 1982.

Dave recently organized and took part in the Dash for Cash downhill race at Sunshine Village on the same mountain that nearly killed him two years ago. Most of us will remember the terrible ski accident where Dave suffered severe head injuries and was hospitalized for three months, injuries that many people would not have survived. Not only do some consider it a miracle that Dave was skiing at this event, but it is even more incredible that he had one of the fastest times as a forerunner.

The Dash for Cash was the first major fund-raiser for the Dave Irwin Brain Injury Foundation and will become an important and I'm sure very popular annual event. On March 8 of this year, 22 teams of four and over 40 volunteers braved frigid weather and raised nearly $50,000, money that will be put in an endowment fund to support research, awareness and prevention programs, and aid for those living with brain injury.

Dave's positive attitude and determination have contributed to his remarkable near-full recovery, and he truly is an inspiration to all of us. As a brain injury survivor, Dave is now using his talent and skill to help others and is working to remove the social stigma against people with brain injuries.

Please join me in congratulating Dave on the success of his fund-raiser and in wishing him all the best on his continuous road to recovery. On behalf of Albertans, thank you, Dave, for your major contributions to the people of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Iraq Conflict

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a tragic day in the history of our shared humanity. It is the day that the leaders of the world's most powerful nation, the United States, chose to commit an act of unprovoked aggression against a much smaller and less powerful nation.

In the aftermath of the Second World War the United Nations was established to prevent unprovoked aggression. The UN Charter specifically prohibits powerful nations from launching wars of aggression against less powerful nations. The war against Iraq sets a very dangerous precedent. After regime change in Iraq, who is next? North Korea? Iran? Venezuela? Canada? The doctrine of pre-emption can be invoked by countries other than the United States against their less powerful neighbours. It will lead to greater proliferation of weapons of mass destruction as smaller countries arm themselves to better repel aggression. It will not make the world safer but rather much more dangerous.

Not only is the war against Iraq destabilizing; it is also unnecessary. Since last November weapons inspectors have been on the ground in Iraq working unimpeded. All of the U.S. and British intelligence leads claiming that Iraq was hiding illegal weapons were in the words of one of the inspectors: garbage, garbage, and more garbage.

The Canadian peace movement deserves a tremendous amount of credit for moving the federal government to opt out of the Bush/Blair war of aggression against Iraq. So does the federal NDP under the leadership of Alexa McDonough and Jack Layton, who have been saying since last fall that this war is illegal and wrong.

When the Premier ties himself up in knots pledging solidarity with the most retrograde elements of the Bush administration, he does a disservice to Albertans. In doing so, the Premier does not speak for millions of Albertans who deplore this war of aggression. The Premier claims to be protecting Alberta's interest in speaking out. By invading Iraq, the U.S. is seeking to re-establish control over the world's oil reserves. Counteracting OPEC to push oil prices down has been a cornerstone of American policy for decades. Low oil prices in the long term mean less exploration, less oil sands investment, and lower royalty revenues for the government. It means . . . [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition to the Assembly, please, and it is signed by 25 people from across the province, and they're petitioning the government here.

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the provincial government to establish a provincially subsidized monthly transit pass program for low income Albertans that would apply to all municipalities with a public transit system.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Deputy Government House Leader I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday he will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places and also to give notice that on Monday he will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Bill 32
Income and Employment Supports Act

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 32, the Income and Employment Supports Act.

This bill will bring different programs together under one piece of legislation and make the processes for delivering them clearer and fairer. It reflects the recommendations of the MLA committee to review low-income programs and of course the advice of thousands of Albertans. They call for income supports and employment supports to be brought together so that we can shift the focus from programs to people.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. This tabling is on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. It's a review of the Old Scona academic high school's finances, showing concerns about the anticipated funding shortfall.

I'd like to table an e-mail from someone from Spruce Grove to the minister, and it says: "That giant hissing sound is the sound of money being sucked out of Albertans' pockets."

Mr. Speaker, this is an e-mail from a Morinville senior, and he says that large gas lines "to export our natural gas out of this country . . . is good for Alberta's economy but I don't think it should be done at the expense of seniors and low income" Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling a power bill from Ardrossan with a comment from the citizen that the cost has nearly doubled due to deregulation.

Another power bill from Morinville, Mr. Speaker. This one says: "This is ridiculous, 4 times what it should be. We are going to move to another province before we have to lose our house."

This is an e-mail from a constituent of mine, Mr. Speaker, and it says: "I believe the government has to do something to lower the costs of rising energy costs . . . Something [has] to be done."

Mr. Speaker, this is a power bill from Edmonton with the comment, "Thank you for speaking on our behalf to what seems like a deaf ear."

This is an e-mail to my office, Mr. Speaker. It says: I would love to come up with energy saving devices and put them in place, but with prices steadily rising, I can't afford to buy any of the items.

Mr. Speaker, this is an e-mail from a single person who is paying one-third of the cost of her mortgage on her utilities.

Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling today a letter to Minister Woloshyn . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, please, please, please. You know about the thing about the names. I must have said it six times this week.

Mr. Mason: I apologize: to the Minister of Seniors. I quote in part from seniors voicing their displeasure with regard to the deregulation of utilities: "It has been a fiasco."

Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling a letter and some utility bills from St. Albert, and the citizen comments, "It is virtually impossible for our usage to double from one year to the next," yet the charges are double.

Mr. Speaker, this is an e-mail from one of my constituents. I'm quoting, but I won't quote the name. I'll just say that he says that the Premier "should wake up and realize . . . that all people are not in his income bracket."

Mr. Speaker, this is a letter I'm tabling from a stay-at-home mom. She says, "When are we going to see the beneficial prices we were told were coming?"

Mr. Speaker, this is a letter from 102 residents at River Ridge on fixed incomes. They indicate that an increase in condo fees has resulted from high utility costs.

Mr. Speaker, this is a letter from some citizens in Edmonton regarding their ATCO bill. It says in block letters: "We are . . . outraged." "Thank you so much."

An e-mail from a constituent. This citizen uses $40 worth of power and is paying over $100 worth of service charges.

Mr. Speaker, this is a letter and some bills from Daysland, and I quote the citizens: "Our natural gas bills and power bills are outrageous . . . Mr. Premier, we are sitting here freezing in the dark."

Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling a letter and some utility bills from Red Deer, and the citizen indicates, "I may lose my house as I cannot keep up."

This is a bill with some written comments from St. Albert indicating, "We do not keep any lights on."

This is an e-mail I am tabling from a citizen, Mr. Speaker, and they indicate: do I need to turn off the thermostat and freeze the pipes in the house?

Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling a bill from Edmonton with a note from the citizen: there has to be some help.

This bill I'm tabling next, Mr. Speaker, is from Whitecourt. The citizen indicates: my cost per month has doubled.

These are some bills that I'm tabling from a constituent of mine, Mr. Speaker. The comment: there have been more power outages in the rural areas since privatization, and the response time is much longer, approximately six to eight hours.

I'm tabling a bill from Battle River. The citizen comments: the add-ons are disturbing figures.

I'm tabling a bill from a citizen in St. Albert who says: thank you for bringing this to Premier Klein's attention.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Please. This is a real problem for me. It is now the seventh time, the second time in the last 10 minutes, that you mention names. Well, there seems to be a wall here with respect to this.

Maybe we can come back for tablings with you next Monday; okay?

We'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is a commentary from the C.D. Howe Institute, and it is entitled California Shorts a Circuit. It is about the electricity deregulation there.

The second tabling I have is on behalf of a constituent. It's a letter addressed to the hon. Premier, and it is from Laura Webster. Ms

Webster is expressing her concern about funding cutbacks and what they're doing to her local school in Kenilworth.

The third tabling I have is also addressed to our hon. Premier and dated February 25. It is from Kevin Whitton, the chair of the school council at Kenilworth junior high. Mr. Whitton is expressing concern about next year's budget for the school as a result of this government's policies.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today, all having to do with education. The first is from Karen Ferrari, a constituent of mine who attended the public gallery on March 19. She's expressing her grave concerns over education funding and also asks for an apology for the comments and groans by the Premier and government MLAs.

The second tabling is a letter to the Minister of Community Development from Melanie Shapiro. Among other things, she says, "Parents are all asking why the Government cannot fund education as a priority."

The third tabling is from Jenn Hoogewoonink to the Premier and the Minister of Learning. Among many things, she says, "We cannot smother concerns of scarcity in education when it directly affects who we are or who we can possibly become."

The fourth tabling is from Linda Telgarsky, a copy of a letter to the Premier and the Minister of Learning. She says, among other things, "I am concerned about the current situation regarding the funding of public schools."

Thank you.

The Speaker: Additional members? Additional tablings?

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the government now share with us what they expect to be the business of next week.

Mr. Hancock: I expect that next week will be taken up with further debate, additional and comprehensive debate, on Bill 27, Bill 3, and Bill 19.

To be more specific, on Monday, March 24, at 9 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders I would expect that we might take up government motions 14 and 16 and then proceed to Committee of the Whole on Bill 27 and Bill 3 and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, March 25, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for third reading Bill 27, Bill 3, and Bill 19, and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for third reading Bill 27, Bill 3, Bill 19, and Bill 30 and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, March 26, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for third reading Bill 27, Bill 19, Bill 3 and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for third reading Bill 27, Bill 19, Bill 3 and as per the Order Paper.

Thursday, March 27, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for third reading Bill 27, Bill 19, Bill 3 and as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. Minister of Learning.

Point of Order

Allegations against a Member

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today under Standing Order 23(h), which states, "makes allegations against another member." In the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods' preamble he stated – and unfortunately I have not yet had the Blues – that there were $2 million in renovations spent in my office. As the hon. member fully knows, this was money that was spent in moving 470 of my staff from one building to another building, and that lease change saved the provincial government and the taxpayers of this province $3.4 million net. He has made a direct allegation against myself personally that I spent $2 million on renovations to my office. I stand corrected if that is not what is printed in the Blues, but that is what I feel that he said.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, it wasn't in the preamble. It was in my third question. What I actually said was: who found $2 million to renovate his offices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods said:

Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Given that parents like Mrs. Beaudoin hold the government responsible, when will the minister who found $2 million to renovate his offices and $7 million for Calgary public find the $13 million needed to prevent these cuts in Edmonton public schools?

The hon. minister said:

Mr. Speaker, again with the Edmonton public audit as I've stated, maybe this member has got something in his ears and can't hear, but we are already down approximately $4 million to $5 million, so it is not $13.5 million.

The other comment that the member made: I would invite the hon. Minister of Infrastructure to comment on the $2 million that was used to renovate the offices and the amount of money that that has saved my department.

There was no further intervention by any other minister.

"When will the minister who found $2 million to renovate his offices . . ." Well, it strikes me that this is a point of clarification. Ministerial responsibility involves the taking of responsibility for everything under one's portfolio, one's department, and I suppose that in the most extreme interpretation, when the member says, "who found $2 million to renovate his offices," he's assuming that the minister must assume responsibility for all the offices in his department.

Regardless of what it is, it was an opportunity for the minister to respond. Not the best words in the world – and maybe we've dealt with this as a point of clarification, with the House recognizing, as well, that sometimes we have to accept two contradictory views of the same situation – but a useful intervention for clarification. We all know it was not the Minister of Learning that spent $2 million on, quote, his offices in the building. I don't believe that the Minister of Infrastructure, as a result of all its petitions from the Speaker over the last six years, would have even spent that much on the whole system.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Private Members' Public Bills

The Speaker: Hon. members, I've had a number of questions from hon. members with respect to the order of business on Monday, and I want to make the following statement in order to clarify as a result of a number of private members consulting with me in the last several days. It has to do with clarification to all members regarding the sequence in which private members' bills will be called for debate this Monday, March 24.

Standing Order 9(1) states that "all items standing on the Order Paper, [with the exception of] Government Bills and Orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence." As all members are aware, Standing Order 8(5) provides that a private member's bill must be called in Committee of the Whole within eight sitting days of receiving second reading and within four sitting days after being reported by Committee of the Whole.

Sometimes these time lines will conflict depending upon the progress of various bills. In such cases the order of precedence is determined by the date and the time that the Assembly or the Committee of the Whole has made its decisions in respect of the bills. Therefore, given that Bill 201 received third reading on March 10, it must be the first item of business called on Monday afternoon. Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill 203 will then follow, and if time permits, the next item of business to be called will be third reading of Bill 202.

Time Allocation on Bill 19

15. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In moving Government Motion 15, I would just advise the House that notwithstanding two news releases by the Official Opposition relative to the death of democracy as we know it, the fact of the matter is that 7.17 hours of debate have been undertaken on the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act to date, including five hours in committee. As we've just heard under Projected Government Business, there are three bills on the Order Paper for discussion next week at committee and third reading, of which Bill 19 is one. So in addition to the 7.17 hours spent to date, there will be an additional hour in committee and then, of course, the full opportunity in third reading for any member to get on the record any concerns that they might have with respect to the bill.

In speaking to the time allocation motion, I would remind the House, as I had the opportunity to do thanks to the timely interjection of the Leader of the Opposition affording me the opportunity, that time allocation is a parliamentary procedure that's used in many parliaments around the world. Not that we'd want to follow the lead, ever, of the federal Liberal government, it's used on almost every bill, I think, in the federal House. It's certainly used extensively in the federal House.

But that's not the way we use time allocation in this House. It's a new procedure that's used relatively rarely. In the year 2000 it was used five times. In the year 2000 time allocation was used five times. In the year 2001 it was not used at all. We do have three bills that need to be dealt with before the end of the month, one of them being the gas utilities bill. So I'm moving Government Motion 15 today to deal with that.

Lest anyone suggest that they haven't had an opportunity to do line-by-line analysis in Committee of the Whole, I would indicate that the official Liberal opposition has spent 187 minutes, during which they introduced not one amendment. The New Democrat opposition spent 68 minutes, a full hour and then some, and introduced not one amendment. Members of the opposition have spoken a total of 22 times already on this bill. So although it is a big bill and a complex bill and a very important bill, there has been no lack of opportunity for members of the opposition to let government know and let Albertans know and let this House know what their views are with respect to every aspect of the bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is not inappropriate I think at this time to ask the House to consider that although endless debate is allowed in committee and any member has the opportunity to speak as many times as they want in committee under the rules of the House, once two members of the opposition have spoken four times and two members have spoken three times and three members have spoken twice and two members have spoken once and all members have had the opportunity to speak, then to suggest that a further hour of debate in committee might get us through committee, sufficiently allowing the opportunity to introduce any further amendments, or any amendments in this case, because they haven't introduced any amendments, and then we'd move on to further debate in third reading – I'd ask the House to support the motion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 21(3) allows one member of the Official Opposition to participate for up to five minutes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is the participant?

Ms Carlson: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, to say to the hon. Minister of Justice that I'm disappointed is to be in these circumstances polite. Not only do we have Motion 15, Motion 14, we have Motion 16.

Now, when we talk about democracy, it always comes back to the words of the hon. Premier, Mr. Speaker, and those words were uttered in the election in 1997 in Fort McMurray: I believe in free speech as long as you say the right thing. When we have this bill before the Assembly and to learn that the government is going to limit and restrict and close debate and to compare their record with the federal government – the federal government has used closure eight times, whereas this government, with our research, in the last 10 years has used closure at least 30 times. One time was with the electricity bill, going back to Bill 27 I believe in 1998. Closure was invoked on that bill, and since that bill had closure invoked, electricity prices in this province have slowly been on a volatile rise. Now, were the consumers of Alberta well served by that act of closure? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands with the tablings earlier and the outrage that was expressed by Albertans over their electricity bills would indicate to this member: no.

Now, the Alberta retail natural gas market is currently in a state between a fully regulated utility operation and competitive retail service. After the money that has been spent on energy deregulation in this province, the money that has been spent on the increase in natural gas prices and the bills, how can we say that over seven hours of debate or five hours of debate in committee is adequate? This is a complex piece of legislation. When one comments that the opposition has had the opportunity and they have not gone through this line by line, well, I have looked in Hansard, and those government members that have spoken certainly have not gone through the bill at committee stage line by line.

When we see double-digit price increases for natural gas in this province, this closure motion indicates to me just how far out of touch the government is with the consumers. Are not the consumers in the constituencies of Edmonton-Calder, Drayton Valley-Calmar, Redwater, Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, Calgary-Shaw, Calgary-Bow expressing their concern about natural gas prices and how they're affecting residential and commercial users in this province? I've heard in the last few weeks in this Assembly concern from all sides of the House.

To think that we are going to have a bill that is going to amend the Gas Distribution Act, the Rural Utilities Act, and the Gas Utilities Act all in one sweep yet we are lining this bill up with another bill that's going to have closure on it, Bill 3, so that we can have convergence of the electricity and the natural gas markets – this government wants to push it through the Assembly.

The amendments were certainly on the web site, the draft amendments for this legislation. I believe there were even draft regulations on Alberta Energy's web site, but that is not part of the debate of this Legislative Assembly. After the final draft was placed before this Assembly, all hon. members should have had the opportunity to stand in this Assembly and debate the merits or the negative aspects of this bill, and this has not been provided . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 15 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:09 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 19

Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In the time allocated, which is certainly not enough time to debate this billion-dollar issue – this is going to be a billion-dollar bill for Albertans in the future – I would urge any members on the government side that wish to participate in the debate certainly to do so because Albertans will be interested in reviewing this record if natural gas bills continue to be as confusing as electricity bills currently are.

Now, when we talk about providing choice to citizens with natural gas delivery and that this choice is going to drive down costs, I have yet to be convinced of this. When I go through the bill, I see many, many things that need improvement. There are many ways to improve this bill, but still I don't think we can improve it enough that it is going to be a positive influence on Alberta consumers and is going to drive down prices in this province. It has yet to be explained to me how giving consumers more choice in signing a contract, whether it's for three or five years or even for one year or floating through on this natural gas spot price to receive natural gas for residential heating, is going to improve the lot of Albertans. With Bill 3, the sister of Bill 19, we have quite an extensive time for a market surveillance administrator.

One only has to look at, of all things, the Progressive Conservative Association of Alberta's policy convention booklet from 2002. This was a policy convention that took place November 15 and 16 at the Coast Plaza Hotel and conference centre.

Mr. Rathgeber: Were you there?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I was not there, but certainly I was delighted to receive a copy of the policy conference workbook.

In that workbook it's surprising how many good policies of this Conservative Party don't make it to this Legislative Assembly floor. This is one of them, and I think it's yet another example of imitation being a fine form of flattery. First, we see the stabilization fund being adopted. This is an opportunity for the government to take a fairly sound policy from the policy convention, and if we're going to take a bad law and make it a little better, well, let's do this.

In discussions there there was an effort made to establish a special watchdog committee to monitor. To monitor. Now, there are many Conservatives that are very good at monitoring the situation, and here is another example where the Conservatives want to monitor, but this committee should monitor the rural utility systems. The committee should have on it the Minister of Energy, municipally elected representatives, and energy and industry participants and clients. The clients would include the consumers, Mr. Chairman. This idea would be called price protection for rural utility systems. What a great idea to have price protection for natural gas consumers.

I was going through this legislation and going through Bill 3, and there was such a deal in Bill 3 made over the market surveillance administrator, but in Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, that was to my surprise not there. So at this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit to the Assembly – and it's in order from the Parliamentary Counsel – an amendment to the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act. I'm going to get one of the pages, please, to take this to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

For the record I believe we will call this amendment A1, and as it's been circulated to all hon. members of this Assembly, I will read the proposed amendment into the record: the hon. member to move that Bill 19 be amended in section 2(2) by adding the following after the proposed section 28.8:

Market Surveillance Administrator

28.9 (1) The Minister of Energy must appoint an individual to serve as the Market Surveillance Administrator who shall monitor and investigate the supply, distribution, and sale of natural gas from the distributor to the consumer.

(2) The Market Surveillance Administrator shall report to the Minister of Energy on matters in subsection (1) annually.

Now, I think this amendment A1 is reasonable, and I'm not going to in the short time allowed . . . It's reasonable because it's going to provide the same sort of protection that electricity consumers can get. I don't know what to say other than to urge the hon. members of the government – certainly, they must be aware of the price protection for rural utility systems, which was discussed at the convention last November, and it's certainly an issue that I have brought forward. I have had correspondence with the hon. Minister of Government Services, and I really wasn't satisfied with the response and the speed of the response from the department, but I think that it is very, very important. I have to say that I'm disappointed that we're going to have this so-called flow-through rate, and we're going to have these wild swings in prices.

In conclusion in regard to amendment A1, I would urge all members to consider that the EUB at one time thought that the Natural Gas Price Protection Act would allow some form of consumer protection. Now, if one looks at decision 2001-75, one can see where the board thought that the Natural Gas Price Protection Act would work in that manner, and when the board considers that given the provisions of the Natural Gas Price Protection Act some customers such as AltaGas would be sufficiently protected, the board thought that, well, if the Natural Gas Price Protection Act is that good, then there's no need to consider the hedging provisions that AltaGas had proposed to be necessary to soften up some of the price spikes for consumers.

Now, I'm sure there's going to be an hon. member of this Assembly standing up to say: we don't need the market surveillance administrator. There will be an hon. member from the government standing up to say: we don't need this because the board is going to take care of everything. Well, the board in that decision thought that the Natural Gas Price Protection Act was going to do the job, and we all know that that act . . .

Mr. Mason: It's useless.

Mr. MacDonald: I don't know when it's going to work. I heard a comment that it was useless, but I don't know when that Natural Gas Price Protection Act is ever going to kick in, and consumers across this province, to say the least, are resentful. They consider that Natural Gas Price Protection Act to be a broken promise. However, in regard to Bill 19 and the proposal that we have a market surveillance administrator, I would like all hon. members to consider this, and when you consider the manipulation of price that has been alleged at the Power Pool – it has been proven on two occasions, but no names have been released to the public, which disappoints me, Mr. Chairman – and when we see all these marketers coming in to supply retail service to customers for natural gas, the market surveillance administrator is needed. It certainly is needed, and I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this amendment, and this is the first of many amendments that I have in regard to this bill.

Now, when we consider this, Mr. Chairman, we have to think of what's best for natural gas consumers in this province. They will need a market surveillance administrator to ensure that their interests in what is, in my view, flawed legislation have to be protected by someone.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. My friend from Edmonton-Gold Bar issued an invitation for members of the government or members opposite to him to participate in this debate and to speak specifically to the amendment that is before us. I'm glad that I was admonished to speak specifically to the amendment that is before us because it may have been a 'circuitous' . . . a roundabout route for me to get from it and to it.

An Hon. Member: Circuitous.

Mr. McClelland: Yes. You see, I can't even get the word out because I have so much difficulty with this amendment.

Now, the amendment of course speaks to the act that's before the House, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. This act was brought to the House to facilitate, as members have said, competition in the marketplace. So what is this competition going to do, and why should we think that this competition is going to change anything? Why should we have any particular confidence in the capacity of the free market in essentially a deregulated gas energy market to provide value? I think that we should, Mr. Chairman, and we should . . . [interjection] Oh, I see. Okay. Thank you. I wasn't sure quite what the hand signal was, Mr. Chairman, and I was a little nervous because I know it's been a while since I got to the amendment.

An Hon. Member: I'll give you a hand signal you can understand.

Mr. McClelland: The member opposite suggests that he has a hand signal that I could understand very readily, and I'm sure that I could. Thumbs up would be the signal that I'm on the right track.

Well, the legislation that the amendment speaks to is legislation that brings competition to the marketplace, and that competition in the marketplace may provide innovation, which will in fact provide better value to the customers being served, and that's really what we have to look to. The commodity of natural gas has a finite value. We've all discussed this in the Chamber in the many hours of debate that this bill has been before the House, the endless debate, and we have come to understand that natural gas has a value, and we have come to understand that our planet is best served if natural gas is used with a mind to the finite limit of that resource and its actual value. If we use our resources based upon what their real value is, well, innovation comes into play, conservation, that I know members opposite, the Liberals and the New Democrats, would surely feel comfort with, and the efficient use of the resource.

Imagine, had we not considered a finite resource based upon its value to society, would we waste or would we not waste that resource if we had it for nothing? We're driven because we're human beings to make more efficient use based upon the price that we pay for a commodity. So although the prices have been high relative to what we used to pay for it, the price relative to its value to our economy and to the North American economy is not particularly high and is forcing us to innovate and to use the resource wisely.

Now, over the course of recent months the price has been high. It's spiked up. But it's spiked up in recent months because of world geopolitical events, because we had a cold winter. But I would remind members opposite in the House and those listening that natural gas was at a three-year low this summer and that the price of natural gas is falling like a stone. I heard that on the radio this morning, that the price of natural gas is going down because it is a commodity that has a value that does go up and down, and that's why many of us have determined that it's in our interests to have predictability to buy a contract so that we know what we'll be paying for our natural gas energy from month to month for a period of years, similar to, perhaps, getting a long-term mortgage when we buy a house.

Yes, it has caused us to have to change how we think of natural gas as a commodity and, yes, it has been difficult for many people in the transition, and yes, it has been particularly difficult for people in a situation of low or fixed income without the capacity within their budgets to move resources around. Having heard that very valid concern, the government made the very appropriate and correct decision to do what was necessary to protect those in need, and certainly it would've been nice to be able to protect those in want, but that's just not a true reflection of life. We as individual citizens and as a government responsible for the fiduciary responsibility to be careful custodians, to be careful of what we do with the public purse and taxpayers' money and the resources that belong to everyone, have to make the tough decisions.

I know that it's opposition's role to say that everything we do is wrong and that we should do this and we should do that because that's the role of opposition, but I know the opposition members here present, being good and reasonable people, understand that behind the rhetoric, were the positions reversed, they would do the same thing because it makes sense. I see a member opposite gasping because finally someone said what was in their heart, and they couldn't say it.

So let's just look at what has been achieved as a direct result of a free enterprise approach to energy, and keep in mind that natural gas generates much of the electricity that we use, and therefore the cost of electricity is affected by the cost of natural gas.

Mr. MacDonald: Are we going to put this in your brochure in the next election?

Mr. McClelland: Yes. The member opposite says, "Are we going to put this in your brochure in the next election?" I hope and pray that the Liberals do because Albertans understand the innate sense of the words that I'm speaking.

Albertans are not people that can't see beyond the surface. That's why there are 74 of us in this House even as we speak: because Albertans understand and appreciate the free market and have faith and confidence in the free market.

We have 700 years of coal in our province.

Rev. Abbott: Eight hundred.

Mr. McClelland: "Eight hundred," I hear a member say. But we don't have very much hydroelectric energy. Other provinces have a vast hydroelectric potential and resource, very inexpensive to produce, very clean, and we need to compete with those provinces for our economy. We need to get to a clean coal, perhaps a gasification economy based on that 800-year, perhaps even more, inventory of coal potential.

I see the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is resting his head on his desk. Hopefully these words are not putting him to sleep.

Hopefully these words are encouraging the member to a more free enterprise and a more confident vision of the future.

What we need is to evolve to an economy that's based on hydrogen, on research and development. We need to evolve to an economy that makes better use of green power. The deregulation of the energy industry, including natural gas, has led directly to the capacity of the government of Alberta to be a leader in the country in the use of green power. Now, had we not embraced – and when I say we, I say Albertans, not just the government as represented by people in this Chamber today, but we as Albertans, Albertans as individual citizens and Albertans as business owners, large and small. Had we not the confidence to embrace the free market system, it would not have been possible for others to come into the market to bring their resources, their innovations, their skills, their commitment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please. Beauchesne 459(1), relevance. Amendment A1 was specific to the market surveillance administrator, nothing to do with coal generation.

Mr. McClelland: Mr. Chair, I'll save the chair the difficulty of having to go through various references to cross-check the reference of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I stand suitably admonished for straying from the amendment, which had to do with the market administrator and the amendment here.

Debate Continued

Mr. McClelland: Now, it's clear, my friends, that were a market administrator as devised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to be a part of this debate, that very individual would say: "Right on. What you're saying is absolutely correct and should have been said long ago." He or she, the market administrator, would probably say: I cannot understand the reluctance of the Liberals and the New Democrats to embrace legislation which would provide for a more competitive market, which would provide for innovation, which would provide for the use of green power, which would ensure that the future citizens – our children, our grandchildren, and their grandchildren – would have energy supplies at the flick of a switch, unlike other jurisdictions in our country and in the world who on the flick of the switch get disappointment because of yet another brownout, because there has not been the innovation or the investment in the energy sector, who when they open the mail and get their tax bill have disappointment because they know that they are going to be paying the price for public investment and investment and investment and lower power bills because they're paying higher taxes to offset the public investment in generation of power.

So, my friends, we have a bill before us which provides for the citizens of Alberta to have a market-driven energy industry using natural gas, evolving into coal hopefully, hydrogen, using green energy, using wind power, and the generation of energy from waste materials, technology that the world will come knocking at our door to purchase, providing jobs and a future for every Albertan, every child, every grandchild, and the thousands of people that move to our province every year for just those opportunities.

So I thank the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for inviting this member, this Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, to participate in this debate and try once again to put the opposition on the right course.

The Chair: The next speaker is Edmonton-Highlands, followed by Wainwright, followed by Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I'll be glad to share the time with hon. members who wish to speak, so I will be relatively brief. However, you know, I must say in passing that once we have only an hour to go on the debate for the entire bill as well as any amendments and so on, it is interesting that members of the government are quite a bit more willing to jump up and speak for extended periods of time, and it leaves me wishing that we could in some way impose closure within the hour. Just for the record, that was a joke – that was a joke – and it better not appear in any Tory pamphlets in the next election.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford talks about the advantages that are brought about as a result of the government bill, one of them being about how high gas prices bring innovation and make the best use and encourage conservation. But if we come to how the high prices have been arrived at, I think it tells a different story, Mr. Chairman. The primary reason for high prices for natural gas right now is that enormous quantities of this gas are being exported to the United States for them to use and for them to use to create jobs in their economy at our expense. So this is hardly conservation. It's conservation by wholesale export of a diminishing and valuable natural resource. I just needed to say that.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that I regretfully cannot support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's amendment to add a market surveillance administrator to the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. I know that this is a provision that's included in the electricity act that we're also debating, Bill 3, but this implies acceptance of the government's approach to deregulation of natural gas, that there would be a market and somebody's got to keep an eye on the market and so on. Quite frankly, the New Democrat view is that we don't need a market surveillance administrator; we need a regulated price for natural gas. Since it is our natural gas, then the needs of Albertans should be met first, and the entire structure that is being developed in Bill 19 will add enormously to the cost. The administrative structures will add a layer of costs as well, and that is not in the interests of Albertans as we see it. So we do not support Bill 19, and we cannot support this particular amendment since it merely reinforces the government's approach to deregulation in the gas industry.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The amendment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has presented is an interesting one.

Mr. Rathgeber: That's one way of describing it.

Mr. Griffiths: Yes. It is one way of describing it.

He drew the comparison between Alberta's deregulated electricity market and the market surveillance administrator as proposed. I think it's important to point out to that member some of his misinformation or his lack of understanding of the situation as regards comparison between electricity and gas. Mr. Chairman, the wholesale electricity markets have only been deregulated for several years, and the whole market itself is continuing to develop. The primary function of the proposed market surveillance administrator in electricity is to monitor the competitiveness of Alberta's emerging wholesale electricity market to make sure that consumers get a fair price, that they're treated fairly, and that there is competition.

The difference between the electricity market and the gas market, Mr. Chairman, is that the natural gas market has been deregulated in Alberta for 17 years. It's a very well-developed wholesale natural gas market. It is extremely competitive, and it's highly integrated into a broader North American market. Any examination of the competitiveness of the wholesale natural gas market would need to occur on an interjurisdictional level. This of course would be beyond the scope of any market surveillance administrator that would be set up in Alberta. So I guess if I have a question to the member, it's: how could you justify creating a market surveillance administrator that could only function in Alberta, would be limited, couldn't deal with competition across the entire North American natural gas market? I don't understand it. It seems to me a waste of money and expense: taxpayers' money, taxpayers' expense.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I think it also has to be pointed out to the hon. member that Alberta Government Services responsibly oversees consumer protection relating to natural gas and electricity retailers and takes that responsibility very seriously. They do an excellent job at it. They will be monitoring the market prices very carefully. As well, the EUB is responsible for setting regulated transmission and distribution rates and regulated rates for gas and electricity. We have two bodies already created to monitor the system and make sure it works effectively. The board reviews metering and billing. It looks at residential, commercial, and small commercial consumers, and it's done so for years.

Bill 19 the way it's set up now will give the EUB additional authority to – I've written them down, and I'm going to list them – regulate companies other than utilities that would now be able to provide natural gas at regulated rates to consumers; increase fines for noncompliance with an EUB order; enable the EUB to enforce service quality standards and enforce a code of conduct which will govern the relationship between utilities, default supply providers, and retail affiliates.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in summary, if we started looking at examining the competitiveness of the wholesale natural gas market, we'd have to look at it in an interjurisdictional manner, which an Alberta market surveillance administrator could not do. We already have two bodies that effectively regulate or watch the market, and I guess my question to the member is: given that these two bodies already do this and given that it wouldn't have any effect interjurisdictionally, would the member consider admitting that this would just be duplication and a waste of taxpayers' money and remove his amendment?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. A few comments, partly in response to the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I'd just like to point out to him, although he led the whole debate astray by drawing in the electricity industry, that before there was deregulation in electricity, the most reliable electricity in the world was in Canada. Edmonton Power, which was publicly owned in a regulated system, had virtually the top reliability in the most reliable country of the world. It also had far cheaper rates than we've got now. So correct your facts. Correct your facts.

Now, on this particular amendment I hear from government members repeated rejection of the notion of a market surveillance administrator. All we're trying to do here is keep you consistent. Bill 19 is aimed at drawing the gas network closer to the electricity system, and the electricity system integrated continentally has a market surveillance administrator. So given that the government members are rejecting this notion for Bill 19, I'm wondering if they will be accepting an amendment to pull that function out of Bill 3. Would they be quite pleased to do that? I'd like their response. Are we going to chuck the electricity market surveillance administrator too? I think the public is deeply and justifiably concerned about price manipulation. I know for a fact that they want consumer protection. They don't know where to turn, and this is one chance to offer them a bone, at least to offer the consumer here a little bone while the big dogs of commerce eat up the rest of the dinner. Why don't we give the consumer a little bone?

I don't know how many of you have ever been to Bulgaria. I know I haven't, but there is a saying from Bulgaria: dry pants catch no fish. What we see here is a government that's committed to dry pants. We want the government to wade into this situation, get their pants wet, and catch a few fish, at least be on the prowl for some fish in case those fish are sharks out there cruising for innocent consumers.

So I'd encourage the government to accept its responsibility to protect consumers, accept this amendment to Bill 19. It will be a better bill because of it.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster on amendment A1.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you. To talk to the amendment and just some of the subtle differences between a gas market regulator and an electrical market regulator, they are utilities, granted, but they are produced in very, very different methods. The ability to store electricity is nonexistent, so to regulate what is produced at power stations mostly like we have in Alberta, it's very critical that the balance between production and consumption be as closely tied as it can be because electricity that is not used is gone. Now, natural gas, on the hand, can be produced through the entire year. It can be put into storage caverns, and when you shut the switch off at your house, it stays in the gas line. It's not a commodity that just disappears. So to have the same surveillance on top of these things – we're not dealing with apples and oranges here.

Let's get a little bit more into what you mean about having an individual. According to your motion, "The Minister of Energy must appoint an individual." Well, with this bill he's done a lot better than that. He has 900,000 individuals monitoring the price of gas. And they won't report to the minister; they'll report to the company that's selling them that service. So rather than having someone watching out for people that purchase their own groceries, their own cable TV, their own telephone, that are completely capable of getting their own mortgage, buying their own vehicles, buying their insurance, buying all the commodities that are necessary in our life without the minister appointing someone to watch their business affairs, they're going to be able to do this by themselves.

Now, a really good example would be a gentleman from my community named Mr. Jim Davidson, who purchased a contract from, believe it or not, EPCOR three years ago for $3.90. Now, at the time he was paying a little bit more than it was, but he stepped out on his own and bought a long-term contract with EPCOR, that right now is saving him a lot of money. He did that without anybody's help. He did it as a purchase of a commodity in the marketplace. Now, Jim isn't special. Jim has worked all his life. He's just an average, normal Albertan who on his own purchased a long-term requirement that he thought for his life and his situation was the best thing he could do. In hindsight, which we're all very good at going to here, it was a very good move. But he did that.

Now, he couldn't have done that 10 years ago. He had to deal with ATCO, no ands, ifs, or buts. So now he had the opportunity to shop around, and he saved himself probably several hundred dollars a month. Giving customers a choice shouldn't have to be monitored by anybody. Hopefully, as time goes on and people become more aware of the electrical market and more suppliers are there, we will be able to back away from that individual who will have to monitor the electrical utilities, and the marketplace will begin to work as markets do when government gets out of the way.

We seem to think that somehow competition is new. I mean, it's a fact that natural gas customers, commercial people, have been able to have choice for over a decade, large customers since 1988, since the '70s in some cases. So why was it all right for the big boys to be able to buy at a right price and not the little guys, not the residential people, not the real people that it affects? We wouldn't allow that before, but things have changed.

So with this system we have in place, with this new process people talk to their neighbours. They see it on the news. The opposition makes a point of letting everyone know what all the bad options are out there and what good options they should do. People will use their good information and their diligence to make a decision about who they're going to buy their natural gas from, and trust me, they will be comparing with their neighbour in the coffee shop what price they pay, what other benefits they may have got.

Just take a step back to the deregulation of the phone rates. Ten years ago who was phoning you and saying: do you want to buy from Sprint? Nobody. Because it wasn't possible. They've actually become a bit of a pain now because they all want you to use their phones. Yet in the regulated monopoly part that Telus still has, they don't even have to provide service to people in my area for up to three years after they've built their house, and there is no one else allowed in there to do it. Now, that's blatantly unfair to parts of Alberta, but there's where you leave the regulated monopoly in place. They don't have to care. They don't have to worry about competition. They have the worst of all controls; the monitor is the federal government, probably the last fox you want to put in charge of the chicken house, probably the last one.

The thing we have to remember: I think many Albertans are under the impression that they're going to have to make a choice pretty soon, that they're going to have to do something, and maybe they're counting on the good graces of companies now, but they don't have to do anything. If you're perfectly happy with the service and the price you're getting from your natural gas provider, you could just simply stay there and get your bills, and they will provide that natural gas to you under the same governing body that they do right now. Now, I would think that some people that are more conservative, to use a phrase that's kind of popular in Alberta, may say: "I want to wait and see how this goes. I don't want to make that decision right now, so I'm going to watch. I'm going to talk to my neighbour on this side; I'll talk to my cousin down in Red Deer. I want to find out what they're doing." Believe me. When a marketer starts to provide better prices, better service, maybe a better monthly package, they'll get it. I mean, that's the way business works.

You know, most utility companies have let Albertans average their price along. Now, they didn't average the price of gas; they averaged the payment. And that was easy to understand: well, if I pay a hundred dollars a month, that's kind of like averaging out the price of gas from $7 to $2. Averaging is much easier for many, many people's household budgets. I know it certainly is for mine. So we've had that ability to understand that we can put a little bit of long-term stability into our household utility bill, and that benefits probably most people, most people that make what we make in here and much more for people that make less. No one had to monitor that offer from the utility companies to say: "Do you want to pay a hundred dollars a month? Do you want to go from $300 in the winter to $20 in the summer?" They did that if it suited their situation. And this – what do I call you? Chairman? Speaker?

The Chair: Chairman.

Mr. Mason: That shows how much you speak.

Mr. Snelgrove: Yeah. You see, it's because we listen over here.

Mr. Chairman, there's another part of it that the regulatory body needs to make sure will be fair. The rural gas co-ops, now, are in a very different situation than a public utility in a city in that they have a closed group of owners. The only specific clause is to provide that utility gas service to them, and it will be difficult if one or two of those people in there decide they would like to be serviced by a new provider, who for some reason got gas cheap to them. We've recognized that in this legislation, and rather than have a monitor do that, we've let them decide. If the gas co-op says, "We're not playing. We voted. Our people want us to be the sole purchaser of gas, and the delivery will remain exactly like it is. We're going to buy it on the spot market or however they've done in the past," they'll be able to do that. But, you know, if the people in there say, "Let's open this up; let's, you know, get our fees for the delivery of it within, but let's let whoever wants to buy it," that's great.

I have an unfailing faith in human nature that those who have the general good of their neighbours will take charge and will help them, and they'll become informed, as most small rural communities and gas co-ops do. I mean, you don't have everyone be the expert on gas purchase or the cost of your distribution system upkeep or the equipment replacement, all the things that come into running a distribution system.

Now, there are many other things, if you were to have a market surveillance administrator, that he would have to deal with. Now, I mean, it would be one thing if he simply said: well, the price is too high, or the price is too low. But utilities don't set that price. The world market sets that price, and they take it. They either purchase from someone who's a producer on a long-term contract, that may give them a lower price than the spot and slightly higher than low spot prices – this amendment and this bill have nothing to do with the actual price of natural gas. It has to do with putting the stability into the delivery of it to you, to the consumer.

As part of the natural gas bill you have your basic charge for the gas; you've got rate riders, that might be there for maybe a pipeline or for some price that was up or down; your variable delivery charge, which could be on someone who uses huge amounts occasionally and not much; your fixed delivery charge, which is paying for the basic infrastructure; you have your municipal franchise tax, which many municipalities use as kind of a cash cow and may be not as appropriate as it should be; you have your meter reading, which is becoming more and more automated and more and more distant. I mean, many of our houses now and many of our businesses are read from the office in Edmonton over the phone lines, especially the big industrial users. So that price comes down too, but you don't need anyone monitoring that because business is able to look at the bills and say: can't afford to have the guy driving out every month or every two months; I want to go on the remote reading. Then, of course, the favourite son of all costs on it: the goods and services tax. I would agree with the hon. member who brought this forward, that part should be monitored by somebody, because that's really a cruel . . .

An Hon. Member: What part?

Mr. Snelgrove: The GST. It's just kind of a cruel trick they played on utilities.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think we have to take mainly under advisement that natural gas is different from electricity. It can be stored. It can be spot purchased at lower prices and stored; electricity cannot. So I think that in all fairness and with the good intentions of the hon. member we have to advise him that this is probably not a wise expenditure of money to include another level of bureaucracy in a place where it's probably not needed.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I shall take my seat and thank the hon. member for his encouragement to partake in today's discussion.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise again to debate amendment A1 on Bill 19. Certainly, I'm pleased to see that the previous speaker, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, recognizes that electricity is an essential service because electricity is a product that cannot be stored. I'm pleased to hear that. Electricity is not a commodity. Another correction to the hon. member is that we do not have a world market for natural gas. We have tied ourselves to the North American market. Now, if we were to look at the world market and we were to look at, say, natural gas liquids or natural gas coming from the southern part of Argentina, there would be a significant price difference, and the gas co-ops in the hon. member's constituency would be envious of the price that the Argentinians pay for domestic gas. So to say that there is a world market is, to say the least, inaccurate.

Certainly, the hon. member said earlier as to previous speakers that: well, this is not needed. And then the hon. member said: oh, but we care and we listen. Well, the PC Party in Alberta, which some would consider to be a regulated monopoly – the policy chairperson, a gentleman by the name of Mr. Bill Almdal put together this resolution package and is calling for price protection for rural utility systems. If it's good enough for the policy committee of the Progressive Conservative Party, I don't know why it's not good enough for government members. They recognize a need for this.

I think it's a contradiction, in conclusion, to have a market surveillance administrator for electricity customers and then to just leave out the natural gas customers.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: There are only two members standing. You need three, hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: No. I don't want a standing vote, please, with the limited time we have left.

The Chair: All right. Sorry. Do you care to speak on the bill itself?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In the amount of time we had to discuss this very important issue – the 60 minutes is a guillotine on democracy. A standing vote, as much as I would like, would probably take up the last remaining bit of time that we have to discuss this important issue and how we're going to deal with the gas retail marketplace.

Now, I'm disappointed, to say the least, that amendment A1 did not pass, but certainly there are other concerns that have been expressed through this hon. member. One of them in regard to natural gas – and this government has been negligent in dealing with it in this bill, and at this time I would like to – is the natural gas quality in Alberta. The Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops has a lot to say, and they have a lot of concerns, particularly for those customers in southeastern Alberta. Our correspondence with the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops, Mr. Chairman, indicates that Alberta is one of the only jurisdictions in North America that has no criteria for supply basin gas quality. In Alberta we have always been at the whim of the tariff approved by the regulator, which does not imply or guarantee gas quality.

The solution according to the fine people over at the Federation of Gas Co-ops is to implement an inner Alberta delivery specification on natural gas that ensures that connecting operators such as the federation members are protected from plant upsets and in turn can pursue remedial action and costs when a plant upset occurs. One example is that currently in Alberta the large transportation utility tariff states that 16 parts per million of hydrogen sulphide is allowed in natural gas while Occupational Health and Safety has set safe exposure limits of 10 parts per million. So that's a difference of six parts per million. The inherent risk of this commodity can be minimized by preventive legislation.

They go on to say that a process was attempted through a negotiated settlement with producers and transporters in the province. As far as I know, to-date that process, Mr. Chairman, has failed. Now, I don't know what sort of discussions have gone on in the meantime, but I did not find any part of this bill that is going to protect the safety and integrity of our natural gas pipeline systems in the province as well as the consumers that they serve. Again, I'm disappointed.

I know this legislation wasn't drafted in haste, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, as was discussed here earlier, there have been draft copies of this on the Internet since last October, and even some of the draft regulations were on the Department of Energy web site, but no mention of this. If we cannot pass a law that is going to protect not only the delivery system but the consumer at the end of it, then I think we should have another look at this bill.

I'm sad to think that in light of these important issues and other issues this Assembly is not going to get a chance to debate Bill 19 in this nature. Certainly, it's a first that this hon. member has heard from the hon. Member for Wainwright, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster in relation to this issue. This issue is of great importance to the rural gas co-ops, and I don't know – in their remarks they didn't explain how many rural gas co-ops they had.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but pursuant to Government Motion 15, agreed to March 20, 2003, which states that after one hour of debate all questions must be decided to conclude debate on Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, in Committee of the Whole, I must put the following question: on the clauses of the bill are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Chair: Carried.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:23 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: Opposed.

The Chair: Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 19.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 19. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Some Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: Opposed.

The Deputy Speaker: The motion is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to the agreement arrived at between House leaders earlier I would move that we do call it 5:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; at 4:37 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 24, 2003 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 03/03/24
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Hon. members, would you please remain standing after the prayer for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. Our Father, we confidently ask for Your strength and encouragement in our service of You through our service of others. We ask for Your gift of wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Now, would you please join in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau, and would you please feel free to participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
 The True North strong and free!
 From far and wide, O Canada,
 We stand on guard for thee.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce two guests sitting in the Speaker's gallery today. His Worship Mayor Dave Bronconnier is here representing Alberta's largest city, the city of Calgary. I'd like to introduce him as well as his chief of staff, Marc Henry. I'd like to invite both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mrs. McClellan: This morning I had the opportunity, with my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, to attend the investiture of lifesaving honours. It is my honour and pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two young men who received that honour along with a friend of theirs who was unable to be with us in the Legislature. They were honoured for saving a friend of theirs from icy water, actually at the seventh hole of the Drumheller golf course. I told the young men that we always thought the back nine was the dangerous part. These young men joined a number of others today in being honoured for extraordinary efforts to save a life. I will first introduce the two young men and their guests in your gallery. We have Kyle Kohut and Jeff Potter. These are the young men, with their friend Ben Kirby, who saved this young man's life. They're accompanied by John Kohut, Blair Potter, and Jarred Potter in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. With your permission – the balance of their guests are in the members' gallery – in the interests of time I would ask them to stand as well: Sandra Kohut, Liz Potter, Carli Samuel, Brittney James, Karly Kohut, and Jennifer Potter. Would you please give our guests a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly five constituents from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I'd like them to stand as I call their names. First, Bev Oliver from Three Hills. She was at the same awards this morning that the Deputy Premier spoke of, where she received her bar to the service medal for eight years of volunteer service. We have Bob and Anna Thompson. Bob is a member of the David Thompson health authority from the Trochu area. They are very proud to have with them their daughter Deanna, who also received an award this morning, the M.G. Griffiths plaque, which is the highest bravery award presented by the Royal Life Saving Society, for Deanna's work in Bali during the terrorist attacks on October 12 of last year, where she narrowly escaped the bombing but reacted very quickly in helping to save lives and treat many of the injured. They are all seated in your gallery accompanied by my lovely wife, Janis, and I would ask them all to stand and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf it's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 81 special guests, 67 students and 14 adults: teachers Mr. McDonald, Mrs. Chapotelle, parent helpers Mrs. Redl, Mrs. Ducharme, Miss Hill, Mrs. Gatzki, Mr. Stott, Mrs. Wahlund, Mrs. Rempel, Mrs. de Bruijn, Mrs. Steckly, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Dubrûle, and Mrs. O'Brien. They're seated, I believe, in both galleries, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It does give me a great deal of pleasure to rise on this glorious Alberta day and introduce to you and through you some few individuals from our Economic Development communications branch, a job not without its challenges. They are visiting the House today, and I'd ask them to rise as I call their names and be recognized: Chantal Beesley, Trina Dool, Rebecca Gillham, Connie Hill, and my old high school pal Ken Klatchuk. Would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of the House today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased and honoured today to be able to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very sharp group of students who attend John A. McDougall school in my riding of Edmonton-Centre. They're seated in the public gallery. I've already met with them. They're very aware of current issues like smoking and VLTs. With them today are two instructors, Ms Dhyana Roche and Miss Kym Beres, and I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House Mrs. Hayward from Edmonton. She's very concerned about the financial crisis that our public school system faces today and has been facing for some years. Mrs. Hayward is a parent of five children and grandparent of 11. Mrs. Hayward's grandchildren attend five different schools, and she's active with each of the schools. She's a tireless volunteer and passionate supporter of adequately funded public schools. Mrs. Hayward is seated in the members' gallery, and I will now request her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you a guest who's seated in the members' gallery. She's a constituent of mine, a mother of four, a passionate advocate of public education, and a member of the Windsor Park school committee. I would ask all members of the Assembly to give Melanie Shapiro a warm welcome. If you would stand, please, Melanie.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly one of the very active people in the New Democratic Party. Erica Bullwinkle is the first vice-president of the Alberta New Democrats. She took part on Saturday, along with 18,000 other people, in the rally that ended at this Legislature, and she's here this afternoon to listen to the parties' positions on the current situation in the Middle East. I would ask Erica Bullwinkle to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier.

War in Iraq

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to comment on the strong friendship that Alberta has with Canada's closest ally and neighbour, the United States. As American troops put their lives on the line across the world to defend very fundamental principles that Albertans share with the United States, I believe that it is important that our friends in the U.S. hear voices of friendship and support from abroad. Equally important is a message of support for troops from Britain and Australia, our friends in the Commonwealth. They, too, are at the front lines of this conflict, and our prayers are with them.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have strong ties with the United States. These ties extend far beyond economic interests. The ties between Alberta and the U.S. are rooted in much common history, a tradition of interchange of ideas, and shared values. Today, as conflict rages in Iraq, the thoughts of Albertans, including me and everyone in the government caucus, are not on economic issues. Our thoughts are with the troops, their families, and the American people, who are risking so much in order to uphold what so many believe in.

Our thoughts are also with the people of Iraq, a people with a long and honourable history of contributions to civilization, the arts, and human progress. We pray that peace will come quickly to their nation and that the result of this conflict will be lasting freedom and prosperity for them.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, war is a horrible thing. Television images that Albertans and people around the world have seen over the last few days are powerful, sobering reminders of the ugliness that is war. These images and the very idea of war are stirring passionate emotions among Albertans and people across the globe. There are profound differences of opinion among people as to whether this conflict is necessary or justified, and I respect and I'm sure all members of this Legislature respect the views of those who disagree with that conflict. I know that people who oppose this war speak honestly and from the heart.

For me our friendship with the United States means that we must send a message of support and support for other partners of the coalition. This does not mean that I advocate the use of Canadian troops in the conflict. I don't even know if Canadian troops have been requested. There are Canadian military personnel in the region, and our thoughts today are for their safety and the well-being of their families. In regard to the Iraq conflict the deployment of the Canadian military is a matter strictly for the federal government, and I will respect their decisions on the issue.

My message, Mr. Speaker, is one of friendship. It is a message of support for our neighbours and friends in the United States. It is the hope that the conflict will end as soon as possible and that coalition troops will return home to the arms of their families safely and soon. It's the wish that the values all free peoples share, values such as freedom of expression, of belief, of opportunity, will echo in Iraq and indeed across the world as the result of this conflict.

Thank you.

Dr. Nicol: We live in a dangerous and confusing time, Mr. Speaker. With the events of September 11 our world has fundamentally changed. We have entered a new era with new challenges, challenges which arise from actions of individual leaders like Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein. How we respond to those challenges will determine what sort of world we leave to our children.

What this new world needs, Mr. Speaker, is leadership, but that leadership must come through the United Nations, not from one nation acting alone. We recognize that the United States is our friend and ally. Many people say you should stick by your friends during this difficult time. That is true. Through the war on terrorism we have stuck by our friends.

The Official Opposition believes that leadership in the new age must be found in the rule of law. At the international level the United Nations is the organization that the world has chosen to embody and apply that rule of law. If we espouse our love for freedom and democracy, then we must respect the fundamental principles on which democracy is based. Provincial and federal politicians in Canada know the importance of the rule of law. We practise it every day. Canada is governed by the Constitution, that sets out the powers of the federal and provincial governments. Just as it would be wrong for the federal government to intrude into matters of provincial jurisdiction, so too it is wrong for the provincial government to intrude into matters of federal jurisdiction. Provincial leaders should address their concerns of federal jurisdiction to the government of Canada, not to representatives of foreign governments.

Mr. Speaker, the democracies of the world are expected to provide leadership and guidance to a postwar Iraq. How can we provide that guidance if we don't respect the rule of law at home or abroad?

In closing, Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition sends their thoughts and prayers to the men and women serving with the U.S., British, and Australian forces, to their families, to the families of the people of Iraq who suffer from this action, and to our own men and women in the Canadian armed forces, who continue the fight on terrorism.

When we speak of friendship, we should not forget the important ties that many Muslim communities in Alberta and Canada feel to the people of Iraq. War will bring a great deal of suffering and strife to that troubled region. It is important that Canada be there through the United Nations to help with the reconstruction of Iraqi communities. This action would be consistent with Canada's long-term commitment to peacekeeping and peace building through the United Nations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent from the Assembly so that the leader of the New Democrat opposition can reply to the Premier's statement.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thank the House and you for this opportunity for me to make a statement on this very important issue of historic importance to all of us. I'm pleased that the Premier has chosen to retreat from some of his more inflammatory statements last week in support of the war against Iraq and his statements opposing the federal government's decision to not participate in what is an illegal and unnecessary war.

Last Saturday tens of thousands of Albertans marched peacefully against the decision of the Bush and Blair administrations to launch this war of invasion and occupation. This included 18,000 Edmontonians in the largest-ever rally in the history of this province. These Albertans marched in solidarity with millions of U.S. and British citizens who disagree with their governments on this war. These citizens realize that this war of aggression violates the UN charter and will only make the world less secure and less stable.

My New Democrat colleague and I, Mr. Speaker, maintain that the Premier should not have sent a letter to the U.S. ambassador purporting to speak on behalf of Albertans in expressing support for the Bush administration's decision to launch the Iraq war. This was clearly inappropriate for a provincial Premier, who is normally very sensitive about federal intrusions into Alberta's jurisdiction. I therefore urge the Premier to send a follow-up letter to the U.S. ambassador clarifying that he respects the decision and the jurisdiction of the Canadian government to not participate in the war against Iraq.

Like the Premier I, too, wish for a speedy end to this conflict, but surely the best way for this to happen is for the U.S. government and its allies to stop the war and withdraw from the territory of Iraq. An immediate end to this unjust, unnecessary, and unacceptable war of aggression is imperative, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

Oral Question Period

Time Allocation

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, democratic government means that the people send members of all parties to the Legislature to debate matters of great public importance. Here in Alberta, however, this freedom is threatened by a government limiting debate on three bills affecting many citizens and arrogantly dismissing anyone who dares to oppose them. My question to the Premier: what's your government policy on when time allotment should be used?

Mr. Klein: Time allotment should be used, Mr. Speaker, when we have clear indication from the Liberal opposition that they're going to filibuster and hold up the business of the people of this province. Relative to one bill – I'm not sure which one it was; I think it was Bill 3 – I think they've already had seven hours of debate. Now, there are only seven of them. You know, that's an average of one hour each. I can't imagine what they can possibly say in seven times one hour that hasn't been said before.

His Worship, the mayor of the city of Calgary, is in the gallery today. I don't know if the rules have changed, but I recall that at city hall debate was limited to five minutes per person. You know, if you can't say what you need to say in five minutes, then there's no use saying it at all. They've had seven hours already.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: how can you shut off the debate when you haven't yet heard or seen all the amendments we're proposing on those bills?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they had lots of time to bring their amendments. You know, some amendments are rational, but amendments are simply another tool of filibuster. Nuisance and frivolous amendments are another rule of filibuster so they can talk again another seven hours on each and every amendment. When they keep bringing amendments forward and opportunity to speak and speak and speak again, that to me is a filibuster.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: if Bill 27 was so time sensitive, why wasn't that bill on health labour relations introduced at the start of the session instead of later?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there is an Order Paper, and the Liberal opposition is privy to the Order Paper each and every day. We try to bring these bills forward as quickly as we can, but there is a process. There is a process in terms of getting a bill ready. Now, there are 47, I believe, pieces of legislation on this spring's Order Paper. Each of those pieces of legislation, since they are government bills and private members' bills – there are, well, 47 government bills, and I don't know how many private members' bills; many, many. But here is the process – and they will never know what the process is because they'll never be in government . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Don't be too arrogant.

Mr. Klein: No, I'm not being arrogant. Lookit; you went down from 32 to 17, and now you're down to seven. Next time around you'll be down to none.

Mr. Mason: We've got nowhere to go but up, Ralph, so watch out for us.

Mr. Klein: Just wait and see.

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: When it comes to funding for education, this government has broken more promises than it has kept. According to the Minister of Learning's press release of April 25, 2001, in addition to funding for teachers' salaries, school boards were promised increased funding for local priorities such as enhanced literacy, class sizes, and increasing costs in noninstructional areas such as transportation and operations and maintenance. The school boards dedicated the grant increase of 3 and a half percent to the classroom, following exactly the minister's directions. To the Minister of Learning: given that school boards spent this money on the classroom, as directed, where does the minister think the school boards will get the money for the teachers' salaries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do not have the press release from two years ago in front of me, but I do believe it says that after consultation with the ATA and with school boards there would be money available potentially for the classroom. I will attempt to get a copy of the actual press release and be able to read it and elucidate the Assembly as to what it actually said.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Learning: is the minister accusing the school boards of not being open about their finances when they say that there's no money left to fund the arbitrated settlement with teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. Leader of the Opposition is referring to what we have done in Edmonton, and I think he will be pleasantly or unpleasantly surprised when the audit comes back. We have some schools, for example, that are showing utilization rates of anywhere from 24 to 25 percent. We've got to take a very serious look at some of these things. We have school programs in schools that have 35 students in them. Even in rural Alberta that program would not have continued.

Mr. Speaker, I would just ask that the hon. Leader of the Opposition wait until we have the audit. I'm hoping that the audit will be in by the end of next week. My people are now telling me that the actual audit itself will be approximately 200 pages, so I don't know if we will have it by the end of this week.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Learning: will the minister prevent the teacher layoffs and cutbacks planned in schools across Alberta and finally fund the arbitrated salary agreement?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, there are two parts to that question that I'd like to respond to. First of all, the part about funding the actual settlement: there was $298 million given for a settlement of $260 million, and I've said that numerous times in this Assembly.

There is one other point that I hope the hon. Leader of the Opposition will find interesting, and that is that there have been, apparently, layoff notices, or there have been teachers that have been singled out to be laid off in Edmonton. A very interesting fact is that Edmonton public does not know how many teachers will be retiring until the end of May, so it seems a little bit premature to be putting in layoff notices when they don't know – they don't know – what number will be retiring due to attrition.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Energy deregulation is the most spectacular policy failure of this Progressive Conservative government. Business owners are so upset. They say: "The bills are so big; I don't like to open them up until they're due. Why stress myself out?" My first question is to the Premier. Given that an owner of a furniture store had an electricity bill of $7,000 in 2001, $12,500 in 2002, and if the current prices continue will have a $24,000 bill at the end of this year, how can the Premier continue to claim that energy deregulation has reduced the cost of electricity for this and other small business owners across this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I noted that the hon. member used "if," but he doesn't mention if prices go down what will happen. If prices go down, then, you know what? They will go on to another issue. You just watch and see. You see, they watch the political winds, and whatever way the political winds blow, then they make a lot of noise, but as soon as the situation quiets down – so if the price goes down, so will the rhetoric.

So I say to that business owner: you look at things overall. You look at a very low taxation regime. You look at a government that plays fair, that gets out of the way of business to let them conduct business. You look at the very, very high productivity rate that we have in this province. You look at numerous other things that make up the Alberta advantage – no payroll tax, no sales tax, very low corporate tax, no capital tax, all of these things that Liberal and ND socialist governments have in other jurisdictions – and then you sort of figure out, which they haven't been able to do yet, why thousands of businesses are moving to this province.

Mr. MacDonald: It's been a mistake, and you know it.

Again to the Premier: given that in 2003 the year-to-date wholesale price for electricity is 8.9 cents a kilowatt – and that is 3 cents a kilowatt higher than it was last year – when can small business owners in Edmonton expect this mythical price of yours to come into effect? When are prices going to go down instead of up?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, prices will go down when the price of gas comes down, when the cost of generating electricity comes down, as more competition comes onstream. It will come down. I would remind the hon. member that it was the business community that supported strongly the notion of deregulation. Absolutely. When it was first introduced in 1995, we had strong support from the chambers of commerce in this province and from the private sector generally. You know, it's so typical of the Liberals to focus on the negative impacts of anything, because that's where their minds are. Their minds are in a negative mode.

To speak about the positives in this province, I'll call on the Minister of Economic Development.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier indicated, there are a lot of facts that I would like to put on the table because the fiction that seems to emanate over there is confusing, muddying the water.

I would like to just point out as a small business owner why people set up in Alberta. It's a great place to do business. In Alberta unemployment in the last two years has risen to the highest, Mr. Speaker, anywhere in Canada.* The number of new jobs is the highest of anywhere in Canada. This should very much interest the hon. member opposite. [interjections] Hey, hey, hey, fellows. The largest increase . . .

The Speaker: That's my job to say hey, hey, hey.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, your last question.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This to the Minister of Economic Development. How can this minister state that entrepreneurs must accept more responsibility for high energy prices when this Progressive Conservative government's energy deregulation policy is to blame?

Mr. Norris: Well, now I'm back up, sir. I'll give you the bottom line. Mr. Speaker, I would like to preface this because this is very important for everybody to understand, including the Liberals. There are concerns in the small and medium and large business communities. There's no doubt about that. We are not going to deny that. But the bottom line is that all the economic indicators that everybody looks for in Canada are the best in Alberta.

I want to talk about the one that the hon. member was referring to, saying that businesses are in turmoil, that they're having trouble. The largest number of increases in small business in all of Canada, Mr. Speaker, took place – guess where? – in Alberta. So I would ask the hon. members opposite: instead of focusing on one piece of the puzzle, which is an important one, why don't you look at the whole package that this government I think quite brilliantly has put together that makes it the best business environment in the country, no ifs, ands, or buts about it?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the last few months school boards, parents, community groups have all been trying to warn this government that if funding for education doesn't increase beyond the planned 2 percent, massive service cuts will occur in our schools. Another example of how this government is letting Edmonton down: Edmonton Tory MLAs are telling trustees to not expect anything beyond a 2 percent increase for the next budget year. With inflation over 7 percent, an arbitrated teachers' settlement of 14 percent, skyrocketing utility costs, and a host of other factors driving up costs, this would represent a slap in the face of Edmontonians who believed that they were getting a seat at the table when they voted Tory. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How can the minister defend a 2 percent increase for Edmonton public when he knows this will mean ballooning class sizes in Edmonton schools?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will not be commenting on the budget, as the budget is going to be laid down in this Assembly on April 8. What I will do, though, is, if I can, read a press release from budget 2001.

"I look to the school boards and the Alberta Teachers Association to ensure these significant resources are maximized – giving a fair [settlement] to teachers and addressing classroom needs."

The bottom line is that the budget is on April 8, and I would ask that the hon. member wait to ask questions on the budget until it's actually tabled.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Maybe the minister can tell the House if he will be advocating in cabinet for a funding increase of more than 2 percent for Edmonton schools.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that occurs in government is a thing called cabinet . . .

An Hon. Member: Secrecy.

Dr. Oberg: Well, basically, the things that are said in cabinet must stay in cabinet, and that's something that the hon. member will probably never see in Alberta. What is said in cabinet remains in cabinet. What is said in Treasury Board remains in Treasury Board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister again: can the minister confirm that if in the last few days or weeks he or any Edmonton MLA considered the question of firing the Edmonton public school trustees for making public the deficit the board faces and the effect that that would have on our schools?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I believe there are about two or three questions there. The first question, I do not respond to innuendo that has been written in the newspaper. The second question is about a potential deficit, and I've said numerous times in this Assembly that there will be an audit that will be done by, again, probably not the end of this week because it is lengthier than we thought, but there will be the deficit that will be looked at at that time if indeed there is a deficit, and how that will be dealt with will be decided at that time. So that is coming soon, and hopefully I'll be able to give the hon. member a better answer at that time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Municipal Infrastructure

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Municipalities, particularly Alberta's major cities, have persistent and increasing demands to provide infrastructure and other services due to the enormous growth pressures of our buoyant economy. My question: does the minister recognize these problems, and what's being done to address them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Well, to follow up on some of the earlier comments by the Minister of Economic Development, over the last nine years Alberta has been the fastest growing province in Canada, and of course the 360 municipalities that fall under municipal government are in fact growing each and every day and very rapidly. In fact, just this morning His Worship the mayor of Calgary as well as the mayor of Edmonton as well as the president of the AUMA, representing over 200 municipalities, as well as the president of the AAMD and C for municipal districts and counties – we met with them in partnership with developers, with the UDI group, the Urban Development Institute, and many others relative to: how do we grow the pie? As you know, Mr. Speaker, when people come to Alberta, the fastest growing province in our country, they don't bring their municipal infrastructure with them. What we were doing today in our workshop was looking at potential enabling legislation, in partnership with those developers, to grow the pie to deal with the kinds of municipal infrastructure pressures that cities such as Calgary and Edmonton are facing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary question is to the same minister. Does the minister have a road map or a blueprint by which achievement to meet these ends will be and can be measured?

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In measuring our progress, I'd like to say that our roles, responsibility, and resources committee, the first of its kind in Canada – the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne sit on that committee as well as the Alberta Economic Development Authority. What we're endeavoring to do: as we go forward in the rapidly growing economy that we're facing, we want to be able to measure that progress by working in partnership with municipalities, and we're doing that. With today's three-hour workshop we had some very good feedback from home builders, from the Urban Development Institute. What we want to do before anything enters this House is consult with our stakeholders so we can measure to deal with the pressures that municipalities are facing. I think we're doing that, and I think that in the short term you're going to see some very enabling legislation coming forward to hear the feedback that we heard this morning from those stakeholders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning says that parents should not use the proceeds of gambling to pay for the basics of school education, yet in some schools in my constituency budgets have fallen to the point where parent fund-raising from casinos now exceeds the schools' total budgets for nonsalary operating expenses. Parents resent having to work casinos to pay for basics like computers, books, and supplies. To the Premier: given that many parents like those at Windsor Park and virtually every school council I've spoken with think it is wrong to use the proceeds of gambling for school education, will he explain why his government is not fully funding the curriculum that Alberta Learning mandates?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. Minister of Learning has explained the policy time and time and time again, and why the Liberal opposition fails to comprehend the answer is beyond me. The answer is a simple one, but knowing the mentality of the Liberals, I will have the hon. Minister of Learning explain it one more time.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member raised specifically Windsor Park school. Windsor Park has approximately 179 students and a utilization of 82 percent. They employ 8.7 teachers. For another one that was raised in this Assembly, McCauley school, the utilization is 35 percent. It has approximately 210 students. I've talked about numerous other ones. The bottom line on the question is that all the resources for the curriculum are provided to Edmonton public.

I believe that approximately a year ago certainly the superintendent for Edmonton Catholic put out a statement that there would be and that there was no fund-raising for the basic resources such as textbooks, things like that. Mr. Speaker, the superintendent of Edmonton public put out a mandate to his principals for the same thing. If the hon. member would give to me that these schools are indeed fund-raising for some of the necessities, I will certainly take a look at it. With site-based decision-making it is up to the schools how they spend those dollars. I would be more than happy to look into it if it is provided to me.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, the minister refers to Edmonton Catholic schools, so what does the minister say to Catholics who are forced to choose between breaking faith with their bishop who advises them not to work casinos for school funding or, on the other hand, their schools who depend on casino revenues for supplies and equipment?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I would strongly suggest them to keep the faith. If they don't want to work casinos, then they don't need to work casinos.

Dr. Taft: To the Premier: does government policy recognize any moral issues with using the proceeds of gambling to fund education?

Mr. Klein: The question: does the government defend, I believe, any moral issues . . .

Dr. Taft: No. I'll repeat it. Does government policy recognize any moral issues with using the proceeds of gambling to fund education?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Learning has already pointed out that adequate funding is available to provide for school essentials. Fund-raising, whether it's through lotteries or bingo or other forms, bake sales and cookie sales and so on, is used to purchase items such as field trips and band equipment and other items that the school council feels to be extra to the vital and essential needs of the schools. For years and years raffles and various forms of gambling have been recognized as a legitimate form of method to raise money for these extras.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glangarry.

Constitutional Reform

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Kyoto protocol, a billion-dollar gun registry, and the Canadian Wheat Board Act are but a few examples of federal legislation that is bad for and disliked by many Albertans. Yet each of these pieces of legislation could have been modified, if not defeated, if there was an effective set of checks and balances vis-à-vis the federal House of Commons. My questions are for the minister of intergovernmental relations. When is the government of Alberta going to table a constitutional resolution to reopen a constitutional debate on Senate reform?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta has long been the leading advocate in Canada with respect to Senate reform. We've been an advocate for centuries actually. Alberta has held the only two Senate elections in Canadian history, has long lobbied other Canadian governments in support of Senate reform, and continues to raise the issue with the Prime Minister at every opportunity.

In November, as members of the Assembly will recall, the Alberta Legislature again reaffirmed its support for a triple E Senate by passing a resolution calling on the Prime Minister to respect democracy and appoint one of the province's elected Senate nominees. Following that, the Premier wrote the Prime Minister again asking that he do the right thing and appoint one of Alberta's nominees to fill a vacancy in the upper House. The Alberta government will continue to pursue Senate reform and will do its part to make sure that this is on the national agenda at every opportunity.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. When is the government going to become more proactive in redefining Alberta's place in Confederation rather than reactive by filing unsuccessful court challenges?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, actually the government has been quite active with respect to issues that bear upon the question raised by the hon. member. Recently there have been a whole series of high-profile issues where Alberta has found itself in fundamental disagreement with the federal government, including the Kyoto accord and health reform. I could just report to this Assembly, if they have not heard this before, that these disagreements have triggered a public concern that Alberta is neither getting its due nor receiving the respect it deserves from the federal government.

What I think sometimes gets lost in these tensions is the fact that Alberta has been a leader in the whole area of federal/provincial relations. Alberta has a well-deserved reputation for facing problems, developing workable solutions, and above all defending the interests of Albertans. In fact, we continue to be a leader at the negotiating table and have achieved some significant victories over the past year. We secured significant concessions from Ottawa on the Kyoto protocol related to emissions and capping the costs of implementation for the energy sector. In health care, Mr. Speaker, Alberta was instrumental in designing a health council that will report through health ministers and not be an independent oversight body, as recommended by the federal government. Alberta also led in the development of a dispute resolution mechanism in relation to the interpretation of the Canada Health Act.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, we have been very active in defending the rights of our provincial citizens.

Municipal Governance

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the Minister of Municipal Affairs mentioned the creation of six municipal authority pods in Alberta. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what would the role of these be in municipal governance in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, what I did say last Thursday was this. As we near our hundredth anniversary in this province, if we were creating Alberta again a hundred years later, would we create it with 360 municipalities? I think we all know today that the answer would probably be less because of the fact that what citizens of Alberta are telling us is they want more money on the front line and less in governance. But having said that, I also would like to say this to the hon. member. I indicated that I would not force under my watch as Minister of Municipal Affairs any amalgamations in this province, and I continue to remain by that commitment.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Electricity Billing

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past couple of weeks I've been informed by a number of small businesses in my constituency that they have a new billing line charge on their Enmax bill, a line charge that has not been on the bill since signing a contract with Enmax in the spring of 2002. It reads, "Aquila RRO Rider," and the amounts are huge. I'm outraged because my constituents did not anticipate this. They're appalled at the high amount, and I'm appalled that a company can leave this charge off for six months, misleading their customers through negligence. So my question to the Minister of Government Services: where is the consumer protection?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In terms of consumer protection when it turns out that utility bills and bills have been added to or taken away from, one of the things that we found in the billing process, with many companies involved, was that there can be some inaccuracies and there can be some problems along the way. What we do in government is try to minimize those. As a result, last summer we had a billing task force, that was co-chaired by myself and the Minister of Energy. We looked at billing inaccuracies, and we got a commitment from all of the companies involved as well as Government Services and, as well, the Energy and Utilities Board to make sure that a process was put in place so that those inaccuracies could be checked upon and made proper.

The EUB has approved those rate riders that the hon. member is referring to, and a process is in place for anyone who has a cancellation or a collection. They should be advised that the EUB's consumer complaint line is the place to go for those rate riders, and that particular phone number is 1-866-215-1181, so you can let your constituents know that that's where to go.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in terms of marketing, if there are marketers out there in her constituency that do not show a licence, do not abide by the 17-point code of conduct, do not present a contract in front of a prospective customer that has cancellation rights, then the Fair Trading Act takes over. Under that act if we find that people have violated that act, then $100,000 or two years in jail is the penalty for not abiding by that. If anybody wants to report that, they can call 1-877-427-4088, and we'll investigate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While I'm on the topic of power bills, would the Minister of Energy please correct the unconscionable fear mongering and misleading statements made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, who told my local paper that ATCO power bills will increase by 70 percent and that EPCOR and Enmax will be forced to charge the market rate instead of a regulated one.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, in fact, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is probably doing more to encourage competition, doing more to encourage rate setting contracts out there because he does mislead the public with statements here in question period, with comments made in the paper. In fact, it's a competitive marketplace where people can make contracts, can make decisions about how much they're going to pay each month, and they can determine who their provider is. They can determine how they would like their bill to be structured. There are reputable marketers out there. There will continue to be reputable marketers entering the industry. And you know what? All it takes is for an ND politician to screw it up with bad information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 30 school boards in zone

23 are having difficulty understanding how they are to pay for the government-ordered arbitrated teachers' settlement. The minister's retroactive accounting is not helping them. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. How else, other than by holding back funds, could boards have covered the arbitrated settlement?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it is zones 2 and 3, and I understand that the hon. member had a meeting with zones 2 and 3 last Friday, I believe it was, with many of our MLAs that were there as well.

Mr. Speaker, the question that was asked is whether or not the 3 and a half percent and 3 percent should have been held back. I go back to the press release of 2001 and that it was up to the ATA and the school boards to decide where those dollars were put. We had an arbitration settlement that was 14 percent, and subsequently a good deal of those dollars were used for teachers' salaries. We fully expect that the rest of the dollars would be put into the classroom. As I've said probably 15 or 20 times in this Assembly, there was $298 million allocated for a $260 million issue. I fully recognize that there are school boards that have other costs, other issues, but when it comes directly to salaries, those are the amounts of dollars that were there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: will boards be ordered in the future to hold back all classroom improvement dollars in order to cover possible increases in teachers' salaries?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member fully knows that BQRP funding or other infrastructure funding or, as he has called it, funding for the physical structures are related to the Minister of Infrastructure, and those dollars cannot be utilized for teachers' salaries, things like that. Those are very important dollars that are used to upgrade facilities, and in many cases it is something that is extremely needed.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

School Utilization

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. We continue to learn about the financial problems faced by Edmonton public schools because of this government's underfunding of education. Four schools, including three in my riding, are being eyed by the board for closure. This will mean busing students to other schools and will kill efforts to revitalize neighbourhoods as few parents will move to an area without a school. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How many schools have to close and how many neighbourhoods have to be cut loose before this minister stands up for education and properly funds Edmonton public school board?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly glad that the hon. member asked me that question. I will go through the four schools that Edmonton public has said that they are looking at closing. The first one is Bellevue elementary school, which has 55 students. The utilization rate of that facility is 24 percent.

The second one is Horse Hill junior high program, Mr. Speaker, which is a program. The total school is ECS to grade 9, but they are looking at the junior high program. The number of students in the junior high program is 34. The utilization rate of that school is 28 percent.

Mr. Speaker, the next one is the Sherbrooke program. There are 83 students in grades 5 to 9 that are going to be affected by that. The utilization rate of that school is 30 percent.

The last one is probably one of the more interesting ones, which is Stratford school. It presently has a grade 9 class which is an IB class that is being administered under Jasper Place school, but that school has 24 students, and the utilization rate of that school is roughly 28 percent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it goes well beyond those schools because given the minister's guidelines for utilization rates, the public school board is considering up to 50 schools that may be closed. Is the minister suggesting the closure of each and every one of those schools?

Dr. Oberg: That is so absurd that it really does not warrant an answer. Edmonton public currently is looking at four schools. [interjections] I will go on, Mr. Speaker. For example, the utilization rate for McCauley school is 35 percent. The utilization rate for Riverdale school is 57 percent. Those schools require dollars to keep them heated, to keep them on. Closing the schools that they were talking about – for example, I believe that two of the schools would have saved the Edmonton public school board $613,000.

Mr. Speaker, school closures are never easy decisions, but I do commend the Edmonton public school board for taking a look at them. Their overall utilization in Edmonton now is approximately 68 percent, which means that 32 percent of their facilities are empty. They're taking a look at it. This 50 schools thing, though: those kinds of rumours, those kinds of innuendos with no basis in fact are extremely harmful to the Edmonton public school system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister admit that his utilization formula, which excludes things like playschools, computer labs, and so on, all of which are now considered empty space by his government, is contributing directly to those utilization rates that he's talking about?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the hon. member misrepresented the formula. There are a number of things that are exempt. As a matter of fact, when you look at high schools that were built before 1990, we use the old formula for establishing utilization. The reason for that is because there is space, like wide halls, that in fact cannot be utilized for instruction, so we exempt those. We exempt certain configurations in order to use the old formula. But it's really interesting that even if you apply the old formula to the overall utilization of the Edmonton schools, we still only increase the utilization by maybe 2 to 3 percent. So the idea that it's all because of a new formula is simply not true.

Dr. Oberg: Further, Mr. Speaker, I just want to allow the Legislative Assembly to hear what the former leader of the New Democrat opposition said. But to be frank about it, 54 in a school – this school is closing itself down.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Driving without Insurance

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some years ago someone close to me was hit by a speeding car as she was walking through a crosswalk. She was knocked 75 feet and nearly died. Some years later the same person was again hit by another car crashing right through the store windows to where she was sitting inside, and again she was severely injured. In both cases it turned out that the driver was completely uninsured in spite of being able to produce a pink slip at the time. Since then I have heard similar stories from others such that I wonder what is going on. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. In light of the dramatic increases in insurance costs recently what are the penalties for driving without insurance?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the penalties for driving without insurance, of course, are a mandatory court appearance, and the first offence carries a fine of anywhere from $2,500 to $10,000. Then, of course, for companies the fines are more severe. For a second offence within the first year the penalty does carry a jail sentence of a minimum of 60 days.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you. To the same minister: what are the trends of people being charged and being convicted of driving without insurance?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, taking into the context that the number of registered vehicles, both commercial and passenger, in this province has increased dramatically over the last 10 years, the actual trend is down. But you'd have to break it down into those three key areas from providing a pink card when stopped by a peace officer to the other side of the spectrum, being in an accident and having no insurance. We are stopping more people on the highway today that fail to produce a pink card. On the other hand, in terms of convictions following serious accidents, the number of those situations where a person was not insured is showing a downward trend over the last 10 years.

Mr. Lord: My final question to the same minister: what safeguards are in place in order to make sure people have a valid pink slip and haven't just canceled their insurance and got a refund after they got a pink slip to hang onto?

Mr. Stelmach: Well, Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day we certainly rely on the fact that all Albertans want to be honest and up-front with their insurance. A number of things do occur on a regular basis. One, whenever a police officer pulls a passenger or a commercial vehicle aside, they have the ability to confirm the insurance with the insurance agent, and the insurance agent has to provide the information when requested to do so by a peace officer. As well, because the fines have increased substantially, many Albertans are taking a second look at the cost of the fine versus higher insurance costs and are making provisions to ensure that they're properly insured.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Video Lottery Terminals

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has announced that it is going to be making upgrades or replacing VLTs in our province. This upgrade will be totaling some $105 million.

Part of the costs have been attributed to new safety features which are said to help problem gamblers. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. Is the government buying 6,000 new VLTs, or is the money for upgrades to existing machines?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago in our business plan we indicated that there would be a replacement of an aging VLT system. As the hon. member knows, in Alberta we have a cap. We've had a cap on VLTs since 1995 of 6,000 machines. Many of them came in in or about 1991 and accordingly at this point in time are in excess of 10 years old. They needed replacement some time ago. So the answer to the question is that the money is being spent on replacement of machines, which will give us an opportunity to utilize new technology to introduce responsible gaming features.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. What evidence does the minister have that the new responsible gaming safety features will actually help reduce the time spent gambling and not be negated by the higher entertainment value of the new formats in programming?

Mr. Stevens: The issue of responsible gaming features on the electronic gaming machines is a relatively new one. The first province in Canada to introduce such features was Nova Scotia approximately two years ago. Such features are also located in some of the states in Australia. The research with respect to the effectiveness of responsible gaming features is still to be done in its fullness. However, there is preliminary indication that the features which we are bringing in here in Alberta and which were utilized in Nova Scotia will assist the people playing the machines to manage both their time and money more effectively.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Does the government see its role in providing these machines as one primarily of providing entertainment or as a revenue source?

Mr. Stevens: I think it's fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that in the plebiscites of 1998 Albertans said to this government that what they wanted was for this government to manage and control VLTs. They wanted us to ensure that the cap was maintained. They wanted us to do it in a socially responsible fashion. Part of the mandate of my ministry is that we are to address all those issues together with ensuring that the Alberta lottery fund, which is utilized for many community and public initiatives, is maximized. So it is a combination of all those things: social responsibility together with ensuring that there is revenue for the Alberta lottery fund and for the good work that it does.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Community Initiatives Program

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The community initiatives program has been returning lottery dollars to community groups and not-for-profit organizations, including volunteer organizations, to support their worthwhile endeavours in the community. Since we are coming to the end of the first year of the program and recently we've heard a lot of concerns about parents fund-raising for core items in schools, could the Minister of Gaming provide me with an update on how the program is doing since its introduction last June?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a nice tie-in to the questions asked by the last member because this is a very good example of the good work that is done as a result of Alberta lottery dollars. The community initiatives program was brought in and announced last June. It's a $30 million per year program. I'm pleased to say that the feedback from volunteer groups who have availed themselves of this program is extremely positive. The year ends at the end of this month, March 31. At this point in time there are approximately 900 applications which have been processed. They're continuing to work on this, and by the end of the month we anticipate that well over a thousand will have been processed.

As far as the type of applications, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that they are varied, with recreational initiatives receiving, according to my most recent data, about 25 percent of the money; social service initiatives, another 25 percent; cultural initiatives, about 20 percent; and the balance would include community service, education, heritage, environment, and health. The education initiatives which were funded at the time of this information, which is now dated, were approximately 5 percent.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister: can the minister explain his department's policy relative to funding core items with lottery dollars?

Mr. Stevens: The Ministry of Gaming has had in place since 1996 a gaming proceeds policy, and as it relates to educational funding, I can tell you that we take that seriously. We have a list of approximately 16 specific paragraphs that deal with that that outline in detail what is and what cannot be funded. For example, funding includes resource materials but not textbooks. The Gaming ministry is also guided by the Alberta School Boards Association's policies. Those are in place, and I can advise that any funding that is done by this ministry is in compliance with those guidelines.

I think it might be of note to the members here that one year ago my ministry was FOIPed by the Liberals opposite. It's not something that they've talked about in this House, because it's good news. They wanted to get information on 20 schools throughout the province regarding the use of casino event proceeds. A year ago they were asking the same question with respect to the use of proceeds and the funding of textbooks and things of this nature. The fact of the matter is that I can advise that you haven't heard about it because all 20 of those schools were utilizing the proceeds in accordance with the AGLC policy.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development wishes to supplement an answer?

Mr. Norris: Yes. Thank you for the opportunity, Mr. Speaker. I would like to clarify one of the stats that I used earlier in explaining the outstanding growth that we're experiencing in Alberta. I believe I said that the unemployment rate was the highest in Alberta. What I actually meant to say, clearly, is that the employment rate is the fastest growing in Canada.* That was obvious.

I would like to just offer quickly, Mr. Speaker, for clarification that in the year 2001 employment rose by 2.8 percent and in '02 rose by 2.6 percent, creating some 45,000 new jobs. I regret that that came out incorrectly and would like to reiterate that it is employment that is on the rise, not unemployment.

The Speaker: As per our rules, hon. members, when an hon. minister of the Crown supplements an answer, there's an opportunity given to the original member who first posed the question. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, if you wish. I believe it was your exchange.

Mr. MacDonald: No, thank you, at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Peace Rally

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate more than 18,000 Albertans who took the time last Saturday to raise their voices on behalf of innocent people halfway around the world. Men, women, and children from all walks of life exercised the freedoms they enjoy in Canada and marched to the Alberta Legislature from city hall in support of peace in one of the largest protests the Alberta capital has ever seen. The Edmonton Coalition against War and Racism did a fantastic job of organizing the peace rally, and the crowd is to be commended for exercising its right to peaceful protest.

Congratulations to all those Albertans who know that they can make a difference with their words and their actions. All they asked was for this government to give peace a chance.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Beaupre Community Hall

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday I had the opportunity to witness Alberta community spirit at its best as I participated in the grand opening of the new Beaupre Community Hall just west of Cochrane. It was only a year and a half ago that fire destroyed Beaupre's treasured old hall at the hands of arsonists.

Local residents were shocked and saddened and mourned the loss of a facility that held decades of fond memories for them, but it was not long before a group of volunteers set their sights on a new and improved hall and through determination proved adversities can be and will be overcome when a community unites. Local municipalities, businesses, and individuals gave generously, and today we have a beautiful multipurpose, very impressive community building that everyone can be proud of. On Saturday friends and neighbours young and old filled the hall to reminisce and celebrate, and what a celebration it was.

Please join me in congratulating the Beaupre Community Association, their dedicated members, and all who contributed to this wonderful facility.

Thank you.

Deanna Thompson

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to stand in this Assembly and recognize a great young Albertan. On October 12, 2002, Deanna Thompson was vacationing in Bali with friends when tragedy struck in a nightclub right across the street from Deanna's hotel. Fortunately for her she was still in her hotel and not in the nightclub, where she was supposed to meet friends. The blast from the explosion shattered windows in her hotel, knocking her and her friend to the floor.

In the chaotic situation that ensued, Deanna went outside, where she encountered a young lady suffering from burns to her upper body and in severe pain. She immediately assisted in helping this young lady with another person and got this person to medical assistance. Right after that, Deanna returned to the scene to further assist with more than 30 other victims with no thought of risk or injury to herself. Mr. Speaker, Deanna has since learned that one of her friends from Hungary was in that nightclub that night and did not survive the injuries of this horrible terrorist attack.

This morning Deanna received the M.G. Griffiths plaque, which is the highest bravery award presented by the Royal Life Saving Society of Canada. On behalf of all Albertans I'd like to congratulate Deanna on the receipt of this award and say: we are all very proud of you for what you've done.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Spring into Spring Extravaganza

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to share with this Assembly a very positive and exciting education example, one that has been occurring in my constituency of Calgary-West for many years. Last Monday evening the Ernest Manning high school music department presented the ninth annual Spring into Spring extravaganza at Calgary's large, prestigious Jack Singer Concert Hall with special guest performers from two feeder junior high schools, Vincent Massey and A.E. Cross.

The wonderful performance for family and many friends demonstrated the excellent achievement of the music programs at these schools, achievement attained only through hours and hours of hard work, team work, and the support of many who value the fine arts. The calibre and versatility of the student musicians, Mr. Speaker, was truly impressive. The respect and camaraderie for their music teachers was also very obvious, as was their love for music.

Recognition must also be given to the talented and dedicated music teachers and conductors: Kevin Willms and Dwayne Engh, music directors at Ernest Manning high school; Ken Thackry, music director at Vincent Massey junior high school; and Paul Brown, director of music at A.E. Cross junior high school.

To the Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra: too bad you missed the massed band finale of 285 musicians. It was absolutely thrilling.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Esso Women's National Hockey Championship

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this moment to recognize some extraordinary Albertans who took part in the 2003 Esso Women's National Hockey Championship that took place March 12 to 16 in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. Team Alberta captured the coveted Abby Hoffman cup in front of over 1,100 fans at Saskatchewan Place, and Alberta finished the tournament with a perfect record of six wins and zero losses, outscoring their opponents 46 to 10.

Mr. Speaker, the teamwork and determination of these extraordinary women from Team Alberta was a testament to Alberta's contribution to keeping our national sport at the top of its game both nationally and here at home.

Along with capturing the gold, Danielle Goyette was awarded MVP for the tournament and Colleen Sostorics received the award for top defenceman. The other gold medal winners included Amanda Tapp, Danielle Aycarst, Delaney Collins, Blythe Wurm, Kayley Hall, Jenna Barber, Trina Rathgeber, Cassie Campbell, Becky Klein-Swormink, Meaghan Mikkelson, Dana Antal, Kerri Wallace, Corinne Swirsky, Jenel Bode, Kelly Bechard, Samantha Holmes, Karen Medhurst, and Brittony Chartier.

Mr. Speaker, these amazing athletes and their staff have brought Alberta hockey spirit to the national level, and on behalf of all members and all Albertans I'd like to send my congratulations to them.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

2:50 Victoria School of Performing and Visual Arts

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I recognize the work of the Edmonton public school board in ensuring that the inner city will continue to have a high-quality high school.

In the early 1980s the board was faced with building a new centre for education. Consultants recommended that it be built on one of four possible sites: the old administration building property, McNally high school, Alex Taylor, or attached to Victoria high school. The view that attaching the building to Victoria high school would ensure a viable high school in the inner city convinced the board. Then minister of education David King went out of his way to assist the board with this project. Twenty years later that decision has proven sound, and Victoria has grown beyond expectations to become a K to 12, world-class fine arts school.

Today the public board is maintaining that commitment to the inner city. Faced with a host of other building demands, the board has made replacing the dated Victoria a top priority. A brand-new building to house that world-class school in the heart of the city will soon be a reality. Congratulations, trustees.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With honour I rise to recognize the sacrifices made by those who fight for us. Having the advantage of being born and raised in Vietnam during the period of the 30-year-long war, I can say that my family and many others fought for freedom and democracy locally and globally. The local repressive regime made it hard and impossible without the help from outsiders to share the same humanity ideals.

As the wars are going on in Afghanistan and Iraq, I feel strongly for the fighting men and women on the front lines, far away from their homelands. I see those fighters as my family members who bravely stand up for me and many others. They help sustain our quality of life, freedoms, and democracy we enjoy locally and globally. They are not fighting against a people, a nation, or a faith. They are making their ultimate sacrifices for our freedom and fighting against the regimes of tyranny that promote violence and hatred around the world.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we all want to fight against tyranny. Our arguments and hesitation are on how and when and where to fight. Someone has made the tough decision for us. Let's now all work together to the end of the fight in helping the millions to build a life on the same freedom and democracy we enjoy.

In gratitude to the freedom fighters I remain.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, thank you. Today four members went over the one-minute rule mark, and I really don't want us to arrive at a situation one day where people are going to stand up on points of order and what have you because people have gone a few seconds beyond. So could I just ask again to try and find the ability with one's articulation to stay within the one-minute rule.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the working poor in Alberta to present a petition signed by 54 Calgarians. These Albertans are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to immediately raise the minimum wage to $8.50 per hour and index it to the cost of living.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 33 Insurance Amendment Act, 2003

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 33, the Insurance Amendment Act, 2003.

The proposed bill contains two amendments to the Insurance Act that will ensure that awards resulting from an automobile accident return an individual to the same financial position they existed in before the accident occurred.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 33 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Bill 34 Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 34, the Livestock Industry Diversification Amendment Act, 2003.

The intent of this bill is to make it easier for Alberta's diversified livestock industry to establish a domestic market.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 34 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

Bill 35 Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 35, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2003.

The amendments in this bill will strengthen the controls regarding the purchase and sales of tax-exempt tobacco at duty-free stores, over the Internet, and through the Alberta Indian tax exemption program. These changes will help level the playing field for all businesses that sell tobacco. It also further discourages smoking, making Alberta a healthier province in which to live.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 35 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

Bill 212 Alberta Personal Income Tax (Education Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 212, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Education Tax Credit) Amendment Act, 2003.

This bill will amend the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act by introducing a nonrefundable tax credit to help parents pay for independent school tuition and also extracurricular tutoring programs. The intent of Bill 212 is to provide educational choice to families in Alberta who do not have the financial resources to pay for independent school education. It would also partially cover the cost of extracurricular tutoring and extra special-needs schooling.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 212 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Bill 213 Canada Pension Plan Opting Out Act

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Canada Pension Plan Opting Out Act.

This bill allows Alberta to create an Alberta pension plan that would benefit all Albertans better by serving demographics and Albertans' needs.

[Motion carried; Bill 213 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Bill 214
Matrimonial Property (Division of Property on Death) Amendment Act, 2003

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave this afternoon to introduce a bill being the Matrimonial Property (Division of Property on Death) Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, this act would amend the Matrimonial Property Act to ensure that the surviving spouse of a marriage terminated by the death of the other spouse has equivalent rights on the division of matrimonial property to a spouse in a marriage terminated by divorce.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 214 read a first time]

Alberta Commission on the Status of Men Act

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce Bill 219, the Alberta Commission on the Status of Men Act, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Bill 219 would establish a commission on the status of men to address issues of cultural bias, stereotyping, cultural discrimination, men's health, and family relations. For example, fatherlessness is considered by growing numbers of social thinkers in North America to be North America's foremost social problem. Studies have revealed a strong link between fathers' absence and substance abuse, juvenile delinquency, teen pregnancy, and educational failure. I understand that there are economic and social issues that still exist between men and women; however, I also believe that we are in danger of fueling these problems unless urgent health and social issues related to men are addressed. A commission on the status of men is a step in the right direction.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 219 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter from Mrs. Elizabeth Anne Hayward, a proud grandmother and public education system advocate. It's a three-page letter very carefully written, but her message is very clear when she says:

When you cut to the chase, nothing in our society is as important as an excellent public educational system and an excellent public health care system. Both deserve, and will always require, our biggest dollars. We are not a poor province . . . Let's get with it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: That's a good idea.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's from Dennis Floate of Calgary, and he is urging the provincial government to "withdraw its draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area" in Kananaskis.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'd table the required number of copies of a document entitled Key Messages, a presentation made at the zone 23 MLA meeting on March 21, 2003, which focuses on school buildings, investing in the future, and the governance of public education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first one is signatures from a petition. This brings the total to over 5,000. These are residents of Red Deer, Hinton, DeBolt, Barons, Lethbridge, and Camrose, to name a few. These citizens signed this petition: "We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to reinstate natural-gas rebates immediately." This petition can be accessed at altaliberals.ab.ca.

The second petition I have is a letter dated February 23 from Shirley Clarke, who is a parent of some children who attend Kenilworth junior high. This letter outlines her concern with funding to our public education system.

The next letter that I have is also from a parent of a grade 7 student at Kenilworth junior high. It's Nadia A. Munarolo-Kurjata, and she is expressing concern about the education crisis and how it can be alleviated by reducing the size of the government and putting valuable teachers first.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The other day, I think during question period, a comment was raised with respect to the number of times in which time allocation has been used by the federal government. I'd like to table for the records of the House today a document which shows that time allocation has been used 71 times and closure used a further nine times by the Liberal government since its election.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The correspondence on education keeps rolling into my office. I have a series of postcards today addressed – well, this one's addressed to me. On the back is a child's drawing. "Edmonton Elementary attempts to smash the world record for number of Grade One Students in the classroom." It shows kids stacked up on shelves.

The next one, from a different constituency but addressed to me, is a report card for the provincial government. It grades under listening a grade of F. It says, "Easily distracted, only able to listen in an election year."

Another report card, this one from S. Dobrotsky. This postcard subject: education funding grade to the provincial government, F. Comment: "Seems to have an unrealistic expectation of how far a dollar can be stretched."

The next postcard is from Val West in Edmonton, saying, "Wanted: A government that listens and cares, previous applicants need not apply." So it continues.

This is one from Carla Spinola expressing concern that government has refused to fund the 8 percent for the teachers' salary allowance.

One from Mario Nascimento.

Another one, saying, "Fully Funded High Quality Public Education Now" from Stacey Pelechaty.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have three tablings today. The first is from Barbara Toombs, and she goes on to say, "I heard on the news today that Ralph Klein is requesting the Alberta MLAs to . . ."

The Speaker: Okay, okay, okay. Please sit down. Six times last week I said that you can't use names in this Assembly. Six times at least I said it. We're going to start again this Monday. You don't use names in this Assembly.

Mr. Bonner: She goes on to say that on the news today she heard that the Premier is requesting "the Alberta MLA's to draft a document in the name of and on the behalf of Albertans supporting the US attack on Iraq," and she goes on to say, "I would like to make it clear that I do not want it to be in my name or on my behalf."

My second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate number of copies of a letter to me from the mayor of Edmonton, and he goes on to say:

I am writing to share with you my disappointment with the Province's decision not to sign the Vision, Principle and Fiscal Framework developed and approved by the Minister's Council. This document represented a milestone in provincial/municipal relations and clearly establishing Alberta as leaders nationally in acknowledging the critical need to address the financial crisis facing Canadian municipalities.

The third is a document which indicates that in a 120-page ruling issued today, Judge Allen Schwartz of the US Federal District Court, Southern District of New York, has thrown out Talisman Energy's motion to dismiss the suit brought against them on behalf of southern Sudanese plaintiffs.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a number of letters today in connection with the situation in the Middle East. First of all, I'm tabling a letter from Mr. Charles B. Davison dated March 18 addressed to the Prime Minister and copied to the Premier of Alberta. Mr. Davison writes that the Premier does not speak for all Albertans as Albertans are clearly against the war in Iraq and Canadian involvement in this endeavour.

The second is a letter to the Premier signed by 139 individuals, Mr. Speaker, who state their objection "to your action, without even a debate in the Provincial Legislature, of sending a letter of support to the United States Ambassador."

I have an e-mail here addressed to the Premier opposing any motion in the Legislature expressing support for the policies of the Bush administration on Iraq.

I have an e-mail addressed to the Premier acknowledging his right to his opinions and his right to speak out on provincial matters while chiding him for overstepping his bounds by writing directly to the American ambassador.

I have another e-mail addressed to me expressing concern that the Premier's statement about the so-called war on terrorism and tyranny will only serve to increase terrorism and tyranny throughout the world.

I have an e-mail here, Mr. Speaker, addressed to me, pointing out that the Premier has no right to send letters to foreign officials on behalf of Albertans, particularly if such a letter supports an illegal war.

I only have a few more, Mr. Speaker. I have an e-mail from a constituent who opposes the war and does not know any Albertans or Americans who do support the war.

I have an e-mail addressed to the hon. Member for Drumheller-Chinook opposing the legitimacy of any motion tabled in the Legislature supporting the war on Iraq.

An e-mail addressed to the Premier opposing any motion in the Assembly which supports the war on Iraq.

An e-mail to the Premier opposing the U.S. attack on Iraq.

I have a letter addressed to the Premier. The writer is appalled at the notion that the Alberta government would table a motion in the Legislature supporting an illegal war.

Two more, Mr. Speaker. I have an e-mail addressed to the Premier acknowledging his right as a Canadian to express his views but reprimanding him for claiming he represents all Albertans and for stepping outside his jurisdictional authority.

Lastly, I have an e-mail addressed to the Premier opposing any declaration by the Alberta government that supports the illegal military intervention in Iraq by the United States and Great Britain.

The Speaker: Were there any points of order today that the chair may have missed?

Bill 201

Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem)
Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise in the Assembly this afternoon to move third reading of Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned before, Festuca scabrella, known as rough fescue, is a long-lived perennial bunchgrass with deep fibrous roots which tap soil nutrients and bind soil particles. It's self-curing, nutritious, a native grass that is a major component of the rough fescue grasslands which makes excellent winter grazing not only for livestock but, of course, for wild animals as well, like deer and elk. Its relatively high protein content provides forage, then, for livestock as well as wildlife, and the deep roots facilitate water penetration and act as a water retention factor in the watershed, particularly on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains. A tussock of rough fescue has a life span of well over a hundred years, and consequently it produces only a few seeds each year with the occasional heavier seed sets every few years.

With the passage of Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta Act would be amended further to include rough fescue, designating it as our provincial grass. Provincial emblems, Mr. Speaker, are important as they reflect a province's history, its biodiversity and nature, and the nature of this province. Emblems such as this portray who we as Albertans are. Designating rough fescue as our provincial grass would recognize it as an official symbol of our prairie heritage. Provincial emblems are selected because they are symbolic of the province's history, nature, or culture, past or present.

You know, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's provincial tree is the lodgepole pine. This tree was used extensively in the early 1900s to construct railway ties. However, today its role has expanded, and it is a significant contributor to Alberta's forestry industry as the lodgepole pine is processed into many lumber products such as poles, posts, plywood, and mine timbers.

Another official emblem is the great horned owl, which Alberta adopted as its provincial bird in May of 1977. This bird was the first choice of Alberta's schoolchildren, and it proudly reflects the concerns of Albertans for the management, conservation, and preservation of our province's wildlife.

All of Alberta's emblems, from the wild rose to the bighorn sheep to the bull trout, reflect symbolic meaning and value to our province. Amending the Emblems of Alberta Act would serve to enhance the legislation through inclusion of another significant emblem.

Mr. Speaker, it has been affirmed before in this House that rough fescue is a dominant native grass on the Alberta prairie and foothills. While I acknowledge that it is only found in the southern two-thirds of the province, some other provincial emblems are not as widespread throughout the province. The lodgepole pine, for instance, does not grow in many areas of the province, nor will you find bighorn sheep or petrified wood present all across the province of Alberta. Nevertheless, they are still important emblems of Alberta. Furthermore, Alberta is the only jurisdiction in North America that contains all three species, or varieties, of the rough fescue complex. This native vegetation illustrates the biodiversity of the province from the prairies to the foothills and to the mountains.

Native grasses which have been designated by other jurisdictions have been chosen because they portray the history and culture of those regions and therefore have a specific meaning and value for each of those regions. The selection of rough fescue is consistent with Alberta's other emblems. The prairie landscape is part of our cultural history and has a significant value to our Alberta identity.

The prairie landscape may have appeared harsh to the early settlers. Many pioneers came to the west because the price of land was reasonable and there was an opportunity to fulfill their hopes of building a better life for their families in a land that promised prosperity as well as religious and political freedom. These settlers saw the Alberta prairie as a land of opportunity, a wilderness frontier to be shaped into a new home. The treeless prairies soon became dotted with farms and settlements. It took men and women of courage and perseverance to transfer this land to fertile fields. These pioneers lived off the land and depended on the native grasslands.

Before the opening of the west to settlement and after the transfer of the Hudson's Bay territory in the northwest to the Dominion of Canada, there developed a unique ranching life on prairie and foothills grasslands on the open range of Alberta. Generations of Alberta ranchers have acquired strong, emotional ties to the land and to the animals which depend on native grasslands. They feel a deep sense of stewardship of the land. Individuals who depend on the land for their livelihood inevitably recognize and acknowledge the advantages and values of living in concurrence rather than in conflict with the land and will adhere toward its preservation and its conservation.

Grasslands in general, Mr. Speaker, have a great spiritual value for our aboriginal people. Such people as the Stoney, Sarcee, Blackfoot, Blood, Peigan, and Plains Cree hold native grasses as being significant to their prairie cultural heritage, and they honour their close connection to the land.

Mr. Speaker, rough fescue along with other native grasses are of biological and scientific interest in that the prairie is one of the major ecosystems in North America. Native grasslands in our province are rich in biodiversity. Natural processes have altered the landscape over thousands of years. The prairie was influenced primarily by aridity, fire, floods, drought, and the impact of herds of large herbivores like the buffalo. The prairie ecosystem has survived despite significant pressures and change.

Alberta's native grasslands provide valuable forage for our livestock. When prairie grasslands are used as rangeland for cattle, money gets contributed to the Alberta economy. The livestock industry is an important part of our province's economy. Alberta, as you know, is the largest beef-producing province in Canada. We have over 40 percent of the national beef cattle herd. In 2001 this sector contributed an estimated $5 billion in farm cash receipts to our economy. Native grasslands have contributed to the economic value of the province. Designating rough fescue as our official grass would acknowledge its importance to farmers and ranchers and its economic significance, and it would acknowledge the historic and cultural significance of the First Nations people of the plains.

Mr. Speaker, it is evident that native grasses are an important symbol to Albertans. The deep roots of rough fescue portray a strong, stable grass, thus reflecting our western heritage and the strong secure people that built our province along with those that support and contribute to its prosperity today.

Through the passage of Bill 201, existing legislation would be amended to include another provincial emblem. Rough fescue would be designated as our official grass and would serve as another provincial symbol reflecting our heritage, celebrating our culture, and valuing our natural history. I urge you to strongly support and encourage all of my colleagues to vote in favour of third reading of Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a privilege to rise today to speak in support of Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. Again in third reading I commend the Member for Highwood for bringing forth this proposed amendment. Many things have been said about this grass and its importance to Alberta, and I would just like to offer a few comments on a practical basis as one who has worked in the livestock industry for many years and has seen the benefits of this grass to the agricultural industry.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it's important to recognize history and factors that have made a difference to the diversification and progress of agriculture in Alberta. I think it's important to recognize the importance of agriculture in Alberta. Much has been said the past few days in our debate about competition, and I would like to point out to the members of the Assembly that agriculture, to my knowledge, is one of the few, if not the only, industries in the world that basically operates under what is defined by economists as perfect competition. That basically says that no one seller or buyer could affect the market. Because of this competition and because of the nature of the agricultural industry we in Canada enjoy access to the best food in the world at a very reasonable price. If you look at it, we don't work very many days as Canadians or as Albertans to buy the food that we eat. So I think agriculture has done a great job in feeding Canadians and in feeding the North American economy, really.

Rough fescue as a grass has certainly had an impact on the agricultural industry and upon its success. From the point of view of the ranching community and their use of rough fescue, one has to look at the historical benefits of this grass. Many of the early settlers were attracted to this province because of good grass and lots of good grazing. So they moved their cattle herds here from other places to take advantage of grasses such as rough fescue.

Rough fescue has the advantage of being able to cure on the stem and remain palatable and maintain its nutrition throughout the year. Some of the tame grasses such as alfalfa and timothy do not have that advantage. They lose their palatability over the winter and are not good grazing grasses, whereas rough fescue is a grass that cures on the stem, and consequently it can be utilized by ranchers throughout the year. The advantage to this, Mr. Speaker, is that it allows the ranching community to minimize their costs. It's certainly a lot more efficient to graze animals over the winter as long as possible as compared to bringing in the cattle or the livestock and feeding them hay. Rough fescue has the advantage that its protein levels are pretty well good enough to maintain the basic beef cow for most of the year with perhaps a little bit of protein and vitamin supplement during parts of the year as the mature cow approaches the calving season. But for most of the year this grass can maintain a cow and even provide hay. If ranchers choose to cut the grass for hay, it certainly will work also as hay. So when you look at the advantage of the grass with a view to minimizing costs and allowing cattle producers to survive the cattle cycles, the high prices and low prices, certainly it's important for them to be able to minimize expenses, and this grass has done a good job of allowing them to do that.

So, Mr. Speaker, when you consider the nutritional value of this grass, its ability to maintain itself throughout the year and cure on the stem, and when you consider what the livestock industry is in Alberta today and how it has developed, part of its development has been due to a grass like rough fescue, and certainly I think it deserves to be historically preserved as an emblem of Alberta. I would urge all members in this Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to enter into the debate again on Bill 201 in third reading. I supported this bill in second reading, and I'm pleased to do so again today. This bill will make rough fescue Alberta's provincial grass. Because the grass in its three forms covers the majority of our province and because of its special characteristics as well as its very positive environmental impact, I believe rough fescue should be named Alberta's official grass.

I'd like to make some comments on what rough fescue has done in the past. It has played a very significant role in helping those who first began farming in our province, and it continues to do so today. Actually, it's one of the primary grasses that sustain much of our wildlife, such as deer, elk, antelope, and, in days gone by, the bison. Therefore, I believe it contributes to our hunting and our outfitting industries as well as tourism. I believe it's also responsible for future generations of farmers here in Alberta. Recognizing the benefits that rough fescue grasslands have had on our province and by naming it our provincial grass, we'll be helping preserve it for the future generations of Alberta farmers. Also, by doing so, we will be making a commitment to preserve farming as an integral part of Alberta's future. I believe it's our responsibility as members of this Assembly to protect and preserve and enhance the economic and social framework of this province. It's also our job to celebrate our province's heritage and ensure that knowledge of the history of this province is imparted to future generations and every person in this province. Given that rough fescue has a major role in sustaining our province, I believe it deserves a place among our provincial emblems.

Mr. Speaker, as a farmer myself to me farming is a way of life. However, I do understand that it's also a business. Rough fescue has helped maintain that way of life in this province, and it has also helped maintain our ability as farmers to make a successful living here in Alberta. According to the Prairie Conservation Forum, we're the only province which has all three subspecies of this grass, and they all exist in this province simultaneously today. The forum also states that it would be difficult to figure out how the parkland and the foothills regions of this province could have sustained any agricultural development in days gone by without the existence of this grass. It provided critical winter feed for our pioneers to sustain their livestock numbers and thereby helped to sustain those pioneers who plowed the land and raised livestock. It's also a very efficient retainer of nutrients, which helps to keep our soil in this province some of the most fertile soil around.

Passing Bill 201 may well have the effect of promoting an increase in the amount of rough fescue in our province by raising awareness of its importance. Given the economic importance of our rangelands, which generate some $230 million a year – and the Minister of Economic Development would be happy to hear that – this bill would ensure that there's more rough fescue on those rangelands, and that would mean more successful agriculture activities for years to come.

It's been said that farming is our heritage, our present, and our future. Our land here will always be farmed. Unlike oil, which is a limited, unrenovable resource, our land is a renewable resource. In order for that farming to continue in the future, we need to ensure that the natural nutrients are renewed. Rough fescue has been identified as one of those key ingredients to keep renewing soil, and it's up to us today to ensure that rough fescue is there for future generations and to educate those that are in the farming industry on the role that rough fescue has played in our past and what value it has for future generations. By passing Bill 201, we'll be taking one more step in protecting rough fescue for future generations, and I'd like to take this opportunity to urge all members of this Assembly to support this bill.

I will be supporting this bill, Mr. Speaker, and in closing, I'd like to ask all members to recognize the work and the foresight put into this by the hon. Member for Highwood and to support this bill as well.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to offer my comments on Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to commend my colleague from Highwood for bringing forward this bill, that would designate rough fescue as the official grass of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, over the past number of years a growing number of Albertans have urged this government to recognize the role that rough fescue has had and continues to have in the socioeconomic development of our province. At no time was this more apparent than in April of 2002 when the Alberta conservation forum counted the votes that Albertans had cast to select what grass species would best serve as a symbol of our unique western heritage and identity. In this election Albertans had choices. In addition to rough fescue, four other shortlisted species were identified – June grass, blue grama grass, western wheat grass, and green needlegrass – but instead they selected rough fescue, a grass famous for its resilience, beauty, and agricultural value. Today this Assembly has the opportunity to tell the people of this province that they have heard their choice and that as their representatives in this House we are going to do something about it.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain why so many Albertans hold rough fescue in such high regard and how this valuable grass has helped shape who we as Albertans are today. Of all the grasses that occur naturally in Alberta, rough fescue has arguably played the most significant role in the history and the development of our province.

An Hon. Member: Who would argue that?

Mr. Broda: I don't know.

In the many years before European settlement rough fescue was the crucial ingredient which helped shape the identity and the traditional lifestyles of many of Alberta's native peoples. The same fescue plant that continues to carpet the grasslands and foothills of southwestern Alberta today also served as the ever important forage for herds of big game species including bighorn sheep, mule deer, elk, bison, and buffalo. Due to its ability to thrive and survive the cold winter conditions, rough fescue was the primary source of food for these animals throughout the year. Moreover, the various tribes of native people developed a very close relationship with this rich and seemingly inexhaustible source of forage as it ensured that the herds of game would remain sufficiently plentiful to allow hunting. It can be said that for the tribes that inhabited and hunted on the plains of southwestern Alberta, rough fescue was an essential agent of life which enabled their culture and society to thrive.

However, Mr. Speaker, not just native people recognized the value of rough fescue. Early European settlers, many of whom fled their former homelands as a result of war, instability, impoverishment, and persecution, came to the prairies in search of a better life. The vast majority of them saw farming as a way to earn money, rebuild their lives, and achieve prosperity, just as the native people before them had done. In time they, too, came to appreciate the significant role that rough fescue played in the life cycle of the prairies.

Just as wildlife appreciated rough fescue, the grass also proved to be an ideal source of forage for livestock. High in nutrients and resilient to erratic weather conditions, rough fescue became a mainstay in the diet of a number of our domesticated animals. The native peoples of Alberta and the early settlers both owe their experience of survival and welfare to this tall, exquisite, and abundant grass.

In a way, Mr. Speaker, it can be said that rough fescue was a factor that contributed indirectly to the opening of the western frontier. Like the grass that they came to depend upon, these early Albertans were people of true grit and determination. As rough fescue had to adapt in order to survive in a tough prairie environment, these early pioneers also had to adapt to life in a new and vastly different land. However, they did not only adapt to life on the prairie, but through hard work and perseverance they laid down the foundation for the future economic success and prosperity which we are able to enjoy today. As it did in the past, rough fescue continues to play a significant role in Alberta's agricultural production. It remains a reliable source of high nutritional value for a number of domesticated animals.

Mr. Speaker, if Bill 201 is not passed, we will lose a terrific opportunity to increase awareness and understanding of the significance that rough fescue and other native grasses have had in shaping the Alberta we have today.

When the issue of the Kyoto protocol came up last year, this government argued that Alberta would be unfairly affected by the accord's carbon credit clauses. We felt that it was unfair to impose such a plan on our province, considering that Alberta has a very large number of naturally occurring carbon sinks. Rough fescue serves as one of our province's biggest carbon sinks. These grasslands are some of Alberta's leading conductors of carbon dioxide, a cycle in which plants take in carbon dioxide and in turn produce oxygen. Rough fescue, it has been proven, is particularly good in accomplishing this task and as a result has contributed greatly to keeping our environment clean. Mr. Speaker, if this province is serious about reducing the amount of the deadly greenhouse gases within our atmosphere, then we must take steps to protect rough fescue and Alberta's native grasslands. If we lost the prairies, we would not only compromise our ability to improve the state of our environment, but we would also compromise the quality of life for future generations of Albertans.

Apart from this environmental quality, rough fescue also remains the main food source for much of our wildlife, as indicated earlier. Unfortunately, many of these species are currently at risk of becoming endangered or, worse, extinct as a result of the loss of their natural habitat. According to the Prairie Conservation Forum 73 percent of the endangered animal species that live in Alberta currently depend on the Alberta grasslands for food. When combined with the fact that their natural habitat is shrinking, the survival of these species looks very grim. Mr. Speaker, if this province has any hope of replenishing the already depleting stocks of our endangered wildlife, we need to start protecting their natural habitat. This means protecting rough fescue.

I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that designating rough fescue as Alberta's provincial grass will not only help educate Albertans about the importance of native grasses to our wildlife and environment, but it will also raise awareness of the need to sustain and preserve Alberta's native grasslands. Rough fescue has played and will continue to play a significant role in the development of our province if only we will let it do so. It is part of our identity, our culture, and our heritage. I urge all my colleagues to give it the recognition that it deserves by supporting Bill 201.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to have an opportunity to discuss Bill 201 at this time. I'd like to use the time that's available to me this afternoon to discuss three issues. First of all, the issue of provincial emblems: why is it appropriate, and why do we as a Legislature even spend our time dealing with issues such as provincial emblems? Secondly, I'd like to talk about: why would we choose to have a grass as a provincial emblem? Then, obviously and most important to this bill, why should we choose rough fescue as a grass? With your indulgence let me start down that path.

First of all, provincial emblems, I think, are something that we do with some reticence from the perspective that once we recognize something as a provincial emblem, we want to ensure that it represents the province and the people of Alberta in a significant way, and we don't think it would be appropriate for us to be dealing with 20 different bills recognizing provincial emblems at every session of the Legislature. So it is of some importance, and we recognize as a Legislature that from time to time members come forward and ask their colleagues in the Legislature to recognize and designate something as a provincial emblem. We do that for a number of reasons. Probably the most important reason, Mr. Speaker, is because we have pride in Alberta. We are very proud of the fact that Alberta is a unique place, and as such we want to have something that we can show as something that we have a lot of pride in.

For that reason one of the first provincial emblems that was designated, as you know, was a flag, and like all groups of people we have a lot of respect for that flag. From time to time there were other things added to that repertoire, so over the years we've added emblems such as an official tree. We've talked about an official trout. We've talked about a myriad of different things but always keeping in mind that they should be significant and that they should reflect Alberta's pride.

The second thing – and I think it probably is as important, particularly when we talk about the designation of natural wildlife and flora and fauna – is the issue of conservation and preservation. I think that it is absolutely critical that as we recognize something such as rough fescue, we keep in mind the natural habitat in this province. As we have a tremendous amount of economic activity and we have an explosion in population, an explosion in agriculture, an explosion in a number of areas, it has the tendency to put some stress on some of the natural ecosystems. By designating rough fescue as a provincial emblem, I think that that encourages an opportunity for us as legislators to keep in mind the importance of our natural spaces and also I think, probably, for Albertans to keep in mind the importance of natural space.

Finally, probably another reason why we choose to implement a provincial emblem program is from an educational perspective, and, Mr. Speaker, I know that you've had some experience in the classroom, and you know that oftentimes hands-on experience is the easiest way to teach someone and for people to remember. So whether we're talking about tourists or talking about children in our classrooms, if we want them to remember what Alberta is about, what things there are that we should be thinking about in Alberta, one of the most obvious things is to teach people about the provincial emblems. If you look at a jurisdiction and you look at their provincial emblems or their state emblems, you get a bit of an idea in sort of a microscopic form how the people in that jurisdiction and that vicinity think.

So for all of those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think it's absolutely appropriate and probably of some urgency that we maintain a program of dealing with and approving provincial emblems here in the Legislature of Alberta.

The next thing I said that I would talk about, Mr. Speaker, is: why grass? Why would we choose to have as a provincial emblem grass? We talked about trees. We talked about fish. We talked about a whole number of other areas that have already been designated, and the hon. member now is proposing that we designate a grass. Well, I'll tell you. It again gets back to what some other members have discussed in this Legislature, the fact that we, particularly in the non northern areas of the province, let's say, live the lifestyle and the history of a prairie people. Nothing can be more emblematic of what life on the prairies is than the waving grass.

I had an opportunity a couple of years ago – as a matter of fact, I'm hoping to have another opportunity this summer – to participate in a trail ride across Canadian Forces Base Suffield, which is one of the last areas where anyone can go and actually experience what it was like to be a pioneer at the turn of the century, because that's one of the few areas left in this province where you can literally stand on the prairie and for 360 degrees in every direction see nothing but waving grass, no fences, no telephone poles. There's nothing but the natural environment the way our pioneers saw it when they came here. As a matter of fact, as an aside, to say the least, I'm hoping to encourage other members to come with me on a trail ride across the base this summer, and other members will have a chance to experience that. But, Mr. Speaker, if you have had a chance to experience that, you can understand the importance of grass, particularly as it was in the early days in our history and as it is today, as the mainstay in our livestock industry in southern Alberta.

The other thing that I'd like to mention from a local geographic perspective. The area where I live is known as the Palliser Triangle, and it was an area that when the CPR was developing the land and bringing pioneers forward was designated as an area where you needn't worry about doing much development. No one could live there. Nothing grows there. Well, Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth, because as the first ranchers found out when they arrived in southeastern Alberta and southern Alberta, there is nothing better than the natural grasses in this area to raise livestock on. Literally millions and millions of cattle and other forms of livestock have subsisted almost exclusively on the natural grasses in the area.

So, Mr. Speaker, why name a grass? Well, obviously, we name a grass as a provincial emblem because of its tremendous historic significance in this province and its significance today as an economic driver within our economy

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I come to the final point in my presentation in the debate this afternoon, and that is: why do we name rough fescue of all the myriad of grasses? One just has to walk out onto that prairie and realize that this is not a monolithic type of an experience. There are literally hundreds of different grasses that are growing on the prairie, but rough fescue, as others have talked about in this House, has some significance that I think should be mentioned if we're going to talk about grasses in the Legislature. It has high nutritional value. It has the ability to sustain that nutritional value during the winter and has remained the most important forage on the prairies and in the parkland. Rough fescue has the almost unique ability because of its deep, deep roots to survive in that notorious Palliser Triangle that I talked about. It survives in many other parts of the province, but it does particularly well in the dryer areas in southeastern Alberta because it has such deep roots. In fact, in preparing my notes for this afternoon, I was reading that in many cases the rough fescue root system is actually more extensive below the ground than what you would see above the ground.

Mr. Speaker, I was just getting started, and unfortunately I've run out of time, so I will resume my seat and encourage all members to support this important legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak in third reading to Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the Member for Highwood.

In Alberta we have many different emblems and official symbols, everything from colours to rocks to fish, and I believe that making rough fescue the official grass of Alberta enhances the emblems we already have. Rough fescue is extremely important to the agricultural growing process in the southern part of this province, and it has many different benefits and is a big reason why agriculture has flourished here in Alberta.

As the Member for Redwater has pointed out as well, there can be little doubt that rough fescue possesses a tremendous ability to hold carbon and return nutrients to the soil. The best carbon sinks in the world are found on Alberta's grasslands. The fescue takes CO₂ out of the atmosphere and stores the carbon in its root system, putting carbon nutrients into the soil, which, in turn, benefit our agriculture. Through millennia the grasslands built the organic base and fertility that the major bread baskets of the world, such as Alberta, enjoy today. The soil that is so rich for growing here took many hundreds of years to develop, and our agricultural base could arguably be attributed in part to rough fescue.

When the pioneers arrived in this area and felt the ice and snow of a prairie winter and the hot dry air of a prairie summer, they may have thought of going back to wherever they came from, where there weren't quite the weather extremes as here, but as they began to cultivate the land and grow crops, they found that this land was among the best places to grow food anywhere. So the pioneers stayed and braved the extreme prairie weather, and as agriculture continued to grow so did the territory, and eventually the province of Alberta was born. As the years went by and studies were done on the land, it was discovered that the rough fescue was the main reason for the nutrient-rich soil. This is not to say that rough fescue is the sole reason for the birth of our province, but it surely didn't hinder the progress.

I think the most important point to take from this is that rough fescue has played a significant albeit uncredited role in the lives of Albertans. Rough fescue is an important part of Alberta and lends itself to many qualities that Albertans themselves have. As the Member for Medicine Hat was starting to get into, rough fescue has an extremely large root system. The deep, fibrous roots tap into the underlying soils, drawing nutrients and water while binding soil particles, improving water penetration, and acting as a stabilizing force in watershed quality. The grass keeps surrounding soil moist and healthy and provides stability for growing. The root system is a stabilizer. The fescue could be over 100 years old and have a root system that goes deep into the earth, a system that stabilizes the land.

This is just like an Albertan, Mr. Speaker. An Albertan has deep roots in this province. These roots have been here sometimes for more than a hundred years. The roots of the Albertans stabilized the province. The stronger the roots, the stronger the province. Just like the rough fescue stabilizes the land, the rough Albertan stabilizes the province. This is why I feel that we should make rough fescue an official emblem of the province. The benefits and the symbolism that are found in this grass are much better than in any other grass in Alberta, and since the fescue is so important to our land, it's time we recognized that fact.

There are other benefits that rough fescue has, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned, the grass is extremely good at removing CO₂ from the atmosphere. Over the past couple of years there has been an immense debate raging over the effects of CO₂ in our atmosphere. Many argue that carbon dioxide is the cause of the Earth's temperature warming up. Some argue that there is far too much CO₂ in our atmosphere and that we must change our lifestyles in order to save everything from our ice caps to our forests to our families. Rough fescue has been shown in a number of studies to be an excellent CO₂ eliminator. This is because those deep roots of the fescue store more carbon than any other type of plant, therefore reducing the amount in our atmosphere. We should consider policies that include growing rough fescue as a CO₂ reduction strategy. It could be one way of getting rid of all that nasty CO₂.

Mr. Speaker, the benefits of the rough fescue are immense. It is an important part of our province, and I believe it may have an important role to play in our future. Of course, more studies should be undertaken to show all the benefits that rough fescue holds for mankind, but if we can find a way to use rough fescue to our benefit in fighting greenhouse gases, we should pursue it. I think a first step would be to recognize rough fescue as the official grass of Alberta. It's a small step but one that will be appreciated by Albertans. Hopefully, once this government adopts rough fescue as Alberta's official grass, the benefits will be realized and its importance recognized.

I urge all hon. members to vote in favour of Bill 201. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise in this Assembly today and speak in support of Bill 201, the Emblems of Alberta (Grass Emblem) Amendment Act, 2003. I'd like to commend the MLA for Highwood for bringing this legislation forward for discussion and debate. But I would like to add an interesting perspective, that being that I'm the youngest member in this House, and I'd like to speak a bit on why this bill is important to me.

Dr. Taylor: Do you even know what rough fescue is?

Mr. Griffiths: I know what rough rescue is.

Mr. Speaker, being the youngest person in this House, I have a great fascination with the history of this province. We have a very proud history, a very distinguished history, and I often sat reading books about the history of this province and imagined the settlers coming across the prairie and seeing the open plains and the wide grasslands . . .

An Hon. Member: The rough fescue.

Mr. Griffiths: The rough fescue. That's exactly right.

. . . the open opportunity that was there and presented itself to the entrepreneurs, to the young people who traveled thousands of miles to start new lives. When you read the history of this province, it was not formed and founded by just farmers. It was agriculture. Primarily Alberta was founded by ranchers, people who didn't want to break up the land, but they wanted to leave the grass the way it was, the rough fescue, and run cattle across those open prairies. That's the history of this province, Mr. Speaker. So rough fescue symbolizes our past, a strong past that this province was built on before oil and gas was discovered, before any other investment came.

Rough fescue also symbolizes our future, however. As we tour around this province and look at the wide open grasslands and the opportunities that are there, we see tourism growing in ecotourism and agritourism as people from around the world want to come to Alberta to not only see its great mountains but its vast prairies and open plains. Mr. Speaker, there are even some cultures around the world where people who get off the bus and see those open plains actually have panic attacks. They've never seen so much open space. The first thing that they see is the blue sky and the rough fescue, the grass that spreads across this province. So the rough fescue symbolizes the tourism potential of this province.

An Hon. Member: It symbolizes panic.

Mr. Griffiths: No. It doesn't symbolize panic. It symbolizes the open, beautiful opportunities that this province has afforded us from the beginning of time.

Finally, it's a symbol of freedom because, once again, Mr. Speaker, not only did our forefathers, our ancestors who walked into this province, see the open and wide opportunities and realize that anything was possible, but we see that today. We see that as our farmers struggle through drought, struggle through government intervention sometimes, struggle through a lot of things, but rough fescue is always there. It survives drought, keeps the cattle going . . .

An Hon. Member: My vision is blurring.

Mr. Griffiths: Don't get too teared up.

Mr. Speaker, rough fescue symbolizes our history, the nobility of our past, our failures and our successes, our tragedies and our triumphs. It's a symbol of a strong past, and it's a symbol of a strong future to come.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, all members of this Assembly to support this bill. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood to close the debate.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an emotional afternoon. I'd like to now close third reading on Bill 201, but first I must express my appreciation to all the members who spoke at length in support of naming rough fescue as Alberta's grass emblem.

I also wish to acknowledge the work of our research assistants, in particular Frank Ostlinger, and to pay tribute to Cheryl Bradley of the Alberta Native Plant Council for her support, encouragement, and assistance.

Finally, I wish to recognize the fine work of the Alberta Prairie Conservation Forum, who made this bill possible.

Mr. Speaker, I would now ask all hon. members who feel so inclined to support rough fescue as our newest emblem and request that the question be now called on Bill 201.

The Speaker: Well, it certainly has been an emotional past hour.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a third time]

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 203

School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am delighted today to again have the opportunity to make further comment at committee stage on Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. As I had indicated at a previous time, the bill speaks to a topic that is and should be a top priority for this government and a major concern for citizens of Alberta, and that topic is educating our youth and keeping our children in school.

As we move into the new millennium, it will be intellectual capital that will be the measuring stick for success. How well a country, region, or province maintains high levels of educated individuals in its labour force will determine its future course in this new economy and not necessarily how many resources it has in the ground. It is well acknowledged within the private energy sector that our province's energy basins are mature, meaning that they're here in Alberta but they've reached the height of oil and natural gas supply, a nonrenewable resource.

One resource that has not matured, Mr. Chairman, in a literal and figurative sense, is Alberta's youth, our most prized asset. In light of this, one should consider education to be a completely renewable resource. We in Alberta have moved well beyond the past conventional means of extracting value from the land. We must also strive to improve the value and efficiency of our education system.

The introduction of Bill 203 will hopefully continue this process of streamlining and improving that system. The ramifications of this type of legislation will run deep, Mr. Chairman, and for many years to follow. It's reasonable to believe that a parent who has and was encouraged to finish high school and perhaps even continued on to postsecondary training will in turn encourage their children to do the same thing. This multiplier effect, if you will, creates an exponential increase in educated individuals in generations to come. We have slowly evolved in this direction, and we must continue on this path.

One of the areas that has been identified as a problem area is those who are brought up in an environment where education is not emphasized. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to relay some of my own experiences on the subject and maybe enlighten those in this Assembly on real-life tragedies involving individuals who struggle to survive in this world without the necessary skills of a basic education.

A few weeks ago, just after the introduction of Bill 203 in this Assembly, I had the opportunity to meet and talk with a man who had a very interesting story about life and education. He described to me in heartwrenching detail what life was like for him, a man of limited education. This fellow approached me after he found out that I was sponsoring the bill seeking to increase the mandatory age of school attendance. He had been living in an environment where education was not the top priority for him or of any of the young acquaintances in his area. He worked mainly as a farm labourer, putting in long hours doing heavy manual work such as roguing fields, feeding livestock, or fixing the fence.

Life was not full of much leisure, Mr. Chairman, but he was learning the value of hard work and developing a solid work ethic. While these are very noble and in many ways diminishing traits among our younger generation today, there was one very important aspect of his upbringing that was lacking: a formal education.

At the tender age of 14 years old he decided that he was going to strike out on his own, test the waters outside the circle he grew up in, and move away to the city. He found a job as a mechanic for a small businessman here in Edmonton. Although only 14 he had worked around machinery for quite some time and had taught himself about the trade. Over the years he took on many different jobs involving mechanics. One employer agreed to pay him a wage of $14 an hour. Well, he thought that was a pretty hefty sum, especially since he'd never really earned any money of his own for the work that he had done back home. He thought he had struck it rich, that life wasn't that hard. And why would he need an education anyway?

Well, as he soon discovered, his lack of literacy proved to be a very severe handicap. He was ridiculed at work, taken advantage of by his superiors, and left confused by the everyday responsibilities we all might take for granted. He had no clue what a T-4 was, and only after a warning from the tax department did he even discover that he had a much bigger problem. While all along he had assumed he had agreed to a job that would pay him $14 an hour, he discovered not too long after finally filing his tax return that his boss had only been paying him $9 an hour. Because of his lack of education he was convinced into believing that whatever people told him had to be true. He was unable to properly verify facts because he did not have the proper training, the know-how, or the knowledge. He was determined, though, and after a consultation at a career counseling school here in Edmonton, it was discovered that this man was managing in the city at approximately a grade 3 level of education.

There are several points in this man's tale where one wishes he might be able to go back and do things differently, but as he so adamantly stressed to me, he wished above all else that he could have had the opportunity to finish his schooling and obtain his high school diploma. The difference between this man's story and the story of so many of our youth who leave school before graduation is that they have the opportunity to get a formal education. This young man was never afforded that luxury.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to switch gears just a bit and address the purpose of the school board and to clarify the enforcement required under this Bill 203 amendment to the School Act by the individual school boards. As has been stated, currently under section 15(1) of the School Act attendance boards represent the ultimate authority in resolving truancy issues. Bill 203 proposes that sufficient powers currently exist for school boards to effectively enforce attendance, thereby making attendance boards redundant and obsolete.

Attendance boards were established to provide an alternative to the immediate use of the courts for enforcement of compulsory attendance. It was argued that a judicial approach would be not as effective or appropriate because it focused on sanctions rather than remedies. Well, Mr. Chairman, a school board superintendent or another individual designated by the school board has the power to locate a truant student during school hours, send the student home, and employ judicial backing if needed. When the board believes that all reasonable efforts to enforce the student's attendance have failed, the case can be brought to the attendance board.

As such, in its current form the School Act places only initial enforcement of school attendance with the school boards. Subsequent attendance board involvement represents the ultimate authority. Bill 203 proposes that sufficient powers currently exist for school boards to be effectively able to enforce attendance. Therefore, it's quite logical to surmise that attendance boards will only confuse the responsibility for attendance enforcement by adding another layer of bureaucracy to the problem.

Through this proposal of eliminating attendance boards, Bill 203 will make attendance enforcement more efficient. Truancy is a local problem and if given sufficient authority and responsibility can be solved from a local perspective. As both my rural and urban colleagues here can certainly attest to, this problem with noncompletion of students from high school stretches from the inner cities to the far-out reaches of prairie towns throughout Alberta. Mr. Chairman, I only have to look back at that man in my office who did not have the education to see him through his life, a life that frankly took every bit of courage and perseverance just to survive.

Although this bill, Mr. Chairman, may not be the total answer to solving our high noncompletion rates here in Alberta, it certainly is the correct first step. Although we cannot change the past, we can surely make an impression on the future. I want to thank you and urge all my colleagues to support Bill 203.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a great pleasure for me to rise and speak to Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks and gratitude to the hon. Member for Little Bow for all the hard work that he has done in order to bring forward such an important piece of legislation.

Mr. Chairman, over the past 10 years this government has worked extremely hard in providing the best possible education system that our taxpayers' money can buy. Currently our children and our young people are provided with some of the best teaching facilities and techniques in Canada, and they are taught by some of the most committed and dedicated members of our province's communities. Alberta's high schools and postsecondary institutions, such as the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary, are renowned worldwide for their teaching excellence. As a result, our young people have continued to enjoy great success in their endeavours and are currently considered to be some of the most educated and brightest in the world. This noble feat was accomplished by giving Alberta's youth the opportunity to take advantage of all of the components of our superior education system. This system has time and time again continued to equip them with what is possibly the most important tool one can learn in life: the ability to think critically.

By having the opportunity to acquire this ability, Mr. Chairman, future generations of Albertans will be prepared to face all of the challenges and obstacles that come their way. By giving our children the opportunity to think, we have also not only ensured that they will lead our province and our country into a bright and prosperous future; we have given them the chance to guide the world into a global society which would promote tolerance and democracy.

As good as it may be, Mr. Chairman, our educational system does have a few faults which must be corrected. As my colleagues have mentioned before, section 13(1)(c) of the School Act currently stipulates that Alberta students can drop out of school once they reach the age of 16. Furthermore, section 13(5)(e) stipulates that certain students can be excused from attending school due to various factors including social or religious beliefs.

An Hon. Member: How about laziness?

Mr. Amery: That too.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that in their current form these two clauses of section 13 impede our youth's ability to take advantage of all the wonderful opportunities that our education system has to offer. Allowing Alberta's youth to opt out of school at age 16 or giving their parents the right to take them out of school for whatever social or religious reason compromises their future success. At age 16 Alberta students are in no position to face the modern world. Many of them are not mature enough to make some of life's biggest decisions, let alone the decision to leave school. At age 16 it is their teachers who are in the perfect position to provide them with the necessary knowledge and the understanding of what it takes to succeed in present-day Alberta and the modern world.

The world in which we find ourselves today demands an educated workforce, a workforce that can think, take initiative, and find innovative new solutions to the problems that we face, a workforce that is aware of and is willing to take advantage of the opportunities that are available to them. Mr. Chairman, the days when a person can drop out of school at the age of 16 and still have a bright future are gone. As we all know, a high school diploma today does not hold the same value that it held 20 years ago. Increasingly, our present-day economy demands that our youth pursue a postsecondary education before they can acquire decent jobs.

Mr. Chairman, studies conducted across Canada and the United States over the past decade have continued to show that students who drop out of school at the age of 16 face not only an uncertain academic future but are likely to turn to crime in order to make ends meet. According to one study conducted in the state of Nebraska, a common trait among 82 percent of the prison population was that they were all high school dropouts. The same study showed that if all of the high school dropouts had actually graduated, the state would be spending $130 million less in social programs and that 35,000 fewer Nebraskans would be receiving public assistance. A study conducted in Canada showed that the annual dropout rate among high school students in our country was 18 percent, which costs the federal government approximately $2 billion. In our province, according to a study conducted in 2001 by Alberta Learning, close to a quarter of our youth dropped out of high school before completion.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that we can do better than this. This province is capable of producing far better numbers. However, if we are prepared to do this, we have to take appropriate steps which would help minimize the terrible dropout rate that we are experiencing today. One sure way of accomplishing this task is for this Assembly to pass Bill 203 and amend the School Act, which presently permits students to drop out of school once they reach the age of 16. By amending section 13(1)(c), Bill 203 will extend that age to 17, which will bring the majority of high school students within one year of completing their secondary education. I believe that this one extra year will give our youth the time to mature and consider all of the opportunities and possibilities that education will open up for them. It will give them the necessary time to realize that by not completing at least their high school diploma, they may not only be shortchanging the chance to further their studies, but they may be shortchanging their goals and dreams in life.

Mr. Chairman, apart from increasing the mandatory attendance age from 16 to 17, Bill 203 also serves to amend section 13(5)(e) of the School Act, which permits our young people to be excused from attending school due to various family, social, or religious beliefs. Bill 203 will help alleviate this problem by repealing section 13(5)(e), and this bill will in turn allow the school boards to enforce the attendance rules and regulations on a consistent and fair basis. This means that the school boards will still permit students to be excused from attending classes due to particular holidays, sickness, suspensions, or expulsions, but they would not permit parents to neglect their children by not allowing them to pursue a proper education.

Mr. Chairman, our youth are the future of this province. Among them are the potential leaders of our province, our country, and our world. If we are going to entrust them with this momentous task, we had better make sure that all of them have the opportunity to receive the best possible education that we can provide. With this in mind,

I urge all of my colleagues to support our youth by voting in favour of Bill 203.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak to Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. With respect – and I mean that sincerely – for my colleague for Little Bow, I must rise and speak against this bill today. I'm always sorry to speak against his bills as I know that he brings them forward with nothing but the very best of intentions, and besides that, he's a very good friend. I feel very strongly on the opposite side of this issue, and I'd like to share with you the reasons why I'm not supporting Bill 203.

At the outset I would like to say that in spirit I stand alongside my colleagues in the Assembly who do support this bill. As a parent I am proud to say that both my sons have completed high school and have attained some postsecondary education. My son Jeff has a political science degree from the University of Calgary, and my son Jason is currently in a golf management program. I know that education has opened many doors for them and will continue to do so throughout their entire lives. However, the reason behind their educational success was not legislation that made them stay in school. It was their willingness to be in school as well as their willingness to learn and family encouragement. Like everyone else in this Assembly I realize that staying in school increases a student's likelihood of prosperity and that lifelong learning will in fact become the norm for them, not the unusual.

Like all of my colleagues, I am acutely aware of the fact that the more educated a population becomes, the better a province or a state government would do. Simply put, the smarter we are, the brighter our future for everyone, for students as well as the society. But I believe that a strong education system works best when it is serving the needs of the ready and the willing students. We are not a successful province because we have forced students to be educated. We are successful because we have given people options for various courses of learning, and they have chosen the ones that are the best suited to their interests and their goals. As well, I also believe that in many cases forcing a student to remain in high school for an extra year, from the age of 16 to 17, will not necessarily accomplish anything. Young Albertans who want to get a high school diploma after the age of 17 will in fact get a high school diploma, and those who do not simply will drop out. Sometimes when we are struggling with something, we need to be able to step back from it, and many of those who do drop out eventually come back to learning, some through distance learning or Bow Valley College or a virtual school like we have at the Rocky View Virtual School in my area. Mr. Chairman, not all students wish to be inside a classroom, and some function better at home.

Furthermore, I think the bill skirts around the more important issue, which is that everyone would like to see all children finish high school, and if that's the case, then the bill should come right out and say it. If we measure success by whether or not students graduate from high school, then shouldn't we legislate that students must graduate from high school? Wouldn't that get us closer to the point? Related to this is the fact that in order to increase the chances of becoming economically successful, a young person today will almost certainly require some postsecondary education, and given that this bill is premised upon success, are we going to start forcing young Albertans to take postsecondary education whether they want to or not? That isn't our job, Mr. Chairman. These are decisions to be made by every Albertan as an individual and their families, not their government. All we can do as a government is to try and provide the tools.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, this bill speaks indirectly to the purpose of schools in this province. Are Alberta schools to be forced to provide a service to near-adult individuals who do not want to be there? Can you imagine the disruptive effect on some classrooms if that becomes the case? As all members here know, Alberta students consistently rank amongst the best in the world on standardized testing. This is the testimony to our education system, the one that we do have, one that stresses education above all else. Our schools are truly places to learn, not to coast. I believe that forcing someone to be in a school system against their will is bound to increase the number of problems in that system. This will hamper the ability of all students to learn, and if these students are not there to learn, then why are we trying to force them to be there?

As my third and final point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that during my 10 years as an MLA for Airdrie-Rocky View and, prior to that, Three Hills-Airdrie, not one parent, not one school board official, not one student, not one teacher has come to me with a request or a suggestion to increase the age limit for staying in school. I have over 50,000 people in my constituency, and none of them has ever asked me to do this. My larger point is that people learn best in places and in settings where they actually want to be. Possibly we ought to have the humility to realize that in the case of some of our older teenagers, school sometimes is not that place, at least not at that time in their lives.

This bill is based upon good sentiment and a noble goal, the education of all Albertans. However, due to the fact that the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003, attempts to keep people in a place where they clearly do not want to be, it will not be effective in ensuring that more Albertans graduate with a high school diploma, and that is why I will not be supporting Bill 203.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, once again for the opportunity to be able to speak and put my point of view on the record.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and speak in support of Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. Bill 203 is an important piece of legislation, because I believe that young Albertans need to be encouraged to finish high school. This will lay the foundation for their future in an increasingly competitive and demanding global economy.

Raising the mandatory age from 16 to 17 will bring young Albertans one year closer to graduation, which has become a basic necessity in today's world. A highly educated labour force that possesses the knowledge and skills needed for innovation and productivity growth and one that is flexible and adaptable in the face of ongoing change is a cornerstone of success for societies living and working in today's knowledge-based, globalized environment.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion there are two important aspects in raising the mandatory school attendance age from 16 to 17. First, there are the individual or human benefits to achieving more education. Second, there are the societal and economic spillover effects of having a better educated province. A March 2001 study called Literacy, Numeracy, and Labour Market Outcomes in Canada discovered that each additional year of education raises annual earnings by about 8.3 percent. This statistic is astounding. In another study done by Statistics Canada there was a clear linkage between higher levels of education and higher rates of employment and lower rates of unemployment. With evidence like this, which directly links education levels and income, Bill 203 should be seen as an investment plan for Alberta's future generations.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that everyone is made for university education, but I do believe that everyone has a talent. To pursue this talent, training is needed, whether it be trade school or graphic design school, and while not a lot of these programs require a high school diploma, they most certainly demand specific higher levels of high school courses. Extending the mandatory age to 17 will give students thinking of dropping out at 16 an opportunity to achieve these specific courses so that they have a chance to realize their full potential.

Mr. Chairman, the basic issue that Bill 203 is addressing is that our society along with our economy has changed over the generations. Today almost any job that pays enough for an independent lifestyle requires some postsecondary education, training. Tradesmen need high school courses to get into apprenticeship programs, as do office management students. As you can see, there are very few professions left that are open to young adults without some kind of postsecondary training. This is why Bill 203 is so timely in our province's history.

Global economic fluctuations typically have a large impact on youth employment. Business leaders and social analysts believe that to succeed, Alberta's young people need to be adaptable and innovative and to have sophisticated communication and technological skills. Albertans who have not finished high school are disadvantaged when it comes to job security. When the economy takes a downward spiral, employees with low levels of education are more susceptible to losing their jobs. This stress places more burden on government social and economic programs. A report by the National Center for Education Statistics in the United States found that high school dropouts were three times more likely to receive public assistance than high school graduates who did not go to college. Once again, raising the mandatory attendance to 17 should be seen as an investment in the province's economy and its future.

One statistic published in a study called Youth in Transition Survey brought to my attention the cyclical effects that lower levels of education have on our society. The study found that high school graduates were more likely to have parents who had completed a postsecondary diploma or university degree, and the proportion of high school dropouts who had parents who had not completed high school were three times that of graduates. Mr. Chairman, this statistic makes it painfully obvious that high school dropout levels do not only affect the individual and his or her economic future, but they also affect the future of their children. The same study, which surveyed 22,000 Canadian youths between 18 and 20 years of age in the year 2000, found more evidence that the jobless rate was highest for high school dropouts with no postsecondary education.

There's some good news when discussing high school dropout rates among 20 year olds in Alberta over the past decade. In 1991 the dropout rate amongst 20 year olds was 14 percent, and in 1999 it was lowered to 12.5 percent. However, this still means that over one in 10 high school students are dropping out, and this is unacceptable. Another finding in the Youth in Transition Survey was that three-quarters of those who had dropped out later expressed regret over their decision. On a personal level, Mr. Chairman, in all my years I've not met one person who told me that they wished to have less education.

It should be noted that dropouts have a very difficult time re-entering the education system. The support network of the family is usually not there to provide financial and moral support for young Albertans looking to go back to school. Many in this segment of society are living outside the home and are financially unable to go back to school. I can only imagine how difficult a decision it is for young people, once they're out of the home, to go back to their parents and say that they would like to be supported again to go back to school. Therefore, it's very important to pass this bill so that young Albertans are forced to attend school while they do have that support of their families. We have an opportunity to reduce the amount of regret and disappointment in the lives of these young Albertans. Raising the mandatory age from 16 to 17 will bring these disenfranchised youth one year closer to graduation. After spending this extra year in school, perhaps they will see the light at the end of the tunnel and go on and finish high school. Bill 203 is an extra push for Alberta's youth who for whatever reason are disengaged from the education system.

Building the requisite human capital for skills and knowledge begins with a strong educational foundation. The completion of high school is widely recognized in Canada and in other countries as the minimum education requirement. However, the labour market demand for skills and knowledge suggests that postsecondary education is fast becoming the new educational standard. Certainly, those youths who fail to complete high school will have particular problems integrating into the new economic society. Raising the mandatory age from 16 to 17 should be seen as an economic investment for this great province. It certainly is for the individual. The evidence is clear and blunt: education and income capacity are directly linked.

Some people are wary of this bill because of the costs attached to raising the mandatory age. However, the approximately $43 million that it would cost this government to keep young Albertans in school for an extra year is a small price to pay. The long-term economic benefits far outweigh the short-term costs.

Mr. Chairman, people have raised the question of how this bill would be enforced. Well, Bill 203, by eliminating attendance boards, would place full and clear responsibility for attendance enforcement with school boards. It's my belief that people generally tend to obey the law, and by raising the mandatory age to 17, the mind-set of young Albertans would be changed, and 17 would become the new, accepted mandatory age. With more of the population having higher education, stresses on government services will decline, increasing the amount of money available for the province to reinvest in education and remain competitive in an increasingly demanding global economy.

Because Bill 203 makes plain economic sense for this province, I urge all my colleagues here to support this innovative piece of legislation and thank the Member for Little Bow for bringing it forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to speak on behalf of Bill 203. I believe it's the right step for our education system, and I believe that our province will receive some benefit from this small but not insignificant change to the School Act. I'd like to speak on section 2 of Bill 203 with special reference to the constituency I represent, Edmonton-Norwood. I'd also like to pay special attention to the comments made in second reading debate by the members for Vermilion-Lloydminster and Edmonton-Rutherford. While these two members found themselves on opposite sides of the debate, I believe they both made important comments regarding the larger aims of our education system that we ought to look at more closely.

The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford talked about the importance of getting students ready for a different sort of economy that we would enter. In this new economy knowledge becomes an important tool, especially when we consider the specialization of every sort of job that is out there as well as the explosion of technical achievements that we've seen over the past 20 years or so. It isn't just a particular segment of our economy and particular careers that are subject to this change.

I think back to the '70s and '80s when, if you wanted to become a mechanic, you just helped your dad or went down the street to the local gas station or service garage; hopefully, the guy took you in, saw what you could do, and hired you. Nowadays, however, that doesn't happen. When you go walking into a mechanic's garage, it doesn't look like a service station did back then. One of the things you notice is a computer and diagnostic machines. Then you might see a wrench or a tool set. But if you want to be a mechanic or if you want to operate these machines, you have to know how to read and how to determine and interpret their outputs so you can make the right decisions. You also have to know what the machine is giving you so you know how to fix the problem. In order to do all this, you have to finish high school, and then you have to take one or two years of tech school or community college. All this shows that while the essence of being a good mechanic always involves getting your hands dirty to fix a car, the mode by which mechanics operate has been radically altered.

A larger point is the knowledge that the economy is touching every career in sight, and our students have to be ready for that change, Mr. Chairman. The Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster made an interesting comment on this point. He suggested that perhaps our focus ought to be in looking at the whole school system. Perhaps as MLAs we ought to be asking ourselves the greater question of how our schools should be preparing students for the economy that we're facing.

Finally, the member suggested that we should be looking at all the other sorts of classes we're offering in our schools to ensure that we offer a variety of courses that teach students a whole roster of skills that may be used by them. This is a point that ought to be taken by every member, by the province's learning commission. I know that Alberta's larger centres' apprenticeship programs are helping many students who have thought about dropping out or staying in school, and they may give it another shot. As well, the school system here in Edmonton is the one that caters to different reasons for kids that are in school. Of particular personal interest to me, Mr. Chairman, is Edmonton-Norwood, but this isn't the case for all the other areas of the province. There are those where initiatives and incentives to stay in school are not for all the kids without an aptitude for quote, unquote, learning from books. As well, aside from looking at the environment inside the schools, we've got to look at the environment outside our schools. We can't consider our schools in a vacuum. Rather, we've got to see our schools as connected to the larger community they serve.

In this light, Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk a bit about Edmonton-Norwood and say that for many students in my constituency a school is the best place they can be. I know that many kids in Edmonton-Norwood have big dreams, big plans, and I know that their parents like any other parents across the province have the highest hopes for the future success of their kids. However, Edmonton-Norwood has many challenges. There are pockets in the constituency of different levels of crime. It's on the news: on 118th, the prostitution; the break and enters. These are coming from young kids. You talk to the beat police, and they'll tell you that the youth are getting more and more wise about the law, what they can and can't get away with. If it keeps them in school for one year, there is a likelihood that they might change their course or their pattern of thinking. One of my principals had told me that sometimes one year makes a drastic change in their attitude, from being a young, foolish child to becoming a young adult, and with that comes a different outlook on life.

It's sad in some areas of the inner city where a hot lunch program means learning. Does that reflect on the parents' ability to be a parent, or does that reflect on just the neediness of a community? You look at some of the kids that vandalize the school and are in lower grades. You know, what would possess them to do such things? If they could stay in school one more year, I think we could probably curb a lot of those things. And that's in just one area of the city. What if it made a difference? What if one year made a significant difference? You know, it's definitely not going to hurt, and I think we have a perfect opportunity here, being MLAs and receiving money from the taxpayers, to make a contribution in this segment of our jobs.

I would ask the members of the Assembly to really have a good look at section 2 of Bill 203. I would ask them to really think of the unfortunate kids who might, if they would stay in school one more year, not go on the street, who would not have to take a lesser job, who would have their horizons broadened. Mr. Chairman, I think we owe that to young people. I think we owe that to less-than-fortunate people and young kids that wouldn't otherwise have a chance. It's only one year, and I would encourage everybody to have a deeper look at it.

Thank you so much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to take this opportunity to make a few observations on Bill 203 while we are studying it in committee, the bill with the title of School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. The bill obviously calls on the Assembly to amend the compulsory attendance portion of the School Act so that high school students would be required to stay in school a year longer than they presently do.

I've been listening to the debate with considerable interest, as I'm sure high school students themselves, teachers, school boards, parent organizations, and the government itself are looking at this bill. There are some good assumptions on which this extension in compulsory attendance that's sought by way of this bill is based. Those assumptions are about the fact that an additional year of staying in school will improve high school completion rates, would assist young Albertans to take more seriously their commitment to complete high school. So that's a laudable assumption. That's a very good starting point.

In this day and age high school completion is a minimum. You know, you have to go beyond that to be able to survive and succeed in the work world that we find ourselves in given the complexity and the high-tech nature of the economy that we live in and the rapid changes that are required in learning our skills so many times over during a career, the fact that most Albertans and Canadians do have to in fact retool themselves every five, ten years given the rapid changes in the work world and the changing requirements of skills accompanying this technological change as well as change in the structure of occupations and job skills required. So the more education one has, the better it is. In that sense I congratulate the member for bringing this bill forward so that we can look at this one element that might help improve high school completion rates for our young people.

At this stage I'm simply looking as someone who's interested in having some questions that come to mind addressed. The compulsory attendance will obviously have ramifications for school boards, schools, school superintendents, teachers, parents, and perhaps other groups. All of these stakeholders are, I'm sure, watching and listening, and what I would hope will happen in turn is that we have their input in some systematic way with respect to how they approach this extension of the compulsory attendance from 16 to 17 years, this increase in the number of years that we require by law of our students to attend.

So I wonder if the hon. member, the sponsor of the bill, has some information on whether or not school boards have been consulted, and, if so, have all of them been consulted? Has the Alberta School Boards Association perhaps been a partner in the development of this bill? The same pertains to, of course, the Alberta Teachers' Association as Alberta Teachers' Association represents all those high school teachers who are doing a wonderful job of helping our students who'll be affected by this extension. If so, what position has ATA taken on it? What input did the hon. member have from the ATA on the development of this bill?

Similarly, school superintendents and their association is another stakeholder that comes to mind. Certainly, I'll find it most instructive and reassuring to know that we have heard from them. The hon. member responsible for the bill will, I'm sure, have that information, and he'll share it with me and with the members of this House.

There are many parent associations, parent advocacy groups who are vitally interested in making our schools more successful, more effective in helping young people of Alberta to do better in school, to stay longer in school, to complete high school at a higher percentage of the student body. So what's their position? Any consultation that has taken place with parent advocacy groups would be another question that I would have that I hope the hon. member would have some answers for.

High school completion rates are also one of the many questions that are receiving extensive and detailed and expert attention from the learning commission. Since the terms of reference of the learning commission include specifically this particular item – that is, how we can improve the rate of completion of Alberta students through high school – I wonder if it wouldn't be, in fact, wise for us to hear from the learning commission. I'm sure everyone perhaps agrees that if we are to improve the high school completion rates, more than one measure will have to be taken, more than one change may need to be made. It's the interactive effect of those multiple changes that we may make as a result of the deliberations and recommendations of the learning commission that are likely effective in not only identifying increasing high school completion rates as our goal but in achieving that goal in order to be sure that the measures that we take will have a desired impact. Might it not be wise for us to wait, therefore, for a comprehensive look that the learning commission has been busy taking on the issue of how to improve these completion rates?

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is my great pleasure to rise today in support of Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. I'm very pleased to be able to join the debate on Bill 203, and I'd like to commend the hon. Member for Little Bow for bringing forth this initiative.

You know, initially I wasn't sure whether or not I could support this bill and in fact shared many of the views of the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View. Then the faces of students past appeared before me and all of those students who said to me, "Mr. Maskell, why didn't you make me stay in school?" I know this business of legislating students to stay in school is a challenge and is a difficult one.

I need to share a little story with you. In my first year as an assistant principal one morning at about, oh, 9:30, 10 in the morning a father and a brother came to my door at the school and wanted to speak with me, and they told me: you know, my son was killed this morning in a motorcycle accident on the James McDonald Bridge, and we're here to clear out his locker and finish his school time. So I went to our records – and thank goodness he wasn't one of my students – and we discovered that he wasn't registered at school. He had dropped out some time ago, quite a long time before that. But this young man was getting up every morning with his lunch and his books and getting on his motorcycle, leaving the house, and heading off to school. The parents believed for all those months – and this was in the early spring of that school year – that their son was going to school every day.

I'll never forget the look on the father's face when he said to me: Mr. Maskell, I can never tell his mother about this, because she just couldn't handle the fact that he was living this false life for all of that time. Nobody from the school had ever let the parents know that this youngster was not attending school. Nobody had phoned and nobody had checked. We were supposed to be sending out attendance records and all of this kind of thing, and it hadn't happened at all.

I made a vow from that day forward and for the rest of my career that I would work very hard at keeping students in school. So any strategy that we can come up with that will help students stay in school is important, and I believe that if this is another way that we can retain a few more students in school, it's worth all of the effort.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is rather simple and straightforward: it's a means by which we would ensure that more of our children stay in school and, I hope, graduate. You know, according to a recent study by Alberta Learning 72 percent of Alberta students graduate from high school, and, members of this Legislature, that's not good enough. We have to improve that result. We have to increase that. It's got to be at least 80 percent or more. We can't be satisfied with 72 percent of our students graduating. In fact, although we have wonderful results in this province, this result isn't our finest.

Since July 1, 1999, New Brunswick is the only province where the minimum mandatory school age is 18 years of age, and prior to that date it was 16 in that province just like it is throughout the rest of our country. To my way of thinking our colleagues in New Brunswick should be commended for passing the amendment to raise the mandatory minimum school age there.

So, Mr. Chairman, it was recognized long ago that all children should have access to education, be it in a public or a private setting. It seems fair to assume that by making schools universally accessible to all children in Canada, the implied message is that going to school, that getting an education, is important. That our own provincial Ministry of Learning shares this belief is made clear in its 2001 report, Removing Barriers to High School Completion. At the very beginning it is explicitly stated that

Alberta Learning is committed to ensuring Albertans have the knowledge and skills they need to be successful and to learn quickly and flexibly throughout their lives. This process begins at an early age and reaches a key milestone when students complete high school and begin their adult lives by moving on to further education or employment. As such, the ability of every student to successfully complete high school is fundamental to continued success and quality of life.

Mr. Chairman, as the ministry's own report considers completing high school a key milestone and states unequivocally that completing high school is fundamental to continued success and quality of life, I was surprised to learn that the ministry opposes Bill 203. Why? Has the importance of completing high school ceased to be of fundamental importance? I do not believe that to be the case, and here's why: look around and see what's driving our economy. To be sure, our province has a highly resource-driven economy, but it does not exist in a vacuum. We cannot, nor should we, rely exclusively on what our resources can bring us. As much as any other jurisdiction Alberta also needs to have a qualified workforce in today's burgeoning information and knowledge-based industries. Indeed, in today's competitive economy advanced technology skills and competence dominate. Completing high school is more than a key milestone in an individual's educational process; it has in many cases also become the minimum level of education needed to have an opportunity to compete in the labour market, obtain an entry-level job, and to secure a basic standard of living. Much more education and training is required for decent jobs, incomes, and life chances. Anything less than the minimum may restrict you to long hours, tedious jobs with little opportunity for advancement, and a low quality of life.

Mr. Chairman, we talk a lot about making sure that our children do not get saddled with debts incurred long before they reach adulthood. This concern has been and remains a key factor in this government's vow to pay off Alberta's provincial debt, and rightly so. Another issue of great concern is that we do what we can to make sure future generations are not restricted in their opportunities. It's our duty as legislators, as students, and as parents and grandparents to make sure that we do not place unnecessary hurdles to prevent our children and our children's children from being able to realize their goals, dreams, and ambitions.

A moment ago I said that high school dropouts are at a disadvantage in seeking meaningful employment. What they face are, if not unemployment, long work hours and low income levels. As the disadvantages they face accumulate, they will face increasing difficulty furthering their education, training, or skill development. This to me reads like a recipe for disaster. I want to make sure that all of our children have opportunities to succeed. Bill 203 won't ensure success on its own, but it is a step in the right direction.

Another argument I've heard against Bill 203 is that it could be seen as infringing on the freedom of young adults to choose when to leave school. I must say that I find this to be one of the most confounding and troubling arguments I've heard in opposition to Bill 203. I say this because when you think about it, there are a lot of things we don't let 16 year olds do and, I might add, with good reason. For instance, we don't let 16 year olds purchase alcohol, and in but a few weeks it will be illegal for anyone under 18 to buy and smoke cigarettes in public places. There's more. Those not yet 18 cannot purchase and register a gun of any kind. Starting this year, significant limitations have been placed on the circumstances and manner in which 16 year olds are allowed to operate motor vehicles.

The list, Mr. Chairman, goes on, but I think I've made my point. We have placed restrictions on certain kinds of activities, rights, and duties for certain age groups. We've done so because we and those who came before us felt it necessary in the ever present tug-of-war between individual rights and social responsibilities that there be some areas in which responsibility must take precedence over rights.

Quite frankly, I would also like to add that I think there are many issues about which 16 year olds cannot and should not make decisions whose impact may be felt throughout the rest of their lives. One such issue is whether or not they must attend school. Mr.

Chairman, I think we need only recall our own adolescence and teenage years to know that teenagers do not always fully appreciate the scope or impact of the decisions they make, let alone the decisions others make. Adolescents are much more likely to give greater consideration to what they like rather than what is good for them. I realize this is a generalization, but I think that with time we gain the maturity and experience necessary to make informed decisions that aren't guided solely by what we enjoy doing but also by what we have to do whether we like it or not.

As children grow up and are expected to take on more and more responsibility for their own lives and their decisions, they tend to realize . . . [Mr. Maskell's speaking time expired] Well, I'm out of time.

Mr. Chairman, I urge all those in this Legislature to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is an honour for me to join the debate in the Committee of the Whole on Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Little Bow. I would like to address what the drawbacks in section 2(a) may pose to Alberta high schools and explain why these risks are worth the rewards.

Mr. Chairman, I accept the fact that there are issues with Bill 203. First of all, there's a risk of students simply riding out an extra year. There is an assumption that 16 year olds who don't want to be in school are no different than the 17 year olds who miss their classes. It may also be possible that these students may do more harm than good to the atmosphere in a classroom. I think it's safe to say that students who don't care about their own education care even less about the education of their classmates. Finally, it may also be true that the students who cause disruptions will only cost money because schools finance their programs based on the government's per student funding formula.

We must acknowledge that there may be drawbacks to this bill. Increasing the mandatory age of attendance could be problematic, but we should also make sure that we do not abandon those students who may only need a stronger push to stay in school. I know from firsthand experience the importance of promoting education through whatever means necessary. Mr. Chairman, I had the pleasure of chairing the Athabasca Tribal Council's school review committee. I traveled to northern Alberta and heard about the significant barriers to learners in northern Alberta. The committee heard about the need for more parent involvement and more collaboration between parents and teachers to help improve the learning programs required for students, but the most common concern among all of the schools in the region was the need to improve student attendance.

Now, one could argue that funding education in the far north is expensive in the first place. The schools are located far away from any major centre, students are scattered throughout the region, and facilities are in need of improvement. But it is not our place to decide who qualifies for education funding. The goal of Alberta's learning system is to educate all of Alberta's youth regardless of where they live, their ethnic background, or their current level of education. The best way to address all of these issues was to ask them what they wanted. What did the student want to achieve? What does the school board want to achieve? Mr. Chairman, these same questions need to be answered by those students who have not bought into the importance of basic education. This bill helps families, schools, communities encourage students to stay in school. Most Albertans realize the importance of education and work hard to ensure that students reach their full potential.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 203 plays an important role in the push and pull of education. Government, parents, schools, and society push students to succeed and reach their goals. Students are pushed to go to school and get their high school diploma. Students are pushed to earn high marks and think seriously about postsecondary education. Many students are pushed to be eager, disciplined, and hard-working. Finally, students are pushed to balance life, work, and school pressures. On the other side of this schools pull students into classrooms by making education more attractive. Students are pulled into the world of work to attain independence. Students are also pulled into education with the thought of doors opening as a result of their commitment to education.

This Assembly heard members speak about the need to make education more appealing to students. I agree that the Department of Learning should always be on the lookout for new learning strategies and programs. Updating and tweaking the curriculum is the best way to keep students' interest, but there are others. There are other factors such as programs designed for specific students and proper facilities that contribute a great deal to help attract and retain students who have not fully bought into the importance of education. Learning opportunities that encourage meaningful employment such as job shadowing and more connections to work would help pull students into the classroom.

I believe that Bill 203 also reflects the importance society places on education. The days of working a whole life with anything less than a high school diploma are gone. Sure; there may be certain professions that allow for a lower level of education in place of a good work ethic. There are many part-time jobs that do not require a high school diploma, but these jobs are hardly a career. The career opportunities available for adults without basic education are fewer in number.

The reality is that teenagers are not in the best position to decide their futures. Mr. Chairman, how can anyone know his or her full potential at such a young age? This is why the longer students spend in school the better. Young people must ask themselves what they want to do and where do they want to be. In other words, high school students must decide and define their success. Increasing the mandatory age of attendance to 17 will help those students who do not take their education seriously, but we all know it can be very difficult to force a teenager to do something they may not want to do. If these students spend an additional year in school and achieve anything, no matter how small, then Bill 203 has served its purpose.

Another aspect Bill 203 will address is the attendance boards, which many believe have failed to serve their purpose. These boards were designed to be an alternative to the immediate use of the courts to enforce compulsory attendance. It was thought that the court approach was not effective or appropriate in all cases. It focused on sanctions rather than remedies, and it did not try to get to the cause of nonattendance. However, the complex issues surrounding nonattendance are addressed easier through the school boards. The attendance boards are often viewed as a complicated process. Rather than urging students to stay in school, finding a resolution or applying sanctions are two other duties of the attendance boards that are a more effective result with the student, the school, and the guardian. Again, attendance boards only confuse the responsibility for attendance enforcement.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer back to the meeting with the Athabasca Tribal Council school review committee. Parents, teachers, tribal members did not mention the role or legitimacy of an attendance board because they were not considered part of the equation. My experience has proven to me that a local problem can be best solved by a local perspective. Let's remember that urging students to complete their education provides them with the foundation of basic skills. These skills help prepare young people in their journey in the world of work.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support Bill 203, and I urge all members to vote for it. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Are you ready for the question? Bill 203, School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. On the clauses of the bill are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: Opposed.

The Deputy Chair: Carried.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 5:15 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chair, I would move that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 203.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

Hon. members, since it's 5:30, the House stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

Regional Police Service

504. Mr. Griffiths moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take the steps necessary to establish its own regional police service including a regional police commissioner by 2007.

[Debate adjourned March 17]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to get involved in speaking to the motion that talks about a regional police service. Having read through Hansard and seen what was discussed previously, I'm a little surprised at the debate that's taken place because it doesn't seem to really be relevant to the motion that is before us. That motion is: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take the steps necessary to establish its own regional police service including a regional police commissioner by 2007."

What we heard from the Member for Wainwright, who introduced this motion, was really to begin with a lot of fed-bashing. He talked about the problem not being with the RCMP but with the federal government and the contract they have with them, so the process rather than the implementation of the police force. Then he went on to talk about some of those things that they saw as roadblocks in their dealings with the federal government in terms of how they negotiate to get more police people. Then he stated: it's imperative that the government be in a position to negotiate if it's to effect these improvements. So my question to that hon. member is: is he really talking about negotiating, or is he talking about entering into these negotiations in 2007 with a threat, saying, "You take it our way, or it's the highway," which has been a standard practice of this provincial government when dealing with the federal government? That is not, I think, what the people of this province want when they come to a police force.

What do they want? They want our communities to be as crime free as possible. When crimes are committed, they want the police force to be able to solve those crimes and to bring the people who commit the crimes to justice as fast as possible. They want competent, well-trained police people on the street and in the field. Will we get that with the provincial police force? You don't talk anywhere here about how that agenda will be met. What they do talk about and what I see the Member for Calgary-Buffalo talk about is cost. So he doesn't seem to think that . . .

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for a sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Wainwright to close debate on Motion 504.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry. I was under the impression that seven minutes meant seven minutes for the member, and then I had five minutes after that.

The Deputy Speaker: Two for the member and then five.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you.

Ms Carlson: I'll take your five.

Mr. Griffiths: No. No. That's all right.

Mr. Griffiths: Mr. Speaker, I guess I would like to address some of the concerns this evening that were raised by some of the other members during debate, particularly the Member for Edmonton-Centre. Actually, a few members have raised the point that they are concerned that the motion that's been written and that's been presented before this House doesn't just propose to take the steps to get ready to prepare for debate in 2007 but, rather, actually prepares to move to regional police services and to prepare for Alberta to move entirely on its own.

I would like to give an analogy that my dad always used to give me when I was a kid. He said: when you play cards, if you're going to bluff, it's best if you have four aces. Mr. Speaker, the way I equate that analogy to what the members have asked about actually preparing for a provincial police force is that it would be extremely difficult to move into negotiations telling the federal government, telling anybody that we're not actually serious about it, that we're just doing it for negotiations. If you're going to move into negotiations and you're going to take it seriously and you're going to try and work the best deal you have, you have to be prepared to take the alternative. You have to have the four aces in your hand that say that you can win either way. So if we're going to prepare this – as I suggested, the preparations for moving to regional police services in Alberta – we have to be fully prepared in 2007 to be ready to go to regional police services at that moment, not just contend that we might. We can't fake it, Mr. Speaker. We have to actually be prepared to do it. So I hope that addresses the concerns of those members.

Some of the other questions that were addressed. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview said that he didn't want power centralized in the province, Mr. Speaker. I find that really strange. He also raised the questions: why couldn't we work with the federal government and resolve the issue, and why couldn't the Alberta government contribute more funds? We're dealing with three levels of government: a local level of government, a provincial level of government, and a federal level of government. Negotiations in any circumstance when you're dealing with three levels of government are of course difficult, but the problem is compounded when you're dealing with the federal government, which is in charge of the hiring, pays for a small portion of the contracts; a provincial government, which pays for a portion of the contracts; and municipal governments, which actually sign the contracts and have the deal. The confusion from district to district, region to region makes it really difficult for the police services that we have now to co-ordinate their activities and make sure that they're as effective as can possibly be.

Mr. Speaker, some of the other members have brought up the point that they find it extremely difficult and confusing to think about losing the RCMP and moving to an Alberta provincial police force, which may be the consequence of this motion. They brought up issues that I wasn't even presenting with this motion, but I'd like to point out to the members that the first police force in this province, one that we had until we hit the Dirty Thirties, when financing made it difficult to provide a provincial police force, was an Alberta provincial police force. I mean, the heritage and history is a completely separate issue and I don't think should even be identified on this particular argument. [interjection] I've got a sore throat. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I have a cold. It makes it very difficult to continue talking.

Mr. Speaker, I think I've addressed all the concerns. In summary, I guess what I'd like to say is that we have a history and tradition in this province of doing things that suit this province well, of assuming our own identity, of being in charge of ourselves, of being responsible for ourselves. I think it's very important that we prepare ourselves to assume responsibility for whatever comes up, and I encourage all members to support this motion.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 504 carried]

Water Supply Standards

505. Dr. Nicol moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to create an organization similar to the Clean Air Strategic Alliance for Alberta's water supply to ensure that Alberta's water supply is maintained at the highest standards possible.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important that we reflect on the role that water is going to be playing in Alberta's future. If we look at what is really needed in the upcoming period of transition that we're going through with our water and our water supply in Alberta right now, it's the idea that we have to have a true commitment to water quality. I think anybody who has been involved in agriculture, in human consumption, in industrial use recognizes fully that the quality of that water is really critical for the things that we're going to be doing and the direction that we'll be taking in our province.

We are here asking the government to create an organization similar to the Clean Air Strategic Alliance to look at water. The Clean Air Strategic Alliance has been a very successful effort by the government to bring together all the stakeholders, all the interest groups that are involved in clean air and get them into a position where they truly can listen, study, solve problems, and build all of that around a vision for this province.

Mr. Speaker, I'm familiar with the fact that the Minister of Environment has been telling us that toward the end of the month there will be a water strategy paper put on Alberta Environment's web site, but what we need is an organization whose mandate, whose true mandate is to go out and make sure that all of the people in this province are aware of both the benefits of quality water and the costs associated with allowing our water systems to become contaminated.

It seems like in Alberta we keep talking about the idea that we've got lots of water, yet the last two or three years really emphasized the fact that we don't. When water becomes short, it concentrates. We end up with concentrations of chemicals, either natural or human induced, industrially induced, into the water systems, and those levels of contamination or pollution in effect become more critical when there are dry periods, when there's concentration in nature. Also, when we look at how we interact with it in terms of what the impacts are of business activity and what the impacts are of human activity, we need to make sure that that quality aspect of our water system is truly looked at and that we start and make a real commitment to first of all developing that vision that will then give us a direction of where to go as a province.

This water strategy paper I think is the government's most recent attempt at trying to define where we should be going with our water, but historically we've always seen the discussion around water focus on the quantity issues. What we'd like to see the government do through this organization is look at issues that are associated with quality just like the Clean Air Strategic Alliance is dealing with air quality and the impact that that has on individual Albertans, communities in Alberta, and us as a province, both in terms of our commitment to each other and also our commitment to, you know, kind of a vision or a perspective of what we want Alberta to be.

What we need is for this organization to begin to look at a visioning statement and start to plan for what we need to do about quality issues over the next five, 10, 15, 20 years and into the future. It's so important. If we are going to recognize that that quality in what we do about our water system is as equally important as quantity, then we've got to start planning now, thinking now, bringing together the groups now that will in effect result in some actions starting sooner rather than later to make sure that if nothing else we act to keep our water at current standards so that we can then begin to say: what do we need to do to bring it up in quality to prevent its further deterioration? This, Mr. Speaker, can run the whole gamut from the ideas of what about water for human consumption, what about water for our in-stream flows, what about the qualities that are necessary there, what are reasonable in-stream flow levels, what are seasonal variations in those kinds of things and how does that variation in water quality over seasons affect, you know, the basic ability of nature and human and commercial activity to function?

You know, it's always quite amazing when you look at some of the differences in the quality of water that's brought into our municipal water systems. We look at what this is doing to the capacity of those systems, the workload on those systems, yet when we get to the tap, almost all communities in Alberta have what is probably some of the highest quality water anywhere in the world. But every now and again we have incidences that in effect cause some real concern among Albertans, and what we need to do is look at how we can start telling Albertans that we're aware of that, we're doing something, and we're going to make a difference.

If we were to send a message today to the government by accepting this motion, we can start to plan for an organization made up of the stakeholders that are involved, whether it's, say, environment groups that want to maintain stream flows and quality in stream flows, whether it's members of the local municipalities that want to deal with the burden or the load factor on their water plants, whether it's issues like: how do we deal with making sure that the rural water systems that are being proposed to provide potable water to all of Alberta have quality components built into them? We've got to make sure that that approach to our water system does reflect on all of those available issues.

There's a lot of information becoming available now that really shows even things like if our livestock industry has fresh water that's of a high quality, the performance for those animals is significantly better than with water that has contaminants or that is less pure. So what we need to do is look at making sure that our groundwater systems are protected for rural Albertans and our stream-flow systems are protected in a quality way for the agriculture industry, Mr. Speaker. I'm not talking here just about the issues of irrigation but just basic availability within the livestock sector and the communities. The more you discuss water and water quality with our commercial and industrial users, they focus on the fact that it's becoming more and more costly to them to get the water to the standard that they need for their processes, that they need to make sure that their processes work.

So I think it's a good idea that we do send a message today, that we focus on the idea that this is something we should start, and I hope everybody in the Legislature moves to support this motion. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to thank the member opposite for his comments. I can say in general that I as Minister of Environment personally agree with most of what he has to say. I just want to make a couple of points of clarification in a brief few minutes.

One I would point out to him is that the quality of Alberta's water is the best in the country. We're only one of two provinces – one of two, Mr. Speaker – that has adopted Canadian clean drinking water quality standards in either legislation or regulation. It's important to recognize that. We will continue to improve our standards as the technology becomes available. An example I might think of is that right now we're at five parts per million of particulate matter in our drinking water. Technology will soon become available to go to three and probably then to one, and as technology moves forward we will in consultation with the communities move to those higher standards, once again the only province that will probably do that.

It does raise some issues, though, because in big cities like Edmonton, Calgary, or Lethbridge, where the member is from, it's easier to move to those higher standards because the volume they put through keeps the cost down. The member probably has a few smaller communities in his constituency as well. I'm not exactly sure; maybe Barons. [interjection] No? Okay. It's much more difficult. Bow Island, for instance, is right now at .5 parts per million, and they're succeeding. But to move down to three parts per million becomes incredibly expensive for smaller communities. So one of the things I've asked the AAMDC and the AUMA to do is look at how tightening of these drinking water quality standards would affect their smaller communities. As I say, it's not an issue in the larger communities, but it could be a significant issue in the smaller communities. Once again, knowing Bow Island very well, they're almost borrowed to their max already, and for us to put more burdens on some of those communities may be difficult.

This is an issue that is ongoing. We need to continue to improve. We're not perfect. As I say, one of the two best in the country, but we're not perfect, and we can improve. I just wanted to raise that as a bit of a concern to the member.

He's quite correct that typically when we talk about water quality, we've only talked about drinking water, and we need to expand that definition to what I would call raw water as well. You're quite clearly going to see this on Thursday or Friday of this week. Our draft of the water strategy will be put on the web site, and you'll quite clearly see that the quality issue is not just around drinking water. You'll quite clearly see that the issues he raised around groundwater are in the water strategy that we're putting forward.

The concept of having a body like the Clear Air Strategic Alliance to talk about and advise government on water issues is certainly a valuable one. In fact, that's the way we came up, not in such a formal way, with the water strategy. We invited between 100 and 120 independent people, stakeholders to come to Red Deer last end of May or early June – I've forgotten the exact date – to talk about these issues. We then put what they had on the web site, and we got literally thousands of responses to that. This draft water strategy is going to actually be mailed out to 1,300 different stakeholders. It'll include municipalities, environmental groups, irrigation, agriculture. You name it; it's going out. On top of that, Mr. Speaker, it will be on the web so people can reply, and we're going to allow about a month or six weeks for a reply. We'll get in that information, and then I hope that – well, I'm fairly confident – we'll have our final strategy available in September.

With the comments that this member has made, I hope that he'll support the final strategy because many of the things that he's talked about will be in that final strategy. It'll be much broader than what he's talked about because in the time allowed to him, he certainly couldn't discuss all the issues, but the issues that he's talked about will be there. For instance, we're recommending an overall group like the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, some kind of water governing council, but we're going to even go further than that. What we're recommending is that under the large water provincial council there be a basin council which would feed into the water council, and under the basin council, then, there'll be a local council that looks at individual rivers and management on those rivers. Each will feed into the other. In one sense our recommendation in the water strategy – I realize that I'm giving a bit of it away here – will be even more complete than the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, which is a provincial body. Now it is represented by people obviously from all over the province, but it doesn't have the same kind of feeder system or farm system, if I could call it that to use an athletic metaphor, that the water council will have.

So I think the member has raised a number of good points and certainly recognizing – and I have been saying publicly for some time that water is the important issue of the 21st century not just in Alberta but really on a worldwide scale. They had a United Nations conference on water recently in Kyoto, Japan, and quite clearly that's what the results of the conference were: recognizing that we need as a world to have certain strategies around water. So it's not simply an Alberta issue, but it is very important in Alberta because, as I've said repeatedly, unless we have a comprehensive and complete strategy, we simply will not have water for future economic, population, agricultural, or environmental resources as we go forward. It's simply impossible. If we get another million people in this province, which it looks like we will, Mr. Speaker, we're going to have significant difficulties around water, as I said, its utilization. I believe as we move forward, you're going to see that a lot of the water strategy is going to have to talk about conservation.

I spoke to an irrigation council here – I don't know – a month, six weeks ago and pointed out to them that irrigators are licensed to use roughly 76 percent of the surface water in this province, and they have to be better utilizers of water. So one district, the Eastern irrigation district, is actually giving its members an incentive to move to down drops. Apparently it costs, you know, $7,000 to $10,000 for a down drop. Eastern irrigation is giving its members incentives to move to pivots, away from flood irrigation, and it's one of the models that I use.

I say to St. Mary's, which is a large part of my constituency: why aren't you guys doing the same thing? You have to be proactive in encouraging your users. But it's not just the irrigators; I use them as an example. Communities, cities have to be proactive in encouraging their users of water to conserve as well. The one I often use, of course, is Calgary. Not to pick on Calgary, but you know half their city has meters; the other half doesn't. The half that does not have the meters uses double the amount of water. Actually, the city has a 15-year plan to have everything metered, but quite frankly as we move forward towards conservation, I don't believe 15 years is quick enough.

Also, Mr. Speaker, we can look at the oil industry. The oil industry has to utilize and conserve water, and they realize that. We're having as a department discussions right now with the oil industry as to how they can better utilize water, how they conserve water, and so that's certainly an issue. Any strategy we have to have has to be based around conservation because unfortunately we can't create more water.

Now, we can do a better job of mapping the groundwater. We quite frankly don't have a good idea of how much groundwater we have in the province, where it is, or what the quality of it is. We have some good examples in basins, for instance, and close to the member's riding, in the Milk River basin. There's been a lot of research done there on groundwater. What's amazing to me is that the scientists, the hydrologists tell me that in the St. Mary's River basin from the time the water is on the surface till the time it goes in the river, percolates down, then comes back up in people's wells is something between 10,000 and 20,000 years. When I first heard that, it blew me away, Mr. Speaker, to think that when I take a drink in Etzikom or when I take a drink in Foremost, I'm drinking water that's 10,000 to 20,000 years old. Now, when you explain that to people, you know, it does blow people away.

So one of the programs we've got going right now – and a previous Minister of Environment started it, so I can't take the credit – is capping unused wells in the Milk River basin. I'm not sure if it was that member there nodding his head, the present minister of intergovernmental affairs.

Just let me conclude by saying that we've got a lot of exciting things that are going to happen, and I don't think the member's motion goes far enough, but I personally am pleased to support it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly was a pleasure to hear that the Minister of Environment is going to be supporting this particular motion. I think it comes as no surprise to anyone in this Assembly that I strongly support this motion, and to use the Minister of Economic Development's words from earlier today: every once in a while the Official Opposition has a positively brilliant idea. And this was one of them. This was one of them.

We've looked at this water problem for about 10 years and brought forward a lot of suggestions for the government. We're anticipating this new water strategy to come out any day now and know that it'll be a step in the right direction, but we need to take the politics out of the debate and discussion and put the science in. This is what we believe this kind of an alliance, like the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, or CASA, as it's better known in this province, would do. It's really nice to have the farm teams like the minister is talking about feeding information into a board, but our experience with boards in this province over the past 10 years has not been a completely positive experience, and in fact the government would share that reservation because there have been times when they have completely disbanded them.

If they were to take a strategy like they have with CASA and literally bring all of the parties who have a vested interest in ensuring that we have clean water and that we have enough quantity of water to sustain us now and in the next five years, the next 20, the next 50, the next 100 years – that's what we need to be looking at for a solution. That takes a kind of organization like CASA has evolved to, where while they don't actually have any teeth to implement anything, they can make strong recommendations where they are truly representing all those directly affected parties in the province. The government, to their credit, has listened to this organization, has started to work to implement some of the strategies they've brought forward, and that's all very positive. I think it's very important that we put something like this in place because I did have a little concern with some of things that the minister was saying, particularly in his opening remarks. He spent a lot of time talking about water quality. I agree with him when he says that the quality of the water in this province for drinking water is the best in the country, if not the best then the second-best, and it's great that they've adopted the clean water standards and that they're continuing to improve them.

But what about water management practices? That's where the real issue is. We've got clean water. It's easy to keep those standards in place to be able to maintain that, but what we have to be concerned about now and in the future is water supply. Who gets it, where's it going, and where's it coming from? Those are the big issues that we need to answer in the coming decades and things that I don't hear anything on from the minister now.

You know, one of the questions we have to ask ourselves when many groups are competing for water, whether that's industry or agriculture or people or the ecosystem – all of those groups are competing for it. It's becoming a scarce resource in this province. In spite of what people think, we do not have an overabundance of water in this province. We have in Alberta I think perhaps the least amount of surface water that any province in this country has. It is becoming a scarce resource. So when we have all these competing interests, we have to start having the debate and the discussion about how we allocate those scarce resources. Do we pipe the water to the people in the industry, or do we move the industry and the people to where the water is?

We've seen already some real forward-thinking strategies happen with municipalities in this province. If we talk about Okotoks, which the Speaker is very familiar with, Okotoks has passed some bylaws on their growth. They're saying that they can't sustain more costs for infrastructure and for supplying some of their needs like water. They have put a cap on the growth in that particular area. That's a very smart thing to have done because the cost of providing those services over time will become immense. Well, we have many areas like that in this province.

To look back at something that was said earlier in question period today by the Minister of Municipal Affairs, he said: if we were to take a look back a hundred years – it's 98 years since this province became an official province – and were to start the planning over, would we do things differently? He was talking about municipalities, but I'm talking about water. Would we have put irrigation systems in like we did? Would we have put dams in like we did? Would we have located the cities where we did? I think those are questions that all of us in here can think twice about when we try to answer them, and there are some things that we would do differently knowing what a finite resource we're actually dealing with in water.

So those are the kinds of questions that we need to start talking about and finding solutions to. The Minister of Environment talked about the length of time it took for groundwater to seep through and become available for people or industry to use, and he's very right. If he knows that so well, then why in the world would he be allowing freshwater injections into oil wells when he knows very well that it is not going to be in the next 10 lifetimes of anybody that he is related to when they can recover that water from those deep well injections and reuse it again? It just isn't possible. It just takes too much time. So we need to be smart about our water management practices now, and we cannot make ourselves available to political lobbying, whether that be from green groups or whether that be from industry, whether that be for intensive livestock or whether that be from existing agricultural users. We have to take that lobbying and all of those politics out of the decision-making, and we have to put the science back in it.

That's what CASA, the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, has been able to do. They've spent about 10 years doing it now, and they've done a very remarkable job. They are well respected by all groups in this province. Not everyone likes all of their decisions, but that's fine. On a consensus basis they have come up with some really good ideas, and they have moved the issue forward in terms of keeping our water clean and taking a look at how to work on progressing by still allowing industrial development and industrialization in this province but ensuring at the same time that we maintain not only high air quality standards but move towards higher ones. That's exactly what this water strategy group could do.

It looks like the minister is halfway there. We want him to just take the extra half a step to. . .

An Hon. Member: Go the whole way.

Ms Carlson: Well, sure. It would be great. We see some support for this particular motion from other people in the government, and what we do know from the past, Mr. Speaker, is that when the Official Opposition has a brilliant idea, it takes about two years from the time we bring it onto the floor of the Legislature until it's adopted. [interjections] Well, it's true. We've seen it happen over and over again. Now I'm hearing some moaning and groaning and a little laughter, but who I'm hearing it from are the newcomers to this Assembly. Those people have only been here for two years. When they've been around for four years or eight years or 10 years like myself, they'll see that over time there have been some really great ideas that have been brought forward by the Official Opposition that have ultimately been adopted by this government.

Mr. Ouellette: That's a good thing.

Ms Carlson: That's a very good thing. It is.

Mr. Ouellette: Everybody gets the odd decent idea.

Ms Carlson: Well, we get lots of decent ideas. You guys just figure out how to pick a few of them. This is a good one. We see right off the bat that the Minister of Environment thinks that it isn't a bad idea too, and he's quite prepared to vote for it. When I take my place, I'm going to try and talk the Leader of the Official Opposition into calling the vote soon so that we can get the support for this on the record. [interjection] Yes. I hear that the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations is telling me not to overdo it, that what could have been a good idea could be lost on a vote if I press our position too hard. I won't do that. I expect to see him and a few other people in this Assembly stand to support this particular motion when it comes to a vote because it's a really good idea, and we will give the Minister of Environment lots of credit for actually acting on it in a timely fashion. Don't worry about that. It'll be a great place for him to be, and he'll look wonderful to lots of people in this community from all different groups.

Mr. Broda: He already does.

Ms Carlson: Well, I have to differ with that particular opinion. The Member for Redwater had comment. I know from the e-mails and the letters and the comments I get that that isn't always the particular position that that minister is thought of, but in this case I will be his champion as well if it comes to him putting this particular strategy in place.

So we're looking forward to seeing that as an outcome, Mr. Speaker, when we see the water strategy that he has rolled out in its final implementation in the fall, and definitely we'll be talking about that over the summer, about how this is a good idea and we're not too far apart, and hopefully at the end of the day we'll see a fine resolution.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Good evening. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour for me to have the opportunity to join the debate on Motion 505, and I am very pleased to be able to do so. The idea that Motion 505 puts forward is a very good one, so good in fact that as I was reading, I thought the Leader of the Official Opposition, the sponsor of the bill, had crossed the aisle and joined the government caucus. All kidding aside, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is to be congratulated for introducing such a worthwhile motion as this. Taking a stand for water, for improving the quality of our water, and for protecting our sources of water is always important.

One of the things we learn early on in life in places such as introductory biology or physics courses in junior high school or maybe even earlier in a life sciences course in grade school is that without water nothing could exist. Water, this liquid that is so commonplace and so ordinary a feature of our lives and that we all take for granted, is really an essential component of life. Therefore, putting a premium on clean water and measures to safeguard water quality is in everyone's interest. All of us are all too familiar with the tainted water scandals in Walkerton, Ontario, and North Battleford, Saskatchewan, in recent years. In Walkerton, if you'll recall, Mr. Speaker, seven people died and more than 2,000 became ill after drinking water contaminated with E coli bacteria not quite three years ago. It is therefore not an exaggeration to say that unclean water affects us all, and the impact of unclean water is all negative. Nothing good can come out of polluted water, and as a result we must remain vigilant in preserving and protecting our water, always making sure that we're upholding the highest standards possible.

Mr. Speaker, in the past Alberta was able to manage its water supply thanks to a relatively abundant supply of clean water to meet Alberta's needs and maintain a healthy aquatic environment. As the population has grown, however, Alberta has seen rapid industrial, agricultural, and municipal growth, which has increased the pressures on existing water supplies, thereby potentially affecting the quality of surface water and groundwater. At the same time, nature's unpredictability has placed overwhelming demands on existing water supplies. For instance, consecutive years of drought conditions in most areas of the province have led to water shortages.

Now as ever the Alberta government is committed to ensuring that the province has an effective and sustainable way of conserving, managing, and protecting our water supplies which will preserve the environment while maintaining a high quality of life for Albertans. Here I would like to repeat what the minister has already pointed out, that Alberta already has one of the best water quality ratings in all of Canada. Alberta is one of only two provinces, the other being Quebec, that are in full compliance with the Canadian drinking water standards.

The Alberta government, though, Mr. Speaker, is not resting on wilted laurels. Instead, the government is already hard at work developing a provincial water strategy, as the minister pointed out, known as Water for Life, and I would invite all members as well as the Leader of the Official Opposition and anyone else who is interested for that matter to visit www.waterforlife.gov.ab.ca to learn more about the provincial water strategy. The development of this provincial water strategy has been under way since late 2001. The goal is to have an action-oriented water strategy, one that identifies specific activities and initiatives, in place by the fall.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 505 calls for the government to “create an organization similar to the Clean Air Strategic Alliance for Alberta’s water supply to ensure that Alberta’s water supply is maintained at the highest standards possible.” The thrust of Motion 505, therefore, is the establishment of what we may call a clean water strategic alliance, given that the objective is to create an organization similar to the Clean Air Strategic Alliance. One of the most appealing features of the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, or CASA as it’s often called, which has been noted by earlier speakers is that the makeup of the organization includes representatives of each of the three major stakeholders: government, industry, and nongovernment organizations such as health and environmental groups.

As well, in developing and applying a comprehensive air quality management system for Alberta, CASA operates through a collaborative, consensus-based process. This is a commendable approach. It is worth noting, Mr. Speaker, that it’s a well-known fact that agreements reached through a consensus exercise are likely to be more innovative and have greater longevity than those agreements reached through traditional negotiation processes. Where could such an approach be more crucial than when dealing with the very liquid upon which life as we know it depends? This is an issue where we need to have widespread agreement and understanding of the long-range impact of our decisions. This is not an area that should be subject to too much negotiation.

As evidence of the success of the consensus-based approach I would offer up the following. Significantly less gas has been flared in the province since the EUB implemented CASA’s recommendations for reducing solution gas flaring in 1999. The EUB estimates that in 2001 flaring of solution gas was reduced by approximately 50 percent from the 1996 baseline level of 1.7 billion cubic metres, doubling the 25 percent reduction target for 2001. Further proof that CASA plays a significant role with regard to Alberta’s air quality is found in the fact that in 2001 its mandate to resolve air quality issues in Alberta was renewed by its stakeholders for an additional three-year period ending next year. In other words, the CASA consensus model, if we may call it that, works quite well and to the benefit of all Albertans. There’s no reason to believe that it couldn’t be modified to be applied successfully to our water.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw our attention to one significant factor that we must consider here. Unlike air, water can be sold and is a commodity. If nothing else we know this because each and every month we receive a bill for our monthly water consumption; we do not, however, receive a bill for our monthly air consumption. [interjection] Well, they may do that in the north; I’m not sure.

Water, unlike air, can be harnessed, controlled, and distributed in accordance with need. It can also be redirected, for better or worse I might add. Modern history, as was mentioned again, is filled with dam-building projects, river diversions, and man-made lakes. The same cannot be said about air. Perhaps we have no choice but to try to operate by consensus when it comes to air since air cannot be harnessed, regulated, hoarded, or otherwise manipulated. It is in our best interest to work together to improve air quality. I hasten to add that by saying that we cannot manipulate air, I am referring to our inability to control at will the flow or the abundance; needless to say, we have proven ourselves to be very adept at manipulating what we put into the air. Due to this very basic yet fundamental difference, I’m not sure that an exact duplication of CASA can be realized for our water. As far as I can tell, it is imperative that the government retain its proper regulatory authority.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, the spirit and intent of Motion 505 are commendable. I’m very pleased to see that the Official Opposition has approved of the actions the government has taken on this matter to date, and I hope that such co-operation in common areas of concern will be more frequent in the future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to speak this evening on Motion 505, a very excellent motion brought forward by the Official Opposition and sponsored by the leader. I listened intently as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was speaking and enjoyed all the comments, none any stronger than those from the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. He’s very familiar with water standards, particularly in Sylvan Lake with the impact that’s occurring in his constituency right now with the growth that is proposed there.

I also listened intently, Mr. Speaker, to the comments by the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, certainly when he talked about nature’s unpredictability of water supply. A number of years ago I used to park my trailer out in the constituency of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and the people’s farm that I parked my trailer on were the Carsons. Now, Mr. Carson at that time was about 75, and he used to relate to us the story of how his grandfather, who had homesteaded that particular property back in the 1800s, had written away to Scotland to get granite stones so they could mill their wheat. They actually had enough water power at that time on the Sturgeon River to mill their wheat. Certainly, we couldn’t do that today. Nature is very unpredictable.

I also heard with great interest late last fall Dr. Schindler speak on water in this province, and certainly Dr. Schindler’s comments are to be respected and listened to. Any number of people have talked about his work and how the quality of his work is up to Nobel prize standards. So when someone of this reputation speaks, I think it does us all well to listen. I was shocked when he was talking about the supply of water that we have in this province that the Peace and Slave rivers, the rivers that we think in northern Alberta supply a tremendous amount of water and have a tremendous amount of water, those major rivers in Alberta are flowing today at 30 percent less capacity than they flowed at 100 years ago.

So, yes, I think that in this whole discussion we are having on the water strategy, one of the things that we do have to take into consideration is the supply. I also think of the Athabasca River, whose headwaters are at the Columbia Icefield, and we look at pictures back into the 1920s of how that enormous glacier spread across the floor of the valley, and now it has receded past the floor of the valley and up the mountainside. So certainly I think that if we were to look at that as being a major source of water in this province in the next 100 years, we would have to say that we could possibly have the Athabasca and the Columbia rivers, which are both fed from those icefields, being probably dry at their headwaters because there won’t be any more glaciers.

So we do have a problem, and other members here this evening have talked about how we don’t want another Walkerton here. We don't even like it in this province when we have alerts to boil our water, and that has happened with greater frequency over the last few years. It was quite interesting even looking over a hundred years ago to Cape Breton Island, to Louisburg and the fort there and the problems that they encountered because they didn't know what they were doing when their water became contaminated. We do want to avoid all of those types of situations, so water quality is critical.

I think that with Motion 505, that has been proposed here this evening, the clean water strategic alliance will move us along so that we can have sustainability not only in our communities but in industry as well. I think that what we have done here as well is very, very important because we have identified and prioritized this issue, and it is so important.

Just last fall in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, as a group we passed a bill which would allow the building of a pipeline for the interbasin transfer of water, which probably was a first for this province, and one of the reasons we were able to do that is because those basins join up further down the line as well. So I think that's very important.

As well, I like the idea in this motion, Mr. Speaker, that all stakeholders will be involved in the development of this strategy. Certainly, when we look at industry, it is critical that they are involved because business does have a track record in this province of being able to solve problems very cheaply. They meet their standards quickly and much more efficiently than a lot of people give them credit for. So it is quite important that we do have a commitment from all members.

Now, then, another issue that we have to look at in this province because we are expanding not only from a population base but from an industrial base is that the demands on our fresh water are growing, and I certainly took with notice the comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie when she spoke earlier, and she talked about the freshwater injection that is occurring in oil wells here in this province.

It was just on the weekend that a fellow was telling me that he'd been ice-fishing up around Barrhead, and they were up there before the sun came up and got out on the lake and got their holes drilled, and as they were doing that, a water truck backed up, filled up with water, and left. Then about a half an hour later a fish and wildlife officer came along and asked them if they'd seen this truck back up and fill up with water, and they said: yes. He said: I guess I'll have to get up a half an hour earlier tomorrow in order to catch them.

So we do have, even at this stage in Alberta, some companies that are acting unethically and illegally, so it is critical when we do look at a freshwater strategy that there are some controls, that there are some penalties for those people who do violate our clean water strategic alliance.

So, Mr. Speaker, I do put an awful lot of importance on this particular motion. It is one of those motions that certainly has vision to it. It will allow us to develop an action plan before it is too late, when there is a tremendous amount of stress on our freshwater and our clean water in this province.

So in closing, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members of the Assembly to certainly support Motion 505, and I know from all the comments we've heard here this evening and the many more that we will be hearing – and I'm sure the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake would like to speak to this motion because of the impact on that beautiful lake down in his constituency and the growing demands, the developments that are on that lake.

Anyway, with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and listen to other hon. members. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert in the moments remaining.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am pleased this evening to have the opportunity to join in the debate on Motion 505, introduced by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 505 touches on a topic that is a top priority for this government and a major concern for myself, my constituents, and, I would daresay, for all the citizens of Alberta, and that is the preservation of one of our most valuable resources: clean water. It has been pointed out by the hon. member that the premise behind this idea is to establish an agency similar in structure and mandate to the Clean Air Strategic Alliance for Alberta's water supply. This would be to guarantee that Alberta's water supply is maintained at the highest standards possible.

To give a little background, Mr. Speaker, the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, or simply CASA as it is sometimes called, was established in 1994 by order of the ministers of Alberta environmental protection, now known as Alberta Environment, and the Alberta Department of Energy. The purpose of this initiative was to develop a new way to manage air quality issues in Alberta. The Clean Air Strategic Alliance is a nonprofit association composed of diverse stakeholders from three sectors as had been identified by a previous speaker. Senior representatives from each sector – government, industry, and nongovernment organizations such as health and environmental groups – are committed to developing and applying a comprehensive air quality management system for the people of Alberta through a collaborative, consensus-based process.

CASA has a long history of using consensus in its work. Industry, environmental groups, and government stakeholders have often cited this process as being a positive experience resulting in a strong commitment to the outcome. With specific direction from the Alberta government and in the intuitive belief that consensus is the right approach for multistakeholder decision-making, CASA uses consensus as the basis for its decisions.

As mentioned, with the implementation of CASA, which was designed to improve air quality in the province through stakeholder consensus, the government has already begun implementation of its own water quality initiatives. A cross-ministry working group led by Alberta Environment is in the process of developing a comprehensive strategy to identify short-, medium-, and long-term plans to effectively manage the quantity and quality of the province's water systems and supply. This strategy is known as Water for Life.

Now, in the past, Mr. Speaker, Alberta was able to manage its water supply thanks to a relatively abundant supply of clean water to meet Albertans' needs and maintain a healthy aquatic environment.

The Deputy Speaker: I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. Member for St. Albert, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has concluded.

9:00head: Government Motions

Time Allocation on Bill 3

14. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 3, Electric Utilities Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Now, there are a few points that need to be raised surrounding this motion, and I'd like to share them with members of the Assembly at this time. First, Mr. Speaker, as you will know, every opposition member has already spoken to this bill, some in fact several times. For example, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands and, I should also add, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar collectively have spoken more than about 10 times to this bill.

Secondly, under Projected Government Business for this week the time from Monday to Thursday is exclusively concerned with bills 3, 19, and 27, and I believe the opposition has indicated that it wants time to address those specific bills. There is no other government business scheduled during that time frame, other than the interim appropriation bill that is.

Therefore, there is time for one more hour of debate at this particular stage. [interjections] I'm sorry; there are some interjections here. It's difficult to hear. The member will know that I don't interrupt her, and it would be nice if she would just keep quiet and let me finish here.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, both sides know that there are five minutes on this side and five minutes on that side, and since it's going to soon be your five minutes, save it until then and let this hon. member say his piece.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, as I was saying, there is time for one more hour of debate at this particular stage following this motion, and then this bill can be moved along to the next stage, third reading, where once again there will be generous opportunity for members of the Assembly to speak yet another time in debate.

Finally, I might just point out for all members that time allocation is a fairly common and sometimes necessary occurrence in other parliamentary jurisdictions and particularly so at the federal government level, where since 1993 or so the federal Liberals have used closure, or time allocation, about 80 times. I'm not criticizing them for that. It's just a fact. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is far in excess of the number of times that our provincial government has used time allocation during that same time frame. If you actually go back further, you would find that the current Liberal government in Ottawa has used time allocation nearly 30 more times in its past 10 years than the government of Alberta has used in the past 32 years. So it would be accurate to say that in Alberta time allocation has been used very judiciously and, comparatively speaking, rather infrequently.

So let's be clear that this motion does not abruptly stop the debate at this minute. It simply allocates a time frame within which members can offer any new points that they wish and, one would hope, points that have not already been said many times earlier.

Bill 3 is recognized as important legislation that we must move along in a timely fashion, and I would therefore ask the Assembly to support Government Motion 14. Thank you for your attention.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek discuss the use of closure, and certainly to say that there's going to be generous time to debate the high-priced utilities act at third reading is an embellishment to say the least, and the hon. member knows it.

Motion 14 erodes democracy and the authority of this Assembly. This use of closure is another example of history repeating itself. The hon. member said that closure is not used frequently here. The last time we dealt with a similar issue such as this I believe goes back to 1998. Well, closure was invoked on that energy deregulation bill, and since then we have seen nothing but high prices. Debate was limited; discussion was restricted. If Albertans had known the full implications of energy deregulation at that time, then probably there would not have been the ringing endorsement of it that occurred. Albertans have certainly seen high power bills over the last couple of years as a result of the implications of that flawed legislation. Closure was used then, and it is being used now, and it is wrong.

The government knows that Albertans are very, very suspicious of their energy deregulation plan, and they want to get it entirely out of the newspapers and off the airwaves. They know that it has been the most expensive mistake in the history of public policy in this province, and they just want to quietly sweep it under the rug, so to speak, so that it will go away.

Now, Bill 11 is another example of closure in this Assembly, and that was to set up private hospitals. Whether they're private or public hospitals, they're using high-cost electricity to light them. Another victim of closure was the bill to send the teachers back to work last winter. This goes on and on and on, and history, unfortunately, has a tendency to repeat itself.

Now, by restricting debate, the government prevents the opposition from examining in public all the details of the bill. When we look at the high-priced utilities act here, Bill 3, we have to question and we do not have time to question: what is the role of the independent system operator? What is the role of the market surveillance administrator? What will be the role of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission from America in determining domestic prices for electricity? What will be the role of the Regional Transmission Organization West? What role will that have in determining domestic electricity prices?

Now, I hear some member across the way say: well, that will do nothing. It will affect our prices. The American market has affected our prices in the past, and it's going to affect them again with how this bill is being set up. But, no, we do not want to debate this any further. We just want to sweep it under the rug and hope our problems will go away. But until we face the music and realize that we must adopt the low-cost plan of the Alberta Liberals, Albertans, unfortunately, are going to be faced with high-priced power.

How are you going to deal with your constituents – and this is to all government members – during the next election when they stand at a public forum and ask you: "Why did you have closure on the high-priced utilities act? Was it the greedy picking on the needy? How did you vote that night on that closure motion? My electricity bill hasn't gone down. You promised me I would have choice and with choice would come competition and with competition would be lower bills, but that has not happened. My bills have doubled." I realize that there's even a problem in St. Albert. [interjection] Seventy percent, I'm told, bills have gone up in St. Albert.

An Hon. Member: Wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: Wrong? Is it 80 percent?

Now, Albertans . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

16. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again on behalf of the Government House Leader I would now move Government Motion 16.

I'd like to just briefly comment and state that there has already been a lot of debate on Bill 27, and I know that there will still be considerably more. Specifically regarding Bill 27, every opposition member has had several opportunities to speak both during second reading of the bill and again at the committee stage. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we have now had about six hours of debate so far, and there will still be more. Several opposition amendments were also advanced in the second stage of the debate and during committee, and they've been dealt with.

The Official Opposition leader has taken the opportunity to speak for about 30 minutes of the available 90 minutes he had during second reading. The hon. leader of the New Democrats, the third party, has spoken four times, for a total of 51 minutes. Again I would remind members that on Projected Government Business for this week, three bills are being focused on rather exclusively, which I believe is in keeping with what opposition members would like to know, and those are bills 3, 19, and 27. In fact, no other business has been scheduled, as I mentioned earlier.

So it's time for us to move along on the debate on this bill as well, proceed to third reading, where once again following the committee stage there will be generous opportunities for everybody to speak again. I did remind members earlier that this particular motion does not suddenly halt the debate. It simply puts a time frame within which remaining points, new points, valid points, I'm sure, can still be enunciated.

Finally, I would just remind members again that time allocation is something that is used in other jurisdictions. As I indicated earlier, the federal government has in fact used it rather generously, considerably more often than we've ever used it over 30 years. They've used it 30 more times in the past 10 years alone. So it's not an infrequent occurrence, and it does allow the House to get on with the important business. Some of the business of the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, is time sensitive, and in this particular case we're looking at a situation like that.

So I would urge all members of the Assembly to please support this government motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Fair and balanced and impartial labour relations are not time sensitive. Now, Motion 16 is not a commitment to ensure fair and balanced labour relations by this government for Albertans or for health care professionals. I would remind not only the hon. Deputy Government House Leader but all members of this Assembly that democracy is about free speech, open debate. It certainly doesn't mean that there is a time limit on debate, and this idea that we can perhaps move along with debate: that's wrong.

This is yet another example of the discriminatory treatment this government imposes on public-sector workers. Health care workers require the same options as those available to their counterparts in the private sector. This government denies them that right. It is inconceivable that in the face of continued shortages of health care professionals the opinions of respected lawyers and the opinions of other experts in the labour relations field are ignored. The fact is that this government has chosen to continue to display complete utter contempt for the advice of others with respect to its own labour laws. It makes up the rules as it goes along. It's forgotten about consultation.

Now, if we want to take a little walk down the pages of history, after more than three decades in power this Progressive Conservative government has yet to honour a commitment made in August 1971 by Peter Lougheed, and this is the commitment, quote: in conclusion I would like to state that a Progressive Conservative government would move very quickly to give the civil service a much broader and definitive act which would give the members the same basic bargaining rights enjoyed by organized labour in the province. End of quote. This is another broken promise from a government which when confronted limits democratic debate.

The suppressive nature of Motion 16 and of Bill 27 as well as its unfairness will create conditions making collective bargaining tougher to conclude successfully, not easier, and that's one reason why we shouldn't move along with debate. It is dishonourable for this government to withdraw the right to strike of another 7,000 workers and impose a system of arbitration which no one knows will work or not. Many express a lack of confidence in its impartiality. Why impose a system that demonstrates this government's lack of faith in the collective bargaining process for health care workers?

Bill 27 will make it relatively easy now for management to get around its duty to bargain in good faith, but we're going to ram this right through this Assembly. Now, when we allow closure on the Bill 27 debate – you can call it a time limit if you want, but it is closure – we are promoting the idea that management, in this case the Provincial Health Authorities of Alberta, can reject a proposal, any proposal, from the health care professionals without fear of a strike or in most cases even a means of forced arbitration. That's why Motion 16 is unfair and unduly compromises the bargaining position of the health care workers.

Motion 16 is also unfair and unduly compromises the democratic processes of this Assembly. Motion 16 will only reinforce with the general public the support that already is there and will remain there for health care workers and their cause. Everyone knows – it's well documented – the effects that the health care funding cuts and the subsequent reorganization of health care in this province have had on the working conditions of health care employees. Now, I remind all members of this Assembly that the nurses have more credibility than the employers or the government of this province. Motion 16 does nothing to improve the government's bedside manner. The nurses have the bedside manner. They have tended to the ill, to those in need, and the government has tried to turn the public against them. The public knows. It's a listless, tired government devoid of any new policies that invokes closure.

Thank you.

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order. For the benefit of those in the gallery this is the informal part of the Legislature. Hon. members are allowed to go around and quietly converse with their fellows. The only place where a person may speak is from their proper place. We have the rule that only one person may be standing and talking at a time, which sometimes is honoured more in the breach than in the keeping.

Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm glad that I do get a chance, however brief, to speak to Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, in Committee of the Whole. When I spoke to this bill earlier – I think it was in second – I noted at the time my concern about the number of functions that were going to be guided by regulations. I talked at length at that time about my concern about the increasing use of what the government calls enabling legislation and what I would call shell or blank cheque legislation, where the government sort of gives itself a shell format to work from and all the details are filled in through regulations. My concern about that is because the public doesn't have any idea of how the decisions were arrived at that in fact result in the regulations. They also have no idea about what their own member's, assuming this a member on the government side, input was to the process. There's no Hansard kept. There's no record kept of the discussion that goes on in the government caucus or, indeed, in the cabinet that results in the orders in council that, in fact, establish the regulations.

The more I looked at that, the more something else came to the fore for me, and I have checked the Hansard of the previous debates on this bill. I don't find that anyone else raised this particular issue. I apologize to the minister if someone else has gone over this at length, but my concern here is when I look at the Labour Relations Code, and I particularly look under section 12, which is setting out what the duties are of the Labour Relations Board and what its function is, what it oversees, the decisions that it makes. I go back and I start looking at what in fact is – and this is where the questions start, Mr. Minister – being taken over by the government. Is it just for the purpose of this act, or is this the beginning of a series of labour acts that we see being changed, where the Lieutenant Governor in Council, in other words the cabinet, takes over the function and the duties of the Labour Relations Board? When I do start comparing back and forth, that is what's happening.

Now, I'm just going to go off on one little tangent here. I had done some research to find out if there was any kind of a definition that existed anywhere for "receiving collective agreement." It doesn't appear in the definitions that are at the beginning of Bill 27. It does not appear in the Labour Relations Code. I've looked in both of those places. I checked through the earlier Hansard recordings of the debate on this bill. Nowhere do I find this.

I have stated in the past and I'm on record as saying that I don't myself come from a labour background, but my family certainly does, so perhaps I missed something. Perhaps everyone else in the world understands this, but I don't see that there's a definition for that, and I think it only fair that it be there so that people understand exactly what's being said by the government's regulations in this bill. Partly that is able to be accomplished by having the minister himself speak on record in Hansard because then it can be looked up. So that was just one little thing I wanted to clear up from the last time that I spoke on this.

Now, when I start to look at the comparisons between section 12 of the Labour Relations Code and, in fact, the very long section which is section 5 in the amending act – but it's really pertaining to section 162.1 and 14 sections or phrases or subsections that are setting out these duties and discussing what will in fact be created through a regulation – I start to see where there's crossover here. In particular, the ability of the Labour Relations Code to decide what is an organization – sorry; this is section 12(3):

The Board may decide for the purposes of this Act whether . . .

(c) an organization or association is an employers' organization,

(d) an organization of employees is a trade union.

So it's defining and it claims for itself the right to define what is a trade union, yet we have, when I look at section (b)(iii), respecting the manner of determining which trade unions are eligible trade unions for the purposes of a vote by employees to select a bargaining agent for a region-wide functional bargaining unit.

That's exactly what the Labour Relations Board does. So why is the government now doing it through cabinet under regulation? Why? I haven't heard an explanation from the minister as to what's going on here. So do we take it that the Labour Relations Board is – what? – suspended when this act is in play, or it doesn't come into play? Well, the minister is shaking his head at me, but I've heard no explanation on that, so I'm assuming that he's going to get up and give me an explanation on it. But why would the government the minister represents choose to undermine the Labour Relations Board, that this government has put in place, by doing things like determining what collective agreement will be the final collective agreement for the purposes of this act – that's something the Labour Relations Board does – or determining which type of agreement is going to be in place for a regionwide bargaining unit? These regulations are saying that the government is going to select that or decide that. That's the Labour Relation Board's job, and it's set out in section 12 of the Labour Relations Code that that's in fact what the Labour Relations Board does.

I've already talked about “which trade unions are eligible trade unions.”

Then it's got regulations “respecting the conduct of votes on any issue related to the selection of a bargaining agent or a receiving collective agreement.” Well, when we look underneath the subsection I was referring to earlier, section 12(3)– and I'm into the initials here:

- (e) an employer has given an employers' organization authority to bargain collectively on the employer's behalf or has revoked that authority,
- (f) a collective agreement has been entered into,
- (g) a person is bound by a collective agreement.

I'm going to skip down a bit. “A group of employees is a unit appropriate for collective bargaining.” That's decided by and is a power given to the Labour Relations Board under this act. How about section (o), “a person is included in or excluded from a unit” or section (p) “an employer is affected by a registration certificate of a registered employers' organization”? How about section (4)?

The Board has exclusive jurisdiction to exercise the powers conferred on it by or under this Act and to determine all questions of fact or law that arise in any matter before it and the action or decision of the Board on them is final and conclusive for all purposes, but the Board may [from time to time] whether or not an application has commenced under section 19(2), reconsider any decision, order, directive, declaration or ruling made by it and vary, revoke or affirm the decision, order directive, declaration or ruling.

Clearly, the government has chosen to encroach upon that jurisdiction which is set out for the Labour Relations Board. Why?

Now, we also have a side agreement. [interjection] But we haven't. I looked backwards, and this hasn't in fact been discussed at length. So we're being cut short on discussing it tonight, but I'll do the best I can to get the points out. So we do have a side agreement for NAFTA that was agreed to by the previous minister of labour who's moved into federal politics.

Mr. MacDonald: Foreign Affairs.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I think he's serving as the opposition critic for Foreign Affairs, but he certainly signed it on behalf of this government.

Why, then, is this government choosing to abrogate the responsibilities that it claimed upon that signing? Why is the government walking away from that or making a choice that somehow will view it differently? I don't understand that, especially since once again the government puts the citizens of Alberta on the hook to cover the costs of any jurisprudence, any legal arguing that will take place with this. The government loves to do this. It gets itself into these legal battles, but the people that really foot the bill are the taxpayers. I don't know that the taxpayers, if you went to them, would agree that this is really where they wanted their money going, having the government going back on its own signatory, its own signature to a side agreement of NAFTA. I'm not even going to get into whether we should have signed NAFTA in the first place or not, because I don't think we should have, but you did. This government did, and they did it with full confidence. So why aren't you upholding it, and why aren't you upholding the side agreement that was made by the labour . . . [interjection] I'm hearing heckling from the back row here – I don't know which one – that this was a federal agreement. Well, if that's so, then why did you have the minister of labour signing it? Obviously, he had the authority to do so, and he did so on behalf of this government. I'm having a nod from the minister. He was in fact empowered to do so.

I think this is a serious departure. I think it's a violation of obligations that are outlined under NAFTA, and I've heard no strong reasoning from the government as to why they feel that they can walk away from this agreement.

I've already talked about the Labour Relations Board administering the rules affecting collective bargaining in Alberta, and as far as I can see, most of them are being taken over. Now, my questions stand. Are they being taken over only for the purposes of this act, only for the purposes of this restructuring or reshuffling of labour relations under the health sector only, or are we now to expect a bill that's going to come in and restructure things under construction or vocational trades? What's next? Is this the beginning of a longer series? If it's not, then why is this the exception? If it's the beginning of a longer series, then what does the government stand for around collective bargaining? I'm hearing as little as possible, and I would agree. I find that there has been a deterioration in labour relations and in upholding and valuing the collective bargaining process in the province. [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, long-distance talkers, if you wish to speak to one another, that's wonderful and commendable, but please don't do it here. We have one person speaking and only one, not either of you two gentlemen. So if you could contain your conversations to outside the Chamber, that would be marvelous.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I was talking about a deterioration in the upholding of an ideal of collective bargaining by this government. I don't know if that's true about this particular minister, but I certainly do feel just even as a citizen, before I was elected, that there wasn't a strong commitment by this government under this Premier for the workers in Alberta. There actually seemed to be an attitude that there was something wrong with workers, that they asked for too much or that they weren't contributing enough or that somehow they just weren't as good as other people. That has never sat right with me, and I think that we need to have a better understanding of exactly what the workers have in fact brought us in this province. [interjection] Does the government consider them a resource or a commodity? Oh, I would say that the government considers workers a commodity but not a resource. [interjection] Well, then the Member for St. Albert can get up and speak to this. I mean, I would have looked to see legislation coming forward that strengthened the position of workers and upheld the position of workers in this province.

Let's face it. It wasn't a brilliant government idea that got us public education, that we all stand up and put our hands over our hearts and say that it means so much to us in this province. The idea for public education came from the workers. I think it could be argued, as well, that the idea for health care, medicare, came from the workers. As I said, people like to stand up and put their hand on their heart and go, "Wow, we're so proud of that here in Alberta," but in fact the idea itself came from and was campaigned for by the workers. Child labour laws: the government certainly didn't put those in place. They certainly didn't. That again came from the workers of the world. A lot of the laws that we value came from them. So why disparage what workers have brought to us? Why are they all of a sudden, well, over a long period of time, to be not looked upon as valuable resources in the province?

I talked earlier about the need for first contract arbitration – I never get the words right – that had led to so many long, drawn out, terribly costly strikes in the province. I think hand in hand with that goes a need to look at replacement worker legislation – yeah, scab legislation – because when an employer can instantly bring in replacement workers, there's no impetus upon them to sit down and bargain with the original workers to solve the problem. They just keep right on going. They bring in replacement workers and keep right on going, and it allows them to be able to do that.

So those are two pieces of legislation I'd much rather be looking at than what we're looking at today. Now, I'm aware that we only have an hour to debate that, and I've taken up almost my 20 minutes here. I know that there are other people that want to get on the record, and I'm hoping that I can get the minister up to also answer some of the questions that I've brought before him about what putting this bill in place is going to do to the concept of collective bargaining, the ideals that are brought forward and put in place by the Labour Relations Code, and in fact what the job description, the duties, responsibilities, and the powers of the Labour Relations Board are.

I want to leave that discussion by talking about fairness or equity or a concept of evenhandedness because that is what the Labour Relations Board is charged to do, and I think people believe that it does. I think people believe that the Labour Relations Board does come at things in an evenhanded manner, trying hard to balance both the interests of the employers and the employees, of the workers. Perhaps if government members don't believe that, they'll get on the record and say it, but I've never heard the government criticize the Labour Relations Board for not being evenhanded.

I think the real concern for me underlying all of this is that we would not have that same evenhanded approach when we look at the government deciding how these regulations are going to work behind closed doors. Again, we don't get to hear what the discussion is. We don't get to hear whether the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs or Sherwood Park or Calgary-Shaw argues in favour of the regulations or against them. We have no idea, and if someone approaches them later and says, "Did you speak out for me?" they have no way, none at all, of going and checking if, in fact, their member did that or did what they said because it's all behind closed doors. Eventually somehow the regulations trickle out.

Now, we were able to get the regulations posted on the web site – or I think the government volunteered to put them on the web site – well in advance of them being passed. Why can't the government be doing the same thing for the regulations that are being considered and brought forward under Bill 27 and, while I'm at it, Bill 3? I would like to see those regulations out there so that people can have some idea of what's being considered and are able to approach their MLA and say, "I want you to go into that caucus meeting and talk about what this regulation is going to mean to me as a worker who lives in Edmonton-Mill Woods," or Calgary-Cross or Calgary-Currie, and are able to get their voice heard, because if the government is going to take the discussion that rightfully belongs in this Legislative Assembly and put it behind closed doors, then we're going to have to get people to pursue you behind closed doors to make sure that you're carrying their voices forward. Frankly, I would rather just see the discussion happen here. I still bemoan the loss of the legislative all-party Standing Committee on Law and Regulations, so much talked about by the previous Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and in fact the deleting of that committee I think was done as a sort of memorial against him.

So I think that what's happening here is that we have no guarantee of an evenhanded approach. I think I can safely say that workers in this field are not viewing this government bill as being evenhanded and being able to say: do we trust the government to take forward these regulations and be evenhanded, fair or equitable, a level playing field and all those other much-beloved and ill-used phrases? No, I do not trust this government to do that. I don't trust you on a number of levels, but I particularly do not trust the government to be evenhanded around labour regulations and labour law when I see a bill like Bill 27 come forward.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, it is quite a load that we've had placed in front of us by the previous speaker, and I'm not sure that I can answer all of the little innuendoes and that sort of thing that were coming out of her speech, but maybe I can use them as a springboard for providing some more accurate information. As I listened to the speaker, it clarified for me to a great extent some of the confusion over individual phone calls that I've been receiving at my constituency office. So I think clearly there is one of two things that is happening here from the opposition benches: either a misunderstanding of what it is that we're trying to do with Bill 27 or deliberately misleading people that might be impacted by the provisions and the regulations of the bill.

One of the phone calls that I handled this afternoon was from a nurse in a large hospital who belonged to the UNA, and she was concerned about two things. She was first of all concerned that the government behind closed doors was going to tell her which union would represent her, and the second thing that she was concerned about was that the government was going to provide, then, and tell her what collective agreement she would be working under. Well, after I explained to her what I'm about to explain now to the rest of the House, while she didn't say that she was going to vote for me at the next election, she did indicate that she wasn't as concerned as she had been at the start of the phone call.

In order to arrive at four bargaining agents in each region and then to have four collective agreements in each region, some things have to happen, but if you're a member of UNA today, then you're going to be a member of UNA after Bill 27 and its regulations go through. In talking about four certificates for bargaining purposes, we've said that it'll be the registered nurses, and they're covered by UNA. There will be the professional technical people, and that's the Health Sciences Association. There are the licensed practical nurses, and I think in all cases, at least in most cases, that's AUPE. Then there are the support workers.

Now, this is where it's not the government that's going to pick what union is going to represent them, but clearly it's in the support workers' area that most of the adjustments and transitions are going to take place. Although I don't have the numbers in front of me, there's a tremendous number of those folks that are a part of a bargaining unit under CUPE and probably as many under – I'm using acronyms here – AUPE, the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees. There's going to have to be some way to get those two bargaining units into one in any particular region. So in that particular case you might have support workers under AUPE in one particular region and under CUPE in another particular region, but in nine regions UNA is going to continue to represent the registered nurses.

So I think she felt better with that explanation, and I hope members here in the House and people that might be in the gallery feel better about that as well.

The other thing: when it became obvious that she was a nurse in a large regional hospital, it seemed likely to me that she would probably be staying under a collective agreement that she is used to. I don't know that that's going to happen in all cases, though, because in the Capital region, for an example, you would have registered nurses that would be under a facility agreement that would be designated as the Royal Alex hospital, and other nurses that work at the University hospital would be under a facility agreement under that organization, and then of course you have the community nurses that have their own collective agreement. You know, something is going to have to happen to make the selection, then, of one collective agreement. Now, whether it be a facility agreement from Royal Alex or a facility agreement from University hospital, the nurses themselves through voting will determine that, not the government behind closed doors. So I would hope, although it might be too much to expect, that from this night forward we get rid of this misunderstanding that somehow the government is going to pick both the bargaining unit and the collective agreement. That's going to be done by the employees in the health system themselves.

Now, I noted in the comments that there was a concern about the workers of Alberta, and I think it's fair to say that the concern for the workers of Alberta, if we mean that – if what we're truly talking about here is people that go to work that happen to live in Alberta, then I think that all three parties in this House can share not only a concern but also can share the responsibility for their interests. I don't think there's any question about the popularity of the Premier of this province amongst working people of Alberta. As a matter of fact, just earlier this evening when I was on a bit of a recess from my duties here in the House, I happened to be watching television, and there was quite a good documentary on this evening, The Education of . . . Ralph Klein. Now, there's an order in this House, but you don't have to get up. I'm simply quoting what the title of the documentary was. The documentary was The Education of . . . Ralph Klein.

The Chair: Hon. member, I think that the Speaker made it fairly clear this afternoon and at least half a dozen times last week that we don't use names, even if it is a title, so we refer to the Premier or the minister of whatnot or the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, whichever.

Mr. Dunford: Well, I was watching a documentary, and it was called the education of a rather spectacular Premier of Alberta. In any event, there was a great deal of time spent in talking about the popularity of the Premier of Alberta with working people of Alberta, and that stands today, because anybody in this province that gets paid on a two-week basis, or twice a month, has known since 1993 what this government was up to in terms of getting rid of deficits, paying down some debt, and lowering taxes. You know, even the hon. member that gets paid once a month has seen the benefits of all of that, as well.

I want to try to address, if I can, the question about a balance here in terms of labour relations. I want to say once again, because I think I've been very up front with this, that it is other interests that we are concerned about here rather than the interests of parties in a labour relations exercise. I think we as the government have said from day one that we are motivated by a desire to improve the delivery of a quality health care system in this province. You can be critical of us, you can make the phone calls to us, you can write the letters to us, and you can have your demonstrations, but you're not going to take away from us the deep-seated feeling that we have inside us, and that is that there's a greater good that's at stake here. The greater good is delivering to all of the citizens of Alberta a quality and a timely health care system. As sincerely as anything that we have believed in the almost 10 years now that I've been here, we believe in that. The greater good is a term that I use without any embarrassment, and I use it up front, whether it be with an employer in this province who's a little concerned about some of the reaction that Bill 27 might be having, because he's worried about it spreading into their particular area, or to a union leader that's here in Alberta or to a worker in Alberta.

There's a greater good at play here, and that, of course, is what is involved in a democracy. Now, a democracy doesn't mean that there should be a tyranny of the majority. What a democracy means is that the will of the majority will be done, but the interests of the minority must be looked after. I would ask, when you come to look at this particular bill, that you recognize that the workers that are currently unionized within the system will still be unionized, that the workers that are currently covered by collective agreements will still be covered by a collective agreement. The majority might still be covered by the agreement that they're used to, but there will be some transition, and I admit that.

As far as the NAFTA challenge, I welcome that. I think it's a proper thing that that should happen. We don't believe that we're in violation, but if some other party wants to take us to court to find that out, well, then we, of course, welcome that. Certainly NAFTA is an extremely important agreement for this jurisdiction. Why I nodded: the minister of labour, as the department was then structured, had the authority to sign that agreement. I only need to remind all of you that the federal government has no jurisdiction in labour relations as it relates to a provincially organized entity. They certainly have labour relations responsibility for federally licensed industries, but in Alberta the federal government would have jurisdiction over approximately 10 percent of the workers. So if you're going to have side agreements of NAFTA in terms of environment or in terms of labour relations, then of course the provincial governments have to sign on. What I liked about it is the fact that then the dissenters to what we're doing are looking at and understanding that there are legal remedies that can come when a government brings forward legislation and regulation. This is a lot better and a lot more useful than spending our time talking about the potential of illegal job action.

Now, the hon. member speaking previously talked about whether there would be restructuring, and it did make me think back to 1988, as a matter of fact, the last time there was any sort of real change to the Labour Relations Code. One of the things that happened at that particular time was, in fact, a restructuring as to how collective bargaining would take place within the construction industry. So, actually, maybe inadvertently, you hit the nail right on the head, that periodically there is restructuring that takes place as times change.

I think you read too much into my motivation or into the government's motivation when you want to extend this beyond what this bill currently is talking about. I say again to everyone that's hearing my voice tonight and that will read this in Hansard: Bill 27 is a very unusually worded bill. Why is that? It's the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. Now, is there anybody here in this Assembly or in the gallery that wouldn't understand, then, that this is a specific point which we are trying to deal with, and it ought to, I believe, allay any fears that people have about some sort of massive restructuring of the union movement here in the province. I think most union leaders in Alberta recognize this for exactly what it is. It is a regional health authorities restructuring that's taking place, and I think we've been quite up front with that. So what more explanation do we actually need?

Now, with the few minutes that are remaining, I want to assure the member that the reputation and the integrity of the Labour Relations Board is still intact. It'll still be intact later on, but in terms of the regulations that will be made, there will be specific instructions to the Labour Relations Board as to what they have to deal with and the manner in which it's to be dealt with.

When the health regions were first restructured back in I believe it was 1995, the government didn't take this kind of action. We thought what we would do was let the Labour Relations Board handle the situation. There's nothing like hindsight to make you smarter, but hindsight has shown us that that was an incredibly complex system then that we left up to the Labour Relations Board. So this time in the restructuring when it was clear that it was going to go ahead and we had the request from the employer in this case to simplify and streamline the system, well, then it showed, I think clearly, that the government had a job to do in this particular area.

The job, of course, wasn't to strip people of collective bargaining rights, and it wasn't to strip them of union membership – it was to leave them in place, and we've done that – but it was simply to have all parties understand that at the end of this day, whenever that day comes, there will be nine regional health authorities and there will be four collective agreements inside each of those regions. They will be border to border, and so there will be 36 collective agreements that will need to be dealt with inside the so-called regional health authority public health system. That is the streamlining, and that is what we're responding to. That is our motivation, and we want to get on with it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to introduce an amendment to Bill 27, and I'll just move that Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, be amended in section 5 by striking out section 162.2. I'll just pause while you get that around.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member. This amendment will be known as amendment A4, and we'd ask the pages to hand it out to the people who are actually here, and then later you can go and fill in all the other desks. Good.

Hon. member, I think most members now have a copy, so you may proceed on amendment A4.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The title of the particular section here is "disentitlement to severance and termination pay." This is, I think, cause for considerable concern. I would indicate that this particular section allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations which would then override the terms of any collective agreement, and specifically the regulations suggest that individuals "are not entitled to severance pay, termination pay or other compensation as a result of a change in governance or restructuring of the prescribed entity."

Now, the way this has been described is that as you amalgamate health regions, you will be continuing your job, but you will have a different organization that you work for and therefore you're not entitled to severance pay as a result of the reorganization of the health authorities, and your job is unchanged. There's a certain reasonableness to that, Mr. Chairman, but I think the concern is that this is not the only agenda of the government.

The other agenda of the government, which was set out in the Mazankowski report, is an increased role for the private sector in health care delivery. So we may find that in fact many workers, if the government pursues this misguided agenda, may end up working on a contract basis, and this section in our estimation would allow the government to make regulations which would disallow severance even if people were going to be working at the same type of job but for dramatically reduced salary and benefits or wages and benefits. So I think that that's a problem.

Perhaps at least this amendment will elicit a clarification on the record by the minister. It is troublesome that the increasing level of privatization and divestiture of different functions in the health care system may in fact result in the situation that employees who've been working for a number of years for a regional health authority may not be entitled to any compensation, and that includes the potential loss of pension contributions in any negotiated severance or termination payouts. So this amendment quite simply would just delete this, and if the government wants to bring forward something later on that is more specific, clear, and produces less uncertainty, then, you know, we would welcome that. In the meantime this broad clause allows the cabinet essentially to make rules in a variety of circumstances and not just the simple circumstance of reorganization of health authorities, so we believe that it should be deleted.

Mr. Chairman, as I hope to introduce a second one in the remaining time, I will not take the full amount of time and will take my seat and look forward to the response of the minister and other members.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on amendment A4.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, will be brief in the amount of time that we have to discuss these very important matters. In light of the fact that I do not believe that my questions that I directly earlier to the government in regard to this matter have been answered adequately, I'm going to support the amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Certainly – and this was recognized by the provincial health authorities of Alberta themselves – revisions to the health authority boundaries would have a significant impact on collective bargaining. The resulting transfer, as I understand it, of services and employees from one old region to one of the newly created regions certainly could and would produce challenges in the areas of seniority, portability of benefits, and compensation. Certainly, someone over there must have an idea of what all that was going to cost, or they wouldn't have slipped this through at the back of the bill. Until someone can tell this side of the House precisely what those costs would be in the event of section 162(2), disentanglement to severance and termination pay, what the consequences of this would be for the taxpayers, I'm going to certainly support amendment A4.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on amendment A4.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise and speak to amendment A4. I'm going to support this amendment for all the reasons that the two previous speakers have given, but as well one of the reasons that I think it's important to support this amendment is that I was going through a newsletter called Challenger, and there was a letter published in that newsletter from a medical radiation technologist at the Royal Alexandra hospital to the Minister of Community Development. She makes many, many points in here as to why we cannot leave clause 162.2 in this particular bill.

An Hon. Member: Tell us, Bill.

Mr. Bonner: I certainly will give you a little information here then. She goes on to say:

My contract with the employer expired on March 31, 2002. My union, the Health Sciences Association of Alberta, has been negotiating a new contract since the fall of 2001. Contract negotiation is a very long process but made even longer because the employer's representatives at the negotiating table are unable to make any decisions. Mediation took us nowhere, so now we are at the point of going to the arbitration. I don't understand why it has to come to that.

Now, these here are people that cannot go out on strike. "We are told," as she says, "that we can't strike because we are 'the essential services.'" That's exactly what this bill is going to do to over 7,000 workers: make them essential services so they can't strike. She says, "Yet we are not treated as such when it comes to negotiating a new contract."

Other concerns that she has:

Lately our professional provincial body formed a college to comply with the Health Professions Act. Do you know that our fees jumped from $190 a year to $540 per year? The employer reimburses none of that. On top of that we are required to have 48 hours of continuing education courses and credits. As you would imagine, that will also require some costs.

She goes on to say, Mr. Chairman:

I feel that the public needs to know all about those issues and only then will they be able to understand why they have to wait for the ambulance for 20-30 minutes, wait in ER room for 2-10 hours, wait to see a specialist for 6 months, wait to have diagnostic tests (MRI scans) for 6 months, etc. It is really difficult for me to understand that all of this is happening in the wealthiest province of this country and in the best country in the world.

She finally ends up by making a comment to the minister.

I am asking you to support our process of arbitration. Please keep in mind that hospitals do not function with just doctors and nurses. Allied health care workers make up many pieces of the complicated puzzle. We need them in order for the whole system to function effectively.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that when we do look at this amendment, it is a very good amendment because it will strike out that part of the bill that leads to this type of action or inaction by the employer. In the whole process of looking at contract negotiations, as the minister himself said: the greater good. So when we look at regulations, it is for the greater good not only for those people who are sick or injured in hospitals, but it is also for the worker, for society at large.

As well, another point she made very strongly was that there has to be fairness, and I think people that have been negotiating since 2001 who have not got a contract to this day are not being treated fairly. Regulations such as one person could be empowered to institute will certainly lead more to a process that is not fair for workers but will result in hopefully not job action of the type of an illegal strike but certainly will not make for good morale and good care for patients.

The minister also talked about streamlining the process. Well, we have a process currently here with these workers, who after almost two years still do not have a new contract. Their last one expired a year ago. There were negotiations for almost a year before that. So we do need a much, much better, a much, much stronger. . . [interjection] Would the minister like to partake, Mr. Chairman?

The Chair: The chairman would like to partake by asking you if you would table the letter that you quoted extensively from.

No, hon. member. You have the floor, and if the minister or the hon. member being referenced wishes to speak after you're finished, that's fine, but you're on.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you. I'll try to finish up here because I do realize he does have another amendment.

We have an amendment here which is a very good amendment. If we strip people of their collective bargaining rights, then we are putting 7,000 more workers in the same position as this person here, and if that does occur, then we are going to have 7,000 more workers in this province who are not being treated with fairness.

So thank you very much for that opportunity, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. I want people to vote against this amendment. It's very simple, again, what our motivation is here. This government has never been happy with the rulings that came out of the so-called Grande Cache case. People employed one day, employed the next day, different name on a paycheque, but became eligible for severance pay, and because we're moving the Alberta Mental Health Boards into the regional health authorities, we need 162.2(1) and (2) to make sure that that doesn't happen in this case.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on amendment A4.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, on the amendment. I, too, support this amendment, and I'll keep my comments short because of the brief amount of time still available to us. The brief amount of time is available to us because of time allocation that's been brought in.

Now, this amendment follows very nicely with the two amendments that we brought in previously in the very limited time that we've had to debate this bill. Let the record show that this bill has been repeatedly brought in after 9 o'clock at night, and there is a good reason for that happening. The government does not want participation by the public in this particular debate.

Mr. Dunford: It's called Standing Orders.

Ms Carlson: It's not called Standing Orders. Mr. Chairman, this government has the ability to bring in substantive bills like this in the afternoon and in the evenings . . .

Mr. Dunford: Quit playing to the gallery and just do your job.

Ms Carlson: I am doing my job by ensuring that people know what has happened in the progress on this bill, and it has been a serious problem for democracy in this province. We have seen this bill come in late at night. We have seen debate limited on it. We have seen very, very good amendments being brought forward to make a crappy bill better, and look what happens. You know, nobody talks about them, nobody supports them, and we see debate limited like this.

This is a good amendment, and it follows in line with the two that we brought in in the very limited time we had to bring in amendments last week, which was Wednesday evening after 9 o'clock at night. Then, after we voted on the two amendments, you guys adjourned debate because you don't have the stuff it takes to stay here and debate this stuff and put good information on the record. Let the record show that the minister is laughing at that. He spent a very limited amount of time debating this bill. There's another minister, the Minister of Environment, who refuses to enter into debate in a legitimate fashion in this province, and he should stand up and be counted on this, let the voters in his constituency know where he stood on the issue to take rights away from health care workers and to union-bust. That's essentially where we're going with this legislation. I will definitely be supporting this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the amendment A4.

Mr. Mason: Just to conclude, Mr. Chairman, it would be fine if the minister's amendment or if the minister's clause in the act was limited to the kinds of circumstances that he's referring to, but it's not, and I think everyone is very concerned that people could end up with a dramatically different job or dramatically different collective agreement or dramatically different employer and still have their severance taken away from them. This possibility is open under this particular clause, so the amendment takes it away. If the minister wants to bring something that's a little more certain and clear, then I certainly welcome that, but in the meantime I think that the members on the government should vote against the government on this particular bill.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to move an amendment, that Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, be amended in section 5 in the proposed section 162.1(1)(b) by striking out "whether with or without a vote of employees" and substituting "and the timing of votes of employees."

The Chair: Thank you, hon. member. We'll just take a few moments for the papers to be taken around to people.

Hon. member, why don't you commence?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, this particular amendment changes 162.1(1)(b), which allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to regulate changes in bargaining units without providing for members of the bargaining unit to vote on the changes. The intention of this amendment is to ensure that the Lieutenant Governor in Council provides for votes by requiring that the regulations set the timing of votes. So it's an elegant amendment, and it very neatly requires changes in bargaining units to be settled by a vote of those people who are affected. That's all I'll say at this point.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: If you wish to speak, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, as we conclude debate, unfortunately as a result of the closure motion this evening on Bill 27, I must say that I'm very concerned about future labour relations in this province in the health care professions.

Thank you.

The Chair: I'm sorry to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but pursuant to Government Motion 16, agreed to March 24, 2003, which states that after a one-hour debate all questions must be decided to conclude debate on Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, in the Committee of the Whole, now I must put the following questions, then, to conclude debate. Having named the bill and given its title, on the clauses of the bill, are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed?

An Hon. Member: No.

The Chair: Carried.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:45 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

For the motion:

Ady	Hlady	Norris
Broda	Horner	Ouellette
Cenaiko	Jablonski	Renner
Coutts	Johnson	Smith
Ducharme	Jonson	Snelgrove
Dunford	Knight	Stelmach
Evans	Lougheed	Stevens
Forsyth	Lukaszuk	Strang
Friedel	Masyk	Taylor
Graham	McClelland	Vandermeer
Graydon	McFarland	Zwozdesky
Herard

Against the motion:

Blakeman	Carlson	Mason
Bonner	MacDonald

Totals:	For – 34	Against – 5
---------	----------	-------------

[The clauses of Bill 27 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Chair: Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 27.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 27. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

11:00head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 3 Electric Utilities Act

The Chair: We have on the floor from a previous Committee of the Whole on this bill amendment A3, as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Are there any other comments?

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, we continue to support that amendment and call for the vote.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

The Chair: Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to finally be able to put my remarks on the record for this bill. In fact, I had risen to speak to a reasoned amendment back in second reading and spoke briefly to a reasoned amendment and then was one of the people that did not get to speak full out in second reading because the reasoned amendment necessitated the immediate vote out of second reading. Then every time that I have been here, every night as the bill got called onto the floor late, late at night, I was ready to speak, and they adjourned and went home, so I never got a chance to speak in Committee of the Whole until this time. So I'm pleased to be able to get the opportunity to do that now.

An Hon. Member: I thought the government said that everybody spoke a whole bunch of times.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. I know the government said that everybody spoke a whole bunch of times, but they really didn't look at their records very carefully.

One of the first things that I want to make sure I do get on the record at this opportunity is to request that we get the regulations for this bill. Once again we have an enabling piece of enabling legislation from this government which sets out the sort of context or format of what the government would like to see, and everything else is accomplished through regulations. They did manage to set a very fine example with Bill 19, the natural gas amendment act, and put the regulations on the web site for everyone to be able to see and understand and to be able to approach their MLA to bring additional questions forward or to participate directly. That's fine. The point is that the regulations were known. It wasn't a secret. I would like to request that the regulations for this bill also be posted on a government web site or a nongovernment web site. I really don't care. Just get the regs out there so that people can have a look at them and understand exactly what the devil is in those details, because the detail is definitely the regs. So I wanted to make sure that I got that on the record and didn't let that slip by.

I do not like this bill. My notes are all from second reading, but of course it's past second reading. In Committee of the Whole one may speak more in depth about what's being proposed, can go in fact line by line or word by word and/or bring amendments, all of which are perfectly acceptable, despite what the Minister of Justice would like us to believe, that we should only be doing one or the other but not both.

What I don't like about this plan is that it doesn't put the consumer first. I think that a government electricity plan should be to provide electricity to Albertans at the lowest cost. It should not be to provide a more attractive market for electricity retailers. So my overriding question around this bill is: who benefits? And the answer I do not think is Albertans and certainly not if we are to judge this bill by the previous bills that the government has brought in around electricity deregulation. Albertans are not paying a lower cost there, and no matter how much this government stamps its tiny little foot and waves its tiny little fist in the air, it did not bring the prices down. The government insists that bringing more competition into the marketplace will work. Well, it hasn't. All that's happened is that this bill is now going to transfer even more of the risk onto the consumer, onto Albertans. So I think the answer to the question, "Who benefits?" is: just about anybody but Albertans and the consumers.

When I look back – and I'm now serving into my seventh year here, so I was around for a good part of the electrical deregulation, and I've spoken against it as much as I possibly can. So the government deregulated electricity in three stages, and the last was this retail portion, which is what's before us now. As far as I'm concerned, the stages were: one, create uncertainty; two, no one will build generators as a result of the uncertainty that's been created; and three, we don't have supply keeping up with demand, and prices start to go up. Now we go on to the other stages, which are price increases. So once again Albertans and the consumers did not benefit. Somebody did, but it certainly wasn't them.

So our problem, really, and I think the problem that the government has with this is how to get new companies interested in participating in this retail market. Now, what's interesting to me is that if this really was a marketplace where companies would make a lot of money, they would have been in here like flint, but I think what we've got is that there's not enough profit that the corporate shareholders of companies can really make a lot of money. And that's the point, and there's nothing wrong with that. It's perfectly legitimate. That's what businesses do. They've got shareholders. They make money. That's what they're there to do. Lots of times they provide a service or a product that people want to buy. Great all the way around. But I think that that is not always true when you step into provision of utilities. I myself would prefer to see utilities owned by the government, but that's not going to happen in Alberta, so I've lost that on round one, but I will still try and maintain as much of a regulated marketplace as possible.

So I guess the question is: if a government deregulates and there is no increased competition, did the plan work? You can hum that along with the old saying about: if a tree falls in the woods and no one is there to hear it, did it make a sound? Same concept, the Zen of electricity, if you like. And I think that the answer is: no, it didn't work. The plan did not work; it failed. What we've got now is consumer confusion, we've got industry chaos, and we now have even the government admitting that we will never get back to the low prices that we once enjoyed. And where were we, say, eight or nine years ago? We had stability. We had low prices.

An Hon. Member: We didn't have enough power.

Ms Blakeman: We had enough power. We did.

Now, if the government hadn't made such a large declaration about how they were going to get in and really stir this all up and then did nothing for such a long period of time that it created that hesitation and uncertainty with the companies that were interested in building power plants, then they would have continued to build them, but we all know that they stopped because they didn't know what the government was going to do with electricity deregulation. They were waiting for the rules. They were waiting for some sign of what the heck was going to happen, and they didn't get it for a long enough period that they all went: whoa; let's stop these horses. And they did. They waited to see what the government would do, and they didn't get the legislation through in time, at which point we had not enough supply, and we did start to have rolling brownouts, which at one point I think the excuse for it, that was actually given by the then Minister of Energy, was that it was a squirrel that had caused a brownout in one particular area of a major centre in Alberta. Unbelievable. I'm sure he'll never live that one down.

Ms Carlson: It was a blue and orange squirrel.

Ms Blakeman: Yeah. It was a squirrel wearing a little blue and orange sweater, I think. It must have been that day.

But what we really have here is consumers that are paying and paying. They're paying the deferral accounts. And how many do we have now? We've got the deferral account from 2000. We've got the difference in the regulated rate option from 2001. We've got a deferred Balancing Pool. We've got higher prices. And still to come? Oh, my goodness, higher prices again and risks. Now, where are we – and this is interesting – with risks like site reclamation or force majeure compensation, for example? I did try and go through this.

I have a generating plant in my constituency. It's just down the hill here, the Rosedale power plant, and there's been a good deal of work from that community and a number of other communities that banded together under the name of ConCerv to try and convince any power that they could that that power plant had reached the end of its useful life and should be shut down. Indeed, the Minister of Community Development did the right thing and supported the application for designation as an historical site, and with that requirement upon them the owner, which is EPCOR, decided that it was too expensive for them to follow through on the – I'm trying to remember the words that they were using – repowering. They were looking to expand and to put in new turbines and basically sort of reinvent that power plant.

Now, there is concern still being expressed by the community and others, including the city, which is now relooking at what's going to happen to that site, and I looked in here to see if there would be any answers provided. For example, we need to get the question settled of who's responsible for site reclamation. If in fact the city does decide as the major and only shareholder of EPCOR that they are going to shut down that plant, decommission it, in other words – its decommissioning date was 2000, so we're past it. We were led to understand during the last debate around electrical deregulation that for plants like that there was going to be a fund in place that would help pay for the reclamation of the site once the plant itself was decommissioned. There's an understanding that although the date mentioned was 2000, that doesn't mean that the power plant shuts down that day. It's just that you don't do anything more to upgrade it or upkeep it or maintain it, and slowly as it becomes obsolete, it will indeed be shut down, one assumes within, say, 10 years.

So where is the money to reclaim that site once it's been decommissioned? This is interesting. Okay. I can hear the minister sort of mumbling to himself, so I know, then, that he will get up and give me an answer to this, and I'm looking forward to it. Certainly the members of the community of Rosedale and everyone that's worked on the ConCerv group plus a number of other individuals in Edmonton and elsewhere that are interested in what's going to happen to this power plant will be interested in what the minister is going to tell us about that.

So what's in this bill that's going to help them with the decommissioning costs and the site reclamation costs? When I looked under Balancing Pool Duties, I didn't see it there, and when I looked under Generation, which is talking about permissible municipal interests in generating units, if I'm reading this right – and I may not be – it in fact seems to be saying that if a municipality or a subsidiary of a municipality had an interest in a generating unit on May 1, 1995, that municipality or subsidiary may continue to hold that interest after May 1, 1995 if the generating capacity of the unit does not increase significantly beyond its capacity on that date.

In other words, under this the Rosedale power plant could not have repowered, which I think is why they were in such a doggone hurry to get that through before, and in fact it's failed. So now my understanding is that any future expansion of that plant would not be allowed under what's being proposed here in Bill 3, and I look to the minister to confirm or deny that.

I think that overall citizens in Edmonton have some trouble with this part 6, Generation, in that it is putting limits on what municipalities that own generating plants are able to do, and there is some degree of exasperation that's been expressed to me by citizens and therefore part shareholders, at least beneficiaries, of the city of Edmonton about having the municipality's hands tied around this.

So we've got things like the termination of power purchase agreements by the Balancing Pool, power purchase agreements ceasing to apply, et cetera, et cetera, and then, of course, the usual pages and pages of regulations. "The Minister may make regulations," and on it goes. So I am still wondering what happened, and we were never able to get sort of ironclad confirmation of the original agreement about what was supposed to happen for decommissioning costs of plants under the previous legislation. My question stands: what's in here under this one?

I go back to my original concern here that what I see happening in this bill is that it is transferring the risk to Albertans, that the risks that would be taken under this are now guaranteed by Albertans. I think there's a need to make the companies take the risk. That's the way I've always understood it. You take the risk; you get the profit. You get the payoff. You get the big win. Isn't that the definition of free enterprise? That's not what I see happening here. I see the risk being downloaded onto the shoulders of the ratepayer, the consumer, the Albertan, and the companies stand to make an enormous amount of money. So they're not taking the risk, but they are making the money. There's an imbalance there, and it's not an imbalance that benefits Albertans.

The other major problem that I have with this bill is that it is not promoting conservation. So we have the risks being moved onto the shoulders of Albertans without their getting the benefits of the big payoff, and the bill is not promoting conservation.

I continue to be concerned about fairness. Now, I have raised the issue of fairness a number of times in connection with electrical deregulation. On the last go-round on this we found that there was an inequity in the way things were applied for a number of the constituents of Edmonton-Centre and, in fact, any constituency that had people living in high-rise apartments or condominiums because there was an inequity in how the regulated rate option was applied. There was a better rate for single-family, detached homes and a less beneficial rate applied to high-rise apartments and condominiums. The defining factor here was whether units were individually metered.

Interestingly, I have a number of very old apartment stock, three-floor walk-ups, that are still individually metered, which is unusual because in this day and age individual metering is considered high-end. So the very expensive condominiums along Victoria drive, which is where the Premier lives – and in fact he's referred to the fact that he has individual metering – get the advantage of the regulated rate option and also got the advantage of the rebates that were offered for energy.

The people that were living in the high-rise apartments and those apartments that had been condo-ized or were built as high-rise condos got a different deal. They got a different deal on the regulated rate option, and they got a different deal on the rebates and the money that was offered – what did they call them: energy refunds or something? – to help people cope with the very high electricity rates just prior to the election.

Now, it was sold at the time, and the government talked at the time about how they were protecting families, but in fact as I repeatedly pointed out, they were only really protecting and giving protection, offering special protection to families who were in single-family units. In other words, they only offered protection to families in certain kinds of living accommodations. So it was the living accommodation that was the deciding factor there, not whether or not you were a family or were talking about a residence or someone's home. In fact, those high-rise apartments and condominiums were often defined as commercial, and that's why they got the lesser rebate and in fact had a higher regulated rate option. So I'm interested in whether that unfairness is being carried through under this proposed legislation.

The other issue that arises frequently is that the volunteer treasurers of the condominium boards have to try and figure out what the electricity rate is going to be for the upcoming year. In fact, there's legislation that makes them do that by a certain time, and I often get calls around that time of the year as they try and figure out what is going to be a reasonable estimate for them to include so that they know how to set the condominium fees. There's high confusion around that because they were told to check – I remember back in the beginning of this electrical deregulation – the web site for competition. They all duly went there, and there was no competition. They could not get another company aside from EPCOR and then, finally, Enmax to bid on their contract, period. So there was no competition for them, and they certainly did not manage to get a better rate.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Chairman, thank you very much for the opportunity to enter into debate and, certainly, attempt in my humble way to provide some clarity on the legislation and some further information on the bill. The member asked many questions, and hopefully I can shed some light on some of them.

I think the first question was a deleterious comment as to the effectiveness of the marketplace. Mr. Chairman, it's important to remember that the residential side is approximately 12 percent of the entire electrical marketplace. When you look at a load of some 8,000 megawatts in the Alberta grid, this means that 7,000 megawatts is being served without any problem, without anybody coming to government or to opposition and saying that there are difficulties in that part of the market. So we know that that part of the marketplace we've got correct, and that's 88 percent.

Now, I don't think there's been any denial on the government side that the marketplace at the retail level would be served better by further competition. We already have two city-owned utilities competing. If you're a business, then you have access to some 20 to 25 other commercial retailers to look at your business, and that part seems to be working. So, really, one of the things that we've heard is of the entry of another world-class retail marketer that will add substantially to competition, so I think that we can assuage the member's worries that the marketplace is in effect not working, because it is in effect working.

She did bring up the comment of force majeure. In fact, if you would go back to I believe it's the TransAlta turbine that went out shortly after the start of 2001. They tried to implement force majeure, which is a process in which the generator is held nonaccountable because of acts that would be nonpreventable for the generation of electricity. In fact, the Balancing Pool at that time ruled in favour of the utility who had the PPA, and TransAlta had to pay Enmax I believe a number around $45 million. So in fact that part of the marketplace is working exceptionally well.

Then the member started to talk about owners' liability, the Rosedale plant, and limits on municipal generation.

An Hon. Member: Site reclamation.

Mr. Smith: And site reclamation. I can provide the information. To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Chairman, those who benefit from the generation are the owners, and as a result those owners would incur reclamation as a normal business risk as part of a commercial material transaction. Rosedale is an antiquated plant and in fact has only run in the last number of years as what we called a peaker plant, and that's the time from 4 to 7 p.m. During that time when the load goes up and we're all home washing dishes, turning on lights, and increasing the power load, then at that time these peaker plants come into play.

Now the last peaker plant, Mr. Chairman, that was built under the regulated model was one called Clover Bar. Clover Bar, which coincidentally happens to rhyme with your constituency, Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, was the second – well, economically, one would say that it's the most inefficient plant in the entire mix of generating facilities in Alberta. That was built under the regulated model. It has a heat rate of 10.5, which means it's about 10,500 BTUs in order to manufacture a kilowatt-hour of electricity.

Today's peaker plants, today's natural gas plants, are not only just run for peak performance in the period between 4 and 7 but are run on the margin in the merit order graph. Those plants have a heat rate of 6.5. So the private sector has already – and this is without a long regulatory process – put in facilities that are 42 to 45 percent more efficient. When they're more efficient, what happens, Mr. Chairman? They are more conservation oriented, and I want to come back to that because part of the question from the member has been conservation. It's always a concern of this government, appropriate conservation and appropriate use of resources, and certainly there's no better hand than the invisible hand of competition to allocate those scarce resources via the mechanism and vehicle of competition.

Mr. Chairman, let me move on to the member's question on limits on generation.

An Hon. Member: Site reclamation.

Mr. Smith: Site reclamation is the responsibility of those who own the plants. So I will repeat for the benefit of the member. That way it's referenced in Hansard a second time for clarity.

Mr. Chairman, with respect to limits on generation, one of the real designs of this legislation was that we don't want to have limits on generation. We want the marketplace to determine what the limits on generation are, and in fact that's where you can see the nature of the competitive market in action. There have been some 3,000 megawatts of new generation come on over the last four years as investors who take the financial risk respond to a market opportunity. In fact, this month we're seeing the Calpine Corporation's 265-megawatt plant ramp up just outside of Calgary, and that's a very positive thing. Hunt Power has indicated their preference to put a 365-megawatt generator in the Crossfield area, an area, actually, where people are welcoming that facility for the jobs and investment that it creates. EPCOR, the municipally owned utility, that members opposite seem to love to love and love to hate, also are on budget, on time, and on spec in their supercritical coal-fired plant that they're building in the Wabamun area. So we're actually seeing very positive reports on new generation throughout the province of Alberta.

If I can turn the members' attention to part 5 of the bill, which is the liability section, the appropriate liability that the bill talks about is the liability or the protection, if you will, Mr. Chairman, for the independent service operator, the market surveillance administrator, and the Balancing Pool, all statutory corporations created by law and also with appropriate liability treatment specified in the law that creates them. Therefore, part 5 spells out that liability for each of the three areas as well as their employees. In fact, parties doing business in any market are exposed to the risks of error or damage to others. In the electric industry liability does exist for all parties, hon. member, and they manage the risk and they put the cost matrix to the risk analysis as part of their overall business judgment. So that part is covered in part 5 of the act and can be seen there.

I really want to provide crystal clarity to your comment about conservation. Nothing has been better for the green power industries, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is going to point out shortly, than deregulation. There's no question, there's no doubt on the amount of green generation that has been put into Alberta, to the point where next year Alberta will surpass all other provinces, large and small, across Canada in their production of what is known in the marketplace as green power. In fact, what this program of deregulation and new competitive market structure has done is provided a value on heat, provided a value on waste product, provided a BTU value that has stimulated conservation and stimulated the utilization of power sources in every which way.

You will note that this government, that in many cases I know the hon. member wants to support but sometimes has just tiny little disagreements with, executed the largest green power contract in the history of North America. I know that's important to you members, so I wanted to make sure that that was on the record for you. The price is the price. It was a bid price. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie said that it was a premium price. I know that her crystal ball might be parked beside a broom or something. You know, you would then be able to put forward some sort of accurate prediction, but, Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely strong and compelling evidence that this is the most reasonable green power deal. In fact, it's cheaper – cheaper – than the conventional power agreement that the government had.

So I know that the hon. member will want to support conservation. For example, Mr. Chairman, in Lloydminster, Archer Daniels Midland have a five-megawatt cogeneration in a wonderfully progressive and still Conservative constituency called Vermilion-Lloydminster, and a wonderful place it is. I've had the good fortune of visiting there. In this bright constituency there is also a five-megawatt generator that the Archer Daniels Midland corporation has for canola oil. It's a canola crushing plant, rural value-added, again another positive contribution to value-added agricultural strategy. In fact, when they look at the price of canola oil and they look at the price of natural gas, that's how they run their generator. Now, that to me is top drawer in conservation.

I know that what's being run on green power, the Enmax partnership with Vision Quest and TransAlta that's going to make Alberta the number one wind producer over the next year, is also important to the member, so we want to put that out. In fact, we take a look at Grande Prairie-Wapiti, just a wonderful constituency in the northern part of Alberta, one that is actually not adequately served at this time with good transmission. So, in fact, what does deregulation do? It allows you to put good generation close to the spot where it's needed, and what we're going to see, hon. member, is a biomass project on the Canfor site that's not only going to provide electricity for the government, but it also through the generation of steam is going to provide heat for government buildings. So it's two benefits in one. I can see that members on this side are quite taken with the ability for that to work that well.

I think I could go on with other conservation examples, but I'd be pleased to add those in further debate if they were further needed, Mr. Chairman. In fact, the marketplace is its own conservation device, and for that, the strength of this marketplace is particularly important.

I think that the member also talked about the inequity in the RRO and the importance of moving to something transparent to see how an RRO is set in a transparent fashion, to see that there is equity in distributing that regulated rate option to those who wish to take advantage of it. So that's why I know she'll then support the part of the bill that puts regulation into the Energy and Utilities Board, where it's held now in transparent hearings, and that will have fair scrutiny and the ability to note the equitable charging of electricity rates on a level playing field basis.

Mr. Chairman, I think that most of the comments by the hon. member have been responded to in an honest fashion. I think that we are seeing a competitive structure unfold in Alberta that is now delivering power at the right price at the right time at the right place. We're not having to mortgage the future of our working folks or our new companies or mortgaging the future of our children. We have a good market. We've asked for a midcourse correction, and this midcourse correction is not a creation of this Legislature. It's not a creation of this government. It's not a creation of the opposition's questions. It's a creation of two years of consultation, consultation with every stakeholder group, consultation that cast a net as wide and as broad as to include the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands as an interested party on the web site for information. He's taken that information and again, I'm sure, found some positive areas that he'll want to comment on when his time to contribute to debate arrives.

So, Mr. Chairman, this consultation process, a variety of committees, the Advisory Council on Electricity, the business issues group, the retail issues subcommittee – this bill, this midcourse correction, is simply a response to industry players, consumers, those individuals who have looked at a market situation and have responded in strong content to questions asked and provided us with good suggestions that we have assembled together and assembled in a bill called Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, that has been some two years in the making. It's been subject to a long and voluminous debate in the Legislature, to questions in and outside the House, and I think there's been a quite thorough examination on the bill.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Just three little points in response to the minister. I'm sure that he didn't mean to misunderstand the point that I was making about the unfairness in the regulated rate option, which was, in fact, an unfairness that was put in place by the government.

Secondly, one of the questions that I had asked very clearly at the beginning and to which I did not get an answer – so I'll put it on the record again – is: will we see the regulations perhaps posted on the web site or available for people to see before they are actually implemented?

Finally, again I'm sure that the minister wasn't being cute at all, when he talked about conservation, that he decided to talk about conservation on the side of developing new forms of what's called green energy. My concern with the bill was that it was not encouraging individuals to take steps to conserve the demand upon energy. In particular, I'm concerned about anything that can be done or any plan that the government has or advertising program that would encourage people to use less energy and to help them cope perhaps by retrofitting their homes or any assistance to retrofit their homes, such as the fund that's been proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

So those were just three follow-up points that I wanted to make to the minister, and thank you very much for the opportunity.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to the RRO, the rate-setting process, I have outlined that it will be in front of the EUB, and we'll look forward to equitable rate setting across the board for the RRO.

The regulations – and the member makes a good point – are in discussion, under debate, in development. Some are posted on the web site, some are available through some of the various industry subcommittees that are going on, and they're very much going to be put together in concert with consumer and with generator.

Just a final note, Mr. Chairman, on conservation. From a demand perspective, since the introduction of the new competitive market model in January there has been a reduction of about 6 to 7 percent, according to some early analysis by TransAlta, in the demand rate for electricity, so people are by paying attention to them taking measures.

As I talked to the former Auditor General tonight at a goodbye soiree for the Ethics Commissioner, Mr. Robert Clark, the former Auditor General said that when he got his electricity rebate, he just went out and took that money, $40 a month, and bought high-energy-efficient light bulbs, and he said: I made a decision as to how I want to use the energy rebate that I received in 2001. Of course, you know, when the government put that money, which was consumers' money, back in their hands, we did not put any specific restrictions on how this should be used nor did we want to take programs that would drive tax reductions to the richer levels of society. We wanted, in fact, this to benefit everybody in a fair manner.

So I can report to the member that there is good progress in the marketplace on conservation, and we would expect Albertans to respond as they have in the past, with further attention to wiser and better use of their resources, as they do on an annual basis, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I have a number of comments to make. I also have a number of amendments, but given the fact that the government has imposed closure and we only have a few minutes left, and given that the government just automatically votes down opposition amendments, without debate in many cases, I won't introduce them, but I will tell the House what we had in mind.

First of all, section 106 of the act prohibits owners of distribution systems from engaging in retail functions within the electrical system, and I believe that this is meant to tie the hands of EPCOR and Enmax. By amending the section, EPCOR and Enmax would have been able to continue to provide retailing services. This is the division or the unbundling that we've seen in the EPCOR/Aquila area, Mr. Chairman, and it's clear that the problems multiply when you've got two people involved, one in the distribution and one in the retailing of electricity. That's been a real mess. It doesn't, I suppose, always have to be as bad as it's been, but it certainly speaks to the government learning lessons the hard way rather than anticipating them and dealing with them before they happen, as we I think have a right to expect when it comes to our power system.

Another amendment might have been an amendment to section 147, which would have eliminated the payment in lieu of taxes. Now, of course, the money that Enmax earns benefits the citizens of Calgary, the money that Medicine Hat utilities earn benefits their citizens, and the money that EPCOR earns benefits the citizens of Edmonton. So this is money taken directly out of municipal coffers and funneled into the provincial coffers, and it would be better, I think, if we had the province involved in the electricity business so that the profits that would be made first of all could be reasonable and second of all could be put to the benefit of the citizens. This model of the municipalities is an excellent one and shows how we can provide power at a stable and reasonable price and at the same time use it to offset the requirement for taxes. That's seen by citizens of Edmonton, Calgary, and Medicine Hat as a very positive thing, and it would be something this government would be well advised to look at as well.

Another amendment, Mr. Chairman, that I had in mind was looking at section 108. Clause (b) there will also allow the minister to further tie the hands of municipal entities, so that's a concern, and we would have been pleased to bring forward an amendment with respect to that one.

Now, there's another one that I think would have been worth the Assembly's consideration had not closure been brought in, and it's similar to the amendment striking out sections 3, 4, 5 of section 42. It strikes out the same subsections in section 75, and it ensures that the Balancing Pool is an agent of the Crown. Keeping the Balancing Pool as an agent of the Crown would have meant that the Balancing Pool would continue to fall under the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman, the Auditor General, and so on, and that would have made sure that the Balancing Pool had a reasonable degree of public scrutiny. We don't accept the argument that because they have to hire some auditors, that's going to be an adequate look at the operations of the system. This system is operated in the interests of the citizens of this province, or at least it should be, Mr. Chairman, so not having those kinds of agencies able to have a look into the operations I think ensures that the system will be much less accountable than it ought to be.

I'd like to speak a little bit about the effect of this legislation on REAs. Like most consumers the REAs, or the rural electrification associations, wish to be able to hedge against fluctuations in the extremely volatile Power Pool price. A proposed regulation will prevent REAs from hedging and force them to supply electricity at the flow-through rate only. This will be particularly disastrous as the lag time between purchase and sale of electricity for REAs will cause significant cash flow deficits as prices are increasing and surpluses as the prices decrease. Financial institutions are unwilling to hedge against REA deficits and surpluses, leaving the REAs in a cash flow bind. Now, we don't know if this is an intentional effort to push REA consumers into choice. The government likes to talk about choice. What it basically means is signing a contract with some big multinational corporation like Direct Energy. That's the government's idea of choice. It doesn't include the choice to have public power or REA power and so on. So we may see the REAs further disadvantaged by this.

Under the proposed regulations the REAs will no longer be able to arbitrate their membership eligibility. The year 2003 contracts with ATCO and Aquila have already been arbitrated under the assumption that arbitration of membership eligibility would be allowed to continue, and this was deemed a fair assumption as the task force of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti assured the REAs that the membership eligibility was not a consideration. I'd like to quote from the REA report to MLAs: Roles, Relationships and Responsibilities Regulation; Prohibition Against Arbitrating Membership Eligibility. It says:

REAs were specifically assured by the MLA members of the REA Task Force that membership eligibility was not a term of reference for the Task Force or up for discussion by stakeholders or a matter which government was reviewing. REAs have lost confidence in MLA assurances that they will seek input from REAs on matters specifically concerning them.

Well, Mr. Chairman, you contrast that with the wonderful assurances that we received from the minister that, you know, not only has he consulted with everybody; he's even included this member on his mailing list. Well, if his consultation with me was indicative of how he consulted with other stakeholders in the industry, then I don't think that the act is particularly reflective of everyone's interests. It certainly doesn't represent my interests.

The REAs feel that they should not be subject to the same prudential requirement deductions as competitive retailers. Statutory retailers such as REAs have a good history of payment, have hard assets to back their obligations, and are a regulated monopoly, which ensures their viability. Competitive retailers do not have the above advantages, and I'll quote again from the REA report to MLAs. It says:

Regulations that prescribe prudential requirements are an intrusion into the management function of REA businesses. REAs are in the best position to determine adequate (and fair) prudential requirements for the protection of their members.

Now, I can go on a little bit more about REAs, Mr. Chairman. REAs are already regulated by their elected boards of directors and the director of rural utilities under the Rural Utilities Act. Submitting REAs to additional regulation via the EUB will add to costs without adding to the service benefits accrued by REA members.

So I think there are a lot of concerns that had not been adequately resolved, at least the last time we talked to the REAs about this. It comes to the philosophy the minister described, which is that the invisible hand is best able to provide for many things, and I think this is, you know, going back to an economic theory of the late 1700s, being Adam Smith. I think economics have evolved a long way in the last 200 to 300 years, and I think there's lots of contrary opinion with respect to the utility of the marketplace to provide for anything other than the broad distribution of resources within society. It does provide that role quite adequately but in terms of being used as an environmental check and balance is ridiculous and does not take into account the actual history.

Where was the market, for example, when the cod stocks off Newfoundland were being fished out? The market didn't protect against that. The market is not protecting against the wholesale export of natural gas from this province into the American market, leaving us with no feedstock for our chemical industries. The market's not doing that, and we can go on and on and on. Because the government is so one-sided in its outlook, it completely negates the use and the role of responsible stewardship by government, and that's something that New Democrats actually believe in.

Now, the minister also talked about the question of green power: does, in fact, the deregulated system that the government has put in place lead to the development of green power, alternative energy sources, and conservation? Well, the answer is that, yes, it does. But the interesting thing is: how does it do so? Well, it primarily does so because it creates very high prices. All we have to do is make the price of a commodity beyond the reach of most people and you'll find that it does generate innovation and conservation, so that's certainly true. But what's the price we're paying, then, Mr. Chairman, for this conservation? What is the price that the average consumer, who admittedly doesn't consume the majority of power but is nevertheless completely dependent on that power for their daily lives – how do they survive, and how do they work within this kind of system?

I think that's something the government hasn't really talked about, and they haven't made any claims for electricity prices coming down substantially as a result of the increased competition. I'd like to hear some predictions. I know that we've had lots of predictions from the government about what their policies will produce in the electrical industry, and almost none of them have come to be, but it would still be useful if the people of Alberta had some inkling of what power prices are going to look like when we have Direct Energy and potentially another major retailer enter our market. Is it going to give some relief to these higher prices?

It's true; the minister has indicated, and I think correctly, that for large consumers of electricity the market has not been too bad because they have considerable market clout, Mr. Chairman, and they have the resources and so on to buy in just the right way at just the right price in order to minimize their costs. They have market clout. On the other hand, the small percentage of power consumed by the vast majority of Albertans does not lend itself to market competition, and we've seen the results of that. I will be absolutely amazed if the entrance of Direct Energy and the other American company into the retail market substantially depresses electricity prices in this province, which brings me to the question of the flow-through pricing, which is replacing the regulated rate option.

They don't call it a regulated rate anymore, and they shouldn't, because it's not. It's really just a way of aggregating a market cost and passing it on to consumers. It's really just a way of calculating market cost for consumers. So what they do under this approach – and this is something that the hon. Member for St. Albert should understand so that she can explain this to her constituents. They take the price of power for the previous month, the average price. They average it, and that's the price you pay the following month. If you look at the prices this month that TransAlta is faced with, it's around 10 cents a kilowatt-hour, so that translates next month into a price that may be as high as 120 percent more than the month before.

I should clarify. That's only calculated on the energy portion. That doesn't include the multitude of new charges that people have to pay in order to support this new system, like distribution charges and rate riders and all of those things. That's just on the cost of the energy, but it is going to be a dramatic increase in the cost of energy. In fact, what we're looking at in this bill is the extension of that approach to replace the regulated rate option by all distributors of electricity or all retailers of electricity in this province. So not content with shooting up the prices of electricity now, already somewhere between a 60 and 100 percent increase since deregulation, we're now going to see on top of that dramatic increases yet again.

Mr. Chairman, I have a sense out there that I've not had before. There's a sound, and it's the sound of the voters of Alberta reaching their breaking point when it comes to utility costs. There is an anger out there on this issue that I've not seen before and which I fully expect will make itself manifest in due time. People are just fed up with having to pay these prices and always being told to wait for tomorrow or wait for next year. You know, there's an old saying from the farms in the Depression. They used to call it "next-year country" because, you know, the next year was going to be better. There was going to be some rain, and they'd get a crop in and so on. This has become next-year country as far as electricity goes because the government keeps promising: well, if we just go a little farther down the road, things are going to get better.

Well, they haven't so far, Mr. Chairman, and it should be a warning to people. It should be a real signal to all hon. members that the experiment with ATCO, where they agreed to be the guinea pigs with the EUB to try out this flow-through pricing, is going to result in a dramatic increase, and they're not denying it. I know that the hon. Member for St. Albert is upset that I'm suggesting that there's going to be another big whack on her constituents' power bills, but in fact if she checks with the power company or if she checks with the Consumers' Association or if she checks even with some other MLAs on the government side who know something about this issue, she will find that what I say is in fact true and is imminent.

So this is now part of the bill, and this will become generalized to all power retailers in the province. So what's happening now in St. Albert and Grande Prairie and parts of eastern Alberta within the TransAlta area is very likely going to become the norm throughout the whole province because that's just the way that the market is being applied in this case, and it's nothing more than paying the average market price one month back.

So, Mr. Chairman, with those comments, I'll take my seat and thank everyone for their kind attention.

The Acting Chair: Thank you, hon. member.

Pursuant to Government Motion 14, agreed to March 24, 2003, which states that after one hour of debate all questions must be decided to conclude debate on Bill 3, Electric Utilities Act, in Committee of the Whole, I must now put the following question to conclude debate. On the clauses of the bill are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Chair: It's carried.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:02 a.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

For the motion:

Ady	Hlady	Norris
Broda	Horner	Ouellette
Cenaiko	Jablonski	Renner
Coutts	Johnson	Smith
Ducharme	Jonson	Snelgrove
Dunford	Knight	Stelmach
Evans	Lougheed	Stevens
Forsyth	Lukaszuk	Strang
Friedel	Masyk	Taylor
Graham	McClelland	Vandermeer
Graydon	McFarland	Zwozdesky
Herard

Against the motion:

Blakeman	Carlson	Mason
Bonner

Totals:	For – 34	Against – 4
---------	----------	-------------

[The clauses of Bill 3 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Chair: Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would now move that the committee rise and report Bill 3.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 3. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: All those who concur in this report, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: The motion is carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has indeed been a very good evening of further debate on bills 27 and 3, and I'm sure all members are pleased with that. Therefore, I would now move that the House stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m., later this afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 12:16 a.m. on Tuesday the Assembly adjourned to 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Tuesday, March 25, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/25

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you some very special guests in the members' gallery. We have present today Brad Klein, who is the son of the Premier, his wife, Leslie, and their children Braden and Avery, and soon Great-grandpa Phil will be joining them. Braden and Avery had lunch with Grandpa Klein and Great-grandpa Klein, and of course mom and dad joined them. I would invite all members to give our special guests a very warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When you're from the deep south, like I am, it's not often we get to welcome guests from schools, but it's certainly my honour to be able to do that today. I want to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature 58 students, 13 parents, and three teachers from Dr. Gerald Probe school, that is in my constituency. Now, there's quite a list. I will briefly mention the names of the teachers and the group leaders. We have Mr. Vaughn Atkinson, Mr. Wayne Filipenko, Ms Misti Rogers, and all the parents and the students. They might be in both galleries. If they would rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you a number of guests who are sitting in the gallery: Anna Russell, Joan Meachem, Natalka Harvey, George Flynn, Anne-Marie Piccinin, Andy Tymkow, Lara Check, Bruce Milne, Amy Spencer, Andrea Stabber, Laura Inglis, Sara Cooke, Fred Horne, and Sandra Duxbury. I'd ask that they rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'm honoured today to introduce a group of exceptionally bright students from Horizon school in Sherwood Park. They've been here this morning touring the Legislature. They're in the public gallery. If they would please rise so we could give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a number of parents from King Edward school. They are my constituents as well as active members of the parent council at King Edward school. In addition to them, there are two parents from Eastwood school and Forest Heights school. Let me name them, with your permission. The parents from King Edward school:

Joscelyn Proby, Jean McKenzie, Kelly Collins, Natasha Bergsma, who is here with her sons Raymond, Matthew, and Jonathan, Mary-Wynne Semchuk, Beverly Yeung, Dubravka Staka, Joanne Wynn. I'll ask them to please rise and wait until I name the other two visitors before they receive the warm welcome of the Assembly: Trudy Corless, a parent from Eastwood school, and Rita Kent, a parent from Forest Heights school. They're all on their feet, and I'll ask my colleagues to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Dr. Shirley Stinson, who's seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask her to please rise. Dr. Stinson has raised the profile of nursing in Canada and contributed to improved standards of patient care around the world. Her pioneering efforts to establish nursing research as a respected field of study led to one of the first master's and doctorate in nursing programs in Canada. Founding chair of the Alberta Foundation for Nursing Research, she has worked to promote the study of advanced clinical nursing practice, theory, and research and brought this view to other countries. Professor emerita at the University of Alberta and adjunct professor for life at the University of Calgary, she is a mentor to generations of young nurses. For her achievement she has been named as an officer of the Order of Canada. Please give her a warm welcome.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to introduce to you and through you a guest that has joined us since I introduced Braden and Avery. Their great-grandpa has joined us now. I especially wanted to introduce Phil Klein, because I thought he might be nervous. He introduced our Premier this morning at the breakfast for Kids Kottage, and I thought he might think that I would give him a similar introduction, but I won't. This is a gentleman who does a lot for the volunteer community, particularly known for Crystal Kids work. Please welcome Phil Klein.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

McCauley School

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Minister of Learning criticized low student numbers at McCauley school that resulted in small class sizes. This and low space utilization were used as criticism of the Edmonton public school board. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why would the minister criticize McCauley school when the school is being recognized internationally as an example of how the integrated delivery of community services can help inner-city students increase their achievement?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, McCauley school presently has approximately 210 students. The average class size for grades 1 to 6 is 14.7. The utilization rate for the school is 35 percent. I'll have the Minister of Infrastructure comment more on the utilization ratio, but when a school is at 35 percent, it means that there's a considerable amount of the rest of the space in the school that is being funded by the school board, that costs them money quite frankly. What I'll do is have the Minister of Infrastructure supplement my answer on the utilization.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we assess the schools, taking the amount of space that is available in the structure and then, of course, dividing that by the number of students, figuring out the capacity of the building and then dividing it by the number of students, to figure out the utilization rate. Obviously in the McCauley school there are a number of areas that aren't being utilized to their full extent, and that's why there would be some concern when we look at the overall operation of that particular school.

Dr. Massey: My second question is to the Minister of Learning. Why would the minister criticize McCauley school for having small class sizes when his own research project in this school concluded that there were large gains for students and his department endorsed such a plan under the AISI grant?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely right that a lot of our projects under AISI were on class size, but again that was done in conjunction with the school boards and with the parents. We are currently tabulating the information on class size, and there are several areas in the province where they decreased class size and in actual fact there was no great improvement. McCauley's class size, again, is 14.7 students. The school is 35 percent utilized. A key point to this is that there are good programs going on there. Absolutely. There are a lot of hardworking teachers, and it's an excellent school, but we have to look at some of these utilization factors as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why would the minister criticize McCauley school when the school has proven viable enough to be approved for a $4.5 million renovation, which is currently under way?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have not criticized their school. I've simply stated facts.

With regard to the authorization for the renovation that is under way, I'll ask the Minister of Infrastructure to comment on that.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there's a process that we use for approving modernization whether it be under the major program or whether it's a separate program. In that process we look at the prioritization that is presented to us by the board that operates the school and then weigh that against provincial priorities. Certainly, the Edmonton public board has indicated that this school is a priority, and that's why they would have gotten approval for a modernization project.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

School Utilization Formula

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Minister of Learning held up McCauley school as an example of how Edmonton public is underutilizing space. He told the Assembly that the utilization rate for the school is 35 percent. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Does a utilization rate of 35 percent automatically warrant closure of a school?

Dr. Oberg: The answer to that, obviously, is no, Mr. Speaker. What happens is that the school boards, regardless of where they are around the province, are the ones who determine which schools stay open and which schools close. We do not want and I don't think taxpayers want to be funding, to be heating, to be operating electricity to schools that are 65 percent underutilized, and that's one of the reasons that the utilization factor is taken into account when it comes to operation and maintenance. Again I'll ask the Minister of Infrastructure, in whose budget operations and maintenance are, to answer that question.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we underwent a process involving the school boards, the superintendents, and the maintenance operators from a number of jurisdictions in order to devise a proper way of dividing among all 1,463 schools in the province of Alberta the operating and maintenance money. As it relates to McCauley, there was a program set in place some few years ago where they looked at seven schools within the centre of the city with the intent of bringing the utilization up. Out of that study it was obviously determined that McCauley was one that should continue and that the utilization would likely increase by the closing of one or two other schools within the area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. My second question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. How fair is it to compute the utilization rate of older schools based on wall-to-wall outside measurements, wider hallways, and larger entranceways that were characteristic of older school buildings?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, we didn't do this internally on our own. We had a number of the players in the field actually devise how this is going to work.

As it relates to some of the older schools within the cities, for any high school that was constructed prior to 1990, we haven't changed the formula at all. It's only on the high schools that were built since that time. On the other schools another change that was made: rather than taking a capacity of 25 students per class, we now look at it in a more realistic way and count it on individual instead of on a 25-student basis. So I believe that this new formula certainly is more reflective of what needs to be done when we're building new schools. I recognize that it has created some problems in some of the older schools, but realistically if you take the new versus the old, the percentage of utilization usually falls only within 2 to 3 percent. So it's not a really big difference.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. The third question to the Minister of Infrastructure: will the minister consider adopting our community school plan, which would make viable smaller schools by housing a variety of community and district services?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, that's a good suggestion. It's something that we're already looking at and doing. I must point out to the hon. member that if in fact a portion of the school is used for something other than instruction, then it is taken out of the base, so the utilization goes up. We are urging the boards to look at those types of things. Now, having said that, there's still some problem, because if you have a classroom that is large and you don't have enough pupils to put in it, you can't just carve up a part of that classroom in order to reduce the area.

So it will assist, and we are already trying to get boards to look at how they might do some of those things to actually serve the community.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Progressive Conservative government's energy deregulation policy has become a scandal. This scandal has meant the end of affordable home heating costs for all Albertans. Angry, frustrated, and now broke Albertans are waiting for the EUB to approve natural gas rates for next month. My first question is to the Premier. How much money should Albertans be saving this month so that they can pay the unexpected utility bill add-ons that are coming as a result of this energy deregulation scandal?

Mr. Klein: First of all, I take great offence at his use of the word, his very liberal use of the word "scandal." There is no scandal. The only thing scandalous about this Legislature is the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker, consumers have the opportunity to shop for both gas and electricity. They have the opportunity to enter into budget programs with the various retailers of energy and natural gas, and I would encourage them to seek the best deal that they possibly can. I'd remind the hon. member that deregulation has brought this about. It offers a choice, unlike the socialistic, regulated environment that the Liberals so much enjoyed, where the consumers had absolutely no choice whatsoever. And the NDs, I might add. One of their representatives, of course, was a member of that totally regulated corporation that begged to be unregulated.

The Speaker: I take it, hon. member, that you rose on a point of order?

Mr. Mason: Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Minister of Energy to supplement. Briefly, please.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only part that I wish to supplement is the complete and erroneous connection that the member continually confuses beyond all shadow of a doubt to himself what deregulation is all about. In fact, the EUB has been regulating the price of natural gas and how it's been filed by ATCO since time immemorial. Wake up and smell the rulings.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. High energy prices are scandalous.

Again to the Premier: how many millions of dollars will Albertans have to pay in deferral charges created by this government before this government swallows their false pride, admits its expensive mistake, and unplugs energy deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Unplug energy deregulation. Will the hon. member stand up in this House and say that he wants to go this moment right back to a regulated, monopolistic, state controlled environment? Mr. Speaker, is that what he's saying? If he's saying that, then stand up and say it.

Mr. Speaker, whenever you make change, there are going to be bumps along the road, and those bumps are becoming smoother and smoother each and every day. Deregulation is finding its way into the marketplace. There's more power than we've ever had before. There are more consumer choices than we've ever had before.

Undoubtedly, we went through an extraordinarily cold March – an extraordinarily cold March. Believe me; when the temperature goes up and when it gets hot, then the rhetoric over there will come down accordingly. You know, it's all related to the temperature. That's how they gauge things, by the wind and the temperature. If the wind blows this way, that's the way they go. If the temperature goes up, the rhetoric goes down; the temperature comes down, the rhetoric goes up.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier. To provide electricity to consumers at the lowest cost possible is the best public policy, and the government knows it. Now, how will this government protect Albertans from further costly add-ons that may appear on future utility bills given that on April 1 a new fiscal year begins and the natural gas rebate trigger is reset?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Energy pointed out, natural gas has been deregulated, well, for as long as I can remember. I think it was 1985 when it was deregulated. We're heading into warmer months; there's no doubt about it. Hopefully we won't have an extraordinarily cold winter, but having said that, there is one thing for sure, and even the Liberals can understand this: they don't make any more gas. There's only so much in the ground. It's a valuable commodity today, and it's probably going to become more expensive in the future. We have put in a trigger price of $5.50 a gigajoule, and on an annual basis if the price reaches that, then the rebate program will kick in. It's more generous than what any other jurisdiction in this country, perhaps North America, offers. It's there to shield Alberta customers, as opposed to any other jurisdiction, against the rising cost of natural gas, and it will rise in the future.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, joining us today in the gallery are parents from King Edward school in my constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. I've received 91 letters from 130 families who send their children to King Edward expressing their concern about the chronic underfunding of public education in this province and the looming deficit that their own school faces this year. This shows just how strongly parents feel about the failure to fund the government-imposed arbitration settlement and the reductions in operation and maintenance grants. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. If the government is providing adequate funding to schools, why is King Edward school facing a 7 percent reduction in next year's budget?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly glad that the hon. member asked me that question, as just this morning I was talking to the superintendent of Edmonton public. I told him of some of the concerns that the hon. member has raised and that I have heard, as well, about the budgeting for this upcoming year. What he said to me was that he has in no way put out any budget targets to the schools. He said that he does not expect a final budget for them until well after April 8, which is our budget year. The hon. member should also know that we do not expect a final budget from the school boards until June 30 of this year, so I really believe it is very preliminary, and the superintendent has said that he has taken action against that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister please explain how the loss of a teacher at King Edward school as a result of budget cuts next year, that the council of the school says will happen, will do anything other than hurt kids who'll be put into a combined grade of 29 or 30 kids?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, speaking of budget cuts, I will read exactly what the superintendent of Edmonton public put out to his teachers on March 21 of 2003. It says:

Discussion surrounding budget planning and possible reductions to staff are appropriate, but no staff member . . . should be formally identified for transfer for 2003-04 until after the staffing procedures are distributed.

The staffing procedures for Edmonton public have not even been distributed yet.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll repeat the question to the minister. Will he explain to the parents of King Edward school: how are they going to deal with the increased size of the classes in which their kids will be sitting when the number of teachers is cut next year?

Dr. Oberg: The hon. member obviously has a hearing problem, because as I have said, their budget has not even been finalized yet, Mr. Speaker. They have not sent out their final numbers. They have not sent out their AISI funding, which will be out approximately the end of this week. So it is very unfortunate that these hon. members will not talk to the actual administration and the school board, who are putting out these dollars.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Workers' Compensation Claim

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The WCB's own medical expert has concluded that my constituent has the following work restriction: he cannot sit for more than six minutes at one time, cannot stand for more than one minute at a time, cannot walk for more than one minute at a time. WCB, however, has cut this man off temporary total disability benefits and ordered him to return to work, contradicting its own policy. On behalf of my constituent I would like to direct my question to the minister responsible for the WCB. What job can the WCB expect a man in such poor physical condition to perform, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I believe that I have to be somewhat careful in a response because as I heard the preamble of the question, we're dealing with a specific case, and I don't want to get the hon. member or myself, as a matter of fact, into any difficulty with freedom of information and protection of privacy. Maybe what I can say, though, in general terms is that a normal procedure that one might expect in a case like this or similar to this is that the WCB claimant would be directed to a rehabilitation facility, and at some point upon the completion of the rehabilitation program an assessment would be made in terms of the person's ability then to move forward into the workforce.

It's my understanding that in the specific case that has been raised, due to duplication of documents there might be some confusion on the part of the hon. member as to the actual direction that was provided.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again on behalf of my constituent I would like to address my question to the minister responsible for the WCB. Can the hon. minister ask WCB to provide the name of one employer who would be willing to hire a man who cannot stand for one minute, cannot sit for more than six minutes, and cannot walk for more than one minute?

Mr. Dunford: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I think that what is happening here in this specific case is a question arising out of perhaps the erroneous duplication of a document. I think that I would ask the hon. member to review with the constituent the actual information that has been provided. I would ask the hon. member to review the letter that was written by myself to him, where I offered to meet not only with the hon. member but also with his constituent to see if we can't bring more clarity to this situation.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that the minister's answers seem to indicate that my information is wrong, will the minister ask the CEO of WCB to resign if I can prove that he has tried to mislead the minister with the wrong information?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that has taken place since I took over the mandate in 1999 was to work very diligently, in my view, toward enhancing the performance of WCB and bringing forward solid recommendations. Everyone here in the House is aware of two reports. We had what is called the Doerksen report, and we have what is called the Friedman report. As I recall, there were 59 recommendations that came out of those two reports. I believe that probably in the area of 54 to 55 of those recommendations were either accepted or certainly accepted in principle. As the minister responsible I, of course, always reserve the right to accept, reject, or modify recommendations, and I exercised that authority at that particular time on one or two of them.

I don't think that there's anyone here in Alberta that's had a recent situation with WCB as it relates to appeals that wouldn't agree that we've made substantial improvement in this particular area, and I think it's important that we leave this question with the thought in the minds of all of the members that we have made substantial improvement in this area, and certainly I will not be calling for the resignation of the chief executive officer.

Energy Conservation Initiatives

Ms. Carlson: Mr. Speaker, it is painfully obvious that the Minister of Energy doesn't have a clue about wise energy-efficient choices he could be pursuing on behalf of Albertans. Net metering means that small renewable power producers like wind and solar power can run excess capacity through their meters and their meters will spin backwards, which reduces their overall energy costs. A majority of U.S. states have this system, and so do Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia, and the Yukon. To the Minister of Energy: why doesn't this minister realize that his government has to establish net metering rules before consumers can take advantage of this excellent system?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, in nine years in the Assembly I'd just like to say that that's an interesting suggestion. If it isn't given in a spirit of sarcasm and criticalness, I'd be more than prepared to undertake that.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the Minister of Environment. Why doesn't this minister do his job by bringing forward good ideas like this, ensuring that the government not only knows about them but acts on them?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, and I'm very pleased to respond to that answer. The issue, as you know, is that we just recently have said that our green power purchases will be 90 percent by 2005 of all the power government uses. We are the lead government in this country in dealing with greenhouse gases and energy efficiency. So the government is clearly listening. The government is clearly taking action on ways to conserve energy.

Ms Carlson: Not nearly fast enough, Mr. Speaker.

To the Premier: when are we finally going to see this government commit to helping consumers bring their energy costs down through smart energy-efficient choices with a retrofit program like we suggest that introduces good concepts like net metering?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member heard the Minister of Energy say quite clearly that it was a good idea – albeit it was put in a very sarcastic tone – and that he would take the idea under consideration.

Relative to steps this government takes to educate consumers about conservation efforts, Mr. Speaker, there are numerous programs sponsored both by the Department of Environment and by the Energy department. There's a wealth of information available through various government sources and programs to educate people about ways and means to conserve energy.

For the government's part, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the hon. Minister of Infrastructure can respond. Numerous steps have been taken in various government buildings to achieve conservation measures, and the minister just recently announced that we're going to consume about 90 percent green power, power that is produced through wind or biomass or other means, and as the hon. Minister of Environment pointed out, this province is a leader in energy conservation and a leader in the reduction of greenhouse gases.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Energy Marketing

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Recently we learned that a company called Direct Energy is applying for a licence to market electricity and natural gas and possibly other consumer services in Alberta. We have discussed for quite some time how essential market competition is to reducing cost for consumers, and I know that many people are looking for other supplier choices for reasons that we don't really have to go into anymore but are anxious to look at competitive options. I wonder if the minister could advise us how long it might be before Direct Energy is going to be able to market energy services in the province.

Mrs. Forsyth: That's a good question.

Mr. Smith: Well, it is a good question, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Solicitor General for that opinion, and it's a good opinion because people across Alberta are looking for alternatives.

Direct Energy as well as others, Constellation Energy for example, have shown some preliminary interest in the retail market. Of course, there are some 22 retailers involved in the wholesale market.

For the Member for Peace River: the process is that Direct Energy's entry into the marketplace, Mr. Speaker, is subject to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board's approval of the company purchase of the retail energy business of ATCO Gas and ATCO Electric. There's been a very public offer, some $130 million being tendered. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board will follow a standard review process which allows consumer groups and other interested parties to actively participate before rendering a decision. This means public hearings, a transparent process, transcribed decisions, all in the public domain, and then after the EUB approval or disapproval a more precise date will be set for the new market entrant.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Friedel: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The minister must have anticipated part of my second question. He covered the issues that the company must do before it has to operate. I wonder if the minister could tell us if anything is being done to entice other companies into retailing energy, particularly to consumers and small businesses in Alberta.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again, very salient, very topical, and very important to small business, particularly those who use under 250,000 kilowatts per annum. That regulated rate option will be dropping off at the end of this year, and in fact independent business owners will start making contract decisions certainly in the next quarter and certainly over the next four to five months.

So in response to the Member for Peace River, I can say that the earliest we would see a licensing of Direct would be somewhere in mid-2003. Of course, I will be tabling for the benefit of all members at the appropriate time Direct Energy's advance advertising campaign titled More Energy Choices for Albertans and Direct Energy is Coming Home to Alberta.

Medical School Tuition Fees

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, in contradiction to statements made in this Assembly by the Minister of Learning, an April 2002 study in the Canadian Medical Association Journal found that differential tuition fees make medical school less accessible to low-income students. The number of medical students with a family income of less than $40,000 declined 30 percent after tuition fees were jacked up for medical schools. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given the urgent shortage of physicians, how can the minister accept a policy from his own government that discourages people from attending medical school?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the work that was done in the Canadian Medical Association Journal in relation to this, but to address the issue of the number of physicians in this province I can say that we've done a very, very good job. There have been a number of strategies. The first strategy, of course, is to make better use of the physicians that we currently have, so we've done that. We are continuing to work on a primary health care strategy that will make better use of the physicians that we presently have in the province of Alberta. There are nearly 6,000 physicians in this province. In the last two years we've been able to recruit a significant number more to this province. That is also part of our strategy. We have a net increase in the number of physicians of something in the magnitude of 11 percent more GPs, 14 percent more specialists over the last two years, a total of somewhere in the magnitude of 600 new physicians in the last two years. The third part of our strategy is to increase the number who are enrolled in medical school, and we have in fact increased the number of seats not only in medical schools but in nursing schools, as well, throughout this province. There are now over 12,000 people training in postsecondary institutions in the province of Alberta for health care professions.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are doing a good job with respect to recruiting people, part of that recruitment effort, I'm advised by Dr. Clayne Steed and Dr. Bob Hollinshead and Dr. Steven Chambers, all presidents or past presidents of the AMA. Our current contract with physicians has allowed us to be effective in our recruiting efforts. We have increased the number that we train in our own schools, and we are making better use of the doctors that we presently have.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that the hon. member just made a little bit of an inadvertent oversight. He must realize that the study that I was citing was actually on law from the University of Toronto, not on medicine.

Dr. Taft: He never made that clear.

To the Minister of Learning. At least one minister is aware of the effect of differential tuition fees. Given that the U of A medical school has not had enough applicants to even come close to filling its vacancies for training in family medicine, will the government reverse the differential tuition policy for medical students?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the hon. member has a little bit of an error in the facts. Obviously, in family residency, which is after the medicine program, this is the first year in history, I believe, that family medicine in Edmonton was not matched 100 percent completely. This is not an uncommon procedure. What subsequently happens is that it goes through a second round of the match. This often happens in different faculties, and indeed when I was in the faculty of medicine, what happened was internal medicine at the University of Alberta was not matched and had to go through the second match. So this has absolutely nothing to do with differential tuition. In the residents program they actually get paid to go to school.

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister admit that the already poor access for the public to family physicians is only going to get worse as a result of differential tuition fees?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many constituents and some parents have contacted me with concerns relevant to the budgeting process in Edmonton public schools. I've heard that some EPSB principals are now telling teachers that a number of teachers will be laid off at the end of this school year. To the Minister of Learning: does Edmonton public school board right now have the budgeting information available to them for the year 2003-2004 to be able to tell teachers that they will be laid off?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will reiterate a little bit in that I did talk to the superintendent of Edmonton public school board this morning and raised this exact issue with him. He said that they do not have the information to finalize their budget. I quoted part of the response that he had sent out on March 21, 2003, and if I may, I'll quote the rest:

The ATA local has notified the district that teachers are calling them indicating that they have been identified for transfer. This action is precipitous as district Staffing Procedures – Spring and Fall 2003 have not yet been released.

It is too early for the schools to be finalizing their budget, and as I said in an answer to a previous question, the actual budget for Edmonton public is not due to be received by my department until June 30 of this year.

The other very interesting point, Mr. Speaker, is that the AISI funds, the Alberta initiative for school improvement, which amounts to close to $9 million in the city of Edmonton and in Edmonton public, has not yet been divvied out to their schools, so they have no way of knowing exactly how many dollars are available to them for staffing for next year.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, the minister should also know that there is a great deal of concern that school improvement programs such as reading recovery may be cut away. Have those funds been withdrawn from the Edmonton public school board?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting question. Back in November of this year at the annual Alberta School Board convention I made the commitment to continue funding AISI, Alberta initiative for school improvement, for the next three years. I, too, have had questions from the general public about whether this excellent initiative will be continued, and the answer is, as I stated in November of this year, absolutely yes. It will be continued. What has happened is that Edmonton public has not renewed yet their new programs for the next three years, and in talking to the superintendent this morning, it seems that that will occur either at the end of this week or the first part of next week.

Mr. Speaker, we're talking about $9 million here, $9 million that is being given to Edmonton public to improve their schools, the initiative for school improvement, so that is quite substantial. I will say that the reading recovery program is one of those programs that fell under that funding. Hopefully Edmonton public will be notifying their teachers very soon.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is telling us that the audit of the Edmonton public school board may be taking longer than anticipated and the actual deficit is unknown, will the minister commit to us today and tell us whether he will allow Edmonton public school board to defer the pay-down of the deficit over a prolonged period of time?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of things there. First of all, I would like to see that there be no deficit, and that's the condition that we are working towards. It's my understanding that there still may be a deficit.

In direct answer to the hon. member's question: yes, we will allow them to defer it over the next three years. The key component to this, Mr. Speaker, is that they will need to pay it back. We do not want Edmonton public penalized with three or four months left to go in the fiscal year for them, but they will be paying it back. But I will reiterate that I hope there is no deficit at all.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Life Lease Properties

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Seniors in this province now have life leases as an increasingly popular option for meeting their housing needs, whereby the tenant provides a loan to a builder for a condominium complex and lives in a suite for a relatively low fee. My questions today are to the Minister of Government Services. Has the minister done any studies of life leases or had any discussion with the Minister of Seniors about the deficiency in legislation since I raised this issue last May?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Life leases – the hon. member is absolutely right – are an emerging sort of market or housing option for Canadians who are 55 and older. These are people who wish to move into a managed housing situation and into complexes that would offer sustainable living arrangements for the rest of their lives. Presently there is no legislation in Alberta that sets out any kind of provisions for life leases. At this point in time we've had approximately 20 to 24 inquiries into our call centre about life leases, most of those people just wanting to know some kind of information about life leases, so at this present time we don't think that there's a big concern in terms of life leases.

Ms Blakeman: Can I confirm, then, that the minister will not consider implementing any kind of legislation or programming around life leases?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that we are monitoring the life lease situation, and if we find that there is a need for legislation, we will certainly go out and do what this government has always done: take a look at the people and the stakeholders that are involved, do a consultation, and bring forward the kinds of legislation that are required, only if it's required.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Well, given that this government was willing to enact consumer protection legislation on travel clubs, why is the minister dragging his feet on protecting seniors with legislation for life lease?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, as I just mentioned in the last answer, if there is a need, we will do the consultation that is necessary. We will go out and we will look at the potential for any kind of legislation that would protect customers. But one of the most important things is that we're already monitoring this, and we've only had, as I said, 20 some odd inquiries into our office. If there is a need, we will certainly look at it.

I can only say one thing, Mr. Speaker. Consumers out there, when they're buying a piece of property and doing every single solitary transaction, should maybe take a look at getting a lawyer, take a look at it and get advice from a lawyer before they make that transaction.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I gather you're going to continue the discussion with the Minister of Economic Development now.

Mr. Mason: No. May I ask my question, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: Please. I just assumed that it would be to the Minister of Economic Development to continue the conversation.

Charter Schools

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parent groups in Calgary are very upset about the announced closure of five public schools in their city. To add insult to their injury, in the very same week that these closures were being announced by the Calgary board of education, the Minister of Learning announced the approval of a new charter school called the Calgary Arts Academy. To the Minister of Learning: can the minister confirm that this new charter school will likely be located in one of the schools closed by the Calgary board of education?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that as what we have done at this moment is just confirmed the charter and agreed to the charter. It could well be that through negotiations with Calgary public this charter school does end up in one of the former public schools. What really needs to be reiterated here is that charter schools are public schools.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I differ with the minister on that point.

Since the Calgary Arts Academy charter school will recruit its students from existing public schools, how can the minister justify approving a new charter school when he knows it will decrease the utilization rate of schools run by the Calgary board of education?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, there are two points that I'll answer to that. First of all, I'll say it again: charter schools are public schools. Anyone who wants to go to the charter school can. They receive full public funding. The second point is that it's because parents want it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, on the issue about utilization and the charter schools the fact is that if the charter school is in a school that has been closed by the public system, the square footage of that school is taken out of the calculation, so it doesn't even figure into it. What we are suggesting to the Calgary board of education is that in fact maybe a charter school could cohabitate with a public school, and the ratio of the area taken up by the charter school would then be pulled out of the total footage for the public system. So it's an advantage, not a disadvantage.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister admit that the projected 300 students of the Calgary Arts Academy charter school will be recruited directly from the public system, or does he think these students will just materialize out of thin air?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, once again I will reiterate that the charter school is the public system. It is directly responsible to me as the minister. It is fully public. Anyone can go to the charter system. As a matter of fact, the policy of exclusion is something that cannot be tolerated in a charter school. They must include everyone who wishes to come to that. This particular charter school has decided to get into more arts students, get into more performing arts students, and they have canvassed their school parents. They've talked to their parents and indeed have come forward.

Mr. Speaker, the other point that I want to make is that this is the second charter school in the last little while that has been approved. We do have another one on the way, which is going to be there immediately. The one that was approved, just on the outskirts of Edmonton, actually had to do with aboriginal children and should be very exciting. We also have one more that is under way, which is looking at a good way to deal with small schools and rural education. You can actually imagine that they would tailor their school year around the different seasons that occur in the agricultural community. So a lot of good stuff happening in this system, and charter schools is but one of the stories.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, underutilization has been a problem with some of the bigger boards. The fact is that with charter schools and the way that we treat those as public schools, some of those students come from home schooling. Some of them come from independent schools. So, in fact, there are students coming into the system instead of just drawing from the public, as seemed to be indicated by the member.

Heritage Scholarship Recipients from Edmonton-Whitemud

Mr. McClelland: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege indeed to be able to rise and speak on behalf of another member, and I do so today on behalf of the member representing Edmonton-Whitemud. It's perhaps apropos, because I have this opportunity, then to say kind things about Edmonton-Whitemud and about the students of Edmonton-Whitemud who are represented through the various scholarships. Members would be interested to know that of all the constituencies in Alberta, Edmonton-Whitemud ranks as number one – number one – for the number of scholarships: 611 in one constituency, that being Edmonton-Whitemud.

The total dollars involved are $998,700. They break out this way: the Alexander Rutherford Scholarship, 323, for a total of $661,200. Now, the Alexander Rutherford scholarships, as members know, are awarded on the basis of achieving an 80 percent average in five designated subjects in grades 10, 11, and 12. There are also the Louise McKinney scholarships for $82,500, and this is for advanced education, and the Jason Lang undergraduate scholarships, 255, for $255,000. They are the scholarships for students achieving an average equivalent to 80 percent in the first year of any undergraduate program of at least two years, and they will automatically get a $1,000 scholarship.

Members, there is one other scholarship available. That's the Michael Luchkovich scholarship, part of the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, and that offers financial support to Albertans who have demonstrated outstanding ability in their work and are interested in pursuing short-term or part-time career-focused learning.

So, members, it's obvious that the province of Alberta through its various scholarship opportunities does recognize achievement, achievement of the students, but I think particularly when education is so much on our minds, education of the system as a whole, education including the teachers who make their contribution to make it work.

We also have our responsibility and contributions. So I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, whom I know to work tirelessly with teachers, with the trustees, with those involved in education to improve the system, and I particularly recognize and congratulate on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud those scholarship recipients in Edmonton-Whitemud.

Thank you.

Earned Income Tax Credit

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, I have many low-income constituents in Calgary-Currie, and I am continually being asked: why doesn't the government just raise the minimum wage? If only it were that simple. It seems like such an easy idea for alleviating poverty, and it is hard to have to explain that raising the minimum wage at best would do almost nothing and, in fact, may actually make things worse. People don't know about the other side of the equation, which is poverty rates among small business owners who have to pay those wages, and that's because poverty rates among small business owners is probably the greatest unstudied and unrecognized problem area of our economy. It's as if no one wants to know about it.

The facts are that many if not the majority of small business owners are actually earning below poverty lines themselves. Average employers earn less than average employees in Canada, and with 95 percent of all businesses being small businesses, this means that raising the minimum wage translates directly into job losses and just increases the already high failure rate of small businesses since costs are up but revenues are not. I do not believe it to be a coincidence at all that the province with the lowest minimum wage has the best economy. Capitalism seems harsh in the short term, but it sure works in the long term.

I would like to suggest a new idea, however. It's called the earned income tax credit, also known as the incentive to work program. It is an idea that is credited with lifting millions of people in the United States out of poverty. It also works. It has political support from the left and from the right. Essentially, it involves not clawing back any income or creating other disincentives to work for people currently on social assistance, as our system tends to do. It encourages people who can work to do so and even tops up their paycheques by reversing the flow of money through the tax system, targeting low-income individuals directly, provided that they are working.

On behalf of my constituents, I hope we can look at this idea soon, Mr. Speaker, as it might provide a real solution. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer College Kings Volleyball Team

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Red Deer College Kings volleyball team has defeated some of the best university teams in Canada and the United States. Last week in Oshawa, Ontario, they won the Canadian National College of volleyball championship. But more sensational than that, the Red Deer College Kings volleyball team has won the national championship not once, not twice, not three times, but unbelievably they have won four consecutive national championships.

An Hon. Member: How many?

Mrs. Jablonski: Four consecutive.

This year's team may be the closest a coach would ever get to having a perfect team, with an excellent line of athletes including three players who were starters on the Canadian national junior team. Coach Keith Hansen was able to lead this team beyond being simply the best to being magnificent. Each member demonstrated their superior skills by playing their roles, supporting each other, proving their mental toughness, and together made each other better, a team every coach dreams of.

Congratulations to these Red Deer College national volleyball champions: Nicholas Cundy, Adam Sillery, Robert Ellis, Aaron Schulha, Marcel Beatch, Samuel Foon, Brock Davidiuk, Jordan Turner, Seth Schalk, Adam Roth, Blake Henwood, Craig Marshall, Mac Kucharski, and Dallas Soonias. Congratulations to their head coach, Keith Hansen, who was chosen as the national collegiate coach of the year, and to assistant coaches Trevor Pikkert, Kevin Tennant, and Lee Tippman and also to their athletic therapists Heather Fletcher, Terry Smyth, and Melanie Tuck-Hoppins. All of Alberta congratulates you on your outstanding performance.

Tribute to Members of the Armed Forces

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, as communities and nations around the world move towards forming unions, this government talks of separation. Much has been made about the economic costs of separation: how Alberta's trade will be affected, what businesses leave Alberta, what currency we would use. But little has been said about the cost we've already paid to be a part of Canada, about the men and woman from Alberta who have given their lives in service to this country.

In the rotunda of this Legislature hang the colours of various military regiments who have called Alberta home. These regiments represent the army, navy, and air force. The members of these regiments fought, and many gave their lives. From the First World War to the current operations against terrorism over 116,000 Canadians gave their lives in service to their country. Many of those were Albertans. A high price has been paid for our country, and there is no guarantee that we won't continue to pay that price with the lives of honourable men and women from throughout this province. Many of the approximately 5,000 military personnel from the Edmonton Garrison are currently serving in dangerous locations around the world.

This government almost seems to enjoy raising the spectre of separation. In fact, many political pundits claim the government uses talk of separation as a smokescreen to distract from the real issues. I hope that isn't true, Mr. Speaker. I hope that isn't true because that would denigrate the sacrifice that thousands of Albertans have made to our country.

As MLAs leave the Legislature today, I would urge them to look up at the names etched on the memorial plaques all around the rotunda, and when talk of separation comes up, think. Think about the names on those plaques. Think about the men and women who loved this country and died for it. Think of the price that generations of Albertans have paid in blood for this country. It is a price we must never forget.

Mr. Speaker, I will close with the words of former Member of Parliament for Calgary East, George H. Ross. These words are from a letter to Mrs. P. Quinlan on the death of her son Dennis, who was killed in action on August 17, 1942: "We can still resolve to do all in our power to insure that these young lives so gallantly given for the cause of freedom and justice shall not have been sacrificed in vain."

Thank you very much.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the working poor of Alberta I'm presenting a petition signed by yet more Calgarians, 53 of them in this case. These Albertans are petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to immediately raise the minimum wage to $8.50 per hour and index it to the cost of living.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition on behalf of 42 Calgarians. This petition has been organized again by Joanne Black. The citizens are urging the government of Alberta to "implement the income recommendations of the 2001 MLA Committee Low Income Programs Review."

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'd like to table the required number of copies of 38 letters from residents of the Edmonton area supporting Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. I think it's important to note the addresses of these letters. Residents from neighbourhoods including Petrolia, Mill Woods, Sherwood Park, and Norwood all believe that there's a need to address the pressures and rebuild communities battling street prostitution in the inner city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter that I received from a constituent, Mrs. Kelly Collins, dated March 17. Mrs. Collins expresses a serious concern about the ongoing underfunding of the public education system, underfunding that's made worse by the government's refusal to pick up the costs of the arbitrated salary settlement that it imposed on school boards.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It is a letter from the World Lebanese Cultural Union, Edmonton chapter, dated March 23, 2003. It is expressing their dismay and shock regarding the Premier's support of war against the people of Iraq. As Albertans they do expect the Premier to work for peace before anything else.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. The first one is five copies of an amendment I had proposed to make Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, in my view, better.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is a ballot from the German elections to provide two selections: persons from a particular party and a party which will determine the distribution of seats for the different parties. This is from an interested Albertan who lives in Edmonton-Gold Bar, Mr. Henry Vermeulen, and I would urge all hon. members to have a look at this.

My third tabling is a letter addressed to the hon. Premier. It is dated February 25, and it is signed by Deborah Maidens. Deborah is expressing an opinion that "our public education system is currently grossly underfunded."

The fourth tabling I have this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is also from a resident of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Betty Tetterington, and it is addressed to the hon. Premier. Ms Tetterington is expressing the strong opinion about the lack of funding for public education in the school that her children attend.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have quite a number of tablings today, all relating to education. The first one is a copy of a letter addressed to me from a constituent, Maureen Santin, who says that “educating our own children will be our best insurance for the future of our province and its resources.”

The second is a letter from the same person, a completely different letter to the Premier, saying among many things, “Please supply the funds to ensure a strong education system for our children.”

The next tabling is correspondence to the Premier and the Minister of Learning: “I am writing because I am concerned about the cutbacks to our public education system.” It’s from a Susan Hannon.

The next one is a letter to the Premier and the Minister of Learning from a Janet Haley Sperling saying among many things that “it will be increasingly more difficult to keep Albertans [in Alberta] if the public school system remains in crisis.”

The next correspondence is from Elizabeth Anne Hayward to the Premier and says among many things that “a good public education system where rich and poor are given the same educational opportunity is the premise of a good and just society.”

The next correspondence is from Elizabeth Hendricksen to the Premier and the Minister of Learning saying among many things: “I am concerned about the current situation regarding the funding of public schools in Edmonton.”

Next is a letter from Marie Bergeron to the Premier and the Minister of Learning saying, “The Government is being disingenuous when it ordered binding arbitration but refused to step up to the plate and fund the result of that settlement.”

The next is a letter addressed to me from a Kathy Pontus expressing her concern about school funding. She has two children in Edmonton public schools.

Next is a postcard to the Premier and to Dr. Oberg, and on it is a drawing of “Edmonton Elementary attempts to smash the world record for number of Grade One Students in the classroom.”

The next is correspondence as a postcard from Monika Koch saying: it is an outrage that the government is not funding the arbitrated settlement for the teachers’ salaries.”

Next is from Shirley Dobrofsky, a postcard that says, “Fully funded high quality public education now.”

Next is a postcard from S. Samuels saying, “Wanted: A government that listens and cares, previous applicants need not apply.” It’s expressing concern over education funding.

Next is another postcard that is in the form of a report card giving the provincial government an F for listening, saying, “Easily distracted, only able to listen in an election year.”

The next is a postcard – I only have a handful left – from Karen Ferrari, saying: the current state of funding is unacceptable; losing teachers and large class sizes are not options in my child’s education.

Next is a postcard saying: I would really appreciate a fully funded education system as a way of building the future. It’s from a Mercy Kigunda.

Next is a postcard saying: we live in the richest province in the country; a teacher’s assistant and teacher librarian should not be a luxury.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a postcard saying: our public education system is approaching a crisis level; let’s not get that far.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry in tablings, I just want to point out to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview now, for the seventh time in the last four days, we do not use the names of members in this House.

Dr. Taft: I wasn’t aware that I did.

The Speaker: Well, you might want to read the Blues.

Mr. Hancock: Point of order.

The Speaker: A point of order after the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table a document that was forwarded to me from the World Lebanese Cultural Union, Edmonton chapter. The subject was comments made by the Premier, and in this document they go on to say:

We the World Lebanese Cultural Union Society in Edmonton, and along with over 70,000 other Arabs and Muslims were shocked and utterly dismayed at your recent comments and support for this illegal and immoral war against the innocent people of Iraq.

It goes on to outline:

We believe that the war in Iraq today [is] not a war against terrorism to be supported, it’s a war for oil and domination. Albertans along with millions of Canadians and billions around the world want peace more than anything else. Throughout the history, Canada supported peace and talked for peace, deeply believing that a peaceful world is a prosperous world.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy on tablings.

Mr. Smith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Further to my comment in question period I wish to table today the appropriate number of copies of a brochure entitled Direct Energy is Coming Home to Alberta. In it Direct Energy speaks of coming home to Albertans. They say in there, “Alberta Has Done it Right.”

Alberta’s political leaders and regulators have developed a plan to introduce retail energy competition to the province . . . One element in Alberta’s success has been the abundant supply of electric power and the fact that significant supply has been added since deregulation in January 2001.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to table a brochure entitled “ATCO Delivers . . . more energy choices for Albertans, introducing Direct Energy.”

Mr. Speaker, I do wish to also table copies from a web site that shows a man with band-aids around his nose and a nose-hair cutter that doesn’t seem to work very well with the phrase “Impulse shopping never works out. So wait for Direct Energy before rushing into an energy contract.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a point of order.

Point of Order

Clarification

Mr. Mason: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. I’m raising a point under our Standing Orders 23(h) and (i). Specifically, the Premier again claimed that I had at some point been a member of the board of EPCOR. Now, I would appreciate some guidance from you on this. I don't particularly feel insulted that someone would think I'd been on the board of EPCOR, but I've corrected the Premier and I've corrected the Minister of Energy in this House on a number of occasions. They know that this is not correct, and they keep repeating it. So I think that it's a violation of (h) and (i), but I would request your guidance on how to proceed in this matter.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on this point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I obviously don't have the benefit of the exact words which were used in this exchange; however, I was listening carefully at the time. What I heard being said was that the hon. member opposite who complains was an alderman with the city of Edmonton, which is a shareholder of a utility, at least at that point in time, here in the city of Edmonton. It seems to me, as the hon. member says, that's not a matter for a complaint. I think that the words simply are accurate, and perhaps it's a matter that this hon. member reads more into the powerful words of English, which can be sometimes taken as meaning different things, depending on where you sit when you hear them, but from my perspective the words were quite appropriate.

The Speaker: Let me just quote the last couple of lines from the Blues with respect to the response by the leader of the government, and I'll pick up the quote midway through the response:

It offers a choice unlike the socialistic regulated environment that the Liberals so much enjoyed, where the consumers had absolutely no choice whatsoever, and the NDs, I might add – and one of their representatives, of course, was a member of that totally regulated corporation that begged to be unregulated.

So on the face of it there's no mention of any of the firms or anything else that was brought up by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

One thing is very, very clear. The use of words which can provoke debate, words like scandalous and all kinds of other things, may or may not be words without definition at a particular time. They can, depending on who the receiver is and the tone of it and everything else, provoke debate. So there's absolutely no doubt in my mind that it can elicit responses as well.

In order to have a legitimate point of order, there would have to be something that would actually hit home, and in the words that were used in here, to the hon. member who might take offence, as I sit in the chair on a day-in, day-out basis, there are quite a few words that I suspect a lot of members would take offence to. Heck, it's only Tuesday. It's still March. We've got a long way to go. Let's just thicken up the skin a little and see where we go with it.

The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Tabling Documents

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising pursuant to section 13(1) of our Standing Orders, which allows the Speaker to make a ruling or interpretation with respect to general matters before the House which aren't completely covered, and I'm rising with respect to the question of tablings in the House, the rules of the House particularly with respect to the actions of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview today in tabling his filing cabinet, but in previous days the Member for Edmonton-Highlands also saw fit to clean out his drawers for the benefit of the House.

Now, I do not object to people putting documents on the record of the House. I mean, obviously that is something that has been ruled on previously, and our rules for tablings are very broad in this House. It might be interesting to go back through the history of tablings, looking through Erskine May and some of the other reference tomes that we operate by where, really, tablings were initially the concept of tabling documents which were government documents for the public record. We've gone far beyond that and quite appropriately so, in my view, so that we can table other documents of interest, and in some cases, as I understand it, in the past even a hamburger has been tabled.

But, Mr. Speaker, when tabling documents, we also have a process in this House that has worked in the past very well for all members of the House where in tabling a document one might give the title of the document, the date of the document, if it's a letter, the to and from and a brief description of its content, and I'm not alleging that any of those were violated. However, I think it's appropriate, given what we've seen in the last week or two with extensive tablings of a number of letters all on the same subject, to put into the context of our rules what has I think been the practice in the past, where if one has a number of documents on the same subject, they ought to be tabled together. They do not need to be referred to individually and successively because that will prolong the process of tabling.

Now, we have put in place a mechanism where people can table documents with the Clerk prior to 11 o'clock, and those documents will be put on the record of the House and read into the record of the House in terms of the title, which is the appropriate way of tabling by the Clerk, but we have not changed the rules so as not to allow tablings in the House because members do want to be able to stand up in the House – from time to time even I might want to stand up and table with the House documents that a constituent has brought forward and specially requested be brought to the attention of the House. That's entirely appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, I would request your ruling under section 13(1) with respect to tablings because otherwise we'll see this get completely out of hand. Where it's appropriate, when you're tabling documents, particularly letters, all of which are on the same topic, they ought to be tabled together as a bundle and need not be individually read into the record.

The Speaker: Well, I would like to hear from the House leaders with respect to this matter because I intend on saying something. Now, the hon. Member from Edmonton-Riverview is not a House leader.

Dr. Taft: A point of order.

The Speaker: No. There's no point of order against you, sir, but I will hear from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview if he wants to participate on this point, because there's history behind this. Go ahead.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate that. I was in no way trying to abuse the privileges here. I understand the frustration of long periods of tablings. However, I am responding specifically to the requests of constituents who want to see their correspondence tabled in the Legislature and treated with respect. They want to ensure that their specific correspondence was presented.

Frankly, I am getting a huge volume of materials which people are asking to be tabled in the Legislature not only on education but also on the war in Iraq. I see no other option but bringing those voices to the Legislature when my constituents or other Albertans ask me to do so. We have taken the step of moving the tablings to the end of the daily Routine so that it doesn't hold other things up, which I think was a wise step. I have made no habit whatsoever of going on with long tablings. I am simply responding to the demands of the citizens of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on this point of order.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I make my point on this, I wonder if the Government House Leader has a citation with respect to tabling other than 13(1).

The Speaker: The Government House Leader did provide a citation. Please proceed.

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only one that I heard was 13(1).

An Hon. Member: Oh, challenging the Speaker.

Mr. Mason: No.

That says "the Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and shall decide questions of order." That is, of course, the most broad power of the Speaker and doesn't pertain specifically to the matter of tablings, and it's clear that the orderly tabling of documents in this Assembly does not violate either the order of this place or the decorum.

I would concur with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview that at certain times on certain issues constituents and others provide quite a large volume of correspondence to our offices, and it's our practice to try and bring them forward when that occurs. It is by no means an even amount of documents that we receive. It entirely depends on what the issue is at the time and how strongly people feel about it.

The Speaker: At the outset there is no point of order. We have rules in this Assembly which are very, very clear. There is a provision provided on the Routine for tablings, Tabling Returns and Reports.

Now, I'm going to make some comments though, and I'm going to make these comments from the current position that I hold as the chair. I'm also going to make some comments with respect to a previous position that I did hold once in the past as Government House Leader and also comments with respect to the role that I would think members would want to play in a parliamentary, democratic sense. We use wit here, we use our mind here, we use tradition here, we use the rules here, and we work within that environment. We do not use guns here, we do not use grenades here, we do not have airplanes here, we do not have helicopters or gunships, and we don't use submarines or warships. So we use what we have here.

Now, we have rules that we make. We have rules called Standing Orders, and we've made these rules, and quite clearly we have decided in this Assembly that we would go on what is normally the practice in most other parliaments anywhere that follow the British model. In virtually every other parliament that follows the British model, they have sections, and we have a section that we can quote from Beauchesne with respect to the tabling of documents. It's cited in section 347. This is the only paragraph in this whole big book which deals with the tabling of documents, and here's what it says:

There are, under Standing Order 32, two methods by which the government may table documents in the House. The first which is by direct deposit with the Clerk of the House means that the document is being tabled in accordance with an Act of Parliament or in pursuance of a standing order or resolution of the House. The second method is more directly applicable to the Daily Order of Business of the House in that a Minister or Parliamentary Secretary acting on behalf of a Minister may table documents dealing with matters coming within the administrative responsibilities of the Government.

In virtually every other parliament that follows the British form, the only individuals who can table documents are ministers of the Crown where there is a statutory requirement for the tabling of a document, and that is the norm.

In the past in this Assembly, as a result of discussion among House leaders – in this case the Government House Leader, the Official Opposition House Leader, third party House leader – these matters have been discussed. The conclusion was that in this Assembly of Alberta there would be a provision to allow members to table documents. That proceeded for a period of time. Then we evolved to, the last time we reviewed the Standing Orders, that we would move that section later down in the Routine so it would be the last item, called Tabling Returns and Reports. Since that time, of course, you've had not only reports that are published. We went to telegrams to be tabled, then we went to fax messages to be tabled, then we got letters not only addressed to us but addressed to other people that we're tabling, and of course now we're into the e-mail business of tablings.

So here's what I think is going to happen one of these days: the ultimate filibuster is going to take place in this Assembly. We will arrive here at quarter to 3, at the conclusion of the question period, and when a time order is up to get something done, some debate done or something that has to be done by a certain time that day, hon. members are going to table 7,000-plus documents. We're going to be here at 5:30 on that day, and there is not a thing that anyone will be able to do about it because it's clearly within our rules and it's clearly within what we agreed to allow to happen.

So let me repeat: there's no point of order. But I am going to invite the three House leaders to revisit this issue, and I will invite them to co-operatively look at this portion of the Routine because it can work two ways. The sword in this case is double-edged, and it can cut both ways. The opposition may filibuster, or private members on the government side may filibuster. It's not necessarily the opposition that would do this. It could be 10 government members that don't like a bill presented by the government that has to be done on a certain afternoon, and the 10 just decide: this is the way we're doing it; we're tabling 7,000 or 10,000, and that deals with it. Or, worse yet, on a Monday, on a private members' business day on a Monday, a private member who has the right to present a bill comes here, and a group of members decides: well, let's not deal with this, but here's the way we can go about doing it. So the sword cuts all ways, hon. members.

So I'm going to invite the three House leaders to some time – there's no time requirement on this – basically look at this because everybody has something to benefit from a judicious approach in this regard and everyone also has something to lose if it's not done intelligently and it's not done carefully. I repeat: we make our decisions here by way of the usage of our minds to try and find the most workable solution for everybody so that we can advance the progress of democracy. I just implore that and would ask that again, and I repeat: there's no point of order here.

The members who are filing clearly have the right to do that, but I'm going to ask that there be a shortage of the verbiage that goes with the description in the future simply because it probably is not the best use of the time in the House. But that message will apply both ways: to ministers who want to give editorial comment with respect to the document that they're tabling, to other members who want to give editorial comment with respect to the document that they're tabling.

The bottom line is that the three House leaders are going to be invited to look at this further to basically see if we can find a more rational and harmonious approach with respect to this. I do believe that's where we end with these points of order.

Now we're going to go to Orders of the Day.

head: Third Reading

Bill 27

Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like on behalf of the government to move third reading of Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003.

Once again pointing out that it is an unusual title and refers specifically to regional health authorities' restructuring will refer specifically to the fact that there are identifiable regional health authorities and that this will put in place a system of transition so that at the end of the process we will end up with nine regional health authorities, four bargaining certificates in each of those nine regional health authorities, and of course then there will be one collective agreement that will go with each of those collective bargaining units. So we would expect and forecast that at the end of this process – and I believe it to be some time in the April to September of 2004 time frame – we will have 36 collective agreements in this province rather than over 400 and that we will have a health system that is headed for and will achieve a quality and a timely and accessible health system, that all Albertans wish and desire.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to get a chance to speak one more time in third reading of Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. In third reading my understanding is that we are contemplating the effect of the bill.

One of the leftover things from Committee of the Whole that I wanted to raise again with the minister was that we have received confirmation from the Minister of Energy that following on the excellent example of publishing the anticipated regulations for Bill 19, he agreed last night that he would make available the anticipated regulations for Bill 3. I also asked that same question of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, if he would make available, publish on a web site, for example, the anticipated regulations for Bill 27. I have quickly reviewed the Hansard for his comments last night, and I do not see him commenting on that. So I will ask that one more time: to please ask the minister to publish those proposed regulations so that members of the unions, workers that are unionized, other workers, citizens, MLAs, staff, other stakeholder groups can all have an opportunity to review these regulations since they are such an integral part of this legislation that's being proposed.

As the government has pointed out, this is in fact enabling legislation where it sets out a context and all of the detail is to come at a later date through the regulations. Therefore, it's important that people see and understand these regulations. To say to us, "Please pass this bill," or "Please support this bill," when in fact the content of the bill is really contained in the regulations, which are not available, is asking me, I think, as a member of this Legislature to be irresponsible, and I am passing something that I can't look at and I can't contemplate, nor can I seek opinion, concerns, or accolades from my constituents on this issue. Once again I ask that the minister do publish these regulations. I know that he has another opportunity to speak to this bill, and I hope that when he does, in closing off this debate, he will in fact announce that he's doing that.

What I've heard the government say is that this bill came about as a request from an employer, that being the regional health authorities, and in fact the regional health authorities are entities of direct legislated entities created by and wholly responsible to the government. So to somehow pretend that this was an outside employer that the government was looking to please is just a little bit ingenuous I think because the regional health authorities – there's no question – are the entities of government. So in fact the government has asked itself to put this legislation in place.

I think it can be said, and I will certainly say, that this government has an uneven history with the labour movement in Alberta. Certainly, the labour movement has expressed that it feels that the government has tried to break a number of unions and not to be entirely supportive, and I think that this legislation before us has caused a great deal of fear. It's been interesting to see how many nights the galleries had people in them who stayed as late as they needed to as long as this particular bill was being debated to try and understand where the government was coming from with its opinions and its direction on this bill.

So to cast back over the concerns that were raised in the beginning and the responses that we've had from government and whether or not that in fact makes me more in favour of this bill, there was concern at the beginning around the nurse practitioners being in effect cut off or orphaned in that they don't have a professional union of their own and the moves that were being put in place by this bill would have truly cast them off. I understand that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview was able to have a friendly discussion with the Minister of Health and Wellness, and in fact they were able to resolve that so that the nurse practitioners would not be cut off and would in fact be able to get some assistance by way of affiliation with a professional association.

The bill is for the most part taking away what we call a right to strike. There was a great deal of discussion about whether this was a human right, and: was it really a right, and where did this right appear? I think for the most part that was cleared up. It's not a human right, but it certainly is part of the UN side agreements, and it also, in fact, is a side agreement for NAFTA that collective bargaining is certainly allowed and even encouraged. But taking away the right to strike from any group of people should not be done without a great deal of care. I think it does create an imbalance, and if you're going to take away something that does create an imbalance, then what are you going to do to try and restore some sort of balance? I don't see what's being brought forward by the government in this bill that indeed does restore any sense of balance or fairness or restore a level playing field if these workers in fact lose their right to strike.

Well, it's only 10 percent of the workers says the government; that's no big deal. Sorry; I don't buy that. I don't think it's right to do that to any group of people no matter what the percentage is, and we never heard a number from the government about how many people that 10 percent in fact represents. Under any circumstances or any number I don't find it acceptable to do that. I think it's fundamental to how we have relations with the employers here, and if people wish to come together and unionize, to have a collective bargaining situation, then they should be able to do it, and I am deeply disturbed by the government taking away that ability from this particular group of people.

The unions had expressed some bafflement in that they had voluntarily been meeting to work toward achieving some sort of agreement to reduce the number of bargaining units in each health region, and they couldn't understand why, without them being aware of it, all of a sudden there was legislation in front of the Assembly which was going to do the same thing. So that didn't help to keep good union relations.

We asked a number of times whether the personnel would retain the seniority, benefits, and wages that they'd earned and bargained to keep. We had differing answers on that, I think it's fair to say.

There were also concerns about the clause that appears in the bill about the severance not being available. I think that comes down to a matter of trust, and unfortunately the trust, I think, is not there. It's a matter of trust in that it's quite clear in the legislation that if an individual is doing exactly the same job except that the name on the paycheque changes from the 31st of March to the 1st of April or whatever the enabling proclamation date is for this legislation, there should be no reason for them to be able to claim severance if their job is exactly the same. But we have sought reassurance that employees or that workers would not see their benefits, for example, change or pension contributions or seniority change in any way, and I'm not satisfied that those assurances have been received.

I think there's a genuine concern on behalf of government that people not be subjected to constructive dismissal, which is what we're talking about here if their job was changed enough that in fact it's a different job. I hope that the government will be able to hold its side up there and that it will in fact prove to be trustworthy around this situation because that's what we're talking about here. They've said that they won't do that and they won't abuse it. We have to wait and see if that is the case.

I brought up the issue of the regulations, and I've already talked about them being published so that people can have a look at them and understand them because the regulations are really the important part of this bill, but also my concern is around the legislation appearing to usurp the role of the Labour Relations Board. The minister credited me with more rabble-rousing in the community than I really should be receiving credit for because I actually have not had the time to get out into the community and give a number of people some information that would cause them to call the minister, then, and be concerned about how this legislation would impact them. I am not entirely satisfied with what I heard back from the minister.

He did not give me very clear detail about what in fact is the relationship between the regulations appearing in this act that do take on the role of the Labour Relations Board. He did address whether this was likely to continue on and appear in other bills. He indicated not, but I still express concern in this situation that we have regulations that do take over the job of the Labour Relations Board without giving any indication of what they're supposed to do now while this is all being decided by cabinet and put out as an order in council.

The government has avoided answering how much this new process is going to cost and was unable to offer guarantees that in fact it will be in the best interest of workers. As I say, it becomes an issue of trust.

Those were the issues that I most wanted to raise when we talk about the anticipated effect of the bill once it is passed and up and working. I have listened very carefully, and the minister, I must say, was very good about being present and listening and answering questions, and that can't be said for all members of cabinet when they have bills in front of us, so I would like to give him the credit that is due to him for taking that time and for being here.

I still am not in favour of this bill, and I will continue to oppose it. I really object to having the right to strike being removed from workers. That's an integral part of collective bargaining as we know it. I disagree with what's happened to these workers, but I will be watching very carefully to see what happens when the bill itself is implemented.

I appreciate having the opportunity to raise these issues again and particularly and one last time ask for the regulations to be published and easily accessible for people to have a considerable period of time to read them and understand and even be able to go back and question through their MLAs and cabinet or the minister exactly what it is anticipated that the regulations will mean in their implementation. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to participate this afternoon in third reading of Bill 27. Certainly, although the changes may appear to some to be insignificant, I find at least some of the changes quite worrisome.

We all know in this Assembly how positive it is that we have stable and fair labour relations in this province, and the fact that one party, in this case the employees, were not consulted in my view in a timely fashion in regard to this bill is not only one of the reasons why I would have concerns at this time. Whenever we use closure to limit and restrict debate in this Assembly on an issue, in this case Bill 27, it makes not only members of the opposition cautious and suspicious about what else is perhaps in this legislation, but certainly it does that for the public as well, Mr. Speaker.

I, too, would like to put on the record that the Minister of Human Resources and Employment's efforts in participating in debate in regard to this bill certainly do not go unnoticed by this member, and those efforts are appreciated. But when we look at creating our four functional, regionwide bargaining units and we are going to have 36 different collective agreements within the nine different regional health authorities, this streamlining of the bargaining process is only going to work if all parties were to know what the regulations were going to do or what the regulations were going to say. That, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, is not the case.

Now, we are assured that this is going to make a real difference, and when you consider what our public health care system in this province has gone through, I can certainly see why Alberta's health regions, whether there are 16 of them or whether there are going to be nine, want to try their best to improve quality patient care. They have certainly been working with limits, Mr. Speaker, in the last number of years, and a goal that all health regions, as far as I know, are striving for is to spend health care dollars wisely. I think that under the most difficult circumstances they're doing the best that they can do. How Bill 27 is going to improve this, I don't know.

We have seen in recent years that there has been growth in outpatient home and community care, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview certainly has some very good ideas on improving community care. There has been this idea of centres of excellence, and more health care professionals are working, as I understand it, in teams. We are using the full skills and abilities of each professional to reduce healing times for the patients, but that tells this hon. member that we need to ensure that health care professionals have confidence in the system.

Let's just look at one of the largest regional health authorities that we have and that certainly will remain, and that's the Capital health authority. Now, if we were to look through the latest annual report, 2001-2002, of the Capital health authority, which is one of Canada's largest integrated health regions, we would recognize – and I've spoken of this in the past – the challenges and the future directions that are needed. I have to question whether Bill 27 at this time is going to be the right answer.

It's been expressed many times before, but certainly the recruitment and retention of skilled staff, particularly of nurses, continues to be a major challenge. Thanks to a number of initiatives, including the recruitment of foreign nurses, Capital health was able to recruit over 250 nurses and 90 physicians in the fiscal year 2001-2002, and now with the measures that are occurring as a result of this legislation, I would be interested to go to a trade fair and see if the whole issue of labour relations is discussed in recruitment. Or is it even an issue with health care professionals? Certainly, it is an issue with the Australian ones that are coming here.

Now, when we look at how important this issue is for the future of health care – and I'm not only talking about registered nurses but other health care professionals as well – this is perhaps the most important area where long-term planning is needed. If we look at the Capital Health business plan here, the health workforce plan in progress, the personnel counts as of March 31, 2002 – these are year-old statistics, but fair enough. They're the latest that are available to the Official Opposition. There are 2,116 regular full-time registered nurses – registered nurses refers to registered nurses and registered psychiatric nurses – in this health authority. Now, there are close to 2,600 regular part-time nurses. There are 2,583. There are about 2,700 casual nurses, and there are close to 300 temporary nurses.

When we look at this, the first thing that we should consider if we're going to have positive labour relations is: how are we going to be flexible enough to recruit these nurses and retain them? Now, do some of the 2,500 that are working part-time want to work full-time? If they want to work full-time, why are they not allowed to work full-time? When we look at their ages, how many of them are over 50 years of age and perhaps in the next decade planning retirement? Of the registered nurses, the number of staff 50 or older as of March 31 last year, Mr. Speaker, was 1,800. In the temporary/casual category there were 546. There were close to 500 licensed practical nurses over the age of 50. We have to be cognizant of this.

When we look at changing the rules like we're doing with Bill 27, we have to recognize that long-term planning is needed, or we're going to have a real crisis on our hands. I hope that at some point in the future no hon. member of this Assembly would stand up and say that it is the union's fault or that it's the nurses' fault because our public health care system continues to lurch from one crisis to the next. We have to have long-term planning, Mr. Speaker.

I would alert all members of this Assembly to the annual report and to consider it when you're voting on this bill. If we were to take away the rights of a certain sector of workers, are younger people who are leaving high school or contemplating taking further education or career training going to look at just the regular part-time jobs? The majority of nurses in the Capital health authority are doing regular part-time work. If these individuals are only going to be able to find part-time work, well, perhaps they're going to consider another profession, and it's time we recognize that. We have to look at the whole playing field here, Mr. Speaker, because it's so important.

Before I proceed further, when we look, Mr. Speaker, at the cost of sick time as a percentage of total salaries, it was $21 million, or 3.3 percent of the total, and that does not seem out of line. So that would indicate to this member that members of the nursing profession are working very, very hard.

Now, when we look at other information that's provided by the Capital health authority, they state in regard to their financial information, and I quote: the financial outlook for 2002-2003 and beyond reflects increased cost pressures; the cost pressures that Capital health faces relate to labour contracts, staff shortages, population growth, and new technology. End of quote. I'm pleased that they talk about population growth and not about an increased seniors population driving up health care costs. It's total population growth.

Mr. Speaker, when we consider what the Capital health authority is worried about here, is Bill 27 the answer? I've been persistent in second reading and in committee asking: exactly how much money is this bill going to cost? How much of an inherited debt will each new regional health authority get as a result of this bill? Hopefully we're going to get an opportunity to discuss this.

Now, we have to look at employee future benefits. I've asked that question before in committee. Certainly, the revision of the regional health authority boundaries could have a significant impact on collective bargaining. There's the transfer of services and employees from one old region to a new region. This is going to have issues of seniority, portability of entitlements, compensation. Certainly, as outlined in the financial statements . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in. Any questions? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you have a question?

Ms Blakeman: The member was discussing his concerns about whether Bill 27 was appropriate. Can he expand on what those concerns were, please?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, there are many concerns, but it's a dollars-and-cents issue. I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre for the question. Certainly, there are future employee costs to be considered, there are pension obligations that shall be met, and these are of course going to come out of the budget of the province. Now, we have to be very careful of that, hon. member. I heard last Friday that 37.5 percent of the total provincial budget was devoted to public health care. I didn't realize it was that high, but that was a quote that was quoted twice: 37.5 percent, Mr. Speaker. In any way that we can save money, keep "public" in public health care, we have to do it. Bill 27, I think, should really go back to committee, because with the closure motion I don't think we have had adequate time to discuss all implications of this bill on our public health care system.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Could the member talk about what other amendments he would have done had he had the time to do it?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, certainly, there are many amendments that could be utilized, an amendment to perhaps move this entire matter back to committee. There was a motion presented by the hon. Government House Leader yesterday evening in regard to this matter. An hour of debate is not enough time to ensure that this Bill 27 is going to provide stable, balanced, and fair labour relations in this province and prevent a bad situation from getting worse, and that's the situation that is unfortunately going on here because of lack of long-term planning. That's the chronic shortage of health care professionals, specifically, in this case, registered nurses and LPNs and various other health care professionals. It's just a shame that in an hour, in 60 minutes, discussion of this bill is to be concluded at committee.

The Acting Speaker: There being no further questions, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 27. This is, as I think all parties recognize, a very important bill and one with many implications. We hope they aren't going to be profoundly negative. In fact, we all hope they'll be profoundly positive, but there are so many people with such serious concerns about Bill 27 that I am worried. I need to bring some of those concerns about the effects of this legislation to the floor of the Assembly. I was, even as recently as yesterday afternoon about this time, invited to meetings and attended meetings with people who were very concerned about this piece of legislation, so I need, in the limited amount of time we've been granted, to get some of those on the record.

One of the points that was brought to my attention and which, I believe, has been partially addressed – but I am awaiting more information, and I won't have time to collect all that information – concerns the situation faced by the nurse practitioners under this bill. Now, the original concern that was brought to my mind was that under this legislation the nurse practitioners are removed from the collective bargaining process, but under other legislation, under the Public Health Act, I believe, they are required to be employees under the regulations of that act. So while the intent of Bill 27 was for nurse practitioners to expand their autonomy, to increase their freedom to be self-governing professionals, they were under other regulations required to be employees. That set up a legal contradiction in which we had people who were required to be employees who were not allowed to collectively organize, and that would have opened this legislation to a court challenge. I was told of that very early on in this process. I raised the issue with the Minister of Health and Wellness. He assured me that the regulations that forced nurse practitioners to be employees was being altered so that they would be open to self-government and to the full extent of professional self-control and self-regulation.

The reality is that nurse practitioners are years away from having their own organizing college or registrar, their own organizing system, their own voice through which to negotiate. So I expect that for the next several years nurse practitioners are going to be in a position where they have to negotiate one-on-one with the regional health authorities as a result of this bill, and that's an unhealthy situation for nurse practitioners in particular and for the whole health care system in general. I think that we all recognize that nurse practitioners do have a crucial role in the ongoing evolution of Canada's health care system. We will be turning to them more and more, and we are right now leaving them in something of an organizational and legal limbo. So that's one of the concerns with Bill 27. The government has taken some steps to address that, but I think our timing is out of sync here. We may have wanted to handle it differently, but given the speed with which the government is pushing this bill through, we won't have that opportunity.

Another issue that was brought to my attention yesterday, which I know has some people very nervous, is the issue of succession rights. The way this was put to me is that the concern is that if a unionized health facility, let's say a rural hospital, were sold to, heaven forbid, a for-profit corporation, the requirement that the new owner respect the labour contracts that were in place with the existing public-sector unions was not necessarily guaranteed. In other words, the succession rights for the workers to continue with their contract would not carry through if the ownership of the facility changed. The concern was brought to me very forcefully that this legislation could have the effect of accelerating the breakdown of the public health care system in this province if we started to see any public facilities sold off. That would actually break up the health sector unions.

I looked into that quickly. I spoke to some labour experts on it, and I was reassured that that is not an effect of this bill. In fact, I was told that the bill is fairly tightly written, fairly narrowly focused and precise in what it intends to do, although that's not to understate the fact that there are worries under section 5. But the issue of succession rights, I'm afraid, because of the speed with which this is moving, remains a real concern for some members in some areas of the health unions, and I hope through these comments that I can help allay those fears, assuming that they're justifiably allayed.

Another issue that is being brought forward here and a worrying effect of this legislation is that it is pitting labour unions against each other in a battle for members. It's going to take the wisdom of Solomon and then perhaps some for the minister and the government and, I hope, the Labour Relations Board to sort that out. It undoubtedly will be tempting for some to egg on the unions in bidding battles and raiding wars. Let's really hope that that doesn't happen. That doesn't serve anybody in the long run. It destabilizes the work environment for employees; it heightens the tension on the workplace floor. In the end it doesn't serve anybody any better to create those situations, except it does serve people who want to distract the union leadership and union members from issues of really looking after their members. So I hope that this cabinet, this minister, and whoever else is involved, the Labour Relations Board potentially, exercise good judgment here, constructive judgment, take steps to calm the waters and prevent nasty raiding battles occurring between the unions. We'll have to wait and see on that. All we can do right now is hold our breath, again because of the speed with which this legislation is going through.

I also am aware that there's a NAFTA appeal potentially being launched around this legislation. I think we'll have to wait and see if that proceeds and how far it goes. It does raise the issues again of the fundamental legality of legislation like this, but time will tell. Time will tell. There are, as I keep saying here, many issues on which we can only wait and time will tell: issues around the regulations, issues around the handling of the labour union turf wars, issues around what happens with the nurse practitioners.

We have been asked many times to debate many things and bring forward many amendments on this legislation. We've not had the opportunity. I do have an opportunity right now even in third reading to bring forward an amendment, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to do so now. I have sufficient copies here for distribution by the pages. I'll wait a moment and then carry on with my comments.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you may proceed now.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that third reading be amended by deleting all the words after “that” and substituting the following:

Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering the proposed section 5.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this is a plea for us to revisit this issue, return to Committee of the Whole and allow a more extensive debate on this piece of legislation. Wouldn't it be thrilling if we had the same extensive participation in debate on this legislation from government backbenchers as we had on the rough fescue issue? Rough fescue is the grass that has been now, I guess, legislated as an official emblem of Alberta.

Anyway, the intention of this reasoned amendment – it's not a hoist; it's a reasoned amendment – is to return the debate to Committee of the Whole so that we can take our time and maybe even allow a week or two to pass so that the affected bodies, particularly the tens of thousands of workers who are involved, can have some more vigorous and direct and meaningful input into this whole process. They are desperate for consultation on this particular issue. I welcome a free and open debate on this particular amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this issue is so important to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and all the members of the Liberal opposition, would he be willing to abandon his cowardly ways and answer a question?

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly why I don't participate in this business. If we return . . .

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Insulting Language

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order under 23(h), (i), and (j). I think that last statement from the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is totally inappropriate, and I would ask him at this time to withdraw that comment from the official record. Thank you.

Rev. Abbott: I'll save the opposition the time of trying to prove their point of order, and I'll withdraw the statement.

The Acting Speaker: That really helps, but I'll caution all members. Every person in this Assembly is an honourable person. Please be cautious with the words that you use in this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Debate Continued

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is more by way of comment than question because I respect the Member for Edmonton-Riverview's decision not to participate in questions and comments. So I'll use this time as an opportunity to comment. I want to comment in general terms on this legislation just for the record at third reading.

As a result of this legislation over 400 collective agreements will become 36 collective agreements in nine health regions, and this will be for the benefit of everyone involved in the system, including the employees covered under these contracts. They will be able to work shoulder to shoulder with other people doing essentially or exactly the same job and be covered under the same contracts. Yes, it's going to be difficult for some to arrive at this, because the employees are going to have to make a choice freely, of their volition, between one of two unions to belong to. That's the only way we're going to get from 400 collective agreements down to 36. The measures envisioned in this act are in no way antiunion, antilabour. They inure to the benefit of everyone involved, including the patients, including the taxpayers, and including the workers.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah, just a friendly comment. I think that Bill 27 actually will aim to streamline bargaining in the health care sector. I believe that employers, employees, unions, et cetera, have all been well consulted on this, and I know that our minister has done an excellent job. So I guess I just want to in a very friendly way speak against the amendment and put my comments on the record that I think this bill is in the right direction.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, that section was still under Standing Order 29 for questions and comments. I take it there's nobody else who has any more questions.

We will recognize the Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: I would ask all members to defeat this amendment, and I will tell you why. We could spend hours discussing back in committee the concern about the severance situation, but I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview in his cogent and succinct way said as much as can possibly be said – and I don't know that it took him 30 seconds – and that was the fact that he went and had the act, I guess, reviewed, as I understood his comments, by legal authority, and they talked about how tight this act really was. Now, I think it's a reaffirmation that this government has not been kidding when it talked about the fact that with a very unusually named bill we were being very tight, in his words, or being very specific. I don't know that there's any confusion left here in the House or whether there should be any confusion left here in Alberta, as a matter of fact, of what we're dealing with, then, within this bill. So reverting to committee is clearly unnecessary, and I rely as my evidence the hon. member's own remarks.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Certainly I appreciate the observations of the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, but at this time in regard to the amendment there are many outstanding issues.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I regret to interrupt you, but there was a note that I had which I did not understand clearly.

May we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

4:00head: Introduction of Guests*(reversion)The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce three people to you. Two of them are from my community of Brooks. They are here with the Chamber of Commerce, who are holding their annual MLA reception tomorrow. The first one is Arlene Curry with the Chamber of Commerce, and the second one is Mara Nesbitt with the Chamber of Commerce. Mara Nesbitt is the president of the Chamber of Commerce and also happens to be my constituency assistant and has worked with me for approximately the last 12 years in varying capacities. Also with her is Sandy Stefanyk, who works in my office here. I would ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders

The Acting Speaker: The chair once again recognizes the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and my apologies that we interrupted you. We will give you the full 15 minutes from here on.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, when we're looking at the Alberta Labour Relations Board and the role that they're going to play at some time in the immediate future in regard to this legislation, Bill 27, perhaps now is a suitable time to move this bill back to committee. This could almost be our own version of the Senate. Certainly the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud has spoken in the past about the Senate and the purposes of the Senate, and this motion is actually going to give us our opportunity to have another close second look at this bill.

When we look at health care labour relations and some of the changes that are proposed, we're going to have certainly these four functional bargaining units. The reason for having the four functional bargaining units as articulated by the Human Resources and Employment department on their home page is that the Alberta Labour Relations Board will be granted special temporary powers to deal with issues arising out of the formation of the four functional bargaining units. I'm sorry; in the length of time we have debated this, this issue has not come up. The Alberta Labour Relations Board will be granted special temporary powers to deal with issues arising out of the formation of the four functional bargaining units. Now, how is this going to enhance fair and balanced labour relations with the health care professionals? My questions at this time – and if we could go back to committee, we could have a good look at this – are: how long will these special powers last, and who will revoke these special powers? Will it be the Lieutenant Governor in Council? Exactly how is this going to work? I'm still concerned about some of the legislative notions that are going to go forward in regulation.

Certainly "authorizing the Board to make binding determinations as to [the] terms and conditions to be included in a receiving collective agreement where the parties are unwilling or unable to do so" – any member can stand up and correct me, but we are giving the board the authority for binding arbitration. Where is the mediation in this process? Certainly in the current act it's in there for employees, not employers, but there are some areas or some sections of the act where a one-person panel, whether it be the chair or vice-chair, can make certain specific decisions in regard to matters around employees.

This is another good idea why we should go back to committee, because in all the time this has been discussed, the answers haven't been coming from the side opposite. The Lieutenant Governor in Council regulations can – I think it's 162.1(3). "The Board may hear any matter or conduct any business under this Part through the chair or a vice-chair sitting alone." Well, this is in my view expanding the powers again of the Labour Relations Board, and I don't know what this is supposed to do. Is it the granting of special temporary powers? If these special temporary powers are to occur, then we should have a grandfather clause here to make sure that these special temporary powers don't go on forever. If we're going to have them until we get the whole issue of changing from 16 health authorities down to nine, then there should be some . . . [interjection] Well, there are a couple of other ones that are sort of outside that, but we need to ensure that whenever the reorganization of the regional authority boundaries goes on, these special temporary powers are dealt with.

I would urge, Mr. Speaker, for this issue to go back to committee to be discussed because it is certainly an issue of concern. Perhaps again I will pose the questions and at the end of my time speaking I will receive an adequate answer, but again: how long will these special powers last, and who will revoke these special powers? I don't think that it's in the interest of fair and balanced labour relations and even the whole issue of being impartial when we look at the current act and either a vice-chair or a chair sitting alone can make certain rulings regarding employees but not, odd enough, in my research, the employers. Now, if we could get an answer to that, it would be terrific.

In support, again, of the motion to recommit this bill to committee in light of closure that was invoked last night – well, it was on the Order Paper since last week, Mr. Speaker – we can never be too hasty. If we're going to have confidence in our entire system of labour relations, then let's have a good, broad discussion on what we need to do.

Now, I'm not saying that this government has proven itself again to be a foe or an enemy of labour unions. I was certainly pleased to learn yesterday in research that in August of 1971 then Official Opposition leader Edgar Peter Lougheed decided and expressed by letter that certainly the public-service unions should have the same rights as other union members in this province. That was a promise made then, and that was, gosh, 32, 33 years ago, and it still hasn't come to be. But there is always a chance and there's always a hope.

This was expressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview: we can't pit one group of workers against another. There has been concern expressed that this bill is going to make the AUPE and the CUPE drive for the right to represent those workers. Now, if that's going to happen, if we're going to pit one union against another in a competition to represent far fewer bargaining units, how is this going to be healthy for all the labour relations in the health care professions in this province?

If we went back to committee, if we recommitted this bill back to committee, perhaps the government could have a consultation process with some of the unions. The union leaders in the past have been more than willing to meet with and work with this government, but now we have – and it's disturbing to learn in the course of debate earlier that: oh, we are taking the advice on this one of the provincial health authorities of Alberta, and we're going to take their interest, and the health care professionals can like it or they can do whatever they figure is best. Certainly, I hope that they do not have a look at this legislation – I sort of broached this issue a little earlier – and vote with their feet and take their precious skills and go to another jurisdiction. I certainly hope that doesn't happen, Mr. Speaker. When unions and the health care professionals or the workers that they represent are upset by this legislation, they are again concerned about the regulations.

Now, perhaps this recommitment would not be necessary if all the regulations were tabled in this Assembly, even if they were on the Internet. Bill 19, the gas bill, the further energy deregulation bill – those regulations or draft regulations were on the Internet from October, from before Halloween, and there were also drafts of the legislation, Mr. Speaker. But with Bill 27 here there has been no such thing, and perhaps the leaders of the unions that represent the health care professionals wouldn't be here until 10:30, 11:00, 11:30 at night, concerned about the implications of this bill, if they themselves could have a look at the regulations.

It is amazing that – and this is getting back to Edgar Peter Lougheed after he was Leader of the Official Opposition and did become Premier – the Premier, Premier Lougheed in this case, would have regulations tabled in the Assembly for all members to see whenever they were debating bills, and I was surprised and delighted in the course of conducting research to find out that this was a parliamentary practice in those days. How things have changed in a little over a generation, in 32 years. Certainly, it would not be necessary to recommit this bill to committee if perhaps all members of the Assembly could see the regulations for themselves. It would certainly alleviate some of their fears.

Now, the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment talked about the United Nurses association, but certainly Ms Dick of the United Nurses association had some reservations about this legislation because she was fearful of what's in the regulations. This is a quote from Ms Dick. It's particularly offensive when you take the right to strike from anyone, she said, adding that not allowing health care workers to strike provides a, quote, false sense of security, end of quote. She goes on to state that the part she is most upset about is that nurse practitioners who currently belong to the union movement, including the UNA, will no longer be allowed to belong to a union. She pointed out that nurse practitioners have many of the same duties as doctors, but doctors are represented by the Alberta Medical Association. Now, that is just one person who is a member of the United Nurses and some of the concerns that she has expressed publicly in regard to this bill.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So in debate on the amendment here, Mr. Speaker, to recommit to Committee of the Whole for the purposes of reconsidering the proposed section 5 of the bill, I would have to urge all hon. members of this Assembly to accept this amendment.

Now, when we look further at this amendment . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] Oh, goodness.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to this amendment. The amendment is that Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, not now be read a third time but it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purposes of reconsidering the proposed section 5. Well, I think this amendment goes part of the way. I would like Committee of the Whole to reconsider the entire bill, but if it's being asked to look specifically at section 5, that's, I think, a step in the right direction.

It says in that section that the following is added after section 162.

162.1(1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations

- (a) providing for the establishment of region-wide functional bargaining units as bargaining units for the purposes of this Act for all regional health authorities and their employees who are represented by a bargaining agent.

Now, that's interesting. You know, I don't disagree with the objective of reducing the number of bargaining agents in this bill. It really in lots of ways makes sense, and I don't disagree necessarily with reducing the number of health authorities in the province. It may be a little bit of a rationalization that might be of some value.

The question in both cases, Mr. Speaker, is how you get there, how the government wants to get to their objective. It's not necessarily that they're always completely wrong on every objective they have. I think that in this case having a rationalized structure for health authorities is probably a good thing. [interjection] I know that the minister enjoys that. I'm sure he thinks I'm making progress when I say that the government is not always wrong. The government is not always wrong, but the government usually employs a method of getting to where it's going that leaves something to be desired, and I think it's the case here.

First of all, without consultation with the health authorities or at least the members of the boards they basically broke them up and fired a number of the public members, so I think that represents kind of an antidemocratic approach to restructuring these authorities, and that's part of the problem.

Now, in terms of how they want to get the regionwide functional bargaining units, the government has ignored a lot of work that's been done by the various bargaining agents, the various bargaining units, the different unions, and they have been working for some time at trying to reduce the number of bargaining units, so they're taken right out of the equation. They're completely sideswiped by this legislation. They're blindsided by it, and the government went essentially behind their back, and at the behest apparently of the employer in this case agreed to this legislation.

So it blindsided the organizations, and it also blindsided the workers, because what it does, Mr. Speaker, is it essentially takes away the choice of people within bargaining units to select which union they want. Not ultimately but it sort of lays before you nine units, as the minister had said today in question period, nine health authorities and four bargaining units in each one. Well, what happens if the employees want to have five bargaining units? Or six?

Mr. Magnus: It's not up to them, Brian.

Mr. Mason: We hear from the hon. member opposite that it's not up to them, and I guess that's really the part that I have the most difficulty with and why I believe that this should be referred back. I think we need to talk more about that. It should be up to them.

That hon. member, I know, has belonged to labour organizations in the past and has benefited by them, and I think that he would agree that freedom of choice in these matters is an important thing. I know that he's also done lots of good work with firefighters, so he knows or should know that some freedom to choose is part and parcel of a free collective bargaining process, and when the government intrudes or infringes on that, it really undermines the whole system that we have.

So it's how the government gets there. Rationalizing health authorities and rationalizing bargaining units within the health authorities are both positive objectives, but we need to arrive there with some democratic discussion with the parties involved and not just a top-down decision by the government as to how things are going to be.

The next part that the cabinet can make regulations on is (b), and it says:

- (b) governing the manner in which a bargaining agent and a receiving collective agreement are selected for each of the region-wide functional bargaining units, whether with or without a vote of employees, including, without limitation, regulations
 - (i) establishing types of collective agreements from which the receiving collective agreement for a region-wide functional bargaining unit will be selected.

Again here the cabinet is getting power in this legislation to determine those things on the behalf of employees rather than allowing the people freedom of choice.

Next, it will have the power to make regulations

- (ii) respecting the manner of determining from which type of collective agreement the receiving collective agreement for a region-wide functional bargaining unit will be selected;
- (iii) respecting the manner of determining which trade unions are eligible trade unions for the purposes of a vote by employees to select a bargaining agent for a region-wide functional bargaining unit, and respecting the circumstances under which such a vote may or must be conducted.

This is, I think, highly illustrative of the government's approach. The government will allow a limited democracy. In other words, the government will determine which trade unions are eligible for the purposes of a vote, and once they've set out who you can choose from, then they allow you to choose from the list that they provide. In some countries, Mr. Speaker, this is called guided democracy.

Ms Blakeman: What?

Mr. Mason: It's called guided democracy.

Ms Blakeman: Who invented that?

Dr. Taft: Was that Lenin?

Mr. Mason: No, I don't think it was Lenin. In certain authoritarian regimes that exist, you know, in different countries – and I don't want to slag any particular organization – it's often used after a military coup, for example, in order to get the country back to democracy. Once they've re-established western institutions and put the oil companies back in charge of the country, they often have a period where democracy is called guided. [interjection] Well, it may or not be appropriate to call it that, but there's clearly a lot of guidance being provided for these poor workers here so that they don't make a mistake and pick the wrong union. So the government is determining which unions they can select. Of course, once the government has done that, then we have free and unfettered democracy in choosing amongst those unions. That gives me a lot of concern, and it's one of the reasons I support this amendment and why I believe that it should be put back into Committee of the Whole so that we can review this entire section, because quite frankly I think there's a lot here that needs some work.

It says that cabinet may also make regulations "respecting the conduct of votes of any issue related to the selection of a bargaining agent or a receiving collective agreement." Well, depending what rules the government makes, that may or may not be okay, but we don't know and, of course, the workers don't know, and until they know, they're not going to be stampeded into supporting this particular piece of legislation, nor will we in the New Democrat opposition, Mr. Speaker.

The cabinet may make regulations

- (c) providing for the continuation of existing collective agreements.

Fine.

- (d) requiring employers and bargaining agents selected under this Part to bargain collectively in good faith and to make every reasonable effort to negotiate amendments to the receiving collective agreements selected under this Part so that the receiving collective agreements will contain terms and conditions of employment for all employees in the region-wide functional bargaining unit, and governing the means by which that is to be accomplished, including, without limitation, the method by which contentious issues between the parties are to be resolved.

Now, that's interesting, and this gives me a lot of cause for concern as well. The government can determine "the method by which contentious issues between the parties are to be resolved."

There are existing methods of dealing with contentious issues, Mr. Speaker. There are collective agreements, collective bargaining, and if that doesn't lead to success, then there's mediation. Then if that doesn't work, the sides can both agree to binding arbitration, and if they don't want to do that, then you could be in a strike or a lockout situation, which we all hope we can avoid. But why isn't the government prepared to use existing methods of resolving disputes, contentious issues between parties in this case? If they're going to use arbitration – and I don't think they should, at least not in the first instance – then they should say so in the legislation. They shouldn't just leave it to the cabinet to make all of these decisions on behalf of both the workers and the employees.

If you move along, the cabinet can authorize or make regulations authorizing the Board to hear and determine a complaint that a party has failed to comply with a regulation under clause (d) and to remedy that failure in the same manner as it may remedy a failure to comply with section 60.

Moving on, under sub (f) it can authorize "the Board to make binding determinations as to terms and conditions to be included in a receiving collective agreement where the parties are unwilling or unable to do so." Well, I guess that's talking, then, about arbitration in a sense, but it really is different because the board makes the determination and it's not an arbitration process. So they've skipped a step there.

It can authorize "the Board to deem affiliated local unions of the same parent trade union to be one trade union for the purposes of this Part."

It may make regulations "requiring affiliated local unions of the same parent trade union to act as a single trade union for the purposes of this Act and to adopt rules and procedures for that purpose."

It can authorize "the Board to do anything that a trade union, employer or employers' organization is required to do under the regulations or by the Board and fails or refuses to do so," without setting any tests, Mr. Speaker, for whether or not organizations, employers, or unions fail or refuse to do so.

And it provides "for any transitional matters the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary to ensure the transition from the implementation of this Part to collective bargaining under this Act generally." Well, there's a lot of room in a transitional arrangement to determine how things are going to work in the long run, Mr. Speaker, so I guess in this case the government is saying:

you just have to trust us. Why would the unions agree to that when the government was involved in working out the details of this act behind their backs with the employer and not telling the unions even what was going on so the unions find out about it post facto? Why would they feel that they had confidence in what the government ultimately wanted to do?

Again it comes back, Mr. Speaker, to the problem I have with this section in general and why I think the Committee of the Whole needs to revisit it, and that is that the government in trying to achieve what could be determined a reasonable objective is taking a shortcut. It's sort of trampled on the rights of people.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll thank the members and take my seat.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to speak briefly to this amendment that is asking that the bill be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering the proposed section 5. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands has been kind enough to read most of those regulations into the record at this point.

My reasoning for wishing to see this bill recommitted to committee is that I still feel that there are some answers that are outstanding. I was also hoping that perhaps without the guillotine of the time allocation hanging over their heads, we might hear from some more of the government members on the record as to why they supported this bill and in particular to hear some of their thoughts around the regulations that are appearing in section 5, because there has now developed this parallel system that the government has with regard to the way it moves legislation through. It's making this Assembly a second or third stop and one in which the government members no longer participate.

I don't know whether the backbenchers were instructed not to speak to this bill or speak to government bills, but we heard from, I think, one or two of them. I always find it interesting and certainly instructive to hear what the various reasonings are from members of government, how it's affecting their particular constituencies or what in their life experience or past work experience has brought them to that point, and we don't hear any of that in this Assembly anymore. The Committee of the Whole is a more informal working session, and I had hoped that we would be able to encourage more of those members from the government side, whether in cabinet or whether they were backbenchers, to in fact tell us why they supported that bill.

I've spoken at length about my concern with the amount of regulations in this bill, as have many others, and my concern that the regulations don't appear to be being released so that they could be discussed. One of the things I said was that constituents could then contact their MLA and find out why their government MLA was supportive, or perhaps they weren't supportive behind closed doors in caucus, but we don't get to know that. I think it's government by stealth, government behind closed doors, and I'm just trying to do my bit to bring it back into this Assembly, which is what we're all supposed to be here to respect and uphold. The government is slowly but surely moving it away from here and diminishing the importance of this particular Assembly.

I recognize that the members are impatient and have already talked about this. Or supposedly they have. We don't know. We don't know how much they participated in it. We don't know if they were just given a briefing and everyone was told to follow along. We have no idea because that's never discussed in here. We don't know how people feel about it. Neither do the public, and the public have no way of finding out what their own MLA said on the record because they didn't say it on the record. So that was my reasoning for wanting to see this recommitted back to Committee of the Whole, the hopes that it would encourage the private members on the government side to rise and get their thoughts or reasoning for supporting the bill on the record.

I continue to look to the minister to explain more about what I perceive as a conflict in section 5 of the amending act with regard to the powers that are allocated through the Labour Relations Code to the Labour Relations Board. There's actually even some differing opinion between myself and other members of my caucus about what this means, so I would have liked to have heard the minister speaking to that.

I do notice that one of the examples that appears in both places that I missed when I spoke to this earlier was in fact an issue that was raised by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, which was the authorization for the board to be able to conduct any business. It's appearing in this act under section 5(3): "The Board may hear any matter or conduct any business under this Part through the chair or a vice-chair sitting alone." A section very similar to that also appears under the Labour Relations Code, section 16(5): "The Board's powers under subsection (4)(a) may be delegated to the Chair, a vice-chair or an officer designated by the Board." So again my question, as it was for most of the other regulations involving the Labour Relations Board, is: does one override the other or set it aside for the purpose of this act, or do they both operate at the same time but there's some sort of referee? I was looking for that to be cleared up.

I guess my final concern was to know that there were union representatives that were meeting and working on this on a voluntary basis, working towards the same reduction of bargaining units as is given by the minister as the sole reason for needing to bring this legislation through. If there was a process that was already happening with the very groups that this bill purports to be dealing with, then what was the hurry that that process couldn't have been enhanced and upheld by the government? What was the hurry to subsume it or stop it or override it? I have not heard an explanation from the government side as to why. Was it failing? Was it taking too long? Were they not covering all the points that needed to be made? What was the reason that the work of that voluntary group was not acceptable? So, in fact, the work was being done, and I still don't see why it couldn't have been upheld. I was hoping that there could be more discussion around that or explanation around that if we're able to pass this amendment and recommit to Committee of the Whole.

So that's all I really wanted to say in support of the amendment. I hope that members of the Assembly will follow through and allow us to recommit this bill. Thank you.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion on the amendment lost]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 4:39 p.m.]

Bill 19
Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again it is a pleasure to rise at third reading and get in further comments in regard to the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act at this time. Now, certainly whenever we consider . . .

The Speaker: Sorry, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. We should have the moving of the bill first. The hon. Member for Dunvegan is going to move it.

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, on behalf of the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.
Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay. The bill now having been moved, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you may re-begin.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 3 and Bill 19, in this case the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, are going to certainly create a great deal of interest and, unfortunately, concern for Albertans. Now, when we look at this bill – and we are looking at amending the Gas Utilities Act, the Gas Distribution Act, and the Rural Utilities Act – we are changing the structure of the natural gas retail marketplace to allow for more competition, and we've all been told that this competition is going to be a good thing and it's going to reduce the price for consumers. Time will tell, but when we look at what has happened – and this is only since Christmas – and we look at the natural gas market in this province and the relationship we have to the North American market, gas prices have shot up certainly. Yeah, there's the issue of supply and demand, and there's also the issue of politics. Energy deregulation has certainly added costs to natural gas, and it is my view that we're going to add costs even further in regard to this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have been given assurances in this Assembly that this legislation affects the operation of gas co-ops only, and this is how it affects them: by allowing their members to buy natural gas from other suppliers if choice is approved by two-thirds of the members. I'm getting calls from all over the province from members of gas co-ops who are just not sure about that. They have had over the years natural gas provided by those co-ops on a cost recovery basis, and they're quite satisfied with that arrangement. They're nervous and they're skeptical of what we're going to do with Bill 19.

Certainly, we look at – and this has been discussed before in this Assembly; in fact, it was discussed in question period today – this deal that is going to be presented by Direct Energy in due time, and it was tabled by the hon. Minister of Energy. This is a marketer, in my view, without a licence that's anxious to participate in our market, but it's another case of a middle person, and how this is going to improve the situation for Albertans is beyond me.

Now, when we talk about aligning the natural gas retail marketplace with the electricity marketplace so that one energy retailer may market electricity and natural gas simultaneously or, in the words of the Navigant report, the convergence of these markets, I fail to understand and many of the 900,000-plus natural gas customers in this province also fail to understand how this is going to bring about lower prices. That's what this is all about, Mr. Speaker: providing what is really an essential service. I've said this in this Assembly before: heat is not a luxury in this province. When we consider what is going to happen and what the implications of this bill are, I think we should have another look at this. I really think that we should have another look at this notion that customer choice or the ability for consumers to purchase natural gas from the provider of their choice will mean lower gas prices for residential consumers.

We can look at the price of natural gas. For instance, hardly eight years ago natural gas was about $1.65 a gigajoule in this province for residential users.

Ms Blakeman: You're kidding.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, $1.65. Those days are long behind us. In fact, when you consider that in some years the regulated rate for natural gas would be lower than even $1.65 – and that was the winter rate too. Those, as they would say, were the good old days. Now we're looking at anywhere between $7.58, $8.58, a little bit over $9. For this month, if we average ATCO north and ATCO south, we're looking at a $9 a gigajoule price for natural gas. Whenever we consider what the price was then and what it is now, this certainly has not been an improvement for Alberta consumers.

I again fail to see how this bill, Mr. Speaker, will improve the lot of Alberta consumers. It has yet to be explained to me – and certainly I hope that at some point we can go back and have another look at this legislation – how the cost associated with combining these two billing systems is going to work. Who is going to pick up those costs? Will it be the consumers again? How is all this going to work out? We certainly know the problems. The citizens of St. Albert, Mr. Speaker, know the problems associated with billionaires and metering devices that, if they are working, are inaccurate. It would be in my view one of the places in the province with the most frustration expressed by consumers over this energy deregulation. St. Albert certainly would be one of the neighbourhoods that have been the victims of energy deregulation. How will the citizens of St. Albert share in these associated costs? That is a question that has yet to be answered.

When we consider that Bill 19 is going to move Albertans toward a more deregulated energy marketplace and require a signed contract to receive stable prices – it's all about stability. It's not about low-cost energy anymore; it's about a stable price. Anytime you have this five-year contract, it's a gamble. When you look at some of the long-term price projections for natural gas – and these are experts and I'm sure the Alberta government has experts and they're probably contracting out to receive expert advice on natural gas prices not only for next year but for the next 10 years – they range anywhere from $3.80 to $4.50, some certainly as high as $5.20 but not in the range of $7.54.

When we consider contracts, Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to see on CFRN television one evening recently a gentleman who had signed a contract and had tracked prices. This gentleman had the contract, as I recall, for at least two years if not three, and there were only two months in that time period where he came out an economic winner as a result of signing this contract. Many constituents are asking for advice on this matter. I'm sorry; signing one of these long-term contracts for $7.50 or $7.30 at this time in my view would be inadvisable.

How can we make the argument that we're going to trade low-cost gas and, oh, we're going to have stable prices or the fact that the days of cheap energy are over? Mr. Speaker, you can't consider at any time that Albertans as owners of the natural gas should not receive the benefit, and the benefit in this case is the public good. To think that they should have to pay the same price as someone in, let's say, Chicago or San Francisco . . . [interjection] Now, an hon. member says that, well, citizens are gathering the royalties, which is true, but the Natural Gas Price Protection Act, which was a flagship after the re-election of this government, after the great rebate election, was supposed to share those rebates with the citizens. Unfortunately, that hasn't happened.

Certainly citizens from all over the province have signed our petitions. Thousands and thousands of citizens – over 5,000 and growing – have contacted this political party through altaliberals.ab.ca to express their dismay at this government in their reluctance to share the wealth from the natural resources. Now, there are many people in the community of Edmonton-Gold Bar who, Mr. Speaker, when they discuss Bill 19 at the coffee shop, think that the reason the government is so reluctant to give rebates is because it would cut into the sales of the direct marketers like Direct Energy and the municipally owned ones, Enmax and EPCOR. That's the reason there are no rebates anymore: because if people knew that there were going to be rebates, well, why would they rush out and buy one of these expensive long-term contracts when they don't have all the information presented in a timely fashion.

Now, when we look at this bill and we look at the future for Alberta, we must, Mr. Speaker, look at some of the promises that have been made here. Again, we are looking at enabling firms other than utility companies to provide regulated gas supply service to customers. We are looking at aligning, as I said earlier, the retail natural gas and electricity markets and permitting both commodities to be marketed together. Well, we already know that electricity is not a commodity, because it can't be stored. We're also proposing here to increase retail competition by providing a more equal footing for natural gas retailers and utility companies. There are a few municipally owned utilities in this province – some people say there are seven; others say there are nine – other than Enmax and EPCOR. Where do they stand on this? How does this affect them? How does it affect the customers that they serve?

When we look, Mr. Speaker, at these three statutes and how they're put together in this bill and the future for natural gas consumers in this province, I don't think it will be positive. It's not going to work out the way we are being promised. We are being promised that this choice is going to work. When you consider what the Navigant report had to say – and this was commissioned by the government. Now, there have been a lot of studies commissioned by this government in the last couple of years. There are so many studies that it's hard to keep track of them all. Certainly there have been studies that have been promised by the Department of Energy to this member, and I'm still waiting. I don't stand too long at the mailbox every day because I've sort of given up.

There are many studies, but the Navigant report is perhaps the most interesting. Now, has it been followed here? The Navigant report spoke about having a consumer education program for all citizens. Other jurisdictions which have attempted this deregulation and then have realized the folly of their ways and have backed off have had consumer education programs. Nowhere in this bill do I see a consumer education program. Some jurisdictions set aside 50 cents, up to as much as $2 – and this would be American currency – to have consumer education programs. But not here. Unfortunately, a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar got some firsthand, up-front information regarding these direct marketers who appeared at her doorstep. It was then that I realized that we must encourage this government to initiate some sort of consumer information and protection program. Not everyone has access to the Internet. Certainly, there are codes of conduct displayed on the Department of Energy web site for not only electricity marketers but also for natural gas marketers. It's there.

Now, a lot of people, because of their high utility bills, can't afford a home computer. High utility bills are eating into a lot of people's disposable income. If they could afford the home computer, then there's the Internet access. They'd have to pay for that too. Many people, as a result of this energy deregulation, have significantly less disposable income, Mr. Speaker. We talk about the Alberta advantage. We talk about: oh, yes, we have lower taxes; we have this; we have that. Certainly we need to have that so we can afford to pay our utility bills at the end of the month. They're skyrocketing totally out of control. How some school boards and some hospitals get by is beyond me.

In regard to natural gas costs earlier in debate on Bill 27 we talked about some of the regional health authorities. Many of the regional health authorities, many of our institutions of higher learning are having difficulty keeping to their budgets because of skyrocketing natural gas prices. How is Bill 19 going to give comfort and economic advantage to those institutions? Certainly some schools, not all schools, are looking at revising their budgets because of utility costs. It is perhaps at this time the number one public issue with Albertans.

Certainly, two years ago the novelty of rebates during an election year worked for this government. Many people decided: well, we'll give this energy deregulation one more chance – one more chance. Bill 19 is putting this government and their massive majority on the bubble, because I don't think the citizens are going to tolerate this any longer, these utility costs skyrocketing to the point where there are going to be difficulties at the end of the month with household budgets. People can only take so much, and when you look at $400 and $500 a month utility bills, it is far, far too much. [interjection] There will be an open revolt. I'm glad the hon. member brought that up, because as people articulate in the letters to the Official Opposition and in the phone calls, that are very numerous these days, it is an open revolt. I'm hearing from citizens all over the province, and they're not happy with the high utility bills.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande-Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some very interesting comments from the member opposite provoked me to respond and perhaps pose a question or two. It was stated that eight years ago the price of natural gas was $1.65. Well, we could go back a little bit further than that if we wanted to look back, which is really not the way we like to look, but we can look back. Would you happen to know the price of natural gas in 1963? It was 26 cents. Yeah, 26 cents. But that's just more trivia.

The important thing about the gas eight years ago, the gas in 1994, and natural gas today in the province of Alberta is to understand what happens to a stranded commodity. The question, then, might come to mind: when was the Alliance pipeline put in service? It could have some bearing on this whole thing.

Secondly, another question comes to mind. Today it might be interesting to check on the price of natural gas in the state of Wyoming. That will give you some indication of what has happened to the province of Alberta. Wyoming is where we were about eight years ago.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, Alberta consumers are at the same time Alberta workers, the same workers who now enjoy the highest disposable income in the country, the lowest taxes, and no sales tax, all benefits from increased gas exports.

Another comment, Mr. Speaker. Electricity in a deregulated environment can be stored, secondarily, I admit. It can be stored behind dams and in gas storage caverns in the province of Alberta's natural gas hub, and you can turn it on in 10 minutes.

Another comment, just to end my comments, Mr. Speaker. The number one public issue in the province of Alberta today remains health care. Utilities may very well be a close second, but certainly the issues in my riding still revolve around health care.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to this legislation in third reading. Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, is a piece of legislation that I think merits considerably more discussion in this Assembly than it has had to this point. I guess I am of the view – and I've heard this view from many government members in the past – that if it ain't broke, don't fix it. [interjections] Well, a variety of combinations might well describe this piece of legislation, because we had a system that was not broken, did not need fixing, and the ideological tinkers just couldn't keep their hands off it.

You know, it's been stated many times during this debate that gas was deregulated a long time ago, and that's true. Basically, the ability for someone who wanted to retail gas to use other people's distribution network to do so has been established in this province for a long time. The interesting fact, however, is that over those years until very recently nobody really tried to do it.

I remember having a discussion with ATCO Gas management in Edmonton when I was still on city council and not, I might add, a member of the board of EPCOR. We did, Mr. Speaker, meet with them and discuss the gas market, the gas situation, their company, the outlook, and so on, and how they served the needs of people in northern Alberta for natural gas. While they didn't say so, it was obvious to anybody that was listening to them that their policy at that time provided very, very cheap gas. Their policy was that they would earn their return on their distribution system. They would buy gas and transmit it to customers at their cost. That was the policy of ATCO Gas and, previously, Northwestern Utilities.

So in that situation two things happened. First of all, you had the cheapest possible gas for consumers because there was a regulated utility, that being the distribution network, which is still there, and that's where they earned the money. We were getting our gas from that company at cost, so we had low prices, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has said and as the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky had said before that. We had very, very inexpensive gas. The second thing follows from it, Mr. Speaker, and that is that nobody else could get in the market. How could they make money? They couldn't make money because they'd have to sell gas with no profit, and they don't have a distribution system to make money from.

So it was a wonderful system that produced for consumers the lowest possible gas prices. In fact, the company at that time had a number of fields, reserves of its own, so it was often selling its own gas and not necessarily having to buy it all the time from a market.

Now, the government promises that we're now going to have choice. The interesting thing is that they imply that it was bad before because we didn't have choice, but what we had was the lowest possible price. Now we will have choice, but it will be significantly more expensive no matter what choice you take. It doesn't matter whether it's a difference between the choice of one company or another, or it doesn't mean if you choose to buy on a monthly basis at the monthly price or you extend it over a three-year contract. All of those options which people will now have will all be significantly more expensive than the system that we had in place in this province.

You know, I think the answer is obvious, Mr. Speaker. If you're going to have competition, you have to have higher prices in order that the competition can take place. So a company that wants to come into this market requires ATCO Gas or whoever it is to be charging more than their cost for the gas. Otherwise, how can they get into the market? They can't.

So we have a case, very clearly, where a monopoly is cheaper than competition. It's cheaper than what the government is proposing for the consumers, but they need to raise the price in order to have room for people to get involved. So unbundling raises its head. You separate the distribution from the retail function. You can't have a company selling what's essentially gas at cost and getting their money from a distribution system because you can't be in both businesses. That means that everybody, to make money, has to either retail gas or be in a distribution monopoly, but not both. That means that everybody is going to make a profit on the gas, so the prices have to rise.

The question is whether or not you're going to get enough companies operating on that basis to actually have price competition or whether you're going to have competition for other things. Are they going to come to you and say, "Well, you know, you might save a little bit if you buy a three-year contract or you might save a little bit here or there or you might win a free trip to Las Vegas or you might win an electric razor or a set of steak knives or something like that or you might get a month free if you buy a contract with us"? But, basically, the price of the contracts is going to be approximately the same as buying month to month if you average it out over a long period of time. That's the case, as we all know, with things like mortgages and so on. Basically, the price has to be higher, considerably higher, in order to support the system that the government is proposing.

So nobody should enter blindly into voting on the last reading of this bill. If they're getting concerns from their constituents about the high price of gas – and they are seasonal – if their constituents are concerned about this, then clearly they need to think through what the government is proposing and consider their constituents' interests in voting on this bill, and I urge them to do so.

Now, I know that the Premier has talked a lot, at least in answer to questions put to him in question period, about the opposition only caring about this when the price is high. Well, you know, if you're trying to represent people, Mr. Speaker, you want to represent them when they have a concern. It's probably true that the people that we represent, the people that you represent, don't have a great concern about natural gas prices during the summer for two reasons. First of all, they don't use very much gas. None of us uses very much gas in the summer. Secondly, because of that, the demand for gas is way down, so the price is way down. So it's not an issue in the summer.

What is so hard to figure out about that? I don't know. But the fact of the matter is that the wintertime price of gas has continued to rise from winter to winter, and we have had a particularly cold winter, and that has been of some advantage to people that want to put tough questions to the government on natural gas and the prices and the policy. I submit, then, that in a perverse sort of way that's a good thing because it really gives everybody a taste of things to come, and if we have another cold winter, it's going to come back.

Yes, the government is desperately hoping for warmer weather and a nice, warm summer and so on, but winter will come again, as it always does, so the problem will come back. We'll have more cold winters in the future, and it's going to really press people who are struggling to heat their homes, and we've heard lots of stories. We've tabled letters and so on from citizens and documented some of their stories and some of their concerns.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, I think that this will be a very unfortunate bill. We could, if we really wanted to, offer people much cheaper natural gas – and we could, as well, with electricity for that matter – by simply abandoning the sort of ideological constructs about how a market is supposed to work and about the magic of the invisible hand, which was formulated by Adam Smith 300 years ago, and sort of look in a practical way at how you deliver energy to the people of Alberta. If we can do that, I think we would find ways to provide low-cost energy to the people, and we could in fact go to a system that had the interests of the public in mind rather than the interests of shareholders of some companies that want to get into the Alberta market, take advantage of the high prices, and make more money.

So, Mr. Speaker, I see that it's getting very close to 5:30, and I think that if it's agreeable to the Government House Leader, at this point I will move that we adjourn debate on Bill 19.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I would move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 p.m.

The Speaker: Well, I think I'd have to agree with the hon. Government House Leader. I won't even call the vote, because it is 5:30. The House stands adjourned till 8 o'clock.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 25, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/25

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 30

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to move.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Bill 30 for third reading.

We've had quite a bit of discussion already on interim supply, and as soon as the spring break is over, we'll be coming back to do the regular supply, so I won't add any further words at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have an opportunity to speak for the final time to Bill 30, which is, of course, the interim supply bill, where we are approving for this government's use $5 billion without having any backup paperwork. We've had an opportunity to voice our concerns on this particular piece of legislation being brought in the way it was. We fully understand the financial commitments that the government has to its operations on a day-to-day basis, being ongoing programs, grants that are thankfully given at the beginning of every fiscal year, and salary and commitments to the staff who work for the government in all the various departments, and we know that those have to be and should be paid and of course paid on time.

Our concern all along has been that this government prolongs the bringing in of the budget to such a time in the year when people and organizations, all of those NGOs that rely on government financial support, have to start their planning for their year without really knowing for sure how much money they're going to be getting. Why don't they know how much money they're getting? Because we haven't seen a formal budget yet. As the Government House Leader stated, that budget will be coming in at the end of the first week in April, but that is already well into a lot of organizations' planning schedules, and there's no reason for it to be brought in that late. We've heard arguments from the government's side that they had to wait until the federal budget came in and that they're still not sure what the allocations are, so that takes a long time to figure out, but in fact, Mr. Speaker, that is just so much kerfuffle that they use to throw in front of people to try and convince them that they have a really good reason for not bringing in a budget.

In fact, there have been many instances in this Legislative Assembly when there has been no federal budget in the first six months of any year, so the government makes the estimates that they need to make based on what their projections are from the federal government and carries on. They plan their budget, they bring it in, they designate it, we scrutinize it, it gets voted on, and that's what happens in many instances. This year they're saying that they had to bring it in so late because they were being held up by the feds, really not an appropriate debate to have had because it isn't accurate. So we would like to see them change the process next year.

What we do need to see is a Legislative Assembly that comes in at a standardized time every year. We at one time, while I was a member of this Assembly, had a House leaders' agreement that stated that the House sat prior to February 15 of each year. That was a pretty good process because what happened then is that we were able to at least see the budget prior to the beginning of the fiscal year, which is April 1, and usually had some time to spend scrutinizing it, asking questions of the various departments, comparing the business plans from one year to the next, taking a look at what their forward projections were, and generally had a fairly good understanding of what the government's direction was for the year. That isn't the case now. We're just shooting in the dark.

When we see a request come in for $5 billion and a government who is so arrogant that they choose not to provide any information and are mortally offended when we ask questions about how they're going to spend the money, that isn't the proper way to run a government. You wouldn't run a business like that, and we shouldn't run a government like that.

When you're taking a look at a quarter of the budget year of the moneys we expect to be allocated being portrayed over three pages of information with ministers who are for the most part very reluctant to back up their requests with any substantive detail, we have a problem. We want to be able to know where the government is heading when they start into the year. We want to know that before half the year is over. We want to be able to ask some questions on behalf of our constituents and organizations that are receiving the funds, because that's the proper way to handle a government budget. It should be scrutinized, it should be available to people, and debate should be had at least in some detail prior to us making approvals for these kinds of supply requests. That's not the way this government chooses to do business. It's very unfortunate. I hope that they will see the error of their ways and take a look at restructuring that for the new year.

It isn't that their government officials couldn't be ready. We know that they start their budget planning process in September of every year, so there's absolutely no reason why it takes from September until the end of March for them to be able to figure out how and where they're going to spend their money. They say that they don't know the accurate figures, that many of the costs have been hard to determine in terms of particularly the revenue flow, but that is also, I believe, an unsubstantiated argument because what we see are what I think are pretty good projections on behalf of the government of what their revenue stream is going to be, including the volatile oil and gas prices. What we have seen traditionally in the past few years is that the surplus revenues they get when oil and gas prices peak or jump beyond what the expectations are is the surplus that the government uses to divvy up for its little pet projects over the course of the year and never would have been incorporated into the general planning strategy anyway. So that argument also doesn't hold any water as far as I'm concerned.

There is no good excuse for a government with this many people on their front bench and the number of staff that they have supporting them behind, all of whom are very excellent and well qualified and do a good job in terms of following their ministers' orders, no excuse at all why they can't have a budget ready earlier in the year, why we can't see some detail, and why we can't have put at least the biggest spending departments under scrutiny on the floor of this Legislative Assembly before we take a look at advancing them dollars for the first quarter of the year. So for that reason, we are not very happy with this particular budget, and we expect the government to act in a more responsible manner in the future.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I come to the close of my remarks, which makes, I see, all the government members very happy. Be happier to return to this particular debate when we see the formal budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to make some brief comments on Bill 30, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2003. I raised several questions during an earlier stage of the debate on this bill in this House, and I heard a very spirited defence from the Government House Leader, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. He was trying to defend what I think is the indefensible; that is, an unexplained and unjustifiable delay in bringing forth the real budget for fiscal 2003-2004 before this House by now.

Since the government failed to act in a timely fashion in bringing forward the budget for the next year as a whole, it found it necessary, therefore, to bring Bill 30 forward, asking the House to approve close to $6 billion, according to my count on that evening, without really providing information that's normally required by Assemblies such as this one before its members can based on good information vote for or against the bill. That information not being there, it's difficult, therefore, to really debate the legitimacy of various items in this bill and have a discussion back and forth on whether or not the moneys requested, the amounts indicated here in the bill, are indeed justified and merit the support of members of the Assembly.

However, we are cognizant of certain other imperatives. The public service employees have to be paid. The Assembly's expenses have to be paid. There are bills there that await being paid. So the money is needed. There's no doubt about it. It's just the lack of appropriate and necessary information that will help us as members of the Assembly to scrutinize the requests made here. That's the issue.

As to the arguments given by the hon. House leader the previous evening when I raised some questions with respect to why the delay in bringing forward the budget for next year, the volatility of markets and the federal government's budget were two main reasons that were given, and neither of them was either compelling or convincing in any real sense. The federal government brought its budget forward quite some time ago, so that in itself is no reason why the provincial government here could not have prepared its own budget and brought it before the House by this day. The volatility of the markets continues, and that's in the nature of the markets given both the international situation and the normal speculative character of international markets in the current era of finances moving back and forth across national borders every minute of the 24-hour cycle of every day. So factors such as volatility, unpredictability, instability in the market are something that's normal, not something that's abnormal. If the normal fluctuations of the market are used to justify an unusual, an abnormal delay in the presentation of the budget, that isn't very convincing, and one can only say, then, that the government hasn't really done its job in a timely fashion.

The Minister of Finance will have an opportunity, I understand, on April 8 to bring forward the budget, and these numbers will obviously be blended into those overall numbers. We will hope that at that point there'll be adequate information provided in the budget documents for this Assembly to seriously debate the estimates and proceed to vote on those estimates.

So in the meantime to assist the government in its desire and ability to pay the bills that have to be paid – the budget may be delayed, but the payments can't be; that's recognized – I will be giving a sort of conditional support to the bill.

With that, I conclude my remarks on Bill 30, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 now is available.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a third time]

The Speaker: Before calling on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure always to stand up in this House and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly constituents, but there's a family in the public gallery this evening that is a little extra special. It's our senior counsel's, Rob Reynolds', family. It's quite unique, and it is on public record that Ritu is due on April 8, and we'll see how close to the date we are. I would ask that Ritu Khullar and Samir Reynolds please stand up and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders

Bill 3
Electric Utilities Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms. Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 27 for what will be the last time this evening . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, the bill has not been moved.
The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased tonight to move third reading of Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act.

Certainly, there have been a number of concerns and questions raised in committee. Hopefully, in the time we have allotted in third reading, we'll be able to address some of those concerns, and we look forward to some more constructive criticism and debate with respect to this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was a slight error in my process tonight, so I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 3 so that we can proceed with Bill 27 as was previously agreed with the opposition.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 27
Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities
Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 25: Mr. Hancock]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'd like to thank the Government House Leader for the small amount of confusion there. It's a good thing, I think, that this is the final week before we have a short spring break and everybody has the chance to get a little rest and recharge their batteries.

As I started out saying a few moments before, it's a pleasure to be able to speak to Bill 27. It's not really a pleasure that this is going to be the last opportunity we have to speak to it in this House at this time. We have had some concerns with this particular bill, as have been outlined over the few hours of debate that we have been entering into over the past week. This is one of those bills that we've truly seen get the bum's rush through this Legislature. It was introduced last week and is already coming out of third reading and may see Royal Assent by the end of this week. So this could be – we'll have to check and see the records; we haven't had time to check the records yet – the fastest passage of a bill that we've seen in this Legislature from the date of introduction to the time it gets Royal Assent. I see the Government House Leader looking quizzically at me. I'm sure that with his vast resources he'll be able to check that and correct me if I'm . . .

Mr. Hancock: I'm sure that'll be on top of my priority list.

Ms Carlson: Yes. Mr. Speaker, he's stating that it'll be on the top of his priority list, and I'm sure that it will be. Accommodating anything that I ask for is always at the top of his priority list as I have noticed over the past few years. Sadly not the case, although I have to say that when we do have important issues brought up, he does deal with them in a timely fashion, and we certainly do appreciate that.

With regard to this bill, it feels like a union-busting bill to us. It makes us ask the question: who's next? It makes us ask the question: why was this bill so quickly brought in and pushed through the Assembly? We haven't had those questions answered yet, and in spite of all the squawks we heard from the government side on the amount of debate that we've had on this piece of legislation, for such a substantive piece of legislation which will significantly affect health care workers in this province now and for the foreseeable future the amount of debate has been limited. For the most part, with the exception of this afternoon, it's been limited to squirreling away little hours of debate here and there after 9 o'clock at night in this Assembly, when most people in this province don't even know that we're at work.

So it's been a problem for us. It's been a real problem. We've tried a couple of amendments. We didn't have time, I don't believe, to get all of our amendments to this particular bill on the floor. Our colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar, who has been shepherding this bill and the critique of it through the Legislative Assembly, will be tabling any amendments that we haven't had a chance to talk to. I do know that the amendments that were brought forward weren't dealt with in as great a depth as we would have liked. I don't believe anybody in this Assembly actually had the opportunity to do the last stage of review in committee, which is a line-by-line, section review of the bill. There just hasn't been time due to the time allocation motion that was brought in on this bill after very little debate. The Government House Leader talked about seven hours of debate, but that was on three bills in total during committee; that wasn't per bill.

Mr. Hancock: Eight point five two.

Ms Carlson: Eight point five two, he is saying, on this one so far.

Well, that's good. Now we're getting to something that's about halfway to what a bill of this stature should have in this Legislature. It doesn't do anybody any favours in the long run to rush these bills through. We've seen that over time.

A lot of people complain that governments move very slowly, and that's true. I used to really hate that, but then when I see the legislation go through in a quick fashion . . . [interjection] I hear some more comments from the Government House Leader that I'm quite sure he'll be happy to put on the record.

The problem that we have seen over time when these bills get rushed through so quickly is that they end up being flawed in some capacity. We see them being brought back into the Legislature for some kind of substantive change in that year or the year following their speedy passage through, and that's worse than having taken the time in the first instance to take a look at the bill, to be able to put it out to the various stakeholder groups and to give them time to react. These bills that we send out to stakeholder groups and that the government has consulted on are generally speaking not the highest priority on those groups' lists, so we need to ensure that we have given them enough time to actually take a look at the bill, have the substantive parts of it discussed adequately, reviewed by whomever they choose to have review it, and then give them time to give their feedback to us. That's an essential part of this process, and it seems increasingly to be a missing part of the process.

I can't count the number of times in the past 10 years that people have phoned us and said, "Please hold that bill up just another day or two; we've got a couple of questions" or "Please hold it up; there may be a big problem with it." And we've passed it the night before. Generally late at night it's been passed, and there's no opportunity left to do that. We hope we don't see that same thing with this legislation, Mr. Speaker, because it's going to affect a great many people in this province and a great many workers whom the public generally relies on, those being health care workers.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like at this point in time to introduce an amendment at this stage because we have not seen our concerns adequately addressed with regard to this piece of legislation. Do you want me to read it into the record while it's being distributed? On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I move this amendment. Will it have a number? Will it be A2? I see there was one earlier this afternoon. We will call it A2. The notice of amendment reads as follows: that the motion for third reading be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, be not now read a third time because it is the Assembly's view that the bill discriminates against employees of regional health authorities by taking away the right to strike and the right to termination pay.

An Hon. Member: Is this a hoist?

Ms Carlson: This is not a hoist; this is a reasoned amendment. The hoist will come next.

Still our biggest substantive concern about this bill is how it discriminates against employees by taking away both their right to strike and their right to termination pay. We heard yesterday the minister, I think it was, explaining the reason why he was taking out the right to termination pay. He talked about what happens with the restructuring when employees get laid off and then are rehired really within the same organization but are then eligible for severance pay. He said that that was the reason why they wanted to have this particular part of the bill in it.

Inasmuch as it pertains just to those particular situations, we understand his dilemma. We believe that there are other manners by which he could deal with this particular situation, and those are private agreements with those authorities given the nature of the changes and crossover bids, talking to the union leaders and getting an agreement, a tactical agreement on how to move forward as the restructuring happens. We believe that that's entirely possible to do. If both parties go to the table in good faith – and we have seen that kind of good faith evidenced by the unions; government needs to also do that – then we believe that there are other ways around that particular obstacle other than changing it in the legislation, Mr. Speaker.

When we see the government move to legislation to make that kind of a change, we have to ask the question: what else? What else is this here for? What else can we expect to happen in the near future? Why is it that they don't believe that they would be able to operate with the unions on a good faith basis to negotiate these kinds of agreements? That's our concern with this bill. We haven't seen that adequately addressed in any of the debate that we've seen here and certainly not by the minister who is responsible for this. It seems to be a question that he avoids. That does not build our trust with where they're moving on this bill, and I'm certain that it doesn't do anything to build trust amongst the unions that he's dealing with in that regard.

Then there's the part of this amendment that we believe discriminates against employees of regional health authorities by taking away the right to strike. We believe that the right to strike is a fundamental right and that those employees have the right to use that in their arsenal of bargaining abilities if the need comes to that. Health care workers are not hugely militant to the point where the first thing they want to do is go on strike. They spend sometimes years at the bargaining table trying to negotiate contracts that are fair for both sides and work in a reasonable fashion. In my years in this province – and this is the province where I was born and raised – I have not seen health care workers strike without having been significantly provoked.

What is wrong with the current process that is here, unless the government doesn't wish to abide with a fair bargaining process? We saw shades of that during the teachers' strike last year. Looks like that's the way this government want to operate in the future. We have a real problem with that, Mr. Speaker. These workers have every right to strike. It has been a part of their agreements, it has been a part of their ability to negotiate, and it should be a part of their ability to negotiate in the future. This government I believe does not have the right to hold that kind of a hammer over their head and take away that ability from them, and we have serious concerns with that and as such have brought in this particular amendment as the last possible hope to see this government recognize the rights of workers in this province, particularly health care workers.

I would strongly urge all members of the Assembly to support this particular amendment because it is really worthwhile taking a look at. In the absence of having heard any reasonable and justifiable discussion from the government on why they're going forward with this, I believe this is the only option available to us.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks on this particular amendment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to add a few comments in support of the amendment that we have before us. As the mover indicated, it is a reasoned amendment and as such is allowed under our rules to be adverse to the principles that are actually contained in the bill. There are two major principles that are offensive to the opposition and to many Albertans, and the principles that are being attacked in Bill 27 are the right of a particular group of employees to strike and the right of a group of employees to termination pay. Those are two rights that have been hard won. It's taken a lot of years and a lot of negotiation and a lot of grief to have those two rights pretty well as givens in our province for the most part. I think most employers would respect the right to strike and the right to termination pay. So we see Bill 27 as being a backwards step, being an unfair step, and being a step that's unnecessarily confrontational with respect to the organized employees in the province.

Another characteristic, of course, of a reasoned amendment is that it may express an opinion. Certainly, the opinion that employees that are being denied the right to strike in Bill 27 and denied the right to termination pay – you didn't have to go much further than the steps of this Legislature to hear how passionately many Albertans feel about those rights and how passionately they feel about the government moving to take those rights away. It's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, because it's so unnecessary. There was no attempt to consult with the groups that are involved, and you would think that that would be a basic piece of the process in drafting any legislation, that the government would have not only the courtesy but would sincerely want the input of groups of citizens that are going to be affected by legislation, and that hasn't happened.

I think it was on this bill that the minister indicated that after he had presented the bill, he immediately adjourned to a meeting with the people involved to inform them of the contents of the bill, and that's very unfortunate because that's consultation after the fact. It's one of the real flaws in this government's dealing with organized labour and with professional groups that often decisions are announced and then groups are approached, and it seems to me that it's putting the process backwards.

So this amendment attempts to rectify two of the most offensive provisions of Bill 27, and the amendment I think is very clear. Although the history of reasoned amendments and the success of reasoned amendments have not been great in the country, I'm hoping that colleagues in the Legislature will see fit to support this amendment.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on amendment A2 to Bill 27. I think it's moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and the intent of the motion is to give the government and the Assembly more time before this bill is passed so that further and necessary consultations can be held.

If this amendment is passed by this House, it'll also allow the government to develop necessary regulations that will really constitute the exact changes that are being sought by way of this bill. This bill is a shell to give the government and the cabinet the powers to make regulations as it pleases, and it's very difficult for the House to determine what the substance is of those regulations, in what both exact and proximate ways they will change the existing arrangements. The scope, the scale, and the nature of the changes are all unclear from the bill itself, so it's very difficult for me as a member and for the New Democrat caucus to even make an intelligent decision on this bill, whether or not to support it, because the detail, the substance is missing.

That being the case, the only plausible reason that I've heard from the government side for rushing the bill through the House is that it needs to be passed by the end of this month because the contract with health care unions is running out. It runs out on that date; that is, March 31. Mr. Speaker, if it is indeed the case that this bill has no regulations accompanying it and the regulations are not yet even drafted, then how credible is it for the government to argue that it needs this bill in place in order for it to be able to use it as of the 1st of April to deal with the situation that will arise from the expiry of the existing contracts that health care workers have with the regional health authorities? It remains beyond me to believe that if the government has no regulations at this point, has not even done the drafting of those regulations – and if that's the reason why it's unable to share those regulations with us members of the House so that we could in an informed way assess, as I said, the scope, scale, and the nature of changes that the government plans to make using this bill, then the raison d'être for rushing it through for March 31 so that it's available to the government as a legislative piece to use to deal with the emergent situation doesn't make sense at all.

If there are no regulations at this point, then I can't see how this bill can be enforced come April 1 without those regulations because regulations are the essence of this bill. It's really a bill that should be called an act to enact regulations, I guess, rather than anything else. This may be about the restructuring of health care authorities, but there's nothing in the bill that gives me a reasonable amount of information as to the real intentions of the government on this.

One can speculate on this – and I have worked very hard to be careful in speculating what the bill is about in my previous remarks on the bill – but I think this amendment that's before us, the reasoned amendment, which will mean that the bill will come back, I guess, for further debate before this House after six months, is perhaps at this stage the best way to deal with the conundrum that we find ourselves in, which is that it's difficult for us to vote on this bill unless we know what the regulations are, because it really is an attempt to seek the stamp of this House for the government to engage in the development of those regulations. Again, it's the regulations that should be approved by this House, not just this bill. So unless the intent of this bill is really to sort of get back at the union movement in the health care field for whatever reasons the government has and to break the unions, there's no reason why we shouldn't wait six months.

In fact, the unions as employees must be in my view consulted in the development of the regulations, which will give body and substance to this bill once those regulations are developed. So six months from now the government will have, I hope, consulted with unions, consulted with the employee groups who are going to be dramatically affected by this bill, and if those consultations indeed are undertaken by the government honestly and in sincerity, then the regulations that arise from those consultations will make this bill much better and will make this bill something that this House can intelligently debate and vote on.

My concern is that if the government proceeds, as it seems determined to do, to push this bill through the House tonight or tomorrow when it doesn't even have the regulations ready or drafted or consultations undertaken with the employees' representatives, then the effect of that failure on the part of government to not have consulted with the employees' representatives or its failure to have even draft regulations on hand and have shared them with this House to get the benefit of the debate and the scrutiny of this House as to the appropriateness of those regulations – all of this will simply profoundly alienate the very frontline workers who we expect to deliver health care services to us when we are ill, when our families are ill and in whose care we place our life and expect them to make sure that our safety, the quality of service that we receive remain their first concern.

Workers who feel alienated, workers who feel mistreated, workers who feel excluded, workers who feel marginalized in the workplace and find themselves in a situation where the employer has all the marbles and workers simply have to obey the orders and have no recourse collectively to engage in serious negotiations and bargaining with the employer are not happy workers, are workers who are angry, workers who feel excluded. Anyone who has done any work in the area of management knows that good managers make sure that their primary concern always is that employees are kept onside, that the employees are not pushed into a corner where they feel confronted with unacceptable conditions under which they are forced to work.

So in terms of considerations from the point of view of good, effective, efficient, humane management or from the point of view of good, transparent politics, it makes no sense to rush this bill through at this stage. This amendment certainly would help the House to pull itself out of this difficult situation where the government's determination to push the bill through has put us the members of this House; that is, to proceed regardless of the very considerations and the concerns that I have noted as to how the employees are likely to respond to this bill if it doesn't receive any input from them and if they are denied the opportunity to be consulted and have the opportunity to see the regulations. After all, it is those regulations that are going to affect their ability to bargain, the ability to have an opportunity to put their case at the bargaining table and to be able to make sure that as frontline workers they have the working conditions and the workloads that will permit them to provide health care services in a safe and nurturing way to people who, once they become ill, certainly are dependent on both the ability and the capacity of these workers to provide in a timely manner and in a professional manner the services they so badly need.

So for those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I support this amendment, and I hope that my colleagues in this House will also favourably consider supporting amendment A2 that's before the House. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on the amendment.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and it is indeed a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to the amendment. I welcome this opportunity because we are rushing a bill through this Assembly. It's a relatively small bill, but it's going to have a huge impact on what happens in this province.

We have heard time after time how there's been adequate debate, but I believe that if my math is correct, there were 74 members elected on the government side last election. Twenty-five of those are either ministers or yourself, Mr. Speaker, and that leaves 49 backbenchers who have spent next to no time adding input into this bill. I know that Albertans want to hear from these people. They want to hear about this amendment tonight. I would daresay that there isn't one member in this House that doesn't have at least one of those 7,000 union workers who are going to lose their right to strike in their constituency.

We have to realize that a strike is the last option. We also have to realize that for those workers – and I outlined yesterday when we were in Committee of the Whole how the employer has treated some of these union workers, people that started contract negotiations in 2001 because their contract was going to expire on March 31, 2002, and how even today, a year later, those people do not have a contract.

So we have a piece of legislation here that is poor legislation. As the hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona, if I heard him right – I wouldn't be surprised if this piece of legislation were back on this floor and we were looking at amendments to it because it is such poor legislation, because it does lead to provocation, it does lead to illegal strikes. Certainly, if we are concerned about the welfare of those people, those most vulnerable people who are in hospitals, then we should be concerned that there is no interruption, that there should be honest and open and fair negotiation. But this amending bill offensive. The bill is offensive. The amendment is trying to make a bad situation a little bit better.

We only have to look at the examples in the world of where there has been peace between employers, peace between governments and unions, and where economies that were in far worse shape than ours here in Alberta have been able to turn around. I was reading the book Road to Growth: How Lagging Economies Become Prosperous, and this was written by Fred McMahon from the Atlantic Institute for Market Studies, AIMS, and I noted in here that in a state economies such as Massachusetts and Michigan they certainly didn't get into a confrontation with the unions. What they did in order to improve their lot was they lessened the size of government. It goes on to say:

In other words, Maine did not take the same cure as Massachusetts and Michigan – significant reductions in state government and taxes – and has not benefited from as strong an economic turn-around.

So we have many, many examples of what it is that we can do in order to have labour peace, what we can do to have productivity in this province.

We have two other examples from economies that have turned around, and I'm looking at the Irish and the Dutch strategies. To quote again from this book:

Yet the successful Irish and Dutch strategies were remarkably similar to what occurs in the United States, though motivated as much by policy decisions as by the market. While U.S. wages naturally tend down during economic weakness, in the Netherlands and Ireland, government, unions, and businesses worked together to get the same effect through planning.

I think that's quite important, and it's quite important particularly when we see the amount of consultation that went on in this particular bill. There was next to no consultation. As a result, we had people in the galleries; we had people that already are planning strategies as to how they're going to counteract the negative parts of this bill. It is unfortunate that we have to get to the situation where we do have labour unrest in this province where it will lead to job action, whether it's work-to-rule, whether it's very poor relations in the workplace. All of these are not productive, and it could have been avoided. That is the thing: it could have been avoided. But once again we rushed. Once again we did not go out and certainly consult with all stakeholders. How much simpler it would have been if we would have simply had those regulations ready to ease the suspicious minds that these unions have.

Certainly, they have been given good cause in this province, Mr. Speaker. I can think of shortly after we were elected how a strike at the Calgary Herald went on and on and on, yet we did not have any intervention. I can think of just recently where at the Shaw Conference Centre we had a strike, and it was allowed to go on for months as well, and it was to the point where Shaw Communications didn't even want their name associated with it. So we saw press releases coming out with the Convention Centre, not the Shaw Conference Centre, because, again, this was damaging to their image and damaging to other sectors of their business.

We have legislation in front of us that certainly is going to infringe on the rights of 7,000 workers, and as a result, Mr. Speaker, we are going to have labour unrest in this province, and it's labour unrest that certainly could have been avoided. So I would urge all members of the Assembly to support this amendment. I would certainly ask all members of this Assembly not to support this bill that robs health care workers and their unions of their right to due process when it comes to basic labour relations.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly will cede the floor. I know that as I mentioned earlier, there are 49 other MLAs that have the opportunity to speak to this bill and to this amendment, and I do know that their constituents and especially those constituents who are involved in some type of union would love to hear their comments and their input on this particular amendment and this bill.

Thank you very much for this opportunity to speak to the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the bill?

The Speaker: Well, I do believe I've already recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to speak on the bill.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 27. I would like to, if I might, introduce an amendment to Bill 27, the Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar I move that the motion for third reading of Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 27, Labour Relations (Regional Health Authorities Restructuring) Amendment Act, 2003, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods does have the floor and can proceed.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment is, as all the members recognize, a hoist amendment, and the intent is to put an end to the discussion of the bill and in fact to let it die and not to become law in the province. There have been a number of speakers, I think, who have outlined very clearly the reasons why that should be the case. The bill, in essence, is unfair to a group of Albertans. It takes away their rights, and as a bill that does that, it deserves to die on the Order Paper. In fact, it should never have been before the Assembly.

I won't go over all the arguments that have been made in terms of what's wrong with the bill, but again the workers, the professions that are involved are very, very offended with the provisions of this act and rightfully so. They see this as a bill in which progress is being not only halted, but the clock is being turned back to an era where employees were often treated this way and in other jurisdictions where employees are treated this way to their detriment, Mr. Speaker.

So, again, speaking to the hoist amendment, it is intended that the bill, Bill 27, with all its provisions die and that things remain the same as they are. We had hoped that if the government has objectives in this area, once the bill has been hoisted, they might then take the opportunity, as they should have in the first place, to consult with the groups involved and then bring forward a bill that better reflects both the government interests and the interests of the employees that are affected.

Again, as I said previously, it seems only fundamental in labour relations that you would spend some time talking to the people that are going to be affected by your decisions before you make those decisions and even more fundamental that you would before changing the laws of the land have, if nothing else, the courtesy to talk to those groups to hear their views, to not only hear their views but to look to them for help with solutions. I'm sure that were they given the opportunity, they would have been pleased to contribute to the dialogue and the solution of the problem, and it's a problem that only the government seems to have at this point.

With that, I think I'll conclude, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I properly rise now to speak to the amendment, and this is, as my colleague has said, a hoist amendment. It is the last opportunity we have to try and get the government to pay attention to what we think is a substantive bill.

In third reading our choices of what we can do to bring attention to the issue at hand are limited. We can try to have a recommittal of the bill, which is what we did earlier this afternoon on this, send it back to committee so that we can finish up with what we were talking about in committee. When that fails before the House, then we have the ability to do a reasoned amendment in third reading, which is what we just talked about, where it takes out a piece of the bill that is particularly offensive to us. Of course, that also failed here this evening, so we are at the very last stage of this particular bill, which is a hoist.

The intent of the hoist can be, as my colleague said, to put it out there in the ether and let people talk about it and think about it and hope that the government never brings it back. People think that that's unreasonable sometimes, but in fact in this Legislature we have had cases where that has happened, not that a hoist has ever been successful in the past while I've been here, but what has been successful is talking out bills until the government decides to leave them on the Order Paper over the summer time period.

As they have these bills out there in the community for people to talk about and hash through, often they do find out, they are convinced, that the bills are flawed, often fatally flawed, so many of those bills never do come back in the fall sitting. Of course, then they die at the end of that particular legislative sitting, and that's a good thing. Those bills that we've seen that have died on the Order Paper or never have been brought back have been fatally flawed, and we think this is also a fatally flawed bill that should have the same kind of future for it.

At the very least what the hoist does state is "that it be read a third time this day six months hence," which would bring us back into session in – this is March; April, May, June, July, August – September, a little early for this government but certainly doable. They don't like to come in until the end of November so that we can be out in time for Christmas and nobody has to work too hard. But, you know, we could come in a little early this year. [interjection] Well, perhaps the Government House Leader works hard when we're in session, but I see a whole lot of pocketbook reading going on in corners of this particular Assembly and a lot of chitchat happening and often not a lot of work.

Dr. Massey: And a lot of solitaire played on computers.

Ms Carlson: Yes, a lot of solitaire playing on computers, as my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods has also noticed. [interjection] Well, the Government House Leader has some comments to make about the work schedule of people, and it certainly isn't the Official Opposition that has to find paid jobs on committees for their members, because we're quite busy keeping an eye on what this government is doing, talking to the people about what they think about what this government is doing, and putting that information together to come back into this Assembly. The Government House Leader may not realize it, but Official Opposition members don't have the kind of staff complement that people on your side of the House do, not only in terms of direct staff but in terms of access to . . . [interjection] There's the Government House Leader chirping away again, and of course those records will also now be in Hansard for all and sundry to read, so keep it up. This could be fun. Lots of good stuff to ship out to your constituents.

Dr. Massey: I'm here. I'm listening.

Ms Carlson: Yes. One of your constituents and my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods is listening with rapt attention, and I'm sure you're also providing some interesting amusement for all of the great and wonderful staff who work at Hansard, who really have what must be one of the world's most boring jobs translating what we have to say. As much as we think that what we're saying is brilliant, there are moments when it could be a little draggy for everybody concerned. [some applause] It's nice to see so much applause from the Assembly. People are actually listening to what I am saying. I do appreciate that. [interjections] Well, I see that Calgary-Shaw and the Government House Leader and the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs all would like to enter into debate on this hoist, and nothing could please us more than that happening and to have those comments that they've made be a part of the history of this province for ever and ever and ever.

Unfortunately, we don't have for ever and ever and ever on this bill. Shortly, in probably 10 or 15 minutes, we'll have a vote on this amendment, and I fear that it will suffer the fate that the other hoist amendments have suffered in this particular Assembly and that the government continues not to listen to what we think is a very good idea. Just set the bill aside for a little while, think about it over the summer, get some more feedback, talk to the unions, figure out a way to work out some of these issues in a less confrontational manner. This government has all the power anyways. They don't have to succumb to these kinds of tactics to get what they want.

We would just urge them to act with some reason at this particular time and encourage them to support the hoist amendment that we see before us today under the signature of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who has worked so hard and so diligently on ensuring that we fully understood the implications of this particular bill in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on this hoist amendment. I think it's an opportunity for this House to seize this moment and fix a situation that really is quite disturbing. It threatens labour peace in our hospitals. It certainly threatens the long-established and democratic rights of employees to organize and be represented by a union and to have the right to strike. These rights are simply being swept aside by this so-called innocuous legislation which seeks relatively modest change, using the words of the minister responsible for the area of labour relations.

Mr. Speaker, it's a bill that really is quite radical and far reaching in what it will do. It will set back labour relations in this province by 30, 40, 50 years, and that's not what Albertans want, that's not what health authorities should want, and that certainly is not what patients want. Patient safety must always remain a prime concern of all of us. Health authority boards, frontline workers, health care unions, this Legislature, the Minister of Health and Wellness, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, everyone should put first and give highest priority to patient safety.

If this legislation is passed, which will deprive over 7,000 frontline health care workers, employees of regional health authorities in this province, I cannot see how taking their fundamental rights away will contribute to improving the conditions which guarantee patient safety or improvement in the quality of services provided in our hospitals to those of us who become sick and become vulnerable as a result and dependent on the good judgment, good logic, professional ethics, and commitment of the people who provide us health services.

Giving extraordinary powers to the Labour Relations Board to impose settlements, to sign agreements unilaterally, and hand them down to employees makes absolutely no sense. Whether it's the case that the labour board will have the right to do it both to the employees and the employers doesn't cut the mustard here. It's a very, very extraordinary piece of legislation in that it empowers the board, just the chair of the board, to do all of these things either to the employers or to the employees, and I don't think that should be acceptable in a free and open and democratic society. No board should have that kind of unilateral authoritarian right to impose agreements. Just to say that it levels the playing field for both sides in my view simply isn't an argument worth our attention. It's no argument. It's a nonargument.

If this bill passes, it will look like an attempt to rule and that the government is determined to rule by defeat rather than through appropriate legislation which has been carefully drafted: all its ramifications and implementations by and large are clear from the wording of the legislation. That's not the case with Bill 27. Quite the contrary. It's flimsy, it lacks any detail, and it puts all the powers of this Legislature into the hands of the Executive Council or the minister of the Labour Relations Board. This should never, never be contemplated, much less allowed to happen. Legislatures must remain supreme in the role that they play in our representative democratic political structures. They have a role which should not be abrogated or surrendered to other legitimate segments of the government.

So the effect of this bill will be in fact to write a blank cheque to the executive branch of the government to do what it wishes with the restructuring of the health authorities, with the rights of workers, with the collective bargaining process, with the working conditions, which we can all spell out that are necessary to underwrite patient safety in our hospitals. Patient safety is simply not possible to contemplate without the full co-operation and without the assumption that there's a motivated workforce and set of employees who are not only dedicated to the work that they do but feel appropriately rewarded and recognized for the work that they do. And these two conditions have to be there together, the dedication of the workers and the recognition of the importance of their work, guaranteeing them the respect and dignity that they deserve and should have.

So this bill will in my view destabilize the context of the workplace, the working conditions in such a fashion that it will both jeopardize the conditions which need to be there for patient safety to be put first and foremost and, secondly, it will jeopardize or certainly put in question the question of labour peace. Health authorities and hospitals as places where we go to seek healing and treatment and recovery are places that need predictability, that need amicable relationships and reasonable working relationships between employees on the one hand and employers on the other. If we turn hospitals into places where confrontation rather than co-operation is assumed by legislation, then we are in very bad shape, Mr. Speaker. This bill will lead to confrontation rather than voluntary co-operation and goodwill between employers and employees.

If postponing the consideration of this bill by six months or so means that we work with the old rules and the restructuring transition must move more slowly and a little more painfully, so be it. I think it's a price worth paying for ensuring and for getting the conditions which are conducive in the long run to provide us, as patients and families of ill and injured and sick, the assurance that good care will be provided and patient safety will be the outcome of the conditions of work and the framework within which employers and employees work.

So I guess, Mr. Speaker, this hoist motion is well intended in that it will put this bill off the Order Paper for the next six or so months. It gives the government to reconsider its position, it gives the regional health authorities to reconsider their position, and it will give all parties to engage in a consultative exchange of ideas and positions out of which should emerge a much better piece of legislation, which we would hope will address the problems that I see arising if this bill is passed.

This bill in a way is inevitable, sort of part of the sequence of events that were contemplated when Bill 11 was passed. Bill 11 gave rise to Mazankowski, of the Premier's advisory committee, which produced the Mazankowski report, and the Mazankowski report anticipated this antilabour legislation which is before us now. It really is an implementation of the worst parts of the Mazankowski report, and I think the House should reject this attempt to legislate what in the judgment of most Albertans are the worst parts of the Mazankowski report. There are some good parts of the Mazankowski report, but they fade in significance when you compare them with the flawed parts of the Mazankowski report.

The only part of the Mazankowski report that has received full implementation up to this point, Mr. Speaker, as we all know, is the 30 percent increase in health care premiums. This is the second part that's coming up, and if this bill is passed, that will I think further worsen the situation in the health care field.

So I will support this amendment, and I hope other members will as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on the hoist amendment.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again I rise to speak to the amendments put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and in this particular case it is a hoist amendment. I think it's a very good amendment because it gives us a chance to look at this legislation. As I mentioned earlier, it is a simple piece of legislation, it's a short piece of legislation, but it's also very shortsighted. The benefits that we are going to reap in this province from this legislation are short-term because it will not in the long run lead to the very things that we wish it to, and that is harmony between labour groups, between employers, between employees, between the general public at large and the government. And what an excellent opportunity for us when we do have changes in the health care system taking place at the end of this month, what a great opportunity for all parties to sit down and look at problems they're going to encounter as we work through this particular new set of health regions and what impact it's going to have on the various unions.

I can't help but think back, Mr. Speaker, to the time when Lech Walesa was the head of the union and what a great, great person he was – certainly, this was at a time just prior to the crumbling of the Soviet Union – and how a person, a very intelligent person, a person with foresight, went from the point of being in jail in 1980 to winning the Nobel peace prize in 1983.

An Hon. Member: That's quite a leap.

Mr. Bonner: That is quite a leap.

Again, when I think of the oppression that occurred in the Solidarity trade union in Poland and what came out of it, it was remarkable. And I think that this legislation right here in its own much smaller way with less impact is going to do the same thing here in Alberta, that we're going to set up leaders in this province who are going to be extremely powerful. These leaders of the trade unions are certainly going to be militant because this is exactly what this type of legislation is doing to their rights.

I have to look at a quote that Lech Walesa made, and it comes from a great little book, Great Quotes from Great Leaders, and he goes on: "Everyone wants a voice in human freedom. There's a fire burning inside of all of us." The last thing we want to do in this province, Mr. Speaker, is ignite those fires of union unrest, because we have, as the minister has said countless times in this Legislature, relative peace amongst the unions and the employers. There certainly have been bumps along the way and there always will be those bumps along the way, and to bring in a bill that is fraught with controversy, a bill that is regressive against the rights of workers, then we are simply looking for trouble down the road.

We have right now staff shortages in our hospitals. We have shortfalls in funding and financing of our health care system. We have workers who go to work every day who say they're at a track meet because they don't stop from the time they get there until the time they leave. Is this going to be the button that triggers job action?

As I mentioned earlier, as well, what a great opportunity this would be for all of those MLAs that were elected during the last election, particularly those that campaigned that they would be the people's voice at the table, yet we haven't seen those members get up and debate in this Legislature, especially on government bills. How refreshing it was this afternoon in this very House when the Member for Calgary-Montrose got up and certainly represented one of the injured workers in his constituency in a very strong manner. Certainly, I hoped that that would be a great, shining example to other members, other backbenchers who don't have to be stifled, because regardless of all the legislation that we pass in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, we all realize that what is even more important is that this Assembly is a symbol of free speech in our democracy. To come in here day after day after saying to constituents that you're going to represent them, that you're going to be their voice, and then sit by and see a piece of legislation such as this go by without consultation, without even regulations being drafted so that the workers know what rules they're playing with is wrong, and that certainly isn't what those hon. members got elected for and what they thought they would have when they came into this Assembly.

They certainly thought they would have that opportunity to speak. As I said, I certainly do have a new respect for the Member for Calgary-Montrose because he did get up and he did speak.

As we look around our region, we hear how we have the great work that's going on at our hospitals, whether it be the University, the Royal Alex, Sturgeon general, Grey Nuns, the Misericordia, all those wonderful hospitals, and our regional health authorities. To think that every member probably has in his constituency a few that are going to be affected by this legislation, yet we haven't had consultation. So this hoist would certainly give us that opportunity. It would give every MLA the opportunity to go back and see what those constituents of theirs think about this legislation. It would give them the opportunity to bring those views into this House and debate them openly and have that record in Hansard. How important that is.

I look at this legislation, and again reading in this book, Road to Growth, I think, Mr. Speaker, that we have to call a time out here, that we have to look at this piece of legislation, and we have to realize that it is fraught with failure down the road. This is like the Ford Motor Co. in 1958 when they pushed the Edsel out, and this is our Ford Edsel of this particular session. It's a piece of legislation that certainly might have some good components, but it's going to be badly overshadowed by its shortcomings.

When I was reading, certainly, in Road to Growth about how lagging economies become prosperous, I was struck by another quote in this book. It goes on to say, "Modern research shows that even the length of Great Depression, though not its onset, was more a policy error – too-tight monetary policy and inflexible wages – than a natural outcome." How those words ring so true when we look at Bill 27.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote for this hoist amendment. It will give them the opportunity to go back to their constituencies to do the very thing they said they'd do when they campaigned at those doors, that they would be the voice of those constituents inside this House, not in a caucus meeting where there are no records but certainly where all of us can share net wisdom, can share net input.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly do support the hoist amendment, and I encourage all members to also support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's really disheartening to see how desperate the opposition must be to further their own political aspirations and causes that they would actually dig into books and misquote world leaders and try to draw some desperate comparisons between what's happening here with the bill before this House and what has happened in Europe and in Poland.

First of all, you know, I'm not sure if a little history lesson would fall upon deaf ears with the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry or if he has already expanded his cognitive abilities in his misquotes, but I'll give it a shot anyway.

Mr. Walesa, who he has been referring to, was indeed a union leader and quite an admirable character in our century. However, he was a character who has come to prominence because he was fighting against an oppressive socialist government, a socialist government that would probably resemble a government that one of the political parties across the aisle would form if ever given a chance, along the lines of the NDP perhaps or the Liberals. However, what is more important, Mr. Speaker, is to point out the fact . . . [interjections] Obviously, the opposition is not interested in having some historical errors pointed out to them, but I will persevere.

It is of importance also to point out that Mr. Walesa, while trying to overturn this oppressive socialist or perhaps even communist government, was modeling himself on Canada and the United States, on North American governments much like ours, the one that we are sitting in here right now.

What also ought to be pointed out for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry is that when Mr. Walesa actually had managed to overturn the government and form a government himself, he had formed a government that was as democratic as this government is and had adopted many of the policies of our Canadian governments, federal and provincial. Mr. Speaker, it would be blasphemous to draw a parallelism between Mr. Walesa and any union movement here in this province. We do not have oppressive governments that would even resemble those governments of eastern Europe at that time, and the governments that have been formed in eastern Europe since are indeed democratic governments which are striving towards . . .

Ms Carlson: A point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Erskine May, page 393, relevance. Is the member speaking on the hoist amendment?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes. The hon. member is speaking on a hoist amendment. I haven't heard anything directed to that, but surely you're going to tie this all in.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Well, obviously the ability to properly reflect on historical fact is as short as the span of attention of the hon. members because I was indeed getting to that point.

What needs to be said, Mr. Speaker, is that hoisting . . .

The Deputy Speaker: You were going to explain how what it is that you've been saying for the last few minutes is relevant to the hoist.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Indeed, Mr. Speaker. My comments are directly related to the hoist, as the opposition is arguing that this bill ought to be hoisted because the bill in itself presents such threats to the democracy of this province, parallel perhaps to what has been happening historically in eastern Europe. What I'm trying to exemplify is that there is no parallelism whatsoever and hence no need for hoisting.

The Deputy Speaker: I think, hon. members, that inasmuch as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry did bring this whole issue into his reasoning for supporting the hoist, we must bear with the hon. member for the opposite point of view, for opposing the hoist, which is what I presume the hon. member is doing. So I guess that one is as good as the other.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to finish.

Debate Continued

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hence, since there is no parallelism, as I have, I imagine, clearly indicated, I would strongly urge this government to proceed with the bill before the House right now and definitely vote against any amendment before the House to hoist this particular bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment lost]

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

Bill 19

Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 25: Mr. Mason]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make some comments at this stage about Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. It's at this stage that the Assembly traditionally goes back to the principles of the bill and revisits them now that we've had an opportunity at second reading to speak to the principles and at the committee stage to look at the details.

It wasn't that long ago, Mr. Speaker, that the natural gas business in our province was pretty simple. I think most Albertans were pretty proud of the system that we had. It was reliable, it was low cost, and I think that, in general, Albertans felt good that we were using our natural resource for our own benefit. I even recall driving around the province and seeing signs that used to have arrows on them that pointed up to the sky and said, "You're looking at some of the cleanest skies in the world" because of our burning of natural gas. So I think there was a general satisfaction with the way things were going with the natural gas business in the province and, particularly, with respect to consumers.

I guess the question has to be asked: what happened? What was wrong with the system that we had in place, that most people were satisfied with, that was providing heat to our homes and energy for industry at a low cost? What happened to change things? I've heard answers to that question in a number of places. The most commonly given answer is that something happened south of the border, that it was actually moves in the United States and movements there towards competition that really were the spark that ignited a whole host of deregulation efforts across that country, and of course the explanation has spilled over into Canada. I guess the act that started it all was in 1978 when Congress ended the federal control over the price at the well. That seems to have been the beginning of the efforts to deregulate the natural gas industry, and as I said, it has spread north of the border, and we find ourselves with another bill related to deregulation.

They seem to be predicated on a number of principles, but there's one principle that underlies all of it, and that's a blind faith in the competitive market, that somehow or other the competitive market can do all and can provide low-cost, reliable service with respect to any commodity just given the right conditions. I think that that's questionable, and it's being questioned in a variety of places. It's certainly being questioned south of the border, where it first raised its head. The deregulation there has been characterized by a belief that competition will bring lower prices. One author has indicated that this seldom materializes for consumers, for those of us who have to have the supply of gas at our homes, that it may in some cases result in lower prices for industry but that it has yet to be proven for those of us who depend on it for heating our homes, that we'll be waiting a long time before it delivers lower prices for us and for a number of reasons. It seems that for every plan that's put in place – and that's certainly been the experience in our province – there are unforeseen market conditions that arise that prevent the price reductions from coming into place, things like stranded costs that are passed on to consumers, and again it's usually residential customers that are the last, if ever, to benefit.

I looked at some of the summaries of the experience in the States, and they pointed out the real need for advocates, for families to be on top of deregulation legislation, and we really haven't seen or heard a lot of that in the debate. It's part of the problem that arises when legislation is moved through the Assembly as quickly as this legislation has been, that those groups who might speak for families, the conservation professionals, in many cases are not even aware of the legislation, certainly not aware of the provisions, and haven't had an opportunity to look at the kind of impact that it will have on residential consumers and customers. I think that that's unfortunate. I think that if you were going to predict anything, you could predict that we will be here at this same time next year or maybe even sooner, next fall, with some more amendments to the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, trying further to fix it, and again that will speak to the haste with which it's been pushed through the House.

It's rather interesting as you look at the bill, Mr. Speaker, that it is called a deregulation for the natural gas industry. If you look at the provisions of the bill and the kinds of regulations that can be made, starting with section 28.1(1), they lay out the regulations that the cabinet, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, may make. When you read that list, it's two and a half pages long, and it's astounding in what is supposed to be a deregulated market that there's a need for so many regulations. They go from "respecting the powers, duties, rights and obligations of gas distributors, default supply providers, retailers and customers" all the way through to "respecting records to be kept by gas distributors, default supply providers and retailers;"

- (h) establishing a code of conduct governing the relationship between
 - (i) a gas distributor and its default supply provider,
 - (ii) a gas distributor and its affiliated retailers, or
 - (iii) a gas distributor's default supply provider and an affiliated retailer, or any aspect of the activities of the parties in the relationship.

I mean, the provision for what is going to amount to just a whole vast number of regulations is set up in this bill.

Instead of making life simpler for customers – and in particular my concern is the residential customers – life is going to become a lot more complicated. They're going to end up having to make some decisions that many of them feel ill equipped to make and are going to be put in I think an unsatisfactory position of trying to work their way through a number of retailers who will be making various offers to them and trying to understand those offers and the long-term implications. We've already seen examples of the retailers in action and the kinds of abuses that can occur and the kind of distress that's it's going to cause residential customers. We saw that earlier last week, I guess it was, in the Legislature with the case of an elderly resident who had been approached by a retailer with some rather unsatisfactory results.

It's a bill and it's a move on the part of the government that, again, is hard to understand. Why are we in this whole mess? What was wrong with what we were doing? Is ideology, blind faith in a particular economic model, really good enough to explain turning the province on its head and putting the province through the kinds of contortions and convulsions that the deregulating bills, whether it's Bill 19 or the electrical, Bill 3, that we have in front of us – is it worth the kinds of problems that are arising as a result of the legislation? Has the government not really lost sight of whom they're serving in terms of the utilities and the best way of going about providing that service?

So I conclude, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate that we are involved in this kind of legislation. I think it's even, as I said, more unfortunate that it's been pushed through the House as hastily as it has. Again, as I said before, I think we're going to be back here not too long from now with another package of amendments to try to fix the kinds of problems that will occur as a result of the legislation that's going to be passed here in Bill 19.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to join debate in third reading of Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. I have had the opportunity, I guess, of speaking to this bill before, a couple of times at least, and putting on record my very serious reservations about this bill.

This bill obviously tampers with existing legislation to facilitate, it seems, on demand, more or less, a new company being invited into the new natural gas market structure that's being put in place, the company's name being Direct Energy. I think it would have been far more appropriate to give transparency to the title of this bill and call it the Direct Energy activities bill or something. It really is a bill which might as well have been drafted by lawyers for this company, Direct Energy, which this government seems to be so desperate to see enter the Alberta scene without asking the hard questions either about the record of this company in terms of billing practices and failures, of which we have learned a few things from Britain, or whether or not the entry of this company essentially as a retailer will do anything other than add to the costs to consumers of the billing services, which will now have to be assessed both at the level of wholesale and retail. This duplication will lead to an increase in the cost to small consumers, household consumers in particular, and small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, it's a bill that is intended to deregulate completely the market, with the consequences that have been apparent for some time both in the utilities area in general, electricity in this province, and natural gas. Things are bad as a result of deregulation, very bad indeed. One just has to look at one's bills over the last year or two to see how bad the situation has become largely as a consequence of the deregulation policies of this government. This bill will make the natural gas consumers' situation worse. If it has been bad before, it will become much worse now as a result of this.

I was looking at a recent piece of communication that the Alberta Rural Utilities Association sent to its members. The Alberta Rural Utilities Association is made up of several groups. I can see that there are about seven of them: Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops, Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations, Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, Alberta Water Co-ops, Gas Alberta Inc., Prairie Power Ltd., and Rural Electric Services Ltd. Now, these companies decided to form an association as a response to the pressure that they were receiving from the government to sign onto its deregulation agenda. This association, in its recent newsletter that it sent to its members, says – and I'm going to quote here and there:

Members of the ARUA [Alberta Rural Utilities Association] are united in their concerns about the impact of electricity and gas deregulation on small consumers . . . The ARUA is currently informing provincial government officials and legislators of the broad opposition to some of the current provincial government deregulation plans.

Then I have another quotation here, Mr. Speaker, from Dan Asner, president of the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations. Mr. Asner says, "The consequences of deregulation for the small consumer are quite alarming." He goes on to say, "Some have estimated the costs at thousands of dollars per consumer, and the people I talk to just can't afford it and they don't want it!" It's an interesting commentary by rural associations, which represent small consumers, their members, and these are nonprofit organizations which have successfully delivered natural gas, electricity, utilities to their members at the lowest cost on record.

Another major partner in ARUA is the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. Its president, Jack Hayden, is close to the rural community and is also quite particularly concerned about the impact that utility deregulation will have on small consumers in rural Alberta. He says:

We have many challenges in rural Alberta – low commodity prices, high input costs, a devastating drought – and the last thing we need is uncertainty about our electricity and natural gas bills as well. The deregulation initiative hasn't demonstrated any benefits to rural Alberta so far, but one thing it has clearly shown is the importance of mechanisms to protect consumers from price instability and opportunistic business practices.

Now, further down in this newsletter, Mr. Speaker, I will quote a little more and then go on to make some other observations. I think it's important to put on the record the concerns of these small consumers represented by this rural utility association and their members. This is a statement in the newsletter.

Government is already seeing that electrical deregulation that was supposed to reduce prices through increased competition is resulting in exactly the opposite. A major utility has applied to the Energy Utilities Board for a temporary rate increase to cover a projected shortfall of $15 million in distribution costs for this year.

Of course, these association spokespersons and this umbrella association representing all rural utilities is anticipating some criticism, so the newsletter says:

We may be accused of living in the past or being unwilling to change. That is not true at all. Rural Alberta has some of the most technologically advanced utility distribution and service systems in the world. We also have tremendous safety training and experience and the service we provide to our customers is second to none. Our utility systems are evolving every day.

And they're very good.

The next paragraph is significant here.

We may be accused of fearing customer choice.

That's the key rationale behind deregulation and Bill 3 and Bill 19, Mr. Speaker. So they're saying:

But that also is not true. What choice is it if one has to choose between company A and company B and one doesn't want to do business with either? Utility companies aren't like fast food outlets – there aren't hundreds of them to choose between – there are very few. Most of these are large corporations catering to shareholders who want profits. Their interest in customers is limited to how the customer can generate profits.

That's the essence of my concerns about this bill as well. This bill, as I said, is a bill virtually written by the lawyers of this new company, Direct Energy, to come into Alberta and enter the retail field. This is a company whose activities and work will not add a single cent of value to the commodity or to the service. All they promise is bundling services, that we already have in this province, available in abundance, under conditions of free and open competition provided by Alberta-based providers of these services, whether it's furnace cleaning or new furnace installation or putting humidifiers on our furnaces or selling filters for these furnaces. We can go on and on and on.

There isn't an absence of competition, but if company A and company B, as this newsletter says, regardless of which company is offering the service, isn't something that you want to do business with, then what's the point of so-called choice? Adding another company by tampering with the existing legislation and framework, which has served to give us both stability in terms of prices and low prices, seems not only wrong-handed; it's intention does not seem to be at all to provide consumers with the protection or security and stability of low prices. The intention seems to be to assist a big marketer to come into Alberta and underwrite the risks for it to do business in this province. That's not what this government should be about. That's not what this Legislature should be concerned about. The job of big corporations is to be able to take risks and handle them themselves without the assistance of governments or Legislatures.

That's why, Mr. Speaker, it's a bill that needs to be rejected by this Legislature. It's setting a very, very bad precedent. If this Legislature becomes simply a rubber stamp for companies' wishes, expressed in the form of some draft legislation, that will be a bad day for the province, for the consumers of this province, and for our democratic powers that we as a Legislature have.

So I will not be supporting this bill and would urge other members of the House to consider doing the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is our last kick at the cat, so to speak, on this particular bill, Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. I think that on a bill like this we have to ask ourselves the question: why is it being brought in, who benefits, and why at this time? Seeing as we have had gas deregulation for some years now, the biggest reason I can see in all of the information that we have had presented to us is that they need this particular legislation so that new companies coming into Alberta can bundle services, bundle electricity and gas together along with other services and provide what is a more profitable package for them to give to consumers. It doesn't look to me like we see anything else more substantive than that as a reason.

So then the question is: does that help the people of Alberta? Does it lower their costs? Does it provide them with better service? In terms of service many of them will get one bill instead of two, so there's some streamlining in that regard, but they're going to be paying a high premium for that. They pay a service charge for that to be done. Plus we have seen through this whole deregulation crisis and mismanagement over the past number of years prices skyrocketing, not wholly because of deregulation but certainly in some contributing manner, Mr. Speaker, and that's a real problem.

Then in what happens to be one of the most substantive pieces of legislation, as a companion piece to Bill 3, and then as another substantive piece, Bill 27, we see this government take this hat trick of bills and shove them through the Legislature in a very short amount of time, where they bring in time allocation. I've got lots that I want to say about time allocation and what other jurisdictions do with regard to this and the other bill we still have under debate and also information that we weren't able to present in committee because of the shortage of speaking time and a whole lot of other good ideas, like the one we talked about earlier this week being the net metering, that I want to present.

Given the hour, Mr. Speaker, I believe that I will now adjourn debate and continue tomorrow.

10:10

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:11 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 26, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/26

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to introduce two members from the constituency of Fort McMurray, and they are the president of the chamber of commerce in Fort McMurray, Bob Gazzard, as well as one of the directors, Carol Yayechnick. I want to say that Carol and Bob are truly people that represent and exemplify the spirit of our city slogan: we have the energy; nous avons l'énergie. I'd like to ask them both to rise today and receive the very warm welcome of the Alberta Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly here some very bright and energetic young students from Blessed Kateri elementary school in my area. They are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Mhairi Miskew and Ms Cathy Kahanyshyn and parent group helpers Elizabeth Suwala, Nancy Coco, Yolanda Creswell, Elaine More, and Mrs. Connie Kahanyshyn. I would ask all of our special guests from Blessed Kateri to please rise and receive the thunderous applause of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much. I rise on this glorious Alberta day to introduce to you a very rare Albertan. It's not often that we have a world cup champion and a gold medalist, but today we have them in the same person, and I'm referring, of course, to my brother-in-law Pierre Lueders. Pierre, of course, was the gold medalist at Nagano in the two-man bobsled. His accomplishments in representing Canada in the Olympics and at world championships are too numerous to register, but I would like to point out that there are 19 gold medals, 12 silver medals, 17 bronze medals, three world championships, and one Olympic gold medal in his repertoire. Of course, Mr. Speaker, you can appreciate that with my athletic ability I've counseled Pierre on all matters of bobsledding including the use of spandex outfits. It worked out much better on him than it did on me.

I would also like to take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to the House a very special lady. Of course, Mr. Speaker, they say that behind every successful politician is a very surprised wife, none more than mine. I think I would say on behalf of all members of the Assembly that our spouses allow us to do this, and I would like to publicly thank and introduce my beautiful wife, Veronica, and her brother Pierre Lueders.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you someone who when I looked up in the gallery I didn't expect to see, Mr. Chris Schonbrun from Lethbridge, Alberta. Chris is the manager of the Lethbridge Housing Authority. He grew up around Iron Springs and Picture Butte. His wife, April, is an RN at Lethbridge regional, and he's been a good friend for quite a while. Welcome, Chris, and please receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Steven Brodie. Steven is a key communicator for the McNally school council, where his daughter attends school, and in addition he is the chair of the Holyrood school council, where his son attends school. Steven is a passionate public school advocate, and I will be tabling his submission to the Commission on Learning later this afternoon. I ask you all to join me in welcoming Steven Brodie.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly once again a parent from Windsor Park school who is observing the proceedings here regularly on behalf of a whole set of parents and of parent education advocacy groups. She's in the members' gallery. Her name is Melanie Shapiro, and I ask you to give her a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I've got two introductions today. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 25 grade 6 students, bright boys and girls from Our Lady of Mount Carmel school, which is located in my constituency. They're accompanied by Mrs. Nicole Cunningham and two student teachers, Dean Carter and Jodi Walker. All of them are seated in the southeast corner of the public gallery. I would now request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to introduce the second set of visitors, who are parents from Strathcona Nursery School, located at King Edward school. They are very concerned about the drastic rent increase for their nursery school that they see as a direct result of the provincial government's underfunding of education. They are Shauna Bevan-Stewart, Jill Cerezke, Kirsten Goa, David Goa, Talia Goa, Theodore Goa, Neil Robinson, Lisa Puchyr, Nikki McGill, Krista Wintoniak, Sandy Marcynuk, Susan Hagen, Shawn Robinson, Madeleine Ani. I suspect that they may be sitting on both sides of the House. I will ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Lobbyist Registry

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 1996 when the Official Opposition introduced Bill 223, we've been asking the government to implement a list of those persons and organizations who lobby the government. Albertans continually get the same response as was given by the Minister of Government Services in November 2001 when he said that such registries are strictly public relations exercises. However, this week Albertans have learned of the lobbying by big tobacco against efforts to clamp down on smoking and Tory country club soirees paid for by corporations and special-interest groups. My questions are to the Premier. Will this government commit to adopting the Alberta Liberal plan for a transparent list of people and organizations who lobby the government?

Mr. Klein: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. member to stand up in this House, be honest, and mention and say out loud for all to hear about this great lobbying effort, this country club soiree, as she talks about: the dates, the times, who was there. Give us the evidence. Don't come out with this vicious, malicious, false innuendo.

Mr. Speaker, relative to tobacco industry ties, I didn't read the story, but I was asked yesterday by the media if I had been lobbied by Rod Love, who, as you all know, used to be my chief of staff, and Hal Danchilla, who used to work for the government as an executive assistant, now working as private consultants. I can say with all honesty that I have never been lobbied by Rod Love, Hal Danchilla, or anyone else representing tobacco companies. Never, never, never. For this hon. member to stand up and imply, to make the implication, the insinuation that we're subjected to lobbying by these people is shameful, and she ought to apologize.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Given that this government's Tory cousins under Brian Mulroney established a lobbyist list, what is this government afraid of?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we don't need a lobbyist list. We don't need a lobbyist list. We don't care who approaches the Liberals. They have their groups of people, like the Parkland Institute, this new Riverview school foundation. They're in the business of lobbying and pressing those Liberal members to bring forward matters that concern them as constituents, and that's fair. That's fair. That's what should be done.

There was also a story in the newspaper, I understand, about MLAs attending receptions. Well, I would remind the members of the Liberal Party that they are invited to many of these receptions as well. And you know what? I've never seen them refuse a free lunch or a free reception, you know. But I can tell you that these receptions – I'll go back to last week. There was one sponsored by the Canadian Diabetes foundation, a nonprofit organization. At the same time there was one sponsored by Bell Telephone. Mr. Speaker, this evening, I understand, there's a reception sponsored by the Chambers of Commerce. Nothing wrong with that. I meet in my office with numerous people relative to numerous issues, from nonprofit organizations to corporate interests to charitable organizations to groups that want legislative changes, and they also meet with these people. So to stand up and be as – I can't use the word "hypocritical" – sanctimonious as they are is, to say the least, dishonest.

Ms Blakeman: Given that it is a requirement that donors to political parties are listed in public documents, why aren't paid lobbyists made public through a lobbyist list?

Mr. Klein: Paid lobbyists? We don't have paid lobbyists. This is not the United States, where lobbyists register. We have numerous consultants who represent various companies and nonprofit organizations and other organizations. Plus, some organizations like the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, the Pembina Institute, the Parkland Institute have their own people in-house who approach government, well, pretty much all the time on numerous issues. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with it. There is nothing wrong with it. If she's talking about and alluding to the people who might want to host a reception, what they do is they register. Fine. Then they hold the reception anyway. So big deal. What's the big deal about it?

Access to Government

Ms Blakeman: In 1997 the then MP for Edmonton Southwest, now the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, was quoted as saying: a few years ago many people thought the government of Alberta was run from the 19th hole of the Mayfair club. He also argued for a lobbyist registry and stated: for every yin there is a yang. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Do parent groups requesting more funding from this government have to buy access by holding feasts at country clubs?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that's quite a revolting question and really doesn't deserve an answer, but I will say that tomorrow afternoon I'm actually meeting with 10 different parent councils.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will AISH recipients be more successful at getting a cost-of-living increase by holding soirees at country clubs? [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Dunford: I don't think that would be the way for AISH stakeholders to go about it. I think the more proper way is something that happened just recently. Mr. Speaker, you might be interested in this, as hon. members might be interested as well. I was asked to attend – I think they had coffee, but I don't drink coffee, so I'm not sure what else was there besides water. I was invited to go over to the Inn on 7th, which is a local establishment here in the city. Actually, I used to live there. I thought it was kind of country clubbish until, of course, the television cameras went in and looked at the room I had. Then that took care of any country club attitude there.

There is a group that is informally put together called the Alberta Disabilities Forum. They asked me if as minister I would go over and talk about the current status of AISH and what we saw in the future. I was glad to go over there and meet with them and say: look; I'm very concerned – I'm very concerned – about the sustainability of AISH.

An Hon. Member: They want them to register.

Mr. Dunford: Well, you know, I think that's what they do. If I'm hearing the hon. member correctly, they would want all of these people that have worked their hearts out for the people that they represent – they're some of the nicest groups of people that I've ever met with. They were sincere about their issue. They poured their heart out to me, Mr. Speaker, about how they felt about this particular situation. I was very glad to go and meet with them, and I would meet with them again if they gave me the opportunity. As a matter of fact, I've indicated to them that after we have the budget on April 8, they're going to be one of the first groups that I go back to.

So I think that if you make a representation to a minister or a group of ministers in Alberta, we're going to respond. We're open, we're transparent, we care about these issues, and we're going to meet with these people.

The Speaker: The hon. the Premier to supplement.

Mr. Klein: To supplement, Mr. Speaker. I find this line of questioning outrageous, inappropriate, improper to say the least.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment talked about meeting with a group concerned about AISH payments. I can tell you that every MLA in this caucus, every minister in this caucus meets with people in the back of fire halls, at curling rinks, yes, at country golf courses, and occasionally at the Mayfair Golf & Country Club, as do the Liberals – I've seen the Liberals golf there from time to time; you can't tell me they don't socialize at the 19th hole – at cattle sales, you name it. Our MLAs are there listening to people and taking under serious consideration their concerns. In other words, they don't become so compelled and so obsessed with the dome; they get out and they talk to constituents in a number of environments. That's why we have 74 and they only have seven.

Ms Blakeman: Well, again to the Premier. Low-income seniors haven't wined and dined this government. Is that why they have seen much-needed programs cut back over the last decade?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, this line of questioning is malicious, it's false, it's misleading, it's improper, and it's insulting to seniors' groups. Any seniors' group who wants to meet can meet with either me or the hon. Minister of Seniors or any other MLA or any other minister. To imply that these seniors or any other group has to hold a lavish dinner at a country club is so ridiculous, so wrong, so false, so misleading that this hon. member should have the courtesy to stand up and apologize. She should stand up and apologize, but I don't expect that she will.

1:50

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Energy Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every month, as a result of energy deregulation, the Progressive Conservative government continues to dip their hand into the pockets and into the purses of Alberta consumers because of the expensive deregulation policies that have led to the energy scandals. Now, I would like to publicly lobby on behalf of Albertans for affordable energy costs. My first question is to the Premier. Given that the Premier promised that when the temperature goes up this spring, natural gas prices would go down, why are Albertans still faced with natural gas prices for the month of April that average $8.75 a gigajoule?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's a simple matter of economics. March's bill is usually recorded in April. That's the way it is. You know, when I pay my cable, when I pay my electricity, I pay what I consumed last month in the next month. And I didn't say that when the temperature goes down, the prices go up.

An Hon. Member: That's because it's obvious.

Mr. Klein: No. I said that when the temperature goes up, consumption comes down. What I did say is that when the temperature is up, the Liberal rhetoric is down, and when the temperature is down, the Liberal rhetoric is up.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why, given that utility bill add-ons were supposed to be a temporary part of deregulation, do Albertans have to pay now nearly $30 million worth of add-ons on their April natural gas bills? Explain that.

Mr. Klein: Yes, I can explain it, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy give a more detailed explanation, Mr. Speaker. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands knows this because not only was he on city council, he was a member of the EPCOR board. He knows full well that billing processes in a regulated environment and in a deregulated environment, in any environment – those billing charges, all of the add-ons were included in the overall price, and people were not given a breakdown. People simply were not given a breakdown, and that was probably company policy. If it wasn't, perhaps the hon. member can stand up and explain the situation as it was when he was on the board.

Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's very difficult to explain in cold, logical terms because of the absolute confusion and mix-up between gas and electricity that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has put forward, the absolute confusion and misinformation campaign from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. In fact, the confusion that these two members generate is going to cost the taxpayers money because we're going to have to undertake a consumer education program that clearly outlines the choices Albertans have and not to be misled by misinformation, ramblings in the media, and totally inaccurate statements about what deregulation is all about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the confusion and frustration by consumers is caused by the failure of electricity and natural gas energy deregulation, will the Premier now admit that the Progressive Conservative's energy deregulation boondoggle translates into high home heating costs year-round for Alberta consumers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the only confusion that has been created has been created by the Liberals through their campaign of misinformation.

Relative to natural gas prices it stands to reason – and any elementary school student, any grade 2, 3, 4 student can understand – that when the price of a commodity goes up, you pay more, whether it's sugar or coffee or flour or potatoes or gas or electricity or wheat or barley. When the price of a commodity goes up, you pay more. And the price of gas is up.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Calgary Board of Education

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. School superintendents serve two masters, their elected school boards and the Minister of Learning, and this minister keeps superintendents on a very, very short leash. A letter that can only be described as government propaganda is being sent to parents next month in school newsletters by the superintendent of the Calgary board of education. The superintendent's letter all but tells parents to zip it and stop criticizing the Tory government's education funding policies. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. What role did the minister or any of his officials play in the decision to send out this government propaganda to Calgary parents in the form of a superintendent's letter?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sincerely very happy that that hon. member chose to ask me this question today. The letter in question is a letter that was put out by the superintendent of Calgary public schools. I believe it was at the start of this week or the end of last week. It was completely unsolicited. It is actually a letter that is entitled Collaboration with Government. It's my understanding that most Albertans actually want their governments, their school boards, their municipal councils to collaborate and work together. This is an excellent letter. He chose to put it out in his superintendent's statement. He does it once a month. He has done it in his newsletter. He has done it once a month for the last 25 or 30 years in Calgary public.

If I may, this is the type of letter it is, and I will read the last paragraph, which sums it up.

I am a very strong supporter of teachers, support staff, parents and the community with respect to their massive contributions to student learning. Once in a while, would it not also be good for us to acknowledge that Alberta Learning is a major player in the business of public education?

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this . . .

The Speaker: I'm sorry; I've already recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is it okay for a superintendent to send progovernment propaganda to parents, but it's not okay for the Edmonton public school board to send a letter to parents outlining the consequences of government-imposed funding shortfalls? Why the double standard, Mr. Minister?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, as I said, this is a regular letter that the school superintendent sends out once a month. Edmonton public has sent out letters to their public.

I was not the one who raised this as an issue. It's an excellent letter. It was tabled in this Legislature, which shows the benefit of it that is coming from Calgary public. Again, what the superintendent is simply saying is: hey, you know, Alberta Learning does some pretty good stuff too.

I would ask the Premier to supplement as well.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, again there seems to be a little bit of mischievousness going on here. The ND opposition has no problem when the ATA through teachers in any public school system sends home information. They have no problems whatsoever. They say that's good. As a matter of fact, they table those letters in the Legislature. They table numerous letters in the Legislature that are negative toward public education. But when some member of our caucus, the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, tables a letter, one letter, that says quite simply,

I want to take a rather different line in this newsletter and say a few words in support of our provincial government – directing my comments specifically to the education system, this coming from the superintendent of schools in Calgary, they get bent out of shape.

Now, what is wrong? Are they saying that this superintendent is wrong, that he is dishonest, that he's not concerned? Is that what they're saying? If they're saying that or implying that, then stand up and say so. Are they saying that this letter is wrong, that it's wrong to collaborate with government? Then stand up and say so. Are they saying that it's only right to collaborate with the NDs and strategize with the NDs and to become absorbed with their socialist policies? That's okay. But when someone says something good about the government, oh, God, you can't say that.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the minister: why is the minister attempting to silence parents by sending an intimidating letter from a school superintendent containing a subtle warning to not criticize his department and his Tory government?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, you know, this is the second time today I've found a question extremely revolting, but this one in itself, where he said that we actually wrote this letter – we have a superintendent of the largest school district in Alberta who actually is saying that the 3 and a half billion dollars or $4 billion that goes to public education in Alberta is spent well, is doing good things, that our students are well educated, that we have an excellent learning system, that we spend more money on education than anyone in the country. This letter is quite simply a letter that states to us, to the government of Alberta, to the people of Alberta that we have a good system and that we should recognize it. I'm personally very insulted when this hon. member says that I wrote this letter. It's extremely dishonest of the hon. member to say that.

The Speaker: I am unaware that this letter in question has been tabled, so perhaps at the appropriate time this afternoon it would be tabled.

The hon. Member for Dunvegan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Deer and Elk Population

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Again high numbers of deer and elk are posing havoc in parts of rural Alberta. This is especially evident in my constituency of Dunvegan, where herds of 50 to well over a hundred are roaming around. Not only are they getting into stacked hay and other feedstocks, but they are the cause of many vehicle accidents. We have deer trapped in ice on farmers' aeration systems and dugouts. We are losing hay and silage piles. Snowed-under crops are being devastated, and fences are being damaged. Can the minister tell us what is being done about this issue?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question. Definitely there are a high number of deer and elk in Alberta, and we continue, of course, to monitor the situation very closely.

You know, it's interesting to note that the deer population has increased by 50 percent since 1991.

Dr. Taylor: How much, Mike?

Mr. Cardinal: Fifty percent since 1991, so it's a real challenge.

Mr. Speaker, there were an estimated 4,000 to 6,000 accidents last year between animals and motor vehicles. Unfortunately, there were three fatalities, so we do have a challenge.

We do have a plan to deal with this specific situation, Mr. Speaker. Number one, of course, is to increase the hunting; number two, lengthening the white-tailed deer season from one week to one month in 15 wildlife management zones; additional supplementary licences for white-tailed deer also will be available in certain areas; and of course we are also developing two additional management zones in order to deal with that specific problem. We are looking at better signage. We'll be working very closely with Transportation in some areas. We may have to look at reduced speed limits. The other area is the habit of moose and deer crossing roads in certain areas. We need to look at how the landscape is developed. It's definitely a challenge. The other problem we have is deer and elk and moose have become urbanized and they've become reasonably tame. That creates yet a further challenge for our government.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is for the same minister. How can rural Albertans learn about what they can do to prevent problems with deer and elk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We are working, of course, very closely with other government agencies and stakeholders in order to work towards preventing wildlife damage to certain crops. In fact, we do help agricultural producers now to prevent damage in a number of ways through our ungulate damage prevention program, for example. The other is that staff works very closely with a farmer in relation to a store of feed and also the ability to develop fencing in some areas.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. There are programs available, as the hon. minister indicated, to compensate some of our Alberta producers and to compensate for some of the damages that they're experiencing from deer and elk, but can these programs be enhanced to cover losses to stacked hay, the damaged fences, and the damaged buildings?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the member is quite correct. There is a program in place to cover losses for stacked hay. That program is administered by Agriculture Financial Services, and it's been in existence for about two years. Producers should contact their local Ag Financial Services office to see if indeed their situation meets their guidelines. The guidelines primarily are on stacked and stored hay, and it has to be stacked at a site that's readily accessible for feeding or transport. Today there are no programs for damaged fences and buildings, and we encourage producers to contact their private insurance carrier. Those producers do carry insurance on their farm, which is outside of our insurance programs, and those programs could possibly compensate for stacked and fenced hay.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Deficit budgeting was not the answer to provincial financing of programs nor is it the answer to school board financing. Despite claims of astronomical funding increases the fact is that the buying power of school boards has remained relatively unchanged for the last 10 years. My first question is to the Premier. Why is going into debt illegal for the government but sanctioned for Alberta's two largest school boards?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, to insinuate or to imply in any way, shape, or form that it is sanctioned is absolutely wrong – absolutely wrong. We are not sanctioning it. We are saying as a last-ditch measure that if school boards need to, absolutely need to, they can run a deficit for three years, but they must pay it back. They must achieve a balanced budget. This is a case that may or may not come about because, as I understand it, the budget hasn't been tabled yet, but it is one of the options that is being explored by the Minister of Learning and people in his department. We don't know if that last-ditch, that emergency measure will have to be taken.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member raises two points. About the potential deficit of Edmonton public, well, first of all, the reason that we are allowing them to carry it over for three years is because it has come about so late in the year, we do not want them to penalize students, to do some things that aren't necessarily that good right now. We're giving them three years to amortize their deficit.

The other issue that was raised was the issue of the deficit in Calgary public. The hon. member has been yelling across the way. Well, Mr. Speaker, Calgary public has done an extremely fine job of paying back their deficit. As you know, this deficit has been going on for about five years, and if you talk about sanctioning, I would say that we did absolutely the opposite of sanctioning it and that we actually fired the board.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. My second question is to the Minister of Learning. Given that government figures show that K to 12 grants when adjusted for enrollment and for inflation remain at 1992 levels, how are boards expected to pay for the arbitrated teachers' settlement?

2:10

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, since 1995 the funding to education has gone up 46 percent. Enrollment during that time has gone up 6 percent. Last year the enrollment increase in Alberta was .25 percent, which is two and a half new students for every thousand students in the system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. My third question is to the same minister. When will the minister put in place an allocation formula that accurately reflects the costs of running a school?

Dr. Oberg: September 1.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Commercial and Sportfishing Industries

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the past few months I have received concerned inquiries from the commercial fishing operators about the progress of the rationalization program, which is aimed at reducing the size of the commercial fishing business in the province. Since the commercial fishing industry brings in millions of dollars annually and is a valuable part of my constituency and the provincial rural economy and represents an important part of rural life, my question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What is the progress of the rationalization program, and will it enable small operators to continue to operate?

Mr. Cardinal: That's a very good question and timely, again, Mr. Speaker. We have in fact just modified our program, and we'll continue monitoring, of course, very closely the modifications. The overall plan, I've always said, is to reduce the number of commercial fishermen in Alberta and the number of nets they work with.

In response to some concerns recently brought forward by fellow MLAs in relation to the small commercial fisher operators, we have made some changes now so the smaller operators can continue to remain in the industry. In fact, we will now permit the small operators who have fewer than four net privileges to renew their zone licences . . .

Dr. Taylor: How many?

Mr. Cardinal: Four net privileges.

. . . beyond April 1, 2005, as long as they pay the new licensing fee of $500. The transfer options will still be restricted for those small operators. In the overall rationalization program over 300 individual companies have applied now seeking compensation.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental, another question to the same minister: how does this commercial fishing rationalization contribute to the future of our overall fisheries?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, like I said earlier, it's a very, very important industry. The commercial fishing industry is about a $5 million industry in Alberta and continues to diversify certain family operations across the province. On the other hand, the sportfishing industry is a $350 million industry in Alberta, so it's a large, large industry. We have less than a thousand lakes, I believe, that do have fish that sport and commercial fishermen can access. That is why we want to reduce the 800 commercial fishermen down to about 200 and reduce the yardage they have from 37,000 100-yard nets down to about 18,000 so that we can continue monitoring the industry. We are continuing, of course, with the overall plan to try and find the dollars necessary, and I'll be working very closely with the Treasury Board and also the Finance minister to try and get the dollars that are required to reduce that particular compensation program in the next three or four years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Since the future of our commercial and sportfishing industries is so prominent in the economics of our rural communities, in what ways is our government promoting these industries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the outset I would agree with the hon. member's premise. Sportfishing and commercial fishing are remarkable industries, and Alberta is blessed with some of the most pristine and beautiful lakes and rivers to fish in. Obviously, the Bow River comes to mind. A lot of northern Alberta is blessed with remarkable sportfishing. There are also some of the best guided tour operators in North America that operate in Alberta. So as a result of that, our department has recognized this as an outstanding tourism opportunity and has worked very closely with the industry to promote that through our call centre and our web sites.

With regard to aquaculture, I know that the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has a very strong program, but I think I would close by saying to the hon. member that any time there's an opportunity to promote any industry in Alberta, to get the message out about the beauty and the skills and the resources that we have here, our department takes it as a vital concern and will continue to work with the hon. member, as we have in the past, in Lac La Biche-St. Paul and continue spreading the message.

Net Metering of Electricity

Ms. Carlson: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Energy minister said in question period that net metering was a good suggestion that he would be willing to undertake, but just six days ago the Energy minister helped to defeat an opposition amendment that would have enshrined net metering in legislation. My first question is to the Premier. Given the Energy minister's flip-flop, which is it: do you support net metering or not?

Mr. Klein: Net metering. Fishing nets? No. You know what? I thought I knew it all, but I don't. I don't know what net metering is, so I can't answer your question, but I'm sure that one of our very wise ministers knows.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's exactly the truth. This government does not know it all.

Mr. MacDonald: We know that.

Mr. Smith: So when this government sees a suggestion that is put forward in question period without some sort of cheap reply like we've just heard from the opposite side we're prepared to take that suggestion into the policy process. It's a reasonable thing to do, it's an honest thing to do, and it's one we can do from time to time. Frankly, because of the rarity of it, I guess that's why it's so difficult to integrate completely.

Ms. Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that this is hardly a rare concept since 30 percent of the states and five of the provinces in Canada subscribe to net metering and the Energy minister has had since last week to begin to understand it, does he understand now that in order to allow net metering in this province, we have to see an amendment to the utilities act?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, when I said that it was a rarity, I was referring to the number of good suggestions that come from the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Speaker, we have an act before the House that is in debate, so I don't want to infringe upon that rule, but as I said in what I think was a feeling of co-operation and bonhomie amongst the House, we'll certainly look at it. But to continue to be criticized for not doing something in six days is not a good start.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Energy, then, explain to us: if he thinks this is such a good idea now, why did he stand up in this Assembly and speak against the amendment and urge all of his colleagues to not support it?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's important for me to thank all colleagues who voted against that amendment and who have been supportive of Bill 3 to get it to this stage. The process of introducing something into review and legislation is, as the member knows, a process of policy development. Now, in the two and a half years of consultation that Bill 3 took to get it to where it is today, the words "net metering" were not brought up by stakeholders, were not introduced into the mix, nor was analysis asked for. It has been on the initiative of the department, at my request, that we have examined the metering, wireless metering and interval metering, that's been taking place in Puget Sound, and if there's information with respect to making Alberta an even better competitive marketplace, we'd be more than pleased to examine it in the full breadth of the policy process.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The energy industry is a critical component of Alberta's economy, providing tremendous opportunities for all Albertans. Recently some members of the Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries, OPEC, have suggested that Alberta attend a future meeting of that organization. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Can the minister indicate what Alberta's position is in attending a future meeting of OPEC?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question, and it's a particularly good question because we function in a global market. Albertans who sell their oil sell it at world prices. We do not establish a price. We are price takers. So at any opportunity that we have to broaden our competitive knowledge, to make a larger bank of intellectual knowledge that we have so that we can better serve Albertans, who since 1930 have owned this resource, we certainly intend to do so. We have found that it's important for Alberta to reach out on these matters because of the notoriously inept and notoriously poor energy policy that continues to emanate from Ottawa.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the Minister of Energy. What is Alberta's policy or position with regard to joining OPEC?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can remember the Rhinoceros Party actually running on a platform of joining a number of countries together who had snow every year, and they would then export the snow so they'd have a continually warm climate, and that organization was to be known as SnowPEC.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to OPEC, OPEC is a collection of countries that run their oil production through state oil companies. Alberta does not do that. The mechanism that we have for orderly development and competition of capital dollars is our royalty devices. Those royalty devices have served us well over the last 50-plus years. We will continue to do that. So Alberta will not look at joining OPEC as a particular entity, nor would we recommend it to the government of Canada. But we feel that on the supply side of oil Canada is the 10th largest producing country. We think there's much to be gained from that as well as from participating with the International Energy Agency, which works on the demand side, so that we can gauge supply and demand.

For example, and just to finish off, Mr. Speaker, there is non-Kyoto oil flowing into eastern Canada that gets refined and sold as gasoline, and in fact the Kyoto question turns into punishing those who produce but letting those who refine and sell do nothing. So it's a matter of examination.

Medical Officers of Health

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, we've known for a long time that West Nile virus is coming to Alberta. It's killed 12 people and infected up to a thousand more in Ontario and has left at least one Albertan in hospital for months. Given that mosquito season is soon upon us, Albertans will be watching this issue closely. One can only imagine the impact of the disease on summer activities like camping, angling, hiking, golfing, and so on. To the Minister of Economic Development: has any analysis been done on the potential cost to Alberta's tourism industry from an outbreak of West Nile virus?

Mr. Norris: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, the West Nile virus is a concern. It's not my department's responsibility to know if and when it's coming, so I'm going to ask the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to maybe offer comment about what his department is doing.

I would like to offer at the outset that any threat to tourism in any way, shape, or form, including economic, health, or otherwise, is of vital concern to us, and we will do something about it if and when that threat arrives. But I would point out that that's a big if.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Health and Wellness then: given that a public health warning from a medical officer of health about an outbreak of West Nile virus could devastate the local tourism industry, what precautions has the minister taken to protect medical officers of health from political or economic interference?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we are working very closely with our medical officers of health with respect to two serious issues, the first one being West Nile virus, and the second one, perhaps an even more critical one, is the issue of severe acute respiratory syndrome, or SARS. In both cases we are working with our medical officers of health to indicate to them what the best advice is that we have in our monitoring of the situation. They are aware and have disseminated information to physicians throughout the province to look for symptoms of both of these diseases, which can be very, very serious.

So, Mr. Speaker, medical officers of health do have the authority to raise the issue should it become a legitimate one. We do know that there are at least two cases of West Nile virus that have appeared in human beings here in this province. In both cases, to the best of our information, they were contracted while outside of the province of Alberta. We are continuing to monitor with the assistance of other ministries the appearance of West Nile virus in animals, particularly birds and horses. We will work with medical officers of health and other public health officials to ensure that appropriate measures are taken to do our best to (a) have a public education program on how to avoid getting bitten in the first place and (b) how to recognize the symptoms should they appear in an individual so that appropriate medical attention can be given to such individuals.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. That's all very good, but to the same minister: given that Dr. David Swann's firing last fall proves that medical officers of health face strong political pressures, will the government take steps in regulations or legislation to guarantee the job security of medical officers of health?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, you know, let's look at medical officers of health throughout the province. They have not been shy about indicating issues that are legitimate issues for discussion, but they are not hired by the province of Alberta. They are employees of regional health authorities. So as is the case with chief executive officers of regional health authorities, with medical officers of health, those types of questions are more appropriately directed to the employer. In this case, the employer is not the province of Alberta. The employer is regional health authorities. I can tell you that this system works very, very well throughout the province. People like Dr. Predy here in the city of Edmonton are highly respected health officials, and I think that we should continue to allow medical officers of health to report and be accountable to the people who hire them, which are the regional health authorities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the face of impending school closures, teacher layoffs, and growing class sizes in Edmonton public schools the dynamic Edmonton Tory caucus swung into action. In a bold move they have apparently convinced the Minister of Learning to allow Edmonton public school board to run a deficit. On the other hand, when the Calgary board had special requirements as a result of the teachers' settlement, they got $7 million in cash. Why is the minister going to allow EPS to go into deficit when this government has made government debt a dirty word in this province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the main reason is because we do not want to penalize students. It's close to the end of their fiscal year. We have just finished or are very close to finishing our audit. I hope to have the announcement of our audit the week after next. We're saying that if they are running a deficit because of some mistakes that have been made, we will give them three years to pay it back, but still at this point in time that is a big if because we do not know if indeed they are running a deficit. As soon as the audit is in, I'll be able to tell the Assembly more.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, isn't the decision to allow school board deficits really just an admission that government funding for schools in this province is inadequate?

Dr. Oberg: No.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since school boards get their money from the government either by grants or property tax and given that EPS is already predicting a large deficit for the following year and given that the government is expected to have another large surplus this year, why not just raise the grant now so that no public school board deficit is needed?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, the budget is coming out on April 8, and I do not want to usurp what is in the budget. We are talking about one school board out of approximately 64 or 65 different school boards around the province, and a lot of them are doing well. There are some that are in a reasonably difficult situation, but a lot of them are doing very well. A lot of them are adjusting, and we fully hope and we fully expect that they will not run a deficit. In this particular circumstance we have found it prudent to allow them to carry that deficit over three years. Obviously, if they want to pay it back sooner, they certainly can.

2:30head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Bob Clark

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a constituent from Carstairs who has distinguished himself through his many contributions to this province and to his community.

Bob Clark was first elected to this Legislative Assembly in 1960 and served to 1981 as MLA, minister of youth, minister of education, and Leader of the Official Opposition. In addition to a consulting business he also held the position of board member and chairman of the Alberta Special Waste Management Corporation. Bob also became Alberta's first Ethics Commissioner and first Privacy Commissioner, and he certainly left his mark on those two departments.

However, Bob's greatest love after his wife, Norma, and their family is hockey. His name is synonymous with the Olds Grizzlies junior hockey team, which Bob managed for many years, and he also served as chairman of the Alberta Junior Hockey League.

I was honoured last month to present Bob with the Queen's golden jubilee medal in recognition of all Bob's accomplishments and contributions, which are too numerous to mention in the time allotted here.

So congratulations, Bob, from all of us, and best wishes on your retirement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Support for Americans

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize Alberta

hockey fans and a couple of events which occurred in Alberta on the weekend. On Saturday night I had the pleasure of attending the Calgary Flames game in Calgary. I've never been so proud to be an Albertan as when the national anthem of the United States was sung. That group of about 18,000 Albertans cheered loudly and sang along with the American national anthem. I understand that the very same thing occurred on Sunday night in Edmonton at the Oilers game.

Just like within our society fans at those games were divided on this war. This is why I am so proud: regardless of their position they chose to honour our friend and ally to the south by showing the true strength of that friendship.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Davis Cup Tennis

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to tell everyone about the Davis Cup event which is being held in Calgary this April 4 to 6, hosted by Tennis Canada.

Now, the Davis Cup event is very famous, having been in existence since 1900, and it's played in hundreds of countries around the world by all levels of players. The event in Calgary will be one of many happening around the globe over the course of the weekend, and fans attending not just from Calgary but, in fact, from across the province and elsewhere will be able to really enjoy some top-notch tennis matches featuring, for example, Canada versus Peru in the second round.

Of course, we're helping to host this event through the Alberta lottery fund, which is a proud sponsor of the Davis Cup, contributing $25,000 towards that event. So we can take pride as a province and especially us Calgarians for our role in hosting this globally recognized event, and I would certainly encourage people to take this opportunity to get out and watch a few games if they can.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

World Theatre Day

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow, March 27, is World Theatre Day. This international day is proposed by the International Theatre Institute and sponsored by UNESCO. World Theatre Day seeks to promote exchange of knowledge and practice in the domain of the performing arts, to stimulate creation between theatre people, to make public opinion aware of the necessity of taking artistic creation into consideration, to deepen mutual understanding to strengthen peace and friendship among peoples.

As the Official Opposition critic for the arts and an Edmonton MLA I'm supremely proud of our theatre community, which includes but is not limited to Azimuth, Die-Nasty, Chimprov, the Citadel, Concrete, Electra, Fringe Theatre Adventures, Jagged Edge, Jubilations, Kill Your Television, the Mayfield dinner theatre, Northern Light, Oh Susanna, Rapid Fire, Running With Scissors, Shadow, Studio, Teatro la Quindicina, Theatre Network, Theatre-sports, Three Dead Trolls in a Baggie, Walterdale, and Workshop West, all in Edmonton. So go to a play this weekend, and help celebrate World Theatre Day.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Magrath Zeniths

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and recognize an outstanding achievement in high school for boys 4A basketball. Last week, March 20 through 22, 16 of the best 4A boys basketball teams in Alberta competed in the 4A provincial tournament at the Enmax Centre in Lethbridge. The quality of players and competition was outstanding. I congratulate all who participated.

My sincere congratulations are extended to the Magrath Zeniths of Magrath, Alberta, who were successful in winning the tournament and being crowned provincial 4A champs in 2003. This culminated a great season of hard work and commitment by players and coaches. These players include Giovanni Uneddu, John Leishman, Cam Smith, Riley Sabey, Doug Mehew, Ryan Clark, Allen Tollestrup, Brett Harris, Derek Blackmer, T.J. Quinton, Joe Schow, Shane Nishikawa, and coaches Phil Tollestrup and Mark Tollestrup. Mr. Speaker, again, my sincere congratulations to this team and their community for their achievement.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Youth Forums

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, as chair of the Youth Secretariat it has been my privilege to attend youth forums as they are being held in nine different regions throughout this province. This morning I attended the youth forum at the Westerner exhibition grounds in Red Deer and spoke to more than 60 youths from the ages of 16 to 19 years. Some were on their spring break, and some were giving up classes for the day. They were all a highly energetic and motivated group. They listened as I told them that we needed and welcomed their ideas and suggestions to help us solve some of our teen issues. We talked about youth issues such as addictions, crystal meth, youth crime, and youth employment. They were glad to hear about the changes in the Child Welfare Act and the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. They were glad to know that we care about what they have to say.

Each youth forum will compile and submit a report of their ideas and suggestions to the Youth Secretariat. We will review these reports and carefully consider the recommendations of our Alberta youth.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank members of the Youth Advisory Panel who have volunteered their time to help make these youth forums fun and informative. Thanks to the staff of Children's Services and thanks to the youths themselves for their participation. If these youths at the forums are any indication of the future of this province, Alberta has a very bright and successful future indeed.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Song for Peace

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A young constituent of mine, Quinn Grundy, is studying grade 12 in India at an international school. When news of the war in Iraq reached her school, the students there were so moved that several of them got together to write a song about peace. These students are from Europe, Asia, and North America; in other words, they span much of the globe.

Having written the song, they obtained instruments including a guitar, drums, and a violin and recorded it at a studio in India. They have now posted it on a web site for all the world to hear. Now, the web address is so long there will be a link to that web site from my constituency web site, www.edmontonriverview.com.

These are some of the leaders of the next generation of humanity, and I would like to recognize their commitment to building a world without war.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to stand and present a petition that's in order, signed by nearly 1,000 citizens of Alberta saying:

We are very concerned about the crisis in education. Reductions in teaching staff, enlarged class sizes or the elimination of any programs including music, special academic programs, and sports are all unacceptable ways to deal with the cost of education.

We . . . petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to increase funding for public education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two tablings, and these would be amendments on Bill 3 that we never had an opportunity to get to in committee, which is the stage where we would introduce amendments, because of the time allocation or closure motion that came forward. Both of these are very good, talking about other new ideas for this government to be energy efficient and help consumers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies of a submission by Steven Brodie to the learning commission. The submission reflects Mr. Brodie's deep concern with education and runs to over 60 pages and deals with a whole variety of problems facing the education system and offers some sound solutions. It's with pleasure that I table this submission.

2:40

The Speaker: Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings today. Three of them are expressing concerns over education. The first is addressed to the Minister of Learning, as I say, raising concerns about funding for our children's education. It's from a Dr. Francis Landy.

The second is addressed to the Premier and the Minister of Learning from Marcia Barker, saying that she's concerned about the funding of public schools in Edmonton.

The third is to the Premier and the Minister of Learning from a Janet Haley, saying that she is very concerned about the state of learning and its impact on the weakening of the Alberta advantage.

The fourth tabling addresses Bill 27 and is from a Denise Palmer, expressing displeasure at the introduction of Bill 27. "I am an Albertan . . . I've lived in this province with my husband for almost 30 years." She's a registered nurse. She's very unhappy with Bill 27.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a pamphlet that we received at the zone 2 and 3 board meetings, and it's titled Public Education: The Right Answer. It outlines the past, the present, and the future of public education in the province.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings today. The first one is a set of 49 letters written by parents of children at King Edward elementary school with a request to me to table these letters on their behalf. These letters are all expressing deep concern about the inadequate funding of public education and the negative impact that this underfunding has on their school.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from the board of the Strathcona nursery school outlining how this underfunding is negatively affecting activities at the King Edward school, associated with the Strathcona nursery school. Their rents are going to go up by 700 percent, and they're very concerned that it'll make their school unaffordable and unsustainable.

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from a highly gifted and committed teacher at that nursery school. Her name is Heather Craig, and she makes compelling arguments why it is necessary for us all to work together to save schools such as this nursery school at King Edward school.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from Linda Hughes, dated February 12, 2003, addressed to the Minister of Learning. She asks that her concerns be addressed and responded to in a timely manner, would like to know why MLAs' salaries have gone up over the past 13 years, why the government does not hold education in its highest priority, and would like a redistribution of her tax dollars as per her attached letter.

The second, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Heather Smith, president of the United Nurses of Alberta, to the Minister of Health and Wellness, asking that the chair of the Provincial Health Authorities bargaining committee be fired for providing what she terms misleading and erroneous information about the negotiations for a new collective agreement.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a point of order.

Point of Order Clarification

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated yesterday in my point of order and perhaps inadequately, I continue to hear the Premier refer to me as a former board member. Not that I take any offence from that directly, but the purpose seems to be to suggest that I have had some conflict of interest in respect of this matter. So I again would appeal to you and to the Premier to get the Premier's facts straight with respect to my previous position, which did not include sitting on the board of EPCOR.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a point of order that was argued admirably yesterday. Nothing has really changed in the circumstance, and I think that what happened yesterday is exactly the same as what happened today.

The Speaker: It appears to be more of a point of clarification than a point of order. Unfortunately, we do have this situation, and this contradiction does allow sometimes to have two different views of the same situation. That does cause a dilemma, no doubt at all. Perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands might just want to emphatically put in writing to the hon. the Premier the facts with respect to whether or not he was a member of such a board. I have no idea, so I don't know how I could rule on that. But if the member says he was never a board member of the power company of the city of Edmonton – we've heard him say that he never was, and presumably that will be conveyed to all hon. members, that the member never was a member of the board in question – then one should not suggest that he was.

Bill 3 Electric Utilities Act

[Adjourned debate March 25: Mr. Hancock]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are now entering into the final stage on Bill 3. [some applause] While I hear some members who support the government position on Bill 3 applaud that particular perspective, it is not one that is shared by the Official Opposition. There is no doubt that this very substantive bill has been rushed through this Assembly in a most speedy and untimely fashion, allowing for limited debate on the issues at hand. We think that is incorrect. In fact, the debate has been some very few hours by this opposition.

Mrs. McClellan: Eight hours.

Ms Carlson: The minister of agriculture says eight hours on Bill 3. Have we had eight hours of debate so far on Bill 3?

This is a very interesting perspective, Mr. Speaker, because the government seems to feel that that is enough time to have brought in closure at committee on this particular bill. [interjection] It's now renamed time allocation, as the minister of agriculture and the Government House Leader stated. However, it is a form of closure, and time allocation, when they bring it in, means that we have one hour of debate left in committee after some hours. [interjection] In this case they're indicating that it's been close to eight hours of debate on this bill.

They have used the federal government's example of bringing in time allocation and closure on bills as their good reasons for also being able to do it here. This is the only thing they seem to agree on with the federal government. So it's monkey see, monkey do when it's convenient for them; otherwise, they don't like what the federal government does.

I would like to remind them that when you scratch the surface of what this government proposes – first of all, they give you a picture that looks nice. Then you scratch the surface, and you find out it isn't all that great, Mr. Speaker. If we take a look at what happens at the federal level – we took a look at that list that the Government House Leader gave us and randomly picked three bills that the federal government had used time allocation on to see how long they let members at the federal level debate, and we found out something very interesting. It turns out that on the bill that had the least amount of hours of debate prior to time allocation – the one that we looked at was C-20, the Quebec Secession Act, the clarity bill. Before time allocation 15 hours and 15 minutes of debate were allowed as compared to about eight here. Then we take a look at Bill C-36, amending the Criminal Code: before time allocation, 17 hours and 58 minutes of debate. Bill C-49, An Act to Implement Certain Provisions of the Budget: before time allocation, 22 hours and 44 minutes of debate. Bill C-5, An Act Respecting the Protection of Wildlife Species: before time allocation, 37 hours of debate. We're not going to see that kind of debate on all three of these bills that this government brought time allocation on.

Let's talk about time allocation at the federal level. What does that mean? It doesn't mean that they're limited to one small hour of debate in the Legislature. It means that they get a whole sitting day. Quite different from the allocations here. So this government, who has this huge, overwhelming majority, continues to bring the hammer down on a very small opposition. Why would they do that, Mr. Speaker? That's the question.

We have very good things to say. We have great ideas to put out there to these ministers, which they often aren't able to actually understand the first time we introduce the idea, as we have seen repeatedly on net metering in this Assembly over the last 10 days. [interjection] Like the member says, I guess it's a fishing thing, if you ask the Premier.

They need some help, Mr. Speaker, on these bills. They need some help on where we go for the next step, and they don't seem to be prepared to take it, but definitely it's something that's required. So with the thought of helping this government understand some of the options that are available to them, at this time I would like to introduce an amendment that will refer this particular bill back to committee, where we can discuss some of those very excellent, great ideas.

The Speaker: Would the hon. member continue as the amendment is being circulated.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What we see in this notice of amendment to Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, that I'm moving on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who signed the amendment, is for the motion for third reading to be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 3, Electric Utilities Act, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purposes of reconsidering the proposed section 1 and proposed section 20.

Mrs. McClellan: Is this a hoist?

Ms Carlson: No, this is not a hoist. This is a recommittal. There are three possible amendments that we could make at third reading stage, and the first of those that we will be talking about this afternoon is a recommittal. The last of them that we'll be talking about this afternoon or this evening would be a hoist.

Now, why would we need this particular amendment? As we've seen even today in question period, there are a lot of unanswered options and things that the government really doesn't understand about where they could move on electricity in this province to help consumers lower their costs, given that this government has created huge increases in their home costs through the mess they have made of deregulation. Even though we've told the government for the past five years that they needed to lay out the rules so that industry knew what the rules of the game were going to be, so that industry could ensure that they had enough capacity to meet the needs downstream, so that other industries who were looking at coming into Alberta could get set up, could get established, could get their networks happening, so that the companies now operating in this province could ensure that their information systems were compatible and could work well together, so that all the needs of the consumers and the industry and the government were met. Because they didn't do that, because of this huge kerfuffle that we've seen, prices have absolutely skyrocketed, people and businesses, particularly small and medium-sized businesses, are in great hardship. We need to go back with this bill and find out how to do it properly.

In addition to that, given that with this huge majority this bill is very likely to pass, the government needs to know how to be able to provide options to consumers to lower their costs. We've talked for a few months now about putting a government retrofit plan in place where the government would either loan to consumers on an interest-free basis or have some form of grant instituted, where consumers could access the dollars so that they can retrofit their homes, and potentially extend it to the business community so that they could retrofit their businesses, so that they could access different methods of building construction and new furnaces and hot water tanks and those kinds of additions to their homes or changes in their homes or solar power or wind power so that they could lower their overall costs and be more energy efficient. Not only does that effectively help us on the path to meeting our Kyoto targets, but it also helps consumers lower the operating costs in their homes. When we're seeing electricity and gas prices coming in this winter in many cases higher than people's monthly rent or mortgage payments, we certainly need to take a look at what some of those options are.

Last Wednesday evening we introduced in this House an amendment to allow for net metering. I need to explain net metering because even after talking about it Wednesday night, when we made a fairly thorough review of it, the Energy minister didn't get it. When he got up to speak to the amendment, he couldn't explain to anybody what net metering was and then, even not knowing what he was talking about, strongly urged all members in the Assembly not to support the amendment. So the amendment was defeated. Then when we asked him a question yesterday in the House about this, he said suddenly: this is a good idea, and we'll go forward and take a look at it. Yet when we asked him and the Premier about it today, once again they were suddenly clueless about what net metering is. The Premier thought it had something to do with fishing nets. I'm sure he knows now that it's something different. The Energy minister was so arrogant in his attitude. Between last Wednesday and the question yesterday he still hadn't taken the time to either read Hansard, where it was explained, or to find out from his own people what's required.

Net metering is a situation where individuals or businesses or farms who have adapted their places of residence or business to use solar power or to use wind power can take that capacity and hook it into the meter in their home. What happens, then, is that at the times of day when they're using a lot of electricity and they don't have enough capacity provided by the solar power or by the wind power, their meter, their regular household meter, just like you have on the outside of your house, runs forward as they use electricity from the grid. When they have an overabundance of capacity, more than what they're using in their house, that feeds into the meter itself, and the meter spins backwards, effectively reducing their overall monthly utility costs. So when they need the power, they access the grid, just like all of us do in our homes. When they have excess capacity, that feeds into the grid, and their meter runs backwards at the same consumption level as it would run forward.

Now, what's required here for this to work effectively in this province is that we actually need a change to the utilities act. Either an amendment has to be brought in or a regulation has to be brought into the utilities act stating that companies have to provide this service in this province.

You don't need an extra meter to do this. The existing meter you have now goes forward and goes backwards. That works. The companies providing this service just have to agree to do it. The trick here is that they agree to take in the power that the consumer is offering at the same price that they're selling it out to them. In the States and in the provinces where there isn't a specific regulation saying that companies like EPCOR have to provide a net metering service, what happens is that the individual can come to an agreement with the organization. So we have an instance here in Edmonton where EPCOR won't do it. There's an instance in Calgary where Enmax will do it.

The trick is that if there is no legislation saying that what they're selling to the consumer is going to be charged at the same price as what is coming in, what the companies will do is give a bargain-basement price for that electricity coming into their grid from the household. So that's an unfair advantage that the large corporations have. If there is a regulation in place saying that this service has to be provided at the same level as what the daily household charge was to that household, then you really have a level playing field, and it's just an excellent idea for people who want to put a solar panel on their house. It's a particularly good idea for prairie farmers because of the ability to have wind power and feed that into their grid. It's a particularly good idea for intensive livestock operators. It really works well in communities where it's been used. It's good for acreages who can also hook up a windmill, and of course it works very well in city areas where you have the ability to put a couple of solar panels on your house.

So this was the idea that we were asking the Energy minister to adopt in the amendment. We even had the minister of agriculture saying that it sounded like an interesting concept and if it didn't cost companies any money to do it, it should be something that should be pursued. It's true. Because the consumers are selling a little bit of power in, there's an opportunity cost loss for the large companies like Enmax and EPCOR because they're not selling as much power to that consumer as they could've, but that is the only cost to the large corporations.

The cost to the individual is to set up their particular system, solar or wind, and then ultimately the hookup into the existing meter that they have, but they don't need a new meter, and other than that it's a system that works out very well. There are 30 states – some of them are northern states, but some of them are southern states – and they think that this is an effective enough way to reduce energy costs that they have set up legislation in all those areas for it. It's really something that we need to do. So I urge everyone to support this particular amendment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on the amendment.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a rare opportunity that we get to speak to such an important amendment, an amendment that has huge implications and has a huge impact on the consumers of this province. Unfortunately, we keep hearing that there has been adequate debate on this bill, a bill that is potentially going to cost the consumers of this province billions of dollars, yet we have had very little debate, and we've had very little participation by government members. Wouldn't it be nice for all of these people who get all the calls in their constituency offices and all the complaints about our high electricity prices and people that constantly complain about the price of their energy in this province, when for many, many decades they were accustomed to a regulated rate – those people, those Albertans, do not have the opportunity to hear their members debate. They perhaps may have talked about it in caucus or may not have – I have no way of knowing – but we certainly don't have a public record of that. We don't have their thoughts and their ideas in Hansard. Yet they're going to go back to their constituencies, and those very people that they represent are going to be paying larger and larger bills.

It is a very, very good amendment that has been proposed. Just to review that amendment: "Bill 3, Electric Utilities Act, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purposes of reconsidering the proposed section 1 and proposed section 20." I think that is an excellent suggestion, Mr. Speaker, particularly when we are at the final stage of this bill and this is probably the biggest bill that we will be debating in this spring session. It is also a very, very important bill because electricity does affect each and every Albertan. It is certainly something that is getting a whole lot of attention.

Now, many years ago when I was still a student, I had the opportunity to take a course. One of our required readings was a little book called Limits to Growth, and in that book it described how we have all these feedback groups and things that we were doing. It was quite interesting to note even at that time that our professor said: really, if you wish to cripple Canada, if you wish to cripple any northern country, all you would have to do is when the cold weather, the 30-plus-below temperature, hits, somehow limit or destroy their electrical production. They would be crippled. That thought has always stuck with me, and that's well over 35 years ago that I listened to Dr. Wilson describe that.

We are dealing here with an extremely important issue. We are dealing with electricity, that certainly allows a much better quality of life for all of us in the world. It is an issue of fundamental importance. None of us want to get back to the days when the pioneers settled this province and they didn't have electricity. So we have to look here at how the electrical market has developed in this province, how it has played such a vital role not only in the development of this province but in the attraction of many people to this province.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

We certainly realize that over time the electric industry, not only in this province but throughout North America, has become a very complicated system yet a very, I think overall, efficient system, particularly when you look at how the electricity grid has developed in North America and how links from different jurisdictions fit together and how we can reroute electricity because of shortfalls, because of problems with our plants, where we have breakdowns, whatever. But overall we can reroute electricity so that we can certainly handle all of these shortfalls.

It is a very, very complicated system, Mr. Speaker, because electricity is one of those essentials that cannot be stored. We cannot use it if we produce too much. We also have major problems if we produce too little. So the market, the system in North America has just done a fabulous job in not only operating but supplying us with cheap and reliable electricity. It has developed over decades, and of course as it has developed, it has met so many of the problems that we would have encountered if we had not had a regulated system.

Now, again, at one time we did have a system that wasn't regulated, and it led to many, many problems. You know, we had supplies that were not necessarily sustainable. We had supplies that would come and go. It wasn't an efficient system. There were no standards.

Of course, we have to look at safety issues when we're dealing with electricity because it is one of those very volatile forms of energy that if not used correctly can have serious consequences. We have to look at the fact that there is no substitute for electricity, and we have to realize that electricity is not a commodity. It must be treated quite differently than other commodities. It is because of this, Mr. Speaker, that electricity does not lend itself to the market forces. So when we look at Bill 3, the Electric Utilities Act, that is certainly one of the goals: to allow electricity to be used as a commodity.

Now, then, when we do look at the regulated system which we did enjoy in this country for many, many decades, we had a very good supply. The supply was consistent. It was never in question, and as we required more electricity to come on-line, then certainly it came. We also had a very efficient system in that here in Alberta until we deregulated we had some of the lowest rates for electricity in North America. We also had standards where the producers had to meet those standards. We also had a system that had been developed over many years of dealing with electricity where it was very efficient; it was very safe. Certainly, we have all recognized how very useful electricity is as a form of energy. What we have in Alberta and had in Alberta was a very good system, and we did enjoy very cheap and very reliable energy. Why we would want to tamper with that particular system is above me.

As I did indicate, cheap, reliable electricity is certainly one of those issues that attracts people to Alberta. It attracts business to Alberta, and it has certainly led to the economic development that we enjoy in this province. All we have to do is look at our future and look to the hon. member's constituency of Fort McMurray. Certainly, the amount of energy that's required in that part of the province to produce and separate the oil from the sands – again, very, very critical. When we look at the future of this province and the potential that we have because of that huge oil spill that occurred I don't know how many hundreds of thousands of years ago up in northern Alberta, we have to realize that our success and also that success are based on different forms of energy, of course, and electricity being one of them.

We have had in this province a regulated system, a system that was supported by business. It was supported by consumers, it was supported by regulators, and it was the backbone of a very, very good system. It was without a doubt the building block of our financial success.

So in our amendment that we're speaking about here today, Mr. Speaker, we are asking for this bill to be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of reconsidering proposed section 1 and proposed section 20. The electricity industry is, as I've indicated, a very, very complicated industry. It is one where we as Albertans have enjoyed some of the best and cheapest electricity in North America. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie had just spoken very eloquently to the whole issue of net metering, which we have not even seen here. This certainly is one of those recommendations that I think the whole Assembly would like to look at because we do want the cheapest possible rates for our constituents.

Mr. Speaker, with those few comments I will take my seat and urge all members to speak to this amendment. I think that all members should support this amendment as well because it will allow us to take a look at a bill that's a very complicated bill and certainly look at options where we can provide the type of service we had in the regulated system to Alberta consumers, a system that provided very cheap and very reliable electricity, something that unfortunately, since we've had a deregulated system in this province, we haven't been able to maintain. As well, I think that one of the things I haven't mentioned here is the fact that I believe that Bill 3 is going to remove the right of community-based companies like EPCOR to set their own rates.

So with those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and certainly look forward to the debate raised by all members. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky on the amendment.

Mr. Knight: On the amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to rise and join debate with respect to an amendment before us that would in fact return a piece of well-thought-out, necessary, and timely legislation to committee for further study of two areas. The first one, I believe, is section 1, which I presume would be the interpretation. If we want to return to committee to discuss the interpretation of this particular piece of legislation, then I would say that we really are going to go back, well, at least until 1995. I think that was when the first one was brought in, a little before me, and that would be kind of where we'd be returning to. I can't really support the idea that we would need to go back eight years or something and kind of start this thing again.

Bill 3, Mr. Speaker, is actually a complicated piece of legislation. I agree with the member opposite. That is true. When you break it down and you look at the discussions that have taken place in this Assembly about the particular issues that the bill itself addresses, I think that I could argue that it would be difficult for us to have many more varying opinions with respect to these issues. Certainly, net metering is a technology that can be employed. No argument that it's a good idea. No argument that it's available. No argument that it's being done in certain places. However, I might perhaps put it this way: net metering is not really for the masses. There are certain circumstances where net metering can work, but we don't want to leave anybody with the impression that net metering is something that you would want to put in every household in the city of Edmonton. I rather doubt that that would work, although there are instances and certainly I'm sure they will be investigated. I do believe that in the province of Alberta right now there are instances where that return power system is actually working, so I certainly agree with that. However, it's not necessary to return the act to committee in order to address a situation like net metering. I'm sure that that can be accommodated other ways, and very likely in the regulations that surround this piece of legislation there can be accommodation made for situations similar to that.

The Electric Utilities Act has a number of very necessary parts to it with respect to the ongoing restructuring of the energy business in the province of Alberta and, I might add, Mr. Speaker, in North America in general terms. We really do need to understand that as we move ahead, Alberta will have to be connected with and be a player in a bit of a larger electrical market. So what we're doing here: we're going to establish an independent system operator. This new market operator will assume responsibility for the market operations in the province, and they will include the Power Pool, system control, the long-term transmission system integrity, the planning and the management of our transmission system, which – and I agree again with the member opposite – is extremely important business for the province now. This legislation addresses that particular issue. We realize that on an ongoing basis and looking out a few years, transmission congestion could be a major problem for Albertans. This piece of legislation, under the ISO, will deal with that. Another important thing that the ISO will do is they will handle under one umbrella, under the ISO, the load settlement issue, and that again relative to transmission and distribution is extremely important for Albertans.

The way that we started into the restructuring of Alberta's electrical system brought about a situation where we had a requirement to organize a Balancing Pool. The Balancing Pool, again, is a temporary part of the restructuring, and it's ongoing for a 20-year period. We had to have a way in our system to allow the Balancing Pool to operate independently of the rest of the players. Another important part of the Electric Utilities Act, 2003, is to allow the Balancing Pool to become more independent and to be governed by its own board, a more independent Balancing Pool, Mr. Speaker, governed by a board of professional members no longer associated with the Power Pool.

Again I just want to go back to reinforce the things that the member brings up. They're absolutely true and critical. That is: what about ordinary consumers in the province of Alberta? What are we doing for consumers? Certainly, the ISO is part and parcel of an oversight system, but more importantly I think that the market surveillance administrator will be appointed by the EUB. Mr. Speaker, the market surveillance administrator will conduct surveillance, monitor and investigate the market to ensure that it operates in a competitive and transparent manner.

The MSA has under this bill some expanded responsibilities in the area of the retail market, and I believe that's the part that you would be most concerned about; that is, the consumers in the province. This will allow consumers to have a greater amount of confidence that the retail functions in the marketplace are competitive and are transparent. The market surveillance administrator is a single person, and when we go into that in the bill, it's understandable there that he has some major responsibilities and abilities given to him to carry out his function with authority.

So those are, I think, some of the issues certainly brought up that I hope I was able to help address and the reasons, Mr. Speaker, why I feel that it's important for this legislation to move ahead. I need to then address the situation with respect to the amendment, because I don't see the amendment, especially in areas of interpretation, being a productive thing that is actually going to move this piece of legislation in the right direction. So I have to urge my colleagues to vote against the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the recommittal amendment, please, Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments to make on the amendment before the House that would recommit the Electric Utilities Act, Bill 3, to the Committee of the Whole for the purposes of reconsidering specifically section 1 and section 20. I think there are a number of issues that are in play. One is those two specific sections that the amendment addresses, and I'll speak to them in just a minute, but I guess that the purpose of the recommittal motion is more important than the specifics.

What we're asking is that there be, really, a sober second look at Bill 3. I think that it's wise that we ask for that second look at this point, Mr. Speaker. We're still somewhat surprised that the government has seen fit to push this particular bill through the House with such haste. It's a large bill and it's an important bill, and it would seem to us that it's a bill that deserves a reasonable amount of time for debate and a reasonable amount of time for interested parties to have their say about the implications of the bill. We don't think that that's happened. So one purpose of the recommittal motion is to provide the Assembly and others who are interested in the legislation with an opportunity to again look at the provisions of the bill and the implications of the bill. In our case we've been particularly concerned about consumers in the province because those are the kinds of people that we've been hearing from in the last number of days. So there are those two purposes.

I think the need for a sober second look at it became really evident this afternoon, and as has already been mentioned, it surrounded the discussion of net metering. It was astounding to find that the minister in charge didn't understand – at least, it didn't appear to people on this side of the House – what something as basic as that term really was about. Even more distressing, Mr. Speaker, is that that minister would have advised his colleagues a number of days ago to defeat an amendment that would have placed net metering in the bill. So I guess that the point I'm trying to make is that the actions of the minister call into question the government's own understanding of its legislation. Has this been prepared so hastily that there have been some major oversights? When you have really quite basic and certainly not hugely significant things like net metering not even in the vocabulary of the minister and him advising the government to take action in the Assembly based on lack of knowledge, it's really most distressing, and I think it does point out the strong need for a second look.

It comes back to comments that we've been making about the natural gas bill before the Legislature, and that is that so much of the legislation seems to be driven by blind faith in the market and that somehow or other all you have to do is drive and drive and drive towards a competitive model and that no matter what the conditions are out there, somehow or other it's all going to work out. We've had that experience previously, Mr. Speaker, with the government, and the fact is that it doesn't always work out. Blind faith may be great in some areas, but when it comes to utilities, it doesn't carry the day.

The proof of it, of course, is the size of the amendment that's before us today, a bill that runs over 129 pages. That's quite an amendment and again, I think, speaks to the whole notion of things not being thought through carefully the first time and then having to be redone. I think it's unfortunate. So much of the legislation, I think, has been driven by that faith in a competitive market, and I think that our concern is that Albertans are now paying a high price and are going to be paying a higher price in the future for that kind of approach to public policy-making. Again, I think it's unfortunate.

Specifically, the amendment asks us to revisit part 1, which is Interpretation, Application and Purpose, and section 1 of that is Interpretation – and these comments were made previously, Mr. Speaker – which really defines the terminology that's going to be used throughout the act. Most of the definitions remain the same with the few that have been added or deleted as was necessary throughout the act. For instance, the definition of an electric utility has been broadened to allow for the convergence of the natural gas and electricity retail markets. The purpose of this, of course, is to allow one retailer to sell both products.

I think it's that whole concern about retailers – and the previous speaker, I think, tried to assure us that this has been looked at carefully and that we don't need to have concerns, but given our experience, we do have concerns about how retailers are going to behave and the kinds of situations that, particularly, residential customers are going to find themselves in when this act becomes the law of the land and we really get into the deregulation as envisioned by the drafters of this legislation.

The definition of farm transmission costs dealing with supplying electricity to rural electrification authorities has been removed from the act, and the definition of municipality has been broadened to include the Métis settlements, that were established under the Metis Settlements Act.

The definition of power purchase agreement has been added to the act, and now I think it makes it abundantly clear that the claim that we made at the time that we had no idea that Alberta's electricity generating assets were going to be sold off when the government began its deregulation process back in 1980 was correct. No one had any idea what the government had in mind, and to claim otherwise is a distortion.

Section 1 defines where different terms created by the Electric Utilities Act get their meaning, and section 1(3) simply states that the Electric Utilities Act determines if a corporation is a subsidiary according to the Business Corporations Act.

An important section is the section that deals with the Medicine Hat service area. Section 1 provides the definition for that service area, and it's really quite important to the rest of the act because the Medicine Hat service area is exempted from some provisions, and it's treated differently than other entities in parts of the act, particularly when it comes to various regulations. So it's an important definition in terms of what that service area includes.

So those definitions have some implications. We're concerned, as I indicated, about retailers. We're concerned about the residential customers and that our concerns for residential customers are not reflected in the definitions that we see there. We've done some thinking about what might go there, but at this point all we're asking is for it to be taken back to Committee of the Whole for reconsideration purposes.

The second section that we had asked to be reconsidered was the ISO rules under section 20. This is the section that establishes what areas the ISO has jurisdiction in, and it outlines the various areas where the ISO can make rules. Most of the rules, we have to admit, already currently exist as part of the Power Pool, and this section simply transfers the rule-making authority from the Power Pool to the ISO.

But, again, as I said, the major purpose of the amendment before us right now, Mr. Speaker, is to ask for a very careful second look at the provisions of the bill, and as I indicated last night with another bill, I suspect we're going to be back here – and I would almost lay money on it – in the fall or next spring with further amendments to the act and more changes. Part of those changes will be as a result of not having done a thorough job in the first instance. Again, the concern we have is that amendments that are put forward are dismissed summarily and often without any knowledge of what the amendments actually mean or the content of the amendment. They're dismissed on purely political grounds rather than in the interests of trying to make the act a better piece of legislation that would better serve Albertans.

I think that with those few comments, Mr. Speaker, I would urge members to support the amendment before us and to allow the House to take a close second look over a longer period of time at the provisions in Bill 3. Thanks very much.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude, I'd like to adjourn debate on Bill 3.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:40

Bill 19Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

[Debate adjourned March 25: Ms Carlson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to resume debate on Bill 19. I'm wondering if you could give me some indication of how much time I have. Okay. Twelve minutes. Thank you very much.

We have still quite a bit to say on Bill 19 although we're in the final stages of this particular bill. The problem that we have had with it from the beginning is that while there has been deregulation in the gas markets for a long time, the principal reason for bringing this bill forward is to give companies that are moving into Alberta to provide electrical services, utility services a better market by being able to bundle services, being both gas and electricity. When we do things to provide a better platform for business to make money, it means somebody isn't making money, and that means it comes right out of consumers' pockets. That is our biggest concern with that, Mr. Speaker.

Having said that, I will now introduce an amendment that we hope will focus on consumer protection. I am happy to talk about the amendment to Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. I'm moving it on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and it states that the motion for third reading be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following.

Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, be not now read a third time because it is the Assembly's view that the bill will leave consumers vulnerable to entrenched high natural gas prices without consumer protection.

Why do we think that there won't be consumer protection here? It's because we haven't seen anything come forward from the government to indicate that that would be the case. Part of what protects consumers is bringing in other options for them to be able to take a look at so that there are more options available on the market. If they have things that are available to them to do, that brings down the cost of gas in general. I talked about some of those on the electrical side when we talked about net metering. The same thing can be given. Electricity sold into the grid provided by green sources can be used as a heating source as well, which then can be in direct competition with gas, which is what we're looking for here: whatever options are available that bring the overall price down.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, there are quite a few good options out there. We didn't have a chance to talk about some of these other options in committee because of the time allocation rules, but there are certain locations that have anticipated the high costs of gas and other sources of heat and have brought in very excellent programs for their particular memberships to participate in. If we take a look at some of the outstanding options that are out there, California has some really good ideas. They have something that's called an energy-efficient mortgage. Eligible technologies are solar water heat and active space heat and photovoltaics. Well, I don't have enough time to go into a definition of that for the Energy minister, so he'll have to look it up or get some of his staff to look it up so that he understands it, because something as simple as net metering seems to be an insurmountable barrier this particular week.

To go into a summary of the kinds of things that we could be bringing in that speak to this particular amendment talking about consumer protection are these mortgages. They can be used by homeowners to pay for energy-efficient measures for both new and existing homes. That becomes a critical factor, Mr. Speaker, because not everybody is going to go out and buy a new, energy-efficient home. They can't afford to. And what do we do with the surplus on the market that is there otherwise? That's why our idea of having a retrofit program for existing homes is such a good idea. You could combine this with this kind of a mortgage. What happens is that they can be applied to most homes and work for both government-insured mortgages, like we have in this province, and conventional kinds of mortgages.

In a nutshell what happens is that all buyers who qualify for home loans also qualify for this. So it's intended to give these buyers additional benefits on top of their usual mortgage deal. What happens is that the lender uses the energy efficiency of the home, as determined by a rating that is federally monitored and implemented, to determine what the benefits are going to be. Then it can be used to finance all these technologies. So this could be in addition to the retrofit plan that we've talked about, or since the government doesn't like to take our great ideas all that often, then they could go to this mortgage program instead. We heard some discussions earlier this session about options for mortgages, I think brought up in private members' bills by private members who support the government agenda, so we know that for at least this particular idea there is some kind of support. So I would strongly suggest that both the Energy minister and the Environment minister get together with their respective departments and start to think about how we can help people get out of this huge corner that they have pushed the average consumer into with the kinds of costs that we're taking a look at.

Montana also has a really good incentive program for renewable energy, which would come in direct competition with high natural gas prices, which speaks to this particular amendment. This program is called a universal systems benefit program, and it's a public benefits fund incentive. The eligible technologies for this one are passive solar space heat, solar water heat, active solar space heat, solar thermal electric, solar thermal process heat, again photovoltaics, wind and geothermal electric.

I just had an interesting discussion with a person who came to my constituency talking about how to lower costs. This person is a home builder, and he talked about how we need to start taking a look at using thermal heat and electrical heat way more efficiently. He builds very low-end consumer houses, so first time buyer kinds of homes, and he builds them mostly around the Cooking Lake area. What he has done to keep his costs low for a long time is when he builds the home – traditionally, what builders do is take all their scrap materials and haul them out to the dump. That creates a few problems. It creates a waste problem, a transportation issue, dumping fees. All those add to the cost of the home. What he has done traditionally is dig a large hole in the backyard, so down about 40 feet and about 10 feet wide. What he does is dump all the household waste in that hole. Then what he does, also, is put water heater pipes vertically in the side of the hole, covers it all up when he's done building the house, hooks up the water heater pipes to the home. This is a very environmentally forward-thinking concept, and it works very well for him and, subsequently, for the people who buy those homes.

As that waste decomposes – now, if you think about it, it's all decomposable biomass stuff: wood, things of that nature – the decomposition creates heat. So what happens with the heat that's generated down there is it heats up the water coils, and that feeds into an electrical system into the house. That stuff takes about 20 years to decompose completely. At that point in time what it does is run through into the house and through tubing in the basement hooks up to the water tank there and provides heat for the home, thereby reducing the overall energy costs, effectively using waste materials from building homes. This kind of power is a great idea. It's something that we need to be taking a look at as options, and it's the kind of thing that would specifically qualify for this particular benefit program that Montana has.

So when did Montana do this? You know, is this a situation where everybody just suddenly woke up? Well, most states have been working on these kinds of issues since at least the mid-1990s, and Montana brought this in as part of its 1997 restructuring legislation. So it took them a little while to get it all figured out and to get the legislation in place, which is exactly what we've been asking the Energy minister to take a look at and to bring forward here. What happened was that on January 1, 1999, all suppliers began contributing a very small percentage of their profits, and that created a fund. It supports energy efficiency, renewable energy resources, low-income energy assistance, and renewable energy research and development. So these funds are then distributed among these programs, and implementation began almost immediately. This is, once again, another really good idea that this government, had they done their research – you know, Mr. Speaker, they have way more people in their department to help them with research than we do, certainly, and it wasn't very hard for us to find out about these very excellent ideas that are out there in the community.

They also could have taken a look at some of the options that were provided to them by the Pembina Institute submission, options that speak directly to this amendment when they talk about consumer protection and leaving consumers vulnerable to entrenching high natural gas prices. In this Climate Change Action Plan for Alberta: Summary Overview submitted by the Pembina Institute, they talked about all kinds of things that could help overall in lowering gas prices and providing some protection. They also in this submission talked about net metering. So this isn't a new concept to this government. It has been around for a long time, and we strongly suggest that they read the stuff they get.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on the amendment.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I think it's very important that all members of the Assembly take a second look at Bill 19, another bill that is dealing with necessary utilities to the province. It's a situation where I think, when we look at the whole gas industry in this province, there are some things that we would like to do again. I look at our plant down at Joffre, Alberta, that strips the natural gas in this province and uses those by-products in the petrochemical industry. What a difference it has made to Alberta. Certainly, the foresight that Premier Lougheed had when he made it possible for Joffre to come into being and to compete with the Sarnias of the world and whatever else – it was one of those industries in the province that was welcomed, and it was one that was very beneficial to the province. A few years later we had the development of the Alliance pipeline, and we allowed all of that natural gas here in the province to flow out of this province without being stripped. Something like that has put our entire petrochemical industry in a very weakened position simply because of the source of materials.

So we look at this particular bill, Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, and what it's going to do here in the province of Alberta. Specifically to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has indicated that it "be not now read a third time because it is the Assembly's view that the bill will leave consumers vulnerable to entrenched high natural gas prices without consumer protection," and I think she was right on when she introduced this amendment.

When we look at the bill itself, we see that Bill 19 is a sister bill to Bill 3. It proposes amendments to align the natural gas retail marketplace with the electricity retail marketplace, and certainly it allows for a single billing of the two. It also changes the structure of the natural gas retail marketplace to allow for more competition. But, again, when we have a limited supply of natural gas in this province – and at our present rate of consumption we have less than 20 years of reserves left – then I think that we have to be very cautious about these bills that we pass in this Assembly. Certainly, the amendment will allow us to look at situations where we can provide cheaper gas to consumers here in this province.

Now, then, we talked at length in the Assembly about consumers having the choice of signing a contract or floating on the natural gas spot market when they receive their natural gas. Natural gas is one of those essentials in this province that are required for industrial growth. It's required particularly for a number of months for our consumers, our small consumers, and the constituents in all of our constituencies in order to enable them to live year-round, and it is an essential – essential – energy source. So we have to look at ways that we can provide this type of energy at a very competitive price but also at a price that certainly won't lead to wastage, because it is a nonrenewable resource.

Now, then, as well, I looked at a study which was done by the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops, and it's titled Improving the Competitiveness of Alberta's Retail Electricity Market. Certainly, when we are discussing Bill 19, which is the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, there are so many parallels between the two, and one of the conclusions that they came to was that in certain cases introducing competition into the marketplace will bring down prices. They go on to say that deregulation of natural gas has worked well at the wholesale level, but cost-benefit analyses and reference to actual experience in other jurisdictions demonstrates it does not work well at the retail or small consumer level, without introducing additional costs, additional layers of overhead, and increased control required by regulators.

So they do have some very, very legitimate claims when we are looking at this particular bill and this particular amendment.

As well, the federation and Gas Alberta Inc. go on to ask the government to keep in mind this small consumer, who has little protection from the marketing community, does not understand complexities of purchasing commodities such as electricity and natural gas, and may never be comfortable or able to fully understand the unique commodity market process.

For that very reason right there, Mr. Speaker, I think it's essential that we as legislators do our homework here so that this whole process is open, this whole process can be understood by your small consumer, and we can provide them with the best price possible regarding the gas.

Now, then, Bill 19 as well allows for a flow-through price of natural gas, and it certainly does change the rules of the marketplace in that it attempts to attract more competition. But, again, how can we have more competition when we have a limited supply, particularly when we look at the resources that we do have in this province, known resources that have currently less than a 20-year supply?

It is with those comments, Mr. Speaker, that I support the amendment as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I am also in agreement with the federation and the Gas Alberta Inc. position where they look at the situation. Certainly, they look at a bill such as Bill 19, that is being promoted by government, and they say: does this meet a test of prudence, and does it satisfy a cost benefit to consumers? So far I think that what we have seen is that there is no guarantee that there will be a cost benefit to consumers with the passage of this bill. It's a bill that will give them choice but certainly no guarantees that there will be a cost benefit.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to some other hon. member and encourage all members of the Assembly to vote for this amendment. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to the amendment. We're often accused of being repetitive in the opposition, and I have to admit that I'm feeling repetitive. I'm putting it down to the nature of the bills. Bill 19, the one that's in front of us now, the amendment for Bill 19, and Bill 3 are very similar and give rise to the same concerns, and Bill 27, a companion piece that has been introduced and rushed through the Legislature, also gave rise to some similar concerns. So if we're using the same arguments time and time again, it's because the three bills elicit that kind of criticism.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the amendment that would have Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, not read a third time. I think that what's important in terms of the reasons for the amendment being presented to the House is that it's our fear that it's going to leave consumers vulnerable to high natural gas prices and that there's going to be very little consumer protection, and I don't think that those fears are unfounded.

If you look at natural gas deregulation south of the border, one of the major concerns there has been that in all of the legislation the consumer has been left behind. They've been left out of any kind of major concern when the legislation was drafted and, again, a great faith that somehow or other the marketplace was going to take care of the consumer, and that in many places south of the border just hasn't happened. What has happened in a number of states where there is natural gas deregulation is that consumers are asked to pick a gas supplier on blind faith that the marketer can deliver what is promised, and it's very difficult for customers to make their choices without any evidence or the resources that they need to make sure that that is the case. How can consumers in Alberta, for instance, go out and interview someone in the marketplace and try to find out: what's a good company, what's a bad company, what's a good rate, what's a bad rate?

I've had – and I'm sure I'm not alone – trouble getting the whole business of gigajoules and all of the terminology that is now part of the legislation, making sure that I understood those and what kinds of implications that that has for my own residence. I think I'm one of the lucky Albertans, as are people in this Legislature who are dealing with it, and I still have to confess that I look at the water heater that's fired by gas and wonder how much energy that is and what it's going to add up to over a year, and I'm sure that I'm not alone.

It's really our concern with customer protection in this amendment that we're addressing and, again, the haste that it's being pushed through the House with and that the good kinds of education, the good kinds of alternatives and suggestions to consumers and ways to protect them are being left to be handled later, I guess is the way that they'll be addressed, and I don't think it's good enough. The experience elsewhere has been summarized as leaving consumers to significant risk. While the rules of deregulation and the regulations and the legislation are debated, the consumers are left out there on their own.

There have even been some schemes south of the border where consumers were encouraged in the interest of getting a better rate to pay their bills to the company ahead of time. They would be asked to put three or six months of utility costs up front, and you can imagine the kinds of Pandora's boxes that that opens in terms of what might happen to customers. The kinds of actions that some of the retailers have taken when customers have defaulted are actions unknown in our province. I know that in our constituency office when we have customers who have difficulty making their bills, we're able to negotiate with companies like the gas company to make sure that the utility stays on, to make arrangements for payment, and south of the border that's not been the case in many instances. Retailers have been very hard-hearted and have not had the kind of compassion that we have come to expect from our public utility companies in this province. So it sets a whole new climate in terms of the relationship between customers and the supplier of their natural gas and not always for the better.

I think some of the states have tried to move now to protect consumers, but again it's after the fact, and I'm afraid that that's what we're going to be in for in Alberta. We're going to be going back and saying: how can we rectify this situation that we've created with bills like Bill 19?

The fact that there were retailers getting ready to operate in the province before they were legally sanctioned to do so I think is just maybe the tip of the iceberg in terms of what we're in for when the vision for Bill 19 becomes a reality in the province, and again I think it's unfortunate.

The other piece is that consumers can be protected in a number of ways. One of them is through the legislation that we have before us, but there are a number of other things. They can be protected, first of all, by being encouraged to do things themselves that will protect them from high energy costs. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie indicated some suggestions that had come from the Parkland Institute. I know that many members of the government have a view of the Parkland Institute that's not always positive, but they do good work, and they have made, I think, some very positive suggestions for government action that would help consumers protect themselves from high natural gas prices. It's this kind of preliminary work that I think should be in place or should at least be ongoing before bills like Bill 19 are acted upon. One of the suggestions is that the government should improve the energy efficiency of new building construction, and they give a number of suggestions as to how that might be done.

Ms Carlson: It's the Pembina Institute, not the Parkland.

Dr. Massey: Did I say Parkland? Sorry. I need to correct that. I said Parkland Institute. It was the Pembina Institute.

An Hon. Member: The Fraser Institute.

Dr. Massey: No, not the Fraser Institute. We have our own biases about the Fraser Institute.

The suggestion is that the government immediately adopt the national energy codes for housing and building, that they could remove the barriers to the construction of R2000 homes in Alberta by reducing the costs for builders, because building those kinds of homes increases permit fees and municipal taxes associated with the construction of the home and again becomes a barrier. The government could shelter the incremental cost of qualifying R2000 homes from the municipal mill rate as well as providing a rebate on municipal development permit fees for homes built up to the 2000 standards.

So I think all that the Pembina Institute is saying is that there are actions that the government can take that would protect consumers, because the buildings that they were going to be responsible for paying heating costs on were standards such that those costs would automatically be less than they might otherwise be were less efficient construction methods used.

They also suggested that there be a retrofit of buildings, and this is something that our critic for Environment has spoken to a number of times and tried to make the government understand how important it is that there be encouragement for Albertans to retrofit. I think the suggestion was that there be loans available to families to retrofit their homes in order to make them more energy efficient. There again I think the notion is that there have to be financial incentives for builders and for homeowners to make their homes more energy efficient, to improve them, and with modest, I think, input from government. The suggestion has been that it be with interest free loans or low-interest loans and that there be a fund established so that that kind of money would be available.

They've also suggested that the government should work with postsecondary and vocational institutions and colleges to strengthen the training for building trades, contractors, and other professionals in the energy efficiency design, construction technique, and retrofit. So again a number of suggestions that would help the consumer and things that we think the government should have acted upon, if not before, at least in concert with legislation like we have before us on Bill 19.

Just in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we think that the amendment has to be supported for a number of reasons. First, our fear is that it's being rushed through the Legislature too quickly. When we find examples where the government members and particularly government ministers don't understand the legislation, we're fearful that there's more in the legislation that may be damaging and may in the long run hurt Albertans. I think it's unfortunate that we have to have this go through the House so quickly. We think it's being unreasonably rushed through the Assembly. We think that it doesn't have accompanying it the kinds of programs that would help consumers and those people that are going to have to be making some pretty serious decisions that involve them and will commit them financially without really having full knowledge of what they're undertaking and that, again, there hasn't been the attention to consumer protection and consumer programming that bills such as Bill 19 really demand. I guess that the overwhelming concern is that it's not carefully thought-through legislation and that Albertans may in the long run be hurt.

With that, I'll conclude. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to take this opportunity to add a few more comments to Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

Of course, this bill is twofold, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, it is to align the natural gas retail marketplace with the electricity marketplace so that one energy retailer may market electricity and natural gas simultaneously. Of course, the second object of this bill is that it will open up the natural gas marketplace in an attempt to attract more retail competition. In other words, Bill 19 will further the deregulation of the natural gas marketplace.

[The Speaker in the chair]

I did notice that when he introduced the bill, the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake stated that Bill 19 will improve the ability of about 900,000 natural gas customers served by the major utility companies to buy natural gas from the supplier of their choice. Well, of course, we think that is certainly a good part of the bill, that choice is certainly something that Albertans enjoy and something that perhaps they want. But, as well, in this choice, Mr. Speaker, they want a competitive marketplace and a competitive marketplace where we will see the best possible price for our consumers. I don't see in reading Bill 19 where the consumer here in the province is going to be looking at lower gas prices.

Now, then, by way of background when we look at the history of gas utilities in the province, customer choice or the ability for customers to purchase natural gas from the provider of their choice has been available to large industrial natural gas customers in Alberta since the late 1970s and to small industrial consumers since 1998 and again to most residential consumers since 1996.

Currently customers who have chosen not to sign with a retailer pay a spot rate based on the monthly market price of natural gas. For example, Mr. Speaker, most Edmonton residents pay the monthly ATCO Gas price that is based on the market price and regulated by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. About 40,000 residential and commercial customers have chosen to sign a contract with a retailer for natural gas. Currently, signing a contract is one of the only ways for consumers to receive stable monthly bills.

Of course, this is essential when we look at business in the province and certainly essential for those people who are on fixed incomes so that they will be able to get away from these soaring prices that we currently are seeing. I would suspect that if we were to poll the members of this Assembly, many of the calls, probably the majority of calls, that they get regarding the high price of gas that we have experienced this winter would come from seniors who are on fixed incomes and seniors who had planned their retirement and planned it well, and certainly never, never did they ever expect to see prices fluctuate and their bills skyrocket as they have so that there were advantages for those people to sign a contract.

Now, as well, Mr. Speaker, when we look at businesses, they, again, want to know what their costs are. The landlord in the building that I'm in was expressing his displeasure over a building that they recently purchased where since last July he has been trying to get his electricity bill straightened out. Just after the new year he finally got a bill for $50,000, and certainly he would have much preferred that this billing irregularity could have been straightened out months ago so that he would be able to pay a set fee per month as we moved along.

As it now stands, only natural gas utility companies can provide a regulated supply of natural gas. The changes proposed in this legislation will allow for the creation of a default supply provider. A default supply provider is any company that chooses to provide gas supply service at a rate regulated by the Energy and Utilities Board. The regulated rates proposed under this legislation will be based on the flow-through price of natural gas just as they are currently. Currently retailers must provide separate bills for electricity and natural gas. If you were one of the few Albertans who receives both electricity and natural gas from EPCOR, you would receive two separate bills and it would probably be on two separate billing cycles.

This legislation would allow the retailer to provide a single utility bill for both. Additionally, this legislation will allow retailers to provide a single utility bill for gas supply and delivery costs. Currently they both are billed separately. There will be a cost associated with combining these two billing systems together. This legislation, Mr. Speaker, will move Albertans toward a more deregulated energy marketplace and require Albertans to sign a contract in order to receive stable bills.

Now, then, I certainly will not be supporting this legislation. One of the reasons that I will not support this legislation is it proposes some of the same changes to the natural gas marketplace that Bill 3 proposes to the electricity marketplace. The convergence of the electricity and natural gas markets does not guarantee that more retailers will come to Alberta. It simply opens up the possibility that more retailers may want to come to Alberta. This means that the changes proposed in Bill 19 will not automatically make things better for consumers, and of course that's what we want to look at: lower prices for consumers. Additionally, there's no guarantee that more competition will bring lower heating bills. Retailers will only come to Alberta if there is a possibility of making a profit. It is in retailers' best interests to keep the prices and therefore the profit margins as high as possible. So I will not be able to support this legislation.

At this time I would like to move an amendment to Bill 19, and this is under the name of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, with your permission I could read the amendment while it's being distributed. Under this the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie moves that the motion for third reading of Bill 19, the Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 19, Gas Utilities Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

The Speaker: The hon. member may continue.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, Bill 19 is another piece of the puzzle in the delivery of electricity and gas to Albertans. Again, those are two very essential types of energy that we require in this province. Again, when we look at the amount of debate that has occurred in this Assembly on pieces of legislation which will impact consumers, whether they be business or residential or small consumers, in this province – this legislation will have a huge, huge impact. So in speaking to the amendment that we postpone the passing of this legislation for six months, I think it is in the best interests of all Albertans.

It has been an extremely quick process as this bill has been pushed through the Assembly at a record pace, and it certainly doesn't give the members of this Assembly an opportunity to get back to their constituencies. It certainly doesn't give them the opportunity to get input from all stakeholders here in the province. It doesn't give us the opportunity to examine this bill to see if there are improvements that can be made. Certainly, an amendment such as this would allow a lot more consultation. It would allow all the people in this province to have a say in this very important legislation. Mr. Speaker, I would certainly want to encourage all members to vote for this amendment.

I think, as well, that this amendment here would also allow all members that haven't had an opportunity to speak to this amendment to do so six months down the road, and of course they would certainly have the opportunity, as we said, to research, they would have an opportunity to sit back and look at what all has been presented in debate to this point, and they would have the opportunity to discuss this with their constituents in the coffee shops or on the golf course or wherever during the summer. I think that by following this procedure and by following this amendment, Bill 19 would become a much better piece of legislation, and it would be a piece of legislation that perhaps might even be amended so that we would not only be looking at choice for Alberta consumers, but we'd also be looking at the best possible price.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and certainly look forward to debate by all members of this Assembly on this very important amendment. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on this amendment before the House that's been presented to the House by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. The amendment's intent is clearly to see if the House would decide to hoist this bill for the next six months. That certainly will purchase members of this Assembly valuable time to take an extensive look at the consequences of this bill for consumers, for the market structure, for examining some embedded assumptions in this bill which would suggest that if this bill is passed, the volatility in the market, the instability, the spiking of prices, that there's a solution to all of those things in this bill.

There has been, obviously, some debate in this House on whether or not that is what will result if we pass this bill today, and there have been comments in the media, serious analysis given by consumers groups, Alberta Rural Utilities Association, and many other concerned groups. With the exception of the Minister of Energy and some companies – namely, the new company that's being invited by the minister to come to this province at whatever cost, Direct Energy – with the exception of these parties and the government of course, most other Albertans and organizations in Alberta have expressed very serious concerns about not only the unintended consequences of this further deregulation but the negative consequences that can be foreseen quite clearly from careful examination of the bill.

This bill will neither lead to protection of consumers from price hikes and ongoing rapidly increasing costs to them, heating costs particularly for households and small businesses, but it will also not clarify matters from the point of view of the consumers and in fact will increase confusion among ordinary consumers of natural gas. There's no doubt that all parties agree that this bill if passed would be highly consequential. The question is: what will be the consequences? And if the consequences are primarily negative for the consumers, then who will pay for them? And if it is going to increase the costs of heating our homes and our schools and our business premises and our municipal town halls and city halls, then can we justify proceeding with it at this stage given that there are such deep differences among groups, institutions, individuals, parties with respect to the consequences of this? Not only will the consequences be different for different groups; they also are going to be highly negative as perceived at least by the vast majority of consumers in whose name this bill is being proceeded with.

So this amendment, Mr. Speaker, will help in providing more time for further serious thought by the government side, by the Minister of Energy. He certainly will have the benefit of further public discourse on this. He may even change his mind. I never assume that the minister is impervious to good, sane, sensible, wise advice from Albertans. After all, this Legislature is about reflecting and embodying the wishes of Albertans in our legislation and the policies that follow from the legislation which undergirds those policies. So the minister will benefit. We will learn from each other. Consumers, REAs, ARUA, which is the Alberta Rural Utilities Association – there are six or seven organizations that are members of that – will all have further opportunity to influence the minister and the government with respect to what should be in this bill and what should not be and what the primary purposes of the bill should be.

It seems that at the moment the bill in its present form does no more than promise a new market structure for our natural gas without explicitly expressing the social purpose which should be at the centre of this bill, which is to reduce costs, to reduce uncertainty and volatility so that Albertans can benefit from not only stabilized prices, smoothing out spikes in pricing, but also can be assured that given that they are the owners collectively of this resource, which is as important to us almost as water is in this cold climate, they will pay less than perhaps other jurisdictions. There's nothing so sacred about markets that we shouldn't have the courage and the will to say that regardless of how markets work, we are going to protect the owners of this resource from the unpredictability and the volatility of the market, which is in part to be explained not simply by demand and supply but also by politics, also by speculation, also by big corporate players who are present in the market to distort the market from operating as a truly free market.

It's a myth that modern markets are free markets. They're not, and deregulation is not the way anymore to make them free so they will work as a pure market. Deregulation, in fact, empowers the already very powerful few players to further be able to manipulate the market to their advantage to the disadvantage and at the expense of the small, ordinary, family-based household consumers.

Mr. Speaker, if the intent of the bill is really to serve appropriately and seriously the long-term interests of Alberta consumers – and that interest has at the core of it stable and low costs for heating and for running their business – then this kind of contrived competition scheme as represented in this bill is not the answer to it. That's exactly what we have heard, as I said, from all kinds of organizations, and media columnists have also jumped in to draw attention to the flaws in this bill.

So this amendment, Mr. Speaker, is a good amendment in that it recognizes that there is a lack of consensus on the consequences of this bill, on the appropriateness of the provisions in different sections of this bill, and on the purposes of the bill. Given that there is such widespread disagreement and therefore absence of consensus with respect to this bill by the very people who'll be affected by this bill, does it not make sense, then, to say that we are going to give people who'll be affected by this bill more time so that they can engage in further public debate and expert analysis for their respective memberships and clientele? REAs and Alberta Rural Utilities Association, the Consumers' Association and other groups come to mind here. Small business organizations are very concerned about their growing costs all the time. There are upward pressures because of increasing rates of inflation. Already they've been hit by electricity cost hikes, and this bill will make their business life certainly more difficult, Mr. Speaker, because this bill if passed will translate again into a substantial increase in their costs related to heating or other business activities and processes which depend on the use of natural gas as an appropriate form of energy.

So, Mr. Speaker, why is it, then, not really a reasonable thing to do to allow ourselves and all Albertans – and they have the right to expect this from us – an extension of six months for this debate to occur, for the analysis to happen, for the natural gas markets to settle down perhaps? As the members on the government side have been suggesting, as the temperatures improve and we move out of winter and into spring and summer, somehow the natural gas prices are going to come crashing down. If that is indeed what happens – and we have to wait to see if it happens – then maybe there'll be more people who swing to the kinds of policies that this government is opting for and that this Bill 19 will allow this government to proceed with.

This assumption that somehow natural gas prices are directly related to the seasonal fluctuation in temperatures I think needs to be tested carefully. We have seen that deregulation of electricity and natural gas over the last few years has not delivered on that promise. So let's wait and carefully study whether or not this assumption that's being sold as fact is in fact something that's supported by the natural gas markets and the prices that are produced over the next six months.

This amendment is very opportune, Mr. Speaker. It comes at a time when the weather is changing, the temperature is warming up, and we should come back to it in six months to look at it to see if we want to proceed with it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment.

Dr. Massey: Yes, on the amendment, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the purpose of the hoist amendment is to kill the bill, to move consideration of it six months hence, which would be of course when the Legislature will likely not be sitting, and in fact historically that's where the hoist amendment comes from because the legislative sessions at the time lasted less than that. There used to also be a three-month hoist that was used in the latter part of sessions to prevent consideration of a bill. So that's what the intent is of the motion. We want to prevent the bill from coming to a vote in the House and being passed by the Legislature.

We want that for a number of reasons. The first is some of the premises that underlie the bill, and we have serious questions about them. One of the premises is that the bill provides for consumer choice. The question that keeps rising and people keep asking is: who wants it?

If you go back a number of years, we have grown to expect that our public service utilities would be in place, that they would provide low-cost and reasonable service for things that are pretty basic to our lives: water, natural gas, electricity, even telephone service. I think we were happy with the kind of service that was being delivered. In this climate, as has been mentioned, certainly heating is crucial, and it's a service that we believe is a public service, and a public utility best handles that service to customers and consumers. So in the province we had grown used to having reliable basic services without the whole notion of consumer choice, and again the question comes back: "Who is pushing for consumer choice? Where has this come from?"

The movement first started, as we know, south of the border, the push there in a number of states to deregulate and to try to bring a competitive market to the delivery of electricity and natural gas, and that movement has moved north and particularly into the province of Alberta and partly, I understand, into Ontario. Again, it's predicated on political and economic beliefs in the operation of a free enterprise system and the role that the marketplace plays in that system. It attributes to the free market system much more than I think was ever intended.

So the whole notion of having consumer choice hasn't come from Albertans who have risen up and said: look; we want free market choice. It has come from this government and seems to be consistent with the philosophical beliefs that have guided many of the other pieces of legislation that we've seen before us, Mr. Speaker.

A second premise of the bill is that if we can just keep continuing and if we can just keep reshaping and if we can just keep adding more rules and more regulations, we're eventually going to get deregulation to work, that you can keep tinkering with it and if you tinker with it long enough, eventually something good will happen. I don't believe that that's the way Albertans want their utilities dealt with. What we have seen with the kind of tinkering that has gone on is that higher prices are the order of the day. There's no guarantee in this legislation or anything else that the government has put forward that there's going to be anything else but higher prices.

I was looking at some of the debate in Hansard in terms of how dramatically those prices have increased over the last number of years with respect to natural gas. It's really been quite astronomical. The days when we were looking at $1.65 for gas compared to what we're at now, $8 and some odd cents, are long gone. The reason for that in part, not totally but in part, has been because of the government's deregulation efforts.

One of the other things that Albertans have come to expect is that they will be the beneficiaries of the resources that they enjoy, and again I read Hansard, and some of the government members have argued that they are the beneficiaries. They receive rebates. We benefit because of the royalties that are paid. But in addition to those two things, I think Albertans have expected that because we're sitting on top of the resource, their energy bills will reflect that and their ownership of the resource.

A third premise that the bill rests on is that by passing this bill, we'll bring more retailers into the province and that somehow or other this is going to automatically lower the price and benefit consumers. I think that there are some serious questions about whether that's true. In fact, I think there's some real concern that what this does is open the consumer to competition with some retailers that may not be working in their best interests.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that in supporting the amendment that the bill be read six months hence – my own personal experience with a gas retailer who appeared at the door, and the question to me was: I want to see your gas bill. I have to admit that I was somewhat taken aback that someone would appear at the door and ask to see the gas bill. I said: may I ask who you are, and why? His response was: I want to see your gas bill. He became more and more aggressive until I finally closed the door and just didn't deal with it any further. I still am somewhat surprised that that actually occurred.

Again, we're fortunate in this Legislature that we're dealing with the legislation and I think are somewhat more aware than the general public in terms of the deregulation and what it means in terms of competition and what it means to have retailers seeking your business. I was very much surprised. One of our major concerns we've had with this and with Bill 3 – I've said it before and I'll say it again – is that consumers have to be protected before the deregulation of the marketplace proceeds any further. We don't see the protection of consumers in the bill that we believe is necessary before we would pass a bill like Bill 19.

Many of the arguments that can be made against Bill 19 are similar to those that can be made against Bill 3. There's no guarantee that we're going to get lower bills. There's just this blind faith that deregulation somehow or other is going to work. We think it's going to do nothing but generate a huge amount of confusion in consumers' minds and that this bill, when it's passed, will only add to that confusion.

I think I'd also give an example of how this has happened, for instance, with the telephone service, the selling of long-distance telephone service to customers. If you look at some of the information coming out, people's feelings about the competition for telephone service are really very negative. Many of them frankly admit that they're confused by the kind of advertising that goes on. Many of them frankly say that they would just like to have the rate to pay the bill. They don't understand the different options that are being offered by retailers, and they find the whole business of trying to buy telephone service from a variety of retailers to be confusing and something that they really don't want to engage in.

I think that exactly the same kind of thing is going to happen in terms of electricity and natural gas, that consumers are going to be equally confused. It's something that we've heard time and time again, that people don't want and resent in many cases being forced into being involved in it. Again, as I said before, it's not a demand that has come from Albertans, that this kind of legislation be passed or that the government move further down the road with respect to deregulation. In fact, we hear the lament time and time again: "Things were going well. Five, six, 10 years ago we had good service, reliable service, affordable service. What's happened? Why have we lost that?"

So for all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the amendment, that this "be not now read a third time but . . . six months hence," makes sense, and I hope that members of the Assembly will agree. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the amendment.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand and lend my support to this particular hoist amendment. It looks like I'm going to be the last speaker on this bill. [some applause] I hear that some members of the Assembly are very pleased with that. However, there are a number of issues that have yet to be discussed about this bill, and that's why we think a hoist, where this bill is read six months from now, is such a good idea. In fact, there are a whole bunch of programs that this government could be supporting that they haven't heard about yet even one time, and it seems to take more than one time for them to hear about them and actually understand them.

We also haven't had an opportunity to talk about demand-side management to any great extent, Mr. Speaker. That's really an important issue for us to have talked about because there is no doubt that one of the clear lessons we've heard about energy efficiency after more than a quarter of a century of performance in North America is that it's very simple. It's much cheaper to save energy through efficiency gains than it is to build and operate new plants, and energy efficiency has proven that total energy demand can be lowered while delivering comparable or even enhanced services.

We haven't spent very much time talking about that. Why? Because this government is very much in support of a former Prime Minister of Britain, Clement Attlee, who subscribed to the theory – and this is a direct quote from him: “Democracy means government by discussion, but it is only effective if you can stop people talking.” This is something that this government strongly supports. We see it with time allocation. We see it with their muzzling . . . [interjection] Thank you very much, Member for Calgary-Mountain View; I appreciate the support.

This is a government who doesn't even let their own backbenchers talk. We've seen a couple of them. Grande Prairie-Wapiti has been on his feet several times during this whole debate, and we're very happy to see that participation, but as a general rule the members in this Assembly that support the government's side tell us time after time that they have their discussions in their caucus and their standing policy committees and not in the open on the floor of the Legislature. Also, by not standing on their feet, they support this particular quote too.

Now, for people who know anything about Clement Attlee, he was the Prime Minister of Britain right after the defeat of Winston Churchill, and by subscribing to this particular philosophy, he was a very short-lived Prime Minister, soon to become the Leader of the Opposition, soon to be totally out of office. So I could wish that that would happen to this current government if they continue to subscribe to this particular philosophy, where it's most effective for their type of democracy if people stop talking.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will call for the question on this particular amendment.

[Motion on amendment lost]

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I'd move that we adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:19 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 26, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/26

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Third Reading

Bill 3 Electric Utilities Act

Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the motion for third reading be amended to read that Bill 3, Electric Utilities Act, be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to Committee of the Whole for the purposes of reconsidering the proposed section 1 and proposed section 20.

[Adjourned debate March 26: Dr. Massey]

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I rise to speak at third reading of Bill 3, our high-priced utilities act. To say again that I'm disappointed in this legislation certainly would be an understatement. I don't understand how this bill is going to promote low-cost electricity.

Now, when we look at what needs to be done, are we going to have a long-term strategic transmission systems plan out of this act? No one has convinced me of that. Are we going to have excellent customer service? No one in the course of the debate has convinced me of that. Are we going to be able to resolve the problems with the wholesale electricity market, the apparent problems of price manipulation at the Power Pool? I don't think we are. The load settlement solutions? There's not an hon. member of this House who is not aware of the load settlement solutions, and no one has convinced me of the merit of Bill 3 yet.

To invoke closure on it I believe is the wrong thing to do. If anything needed discussion, it certainly would be the details of this bill. We saw a similar pattern with I believe it was Bill 27 in 1998, a similar statute that changed how electricity was generated, transmitted, and distributed in this province, and we've seen nothing but high prices ever since. Again, there are too many questions left unanswered to support this bill, and I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to vote no – no – to Bill 3.

When we look at transmission capability and having adequate transmission capability, is this the answer, facilitating investment in both base load and generation? Is this bill going to be the answer? Mr. Speaker, when we have a look at what is left of the base load in this province, the coal-fired generators, we've got a serious problem, and Bill 3 is not going to resolve that. We have a lack of confidence. It's gotten to the point where two major generators of electricity have gotten together because they don't know the rules, and they have pooled their money to reduce their exposure. This is EPCOR and TransAlta at the Genesee power plant, and this uncertainty is costing everyone money, whether it is the – well, it's the old ratepayers, really, or the investors.

We're looking at customer service and customer choice here. Now, is this bill going to simplify contracts and processes? I don't think so. Are we going to have anything positive for consumers in this notion of the one-stop-shop approach where you can get both a natural gas and an electricity contract from a marketer? Where are the savings? No one has explained where the savings are going to be for the consumer in this bill. No one from that side of the Assembly is confident enough in this legislation to stand up and put all their comments on record for their constituents to see. The ultimate vote of confidence that government members can have in this legislation is to stand up, each and every one of you, and put your comments regarding Bill 3 on the record, and then when your constituents have problems, mostly complaints, they can refer them to this side of this House. But, Mr. Speaker, at this time certainly the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, that introduced this bill and has had a great deal of time and patience with this member in regard to this bill, has been willing to put his remarks on the record.

Now, I asked this earlier and I did not receive a satisfactory answer: where are we going to be with the Regional Transmission Organization West and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission? They want a standard market to sign for this area of the world, and it's interesting, as we use closure on this legislation, that the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in America has come down hard on the electricity profiteers south of the border. This profiteering has been going on for the last couple of years, and they came down on them hard today, as I understand, Mr. Speaker. If those problems do exist in this province in the Power Pool, let's find out about them. Let's show a willingness to investigate this market manipulation. But it's just deny, deny, deny. "Oh, no, it's not happening. It couldn't happen, not with our rules here in this province." But at least we should have a look at that, and that is the form of consumer protection that I would strongly advocate.

Now, the load settlement issues with Bill 3. Is that going to become a smooth process? How many load settlement areas will we finally have, Mr. Speaker? When we look at monitoring the settlement results between different areas and between different providers, we need to get a grasp on this. We need to get a handle on this, and we need to get a handle on it very quickly because it's the consumers that are suffering.

Mr. Speaker, when we go through this and we look at the Balancing Pool and we look at the eventual winding up of the Balancing Pool, when are consumers going to be made aware of the deferral accounts in the Balancing Pool if there are any or if they're going to be larger than the current $345 million that are on the books? When is this going to be done? The Balancing Pool is not clear in this legislation, and because of closure a person hasn't had a chance to bring that forward. Certainly there are going to be different reporting rules for the Balancing Pool than there are for the market surveillance administrator and also the independent systems operator.

Dr. Taft: Do we have a market surveillance administrator?

Mr. MacDonald: There is a market surveillance administrator in this act.

Dr. Taft: Is there one in the other bill?

Mr. MacDonald: There's not one in Bill 19, the sister legislation to this.

8:10

Ms Blakeman: Brother legislation, please.

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon me. Sister/brother legislation. Yes.

We have these huge deferral accounts that could grow larger in the Balancing Pool. For a free market system the Balancing Pool is where all the generation that could not be sold or would not be sold in the power purchase arrangements is held. To call this a free market, Mr. Speaker, is a stretch to say the least, and this is not going to improve it. How long are we going to continue to hold these power purchase arrangements? We haven't even had an opportunity to discuss the power purchase arrangements yet in this debate, and here we're making in this legislation a legislative window from which to get rid of them and get rid of them on the basis of their net value, what's left. The people that were lucky enough or smart enough to buy those original power purchase arrangements have certainly made a return on their money.

There's just so much in this legislation, Mr. Speaker, and so little time.

Now, when we talk in division 4 about municipally owned electric utilities – and sometimes we forget in this Assembly, and I've reviewed Hansard and I haven't encountered this yet, but I may have missed it – what does this mean for the municipally owned utilities outside the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary, the city of Lethbridge, the city of Red Deer, and Medicine Hat? There certainly are other jurisdictions that could be affected by this. What does this mean for them, and how do they compete with all these foreign outfits that are supposedly going to come in here as far as hiring lawyers to appear as intervenors in hearings? This can be a very expensive process. How can these locally owned municipal outfits compete, and how do they protect themselves if they just want to be left alone in their part of the province to carry on providing service as they have in the past to their customers? How are they going to be affected by this?

This is a complete, entire new statute. We're going to repeal the current Electric Utilities Act, and here we go with a new piece of legislation. To think that we would invoke closure on this after the last use of closure on an electrical utilities amendment – we've seen nothing but high prices since, and to repeat that pattern to me is very disrespectful of the consumers who have footed the bill here for the last three years.

We cannot forget that the ultimate goal of electricity generation, distribution, and transmission should be to provide electricity at the lowest possible cost for consumers, not the maximum profit for the generators, and this is what this bill is all about. You can stand and disagree with me certainly if you like, and I welcome that.

Everyone in this province – and this includes the mayor of Edmonton and city council. They should not have to go cap in hand to the provincial government if they want to expand the generation capacity, let's say, even further at Genesee. They shouldn't have to do that. This bill is going to put restrictions and limits on them when it doesn't need to, because they've already paid payments in lieu of taxes into the Balancing Pool. Perhaps that money, as I said before, should go into the general revenue of this government. Edmonton and Calgary and other jurisdictions over the course of time will be making these payments in lieu of taxes. Well, they're subsidizing the other operators, and I thought this whole idea was that we would have no subsidies to business.

We have never in this bill discussed what we're going to do with the location-based credits. In my view, how can we say that we want to level the playing field for the investor-owned utilities? The municipally owned utilities have all these advantages whenever everyone is ponying up for the location-based credits, because we have not had adequate long-term planning with our transmission system in this province since someone came up with this notion of energy deregulation. As a result of that, we're trying to incent gas-fired generators, and that gets to the real problem.

I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to go on the EUB web site, not the altaliberals.ab.ca web site for once but the EUB web site, and pull off the Alberta electric industry's annual statistics for 2001.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in. Does any member have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

Ms Blakeman: I understand that the member was going through the list of disappointments that he had where he wasn't able to complete the discussion on it because of closure. Is there anything he left off the list?

Mr. MacDonald: Lots.

Ms Blakeman: Get up and tell me then.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first thing is how we will straighten out generation capacity so that we have a system that is not relying on the expensive natural gas fired generation. There are over 4,400 megawatts of natural gas fired generation in this province, but if one were to be in the Premier's office and look out the window at the Rosedale power plant, you wouldn't see it steaming. Certainly you would see consumers steaming from high bills, but you wouldn't see the Rosedale power plant steaming and making electricity, nor would you see the Clover Bar plant anymore. The Clover Bar plant on occasion is like the Premier in question period: gets fired up over electricity deregulation, but not very often.

What we have to do is to ensure that our base load capacity increases because the base load capacity in this province has increased hardly at all since 1992. In 1992 we had 5,299 megawatts capacity, and in 2001 we had increased that by about 400 megawatts, 415 megawatts, and that has come as a result of the prudence of the Edmonton city council in allowing further construction at Genesee. We increased our coal-fired generation, but the gas-fired generation is expensive, and that seems to be where we are going. That is, to say the least, hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, a major disappointment – a major, major disappointment – and this bill doesn't do anything in my view to correct that.

The Acting Speaker: There being no further questions, the chair recognizes the Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure tonight to stand here and speak on Bill 3. I'd just like to give the member over there a little history lesson. It was over 11 years ago when I was mayor of the town of Edson. With the mayor of the town of Hinton we were approached by a coal company wanting to develop coal-fired generation within the close proximity of their three mines. So we went to bat for them, tried to get this system set up so that they'd be able to generate electricity for their three mines and also sell the excess power back to the power grid. We tried with all our might to do that, and of course we weren't able to do it.

So with this Bill 3 I would like to tell him the future story now. We have a company just west of Edson that is looking at building a nine-megawatt power station. So what that's going to do for them is make them more competitive for the simple reason that they're going to be able to control their costs. They're going to be able to add a couple more dryers on their system so they can cure the lumber. Also, they're going to be able to bum their waste. The other thing that they're going to be able to do: they're going to be able to get carbon credits. So it's interesting to note that when you give the people choice and they're able to work it out – with this nine-megawatt they might have extra power; therefore, they're going to sell it back to the grid – it's going to help the area.

I guess the other thing that I want to say is that this government is looking very strongly at developing the aspect of clean-burning coal technology, and we should always realize that. This province has 300 years of known reserves now, and what they're looking at is partnering with other people in the nation and in the world to look at this clean-burning coal technology. Once they do that, then, with the aspect of our Alberta energy research technology, we'll be able to do that: work with the different companies.

We've changed quite a bit in our whole business about coal. Now we've got one company that looks after all the thermal coal in the province and even in other jurisdictions. So we have a lot of aspects where we've got alternative fuel. We're giving the companies and everything the chance now to move ahead with certainty. Under the regulated system we couldn't do this. They couldn't look at any long-term plans.

So what I'm saying is that with this type of system we're able to get out there, allow the people to build business plans, work with other people, look at trying to make things more economical in their own business. And as I'm talking about this forest company, they're selling their forests around the world, and they're getting premium price for their product, but now they'll be able to be more competitive in some of these tougher markets because they're controlling their own destiny. So, Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe in Bill 3, giving us the aspect of choice.

The member opposite seems to neglect telling us about the aspect of Direct Energy. Direct Energy is already willing to go into this market, but they want to have a level playing field. Sure. With all the municipalities that have different resources in the aspect of electricity, when they're selling in their own domain, which is good, do we want to sit back now and just forget about it and let them? Now they're all across the nation. They're even in the United States. What happens when the city possibly goes broke? Who does that come back to? The next level of government; that is, the government of Alberta. We don't want to burden those type of taxes on all the people in Alberta. So what we're looking at is a level playing field. We've got another company that just bought some strips of electricity energy in the province here, so we could have four or five.

Then I guess the positive thing is that the citizens are getting choice. The other aspect that they're talking about: well, look at how high it is. Well, I guess it's that high. The only thing that could transpire before to get anything on quickly was the aspect of gas-fired generation. Therefore, when the demand goes up on it, it's a commodity; it's a North American commodity. Naturally you're going to have to recover some costs.

All we had before was a very falsified economy when it came to electricity. I could go on and on about the different aspects of EEMA. I mean, that was almost criminal the way that was operated, and then you have to pay for all the stranded costs. I'd love to have a business that with generation I could do whatever I wanted, within certain realms, and then come back and say: well, I need 15 percent to cover all my costs. That would be a great business to have.

That's why I'm saying and urging everybody: we've got to go forward. Sure; everything is not going to be rosy to start with for the simple reason that there are going to be some corrections and everything else. But with competition and the understanding that the people in our ridings want to have choice, they want to be able to go ahead and buy their electricity – some companies have come to us and said that they've had 2.2 services that they sell to customers.

People want to have that choice. They want to have the understanding, and I strongly believe that Bill 3 will do this for us.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much. My first question is to the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. How much was the price of electricity when the hon. member was mayor of Edson, and how much is the price of electricity under energy deregulation for Edson residents now that you are their representative from the district of West Yellowhead in this Assembly?

Mr. Strang: Well, hon. member, that's irrelevant right now. I mean, is everything the same? When you were a young whippersnapper down in eastern Canada, was gasoline only 10 cents at that time? Times change, you know. What I'm say is that people understand that. They want to have consistency. That's why people want to have Bill 3: so they know where they can buy their services, and they can go on a budget and everything and get it. That will help them there.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for West Yellowhead why he believes that it is impossible for other people who want to add generation, whether it's cogeneration or a stand-alone plant, to participate in the electricity grid or the electricity system without deregulation? What is it about a regulated system that . . . [interjection] No, no, it's to him, hon. minister. What is it about a regulated system that prevents other players from contributing generation into the system?

Mr. Strang: Well, first and foremost, I mean, you of anybody shouldn't be asking that question because you knew the business when you were with the city of Edmonton. You take the aspect in the area that I was in. When I was mayor it was under TransAlta. TransAlta could say no, and you couldn't produce power for the excess power. You couldn't even produce power, so therefore it's protectionist. They had the areas, and they couldn't do it. Under the deregulation system now we're able to utilize the power and to sell it into the grid. We've got other aspects in our area where we can do that, and that's what we're looking at.

You take a look at the aspects now in Fort McMurray. What's transpiring there? There's huge cogeneration there. What's happening with TransCanada now? It used to be NOVA. NOVA has cogens too, so they're operating their own. They're allowed to drop their costs to be able to be more competitive in the world.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Member for West Yellowhead: how is Bill 3 going to affect the rural electrification associations in a positive way? How is that going to help them?

Mr. Strang: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a fairly broad question. What I'm saying is that people are going to have choice now. It's unregulated. They're going to be able to have more. I mentioned at least four, maybe five people that are going to be selling contracts on electricity. Then people are going to have a choice to buy them.

They can go for the aspect of longer choices. They'll be able to get their bill, and they'll know what they're paying for, unregulated, whereas as it is now, with some companies you can see what's transpiring. They're giving free electricity. Well, what's happening? They realize that there's competition coming, so they want to be ready so that when they come in, they may have these people signed up, but these people are waiting for choice so that they can compare. I mean, do we have in our country now where you only go to one bank because they just give you the mortgage? No. You have choice. You shop around. The rates fluctuate, the same thing that's going to happen here. If you want to sign a contract for a year, well, maybe you'll get a fairly large number, but if you want to go for a longer term, it'll be shorter. So, I mean, that's the beauty people are going to have when they are able to go and deal with their electricity, so I can't see how it's not going to help.

8:30

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, just a brief statement, then, on the answer previous to my question.

An Hon. Member: This is question time.

Mr. Mason: It's not question period. Perhaps . . .

The Acting Speaker: I regret that the five minutes allocated has run out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Okay; one last chance here in third reading to talk about the effect of Bill 3. You know, I keep going over the information I have. I've listened carefully to the members from the government side that have contributed to this discussion, and my compliments to the members from Grande Prairie-Smoky and from West Yellowhead for having the courage to get on their feet and defend their views and get themselves on the record. Thank you very much, and it's been very interesting hearing why you support certain things or don't support certain things, so I thank you for participating in the discussion. It's much more interesting in here when we all engage rather than just heckling one another.

One of the questions that I would have asked the Member for West Yellowhead – but I just couldn't get into the fierce competition existing here between Edmonton-Gold Bar and Edmonton-Highlands in trying to ask these questions to him. Yes, it was difficult or prohibitive under the existing regulated market to establish new generation, but that was merely a matter of changing the regulations, which this government likes to hold pretty closely in its hot little hand and behind closed doors. So this was not that difficult to facilitate. It did not require the wholesale deregulation of the electrical industry and all of the problems that have come along with it.

So I appreciate what the Member for West Yellowhead has brought forward as a point of argument, but I would say to him that we did not need – this is now the third bill that we've had for electrical deregulation and the second one that has had closure used to come into existence in this province. Perhaps if we're going to get a discussion from another member, they could discuss with us why the government chose to deregulate the whole system instead of adjusting a few regulations that would have allowed new power generation to come on-line. When I looked through all of the articles I got off-line – did you know that there's a magazine called Electricity Today with lots of information in it about what's happened? The things you learn. This electrical deregulation hasn't really worked anywhere except for Great Britain, where they have a 10-year run-up to it.

Dr. Taft: It didn't really work. It's debatable.

Ms Blakeman: And my colleague is going to get up and debate back against me here that it wasn't entirely successful there either. But they had a much longer run-up to it, and I think that alleviated some of the problems that we experienced here in Alberta, where we had stability and certainty and low cost in our marketplace, and then when the government started to discuss all of this in the mid-90s and then towards the end of that decade, it caused instability because nobody was quite sure what the heck was going to happen or when or how. As a result, nobody got into building new power plants. So then we had a shortage of supply, which caused the voluntary blackouts that people did, the rolling brownouts that were described as a squirrel by the then minister of energy.

You know, when I looked at some of the other places, California, as we know – my goodness, they're up on charges now for ripping off the public and collusion and setting the prices and all kinds of things that went on there. In Auckland they had a blackout in downtown for five weeks. I can't imagine that, but that's what they had to deal with as a result of deregulation there. In the midwestern U.S., Indiana, they had a number of outages and a great amount of instability there.

I've already talked about what happened here, and you know the government tried really hard at the time to say that, no, no, this wasn't a result of the decisions that the government was making or rather not making, just sort of talking out loud about how all of this was going to be deregulated. But it did cause instability because nobody quite knew what was going to happen, and that went on for a period of about three years, I think. So I'm still looking for the really good, solid examples of where electrical deregulation has worked. I like to learn from other people's successes and hopefully learn by their mistakes as well. I'm still looking for really prime examples of success here, and I'm not finding them.

One of the other issues that was raised a number of times – and I've raised it and was not satisfied with the answer that I got from the minister – was around promotion of conservation. Now, the minister took that to mean: was the government getting involved in promoting green power and purchasing green power and the deals that they've made to purchase green power and all of that sort of thing? But really what I was looking for was around convincing citizens to use less – to conserve, in other words – because as part of Kyoto, as part of our responsibility as individuals on this planet I think it behooves us to try not to use any more nonrenewable resources than we can help. So I was looking for a clear commitment to that as part of this bill. If the government was going to go forward with it, then I was looking for this as a hand-in-glove move. Obviously, based on what I got from the minister, there's not much interest being expressed by the minister in doing things to encourage citizens to conserve and to use less power.

Now, the other issue that I raised with the minister – and I got an answer, but when I went back and looked at the Hansard, it wasn't spelled out as clearly as I thought it was, so I'll put it on the record again – was the request that the regulations that are going to come out of this act be published well in advance. Put them on the web site, for example, so that everyone can get access to them, and I mean everyone. I think the citizens of Alberta would be quite interested in this and be able to have a look at it and converse with their MLA and ask them what it means and have a good debate around those regulations. In fact, the minister didn't clearly state that he would make those available. He just talked about stakeholder consultation, and I think it needs to be more than that, especially considering this government's proclivity to passing enabling legislation and leaving all the detail to be done by regulations, which of course are done behind closed doors, which of course are done without consultation, which of course are done without Hansard recordings and no way for the citizens of Alberta to know what their MLA said about it. So I'm really hoping that someday soon I'll be able to stop saying stuff like that and that the government will actually do something to alleviate it. I'm getting good-natured chuckling from the other side, so I guess I'm not anticipating that anytime soon.

The government members talk a lot about choice, but I don't know where this choice is supposed to come from, because we've only got a couple of companies that are delivering electricity. There seems to be this great hope, this steadfast belief, this wish. It's kind of like Santa: if I just believe, then he will come down that chimney. But, you know, when you get past about six, he doesn't come down that chimney anymore. He's stuck in the chimney.

I made a joke before about the Zen of electricity and if the government deregulates and there's no more competition, did it work? Well, no. It hasn't so far. There's a lot of talk about: "Direct Energy is going to come into the marketplace. That's going to be our new competition. That's going to really add." But we're not remembering here that ATCO is leaving. We're losing one provider and we're getting a provider, so we're exactly where we were before all of this happened. We have no more new people in this marketplace than we did before, except one of them is a multinational, which should be pretty interesting in itself. So this whole question about choice I refute.

It continues to be an issue with me that the risk is being passed on to the consumer here. The last time I talked about this, people went: "Oh, well, sign a long-term contract then. That takes all the risk out of it." Well, no, it doesn't. That puts even more of the risk squarely on the shoulders of the consumer. The consumer gets to take the risk one of two ways. Here's the big choice. You can ride it out on the spot market pricing if you've got a thousand dollars to sit in a bank account to pay your bill. One month it could be $300 or $400 and the next month it could be $700, depending on what price the electricity was bought at and they're going to charge you for that month. So if you can afford to kind of float up and down with that and leave that money in there and constantly refresh it, okay, ride the spot market.

If you can't and you need a steady fixed price, then you're going to have to go with the long-term contract to get that kind of certainty in your life, and – guess what? – it's people with less income, those that don't have an extra thousand bucks to put in a bank account, that are going to have to be in a position of looking at those long-term contracts. They will pay a premium for that certainty because they don't have enough money to ride the spot market. So all of the risk is being taken by the consumer here and transferred to the consumer. None of it is being taken by these large companies anymore.

I had also talked about the Rosedale plant – and others have referred to it – and my concerns about the decommissioning and the reclamation costs and things. I think what's really concerning me is that there are still a number of issues that could be raised and discussed if we were able to not have the closure that was brought in. We did do the closure jig here in this bill.

What I'd like to do is, on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-

Glengarry, move this amendment. I'll send it over to the table now and give everyone a minute or two to have a look at it, and then I can speak a bit more to it. So I'll just pause briefly.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. You may proceed now.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. This amendment would be amendment something or another. I'm not sure which one.

The Acting Speaker: Just proceed.

Ms Blakeman: Okay. We'll find that out later. It is moving that the motion for third reading be amended by deleting all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 3, Electric Utilities Act, be not now read a third time because it is the Assembly's view that the bill will leave consumers vulnerable to spikes in electricity prices.

So just in speaking briefly to this reasoned amendment, I had started by talking about the closure jig which this government is very fond of dancing. I think it's their favourite dance tune these days. This issue about leaving the customer, the consumer, the citizen vulnerable has not been addressed to my satisfaction. My hope is that by introducing this amendment, it will generate some more discussion. We have managed to engage the Member for West Yellowhead, which I was very excited to see. We've had some engagement from the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky in the past, and I'm looking forward to his contributions. So I'm hoping that we might engage some of the other government members and encourage them to get up and get on the record and talk about why they think this bill will not – or perhaps they agree with me that it does leave consumers vulnerable to these spikes in electricity prices.

Now it's back to what I was saying just before I introduced it, and that is the issue around riding out the short term or signing a longer term contract. Now, I know that I'm coming near to the end of my time and I know that some of my colleagues will want to speak to this, but I think it's important that we look at the risk that's being transferred to the consumer and how we can create stability for the consumer. The discussion of choice that I've heard from the government members has not satisfied me that this is going to end up in lower prices and a better deal for people in Alberta. As a matter of fact, all I've seen in the entire time I've dealt with electrical deregulation, which has been going on since I got elected, is more instability, more uncertainty, and much higher prices, and that is causing, I know, a lot of citizens a great deal of grief.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29 any questions or comments? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, are you rising to ask a question or make a comment?

Dr. Taft: No. I would like to debate the amendment.

The Acting Speaker: With there being none, the chair recognizes the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I had indicated that I would be recognizing you next.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to third reading rather than to this amendment.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I will be speaking in favour of this amendment. I think it's pretty obvious that it makes a valid point; it raises a very valid concern. I think it's a sign that the government is in real denial when they vote against . . .

Ms Blakeman: That big river, huh?

Dr. Taft: In de Nile, de West Nile virus. No. They're in denial about the effects of Bill 3, and they're dreaming. The Germans have a saying about dreams. They say: a slice of ham is better than a fat pig in a dream. What we're being presented with in Bill 3, I think, is the image of this big, juicy, fat pig, but it's in a dream. All Albertans really want is a slice of ham or a slice of the electricity system that they used to have, stable prices in hand.

Now, in thinking through what the effects of Bill 3 will be without this amendment, I go back to the promises that were made by this government in a brochure printed in 1999. I think it's worth reading here some of the things the government was claiming then. I'm quoting from the brochure.

Albertans will soon have the same opportunities in the province's newly deregulated electric industry. Retailers will begin offering their packages by mid-2000 for services that will be available to you as of January 1, 2001. You will be able to choose the electricity retailer that offers you the best combination of price, service and features suitable for your particular needs.

That promise was made four years ago. It was to have come true nearly three years ago, Mr. Speaker, and it turned out to be a dream. Indeed, it turned out to be a nightmare.

What else was the government claiming the effects of electricity deregulation would be then? Well, they asked, "What about prices?" They go on to say:

No one can say for sure what electricity prices will be in the future with or without competition . . .

You notice that already in 1999 the government was backing off its claims that prices were going to go down. It goes on to say:

. . . just as no one can guarantee what will happen to interest rates or the stock market . . . Over the long-term, prices are forecast to be lower than they would have been under a regulated system.

That was a forecast made four years ago, and the reality is that the prices in fact are far higher than they were at the time, and there are no real signs of them coming down. The dream has turned to a nightmare, and we're not going to be getting out of this nightmare anytime soon.

One of the things that consumers are exposed to as a result of Bill 3 is spikes in electricity prices, and we're seeing that now. I haven't got my computer with me, but we could go on-line to the web site, and we could have looked at the pricing today. I just have in front of me by chance the price from a day a few weeks ago, and actually the prices spiked that day up to $134.86 a megawatt hour. That's very high. That's five times higher than they were before deregulation. Another day, March 2, 2003, they spiked up as high as $241.53.

An Hon. Member: How low did they go?

Dr. Taft: How low did they go? Let's see. One of the members asked: how low did they go? They went to $49.03, which is still far higher than the peak price was under regulation.

Mr. Knight: One cent yesterday.

Dr. Taft: That's wonderful. One cent for how many hours in the day?

An Hon. Member: I don't know.

Dr. Taft: Yeah, well, you don't know.

What we have brought into the system through electricity deregulation and what we're continuing with Bill 3 is the most volatile product that is publicly traded on any market in the world. It is not uncommon on a daily basis for the price of electricity to fluctuate a thousand percent, and that is absurd. It's an enormous risk to expose consumers to, especially small consumers who don't have a reasonable capacity for dealing with that, and it's a risk that just simply did not exist under the regulated system.

I can tell you that the rest of the country looks at Alberta's electricity deregulation experiment as a failure, a complete and abysmal failure. We could have revised the old regulated system without throwing it completely out. We could have made some of the laudable changes that people here have suggested under the regulated system simply by adjusting the regulations. Instead, we threw the baby out with the bathwater, and we're left with a mess.

What are the risks of economic spikes? Well, there are direct risks that this amendment is intended to alleviate: direct risks of enormous financial costs; direct risk of rotating shutdowns, which we have seen in this province on a voluntary basis. Two winters ago we saw a number of major consumers being asked by the system operator to go off-line because the system was so close to collapsing.

Certainly other jurisdictions who have experimented with deregulation have had major problems as well when the price spikes. My colleague from Edmonton-Centre referred to price spikes in the U.S. Midwest when they deregulated, and the price of power went up as high as $7,000 U.S. a megawatt hour. Major steel companies, for example, shut down their foundries. They couldn't afford to operate. There were bankruptcies because of the price spikes. We were talking in this caucus recently with the head of a major steel corporation, and his company clearly isn't interested in coming to Alberta because of what he very rightly described as the failed, badly done deregulation of electricity in Alberta. So those are the direct effects of spikes.

The indirect effects should not be lost, though, too. For there have been times – and this is a matter of historical fact in this province – when because of price spikes companies that generate power to produce a particular product have stopped production of that product and simply mothballed their main plant and made more money by selling electricity at the extremely high price than they would have in producing their product. An example of this is fertilizer plants in this province who have at times shut down fertilizer production because they happen to have their own electricity generation, and they make more money by selling that power onto the grid than by producing fertilizer. Well, there's a huge economic cost to that. First of all, the people who work producing fertilizer are out of work. Secondly, the supply of fertilizer shrinks, so that drives up costs for farmers.

So there are indirect costs, Mr. Speaker, to price spikes in electricity, and all of those are intended to be addressed through this amendment, which I can see the government members are very interested in and I expect are probably going to support.

An Hon. Member: He's dreaming.

Dr. Taft: Well, maybe I'm dreaming there. I think I am, but it's too bad. It's too bad because we are digging this hole deeper and deeper and deeper, and I'm quite sincere in believing that the future economic prosperity of this province is being seriously eroded because of the disaster with our electricity deregulation.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I welcome follow-up and debate. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to question the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Could he relate why the energy prices went up so high in 2001? I think he should tell the whole truth. Can he maybe explain what TransAlta was doing at Lake Wabamun at the start of 2000?

Dr. Taft: I will be delighted to, but not right now. I am open to debate in committee. I was here many times in committee.

Mr. Strang: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess the thing that I have a hard time to understand and realize is that when somebody can talk across the way and tell – well, I can't use that word – no truth at all for the simple reason that what they're saying is that, you know, nobody wants to move to Alberta, well, I'm telling you that there are a lot of people who moved here. There have been three or four times the size of Red Deer move here. What happened in Ontario? They didn't have the strength to stay with the deregulated system, and what happened? Then they had to set a price. So what happened in Ontario? There's going to be no generation there. What's happening now in Nova Scotia? They're looking right now at trying to build a grid system into the United States, but they can't because the United States doesn't want to build it up here.

So, I mean, how can you stand there and say that this type of system that we've got isn't a fair and upright system, because, number one, everything is open. They can invest, they can sell their commodity, and they know that they're going to be able to make a bit of a profit.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you. I'd be happy . . . [interjections] First of all, I take issue with the Member for West Yellowhead putting words in my mouth by saying that I said that people were not moving here. That is simply untrue, and he should retract it.

Secondly, the reason the power prices soared in the year 2000-2001 was primarily because the screwups in deregulation for the five or six preceding years completely – completely – pre-empted all construction of additional power plants. So there was a shortage of supply induced by the incompetence of this government. Any other questions?

9:00

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Didn't that feel good?

An Hon. Member: Oh, he probably won't answer that one either.

Mr. Mason: He doesn't need to.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. There being no question, is there anybody else who wishes to speak on the amendment? You want to speak on the amendment?

Mr. MacDonald: Please. On the amendment.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, we have to ensure that consumers have no further economic grief from price spikes of electricity in this province. Now, whenever we look at the bill and the fact that we're going to have a monthly price, the same as we have for natural gas, the whole idea behind this is to drive people into the expensive three- and five-year contracts. We have the monthly price, which is going to be set by the Power Pool. We all know that there are a lot of problems with the Power Pool because of the way the price is set. Now, the lowest offer received for the last unit of generation required to meet demand sets the pool price. This is not a free market, and if coal-fired generation, which is much cheaper, is going to be set into that price, set into the pool at that time, and natural gas at 11 cents or 12 cents sets the price, then all producers are going to pick up that money. How does that benefit consumers? How is this going to benefit consumers in the future? That's why I would encourage all members to support this amendment. We cannot any longer leave consumers vulnerable to spikes in electricity prices in this province.

Has there been price manipulation in this province? Certainly, it has been recognized in the past at the Power Pool. This system is not, to say the least, perfect. Now, when we look at where we are with the supply and the demand of electricity in this province and we look at the Alberta power market as it is, as it's been set up under deregulation, it is highly concentrated and it's short of capacity. Sure, there is this notion going around that, yes, since energy deregulation we've created all this capacity, but it's high-end capacity. It's like building a lot of apartment buildings for housing, but the rents are $2,000 a month. We're not having sound public policy if we designed all housing at that price, because there are only a few people who can afford it. We have to be very, very careful here.

The hon. member across the way talked about the many citizens moving to this province, but there are also businesses contemplating moving out of this province. The reason why they're contemplating moving out of this province is because of the high cost of energy. [interjection] The high cost of energy, yes. Certainly, some of the oldest established companies in southern Alberta are talking of going to Manitoba. Now, when they look at their power bills, they're going to go and look elsewhere. Electricity is a cost of business. Electricity certainly is a cost of business in this province.

If the hon. members across the way get excited about the failure of their energy deregulation policy and get nervous, I can certainly see why. There have been a lot of spectacular public policy failures in the history of this province, but this is the granddaddy of them all, and to support this amendment would be prudent. It would be like taking a slow, calm breath and realizing the mistake that has been made. One of the things that this government used to do and that the voters were so fond of was admitting a mistake. The government, whenever they saw an error in their policy, were quite willing to admit it, but with this electricity deregulation, Mr. Speaker, it's one thing after another. It's high bills getting higher, and still they will not admit that this has been a spectacular failure.

How is Bill 3 going to reduce the price spikes? We have price spikes every day at the Power Pool: in the morning at peak demand and in the evening at supper hour, at peak demand. Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't have today's actual forecast from the Power Pool, but I believe that another hon. member has. I don't know if it would be as bad as March 2, because certainly there were significant spikes on that day. It went up and down and up and down. Where has it spiked since January? In January at the start of the month we had about 4-cent electricity.

Now, I see in the Edmonton Journal, that great newspaper, which is as old as the province – excuse me; it's older than the province. We look in that every day to check the power price. The only idea that this government took from this side of the Assembly in regard to trying to fix this problem is that since this government made electricity a commodity, they took an idea from this hon. member and said: yes, we're going to publish the price so businesses can see firsthand what the price is the following day, Mr. Speaker. I will give them credit. They did that. So now all businesses, all commercial enterprises, and all residential shoppers for electricity, if they so wish, can open the Journal and can see what electricity traded for the previous day or the day before if it's a weekend paper. That gives Alberta consumers a good look at what's going on.

Prices have almost tripled since January, and one of the reasons why they have tripled is because of these links that we have to the Pacific Northwest. Now, I'm sure there are members in here who are going to say: "Oh, no. That's not true." But the Power Pool's own web site indicates whenever there is a disturbance on the Pacific Northwest grid. For instance, California was short 1,700 megawatts. What happened in Alberta? The price went up. There are hon. members in this Assembly that are going to say: "Oh, no. Our price spikes had nothing to do with California." But you bet they did, because whenever we were exporting power from this province, whenever there was a lack of hydro capacity in the Pacific Northwest and other reasons, whenever prices were high there and we were wheeling power out of here, our own domestic prices were high. This bill is not going to prevent those price spikes from ever happening again.

Unless we go back to the low-cost power plan suggested by the Alberta Liberals, unfortunately Alberta consumers are going to have to learn to live with these price spikes, and I'm disappointed in that. Not only seniors trying to live independently in their own homes on fixed incomes but businesses are going to be affected. Big business and small business are going to be affected by that.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. members across the way don't think that high prices for electricity are going to scare away businesses, I would remind them of the last quarterly update from the hon. Minister of Finance. In that quarterly update I saw where with the high cost of registration for commercial vehicles, whenever we put the taxes and that up in this province – and those are taxes – commercial operators took their business elsewhere, and small businesses will do the same with electricity. If we are going to force the municipally owned utilities in Bill 3 to call charges on the bill taxes, then I would suggest to this government that when they table their budget on April 8, they also call all the little user fees and levies on this and levies on that taxes. If you're going to force the municipally owned utilities to lay out all their charges and call them taxes, then I would suggest to you that if you really believe what you're preaching in this about having a level playing field, when we introduce the budget, then you call a tax a tax. If it's good enough for the municipally owned utilities, surely it's good enough for this government.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29.

There being no questions, does anybody else wish to speak on the amendment?

[Motion on amendment lost]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's a pleasure to rise at third reading on Bill 3 and my last kick at the cat. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about feeling as if he was in a dream, and you know, I can relate to that, although I think it's a little bit more like being in a Salvador Dali painting. You know, it's a surreal experience. It's a bit like being trapped in the twilight zone.

Here's the situation. This government, since it introduced deregulation a number of years ago, has been wrong on virtually every prediction about what would happen. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has pointed out, they were completely wrong about when eventually we would finally get around to consumer choice. They were wrong about what the prices would be, very wrong, so far wrong that it's incredible. It's scary, Mr. Speaker, how wrong they were. They were wrong about the prices that would be achieved in the auctions that took place of the power that was being produced by depreciated plants. They were wrong about how many people would bid and the total value, and they were wrong about many other things in respect to this thing. It has produced price increases for small power consumers that are almost breathtaking, and it has produced a reaction in this province among traditional Tory supporters and others that I've never seen in this province. Certainly, it has not been just traditional New Democrats or Liberals that have expressed their anger about this government.

You know, you didn't even see this during Bill 11. You didn't even see this. I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said that to me the other day. He said that even during Bill 11 you didn't see the kind of anger that's out there. What is it, then, about the government having been so wrong for so long on this issue that makes them forge ahead? What is it about this government with the anger and the loss of support from traditional voters that makes this government forge ahead? [interjection] The composition of this House, I'll remind the hon. Deputy Premier, was set over two years ago. A lot can change in six weeks in politics, let alone two years, and there are two more years to go. So don't be too smug and comfortable in your 74 seats, because I'll predict right now that if the government passes this bill, there will be less than 74 Tories in the next Assembly, and I will be willing to bet a coffee on that.

So part of this surreal feeling that I have, Mr. Speaker, is that the government knows that people are angry. We have their own backbenchers getting up and asking very, very pointed questions of the government. Not just on this issue, I might add, but particularly on this issue we have had very strong and pointed questions from private members on the government side directed towards the Minister of Energy. It is clear that the caucus of the government is far from united on this question. Nevertheless, the government can use its power to force government members to vote for this bill even though it is most likely going to cost some of those hon. members their seats at the next election.

So that adds to the feeling of surrealness around this bill, that the government, notwithstanding its failures, notwithstanding the fact that this process is costing them popular support, is hell-bent on going even farther down the road than they've already gone instead of doing the rational thing and turning around and reconsidering the whole matter. I predict that the passage of this bill in third reading and its proclamation after that will mark a turning point in the 30-year-plus history of the Conservative government of this province because I believe this is the number one issue on voters' minds across the province, even people who have been traditional Tory supporters for many, many, many years.

I know that the hon. Deputy Premier is encouraging us to sort of get out from under the dome and meet people. In fact, I've been doing that, Mr. Speaker, on this very question. I've had a number of meetings not in traditional NDP areas, not in antigovernment areas but right in government areas. I've been having meetings and, you know, getting pretty good turnouts. Sometimes you get really good turnouts and sometimes more modest ones, but the people that are coming forward are farmers primarily and small businesspeople. They're not trade unionists; they're not lawyers. They're farmers, and they're small businesspeople, and they're people that are even involved in the energy industry themselves. That's how they make their living, and they are extremely concerned about the problems that we have had in this province with electricity prices.

They know two things. They know that it comes from deregulation. They don't know why necessarily. They don't understand all the complexities. Although I've met some very smart and very well-informed people, particularly people in REAs, and some businesspeople that know way more about the electrical industry and about electrical deregulation than they ever wanted to know. They've been forced to become experts themselves in order to understand this system. So you've got an electorate, Mr. Speaker, that is well informed in many cases, and if they are not quite that well informed, they know two things, as I said. They know that the high prices come from deregulation, and they know that they're not going to get any assistance from the government unless it's election time. Those are the two things the people of Alberta know very clearly.

I will leave that with members to think about, perhaps dream about tonight, and go on to the question of whether or not additional retailers are going to add competition that will bring down prices. That's the question.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has succinctly and I think quite brilliantly put her finger on the source of one of the government's mistakes, and that is that when Direct Energy and other retailers come into the market, they're in fact in some cases replacing existing retailers. You know, three minus one plus one is still three. It's a zero-sum game, Mr. Speaker. This also applies to gas, and what I can't understand is how people think that if you add a bunch of retailers selling the same gas and buying it at the same price, somehow this is going to translate into a whole bunch of competition that's going to bring down prices.

It brings me to the electricity thing, which is a little more complicated than gas. With gas it's simple. You can have as many retailers as you want, but if they buy their gas at a fixed market price, they all are in the same market. You're basically going to be paying the market price for that gas plus the markup and the added inefficiencies of having multiple small retailers of the natural gas.

Now, with electricity, Mr. Speaker, it's a little more complicated because you have the ability to add generation. This is important. The thing that determines the ultimate price has nothing to do with how many retailers you have. It has to do with the balance between the supply of electricity and the demand or the consumption of the electricity. So the only way to bring down prices in electricity is to add additional generation so that there's a greater amount of generation relative to the demand for the electricity. Then the price that the retailers get it at will come down, and they could, if there was indeed true competition, pass on some savings.

So the key to lower electricity prices is not competition, Mr. Speaker. It is additional generation, which brings me to the problems that we have had in this province about generation going back to the 1990s. It's clear that between the time the government signaled its intention to move in the direction of electricity deregulation – I think the Minister of Finance was then the Energy minister, and that goes back to the middle to late '90s – we actually passed through I think three others, so a total of four ministers of Energy, before we come to Bill 3.

There was an extended period of time when everybody in the marketplace, including the investors, knew that deregulation was coming, but the government did not have a final answer, and in fact many of the preliminary ideas, as we saw from the pamphlet referred to by Edmonton-Riverview, were off base and were wrong. So what actually happened at that point is that they decided not to invest in new generation.

I might add that when EPCOR, of which I was never a board member, built Genesee 1, which came after 2, because they had a funny way of numbering them, the government agencies had initially said that they could build it and that demand was required. Once they built the thing, then the government wouldn't let them put it into the rate base. So what happened – and this is normal in the electrical industry – is that the city had to continue to borrow money in order to pay itself for the cost of that. When they did finally put it into the rate base over the objections of TransAlta and Calgary politicians, then of course the cost to the rate base included not just the cost of building the thing in the first place but also all the borrowing that had to be done in order to support the plant because the government refused to allow Edmonton Power at that time, later EPCOR, to put it into the rate base.

These actions on the part of the government created an atmosphere, a climate, where people weren't prepared to invest in new generation, so there was a large period of time when new generation didn't come on-line. The government would have you believe that that was because there's something inherently wrong with a regulated system. Nothing could be further from the truth. As long as the government provides a stable environment and a regulated rate of return for investors, they will in fact invest and always have invested in new generation in this province.

So the government created a shortage of electricity, which created a situation where we were having brownouts, the threat of blackouts, and huge price increases even before deregulation was finally implemented. This was entirely the fault of the Tory government, Mr. Speaker, and had nothing whatsoever to do with the regulated system that was in place. The regulated system is in place in most other provinces, in most parts of the United States, and in fact they are building power plants just fine. But a place like California or a place like Alberta that incompetently implements deregulation will run into trouble. You'll have problems with generation, and you'll have problems with supply.

So I want to just say that in terms of politics, if I were somebody who was just a crass politician who didn't really care about the people of this province and all I wanted to do was ensure that I'd have a better shot at winning more seats in the next election – I mean, having two seats in this place isn't that easy – I would say, "Go ahead and pass the bill," because we would like to increase our representation in this Assembly, and if you pass this bill, I guarantee you that we will. But I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I'm not that kind of person, and I really think that we should put the interests of the people first, even though it may result in a rebound of Tory popularity in the province. I don't know. But I think we should be doing the right thing for the people.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29. The Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He made a comment, and I'm quite surprised that with his link to Edmonton Power and now EPCOR – I'm wondering if he is not aware that as a Calgary MLA and as the Minister of Energy at the time it was I that actually took Genesee 1 into rate base. I can't believe you're not aware of that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I am well aware of it. I am also aware of the very, very vigorous campaign that had to be mounted by the mayor of the city of Edmonton and the support that she received from the northern mayors in order to achieve that goal.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I am also surprised that the hon. member was not aware of the fact that we were dealing with the province as a whole, and what was right was right and what was wrong was wrong. There may have been campaigns out there, but the right thing to do was to move Genesee 1 into rate base because, in fact, the facility had been built, and in this government we recognized that the industry already did exist. So we made the right move, and, yes, it was in co-operation with the city of Edmonton, but it was the right move, and that's why we made it, for no other reason.

Mr. Mason: I would like to be generous, Mr. Speaker, and admit that this minister was responsible for resolving the difficulties and the long-standing issue around getting Genesee into rate base. She did do that, and I'll give her credit for it right now.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I understand that in research preparation for Bill 3 the hon. member attended a public forum in St. Albert, and I was wondering if the hon. member could enlighten the Assembly as to some of the frustrations that were expressed at that meeting and how consumers in St. Albert dealt with the fact that they're looking at, I believe, a 70 percent increase in their electricity bills.

Thank you.

9:30

Mr. Mason: I'd like to clarify that, Mr. Speaker, if I may. On Monday evening I did confuse St. Albert with the ATCO service area where the 70 percent increase is going to take place, so I'd like to correct my remarks. St. Albert is part of EPCOR/Aquila and will not be getting immediately a 70 to 120 percent increase in the April billing period, but when this bill is passed, such increases become inevitable probably within six months to a year.

I would like to correct that for the record. Thank you very much, hon. member, for asking.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands: did the citizens of St. Albert express to you at that public meeting a preference for choice in electricity contracts, or did they express an interest in having low-rate, affordable electricity for their homes?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was unanimous: cheap power.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wishing to speak on the bill?
The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky to close debate.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is again a pleasure for me to be able to add a few comments and perhaps make some attempt to clarify a few of the issues that were raised with respect to Bill 3. I won't spend a lot of time on it. I think we've spent a lot of time on it. [some applause] Popular; aren't I?

There was some suggestion that we have a distinct problem here in the province of Alberta with base load. The suggestion that I would make there is that the answer to situations like that is never legislation. However, legislation in this province and the legislation contained in Bill 3 are the foundation for a solution to base load problems on an ongoing basis. Certainly, those things will be addressed as we move along in regulations, et cetera.

Bill 3, Mr. Speaker, is certainly a piece of legislation that moves us into the future, and as we listened to the very emotional and passionate address by the Member for West Yellowhead with respect to his riding and his concerns, I think that we all can see that Bill 3 has been well thought out. It's a good piece of legislation, and it will suit Albertans in the future and do a very good job with respect to providing electrical utilities for this province.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would close debate.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 9:34 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

For the motion:

Amery	Graydon	Maskell
Broda	Griffiths	McClellan
Calahasen	Hancock	Melchin
Cao	Hutton	Nelson
Cardinal	Jablonski	Oberg
Coutts	Jacobs	Pham
DeLong	Klapstein	Rathgeber
Dunford	Knight	Strang
Evans	Magnus	Tarchuk
Fritz	Mar	Woloshyn
Graham	Marz	Yankowsky

Against the motion:

Blakeman	MacDonald	Mason
----------	-----------	-------

Totals	For – 33	Against – 3
--------	----------	-------------

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour and the work that's been accomplished this week, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:47 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 27, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/03/27

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. At the conclusion of the prayer would you please join me in a moment of silence.

Let us pray. O Lord, we humbly give our gratitude for the life of your faithful and trusty servant, Edward Glancefield "Ted" Hole, husband of our beloved Lieutenant Governor, Lois Elsa Hole.

We give thanks for his love of family and his gift of friendship, for his grace, dignity, and courage, for his humour, generosity, and sheer love of life.

We remember his family and all who mourn.

Would you please join me now in a moment of silence. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise on behalf of my constituents, yourself, Mr. Speaker, and the Member for Redwater and introduce through you to all members of this House two of Alberta's elected municipal officials. I had the opportunity to have lunch with these individuals today, where we discussed regional issues of mutual interest. As far as I know, they are not paid lobbyists, but I bought them lunch anyway. I would like to ask that His Worship Mayor Lloyd Bertschi of Morinville and Councillor Don Rigney of Sturgeon county rise in your gallery and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is a great privilege to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly constituents from Vegreville-Viking seated in the members' gallery. All the people that I will introduce share a common thread of community-building, unbelievable hours of volunteering, all individually talented and skilled, and one thing that can be said about all of them is that they all put the needs of others ahead of their own.

I will ask the following people to rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly as I call their names, and these are all recipients of the Queen's golden jubilee medal. The first person I'd like to introduce is Mrs. Elsie Kawulich from Vegreville. Next are Mrs. Georgina Hauca from Willingdon, Mr. Jack Roddick from Viking, an unbelievably talented pianist Mr. Christopher Kupchenko from Brosseau, Mrs. Mae Adamyk from St. Michael, Mrs. Yvonne Brown from Tofield, my former bus driver, Mr. George Morie from Andrew, and Mr. Jerrold Lemko, volunteer fire captain of Vegreville volunteer fire brigade. I will ask all of the recipients and their accompanying family members and support members to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 40 members of the Girl Guides of Canada, Alberta Council, who are participating in the Alberta Girls' Parliament. They are accompanied today by head adviser Edie Jubenville and leaders Sherry Gurjar, Claudette Vague, and Bernadette O'Connor. They're seated in the public gallery this afternoon, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to stand up on behalf of the hon. Member for Wainwright and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 19 of the brightest children in Alberta, from Allan Johnstone school in Hardisty. I did get a chance to speak with them before we came into the House, and they're a great grade 6 class. They're accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Dawson; the school secretary, Mrs. MacKinnon; Mrs. Dewald, the teacher's aide; Mrs. Balaban, a parent; and John Bruketa, the bus driver. I would like them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House. They're seated in the visitors' gallery.

The Speaker: On this day 47 years ago the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster arrived in the world, and we will now recognize him for an introduction.

Mr. Snelgrove: It seemed longer, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three visitors from the Vermilion-Lloydminster constituency. Mrs. Dawn Garnier and her husband, Stan, run a very successful ranching operation near Dewberry. As well as being great neighbours and terrific community supporters, they've been very actively involved in the rodeo industry. In fact, they've participated in Australia and New Zealand both as participants and timers. Dawn is accompanied by her daughters Danelle and Skye. Danelle works as a teacher's aide in Heinsburg, and Skye will graduate from high school in May. Both of these young women work on the family ranch, are involved in rodeo, 4-H, and community sports. They have risen. I wish you would all join me in congratulating them on their attendance and welcoming them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly one very special individual, my daughter Cindy Broda. After spending a year in Tokyo and three years in Italy, it's certainly great to have her back home. Accompanying her is her good friend Adi White from Belfast, Ireland. Adi will be leaving next week for Ireland and then to the Caspian Sea, where he's second officer navigating a ship in subsea surveying of oil and gas fields around the world. They're both seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a constituent from Lac La Biche-St. Paul and a good friend of mine. Mr. Johnny Lypowy has the distinction of being the longest serving employee of AFSC, a total of 36 years, and I can attest to the fact that he's still running at full choke. Johnny has been a major rancher in the constituency. Unfortunately, the drought has had quite an impact on his herd, and he has recently had to sell his cattle due to shortage of feed. His contributions to the community and the province are far reaching and include involvement with the REA, the seed plant. He's also associated with the Saskatchewan/Alberta hockey board, the longest active league in the province, and Johnny has been their president for 20 years. Johnny Lypowy is seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask him to now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce 49 very enthusiastic and bright students from the newly modernized Three Hills school. Three Hills school is actually quite famous for producing very bright students. I graduated from there myself a few short years ago. [interjections] I knew I was setting myself up. They're accompanied today by teachers Ms Anderson and Mrs. Riegel, by Heidi Riegel and also Ann Anderson. I'd ask them to rise in the public gallery and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce two sets of guests today. The first one I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this House is Mrs. Bettianne Hayward, grandmother of 11 children, all of whom are in our public school system now. She's here for the second time this week to watch us debate issues related to education matters. She's very concerned about underfunding of education. She's seated, I guess, in the public gallery. I'd ask her to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second set of guests are mother and daughter. Jette Badre is the chair of Parents of Kids with Diabetes, a parent advocacy group for diabetic children. Today is Jette's birthday, so I would ask that she rise and receive the warm congratulations and welcome of the Assembly. Her daughter Ghita Badre is a second-year student at Grant MacEwan College. She's here to observe the workings of the Assembly, so please give her a warm welcome.

head: Oral Question Period

Electricity Pricing

Dr. Nicol: Yesterday the top energy regulatory authority in the United States found several energy traders guilty of manipulating electricity prices to increase their profits in 2000-2001. A number of companies investigated by the commission, including Enron, Powerex, Enmax, and TransAlta, were also operating in Alberta at the time. The year 2000-2001 was also a year when this government had to cap skyrocketing prices of electricity here in Alberta. To the Premier: given that this commission found that taxpayers in California were owed $3.3 billion from the energy firms, how much money are utility payers in Alberta owed?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting question. It was one that I planned to ask the Energy minister myself, so perhaps he can answer it right now.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Premier and Mr. Speaker. The hearing was a result of some two years of strong investigation. Primarily, the FERC ruled with respect to the supply of natural gas and primarily coming out of the San Juan basin. That was where the bulk of the finances are directed to. Throughout that time, those companies that were operating in Alberta were the subject of scrutiny from the Power Pool, the market surveillance administrator, and at the demise of Enron a power purchase arrangement, a PPA, was transferred without incident. There has been no evidence on investigation by either the Power Pool, the transmission administrator, the Balancing Pool, or the market surveillance administrator of any price gouging that took effect in Alberta during that short six-month period where there was a wild swing of prices in the marketplace.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy then: are you prepared to make some of the results of those hearings or those investigations public so that Albertans can see the way that you looked into protecting their interests?

Mr. Smith: We'll certainly take that question under advisement, Mr. Speaker, and if there are documents that can be put forward in the public domain, they certainly will be.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, will the minister commit that future investigations like that will be done in public so that the public can actually have input and raise questions at those kinds of hearings?

Mr. Smith: Well, that's why I'm thanking the member for his support of Bill 3 then, Mr. Speaker, because that's exactly what Bill 3 is intended to do, to bring scrutiny and transparency to the process: public hearings, transcribed hearings, interventions, and a full and transparent competitive market structure.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Back to the Minister of Energy: what facts does this government have to support their claim that Albertans are paying fair electricity prices since these government investigations haven't been conducted in public?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the member would follow the prices of the Power Pool through the period of time, the number of entrants that were in it, the results put forward by the market surveillance administrator, there is ample evidence that the marketplace had reacted. In the early stages when we were very short of generation, we had a fast, fast growing economy, we had a steep rise in natural gas prices, and we had the spectre of Kyoto also putting upward pressure on prices. These effects cumulated in a perfect storm scenario in the first four to six months of the period. The Power Pool price rose to the 16-cent level and then very quickly drifted back down to the 4-cent, 4.9-cent level as new generation came on.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Energy: who is responsible for ensuring that the electricity marketplace is functioning in the consumers' best interests given that the market surveillance administrator has no enforcement powers?

Mr. Smith: The market surveillance administrator, Mr. Speaker, I believe, does have the ability to put forward to the EUB, which has long since operated in the public interest. In fact, if you look at EUB decisions over the past 15 months – let me give you one for example: the sale of the Viking-Kinsella gas fields to Burlington Resources by ATCO. That initial decision was made, filed with the EUB, and then the EUB returned and said that some $167 million further had to be returned to consumers. TransAlta, I believe, also returned 6 point some million dollars. Engage Energy and the Rainbow operating units were deemed to be in default by some $60 million. The decisions are very evident and can be followed through the EUB public process.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Minister of Energy: how can the minister claim that the Power Pool is doing its job when in 2001 pool officials argued that it's unreasonable for consumers to expect prices to remain at or close to marginal cost at all times?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the member is asking if the market forces aren't working as they're supposed to or if in fact the structure was inappropriate with respect to the merit order graph. Over and over again the concept of pricing through the merit order graph has been confirmed by the market surveillance administrator and by the Power Pool itself. What that does is ensure that must-run generation is vended in at the very earliest part to the power grid so that must-run generation is not gamed so as to create higher prices.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Lobbyist Registry

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In responding to questions yesterday, the Premier stated, "We don't have paid lobbyists . . . We have numerous consultants who represent various companies and nonprofit organizations." Pure semantics. If someone is paid to influence government policy, they are a paid lobbyist. If they are not paid to lobby the government, then they are not a paid lobbyist. A lobbyist list would be used to register paid lobbyists, not constituents. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier tell this Assembly what he sees as being the distinction between paid consultants and paid lobbyists?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if there is any distinction. I think what the hon. member is alluding to is the issue of a lobbyist registry. Now, she talks about paid consultants. What I mentioned in the media scrum yesterday is that, yes, indeed there are consultants who establish themselves to consult for companies and other organizations with government, with community organizations, with the media. In other words, they combine public affairs, public relations, government affairs into their overall practice.

Then there are some organizations, many nonprofit organizations – as matter of fact, going back to the days when I was the public relations director for the United Way and in charge of agency affairs, I was called upon by those agencies to represent them with the media, with various government organizations like city hall or the provincial government. I was on salary. Was I, then, a paid consultant? I don't think so. Many of those organizations, nonprofits, as they do today, had full-time public relations people within their organization who were also responsible for government affairs and other public affairs.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's hard to define. Is it all right for a person paid by a nonprofit organization in the role of a public relations director or public relations/government affairs to lobby government? It isn't, no, but they have them. So if this hon. member is standing up and saying that all of these organizations should get rid of these people, then let her do it and see what reaction she gets.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Given that in 1997 the MP for Edmonton-Southwest, now the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, stated that the secret is to make sure that everything is out in the open, will this government follow the advice of their own member and establish a lobbyist list for the sake of openness and transparency?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, a lobbyist list or registry was evaluated by the government about a year and a half ago, and we found that the registry is not needed in Alberta. Indeed, if the hon. member wants to find out who our consultants – and I'm sure they use consultants. They hire consultants. I know that in the last election they hired consultants out of Vancouver. It didn't do them a bit of good, but they hired consultants.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, we found that a registry is not needed in this province. It would cost about $400,000 to set up and God knows how much to administer. What we're seeking in this government is quite the opposite from what the Liberals are demanding, and that is less bureaucracy rather than more bureaucracy.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, given that this government spends in excess of $600,000 per year on closed-door standing policy committees, will the Premier agree that at a cost of less than, as he puts it, $400,000 once, that's a small price to pay for democracy, to set up a lobbyist list? Six hundred every year. Four hundred once.

Mr. Klein: If they use the money we give them for research, the hon. members can produce their own list. First of all, they can produce a list of all the consultants in the province who operate privately and independently. They can go to the Internet or have their researcher – and I'm doing their job for them. They can contact all the nonprofit organizations and find out if they have full-time public relations/government affairs people. They can do all that, and they can publish their own list if they want. You know, I mean, that information is readily available. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie suggesting, for instance, that her husband lose his livelihood because he is a consultant along with a former member of this Legislature, this government caucus, Jon Havelock, and a former member of I believe the Liberal caucus, Peter Sekulic? With all due respect, he does a marvelous job. We hire him, the private-sector hires him, nonprofit organizations hire him, and he does a wonderful job in representing whatever he has to represent.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Energy Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This province has an Energy minister who claims that climate change is caused by people breathing and wants a nuclear reactor to power Fort McMurray as long as it's built in Saskatchewan. Now this minister is lecturing his federal counterpart on the importance of energy ministers acting as lobbyists for the oil and gas industry. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is it the policy of this government to represent, support, and lobby for big oil instead of Alberta consumers, who are suffering from obscenely high power and gas bills?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy. And there was a point of order arising out of this as well.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the oil and gas industry in Alberta, thanks to educational institutions like SAIT and NAIT, thanks to an incorruptible land regime of land tenure by the Department of Energy for some 50 years, and thanks to the EUB, has allowed Albertans from every walk of life, from Drayton Valley, from Grande Prairie, from Manyberries to become successful individuals in an entrepreneurial world. That ability for them to do business on a world-class level has been impaired by the actions of the federal government. I believe that it is the responsibility of elected officials, particularly mine as the Minister of Energy, to be able to say of those individuals who are involved in this business that they are from Alberta, they are world-class, and they're very willing and ready to participate in business activities around the globe.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, can the minister explain, then, if this is the reason why consumers in Alberta have to pay such high prices for natural gas: because the minister sees his role as acting on behalf of the companies rather than on behalf of the consumers?

Mr. Smith: I think, Mr. Speaker, I said every Albertan, and that's exactly the representation of this government: to act continually in the best interests of all Albertans. That includes consumers and that includes those who go out late at night and change wellheads, those who fight oil field fires, those who contribute every day to the great economy of this province. For the member to make representations that this government is less than interested in every Albertan is a remark that should be withdrawn immediately.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, can the minister, if he is actually acting on behalf of every Albertan, explain why oil and gas companies can make record profits, but people's gas bills are often more than their mortgage?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member's assertion is as usual incorrect and reaching at straws. Alberta has not been able to control the price of a commodity called natural gas. We are price takers in the international market to the east of Alberta where we export and in the province of Alberta. Since 1985 the price of natural gas has been deregulated. What we are attempting to do with the legislation and with the final deregulation of natural gas is give Albertans a choice, give Albertans the ability to combine electrical and natural gas purchases and for them to accommodate these bills in their own personal budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Student Debt

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Canada Millennium Scholarship Foundation recently undertook a yearlong survey of student income and expenditures. Their findings concluded that nine out of 10 students in the older age category of 26 and up carry an average debt of $20,500 from government and private sources including high-interest credit cards. They also concluded that students from the prairies, Alberta, and British Columbia, have the greatest financial need and are finding it difficult to make ends meet every month. My questions today are for the Minister of Learning. What kind of financial resources are available to help students with educational costs and monthly living expenses, particularly those students who operate in the red every month?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In this province we put out approximately $417 million every year in student loans. We also have a very generous remission plan that allows students to pay back only $2,500 per semester, or $5,000 per year, in the majority of the courses.

2:00

In direct answer to the hon. member's question, a single student who lives on his own would receive about $730 per month in living expenses. On the other end of the spectrum, Mr. Speaker, a married or common-law couple with no children will receive about $1,455 per month plus expenses on top of that.

So, Mr. Speaker, that's what financial resources are available. We consider our student loan program to be one of the best in Canada. Many students will say that. We fully recognize that student debt certainly is an issue, and we constantly work to ensure that our student loan program is there to ensure that students have enough dollars to go to postsecondary education should they wish.

Mr. Shariff: Given that our students are continuing to operate in the red every month, would the minister agree to review the criteria used to calculate the monthly living expense portion of Alberta student loans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question because there is a little bit of a myth out there that we arbitrarily decide what the living expenses are by the amount of dollars that we have. In fact, what actually happens is that the living allowances are measured using Stats Canada's survey of household expenses and the consumer price index. The food allowance is calculated by Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on some of their statistics that they have. We are one of the few provinces that actually increases on a yearly basis the living allowance and food allowance. Last year was 2 percent; the year before that, 2 percent; the year before that, 4 percent. So it is something that we do continually. We do it every year, and it's something that we feel is extremely important as we see such a wide variation in prices.

Mr. Shariff: My final supplementary is also to the same minister. Student loans can be of great help to students while they are in school, but what is this government doing to minimize student debt after graduation?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I've already mentioned, our remission program is probably the best in Canada, where students who are in a four-year degree can basically plan on paying back approximately $5,000 of their student loan per year. The maximum amount of a student loan right now is $11,000. So, theoretically, if a student were to go four years, got $11,000 per year, they would receive about $44,000 and would pay back about $20,000. We feel that this is extremely important to allow our students to go to university, to allow our students to go into postsecondary education, and to continue on in a career in Alberta. It's certainly an economic development tool as well and is viewed as a very positive thing for the students of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Natural Gas Prices

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta consumers are taking a real close look at their current and past natural gas bills and have brought to the attention of the Official Opposition the fact that Northwestern Utilities/ATCO has included the costs of depreciation and financing in the charges to their natural gas customers. This is indicated in their publications between 1994 and 1997 in the segmented cost per dollar gas chart, showing these costs to be in the area of 16 to 18 percent of the total gas costs. For some unknown reason these charts were never distributed again to customers. However, a segmented circle showing the cost distribution per dollar, including depreciation and financing at a lower level, was displayed in early 2001 in their regional office. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How much money was paid to ATCO by natural gas customers in depreciation and financing over the last 10 years?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are motions for returns, and there are ample ways to display that information in the legislative domain. There's also the EUB, which, as I've said earlier, holds public hearings and rules on it, and he is entitled to that information as well.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: when are customers who paid millions of dollars for depreciation and financing going to get at least part of their money back now that ATCO is selling part of their operations to Direct?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, those decisions are made in the purview of the EUB, and they are done in an open, transparent fashion. That hearing is coming up. I expect that maybe the member can get down to Calgary and spend some time at that as well as reviewing all the other decisions, the decisions when refunds were made, when rate riders went on. I mean, he's entitled to follow the entire natural gas history.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the federal Income Tax Act allows for depreciation in the cost of financing to be deductible from corporate income provided it has not been collected from another source, could the hon. minister please seek written acknowledgment from the federal department of income tax authorities to ensure that the doubling of these claims has not taken place?

Mr. Smith: I would look forward to the hon. member tabling the information and, again, going back to EUB. If we can shed further light on it, Mr. Speaker, we will.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Securities Regulation

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Securities reform is the subject of much debate across the country. Many financial experts and regulators suggest that the system needs to be improved to provide better protection for investors. They want change. Recently the federal government intruded into provincial jurisdiction again and appointed a committee to study securities regulation and make suggestions to move towards a national securities regulator. My questions are to the Minister of Revenue. Can you please tell the members of this Assembly why you declined to nominate any Albertans to this committee?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I go on to answer that question, I would like to first remind you that regardless of any approach to improving securities regulation in Alberta, the prime objective that I want to assure Albertans of is that investor protection as well as market efficiencies are our objectives with respect to securities regulation in Alberta. It's true that the federal government did put together a Wise Persons' Committee recently to study this issue. It's been studied many times before, but we felt the best opportunity for improving a national approach to regulation in the country was to acknowledge that the provinces do have jurisdiction for securities regulation, which the federal government knows, and that we find out what the will is among the various provinces to improving the system.

We started earlier last year with British Columbia and ourselves meeting to find out what common ground there might be. That expanded to a meeting early in February with the provinces of British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec. The four provinces did then agree that we together wanted to provide an initiative among all provinces in the country to improve this. We had a conference call with all the provinces and territories last Saturday and unanimously agreed that we are going to approach and work towards a tight deadline of September 30 to put a working plan together to improving securities regulation in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: given that you have a committee and the federal government has a committee, will these committees work against each other and create competing interests?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to acknowledge that we felt that the highest opportunity for success in improving it is to ensure that all the provinces are involved in it. That's why Alberta is leading this initiative among the various provinces. We're chairing this as a committee. It is going to be led by the ministers, and that's going to provide the best opportunity for success.

The committees don't have to be conflicting in nature. We will take the consultation of many: the constituents, those that are involved with regulation of securities, and the public at large. We will involve their input, and we will also accept the Wise Persons' Committee as another source of information, but ultimately it does come back to each of the provinces to have to accept and implement any of these recommendations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the investment industry has been down this road before and many have been asking for a change for a long time, what will make your initiative different?

Mr. Melchin: I think a number of things, Mr. Speaker, have made the timeliness of this initiative important. Our Canadian securities administrators have been working together over the last number of years to improve our securities regulation across the country. Many initiatives have already been adopted, such as the mutual reliance system. There's been an electronic filing for continuous disclosure. These things have laid a framework, but one thing which the Alberta Securities Commission has been leading in is a uniform securities legislation project among the various security regulators in Canada. That's laying a platform so that when we want to improve the efficiency of the markets, it has led to all of the provinces and the ministers for the first time that I can recall unanimously agreeing to steer this and ensure that by September 30 we have a working plan. At a minimum we've agreed to implement among other options a passport approach to this. All of us have agreed already to that as a final outcome. At a minimum we'll get to that, and that will substantially improve the efficiency and investor protection in which Alberta is leading.

2:10 Administration of Psychotropic Drugs

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, every Thursday the Alberta Liberals will ask a question that a member of the public has asked us to pose. Albertans can send us their questions by phoning our office or visiting our web site at altaliberals.ab.ca. Today Edmonton's Stephanie Baziuk would like an explanation for difficulties she encountered when her 89-year-old father was admitted to a long-term care facility. She said that staff tried to invoke the Mental Health Act to have her rights as her dad's legal guardian taken away and that staff gave him psychotropic drugs even though she told them he has bad reactions to medication. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: when conflicts arise between the Mental Health Act and the Dependent Adults Act, which law supersedes the other?

Mr. Mar: I would acknowledge, Mr. Speaker, that you would warn us about the importance of not making a legal opinion on the floor of this Assembly, so I must decline answering this question.

Dr. Massey: I bet that makes citizens happy.

Dr. Taft: Yeah, that'll make people happy.

Is it acceptable under government policy to prescribe or administer psychotropic drugs without the informed written consent of the resident, the resident's guardian, or other authorized representatives?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I am reluctant to answer this as well for reasons relating to the fact that we do not discuss individual cases on the floor of this Assembly. If the hon. member wishes to take this matter up with me in a manner that we can deal with in a venue outside of this Assembly, which he has done before to the benefit of both his constituents and the physicians and such who are involved, we can do that, and I make that offer available to him. But to answer questions like this on the floor of the Assembly, asking me about a medical decision by a physician to prescribe a psychotropic drug, is not within the scope of my ability to answer.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I'll repeat the question because there must have been a misunderstanding. Is it acceptable under government policy to prescribe or administer psychotropic drugs without the informed written consent of the resident, the resident's guardian, or authorized representatives?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it is a physician who would prescribe a psychotropic drug. It is not the minister of health. It is not properly a government policy issue as he tries to frame it. It's simply not. If there is some suggestion that the psychotropic drug was incorrectly prescribed by this physician and there is a complaint that arises from such a prescription, then the hon. member should take that matter up with the College of Physicians and Surgeons. I am not here nor is this government here to establish policy which challenges the appropriate power to prescribe by physicians, but if there has been an error in improperly prescribing something, then the proper place to take such a complaint and an allegation is to the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Rules

The Speaker: Hon. members, Beauchesne 408 reads, "Such questions should . . . not require an answer involving a legal opinion," and Beauchesne 428 says, "A question . . . must not . . . ask solution of a legal proposition, such as interpretation of a Statute, a Minister's own powers, etc." The minister is absolutely correct.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Calgary-Fort there have been a number of housing facilities constructed for the homeless under a funding partnership from the government, charities, and corporate organizations. These outstanding facilities, such as the Calgary Drop-In Centre and the Salvation Army Centre of Hope, are aimed at addressing the obvious and urgent need for accommodation. However, hidden are many hardworking Albertans who need low-cost housing that is affordable within their low income. A number of the groups have approached me inquiring about the low-cost housing project. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Seniors, who is also responsible for housing assistance. Can the minister tell us the process for a low-cost housing project to start?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We would want an organization, whether it be a private, for-profit organization, a not-for-profit group, a municipality, an outfit such as the Edmonton Housing Trust Fund, to first of all identify a need. When they identify a need, then we would want them also to come up with some sort of equity in order to create a partnership. This could be through land or through money. Along with that would be the establishment of a rental rate that would be truly affordable – and that would have to be agreed upon – and then also to be prepared to enter into a 20-year commitment. If those things would be met, then the Alberta Seniors department as well as the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation would be prepared to support it financially and enter into an agreement to go forward with such a project.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. What role do the governments – federal, provincial, municipal – play in a project like this?

Mr. Woloshyn: I think it's extremely important that all municipal governments who would want that project in their area would be involved in the sense that they are responsible for what is happening within their area and also that they would be participating partners wherever possible. The federal and provincial governments' role is to facilitate the project through financial support and to approve the project so that it can go forward.

Mr. Cao: My last supplemental question is to the same minister. So what is going on now or expected soon?

Mr. Woloshyn: For the 2002-2003 year there was a supplementary estimate of $8.5 million approved in this House that is matched by federal moneys through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Currently the department and the housing corporation have reviewed numerous projects across the province, and they're going through the final stages to make sure the announcements are appropriate. I must say that these are joint announcements between Canada Mortgage and Housing and the Alberta government. For the upcoming year and the outgoing years of the agreement the budget will be coming down soon, and there will be moneys allocated in the budget for next year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Water Strategy

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We would like to thank the Minister of Environment for incorporating in his water strategy many of the great ideas that the Liberals have been promoting for at least five years. However, his own idea about a water tax is not going to be too popular. Will the Minister of Environment explain how he is going to get a water tax through cabinet and into government policy?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, as much as that member is trying to perturb me, I'm going to remain imperturbable. I just want to say that I did not have an idea of a water tax. It's not my idea. We aren't proposing a water tax, and I would suggest that she probably read the document. As I quite clearly pointed out at the press conference that she was at, we heard quite an argument at the forum we held last June on: should there be a price charged for water? About half the forum said that there should be; about half the forum said that there shouldn't be. Right now in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, with an NDP government, and B.C., with a Liberal government, they do charge for water. So because of that, we have a statement in the draft document, very clearly a draft document, that talks about creating the discussion once again around this very hot issue.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, will this same minister explain how he plans to get the regulations he talked about today at the conference past the minister of deregulation in this province?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, what I said is that when government introduces legislation, there are always regulations to back up the legislation. It doesn't matter which minister brings in legislation, whether it's myself or the Minister of Justice. Then there is regulation to back up his legislation or the Minister of Transportation's legislation or my good friend here the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development's legislation. Legislation has regulations.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, if conservation is the Minister of Environment's top priority with this water policy, will he commit to a retrofit fund to help Albertans save water?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, as I said, this is a draft strategy right now. We will hear from Albertans about all kinds of conservation methodologies, and certainly as we hear from Albertans on what they think about it, we'll pursue all options, and we'll continue to monitor.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Oil Supply

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy has recently been ruminating about joining OPEC. Presumably, he wants to see Alberta get the highest possible price for our oil. Industry analysts are predicting as a result of Iraqi oil coming back onto the world market once the conflict there is over – so in light of this a question to the minister: given that oil prices dropped $1.45 a barrel yesterday, what's the government's view as to how world oil prices will be affected in the post Iraqi war environment?

The Speaker: Very speculative, Minister. Very speculative.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, when I was first appointed as Minister of Energy, I phoned an individual by the name of Brent Friedenberg, who publishes the Natural Gas Daily Outlook. I said: Brent, I assume that I'll be asked questions about what will happen to the price of oil and what will happen to the price of gas. He said: Minister, natural gas, oil prices will fluctuate.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that industry analysts are predicting lower long-term prices for oil, has the minister estimated how Alberta's revenues will be affected if this happens?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, one of the great things about three-year business plans and budget documents is that there is an unparalleled level of transparency in those operations, and that unparalleled level of transparency will be reached yet again in this budget coming April 8.

Dr. Pannu: My final question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given the minister's penchant for talking about the invisible hand and the market-think that he is prone to, why doesn't he understand that if supply is increased, the price will go down? Why doesn't he tell Albertans that prices are going to go down?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I'll give him the invisible answer on this Thursday afternoon.

Ghost-Waiparous Recreation Area

Mrs. Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, the Ghost-Waiparous area northwest of Calgary has seen increased recreational pressures over the years. Time and time again we've heard serious concerns over the impact on the environment from the use of off-highway vehicles in sensitive areas as well as from parties and random camping. At the same time, Albertans need reasonable access to this area, where they can enjoy our scenic outdoors and recreate. My question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister tell us today what direction his department is taking to develop a meaningful and effective management plan?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a very important question, especially for areas around Calgary. This area is covering about 1,500 square kilometres, and it's less than an hour's drive actually from downtown Calgary, so there's a lot of pressure on that particular area. To address the concerns, my department is consulting with an access management group. We will go through this process and listen to Albertans and then develop a plan. My department commissioned a random telephone survey recently in the area. Eighty-five percent of the people contacted said that a system of designated trails and also establishment of recreational users should be put in place, and over 70 percent felt that if nothing is done, there'll be a real danger to the environment.

Mrs. Tarchuk: To the same minister: in that local constituents feel very strongly about the need for change and are pleased about the consultation effort, can the minister assure Albertans that the government will take action on a deliverable plan rather than create a plan that will just sit on a shelf?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes. Definitely, Mr. Speaker, you can be assured that the plan will not sit on the shelf and gather dust. At this point we are still of course consulting with Albertans, and you can be assured that once the consultation is done and the plan is in place, we will put in a process that will ensure that as the area is monitored and recommendations are made to make changes and adjustments as we move forward, there is a process in place to do that.

A good example of that is that we just recently announced the Bighorn backcountry access management plan, which is for about 5,000 square kilometres.

Dr. Taylor: How many?

Mr. Cardinal: Five thousand square kilometres. There's an active monitoring, action-oriented plan in place now of various users including local government, including in fact the MLA. Once you develop a plan, the job is not done. It's just the start of the job. The development as of now will be the most challenging and interesting, and you have to monitor and make sure that you have performance measures actually in place, that the job is done instead of gathering dust.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another concern I hear about repeatedly is education, and I would like to hear from the same minister how he hopes to address the need for educating users in this vast area.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is very challenging. Both the Ghost-Waiparous and also the Bighorn backcountry, of course, are the most challenging to provide a proper education program for because it is such a multi-use area. You have skidoosers, you have skiers, you have people that want to enjoy the environment, you have people that want to go fishing, people that want to go camping, and there are quaders and there are trikers. You know, it's a multi-use area, so it is not easy to put in processes that will educate the people as to how the area should be used and developed. But we do have a group of people that are interested. The users actually are the ones that will be handing out brochures and contacting people as to what the area would be used for in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Underfunding of education in the province has forced Calgary public into deficit financing and threatens the same at Edmonton public. Over 20 other boards in zones 2 and 3 say that they, too, are in a most difficult financial position in part due to the government-ordered arbitrated teachers' settlement. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. If, as the minister claims, boards have experienced 40 percent plus increases, why are these boards in financial straits?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, to some of the preamble of his question. The Calgary public board, which he alluded to, the CBE, ran a deficit approximately five or six years ago that they are still paying off at this time. They're making an orderly payment of their deficit, and it is something that they are actually ahead of the game on. They're ahead of their payment scheme.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the amount of dollars, the majority of school boards, the average of school boards is around 48 percent since 1995. There are some school boards that have received up to 50 or 60 percent because of increased enrolment, Mr. Speaker. There is a tremendous amount of dollars that has gone into the education system. In saying that, though, there have been challenges. For example, our teachers' salaries are about 8 to 10 percent higher than anywhere else in the country. Our teachers obviously do the best job in the country, because our students do the best job.

Mr. Speaker, this is something that we will manage; we'll manage it together with the school boards. The school boards that he has talked about that are having a tough time: yeah, we all have tough times, and indeed we will find a way to get out of it. I'm confident that the school boards will live up to their reputation as having the best school system in Canada; in fact, the world.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister: how can the minister claim the boards are properly funded when they need over $400 million just in catch-up funds?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I don't agree with that number. The Alberta School Boards Association in saying $411 million basically is saying that the 3 percent and the 3 and a half percent were nonexistent and did not come to them. Those were dollars that were there. Those were dollars that the School Boards have received. We recognize that in many ways the School Boards Association's mandate is to lobby for more money, and I accept that. But we do have fiscal realities, and you will see those fiscal realities on April 8 when the budget is tabled.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker:

will the minister table an account for school boards showing exactly how per pupil grants are supposed to cover school costs?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that the hon. member would want us to micromanage school boards to that degree. It would take a considerable amount of time and expense to be able to do that. Quite frankly, I would much sooner take those dollars, give them to the school boards, allow them to educate kids, allow them to put those dollars in the classroom, which is exactly where those dollars should go. I feel it is extremely important to do that. I think that the majority of school boards if not all the school boards do an excellent job in dishing out their money to their schools.

Mr. Speaker, it is something that we will not be doing: we will not be getting in and telling the school boards specifically how to fund, how to use their dollars. As a matter of fact, the Alberta School Boards Association has asked us for more flexibility, demanded more flexibility, and in the new funding formula that is coming out, we have agreed with that, and we will be giving them more flexibility. There are a lot of new things coming out in the funding formula. As of September 1 of this year we will see all of that, and I think it will be extremely positive.

With regard to the actual funding that is going to the school districts, the individual school boards, we are continuously – continuously – monitoring the amount of dollars that they are getting to ensure that it is spent in the best possible fashion, to ensure that it goes to the classroom, to ensure that the education of the students of this province continues to be the absolute best in Canada.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to the hon. member for asking that question, and we'll see him after the break.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Ted Hole

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Member of this Legislative Assembly representing the constituency of St. Albert, I rise today to pay tribute to a noble and honourable man, Mr. Edward G. Hole, who passed away last evening. It would not be an exaggeration to say that almost everyone in St. Albert either knew Ted Hole or was aware of this fine gentleman's presence in our community.

For those of us who had the privilege of knowing Ted, we will remember him as a wise and knowledgeable agriculturalist, an accomplished musician and supporter of the arts, an astute business owner, interested sports enthusiast, and most obvious of all, a strong family man. But even if you only knew of Ted or saw him at a distance working in the original red barn or the current greenhouses and gardens, you sensed the authentic warmth of his caring spirit, the sparkle of his delightful wit, and the sincerity of his genuine interest in people and life, in the earth, and in the community.

I know I speak for all St. Albertans in extending our sincere condolences to Her Honour and all members of Ted's family. We will miss Ted's warm smile, his kindly concern, and his regal-like accompaniment of Her Honour. Our neighbour and friend, may you rest in peace, Ted.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Canadian Unity

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In its early days Canada was a land full of promise, the promise of freedom, democracy, and wealth. It was this promise that led hundreds of thousands of people from all over the globe to settle in our cities, our towns, and our countryside. Since that time Canadians have been turning this promise into reality. We boast one of the highest living standards in the world, one of the highest life expectancies in the world, one of the lowest rates of poverty in the world, two of the best health and education systems in the world, and the fastest growing economy in the G-7. Together Canadians have turned this land of promise into one of the most vibrant and successful countries the world has ever seen. This country's achievements are beyond anything that could have been imagined over a hundred years ago. Even before Alberta was a province, Albertans have been leading the way in turning this land of promise into the country it is today. Our pioneering spirit has opened up this land and exposed the great wealth and treasures that it holds.

Albertans have never shied away from doing their part as Canadians. When our country needed us at Vimy or Dieppe, in Korea or Afghanistan, we were there. It is because of all this that I along with so many Albertans am perplexed by this government's disturbing turn towards increasing talk of separatism. From Kyoto to the gun registry to health care this government seems intent on using policy differences to promote a separatist agenda. In fact, many Albertans accuse this government of using separatist talk to avoid the real issues of energy, education, and health care. Without separatism the government would have to tell Albertans the truth about why the government spends so much, yet Albertans are faced with crumbling schools, roads, and hospitals.

Talk of separatism is dangerous. It sends a poor signal to the rest of Canada and only helps to fan the flames of separation in Alberta. Our commitment to Canada should be unwavering. Canada is a family, with each province a member of that family. This government talks about supporting our friends. I wish this government would show a little more support for our family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Small Business Entrepreneurs

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We hear a lot about the unemployed or people with low income, for whom life, in fact, is a very difficult challenge indeed. About the only thing worse than being unemployed and flat broke, however, is actually being employed at the job I am going to describe. Imagine having a job in which you work 60 to 80 hours a week under great stress with heavy responsibilities to many people, forced to put up with abusive and condescending bosses, living in fear of your landlord, your creditors, government people but unable to quit this job, at least not without declaring personal bankruptcy first or suffering major financial loss. For all this you are being paid nothing. Despite the zero income, however, you may still be required to pay a shocking amount of taxes to your government, far more than most will ever pay.

It can even get worse. Even if you are virtually destitute, no money even for groceries, you do not qualify for any government social safety nets at all. If you do become unemployed from this job, you won't qualify for unemployment insurance either, even though you likely paid way more into it than most.

I'm talking about the situation that thousands upon thousands of small business entrepreneurs find themselves in when their big dream of success turns into a nightmare instead. What are the numbers? Well, I can tell you that approximately 4,000 businesses in Calgary alone discontinue their licences each and every single year, and they didn't do that because they were successful. Only about one in five actually ever succeed at this job, Mr. Speaker, and thank God they do, because the wealth of this entire country depends on that one out of five that succeeded.

I wonder: if we had a project that set out to double the success rate of small businesses from one out of five to two out of five, wouldn't that theoretically double the rate of wealth creation in this country and therefore our national wealth eventually? With double the income think what we could do about poverty for everyone else in this country, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

2:40 Automobile Insurance Premiums

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Automobile insurance premiums in this province are becoming increasingly unaffordable. Skyrocketing premium rates, increasing claim costs, and insurance companies handpicking clients create hardship for Albertans. In recent months some insurance companies stopped taking new vehicle insurance clients due to high claim costs. Meanwhile, car insurance rates are rising 10 to 30 percent a year. This is utterly unacceptable.

The government of Alberta has an obligation to help alleviate the burden of outrageous car insurance premiums on its citizens not only for the sake of those citizens but also for the sake of the public purse. If Albertans can't obtain insurance due to skyrocketing prices or are simply being turned down for trivial reasons, then some people may unfortunately choose to drive without insurance. Most folks likely won't do this, but those who can no longer afford to drive to work may have to take a lower paying job closer to home, or they may not be able to work at all. The government of this province cannot stand idly by and do nothing about an insurance industry that's been forced to put its product beyond the reach of Alberta drivers.

I have suggested to the Minister of Government Services and I continue to encourage this government to immediately form an all-party committee to study Alberta's automobile insurance industry and endeavour to find a solution. Alberta is not alone in its struggle to help consumers get fair and equitable deals with insurance companies while still allowing those businesses to make a profit, but I'm sure this province can lead the country in finding a mutually beneficial arrangement.

Let's stop spinning our wheels and start making tracks toward a solution. It's the Alberta and the Liberal way. Thank you.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I hereby submit five copies of the report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts for the Second Session of the 25th Legislature covering the committee's activities in 2002.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday when next we meet, whatever that Monday is, I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I'm also giving notice that on that same Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do also stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today at the request of Glen Allan school council executive to table a letter that they have forwarded to me relative to education funding and the education that children are receiving.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a report from the Bank of Montreal entitled In Search of Canada's Small Business Hotbeds which was released this month. The study points out that among smaller populations Lloydminster and Grande Prairie have two of the fastest growing small business sectors in all of Canada. As well, Calgary and Edmonton were ranked number 1 and number 2 in both the number of small businesses per capita and the growth of small business ventures. This report obviously reflects the Alberta spirit of innovation and that this government has done the right thing to bring in jobs and create a positive environment for businesses to establish themselves, continue working, and grow.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 2002 annual report of the Alberta Association of Architects.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table on behalf of three teachers that I've been meeting with over the course of the last year on a regular basis to discuss issues with respect to education a document which shows their concerns relative to class sizes and staffing issues for the Earl Buxton school in my constituency.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Chad Willms from Lethbridge, who is very concerned about the development in Evan-Thomas within the Kananaskis valley. He would like it stopped.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a brief letter addressed to the Right Honourable Premier. It is from Michael Kurjata in Edmonton-Gold Bar, and it concerns the lack of funding for public education.

The second letter I have is also addressed to the hon. Premier, and it is from Dean Rosychuk, a professional engineer from 102A Avenue in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. This individual is a parent of a grade 8 student in the French immersion program at Kenilworth school and is very concerned about the lack of proper funding for public schools.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. The mail keeps flowing in on education issues. My first tabling today is a copy of a letter signed by Trina Chrzanowski and 22 others urging me to stand up for the Edmonton public school board and demand adequate funding.

The second is a copy of a letter to the Premier, a very interesting letter from a recent immigrant to Edmonton from the United States to work at the university. She's very concerned about the decline of education in Edmonton.

The third is from Donna Provost, urging action on education funding.

The fourth is from Ryan Dunkley, who says "I am becoming more and more saddened by the state of education in our province."

The final one is to both the Premier and the Minister of Learning from Judith Nyrose, expressing concern with the shortfall in funding from the Alberta government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter from Dr. Donald Smith, a professor of history at the University of Calgary. The letter is addressed to the Minister of Community Development, who is in charge of parks in addition to other responsibilities. Professor Smith is asking the minister what's holding him back from consultation with the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, which is the naming authority in the province for parks. Furthermore, he wonders why the minister doesn't adopt the Parks Canada protocol, which "in order to avoid any suggestion of political favoritism, does not allow the naming of federal parks after individuals."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a letter from Mr. William H. Percy of Stettler dated March 10, 2003, addressed to his MLA regarding jumps in natural gas prices. He writes that it is time for the Conservative government to face up to the complaints from consumers and small businesses and deliver on their election promises with rebates.

Thanks.

head: Projected Government Business

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, we would ask that the government share with us the business for the week of April 7, when we return to this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The projected government business for the week when we next meet, whenever that week might be, would be as follows. On Monday the afternoon would be private members' business, the usual Written Questions and Motions for Returns, followed by Public Bills and Orders other than Government Bills and Orders. The evening would continue with Motions Other than Government Motions for the first part of the evening and then continue with Government Bills and Orders, perhaps a government motion on Standing Order changes, second reading of bills 23 and 24, Committee of the Whole for Bill 22, and third reading of Bill 22 should that be necessary.

The Tuesday afternoon would be consumed with Government Bills and Orders and Government Motions. Of course, there is a possibility that if that particular Tuesday happens to be April 8, then we would have a budget presentation around 3:30 p.m. Following on with the Tuesday evening, Government Bills and Orders at 8, Government Motions, the Leader of the Official Opposition in response to the budget, perhaps some motion on electoral boundaries, and second reading of bills 33, 34, and 35.

On Wednesday, April 9, the afternoon will be Government Bills and Orders with Committee of Supply, we expect, and the Legislative Assembly estimates following up with opposition designates. I'm not sure what that will be yet, but I suspect Revenue will be one of them. Wednesday evening would be Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply. That would be Innovation and Science, I assume, should that happen to be day 2 of 24. We'll have to wait and see.

Thursday afternoon would be Government Bills and Orders. Again, we'll have to wait and confirm, but I expect that would be Committee of Supply, and that would be day 3 of 24. I think the opposition will be designating an appropriate department for that time. It likely may be Gaming.

So that's as much information as I have at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order.

Point of Order
Clarification

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(h) and perhaps (i). I don't have the Blues in front of me, but it seems to me that in an exchange between the Premier and the Member for Edmonton-Centre the Premier either made an allegation or perhaps imputed a false motive. I would like to put it on the record that my husband and his company are duly registered as lobbyists in those jurisdictions requiring it and will be very pleased to register here once a registry has been established in this province, as it should be.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I don't have the Blues at my disposal either, but I was privy to the answer that the Premier gave, and I don't think any allegation was imputed one way or the other against any member of this House nor, for that matter, against any consultants or lobbyists or whatever they may wish to be called.

I happen to know all three of the individuals that were referenced by the Premier, and I think that if you'll reflect back – and I'm sure Hansard will bear this out – the Premier was highly complimentary to those three individuals. They have done outstanding work for a number of organizations I would think. In particular, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie's husband is an exceptional consultant and a very good friend to I would think almost the whole Assembly here. He does outstanding work, as does a former Member for Edmonton-Manning and the former Member for Calgary-Shaw. These are outstanding individuals who work hard on behalf of Albertans.

I think that we frequently have positive things said during Recognitions. We have positive things said during Members'

Statements, and occasionally it's okay to say positive things during question period as well. So perhaps this might be viewed more as a point of clarification. I certainly do not personally think that there's any cause for a point of order, but I'll leave it up to your wisdom to decide that in your own good way, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, it sounds like a love-in to me, but what the Blues actually say – this affords an opportunity for a lesson; how's that? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre says in her lines: "will the Premier agree that at a . . ." Just remember those words: "will the Premier agree that at". Then the Premier coming back at one point in his response:

Mr. Speaker, I would point out: is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie suggesting, for instance, that her husband lose his livelihood because he is a consultant along with a former member of this Legislature, this government caucus, Jon Havelock, and a former member of I believe the Liberal caucus, Peter Sekulic. With all due respect he does a marvelous job. We hire him, the private sector hires him, nonprofit organizations hire him, and he does a wonderful job in representing whatever he has to represent.

Well, sounds to me like quite an endorsement. But the interesting thing about this – there is no point of order, by the way, in the one raised, but there could have been two points of order raised out of this. So, hence, the lesson.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre said: "Will the Premier agree that at a . . ." Now, it's quite clear that the rules prohibit the seeking of opinions, and they are certainly not permissible under the rules. House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 427 and Beauchesne's 409(3) would prohibit the seeking of an opinion in a question. The question might have been ruled out of order.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie might also have risen on a point of order basically saying that it is totally unacceptable to name a person in this Assembly who is not present and not able to defend themselves, but then that would have ruled out virtually all the tablings today, too, because everybody who made a tabling today mentioned somebody's name.

Dr. Taft: With permission. For information.

The Speaker: No, no, no. There's no such thing as for information.

The preambles and the personal references are very clear in the House of Commons Procedure and Practice at page 524 and Beauchesne's paragraph 493(4).

So while there was no point of order on the point of order raised, there could very easily have been two points of order raised, and all I'd say is: just give some careful consideration to this swinging sword that's sharp on both sides. It cuts both ways.

Spring Recess

10. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns on Thursday, March 27, 2003, at the regular hour of 5:30 p.m., it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 7, 2003, at 1:30 p.m.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as per Standing Order 18(2) and 18(3) such a motion is not debatable.

[Government Motion 10 carried]

head: Second Reading

Bill 22

Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 10: Dr. Massey]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services to close the debate.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just taking leave to speak to second reading and to close debate on Bill 22. This amendment is a very straightforward amendment. It removes the stipulation of the maximum number of members that may sit on a child and family services authority board. With the number of regions going from 18 to 10, this will allow us to ensure adequate community representation on the boards. I feel very confident that when this bill passes, we will be able to ensure the governance and the consistency of representation through the differing needs of each region.

Therefore, I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 22.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a second time]

Bill 18

Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to rise and move second reading of the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003.

Alberta is known and respected worldwide for its land tenure and royalty collection systems. It is a fact that other jurisdictions from around the world regularly come to Alberta to learn about our tenure and royalty systems. These systems ensure industry competitiveness and provide Albertans with a fair return for the development of their resources. Revenue from the oil and gas industry is critical to this province's economic prosperity. For the 2001-2002 fiscal year the Department of Energy collected $6.227 billion in bonuses, royalties, and rent on behalf of the people of Alberta.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, these amendments will improve the management and administration of the Crown's mineral rights and will optimize benefits to Albertans. One key element in Alberta's success in this area is certainty. Investors want and need to know what the rules are before they make their investments. Those rules are generally laid out clearly in legislation and regulations; however, there are always areas where those rules have not kept up to date with changes in technology or markets. Some are also found in the common law, which investors may not always find or which may not be as clear as legislation. This bill clarifies some important points that are existing policy or are existing common law in the view of the government and are how this province currently practises. This will provide certainty and reduce any uncertainty as to who is entitled to what or under what regulations they pay their royalties on production.

The bill makes it clear which Crown mineral rights leaseholder has the rights to natural gas in areas with coal or with oil sands. Natural gas found separated from the bitumen in the oil sands at original conditions is part of the natural gas lease, while any additional gas that evolves from the bitumen as it is produced is part of the oil sands lease. In other words, natural gas produced out of sandstone, shale, coal, or other rock is part of the natural gas lease.

These are the policies of the government today and the practices of government and industry. They will now be there in black and white for any investor to see when they decide on an oil sands, natural gas, or coal project. You may note that the holder of a coal lease today can produce natural gas for safety reasons to remove it from a mining development. That safety precaution is continued.

One of the cornerstones of Alberta's land tenure system is that industry has access to a fair and level playing field. It becomes unfair if someone trespasses on unsold Crown minerals by drilling a well into them deliberately or in error. Doing that can result in that person having more information than other potential bidders or even producing minerals that they have no right to. Current provisions to deal with trespass have not always been an effective deterrent. A significant and effective deterrent is required because these situations are difficult to detect and can result in revenue loss to the Crown both as a direct result of the wrongful recovery of Crown minerals and also as a result of lower bonuses paid to the Crown for mineral agreements. You can imagine the effect of someone's bidding strategy if as a result of trespassing they already know that it's a dry hole. The proposed amendments to the Mines and Minerals Act will improve the Crown's ability to respond when someone explores for or produces Crown minerals without authority.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main objectives is to ensure that our good corporate citizens can continue to do business in Alberta for the economic benefit of all Albertans. In keeping with our desire to provide certainty to investors, these amendments will do just that. As such, another key amendment is an enhancement to the provisions around collection of royalties. This bill will codify joint liability of Crown leases and provide procedural flexibility to remove the administration of collections. It will also allow the minister to redirect funds owed to a person and apply that money to any outstanding debts that person might have to another branch of the government, expand and clarify the application of provisions related to royalty and tax recalculation by the Crown, and also ensure that a company cannot transfer their interests to a lease to absolve themselves of a debt. Any debt will flow through to the transferee.

Another significant change to these acts deals with the Limitations Act. The recent Limitations Act has created some doubt as to how time limits imposed by that act for initiating legal actions in court impact existing time limitations provided under the Mines and Minerals Act and the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Act. This bill excludes or specifies time limitations for initiating legal actions under the acts from the limitation periods specified in the Limitations Act. The time periods under these acts to complete calculations and assessments of royalty, mineral tax, and related interest or penalties are well understood and accepted by the industry and the Crown and were designed with industry business practices in mind as well as this government's business needs of ensuring complete and accurate payment of royalties, taxes, and penalties. The existing periods, generally four years, are not exceptional, and they have generally worked well through the years. The bill will exempt these practices from the Limitations Act.

Issues of trespass can take years to detect. The bill specifies specific limitations once a trespass has been documented. Issues of mineral ownership, primarily between the federal government and Alberta, can also take years to resolve. The bill exempts these cases from the Limitations Act.

Mr. Speaker, gas storage helps smooth peaks and valleys in production activity and gas prices while enhancing security of supply. The bill will reduce administrative barriers and barriers of uncertainty to entering into storage arrangements. This legislation allows the use of depleted oil and gas reservoirs for storage but speaks generally in terms of recovery of minerals. This bill amends the act to make it clearer for people interested in developing storage that there is legislation for use of these reservoirs for storage purposes. The bill also clarifies that use of a reservoir for storage continues the leases granting the rights to the reservoir.

Mr. Speaker, in 1949 all coal mines were required to sell coal to Alberta residents for their domestic needs at market prices at their plant gate. At that time, coal was a common domestic fuel. This in theory requires all coal mines to have the equipment and processes to be able to do this today even if no one is asking for it. This bill continues the requirement but provides the ministerial discretion as to which coal mines need to be able to sell coal for domestic needs.

Finally, the Fees and Charges Review Committee has asked the government to comply with an Ontario court ruling to specify where money collected as a penalty is properly identified. In fact, Mr. Speaker, these amendments will do just that.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with interest that I rise this afternoon to participate in the debate on Bill 18, the Energy Statutes Amendment Act, 2003. Certainly, I appreciate the words from the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow in regard to this amendment act.

We're talking about the Mines and Minerals Act and the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Act, and certainly there is merit in providing clarity in the rules for all investors in this province. When we consider the influence and the amount of money that is being invested by the energy industry from around the world in this province, it's certainly a strong vote of confidence not only now but well into the future for the energy industry in this province. We have to be very careful. I believe I was looking at Economic Development, their department and their annual report from last year, and close to half of the activity in this province was generated from the oil industry and the gas industry, and that's reason enough to provide clarity in the rules for investors.

Whenever you compare this province and this country to other jurisdictions around the world and whenever there are investors that say: oh, well, if we don't get our way, we're going to move on . . . We have a very stable, secure investment climate in this province. You look at the situation around the globe. You look at the current situation in the Middle East, particularly in Iraq and in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, large oil-producing nations. Then you compare them to us. Certainly we have modest reserves when you count up their reserves, but people want to do business here, and it's our political stability that provides that.

If you look at Venezuela and those arguments made last year, late last fall: oh my gosh, we're going to take our money and invest it in Venezuela. Well, there have been a series of political upheavals in that country that certainly make Alberta even more attractive now than it was in October.

Mr. Speaker, you look at some of the enormous potential that's left in the former republics of the Soviet Union as far as oil and gas development go, but there's considerable economic risk in putting your money there for development because you don't know the politics of the region. It was not long ago that there was a gas field developed in Russia, and no sooner was the last well X-rayed in the gathering system than a local group of bandits took it over. So we have to heed the words of the hon. member when the Member for Calgary-Bow discusses the fact that we have a regulatory regime that is admired and I believe copied from other parts of the world.

When we look at some of the ways we can improve that system, we have to look at royalty collection. We have to ensure that recommendations from previous Auditor General's reports are being looked at and are being considered in this bill, and I don't know, Mr. Speaker, if they are or not. You know, whenever we talk about providing legislative clarity for investors to ensure that the rules are clear and effective, if someone drilling a well, taxpayers, and those who have mineral rights have their rights protected, that's fine. But when you consider the investors, you also have to consider those who own the resources, and that's the taxpayers and citizens of this province. As I understand it – and I'm a member of the opposition, and I'm told nothing and taken nowhere – there is a new process in place, and there's a lot of electronic filing. I think it's all electronic filing now as far as gas and oil production and royalty calculation.

Getting back to the Auditor General, the Auditor General has been persistent in pointing out that there have been some problems in the past, and I'm not convinced that those problems are being addressed in this bill. Now, perhaps they are and during the course of the debate I will change my mind, but I'm not convinced that this is going far enough whenever we look at some of the past recommendations from the Auditor General's report.

How much money are we losing as owners of the resource? I have no idea. I know they're not significant, but they're certainly 1 or 2 percent losses noted in certain production records of oil and gas, and I have enough concern about that, Mr. Speaker, that I have put forward a motion to deal precisely with that.

I would like to see – and perhaps it would be at the appropriate time a suitable amendment for Bill 18 – an individual meter placed on each oil or gas well in this province, and the meters would vary in expense of course, Mr. Speaker, because of the location and the service that is provided. It would have a lot to do with the pressure of the well and the size of the gathering system which is being fed by that well, the flow rate. All these factors would affect the cost of the meter, but certainly to put a meter at each wellhead I don't think is out of line. We have a gas meter for every individual user of natural gas in this province, and we seem to be able to live with that. So that is what I would propose to do, and this Bill 18 may give a person a chance to let all Assembly members have a good look at that idea of how we can improve our system in Alberta.

When we consider the pressure that is on the government to deliver public health care and public education and all sorts of programs, we have to ensure that as the oil and the natural gas is depleted, we are getting maximum return on that depleting nonrenewable resource. Perhaps we should consider what this bill is going to do, and perhaps we should consider strengthening it. Certainly, this bill also deals with incorrect tax calculations and defines the limitation period for actions under the Freehold Mineral Rights Tax Act, but at the same time here I see that section 3(3) is being repealed and the following is to be substituted. Perhaps instead of "may" the minister "shall" recalculate the tax, interest, and penalties, as the case may be, and send a new tax statement to the owner. I don't think that this should be just left up to the minister. I think that the minister on behalf of all the citizens of this province should be obligated in this statute to do exactly that, Mr. Speaker.

Now, certainly, I would also like to know why we need this bill. How much money is at stake now? Is it a few dollars, or is it millions? Like, what's going on here? Is it a major problem? Are we having many incorrect tax calculations? It would be wonderful to have before this Assembly just exactly how much money is at stake here. I think that in light of some of the budget restraints and the cutting back and the – what is this called? – stop-and-go spending by this government or roller-coaster budgeting, up and down, yo-yo budgeting – there are any number of terms for this – if there are significant amounts of money at stake here, I think the public would be very, very interested in knowing that. For that reason, I would be very interested in hearing, perhaps if not from the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow then from another hon. member of this Assembly, exactly what sort of sum we're dealing with here.

Further, as I go through this bill, I have another question, and hopefully it'll be answered. Mr. Speaker, it deals with the substituted section 38, calculations and recalculations. In going through this act, I would like to know at this time who will be authorized by the regulations to make a request in writing for calculation, recalculation, or additional calculation. If that could be answered in due time, I would be very grateful.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, those are some of the initial questions I have in going through Bill 18 at this time. I can't dispute what the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow had to say earlier about having a system that all parties are comfortable with. When we consider all parties, we have to take special interest in protecting the financial interest of the owners of the resource, because this is a resource that is being depleted. The golden goose is aging. The western Canadian sedimentary basin is now a mature area for oil and gas production, and we have to ensure that we get as much life out of that golden goose as possible and as much return to the citizens of this province as possible. After the oil and gas are gone – and I worked all my adult life in the oil industry all around the world. The oil and gas industry is very mobile, and it will go where the resource is. So whenever this basin matures, good-bye to Alberta and hello to the next jurisdiction. We have to make sure that Bill 18 is suitable at this time for the interests of all citizens.

Now, you know, the changes proposed in this bill are, as I understand it, based on problems that have arisen around the normal course of business as conducted in the field. I would also question the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow regarding a court case. I believe it was with – and I could be wrong on this and can certainly stand corrected – Gulf oil and gas around Fort McMurray. The legal question was: who owns the gas underneath the tar sands or the bitumen mines? There were some legal questions around that. Does this bill satisfy those legal requirements? Also, the venting off or the bleeding off or the collection of gas from coal fields and the safety issues that surround that are of interest to this member.

Certainly, I was very interested in the statements regarding coal and the obligations of coal companies in I guess you could call it the coal gate. Albertans could go and get coal there. With this energy deregulation policy that this government is persistent in pursuing, coal may become again, because of cost, a major home heating source for citizens. I think it would be a step in the wrong direction, but I also think energy deregulation is a step in the wrong direction.

Now, in regard to the venting for safety issues, how exactly is this going to affect the development of the coal bed methane industry in this province? I know the Minister of Energy is working. He's as busy as a beaver, Mr. Speaker, getting studies done and economic reports conducted on the potential for coal bed methane in this province. It's going to be interesting to see how this develops.

Certainly, we could compare the development of the coal bed methane industry in this province, which is in its infancy, to energy deregulation in America. Coal bed methane has been under production in the Powder River basin in America, south of us, mostly in the state of Wyoming, but that basin goes a little bit farther north than that. There have been significant problems with that, but the results, as the hon. Minister of Energy told me in estimates last year – I think that 8 percent was the quote. Eight percent of the lower 48's gas production is coming from coal bed methane, but there's the issue surrounding water and surrounding leases. Apparently, you need quite a bit of public land in order to get a coal bed methane system going. You need a lot of wells. You have to have more wells than you do for a gas field. But they're dealing with this in America. They've made some mistakes, and I certainly hope we're going to not make the same mistakes. The Americans made mistakes with energy deregulation, and we followed through blindly and made the same mistakes. I'm hoping that we're not going to do that with coal bed methane.

I see, with the right conditions, a very bright future for coal bed methane. If the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow could explain to me the implications for the development of the coal bed methane industry in this province, I would be very grateful. Certainly, you know, methane is a dedicated source of fuel for electricity generation. Perhaps the Minister of Energy has already got a policy on this, and I would be surprised and delighted to see that policy, because it would reduce, as I understand it, our greenhouse gas emissions, Mr. Speaker. [interjection] Well, we could have this as part of our provincial strategy on Kyoto. It certainly would work into the plan, and maybe that is part of the government's plan. Perhaps this Bill 18 is a quiet part of that plan. I don't know for sure, but I guess, as I said earlier, that only time will tell.

Whenever we think of the potential for coal bed methane and when we think that there are estimated remaining established reserves of natural gas of 43 trillion cubic feet and that the National Energy Board predicts that the unconventional supplies of natural gas will be required by 2008 to meet rising demand – and that's not much beyond the next election; that day is coming very quickly – we could have almost double that amount, if not greater, in potential coal bed methane reserves. So for the hon. member to stand up and tell me that my cautions about this bill are wrong would be delightful in light of how important this energy industry is.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll have a few comments on Bill 18. I appreciated the comments, the wise words of wisdom from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Zwozdesky: As always.

Dr. Taft: As always, as the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek says.

It's an important bill. Anything having to do with the royalties and the management of Alberta's petroleum reserves is an important bill. Anything addressing the way royalties are calculated . . . [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, you're having some competition from your own side as well as the other side, and I wondered if in the stillness of the afternoon we could abide by the rule of only one person talking at a time.

Dr. Taft: They can't help themselves, Mr. Speaker. They're responding to my comments, I'm sure. Support and applause: I'm sure that's what's intended.

So to get back to my comments, I was saying that this is an important bill. The issues involved are complicated because of the stakes. The stakes are very high. The thing that's at stake here is the very future of society in Alberta, the very future of our economy, the future of our prosperity, the size of the population, the quality of the environment. All those kinds of things are at stake here. So these kinds of bills are of enormous importance, and it's going to take us some time to sort out all the issues that are involved in this piece of legislation. A few have already come up in the brief comments that have been directed towards this bill, and I would add a few of my own.

Now, to the extent that this perhaps simultaneously streamlines and tightens the management of the royalty system and the Mines and Minerals Act in the province, to the extent that that happens, it will be a good thing. As usual, though, it's a bit hard to tell exactly where this legislation is going to end up, because so much of it is passed over to regulations, passed through the Lieutenant Governor in Council; in other words, through cabinet. I don't believe those regulations have been made public. I'm not sure they've even been established yet. So we are, as unfortunately so often happens in this Legislature, debating something about which we are only given partial knowledge, and I find that difficult and frustrating.

There has been a lot of debate around the management of the royalties of Alberta's energy resources, petroleum resources. I have had discussions with various people about the royalty regime for the oil sands plants, and I think there are some serious questions that we need to stay on top of with those royalties. Frankly, many critics would say that the current system, which allows these huge corporations to build their plants by financing them through a royalty concession and therefore at public cost, is too generous, that in fact the bottom line of that is that the public is paying for those oil sands plants. People on the other side will argue that what we're doing is putting in place the infrastructure so that down the road the royalties will flow into the provincial treasury and that if we didn't give those enormous royalty concessions, we wouldn't have those plants built. I think there's merit on both sides, but I am concerned that we have put in place a deal with oil sands royalties that needs to be very, very closely watched. I'm concerned that over the years there's room for abuse of that system.

Those kinds of principles come to bear on all of the management questions about royalties on all of Alberta's gas and oil reserves. Are we putting in place mechanisms that can ensure that the legislation and regulations are properly enforced? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, for example, suggested metering on every producing well, and that sounds like a reasonable request. I know that I have had people approach me, people with considerable experience and expertise in the field, expressing a lot of concern that we are not sufficiently enforcing the royalty rates in Alberta, and as a result an important volume of oil and gas is produced and slips through the cracks of the system, and the public never collects the royalty on that oil or gas. That's just a complete write-off to the public treasury and a direct subsidy to producers if that is happening, and certainly questions have been brought to my attention on this issue.

I also would like just to raise a different question here, and I'm going off some comments made by the Member for Calgary-Bow when she spoke about, as I understood it, drilling through layers of resources. Perhaps you're seeking oil at the bottom of those layers – it's the deepest layer – and you might go through gas. Then the question arises: how is that gas managed? How are royalties charged on it? How do we ensure that the public purse gets full value for that gas?

A few weeks ago I heard of a different sort of situation, but in principle it's related, and I think that given the work of the Minister of Environment on water resources, it's very timely. I was told recently of a farmer who has tremendous concern because an oil well has gone through the water aquifer and is disrupting the water flow for the farmer. In fact, it's not just disrupting it.

Mr. Smith: Do you have proof of that?

Dr. Taft: The Minister of Energy is asking me if I have proof of that, and I guess I'll have to wait till committee, but I do. I know the exact case, and I'd be interested in his uptake on the issue. Maybe we can follow that up at a later date.

This farmer's perspective or view of the situation – and the farm is in central Alberta northeast of Red Deer – is that the farmer didn't even know that the oil company had put in a water well. There were several oil wells on this piece of land. They all looked the same. It turned out after the fact that one of them is pumping water that the oil company, as I understand it, is using to increase the flow in the oil wells. So we are losing the water resource, the farmer is losing the water resource, and I throw that issue out here. I don't know if it would ever relate specifically to this amendment, but the principle is the same, where we have an oil well going down through various layers of resources to that pool of oil. What happens to all the resources that that oil well encounters on the way down? It may not just be natural gas. It could be water. It could be something else. So it would be interesting to know how we as a province manage that kind of an issue.

I've read recently of new technologies of metering, photonic metering, and that may allow us to more precisely and easily measure what flows out of Alberta's oil wells and gas wells and coal bed methane production and so on and ensure that we are collecting a fair royalty from that resource. So metering is an important issue that's going to come up: the actual rates themselves, how those will be audited, what happens to collateral resources that are encountered in this work, how royalties will be administered. Ultimately, as the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said, it would be fascinating to know the total value of what's at stake here. We're talking about tens of billions of dollars. It's a huge, huge issue for us. I know there are many, many other pieces of legislation that affect that industry, but this is one of those, and it is of direct relevance.

Those are some of the principles that I think we'll be pursuing as we go into committee, questions we'll be asking. Maybe the government members can anticipate some of those issues and help us with the answer.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that we adjourn debate on this bill at this time. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order. For the benefit of those in the gallery this is the informal part of the Assembly. Members are allowed to move around, so they won't necessarily be in the seat that you see if you have a diagram. This is where we are allowed to go through a bill clause by clause and to propose amendments and that kind of thing.

Bill 22

Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2003

The Chair: So without further ado, are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. I just have a few comments here. I'd like to get on record my concern that there is a trend developing in the government towards a series of regions in the province, co-ordinated boundaries for regional health authorities, for children's authorities, and down the road I am concerned that we may see the same thing being imposed on municipalities, on school boards, and who knows what else. So I have concerns that this bill is a step in a fundamental restructuring of the way that this province is organized and the way that we govern ourselves and may be part of a larger scheme this government has to create a handful of fiefdoms, they could be called, around the province through which all public services are administered.

If that is the trend here – there's certainly been speculation on that possibility with school boards and speculation, I think, fed by some government members at some point on that same possibility with municipal governments. So I'm not sure that that's what the citizens of Alberta want. Whether it is what they want or not, they should be openly consulted on this process, and I don't think there was much consultation at all on the rearranging of the boundaries and the board structure for the children's services authorities. So those are some concerns I have there.

I am also of course concerned about the erosion of local representation on these authorities. I know this bill is intended to help those authorities retain some local representation, but we are seeing a consolidation of power in this province and to fewer and fewer democratic structures. We're seeing more and more boards appointed by this government having more and more power, more and more money to spend, more and more information on the intimate details of people's lives, whether it's Children's Services, whether it's health, whether it's perhaps down the road a school or a municipal government. So if this is part of a pattern towards creating a handful of regions in this province, all of which would be governed by handpicked appointees from this government, I think the government should come clear and consult openly and freely and see if that's what the citizens of this province want.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Evans: Just a very brief comment, Mr. Chairman. The intent of this amendment to the Child and Family Services Authority Act is to add representation given the expanded nature of the authorities. In the consultation process for selecting board members, there has been a panel selected from other publicly elected or appointed officials, and the consultant that has been involved, the hon. member opposite will be delighted to know, has in fact been a candidate federally for the party which the hon. member serves as a part and has certainly been involved.

Dr. Taft: Point of order.

Point of Order Clarification

The Chair: A point of order has been called, hon. minister. So Edmonton-Riverview will explain his point of order, and then you'll have a chance to rebut. Then we'll go back to you after a decision is made.

Your citation, hon. member?

Dr. Taft: Just give me a moment here. Is it 23(h), (i), and (j)? Oh, we've heard them all before. I just would like to make clear to the minister two or three things. There is no connection between the federal Liberal Party and the party which I belong to. I am not now nor have I ever been a member of the federal Liberal Party. So I would appreciate her correcting the record on that.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. member, that indeed is not really a point of order. At best it could be called a point of clarification, and on that basis we'll not ask for the other side, hon. minister, if that's okay with you. You may proceed with your comments.

Ms Evans: Thank you for the clarification. Clearly, Mr. Chairman, I meant no insult to the hon. member, and I do retract.

Ms Evans: I would just point out that this establishes no trend. We had consulted with the boards six months into the new year in 2002, endeavouring to elicit from them their attitudes about some consolidation.

One additional point. The boards when struck originally were recognized as having certain constraints to being efficiently structured because of the sparsity that related to some of those boards. So the following through with the same pattern as the health authorities was done to continue to keep administrative efficiencies there but in no way meant any disregard for the communities. In fact, over the last year we've added additional dollars through family and community support services to provide prevention for children having to be served in the child welfare system.

Again, Mr. Speaker, the intent of this amendment is to enable us to provide more adequately and a more expanded membership for those boards so that we can serve the very disparate regions that are available.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I just want to raise a couple of points very briefly while we're in Committee of the Whole. I know that the Official Opposition critic on this bill has already spoken at second and had advised members of this caucus to approve the bill and allow it to move along quickly, which we've been happy to do today. I wanted to make just a couple of points, or perhaps the minister could see them as questions that could be answered in third reading.

When the idea of the children's health authorities was being contemplated, there was a great deal of discussion and organization around a fourth pillar, which was aboriginal. That seems to have been diluted or perhaps even fallen by the wayside. When I look at Bill 22, the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2003, a bill that is looking to increase the number of representatives on any given children's health authority, I wonder what is happening to that fourth pillar, that was to be an aboriginal pillar.

I will also echo the concern – and this leads out of this bill but may not be specific to this bill – that we're seeing a wider move to establishing regions in the province. I agree with the Member for Edmonton-Riverview that if in fact this is what's going on, then I think we should fess up on it. Part of my concern when we went from I think actually 18 children's authorities down to 10 – when I hear of funneling down of administrative authorities, which is what this is, I'm reminded of amalgamations that we have seen, bringing together a larger group into a smaller group, in other parts of the country. I think the lessons that we've learned from some of them are that we really need to make sure that the representation continues, which is in fact what the minister is trying to accomplish with this bill, that even though we've now got 10 authorities instead of 18, the representation from a larger authority continues on the board and that the representation is good.

However, I question whether it will create administrative efficiencies, because when you take a large enough area, you in fact have to go back and put more people in place so that you are still in touch with the outer regions, and we then create two layers. We've got the new layer that was created, and then we end up with a sublayer in every single little area that needed to be pulled together just so that we can keep up with that representation and the strong connection back to the many little communities that are made up here. In fact, it ends up costing more because you end up having the 10 regional authorities, but then the authorities themselves are each now going to have to go back and set up little sort of satellite ones. That potentially could happen, so I think it's just something to guard against.

Those were the two issues that I'd wanted to raise when I looked at the bill briefly, and of course I wanted to state our intention of assisting the minister with speedy passage of the bill. The Official Opposition is often accused in this House of dragging things out. Therefore, I'm obliged to get up and put it on the record when we do actually facilitate reasonable movement. It's important to do that. In fact, I think it's fair to say that about 80 percent of the bills that pass through here do receive a fair amount of co-operation from the members of the Official Opposition and, indeed, speedy passage.

Thank you for the opportunity to make those points.

[The clauses of Bill 22 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

3:50

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 22.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 22.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 26 Corrections Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 26, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2003.

It is my hope that the amendments to the Corrections Act that I am proposing will enhance the safety of our corrections officers and our inmates by focusing on eliminating weapons and gang-related activities in our correctional facilities. In addition, these legislative changes may help inmates address their drug problems while they are serving in our correctional facilities. I fully acknowledge that a high percentage of inmates come into our correctional facilities with drug and alcohol problems. Often these problems are the basis of their criminal activities. For the sake of the inmates, their families, and the society as a whole, we provide programs and we provide counseling to try and address the inmate drug problems.

As well, these legislative changes may help our probation officers with inmates who have left one of our facilities. Inmates who have come to terms with their addiction and who recognize that they need help will be better able to benefit from community supervision.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the legislative amendments will not solve all the problems. However, I believe these changes will be an important additional tool to help inmates recover from their addictions. At present, we do provide drug and alcohol awareness programs for inmates. We also provide treatment for addictions under individual medically supervised addiction-withdrawal programs.

What I'm proposing is an additional method to help inmates, many of whom do not acknowledge that they need to keep clean and they need to keep sober, and that is to significantly reduce their ability to obtain drugs while they are in our facilities. I have called this a zero-tolerance policy for offender use or possession. A large part of the program will involve an introduction of random drug testing. This program will encourage inmates to remain drug free because they have a better chance of being caught.

Typically, penalties for offenders discovered with drugs include a period of time in segregation and loss of visiting privileges. Mr. Speaker, Bill 26 will ensure that in these cases internal disciplinary hearings will be held. The disciplinary board will be compelled to consider reducing earned remission as a punishment. Currently an inmate could potentially earn a third of their sentence off for simply serving their time. The amendments will ensure that an inmate will have to earn their time off with good behaviour. The loss of remission will be in addition to any criminal charges that may be laid. Loss of earned remission will also be another tool to help deal with offenders who demonstrate assaultive or threatening behaviour toward staff and other inmates. The same will go for the offender found with weapons or involved in gang-related activities.

Let me say a few words about gangs in our correctional facilities, Mr. Speaker. Gangs exist in our facilities. Various gangs use our jails to recruit their new members. We are facing a problem, and it is one that Bill 26 will help address.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I believe that random drug testing will act as a deterrent, it will help in surveillance, and it will help identify those inmates who need help. I believe that zero tolerance for weapons and gang-related violence will create a safer environment for both staff and offenders. Offenders need to fully appreciate that there are rules in place and that they are expected to live by them.

Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to bring forward this legislation and to have it debated in this Assembly. The amendments to the Corrections Act that I am proposing in Bill 26 will hold offenders fully accountable for their actions for the time, however short in comparison with federal penitentiaries, that they are incarcerated in Alberta correctional facilities.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to rise today and speak on behalf of this bill. Through you I urge all members of the Assembly to support this initiative.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise as the Official Opposition critic for the Solicitor General and speak in second reading to Bill 26, the Corrections Amendment Act, 2003. In speaking to the principle of the bill, I always look at bills to ask three questions. Is there a problem? Does it need legislation to fix it, or would legislation fix the problem? Thirdly, is this the legislation that would fix the problem?

I think the Solicitor General has outlined that there is a problem. I think we all know there's a problem, and if we don't, we haven't been paying much attention to the media. There's certainly a large problem with drugs in our provincial prisons and in the federal prisons. We know that there is gang activity and, even more chilling, that there is recruitment into gangs that happens in the prison system, and we know that there's a problem with violence and use of weapons against the staff and against other inmates. So is there a problem here that we need to be addressing? Absolutely. No question. I have to say that I'm pleased to see the government understanding that there is a problem and trying to do something about it.

My next question is: does it require legislation to fix the problem? If we know we've got drugs in prison and we know we've got gang activity and gang recruitment going on in prison and we have violence and the use of weapons, is legislation the tool to address these problems and to try and alleviate, minimize, or eradicate these problems? I think the answer is yes. We need to be able to empower the people that operate our provincial prisons to be able to put certain programs in place that work toward this, because we are dealing with a number of different constituencies here. We have the constituency of the prisoners, and those are people sentenced to provincial time, two years less a day. We have the constituency of the staff, who for the most part are employees of this government, employees of the Solicitor General's department. Under that, I would include support staff, administrative staff, janitorial, food preparation, et cetera. So that's the second constituency.

There is the affiliated constituency that comes from the family and friends of the first two, because certainly if the prisoners are affected or a staff member is affected by drug use that leads to disease, for example, or if someone is injured, that certainly affects the third constituency, which is their family and friends and, in fact, the wider public. Therefore, it is an issue that needs, I think, to be dealt with under legislation and to look for ways under legislation to make that possible, and that's not to say that there aren't programs that can be implemented without legislation. I think there are, and with political will and ingenuity there are a number of things that probably can be put in place without needing the legislation to do so.

Now, the final question is: is this the legislation that would accomplish all of that? This is where I start to struggle. In principle I'm certainly supportive of the minister's efforts in this area, but I feel that this legislation doesn't go far enough, and I have been critical of what is not contained in this bill that I feel should be contained in this bill. I'll put that on the record now.

What is in this bill as compared to a lot of things we've heard talked about as being in the bill but in fact are not specifically outlined here? What is in this bill is adding in the definition of illicit drugs, meaning alcohol or a controlled substance or any other substance that could be designated by the regulations. The definition of an illicit-drug test is added in. Then we get added into some of the sections things that people shouldn't do: bringing illicit drugs or causing illicit drugs to be brought into a correctional institution or possessing an illicit drug while in a correctional institutional, so bringing it in or having it on you. So those are the definitions that are added.

Then we have a series in the bill that is looking at implementing the ability through legislation to conduct random tests and specific tests for illicit drug consumption. It's being able to test people to see if they have drugs in their system, and there are two kinds of tests that are talked about or contemplated by the legislation. One is a random selection, and the second is very specific if someone has a reason to believe that an inmate is under the influence, if I may use those terms. There's a third section which is sort of a regulatory requirement that if we have an inmate going into a situation that requires that people are guaranteed to be clean, let's put it that way, so going into a community program or into, for example, an alcohol abuse reduction program where they're required to be clean, there's another reason to be testing them to make sure that they are.

So what we have so far are definitions, and we have testing for illicit drug use.

Then there's a section in the bill that discusses punishment and opens up some other areas that could be levied as punishment for inmates. The most obvious and specific one that's being opened by this amending bill is to talk about losing earned remission, and the minister had already spoken briefly about that, that there is a format, a program, a structure by which inmates for a particular good behaviour earn time off towards their whole sentence. What's being contemplated by this bill is that should they contravene any of the rules or the legislation or the regulations in fact, the board, the director, or a panel could now take away some of that earned time off for good behaviour, also known as earned remission. So that's really a punishment section.

Then we have a section that allows for the making of regulations around searches and drug testing. Essentially that's the end of the bill.

So I'm curious, and I look to the minister to point out where in the bill – or perhaps she contemplates it coming under regulations somehow – we have things laid out like zero tolerance on violence or zero tolerance on gangs, because the only place those are really spoken of or referred to in this act is around the punishment section, in which it's detailed: here are some considerations where people may have breached it, and if they do breach it, then we can consider looking at loss of remission as a punishment for it. But nowhere in this four-page bill – and actually on the fourth page there's one sentence that talks about proclamation only, so it's really a three-page bill – is it talking about and outlining a program or a legislative authority to do anything with gangs or violence or with drug use. Now, the minister rightly laid out that there are number of programs already available that don't require legislation to be implemented and are available currently in the corrections system.

[Mr. Renner in the chair]

The minister referred to eliminating weapons, but in fact there's nothing in the act that actually does anything to eliminate weapons. As I said, the only place weapons are mentioned is under the punishment section and its listing under section 5(2), an appropriate punishment that the panel can consider doing, including the loss of earned remission, if the regulations or rules of one of the following has been broken, and the possession or use of a weapon falls under that, 5(2)(d). So it's really talking about punishment. It's not talking about any activity to get rid of the use or possession of a weapon. It's assumed here that the inmates would know that they would be punished by losing their remission time and would therefore not bring weapons in or not use weapons, but there's nothing else really said in the bill about weapons.

So to say that there's zero tolerance for gang activity or for use of weapons or violence, it really just doesn't appear in the bill. The minister may well be contemplating that under regulations, but when

I look, knowing how fond I am of regulations, in the bill under what is being additionally authorized by the bill under the regulations section, that's where we're talking about the ability to carry out searches and the illicit drug tests. It's not adding anything else beyond that.

One of my largest concerns about what is not addressed in this bill is harm reduction strategies. Now, I have talked about this a great deal because I think it's important. I look to members of cabinet to understand and uphold that they have a number of people's welfare under their care and that there is a duty of care that is expected from the kinds of programs and activities that the cabinet authorizes. I'd like to refer to some work that was done by the Canadian HIV/AIDS Legal Network, and I'm going to quote from a news release that they put out last November, November 2002, and it's just a little description of what they do.

The Canadian HIV/AIDS Legal Network is a national organization engaged in education, legal and ethical analysis, and policy development, with over 250 organizational and individual members across Canada. In 1996, the Legal Network released HIV/AIDS in Prisons: Final Report, containing 88 recommendations about what Canada needs to do to prevent HIV transmissions and address injection drug use in prisons.

There was an updated report released in November of 2002 which assesses the progress that has been made in implementing these recommendations within the federal and the provincial/territorial prison systems. I'll also note that the legal network is a nongovernment organization in special consultative status with the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations. So no slouch, this bunch.

Their conclusions are worrying. They would be the ultimate authority in my opinion on how well we're doing with harm reduction strategies in either the federal or the provincial prison systems, and in fact Alberta is mentioned as part of their report card, and where they're mentioned is not happy news. But I will come back to that.

I note that as part of the preparation of this particular updated report card, those that were consulted in Alberta include the director of the temporary absence program from Alberta's Solicitor General correctional services division, the director of division support services from Alberta's Solicitor General correctional services division, and the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. They were all consulted in the preparation of this, so we have to assume that those are pretty good authorities, and I'm certainly willing to take their authority on this.

Now, when we look at what the problem is – and on this I'm quoting from page 66, Action on HIV/AIDS in Prisons: A Report Card. The conclusion of the report says:

Although the prevalence of HIV among Canadian prisoners is at least 10 times higher than in the general community, far from enough is being done to prevent the spread of HIV infection in prisons and to provide prisoners living with HIV or AIDS with adequate treatment, support and care.

This puts "prisoners, staff, and members of the public at risk of their lives," and remember I talked earlier about those three constituencies of people, and there you have it again: prisoners, staff, and members of the public. Those in fact were the words that started out the 1996 report, and they were not able to improve upon that much when they went back and looked at the 2002 report.

Into this mix you can tell that between '96 and 2002 we've had to add another factor in, and that's hepatitis C. So where we used to be concerned about HIV/AIDS, we now have to be concerned with hep C under the same circumstances, hepatitis C, which I'll shorten to hep C with your permission.

The problem that we have here is that we do not have a consistent, across-the-board implementation of what we call harm reduction strategies, and these are essentially denied to prisoners. So we've got jurisdictions that have just failed to embrace a harm reduction approach to drug use, and Alberta is one of them. That includes failing to provide adequate education to inmates about HIV and hep C.

I'll quote again from page 67 of the report:

Prison systems have a moral, but also a legal responsibility to act without further delay to prevent the spread of infectious diseases among prisoners, and to prison staff and the public, and to care for prisoners living with HIV and other infections.

There we have the hep C coming in again. So it talks very clearly about the protection of the prisoners and protection of the staff.

Further on in the report it reflects upon the fact that these people live in wider communities – that's the third constituency I was talking about – and points out that the governments that are in charge of these various prison systems have a duty of care, a responsibility to prevent the spread of HIV and, I would add, hep C among communities. Prisoners are a community, and they furthermore go out into a wider community when they are released. I've heard the minister say that the average length of stay in the provincial prison system is 36 days, so we potentially can have someone contract this disease and then send them out into a wider community in which further harm can be done. So, essentially, protection of prisoners is protection of all of our communities, and I think it's important to remember this.

In no way am I saying that drug use is okay or that it should be made legal or, you know, that it's excusable in any way, shape, or form. I'm not. But I am saying that if you cannot eradicate drug use in prison – and we haven't been able to. Nor has any other prison system been able to successfully eradicate their system of drug use, at least none that I'm aware of using legal means. So we have drugs in our system, and I think that to not be implementing harm reduction strategies when we know of shared needle use, for example, and the various ways that these diseases can spread and we let these prisoners back out into a community, potentially to infect further, is a neglect of duty that is not acceptable from a government who has lots of information available to them to tell them that this is the likely outcome of their activities. So I am pressing the minister to include harm reduction strategies into this legislation and into the programs that she's anticipating here.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

One of the issues that we struggle with the most is that the rate of infection of HIV and hep C in prisons is so much higher than in the outside population, and therefore the likelihood of it spreading is much higher because there are just more people infected with it. This is also about protecting our staff, and I think it's important that we remember that. The minister doesn't want to appear to be okaying drug use amongst inmates, but my concern is more about what happens to our staff.

I look forward to continued debate in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister to close debate?

Mrs. Forsyth: No. Go ahead.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

Bill 29

Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 29, the Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003, which will have the effect of giving all mortgage default insurers operating in the province the ability to sue an individual for a mortgage deficit on a high-ratio residential mortgage after there has been a foreclosure on the subject mortgage property.

By way of background, Mr. Speaker, the Law of Property Act in this province sets out certain legal requirements for real property or land transactions and also contains the statutory authority for lending institutions to foreclose on mortgages. In these foreclosure rules section 40 of the Law of Property Act prevents lending institutions, when foreclosing on a residential mortgage, from taking action against an individual borrower beyond taking the property, even if that property is worth less than the amount owing on the mortgage. The general rule for mortgage enforcement in Alberta is that a lending institution can't sue an individual borrower for any deficit owing on a residential mortgage, and the lending institution can only foreclose on the property. This general rule began in 1939 so that farmers and others didn't lose the basis of their livelihood if they defaulted on a mortgage.

There is, Mr. Speaker, an exception to this general rule in favour of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or CMHC, as it is commonly referred to. This comes about for this reason. Under the federal Bank Act a borrower is required to obtain mortgage default insurance if the borrower is borrowing more than 75 percent of the value of the mortgaged property from the lending institution, and these mortgages are referred to as high-ratio mortgages. The required mortgage default insurance, to which I have referred, as required under the Bank Act is available in Canada from the federal Crown corporation Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or CMHC, under the National Housing Act, and it is also available by a private-sector company known as GE Capital Mortgage Insurance Canada.

Now, section 43 of our Law of Property Act establishes that mortgages insured by CMHC are exempt from that general rule or that restriction that I mentioned before which prevents the lending institution from suing the individual borrower for any balance owing on a residential mortgage. As a result, Mr. Speaker, if an individual defaults on a CMHC-insured residential mortgage, CMHC will pay out the mortgage to the lending institution, it will foreclose on the property, and it has the ability to sue the individual borrower for any balance owing on the mortgage.

This exemption in favour of CMHC was first established in 1945, when there were no other companies providing this insurance, but that situation has now changed, Mr. Speaker. The exemption for CMHC gives CMHC a competitive advantage over its private-sector competitor, the previously mentioned GE Capital Mortgage Insurance Canada, and of course any other private company that may want to enter the mortgage default insurance business in this province. Under the current rules, if a borrower defaults on a GE Capital insured mortgage, GE Capital will have to pay the lending institution for any balance owing on the mortgage after recovery on the land, but it cannot sue the borrower to recover any deficit balance still owing on the mortgage. Thus, there is an imbalance or an unlevel playing field between CMHC and GE Capital.

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendments in Bill 29 will level the mortgage default insurance playing field by, firstly, allowing all mortgage default insurers the ability to sue borrowers for any balance owing on a high-ratio mortgage and, secondly, preventing all mortgage default insurers from suing borrowers for any balance owing if the mortgage is not a high-ratio mortgage; in other words, on all conventional mortgages.

Mr. Speaker, defining the term “high-ratio mortgage” for the purposes of our Law of Property Act will be done through regulation to allow further input on how the term should be defined and whether or not it should reflect the definition of high-ratio mortgage in the federal Bank Act, which, as I mentioned, is when the down payment is less than 25 percent of the value of the property.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments are designed to ensure that the two mortgage default insurers, CMHC and GE Capital, will operate under the same rules and that CMHC, as a federal Crown corporation, will not hold a competitive advantage over its private-sector competitor. The ability of mortgage default insurers to sue borrowers for outstanding balances is being limited to high-ratio mortgages under our proposed amendments. The reason for that is that high-ratio mortgages present a unique risk because borrowers only place a small down payment on high-ratio mortgages, and that being the case, in these high-ratio mortgages a small decrease in the value of the mortgaged property can result in the property being worth less than the amount owing on the mortgage.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to note that these amendments will continue to protect individual Albertans who have default-insured mortgages that are not high-ratio mortgages. In addition, the act will continue to offer protection to individual Albertans who have mortgages with lending institutions where the mortgages are not insured with mortgage default insurance. In these instances the lending institution’s recourse will be limited to foreclosing on the property. Borrowers cannot be sued by either the mortgage default insurers or the lending institutions for any balance which may be owed on the mortgage.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, these amendments are in keeping with Albertans’ belief that public institutions should not have a competitive advantage over their private-sector competitors. Those are my remarks in second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was certainly interesting to listen to the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed in regard to Bill 29, the Law of Property Amendment Act, 2003. I would like to express my gratitude on behalf of the Liberal caucus and the research staff for the gracious help that has been provided by the hon. member in regard to this bill.

There are still many outstanding questions at this time, Mr. Speaker. There certainly seem to be two parties to date who have expressed an interest to this side of the Assembly in regard to the matters that are being discussed with Bill 29, and they are, as previously the House heard, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and GE. Now, one would not think that the General Electric Company has much of an interest in mortgage insurance. One thinks of turbines and electric motors and things like this, but certainly GE Capital Mortgage Insurance Canada is supportive of this bill. They argue and advocate that it creates a level playing field for all mortgage insurance companies in Alberta.

Now, by exempting them from the provisions, as the hon. member said, from sections 40 and 41 of the current Law of Property Act – and it is interesting to know that General Electric has a substantial presence in Alberta. This includes a new manufacturing plant for GE substation automation – that’s a global business based in Calgary – and the Canadian head offices of two GE capital businesses. The GE railcar is in Calgary as well, and GE Capital Card Services is in Edmonton and has sales and service operations in this city for other GE-related businesses. In total, General Electric has 900 employees and $1.4 billion in assets in Alberta, and that is significant.

This company, in correspondence that’s been provided to this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, indicates that the current Law of Property Act creates a double standard, and they go on to state that most lenders who provide high-ratio mortgages to home buyers – that is, with down payments of less than 25 percent of the property value – are certainly required to purchase mortgage insurance from either the CMHC or the GE corporation. Now, GE is CMHC’s only current private-sector competitor, and as everyone knows, the CMHC is a federal Crown corporation. Whenever GE Capital Mortgage expresses concern about this perceived double standard, which places the government-owned company and private-sector companies on different footings in terms of their ability to collect on loans in default, it significantly restricts any private-sector company’s ability to do business in Alberta because of the additional risk that they are exposed to.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, we have to ask: why is mortgage insurance important? Mortgage insurance enables people who are entering the home market or home buyers for the first time who have a good credit rating to purchase a home with a down payment as small as 5 percent of the purchase price and still get the same interest rates as they would have obtained with conventional mortgages. Mortgage insurance does this by protecting lenders from losses that result from a borrower defaulting on a mortgage at any time during its 25-year period.

Now, under the Bank Act all lenders who provide mortgages to home buyers who make down payments of less than 25 percent of the property value are required to purchase mortgage insurance. Our research has indicated that to date there has been contact, but the Canadian Bankers Association is still studying this issue in this bill. So I’ll be anxious to hear back from them, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this matter.

The hon. member earlier talked about: why does an unlevel playing field exist in Alberta? It goes back to an amendment to the Law of Property Act in 1945 to provide an exemption for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation at a time when there were no competitors to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As a result, the amendment for CMHC did not contemplate private-sector competitors.

Now, it’s interesting that all other provinces – and I think the hon. member mentioned this – except Saskatchewan make all borrowers responsible for their actions when their mortgages are insured by either GE or CMHC. In Saskatchewan, as I understand it, CMHC has no special status, Mr. Speaker. We have to wonder, you know: are the delinquency rates that much higher in Alberta than anywhere else, or what’s going on? According to GE now Alberta has had Canada’s best performing economy over the past five years, and this should mean a low rate of mortgage defaults, but that has not been our experience in Alberta. GE Mortgage’s delinquency rate in Alberta is its highest in Canada. All this economic activity, all this supposed high disposable income, yet we find this going on.

Also, it is interesting to note that GE indicates that this has taken place even though GE Mortgage tends to be more conservative in its underwriting practices in Alberta. Our loan provisions here – maybe this is a caution or a warning bell. This goes back to the previous – I think it’s 20 years ago now, Mr. Speaker. That would be this practice that went on here, and it was called dollar dealing. Now, certainly, according to GE Bill 29 in its present form encourages responsible borrower behaviour.

GE Mortgage entered the Alberta market – it’s only been seven years – as a second provider of mortgage insurance. Up to that point, most brokers, lenders, and lawyers only dealt with CMHC for their mortgage insurance needs. GE Mortgage's account representatives in Alberta are often asked about the effect the Law of Property Act had on GE when compared to CMHC. In some instances GE Mortgage has been contacted by Alberta lawyers who are trying to understand the difference between their clients and have specifically told them to confirm that unlike a CMHC insured mortgage a borrower cannot be sued with a GE Mortgage insured mortgage. Now, Mr. Speaker, some mortgage brokers are actively promoting GE Mortgage's insurance to borrowers specifically on that ground. This side of the House certainly hasn't heard from any of them, and I think I would welcome their views on this bill.

Certainly, when we talk about the advantages of changing the Law of Property Act – and the hon. member talked about promoting competition by leveling the playing field for all mortgage insurers in this province. I would have to question – and hopefully this will be answered in the course of debate – what new products, if we are to support this legislation and it is to become law, will be introduced to the Alberta market that previously would have been excluded from this province. I also would like an answer to this: what is the need to increase the availability of high-ratio financing across Alberta? Who is demanding this?

Now, I'm told that we can possibly reduce the level of defaults and minimize the negative impact on property prices during economic downturns. I would appreciate more information on this matter before one decides whether to support this legislation. When we consider, as GE does, that one of the advantages of changing the act would be to promote responsible behaviour by borrowers by discouraging people from defaulting on their mortgage when they still have the ability to pay it, how many of these practices are going on in this province now? That's GE's side of the story.

Certainly, the prairie regional general manager of another stakeholder that we consulted, the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation, indicated that the bill does not fulfill its stated objective of leveling the playing field. There was a suggestion that GE Mortgage Insurance doesn't need the right to recourse offered by the bill that CMHC currently enjoys because CMHC is obligated through its mandate to take on riskier mortgages than is the private insurer who can handpick clients. Now, this is quite interesting, Mr. Speaker.

The general manager of the prairie region also advised that the consultation process for the bill left out the Canadian Bankers Association, and I know that we're still waiting for an opinion, as I stated earlier, from the Canadian Bankers Association. Their lawyers are having a look into this bill, and I'm going to be anxiously awaiting the correspondence in regard to that matter, and perhaps this will catch up with the Legislative Assembly next week.

Mr. Speaker, we need to ensure that everyone is satisfied with these changes, and I would caution all members of the Assembly that we hold off on this until we hear back from these stakeholders. Certainly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed suggested that this Law of Property Amendment Act is consistent with the federal Bank Act, but it would certainly be nice to hear from their own experts.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, also at this time – I don't know how many more minutes I have here in the discussion – it would be good to have a definition of a high-ratio mortgage. It would be excellent to have the definition in the act, not in the regulations. We'll see what happens with this suggestion, but perhaps it would make members on this side of the Assembly more comfortable if that definition was in the statute and not in the regulations.

When we consider the consultation process and we look at both parties involved in this, as I said earlier the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and GE Mortgage, one has to hear both sides, Mr. Speaker, of the issue. The general manager of the CMHC prairie region goes on to state that it would be her preference to see an amendment to Alberta law that currently allows a person to assume a mortgage without qualifications. If the second person defaults on the mortgage, both the original and the second person can be pursued. Only the second person would be pursued if they had to qualify to assume the mortgage.

Now, there are a lot of issues here. In conclusion, we reserve our support for this bill certainly until we hear back from a couple of other stakeholders. It may seem like straightforward legislation, but if there was a significant downturn in the economy and there were a lot of people left with mortgage difficulties, particularly after they had purchased a new home with very modest down payments, I'm not so sure how these changes would affect them.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I will reserve any further comments on this bill until hopefully I get an opportunity to hear back from some other groups that we have contacted in regard to this matter. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I won't speak at great length here. I do have a handful of issues to raise and questions to perhaps just begin directing at the Member for Calgary-Lougheed or anybody else who wants to respond to them at some point.

As I read through the material on the bill and the bill itself, I must say that my sympathies don't automatically lie with huge financial institutions, especially when they're in a relationship with an individual borrower, nor am I saying that I'm automatically opposed to them. I have accounts at a major bank, and they're as reasonable as all banks can be, I guess. They don't necessarily give me good service fees unless I'm very sharp with them.

The reason I raise that is that I see this bill as frankly doing a favour for a very large financial organization, and I do wonder if that favour might not be at the expense of individual Albertans who are perhaps through no fault of their own in financial straits. They might enter into a high-ratio mortgage and they get injured; they lose their job. I certainly remember a time in the mid-80s when tens of thousands of Albertans were losing their jobs when the economy tanked. I'm not keen on entering into a law that would give a huge multinational – in fact by some measures I think GE is the largest multinational in the world, certainly in the top three or four. I'm reluctant to enter into a law that would give that multinational power to pursue Albertans who are bankrupted or broke through bad luck, bad circumstances, through no fault of their own.

On the other hand, I do recognize that people need to borrow money, and lenders need some security, or they'll stop lending, and then we're behind on that account too. So really it is a matter of balance. The thing to me is that I don't know what's been wrong with the system to date. I haven't heard anything about this issue in my constituency office. I'm not sure what's behind this bill coming forward at the moment, whether perhaps GE has been lobbying on this particular issue or not.

So this is going to be a matter of weighing things out, weighing what's in favour of the individual Albertan and what's in favour of, frankly, a giant multinational. I do notice one thing here, that the profits and revenues from this business, when we allow GE greater access to the market, are going to flow right out of the province and, indeed, ultimately out of the country. I'm concerned. It's the same pattern, the same principle I've seen followed with bringing Direct Energy into the electricity market, replacing ATCO. We know that when ATCO is in the business and making a good profit, that money stays with Albertans, just as we know that when Direct Energy takes over and makes its profit, that money is going to flow out, ultimately, to headquarters in Britain. So tough issues here.

One of the things I would ask the Member for Calgary-Lougheed to provide perhaps when we're in committee would be some examples of how this issue has unfolded in real life. Are there times when GE has been left out to dry because we haven't had the proper legislation? What has the impact of that been on GE? It would be interesting to find examples on the other end, where people perhaps have lost their capacity to sustain a high-ratio mortgage, defaulted on the mortgage, and then might at some point find themselves exposed to a lawsuit from a huge multinational. How does that dynamic play out? Has Canada Mortgage and Housing followed that course since it has the right to do so? Has it followed it very often? What have been the outcomes? Those examples, those stories are often very valuable in helping to understand how a piece of legislation like this plays out.

One other issue that comes to my mind: clearly, if this bill passes, we are shifting the financial risks from a multinational to the individual Albertan. We are lightening the risk load, the risk exposure of GE, and we are transferring that burden to the individual Albertan, so it's a shifting of risk. At the very least, if GE is having its risks reduced, its financial exposure reduced, then I would hope that they would commit to lowering their interest rates and perhaps improving the terms under which they loan the money. After all, if they are charging extra, and presumably there is some kind of a premium for insuring these mortgages, then maybe that premium should be reduced if they're facing fewer risks as a result of our perhaps passing Bill 29.

So at this stage, those are some of the principles I'd like to explore here: some of the issues around fairness, money staying in Alberta, money going out of Alberta, risks on the individual versus risks on what is, after all, an enormous, enormous corporation. Gosh, I'm a little reluctant to expose individual Albertans to duking it out one on one with GE. Why should I do that? The Member for Calgary-Lougheed has to convince me why I should support doing that.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 29. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

4:50 Bill 31
Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to move second reading of Bill 31, the Local Authorities Election Amendment Act, 2003.

It's a very important piece of legislation in Alberta. It sets out the procedures for the conducting of elections of municipalities, school boards, and some other local authorities. The government acknowledges the key role of the Local Authorities Election Act and is firmly committed to ensuring the act's continued viability and relevance. To further improve upon the act, the government has concluded that additional amendments are appropriate. There's been a lot of consultation, and the proposed amendments certainly would clarify the election process for stakeholders and ensure that the process remains current and valid for future elections.

The proposed changes under Bill 31 would accomplish some of the following. It would accommodate those requiring assistance in the voting process by providing greater access for incapacitated electors and assisting those unable to read or understand English. Examples include authorizing the deputy returning officer to extend the boundaries of the voting station to include the closest point of access that the incapacitated elector can attend. This would provide assistance to those unable to read and provide blind voter templates when requested.

The proposed changes would also ensure integrity in the administration of oaths by, for example, requiring agents to take the official oath in the performance of their duties and prior to entering the voting station. It would clarify the duties and responsibilities of election officials by allowing returning officers to record their objections if they feel the candidate or voter to be ineligible and clarify that the responsibility for filing proper nomination papers rests with the candidate, not the returning officer.

It will create greater consistency between summer village voting and elected authorities by standardizing time lines and voting patterns. Examples include extending the time for receipt of nominations for summer village votes consistent with other local elections and clarifying residence requirements for summer village residents. It would ensure fairness and equity in the nomination process and create flexibility in that process. This is accomplished by providing consistency between school board and municipal elections in the requirement of signatures on nomination forms and ensuring consistency in the retention and inspection of nomination papers and ballot counts.

It would balance electors' privacy rights with a candidate's right to access information by providing greater consistency with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act and outline the role of enumerators, campaign workers, and candidates. Proposed amendments include clarifying that the list of electors is prepared in accordance with the bylaw, requiring proper identification for enumerators, candidates, or campaign workers and adding a consent clause on the nomination form to allow at the candidate's discretion the release of relevant information.

It would clarify administrative procedures. There were some redundancies, omissions, and duplication references identified such as the need to add a reference to school division or regional division to complement the reference to school district and clarify that where a municipal council is acclaimed, the organizational meeting can be held any time after the returning officer has declared the candidates elected.

Other suggested amendments include deleting outdated references such as "cash order" and removing the requirement to list incapacitated electors "alphabetically according to wards."

Just a couple more brief points. It would guarantee the security of ballot boxes and provide access to alternate methods of voting by providing for special ballots similar to what exists in the current Election Act. It would ensure the integrity of electronic voting equipment by requiring standards for electronic voting equipment and increase the flexibility in the conduct of advance voting by allowing voters to vote at the advance vote if they are unable to vote on election day. Previously it was only if you were going to be absent from the local jurisdiction. That will be changed.

These amendments need to be in place for the 2004 local authority elections.

In closing, by supporting these amendments, we will provide all Albertans with increased integrity, fairness, privacy, and access in participating in the democratic election process that we enjoy.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 31.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
 head: Third Reading

Bill 13
Government Organization Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 13, Government Organization Amendment Act, 2003.

Just as a reminder as to what this is about, since it's been a while since we were dealing with this bill, I'll just go over the key information here. Alberta Registries issues identification cards so that Albertans who don't drive are still able to have photo identification.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to stand and get on the record briefly at third reading of Bill 13. Certainly, Bill 13 is going to authorize the continued production of all the voluntary ID cards in the province, and this goes back to, I believe, the youth of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and the old ALCB cards, that were prized possessions of those people who were just turning the age of majority in the 1970s, times like that. You know, the Alberta Liquor Control Board first began issuing these photo identification cards I think in the early '70s. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre could certainly correct me, but perhaps it was even at the specific time when the drinking age was lowered to 18. I'm not sure. But this seems to be a continuation of that program.

Certainly, when you look at the cost of this card over five years, which is a little less than $40, it's half the price of a passport. The expiry date is going to be on the individual's birthday, and it's just going to be a simple ID card with photo and signature and address, birth date, gender, height, weight, hair and eye colour. It's not only going to be useful for younger people, students, but seniors who don't drive and don't hold a licence may find merit in holding this card, citizens who are blind, or anyone who might need photo ID for everyday actions such as cashing a cheque or accessing government programs. So I don't see any problems or much concern about this with the exception that I certainly hope we don't have the same sorts of problems we're having with the drivers' licences in this province.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow was kind enough to provide a briefing in regard to this bill, and the hon. member and some of the staff from Government Services gave assurances that a significant amount of thought had gone into the design of this card and it had safety features that would not allow unauthorized reproduction or forgeries or frauds, whatever you want to describe it as, Mr. Speaker.

My only caution again on this is that I consider our registry system to be a bit of a weak link. Some of the registries have been selling drivers' licences and whatnot that are not authentic. In some cases I believe the market was between $200 and $500 in Calgary. So there are definitely some problems with that system.

I certainly hope, in conclusion, that what we're trying to do here with Bill 13, the Government Organization Amendment Act, 2003, as sponsored by the Member for Calgary-Bow, is going to be different from the problems we have with the drivers' licences and the concerns that have been expressed in regard to the registries and the promotion and the reproduction of drivers' licences.

With those comments, I will cede the floor to another hon.

member of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, and I hope this works out well for all the citizens of Alberta that need it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to speak in support of this bill in third reading again because I think that it is important that we continue to have identification cards available beyond the mainstream. There's already been a fair amount of discussion about the old what we call ALCB cards, which is certainly dating us.

Someone else pointed out that the people that really needed those identifications cards – and they're picture ID – were those that didn't have a driver's licence. I know that now they are issued by the registries and in this case the private registries in Alberta, but it's important that we continue to offer those cards and that they are accepted as we expect them to be accepted. You know, even given the increased security and vigilance we need to have around protection of people's personal identity, I think that enough safeguards can be put into place around this kind of non driver's licence photo ID, that we can protect it, and it's important.

I've had constituents who are not in the best time of their lives; they're struggling. One guy I can think of, you know, lost his vehicle, and his driver's licence expired, and that was it. There he was: no ID. At that point, he couldn't get anything. He couldn't get an ATM bank card. He couldn't open a bank account. He couldn't begin to even get any other ID because everything had expired on him. So I was able to vouch for him, and he was able to go to the private registries and get this version of this ID card, and it allowed him to sort of start everything over again and to rebuild his life. But he was in a fairly bad state without any kind of picture ID, because in this world of security and access, boy, you've got to have that.

So I appreciate what's being put forward here and that there is a way of continuing to apply for these cards and that they will be accepted and that there's security around the issuance of them. I think the only thing we need to be really careful about is the regulations section, and again I get concerned when I see that the minister may make regulations respecting "the issuance, renewal, cancellation and expiration of identification cards" or the next section, (d), "the qualifications or conditions required to be met in order to be issued or to hold [one]." I mean, I know that you don't want all of this stuff in legislation, but I continue to be quite grieved by the amount of decision-making that affects all Albertans that goes on behind closed doors and without scrutiny, without information.

I'm glad to see this carrying on, and I thank the member for bringing it forward and Mr. Speaker for allowing me the opportunity to speak in favour of it.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a third time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members of the House for excellent progress this week and today in particular. On that note, I would move that we now call it 5:30, and pursuant to Government Motion 10, agreed to earlier today, I would move that our Assembly do stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, April 7. May I wish everybody a happy conclusion to the month of March.

Thank you, sir.

[Motion carried; pursuant to Government Motion 10 the Assembly adjourned at 5:06 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 7, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/07

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon and welcome back. At the conclusion of the prayer would you please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask You, Father, to renew and strengthen in us the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of this Legislature. We ask You also in Your divine providence to bless and protect the Assembly and bless the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Now, hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, would you please join in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour and privilege today to introduce to you 12 students and six adults who are attending the School at the Legislature all this week. They are from Hussar, Alberta, and the adults are Linda Moczulski, Frances Williams, Jeanne Treacy, Richard Pratt, Janice Fandry, and Yvonne Comstock, as well as 12 grade 5 and grade 6 students. They're the ones that are brightly attired in their School at the Legislature shirts, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour for me to rise today. I have three school groups visiting from my constituency today from right across, east to west. First of all, we have Lakedell school, and I'll ask the teachers and parents to stand as I announce their names: Mrs. Cline, Ms Sappok, Ms Jackson, and Mrs. Ollenberger. I'll have the students stand in a minute.

The second school I have, Mr. Speaker, is Calmar school, and we have Mr. Kevin Hancock and Mrs. Yvonne Heitzman.

The third school I have here is Alder Flats elementary school with Mrs. Gina Foster and Mrs. Karen Becker.

We have a lot of excellent students from these three schools, and they're learning lots about the Legislature today. I think some of them also went to the Provincial Museum. So I would ask them all to rise in both galleries and please receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a young man fresh from the Alberta oil patch; particularly, Akita Drilling rig 3. There is a saying in pool, "It's not what you take; it's what you leave," and I believe that to be the case in our work here as well as in life. If that is the case, then I've played a very good game. It's with a great deal of pride that I ask my oldest son, Craig, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce three firefighters from the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo in Fort McMurray. They're all very active in their community. Joining me today are Brian Makey, Tony Gordon, and Brad Grainger, and I'd ask them to stand in the public gallery and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the past few weeks of this session we have been honoured to have parents who are concerned about chronic underfunding of public education to come and sit in the gallery, and today is no exception. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly several parents, some educators, some students, all wanting to show the government with their presence today that they expect tomorrow's budget to hold good news for all Alberta's children in our public education system. They are Mona Luth; Melanie Shapiro; David Galbraith; Rosalie Anderson; Erica Bullwinkle; Miriam Weinfeld; Patti Clancy-Novosel, president of Edmonton Catholic teachers; and Karen Beaton, president of Edmonton public teachers' local. I'd ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a second introduction. They're two members of CUPE, Canadian Union of Public Employees, local 474, who represent the custodial staff in our schools. These two guests are Doug Luellman and Berend Wilting. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What a distinct honour and privilege it is today to introduce two members of my community who are seated in your gallery. Their beautiful daughter, Sarah Monkman, has been well known as a page in our Assembly since 2001, and she is with us this afternoon. Her parents are here. They are soccer directors in Sherwood Park. The mother is a nurse, and the father is working in Yemen. He is very happy to be home on a five-week leave of absence so that he is not right in the midst of the conflict overseas. He will, however, be going back on Monday. I would ask, please, that Cheryl and Randy Monkman rise and that this Assembly show them the warm accolades of this community.

head: Oral Question Period

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Dr. Nicol: "Sustainable" is the new buzzword used by this government since they announced the creation of their new fiscal framework, but Albertans have been given no idea what this means for priority programs and services. So that Albertans understand what you mean by sustainable, could the Premier explain what it means as it relates to Albertans' priorities in the areas of health care and education?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it means just that: sustainable; programs that we can sustain over a long period of time at a price Albertans can afford without forcing this government ever again to spend more than it earns, to go into deficit. That's what it means: sustainable. The details relative to the sustainability of this year's budget plus the three-year budget plans will all be tabled tomorrow, and indeed the key word is sustainability – reform, also, to achieve sustainability. The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition will see that tomorrow when the budget is tabled.

Dr. Nicol: To the Premier: would a sustainable budget in education include funding to cover teachers' salary increases, technology updates, new classroom supplies, replacement textbooks, cost of service increases, higher utility bills, more funding for special-needs programs, additional costs for infrastructure update and maintenance? Would those all be included in a sustainable budget?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I assume that on a reasonable-case basis all those items will be included; on a sustainable basis all those items will be included. But unlike the Liberals, who think money just falls from the sky, we know our limitations relative to the revenues we collect, and we know our limitations relative to the amount of money we have available to spend on essential programs. Indeed, everything we do we want to do to achieve sustainability.

Dr. Nicol: Again to the Premier: would a sustainable budget in health care include the funding for cost-of-service increases, population increases, cost-of-drug increases, the aging population, technology costs, and any salary increases being negotiated?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, all these questions are in anticipation of the budget, which will be tabled tomorrow. If the hon. leader of the Liberal Party would wait until tomorrow, I think that he will have an opportunity to judge for himself whether the budget indeed provides sustainability in the areas he mentioned.

Budget Release

Dr. Nicol: Today the Minister of Finance held a press conference to outline the embargo rules for the release of the budget tomorrow. According to these rules, the media will be allowed to see the budget five hours before opposition parties become privy to any of the information. To make matters worse, the media are allowed to file stories before they can speak to any opposition members or other stakeholders. To the Premier: why did the government design a budget release strategy that short-circuits the ability of opposition and stakeholder members of Alberta to comment with the media before they file their stories?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, nothing is being designed purposely to short circuit – short circuit: a Freudian slip – to short-circuit the opposition's opportunity to comment on the budget. Indeed, the hon. Minister of Finance informs me that she didn't hold a news conference today. I don't know the details relative to how the press are to obtain the budget, the rules of the embargo, but I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the process has been very clearly worked out. It's not different. There is always an embargo and a briefing process that takes place with any budget that comes forward, but nothing has changed. I certainly didn't have a press conference today. The media came into my office and took a picture prebudget, and that was it. There was no press conference.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the minister. I called it a press conference. It was a press release that we got in our office that outlined it. I apologize to her.

To the Premier: are these embargo rules a way to get around the Speaker's ruling that members of this House have to have access to information before the media approaches them?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Finance pointed out, the embargo process is the same as it has been in previous years. As far as I know, nothing has changed or is about to change, but again I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, let's be very honest. We always have a process of embargo before a budget address is made in this Assembly. We follow that process very clearly. We do also make sure that people are briefed properly. We have the most open budget process that you could have in Canada, and we're the one government that prides ourselves on having full disclosure through our budget process. I don't know what the hon. Leader of the Opposition is concerned about. I'm quite rigid on those processes. I don't circumvent the procedures, and I tend to follow them to a T.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you. Then to the Minister of Finance: why is the minister holding a news conference that opposition members cannot attend that may contain information the opposition members maybe have to respond to later that day?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, we have a standard embargo process, Mr. Speaker, that we have followed year after year after year, and we haven't changed that process.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Edmonton Public School Board Operational Review

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the tale of the two city school boards Calgary public gets the money and Edmonton public gets an audit. My question is to the Premier. Now that Calgary public is looking at a $30 million deficit, will the government be ordering an audit of their books, or will they just be writing another cheque?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning supplement my answer, but any news report relative to a possible or an anticipated deficit by the Calgary public school board is purely speculation at this particular time. We won't know for sure until we have a chance to review their budget in detail.

Relative to where the budget is, the status quo of the situation as it pertains to Calgary, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member well knows, there was $7 million given to Calgary public that was given because they had extraordinary costs from the arbitration settlement. The $7 million put all the boards on the same footing. Approximately a week ago the Calgary public board came out that they were anticipating a $30 million deficit. We have contacted them, we have worked with them, and quite frankly it's very hard for them to nail down an exact figure. They don't know enrollment. They don't know what is included in our budget. There are a lot of unknowns, and in their own words they said that it was probably a worst case scenario. But we will be working with them over the next three or four months to help them in much the same fashion as we helped Edmonton public.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Finance. Does the minister agree with the Edmonton audit recommendation that capital assets be sold off to meet school board operating costs?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the question is more appropriately put to the Minister of Learning. He'll be bringing a recommendation forward to us.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There is no such recommendation in the review that was done of the Edmonton public. The Edmonton public sold an administration building for $1.9 million. These were their dollars. They were funded completely by the Edmonton public school board. They were not moneys received from us at all. They wanted to put that towards their deficit, and we gave them the approval to do that. Included in the audit are approximately $1.6 million of capital expenditures that will occur over the next six months. We suggested that about a quarter of those could probably be put off until next year. Those are the only recommendations on capital that are included in this review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. My third question is to the Minister of Learning. Given that Edmonton public saved millions of dollars by eliminating a number of associate superintendents, does the minister support the Edmonton audit recommendations that would see this administration returned to oversee principals?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, what my people did when they took a very close look at Edmonton public is very quickly come to the realization that the chief financial officer is number 215 on the organizational chain. A chief financial officer is a very important position and does not report directly to the superintendent. As a matter of fact, he reports to an executive director. There are 208 principals that report directly to the superintendent, and what they have recommended are different approaches as to how their administration can handle some of the issues that were raised in the review, but the bottom line on it is that there needs to be more accountability for how the dollars are spent. Those are purely recommendations. Ultimately, if there is a change in management style, it will be at the request of Edmonton public and it'll be of their volition.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government spent two months sending a team of auditors and investigating the books of Edmonton public schools. This audit was largely an exercise in public relations and a waste of resources. While it's easy to be a Monday morning quarterback and second-guess specific budget line items, the bottom line is that Edmonton public has been a responsible steward of public dollars. When all is said and done, the minister's audit concludes that the government shortchanged Edmonton public by millions of dollars. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. In light of his own audit report, why is the minister refusing to fully fund the Edmonton public budget deficit for this year?

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much for that question. He's raised about three different issues that I'd be more than happy to comment on. First of all, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the actual budget, what we did is looked at their figures. There were $2 million that were questionable as to whether or not it really was a deficit. At another point in time there was $1.2 million that they had not added in. There was $1.9 million that was received as a result of the sale of an administration building, which I commented on earlier. There's another $1.6 million, roughly, that we feel that they can find over the next five months. Obviously, five months is five-twelfths of their budget year, and we feel that they can reasonably do it.

The other issue, I think probably the key issue, that is in this Edmonton public audit is that when Edmonton public put out their per unit teacher costs in April of 2002, the figure that they used was $62,828. Mr. Speaker, the figure that they had used for 2001 was $62,953, so they had actually shown a decrease in teachers' salaries despite the fact that this Legislative Assembly voted on a minimum 6 percent increase for teachers, despite the fact that there had been settlements in the 11 to 12 percent range. It would have been a lot easier. Six percent of the roughly $300 million in teachers' salaries is $18 million, and that probably would have solved their deficit issue.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why has the government chosen to waste public dollars on an internal audit if the minister now has decided to ignore it and not fully fund Edmonton public schools' deficit this year?

Dr. Oberg: Well, again, a very interesting question, Mr. Speaker. The review was done by people from my own staff. The review was done with full co-operation of Edmonton public, full co-operation of the administration and the principals, and in reality the Edmonton review cost us nothing.

Dr. Pannu: My second supplementary to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how does the government expect Edmonton public to find an additional $1.6 million in savings in the five remaining months of this school budget year, especially when most of the savings involve adding costs to next year's budget?

Dr. Oberg: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I'm really happy that the hon. member is asking me these things. First of all, we have suggested reducing the discretionary spending and freezing the discretionary funding. The next thing is reviewing the capital projects, and as I said earlier, we suggest that they freeze approximately 25 percent of the projected expenditures on capital projects. Third of all is filling nonessential positions that are vacant. That's how we expect the $1.6 million to come.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Medicine Hat Arts Centre Funding

Mr. Renner: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Medicine

Hat is currently in the final planning stages for construction of a major performing and visual arts centre and museum in downtown Medicine Hat. The total budget for this project is estimated to be approximately $32 million. While the vast majority of the funding will come from the city of Medicine Hat itself, both the provincial and federal governments have made significant contributions. In addition a fund-raising drive is currently under way to solicit funds from individuals and groups within the area. My questions today are to the Minister of Gaming. Given that the number of community organizations who wish to contribute to this project derive a significant portion of their income from either casinos or bingos, why have your officials told these groups that contributions to this project are not allowed within the regulations governing the spending of gaming dollars?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year we anticipate that some thousands of not-for-profit groups will earn about $200 million as a result of being licensed for casinos, bingos, or raffle tickets. This particular process is the very heart of gaming. It's called the charitable model. The charitable model is based upon the Criminal Code of Canada, which indicates that there must be eligible uses for such proceeds, and those eligible uses are for religious or charitable purposes. It specifically provides that an organization that is a government or part of a government is not eligible, and as such that is the reason that the hon. member's groups have been told what they have. I might add, however, that this government has a number of granting agencies – namely, the community facility enhancement, CIP – which certainly might be able to provide some assistance because the rules are different in that regard, and in 2000 this particular organization received a centennial enhancement grant of some $3.5 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question to the same minister: given that there'll be a number of significant user groups in this new facility, would it be possible for these user groups to make contributions of their casino or bingo dollars to this project?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, there's absolutely no doubt that this project will be of public benefit to the members of the Medicine Hat community and surrounding area, but the project, notwithstanding the nature of its benefit, will continue to be one that is part of government and, as such, will not be eligible for the proceeds of casinos, bingos, or raffles. However, the user groups that raise such funds certainly might be able to provide some support. The AGLC, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, is working with those groups at this point in time to determine ways in which they might be able to provide some assistance. For example, it may be possible that a theatre group would be able to provide a set or such products through casino proceeds.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: how will the minister ensure that these affected groups are made aware of these opportunities that he's outlined today?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that Gaming is very proud of is the extent of the information on our web sites, and in this particular case all of the information with respect to eligible use of proceeds is contained on the AGLC web site at aglc.gov.ab.ca.

I might also add in this regard that the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross is in the process of finalizing a report with respect to the eligibility and use of proceeds. It will be available sometime over the course of the next month or so, and that will also be on the web site.

Civil Fraud Suit

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, Raymond Reshke, a former Assistant Deputy Minister of Infrastructure, was charged last summer with fraud for allegedly illegally funneling more than $100,000 of taxpayers' money to a friend's company. Criminal charges and a civil suit were filed against Mr. Reshke, but three weeks ago the civil suit against Mr. Reshke was dropped. To the Minister of Justice: why did this government drop its civil suit against Mr. Reshke?

The Speaker: Hon. minister, let's just be very cautious of the sub judice provisions with respect to this line of questioning and answering.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I take your admonishment very seriously. The matter is still before the courts with respect to the criminal matters, and I think it would be inappropriate at this time to comment further.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Given that the civil suit was dropped, Mr. Speaker, and given that the province is not one of Mr. Reshke's secured creditors, how much of this money will taxpayers get back through this agreement?

Mr. Hancock: I think, Mr. Speaker, that at an appropriate time and in an appropriate place those matters could be and perhaps should be discussed in this House, but I would be very reluctant to discuss any details relative to that matter while it's still before the courts.

Mr. Bonner: To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that taxpayers have already been fleeced because of your department's lack of transparency, when are you going to release all the records relating to sole-source contracts so that Albertans know that they're not going to get fleeced again?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I think that we went through this once before where we clearly laid out what the new procedures are within Infrastructure, so I'm sure that if the hon. member is really interested in learning the new procedures, he can easily find those.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Edmonton Public School Board Operational Review (continued)

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Learning. In February the Edmonton public school board indicated that it was facing a funding crisis as a result of a projected $13.5 million deficit in a $577 million budget. Today, following the operational review by the Department of Learning, the minister has indicated that the deficit will be $5 million, not $13.5 as originally projected. My question: what was the most significant issue that the review team found that resulted in the significant reduction in the projected deficit, and what led to the deficit in the first place?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, what I will basically answer that question by is sort of a compilation of my last two answers. First of all, the accumulated deficit at schools was projected to be $3 million by the Edmonton public school board. The accumulated deficit at central services, which is basically administration, was deemed to be $3.8 million. They had O and M shortfall of $3.4 million, and they had grade 10 funding changes of $0.5 million and unplanned special-needs cost pressure of $1 million. The total of this was $11.7 million. So when we went in and actually did the operational review, we could only find $11.7 million of the original $13.5 million utilizing their own numbers.

What we then did is we removed $2 million for Metro College. The reason for that is that all of Metro College's work will be coming in the upcoming summer months. A lot of their expenses are due to an hourly wage paid to teachers, Mr. Speaker, and they do not know how many students they have. We fully expect, in conversations with Edmonton public administration, that Metro College run on a cost-neutral basis. So that $2 million was taken out. We then looked at the actual cost savings, which would be approximately $1.6 million. There was $1.2 million that was a one-time transfer from operations and maintenance and $1.9 million from the sale of the administration building, which led to the ultimate number of $5 million, which they will be allowed to carry over three years.

Mr. McClelland: To the same minister: therefore, the 350 teachers that the Edmonton public school board has indicated would be laid off and programs reduced, is that necessary? Will that happen?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that they have enough information at this time in order to make a proper budget. They have not put in AISI funds. They do not know what is in the budget tomorrow. They do not know how many teachers are going to retire this year. Those three factors alone can account for some $15 million to $20 million in difference. So the bottom line is that they have not received any final numbers, but the key component here is that they have to change their budgeting processes so that the dollar amount used per teacher can be flexible and can change with changing conditions. That was the problem last year.

Mr. McClelland: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: is it reasonable to assume that following a similar operational review other school jurisdictions could find the same savings?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that that is reasonable to assume, and the reason I say that is that Edmonton public has a very different system. I will say at the outset that Edmonton public has a system that gets excellent results for their students, which is what the learning system is all about. They are a very decentralized system. They are probably the most decentralized system in our province, and for that reason it has led to some of these issues. We are working with them to find areas where they can accumulate economies of scale, where potentially they can get some savings. But the key component here is that the decentralized system has served Edmonton public very, very well in the past.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Social Assistance Rates

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's bungled energy deregulation policy has caused inflation to skyrocket. Now we learn that the government is contemplating a meagre $20 a month increase for social assistance benefits only for people with children. That amounts to 66 cents a day per family unit and doesn't begin to address inflation over the 10-year period. In fact, that 66 cents will only buy one pound of potatoes in Edmonton on sale. My first question is to the Premier. Why have social assistance recipients with children been chosen for this meagre raise but not single recipients or people with handicaps?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this is a budget item, and the hon. member will have ample time to comment on the situation following the budget. But speaking generally, first of all, to reiterate: this is nothing but speculation at this point since the budget has not yet been tabled, but I can tell the hon. member that this government is committed to helping those most in need. Our policy is a hand up rather than a handout, and it must do so in a fiscally responsible way that maintains an incentive to work for those who can work and are receiving SFI. In other words, we don't want to let welfare become a way of life, especially for those who can work.

I would point out also, Mr. Speaker, that people on SFI have other sources of assistance that aren't generally cranked into the general payment scheme, nor are they taken under consideration when we talk about SFI payments. These include child benefits, medical coverage, training funds, and special-needs assistance, along with other programs. As well, people on SFI can earn a certain amount of money each month without having their benefits reduced. The program as it exists is a very generous, a very fair program – a fair program – and what we want to achieve is fairness, but relative to what is going to be done in the future with respect to SFI, that remains for the budget to address.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: if this benefit program is so generous and so fair, how was the decision made to offer those citizens only a 66-cent a day increase in their benefits? What's so generous and what's so fair about that?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would reiterate: I'm not going to go through what I just went through, but I would tell the hon. member to wait until tomorrow. The budget will be tabled tomorrow, and at that time he'll have ample opportunity to debate the budget.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why does this government continue to discriminate against the poor and vulnerable citizens of this province? Why do you continue with your discrimination?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we don't discriminate. As a matter of fact, we do exactly the opposite. We deliberately go out and seek out those who truly need help in society, to find out, first of all: do they need SFI, or do they need AISH? And for those who are severely handicapped, we have assured income. For those who need SFI, we look after them. For those who can work but need some encouragement to get out, we will provide skills upgrading, job retraining, educational opportunities. Hardly discrimination. A hand up instead of a handout is not discrimination; it is the right way to do things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The operational review of the Edmonton public school board released today by the Minister of Learning outlines some interesting information and recommendations. The report highlights that Edmonton public has a very decentralized decision-making system as a result of its, quote, unquote, site-based decision-making model and recommends a number of changes to the board that the board can consider to gain systemwide efficiencies. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. Is the minister suggesting through his report that the board reconsider its decentralized model?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for that excellent question. First of all, we are not asking the board to reconsider their decentralized model. I think their decentralized model has a lot of pluses. What we are suggesting to the board to take into consideration is that they look at things, for example, like janitorial services or operation and maintenance, where the principal does not necessarily have the expertise to make the decision. The principal is the educational leader of the school. It isn't necessary that he knows about when to replace windows or when not to replace windows, things like that. What we are suggesting – and I will say that it is a suggestion – is that some of the cost savings through economies of scale could be seen if they did some of these on a centralized basis, but the decentralized component, as I said previously, has served Edmonton public from an educational point of view extremely well.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: the Edmonton public school board must find $1.6 million by the end of this school year. Can the minister outline the cost saving measures that can be taken to meet that target?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We have looked at four specific areas that we feel Edmonton public can reduce by $1.6 million. First of all, there's a reduced capital-based budget, which is roughly about $1.2 million, $1.3 million. We have suggested that they take about $0.4 million of that and save that for this year. We've also suggested that discretionary spending be frozen. That would save them about $300,000. The other thing, which is very important, is that the unfilled positions that are out there right now would save them about $500,000 from this time forward if they did not fill them. Lastly, if they were to defer some of their maintenance that was nonessential maintenance that is done over the summer, they would have a saving of about another $400,000. The bottom line, through to the hon. member, is $1.6 million from a budget that is $578 million. That is what we're asking of them in this review.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: are the recommendations outlined in the review report just that, recommendations to the school board, or is the school board required to follow them verbatim?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, they are recommendations through to the school board. The school board ultimately has the decision-making capability to follow them or not to follow them. I have said that they're able to have a $5 million deficit this year that will be carried over three years, but it is extremely important that we continue to monitor with them to ensure that they are following so that they will stay with the $5 million deficit.

Condominium Property Act

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, the concept of one person, one vote is essential to our democratic system, but under the Condominium Property Act the weight of a person's vote is based on geographical space and money. My questions today are to the Minister of Government Services. Given that people pay thousands of dollars per year in condo fees for services, does the minister not believe that these condo residents should have equal voting power with each other?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the legislation, the condominium act, was developed in this House and debated in this House just recently, within the past five years, and the very basis of the condominium act that came forward was the fact that based on consultation with the people in the industry, with developers, with condo owners, the issue of voting rights was directly attributable to the unit factor of the amount of property that they owned in the condominium. So there lies your fairness.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Does the minister see it as democratic, then, for the importance of people's votes to vary depending on their unit factor?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the greater the stake in the condominium that the shareholder has, then the greater the voice the shareholder should have, and that's just a very, very basic rule of the investment that individuals or developers make in a condominium.

Ms Blakeman: Well, given that the act has been amended twice in the last six years, will the minister do the right thing: open the Condominium Property Act and fix the inequity instead of so blithely telling condo owners to go to court and spend thousands of dollars to get their democratic rights?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We do receive a few complaints on this issue in terms of the condominium act, but very few complaints have actually come into our department. I know of various members in this House who have had meetings with condominium owners. People from our department have come out and explained the situation, explained the act in detail, and people have walked away understanding what the condominium act says, so I don't see any reason for opening up this act at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Education Funding

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite the fact that the government singled out the Edmonton public school board by siccing the auditors after them, school boards right across the province are telling the government that its suggested 2 percent funding increase will leave them facing huge budget deficits next year. Edmonton public is facing a $17 million deficit next year. Grand Prairie public is facing a $1.7 million shortfall next year. Calgary public is facing a whopping $30 million shortfall next year.

My first question is to the Minister of Learning. What's it going to take to convince this minister that the 2 percent increase in instructional grants planned for next year will leave massive school board deficits in its wake from one end of the province to the other?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I will not comment on what is coming in the budget tomorrow. As far as the numbers that the hon. member has thrown out, quite frankly, they're fictitious.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Premier. Why is the government turning its back on the province's children by refusing to provide adequate funds so that school boards are forced to either run huge deficits or engage in massive cost cutting including staff layoffs, threatening the quality of education that the children of Alberta deserve?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I really take exception to the fact or to the statement – not the fact because certainly it's not factual – that we're abandoning Alberta's children. Our commitment to children is as strong if not stronger than it has ever been. I would remind the hon. member that generally there's been a 46 percent increase in education funding I believe over the past six years. Enrollment on average throughout the province has grown by only 6 percent. That to me represents a demonstrable commitment to the children of this province and to the education of those children. I think it's irresponsible of the hon. member to stand up and say that we have abandoned our commitment to children.

Mr. Speaker, our commitment to children is very strong through the Department of Learning, through the Department of Children's Services, through the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, through the Department of Human Resources and Employment, and numerous other departments. As a matter of fact, if this hon. member had been listening carefully to the throne speech, he would have found that the theme of the throne speech is indeed the future, and the future is the children.

Dr. Pannu: My last question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given the Premier's apparent commitment to the children of Alberta, why does his government prefer to let at least $3 billion sit in the bank waiting for debt to mature while refusing to invest a small fraction of it in Alberta's children by providing increases to school boards that will avoid the need for massive deficits or cost cutting in our classrooms?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this speaks to an entirely different matter. This speaks to debt pay-down and the money we have put in reserve to accommodate our commitment to pay down debt. Relative to why that money is sitting there, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance address that particular question.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member opposite knows, on an annual basis we have been putting money aside to pay off debt and we've put it into a debt retirement account and it's been earning interest. As the debt matures, then we have been able to pay it off as it comes due. We can't pay our debt off any faster, or we face a fierce penalty to try and prepay it, so we've been putting money aside to pay it as it comes due. That's why that money is there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Coal Mining Industry

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. West Yellowhead has lost 95 employees at the end of this month with the suspension of Obed Mountain Coal. Also, by the end of this month we'll be losing 190 people at Cardinal River Coal. Can the minister of human resources tell these employees what help we can give to get them back into the workforce?

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, part of our mandate, of course, is to help people find work. What we've been doing in cases similar to this in the past is see how our normal operating systems are able to handle a particular situation, and if so, then we proceed with that. But every once in a while we get into a situation where a community is impacted quite severely, and this might be another one of those cases. We're not sure at this point. If so, we have the ability then to move people from other parts of our operation into a community and then start working right at ground level.

Now, the kinds of things that we can do are of course inventory the basic skills that are available then within that group of people and see what it is that we'll have to do in that particular case, and from there we can start to develop employment programs, educational programs, whatever is necessary to get these people and this community back on its feet.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the hon. Minister of Energy. Would the minister please explain how the rest of the coal leases at the old Smoky River Coal Limited company will be proceeded with?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. Firstly, let me say that one of the difficulties about the coal market is of course the volatility of the price and the contingent supply/demand imbalances that occur throughout the world. Make no mistake about it: people in Hinton and Grande Cache in the coal mining industry of Alberta play in a very rugged and a very brutal international marketplace. So when I heard last week of the impending closures and the pause on the Cheviot mine development, it was with regret and some sadness, because this is a skilled workforce. This is a workforce that can deliver good results. They've been trained in the Alberta advantage, and so they deliver.

One of the things that we can do, Mr. Speaker, with respect to other leases up there is to try to find expedient methods in which to develop these or put them out for tender or have the private sector get involved as quickly as possible so that we don't lose this talent pool resident in the member's constituency. I will be speaking with them in detail, and we have been working since the minute we heard of the impending closures and the impending job losses on other avenues of development up in that area that can put good Albertans to work in that area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. Would the minister explain what we're doing on the coal bed methane fields now?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are opportunities with respect to coal bed methane. There is no change in our regulatory structure now, but we are asking for consultation throughout Alberta from all types and all walks, and it's a public process. We also feel, Mr. Speaker, that there might be added value in these coal beds with respect to coal bed methane. In fact, in the United States some 7 to 8 percent of the total U.S. supply of natural gas was obtained through coal bed methane extraction. These wells are very much different from our traditional natural gas wells in Alberta. They're very small volume; they're about 100,000 cubic feet per day – that kind of pressure you can literally put your hand on and close it down – in comparison with some gas wells that blow 20 million cubic feet a day in production.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are working very closely with industry and with stakeholders with respect to developing coal bed methane in an efficient, environmentally responsible, and safe manner, as we have developed all the other resources in this province.

Mercury Exposure

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, every environmentalist and health official knows that mercury is hazardous to human and environmental health. Long-term exposure to mercury can result in damage to the nervous system, heart, kidneys, and digestive system, and exposure to mercury can cause brain damage in fetuses. Alarming, Alberta has a large number of mercury hot spots, 18, compared to two in B.C. and five in Saskatchewan. My questions today are to the Minister of Environment. What is this government doing to clean up the disproportionate number of mercury hot spots in this province?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, as poorly as I feel, I still find that question amusing because the mercury hot spots she's referring to that were identified in that study clearly are mercury that is occurring in natural coal seams that are already in the ground. There's not much the government can do to fix the naturally occurring mercury in natural coal beds, but of course we'll continue to monitor.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, we don't agree with that assessment at all. What is the minister doing to address the 18 hot spots in Alberta that are occurring primarily in rural areas to ensure that residents of those areas know what they're dealing with in the work environment and in the total living environment that they're exposed to there?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, quite clearly, she didn't understand the first answer. The hot spots that she refers to: the samples were taken from coal seams, coal seams in the ground that were placed there how many millions of years ago. That's where the hot spots were from, from naturally occurring mercury in coal beds in coal seams. I encourage her to listen to the answer.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, if we take a look at those hot spots in this province, they all lie along the coal seams that are now currently being mined. This government has some responsibility. What are you doing?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to be able to say that as Minister of Environment I can, you know, undo millions of years of work, but unfortunately I can't do that.

Of course, as we burn coal, we have very strict standards on the emissions. We have some of the toughest standards in the country. But these mercury hot spots she's talking about have nothing to do with the burning of coal. They are occurring in natural coal bed seams, and as I said, we'll monitor it.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've arrived at a point where my list is now exhausted. We still have time; the first member up gets a crack.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Environmental Enforcement and Monitoring Policies

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to address more questions to the Minister of Environment today. As we see that tomorrow is budget day and we know that the biggest downfall with this government on the environmental side has been the enforcement and monitoring policies, has this minister aggressively pursued more money for enforcement and monitoring in this province?

Dr. Taylor: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Carlson: Can he tell us how and what kind of dollar figures we see coming in terms of not only money but people?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, watch tomorrow.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, hardly an adequate response.

Can this minister tell us that we're going to see more people in the field starting Wednesday morning?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, whether we put more people in the field is really not important. What's going to happen is that we will continue to maintain high standards, the highest standards in the country, on environmental issues.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we introduce the first hon. member for Recognitions, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce from Elk Island public schools the chair and vice-chair, Maureen Towns and Pat McLauchlan; also, the associate superintendent, Brian Carbol; science and technology director, Edna Dach; Rob McPhee, the superintendent; and Carol Moen from Dow Chemical. I'd ask that they rise in the gallery and be recognized by the Assembly.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

2:30 Call of the Land Radio Program

Mr. McFarland: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, today marks the 50th anniversary of a unique radio program that is dedicated to and a proud sponsor of Alberta's agricultural industry. Call of the Land is broadcast weekdays on 20 radio stations in Alberta and two in B.C. First broadcast on April 1, 1953, with announcer Everett McCrimmon, today Call of the Land originates from the J.G. O'Donoghue Building in Edmonton. Announcer Jack Howell has been keeping Alberta farm families and the ag community current on the latest technologies, research, market trends, upcoming events, and government programs since 1970.

Other hosts of Call of the Land since 1953 include Ken Blackley, Stu Wilton, Scott Flewitt, Ed Hamula, Lynn Malmberg, John Andrew, Warren Wismer, Don Potter, Douglas Pettit, Phil Thomas, and Gerard Vaillancourt.

Mr. Speaker, Call of the Land is an Alberta institution, and I'm pleased today to acknowledge and congratulate everyone who's been connected with Call of the Land for the past 50 years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Catriona LeMay Doan
Jeremy Wotherspoon

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to recognize two very special constituents who were honoured by the Minister of Community Development as Alberta's male and female athletes of the year at the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation awards banquet last Thursday.

Catriona LeMay Doan has broken the world record in long-track speed skating eight times, including a gold medal performance at the 2002 Olympics, and became the first Canadian ever to defend a gold medal at any Olympic Games.

Jeremy Wotherspoon is a nine-time World Cup championship speed skater who holds 25 world records, the most ever by a speed skater in the history of the sport. He has won 74 World Cup medals, which places him third in World Cup history.

Jeremy and Catriona have both achieved exceptional levels of success and have become incredible ambassadors for our province and role models for many aspiring Albertans. Please join me in congratulating them.

Partners for Science Program

Mr. Louheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise in this Assembly to recognize a unique and highly successful science education partnership. I'm referring to a hands-on, curriculum-based science program called partners for science, that's offered to students attending Elk Island public and Elk Island Catholic schools.

Every educator knows that science is best learned through hands-on activities. The partners for science program facilitates a teacher's efforts to provide students with the very best learning experience possible.

Partners for science has been very effective. Elk Island public and Catholic students are consistently and significantly outperforming their provincial peers in terms of average achievement and highest achievement in science.

This innovative public/private partnership is supported by major and ongoing funding contributions by Dow Chemical. Ten years ago Dow provided almost half a million dollars in seed money for the elementary school program. In addition to providing ongoing funding, two months ago Dow presented Elk Island school districts with a cheque for $300,000 to launch a junior high version of the program.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all members assembled join me in recognizing Dow Chemical and partners for science.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alberta Sports Awards

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday evening the 2002 Alberta sports awards were presented to Alberta athletes and to sport volunteers of the year. In addition to Jeremy Wotherspoon and Catriona LeMay Doan, there were other awards of recognition that were also passed out. Volunteers Marilyn Barraclough, Leigh Goldie, J.R. Kelly Rich, and Yoshio Senda were recognized for their many hours of hard work, determination, and commitment that helped their organizations succeed. The diversity, dedication, and contributions of these individuals are sincerely appreciated, and their distinguished service merits a sport volunteer recognition award.

Deidra Dionne was named junior female athlete of the year. She competed at the 2002 Winter Olympics in Salt Lake City, where she claimed a bronze medal, and her other achievements include six podium finishes at World Cup events and two third-place finishes at the 2002 world championships.

Kyle Shewfelt was named the 2002 junior male athlete of the year for his accomplishments in the past year at the national and international levels in gymnastics. At the 2002 Canadian national championships Kyle placed third all around.

My congratulations to all award winners.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Weldwood of Canada Recreation Program

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Weldwood of Canada began its recreation program in the early 1970s with the development of hiking trails. Most recently it used its own funds as well as contributions from the Forest Resource Improvement Association of Alberta to greatly increase its involvement in forest recreation to benefit all Albertans. This commitment was recognized with an emerald award from the Alberta Foundation for Environmental Excellence in 2001.

For instance, it now co-operates with Community Development to manage 16 campgrounds including 13 provincial sites in the Hinton area as part of the company's special places in the forest program. In addition, it maintains seven hiking, biking, and cross-country ski trails in the area, over 600 kilometres in length. The company does its part to reduce environmental and fire risks arising from uncontrolled random camping.

At this time I'd like to thank Weldwood of Canada for working with Community Development plus Albertans.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Marilyn Barraclough

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to congratulate one of Highwood's constituents, Marilyn Barraclough from Black Diamond, who received an outstanding volunteer recognition award from the Minister of Community Development at last week's Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation awards banquet.

Marilyn's dedicated involvement in the Alberta Curling Federation and sport in Alberta stems back to the 1970s. She's been intensely involved with curling on a provincial and national level and was for six years the curling representative for the Calgary Olympic Development Association.

She's also been involved with the Girl Guides of Canada, where she volunteered for many years as the western Canadian representative and is an executive member of the national council.

She was recognized by the Canadian Curling Association and by the Calgary Olympic Development Association for her long-term efforts to promote curling in Alberta and in Canada.

Please join me in saluting Alberta volunteer Marilyn Barraclough.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Larry Booi

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and recognize today the outgoing president of the Alberta Teachers' Association, Mr. Larry Booi. Mr. Booi served as vice-president from 1997 to 1999 and assumed the office of the president on July 1, 1999. He leaves this office on June 30 of this year.

Mr. Booi is an outstanding educator and a strong and passionate supporter of public education. He came to the ATA with over three decades of teaching experience with Edmonton public schools. He saw Alberta teachers through the largest teachers' strike in Alberta history in 2002 with exceptional leadership. He led the fight to protect the quality of education of Alberta's children and Alberta's public education system with tenacity and integrity. While he may be leaving this office in a few months, his leadership during this very difficult time for teachers will be appreciated and remembered by parents and teachers alike.

I wish him well and thank him for his service to the children, teachers, and everyone associated with public education in this province. Thank you, Larry Booi.

Calendar of Special Events

The Speaker: Hon. members, before moving on to the next item of the Routine, might I just advise hon. members that April is the following: Daffodil Month and Cancer Awareness Month, international Prevention of Animal Cruelty Month, Parkinson's Awareness Month, Asthma and Allergies Awareness Month, Earth Month, Oral Health Month, Stay Alert . . . Stay Safe Month. It is also the second month of the Easter Seal mail campaign. April 1 was Unpaid Work Day. April 4 and 5 was the 30-hour Famine Day. April 6 to 12 is National Wildlife Week. April 7 is World Health Day. April 14 to April 18 is Law Week. April 15 is Law Day. April 17 is International Hemophilia Day. April 18 is Good Friday. April 19 to May 19 is National Physiotherapy Month. April 20 is Easter Sunday. April 20 to April 26 is Administrative Professionals Week, as it is also National Soil Conservation Week, as is it also National Battery Check Week, as it also is the National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week, as it is also Canada Book Week. April 22 is Earth Day. April 23 is World Book and Copyright Day. April 23 is Administrative Professional Day. April 23 is also St. George's Day. April 27 to May 3 is International Composting Awareness Week, as it is also National Volunteer Week. April 28 is National Day of Mourning, and April 29 is International Dance Day.

2:40head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by about 120 Albertans from all over the province – Calgary, Edmonton, Spruce Grove, Carvel, Sherwood Park, and so on – expressing great concern about education and urging the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to “increase funding for public education.”

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Bill 36 Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2003

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce

Bill 36, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2003.

This bill does three things, Mr. Speaker. It strengthens Alberta Environment's ability to develop and enforce consistent, province-wide standards, it gives municipalities and industry the option to report environmental incidents electronically, and it will also improve Alberta's efficiency in the upstream oil and gas remediation and reclamation program.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Bill 37 Climate Change and Emissions Management Act

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 37, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

It essentially builds on Alberta's framework of environmental regulation and ownership and management of its natural resources. It strengthens and complements Alberta's existing legislation on environmental protection, and it also reaffirms Alberta's commitment to sustainable development and our belief that we can maintain high standards and at the same time enhance economic prosperity.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table pursuant to Standing Order 58(6) a calendar of Committee of Supply appearances for spring 2003 in anticipation of the budget being delivered tomorrow. Standing Order 58(6), as you will know, allows for the Leader of the Opposition to send a letter to the Clerk requesting appearances. I can assure this House that we have had discussions with the opposition and that they have designated the particular ministries for the appropriate afternoons, and the calendar has been reached in agreement with the opposition.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings today. The first one is an article in the Daily Herald-Tribune of Grande Prairie dated March 26. This is the report that I quoted in one of my questions. The report in this paper is about the crisis in education, and it mentions that “faced with its largest-ever budget shortfall next school year, the Grande Prairie Public School District board . . . will likely be forced to cut teaching jobs, axe school programs,” et cetera.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a report based on visits by Mrs. Melanie Shapiro to seven schools in the Edmonton public school district under the umbrella name of the city centre education project, and she draws attention to how the very valuable programs there could be axed as a result of the funding cutbacks.

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the letter based on this report that Mrs. Shapiro has written to the Premier, the Minister of Learning, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Children's Services drawing attention to the same looming crisis in this city centre education project, affecting seven schools that serve very needy children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of the program for the 2002 Alberta sports awards banquet, and I know that all athletes and nominees mentioned in here would like to thank the generous support they get from the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation and Alberta Community Development.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first one is a summary of the MAP 2 strip auctions at Clover Bar, Sheerness, and Genesee in regard to energy deregulation. This is from the Balancing Pool.

My second tabling is a letter from Patti Skolski from the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and Patti is concerned about the funding of public education and is urging stable, reliable funding for public education and can't understand why in this province it's underfunded.

My last tabling is also a letter. This one is addressed to the hon. Premier. It is from Andrea Holmstrom of 25th Avenue and 47th Street, and Andrea is also concerned about the funding. She's appalled, actually, at the lack of funding for public education in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Others?

Hon. members, I am pleased to table with the Assembly an interim annual report that the chair has received from the now former Ethics Commissioner pursuant to section 46(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act. It is a report generally on the affairs of the Office of the Ethics Commissioner and covers the period April 1, 2002, until his last day in office, March 31, 2003. A copy of the report will be distributed to all members.

As well, pursuant to Standing Order 109 I am pleased to table with the Assembly the 13th annual report of the Legislative Assembly Office for the calendar year ended December 31, 2001. The report represents the audited financial statements for the 2000-2001 and 2001-2002 fiscal years and the fifth annual report of the Alberta branch of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, and a copy of the report will also be distributed to all members.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 27, I would now move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again proper notice having been served on Thursday, March 27, I would now move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper also stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, in calling on the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, might we also revert to Introduction of Guests, or does the hon. member want to proceed with it all at the same time?

The hon. member is recognized.

Bill 202

Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure and indeed with some pride that I rise to my feet today to speak to Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. Just prior to moving that, though, I would like to introduce a number of people in our galleries. All of them are not in our galleries at this point in time, but they are some of the finest firefighters in the world, and they are, of course, Alberta's firefighters. They are from virtually every major urban fire department in Alberta. I'll mention a few of the towns: Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, Lethbridge, Calgary, Edmonton, and I know I'm missing a few.

An Hon. Member: Medicine Hat.

Mr. Magnus: And Medicine Hat. My apologies.

I would ask that they now rise and accept the warm, traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to move the bill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would indeed move Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003, right now.

Firefighters are the healthiest and fittest people of any profession known to man. In order to become a firefighter, you literally have to put in an application and compete against thousands of other people who have put in applications at the same time as you in order to get, in a major city like Calgary, probably an average over the last 10 years of 20 new firefighters per year. Thousands will apply for each and every one of those positions.

Firefighters are the healthiest and fittest people out there, but unfortunately they get cancer from their job. Interestingly enough, through the debate on this bill – and we've had a tremendous amount of debate, whether it be in second reading or committee – we've had people talking about the issues and the things that are within the bill. One of the very, very important things that this bill does is it puts presumptive legislation in place, which indeed changes the onus for a firefighter. Now with this bill in place, or when this bill becomes a bill in about an hour's time, I hope, the onus will have been shifted from a firefighter having to prove where indeed he got the cancer to the WCB having to prove that he didn't get the cancer from the job. It is a very, very large shift in this responsibility, Mr. Speaker. Firefighters get it for a couple of very simple reasons. They are special and they are unique in that they are the only profession that we have today that are forced to and indeed go into unsafe working environments and battle their way through that.

Interestingly enough, I was reading something on the weekend about cancer itself and about some of the by-products of fires. One of those by-products is benzene, and benzene comes from plastics. The interesting part about that article is that there are 300 new plastics introduced in North America every year, and virtually everything we have that is out there, whether it be our car, things in our home, whatever is burning, releases benzene, and it is the most highly carcinogenic substance known to man. Regardless of the protection that a firefighter wears or the type of equipment, they are still susceptible to this because it's not just the breathing in of the smoke and the toxic chemicals; it's what gets under their equipment and gets on their skin.

This bill with its presumptive legislation being brought into place is a radical departure from the way it used to be because, frankly, no fireman in Alberta was ever paid for cancer-related illness from the job prior to all the publicity on this bill. I think what we've got at the end of the day is a very, very good bill. In fact, it's superior to bills that are being put forward in other provinces and, in fact, the bill in Winnipeg that we originally modeled our bill on. The reason for that, of course, is we have two extra cancers that have been added to the bill, and I think that because of the fact that our cancers are listed in regulations, it does make it indeed easier for us to add cancers in the future.

Mr. Speaker, we had an awful lot of people debate this, and I'm not going to take too much of the House's time, but I would like to say some thank yous, and hopefully it will be a very short debate on the closure of this third reading on my part by doing this now. I'd like to start off by mentioning Greg McFarlane, my researcher, who did a tremendous amount of work for me and shepherded this right through the Legislature, and he's here now. Greg, you may want to stand. Morten Paulsen – and I'm not sure if he's here – is a communicator extraordinaire, and he has worked for the various fire departments across Canada, indeed a very good friend of mine and, as I say, an excellent, excellent communicator who has shepherded me through the process for quite some time. We've had a bit of a campaign going on in this, as I'm sure all members are aware.

I'd also like to thank members of the Legislature because, frankly, this has not been a political issue. This is an issue, in my mind, about fairness and about doing the right thing. When I took it to the two opposition parties, they came forward immediately and said, "Yeah, this makes sense to us," and they have kept their word all along. So I would like to give them some accolades for that, as well as the members of the government of course, because while this has been at times somewhat contentious for some people, based on a whole variety of reasons – and that's fair – everybody did get up and express their opinion. In fact, we had 22 speakers at Committee of the Whole two weeks ago when this bill came before us.

I would be remiss if I didn't mention four firefighters. I know they're all here, and we've introduced them in the House before: Ken Block, the president of the Edmonton firefighters association, and Alex Forest, who's the president of the Canadian firefighters association. The rest of you will probably agree with them, but I talked to them, and they were essentially on call on their cell phones for the last two months pretty well and were available to provide me with information on this bill and to in fact answer questions. It didn't matter whether it was midnight or 7 in the morning. They were on those cells and available to answer questions, and I thank them very much for that.

The last two members that I absolutely have to thank, Mr. Speaker, are two gentlemen from Calgary: Scott Wilcox, the president of the Calgary Firefighters Association, and Gord Caldwell, who is a Calgary firefighter and who is the president of the Alberta Fire Fighters Association. Interesting to me: these two gentlemen on this issue and on most issues that they discuss are very, very passionate but in two entirely different ways. One is a little more flamboyant than the other, but they are both passionate about this issue to the nth degree. Both of them have helped me right from the very, very beginning, and all four of these gentlemen that I've mentioned today – if the firefighters are smart, frankly, you'll make these folks presidents for life in their respective jobs because they have gone way above and beyond the call of duty in order to do this.

Mr. Speaker, the last people I would really like to thank – and I'll take my place and open the floor to debate – are firemen as a whole. We have wonderful, wonderful firemen in this province. They are wonderful all over the world. We can talk about September 11 till the cows come home, and maybe we should be talking about that, but we have examples closer to home; in the last two months in Calgary and Edmonton, as an example. We've had two fires in Calgary – one was a church fire, and one was a huge warehouse-type fire – where the firefighters in Calgary went out and showed their mettle. We've had two fires here in the last three weeks. The same crew, interestingly enough, fought both those fires: the fire at the parkade a block east of this building and the Whyte Avenue fires. They were only about a day, a day and a half apart. The same crew actually went from the one fire to the other, and we all remember the scare that we had when that parkade came down. Firefighters get out of bed every single day of their lives not knowing if today is the day that they're going to be called upon to be heroes, but they go willingly every single time.

Mr. Speaker, the time is right for this bill. The fairness, I believe, is there. We've got a good bill. Let's do the right thing. I'd ask members of this Assembly to vote in the positive in third reading of this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and participate in the debate, as well, on Bill 202, and at this time I believe it's opportune to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill for bringing this legislation forward. Certainly, I was pleased to hear that this was going to be an item for discussion and debate at this time. I was disappointed last June when the initial discussion on this bill had a public forum, and there were certainly reservations at that time, but at this time I am pleased to stand and support this legislation. I think it's a step in the right direction not only for firefighters but hopefully at some time in the future for other workers in this province who through the course of their duties may as a result of their duties come in contact with carcinogenic substances that lead, unfortunately, to cancer.

Now, certainly in debate on this legislation a lot of issues have been covered at this time, and as I understand, there are many members of this Assembly who would like to speak at third reading. This is good legislation. I can't think of a worse thing than coming home and sharing with a loved one the fact that cancer has been discovered or diagnosed, and it would be, to say the least, comforting not only to the individual but also to the family to know that this would be a disease that is going to be recognized and covered by our Workers' Compensation Board legislation. Now, when we think of other workers in this province, certainly as our construction materials change, as the composition of those materials changes, and with the unknown effects that these materials have on workers at the time, hopefully this legislation will be a stepping-stone for others.

Certainly, there are questions that I have in regard to this legislation. Specifically, what does this mean for firefighters that are employed in large industrial complexes? I noticed that earlier this afternoon the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan introduced some individuals, I believe, who were employees of Dow Chemical. Dow Chemical is a complex that would have permanent, highly trained fire-fighting teams ready and willing. I hope they never have to respond, but in case they do, what would this legislation mean for them? Now, hopefully through the course of time my questions will be answered regarding that matter.

In conclusion I would like at this time to thank the hon. member again. He thanked a lot of individuals, and I am pleased to have the opportunity to publicly express my gratitude to him for bringing this bill forward.

Certainly, one of the most pleasant observations I have had the chance to notice in the last year in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar is the fact that the firefighters have decided to make their new permanent home there. I believe they've seen the light and moved from Edmonton-Centre.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I wish the sponsor of this bill the best, and I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to support Bill 202 as we know it and as it's presented here, and hopefully this will be a stepping-stone for all workers in this province, because times are changing. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today and speak in support of Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. I have a great deal of respect for the Member for Calgary-North Hill for bringing this important legislation forward.

With little concern for their own safety firefighters, as we all know by now at least, enter buildings which are engulfed in flames and do what they are trained to do: save lives, provide medical attention, protect property while extinguishing fires. The purpose of Bill 202 is to provide fair and just compensation to firefighters by granting presumptive status for the seven – yes, seven – specific cancers outlined in the bill. Benefits would be delivered then based on the presumption that firefighters contracted the cancer due to their work environment.

Mr. Speaker, other provinces across Canada are now recognizing and identifying the importance of this initiative. Currently, Manitoba is the only province with legislation granting presumptive status to firefighters for specific types of cancer. However, Nova Scotia, Quebec, and Saskatchewan are presently considering similar legislation.

Studies and extensive data prove that there is a link between different forms of cancer and the hazards and carcinogens firefighters are exposed to while performing regular duties. Research indicates that firefighters are more than two times more likely than the general population to get brain, bladder, kidney, colon, lymphatic, ureter, and hematopoietic cancer or leukemia. Moreover, firefighters are more likely to contract these cancers than individuals in similar stress-related occupations. Toxins and carcinogens which are released during the combustion of synthetic materials pose both immediate and long-term dangers for firefighters. These toxins combine to form a myriad of dangerous chemicals. These chemical compounds are ingested, inhaled, and even absorbed into the bodies of firefighters despite the protective gear worn and breathing apparatuses used.

I feel that an increasingly smaller part of my own image of the valiant firefighter is of one who has rescued a child, but with the help of this bill that image of mine has certainly changed somewhat.

It's not lost, but it's changed. Firefighters are definitely very valiant, but through personal testimonials I have learned of the health risks and for many of them the risk to their lives. In fact, I guess I would say that I'm left wondering why young men and women recruit themselves as career firefighters.

Mr. Speaker, we have to put into place the necessary legislative amendments to make sure that firefighters are protected from any disease that they encounter due to their work environment. Bill 202, when it is passed, will amend the province's Workers' Compensation Act to establish automatic compensation guidelines when a firefighter suffers from cancer of the brain, bladder, kidney, ureter, colon, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, or leukemia after a specified number of years on the job. Bill 202 provides a framework for granting these benefits. There will be certain thresholds of time a firefighter must spend on the job in order to receive the benefits for the seven cancers.

I would like also to mention that I am very pleased with the amendment which takes the cancers out of the legislation and places them into regulation. This provision makes it easier to add cancers without opening the act. Furthermore, as more studies are done and more precise findings are brought forward, the act can be altered to reflect the current situation and how certain cancers are linked to fire fighting and the workplace, such as lung and testicular cancers.

The presumption applies even though it is not possible to determine which exact claim is actually caused by the occupation. This presumption is a way of being inclusive in the acceptance of such claims, given that it is not possible to distinguish among them. A presumption is usually based on a demonstration that the relative risk exceeds twice that of the general population because under these conditions the likelihood of the origin being related to the exposure is greater than the likelihood of the origin from other reasons. The bill presumes that the dominant cause of the disease is the individual's employment as a firefighter unless it can be proven otherwise. However, the disease could not have been detected at the initial physical appraisal.

Currently, the burden of proof lies with the individual, and they have to rely on their own resources to pinpoint an actual cause in order to receive benefits. As it stands, firefighters would have to list every incident and fire scene that they have attended and substantiate the different materials that may have been inhaled or absorbed. Furthermore, with the numbers of synthetic materials and increased use of plastics, it would be impossible to document all the different substances that a firefighter may have been in contact with. For example, there are approximately 300 new plastics each year.

Mr. Speaker, firefighters deserve to be supported after so many years of taking care of Albertans across this province. Bill 202 would compensate firefighters for their total commitment to public safety.

Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to shift my focus for a moment and point out that volunteer firefighters, who make up the bulk of firefighters in the province, are not covered under this legislation. In the unfortunate event that one of Alberta's many volunteer firefighters is diagnosed with one of these types of cancer, these volunteer firefighters will still have to prove to the Workers' Compensation Board that the cancer they contracted was caused by their exposure to carcinogens and toxic chemicals through their duties as a firefighter. We should acknowledge and recognize that the dangers and hazards faced by a volunteer firefighter are not any less real than those faced by a full-time firefighter in Alberta's urban centres. However, I am pleased to hear that the government will be collecting research which examines the risks for volunteer firefighters so that these individuals can be assured that their concerns are not forgotten while the ease of receiving benefits could soon be extended to these volunteers.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very positive that we are moving closer to an understanding of when and where it is appropriate for workers' compensation boards to provide support and benefits to workers whose cancer may have arisen from their work environment. This is an important step in providing better access and a more open and honest process to providing compensation for those who develop cancers from exposures in the workplace, especially when these work environments are uncontrollable and cannot be regulated, such as those of firefighters. At the same time, it clearly begins the approach of clarifying when a cancer can be considered work related and a framework within which employers can become much more involved in addressing factors which cause cancer and in reducing the incidence of cancer which results from the work environment.

After all, we are dealing with diseases that are potentially fatal. Firefighters daily put their lives at risk to preserve and protect the lives and the property of Albertans. Bill 202 would amend the Workers' Compensation Act, grant presumptive status for the seven outlined cancers. This amendment would provide benefits, delivering fair and just compensation to firefighters across the province that contract these diseases due to their workplace.

Mr. Speaker, I highly commend the MLA for Calgary-North Hill for bringing this legislation forward. I strongly support this initiative and encourage all my colleagues to vote in favour of Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003.

I would like to take this opportunity to sincerely thank the members of fire-fighting forces and their families across the province for their commitment and dedication to community safety and protection. Thank you so very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We in the Official Opposition continue to support this bill, as we have through the various readings that we've had so far. For our visitors and for those people who are avidly following the words that are spoken in this House on this bill, I would like to explain some of those processes. In our Legislature it isn't required to have a recorded or standing vote for every piece of legislation. The process for getting a recorded vote is to have at least three members of the Assembly stand after a voice vote is taken. In second reading on this bill that's what we did. Members of the Official Opposition stood and asked for a recorded vote where it could be recorded that those from our side who were available that day stood in support of the bill. All members of the Official Opposition strongly support this bill. That information is available in Hansard for people to review.

The process for bills in this Legislature is that they go through three readings: the first reading, just the title and a small preamble; the second reading, where we all have a chance to speak to the bill in principle, and then committee, where there is more give-and-take in debate; and third reading, which is the final stage that we see here today as far as this Assembly is concerned. There still is another stage, and that's royal assent. We have seen in the past where private members' bills that have gone through the first, second, and third stages successfully in this Legislature never actually get royal assent. So my encouragement to all of those people who support this bill is that your job isn't finished after the vote today. We still need to ensure that we get royal assent on this bill so that it's actually passed into legislation in this province.

So I would urge everyone who likes this bill to continue to be diligent to ensure that we get what it is that has been supported by this Legislature, this bill as amended, which we do continue to support. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am really very pleased to be able to speak at third reading to this bill. I think this is a bill that we should all be very proud of in this Legislature. As a politician every so often you get the feeling that you've hit a home run and done something that's absolutely correct, and when you see the support on all sides of the House coming forward, as a politician you know that clearly this should have been the case all the way along.

I also want to once again congratulate the Member for Calgary-North Hill for bringing this forward. When he first told me about this bill, I was surprised that we already didn't have it in place. I couldn't believe that it was something that wasn't there, particularly when I realized how terribly dependent we all are on the firefighters. Through a simple phone call, three numbers, they're there without hesitation, without question, without concern for themselves, and without concern for their families. They come right through the door, no matter whether it's a house or a plant or a field, to deal with the emergency situation.

The amendments that were offered as House amendments by the minister I think are very, very important, and I think it's when I look at the lists of cancers that were involved – Cancer Crusade is one of my pet projects and something I support as we've dealt with it personally. Every one of these cancers is very, very, very difficult to deal with. I had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, also to have coffee and brownies one Saturday morning with Scott Wilcox to talk about this, and I admired his staying power to make sure that there was a clear position from the firefighters coming forward in support of this bill.

So I won't talk long other than to say that every so often we do something that is absolutely correct, and I believe that that's what this bill is. It's the right thing to do. Again I will congratulate the firefighters for bringing it forward and my colleague from Calgary-North Hill for making sure that he had this entire Assembly onside to support our firefighters, because they always support us.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to support this bill. I've not had a chance just because of scheduling arrangements, I guess, to speak to the bill before now, but I have watched its progress through the Assembly carefully, and I'm delighted that it's gone as far as it has. I, like others, congratulate the Member for Calgary-North Hill and all the firefighters and their supporters, who have worked so hard on this bill.

I would like to make a comment that I hope this is the start of something of a trend and that perhaps it will lead to better recognition of many other workplace hazards and safety issues. In particular, I'd like to mention the issue of asbestos today, and I know that this is or at least ought to be a concern to firefighters in the province. Asbestos is far and away the leading cause of workplace-related disease and death, and I was just reading extensively on it again last night. The members here will know I've been digging into this issue for some time. It is undoubtedly significantly underreported. It is responsible for thousands of workplace disease deaths a year on this continent. There are about 30 reported deaths a year in Alberta alone stemming from asbestos-related diseases, and undoubtedly there are many, many more beyond that.

Now, why do I raise it in this context? Because a tremendous number of the buildings that firefighters need to go into when they're fighting fires are loaded with asbestos, and the most dramatic example of that is the World Trade Center, which in fact had hundreds of tonnes of asbestos in it. Those great clouds of dust that went up in the air and coated the firefighters, coated the civilians, coated much of New York City had substantial amounts of asbestos fibres in them, fibres that lead to many different kinds of diseases: lung cancers, stomach cancers, asbestosis, and a particularly dreadful cancer called mesothelioma, which I learned last night took the life of Steve McQueen. I thought he'd died of lung cancer from cigarette smoking, and it turned out, I learned last night, that he died of asbestos-related diseases. He was exposed to asbestos before he was in the acting business when he was working in a shipyard, I believe.

There is no question that firefighters encounter significant risk of asbestos exposure. Asbestos is reasonably safe if it's properly contained. Of course, in a burning building it isn't, and that's a significant risk for them. So I hope that we will see other steps taken to advance the issues of workplace safety, workplace hazards, recognizing that the men and women who are exposed to these hazards through the course of their work need proper treatment. This is a step in the right direction, but it is only a first step, and as big as it is, we need to make more steps. Every journey, as the saying goes, begins with a single step. I hope there are many steps to follow to ensure that our workers are treated fairly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to join in debate in third reading of Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003. We've heard a great deal about the importance of firefighters and the value that they are to urban communities. I'm sure that the firefighters appreciate these sentiments and acknowledgments, and I agree and I add my voice to them as well, but they probably care more about improving the settlement process for cancer claims.

Mr. Speaker, both rural and urban firefighters work in my constituency, and I'm satisfied that Bill 202 will address their concerns regarding cancer claims. Presumptive status through regulation will dramatically improve the settlement process for sick firefighters, who should be concentrating on their health. Opening up the Workers' Compensation Act to add or, less likely, to remove cancers is not efficient or fair to firefighters. It isn't efficient because legislation takes time. It isn't fair because sick firefighters need to battle cancer, not the WCB nor this government.

The other aspect of the bill, which hasn't been talked about as much, involves the WCB's report on the status of research already being conducted in other jurisdictions. Other firefighters such as volunteer and part-time firefighters as defined in Bill 202 often contain fires rather than go into them, and there is a perception that containing a fire leads to far less exposure than actually entering a fire. Obviously, these firefighters are not exposed as much as their urban counterparts, but I do believe that they are at risk of developing cancer.

I understand that there is a reluctance to extend presumptive coverage to every firefighter in Alberta. There are 23 states and two provinces that have either addressed this issue or are waiting for more research to be done. Every fire is different, and every firefighter is different. I think it's important that the WCB watch what other jurisdictions are doing and consider the conclusions drawn from future research. This process will help Alberta's firefighters, specifically those who do not work in urban centres. Although the WCB has not avoided the firefighters' claims, this bill has brought all affected parties together to settle all concerns and improve the process.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of a reasonable argument against the intent of Bill 202. The medical research and overwhelming evidence needs to be acknowledged. One concern some may have involves the possible increase in premiums due to more cancer claims. The reality is that if workers get injured, they must be protected. In the case of firefighters, if they develop cancer, they must receive coverage.

My hope is that the instances of cancer among firefighters can be reduced with improvements to their equipment. Continued innovation in their protective gear could limit exposure, which could help reduce the chances of developing cancer.

There is an element of risk in many professions, and this bill may open the door for others to seek presumptive status. If passed, Bill 202 will certainly set a precedent. After all, there is an element of risk in several occupations and industries in Alberta, but I believe that this precedent will not be enough to justify expanding presumptive status. Workers and their employers are legally obligated to wear protective gear to reduce the risk of injury. For example, construction workers must wear a harness if they're working above a certain height, and paramedics must wear rubber gloves when treating patients, but it's hard to develop a similar policy for firefighters because the element of risk remains high every time they fight a blaze. The amended regulations in the Workers' Compensation Act will reflect the unique working environment of firefighters.

The original mechanics of Bill 202 caused concern amongst several members in this House, and I appreciated and agreed with their apprehension for supporting the original bill, but the amendments passed in Committee of the Whole maintain the autonomy of the WCB and ensure that future cancer claims are settled more efficiently.

Mr. Speaker, I support the idea of improving the process for settling claims for any sick or injured worker. Urging the WCB to monitor related research is the right action to take and necessary to improve the compensation process for Alberta's sick firefighters. I'm very happy to support Bill 202 as amended and congratulate the hon. member and the minister and all the stakeholders for working together for a solution that works for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and a pleasure to rise today and join the debate on Bill 202, the Workers' Compensation (Firefighters) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. Bill 202 would amend the Workers' Compensation Act to ensure that primary site brain cancer, primary site bladder and primary site kidney cancer, primary non-Hodgkin's lymphatic cancer, leukemia, and primary site colon cancer have presumptive status for any fireman wishing to receive workers' compensation benefits due to the contraction of these cancers.

Firefighters risk their lives to save the lives of others. They are trained to avoid being trapped in a burning building or crushed under a collapsing roof, but as we have heard, there is evidence that firefighters face another equally serious risk. Cancer is a silent killer. Firefighters seem to not only be battling fires and saving lives but running headlong into prime contraction areas for certain cancers.

A specialist in the causes of cancers recently looked at the death reports of 6,000 firefighters from Toronto. The results of her research determined the culprit to be toxins created by smoldering plastics. These cancer-causing vapours and smoke come from commonly found glues, wraps, paints, insulation, and other building materials, the synthetics found in almost every article of modern-day life. Any fire can change an ordinary building or vehicle into a chemical whirlwind. If these chemicals and poisons are present in the majority of nonindustrial fires, then imagine the chemicals and poisons that firefighters are exposed to when dealing with a fire on an oil lease or cleaning plant or factory. We need to acknowledge that these risks are real and recognize that firefighters have more than earned our support on this issue.

Additional studies have concluded that firefighters are at increased risk for brain cancer compared to the usual control group, police officers, who are often under comparable stress. Of 14 studies done on the mortality of firefighters, 11 found excessive risk of brain cancer. A story regarding this issue may best illustrate my case. Around 10 years ago a firefighter in Kitchener, Ontario, began to realize that the men in his shift were dying and they were all dying from cancer. After checking the records, one similarity became constant. They had all fought the same fire. It was a huge blaze that occurred in 1987 at a chemical factory.

When a firefighter responds to a call, the fire is only the first risk of many. Once the fire is extinguished, a number of risks still exist. A fire can produce dangerous chemicals both during the working phase of a fire and after the fire is out. One such chemical is PVC, or polyvinyl chloride, which is used in making upholstery, wire, pipes, and wall coverings. Polyethylene and PVC are often more dangerous when smoldering than during the high heat of a working fire. They both give off carbon monoxide, hydrogen cyanide, hydrochloric acid, and other chemicals. Concrete can also pose a postfire risk to firefighters. It can act like a sponge, retaining heat and gases and then releasing toxic fumes as the fire is extinguished and cooling takes place.

With all the medical breakthroughs and all the research we still don't fully understand the links between cancer and firefighting. There will always be skeptics until a defined direct link is made between certain actions and being diagnosed with cancer. I believe we need to provide assistance and protection to those who risk their lives to protect us, and I wish to add my support to this bill and urge all hon. members to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I think I may have stood at the wrong time. I've got another bill to speak to.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did have a chance during Committee of the Whole to stand up and speak in support of this bill, but I just wanted to add that there is someone in our galleries today that I'd like to introduce to everyone. That's someone who actually used to be a neighbour of mine, and I got to know him a little bit when he was a neighbour and showing me his house. I knew he was a fireman; I think he was actually a fire chief at the time. I did read just in the newspaper this weekend that he is now getting his WCB benefits. I'm really happy about that, because it means that he can concentrate on just looking after himself, living his life well. So I would like to please introduce to you and through you to the rest of the House Mr. Hemming and his wife. They're up in the gallery, and if I could ask everyone to show their appreciation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill to close the debate.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, it occurs to me that firemen are there every time we need them, and they need us now. I would ask all members of this House to look at this bill in a positive light. I'd call the question.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 202 read a third time]

3:30

Bill 203

School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, I apologize for getting up here before. I had already spoken to the previous bill, and I appreciate your co-operation. I am also pleased here today to have the opportunity to continue debate on Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003, in this third reading.

As we gather here, I could not help but reminisce a little bit about my early days growing up in the rural setting of Carmangay, Alberta, a small village. I, like many of my colleagues here who also grew up in small towns and attended small-town schools, realize that the emphasis was on educating children. This statement is not intended to minimize what schools and teachers do in today's environment, but I want to underscore the fact that in this setting education was the top priority. We were lucky to have any extracurricular activities outside the classroom at all. For most of us leisure time was something we would spend back home doing chores, especially on the farm. As with any group of children there were individuals who simply did not want to be in school. This is true today just as it was true when I was young. Either they had aspirations of moving to the big city for bigger and better things or they figured that they were simply going to end up farming anyway so why bother going to school.

The question has been asked here and it will continue to be asked: why should children be forced to stay in school when they have no ambition to be there? Well, I've used the argument: show me one 16-year-old child – and that's what they are, Mr. Speaker, children – that's mature enough to understand the ramifications of making the decision to quit school. There are very few who are at that level, and if they think they are, maybe their parents would be willing to sign a guarantee that they wouldn't require any public assistance until such time as they've reached that maturity.

Mr. Speaker, we have in this province many teachers who do a tremendous job day in and day out. I'd be willing to bet that many teachers feel a real sense of disappointment, perhaps even failure, when one of their students drops out of school. We as a government are giving up on our youth before the teachers do by allowing them to quit school when they're 16. We're allowing them to leave school before they even have the opportunity to graduate. We assume that any child at 16 years of age who does not want to finish school will not be influenced by the many great counselors and teachers we have here in Alberta who could instill in them the pleasure of high school completion.

While it is true that we are not a successful province because we have forced students to be educated; we are successful because we give our children opportunities. Allowing them to leave school at 16 years of age is not giving our children much for opportunity. Raising the compulsory age of attendance to 17 years does not guarantee that a child will graduate, Mr. Speaker, but it gives him or her a better opportunity to succeed, and that, in essence, is what we're discussing in Bill 203.

In fact, many of you can remember that school was a downright drag when you were a teenager. There are so many other things that a teenager would rather be doing than sitting in a classroom listening to a teacher drone on and on about geography or chemistry or Shakespeare. I realize that it's a struggle for many students to motivate themselves to finish their education when they are this age, but the point is that beyond the conventional methods of classroom teaching there are avenues that a parent can use to help his or her youngster with their education. Institutions such as the Sylvan Learning Centre allow students who are having trouble learning in their school environment to step back and out of the traditional classroom for a time to learn from another young individual or another tutor. This is one of the many examples of resources available. It's a team effort that helps get a child through school. It should not be left to the child alone to learn, and it certainly should not be left to the child alone to leave.

There's been some discussion in this Assembly about 203 skirting around what some perceive as a central issue in this piece of legislation, and that's making graduation mandatory. If this was the case, Mr. Speaker, then Bill 203 would come right out and say so, which it doesn't. Bill 203 does not attempt to disguise itself as a magical answer to a very large problem. It's simply a step in the right direction. After all, how can we be faulted for attempting to solve some of our larger issues step-by-step? Bill 203 moves to do just that: fundamentally address one area of concern that impedes our children from achieving all we as parents hope that they will.

As I have alluded to earlier, keeping our children interested in the learning process is a team effort. It requires the help of qualified and dedicated teachers, mentors, counselors, and most importantly parents. While it is certainly true that it's up to every individual and their family to decide whether or not they should stay in school, shouldn't we at the very least provide the tools necessary for achieving some level of success? I believe Bill 203 is one of those tools that are essential.

As we move into this new age, this new economy, it will be those regions, those countries, and those individuals who have committed themselves to lifelong learning who will succeed in society, business, and life. We should strive to instill this belief in every one of our children, allowing none of them to be left behind, none of them to be discarded before their true potential is realized. By allowing a 16-year-old child to leave school early, are we not just giving up on them, leaving them behind, Mr. Speaker?

When I think back to the small-town school that I grew up in, I remember how it was expected that each one of us would not just graduate but excel in whatever profession we chose afterwards. It was knowing even at a young age that I had the support and the backing of many people to ensure that I fulfilled my potential. That sense of accomplishment even in the face of adversity is what builds character. For the individuals where scholastics was a challenge, with the support and backing of teachers and parents they were able to realize their goals, and that's what set the course for the life of their person.

Not all of us are academically inclined. There's no disputing that. For some school can be the ultimate in challenges, while others breeze through it without much effort. What does matter at the end of the day and what shows up in a person's makeup for the rest of his or her life is: in the event of difficulty how do they react? Some people panic. Some people falter. Others focus and prosper. To the 16 year old who is contemplating dropping out of school, will he not be forever burdened by the thought of backing down in the face of a challenge? This is when they need support and guidance from people who have been there before them and pulled through to succeed.

Mr. Speaker, a lot of debate has occurred on Bill 203, and that's a good thing. Debate brings issues front and centre, where all of us in the Assembly can air our viewpoints and engage in productive discussion. In my time here today it has been my intention to bring into the discussion more of a human element rather than concentrating on statistics and noncompletion rates for my argument. We as legislators, as citizens, and most importantly as parents have a duty to encourage and support our children to fulfill all their potential. As the old adage states: the mind is a terrible thing to waste. Too many of us may in fact waste too much of that too often.

I encourage everyone to continue the debate, and thanks very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak in third reading stage of Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. Bill 203 is a simple piece of legislation which increases the mandatory school age to 17 years of age. I feel that this is not a good idea, and I would like to take this opportunity to speak against the legislation being considered today.

3:40

Mr. Speaker, this bill goes too far, and this government should not be making this change. I don't think it is in the best interests of this government to be increasing the mandatory age of young people in school. We should steer clear of this matter because it is not our business whether or not a young person should go to school. This is the job of parents. If a young person at the age of 17 does not wish to be a part of the school system, it should be up to the family to resolve this issue and not legislation made by the government. We are becoming too involved in the private lives of the citizens of Alberta. There is no need for government to stick its fingers where they don't belong, and I would argue that our fingers do not belong in this matter.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Not all young people are students. There are many young adults in Alberta who are not cut out for school. There are many who have no desire or ability and feel that they have no need to be in school. They feel that life would be better for them if they dropped out and did something worth while like begin working. Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm not advocating that children should be able to drop out whenever they feel like it. In fact, I don't think a young person should drop out, but rather all should try to finish their high school education. However, if they feel that they cannot finish or they don't want to finish, we should not be the ones that tell them otherwise. It is a private matter between the young adult and his or her parents. We should not be forcing our desired outcomes on those who wish to make their own decisions.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that a lot of people feel that high school is a necessary requirement to get ahead in this world, and I agree with those people. Children should do their best to stay in school. Even so, as I said before, it is not the job of this Assembly to pass a law that will force young people to stay where they do not want to be.

What would be the outcome if we passed this bill? I feel that there would be consequences that are harmful to the learning environment of those who do wish to stay in school. For instance, if a 17 year old is in grade 11 and not being productive, he or she may skip relentlessly causing the principal to continually have to discipline the student. This is a distraction not only for the students in the classroom but also for the administration who have to deal with the same problem day in and day out. Since there is no real desire in the young person to be at school, he or she becomes somewhat of a distraction and a disruption to those who are trying to concentrate on their studies. These disruptions are extremely harmful to the students and should not continue.

As I said before, having a young adult hang around school when they have no desire to be there causes more harm than good to the other students who want to be there. If they decide that there are other opportunities, that school isn't for them, then they have a way out, and I feel that they will make sound decisions with the advice of their parents.

As well, Mr. Speaker, it may have a benefit for kids to drop out early. It may be the only way they learn to appreciate how important being educated is. Life has a funny way of teaching us. I say let a young adult have a taste of life if he or she so desires. Put a young person to work at a young age and it might be a wake-up call for them, and they may decide that getting an education might be a good idea after all. They make the decision to go back to school, not the government.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta children are important. We should and we do a great job of advocating for what is best for our children. However, when it comes to families and their private decisions, this is where the government should not be involved. It is not our responsibility.

I think it would be prudent for us to vote against this bill today. This bill just does not fall in line with the policies of this government. We try to stay out of the private affairs of Albertans as best we can, and passing this bill makes us look like meddling politicians. Every day bills are passed or debated and have serious implications on Albertans, and this is one of those bills, one which I feel is not in the best interest of our electorate. I urge all members to vote against Bill 203.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with interest that I rise to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. Certainly the previous speaker's comments were noteworthy, but I'm afraid that at this time I would have to disagree with the hon. member and urge all members of this Assembly to support this private member's bill as proposed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

There are questions in regard to this legislation, and one that I have in the research that has been provided that remains unanswered and perhaps can be answered in the course of debate is: what happens with an individual who is interested in taking up a trade in this province, whether it's a compulsory or optional certification process, if that individual is to, say, take that trade up at age 16 on a part-time basis? What effects would this legislation have on that individual and their employer, or if that person is involved in part of the RAP program, exactly how, if this bill became law, would those individuals be affected? Certainly we need to encourage young people to take up the trades in this province.

I am looking forward to the estimates debate on Learning because I think we are making some significant mistakes in some of our public policy issues there, but we will get to that later, Mr. Speaker. Now I'm just curious as to how – and if the hon. Minister of Learning has an answer, I would be very grateful for his time because I think this is an important question. Many people, even while they're finishing off their last year of high school, are participating part-time in a trade certification. How would this affect them?

I'm going to support this bill, but certainly I feel that there would be less need for this legislation if the public education system in this province were adequately funded. Perhaps if we had more guidance counselors, there would not be nearly the dropout rate that we have. I think we can certainly do better than having 72 percent of Alberta students graduating from high school. It is quite unfortunate that many Alberta students for one reason or another quit high school. The hon. Member for Little Bow makes it quite plain and points out correctly that a study released recently by the Alberta Association of Colleges and Technical Institutes shows that for each year a student attends Lethbridge Community College, his or her annual income increases by $2,100. The hon. member is quite correct in explaining that this is a positive story to tell students.

Now, to think that this bill would in some way be an invasion of one's family obligation or an invasion by the government of obligations that belong with the family – I think that in light of our society this bill is perhaps prudent, and I would again encourage all members to please consider this proposal to raise the compulsory attendance age to 17. I think this is beneficial, and at this time I will await.

Hopefully I will receive an answer to my question in regard to apprentices and how he or she would be affected by this legislation. It's certainly something that I would be proud to support, and I thank the member for bringing it forward at this time, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to rise today and join in the debate with regard to Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. Before I begin, I would like to thank my colleague from Little Bow for bringing forward such an important piece of legislation, which aims to help some of Alberta's most important individuals, our children.

Before I begin dealing with the specific aspects of Bill 203, I would like to offer some of my thoughts on the vital role that education has and continues to play within our society and the world today. In many ways, Mr. Speaker, if it were not for the importance that was placed upon education of our young people, our society would not only stop evolving but we would eventually become stale and unresponsive to the winds of changes that are affecting the global community.

I am sure that all members of this House are keenly aware of the fact that Alberta is a net exporter of such natural resources as oil and natural gas. Our province's economic success and our society's high standard of living can be in many ways attributed to the fact that the rest of the world needs this kind of resource in order to function and survive. Knowledge and technology have helped Albertans harness our natural resources and transport them to other nations that are in need of such necessities. Our economic success is a testament to the fact that no longer can a country isolate itself from the rest of the world and expect to be prosperous. Not only would the people in such a country forfeit their chance for economic prosperity, but they would also be compromising their opportunity to learn about the world in which they live and in turn make it a better place for all humanity.

As a famous Edmontonian by the name of Marshall McLuhan once said: "There are no passengers on the spaceship earth. We are all crew." Never has such a quote been more relevant to the times in which we find ourselves today, Mr. Speaker. Education is a vital medium which generates the necessary knowledge that humanity utilizes in order to move forward and steer this spaceship earth towards a bright and prosperous future. As a result, education of our youth has not only significant impacts upon our province but the world as well. We should never forget that it is the next generation of individuals which will lead us and the global community into the uncharted waters of the future, and therefore we have an obligation to provide them with the best possible education that our resources can provide.

In Alberta, Mr. Speaker, we have one of the best and most effective education systems in the world. The School Act is presently deficient in certain areas, three of which are addressed in Bill 203. Firstly, section 13(1) of the School Act permits students to discontinue their high school education once they reach the age of 16. This is a problem because the vast majority of Alberta students have not completed secondary education by the age of 16 and therefore are in no position to receive the necessary high school diploma. By not attaining the essential certificate, these students seriously compromise the opportunity to further their education and knowledge. Bill 203 attempts to remedy this problem by amending 13(1) of the School Act, making it mandatory that all students attend school until they reach the age of 17. Giving our youth one more year of school will undoubtedly help increase the graduation rate and would also allow those students who are thinking about dropping out time to reconsider.

Secondly, section 13(5) of the School Act allows parents to take their children completely out of school due to certain family-related religious or social beliefs. On top of that, Mr. Speaker, the act permits parents to not only take their children out of school but permits them to do so even before their children reach the age of 16. The problem here again is that such children are denied the opportunity to gain the necessary knowledge which will enable them to compete and succeed in the modern globalized world. Bill 203 proposes to strike out section 13(5) and instead proposes to apply the mandatory attendance rules outlined in the School Act on a constant and predictable basis. This would in turn ensure that all students have the opportunity to receive the basic education at least up to the age of 17.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, section 15(1) of the School Act allows attendance boards to resolve disputes relating to student attendance. The problem with such an arrangement is that it complicates the enforcement of student attendance because the process involves both the attendance boards and the school boards. As a result, issues have arisen with regard to which entity has a particular jurisdiction. Bill 203 would eliminate this problem by eliminating attendance boards altogether and placing all the jurisdictions related to this matter with the school boards. The benefit to this type of arrangement is that the school attendance rules would be administered and enforced in a clear and consistent manner. I believe that by having clear and consistent rules, we will see more students attending their classes and eventually completing their secondary education.

Alberta, Mr. Speaker, needs this kind of legislation to ensure that graduation rates improve not only on the provincial but on the cross-country level. According to Stats Canada 18 percent of high school students in the country do not complete grade 12. This equates to 120,000 students per year, which, in turn, costs Canadians annually about $2 billion. Also, according to a study conducted by Alberta Learning in 2001 the department identified and tracked the progress of 38,000 grade 10 students in the province. Of the 38,000 students 72 percent completed high school, 25 percent did not graduate, while 3 percent continued on with their studies. According to a study completed by the United States Department of Justice in January 2003, about 41 percent of the inmates in the country's federal, state, and local prisons and 31 percent of the probationers never completed high school. As a measure of comparison 18 percent of the general population in the United States above the age of 18 never finished grade 12.

With regard to the matter of health study after study has proven that people who have received secondary and postsecondary training are more likely to live longer and healthier than those who decide to drop out. As a result, there is a direct correlation between government spending, the time on health care, and the high school dropout rate.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, it is in the interest of this government to try to minimize the high school dropout rates not only for the sake of our youth but for the sake of the greater community. At the end of the day a well-educated society is more productive, more healthy, less taxing on the government's social and health programs. I believe Bill 203 is one step forward to achieving this goal. Even though some of our young people may not realize it yet, education is a tool and a medium for their future success in life. As I mentioned earlier, they are the future leaders of not only our province and our country but the world as well. In order to be successful in their future endeavours, we need to make sure that they are equipped with the right tools and the necessary knowledge. Graduating from high school is one step in achieving that knowledge.

With this in mind, I urge all of my colleagues to support our youth by voting in favour of Bill 203. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I promise not to take very long. I know that my colleague over there is waiting again.

I wanted to just bring up a couple of quick points, Mr. Speaker, and that's with regard to what the intent of the bill is. The intent of the bill is to keep children in school longer. I understand that. I still do not understand why it is necessary to force children through legislation, by the time they're 16 and 17 years old, to stay in a place that they may not wish at that point to be in. What I suggested the other day was that there are young people who drop out of school, and I think it is tragic because I believe in lifelong learning. I've demonstrated that in my own life. My sons are both lifelong learners, and I hope that they will continue to do that as they age. But they didn't do it because somebody in government decided that they had to. They did it because it was the right thing to do.

The speech the Member for Edmonton-Glenora gave fascinated me because he started bringing up the religious aspect of it. That is something that I failed to address in my speech last week, and I wanted to bring it up today. I have several Hutterite colonies in my constituency, Mr. Speaker. I have great respect for them. I have great respect for what they do on the land, the fact that they farm it – they don't sell it for condominiums or for acreages – that they take what they do in their lives seriously. They care about their children. I've been out at the Fairview Colony school. I was just there the other day at a class of grade 1 to grade 8 students of all ages, an absolutely fascinating group of kids that asked phenomenal questions about the processes here, how bills work, what the Mace is, what the Speaker does. These were very well-informed children.

The truth is that when we talk about some parents taking their kids out of school for religious reasons – although I don't believe it's actually been said in here – I believe the people we're actually talking about are the Hutterites. They do, in fact. Many of their children after their 15th birthday finish school, but they don't leave learning, Mr. Speaker. They go out onto the farm. They go into apprenticeship programs throughout the entire farm, which includes everything from learning how to bake, to grow vegetables, to learning how to work a metal lathe, to carpentry, to animal husbandry, to actually handling huge pieces of equipment, and it is all part of their lifestyle. I support their right to choose their own lifestyle. They worked out deals with the provincial government a very long time ago on the basis that we would have regular teachers go out to a colony as opposed to having their own teachers, who may not be ATA certified.

Rocky View school division runs many of these schools, and the children do very well, thank you very much. As they weren't consulted as to their opinion on this bill, I can only ask my colleagues here: while all of us want children to learn and we all want everybody to get a university education and we want everybody to be successful, please let us not impose our own judgment on people without consulting with them first. I have had the opportunity to speak to several principals in my riding. They've not been consulted on this bill, and they flag many concerns with doing what we're anticipating doing here.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, the only thing I can ask is that if this bill is this important, it would eventually come back as government legislation and to have the Minister of Learning bring it in after doing a full, provincewide consultation on the pros and the cons of forcing people to do something that they may not wish to do. Many young people that I know that have inadvertently for whatever stupid reason dropped out of school have in fact turned around and gone back a year later, but they go back with a good attitude. They go back wanting to learn. I don't think we can ask for more than that. When you tell somebody that they must stay there, it doesn't mean that they're going to be a good influence in that classroom or that just because they're sitting there, they would be willing to learn anything. I think there are enough hassles in a classroom without trying to force a child who does not wish to be there in fact be there.

We have many alternatives for young people now. We've got virtual schools. We've got private schools. We've got Catholic schools. We've got public schools. You know, I think that there's an unending list of places where children can go to learn things when they're ready, Mr. Speaker. I encourage that because I think it's important that everybody have options, but I am absolutely, totally, 100 percent opposed to this government forcing people to do something that they've not asked for. Not one person out of 50,000 in my riding has asked me to vote for this bill – not one – and that concerns me. So I'm going to vote against it, and I can only encourage people who have not done a proper and thorough consultation in their ridings: please don't pass this bill today. Let it come back with government legislation. If it's something that we need to do, let's do it the right way.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise again, I think a third time, to speak on this bill. I hadn't planned on doing it, except I think it's one of the most important pieces of legislation brought forward to this Legislature this spring. I've heard some very good arguments in support of this bill, and I've also heard some arguments that were much less convincing in my mind, and I'd like to try to do what I can do to convince those that voted against it the last time to maybe reconsider their viewpoint on this.

Some of the reasons that were brought up in the past were that no calls were made to an MLA's office to support this bill. Well, Mr. Speaker, if that's the rationale for supporting a bill, then I couldn't in all clear conscience support most of the government bills that are brought to the floor of this Assembly, because I don't get a lot of calls about, especially, amendments and that sort of thing that are brought to the floor of this House and are debated. I just don't get a lot of calls in my constituency telling me that I should support that bill or not support that bill. On very few government bills do I get an opinion, and then I usually get a strong opinion one way or the other. So I don't think that that's a rationale.

Another reason that was brought forward was that just because students have no desire, we shouldn't force them to go to school. I'd like to share something very important with this Assembly. When I was 12 years old, I changed schools, and I went to a town school. It was a hamlet, a small village school. I went into grade 8, and I was one of the smallest kids in that class – I know this Assembly may find that hard to believe – and I didn't want to go to school. I wanted to quit, and I had some good reasons for wanting to quit: I got physically beat up two to three times a day every day for a whole year.

An Hon. Member: Say it ain't so.

Mr. Marz: It was so. I was black and blue from my neck to my waist. I didn't want to go to school, but there was a law in place, and my parents had the wisdom to say that I should continue to go to school.

Now, I don't know what the magic age is or what the perfect age is for allowing children to drop out of school. I can't sit here and say that it's 16, but after we vote some time later today, I'm going to have to go back to my constituents and say: well, I believe that 16, the status quo, is the magic, perfect age. Well, I'm not prepared to say that. I'm not prepared to say that 17 is the perfect age either.

Mr. Rathgeber: How old are you, Richard?

Mr. Marz: I'm 58, and I've got a lot more experience than you do.

I don't know what the perfect age is, Mr. Speaker, but I know that things have changed since I went to school, and we require a lot more education even down on the farm, which was brought up about Hutterite colonies. I'd like to point out that the Hutterite colonies – and I have three of them in my riding, and they're very good friends of mine – have embraced new technology faster in most cases than other farmers have, and their young people are going to be able to be better educated to continue to endorse that new technology if they're going to remain successful in operating their colonies for the future.

No, I haven't got any calls saying that I should support this or I shouldn't support this. I have to decide today based on the arguments I've heard and reading this for myself: is this the right thing to do or not? In my own mind I don't think that 17 is old enough. I think it should be 18. I think that a minimum should be grade 12 to allow students to get the important education they need to continue on and to be able to become successful, contributing members of society.

Yes, it's been mentioned that not all young people are academically inclined, and perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we have to do more in our education system to address that particular situation. Maybe we need to look at more technical, mechanical, trade types of education within the school system itself, because once a student drops out at 16, it doesn't mean to say that they're going to go into the trades. A lot of them don't because they don't have the skills to do that. A lot of them aren't hired because, as the member that brought this forward said, they are still children. And they are still children.

They're not mature enough to handle a lot of responsibility in jobs, and outside of some very, very low-paying jobs, they don't get those skills.

A lot of them don't go back to school because they leave home after they drop out, and that window of opportunity that they've had with their parents in most cases to support them while they're going to school is no longer there, and if they're out for three or four years, some parents aren't willing to have them come in. Pride takes place in a young person that may have dropped out when they were 16. When they're 20, are they going to go back and say to mom and dad: "Well, that was a mistake. I did the wrong thing. I'd like you to support me now, four years later, for another two years to go to high school and perhaps after that some more training"? A lot of times that opportunity disappears, Mr. Speaker, and I think parents would be better positioned and so would students if they were encouraged to continue on at 16.

I don't think there's anyone in this Assembly who could find a reason greater than I could for wanting to drop out at 12. I could have argued very strongly at 12 years old why I should have been able to drop out of school. Survival would have been the number one thing, just to survive. [interjections] I hear some chuckles, but it's not funny. It was a very serious thing. There are a lot of strong reasons why people maybe want to drop out. I don't know of anyone that had a stronger reason than I did to want to drop out of school when I was 12 years old. Lucky for the foresight of my parents, who did only have – my father had a grade 8 education, and my mother had grade 10. Lucky for their foresight. They insisted. They didn't allow me; they forced me, as the member said. It was not my desire to go. Well, my parents stepped in, and I thank God that they did.

So I urge everybody in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, to think twice before they shoot this down and to support this bill.

4:10

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the Assembly today to again participate in the discussion and debate of Bill 203, the School (Compulsory Attendance) Amendment Act, 2003. As I said previously in second reading, initially I had some doubts about this bill, but then, you know, after three decades the ghosts of students past – I saw those faces and remembered the youngsters that I wished I would have been able to help and keep in school.

Mr. Speaker, I must stress that we're now living in a global, knowledge-based society where the requirements for skills and knowledge are rapidly evolving as learning and the capacity to learn take on fundamental economic and social importance. Moreover, the attainment of knowledge, skills, and education will soon determine to a greater extent the success of both individuals and democratic societies in economic as well as social terms.

Bill 203 sets out to achieve three objectives: increase the mandatory school attendance age from 16 to 17, apply this age requirement universally and consistently, and thankfully eliminate the use of attendance boards. There has been no more useless, wasteful activity for school principals and counselors and so on than trying to make these school attendance boards work. Anybody who tells me that principals haven't been consulted and that they don't support this idea – I certainly wouldn't mind having a little chat with these people to see what they were really thinking at that moment in time.

As I feel that all three objectives are important, I find the most valuable to be the increase of the mandatory school attendance age. Mr. Speaker, high school graduation is an important goal and provides many benefits for the individual and for our society. Measures to reduce the number of high school dropouts in Canada have primarily focused on providing more programs, more counseling, and more supports. Most of these measures replicate existing school structures and processes. I acknowledge that these measures are important and have improved our education system, but I also feel that increasing the mandatory attendance age will be an important step, taken along with these other initiatives, to address the number of high school dropouts.

Results of increasing the mandatory school attendance age have proven favourable for New Brunswick. Completion rates have increased for both Anglophone and Francophone systems since it became a requirement for youth to stay in school until they graduate or turn 18.

Mr. Speaker, we are living in a world where standards are high and graduates must be capable of strong performances and productive contributions to societal development. Adolescents who are dropping out of school do not have a grasp of what lies ahead. They believe they know what is best for them, although they cannot fully comprehend how their actions today will affect them in the future. Bill 203 would require youth to stay in school until they are 17 years old, bringing students one year closer to graduation and better prepared for an ever changing society.

Early school leavers often describe their personal and social lives as being difficult. They also express that the adults in their lives did not support or help them to stay in school. I have to tell you – and I've said this before – how many times students have said to me: why didn't you make me, why didn't you help me stay in school? A legal provision increasing the mandatory attendance age would reinforce and bring a heightened awareness of the importance of secondary education. This bill would send a clear message urging students to complete their studies.

It must also be noted that early school leavers often do see the value in education and fully intend to return. However, once individuals leave school, the likelihood of them returning declines. Moreover, the longer these individuals are away from school, the less likely it is that they will ever return. We must help these individuals in school, encouraging and supporting them to obtain their diploma. Students leaving school are not doing so primarily due to poor achievement. Many of those who drop out have good or excellent grades. It is clear that students leaving are not struggling with their marks, necessarily. These students are talented students that should not be exiting our schools, and this bill can help keep them in the classroom.

Bill 203 is one measure that could help to increase the completion rate of secondary students. It keeps students in school for one year longer, bringing them that much closer to graduation. Studies indicate that the closer they are to receiving their diploma, the more likely they are to stay in school. I do not believe that this bill will ultimately solve the problem of high school dropouts in our province, but it's definitely a step in the right direction.

Society has evolved over a number of years into a knowledge-based entity. It is argued that a key feature of this new world society is the increased emphasis on intangibles such as knowledge, ideas, and intelligence rather than the tangible goods that have long been the staple of human interaction. It is essential now more than ever that individuals obtain a basic set of learning skills.

Mr. Speaker, high schools are undergoing increased program flexibility, and I would say that all of the members in here don't even know what that means. I mean, schools are moving away from that old 9 to 3 mentality, that agricultural mentality. We're looking at flexible kinds of scheduling now where we can have trimesters, where students can move through far more quickly than they did in the past. We've got to get kids out of that failure cycle and courses where if they didn't finish by the end of June, they had to repeat it again, and they might have got stuck with Mrs. Smackhammer for a second or third time. Then they may have been doomed, and poor Mrs. Smackhammer was doomed as well. With the new kind of flexible scheduling that we can provide students, this helps keep them in school.

High schools are altering their programming to accommodate students. We're also seeing a greater choice in courses offered throughout high schools which are not solely based on academics. High schools are offering relevant program options that better meet student needs. Education used to favour academically oriented students. This isn't the case anymore. Program options offered do vary according to the school, but there are many different learning opportunities within Alberta's education system. These alternative courses also provide a chance for students to explore other areas of interest and potential career choices.

Education, skills, and knowledge are fundamental aspects for the growth of individual Albertans and our society as a whole. This bill would help to increase the completion rate of secondary education and thus would help to better prepare Alberta's youth. These individuals are the future of our province.

Mr. Speaker, it's evident that in a competitive economy dominated by technology and advanced skills, high school completion may be the minimum level of education needed in order to have an opportunity to compete in the labour market, obtain an entry-level job, and secure a basic standard of living. Furthermore, much more education and training are required for any positions beyond entry level, basic incomes, and life chances. Anything less than the minimum may restrict youth to long hours, tedious jobs with little opportunity for advancement, and a low quality of life. The economic and social costs to individual Albertans as well as to our communities are too high to become complacent about a 25 percent noncompletion rate of Alberta high school students. A commitment of our province's education system must be to provide each citizen with opportunities to grow personally, professionally, and as a citizen in accordance with his or her abilities, preferences, and interests.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is dedicated to providing excellent education services to its citizens. The province is devoted to ensuring that the Alberta education system remains one of the best in the world. However, we need to make sure students receive the benefits of our education system by completing their secondary schooling.

The noncompletion rate of students in Alberta is among the highest when compared to other provinces. A completion rate of 72 percent with an additional 3 percent of dropouts returning to school are not numbers to be pleased with. Colleagues, this is not acceptable. We need to ensure that more students stay in school and receive the benefits of graduating from a secondary institution in our province. Alberta needs to render certain that its citizens are equipped with the knowledge, skills, and qualifications they will need to be competitive in the workforce.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure all of us here would agree that education is very important, and certainly from my perspective of many years in the classroom and in administration I would just like to offer a few observations with respect to this bill before us. I'm sure we're all keen as well to devise some kind of mechanism to improve student achievement. However, I do believe that sometimes a few individuals cannot be convinced of the importance of education. These students would undermine the best intentions of parents and teachers and even Legislatures and legislators.

How do they do this? Well, they do it by taking courses that lead to no career path because they have some minimal interest in it or are taking the lesser of some subjects that they don't want any of. Sometimes they enroll, but they don't attend, and we allow, unfortunately, intermittent attendance, which is a bad learning experience for the student when society expects production on time and of good quality from anybody that's hired in our workforces today. In fact, some students are suspended, Mr. Speaker, for misbehaviour or even for nonattendance. For not attending school, the only resource left for the boards, the teachers, and the administrators is to expel a reluctant student from the school.

Some would suggest that legislation might help, and perhaps this bill before us might even help, but if a student does not want to go to school, he or she will not attend or, even worse, they will attend and make life miserable for everyone, including the students and the teachers and the administrators in that school. In fact, to further illustrate the futility of legislation to compel students to attend, many students after appearing before a judge on various charges are ordered by the judge to attend school. What's the result of the judge's order? Well, in many cases nonattendance or, even worse again, disruptive attendance. They're there. They disrupt school activities, but by virtue of the judge's order, they have some legitimacy for being present in the school, or in fact they may even engage in further illegal activities.

I'd further submit that for students who feel that school is not for them, there are many alternative programs that have been developed: storefront schools. We've got the RAP program, the registered apprenticeship program. We've got virtual schools. We've got distance learning. We've got home schooling.

We must be careful of scapegoating others for the lack of student success. Often teachers are the targets. Some will say that teachers don't offer them motivation or the challenge and so on. We must also be careful about seeking to compel students to attend school in an effort to ensure their success. Too often we fall into a trap of believing that student success depends primarily on other factors, factors such as school size, funding, programs, homogenous groupings, extracurricular incentives, or even the school-leaving age. Instead, I believe academic success is primarily determined by three factors: first, the commitment of the student; secondly, the support of the family; and third, the skill and dedication of the teachers. These are the factors we must emphasize, and to pass legislation like this bill to increase the school-leaving age only serves to detract from the student, the family, and the professional responsibility.

I urge all members present to oppose passing the revision of the School Act. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I originally did not plan to participate in the debate on this bill, but after listening to the speakers from both sides, I feel compelled to join the debate at this time. First, let me say very clearly that education is very important and that every effort should be made to make sure that Alberta children can access the best possible education. I also agree with the previous speaker that we should do everything that we can to reduce the high school dropout rate in our province, but forcing the students to stay in school is not the answer. Staying in school and graduation are two totally different things.

I have a personal story I would like to share with the Legislature. When I was 17, I dropped out of school because I couldn't afford to stay in school, Mr. Speaker. I had to go out and find a job to support myself to go to school at that time, and thankfully we didn't have Bill 203 in place at that time. My parents were not here with me, and I had to make sure there was money to pay the rent and pay for the food, and the only way that I could do that was to go to work in the daytime and go to school in the evening. I still remember those days very vividly in my mind. I never graduated from high school, but I was able to earn enough credits to go to university later on and graduate from university.

I agree with the previous speaker that the most important factor that contributes to the success of a student is his or her own determination. Passing legislation forcing students to stay in school will not make better students out of those students who do not want to stay there. They will only distract the other students in the classroom, and in some cases it may do more harm than good.

I urge everybody to vote against this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow to close debate.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that I have five minutes. I would like to try to summarize maybe four of the key points that I've heard today. I'll maybe just bounce around a little bit.

Number one, the whole intent of the bill in upping the legal leaving age to 17 is not to force any student who's in an apprenticeship program or who wants to be there who can't afford to go to school. It's to try to provide through a regulatory framework, which I'd be more than thrilled to work with the Minister of Learning on, the opportunity to provide flexibility and deal with the students on an individual basis rather than giving carte blanche to anyone that feels like they're ready to face the world and leave school when they're 16. If somebody is short of funds, ideally we could manage an educational plan so that they could come back to pick up the courses and go out to work, much like they have in a co-op program at university. I do feel that the apprenticeship program that one of the members brought up is an ideal opportunity for the counselors, the parents, the students, the school to help design their educational plan so that they know how they're going to get to that minimum requirement that they're going to require for many of the apprenticeship trade programs, whether it's 55 percent minimum in 20- and 30-level courses. But help them get there rather than leaving school and then finding out that they have to upgrade for a year and a half and in the meantime have worked for minimum wage.

I am very happy that a couple of my colleagues brought up the no-no, the Hutterite colonies. I'm so thrilled to hear that there are actually a couple of people who've got two or three colonies in their whole constituency. Guess what, people? I've got 23 in a 60-mile radius of our community, and I'm going to tell you something to set the record straight. There is not one child – not one child – that I have been aware of in any of those 23 who has completed school after their 15th year. They have left school on their 15th birthday, in the middle of a school year. Another popular myth: they're taking an apprenticeship program. Could be. They're learning how to be carpenters and mechanics, but I can tell you one thing. The colony is getting free labour, and they're not paying unemployment insurance. They're not paying a lot of the different things that the businessman who has to put a student through a registered apprenticeship program is compelled to do, nor are they being instructed by a qualified journeyman mechanic, carpenter, welder, or anything else. They're learning from their fathers, and I don't have a problem with that, but it is not comparing apples to apples.

I would also like to bring forward that with this bill you don't have to stay in school, as some might think, until you're 17 even if you've completed or graduated. If you are very bright and you complete school when you're 16 or 16 and a half or 16 and three-quarters, at the end of the semester you graduate. You're out of there. You don't have to stick around till 17. Why would you? You want to go to university. You want to go to college.

Lastly, I want to go back to an individual who approached me, Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago. The individual came from one of these communities that people mentioned having in their constituencies. The fellow left the colony when he was 14 years old, came to Edmonton. He's worked as a mechanic, or tried to. He's been taken advantage of by an employer because he couldn't read or write. He's been evaluated by a career development college here in town with a grade 3 level of education. He's been ripped off by his employer, who told him he would be paid $14 an hour, and he finds out he's got $9,000 for the entire year. He was so grateful that somebody was doing this. He said: you know, I may not have left the colony if I could have stayed and had some education. But, in fact, he left because he had a horror story. He was beaten by his German teacher. He spoke no English, could write very little. He's here living on social assistance now, and he said: this should have happened a long, long time ago.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry we had to go back to one particular instance, but I will tell you that I have not had anyone particularly jumping up and down saying that we should have this bill, but I was thinking of the betterment of our youth today and our youth tomorrow and how they're going to adapt to the 21st century.

Thank you.

Bill 204
Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits)
Amendment Act, 2003

[Debate adjourned March 10: Rev. Abbott speaking]

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to resume debate on Bill 204, the Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits) Amendment Act, 2003, in the Assembly this afternoon. As mentioned when I began this speech almost a month ago, recently Alberta has seen quite a bit of debate over the workings of the insurance industry as well as the litigation surrounding insurance claims. It is my hope that this bill can once and for all protect the granting of section B benefits from the often contentious battles that insurance companies and injury lawyers get into over benefits that a client ought to receive. I would like to remind this Assembly that the purpose of Bill 204 is to amend the Insurance Act to increase the limit on section B medical benefits delivered to those who have been in an automobile accident to $25,000 over four years from the current level of $10,000 over two years. Bill 204 also includes provisions for a dispute arbitration mechanism between insurance companies and claimants receiving section B medical benefits. That's basically where we left off last time, Mr. Speaker, so this brings me back to my third point regarding independent medical examiners.

It is this section of Bill 204 that I believe really puts consumers back at the heart of insurance concerns. As it stands currently, Mr. Speaker, any insurance company wishing to stop paying medical benefits to claimants can send claimants to a doctor of the company's choice, and if that doctor states that the medical benefits are of no use to the claimant, the claimant can be cut off from further medical benefits. Now, if that person is still injured, they can sometimes fall back on Alberta Health and Wellness' medical services and cost Alberta taxpayers money that should be covered by their insurance companies, or they may even end up at a Human Resources and Employment office seeking AISH benefits.

The assumption among many civil trial and insurance lawyers is that the current system for assessing a section B claimant's health is unfair to the patient. It's also assumed that with a change in the law requiring that doctors be chosen from an impartial list, the process will be made more fair for claimants. If they're being honest, lawyers and insurance reps will both tell you that they hire doctors who will spin medical information to their side or their point of view one way or another.

Now, Bill 204 would alter the current arrangement by setting up an impartial arbitration mechanism to settle disputes between insurance companies and claimants. As well, Bill 204 would establish independent medical examinations by mandating that the examiner be chosen from a list approved jointly by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and either the Minister of Finance or the superintendent of insurance. By asking for an independent medical examination group . . . Is that the end of my time?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you had three minutes left on the time allocated to you.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today in support of Bill 204, the Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits) Amendment Act, 2003. Most of us know someone who has been involved in an automobile accident. In fact, some of us may even have had an unpleasant experience ourselves. Even if it's just your car that gets damaged, it's an experience that we do our utmost to avoid. Dealing with insurance companies and auto mechanics tends to take a lot of time and cause a lot of frustration, and until the process reaches its conclusion, one is likely to feel as if one's life is under the complete control of others.

As if that weren't enough, Mr. Speaker, you can imagine what it's like when an accident involves personal injury. If you are the party responsible for the accident, you will have the guilt of knowing that someone is hurt as a result of your actions. If you are the injured party, worries about your health, your job, and other matters set in almost immediately. This, of course, says nothing of the accident where lives hang in the balance or, worse, the accident results in death.

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, a car accident can in a matter of seconds turn a perfectly fine day into a living nightmare whether or not you are responsible for the accident. The last thing anyone should have to worry about at such a time is money. Whether one has been injured or caused the injury, one should be able to concentrate on getting well and on returning to normalcy, not getting matters settled.

Now, Mr. Speaker, section B benefits are classified as medical benefits that must be delivered by insurance companies to a person who has been in an automobile accident regardless of whether or not the person is held responsible for the accident. In many cases when claimants are pursuing a larger settlement or award through litigation, section B benefits constitute the money they use to pay for their immediate medical costs.

If I may, I'd like to speak bluntly for a moment. Let us assume for argument's sake that in a situation like this the insurance companies are loath to pay out any more than they absolutely have to. Claimants, in the meantime, want to be awarded as much as possible. I realize that these are generalizations, but they do show how the insurance companies and the claimants take two fundamentally opposing attitudes regarding compensation. No wonder, then, that lawyers get called in and that no one likes dealing with insurance companies. It seems obvious to me that when claimants are awarded large settlements, these awards contribute directly or indirectly to rising insurance premiums. No one likes that either.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, one of the main benefits I see stemming from the passage of Bill 204 is that if we were to raise the limits on section B medical benefits from the current level of $10,000 over two years to $25,000 over four years, we would provide accident victims with a cushion against the costs associated with the aftermath of an accident. Moreover, by increasing the time period in which claimants can access section B benefits as well as the amount available for such claims, Alberta would ensure that accident victims were more likely to get the treatment they required under section B claims.

Mr. Speaker, I am also inclined to think that the passage of Bill 204 could have an additional unintended benefit. It would raise awareness of the importance of having proper insurance coverage. Opting out of certain kinds of coverage can prove disastrous at times when you would need it the most and can make you vulnerable to legal action.

What if you are the victim of an accident? Once you've seen a doctor, had your diagnosis made and your claim approved, aside from the aches and pains you may be experiencing, that's more or less all. But that's not necessarily so. This is where Bill 204 could offer another benefit to the insured and the insurers as well. You see, Mr. Speaker, at the present time if an insurance company wishes to stop payment of medical benefits to a claimant, it can do so. Of course, on termination of the claim the claimant must see a doctor, but in situations like this the insurer will in all likelihood send the claimant to a doctor of his choice. If that doctor states that the medical benefits are not warranted, well, there goes the payment, and the claimant is cut off.

Mr. Speaker, if this doesn't sound fair to you, you are not alone. I don't approve of such procedures and apparently neither do many civil trial and insurance lawyers. Among them the prevailing view is that the current system for assessing a section B claimant's health is unfair to the patient.

So how can we make this part of an already difficult experience easier and less cumbersome? As I mentioned, one of the other benefits of passing Bill 204 is the establishment of an impartial arbitration mechanism to settle disputes between insurance companies and claimants. Such a mechanism would I think be appealing to all parties. Particularly, it could have the highly desirable outcome of keeping out of court a large number of cases that really can and should be settled out of court.

If that weren't enough, Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 would make mandatory independent medical examinations to limit the instances where either party takes issue with a particular diagnosis. This is a simple solution to what can often be a big problem. The independent medical examination would be accomplished through the compilation of a list of physicians approved jointly by the College of Physicians and Surgeons and either the Minister of Finance or the superintendent of insurance. From this list, then, an independent medical examiner would be chosen in contested cases. His or her diagnosis would be applicable to both the insurer's case and that of the insured.

Mr. Speaker, while the insurance industry in Alberta is not operated by the government, the fact that it is regulated by the government makes it subject to the values and goals that guide us. I include this aspect because I believe that although we no longer run the insurance industry in Alberta, it is subject to provincial regulation. To my way of thinking, these regulations must reflect the values and goals of the government. Establishing a dispute mechanism and mandating independent medical examinations would be consistent with the principles of fairness and openness which have guided us and continue to guide this government.

Let I be remiss, I think we can assume that with the change in the law requiring that examining physicians be selected from an impartial list, the process will be more fair for claimants. Presumably, this will result in lower costs to the insurance industry, and I feel certain that this will be the case in the longer term.

This is important too but for an entirely different reason. While Alberta is a people-friendly province, we are business friendly too. We know that creating a climate conducive to business will make Alberta a place that companies find desirable in which to do business and in many cases also to be located here. We are sometimes criticized when we lower corporate taxes. While it is important that we always accompany corporate tax reductions with tax breaks for individuals, lowering corporate taxes has benefits that go far beyond leaving companies with more money. Reducing corporate taxes creates a business climate that makes companies want to operate in Alberta, and if they are already here, it makes them want to stay here. When companies want to stay here, it means that they are going to give jobs to Albertans.

A quick look through our wallets and pocketbooks will, I am sure, reveal the variety of insurance costs.

I would like to encourage our members to vote for the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with interest that I rise to participate in the debate on Bill 204, the Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits) Amendment Act, 2003. Certainly, I wouldn't be alone in this Assembly talking about the visits that we all have to our constituency offices from individuals who are concerned about the high cost of automobile insurance and other insurance policies in this province. Certainly, it has increased dramatically. We all know the effects on inflation that energy deregulation has had in this province, but at the same time insurance premiums are also mentioned as one of the contributing factors to our inflation rate, which last month was over 7 and a half percent. Now, what should we do to reduce insurance premiums and make insurance policies more affordable for Alberta consumers? Well, the first thing that I would certainly like to see accomplished is an all-party parliamentary committee, a fact-finding committee, to study this industry as it currently exists in this province.

5:00

Mr. Rathgeber: Are you looking for a job?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder has asked if I would be interested in a job. I would certainly be pleased to sit on an all-party parliamentary committee to study this issue in the province, and included in that committee would be perhaps a visit to Calgary, perhaps a visit to Cochrane, perhaps a visit to Grande Prairie, Drayton Valley, certainly, and Whitecourt. This committee could hear directly from citizens who were affected by the high cost of insurance. Not only citizens but some business enterprises have contacted this member and have expressed a great deal of dissatisfaction with the current premium increases.

Now, we know that there has been a significant decline in the stock markets across North America and other parts of the world, and this has created financial pressures on the insurance industry. The insurance industry in the past has been able to rely on a double-digit return on their investment pool, and that has been a fact, a way of life for the industry, but we note that the government of Alberta, the Department of Finance in particular, states that the profitability of property and casualty insurance companies, or P and Cs, is sensitive to small changes in investment returns. The profitability of the Canadian P and C industry is cyclical, and profitability fell in the early '90s and recovered strongly between 1994 and 1997. That does not apply today, but if you look at the insurance industry over a long period of time, it has certainly survived and prospered.

Now we are in this period of very, very high premiums. We are at risk in this province of having some insurance companies refusing to take new customers or new clients. What is that going to mean for the market premium rates for everyone? I don't know. Certainly, that would be another reason why we should have an all-party parliamentary committee to study this issue. The insurance industry, Mr. Speaker, I note, after-tax profits declined from $908 million for the first six months of 2000 to $269 million for the first six months of 2001. These statistics were last updated in October of 2002, and I believe they came from an Alberta Transportation web site.

When we consider how the markets operate and how investors in the equity markets can expect a return to historical rates of return at some point in the future, hopefully premiums would decline, but if permanent changes to the civil justice system are made that result in improving the profitability, the Department of Finance must be vigilant in ensuring that when market conditions improve, these changes do not result in completely inappropriate windfall profits down the road. I have not experienced in my lifetime as a driver, as a consumer of automobile insurance, even though I've had no accidents, a decline in my premiums. I thought that as I got older, my premiums would go down, but that certainly has not been the case. I consider myself lucky in this province that the insurer that I do have is willing to continue to offer insurance.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in regard to Bill 204 we look at raising the maximum amount of medical benefits and rehabilitation to $25,000 from $10,000. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is anxious to allow for a claimant to call on a dispute resolution panel made up of a doctor picked from an approved list by the insured, one by the insurer, and one jointly if the insurer terminates benefits. I would be very interested to learn from the hon. member just precisely what sort of a cost saving the member envisions here, if any, and how this will speed up the process.

There are two issues to be dealt with here. When we look at this bill, it certainly sounds like it is helping accident victims. However, the IBC, or the Insurance Bureau of Canada, insists that it will drive up the cost of insurance premiums and deliver a result that isn't any better. The Insurance Bureau of Canada, as I understand it, states that victims deserving more than $10,000 can access a larger reward through a tort claim or by having purchased optional coverage. A general insurance ombudsman service was instituted across Canada last year. After we have a look at that and we look at another piece of legislation that's a government piece of legislation – I believe it's Bill 33 – I'm not sure if one is not contradicting the other here. Perhaps in due time of debate the hon. member can clarify that for the House and for this member.

Certainly, when we look at this bill and when we understand that when an insurer terminates benefits on the basis of a medical report, the insured may request a review by this dispute resolution panel consisting of a physician. Now, if that were to go ahead and this bill was to become law, if accident victims in this case with Bill 204 can choose a physician for accident insurance purposes, why not victims involved, Mr. Speaker, in WCB claims? The WCB is in my view in a world of its own, and if you talked to some of the injured workers across the province, they would agree with me. Last year before closure, whenever we debated Bill 26, there was at least hope that the system would be improved, but unfortunately it has not. In light of what's being proposed here, if it's good enough for the insurance industry, I would have to question why it would not be also valid with WCB.

Now, as I understand it, this panel as proposed "must be provided with all medical reports and relevant information held by the parties," and "the panel may require the insured to undergo a medical examination."

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and speak to Bill 204, the Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. It is such a good bill that I think I'll vote with high octave and high decibel when I holler. Bill 204 amends the Insurance Act to increase the limit on section B medical benefits delivered to those who have been in an automobile accident to over $25,000 over four years from the current levels. As well, Bill 204 includes stipulations for dispute arbitration mechanisms between insurance companies and claimants receiving section B medical benefits. This will hopefully help clear up any contentious issues that arise when claims are being made.

Mr. Speaker, this bill essentially is an attempt to make this section of the Insurance Act into a more no-fault insurance system rather than focusing on the tort system that we have in place right now. The tort system is one which is causing extreme hardships to the insurance industry, and I believe it is part of the cause for rising premiums that so many people are dealing with in this day and age, especially when it comes to premiums that have to do with automobile insurance.

Mr. Speaker, a tort is a legal term for a wrong. The tort law is composed of statutes and court decisions that give you the right to sue someone who causes you harm, whether it's careless driving, a corporation that manufactured a defective product, a credit card company that overcharges you, or someone that slaps you on the sidewalk. This system is the cause for the steep rise in civil lawsuits over the past decade as more and more cases become heard in the court system. Insurance companies have dealt with the court system for many years, especially with respect to the automotive industry. For instance, under the tort system if I was in a car accident and it was not my fault, I could sue the driver of the other vehicle for all he has. This is my right in the province under this system.

The problem with the tort system is that when individuals sue, their automotive insurance companies usually have to pay the money and therefore increase the cost of premiums as the companies need to find ways to get their money back. Mr. Speaker, compensating auto injuries through the tort system imposes a significant cost to all types of businesses and individuals, ranging from small entrepreneurs to corporations with thousands of vehicles to folks like you and me or people you see at the corner store. For many businesses auto insurance is an irrevocable cost of doing business that must be covered by prices they charge customers. Unfortunately, all the factors that make auto insurance extremely expensive are very hard to reverse, and I feel that we are in an upward spiral when it comes to rising premiums in insurance. The incentives of the tort system encourage accident victims to inflate their insurance claims above their actual losses in order to increase their damage awards.

Mr. Speaker, it's noted at some point that when somebody gets in an accident, they open the glove box and there's already an inflatable neck collar. We have to discourage these things. This lawsuit-based system for compensating auto injuries allows claimants to seek payment for uneconomic losses. Of course, absent from this is an objective way to value such uneconomic damages such as pain and suffering. So the rule of thumb is for lawyers and the claimant to calculate these losses at two or three times the claimant's economic losses. Economic losses are things like lost wages and medical expenses. Since pain and suffering awards are measured as a multiple of medical and wage losses, there's a powerful incentive to inflate one's claim of economic damages and pursue legal action. This should give all members a better idea of why insurance premiums have been going through the roof of late.

As more and more people are suing and insurance companies pay for it in the end, that is why in principle Bill 204 is a good idea. Bill 204 takes away some of the problems that have been associated with and caused by the tort system. It makes section B benefits move toward a more no-fault insurance system, and I feel that a no-fault insurance system is a much better way of operating for automobile insurance. No-fault insurance is a general term that is used to describe any auto insurance system that requires drivers to carry insurance for their own protection and places limitations on their ability to sue other drivers for damages. In an accident under no-fault laws your auto insurance company will pay for damages regardless of who was at fault in the accident. Any other drivers involved will be covered by their auto insurance policies.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are many benefits in the no-fault insurance system. First, there's a quicker payment of claims by eliminating costly and time-consuming litigation over liability, and it reduces the number of lawsuits. Those costs are part of what drives up insurance premiums in the first place. Another benefit, and one of my personal favorites, is that there is no splitting of fees with lawyers. This is a huge benefit as a lot of times lawyers encourage inflation of costs and get more for their clients than themselves. Isn't that something?

Another benefit is that since the price of insurance is ultimately reduced, the lower rates mean that auto insurance is accessible to people with lesser means. As a tort system drives prices up, no-fault insurance is best to bring prices down. Granted, it's true that no-fault insurance can be a bit more expensive. However, in the long run it'll be far cheaper than would be the tort system, Mr. Speaker.

Again, Bill 204 will bring more no-fault to our insurance system. Our system is a bit of a mix of two systems, tort and no-fault, but it leans more towards the tort system, which in turn is a reason for premiums steadily rising. By increasing the amount of benefits that a person can get under section B and by setting up an impartial arbitration mechanism to settle disputes between the claimant and the insurance companies, we'll make it more fair for the claimant. Fairness means a better system for all. By increasing section B benefits, we would be ensuring that people who are in accidents are able to get money for the treatment right away.

Mr. Speaker, this means that lawsuits' time is cut dramatically, and this saves money for everyone. Saving money is a good outcome of this bill as we as a government do the best we can to save money. This bill is an opportunity for Albertans to save money on their insurance premiums, and in the long run it also gives us an opportunity to move away from litigation that clogs up the process. The tort system in reality causes hardship. I believe that Bill 204 – well, it's a small step in my notes, but I think it's a big step in the right direction to help fix the problem.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you very much, and that, they say, is that.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure to rise and join debate on Bill 204, the Insurance (Accident Insurance Benefits) Amendment Act, 2003, sponsored by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. Albertans are becoming increasingly dependent on the automobile as a preferred form of transportation, and statistics show that there has been a dramatic increase in the number of cars on Alberta's roads and highways over the past 10 years. I was somewhat startled to hear on the weekend – our economic development officer in St. Albert told me – that in our community we have 3.2 cars per household, which is quite a number. However, I can also tell you that I've received a number of calls from constituents who find that the rising rates of insurance are indeed preventing them from driving those cars in some instances and certainly from driving them with the coverage that they should properly have.

There is a stretch of highway 2 near Red Deer that was used by close to 15,000 vehicles per day in 1993, and it's interesting to note that that number has increased to close to 25,000 today. That's an increase of a thousand vehicles per day per year for the last 10 years. It's an example of one of the less congested areas of Alberta's main highways. Why do I speak about that? I speak about it because we are in Alberta using cars as the major mode of transportation in increasing numbers, daily in fact. Although these statistics are limited to Alberta's highways, the increase in the number of vehicles on city streets is just as dramatic.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the issue that concerns me the most as I read these statistics is that the more vehicles that are on the road, the more chance there is of an accident. In 1997 there were 92,365 traffic collisions on Alberta roads and highways. In 2001 there were 104,463, and that's an increase of 12,000 collisions in four years, or a 13 percent collision increase during that time period. Imagine what those numbers are going to be like in another five or 10 years when the number of vehicles on the road doubles, and statistics suggest that they will double.

These numbers concern me for one reason and one reason alone, and that is the insurance premiums. It seems at times that insurance premiums, especially for auto insurance, are always on the rise for any number of reasons, sometimes valid, other times curiously specious. I read in the news a while back that insurance companies were going to raise premiums because the city of Edmonton didn't plow its streets often enough.

In 1995 section B of the insurance policy in the regulation was increased from $5,000 to its current $10,000 limit. This increase along with increases for funeral expenses, income replacement, and death benefits resulted in premium increases from about $25 to $55 per vehicle. We need to keep this in mind when we look at Bill 204. I think this bill has its heart in the right place, Mr. Speaker. By increasing the limit on section B medical benefits to $25,000 over four years from the current level of $10,000 over two years, it is possible to see a decrease in lawsuits against insurance companies as many people in insurance firms will choose to participate in section B payout instead of suing. The average section B payouts have stayed at reasonably the same amount for the past five years. However, I believe that a majority of individuals involved in accidents do not bother to claim section B benefits because $10,000 over two years may not cover their medical expenses. So instead of accessing their section B benefits, they choose to sue for more adequate amounts of money that cover all their costs. By raising the limit on section B medical benefits, it is possible that more individuals will access those benefits instead of suing the insurance company, and any decrease in the number of lawsuits brought into insurance companies would be extremely helpful in the battle to decrease insurance premiums for consumers.

Now, although I support the aim of Bill 204, I firmly believe that this needs to be looked at as only one step in a whole process of reform. Mr. Speaker, the Assembly's main concern should be the reform of the Insurance Act to address specifically rising insurance premiums. I hear it from my constituents all the time. Over the last two years automobile insurance premiums have increased by 20 to 30 percent annually. The Department of Finance is currently conducting a consultation on minor tort reforms to the automobile insurance system which may assist with stabilizing premium increases. The review of the automobile insurance system is slotted for 2003 and is driven in part by concerns over the ever increasing rise in automobile insurance premiums and lack of available automobile insurance from the regular licensed market. I look forward to proposed changes to protect Alberta automobile drivers from what I will call exorbitant insurance premiums.

I would also like to recognize and commend the Department of Transportation on their continued support of pre-emptive measures such as safe roads. Through the safe roads program Alberta Transportation recognizes that the cost to society resulting from traffic collisions is staggering. In Alberta in 1999 traffic collisions killed 347 people and caused an astounding 25,451 other nonfatal injuries. The sad truth is that the majority of these deaths and injuries could have been prevented.

In 1999 approximately 89 percent of all collisions involved an error on the part of at least one of the drivers. In 1999 approximately 9.6 percent of all collisions involved at least one driver traveling at a speed too great for the given conditions, and this jumps to 21.6 percent for fatal collisions. Mr. Speaker, Albertans have a greater chance of being in a collision than winning a lottery, and every Albertan – I don't say this happily – can expect to be in a car crash at least once every 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, all of these collisions are adding to the number of claimants that sue insurance companies to help cover the expenses of the accident. It would be my hope that by increasing the limit on section B medical benefits, that number would decrease due to significant coverage through legislation. My fear, however, is that insurance companies will see Bill 204 as yet another reason to raise premiums and the number of lawsuits will not subside with an increase in section B benefits. If this were to happen, premiums would continue to rise.

So while I support the intent of the bill, I feel that government legislation should concentrate on other areas of the Insurance Act if we are to pursue any type of amendments we want to see in the renewal of this act. My main concern is with the cost of insurance premiums and the burdens that they bring to the average Albertan with a clean driving record. It would seem at times that by keeping a clean record, you still have to pay for the misfortunes and the mistakes of others because of increased premiums. It is my opinion that before any changes can be made, it's necessary for Alberta Finance to examine insurance consumer issues during the automobile insurance review this year. If an increase in section B benefits is what Albertans desire for their auto insurance, it is at that time that this bill could be brought forward, but that would be at a later date.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue this debate, but given the hour, I move that we adjourn debate and carry on at the next opportunity.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we now call it 5:30 p.m. and adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:27 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Water Supply Standards

505. Dr. Nicol moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to create an organization similar to the Clean Air Strategic Alliance for Alberta's water supply to ensure that Alberta's water supply is maintained at the highest standards possible.

[Debate adjourned March 24: Mrs. O'Neill speaking]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I had begun last time, I was speaking about Alberta being able to manage its water supply thanks to a relatively abundant supply of clean water that meets Albertans' needs and our desire to maintain a healthy aquatic environment, but Alberta is facing a number of pressures on its water resources. As our population levels have surged in the past decade, this province has seen rapid industrial, agricultural, and municipal growth. This has increased the pressures on existing water supplies, thereby potentially affecting the quality of surface water and certainly of groundwater.

As increased demands are placed on our water resources, the quality of that product becomes more relevant. As we monitor this situation more closely, we are learning more about natural pathogens in surface water that are difficult to treat by municipal water treatment facilities. These pathogens have the ability and the potential to cause waterborne illnesses such as those seen in Walkerton or North Battleford in recent times.

As the human population in Alberta increases, the uses of industrial water also increase. Understanding and monitoring the quality of surface water is very important, and in order to do this effectively, monitoring and testing methods need to focus on three categories of characteristics: chemical, physical, and biological. Surface water quality varies naturally throughout Alberta. Quality is based on differences in local conditions such as climate and geology, and water quality is also affected by human activities.

There are three major factors that affect water quality, all of which are subject to human influence. First of all, of course, the water quality; number two, the point sources; and number three, the nonpoint sources. Each of these factors represents an opportunity for water quality management, and water quality is ultimately the government of Alberta's responsibility. Thus we take this very seriously.

There is a growing demand for water in Alberta and a decreasing supply. There is also increasing uncertainty about the ability to predict water supply and of course its demand. Officials can estimate demand levels to a degree, but with uncertain weather patterns supply is more difficult to predict. Alberta has a significant amount of groundwater, yet there is a lack of knowledge and understanding of its groundwater resources. So certain basins in some areas of the province are nearing the limits of water allocation, particularly during dry periods when less water is flowing into the rivers and streams.

Alberta must continue to honour its commitments to Saskatchewan and Montana with regard to the amount of water that will flow into each jurisdiction. One can certainly appreciate that because of this characteristic water quality and quantity must be carefully tracked and monitored in this province. As many of my southern rural colleagues can attest, some economic opportunities are being lost in this area because of lack of sufficient water. With the water for life initiative that this government has introduced, Mr. Speaker, we strive to meet these demands with feasible solutions.

The point that is being raised here is that the hon. member's motion is a step forward in the process of improving our valuable environment, and this government is already undertaking such an initiative. Mr. Speaker, I am so very, very pleased to see that the hon. member of the Liberal opposition party is finally beginning to realize the merits of a Progressive Conservative way of thinking, and I'm happy to see that a Liberal has begun to articulate these perspectives on a clean air strategy that has already taken flight under the leadership of the Department of Environment, Clean Air Strategic Alliance.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I am in favour of Motion 505. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: There are only two minutes remaining. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul in the two minutes that we have left.

Mr. Danyluk: Good evening, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to have the opportunity to say a couple of brief words about Motion 505. It's not very often that we find ourselves in such agreement with the Official Opposition about how well a government initiative works. For that reason, I'd like to give my support to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East for the motion. I guess I would like to say that I think that when we do meet as government for an initiative, it is very, very positive, and again I would like to compliment the member opposite for his efforts and for our conjunction.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: In the time remaining, the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to rise tonight and to thank all of those who spoke on this motion. It's really important that we bring it forward and make sure that this kind of an approach reflects the kind of spirit that was in the water strategy that the minister made public in the debate period for this motion.

The interesting part of this, Mr. Speaker, is that I began my professional career doing water policy analysis in the United States, and some of the work we did was with some of the major commissions and congressional agencies in the United States from the National Water Commission, the National Science Foundation, the Environmental Protection Agency. This kept me busy down there for about eight or nine years looking at what would happen to water, water quality, the issues of water availability, interbasin transfers, all of these kinds of things with economic models and spatial models of looking at water across the United States. At one time I was running the largest computer simulation model outside of the U.S. military.

So, you know, these are some of the things that reflect on the commitment that water and water management really have played in the focus that I've taken in a lot of my career. I'm not saying that now to indicate that just because this is a motion that I'm bringing forward here, that's going to be the end of my career by any means, but this is kind of the background that I can put to talking about how important it is that we as a province really make a commitment to water, water quality, and all of the issues that the minister had in that strategy. I've had a chance in the intervening week to go through a lot of it. I can't say that I've read every word of it, but I've gone through a significant amount of it, and this is the kind of thing that we need to start.

We need to make that kind of a commitment to the water resources of this province and make sure that in the end there's strong public input but also a strong monitoring system in place, and this motion would in effect put in place a monitoring system that reflects what the minister has put into the structure of that water strategy. I guess it just kind of shows that in southern Alberta we've lived with water and water management issues for a long time, and when you get to thinking about them, there's one kind of solution that you need, and it comes out when you start trying to put together these kinds of strategies.

So it's the idea that in effect what we're going to have through this process is a strong commitment that water is important to our province and that we need to make sure that water plays a role in the future, helps our province reach into the future. We want to make sure that each one of us when we pick up a glass of water can say: this is quality. It's safe. The government has in place all the appropriate monitoring systems that will allow for Albertans to feel confident about that water system. You know, living just on the edge of Feedlot Alley, the idea of water, the impact on water, the relationship between economic growth in an area and water quality is kind of like everyday coffee shop talk in our area, and this is one of the things that people are always saying, that there is a balance, there is a way to make sure that water is a resource that we value, that we protect, but that it can be used as a major component in growth and the direction of our province.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I think that I want to just commend the minister on his water strategy initiative that was put onto the web site. I think it fits very well with the intent that I had with this motion, and I think that if we let this work through the process outlined by the minister, we'll have a really great opportunity for water and water protection in our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 505 carried unanimously]

Provincial Education Savings Plan

506. Mr. Herard moved on behalf of Ms Graham:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to explore new means of helping students finance their postsecondary education including the establishment of a provincial education savings plan to supplement Canada's registered education savings plan.

Mr. Herard: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today to introduce Motion 506 on behalf of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. I'm quite honoured that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed has asked me to begin debate on this motion, because she knows that I have more than a passing interest in this issue.

Motion 506 urges the government "to explore new means of helping students finance their postsecondary education." Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed has brought this motion forward is because many families around the province are finding it increasingly difficult to provide for their children's postsecondary education. This is happening at a time when postsecondary education is becoming increasingly important in this day and age if Alberta wants to continue to prosper. I think it's common knowledge that over 70 percent of all jobs in Canada require some form of postsecondary education. Today's economy is fueled by knowledge, and we must find ways to ensure that all Albertans can afford to maximize their potential and to maximize that knowledge.

Over the past 10 years the total cost of postsecondary education, like most other things, has been going up. When I refer to the cost of postsecondary education, I'm not strictly referring to tuition fees. There is far more involved in the cost of education than tuition alone. We often hear statements that refer to Alberta as having some of the most affordable tuition rates in Canada. This may be true, but what about all the other costs? Do we really have affordable postsecondary education when all costs are considered? The total cost of educating students includes other amounts such as university fees, fees like material and services fees, athletics and recreation fees, administration fees, and student union fees, which in and of themselves may also include a number of other fees. Students must buy textbooks, calculators, and other supplies, but of course it does not end there because for many students who do not live where they choose to attend, there's still room and board to disburse plus additional expenses such as transportation, personal allowance, and household expenses. For many families that all adds up to a significant financial burden and is among the reasons why many students throughout the province are having difficulties funding their educational needs or, what is perhaps more serious, are discouraged from attending at all. Now, granted, students can apply for student loans, but they may not receive the amount of support they really need.

We need to find new ways to encourage families to fund their children's postsecondary education, and, Mr. Speaker, that's what Motion 506 is about. It simply asks the government to explore new ways of helping students and their families fund postsecondary studies. Having said that, is it solely government's responsibility to fund postsecondary education, or is there a shared responsibility on the part of families to save for their children's education? Government already funds around 70 percent of the cost of postsecondary education, and in my view that's a significant contribution, but I believe what we must do is find new ways to encourage families to save for part of the postsecondary education costs of their children.

One of the possibilities that I've been working on for some time is ways to encourage a provincewide culture of family savings for their children's postsecondary education. One way may be for the government to institute a savings grant similar to Canada's registered education savings plan grant. The Canada education savings grant was established by the federal government, and it works by having government pay a 20 percent grant on the first $2,000 of annual contribution made to eligible registered savings plans.

My research shows that fewer than 20 percent of Alberta students have an RESP. Just think what could be done if all of our children had RESPs. Studies show that 80 percent of children who do have RESPs go on to postsecondary training. This is significantly higher than our current experience with the number of grade 12 graduates that go on to postsecondary. As I understand it, we're at about 50 percent eventual participation right now of our grade 12 graduates in postsecondary. So this is something that is worth looking at.

The government of Alberta could institute a program similar to the one at the federal level. We could contribute to RESPs of a prospective student in an amount that would encourage families to match it and start a savings plan very early in the life of their children. This would clearly establish that postsecondary funding is a joint responsibility and would encourage a culture of saving within our families.

Another area that government should explore is revamping the student loan system. Is the current system doing the job? Are the parental income thresholds appropriate in all cases? What about support for part-time students, Mr. Speaker? What about additional costs of rural students or urban students that must move to a different location to pursue their education? These are all questions that must be considered if we want to have the best support for postsecondary education for all students regardless of where they live. Alberta's future economy and quality of life depend on it.

I look forward to the debate, and I urge all hon. members to vote in favour of Motion 506 today. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise in the Assembly this evening and join the discussion and the debate on Motion 506. This motion urges the government, as the previous speaker has indicated, to explore new means of helping students finance their postsecondary education, and I believe it goes without saying that we all believe that postsecondary education in whichever form and shape it takes for each individual is indeed valuable not only to that individual but to the community at large and certainly to the strength of both the workforce and the thought force of all Albertans. So I stand in support of the motion because I feel that this exploration would offer valuable insight, and it is a very important initiative at this time.

I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the insight that the Member for Calgary-Lougheed has contained in her work on this motion. It raises some important issues that need to be addressed regarding student financing for postsecondary schooling, training, education.

This motion, in addition to exploring new measures, would also examine the establishment of a provincial registered education savings plan. Many of us have had the experience and fortunately been given the direction so that when our children were small we did invest in an education savings plan simply because we knew the money could be used, but I think there are other means and other multiple ways in which parents can of course look to the future on behalf of their own children.

So now more than ever education is extremely important. We all know that. It's important if we want to compete in our global knowledge-based society. However, postsecondary students are faced with increasing costs of tuition and educational materials. We know that. We know that the institutions, as we dialogue with both the students and the staff, realize that it costs more to educate more these days. I believe we must revisit our policies surrounding financial assistance programs for those who are pursuing postsecondary education because the benchmark for a basic education has indeed risen and risen in the last 25 years.

Alberta does have a comprehensive portfolio of flexible student finance programs. We know that, and available assistance ranges from bursaries and scholarships to both student loans and grants. But I feel that it is important to continually search for new and better methods and programs to assist those wanting to attend a postsecondary institution. I also believe that it is our responsibility as legislators to create an environment that enables individuals to plan and to provide for their own immediate families and their own futures, for that matter.

One possible measure the government could include in its study is provincial student loans for part-time students. We are in a society where many people learn on a part-time basis. They don't just learn partly; they learn wholly. But often it takes a longer time, and it's well integrated into their work site, the workforce, and their family lives.

When student loans were first implemented in Alberta, they were done so in an effort to help low-income students deserving of entry into a postsecondary program to pay the associated costs of doing so. But it has become apparent that the costs to attend postsecondary institutions have risen in conjunction with and to reflect an institution's operating cost, and we know that as we see the fluctuation in the percentages that both the government, the private grants and assistance, and individual tuition contribute to the cost of educating students in our postsecondary institutions. So it's not only lower income families that are experiencing difficulties funding the education of their children but many middle-income families as well, and indeed we cannot forget that many individuals themselves need that extra assistance even though they are the main contributors to the financing of their own postsecondary education.

So as the system stands, part-time students cannot apply for provincial student assistance, and therefore the government, I think, should research the provision of extending the student assistance and changing the rules for provincial student loans because citizens of this province deserve at least the opportunity – and I stress that – to pursue the career of their choice and to contribute and benefit from the Alberta advantage.

Another possible provision that is highlighted in the motion is the establishment of a registered education savings plan program, which would allow savings to grow tax free until the student is ready to attend a postsecondary institution full-time. The Alberta government could provide a grant to RESPs to help future students save for postsecondary education, and this savings plan is favourable because the income accumulated on the contributions of the grant, as well as the grant itself, does not become taxable until the student uses the RESP to fund their education. Usually at that time, if attending school full-time, they have little income to claim and therefore would pay little or no tax on the RESP income.

Mr. Speaker, financial assistance for university, college, or a technical school education is a means of contributing to our economy as well as a way to help individual Albertans improve themselves, improve their communities, contribute to the knowledge-based economy that I believe we're moving into more rapidly than we sometimes admit, and this, in turn, improves our province as a whole. This initiative is about assisting young Albertans to get the education they need in order to compete in a global, knowledge-based economy dominated by technology, by advanced skills, and by superior thinking skills. I say superior; I mean in that sense advanced and quite sophisticated.

It is in Alberta's best interest to have an educated populace, a populace that is flexible enough to adapt to the challenges that they face in the workforce and in everyday life, because a strong knowledge base provides individuals with the skills to be innovators and entrepreneurs, and furthermore a well-trained workforce is important to the Alberta economy and significantly contributes to our productivity and capacity while developing innovative products. As a province we should do all we can to develop successful methods to help finance the education of those individuals who are committed to pursuing lifelong learning and who need that hand up and that assistance that will enable them to live a decent life, at the same time pursuing their education formally.

So, Mr. Speaker, I feel that an exploration of new measures and an examination of a possible registered education savings plan grant could alleviate some of the pressures that postsecondary students experience today. So I would like to again lend my support for this motion because the measures that are possible and that I've mentioned could increase finance accessibility for students hoping to attend postsecondary education. For this reason, whenever we give hope to someone and whenever we enhance the environment within their realm of possibility, when we can tell young people that there is a possibility that they can achieve what they want in order for them to be better citizens, I truly believe this is a good motion and I support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make a few comments about Motion 506 and to certainly support the mover and the intent of the motion. I think it's something that's long overdue. It's a piece of the problem that we in the opposition have tried to address with a motion. I believe it's a motion that's coming up, and I think it's an important motion.

One of the things that I think has really concerned us has been the perspective that has been taken on postsecondary education by the government, and that notion I think has been expressed by the Minister of Learning in the House a number of times, by other members of the government too, the notion that because only a small percentage of students go on to postsecondary education and that those students are the primary benefactors of that education, they, in fact, should bear the burden of paying for it. He points out, I think on a number of occasions – and I may have the wrong examples – that taxi drivers and people who are less educated, bricklayers and other people, end up paying taxes that support students in these institutions. What he omits in the argument, of course, is that those same taxi drivers and postal workers and all of us in fact are benefactors of having a well-educated citizenry, particularly the kinds of specialists that are developed at our colleges, universities, and technical institutes. The very highways and bridges we drive across, the expectations we have when we go to hospitals, the kind of care that we place our children in when we put them in our public school systems: those are all places where all of us, regardless of your occupation, benefit from having students pursue a postsecondary education and become the specialists that allow those services to be delivered to ourselves and for our families.

So, as I said, I was alarmed at the perspective, and if nothing else I hope that maybe Motion 506 will cause the government to at least revisit that perspective and their view of students. There are a number of things such a review could look at, in particular the place of grants. I think that most would admit that the Americans have a far, far more generous grant system to encourage students to participate in postsecondary education in that country than we have here. In fact, I recently read an article that indicated that a student south of the border with fairly good grades, average grades could expect to rely on the grant system to pay most of the cost of a four-year program at one of the public institutions there and certainly at the college level. So I hope that part of the review that is undertaken as part of Motion 506 looks very seriously at grants and the grant system.

I think the indications that such a review is needed are all around us, the most recent being the introduction of differential fees, I think a backward step in our province, first at the University of Alberta and then at the University of Calgary, where we're going to see in some faculties astronomical increases in the kinds of tuition that students are going to have to pay. With it, there's going to be the obligation for students to find ways to pay for them and ways to finance them. So this motion, I think, in light of that development is timely.

I think the fact that we're running food banks on our campuses is something that we should be ashamed of. That we have students that have to rely on that kind of a service is an indicator of the kind of financial position that students in this province find themselves in, a position that I think is really unnecessary.

There are a number of ideas that I hope, as I said, would be looked at with the motion should it be successful. One of the things that we've looked at in the opposition and have been promoting is the whole notion of contingency repayment plans so that students could repay their loans based on the kinds of occupations that they are employed in on graduation. So someone who's in an occupation that doesn't pay quite as well would have their loan payments adjusted to reflect that income as compared to someone who may have a higher earning job and be able to pay back a loan more rapidly.

I think there's an opportunity here to review our commitment that was made by Canada in 1976 at the United Nations where we along with a number of other countries agreed that we would move free education up a year at a time as finances permitted. So we would move to the first year of college being tuition free, to the second, third, and fourth until you got to the point where a student in the province could obtain a degree tuition free, much as they now secure their high school programs. I think what it did was cause all of us to reflect on what exactly we do to students. What is the magic between grade 12 and the first year of college or university or technical school? Why all of a sudden in grade 12 are you supported by the public tax system for that education, and when you turn a year older, that support is withdrawn and you're faced with some pretty terrific burdens when you look, as I say, at tuition and particularly at the new differential fees?

So I think that for a number of reasons it's a good motion. It's timely. I look forward to the motion passing and being acted upon. Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening to participate in the discussion, debate on Motion 506, exploring new means for helping students finance postsecondary education. I have a conviction in the human resource development of Albertans because I believe that our Alberta economic strength and quality of living depend on higher education. Investment in education brings multiple returns. Also, as the chair of the Committee on Lifelong Learning I have a deep interest in the subject matter, and I want to acknowledge the need to help Albertans to return and continue learning as their career changes. We can see all of this as a sound economic development policy for Alberta, and I have the feeling that the hon. Minister of Economic Development and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment agree with me on this point.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Motion 506 would allow the government to look at new ways of helping students fund their education. Tuition costs are increasing every year. Students are encountering an overall rise in costs associated with attending postsecondary education, including increases in rent, food, labs, books, other supplies. Both the federal and Alberta governments do provide financial support to those attending postsecondary education on a full-time basis. However, the increase in costs to students calls for new measures to be explored and examined. New provisions for helping students finance their education equate to more students being able to afford postsecondary education. The Alberta government is dedicated to ensuring that postsecondary education remains accessible and affordable to all Albertans. It is clear that this motion is consistent with the government's commitment.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta Learning, under the leadership of the hon. Minister of Learning, continues to ensure that our excellent education system is sustainable and remains so to meet the current and future needs of students. The government provides financial aid where cost may be a barrier for postsecondary education. The total provincial and federal assistance to Alberta students is forecasted to be approximately $470 million. The government provides funds to students through a variety of scholarships, grants, bursaries, and loans. Postsecondary students who receive Alberta student loans are also eligible for loan relief in their first year and after their final year of study. These benefits are applied only against Alberta student loan funds.

The mentioned programs show the government's commitment to supporting and assisting students with costs associated with postsecondary education. However, it is always important to continue to search for new measures and provisions which may lead to innovative approaches to student assistance. It is in the public interest for all Alberta residents to have reasonable access to postsecondary education and training. Students should not be denied the opportunity to attend postsecondary institutions due to their lack of financial means. However, we need to find a balance of student assistance programs that are affordable for the government and for the students. Motion 506 allows the government to explore possible new alternatives.

It is important that we do not underestimate the opportunity we have to better the lives of those Albertans who have strived to better themselves. We have the ability to provide educational opportunity to individuals who might think they do not have the chance to get a specific type of education and training. Mr. Speaker, if there is a way that we can make it easier for Alberta students to access financial assistance and attain the education they desire, we will benefit as a province by equipping these individuals to contribute to our vibrant economy. This motion does not outline any firm measures but rather is flexible to study the entire issue and is not held within a boundary with only one provision. Motion 506 is able to examine a variety of different ways to assist students with funding for their postsecondary education.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 506 hopes to explore new measures to help students finance their postsecondary education. This initiative would allow a possible provincial registered education savings plan, for example, to assist students in financing their education. New funding alternatives could possibly help more Albertans to pursue a specific career and those who may have otherwise abandoned postsecondary schooling and training.

I want to commend the MLA for Calgary-Lougheed for bringing this issue forward. I support this initiative and urge all my colleagues to vote in favour of Motion 506 and the exploration of possible new means to help students finance their advanced studies. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate on Motion 506 and add what I believe are constructive and effective ways to help students afford their postsecondary education. The escalating costs related to going to school are not going to slow down. Tuition will continue to rise, but so will other expenses such as rent, utilities, textbooks, and food. As Alberta continues to grow, the cost of living will continue to rise. There are ways to protect students and encourage others to pursue postsecondary education. Some people may shy away from pursuing higher learning because they feel that they can't afford the expense. It is true that school isn't cheap, but it's also a fact that postsecondary education leads to bigger and better opportunities for graduates.

Mr. Speaker, many of the options and ideas provided during this debate include modifications to Alberta's student loan system, but I believe that Motion 506 provides an opportunity for this Assembly to look at ways to reduce expenses for students rather than injecting more money into the student loan system. There are many ways to help students afford university besides more funding for student loans.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a good idea for this government to explore the viability of encouraging and sponsoring registered education savings plans. RESPs have become enormously popular for a number of reasons. The federal government's Canada education savings grant matches RESP contributions up to $2,000 per year.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Cernaiko: Two thousand dollars per year.

As we all know, postsecondary education has become increasingly expensive. According to Statistics Canada university tuition fees have increased 126 percent in the last 10 years. Mr. Speaker, based on the projected cost of postsecondary education, RESPs may be the best idea to help fund postsecondary education in the long run but do little to help students right now. However, I have a few ideas that will help students who are already in school or who are planning to attend in the future. Some of these options include reducing the amount for student housing, looking at more campus-style housing, and finding ways to slow down the escalating prices of textbooks.

I have learned that there's a need to create opportunities to develop more secondary suites in Alberta. These secondary suites do not have to be derelict housing, as some critics would suggest. I believe that the Alberta government should encourage municipalities to create more R2 zoning, which would allow more secondary suites. These suites could substantially reduce the amount of money needed for housing.

For students not living at home, living expenses can easily exceed $6,000 over an eight-month school year. I know of several students who take a class and try to sell their textbooks back to the bookstore to cover some of the expenses of future purchases, but a problem arises when a professor chooses to use the most recent version of the same book. This becomes a major expense for students, who are basically forced to pay top dollar for an identical book. I believe that utilizing SuperNet would reduce the need for students to buy new versions of the same book, and I, Mr. Speaker, personally went through this same issue some 25 years ago at the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon.

Rather than increasing the minimum wage, Mr. Speaker, the government could provide an earned income tax credit. I understand that it is not this government's policy to provide an abundance of tax credits because Albertans already enjoy a low-rate broad-based system, but this tax credit would benefit students who work part-time while attending school. Under this system, used a great deal in the United States, the government would reverse-tax low-income earners attending school. The earned income tax credit is a refundable tax credit for low-income earners. The United States federal government designed this system to help offset the burden of social security taxes and provide an incentive to work. This Assembly should consider a similar program for students working part-time who earn less than $10,000 a year. This system would reward those students with the time management skills to work a few hours a week while going to school. Rewarding work may also encourage students to be less dependent on the student loan system.

The American program also allows employees with children to receive an advance on their credits through their paycheques. The employee and employer fill out a form that allows the employer to pay part of the credit throughout the year. Again, Mr. Speaker, this program could be adopted for postsecondary students struggling to make ends meet. Earned tax credits would reward students working part-time and offer incentive for students to gain employment. Most importantly, the program would keep more money in the pockets of students, money that would not have to be paid back to the government. They could earn $7 an hour but then get topped off on the employer's payroll.

Mr. Speaker, I believe and I realize that the ideas proposed are not the conventional solutions for postsecondary students, but these policies would send a message that students are valued, these policies would also show the students that their concerns are heard and are being addressed by the Alberta government, and finally these alternative methods for alleviating the financial barriers for pursuing higher learning would encourage more Albertans to go to school. These ideas should at least be explored as asked in Motion 506. Lowering expenses is the same as giving more money to students. These strategies may save students and taxpayers in the long run. Motion 506 is a step in the right direction and is a motion that we must all support.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have some concerns with this particular motion as we see it before us. I don't think that it necessarily addresses the real problems. I think it's skirting around at the symptoms once again. [interjection] I know that that's not a view shared by all of my colleagues, but I really have to put my concerns on the record. Just because he's the Learning critic and a professor who writes textbooks, doesn't mean he's always right about everything.

Here are my concerns. My concerns now are in terms of tuition fees and getting kids into postsecondary education, which really is our goal: to get as many kids in as want to go. First of all, access to student loans is a huge problem. I know that the minister has told us repeatedly that most appeals are won and that the criteria these days is for a combined family income of $50,000 as a ceiling for people to be able to apply, but it really isn't enough in some families. Because of whatever kinds of circumstances kids can't access the loans. They still want to stay at home, which we should be encouraging if we're family oriented, and they can't get the money. So it doesn't matter how much the tuition is if they can't access money for it right now. Sure we can set up another kind of plan for savings, for contributions, but that is not the circumstance of every family. In many families there isn't the extra $50, $100, $75, $25 a month to put into plans, and there is a system right now that works quite well.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I think we have to start addressing the real systemic problems in the system in terms of kids being able to access education, and I'm not convinced that this motion is the right way to go. I think we need to put in a program where everyone who wants a student loan can access it. They may put a limit, then, on what the remission amounts are based on combined family income, but if the family doesn't feel that they can afford the tuition fee, then let the student access the money in some fashion so that we can get as many kids that want to go into the system. That is, I think, our primary responsibility as parliamentarians, and I'd like to see us do that, not put in another level of plans that kids have to learn about and apply to before they can get there. It isn't about making it harder to get educated. It's about making it easier to get educated, and I haven't heard any convincing arguments so far to say that that will be the case with this particular motion. So I think, Mr. Speaker, that I will not be supporting it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and join the debate on Motion 506 this evening. The motion is one that must be seriously considered by this government. I think that this motion shows this Assembly that many of us in government have to realize that postsecondary education is an important issue that must be addressed.

It seems that over the past couple of years the majority of focus has been on the kindergarten through grade 12 system and not on the postsecondary system. This has caused much unrest in the postsecondary student population. Students have demonstrated, asking for their fair share of the funding pie. Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe they get their fair share of the funding pie; however, only on paper. I feel that we as a government give the postsecondary education system plenty of money to use, but I don't feel that it is used to its full advantage. That is why Motion 506 should be supported. It gives us an opportunity to sit back and look at where we are spending the taxpayers' money.

As the motion urges the government to explore better ways of helping students finance their postsecondary education, I believe the best way of helping students is to take a look at where we are spending these resources. I am sure that this government could find innovative ways and investigate different ways of allocating its resources to students. I do not want to increase funding, but I do believe that throwing money at problems doesn't solve anything. It would be more prudent for us to review our policies to ensure that we are doing all we can with what we allocate.

We keep hearing of these stories, that they are not as bad as we are told; they are exaggerated. Mr. Speaker, if things were as positive in the postsecondary system, why are we hearing of increasing cases of students not having enough money for food and shelter? Why are there so many students who say that they have to go to the food bank so that they can eat? The counterargument that the stories are exaggerated is absolutely ridiculous. There are students at universities and colleges that are struggling, and I feel that it is time we looked at or explored new ways of helping out because there are challenges.

For example, I heard a story of a young man who attended a university in southern Alberta. This young man prepared for his third year by working in a lumber yard during the four-month break and saved for the upcoming university year. His parents had too high an income for him to get a loan. He didn't have the grades for scholarships and he wasn't poor enough for grants or bursaries, so he had to make sure he saved enough for two semesters.

After the summer he had made what he felt was enough to get him by. His savings totaled a similar amount as the year before, and since that year's income covered expenses, he felt his third year would be tight, but he could get through. However, when he arrived at university he quickly discovered that he might run into some difficulties as there were some significant price increases. First of all, the price of the textbooks went up dramatically as many of his classes required the newest editions of the texts, and therefore buying used books was not an option as it had been in the past. As well, there were increases in fees that pushed up the amount that he had to pay before he got into his first class. The student was taking five classes per semester, and the amount he paid was quite a bit higher than the year before. He did have a small job with the students' union as an elected member, so that brought in a little bit of money, but he could not work at another job because he was a full-time student and his classes required night dedication. So working was not an option.

As his year started, the young man quickly realized that he was going to run out of money. With about a month left before the end of the school year his early realization became reality, and he was broke with one month to go. This came as a bit of a shock as he had lived no differently than in the previous year except that the costs had increased around him out of control, and subsequently he ran out of money. Now, this young man happened to be from an upper middle-class family, and his parents helped him, and inevitably he got through his university year. However, this problem is not uncommon, and the ending is rarely as positive.

Young people who don't have their parents to fall back on can find themselves in a stressful situation at the same time as they should be studying for their finals. The cost of postsecondary education seems to increase every year, and it is very difficult for students to save enough money to get through an entire year. This is why we need Motion 506. We need to find new and innovative ways to help these kinds of students get through at least four years of education.

I urge all members to vote in favour of Motion 506. [interjection] Just as I was getting to the good part. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has now concluded.

Amendments to Standing Orders

17. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:
Be it resolved that the Standing Orders of the Assembly be amended as follows.
- (1) Standing Order 7(1) is amended by adding "Tablings to the Clerk" after "Tabling Returns and Reports."
 - (2) Standing Order 37.1(2) is amended by striking out "Tabling Returns and Reports" and substituting "Tablings to the Clerk."
 - (3) Standing Order 58(5) is amended by striking out "immediately after Orders of the Day are called" and substituting "not later than 3:10 p.m. provided that Orders of the Day have already been called."
 - (4) This motion comes into force April 7, 2003.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These changes are the result of much consultation with the opposition parties and the government. The main change represents an improvement – some would call it a fix or a repair – to a long-standing procedural matter regarding Committee of Supply when it occurs in the afternoons.

Mr. Speaker, in closing I would ask for the support of all members in the Assembly regarding this motion, and I would like to thank the opposition parties for having helped draft some of the amendments and improvements as enunciated by me just earlier this evening.

With that having been said, I do look forward to the recognition and support for this important motion that does bring in some significant improvements.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the change we see there was our excellent idea, we will of course support it.

head: Third Reading

Bill 22

Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2003

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to third reading of Bill 22, the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2003, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Children's Services. As previously mentioned in the House, the proposed amendment to this bill is very straightforward. It removes the stipulation of a maximum number of members that may sit on a child and family services authorities board. This change aids in the amalgamation of the child and family services authorities from 18 to 10 that is being implemented. The amendment is good news because it allows for the flexibility to meet governance needs and ensures adequate community representation on the boards.

I want to comment briefly on some of the points raised during discussion in Committee of the Whole. The child and family services authorities were originally formed based on extensive consultation with Albertans. More than 3,000 Albertans from 65 communities were consulted. A consensus from the consultations was that the system of services for children had to change to include decision-making that addressed issues of local children and families. Such a service delivery system was created and exists today. This foundation will not change through amendments in Bill 22.

Mr. Speaker, local presentation will be enhanced because some of the 10 new regions will represent larger, more diverse geographical regions, and therefore boards will benefit from expanded membership. If a particular region is large in size and needs more board members to sufficiently meet the governance model in that child and family services authority, then that would be permitted.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services traveled the province, Mr. Speaker, consulting with Albertans late in 2002 and early in 2003 about the issues surrounding CFSA amalgamation. Stakeholders were assured that boundary changes are not only a chance to improve the governance structure but will further entrench community involvement in service delivery for children and families. For example, family and community support services will play more of a vital and formal role with the new CFSA boards, and we will build on existing community partnerships for effective local decision-making.

A concern was raised in Committee of the Whole about the aboriginal pillar relating to child and family services authorities. Mr. Speaker, Children's Services remains committed to the aboriginal pillar through its regional governance structure, and in addition to aboriginal board members each of the CFSA boards will have one aboriginal co-chair.

Reference was also made to a question surrounding administrative efficiencies when dealing with large regions. Mr. Speaker, having 10 regions is not going to be more costly. We will be utilizing the built-in infrastructure already established through the smaller regions. Our vision is for these boards to be boards of influence. They will be more proactive in building community networks. It will be the job of the boards to serve all outlying areas and to create stronger community networks that will provide input into policies, strategic directions, and services for children, youth, and families.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move third reading of Bill 22 because I know that it will allow the flexibility to determine the size of a board based on the specific needs of individual regions.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Just a comment or two at third reading. I was pleased to hear the member on behalf of the minister talk about the makeup of the boards and the boards including aboriginal representatives. It's something in the information that we haven't had. I go back to the forum First Circle: Uniting for Children that was held in 1999, and one of the recommendations at that forum was that there be at least three youth representatives appointed to each of the then 18 regional child and family authorities and that this also be done to school boards and youth justice committees. It's a question I hadn't asked at Committee of the Whole in terms of the makeup of the boards, and I would be interested if the minister has an outline of the kinds of groups that must be included on each of the boards. I think it would be in the interests of all of us to have that shared with the Assembly. I hope that that might be done at a later date.

With that, I think I'll conclude, and we'll be supporting Bill 22. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close debate.

Mr. Cenaiko: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to close debate on Bill 22.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has moved on behalf of the hon. Minister of Children's Services third reading of Bill 22, Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2003. Does the Assembly agree to the motion for third reading?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? The motion is carried.

Bill 23

Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act

[Adjourned debate March 10: Dr. Massey]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to second reading of Bill 23, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. I outlined the bill during our debate on second reading on March 10. I'd like to briefly go through some . . .

Speaker's Ruling Closing Debate

The Deputy Speaker: I'll have to check with the table, hon. member. My record shows that Red Deer-North has already spoken once to this bill at second reading, so the second one is not permissible. It was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods that adjourned it.

Mrs. Jablonski: I'll close the debate.

The Deputy Speaker: I think so. Yes, that would close debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before the next election everyone in here will figure out what the rules are. It's going to be just fine.

Debate Continued

Ms Carlson: I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak in second reading to Bill 23, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act. It's a bill that we've had an opportunity to send out to a few stakeholders and get some of their comments back. What this bill does is create a stand-alone act to provide services that were previously delivered under a specific section of the Child Welfare Act. We've raised a few concerns. We've had a few stakeholders who say that there aren't too many issues, and we've had some others who say that there are a lot. But, in essence, what it comes down to is that it seems like, as usual with government bills, the devil's going to be in the details, and the issues that we'll see as it rolls out will be within the regulations themselves.

We do have some very specific concerns that were brought up with regard to therapeutic services that are outlined in this particular act. The concerns that were raised were that there was no place in the act that actually instructed the director "to seek out either assessments or treatments which rely on evidence-based research." This is a professional in the field who gave us these comments, and I think that they are actually quite interesting and should be taken into consideration by the minister, and we hope that when we get into committee, she will get back to us on her interpretation of this particular concern that's being brought forward. This person talks about an analogy to medicine is that it is demanded of the medical profession to practice within specific diagnostic and treatment guidelines developed on the basis of evidence-based research. No such demand is placed upon most non-medical therapy services provided to children with disabilities, even when such research is available [in such areas as] the provision of Early Intensive Behavioral Intervention . . . programs for children with autism.

So that's a problem. If we have an ability to go to evidence-based research, then clearly it seems to me that that's where we should go, but it isn't required as it stands right now. So they're not instructed to seek out and use "evidence-based treatments when they exist," and "no such demand is placed on the service providers."

What happens then is you may get less than optimal outcomes, which is not what we want when we're talking about kids, and certainly not what we've heard the minister ever talk about in this House. So what happens is that when they don't have those kinds of guidelines to work with, then the outcome is a lack of instruction. It means that those people who are rolling out the rules, the directors, aren't responsible for even knowing if the treatments exist and what they would entail. So what this person is saying is that a great deal more structure is required in this particular area.

They go on to talk about:

The reason for pointing out this issue is that a lack of instruction to directors ensures that, at best, developments in the delivery of services to children with disabilities will be fragmented and not always moving in a positive direction.

So these days when we see cutbacks, financial constraints in programs, and we want to essentially get the best bang for the buck, that's not going to happen if you don't have really good plans laid out for how these kids are handled within this system.

He goes on again to give another medical comparison, and he talks about how "health would not be anywhere as good as it currently is if the medical establishment followed such wide open policies as suggested in this legislation." I think that is a very good comparison. There are very structured protocols in medicine, and he's saying that there is no reason why there couldn't be very structured protocols in this particular service to children with disabilities. So if the minister could tell us what the plan is there.

So that is exactly the issue that comes up in terms of the problem being with the regulations. We need to know with some certainty up front that there's a large framework built within the system so that as events unfold, there is a structured format or protocol to follow with decision trees helping to determine what the next stage of therapy can be. It is possible in this particular field because there is enough documented evidence to do this. He is concerned that this doesn't show up anywhere in this particular bill and that there are enough experts in the field to be able to determine treatments and options. Often what will happen is that directors will turn for information to whom they think is an expert, and it may not be as comprehensive or the best possible option. So this is, I think, something that needs to be talked about.

There's also, then, the issue that comes up in terms of regional autonomy and questions of who you go to there and who decides what the next stage of the protocol is. That's a problem when we see what's happened in this particular case, where there's a lot of regionalization happening and there isn't a comprehensive kind of framework from which decisions are being made. Some regions will have better access to resources and expert advice than others. There needs to be more structure within the bill. I don't think it's enough to leave it to the regulations. So if we can get the minister to comment about this when we get into committee, I think it would be very helpful if she can give us some idea. We've seen other bills where the regulations have been posted on the web site for people to take a look at and review, and it would be very helpful, I think, if we could see some of that happen with this particular bill.

There's always a bit of concern and apprehension when we change legislation that deals with children. We want to know that it isn't an experiment, that there are good, substantial reasons for proceeding in the fashion that we are, particularly when we talk about family support for children with disabilities, where there are often other kinds of extenuating circumstances in the family situation which means sometimes that the families themselves don't have access to enough resources to do the research themselves. They have to rely often on the system for guidance, and we need to ensure that that guidance is provided in the most comprehensive fashion; that is, provided by experts, that there are protocols that will be followed which will ensure that the needs of the children come first and foremost, that we're not looking at experimentation, that we're not looking at cost-cutting measures, that we're looking at providing the best possible service for these youngsters.

So with those concerns I'll wait and see in committee what the minister has to say about this particular bill – or perhaps the Member for Red Deer-North can address some of them in her closing comments today – and make sure that we're moving forward with caution in this particular area. I think those are all of the comments I have at this time, and I'll wait to see what other people have to say on this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions?

I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to briefly revert to Bill 22.

Amendment Act, 2003

Bill 23

Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act

The Deputy Speaker: Okay. Are you ready to close debate, hon. Member for Red Deer-North?

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very happy to be able to close debate this evening on Bill 23, the Family Support for Children with Disabilities Act.

First of all, I'd like to briefly go through some of the issues that were raised during the discussion in second reading. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods asked for information about the consultation process with communities. This legislation has been developed through extensive consultation with and participation by parents of children with disabilities, community stakeholders, advocates, health professionals, and service providers. The Children's Services ministry will continue to work closely with parents and community partners in the implementation of this new and innovative program for disabled children and their families.

There was a concern that the bill medicalizes disabilities and that doctors are in charge of the medical diagnosis on which the determination of a disability is based. The proposed legislation does not adopt a medical model of disability. On the contrary, the provision of therapeutic services for a child will be based on an assessment of the child's ability to function in normal daily living. This approach is very clearly articulated in the bill.

The provision of family support services will be based on an initial determination that the child does indeed have a disability as that term is broadly defined in the legislation. However, there is no requirement that confirmation of the child's disabling condition or impairment be made by a physician. We clearly heard from stakeholders that confirmation of the child's disabling condition should come from a medical professional qualified to make that particular diagnosis and that there should be flexibility in terms of the nature and level of detail of the diagnosis. The legislation provides for this flexibility.

An issue was also raised regarding the definition of disabilities. The definition of disability in the legislation is broad and is intended simply to identify those children and families the legislation is intended to serve. The definition applies only in the context of this legislation. It does not have the effect of redefining disability as set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

There has been an assertion that the act makes provision for income testing, which is alleged to be a departure from the original philosophy of the handicapped children's services program. This legislation recognizes and values the ability and responsibility of parents to care for and support their children. Stakeholders indicated to us very clearly that they do not want a financial assistance program. They want and need a program that supports them in fulfilling their responsibility as parents and meeting the extraordinary needs of their disabled children. This legislation will provide that support. The legislation does not provide for income testing. Rather, it will ensure that necessary supports are provided to families based on the particular extraordinary needs of that family and their ability to meet those needs. Expectations regarding parental cost sharing will be reflected in regulations developed in consultation with parents and other stakeholders. These expectations will take into account a parent's financial abilities and will ensure that cost sharing does not result in financial hardship to families or prevent access to necessary services.

In regard to the issue of the separation of family support services and therapeutic services we heard from stakeholders that family support services and therapeutic services are very distinctive kinds of services and that this distinction should be reflected in the provisions of this bill. Family support services are based on the families' needs and will support families in meeting the needs of their disabled children. The intent is to preserve and strengthen the family's capacity to promote their child's healthy growth and development. Therapeutic services are focused on the needs of the disabled child. The nature and level of service will be based on a functional assessment of the child.

Mr. Speaker, as I have said, we have consulted extensively with stakeholders about this legislation. The Alberta Association for Community Living has called this proposed legislation an historic moment in our country and has in fact commended the hon. Minister of Children's Services for her continuing commitment to involve families in the implementation of this legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'm very pleased to move second reading of Bill 23.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

Bill 24 Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 10: Mr. Cenaiko]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to second reading of Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003. During our discussion on March 10 regarding second reading, I outlined the background of the review process for Alberta's Child Welfare Act and some of the changes being recommended in this bill. Recommendations for legislative changes have placed greater emphasis on and accountability for the safety and well-being of children; permanent placements for children; the involvement of children and families in decision-making; the importance of respecting all cultures, ethnic backgrounds, and religions; and the importance of supporting youth who are in transition to adulthood.

Bill 24 will amend Alberta's child welfare legislation to improve the lives of children, youth, and families, Mr. Speaker. It will also strengthen the ability of the Children's Services ministry to support Alberta's children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make some comments at second reading of Bill 24. I appreciated the overview that the Member for Calgary-Buffalo provided the last time the bill was before the Assembly. The speaker at that time made a number of points about the legislation, and it prompted me to go back to the review that that member had been responsible for conducting for the government and the kinds of principles that were outlined in that review. Because we're in second reading and it's our opportunity to examine the principles on which the legislation is based, I think it's appropriate that we look at those principles and then, as we proceed to Committee of the Whole, make some judgments as to whether the principles as enunciated really are carried out in the details of the legislation. So I'd like to just visit some of those principles.

One of the very first recommendations has to do with the primary consideration of any legislation, that if there's going to be legislation amended or redeveloped, the focus had to be primarily on the impact of those changes on children and on their families and that it had to promote the best interests and the well-being of children. I think it's a principle that we can all agree upon, and it's one that I'm not sure is consistently carried out in the legislation. As I said, there'll be an opportunity when we move to committee to look at some specific instances where I believe that that may not be the case, but certainly it is a principle that's found in similar kinds of legislation. It's consistent with the kinds of things that were part of the Children's Forum, and the recommendations of the Children's Forum were very much in the spirit that any changes, any action that the government undertook had to promote the best interests, the protection, and the well-being of children. So it was the first principle that was recommended by the review, and it's a principle that we're going to be very vigilant in making sure the legislation actually reflects.

The second principle is one that I believe, in looking at some of the submissions, there was some disagreement about. The second principle that was recommended from the review was that "parents are responsible and accountable for providing their children with adequate care and supervision and ensuring their safety, protection, and well-being" and are "responsible for seeking support." There is a "but" applied to that principle as it was recommended, and that "but" was that it "should be clear that the best interests and safety of the child must take precedence over parental and community rights when children are in need of protection." So it seems to me that with this principle as it was recommended from the committee, there has been some discussion whether that obligation of those parents should take precedence over the best interests and the safety of children.

It says in the principle that that is the case, but by including the phrase and trying to put that burden on children, there has been concern expressed that the children's best interests are going to be forfeited in some cases to trying to hold parents responsible for what we would hope they would take on as their responsibilities for their own youngsters, but we know from experience that that's not the case. So the principle that was enunciated is one that, again, is reflected in the legislation, and it's the whole role of parents and their responsibility that I think we have some questions about in terms of the details of the bill.

The third principle that the legislation is based on is that the legislation should be clear that any decisions that are made about children and family have to take into account their cultural, their spiritual, their religious, and their social heritage. It goes on as a principle to expand upon that, indicating that they have to maintain ties with extended families and community members where possible. And that – I go back to the Children's Forum – was a huge, huge issue in that particular forum in 1999, and that of course is with respect to aboriginal children. We've seen the kinds of difficulties in the province trying to work with those principles and the very sad things that have happened to children as a result of trying to adhere too rigidly to that principle.

We can all agree that that's the way it should be, but I think that at some point it has to be tempered with reality. We have to make sure that children are not sacrificed to a principle that insists that they be kept attached to a particular cultural or religious or social heritage. Again, it's a principle that is I think one we can agree upon, but I think it is also a principle that is being developed and has to be very, very carefully applied in practice. The principle talks specifically about aboriginal children, and as I indicated before, there have been some great difficulties in this area. The department has had to take some radical action when the department was trying to make sure that this principle was being respected with respect to the treatment of some aboriginal children in the province.

The next recommendation that came from the report had to do with increased accountability, and it indicated that "the rights of children, youth and families should be clearly identified in the legislation to increase accountability and ensure children's needs are being met." It says, "As well, children should be clearly informed of their rights." This is something that the Children's Advocate has mentioned time after time in reports and has been, I guess, somewhat disappointed that it hasn't been the case. He had examples, for instance, of children not even knowing that there was a case plan for them and their future, and often children were kept in the dark in terms of their relationship to the government and what was available to them.

It was quite acute when it came to youngsters as they reached the age of 18. I think that one of the good things, one of the changes the department has made is that that abrupt cutoff at 18 that was the practice in the past has been amended, and that is for many youth no longer the case. There's an effort to recognize that just because they reach the chronological age of 18, their needs continue and that many of them still need support as they try to make their way. So I think it's a good principle and it's one that's long overdue, and there are some specifics in the legislation that we'll be looking to amend, I think, in this area.

A further principle, I think the fifth, was that "services to children and families be provided in a manner that is supportive, least disruptive to the child and prevents the need for further interventions under the Act." Again, an important principle, you'd think one that would have been paramount in previous legislation and certainly one that would be acted upon in trying to support youngsters, but we know that that's not been the case. Examples of multiple placements of youngsters, the kind of instability as a result of the way that they have been handled have really resulted in some unfortunate things happening to children that were in government care. So I think the principle of it being least disruptive to the child is an important one, and again I think it's consistent with the first principle, where that focus is on children and their needs.

The next principle is one that is concerned with permanency, and this again is related to the previous principle, something that's going to be least disruptive. The whole business of permanency is making sure that youngsters are not bounced from home to home and never do end up having the kind of stable life that we would hope for all children. This principle indicates that all children deserve "a safe, stable home" nurtured by a healthy family and that that is best done when they are in a permanent placement and that those placements are supported as a result of legislation. It's an area that I think is going to be difficult for the government; just because we pass the legislation, it's going to take a lot of hard work to make it a reality in the province. It's unfortunate, but the kinds of placements that are needed are not always available. The kind of climate that one would hope is created for youngsters to be placed in permanent situations has still to be created. Once the legislation comes into being, it's going to need a tremendous amount of work, and it's going to be interesting to see the kinds of specific programs and actions that the government will take to make sure that this principle that is behind the legislation is actually honoured in practice.

The last recommendation that came from the review was that under the current act "Albertans report any instances where there are probable grounds to believe a child may be in need of protection," and this "should be reinforced and strengthened in the new legislation." This is an important principle. There are a number of reasons why a child may be in need of protection – physical and emotional neglect, abuse of one kind or another – and if they don't have a guardian, we have to ensure that they're protected. It's again a most difficult area for the community to deal with, but I think we have to ensure that children are protected in terms of what happens to them emotionally and physically. It's an area that's fraught with all kinds of difficulties, and it's going to be, again, a really difficult area for the government to create the climate where we can assure ourselves that for the most part, as far as humanly possible, if children are in need of protection, that protection actually is there for them and that there's a process in place that will ensure that they'll get the help and be relieved of any kind of duress they may be under.

Those principles, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, came from the review. I think they're principles that for the most part most of us can agree on with a couple of exceptions. As I said, we have taken those principles as they were laid out in the review, and we have put those principles against the elements of the act, the amendments before us, and tried to measure the changes in the act before us with respect to these principles. We've been looking for consistency, and we think that for the most part they are consistent, but there are some notable exceptions, and we'll take the opportunity to look at them when we move to Committee of the Whole.

I think with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003. This is a pretty extensive bill. It's looking at some fairly extensive changes in legislation, and it's a bill that has certainly generated a lot of interest by a lot of people. I think it requires some very significant debate, and I'll be quite interested in hearing what government members have to say about this piece of legislation, the recommendations that come forward, their thoughts on it in terms of the overriding principles, which is what I'll primarily speak about today because of course second reading is speaking in principle to the bill.

We've had lots of feedback from people on this in terms of the adoptions and so on, and I'll be tabling the information I've got when we get to committee and talking about some of those issues, but tonight I would like to spend most of my time, I think, referring to a submission that we have from the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre. They did a very comprehensive review of this bill and had some strong recommendations that they wanted to bring forward, and they primarily focus around the UN convention on the rights of the child. This is a convention that we have tried for many, many years to get the Alberta government to endorse and support, and what we've seen were some backhanded attempts. "We support it, but . . ." happened over the course of the years but not an outright endorsement.

So I'd like to just review that for a moment, because since the last time the UN convention on the rights of the child was intensively debated in this Legislature, we've had an election, and there are a number of new members that support the government's position who should really know the parameters of the discussion that they are making the decision on. I would hope that by doing that, we would see them change their stance and unilaterally endorse this convention, because it does establish very minimum standards for civil, political, economic, social, and cultural rights of children, not maximum standards but minimum standards. When we have a minister who likes to talk so much about her commitment to children and when we hear that echoed by people in this Legislature, then it seems to me that the very least we could be doing is endorsing minimum standards.

So the convention on the rights of the child requires countries to undertake all appropriate legislative, administrative, and other measures necessary to implement its provisions. Canada became a signatory in 1990 and played a key role in the development of this. The convention on the rights of the child has 41 articles, the majority of which deal with the protection of children. They talk about protecting children from all forms of abuse and neglect perpetrated by those responsible for their care and to institute prevention and support programs as well as processes for identification, reporting, referral, investigation and treatment of incidences of child maltreatment . . . appropriate measures to promote the physical and psychological recovery and social reintegration . . . [and] children's basic right to survival and development, the right to belong to families and community, and civil and political rights.

So it promotes the concept that the child is an active subject of rights but also the importance of parents and family, which we think is all very good and which is covered in principle in many ways in this particular bill, some of which I agree with in how the bill has gone forward and some of which I don't.

In terms of their particular review of this bill, they have some concerns, and one of those is the office of the Children's Advocate, that it "may be eliminated because of the belief that there is no longer a need for a formal, centralized advocacy office under the new regionalization system of children's services." The Civil Liberties Research Centre strongly disagrees with that, and we strongly disagree with that as well. It really is an ill-founded belief. "The provision of service to children through . . . service delivery authorities could [very] easily result in children falling through the cracks." In fact, we have seen examples of that in the whole 10 years that I've been here, and we want to minimize that as much as possible. Certainly, children in care need the Office of the Children's Advocate now more than ever. It is important to note that the existing program has been very successful and has served as a model for advocacy programs in other jurisdictions.

So we would very much like to see that continue, as would the Civil Liberties Research Centre. If that could be talked about and discussed in committee, we would appreciate that.

The children's rights charter also talks about children's views being heard.

The Office of the Children's Advocate provides children with an effective complaints procedure regarding the services they receive and access to appropriate advice and independent advocacy, as required by both provisions.

9:50

The recommendation from the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre is that the Office of the Children's Advocate be maintained in the new legislation and that the Office's mandate be extended to include children who have applied for but been denied protective services, children making reports of abuse or neglect to child welfare authorities, as well as those who are particularly vulnerable – such as those children subject to the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act.

So that is a strong recommendation that they come out with.

They also talk about the best interests of the child being strengthened. Another recommendation they have is that section 2 of the act be strengthened. "It should be made clear in the new Act that the best interests of children should be the overarching consideration when making decisions about their welfare and protection," something our caucus also supports.

They have a third recommendation here, and that is entitled Views of the Child. They recommend that "a high priority be given in the new legislation to respecting the views of children." You don't see that actually enacted in this legislation. We may hear that that's the intent. We'd like to see it in writing. We don't want to see it happen in regulations. It needs to be enshrined in legislation in terms of three overriding priorities for this act.

They then go on to talk about specific issues they have, and they provide a discussion of the concerns they have with the current legislation which they believe should be addressed in this new piece that we see before us. One of those is the qualifications of child welfare workers. If you go to the charter – that's the convention on the rights of children – and you go to article 3(3), it calls on countries to ensure that institutions, services and facilities responsible for the care and protection of children conform with standards established by competent authorities, particularly with respect to health and safety and the number, suitability and supervision of staff.

So this is something signed onto by Canada that should happen.

They talk there specifically in the regulations about persons qualified to be appointed as child welfare workers if they're employed by the department of social services at the time that the act came into force or who are registered social workers and hold appropriate education or are deemed by the minister to be qualified to do the job based on academic qualifications and experience. These workers, as we know very well, are the backbone of the child welfare system, and they perform the vast majority of the duties and responsibilities and really need to be highly qualified to do their job. So when the minister gets broad discretion with respect to appointments, the general regulation provides for the watering down of qualifications and standards. As a caucus we see that as a major concern, and the Civil Liberties Research Centre also does. Their recommendation is that high minimum standards for qualifications for child welfare workers be established under the new legislation and that these be applicable across the province. This is particularly important under the current regionalization process, in order to ensure high quality service provision across the province.

In addition, I would like to add that we see this as an increasing concern with the amount of contracting out there is. There have to be very strict guidelines and there has to be strict protocol in terms of qualifications, because otherwise there just aren't enough checks and balances in the system. If you don't have effective monitoring in place, which we have seen time and again does not happen with this particular government, then we're going to run into problems with the kids. One of the ways to circumvent those problems is to ensure that those workers who are the frontline workers have a high minimum standard of qualifications. So we'd like to see the minister's comments on that. That would be very good.

In terms of their discussion on the rights of children in care, the Civil Liberties Research Centre talks about:

Although current legislation recognizes and respects children's rights in a number of different ways, we believe that what is lacking is a clear and distinct statement of the rights children in care are entitled to.

They would like to see this statement provide an interpretive guide for those making decisions under the legislation. The rights statements included in the new act should mirror those provided in the charter under the United Nations convention for the rights of the child, and those would include such things as key rights for children, which are

- Freedom of thought, conscience and religion
- Freedom of expression
- Freedom of association
- Right to privacy
- Right of access to high quality health care services and treatment
- Right to a standard of living adequate for the child's physical, spiritual, mental, moral and social development
- Right to an education
- Right to be protected from all forms of violence
- Right of children who are Aboriginal or who are members of ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities to enjoy their own culture, to profess and practice their own religion or to use their own language in community with other members of their group.

The recommendation that comes forward from the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre is that these rights be incorporated into the new legislation. This could be done by referring to the [United Nations convention on the rights of the child] in the body of the legislation or appending it to the legislation.

So what I hear is that it isn't enough to say that that's the intent. They want to see it written right into the legislation.

Another concern they have is in terms of the recognition of evolving capacities of children. They talk about how the current legislation enables children to participate in the child welfare process at different ages. Under sections 8 and 9 of the Act . . . child welfare authorities may enter into support and custody agreements with children 16 years of age or older who are in need of protective services and living independently. Throughout Part 3, as well as other parts of the Act, children 12 years of age or older acquire certain rights to participate in proceedings and be consulted with regard to matters which affect them. Section 30(4) . . . specifies that children 12 years of age or older who are the subject of temporary guardianship orders can apply to court for an order prescribing access to the child's guardian or other individuals.

Mr. Speaker, the convention on the rights of the child recognizes and respects the capacity of children who possess sufficient understanding to make decisions and participate in the child welfare process. The current legislation certainly acknowledges this principle. However, in establishing a rigid age limit, the Act precludes the participation of younger children at risk who possess sufficient understanding of the matters in issue.

So the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre recommends that the use of benchmark ages for participation in the new legislation be qualified to allow younger children who possess sufficient understanding of their circumstances to fully participate in decisions affecting their care.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003. I would also like to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo for the tremendous amount of work that obviously went into consultation with many, many people throughout the province and certainly for providing the report Strengthening Families, Children and Youth: Report and Recommendations from the Child Welfare Act Review, 2002. It certainly indicates the great concern that all of us in this Assembly have for children in this province, particularly those children, the most vulnerable members of our society, who for whatever reasons have had the need for some type of intervention in their living standards.

As we have seen from the bill, it is a very, very extensive bill, as it should be. It's certainly a bill that we do have to get right the first time because we are dealing with children and in many cases children who are in their formative years, and I think it is essential that we get it right. We certainly don't want a situation that we had here a few years ago where we put forward the notion that 200 hours of kindergarten would be adequate for children per year, and very quickly we learned the errors of those ways.

In looking at the report Strengthening Families, Children and Youth, one of the things that I'd like to focus on tonight in my discussion is the statements under Our Vision and Values. These are outlined in that review, and these are the principles that we are looking for in this legislation. We're looking for the details that will support these visions and values. Certainly, one principle and belief that has helped shape these recommendations is that "the best interests and well-being of children come first. Every child in Alberta deserves a safe, stable home where they are nurtured by healthy families." It is something that we want for all children and is certainly something that all children deserve. In a province that is so blessed as we are with the resources that we have, then it is a situation where no child should go without.

I think that, as well, when we are looking at the principles that were in the report and the principles that we see in the legislation, Mr. Speaker, we all realize that children are best served in "loving, stable, nurturing and sustainable relationships" and that these are absolutely paramount in the development of any child, and in order to have that stability, children need some type of permanence in a situation. I look at this particular bill, and certainly many, many of the recommendations and principles that are enshrined in this bill point to permanence in those situations.

In looking over the bill, one area I'd like to focus on with my comments tonight is what is in the way of adoption here in the province and the rules for adoption here in the province. I'm looking in the bill, particularly section 63, which will allow for a private process for adoptions. This here has caused me a great deal of concern, and also it has caused many others in this province a great deal of concern. In reviewing the report that I referred to previously, I look at recommendation 7.2, which states:

Paramount consideration should be given to the best interests of a child in any adoption. This should be reflected in the legislation and could include:

- the child's views and wishes if they can be expressed;
- the benefits to the child of stability, cultural and family ties;
- the effects of delays in decision-making;
- the mental, emotional and physical needs of the child and stage of development; and
- the importance of a positive relationship with a parent and family.

These are very, very good recommendations. It goes on to say, "In the case of an Aboriginal child, the uniqueness of culture, heritage, spirituality and traditions must be respected." Of course, that is a further addition to recommendation 7.2 which I think is extremely important.

Where the difficulty arises in this particular bill – and I've pointed out section 63 – is that there seems to be a huge problem here in that we have what is stated in recommendation 7.2 and we look at recommendation 7.5, which states:

All private-direct adoptions should be allowed to proceed through the relative/step-parent placement process without involving a licensed agency or requiring a home assessment, unless requested by the birth parent or the courts.

The current legislation requires that a licensed agency process private-direct adoptions, including the provision of a home assessment to the court. This process is costly and intrusive and may delay permanency planning.

Safeguards would be built into private-direct, relative and step-parent adoptions by requiring people seeking to adopt to file information on any previous involvement in child protection or criminal activity with the application to adopt. The courts could request a home study if it was felt that one was warranted by the circumstances.

So in recommendation 7.2, where we are making many, many different rules or recommendations as to how we can best ensure the placement of a child, we flip-flop and go almost to the entire opposite in recommendation 7.5. So where we have had some very, very stringent controls in all other types of adoptions that we allow in this province, we certainly in this particular case don't have these stringent guidelines. So one of the problems that we have with recommendation 7.5 is that it is almost a do-it-yourself process when it comes to adoption.

Now, I had a meeting with a constituent roughly a month ago, and with that meeting this fellow had just celebrated the first anniversary of his adoption of a child, and he had gone to the point of telling me what type of a process it was that he and his wife had to go through in order to adopt this two-year-old boy, and it was extremely stringent and it was thorough. At the point where it was not determined yet whether the person was going to recommend that they be allowed to adopt this child, the process was so intrusive that he and his wife were almost ready to pull out of their request to adopt. When this was all done, what the worker and what they went through was quite the opposite. When she finally indicated that they could adopt this child, everyone broke down and cried. The worker informed them that this was certainly part of the process and part of what she had to do in order that that child was going to be going into a loving environment, a safe environment, an environment that would nurture this child and help it develop as all of us would hope.

So in that particular case I could fully agree with recommendation 7.2, yet in 7.5 we have a situation where we could have a young parent who puts her child up for adoption – and it can be arranged through the family – and there's absolutely no screening as to what type of a home this child is going to. We don't have any background on the adoptive parents. Usually this would be a friend of the family or perhaps a distant relative or a relative, and we are putting children into an environment where we don't know that they're going to be safe.

Those are some of my major concerns so far that I have seen with Bill 24, and I think that it is something that we certainly have to look much more closely at in Committee of the Whole.

So, Mr. Speaker, at this particular time I would like to take my seat and listen to other members speak on this very important bill. Thank you.

10:10

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

Bill 12

Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Magnus]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 12, the Financial Sector Statutes Amendment Act, 2003, has not been in our possession for very long. We are waiting for more stakeholder participation to be delivered to us. So with that and given the hour, I would like to adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some very good progress tonight, as always on Mondays. With that, I would move that we now call it adjournment time until tomorrow at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 10:13 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 8, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/08

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we thank You for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask You to ensure to us Your guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it's a great pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and to members of the Assembly actually somebody who needs no introduction to you, sir. It is Mr. Sine Chadi, who is sitting in your gallery, an honorary member of the Mah Society. I would want to acknowledge his presence here today with some other guests that I understand are being introduced by others today. As you know, Mr. Chadi served in the 23rd Legislature of this Assembly as the Member of the Legislative Assembly for Edmonton-Roper. I'd ask that hon. members please give their ordinary and customary warm welcome to this member.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a visitor from the country of Lebanon. His Worship Mayor Nazir Tarabay is seated in your gallery. He is the mayor of the town of Lala in the Biqa region of Lebanon.

An Hon. Member: Moe Town.

Mr. Amery: Moe Town. That's right.

The town of Lala has very strong ties and deep roots in this province. As a matter of fact, some of Lala's sons and daughters have made Canada home since 1895, including my own grandfather, who came to Brandon, Manitoba, in 1898. Lala's community is estimated to be around 5,000 people, strong and committed Albertans located in Edmonton, Calgary, Lac La Biche, and Fort McMurray. I understand that the mayor is making a proposal to twin the town of Lala with the town of Lac La Biche, and I wish him well. The community is really honored to have Mr. Tarabay with us.

Also, along with Mr. Tarabay is Mr. Bill Tarrabain, his uncle. He's a well-known businessman in the city of Edmonton, and he has been living in Edmonton since 1951. Also we have Mr. Moe Assaf, another well-known Edmonton businessman. I'd ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour and privilege today to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly 22 guests from Rosemary, Alberta. They're led by the principal, Mr. David Blumell, and I will say that this is the 10th year in a row that I have introduced the school from Rosemary led by Mr. Blumell and I believe about the 15th year in a row that they have been here. Parent helpers are Wanda Doerksen, Carol Reid, Lori Hall, Pam Norton, Rick Baerg, and Fern Nickel. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly it's my great pleasure to introduce 75 students and their teachers and parent helpers representing St. Teresa's Catholic elementary school in Edmonton in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They are led by Mrs. Camille Kauhaahaa-Hamel, Mr. Charles Stuart, and teacher's aide Mrs. Debbie McDougall. The parent helpers are Mrs. Anne Lupushinsky, Mrs. Shannon Van Soest, Mrs. Jackie Wraight, Mrs. Lori Bredo, Mrs. Susan Garbutt, Mrs. Janice Kozicky, Mrs. Annette Fry, and Mrs. Karen Harasymchuk. I apologize for some of those names which may have been mangled, but that doesn't deter from the warm welcome of the Assembly to the students and teachers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm extremely honoured today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a fantastic couple from Calgary-Egmont. Earl and Judy Morris have been volunteers extraordinaire in our community for at least the last 25 years that I've known them and have made a tremendous difference in all the communities that they've lived in. Judy is not only currently involved in youth justice initiatives, but she's also the president of the Calgary-Egmont PC Association. I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly 18 students from Hardisty junior high. The students are accompanied today by their teacher, Mrs. Sharon Lougheed, and parent helpers who have been gracious and kind with their time, Mrs. St. John and Mrs. Hauer. Now, Mrs. Sharon Lougheed follows with a great deal of interest and pride the political career of the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. The delegation is in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a good friend, a constituent of Calgary-Buffalo, and a volunteer during the election. Steve Moran is the manager of government relations for NOVA Chemicals, and I'd ask Steve to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ed Butler. Ed Butler is a longtime friend. He's also the principal of Parkdale school in Edmonton and has been losing a lot of sleep recently trying to cope with the demands of an inner-city school in the face of some rather devastating budget cut projections. He's hoping he'll have some relief later this afternoon. With permission I'd ask Ed to stand and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So often members of the Assembly are here and they've left a lot of family members at home. Today I've spotted a couple of people that I would like to introduce to the Legislative Assembly. If it weren't for them where they are, probably a couple of our colleagues wouldn't be here where they are today. I would ask that Angie Goudreau, who is the wife of the Member for Dunvegan, and Jan Marz, who is the wife of the MLA for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, to please stand and receive a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly two good friends of mine who are in the members' gallery today, Don Severs and Carleen Severs. Don is part of the reason why I'm still here. He was my campaign manager for the last two times. He works with me in my constituency office. I'd ask that they please rise. They're great friends.

Thank you.

1:40 head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Funding

Dr. Nicol: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. When the Edmonton school board spoke out about its financial problems, the Minister of Learning sent in an audit team. The minister is blaming the school board for failing to budget for a teachers' salary increase of over 6 percent when according to his own press release from 2001 the additional funds were not exclusively for salaries but instead "local priorities such as enhanced literacy, class sizes." To the Minister of Learning: why does the minister now say that the money that he promised the classroom should be set aside for salaries?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, as the Legislative Assembly I'm sure knows and can remember – and I would suggest to the hon. Leader of the Opposition to read Hansard from those times, read the press releases that were put out. What it stated is that 6 percent must go to teachers' salaries; there must be the minimum of 6 percent. The other 3 and a half percent and 3 percent: it would be up to the local school boards and the local teachers' associations to decide where those dollars would go. Take a look back in Hansard, and I think you'll find very much a consistency in that theme.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, why doesn't the minister admit that he created this crisis by refusing to fund the salary settlement that his own arbitrator established?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are about three or four questions in that one question. First of all, when you talk about our own arbitrator, there was one arbitrator that was appointed by government, there was one appointed by the ATA, and there was one appointed by the School Boards Association in the binding arbitration that had been asked for by the participants. Included in that settlement was approximately $260 million that was the cost of the teachers' settlement. There has been $298 million provided to the school boards. With direct respect to the Edmonton public school board there was $38.6 million utilized for teachers' salaries, and they received $41 million over that time frame.

Dr. Nicol: To the minister. When the arbitration process recommended that salary increase, then he gave the money, saying that there should be money left for classroom size and literacy. Where does that extra dollar come from when it's not there based on the arbitrated settlement?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question, because what has happened is that we budgeted for a huge amount of dollars to go to the school boards. There's roughly $290 million that went in in a period of two years, a large amount of dollars. The arbitration settlement came in and, in essence, took the majority of those dollars to be utilized for teachers' salaries, and that's what arbitration settlements are about. It's sitting down and looking at both sides and coming up with an agreement. That's what happened. I would remind the hon. Leader of the Opposition that there is a budget coming in today and for him to wait until later on this afternoon.

Dr. Nicol: Still to the Minister of Learning: is it the policy of this minister to audit all school boards in financial difficulty or only those boards that speak out about underfunding?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member remembers, approximately two months ago Edmonton public came in with a 13 and a half million dollar deficit in a press release. Thirteen and a half million dollars is a very significant amount. I don't think anyone in this Assembly, anyone in the gallery, or anyone in Alberta would expect me to sign a cheque saying: here is 13 and a half million dollars; no questions asked. What we did is we went in and took a look, and as I reported yesterday, we found some very interesting things. Some mistakes were made, some dollars were spent where they probably shouldn't be spent. In direct response to the question, any school board that wants help to take a look at their budget, we certainly will. We are stretched thin in our own department – it was an internal review that was done by my own department staff – but we will certainly help to the best of our ability.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I was just going to bring him down, and you're cutting me off.

Will the minister's audit of the Edmonton public school board provide any comfort to Edmonton students and parents when the school board is still predicting teacher layoffs for next year?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, absolutely. What we represented here in this audit is that we found ways to get their deficit down to $5 million, in essence, without touching their actual budget. They are only expected to come up with $1.6 million, and $1.6 million, obviously, is a lot of money, but when you have close to a $600 million budget, there should be no reason why they can't find $1.6 million. All the other money has been provided. We have taken a very close look at their books. We have decided that $5 million can be carried forward over the next three years, so again $1.67 million that they can make payments on over the next three years. I see absolutely no reason in looking at this audit why Edmonton public can't live within their financial means. I believe that they owe it to the taxpayers of this province and the taxpayers of Edmonton to come in with a balanced budget.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, doesn't the fact that he's forcing them to reduce that deficit in the next year in effect mean bigger cuts next year as well?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, again I will remind the hon. Leader of the Opposition that we're talking about $1.6 million. The majority of school boards in this province have an average of 10 days of operating surplus that they set aside for rainy day funds. The Edmonton public school system at $1.67 million would be I believe – and my math may or may not be correct on this one – a little over a day of operating surplus. That is something that they should be able to do. We certainly will be monitoring them. We will be looking at them, and more importantly we will continue to work with them because it is in no one's best interest to have a school board who is going to be running deficits of taxpayers' – taxpayers' – dollars.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workplace Safety

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the year 2002, unfortunately, it has been reported that 101 Albertans were killed in work site accidents. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: how many of these workplace fatalities were caused by excessive alcohol or drug use at the job site?

Mr. Dunford: It's a very good question, and I don't know the answer to it. He raises an excellent point, and it's the reason that this government has become very, very serious about incidents. He wants to call them accidents, and I don't believe in that. There were preventable incidents that occurred in every one of those 101 cases that he's talking about. Also, accident somehow means, you know, that it wasn't anybody's responsibility; it was just something that happened.

I would ask all members, when we deal with this particular area, that we no longer use that word. I understand that there are reasons that that word gets used, and it's even in our legislation. But as we talk about what goes on in the workplace, we want to talk from now on about an incident because incident will denote responsibility, and that's what we're trying to get to here. We're trying to get people to accept the responsibility to be safe and not sorry on the work site, and that means not just the employers, but that means the employees as well. We have to do a better job of looking out for those that work around us and work with us. It's an interesting situation.

Part of our WorkSafe Alberta, by the way, and I guess to get to the specific question, is to really look at the incidents that were related to substance abuse and try to find some way, Mr. Speaker, that we can do more at the workplace site with due regard to human rights, due regard to freedom of information and protection of privacy. It's part of our initiative that we're going forward on with WorkSafe Alberta, and I think he's on an excellent point here.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: in the initiative that has just been announced by the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, why do we need a secret committee to study compulsory alcohol and drug testing in the workplace?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I don't think we do. I'm not sure where the hon. member is coming from in his question. We certainly are putting committees together to look at many of the facets of this WorkSafe Alberta initiative. I guess it's so secret, Mr. Speaker, that I'm not even aware of it.

1:50

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if this secret committee becomes public, will the stakeholders of this province be invited to make submissions to the committee or will it continue to gather and work in secret as it is now?

The Speaker: There's a virtual world here, hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: No. I understand. I don't want to trivialize this matter in any way. I mean, we can see that the hon. member has left himself wide open for, you know, some remarks that might come from me, but I don't want to do that in this particular case because it is just too serious.

What we're trying to do with WorkSafe Alberta, Mr. Speaker, is find a way to get to all aspects of the Alberta economy. I speak at many public forums about WorkSafe Alberta, but I find that time after time after time I'm speaking to the converted. It's the unconverted that we really have to get to, and I'm hopeful that perhaps they're watching question period today, perhaps they read Hansard, but I doubt it, and we have to do a better job of getting out to those that either don't know about workplace safety and the responsibilities that they have or don't care. Now, if they don't care, of course we'll find out who they are and we'll be there to be responsible.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Edmonton Public School Board Operational Review

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The operational review of Edmonton public schools is a politically motivated attack designed to punish a school board for going public with its concerns about provincial underfunding. The review was done by officials who report to the minister. They do what he tells them to do. The review was also full of mistruths and factual errors and quite frankly should be assigned to the trash can. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why should Albertans believe the findings of a review done by a team that's neither impartial nor independent and was written by officials who the minister can fire and hire?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I would quite simply challenge the hon. leader of the third party to find anything that is in this document that is not completely one hundred percent reliable.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why did the minister smear Edmonton public's elected trustees by claiming that they failed to provide for teacher salary increases in April 2002 school budgets when the board in fact set 6 percent aside in a contingency fund for salary increases?

Dr. Oberg: Because they did not, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Pannu: To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment this time. Maybe I'll have better luck, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm that had Edmonton public specified a fixed percentage for salary increases in the April 2002 school budget when negotiations on the ATA collective agreement were still under way, Edmonton public could have been hauled before the Labour Relations Board for bargaining in bad faith?

Mr. Dunford: A straight answer?

The Speaker: First of all, it violates the rules to ask for an interpretation of a statute, so I'm waiting with anticipated anticipation for what the response is going to be.

Mr. Dunford: Well, I was going to say that I thought it was a hypothetical, and I'm not sure as a minister responsible that I'm obligated in this forum to deal with hypotheticals.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Electricity Distribution Costs

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, many residents of my constituency have expressed concern or even anger about the distribution costs that appear on their electricity bills. They feel that under the regulated system they paid for the poles, they paid for the lines, they paid for the entire system. They see no maintenance or replacement, little meter reading, but the distribution costs can approach the generation costs. Can the Minister of Energy explain why those costs are so high?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, electricity wires are an investment. As a matter of fact, they're a very good investment in Alberta, and a lot hasn't been done in the last 17 years to build new transmission wires. With the existing transmission wires and those companies that operate them – and those are AltaLink and Aquila and ATCO – each year this group comes before the Energy and Utilities Board, and they talk about the period of depreciation of the wires. They talk about the cost of maintenance, the cost of repairs, upgrades, expansions, changes to a growing Alberta population that's increased by some 500,000 over the last six or seven years. These wire charges are tabled in front of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board on an annual basis subject to very rigorous inspection and subject also to intervenors who are able to challenge and oppose the requested changes. At this time the EUB makes a ruling, and if there's a charge, that charge is then associated with the particular year of operation and is put forward. Today that distribution tariff is now about 20 to 25 percent of your total electricity bill, and they represent an unbundling which occurred in the bill breakdown of the year 2000.

Mr. Lougheed: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy: since the EUB approves the distribution costs for, in my area, Aquila, do they also approve the distribution costs for the farmer-owned rural electrification associations in the same area, and how do those costs compare?

Mr. Smith: Well, it's a good technical question. It shows evidence that the member knows what he's talking about. Mr. Speaker, the REAs, the rural electrification associations, provide about 54 megawatts of power in an 8,700 megawatt grid. The distribution charges for rural electrification association customers are approved by the REA board of directors. Deferral accounts are approved by the AEUB as part of the rural electrification farm rate in the Aquila tariffs. Again, there were intervenors from the Alberta Federation of Rural Electrification Associations. They participated in the hearings and supported the methodology for collecting these deferral accounts. Now, the line items on a typical REA bill are similar to those of other wire service providers. The charges include an energy charge, a distribution tariff, and a system access charge.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, could the minister further advise us that if the EUB approved the sale of TransAlta distribution system to UtiliCorp and then on to Aquila and if that regulated system built the distribution system, then would the cost of that system to purchase have been zero?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, clearly showing detailed knowledge of the topic. Both sales were reviewed and approved by the AEUB. Now, the EUB, the Energy and Utilities Board, followed the standard hearing process for the sale of electric distribution and retail assets. Stakeholders that represent a wide spectrum of Alberta's electrical industry and consumer groups also were registered as participants and, in fact, intervenors in the hearing. So the Energy and Utilities Board put conditions in the approval to ensure that customers do not incur any additional costs as a result of the premium paid by Aquila. This would be the amount known as goodwill. This premium, some hundred-plus million dollars, will not be recovered from customers through distribution rates, and that is continuing on in further hearings on a year-by-year basis by the EUB with respect to the Aquila network.

Now, customers, Mr. Speaker, do not own the distribution system. The wire service in Alberta is provided by private companies who own the wire network. This part is still a regulated monopoly. It's a service enjoyed by all Albertans, and this part of the business will continue to be regulated by the same process as it had prior to the year 2000.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Personal Health Information

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Physicians are under pressure from drug and health care corporations to prescribe certain drugs or recommend certain procedures. Recently the Information and Privacy Commissioner took a step that should reduce some of this pressure, prohibiting pharmacies from selling information on the prescribing patterns of individual physicians. This information was being sold to drug companies so they could target marketing campaigns at individual doctors. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: does the minister support the Privacy Commissioner's ruling?

2:00

Mr. Mar: In fact yes, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: What further steps will this minister take to ensure that physicians and other health professionals are protected from relentless marketing pressure from drug companies, private diagnostic companies, and health supply companies?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member referred to the legislation that the Privacy Commissioner works under, and if there are future issues that arise under the legislation that we've already put in place, then I'm sure we'll deal with it accordingly.

Dr. Taft: Well, given that this ruling of the Privacy Commissioner raises serious concerns about the use of personal health information in the hands of for-profit marketers, why do the confidentiality provisions in the Health Information Act not apply to health information in the private, for-profit sector?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, this has not risen as an issue, and accordingly it hasn't been dealt with.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of the more than 3 million people in Alberta, so far zero have died from severe acute respiratory syndrome, or SARS, yet I am getting calls from constituents concerned about whether we are prepared as a government for a possible outbreak. First to the Minister of Health and Wellness: what are we recommending if someone thinks that they do have SARS?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been placing ads in the newspapers informing individuals that think that they may have SARS, severe acute respiratory syndrome, to phone, first of all, to a health link line or to their own physician so that appropriate measures can be taken with respect to isolation if it's required. We are engaged in a rather large public information campaign. This is something that we have worked on in establishing guidelines nationally with the federal Ministry of Health as well as our counterparts in other parts of the country. Our provincial health officer, Dr. Nicholas Bayliss, has been in contact with his counterparts in Ontario and in other parts of the county, as have I, and certainly letting people know the steps to take in the event that they believe that they have SARS is the first step that we need to take in order to ensure that the risk of SARS to Albertans remains low.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. My next question is also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What capability does the government have access to in terms of quarantines if necessary?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, treatment and isolation of any illness is the responsibility of the regional health authorities, and there are isolation rooms where necessary throughout the province. Of course, we have also been relying on individuals staying at home and being voluntarily isolated at home in order to minimize the spread of the disease. In the event of a widespread health emergency the need for isolation and quarantine facilities would be considered, and that we would do with the assistance of regional health authorities.

We are, Mr. Speaker, fortunate to have the advantage of knowing more information about this particular illness at this point and of measures required to contain its spread, and this has been as a result of being in close contact with our counterparts in other parts of Canada, particularly Ontario, where SARS has been more prevalent than it is here. Public health guidelines for SARS include measures like patient isolation in order to protect the public and health care workers. We do have legislation under the Public Health Act that governs the guidelines and the circumstances under which individuals can be isolated by way of order if they refuse to do so voluntarily.

Ms DeLong: In the event of an outbreak are alternative treatment facilities available for SARS patients?

Mr. Mar: Well, let me say first of all, Mr. Speaker, that in my discussions with our provincial health officer, Dr. Bayliss, he advises me that the risk to Albertans of being infected with SARS is extremely low. Certainly, a travel history to affected areas is one important factor, but even there the risk is small. Close exposure to a known SARS case does carry a higher risk with it. We have six cases of suspected SARS in Alberta at this particular time. Other people who have been previously suspected of having SARS have in fact been found to have either recovered or not to have had SARS in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, with that background I will say that regional health authorities are prepared to deal with a more widespread case. There is a plan in place to deal with this, but of course our first measure is to try and prevent its transmission in the first place.

Vehicle Registration

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that a well-known truck rental company has been employing a disproportionate number of vehicles in Alberta that possess Arizona licence plates but carry no obvious indication of being registered in Alberta. While a few vehicles with foreign registration is understandable for a large international operation, the preponderance of vehicles in Alberta lots seem to come from Arizona. To the Minister of Transportation: are vehicles with foreign registrations allowed to operate for extended periods of time in our province without proper registration?

Mr. Smith: Are you sure that it isn't Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, there is a time limitation in terms of changing registration to the home province, but those rules and the work lies within the Ministry of Government Services.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how can Albertans be certain that foreign vehicles that now operate in the province meet the safety standards of Alberta highways when they do not seem to have been registered in this province?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, with respect to safety and with respect to all of the rules of the road we have a reciprocal licence with the United States of America. They follow the rules when they're here in terms of speed, commercial vehicle registration, the securement of load, and also with respect to the general condition of the vehicles. They are subject to the same rules that any other vehicle on the highway would be subject to.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: is it legal for corporations to own vehicles for use in Alberta but register them outside the province?

Mr. Stelmach: If we get the information from the hon. member in terms of what has been brought to his attention in terms of the particular business ownership, we'll check into it. But generally speaking, there is a time period when any new contractors that come to this province with their vehicles and if they're here for an extended period of time will have to change their registration to Alberta registration.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Minimum Wage

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a recent annual general meeting and convention where about 1,200 people attended in Red Deer, a resolution in regard to the minimum wage was debated. The resolution called on the government to initiate a review of the minimum wage in the province. This resolution was carried with a huge majority. I only have one question to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. When is the government going to respond to the calls from community groups and agencies to start this review and raise the minimum wage and give a hand up to young workers and lower income Albertans in the workforce?

The Speaker: Ordinarily, hon. members, matters dealing with political party subjects are not the matter of question in this House. Now, the question, however, did not relate to the preamble, so in this case there's an ambivalence for a short answer.

Mr. Dunford: Well, I heard, again, Mr. Speaker, a number of things in both the preamble and, of course, in the question. One thing of interest that I did hear: would I review, and would I increase? It looks to me like in the questioner's mind, in any case, a review would lead to an increase, and I'm not prepared to commit to that. What I am prepared to commit to, hon. member, is the review. And I want him to do it.

Lottery Funds

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, there have been persistent rumours for many years that there exists a fund based out of the Department of Gaming which has been labeled as unallocated moneys. According to a letter we received, high-level bureaucrats from the department dangled this fund in front of groups who sought money from the government. According to official documents, the ministry admits to the community initiatives program, CIP, and the community facility enhancement program as the funding programs they administer. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. Does this fund of unallocated moneys exist?

Mr. Stevens: As this hon. member ought to understand, the lottery estimates are part of the budget each year and provide on a line by line basis the expenditures with respect to the money that goes into the Alberta lottery fund. There is no line item which is called unallocated funds. There is a line item called other initiatives, which may be the line that this hon. member is referring to. It is a line item that has been there for a number of years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, given that a well-known member of the minister's department, a community liaison officer, is saying that it does and the minister seems to be saying that it doesn't, can he reconcile the difference here? Who's telling the truth?

Mr. Stevens: The question, as is typical of this member, is without preamble and, therefore, is somewhat difficult to comprehend. If you would like to share the detail of it, I would be able to find out what some member of my department or a member of the AGLC may have said to somebody and respond accordingly.

But to the point: there is a line item in the lottery estimates which is called other initiatives. That line item has been there. I would remind this particular member, who I believe is familiar with the arts community in Calgary, that the Vertigo theatre was a beneficiary of a grant under that particular category this year and will be, I believe, in the next to come years.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Then can I get the minister on the record confirming that the unallocated funds and the other initiatives program are one and the same?

Mr. Stevens: What I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, is that there is a line item in the lottery estimates called other initiatives. When the budget is brought down today, I suspect that there may be such a line item. When we debate this matter on Thursday afternoon, this member can stand and ask questions, and we can talk about it further.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

WCB Claims Review

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, almost two years ago Mr. Justice Friedman recommended a special tribunal to rehear long-standing, contentious WCB claims. The recommendation was made after finding that the WCB appeals process had not been sufficiently independent or impartial and that injured workers did not get a fair hearing. Now, despite the minister's promise to establish the tribunal, the recommendation appears to be gathering dust, and the minister has broken yet another promise to injured workers. My questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. If the WCB has denied injured workers a fair hearing, why is the minister compounding the injustice by breaking his promise and ignoring Justice Friedman's recommendation?

Mr. Dunford: The report that the hon. member is referring to was one of two reports that we received in looking at the appeals system inside both the WCB and the Appeals Commission. Of the 59 recommendations, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government has accepted or accepted in principle probably 54 or 55; I could be out one or two numbers on that. In any case, we accepted an overwhelming majority of those particular recommendations.

As the hon. member has pointed out, one of the recommendations was to go back and relook at some old claims. One of the things, of course, that was disturbing about that – I always felt that, you know, good people within a system were trying to make good decisions, but it was decided that as a government we would have a look at this arrangement. If the hon. member has looked at the official government response to those reports, he'll determine that the rehearing of some old cases is still under review.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what happened to the minister's promise to consider the idea of a temporary surcharge for employers as a means to pay for the tribunal?

Mr. Dunford: Well, one is predicated, I guess, on the other. I'm trying to indicate to the hon. member that we still have that particular recommendation under review. If in fact an independent tribunal is to proceed, well, I think that falls in line, then, with the supplementary question, that we would look then for the financing of the independent tribunal, and we might look to WCB, or we might look to taxpayers. I mean, it would be dependent, then, on the route that we take.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is it that when it comes to firefighters battling the WCB, long-standing claimants looking for a fair hearing, or low-wage earners who want an increase in the minimum wage, this minister always takes the side of employers over hardworking Albertans who happen to be employees?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I don't think it's true, and I don't think it's fair to characterize it in such a way. I might remind the hon. member that when we brought forward what was at the time Bill 26 – it was in a previous sitting of this House – actually, it was hard for me to ascertain whether or not, in putting into the act the provision that the minister “may” provide an independent tribunal, we indeed had the support of the injured workers. As a matter of fact, I heard quite a lot from various injured workers around the province and, of course, those that have identified themselves as a particular advocacy group that weren't very happy with me at all, and it was actually represented here in the Legislature with quite a dramatic walkout during my speech.

So the difference, then, Mr. Speaker, is that in the other examples that he has used today, we have had, if not overwhelming and universal support, a situation where we've had one party, in terms of the firefighters if I could use that, clearly together on what should be done, and then we had another party that was willing to make those kinds of accommodations, so it goes very quickly. Obviously, when you have some disagreement, when there's no consensus as to how you would proceed, then of course it does take more time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

2:20 Safety of Blackfalds Schoolchildren

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in Blackfalds, just north of Red Deer, there's a class of grade 3 students who are very concerned about the safety of all students in Blackfalds who are forced to illegally cross train tracks at least twice a day when going to school. Last October a younger student was almost hit by a train while crossing these tracks. These eight-year-old students in Mrs. Tisdale's grade 3 class were upset at the close call and decided to do something about it. They wrote to me and suggested that Alberta Transportation put up a fence around the tracks and build a pedestrian overpass. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Can the minister tell me if the Department of Transportation is planning to build a fence and a pedestrian overpass to help protect the schoolchildren of Blackfalds?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, upon hearing of the incident from the MLA for Red Deer-North and also receiving the letter from the grade 3 class, we immediately dispatched an individual from our dangerous goods and rail safety division of the department to have a look at the area in question. We also immediately got in contact with CP Rail and are working also with Transport Canada and have held some consultations with them. In terms of an overpass, no, we won't be building an overpass simply because that is the responsibility of CP Rail, but we have had people at the scene and also did an in-class safety meeting with the students in terms of telling them some of the issues about illegally crossing a railway.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, given that this area is not the responsibility of the provincial government but the children at risk are our responsibility, what can the minister do to influence the federal government and CP Rail about this important safety issue?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, in working with the two, CP Rail and Transport Canada, we are looking at different ways of resolving the situation and improving the safety of children that cross that railway on a daily basis.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transportation able to assure the children of this grade 3 class and of this Blackfalds school that we will help to do something to ensure that they will no longer be forced to make the choice of crossing the tracks to get to school?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I definitely will confirm that we're going to continue to ensure that all students at school are aware of the dangers of crossing a track. We're going to work and keep on working with CP Rail and also with Transport Canada. This is, unfortunately, probably an issue in a number of smaller communities in the province of Alberta, and it's one where through awareness and education we'll make our young people aware of the dangers. We've also sent some educational videos and promotional safety information to the class, and I'm quite sure the teacher there will be talking to other grades in the school.

I think we've approached this in a very responsible way, but I also have to congratulate the school and the teacher and the students for taking the initiative of writing the letter and actually elevating this issue to one that other students in that area are going to be aware of.

West Nile Virus

Ms. Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the problems posed by the West Nile virus can be addressed at two stages, the environmental stage and the health stage. While the opposition would prefer to deal with West Nile at the environmental stage, before it becomes a health problem, this government wants to wait until Albertans actually contract the virus before it helps them. Unfortunately, the experts don't agree with the province. My first question is to the minister of health. Given that the U.S. Centers for Disease Control, the world's leading authority on communicable diseases, says that the best way to prevent transmission of West Nile is mosquito control, will this government reconsider its policy to deal with West Nile primarily as a health issue?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we are continuing to monitor the progress of West Nile virus, and we'll take what steps are necessary if and when they become necessary. Now, we can expect that sometime in the spring or summer of this year there will be West Nile virus that will show up first in birds and subsequently in horses in the province of Alberta. Whether or not this will require us to move forward on a spraying program to contain mosquitos remains to be seen. The best advice that we have right now from our provincial medical officers of health is that spraying itself also has certain health risks associated with doing it, so we have to weigh the risks associated with West Nile virus with the risks associated with spraying programs.

Mr. Speaker, to put West Nile virus into context, our best advice from our medical officers of health is that the risk of contracting West Nile virus is very low, that your chances of being bitten by an infected mosquito are less than one in a thousand, and that even if you are bitten by an infected mosquito, your chances of contracting it are less than one in a thousand. So the associated risks are very, very low.

It would be more prudent for us to be dealing with something that appears to have more serious risks, earlier questions being asked about severe acute respiratory syndrome. That appears to be a greater risk than West Nile virus is at this time, but I can assure the hon. member and all Albertans that we are using the best information that we have available from our medical officers of health, who work in collaboration with their counterparts across Canada, and we work with the federal government, that has its counterparts with the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, Georgia, and the World Health Organization in Geneva. We are using the best advice possible to take the necessary precautions to prevent diseases like SARS and West Nile virus from spreading to Albertans. That is our first concern.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the Minister of Environment, who knows that spraying is not the only control option. Given that the West Nile virus is a concern of provincial scope and jurisdiction, when is this minister going to take charge of mosquito control in the province and initiate a mosquito abatement program?

Dr. Taylor: Well, let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the minister of health has clearly in some detail outlined how we are continuing to monitor the situation, being very clear that it is a situation that we are watching closely. Now, in terms of spraying for mosquitos, typically most mosquito spraying programs occur at the larvae stages, and to deal with the West Nile virus, you would have to spray adult mosquitos. It's virtually impossible to track adult mosquitos and find out where they are and where they're moving to.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: should there be a serious outbreak of the West Nile virus in Alberta, what is this government's environmental strategy that is more than just a spraying program?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again, it's a hypothetical question. It's the old the sky might fall. Well, the sky isn't falling, and we will certainly, as I said earlier, continue to watch the situation and monitor it very closely.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Youth Criminal Justice Act

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 1, 2003, the new federal Youth Criminal Justice Act replaced the much maligned Young Offenders Act. While the new legislation promises tougher treatment of violent serious offenders, its detractors allege that it is soft on serial offenders of nonviolent crime such as property offenders. My questions are for the Attorney General and Minister of Justice. [interjections] As he is responsible for prosecutions under the act, what is he instructing his prosecutors to do to hold repeat and chronic property offenders sufficiently responsible for their actions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister, if he heard the question.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I caught the gist of it. The question as I understand it is: what am I instructing the prosecutors to do with respect to the new Youth Criminal Justice Act and repeat offenders? First of all, I think it should be made perfectly clear to members of the Legislature that we set policy, but we do not direct prosecutors with respect to the exercise of their discretion in determining whether charges ought to be laid in a certain circumstance. Police do the investigation; they refer their investigation to prosecutors for charges. The prosecutors then review the files and determine whether there's sufficient evidence which, if proved, would result in a conviction, and that policy is applied consistently with respect to every file the prosecutors have. So that would be our expectation with respect to youth charged with any offence pursuant to the provisions of the Youth Criminal Justice Act, that they would pursue those charges.

2:30

With respect to the context of the question I think it is important to reiterate that Alberta's position with respect to the changes to the Youth Criminal Justice Act, which replaced the Young Offenders Act, as the member said, on April 1, has always been that it is deficient with respect to dealing with recidivists. The new Youth Criminal Justice Act is a step forward with respect to dealing with those youth who come into contact with the law for the first time, and I should reassure Albertans that the vast majority of youth who come into contact with the law for the first time or even the second time are dealt with in a reasonable, appropriate manner and do not reoffend. But we do have concerns with the repeat offences by young offenders, particularly in property areas, and the new Youth Criminal Justice Act does not assist us in dealing with those youth.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is for the same minister. As youth as young as age 14 will be eligible under appropriate circumstances for adult sentences, what financial arrangements have been negotiated with the federal government for the housing of young criminals serving long adult sentences?

Mr. Hancock: Well, of course, incarceration comes under the purview of the Solicitor General, but I would respond to the member's question by indicating that funding under the Youth Criminal Justice Act has been a source of contention between the provinces and the federal government. We have received some assistance from the federal government with respect to the improvement of computer systems and getting systems in place, but there is still much work to be done in terms of negotiating with the federal government and getting them to recognize that the new Youth Criminal Justice Act is much more complex and much more costly than the old Young Offenders Act. It's their responsibility to come to the table with some resources to help implement that act.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you. My final supplemental is for the Minister of Children's Services. As the new federal act does not contain a process for dealing with children under the age of 12, what is the Minister of Children's Services going to do to deal with children under 12 who are alleged to have committed a serious criminal offence?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, under the terms of the Child Welfare Act this is addressed. If the officer upon apprehending the child believes there's a serious offence that has been committed, they can report that to the child welfare director. The director then would define a plan based on what the family circumstance was, on his assessment of the child's need for some early intervention, and then pending the outcome of that plan, monitor the situation very carefully. But it clearly is a matter that is covered under our Child Welfare Act.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling on the first hon. member to participate in Members' Statements today, let me just acknowledge that one year ago, on April 8 in the year 2002, the hon. Member for Wainwright earned the right to sit in this Assembly.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour and privilege to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly a constituent of the Minister of Community Development. Mr. Charlie Koester is here this afternoon, and he is the chairman of the Edmonton Catholic school board. I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a guest in the public gallery that is visiting from New York. Mr. Paul Camilleri is a lawyer who is taking full Alberta advantage of spring skiing in our great province and is presently staying and visiting with constituents of mine, the Gordons. I would ask the individual that Maya Gordon calls Uncle Paul to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to say hello to Charlie Koester as well.

I'd also like to introduce the vice-chair of the Edmonton regional PDD community board, who does incredible work in our area working with persons with developmental disabilities, and that's Jean Wilkinson. If she would stand and receive the warm welcome. Thank you for coming.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and to the members assembled Gary Burns, a resident of Sherwood Park, adjacent constituency to Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. If he would rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Immigrants of Distinction Awards

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to speak about the immigrants of distinction awards organized by the Calgary Immigrant Aid Society. Since 1997 each year the award has been given out to outstanding Albertan individuals, companies, and organizations. This year I had the honour of attending the full-house awards function at the Westin Hotel in Calgary with our colleagues the members for Calgary-McCall and Calgary-Buffalo and the federal minister of immigration. These awards reflect Alberta's ongoing commitment to celebrating the success of first-generation Canadian Albertans and their contribution to Alberta and Canada.

The immigrants of distinction awards are in six categories. The organization diversity award is given to Albertan organizations, groups, and companies that have made outstanding achievements in implementing diversity initiatives in the workplace and have made significant contributions in serving ethnically diverse client groups. The youth scholarship awards are given to immigrant youth who have achieved excellence in the areas of academics, art, sports, and community work. The arts and culture award is given to an immigrant who merits recognition in an artistic endeavour, including visual and performing arts. The business award is given to an immigrant who has achieved success in the creation and operation of a business in Alberta. The community service award is given to an immigrant who has provided meritorious service to the community either as a volunteer or human services professional. The sixth one, the distinguished professional award, is given to an immigrant who has achieved outstanding professional success through advanced education and defined career path.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend the outstanding nominees and the recipients of the 2003 awards.

The Speaker: Before calling on the next hon. member, I'm sure I speak on behalf of all hon. members in the Assembly when I say to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort that we're pleased that he's survived an unfortunate traffic incident last week, and we're pleased that he's here in good health.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to be able to rise in the House today to offer my congratulations to the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association. AMPIA successfully hosted its 29th annual awards recognizing various achievements in over 59 categories ranging from best actor and actress to excellence in news, documentaries, series production, and music videos. The winners in each category receive an award called a Rosie, and the Friend of the Industry award was presented this year to Gerri Cook, a lady who has contributed so much to Alberta and to this industry over the years. A new category this year honouring lifetime achievement was presented to Leslie Nielsen.

Mr. Speaker, being a film producer in Alberta hasn't always been an enjoyable experience. Alberta has not offered the tax credits that many other provinces in Canada use to attract motion picture projects. We did however do a consultation with the film industry in 1998 and again in 2001 to determine what the government could do to encourage this industry to grow in Alberta. The government approved the creation of the Alberta film development program in late 1998. The end result is that we've gone from about $40 million in production in Alberta to over $200 million this year. I'm hopeful that the fund will in fact be increased in today's budget as this industry holds immense growth potential for us. The film industry is rebuilding, and that was obvious during the awards ceremony Saturday when over 850 guests attended, more than twice as many as ever before.

Last year we opened a new Alberta film office. It's a joint venture where we are trying to bring together the Alberta film development program, managed by Jane Bisbee, and the Alberta Film Commission, managed by Dan Chugg, two excellent people who are truly ambassadors of the Alberta film industry. The office is a one-window approach to film in Alberta, and we believe it will be a model for other provinces to follow once we get all of the bugs worked out.

I am very proud to be affiliated with this dynamic and growing industry, and once again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer my most sincere congratulations to AMPIA's Alan Brooks, Nic Wry, Connie Edwards, and so many others for all the wonderful work they did to make this year's awards ceremony the best ever.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

2:40 Nickelback

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to recognize Alberta's very own special music sensation Nickelback. Now, my children think I'm too old to know who Nickelback are, but they're wrong. I'm not too old. I know that the band members are Chad Kroeger, Mike Kroeger, Ryan Peake, and Ryan Vikedal and that they captured the Juno award for outstanding songwriter of the year in Ottawa last weekend. It will interest all members of this Assembly to know that Mike and Chad are the grandsons of the late Henry Kroeger, a former minister of the Alberta government who served as the MLA for the Hanna area during the '70s and '80s. At that time Mr. Kroeger also distinguished himself as the bass player in the MLA band, the Tory Blue Notes, which is likely where Mike and Chad get their musical roots from. Nickelback's Juno award represents their hit song Hero from the Spiderman soundtrack as well as Too Bad and How You Remind Me from the Nickelback album Silver Side Up.

Nickelback started as a cover band in Hanna, Alberta, where they played other people's songs. Soon after, they produced their own original works, that were later recorded in their friend's studio. The rest, as they say, is now making musical history around the world. In '96, with the recording of their own independent songs, they embarked on a series of cross-country tours. After 200 shows on the road Nickelback went from a little-known band in Hanna to playing in front of millions of people alongside international artists. Their popularity and quality of song have sent musical charts soaring around the world.

The significant accomplishment of capturing this Juno award builds on our province's reputation for continually developing outstanding Alberta artists. Please join me and our Deputy Premier from Drumheller-Chinook and our Minister of Community Development in saluting these outstanding Juno award winners, Nickelback.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Hastings Lake

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To many Albertans Hastings Lake in Strathcona county is a home, a recreational area, and the site of businesses. It's a critical habitat to over 200 species of birds, including trumpeter swans who reside in the bay in front of the Thompson home each spring and fall. Hastings Lake Islands have been named one of Alberta's special places.

Sadly, residents of the Hastings Lake area are fearful that their homes, health, and environment will suffer if two well sites proposed by Tempest Energy are allowed to proceed. The minimum setback of 100 metres will put the well sites so close to several homes that it could negatively impact their water quality. Drilling companies are not required to conduct baseline testing on water wells adjacent to drilling sites. All too often water quality deteriorates after drilling, but unless these landowners undertake water testing at their own expense, they cannot prove that drilling was the cause.

The owners of the Berry Inn, a unique bed-and-breakfast place enjoyed by people with disabilities, worry about the lack of a detailed emergency response plan. To date Tempest has not outlined any details to safely remove guests from the notification area. Can emergency response teams cope with guests with a variety of disabilities?

The McFall ranch is the site of a Ducks Unlimited wetland restoration project. Imagine the effect drilling could have on the fragile system they have worked so hard to restore. Contamination of water and air will affect the wildlife population and negate the work of many.

Residents feel that their concerns are being ignored by Tempest, the EUB, and this government. It is imperative, Mr. Speaker, that Tempest Energy's drilling plans not be allowed to proceed until full and open public hearings are held to address the concerns of residents and a satisfactory resolution to their concerns is achieved.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of 125 letters from my constituents regarding funding for education.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the required number of copies of three letters today from the town of Millet, the county of Wetaskiwin, and the city of Wetaskiwin expressing concern and disagreement with the Electoral Boundaries Commission's final report as it pertains to the town of Millet and the surrounding district.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to add yet another 100 signatures to the literally hundreds of thousands of signatures that have been tabled in this Legislature to petition the government of Alberta "to deinsure abortion."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent to me by the mayor of Calgary, His Worship Mayor Dave Bronconnier, supporting Bill 206, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2003. Mr. Bronconnier along with numerous community groups, police services, day cares, schools, and hundreds of inner-city residents understand that Bill 206 is effective and important legislation. They believe that this bill will help communities battle the devastating effects.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from R.J. Gray, the general manager of the Edmonton Klondike Days Association, noting that "deregulation may have been a wonderful idea," but it's not working for his organization. They've had a 75 percent increase in their utility bill.

The second tabling is from Wendy Sauve to her MLA. She's noting that she attended a town hall meeting organized by Edmonton-Calder on the topic of lottery fund distribution in which a community liaison officer from Alberta Gaming made a number of comments about unallocated funds.

Finally, tabling five copies of a media release dated February 2002 from Action on Smoking & Health with an attachment that they claim reveals a strategy to undermine the tobacco control program. They claim this is written by Jock Osler, a tobacco industry primary lobbyist in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and it's a letter addressed to the hon. Premier of Alberta. It's from a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, a B.A. Baer from 72nd Avenue, and this letter is concerning public education and the lack of adequate funding in that public education system.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: On behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Physical Therapy Profession Act, chapter P-14, section 8(4), the College of Physical Therapists of Alberta 2001-2002 annual report.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the House now stands recessed until 3:30 this afternoon.

[The Assembly adjourned from 2:48 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.]

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Please be seated.

Transmittal of Estimates

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2004, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

head: Government Motions

18. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the Messages of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2003-04 Offices of the Legislative Assembly Estimates, the 2003-04 government and lottery fund estimates and business plans, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 18 carried]

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving Government Motion 19, I now wish to table the 2003-2004 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2003-2004 government and lottery fund estimates.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the government's consolidated financial and business plans for Budget 2003 as required under sections 4 and 7 of the Government Accountability Act. Also provided for the information of the Legislative Assembly are the business plans for each ministry, which must be made public under section 13 of the same act.

head: Budget Address

19. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a place like no other. Thanks to the hard work, strong spirit, and unrelenting determination of Albertans we've built a province that simply is the best, a province whose exceptional track record of the past will only be outmatched by our potential for the future. Just think about these facts. Alberta has the strongest economy in Canada, and we're going to keep it that way. There are more people working in the province than ever before, and our rate of unemployment is among the lowest in the country. Albertans pay the lowest overall taxes, and there's no sales tax, no capital tax, and no payroll tax. Our health and education systems lead the way in innovation and produce excellent results, and our universities, colleges, and technical institutes rank with the best. We have the best educated workforce in the country, and Alberta businesses consistently outpace the competition, producing new ideas, new technologies, and new opportunities. When you put all of that together, it's no wonder why I and every other member of our government can stand here today and say: I am proud to be an Albertan.

Our province's strong record of success is unparalleled, but we're not about to stop now. In fact, the very reason our province has been so successful is that we never sit back, rest on our laurels, and assume that what we have today is good enough. Today our province stands on the brink of a future with unlimited potential. To fulfill that potential, we need to act now. We need to respond to pressures of growth and put a solid foundation in place to prepare Alberta for the future. As our Premier has often said, people who come to this province for jobs and careers don't bring their roads, their hospitals, and their schools with them. As new businesses set up or develop new markets, they need highly skilled people and first-rate transportation systems. As our cities and our towns grow, they need good roads, better access to technology, and excellent infrastructure to meet their communities' needs.

Mr. Speaker, Budget 2003 reflects these challenges, the challenges of growth our province faces today, but more importantly it's a budget for Alberta's future. It sets the province on a new fiscal course, a balanced and determined course that builds on our successes of the past, recognizes the realities of today, and prepares us for tomorrow. It's a course that makes us sure that our province is ready and well prepared to seize every opportunity that comes our way. The bottom line: Budget 2003 is about moving our province from good to great. It's about making Alberta even better.

In approaching this year's budget, we've taken the course so many sensible Albertans have taken all along in making their own budget decisions: we won't spend more money than we take in. Balanced budgets are the law in Alberta, and Alberta's budget will be balanced for the 10th year in a row. We're not counting on winning the lottery every year, so we'll put money aside in savings accounts, and it will be there to protect us when we need it. We'll spend most of our money on the essentials, on priorities like health and education.

Most Albertans who need to buy a new car or make major repairs on their home spread the payments out over a number of years rather than paying strictly cash. We'll take the same approach and introduce new ways to pay for capital projects over the longer term. Like so many Albertans, we'd dearly love to pay off the mortgage entirely, but that goal has to be balanced against important priorities for today. Mr. Speaker, it's a practical, sensible approach, an approach that's right for Albertans and right for our province.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans told us: we want predictability. Instead of trying to pick the price for oil and gas and tie our spending to those guesses, let's get off the roller coaster. We've listened, and we've taken action. With the new Alberta sustainability fund the days of wishing for windfalls or worrying about downturns in prices are over. Every year we'll count on a steady stream of resource revenues. No more annual ups and downs, just steady, stable revenues and budgets we can count on.

Albertans said: spend money on what counts most. Health, education, and infrastructure are consistently at the top of their list, and once again we've listened. Close to 70 percent of the spending in Budget 2003 goes to health, to education, and to infrastructure, making sure our children get a first-rate education and have good schools to go to, making sure Albertans have access to health care when they need it most. We'll support transportation projects in municipalities and improve Alberta's highways. The rest will go to new programs for farmers, to programs for children, to projects that keep Alberta's environment clean, and to increase support for families in need.

Albertans said: our province's economy is growing, and we need first-rate infrastructure to keep pace. From health authorities and school boards, from municipalities and industry we heard about the problems with stop-and-start funding: projects that are announced one year then can't go ahead if budgets are tight. We've listened. Based on Budget 2003, we'll put a new capital plan in place, double our investment in capital projects, and introduce a capital account so that we end the uncertainty and we get the projects built.

Albertans said, Mr. Speaker: get rid of Alberta's debt but not at the expense of addressing real problems today. Because of the wise choices we made in the past, we've reduced accumulated debt by nearly 80 percent, and we're in the strongest fiscal position in all of Canada. So we'll use the money we've already set aside to make the payments when they come due this year.

Well, that's it in a nutshell, Mr. Speaker. It's a new direction for new times, a balanced direction that provides stable and predictable budgets, gives more resources to health and education, and reaffirms our commitment to essential capital projects. It's a direction that will make Alberta even better.

There's one clear message I want all Albertans to understand: they will get all of the benefits of this new direction without paying a single cent more in income tax or health care premiums. Because of the solid new direction and the positive forecast for Alberta's future, previously announced plans to reduce corporate income taxes will go ahead this year. Corporate tax rates for small business will drop from 4.5 percent to 4 percent this year. The threshold for small businesses will increase to $400,000. Tax rates for larger businesses will drop from 13 percent to 12 and a half percent this year. These steps, Mr. Speaker, will result in direct tax savings of $94 million this year. That's money they can use to build their business, build a strong economy, and create more jobs for Albertans. No other province in the country can match this kind of budget package, and I'm proud to be able to deliver the good news to Albertans today.

Now for some details. I'm sure that for the past 30 years almost every Finance minister before me has stood here on budget day and talked about one single word: volatility. Our abundance of natural resources is a tremendous asset, but it's also a two-edged sword. When prices are up, revenues go up and so do expectations for more and more services. When prices drop, as they can do without warning, we're left high and dry, wondering how we can afford to pay for commitments we've made in the past. That roller coaster puts everyone on edge, and the ride has to end.

Last summer I asked the Financial Management Commission to recommend long-term strategies that would serve Alberta well into the future. The chairman, David Tuer, and some of his commission members are here today, and I want to thank them for their excellent work. Based on the sound advice of the Financial Management Commission, our government is introducing the new Alberta sustainability fund. With this new fund in place the days of unpredictable, uncertain budgets are over. Instead of pegging our budgets and spending plans on best guesses about the price of oil and gas, we'll consistently count on $3.5 billion in oil and gas revenues. If prices are high, any additional revenue will go to the sustainability fund to cushion us against years when prices may not be as good. If prices are low, we'll be able to use the savings in the sustainability fund to guarantee that no less than $3.5 billion will be available for the budget.

Mr. Speaker, this is a fundamental change for our province. We've replaced volatility with predictability, but it also means that expectations have to change. Too often as soon as oil and gas prices spike upward, so do expectations for more spending. Those days are over too. If prices go up during the year or we have surpluses at the end of the year, the only place those funds can go is to the sustainability fund. Extra revenues cannot be used for operating purposes. If revenues are much higher than expected and if we have at least $2.5 billion set aside in the sustainability fund, then we can use the surplus funds to pay off our debt or put more money into our capital account.

With Budget 2003 we are retaining our strong commitment to burning the mortgage and making Alberta the first debt-free province in the country, but it can't be our only objective. Nothing would please our Premier and his Finance minister more than making the final payment on Alberta's debt, but we can't and we won't ignore the realities of today. The province is growing, and there are immediate, pressing needs that simply can't wait until the debt is gone. Our successful fiscal policies of the past mean that Alberta's accumulated debt now stands at just $4.8 billion, by far the lowest in the country and at least 10 years ahead of our legislated debt repayment plan.

Just like a regular mortgage, Mr. Speaker, Albertans understand that you can only make payments on the mortgage when it comes due. Thanks to our wise decisions of the past we've set money aside in a debt repayment fund to pay off the debt on time and on schedule. In effect, we've prepaid the mortgage down to $4.8 billion, and with the money that's set aside, all the payments that come due this year and part of next year as well will be paid without having to touch one cent of this year's budget.

Mr. Speaker, I know that some people will be disappointed that we're not putting every spare dollar into paying down the debt as quickly as possible, but they should remember that we are years ahead of the game and can now reap the benefits of prepaying the mortgage. They should think about the combined advantages of the sustainability fund and the capital plan not only for this year but for years to come. They should remember that the benefits will go to children, who now have better classrooms or new schools to go to. They should understand that Alberta needs better transportation routes, better access to health care services, better safety net programs for farmers. All those benefits are possible because of the balanced approach we're taking. We will pay off Alberta's accumulated debt. We will be the first debt-free province in the country. That's a promise, and that's a promise we will keep.

Let me now move to some of the direct benefits that Budget 2003 provides for Albertans in every corner of this province. Over the past few years the first budget priority has consistently been meeting the pressing needs in programs that are important to Albertans, especially in health and education. Spending on capital projects has often taken a backseat. As a result there's a serious backlog of essential capital projects, a backlog that threatens our ability to provide the necessary infrastructure and to support ongoing growth in the province.

Once again, we're taking action. Our new capital plan will support more than $5.5 billion in capital projects over the next three years. That money will go to highways and municipal transportation projects. It will go to leading-edge health facilities and new equipment. It will go to build new schools, renovate existing ones, to upgrade and improve access to technology in schools. It will build new facilities at postsecondary institutions. It will improve irrigation, water management, and water treatment. It will make more affordable housing available for Albertans. It will upgrade seniors' lodges and support hundreds of community projects.

The new capital plan not only significantly expands our investment, but it also fundamentally changes how we fund our capital projects. Funds for new capital projects will come from three sources: the annual budget; the capital account, that allows us to carry funding from one year to the next; and alternative funding arrangements, to be considered on a project-by-project basis. Thanks to our strong fiscal performance in 2002-2003, $910 million from our year-end surplus went directly into the capital account. That will pay for roughly 16 percent of the projects included in the capital plan. About 59 percent of the funding will come from revenues in the three-year budget, and the remaining 25 percent will come from alternative funding arrangements.

Mr. Speaker, alternative arrangements could include public/private partnerships. They could also involve leasing arrangements or other options that allow us to pay for projects over the longer term rather than in one fiscal year. Each of those alternatives will be reviewed on a project-by-project basis by a new advisory committee on alternative capital financing, and I can assure Albertans that all aspects of any alternative financing approved by our government will be open and fully disclosed. The new capital plan is a major investment in the future of our province, an investment that will benefit Albertans today and for generations to come, an investment that will make Alberta even better.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to top priorities for Albertans, health and education are consistently at the top of the list. People want to know that they have access to health care when they need it. They want their children and their grandchildren to get an excellent education, and they want every young person to have a chance to get a postsecondary education and build a productive and positive future right here in Alberta. Spending decisions in Budget 2003 reflect those priorities.

In health care overall spending will increase by 7.2 percent this year, including funding received from the federal government as part of the recent arrangement with the Premiers. In total, spending for health care will increase by $1.26 billion over the next three years. By the time our province celebrates its hundredth birthday in 2005, we will spend over $8 billion a year on health care in Alberta. That money will go to health authorities and the Cancer Board. It will support specialized health services like cardiac surgeries and organ transplants. It will support continuing efforts to reform the health care system, and fundamentally it will result in better access and better health services for all Albertans.

In Learning the base operating support for kindergarten to grade 12 will increase by 4.9 percent this year, and over the next three years close to $390 million more will go to school boards across the province. That will bring the total funding to public and separate school boards to $3.4 billion by 2005-2006. On top of that investment in Alberta's children, $450 million is included in the capital plan to build new schools and improve classrooms across the province. Nearly 80 percent of the new funds will go directly to the classroom. It will support the excellent work of Alberta's teachers and help ensure that our students continue to achieve the best results in the world. It will support increases in enrollments, including an 8 percent increase in the number of students with severe disabilities. More funds will be available to buy books and other learning resources. A new funding framework will also be introduced, giving school boards the flexibility they need to make local decisions and meet local needs.

Later this year Alberta's Commission on Learning will issue its report and help set the direction for the future of education in this province. At the postsecondary level first priority must go to making sure students have access to university, college, and technical institute programs. Funding for postsecondary education will increase by $44 million, or 4.1 percent, this year. This includes $10 million to increase access in high priority areas and $12 million to maintain spaces in Alberta's apprenticeship programs. We will also step up our investment in loans and scholarships for students and continue to provide loan relief.

People looking through Budget 2003 will find dozens of initiatives targeted at different segments of Alberta's population, but let me highlight some of the initiatives for Alberta's farmers, for children, for families, and for our environment. All of us watched last summer the heartbreaking scenes of farmers forced to abandon their crops, sell their cattle, and face the ravages of unrelenting drought. Our government didn't hesitate for a minute. We stepped in and provided over a billion dollars in disaster funding and emergency disaster assistance. This year we're keeping our fingers crossed along with every farmer in the province hoping that the winter snow combined with spring rains will put our farmers back on track and the days of drought will be behind us.

With this year's budget farm safety net programs are being completely revamped, giving Alberta producers the most innovative and comprehensive crop insurance program in Canada. Close to $200 million will be provided this year to implement this new insurance program, a program that gives farmers and producers a solid safety net they can count on.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta farmers and producers have long been the backbone of our province. They've had a rough go over the past few years, but we're determined to work with them to address the issues, to expand their ability to add value and market their products, and find the best ways of building capacity in rural communities. Our commitment to the future of agriculture in Alberta is stronger than ever.

Looking to the future and making Alberta even better means making sure that our children get the best start in life and are able to look forward to a future full of potential and hope. With Budget 2003 funding for Children's Services will increase 5.4 percent. Funding will go to protect vulnerable children, support children with disabilities, and expand early learning and child care programs. A new centre for child, family, and community research will also be established this year. Thanks to our Premier's strong leadership funds will go to support Alberta's Promise, an initiative designed to mobilize every sector of our society, to bring new resources and new partnerships together and support a whole new range of community initiatives for children. Mr. Speaker, our children are Alberta's Promise, and we'll do our best to make that promise and make sure it is fulfilled.

Actions in Budget 2003 are also directed at supporting families who need it the most. Following up on the low-income review, income and employment support programs will be combined into a single integrated approach that puts people first and matches their unique needs with a range of programs and support. Along with these changes we'll take action this year to increase the income support rates for 12,000 families with children and another 10,000 people in assured support who are not expected to work.

To make Alberta even better we'll also need to protect and preserve our environment for future generations of Albertans. Our government took a strong stand opposing the Kyoto accord not because we disagree with the need to reduce emissions and protect our environment but because of the federal government's failure to understand and acknowledge the potential impact the accord could have on Alberta's future. Our commitment to Alberta's environment is unwavering. We will not be deterred by misguided federal actions. We will act on our own to do what needs to be done for Alberta and by Albertans.

With Budget 2003 we'll invest an additional $30 million over the next three years in the climate change action plan to reduce emissions, support energy conservation projects, invest in demonstration projects, and support research on new clean energy technology. In addition, Mr. Speaker, discussions are also under way with Alberta's municipalities about a potential interest-free loan program to support municipal energy efficiency projects.

Those are some of the key highlights, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2003 is about a single goal: making Alberta even better. All signs point to a strong future in our province with a growing economy, more jobs for Albertans, and an almost endless opportunity for success. Budget 2003 positions our province to take advantage of the tremendous potential that lies ahead. It sets a new fiscal direction, a steady, balanced direction that delivers what Albertans want and expect: stable, predictable budgets, spending on what counts the most, investment in the province's infrastructure to meet the demands of growth, and no tax increases.

It takes courage and determination to set a new direction. Alberta is known as a national and international leader in fiscal policy, and our success over the past 10 years has been unprecedented in Canada. But as Sir Winston Churchill said: success is never final. As times change and needs change, good governments don't cling to their successes from the past. They change and adapt. They set the stage for new successes to come. They keep their eyes firmly focused on the future rather than the rearview mirror, and they never shy away from taking action that will move their province from being good to being great.

Mr. Speaker, I remember that in one of his early speeches in this Assembly Premier Klein said: given a choice between the past and the future, Albertans will choose the future every time. He was absolutely right, and he still is. Once again we are choosing the future, choosing to build new successes, choosing to make Alberta even better for all of our children and for generations of Albertans to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Official Opposition House leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition I move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly do adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:06 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 8, 2003

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/08

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

I wonder if the Assembly would agree to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This evening I've had the opportunity to speak with a group of young constituents who have assembled in the room upstairs to discuss some topics of interest to them. I'd like to introduce them. I will read their names off, and then afterwards I'll have them rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly. We have with us this evening Darcy Andrews, Ravi Amarnath, Jeanne-Marie Audy, Matthew Bissett, Leslie-Anne Fendeleit, Garnett Genius, Matthew Mohr, Mark Ruhl, Neil Ruhl, Angela Schubert, Trevor Stokke, Chris Young, Beverly Eastham, Jessica McClay, and Steve Buchta. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly one of the most distinguished citizens in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar and a former Detroit Red Wing, Mr. Terry Cavanagh. Mr. Cavanagh has had a very distinguished career in civic politics and has a very keen interest in the economic prosperity and the future of the city of Edmonton. He's in the Speaker's gallery, and I would now ask him to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Mr. Hutton: I was going to acknowledge Mr. Cavanagh as well, Mr. Speaker, because he was a fine mayor and is a dear friend too.

The Deputy Speaker: I guess you could stand up again. A double welcome.

head: Government Motions

Provincial Fiscal Policies

19. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate April 8: Ms Carlson]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise tonight to begin debate on the budget for the 2003-2004 fiscal year. One of the main components of the whole discussion and the theme that kind of permeated through the speech from the Finance minister this afternoon was the idea that this is a budget that's going to start a new phase in Alberta's financial management, financial planning, and the key word seems to be the focus on stability and sustainability. When you look at the process that was put in place through the legislative agenda earlier in the session, Bill 2, that put in place the ability to deal with the stability fund, or sustainability fund, the infrastructure capital fund, and to make some of those adjustments. That really will help in that context.

When you look at the idea of sustainability and the broad context of that term, I have to go back to the question that I placed to the Premier yesterday in question period when I asked him to define sustainability in the context of the government's debate, and he in effect took that opportunity to tie sustainability to government expenditures that were constrained by revenues. That's simplifying an answer that he gave us, but that was the sense of it. I guess when I think about that definition and that use of the term, I would like to think of sustainability in a lot broader context of what is a true use of that word, and to define it so closely tied to budget balancing, budget sustainability, then what we end up with is the kind of approach to planning that really doesn't facilitate the true concept of stability and sustainability, that I discussed at length for the last number of years and, more specifically, the last two years when I've been trying to promote the idea of sustainability, the stability fund, as I called it, the infrastructure fund, the revenue smoothing, all concepts that the government has now incorporated. But the debate that went around my definition of that sustainability had to deal with the progressive and sustainable growth of our province. If we look at it from the point of view of, in effect, the tools that were put in place, those tools by themselves only facilitate an operation, but what they do is they need to make sure that the tools have the appropriate vision behind them.

What I want to talk about a little bit at the start tonight is the vision that I would like to have seen in the budget today and the vision that, in effect, ended up in the budget today. I guess to use some of the budget line items that show up in it, it's a matter of: how do we look at provincial expenditures as a component in both the economic and social systems of our province? If we look at how the government approached the budget this term, yes, they've created a system that will provide for, if I want to call it, the ability not to have shocks in a year. So it's taken out the uncertainty of the budget rather than the sustainability of the budget. You know, I guess that's how I can classify the difference in what I was talking about when I talked about sustainability and stability of our budgeting processes as opposed to what I see in the government's operational plan that they gave us today. In other words, they've got a budget and they're using tools to smooth their budgeting process, not to make a sustainable budget.

When I talk about a sustainable budget, I look at it from the point of view of: are the public expenditures sufficient and appropriately placed to give us the growth in our economy, the support of the infrastructure in our economy, the balance in our social systems, and the safety nets that are there to really provide for a future, a vision, that says, "this is where we want to be 20 years from now; this is where we want to be 30 years from now; this is where we want our children to be when they become adults, become legislators taking our place"? This is the kind of thing that we have to focus on, and I don't see that in this budget in the context of sustainability that I use when I talk about that term.

Mr. Speaker, I'll just kind of go through a little bit and use some of the examples that I want to use to illustrate that in the sense that what we have is a system that didn't put the money in the priority areas, the areas that Albertans were asking for. You know, we keep line item totals in the budget, and I guess the easy one to talk about is education because that's the one that most people have asked questions about today. We end up with, depending on how you calculate it, somewhere between a 4 and a half percent, 4.7 percent – and some people have even come up with a number of 4.9 percent – increase in the Learning budget. But when you look at what's really there for the frontline delivery of service, even the budget points out that it's only 2 percent for the per student grant, and if that's all we have in the per student grant, that's in effect a signal being sent by the government that that's the amount of money for classroom activity.

Now, I recognize that there are additional dollars for technology in another line item, but, you know, that's a signal by the government that those dollars should be in technology. There's another line item for special needs. That means that those dollars should be used for children with special learning conditions, special needs, to help them learn, to help them reach their potential. But when you look at it from the point of view of what's there to handle the classroom need, the per student grant only goes up by 2 percent. How do we deal with that in the context of a system that still is trying to catch up on an arbitrated wage settlement, that is trying to catch up with extremely high utility costs for the past year and the foreseeable couple of years?

When we look at a system that's trying to deal with the added costs of new technology adoption and the evergreening of technology, it doesn't give us a sustainable budget when we look at how it's broken out in Learning. You know, we're dealing here most in my discussion with the K to 12 component, not the advanced education or the adult learning component that they define in the line items of the budget. Even there we're giving basically for the classrooms at the advanced education level a 2.2 percent increase, but what we're doing is in effect downloading on to students more of the cost by allowing tuitions to go up, by allowing differential tuition fees. This basically says that students have to finance more of their own education cost.

When we put that into a development component, Mr. Speaker, you have to appreciate, you know, the focus that I've taken on a lot of the work I did before coming to the Legislature in terms of my work with governments, my work with communities in terms of economic development, and one of the things that we talked about all the time was the need for human resource training, human resource quality, but also the fact that economic development really transcends the idea of just having that. We've got to have an ability for those individuals to participate in both the community system and the economic system, and if we're basically saying to a new graduate that "you're going to have a much greater obligation to the financial community through paying off your loans," they're not going to have the money to participate in what we have as a consumer economy in North America. We don't have with them the same ability to go out and buy a home, to buy new cars, to buy, you know, the entertainment, the consumer goods that I had, as an example, when I graduated.

I was very fortunate to have gone through university at a time when, you know, the public saw the value of a public university and the value of citizens trained to participate in the system. So in effect I came out of university with essentially no financial debt. So I had to deal with that in the context of: where do I go by comparing my grandchildren now or even my children, who are coming out of their university programs with significant financial debts? Does that mean I should step in and help pay off their debt for them? Well, I think that's an issue that we have to look at in terms of what a social expectation is. I hear a number of the members across the road saying that, yes, I should be paying off my children's university debt, but this is the idea of: where does the benefit truly come from that university education? It comes back to all of us as a community. I think the ideal example that we can give on that is the decision that was made by Ireland about 15 years ago to make sure that every student who wanted to had access to an advanced education system, and that system in effect helped them get established, and they had a lot of support through the public school system: no tuition, minimal tuition at the postsecondary education level.

We need to look at the perspective that they now have one of the fastest growing economies in the world. So in effect they were thinking about the long-term potential and long-term sustainability for their communities. They were dealing with this in the context of how to make sure that their communities were viable by having well-trained, well-educated individuals, and they've got rewards coming now from that. You know, that's the thing we should be looking at when we plan our budgets, when we plan our expenditures at a public level, the idea that we end up pushing this to the limit in terms of making sure that these students have a manageable debt but that they do have an obligation to pay off that debt. All we're doing is making sure that the financial communities of our economy are strong, not the true sense of our community, because individuals then start to make decisions about where they can locate to get the most from their employment so that they can pay back those financial obligations. I don't think this budget passes on a message that we want to strongly support people, young Albertans, getting a quality education in our province.

You know, the whole idea that we look through this and say: where are the priorities, where are the issues that this government sees as important? We look at a 2 percent increase per student or classroom grants for education, yet we look at a much bigger increase in the additional dollars going to support horse racing in this province. They get a 10 or 12 percent increase; students get only a 2 percent increase. What signal of priorities does that send to the young people of this province? You know, it's really in my mind the wrong kind of a signal when we're going to increase the expenditures on horse racing by more than we're going to increase the expenditures on public education, more than health care, more than any of the other people service components. It really sends out a wrong signal and a signal that doesn't reflect a lot of the priorities of Albertans.

The other component that we heard talk about here in terms of the stability of where we're trying to go as a province is, you know, this new idea of capital expenditures, and I guess just to kind of touch on one more point to kind of illustrate, the focus that I see in this budget that doesn't sit right with how I would like to see us serve the public through this Legislature is this idea of how we're going to deal with our capital and our infrastructure. You know, it's great. It's really commendable that the government is making a commitment to catch up on some of the infrastructure deficit that we've had created over the last 10 years. You know, the idea that they're going to commit to $5.5 billion over the next three years is going to in effect make sure that we do have some degree of catch-up and sustainability in our needs for infrastructure.

But when you look at what they're doing, it's interesting that they're committing to use some of that public money in support of other financial alternatives, as they call them in here. In the background material they start talking about and they reintroduce the concept of the public/private partnerships, and if we're looking at the long-term best interests of Albertans, we have to make sure that we spend the dollars to get the best return over years, not just this year but over a number of years, for Albertans.

It really raises the questions when we have the best credit rating in North America, we have the options to deal with financing our infrastructure, we have the providers of infrastructure – you know, the businesses in our community who in effect can put that in place . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: I'm sorry, hon. leader. We have a debate going on, and some people have forgotten their manners this evening and don't realize that we have only one hon. member speaking at a time, and that's you, hon. leader, not this gentleman over here nor the other gentleman over here who seems to be anxious to debate. They will have a chance later on, but right now it's the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Debate Continued

Dr. Nicol: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. The point I was getting at is the fact that if we look at the long-term investment in our capital projects, the very best way for us to do it and give Albertans the best value for their dollar is to do it under the public system because we in effect can borrow the money, we have the technology, we have the expertise, and we have the private-sector construction companies that can actually build those things for us in the most cost-effective way. All of the material we've been able to gather over the last four months while this debate's been going on has indicated that in the other jurisdictions where the public/private partnerships have been tried, they've all raised a lot of concern and a lot of problems, all the way from higher costs to higher management to greater bureaucracies being created to deal with the provision of services, and that's not what we want in Alberta. We want to have seamless, cost-effective infrastructure.

All I'm saying here is that if the government moves ahead on this, if they really feel they have to, make sure that the guidelines that they put for this committee that they talk about creating to vet these investments and these partnerships – that that committee be challenged with a long-run vision of how cost-effectively our public dollars are being used and that they have to do it in a public way so that in effect everyone can be brought into agreement about: this is a cost-effective way. We don't want to be in a position where we see problems arise, we see obligations arise that weren't foreseen, and the other issue is, you know, that we have to make sure that the quality standard is the same. In the examples of the P3s that have been tried in Alberta, there were quality differences between the public construction and the private-sector contract construction, and we have to make sure that if we're going to compare costs under a partnership scenario versus the costs under the public system, the quality standards and the use requirements are compatible. You know, that's one of the things that's really important that we do in the context of being open with Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I guess there are just a couple of other issues that we talk about in terms of trying to make sure that we deal with the budget in its full focus. If we look at, in a sense, some of the issues that come up with, again, the line item concept of the individual ministries, we are very pleased to see the magnitude of the increase in health care, but when you build in the federal contribution, which in effect is expected to be used for new services in terms of home care and catastrophic drug costs, we have to look at that then. When you take that amount of money out of the health care budget, there's really little or no optimism to be felt in that health care budget because it doesn't really send a signal that there's a lot of room, especially with the labour negotiations that are coming up this year, how they're going to be handled.

Will there be contingencies built in so that we don't end up with the same kind of requirement for financial transfers from one section to the other to handle the labour costs as opposed to the funding that went into other aspects? It's important, you know, that that kind of issue be dealt with, but, Mr. Speaker, the appropriate place to do that is in Committee of Supply as we deal with those individual budgets. So what I'm trying to do more here is focus on some of the major components of the budget in terms of where we're going.

I guess the other part of it that I want to just address, as well, is the idea that historically we've had some of the disaster services risk management dollars handled at a budgetary level. If I read the budget documents correctly, now almost all of those risk requirements in our budget are being transferred over to the stability fund. So drought, fire, those kinds of components are going to be ending up over there because even in Sustainable Resource Development the line item for forest fires is well below the average amount of money spent in the last three to five years. In effect, we can say that it's not enough to meet what is an average expectation. There is a kind of a signal being sent here that the budget process expects some money to be transferred from the stabilization fund to deal with forest fire fighting.

We look at the agriculture components and look at the drought programs there. I guess I don't share quite the optimism of the Minister of Finance today when she talked about the new Ag programs and how they were going to in effect reduce completely the need for the kinds of ad hoc programs we saw last year. Mr. Speaker, I really hope that that is the case, you know, because the ad hoc programs that we saw last year were really quite open to question about the effectiveness of them. I think I relayed the situation that I was faced with last summer on the acreage payment program where on my farm in southern Alberta I was faced with the highest yields I've had in five years, the best prices I've had in 20 years, the lowest costs because I got rain when I needed it. I didn't have to irrigate. I had all that public infrastructure there to help me risk-manage, yet I got the little form in the mail saying: you can qualify for public money. Now, I didn't apply, but in the end that kind of points out the fact that ad hoc programs don't really direct the money where it needs to go. So I really would like to share the minister's optimism when she spoke this afternoon and said that she hoped that this new program being put in place by the minister of agriculture would eliminate the need for those ad hoc programs, but I also had a chance to chat with the minister of agriculture and pointed out some of the stories that are starting to float around rural Alberta already about ways to abuse the system that are already being found by some of the farmers out there that are signing up for the new programs.

You know, this is the kind of thing, Mr. Speaker, where any new program has to be tested both for its effectiveness and also for its ability not to be used. Are the fences appropriately defined around it? I hope that the minister works strongly to make sure that as next year comes along, the new programs are built or are modified to close some of the loopholes that appear to be in it right now, but that's something that we can only tell over time in terms of how much of a problem that's going to be. I guess that where I was going on that is that it goes in with this idea that all of the risk management money is now being transferred to the stability fund, and how do we sustain that in the context of long-term planning? It would have been better to have had some kind of an estimate built into the annual budgets, you know, especially in Agriculture. With Ag

Financial Services they have a mechanism to move money across years so that, in effect, you can create a pool that has money in it that is actuarially sound over time based on the expectations of demand for the program. So you end up looking at that and saying: why put so much of the risk onto a fund that was supposed to be there for stability as opposed to that risk management component?

Mr. Speaker, as I kind of come to the end . . . [interjections] Well, maybe I'll use a few more minutes of my time now. Getting all that encouragement, I'll go on a little further. The idea is that, you know, we need to make sure that we go through the explanations of the budget and try and make it so that it's easy for all of us to talk to our constituents about it.

I just wanted to touch on one other aspect before closing, and I guess I throw this out as much to hope that it will precipitate an answer as opposed to throwing it out as any kind of a criticism or anything. It's something that to me seemed just out of context or out of sorts with what's been going on the last year or so, and that is the significant drop in the expenditures for Aboriginal Affairs in the context of how that is going to be brought in line with all of the issues that are coming up right now about the work that we're doing in the First Nations communities and the Métis communities. I noticed that in some of the departments there were new line items where aboriginal initiatives showed up under some of the individual departments, where they were not located in others years.

So I guess the question that I throw out and kind of in closing is: is there kind of a philosophic change in the approach to co-ordinating the affairs that are associated with aboriginal issues under one ministry where they are now being spread out under a number of ministries? This is, I guess, an issue that reflects on co-ordination and making these programs so that they flow together, that they don't overlap, that they don't duplicate, so that they're directed in a way that's needed. That, I think, was one of the strengths of having a lot of the programs co-ordinated under that one ministry, but now they seem to have been dispersed through a number of ministries.

So I guess, as I said at the start, that's a question that I raise. I'm not making it as a criticism. It was more a matter of: is it a philosophic or administrative change in the way the government sees relationships with the First Nations communities? In response it would be nice at some point in time to see an explanation about why that dividing up of those moneys occurred and what the government hoped to achieve from it because it really doesn't seem to lead to the co-ordination and the consistency that we could have if they were all run through one minister, one administrative unit. You know, it affects, I guess, a focus of the government.

Mr. Speaker, in drawing to a close, I just want to say that this is a budget where we have to question whether or not it really reflects the priorities that Albertans have been talking about. When you look at the relative increases in ministries in particular activities, I think Albertans would have liked to have seen a little more money at the classroom level in education. There need to be some ideas put out about: what is the true relationship of the public service?

Just in closing, Mr. Speaker, I was doing one of the interviews on the radio station tonight, and it was a call-in. One of the individuals called in and said that he'd been down in Nebraska, and he was wondering why a state like Nebraska has a budget that's about half the size of the budget of Alberta. He said: you know, if we had a budget that was half the size of our budget right now, as Albertans we'd have a lot more money in our pockets. I raised with him the issue that I had lived in that part of the U.S. for 10 or 12 years and the idea that they don't have health care in their state budgets. The social service system for health care for seniors is all out of the federal budget. They don't have a lot of the other same expenditures at the state level that we do at the provincial level here. Their federal government provides a lot more money for support for the advanced education institutions whereas here that all funnels through our budget.

You know, it was interesting in the sense of how perspectives of budgets, perspectives of expenditures really create different expectations for people who look at them. That's why I think it's really important that as we go out and talk to Albertans about our budget, we don't put out information like was in one of the news releases where it said, you know, that basically health, education, and infrastructure are 70 percent of our budget. Mr. Speaker, if I've ever heard an irrelevant fact, that has to be one because it doesn't deal with expectations and expenditures. All it deals with is, in effect, something where they want to make it look like something that it isn't, and that's a real concern when we start talking about money.

What we should be talking about is: are the dollars we're putting into education giving us a long-term, sustainable economic and social system? Are the moneys that we're putting into health care giving us timely and accessible service? Are the dollars we're putting into infrastructure enough to give us a sustainable social and economic system? Are the dollars we're putting into human safety nets like SFI and AISH enough? Are they effective? Are they providing people with the support they need? Those are the comparisons we should be making rather than trying to make the comparison I talked about between the Alberta budget and the Nebraska budget or the fact that health, education, and infrastructure make up 70 percent of this year's budget. Infrastructure itself grew in this year's budget, so if you're going to compare it to last year's budget, it's irrelevant. You're comparing apples and oranges. So we shouldn't be putting out that kind of information if we want to be open and truthful with Albertans. We should be talking about the true facts of: are we delivering services in a cost-effective way and at a level that Albertans are asking for?

Mr. Speaker, that's the kind of criteria that I want to use in judging this budget, that I want to use as we go through each of the departments and look at the line items, the program expenditures, and basically say: are we getting value for the dollar that we're spending on behalf of Albertans? I hope that as we go through that, at the end we can say yes. I know that already on some of the numbers I've looked at, I'll be raising some real questions because I don't think we've got sustainable expenditures that are in the long-run best interests of Albertans, but in other areas I think there is a lot of money being spent where we don't need it. Albertans don't need to have a bigger budget. They just need a budget that's spent in different ways, in ways that meet their priorities and meet their expectations.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the New Democratic Party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that I have 20 minutes. Fifteen? Okay. All right. With a document as vital, as important as the budget document, it's difficult to do it much justice in 15 minutes, but I'll do my best. With the $20 billion or more planned to be expended here, I think it comes to about a billion and some for each minute that I have at my disposal.

Mr. Speaker, for a government as well endowed fiscally as this provincial government, Budget 2003 is a huge disappointment. For school boards and parents hoping for some relief from crippling deficits and ballooning class sizes, Budget 2003 is a huge disappointment. For postsecondary students who are facing tuition hikes of 6 to 10 percent year after year, Budget 2003 offers absolutely nothing. Most of the 7 percent hike in health care spending is simply the Tory government taking advantage of increased federal transfers. There's little in this budget for children and less for seniors.

My first surprise with Budget 2003 is that it didn't contain an update on revenues and expenditures for the 2002-2003 fiscal year. The third-quarter update was released February 26, almost six weeks ago. Surely the government has by now a better handle on what the final surplus is going to be for the next budget year. If past experience is any guide, the surplus for last year is likely to be much larger than the government is currently willing to admit. To be blunt, the revenue numbers as reported in the third-quarter update don't add up. For example, oil royalties are projected to be 40 percent lower than in the year 2000-2001 despite the fact that oil prices have only been about 5 percent lower this year compared to two years ago. This represents a difference of about $700 million, the first instance of lowballing. Natural gas royalties are projected to be about 40 percent lower than in the year 2000-2001 despite the fact that gas prices are only about 20 percent lower this year compared to two years ago. This represents a difference of about $1 billion.

Therefore, it's quite conceivable that the final budget surplus could be $1 billion to $2 billion higher than forecast as recently as the third-quarter update. This fact is kept well hidden in Budget 2003. The government knows that the budget surplus won't be known until June. If the surplus is higher than what is reported in the third-quarter update, it would be too late to do anything other than apply a hundred percent of these extra dollars to debt repayment. Instead of $2 billion sitting in the bank waiting for debt to mature, the cash set aside could grow to $3 billion or $4 billion. With all government awash in cash, having this money sitting in the bank while school boards are facing huge deficits is a case of misplaced priorities, Mr. Speaker.

Budget 2003 is the first budget that uses the new fiscal framework passed by the Legislature earlier this session. To be fair, the new fiscal framework properly applied does serve to improve budgetary processes in two ways. The first change is a shift from pay-as-you-go cash accounting for capital investment, where costs and expenditures are expended in the year they're incurred, to accrual accounting for capital investment where the costs are written off over the useful life of the capital asset. This change does not impact on the yearly budget bottom line, but it will cause the province's net assets to go up another $10 billion thereby making the province's remaining accumulated debt look just that much more insignificant.

The second change resulting from the new fiscal framework is the establishment of a sustainability fund into which nonrenewable resource revenues in excess of $3.5 billion per year will be paid. This sustainability fund will be allowed to grow to $2.5 billion, money that can be tapped to pay for unexpected expenses like drought and forest fires. Once this sustainability fund reaches $2.5 billion, any surplus funds can only be used for debt pay-down or transferred to the capital account.

While the concept of a sustainability fund is a good one, the way it's being applied in Budget 2003 is not. I have to seriously question why the government is putting $2.2 billion into the sustainability fund in the very first year, Mr. Speaker. Paying such a massive amount into the fund in the very first year is a way of hiding some of the budget surplus. It also lends credence to those who charge that the sustainability fund will be used as a slush fund to pay for rebates at election time. Load up the sustainability fund between elections; use it to pay for goodies at election time. Instead of fast-tracking transfer to the sustainability fund, some of the dollars should instead be spent on priorities like keeping a lid on classroom sizes and reducing wait times in the health care system.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier said yesterday that Budget 2003 contained no tax increases, only tax cuts. Reading the fine print today, we find that that isn't exactly the case. There is, in fact, a sneaky 5.8 percent increase in school property taxes paid by homeowners and businesses across the province. That is because the government has not adjusted the education mill rate downward to compensate for increases in the assessment rate base. During the last provincial election the Tory government promised to freeze the education property levy at $1.2 billion. Well, guess what? Two years later Albertans are paying an additional $127 million in school property taxes. That's sure not what Albertans were expecting when the province took taxing powers away from local school boards.

While Budget 2003 contains no further increases in health care premiums, this comes on the heels of a 30 percent hike last year. If the government wanted to give meaningful tax relief to average families and seniors, they would have reduced this highly regressive health tax.

While Budget 2003 contains tax hikes for every Albertan, the only tax cuts are for corporations. The half point cut in the general corporate tax rate from 13 percent to 12.5 percent means $95 million in the pockets of corporations, many of whom are enjoying record profits thanks to high oil and gas prices. This is $95 million that could have gone to classrooms or to improving health care, Mr. Speaker.

The single biggest disappointment of this budget is its failure to pony up for education. The extra money for K to 12 education is barely enough to feed the class hamster, Mr. Speaker. Per pupil grants to school boards will only go up by the same 2 percent announced in last year's budget. That is causing financial crises for school boards across this province. This 2 percent increase does not pay for the government-imposed arbitrated salary settlement with teachers. It doesn't pay for inflation that's running at about 5 percent per year in this province. It doesn't pay for skyrocketing utility bills. To be blunt, this government has the financial means to address the looming financial crisis of school boards but has done virtually nothing. This government has let down Alberta's children.

Don't take my word for it, Mr. Speaker. I want to briefly quote from a news release from a provincewide parents' group called APPEAL in their response to the budget. This news release is entitled Parents Express Shock and Disappointment. The news release goes on to say:

The Alberta government is paying lip service to Alberta's children in their budget rhetoric but has abandoned them in the funding. There is nothing in the 2003 budget to address classroom conditions. In fact, the 2% general grant increase will result in larger class sizes throughout the province . . . Parents had hoped for at least a status quo budget but we have received a brutal wake-up call that the province is unwilling to put their money where their mouth is. Alberta's children take a backseat in this budget.

In postsecondary education base operating grants are only increasing by 2 percent in 2003-2004, less than half the rate of rising costs. No wonder most postsecondary institutions are hiking tuition fees from 6 to 10 percent year after year with no end in sight. The universities are also bringing in differential tuition for certain faculties. This government's response? Well, they're generously allowing postsecondary students to slide further into debt by raising the limits on student loans. In my view, allowing students to go further into debt is the wrong solution. Meaningful action to address skyrocketing tuition fees is the better solution, Mr. Speaker. Not a sign of that in Budget 2003-2004.

Thanks to the federal government health has done little better than education in Budget 2003. Over one-half of the increase in health spending in this budget is due to increased federal transfers.

Alberta's health regions are receiving increases that should just about allow them to keep up with rising costs. However, it must be remembered that the health minister allowed most of the health regions to run deficits and deplete financial reserves last year which they'll have to start repaying this year. So will the new federal dollars be enough? Only time will tell, Mr. Speaker. Rural health regions face a much more serious problem in the face of the new budget and the new commitment made by this government, however.

With $910 million of last year's surplus already set aside and more dollars also flowing in, Infrastructure is clearly the big winner in this year's budget. Having said this, however, the province does have a significant Infrastructure deficit that has built up over the last decade. The problem with Infrastructure is not the amount of money being spent but rather the way the government wants to spend it. Starting next year, the government wants to spend about 30 percent of its Infrastructure money on so-called public/private partnerships. It also wants to force local authorities like school boards, health regions, and municipalities to use P3s whether they make financial sense or not.

This Tory government is refusing to look at the evidence that clearly shows that P3s don't work. Whether we are talking hospitals in the U.K. or schools in Nova Scotia, P3s have cost more and delivered less than publicly financed infrastructure. Worst of all, P3s reduce the accountability Legislatures have for the expenditure of public funds. The New Democrats will work hard over the next year to convince Albertans that P3s are a bad deal for Albertans and that our schools, hospitals, and roads should continue to be publicly owned and operated.

Budget 2003 provides social assistance recipients not deemed employable with a $20 increase in their monthly benefit on June 1. This is the first increase in the 10 years since the government cut rates and does not even restore them to what they were back in 1993. Meanwhile, inflation has gone up by over 30 percent and rents have gone up by 50 percent. This tiny increase of 66 cents a day won't even buy you a cup of coffee, Mr. Speaker.

Meanwhile, monthly benefits for disabled AISH recipients were last increased four years ago, the only increase in the last 10 years. There are no increases for severely disabled Albertans in this budget, Mr. Speaker. This is a terribly shabby way to treat the province's most vulnerable citizens.

If there's little or nothing in this budget for children, Mr. Speaker, there's even less in this budget for the province's seniors. Despite a rising seniors' population, expenditure for seniors is going up at a rate less than inflation. I guess seniors should be thankful that this budget doesn't hammer them to the same extent as last year's budget. This year the government is only hiking their school property taxes and fails to help them deal with skyrocketing utility bills. Last year the government also hiked seniors' health care premiums and took away their dental and eye care benefits.

On environmental protection spending, $10 million on climate change initiatives and $5 million on water conservation is likely to do little more than fatten the pocketbooks of government consultants.

The budget also continues to waste money on pet projects. It has $4 million more in subsidies for horse racing for a total of $37 million. There's 26 million more dollars for the money-losing Swan Hills toxic waste plant.

To wrap up, Budget 2003 is a stand pat, do-nothing budget. It fails to address the growing financial crisis in our schools. It doesn't address skyrocketing utility bills. The budget lacks vision and does not address the real priorities of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think I've just come under 15 minutes.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On questions and comments. I listened attentively to the comments of my colleague, the leader of the New Democrats, and I was interested when he prefaced his comments by saying that he was spending something like, I think it was, $1.5 billion a minute. Is that a suggestion then on the part of the leader of the New Democrats that he does not intend to participate in any of the budget debate, the estimates which will be coming forward over the course of the next month? Surely, the leader of the New Democrats is planning on participating in that debate and will have ample opportunity to further discuss the budget and is not limited to this 15-minute interval.

One other comment, and that had to do with the toxic waste and the funds going to the Swan Hills plant. Is it the member's contention that we should not be eliminating or getting rid of toxic wastes?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member who made these comments. When I said that I have 15 minutes, I meant 15 minutes this evening. So I'm aware of the fact that he and I will have ample opportunity to look at the budget estimates in detail department by department.

On the second part of his observation, how we should deal with waste disposal in this province, the Swan Hills fiasco is not the way to deal with it. That plant has cost Albertans hundreds of millions of dollars over the years, close to half a billion dollars at least, if not more, and it continues to lose money. I think it would be irresponsible for us to continue to close our eyes to that disaster and say that nothing can be done about it. Spending another $26 million on it this year is not the way to deal with that disaster and say there are better ways of dealing with disposal of those harmful wastes.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on questions and answers?

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona: does the hon. member consider this government mean when he learned today that there was no increase for AISH recipients in this province after energy deregulation has driven up the cost of inflation and their benefit rates certainly are not reflected? [interjections]

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question is extremely timely and appropriate. To laugh off the significance of this good question is to trivialize the whole issue of what our obligations are as a community to the most vulnerable members of our community, and Albertans on AISH, Albertans who receive social benefits under SFI and others are the most vulnerable among us. These are people who are unable to find jobs and do employable work. These are Albertans who are either disabled or suffer from chronic illnesses which don't allow them to work. To say that they should not receive increases on a regular basis which are at least commensurate with the rate of inflation so that the real value of what they've been getting over the years can be maintained is to neglect our responsibility in a way which I think is not a responsible act on our part.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, having listened very attentively to the member's diatribe, I must respond to some of his comments. The hon. member tried very hard to discredit very worthwhile organizations like Good Sam, like Bethany Care, like the Caritas group.

When he went on and talked about how terrible P3s are . . . [Mr. Lund's speaking time expired]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. members are reminded that under Standing Order 29(2) we're allowed only five minutes for the question and answer portion. As interesting as it might be, those are the rules.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Final Report of Electoral Boundaries Commission

13. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to section 11(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act the Legislative Assembly concur in the recommendations of the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission, entitled the Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries and Names for Alberta, tabled in the Assembly on Wednesday, February 19, 2003.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my obligation as Minister of Justice responsible for the Electoral Divisions Act and for the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act to move Government Motion 13.

Mr. Speaker, I say obligation rather than using any other descriptive because like many if not most members of this Assembly I don't particularly like the report. In particular, I'm extremely unhappy with the report in that the commission saw fit to reduce the number of electoral districts in Edmonton to 18 from 19.

As a member of this Assembly I, like most of you, am very much in tune with my community, am very much interested in the outcome of boundary redistribution. In fact, I directly and through my constituency association made direct submissions to the boundaries commission with respect to boundaries to the city of Edmonton. In fact, I'd like to say that by my count more Edmonton Conservative MLAs and constituency associations made submissions to the boundaries commission than Edmonton Liberal MLAs and constituency associations. By my count. There is no group, whether Liberal or Conservative, closer to the subject or more knowledgeable about how our communities interact or better able to draw the lines than the members in the House. However, there is also no group of individuals with a greater personal stake in the outcome, and it is precisely for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that we do not engage ourselves in rewriting the boundaries but, rather, establish a commission to do the job within the parameters set out in the legislation for that purpose.

This House in the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act sets the number of constituencies in this province, and it's set at 83. Then the commission has the job to draw those boundaries within the limits of that number and within the parameters as set out in the act. I have as a member of a political party been involved in a number of redistributions over the years and seen a number of iterations of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, and I must say that the act under which we operate in this province is one of the fairest and most reasonable acts in the country in that it sets almost no parameters for the Electoral Boundaries Commission. It says 83 seats, and it leaves it to the commission to then draw those seats based on the latest census results and taking into account a list of factors that are set out in the act, taking those factors into account, not mandating them.

I've argued before a number of electoral boundaries commissions, at least three, over the years that one of the factors that they should take into account in drawing boundaries is growth since the census. I can report to the Legislature that I'm not very effective in making that representation to the boundaries commissions because it has not once been accepted by a boundaries commission. One of the reasons that it hasn't been accepted by a boundaries commission is that the census provides basic verifiable data with respect to population numbers, and there is not a basis in verifiable data, at least that's been presented to the commission, to show the growth since then. In fact, in talking with the chairman of the commission about boundaries and the redistribution in this circumstance, he made the point to me that while most representatives of communities who appeared before the commission spoke about the growth in their community, none of them provided verifiable data, and all of them indicated that there had been huge growth since the last census and that that should be taken into account. So the commission had a very difficult job to do.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no idea why anybody would ever take on the invitation to join an Electoral Boundaries Commission. It has got to be the worst job that anybody could ever accept.

Dr. Taylor: Speak for yourself, Dave. I'd like to be on it.

Mr. Hancock: Well, resign from the House and we'll give it to you.

Mr. Speaker, I really don't know why the hon. member would want it because no one is ever satisfied with an electoral boundaries' report. You could never draw the report the way we as the experts in the business, as the members of this House who know our communities, who know where the lines should go, who know which communities ought to go together – no one could draw those boundaries better than each one of us. The problem is that each one of us would come up with a different map.

So we give the job to an Electoral Boundaries Commission, in this case chaired by the province's Ethics Commissioner. The act sets out that the chairman of an Electoral Boundaries Commission has to be a judge or an Ethics Commissioner or someone in that type of capacity. We had the benefit of an Ethics Commissioner who was also a past member of this House and therefore had a good understanding of the problems and the possibilities with respect to the electoral boundaries and had the benefit of being someone who was respected for his independence, impartiality, and respected in his role as Ethics Commissioner. Then, of course, the act allows for the nomination by the government and by the Official Opposition in consultation with the third party of the other members for that commission.

We give the job to the commission, and then we ask them to meet the public. The act specifically sets out that there should be commission hearings across the province, an interim report, additional hearings across the province, and a final report. The commission is mandated to follow that course and did follow that course so that public across the province could have input at the commission and discuss what their interests were and what their expectations were of a boundaries commission. The commission had those hearings and made its deliberations based on the information which it had.

The interim report surprised many of us when they came to the conclusion that Edmonton, for example, should lose a seat. It was a surprise to us. The previous numbers that I had prior to the census from the Chief Electoral Officer wouldn't have suggested that, but the census numbers as they came out last spring indicated to the boundaries commission in their judgment that they needed to set numbers which would result in two seats being lost in rural Alberta – one in northern Alberta, one in central Alberta – and one seat being lost in Edmonton, and three seats going into Calgary and region. Those were the numbers based on the census numbers and based on their view of how you balance the interests of representation. Calgary's seats have a number approximately a thousand or more higher than Edmonton seats under the proposed redistribution by the boundaries commission, and rural seats have about a thousand less.

Those of us who have argued for years about the need for a triple E Senate in this country so we could balance the regions against the population find it very difficult to argue with the logic of a boundaries commission when they come up with a result which says that the regions have to be balanced against the population. So when you look at the logic of the commission's report, whether you like the result of the report or not, you find it very hard to challenge the logic of the report. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I encourage members of this Assembly to accept the report with all of its warts, as each of us perceives it, to thank the commission members for doing a thankless job, and for recognizing that if we rejected the report, if we did not accept the report, what we would be doing is we would be sending it back to a new boundaries commission – this commission has done its job and is finished – to work with the same data and the same problems and probably to come up possibly with lines in different places but with some other variation of the same result.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think that it's prudent or logical of us or reasonable for us to reject a report unless we could suggest that there's something grievously wrong, that they've made some egregious error, that there is something that they have done wrong based on the mandate that they were given. As much as I don't like the result of the report, I can't say that they did anything wrong. In fact, I have to look at the report and say that the five members of the committee, the two appointed by the Liberals and the two appointed by the government and the one, the Ethics Commissioner, appointed as chairman, did a good job on the mandate that they had. I just don't happen to like the results, and it's not for me to substitute my view of what the results ought to be for the review of a boundaries commission which is charged with drawing boundaries based on all the input that they have and all the evidence before them and coming to the conclusions that they have to. In fact, we separate ourselves logically and realistically from redrawing boundaries and give it to a commission because in the history of parliamentary democracy there have been accusations of gerrymandering when governments or Legislatures or individual members of Legislatures attempted to draw their own boundary lines for themselves.

It's prudent, it's reasonable, it's rational for us not to delve into the job of redrafting the boundaries but to give it to a commission. We've done that. The Electoral Boundaries Commission Act sets out the parameters, sets out the criteria. It's a fair act, it's a fair process, it's a fair mandate, and they did their job fairly, as much as I don't like the results. For those reasons I would ask that this House approve the motion and allow us to get on with the job of bringing forward an electoral boundaries act as needs to be in the second process.

The Deputy Speaker: Before we proceed further in the debate on this motion, I wonder if we might have agreement from the Assembly to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is not every day that a member has the privilege of rising and through you introducing to all members of the House a number of former members of this Legislature and virtually all of the city council of the city of Edmonton. We delayed a bit because we were waiting for the mayor to arrive, and I can't see him. I don't think he's there, but if he does come in, we'll ask if we can introduce him. Obviously, Edmonton city council is here to listen to this debate and I'm sure will be impressed by the oratorical skill that they're about to hear. Terry Cavanagh has already been introduced, but we'll ask each member to stand as they're mentioned: Terry Cavanagh, Stephen Mandel, Ron Hayter, Janice Melnychuk – Karen, are you behind there somewhere? – Karen Leibovici, Michael Phair, and Ed Gibbons.

An Hon. Member: Jane.

Mr. McClelland: Oh, sorry, Jane. Didn't see you. And Jane Batty. Accompanying them is their minder and the person that keeps them together, Dennis Thomson. Welcome.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I too want to welcome the councillors from the city of Edmonton in our midst, but in addition I would like to introduce two of our caucus staff who are sitting in the public gallery: Laura Nichols and Marilyn Hooper. If they would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Now Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and get an opportunity to speak to Government Motion 13 regarding the Electoral Boundaries Commission, but before that I, too, would like to welcome our distinguished visitors in both the Speaker's gallery and the public gallery this evening.

This is a very important debate not only for the current history of the city, but it has implications for the future history of this city. I cannot support this motion, because it is my view that the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission should not have reduced the city of Edmonton's representation in this Assembly by one MLA. Next year we will be recognizing the first 100 years of the city of Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, the centennial year of the city. Edmonton is in the middle of another period of solid economic and population growth, and Edmonton should not as a result of this report have lost one constituency before the next provincial election. Now, what a birthday gift from the province to this dynamic capital city. Happy birthday, Edmonton. Good-bye, Edmonton-Norwood. That is wrong. If the city is to continue to have a positive influence in this Legislature, why are we going to water down the voices in this Assembly from 19 to 18? Again, this report has failed to address the chronic, constant issue of underrepresentation of Alberta's cities in this Assembly.

Now, Edmonton-Norwood, to be specific, has had a long, distinguished history. The constituency of Edmonton-Norwood goes back to 1959. It has been represented in this Assembly by representatives of four different political parties. This is a rich and varied history, and to just take the eraser to the neighbourhoods that are currently represented by Edmonton-Norwood's member and add them to the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands is in my view very disrespectful of the citizens of Edmonton-Norwood.

Edmonton-Norwood as we know it is one of the most disadvantaged ridings in the city. It needs its own voice in this Assembly. There are people there that are very angry about losing their voice, and one of them, certainly, is a resident of Edmonton-Norwood by the name of John Patrick Day, Mr. Speaker. I would like to quote from one of Mr. Day's submissions to this commission.

Edmontonians are slightly less worthy of legislative representation, and will be so forever and ever.

I do not believe that this was intended by anybody. Indeed I am sure it was not. But it is the message given and received.

That reflects on all of us.

Edmonton-Norwood is an inner-city riding with a population of over 28,000. Twenty-four percent of its population is made up of new Canadians. There is a large Italian and a large Asian community. Seventeen percent of the population has less than a grade 9 education. Thirty percent do not have a secondary school certificate. All in all, over 47 percent do not have a full high school education. The unemployment rate for the riding is over 14 percent, more than double the provincial average, and it is interesting to note that more than 56 percent of the households in the riding make under $30,000 per year. Should those citizens lose a voice in this Assembly? I say no; they certainly should not.

9:20

Now, I view this report as being anti-Edmonton, and it advantages the Progressive Conservative strongholds in rural Alberta and in Calgary. Sure, the first report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission suggested that Edmonton lose a seat and we lose two rural seats, but the loss of population in rural Alberta is a result of this government's economic policies, and the city of Edmonton should not suffer because of that. You have a highway 2 mentality. You're interested in economic development 50 kilometres east of highway 2 and 50 kilometres west of highway 2, but you're forgetting about the rest of the province. [interjections] The city of Edmonton, Mr. Speaker, should not suffer as a result of that.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, how quickly you seem to forget. We have a convention in this Legislature that only one member is talking at a time. So, hon. ministers and hon. members on this side of the House, when your turn comes, we'll gladly listen to you, but right now we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, so let us hear Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton's population has grown substantially since the 2001 census and will continue to do so in the foreseeable future. In eight years, when the next Electoral Boundaries Commission sits, unless we can convince this House to put them back to work and do this all over again, there will need to be radical changes because of the growth in this city. According to Economic Development Edmonton the population grew in 2001 again – and this is exceeding Conference Board of Canada forecasts – by 4 and a half percent, and this is in addition to the 8.7 percent growth reflected by the 2001 census. As a result, large parts of Edmonton may have to be redrawn to reflect a large disparity between the number of voters and seats which represent them.

Now, the minority report that was submitted in the final report of the Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries and Names for Alberta was submitted by Bauni Mackay, certainly appointed by the Official Opposition and the Official Opposition leader. There were some outstanding arguments presented in that minority report, and we need to consider those. There was certainly the conduct of the commission. There were several problems addressed, but let's look at three of them: the concept of representation by population, the concern over the concept of effective representation, and thirdly, issues of increasing urbanization not being reflected in this report, Mr. Speaker.

Representation by population means one person, one vote. The minority report by Bauni Mackay points out that because of the redistribution of seats between Edmonton, rural Alberta, and Calgary representation by population is compromised. Even if you look only at the 2001 census, it indicates that Edmonton should have 19 seats, and I argued before the commission that we shouldn't have 19; we should have 20 seats. Edmonton should actually, yes, be gaining an additional seat. However, we are losing one, which means that Edmonton's democratic right to representation is unfortunately compromised.

Now, again according to the minority report the definition of effective representation as used by the committee is vague and in some ways obsolete. The measure of effective representation was based on access of the MLA to constituents and vice versa. The commission did not take into account advances in technology such as e-mail, fax, as well as air travel and an extensive highway system when discussing effective representation. They took into account such issues as geographic distance and low population density. They also took into account the distance of a riding to the Legislature.

It's interesting to note that this afternoon when the budget was announced there was a line item in there with a total expenditure for the Supernet, which is going to be handed $300 million, and that is another way for MLAs to interact with their constituents. It was suggested that perhaps in the public libraries and the public schools in rural Alberta there could be one dedicated line, the same as we have a RITE line so that constituents would have another way of contacting their representative if they were unavailable because of a sitting of the Legislative Assembly and they were present in the capital city Mondays through Thursdays.

Now, Mr. Speaker, such measures are obsolete when discussing effective representation according to the minority report as written by Bauni Mackay. The minority report did argue that what was missing from the measures were distances such as cultural distances and social distances. These distances cannot be closed by technology and are a barrier to effective representation. As a result, the situation arises again that those who are culturally and socially distant, people who are attracted to cities as opposed to rural areas, are being misrepresented.

The minority report also stresses the increasing role of urbanization in that economies in a world of global contact and community are becoming the basis of economies in the modern world, and if I can make one suggestion all over again to the members of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission, it would be this: I would encourage them to read Jane Jacobs before they were to start their report and their study and their analysis. Jane Jacobs would remind each and every one of us of the importance of cities and the importance that cities have in the economic development of the region surrounding them. Whenever you penalize cities, you penalize the entire region. Miss Jacobs is a well-respected, world-known economist and urban planner.

Now, the minority report also points out several scholars' opinions that all Albertans gain from an urban strategy and that rural economies are losing their position in a global economy. While Calgary may gain from adding two seats, it helps no one – it helps no one – that Edmonton loses a seat. The minority report makes an argument that by removing a constituency from Edmonton, the commission is not taking into account the city's role as a hub of activity for a large part of the province and not only this province but also the territory to the north of us. Economic growth in the city and the importance of that growth to central and northern Alberta were not thought of, and that is why I have to agree with the minority report and I cannot accept the recommendations of this report as it's presented in this Assembly now.

When we consider the city and the fact that we have a centennial year coming up and we are going to face the prospect of losing a voice in this Assembly, I think that is a slap in the face to the citizens of this city. I'm sorry; Edmonton should keep their current representation. They probably should have at least one more seat. We have to look at this. We have to have a good look at this in this Assembly at this time and recognize that a mistake is being made. We have time to correct the mistake. It's just going to take political bravery. This government in the past has changed course, has changed direction, and regardless of the composition of this committee we in this Assembly have the authority to change direction. If we were to have another commission, have another look at this issue, well, so be it. But it's a small price to pay for democracy.

Mr. Rathgeber: What if you don't like the other one any better?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder said: what if I don't like it any better? That is essentially democracy, and I would encourage the hon. member to participate in the debate in this Assembly on this issue. Certainly, the constituents of Edmonton-Calder I think would have a direct interest in the fact that we are losing representation in this Assembly. Certainly, the constituents of Edmonton-Calder would be most anxious to know how their representative feels about Edmonton losing one of its 19 seats.

Now, certainly, in conclusion, it will take a lot of political thought and courage by this government to recognize that a mistake has been made, but we in this Assembly have an opportunity here with this motion to correct that political mistake and not penalize Edmonton now or in the future by reducing its representation in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

9:30

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin tonight, I would like to also say hello to some old friends of mine: Ed Gibbons, Karen Leibovici, Michael Phair, Ron Hayter, and my good friend Terry Cavanagh. Hello, buddy. It's good that they're here tonight. I wish my municipalities could be here.

Mr. Speaker, this is probably going to be the toughest speech I've ever had to give. I'm not very proud to stand here tonight and have to condone Motion 13, to say that it's a motion I go along with, to say that it's a motion that my people respect. My people, the people of Lacombe-Stettler, are very, very concerned about the Electoral Boundaries Commission report. They were so concerned that they turned out for the second go-round in force: my municipal councils, my school boards, the people in my community that speak for other people. They said: "Listen; we're not happy with this. We are going to lose an MLA along the highway 2 corridor." The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar just talked a few minutes ago about how this doesn't affect rural Alberta. It does affect rural Alberta. It affects rural Alberta in a big way.

Since 1990-91 we've had differences in Pincher Creek, Crowsnest, Cardston, Drumheller, Athabasca, Wabasca, and now we're going to look at Lacombe-Stettler and Ponoka-Rimbey. I'm not a gambling person. I have nothing to do with gaming and I'm not the least bit interested, but I should have been, because I could have made a lot of money. If someone had said to me, "Listen; they're going to disrupt your constituency," I would have said no. We have the numbers. We have the people. We have the location. We have the growth. We're two or three kilometres off highway 2. We had 330 housing starts in Lacombe last year. We're growing. We're going to continue to grow. We will not be affected. What do they do? They take one MLA away from rural Alberta along the highway 2 corridor, one of the highest growth areas in the entire province. Now, I would have lost money if I'd bet on that.

So I'm standing here tonight saying to you: indeed, this will be the toughest speech I've ever given. My councils passed unanimously at all of their meetings, on behalf of all the people they represent, that they didn't want this to happen. They don't understand why it happened. They don't see the need for it happening. The Lacombe side of my constituency, as it now stands, is going to continue to grow and grow and grow because of the location. They're close to Edmonton. They're close to Calgary. They're close to Red Deer. People want to live there. I grew up in Calgary. I lived in Calgary for 21 years. I love Calgary. If I'd lived in Edmonton, I probably would have loved Edmonton, but I grew up in Calgary. I went to high school in Calgary. I figure I've got the best of all worlds. I'm rural with an urban twist. I happened to fall in love with a rural guy, and I'm really glad I did, because for 35 years he and I have lived in, supported, and been part of a community, a rural community of which I am very, very proud.

You, Edmonton-Gold Bar, and some of you are very proud of Edmonton, and I love Edmonton and have a great affiliation since I've spent so much time here. A beautiful city, a beautiful river valley, but I love rural Alberta. Now, should I have to apologize for living, working, breathing, raising children, being part of a community because I'm a rural Albertan? I should not have to, and I will not. I should not have to give up my rightful place as the MLA representing that area. We have the growth. We have the numbers. Farther east they didn't have the growth and they didn't have the numbers, and that's what the commission took a look at. They gerrymandered themselves, hon. Minister of Justice. They took my area and decided to fix it to make sure that the eastern part was looked after. Well, people don't like it, and I don't like it. I'm not happy with it, and I will not accept it. I earned my place in this Assembly. My people sent me here to tell you, to tell Albertans what they want me to say, do, vote on, and be part of. They don't like this report, they don't like this motion, and they will not accept it. We don't have to accept this report. We don't have to like one iota of it.

As far as I'm concerned, these figures were fed into a computer. The computer spit them out and said, "Listen, everybody; this will be constituency A, B, C, D, E, F, and so forth and so on," until we had 83. It didn't take into consideration community. It didn't take into consideration relationships. The people in my constituency on the Lacombe side have a wonderful relationship with each other. They get along with the county. The towns work together. Not only is this to lose an MLA from either Lacombe or Ponoka – and I have a great deal of respect for the hon. Member for Ponoka-Rimbey. I don't want to go up against him in an election, nor does he, I'm sure, want to go up against me. He had his numbers; I had my numbers. I thought we were fine.

But I'll tell you what this has done. This has split my community.

My municipal leaders are shaking their heads. I have one community that now is to be part and parcel of Red Deer-North. I think the world of the MLA for Red Deer-North. She is one of the best MLAs here. She talks about the Red Deer Rebels, the Red Deer Rebels, the Red Deer Rebels, a great hockey team. But, unfortunately, my town of Blackfalds does not want to be part of Red Deer-North, nor should they be. They're a community of 3,800 people. They're rural. They get along well with the town of Lacombe, with the Wolf Creek school division, with Lacombe county. They have rural issues, and they want to remain part of a rural constituency, and as their MLA I have to agree. That is the best fit. The hon. MLA for Red Deer-North and I have talked. She only wants what's best for the people of Blackfalds.

Now, Blackfalds is an interesting community because per capita in Alberta they have the highest growth rate and the most number of babies born in the entire province. Does that sound to you like a community that's not growing? I don't think so. And you know something? The bottom line is that if you asked one of those members of that commission why they did this, they'd say: well, 90 percent of Blackfalds work in Red Deer. Well, I got news for you. Ninety-five percent of the people that live in Lacombe work in Red Deer, my husband included, but we don't want to live in Red Deer. We like to shop in Red Deer. We like to go to hockey games in Red Deer. We like to eat out in Red Deer. But, by gosh, we don't want to live in Red Deer. We don't want to vote in Red Deer. We don't want to elect our town councils from Red Deer. We want to be rural, and the reason why we're rural in Lacombe is because we're close to Edmonton, we're close to Calgary, and we're very close to Red Deer. But we're rural, and we like it, and that's the way we want to be.

I feel very, very badly that this commission didn't hear the first go-round, didn't hear what my people had to say the second go-round, and now I have to stand before you tonight and tell you that as the representative for Lacombe-Stettler I cannot support this motion. I cannot support the work that the commission has done. My political career could well be on the line, but my people, my town of Lacombe council, my town of Blackfalds council, my Lacombe county council, and my Wolf Creek school division, plus all of the people I see in the drugstore, the grocery store, at the coffee shop, and the people that sit on my executive as part of the political process that I must go through want me to say: this is ridiculous. So this is what I'm saying.

The hon. member that I've know long before I was ever here, the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, said it best when he said to the commission: "You didn't have to use these figures. You didn't have to do it this way. You could have reduced it, and everyone in the province would have been looked after and satisfied." But, instead, no. I personally have a great deal of respect for many members that were on that commission, but I will say it publicly because I've said it to each and every one of them: I don't think they did their job. I don't think they did their job properly. I think they fed the information into a computer; the numbers came out.

Part of the rationale behind all of this is to take a look at community, to take a look at what fits, to take a look at natural boundaries. My town of Blackfalds has a natural boundary. It's a river. It's been there since the beginning of time. Lo and behold, Lacombe county made it their county boundary. So we have the river that was the boundary between what was part of Lacombe-Stettler and part of Red Deer-North, and Lacombe county had it as their boundary. Lo and behold, they just forgot about this river. It wasn't part and parcel of it. They didn't look at community. They didn't look at relationships. They didn't look at needs. What did they look at? Other members of this Assembly, colleagues on my side, colleagues on that side, have said that there are problems here. Well, if there are problems, folks, let's change it. Let's put a new commission in place. Let's put in new guidelines, new criteria. Let's see what fits. Let's make it work.

I would really be remiss tonight if I didn't stand up here and say that what I'm telling you tonight is from me. It's from the heart. I have no notes. But it's also from all those councils, all those people in my community that have said: "No, Judy. Don't let this happen. This can't happen. Why is it happening to us? Why are you and the hon. Member for Ponoka-Rimbey going to have to fight it out?" Folks, I've been through a nomination before. In fact, I've been through two nominations. I've been here 10 years, and in 10 years I've never had a community get off their duff and speak out and speak up and say: no, we are not going to accept this.

Do it if you want, hon. members. Do it if you must, but I'll tell you that our Premier, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, talks always about respect for each other in this Assembly. I respect what the hon. member here has said about Edmonton. I respect the councils here, and I wish my councils could be. I praise you people for spending the amount of money that you have on this issue, because it's a serious issue. My people tell me that democracy is questionable if this happens. The people from Blackfalds tell me that their democratic right is lost. There's no way that they will be able to run and be an MLA being part of Red Deer-North.

I am saying to all of you in this Assembly: if it isn't you this year, it might be you eight years from now or 16 years from now. I'm asking you for consideration for what I'm saying on behalf of the people I represent. I've represented 35,000 people that have been very, very happy with their lot in life, with their representation. They feel that that's threatened, I feel that it's threatened, and I'm asking you to say no to Motion 13. Thirteen has never been my lucky number, and this particular motion was tabled on February 19, which is my birthday, and when you're my age, birthdays aren't a happy thing either.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Two things before I recognize the next speaker. One is that we now are under Standing Order 29(2), questions and comments.

Before I call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, did you have a question or comment that you wished to . . . Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, questions and comments.

Mr. Hutton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the hon. member if she could tell us what she really thinks.

Mrs. Gordon: If the hon. member has another hour or two. I could take him for coffee later, Deputy Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Any further comments or questions?

Okay. Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona – I will eventually. I'm sorry that it's a Solomonic exercise that I have. Instead of having two mothers with one baby, I have a whole bunch of people who want to speak. [interjection] That's Solomon. It's a passage from one of the books. I have so many people who want to speak. I'm sorry; we just have to take one at a time. So it will be a government member and then an opposition member.

This is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After listening to the passionate speech from my hon. colleague from Lacombe-Stettler, I don't think I need any more persuasion that this report needs fixing before we pass it. We can't let this report go through. Our colleagues from the city council are sitting up there watching us tonight debate this motion. I want to congratulate the Edmonton city council for taking a very strong position in trying to convince this House, this Legislature, that this report is flawed and it shouldn't be passed in its present form.

I also want to congratulate the Electoral Boundaries Commission on a job reasonably well done. There's no doubt that the commission had to balance many variables, including the principles of effective representation – I think we have to be respectful of the commission's work to some degree – and representation by population, the requirements of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, and the needs of heterogeneous communities, including the major cities and the neighbourhoods within them, smaller cities, urbanized areas, and rural Alberta. It can't be easy to find the balance between these sometimes competing aspects, and they have worked hard to reconcile them.

However, I would be failing my constituents, my fellow Edmontonians, and the voters of Alberta if I didn't also raise some concerns with this report. I'd like to quote Gary Hanson, general manager and chief operating officer of West Edmonton Mall. He says, and I quote, that representation by population is fundamental to democratic society. Voter parity should be one of the first considerations in determining electoral boundaries. Although Edmonton did not have the growth that Calgary did prior to the 2001 census, it did have a substantial growth rate of 8.7 percent and has continued to grow. The commission's recommendations do not take this into consideration nor the major role the city of Edmonton plays in the economic success and social growth of the province. End of quote.

The fundamental principle of our democracy is the notion of one person, one vote. Without this principle we can't guarantee that every Alberta voter has equal say to determine the path that our province will take. At the last election a vote in some parts of rural Alberta was equal to two votes in Edmonton and three in Calgary-Shaw. The final report of the EBC has improved greatly on the situation, but still there is a range from 32 percent below the provincial average to 16 percent above, Mr. Speaker. Allowing variances of close to 25 percent in a significant number of ridings suggests that the problems remain.

In spite of the best efforts of this commission there appears to be built into their report a systematic bias or tilt which shifts voting power towards some citizens at the expense of others. Relative equality of voting power is a principle that has been upheld by the courts in a number of provinces, including our own. It is possible to have significantly lower variations in population and thus better reflect the principles of representation by population. The New Democrat opposition recommended to the commission that constituency populations be kept to within 10 percent of the average, as has been achieved in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. According to the principle of equality of voting power, Edmonton's population in 2001 warranted more than 18.5 ridings, Mr. Speaker.

To quote the minority report:

Edmonton has grown dramatically since the 2001 Census was completed. According to Economic Development Edmonton, in 2001 the population of Edmonton grew by 4.5%, exceeding the Conference Board of Canada's forecast that it would be the fastest growing city in Canada with a growth rate of 4.1%. The Conference Board of Canada forecasts Edmonton's growth at 2.4% for 2002 and 4.5% for 2003 [the current year].

According to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in the first six months of 2002, single family housing starts in Edmonton increased by 50% compared to the same period last year. In May of 2002 there was a 95% jump in single and multiple housing starts compared to May, 2001, and in June the increase over last year's figures was 91%.

In other words, Edmonton's rapid growth has been occurring since the 2001 Census and is forecast to continue.

Therefore, by reducing the number of seats in Edmonton, the commission would cause Edmonton to be underrepresented until after the census of 2011 and through at least two provincial elections.

Again to quote the minority report of the commission:

The challenge is to find ways to get as close as possible to voter parity without violating anyone's right to effective representation. Inevitably, this requires additional human and financial resources to provide the physical means to ensure effective representation for all Albertans, including more rural constituency offices and staff, increased air travel, more assistance with ground travel, and high quality communications technology. The capacity to do this rests in the will of the Legislative Assembly, not in taking a division [away] from Edmonton.

The definition of effective representation is vague. It would seem that the ease with which the MLA and constituents are able to have access to each other is the measurement of effective representation. However, ensuring adequate access and addressing access issues is the responsibility of Member Services, not of the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

At one time access required face to face contact. Distance, area, and population density were critical factors in determining the effectiveness of representation. However, in the 21st century, access means communicating efficiently and expediently.

The difficulties of representing a rural riding are well known. As a counterpoint, there are additional difficulties internal in some urban constituencies. Many are able to affect the ability of an MLA to represent their constituents, particularly those in inner-city areas. These include many socioeconomic concerns such as high levels of poverty, illiteracy, unemployment, and linguistic diversity. None of these variables were included in the calculations of the matrix despite the fact that Alberta Finance collects detailed demographic data on provincial ridings that include this information.

A final quote from the minority report, Mr. Speaker, with your permission:

Although linear distance, geographic area, and low population density are viewed as potential barriers to effective representation and are therefore measured and compared, cultural distance as defined by linguistic, ethnic, religious, cultural and racial diversity is not. Neither is the social distance that is created by the fact that large cities are magnets for the physically, mentally, emotionally, and spiritually unwell. Similarly, vertical distance and high population density can be daunting because any kind of access to residents of apartment blocks and high rises is often impossible. The anonymity and social isolation of city dwellers provides another invisible distance.

The minority report continues.

These distances, unlike linear distance, cannot be bridged by technology because there must be social learning, which can come only from interpersonal contact. Although these distances make effective representation in some Edmonton constituencies extremely difficult, they were not taken into consideration in the distribution of electoral divisions.

Section 14 of the act specifically says that the commission is allowed to take other considerations into account and is not restricted to only those listed in the act. If sparse population and the distance of some rural constituencies pose challenges for effective representation, so do the high levels of poverty, illiteracy, unemployment, and linguistic diversity of some urban constituencies.

Currently Edmonton's inner city is divided between three ridings: Edmonton-Centre, Edmonton-Norwood, and Edmonton-Highlands. The interim report proposes that Edmonton-Gold Bar cross the river and take in the central communities of Riverdale, Boyle Street, and McCauley. In addition, Edmonton-Centre, Edmonton-Highlands, Edmonton-Norwood, and Edmonton-Calder would represent parts of the inner city. I'd like to quote from a letter from Ewen Nelson, vice-president of the Boyle Street Community League. Mr. Nelson says:

We have grave concerns about the proposed changes. Edmonton's inner city communities are a complex mixture of people of widely varying needs, and the residents of those communities often have great difficulties getting those needs met. One source of assistance has always been the Member of the Legislative Assembly for the area. By reducing the number of Edmonton ridings, the MLAs for those ridings will be less able to assist citizens in need.

We also have great reservations about losing our connection to Edmonton-Highlands. In the Highlands riding, Boyle Street has much in common with other communities. Issues facing Boyle Street are similar to those facing McCauley, Cromdale, and other nearby communities. We have little in common with the communities in Edmonton-Gold Bar, and fear that Boyle Street issues could get lost or overlooked.

Central neighbourhoods share a community of interests. These include ethnically diverse populations and a high percentage of residents who live in rental accommodation. By eliminating one inner city riding and diluting the inner city by further dividing it between more ridings with higher population, the Commission's recommendations will reduce the ability of inner city residents to voice their concerns.

Specifically, residents of Edmonton's inner city would be better represented if the riding of Edmonton-Norwood is retained, Mr. Speaker. Thirty-one percent of Edmonton-Norwood residents do not speak English at home. This presents communication barriers for MLAs, making more difficult effective representation of their constituents. As well, family incomes in that riding are 38 percent below the provincial average. Therefore, residents of Edmonton-Norwood may rely more on government services and thus depend on the assistance and advocacy provided by their MLA.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to move an amendment to the motion on behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Highlands. It's a motion which is very simple. It adds the following to the motion. Before I formally move it, I'd just like to read it into the minutes. The amendment would be as follows, that it will add to the end of the motion: "with the exception of the report's recommendation to remove one electoral division from the city of Edmonton."

I now would like to have this amendment distributed, and with your instructions I will read it into the record of the House and wait until it is distributed until I conclude my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, this will be amendment A1, and you may commence. You've moved it.

Dr. Pannu: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I move amendment A1 to Motion 13 on behalf of my colleague, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

10:00

Mr. Speaker, if this amendment is voted on by the House and accepted, in effect it will restore the 19th seat to Edmonton. By restoring that seat to Edmonton, we can prevent many of the problems that have arisen in the commission's final report including the underrepresentation of Edmonton for at least the next two elections, the division of community interests in central Edmonton, and the dilution of inner-city concerns within more and larger ridings.

I will finish my remarks with a final quote, this one from Edmonton city councillor Stephen Mandel. Councillor Mandel states:

Any decision to reduce Edmonton's representation in the Alberta legislature is unreasonable. Edmonton's population is growing at a substantial pace that makes the recent census out of touch with reality. That is by far not the primary reason. One only has to read the arguments put forward by the minority report of the committee to understand that a reduction is shortsighted and extremely punitive. I encourage all of our Legislators to support the rights of Edmontonians to be properly represented with the maintenance of our current 19 seats.

The Deputy Speaker: You have one more minute, hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just about to conclude.

I urge all members, therefore, to support this amendment, and I certainly would like the House to pay attention to what my hon. colleague from Lacombe-Stettler has to say. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Point of Order Admissibility of Amendment

Mr. Stevens: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to raise a point of order with respect to this particular notice of amendment. I would refer you to Standing Order 23(1), which deals with introducing "any matter in debate which offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." Referring to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, page 176, paragraph 578(2) deals with "an amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negated is out of order."

The motion put forward basically says that there will be an addition of the words "with the exception of the report's recommendation to remove one electoral division from the city of Edmonton." This particular report provides that there will be 83 specific constituencies, and one of those specific constituencies recommended in the report is not the electoral division that was eliminated, namely Edmonton-Norwood. Therefore, the effect of this particular motion, Mr. Speaker, is that there will be 84 constituencies. That is what it means. The fact is that under the legislation pursuant to which the report was done, there must be 83 constituencies. Therefore, on the face of it, Mr. Speaker, this particular notice of amendment is out of order.

The Deputy Speaker: A comment on the point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to suggest respectfully that there's no substance to the point of order raised here because the Beauchesne quotation that was made here is, "An amendment approving part of a motion and disapproving the remainder is out of order," and my amendment does not in any way disapprove the remainder of the motion before the House. It simply adds on to that which is already before the House. So there is no attempt here to disapprove anything. The intent of the amendment is simply to add on to the existing motion before the House. So, in my judgment, I hope you will rule that the point of order is out of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Further discussion on this?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, while I certainly understand the rationale for bringing forward this type of an amendment, I have to support the argument by the Deputy Government House Leader that it's out of order because in fact the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act provides for 83 seats and the effect of this motion would be to create 84 seats because it would approve the report of the Boundaries Commission with the exception of Edmonton. By doing that, it increases the number of seats, and that is contrary to an act of the Legislature, so it offends the Standing Order. As much as I would like to concur in the amendment because of what the member is trying to do, it's not possible under the rules of the House to have a motion of the House violate an act of the House.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, it's a common practice in this House when amendments are brought forward that they need the approval of Parliamentary Counsel before they can be put in order on the floor of this Assembly, so before we go further in this debate, I believe we should have an explanation from Parliamentary Counsel giving us the basis on which this particular amendment was approved.

The Deputy Speaker: On that particular thought, the Parliamentary Counsel and Clerks at the table are here to advise the Speaker, and the Speaker is the one who can't pass the buck but gets advice from hon. members who are lawyers and Parliamentary Counsel who are lawyers. Having only the background of teaching, it's a challenge. If there is any further assistance – I think we've already had one from you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but if there are no others . . . You have something cogent to add to this dilemma?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, with your permission if I may quote from Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms the purpose of amendments. It's Beauchesne 567. It says that the object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original question.

I submit to you and to the House, Mr. Speaker, that the intent of the amendment that I've made is simply to increase the acceptability of Motion 13 that is before the House. So I would request you to rule the point of order as being out of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, thank you for all your assistance in dealing with this matter. The hon. Minister of Gaming is quite right in referring us to 579. I think that's the reference you had, hon. member. At least that was the page you were talking about, and the reference was there, which is:

An amendment may not raise a new question which can only be considered as a distinct motion after proper notice.

Is that what you were . . .

Mr. Stevens: The reference, Mr. Speaker, so that there's clarity on the point, is at page 176, paragraph 578(2), which reads:

An amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negated is out of order.

That's the 6th edition.

10:10

The Deputy Speaker: I don't have the benefit of prolonged years studying the law, but it would seem to me that, first of all, the reference that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona came up with, that is to say Beauchesne 567, would perhaps apply here.

The object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability or to present to the House a different proposition as an alternative to the original . . .

So that would occur to me as being relevant. The amendment would appear to be in order. It is an acceptable form as was observed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, and it modifies the main question to increase its acceptability which is, of course, what 567 directs. It's not a direct negative of the main motion. When all else is to be considered, the remedy lies with the House, and that is that they can simply defeat this amendment, and we can move on with hearing others who wish to speak to the motion. So I would rule that the amendment is in order. Now I am standing here, and hon. Government House Leader, you wish to challenge that?

Mr. Hancock: I'd love to, Mr. Speaker, but I respect you too much, so I'll just speak to the amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: Sorry then.

Before we go forward, I have another request to make. I wonder if the Assembly would agree to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this evening council was introduced, but our mayor wasn't in attendance at that time. He has since joined us for what will be probably the last 45 minutes of debate this evening, and we certainly appreciate his presence here and his strong support of Edmonton along with all of the council in terms of ensuring that we retain at least the number of seats we had before. I see that he's risen. Please welcome him to this Assembly.

head: Government Motions

The Deputy Speaker: This is a debatable motion, so the hon. Government House Leader on amendment A1.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to speak against the motion. I do believe that your ruling was incorrect in that, but we will have to deal with it in the House and deal with it in the House by defeating the amendment. As much as I would love to concur with what the member is trying to accomplish by passing the motion, we would be violating an act of the House, that act of the House, the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, which says that we have 83 seats. The effect of passing this amendment would create 84 seats, and the House cannot pass a resolution, with all due respect, which violates an act of the House. If we wanted to do that, we ought to have amended the act and added an extra seat.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to rise to engage in this debate. I think the spirit of this amendment is the right spirit. I think it's motivated for all the right reasons, reasons that I know that we in the Liberal caucus share strongly, that Edmonton should not be losing a seat. The census data shows Edmonton should not be losing a seat even if there was no accounting made to the growth that's occurred since the census, so clearly what motivates this amendment is to be admired and respected and supported.

I find myself, however, agreeing with the members from the government side that this is, in this case, not a workable amendment.

It's not workable for a couple of reasons. There's no way, as the Government House Leader and I think deputy House Leader pointed out, that we can leave Edmonton where it is and leave the rest of the province where it is. We're going to end up with 84 seats, and as they pointed out, that's clearly against the law, against the act that this is working from. If we are to leave the city of Edmonton with the number of seats that it has, we have to make an adjustment somewhere else. That means we have to open up the rest of the report, which is not allowed under this particular amendment.

I would also join in the spirit of the Member for Lacombe-Stettler that this amendment is not fair to other parts of the province either. So if we are, as I believe we should, going to open things up to respect the needs of Edmonton, then surely as Albertans, as citizens of this entire province we have to respect the needs of every other community as well.

So while I have no doubt of the sincerity and goodwill and rightness of the spirit behind this amendment, I for one find it unworkable and unfair and on that basis cannot support it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the minister.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my experience when dealing with amendments, one should not try to bring in through the back door that which cannot be brought in through the front door, which this clearly tries to do. Therefore, the amendment in my opinion is clearly out of order. However, since we do have a question on it, may I call the question?

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you, hon. member. I think that if you wish to debate that the ruling was improper or wrong, there's another venue for it.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To follow some of my learned colleagues on what is being intended here, I guess I would ask the Speaker, based on perhaps new information in front of him, that in fact he take a few moments to consider the ruling that he's made. I understand that there's some new information for the Speaker to consider prior to what I believe to be not even necessary to be had on this particular motion because, as the hon. member across the way has mentioned relative to it, it is not in my view in order. I understand that the Speaker has some new information, and I'd only ask that the Speaker consider the new information prior to considering another ruling based on the new information he has.

The Deputy Speaker: The Speaker has some new information, and that confirms the earlier decision. If you really object further to it, you have the remedy at hand. You just need to vote against the amendment. I think that's enough on these rulings. Thank you, hon. member.

Are you ready for the question?

Dr. Pannu: May I conclude the debate?

The Deputy Speaker: No, that for sure you can't do. When you make an amendment, you don't have a conclusion right.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on the motion itself.

Mr. Jonson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. First I'd like to make a few comments with respect to an issue which seems to be arising and I hope will not dominate this particular debate. I believe it was the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that seemed to be referring to there being a viewpoint that rural areas were there to serve the cities, sort of a hinterland. We certainly in the rural areas do not look upon it that way at all. We have our contribution to make to the future and to the health of the province, and we know that the cities do as well, and we can't do without each other. We need to work in a direction of continued co-operation for the betterment of all the people in all areas of the province.

To address the whole matter of the electoral boundaries report, Mr. Speaker, I would first like to recognize that the task assigned to one of these committees is certainly a challenging one, particularly in a province that has a growing population and is changing somewhat in terms of its overall distribution as a population. I'd like to acknowledge that the committee did not have the luxury of being able to solve problems by adding seats. That is something that, as I recall, was a possibility in previous examinations of electoral boundaries. So they did have a set number of seats to deal with, and the addition of three or four seats was not an alternative that would get you out of some of the challenges that the commission faced.

I would also like to acknowledge that the commission did make its rounds of the province after its interim report, and as the Member for Lacombe-Stettler indicated, they did their job of coming to various parts of the province and hearing submissions, that came in considerable numbers from our area and the Member for Lacombe-Stettler's area. There was representation there from individuals, from local governments, and there was certainly concern expressed at that particular time.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to indicate, before commenting further specifically on the report, that I've had the fortune or bad fortune to have been involved in looking at electoral boundaries reports for some 40 years. You might wonder how I get to that number. My job before being in politics was that of being a schoolteacher, a teacher of social studies, and I can remember this being part of the political process that I endeavoured to explain to my students on a number of occasions. I must admit that I was successful, I think, as a school teacher and probably as a politician in being able to rationalize and to explain and to convince my constituents once I became an MLA that when these electoral boundaries reviews came around, yes, there were changes. Some we did not particularly like, but they had a rationale for them, and they were made within certain rules and certain guidelines which Electoral Boundaries Commissions had established over several decades.

Now, this brings up what I think to me are the major concerns that I have with this particular report. The documents that are available for anyone to peruse outline the issues that should concern an Electoral Boundaries Commission. One of them, of course, is the issue of sparsity and density of population, and as these rules have evolved, there has been a latitude allowed in the instructions that have been given to the Electoral Boundaries Commission for a variance of plus or minus 25 percent of the average voting population of constituencies. Now, it would appear, Mr. Speaker, that in the case of Ponoka-Rimbey – and I have to mention, of course, Lacombe-Stettler – that particular latitude was not utilized or considered. Both constituencies are well within the range of the plus or minus 25 percent as far as population is concerned. That does not seem to have been a particular consideration. We are both quite viable in terms of existing numbers and also conform to the current rules or policies that an Electoral Boundaries Commission is to look at and to consider.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker – and this is another very grave concern, and I'm sure it is for perhaps some other members of the Assembly and certainly would be the case with the Member for Lacombe-Stettler – is that wherever possible boundaries should follow municipal boundaries because there has to be a co-ordination with respect to the services that are provided, the issues that have to be dealt with, and that in the case of Ponoka-Rimbey seems to have been very much ignored.

Also, there is supposed to be recognition of community of interests. Now, certainly Ponoka-Rimbey functions quite well. It is mainly a farming or agricultural area, but it does have its oil and natural gas, it does have its urban businesses, and it is a very, very cohesive group. The local governments get along with each other. There's no particular issue there.

The other issue that I'd like to bring up, too, is that also to be considered is the trend in terms of population growth and the development of the area. Now, Mr. Speaker, as has already been mentioned, the corridor along highway 2 is an area of fairly rapid growth and steady growth, and all projections are that a constituency such as Ponoka-Rimbey will be growing in terms of population. It is not as if it is flat-lining or it is dormant in some way, and it's certainly not declining in terms of its population. So it is not likely, in any way of looking at the future, to be a constituency that is going to drop below that minus 25 percent. So that's another item to be considered as well.

Then the one that really is most glaring, I think, is, as I said, that there should be some respect for community of interests, the cohesiveness of certain areas of the population in the constituency, and there should be some respect shown to the role that local government has to play and the importance and the common sense that's involved in the electoral boundaries coinciding as much as possible with the municipal boundaries in the constituency.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't want to be too critical of the drafters of the report, but I recall back in American political history that a term called gerrymandering was developed. I must admit that the gerrymandering concept was developed by politicians, not by electoral boundaries commissions. Nevertheless, the maps that have come out – and I'll speak particularly of my own constituency – start to get that aura of a salamander. That is, they go round and round and round and round with no seeming connection to the boundaries of local government or natural geographic features or particular community interests. While I do very much appreciate the amendment that was made between the interim report and the final report of the commission whereby there was a sliver of land added to Ponoka-Rimbey which went around the town of Rimbey and brought it back into the constituency, the fact of the matter is that the two or three townships on each side of that particular highway, highway 53, are in two different constituencies. So it is a troubling development there as well.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that despite the fact that I very much appreciate that this is a very difficult task that the Electoral Boundaries Commission had – and in this particular case I have to go as an individual with my overall experience over the years with representing this particular area of the province and the history of boundaries commissions – I do find that we have a rather unique situation here where the various electoral commissions table of contents, chapter E-3 of a document that I have before me, which is the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, refers very, very distinctly to there having to be consideration of municipal and other important boundaries. There has to be consideration of what I would call service areas, and there should be consideration of the fact, by the very legislation that I have before me and that we have before us in this Assembly, that there can be a variation of plus or minus 25 percent from an average constituency population number. Really, I do not see the rationale in anything that is happening within the two constituencies in question that should indicate that we need to amalgamate the two constituencies, that we should amalgamate them in such a way that natural corridors as far as transportation and trade and other association will be split in various directions in a very dysfunctional way.

Further, Mr. Speaker, one of the areas that I have concern over, although I must acknowledge that I do not have the latest documentation on this particular matter, is that in the case of Ponoka-Rimbey as it currently exists, we have a very large First Nations population. Their numbers have been chronically underestimated as far as the voting population is concerned, and that is something that does not seem to have been acknowledged and accounted for with respect to the deliberations of the commission.

So, overall, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we have a situation here where the constituencies in question – but I will speak specifically for Ponoka-Rimbey. Ponoka-Rimbey I think has had effective representation over many, many years, not just since I've been there, but we do our best, and I'm sure that the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler does as well. We are a growth area. We currently come within the parameters that are required to have two distinct constituencies in that particular part of the province. We have numerous municipal governments to be served. We have a varied business base.

I do take issue with the contents of the boundaries report. As I've said, it's the first time that I have done so in a number of roles. I've not argued formally against a boundaries report before, but I do think that in this particular case for the reasons that I've outlined, I will not be able to support and to represent to my constituencies that I agree with this report.

The Deputy Speaker: Any comments or questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to join in this discussion, but I have to say immediately and right off the top that I do not concur with the recommendations of the final report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission, and I do not support Government Motion 13 to accept and concur in these recommendations.

I just have a wee little quote that I found here that sort of sums up how I'm feeling about all of what's gone on here. This is from Donald and Elenore Laird from The Art of Getting Things Done:

Next to being right, the best of all things is to be clearly and definitely wrong, because you will come out somewhere. If you go buzzing about between right and wrong, vibrating and fluctuating, you come out nowhere; but if you are absolutely and thoroughly wrong, you have the good fortune of knocking against the facts that set you straight again.

And I think – I hope – that is the situation that we find ourselves in with this report. It is thoroughly wrong. A number of other members have spoken eloquently about what has been missed in the report or the criteria that was set up that doesn't work for them. We must not accept the recommendations of this Electoral Boundaries Commission. It is irrevocably wrong, wrong, wrong, and we should not support it.

I think overwhelmingly it's wrong, from my point of view, for three reasons. One, it is wrong because Edmonton loses a seat. I appreciate very much the passionate words that have been spoken by the members for Lacombe-Stettler and Ponoka-Rimbey, and good on them for speaking so eloquently on behalf of their constituencies. I am an MLA from Edmonton, and I am concerned about Edmonton losing a seat, and that's how I am approaching this debate. I think that it's important throughout this debate that we not fall to the Conservative ideology that tends to say: if you're going to give something somewhere, then you have to take something away. I don't think that that has to be put into play here, and I'm certainly not approaching it that way, that in order to get what I want for Edmonton, I would therefore turn around and take it away from somebody else. I'm not approaching that debate this way. I just think that what's been put forward by this Electoral Boundaries Commission is wrong, wrong, wrong.

The other two reasons why I will not concur with the recommendations here. Number one was Edmonton is losing a seat. Number two, I find that what's being proposed in one of the changes, particularly to the community of Boyle-McCauley, is cruel and unfair. I'll come back to that later. Thirdly, I find that the process or more specifically the criteria that's used in the matrix is old and tired and is not taking into consideration a number of things that are very important in my community and I think in Edmonton.

I appeared before the Electoral Boundaries Commission three times. I was invited to appear before the commissioners to talk about what it was like representing an inner-city urban community. I appeared along with my colleague for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who talked about representing sort of a suburban riding in a metropolitan area, that being the riding of Edmonton-Ellerslie. I also appeared in person at the very first hearing that was held in June in Edmonton, and I appeared again at the second hearing. So I have taken every opportunity available to me to appear before this commission to plead my case on behalf of Edmonton and on behalf of my constituents in Edmonton-Centre and even, casting the net wider, on behalf of those who live in Boyle-McCauley.

The first time I appeared, I was asking the committee to please make sure that it respected the natural community boundaries, and that's one of the reasons that I am so unhappy with the report that we find in front of us. It did not respect those natural community boundaries, and I thought that that was just happening in the city. Having listened to the Member for Lacombe-Stettler, obviously there's a natural boundary there that's also not being respected, and I think it works very much against the work we're trying to do as legislators when we allow communities to be carved up or broken apart artificially.

So when I first appeared, I was trying to talk about upholding those communities and their natural boundaries. I was also trying to capture three apartment buildings that were ending up being orphaned. They were just outside of my riding but on the very far edge of Edmonton-Highlands, and quite often just being where they were situated, sort of right in the middle of downtown, they tended to get orphaned, and I wanted to make sure that they were going to be captured.

I talked about what it was like representing an urban riding and the different pressures that were on us and made a plea for constituency budgets and the pressures that are on constituency budgets. I don't know what happens in rural areas, but I was speaking about the pressures that were on my constituency budgets, in particular things like the cost of translation. I have multi, multi languages and many different ethnic backgrounds that are represented in my community, and if I really want to speak to those communities, then I'm going to have to translate, and if I'm really going to speak to them, I'd have to translate into between six and 10 languages, which is a cost factor. So by way of example, that's what I was talking about.

The second time I appeared at the hearing, I was specifically addressing what had been proposed in the draft report – I actually have my notes with me from that – and I was talking again about the need to maintain 19 seats in Edmonton, recognizing a number of the points that have already been raised here: that Edmonton continues to grow, that the growth rate since the census has been particularly noteworthy, that I did not want to see the kind of imbalance created in Edmonton that we created through the last electoral boundary change which resulted in such pressures in Calgary. I felt that we needed to challenge the commission to work more with technology and innovation that was available. I believed very strongly in one person, one vote, and I did not want to see the votes of the constituents in Edmonton-Centre being worth less, and the commission was not able to give me and I think other Edmontonians the arguments to convince that long-held format of one person, one vote. I think that my constituent's vote is just as valuable and should have equal weight as one from any other riding, even compared to rural ridings, and I felt that that was not happening.

I think that what's important here is that we use the golden rule, that we use respect, and I think we need to reject this motion. We need to use whatever is available to us as legislators – if that means changing the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, so be it – so that we can create a new Electoral Boundaries Commission that will approach this again. Fine. We have the power to do it. Let's be grown up. Let's do it. I think that with that it's important to set before that Electoral Boundaries Commission, if we do get a new one, that respect is key. This should not be something that's based on my way or the highway or might makes right or if I'm right, you're wrong or if somebody gets something, someone else loses something. It's just not a constructive way to approach all of this, and there are a number of other factors that should be weighed in.

Now, specifically I want to look at what is currently under the matrix that's being used, and I felt that there were a number of biases here and also a number of things that were not taken into consideration. For example, the matrix takes into consideration the number of elected bodies – and their definition of that is pretty narrow – that a member may have to deal with as part of the criteria for the matrix. So those who have to deal with a number of city councils or a number of town councils, for example, are going to weigh higher on the matrix. It does not take into consideration the situation that I think many of us in the urban ridings now find ourselves in where we are also dealing with elected bodies who are not recognized by this matrix structure; for example, business revitalization zones.

I have four, I think, in Edmonton-Centre, and I know that a number of my colleagues in this city also deal with them. These are areas where people are elected to represent the business interests in a given area. They talk about revitalization; they talk about taxation; they talk about streetscapes. They talk about how they are going to work together as a community and how they interact with the other communities and constituencies that are surrounding them. You know, if we're going to be talking about how difficult it is for an MLA to represent, how many nights you work, how many weekends you work, certainly the meetings with those groups, in my mind, are just as vital and just as key to the health of a community as a meeting with a town council. It's another night, if that's how we're breaking it down and judging it. So the matrix is not taking into consideration things like that.

It's not taking into consideration the range of socioeconomic households that one can be dealing with. I don't have proof, but I've been told a number of times by those that do have proof that Edmonton-Centre is one of the widest ranging constituencies, going from the very, very well-to-do – Wayne Gretzky used to live in a very high-end condominium on Victoria Park Road in my riding – right down to the people that are living underneath the bridge behind my office and everything in between. So we have a much wider range of what kind of resources people have to approach, and that also creates its own set of challenges in representing people. That's not taken into consideration.

Distance, how far people have to travel, is very important when we look at the matrix. The further you have to travel, the more difficult it is in being considered a factor in how you represent people. Yes, I can certainly see how that would be an issue for some, but again I think that there are other issues and factors, like language barriers, like the fact that the cities tend to attract those who are seeking resources, that are not taken into consideration that do play very much for us representing urban ridings.

For example, in Edmonton-Centre I have a number of people with mental health issues. I have a number of group homes. I have a number of apartment buildings actually that cater to people with mental health issues. I have the CNIB. I've got a number of organizations that are catering to people that need help, and thus I get the people who need help. They're going to cluster around those services. In many cases, unfortunately, the services for one or two people who are in need of CNIB are not available in the rural areas, and they're going to move to the city. That's okay. That's where the services are for them. But it also needs to be considered as a factor in how you represent people and how you access your MLA and how difficult that is.

I'm just finding that the matrix that this Electoral Boundaries Commission looked at is old and tired and cranky, and it is not taking into consideration what it's really like in 2003 to try and represent vibrant communities. That's not to say that my community, my constituency is any better than anyone else's. I think it is, but I'm willing to say that all 83 constituencies in Alberta are equally important, and we value them all. It's just different. I don't think that we should be saying that it's terribly easy to represent one, and therefore they don't get the resources.

Overall I think that this Electoral Boundaries Commission did not do a good job. Now, whether it was because what it was charged with hampered them in some way, whether they fed numbers into a computer, and that was the result, and they were willing to abide by it – I don't know what went wrong, and at this point I don't really care except to learn a lesson so that we don't repeat it. What has been proposed under this Electoral Boundaries report is not acceptable. It is particularly not acceptable to me as an Edmonton MLA that we would lose a seat. Obviously, there are other issues that have been brought up in this House, argued equally fervently and perhaps even better than I have been able to make my own case.

So I urge all members to vote against the acceptance of this report. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Question or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre what she would do. It is all fine and well to bemoan the loss of a seat in Edmonton, and I certainly don't criticize her for taking that position. But would she increase the number of seats from its current number, or would she pull another one out from rural Alberta? How would she justify that after listening to the passionate speech from the Member for Lacombe-Stettler?

Ms Blakeman: I think the point is that no one individual in this Assembly is going to be on the next Electoral Boundaries Commission. The point is that we have the ability to reject the report that's put in front of us as being unacceptable and to send it back. Now, we know that the Electoral Boundaries Commission was dissolved as soon as it signed off on the report; therefore, we would have to look at adjusting the existing legislation to create another Electoral Boundaries Commission and send it back to them. I don't think I'm going to have the honour or perhaps the travail of being appointed to that commission. Nonetheless, it's our job in this Assembly to set the criteria for them, and I think that as a group we're more than capable of doing that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you. I wonder if the Member for Edmonton-Centre would, then, advise the House how she would envision the mandate of the Electoral Boundaries Commission to be changed for this hypothetical new commission.

Ms Blakeman: I think that if the member was listening – I spoke at length. In particular, one of my major concerns is the matrix, that I felt needed to be updated and expanded. Certainly, that is I think one of the important components that would need to be changed and set before another Electoral Boundaries Commission.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, would the Member for Edmonton-Centre advocate increasing the number of seats as a method by which the matrix could be expanded?

Ms Blakeman: No, I wouldn't.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How, then, would the Member for Edmonton-Centre square the circle?

Ms Blakeman: Well, the member is giving me a great deal of credit in that somehow he seems to believe that I'm going to be the new Electoral Boundaries Commission all by myself, and I don't think that's appropriate. I think we have the mechanism before us to create a new Electoral Boundaries Commission and to set forth the criteria we want. I've already said that I think we need to update the matrix. Frankly, it's not my job. As much as the member is trying to put it on me, it is not my job to determine all of these.

An Hon. Member: You're critical of the last job.

Ms Blakeman: Absolutely. It is well within my rights to reject the report that's in front of me. Do I have to personally rewrite the new one? No.

The Deputy Speaker: No further questions or comments?

Mr. Marz: Just one question, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering if the member would come up with a suggestion on who she would think would make a good chairman for this new Boundaries Commission since King Solomon is no longer available.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre seemed to be just focusing on the matrix. However, as the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler indicated, I made a presentation to the commission. Quite frankly, we wouldn't have needed to do much of this if we had followed one simple thing, and that is to go to plus or minus 20 percent instead of 15 percent. I wonder if the hon. member would agree with that.

Ms Blakeman: I certainly think that's something that should be included in whatever we look at next because it does address a number of the factors. It seems to me that it particularly addresses some of the factors that are of concern to the people that are representing rural ridings if I'm hearing that correctly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister, in the 12 seconds remaining.

Mr. Lund: The fact is that if we went to plus or minus 20, Edmonton wouldn't lose a seat, we wouldn't lose a rural seat, and Calgary has enough seats so that they could work within what they've already got.

The Deputy Speaker: We're now out of time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora to speak.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd first like to welcome His Worship the mayor, the councillors, and staff who are choosing to come down and watch this titillating debate. This is a very emotional issue as you heard earlier from my wonderful colleague from Lacombe-Stettler.

As the representative for the citizens of Edmonton-Glenora it is important for me to stand and outline my position regarding Motion 13. Mr. Speaker, I will begin by saying that I am very proud to serve the people of Edmonton-Glenora and will continue to do so the best I can for the remainder of this mandate, even the ones that may not be part of my constituency due to this redistribution.

I've been a member of the Progressive Conservative Party for three decades and served in government for two. This will be the third boundary report I have been party to, no pun intended. The arguments and the displeasure have not changed over the decades. As the hon. Justice minister, our Government House Leader, stated, this was an arm's-length commission that was given parameters and principles and criteria that were very objective and solid. The population has moved, migrated, and increased. I cite my hon. colleague from Calgary-Shaw. When she was elected, she had 73,000 people living in her riding. That was a mere two years ago. Today she has 90,000. That is three times the size of my constituency.

I would like to stand before you this evening and say that I am satisfied with the commission's findings, but I can't. I don't want to lose any of my constituents. I don't want to lose a seat in Edmonton. I would like to keep things the way they were, but that would be selfish, self-serving, and subjective, Mr. Speaker.

So what do we do? Well, Mr. Speaker, we could reject the report and take it upon ourselves in this Legislative Assembly to draw suitable lines for the next general election. With an Assembly with a 74-seat majority I'm certain that it would be a very interesting map indeed. The word "gerrymandering" comes to my forebrain when I think of that majority, and I also think that the courts may have some concern and reject any map that we as Legislature members would put forward.

Our second choice, Mr. Speaker, would be to reject the report and have another one struck, and I have to agree again with the Government House Leader in saying that the outcome would probably be marginally changed or minor at best. The third choice is to say that we accept this report, this objective, arm's-length commission's report.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to figuratively pull out my sabre for my constituents in Edmonton-Glenora and for the city of Edmonton in this august House that is steeped in British and Canadian history. I then will put it back in again and accept the principles of this objective, arm's-length report rather than my subjective, personal views. I believe that the citizens of this great province will be well served by the boundary change as it will be hopefully approved in the near future.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments, questions?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a sad event that we're engaged in this evening. I, too, would like to speak against Government Motion 13. For my caucus this is the culmination of a great deal of work. We've been at the process of trying to make sure that Edmonton was treated fairly for a great deal of time. It started when two of our members were asked by the boundaries commission to make a presentation to them before they started their hearings around the province, and it continued with consultations with our caucus before the interim report was made, and presentations were given by the Member for Edmonton-Centre and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

During the second round of consultations, after the interim report, we had the Member for Edmonton-Centre and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar make presentations, and we agreed at that time that we would work through our constituencies so that we could get as wide a number of voices on this subject as we could so that our presentations would truly reflect what Edmontonians considered to be important. So a number of the Edmonton constituencies did make presentations, very good presentations, to the commission. We had a petition urging that one seat not be taken away from the city as this report recommends. We had a Standing Order 30 in the fall of 2002 to try to ward off the recommendation that appears before us now, and we had some discussions with members of Edmonton city council in terms of what we might do as a city to avoid the motion that appears before us this evening. Unfortunately, those efforts have not resulted in what we wanted, and we have Motion 13 before us.

I think that if there's anything good that came out of the boundaries report, it was that the appointment of Bauni Mackay as one of our representatives was a very, very good thing. I think that if you read through the boundaries report, her minority report makes the case for our city eloquently and succinctly. She has done in three pages what many of us won't be able to do in the 15 minutes we're allotted this evening. She has served the city well, and unfortunately her voice was a minority voice on the commission.

As westerners, Mr. Speaker, and as Albertans we're quick to complain about the unfairness of voting systems, particularly when it comes to federal politics and federal institutions. For instance, with respect to the Senate Prince Edward Island has four Senators, and each of those Senators represents 25,000 voters, while in ridings here a Senator represents 105,000 voters. That disparity, that difference in voting power really bothers western Canadians. We also are upset with the number of voters to MPs: one person, one vote in Alberta, one person, two votes in New Brunswick, and one person, four votes in Prince Edward Island. Those discrepancies, those deviations from the norm of one person, one vote really do upset us as Albertans and as westerners, and as I said, we have devised a number of schemes over the years to try to alleviate those differences to no avail. However, when it comes to provincial electoral boundaries, we seem to put away those concerns, and we seem to be very willing to embrace and excuse in fact inequalities in the system. I think that that's why we find ourselves in the position we are this evening and why we ended up with the electoral boundaries report that we did.

What we have this evening, of course, is not new. There have been precedents in years past. In England, as society became more industrialized, the landed gentry there tried to hang onto their political power, and they did that by denying the newly industrial areas representation. So you had what have become known as the rotten boroughs, where you would have a borough represented by two Members of Parliament. Thomas Paine wrote about this at the time, and I'm quoting from his Rights of Man. In 1791 he said:

The county of Yorkshire, which contains near a million souls, sends two county members; and so does the county of Rutland which contains not a hundredth part of that number. The town of Old Sarum, which contains not three houses, sends two members; and the town of Manchester, which contains upwards of sixty thousand souls, is not admitted to send any. Is there any principle in these things?

So as far back as 1791 the notion of one person, one vote and the inequalities in the system were causing difficulties. As I said, it ended up being historically significant and has introduced the notion of rotten boroughs, because that's what they were. They had constituencies with very few people who had exactly the same representation as constituencies that had thousands. I'm not suggesting that the parallel exists in Alberta at this time – it's not yet quite that bad, Mr. Speaker – but there is a parallel.

The increasing urbanization of this province continues unabated. If you look over the changes in the provincial population over the last number of years, the shift from rural to urban is a fact of life, and that shift puts some major stresses on urban areas, as it does on rural areas. There's a quote from the minority report that I think is pertinent here.

While there is no question that the changing face of the province presents a major concern that must be dealt with, the urban/rural distinction serves no useful purpose in grappling with the economic, political and social changes facing Albertans. The solution lies in public policy and not in removing a division from Edmonton. Diluting Edmonton's voice in the Legislative Assembly is not the solution to maintaining a strong rural population. In fact there is a growing body of evidence to show how regressive and counter productive [that] is.

I think that that's relevant as we consider the motion before us this evening, Mr. Speaker.

It's public policy that has to be addressed if rural Alberta is to be strengthened. It's public policy in the area of health care. It's public policy in the area of education. We know how devastating, for instance, it is when small rural schools are closed. In many cases when that happens, it closes the community. Yet we have public policy that works to make that happen. In terms of education policy, in terms of investment policy, in terms of immigration policy, those are the areas that I believe the minority report was talking about and indicating that they had to be addressed if the concerns of rural Alberta were to be recognized and dealt with.

I think there's a lot that will be said and there's a lot that appeared in the report, but I think that for me the most telling remarks were the ones, again, in the minority report. It said:

Not one presenter at the Commission hearings in Edmonton suggested that Edmonton should lose a division. Even in the rest of the province, there were very few presenters who singled out Edmonton to lose a division. However, what we did hear many times in rural Alberta is that the electoral boundaries process should be about people and not about numbers.

I think that that's an important conclusion from the report. I guess that the numbers, of course, that we are suffering from are the numbers that were used by the commission and ones that have been challenged and certainly are ones that are going to within a few years make Edmonton at least two seats short if the present population trends continue. So in part for us it is a numbers problem.

When our constituency association prepared our presentation – and we spent a good deal of time considering the whole question – we didn't even consider addressing the notion that the city might lose a seat. It wasn't even on our radar, and we didn't address it in the report that we prepared. We fully believed that given the population and given the projections for the city the 19 seats that we had in the city were a given. Little did we know, Mr. Speaker. We made recommendations about our own constituency and if there were changes, where those changes might be. We made some recommendations about the matrix and how the matrix might be enhanced, but we didn't make representation to the commission, and as the minority report indicates, it was only on the minds of a few Albertans and certainly not on the minds of Edmontonians, who again, I think, were surprised at what has appeared as a recommendation.

I think that one of the things we can blame ourselves for, Mr. Speaker, is that we allowed the commission to go forward with the givens that we did, that we were happy with the 83 seats. In fact, there have been some recommendations before this Assembly that the number of seats in the province be reduced to 65, and I don't agree with those. I think that the number of seats should reflect the interests and the needs of Albertans, and you don't start off with a preset number and then make things fit. So I believe that we were wrong when we set the commission off on its work to make that as a given. I know that it's popular to indicate that you're going to either keep the number of seats the same or you're going to reduce the number of seats. Politically it's the thing to say, but in terms of the wisdom of serving Albertans, I think it was a mistake. I, too, can hope that somehow or other the report, the recommendation before us will be rejected and that we'll put our minds to finding a way that the very, very serious objections that have been raised and will be raised to the report can be accommodated.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods how he reconciles his statement that the boundaries commission should not have any preset notions with respect to numbers; however, he has in his view a preset notion that Edmonton should have 19 seats.

Dr. Massey: Yeah. It's a good question. I think one of the things that we might have done is some preliminary work in trying to determine the appropriate number of seats instead of just accepting the 83 because that's the way they were. Maybe there had to be some preliminary homework done looking at the problems to see if 83 was going to be the number that would actually serve us.

The Deputy Speaker: No further questions?

Would the Assembly be willing to give agreement to the brief reversion to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce three friends: Werner, Zoria, and David. I'd like them to rise and receive the welcome of the Assembly. David was my campaign chair, Werner is president of the association, and Zoria is a member.

Thank you.

Final Report of Electoral Boundaries Commission

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood is next to speak.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find myself in an interesting position: standing on the front line of a battle field of a constituency that's being eliminated. I took an oath, and that oath meant that I have to do my best, do my due diligence for the constituency. Is this part of it? After 700 days of being broken in, so to speak, to come and face this and exactly explain to the Members of the Assembly that Motion 13 is wrong and to come up with reasons why is interesting.

Lacombe-Stettler had some reasons, passionate reasons. Mine are more geared toward the city of Edmonton and council and His Worship Bill Smith. They took it on themselves to dig deep, Mr. Speaker, and spent $50,000 of taxpayers' money across the board to involve the city of Edmonton and its residents and the voting population, and by doing that, they represented all of Edmonton. So all of Edmonton wants to have 19 seats, and that's measured against the $50,000 that they did spend. Otherwise, they wouldn't have spent it. So those two correspond, and if they correspond with reality, then it must be the truth. So I'm not bringing forward speculation or a system of philosophy. What I want to do is bring forward anti theories, and anti theories there again correspond to reality, the truth.

So, Mr. Speaker, the Electoral Boundaries Commission made a mistake. Why they made a mistake is because when I discussed some sentiments in my office with the chairman – and had it not been a Conservative riding, the likelihood of it not being taken away was great. Now, I didn't tape record it. It was said as my word against his. However, if there are transcripts from the Ramada Inn, we could easily get the admission from Mr. Clark where he admitted to saying these things. Now, does that make it right? Or does that lead us into an area of a legal challenge, which so often accompanies mistakes?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm trying to be as nice as I can and as fair as I can and at the same time achieve an objective, which is to keep the 19 seats and at the same time save face by the oath I did take to represent Edmonton-Norwood. To me, which is it? We could do one of two things. We can either accept the report, or we make a law that there are more electoral boundaries, or we can reject it. It's quite simple. Anything other than that, for the last three or four hours all we did was spin our wheels.

So what are we going to do? Well, naturally, I'm going to vote against this motion. Had it not been Edmonton-Norwood, had I not been in the front, well, would I be hypocritical to say, well, I would sit back and join in the spinning of the wheels? Well, who knows?

I would probably encourage everybody to say that I wouldn't, but that's hindsight. Anybody can do that. But as long as I went up for it, as long as I knocked on those doors, as long as I told the people that I would represent them continually, I will continue to do so until the last breath that I take. At that point, I will probably lean over and trip the trip wire. What does that mean? Well, we'll see.

But, Mr. Speaker, when you dig deep into the trenches, you have to take the field back. So how do we do that? Simple. Convince all my colleagues to vote against this Electoral Boundaries Commission. Are they going to do that? They spent, you know, half a million dollars doing it. Is the next one coming up going to be any different? There are all various kinds of questions. Who has the answer? I don't think anybody has the real right answer.

Edmonton-Norwood, Mr. Speaker. I've probably got 10S pages of notes listening to debate back and forth. I wore myself fairly thin trying to be direct and blunt and to the point and at the same time be convincing. Now, am I achieving that? There's no table thumping; there's no nodding of heads.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora figuratively took a sword out. Well, I'd like to literally take one out – now, it's imaginary, but it's there – and I'd like to chop that report. Here's one here, and if I had the strength, I would probably tear it in half and table it. That's how I'd like to fix it. [interjection] It's too thick. That's why it's imaginary.

Where does that leave a person like me? Where does it leave an MLA who's representing a riding that's being eliminated? Through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Assembly it leaves me only one thing: that's to plead to the other members to do the right thing and vote against it. It'd be embarrassing to get on my knees and beg them.

You know, when I grew up, my dad ran a lot of things by me. It's, you know: you don't work; you don't eat. Well, I brought that philosophy, and I still carry it. I think that's probably why I fit into this government. That's what builds the country. You have to get out and do your share of work. If you work for 10 hours, charge for 10 hours. That was drilled into me. Before you complain about your shoes, look at somebody with no feet. That was drilled into me.

I brought that into my constituency. In the parts that were in the inner city, I had to basically educate a lot of constituents when they came to the door. Believe it or not, they didn't leave all that happy, but I honestly didn't know. I come from a northern community, from a farm, with this background, this philosophy: "You don't work; you don't eat. The harder you work; the luckier you'll get." Every day I had that. Then somebody would come in. They would tell me this; they'd tell me that. Well, work; all you have to do is work. "Well, we can't make it." It's not what you make, it's what you save. I was told that. Didn't your parents tell you that? "Well, we had no parents." Oh. Well, what did you learn in school? "We never went to school." Oh.

So I was faced with a whole pile of things, and one thing representing Edmonton-Norwood did do is it educated me to a whole new world, one that didn't exist in the oilfield, where I worked, one that didn't exist on the farm, where my Success by Six was picking roots. These guys didn't know that.

So little by little as I would go into the community leagues, little by little as I would go to different functions and I would sit down and I would talk to people, I was literally shocked at what an inner city is all about. So I for sure am grateful that I'm a new person out of it, and for 700 days I'll tell you: I have a lot of education. It's not a social outlook. What I do bring is a good conservative-type outlook and bring those sentiments across to people that are in my constituency to make them a better person. I even went so far as bringing Bill 210, and that's a reflection of what needs to be done in the inner city. That's a reflection of what needs to be done in all of Alberta for people who are less than fortunate.

Now, does that mean anything to our government? Well, that's to be debated yet in second reading. I'm not trying to lobby for that bill right now; however, the occasion does present itself. You know, it would go a long way if people would just look at an inner-city constituency, and if it's being held by a government member, anchor into it and root into it. I think, Mr. Speaker, that if we really considerably looked at 19 seats and rounded it up properly, other than Jethro Clampett's new math, where you round down, I think we would probably have a lot more foresight into seeing how things should be accomplished. Calgary is growing. It's a fact. Where's the place to address it? Right here and right now. Calgary is growing. Count the numbers. What can we do to change it? Amend the act to be 84 seats. Are we going to do that? Well, that's another hill to climb.

The one facing us now? Motion 13. Are we going to pass it? I don't want to, and I'm not going to, and I have my reasons. I explained them, and mayor, council, you know, I probably feel that I lost that riding. I honestly feel that. If it was one of the other parties, they wouldn't have taken it. There are only, you know, nine of you guys, and there are a whole bunch of us. So it wouldn't look good; would it? Well, let's be honest. Would it look good if they took one of your ridings? What's left for me? You know, I have full confidence that I could have knocked off any one of you guys in an election. Just dig in. So is it about politics? Of course not. I can walk – maybe in Strathcona I couldn't, but the rest is . . . I'm not worried about it. I covered my constituency three times because that's the work ethic that I had.

The point I'm trying to make, Mr. Speaker, and to the city council who came in, is that if this riding loses, I probably will have to assume full responsibility for winning it in the first place. So if that happens, I apologize to you for losing it to Edmonton, but for any consultation while I am here, maybe we can shorten up some distance on Anthony Henday Drive. Maybe I can lobby harder in the remaining time that I do have here, and hopefully that'll go somewhere, and hopefully we can justify that $50,000 of taxpayer money that was spent. But it's not over till it's over.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I'd like to encourage the members to reject this Electoral Boundaries Commission report on the basis that I brought forward, and on that note I'd like to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:25 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 9, 2003

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2003/04/09

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Aydemir Erman, ambassador of the Republic of Turkey. He is joined today by his wife, Gulen, and Mr. Turgay Ogut, consul general responsible for Alberta. Mr. Erman only recently presented his credentials as Turkey's ambassador to Canada; in fact, it was just in February of this year. He is making his first visit to our beautiful province, and I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm, warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House today 121 visitors from Spruce Grove and the St. Marguerite Catholic school. They are a bright and enthusiastic group accompanied by teachers Miss Nicole Harrington, Mrs. Livia Tamblin, Mr. Denis MacNeil, Mrs. Deloyce Hanna, and Mr. Sean Daly and parent helpers Penny Scheibelhofer, Marilyn Wensley, Heather MacDonald, Candis Mathieson, and Ken Knuff. They are seated in both galleries, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature two guests today who are seated in the members' gallery. My first guest is Jean Grand-Maître. He's the artistic director of Alberta Ballet. Jean assumed the artistic leadership of Alberta Ballet in July 2002. For the past 12 years he has worked internationally as an independent choreographer, creating works for the most important ballet companies in Canada and Europe. Born in Hull, Quebec, Mr. Grand-Maître began his dance training at York University in Toronto and continued at Montreal's École Supérieure de Danse du Québec, where he presented his earliest ballets and school performances. He performed at the Theatre Ballet of Canada, Les Ballets de Montréal Eddy Toussaint, and Ballet British Columbia, developing his choreographic talents by participating in creative workshops.

My other guest, Mr. Speaker, is Ann Lewis, executive director of Alberta Ballet. Ann assumed the administrative leadership of Alberta Ballet in January 2002 after serving and organizing for six years as a fund-raising board member and board chair.

Would my two guests please rise and accept the warm and generous welcome of this Legislature. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, yesterday's budget was one of misplaced priorities, with plenty of money but very little of it for all Albertans. Even though high energy revenues mean government coffers are flush with cash, classrooms and health care programs will continue to suffer. What's fair about this budget? To the Minister of Finance: what's fair about a budget that does include a 12 percent increase in funding for the horse racing industry and only a 2 percent increase in classroom funding for Alberta students?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the budget we delivered yesterday, I believe and our government believes, is a budget that places Alberta again in the lead in this country. It deals with the priorities that Albertans have expressed to every member of the government caucus throughout this year. It deals with the issues in health care, it deals with the issues in Learning, it deals with the issues in transportation requirements, it deals with the issues in Infrastructure, and it does all that in addition to dealing with issues in Children's Services and in agriculture without raising any taxes and no increases in health care premiums.

Dr. Nicol: To the minister of education: what's fair about postsecondary students having to pay 6 percent more for their education next year through higher tuition when this minister has only increased his contribution to advanced education by 2 percent?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I would really appreciate it if the hon. member would read the budget. What you have seen in our budget is a 4.1 percent increase for postsecondary education. In his previous question he stated that it was a 2 percent increase for the classroom. It's very plain to see in the budget that there's about a 4.9 percent increase in my total budget directly to the classroom, directly to the school boards. The Edmonton school board will receive 3.7 percent. School boards such as Christ the Redeemer will receive over 11 percent in this budget.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Energy: did this minister double his department's communication budget this year because his department has failed to keep angry and confused Albertans with their skyrocketing utility bills?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as we go through the budget debate, we'll be able to talk on the line items of each budget, but I think it's very easy to say that we're responding to their very own requests, put forward by the opposition party, and those are to communicate the changes that are being made: the passage of Bill 3, the passage of Bill 19, the move to a fully deregulated competitive market structure in electricity in light of natural gas changes. We are just carrying on business as usual and reflecting that in the budget documents of the day.

Infrastructure Projects

Dr. Nicol: Yesterday the government promised that $5.5 billion will begin to flow through to communities to address the backlog of infrastructure project needs, but what is missing from the budget is a plan of which projects will get the green light. To the Minister of Infrastructure: will the minister release the list of capital projects with the priorities so that Albertans can see the priorities that their communities put on those capital requests?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are currently working our way through the number of projects that we had before us. Just as an example, in the capital plan that was submitted to us by the school districts, the school boards last year, there were somewhere around 450 projects totaling about $1.4 billion. So we are currently working through the process of which projects we can start, and those will be public as soon as we are finished this process of putting the whole package together.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Infrastructure: did you say that you would release the entire $1.4 billion with the community project priorities on them when you're finished making your choices?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish we had $1.4 billion to spend just on schools. The fact is that there isn't that much money, so we do have to prioritize. The projects that are approved to go ahead will be public, but certainly I can tell the hon. member that we go very, very close to what the school boards recommend, and they have to prioritize them. They prioritize them, then we fit those prioritizations on the provincial scale to determine which projects need to go ahead.

Dr. Nicol: To the Minister of Infrastructure: will the minister release projects in total that are approved so that Albertans can judge all the projects together, rather than having them dribbled out and having to look at them one at a time when it's expedient for you?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly we will not be in a position to say that every project that will be done in the year 2003-04 will be issued at one time. Last year, for example, within the department we had some 1,200 projects. Certainly we don't put them all out at once, but we will have a number, particularly the health and the school projects, that will be starting immediately. Yes, those will be out.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The real story in the Learning budget this year is yet to come. Two percent more in instructional budgets will result in larger classes, fewer teachers, and fewer classroom resources in Edmonton public classrooms and others across this province. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Given that salary grid creep alone amounts to almost 2 percent, where is the money for other instructional costs to be found?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the Edmonton public school district is going to see approximately a $17 million increase in their budget this year. Percentage-wise this is 3.69 percent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. To the same minister: why is there no relationship between the 2 percent instructional budget and the actual costs that schools have to pay? There's no relationship, Mr. Minister.

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member knows full well that there is a thing called a funding formula, which is an allocation model on how the dollars are given out. Included in this year's funding is a 2 percent basic instructional grant increase; there's a 3 percent transportation grant increase; there's an 8 percent increase for special-needs education; there's $20 million that is utilized for textbooks; plus, plus, plus. All of these things are rolled into the amount of dollars that the school boards receive. Edmonton public, which seems to be the hot topic of the day, will receive about 16 and a half million dollars more this year than they received last year.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the minister's budget flexibility is akin to inviting 10 guests to a sit-down dinner when you've only got five chairs, when can the parents expect budgets based on actual school costs?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, when we did the flexibility component of the funding formula, we sat down with the School Boards Association, the school business officials, as well as numerous other representatives from the school partners. They determined – they determined – in conjunction with me that approximately 90 percent of the funds that they received would be flexible.

What is not flexible is the administration component. I will not change the cap on the administration so that the dollars can be increased to the administration. The two other elements that are included in the nonflexible portion of the funding formula are, one, student health, which is very, very important to our students; two, the Alberta Initiative for School Improvement. Everything else that is included in the funding formula is in the form of flexible funding. So they are allocated out according to models, but the schools and the school boards have the ability to use those dollars as they see fit.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, for months school boards, teachers, and parents have been urging this government to do the right thing and avert a financial crisis in our schools. Sadly, yesterday's budget did no such thing. The Public School Boards' Association is saying: "Tuesday's budget will doom other boards across the province to Edmonton Public's fate of deep cuts to teachers and programming." My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why doesn't the minister come clean and admit that school boards are headed for crippling budget deficits and program cuts as a result of yesterday's budget?

Dr. Oberg: Charlie Koester, chair of the Edmonton Catholic school board, said that this is a very good budget, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Given the severe financial pressure the minister knows that school boards are facing, why was the minister unable to deliver anything more than the already planned 2 percent increase in per pupil grants?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was going to say that the coalition troops are really in Baghdad.

The increase, Mr. Speaker, to the Edmonton public school board is 3.7 percent. When – when – will this opposition party learn how to read the budget?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister's predictions have a worse track record than a TV psychic, why should Albertans accept the minister's bland assurances rather than the serious concerns being raised by people on the front lines of education?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I feel that the hon. member may just have come from an information session that was over in Iraq.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of money. There's $231 million that has been added to my budget. There's $191 million that has been added to the budget of the K to 12 system. There's been around 5 percent added to the K to 12 budget. There has been a huge amount of dollars added to my budget this budget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

West Boundary Road

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The city of St. Albert is moving ahead with its plans to construct a bypass on the west side of the city or, as we call it, the West Boundary Road now. The proposed roadway will cross the Sturgeon River downstream from the Big Lake natural area, which is protected under the special places program. I understand that the project is moving forward while determining what impact this project will have on the surrounding environment, so my question is to the Minister of Environment. Will the minister please explain why the province is not conducting its own environmental impact assessment for this project?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The construction of the St. Albert bypass falls under the Water Act code of practice, so a provincial EIA is not necessary. However, under the Alberta/Canada agreement for environmental assessment and co-operation the federal government through the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is doing an EIA.

Mrs. O'Neill: My first supplemental then: is Alberta Environment involved in the federal government's environmental impact assessment?

Dr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are involved fully in the environmental assessment that the federal government is doing along with Community Development and Sustainable Resource Development. All three departments are making sure that Alberta's concerns are addressed, and our concerns, quite rightly, with the project centre around the potential effects on the Big Lake natural area the member has quite clearly identified. We want to know what those effects might be as part of this assessment and what the city of St. Albert will do to mitigate any effects.

Mrs. O'Neill: My second supplemental, then, would be with respect to the circumstances under which a provincial EIA would be required.

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, certainly provincial EIAs are required in a number of cases. They are required largely where major projects are going forward: mines, oil sands plants, big electrical projects, and so on. In other cases where one of our directors of the Department of Environment feels that there's not enough information on a certain development, he can call for an EIA, and as he monitors that situation and determines whether an EIA is necessary or not, he can call for an EIA.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Support for Low-income Albertans

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The shameful place that Alberta's poor and marginalized have in the priority list of this government is just wrong. It is poor public policy. This government places the same dollar value on the horse racing industry as it does on Alberta's poor. The racing industry renewal and the supports for independence program each received $4 million more in yesterday's budget, but the horse racing industry actually received a 12 percent increase over last year's budget, which had doubled, while Alberta's poor only received 1 and one-half percent. Alberta's racehorses get more oats while some Alberta children do without winter coats. [interjections] Groan if you want. My questions today are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why did the horse racing industry get a 12 percent hike while Alberta families on supports for independence have to subsist on a 60-cent a day increase in their benefits? That's shameful.

Mr. Dunford: Well, math is always an interesting situation. We all hear about statistics and how they can be manipulated. One of the reasons that the percentages are as dramatic as what he's talking about is the fact that, of course, we're working from different-sized budgets. We provide somewhere in excess of $800 million to needy people here in the province, and we have a number of programs that we're trying to deal with in the sense of moving people from support into independence.

Of course, what he's not relating to the people here are the other support systems that we have in place that don't relate in terms of actual income but are the kinds of things, Mr. Speaker, that you need to provide for your family, that all of the members here in the House have to provide for their families. We do this, then, for families that are part of our jurisdiction and part of our responsibility.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: given that a $20 a month raise won't make much difference to supports for independence recipients, why were racehorses and horse races chosen for a 12 percent raise again when the severely handicapped got nothing? The severely handicapped are still waiting while racehorses get a bigger feedback. Explain that.

Mr. Dunford: Well, it's nice and dramatic and it might play well where he goes, but for somebody to try to draw a relationship between a horse and a person that we're trying to look after I think goes beyond . . . One of the things that I think we made clear some time ago certainly in public and I believe maybe even on the floor of the House here – but if it wasn't here on this floor, I'll make it clear now. We are very concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the sustainability of the assured income for the severely handicapped program. I have been invited to a number of meetings. I've had stakeholders that are involved with this particular group. I've met them here at the Legislature. I've met them elsewhere here within the city of Edmonton, and I'm asking them and we're going to work closely with them to see what we can do about the AISH program as far as making it more sustainable.

Now, as far as this past budget was concerned and in terms of policy, one of the things that every MLA here in this House has had a concern about is the relationship between the income support program for AISH as it relates to the Canada pension plan. Because CPP is indexed by the consumer price index, we actually have had situations where people could get as small as perhaps a $2 a month increase, that actually removes them from the AISH files. While that might not seem significant at the time, Mr. Speaker, it is incredibly significant, because when they go off the AISH files, they lose the medical card. So what we've done as a matter of policy – and I hope that the hon. member would share his support for this move – is the fact that we're now going to carry on that medical card much longer into CPP earnings.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister. Government policy is more interested in sustaining the horse racing industry than they are in looking after the poor, and the minister knows it. Now, since this government has chosen not to increase spending substantially, wouldn't it make more sense to give more to the programs that affect the well-being of people instead of entertainment for the elite?

Mr. Dunford: My mandate, Mr. Speaker, is to cover Human Resources and Employment, and of course we provide, then, a major part of the social safety net that we have here in the province for Albertans. I would ask my hon. colleague from Gaming to supplement, you know, so he can show the concerns that perhaps they have there.

Again, what we have in this situation, what he's not talking about, is the full extent of what we did yesterday. He knows full well that there's an increase in the income for people that are under our supports for independence program if they have children and that it is coming in two phases. We have the cash increase that he's talking about now, but he knows full well that in August we will flow through the federal program and not draw back on it as we have in the past.

The Speaker: Hon. ministers, we've spent six and a half minutes now on this series of questions, and I know that on the Order Paper the estimates for Gaming are designated for April 10 and the estimates for Human Resources and Employment are designated for April 15. They'll be ample opportunity.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Elective Surgery Wait Lists

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With wait times already long Albertans scheduled to have elective surgery find it very frustrating to learn, often at the last minute, that they've been bumped from having the procedure. This very thing has happened recently in my own constituency. My questions today are for the Minister of Health and Wellness. What are the criteria for bumping someone from scheduled elective surgery, and will the new increase in Health help offset this?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, let me say, first of all, that I understand the frustration whenever a surgery is bumped from its scheduled time, and the decision to change someone's scheduled surgery is not one which is taken lightly, but it does occur from time to time when another patient requires an emergency surgical intervention and has to be treated immediately. These are often circumstances in the life-or-death category.

Mr. Speaker, resources within the medical facility where the surgery would be done have to be redeployed to accommodate the emergency. Those resources, of course, include the surgeon performing the operation, the nurses assisting the surgeon, and a bed for the patient's postsurgery recovery. When an individual patient is bumped to accommodate an emergency, then it is rescheduled as soon as possible.

Whether or not the additional moneys that have been allocated in the budget to regional health authorities will help alleviate some of this remains to be seen. We'll see what regional health authorities in fact do with the increase that they receive.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental is to the same minister. Hon. minister, who makes the decision to bump one patient in favour of another, and how far are they bumped?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, the decision is made by the surgeon performing the procedure in consultation with the physician who's in charge of the emergency room, and it's as simple as that.

As far as how long it will take before they can be rescheduled, that depends on a facility-by-facility basis, as I said, on the basis of the resources that are available to that particular place, but they are scheduled as quickly as possible.

Infrastructure Capital Plan

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the capital plan for 2003-2006 shows nearly $1.4 billion allotted to alternative financing. Alternative financing is just another way of saying public/private partnerships, or P3s. Why don't they say P3s? It's because Albertans know that P3s are nothing but a government plan to sell out taxpayer interest to the private sector. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what is fair about a program where infrastructure is built not where it is most needed but where it is most profitable?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, that preamble is just unbelievable. I just can't get over it. I mean, it's hardly worthy of even a response, that kind of drivel and that kind of nonsense coming from that member. The fact is that while the budget says that $1.4 million may be required by alternate financing, it does not say that that is all going to come through P3s. P3s are only one tool in the toolbox. There are a number of other ways that we possibly can move forward with projects. Just to deal a bit with P3s, there will be scrutiny on all P3s that will indicate that it's a good deal for the government, it's a good deal for the taxpayer, and of course there's going to be something in it for the developer, the person that puts it together, but that doesn't mean to say that we're not going to be the greatest benefactor. Certainly, when you look at some situations where we may have a facility that can be used sooner by going through a P3 project than by doing it ourselves, I would think that the hon. member would be happy with that.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: the figure in your budget, Mr. Minister, was not $1.3 million; it was $1.3 billion. Just a little correction there.

What is fair about a program that makes Alberta taxpayers pay more for their infrastructure to subsidize corporate profits?

Mr. Lund: That is so ridiculous. I don't know where the member has been.

If he's right about the first little part of his preamble that I said $1.3 million, I'm sorry. It is $1.4 billion, and I think that's what I said, but if that's not what I said, that's okay.

This is so ridiculous that you would think that we were going to just be going out and providing a profit for the private sector when in fact one of the things that the project will have to go through is a complete life cycle cost, and then we bring that back to current-day value, and we compare that with what it would cost us to do it. There are a whole host of advantages to a P3, and if he ever wants to really understand this thing, I would be only too happy to sit down and slowly, slowly go through it so that he can understand it.

Mr. Bonner: I think it's the minister that requires a refresher course.

To the same minister: will this minister admit that his alternative financing plans are nothing more than a cover way for this government to go into debt to pay for infrastructure?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there are so many projects in this province that we are investing in that are returns for the province. If the hon. member thinks that building a school is simply an expenditure, then I totally disagree with him. That is an investment in the future.

I hope that the folks over at the university are listening to him because we just last night met with the deans of medicine from both Calgary and Edmonton, and they talked about what a tremendous investment these centres of innovation are going to be. They're going to be an industry. An industry can be built on it. We're going to have leading scientists come from all over the world to be in these facilities. And then that hon. member criticizes that we're going to do it? I can't believe it.

Mr. Speaker, these projects as far as he says are going in debt? You tell me one major private-sector company that doesn't borrow so that they can have return in the future. They do that. They constantly do that. Furthermore, if you want to look at what is a debt and what isn't, if you have a capital asset on the books and you have something that's a liability over here, they cancel. That is not a debt.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Pork Industry

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many hog producers in Alberta could be out of business over the next few months due to high input costs and uncertain market pricing. The producers in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne have been calling me to advise me of this difficult situation, and it's very serious. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Have you been made aware of this serious situation that Alberta pork producers are facing today?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have been made aware, first of all, by a number of rural members from the government caucus who have brought the concerns of their producers to my attention. Secondly, I met with the Western Hog Exchange and the Alberta pork producers some weeks ago and met with them again as recently as March 18. So we've been made aware of the situation and have been given some indication of what those groups feel could help.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, since you've met with them, what are you prepared to do to help them?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of options for the hog industry which are available not only to them but to all of the commodity groups. The first is the farm income disaster program. That, of course, has been in place for some time. Our indications are that it will respond fairly significantly to that industry this year as well as perhaps to some other areas. The second is, of course, our farm disaster loan program, which, again, has been in place for some time, and I must say that during this downturn it appears that many of the hog producers in the province are taking advantage of that.

Mr. VanderBurg: My final question to the same minister: given that this help is on the way, is this going to be soon enough to help this industry?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, there are certainly immediate and urgent concerns from the industry, and we feel that we've made some changes to our loan program that will assist in the short term. We've increased the lending limit to $200,000 from $100,000, and of course then the maximum available to an entity that has more than one owner rises to $600,000. We've also increased the quick cash injection loan, which was at $20,000, to $50,000, and that's available to producers on a promissory note, so that can be handled very quickly.

But I think even more importantly, Mr. Speaker, is that in the discussions with the industry are some areas that we could respond to that would deal with this on the long term. The hog industry does often experience an upswing in prices and can take a very sudden downturn, and input costs, of course, can vary and cause them problems. So we've been talking with them about some long-term strategies, whether it be in a stabilization account, an insurance program that could deal with their problems, but right now we're trying to respond to the very urgent problems they're facing as well as looking at the long-term situation.

Postsecondary Education Funding

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, this government seems determined to continue its policies of saddling postsecondary students with ever increasing tuition fees and bigger and bigger debts. At the same time many postsecondary institutions are facing major cutbacks. The government is off-loading its debt onto the backs of overburdened students and overstretched universities. To the Minister of Finance: how does she justify increasing grants to universities only 2.3 percent while subsidies to prop up the horse racing industry soared 12 percent this year and over 100 percent the last two years to $37 million? Is it all just good lobbying?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I think that it's important to get the facts on the table. I'd ask the Minister of Gaming to respond to the question that's been raised a couple of times in this House today that hasn't been thoroughly answered.

Insofar as the funding for postsecondary education I believe that the Minister of Learning has already answered that question, so I'd ask that the Minister of Gaming supplement the other part of it.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The line item relative to horse racing is a commitment that this government made to Horse Racing Alberta in 2001, so it's a fulfillment of an obligation that we have to that particular industry. The hon. members opposite, if they had been paying attention, might remember that the commitment that we made was to assist the industry through racing entertainment centres that were connected with racetracks throughout the province.

This particular increase in this particular budget relates specifically to Northlands park, located here in the city of Edmonton, and should be familiar to the members opposite. Last year – that is, during the fiscal year ended March 31, 2003 – the number of slot machines that were at the REC at Northlands was increased. So this particular year the $4 million will reflect the fact that those increased slot machines will be at Northlands park, Spinners, for a full year as opposed to a portion of a year.

2:10

Dr. Taft: I'll bet Edmontonians would rather have their money in schools than at the horse track.

Is it fair . . .

The Speaker: Please. Please. Let's get to the question without preambles. I'm going to repeat again: designated tomorrow, April 10, are the estimates for Gaming. We'll have a full two hours.

Please proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Learning: is it fair that this government's solution to soaring tuition fees is to change the rules to allow students to go ever deeper into debt?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the hon. member for that question because what is included in this budget is, yes, a 2 percent basic increase to the postsecondaries, but there's also a $10 million performance fund that will go to the postsecondaries, or roughly 1 percent. There's also another $10 million access fund that will bring the total to very close to 4 percent. There's also another $12 million that is being put into apprenticeship.

The hon. member made reference to students. Included in this budget is an increase in student loan limits to $11,300, Mr. Speaker, as well as a $2,100 moving allowance for rural students. A rural student, for example, for those of us who are from rural Alberta, can receive $13,400 for their first year coming into Edmonton or Calgary. Interestingly enough – they're talking about debt – also included in this budget is a $32 million provision for paying off student debt as soon as they receive it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the same minister: can the minister explain the rationale for the 2 percent increase in the operating grant to universities and table the analysis that was used in setting it?

Dr. Oberg: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, it was not a 2 percent; it was a 4.1 percent increase going to postsecondary education. I really wish that these people would learn how to read the budget. The performance fund is there, the access fund is there, the apprenticeship fund is there – 4.1 percent increase – and there's also been huge increases to student finance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Education Property Tax

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In September of 2000 the Tory government promised to cap school property taxes at $1.2 billion a year, a promise repeated during the 2001 election campaign. Now for the second year running the government has broken this promise. Yesterday's budget hikes the school property tax revenues while cutting corporate taxes. The Tories are robbing Martha and Henry to pay Syncrude and Shell. My question is to the Minister of Finance. How can the government claim that there are no tax increases in the budget when the average homeowner and small business will see a hike of 5.8 percent in their school property taxes this year?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, we made a decision to freeze the mill rate for school property taxes. That is reflected in the budget that we presented yesterday. What we have done is we've recognized that there's been growth within this province, and we're capturing the growth to put it into the classroom with the kids where the money is needed. Now, this hon. member objects to funds flowing to the classroom, where it belongs, to reflect the growth. You've heard us talk about people coming to our province and they don't bring their roads or their schools or their hospitals with them. You have to realistically capture growth. That's what's happened. We froze the mill rate. We kept our commitment to freeze the mill rate. That's all that's happened. Please read the document.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that a government news release from the year 2000 says that education property taxes will be reduced by $135 million and frozen at $1.2 billion, can the minister explain why this change of policy and why it means a significant increase to what people actually have to pay in their property taxes, 5.8 percent?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, when we put that 2000 press release out, we took a position of reducing the mill rate. You know, the collection of school property tax used to be 50-50. We reduced it so that there was a lower tax collection from the property owner that would be picked up by the province. We then said that we'd freeze the mill rate, and we have done that. In fact, last year we actually lowered the mill rate. But the reality, as I said in my first answer, is that we've had growth within this province, and you have to somehow capture that growth and put the dollars into the education system. That's exactly what we have done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why is the government using a $64 million hike in school property tax revenues to help offset the $94 million cut in taxes paid by corporations, many of whom are enjoying record profits thanks to high energy prices?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, it's really hard to continually go by the analogies that are drawn by members opposite. They don't like something that's good for the province. They don't like the fact that we're capturing growth and 80 percent of the revenue we're capturing for education is going into the classroom. They don't like the fact that we're dealing with small business pressures by reducing the tax load on small businesses. They don't like any of those things because they're positive, and they can't deal with things that are positive. One of my colleagues said yesterday: there's the difference between a cup being half empty or half full. He's working on three-quarters full and looking for the opportunity to fill it the rest of the way. That's the difference between their side and our side.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Untreated Storm Water
