So I don't want to take up any more time, but I appreciate the minister starting to think about this, and if she could answer me about specific funding this year and what we can look to accomplish over this fiscal year around sustainable, predictable operating funds for these groups.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, of course, just to address the obvious, there has been no discussion in cabinet about not giving acknowledgment to sexual assault, or I wouldn't have just announced that we did give some money.

I would like to indicate that the issues of sexual assault, when I have talked to people either with sexual assault centres or relative to shelters, are not simple ones. In the past sometimes sexual assault activities in a community were part of the shelter network and have broken away for one reason or another. That's a very interesting phenomena because of obvious differences.

In some communities sexual assault is being dealt with through the victims of violent crimes and through the justice system as it's delivered through the police. They are delivering programs, victims' services, to those groups, and there are community programs for that.

In some communities family and community support services provides dollars for prevention programs, and so Children's Services funds in that capacity a lot of prevention programs, which would be under the whole auspices of the 80-20 funding through FCSS. As you'll note in this year's budget, it's increased to about $63 million in FCSS.

So, as the hon. member opposite has indicated, it's fragmented at the community level. Within the individual budgets here the definition of responsibility for assault because of the criminal nature of this has predominantly placed it under the authority of the Solicitor General.

However, I commit to this House that the work of the family violence round-table is not exclusively limited to family violence. The issues of sexual assault have been raised in the 13 regional forums. In our $2 million in the prevention of family violence budget this year, part of the $2 million that's the increase will support operating funding, but other supports will be provided in conjunction with Alberta police forces in co-ordinating collective responses.

Zebra in this city is an ideal example of a one-stop shop where the police are involved; family violence counsellors are involved; sexual assault counsellors are involved; the doctors from the Stollery centre are involved with the children. It's a co-ordinated community response that's also being attempted to be emulated subject to the results of a study four years ago in Calgary, and that's the family advocacy centre and the groups down there that are working to put those agencies together.

I think that what we have to find through the outcomes of the round-table on the 7th and all this information – I've been very pleased to extend this opportunity to Members of this Legislative Assembly to join the other members of the Alberta children/youth initiative ministries – is to see whether or not there is an appetite for a parcelling of specific funds towards the sexual assault.

Let me also provide you with some other thoughts. We have a record of those that are disabled in our disabled community where adult disabled people tell me that 80 per cent of their numbers have been assaulted or victims of family violence, whichever category you want to put it in. We have the gay and lesbian community that have come forward to talk to us. We have former and existing prostitutes that have come forward and talked to us. We have men's groups that have come forward to talk to us. We have grandmothers and mothers of men who believe that they have been traumatized by wives and families in violent situations that have compromised their mental health. We have, obviously, mental health issues. We have about 15 separate groups, identifiably separate groups, that are coming forward in the round-table on family violence – cultural groups, immigrant groups – that have their own unique needs.

I am fascinated that I thought I knew something about this subject before we had the round-tables, and now I realize that today I stand before you and know almost nothing because there's so much out there to learn. I think that what we, hopefully, will find during the action as a result of this round-table is what the hon. member opposite has suggested: at least a co-ordinated provincial support, a co-ordinated federal/provincial strategy on this issue, because I know that the Justice minister and the Solicitor General have discussed that at their ministers' meetings, as we have on the social services end.

I do sincerely hope that we have some willing federal ears to listen to that co-ordinated response who'll understand the passion in this House for making that happen because that is exactly what has to happen. It is not an island performing this or a ministry performing it but, better yet, a collaborative performing what needs to be done for those victims of sexual assault. You know, our new identities for victims of violence in the office of prevention of family violence have addressed a number of victims of sexual assault cases in the past. So we have in that capacity provided them supports through the NIVA program, which the hon. member opposite is fully aware of. But we'll just take a look again through this process to see if there can be some redefinition, a profiling in one centre.

Maybe I should take my quantum leap and go one step further. Because the hon. member opposite who has just spoken is so knowledgeable, she knows that the women's shelter groups have wondered about the opportunity to develop some sort of commission that would embrace this, much like AADAC. The whole issue of violence is affecting one another in society. Not necessarily were they looking at the bullying piece but the rest of it. That might be an outgrowth of this discussion, this dialogue, so that there is a formal, collaborative framework for delivering services to all of those people, not only the operational expenses of shelters but dollars to provide children and the elderly and all people of all ages some considered support.

Until we have gone through that process of dialogue, I hesitate, Mr. Chairman, to go further on the subject except to say that I think there are willing ears in all of the ministries involved in this partnership because we do want to make Alberta much more safe as a society for families and we take seriously the fact that there have been so many deaths in Alberta relative to family violence and, no doubt, relative to assaults of a sexual nature, that impact families in a very devastating way.

So I'll be prepared to answer further questions, and thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to address the Children's Services budget this afternoon. I'd like, I guess, to make a couple of opening comments.

I listened to the minister speak about support for families and her enthusiasm for what's being done in the province, and I quite understand that. But it strikes me that the words are so different from what I experience in my constituency office when I have a call from a mother with a daughter who's in junior high school. The mother is on SFI, and her daughter is unable to take part in the art classes that the school's offering, some of the extracurricular activities. It seems to me that there's this disconnect, with one department so enthusiastic about supporting families and trying to ensure that families are treated as a whole and another department not involved in providing the resources that make that happen and, in fact, helps create conditions of poverty that lead to some of the very problems that the Children's Services ministry has to address.

So I would be interested in a comment from the minister with respect to the kind of co-ordination that goes on among ministries, between Human Resources, in particular, and the Children's Services ministries, so that one department isn't really creating the kinds of problems that Children's Services is trying to solve. It did strike me.

The other thing that struck me was as the minister was speaking. I have before me a multipage complaint from a handicapped parent. I continue to get those: parents who are caught in the system between the Learning department, Health, Children's Services, local school boards. I'm not sure any longer, when these parents contact me, what kind of advice to give them. They have a severely handicapped youngster, they've been to department after department, and all you seem to end up with is a sheaf of paper and reports and appeals and a parent who is still begging for service for a youngster. I guess my question to the minister is: is there a one-stop place for that person to go so that this bouncing from ministry to ministry can stop and parents can get the services that we all know those youngsters deserve?

Those were two things that sort of struck me. I'll pass this one along to the minister; I know that she's had it before.

As the minister commented, I think none of us would argue with the goals that the minister has outlined: preserving the family unit, protection and permanency plans, prevention, and trying to make sure that we're there first in creating the conditions so that youngsters and families don't find themselves in difficulty.

It does lead me to some specific questions about the budget. I don't have last year's business plan with me; I had the 2002. But as I looked at the current business plan, there's a subtitle that keeps coming up: "Source: Child Welfare Information System." That's under a number of the performance measures. It's the performance measures that I'd like to address and I would really like the minister to address because they seem to have changed quite dramatically.

I think I know what it means, but I'd like the minister, if she would, to explain on page 125 of the business plan the performance measure that says: "Percentage of expenditures in the children/youth project and service category of Family and Community Support Services." Then it says: "What it means: Alberta's children and youth, aged 0-19, account for 28% . . . of Alberta's population." It goes on to talk about this being jointly funded. What exactly is that measure going to do? Is it going to say that because they account for 28 per cent of the population, that's the resource that should be allocated to it? I didn't find the "what it means" actually very, very helpful.

I would be interested in the kind of criteria that have been used for the "percentage of childcare centers that provide a developmentally appropriate environment for children."

Underlying these performance measures, I'd like to link it to an increase of $1.2 million in corporate administration and a news release that came out today from Cognos. It was to the attention of business and technology editors from Cognos. Cognos ReportNet is evidently being used by the department. Can the minister give me some background into the corporate spending, the changes in the business plan, and this announcement by Cognos? How deeply involved is Cognos? What's it costing the province?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to take the last comment first because it relates to an announcement made by Cognos today on behalf of Children's Services. I think they were jumping up and down with pride, probably got out a little ahead of giving me an opportunity to say something nice about it. Quite frankly, the reason for Cognos's involvement is this. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods is so knowledgeable about children, youth, and families and about child welfare that he'll appreciate that when we decided to bring in the ARM model and look at providing preventive social services in the home, obviously these children were not being brought into child welfare for protection. So the same CWIS system wouldn't necessarily apply.

You might have a Big Brothers & Big Sisters agency working with mentoring in that family. You had a very new definition of how you track the records and the family supports that were provided to somebody who wasn't technically part of child welfare. So it was important to look at new software to create a different kind of capacity for making sure that if you were the child welfare director in region 6, for example, you went to sleep at night knowing that the people that needed permanent supports got them, that needed temporary supports got them, and those that simply needed to have community strength built through linkages through counsellors and local community support agencies were there.

Cognos is providing us better quality of data both in the collection and reporting of how effective the systems are in delivering what I would call soft children's services to those families that may be vulnerable. We've enhanced our information technology with Cognos. The capacity on investment in Cognos software is going to give us some interactive capacity to talk about our issues and for social workers to communicate through the system, front-line workers with supervisors.

The company itself has been instrumental in giving us a better ability to organize and disseminate the information. You know, when you consider all the tremendous number of files, if you look at even the number of complaints that come to a crisis line being significantly more than the actual case files that are opened, there's such a tremendous responsibility that child welfare delivery has to do the records management properly, and it's probably somebody today in social welfare who needs to have an opportunity as a decision-maker to understand the use of technology in the best possible fashion.

I will table at a later time exactly what the costs were attributable to Cognos for that particular system. But we are so satisfied that for the first time we're going to be more interactive in our conversation with it. Overall this year our shared support service agreement with the ACSC has grown only by $2 million over last year, yet we are dealing with many more intricate file adjustments. We've moved from $36 million to $38 million in our shared corporate support service delivery, and that includes payroll and a lot of other capacities that we have responsibility for. I will get the breakout of what this particular cost will be for Cognos in helping us with the community-based ARM model.

I'm going to be pleased to take a couple of minutes and just say this. I will refer to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment some further discussion based on the member's comments on SFI and will be very anxious to see whether we can resolve it. The member said handicapped parent. I assume that it was the file of a parent of a handicapped child. Now that we're in transition on our new resources for children with disabilities legislation, I think there may be some confusion. We can get somebody to sit with that person – and I promise that – and go through this file very solidly.

We've had two schools of thought in this city from parents coming to me. Some want to choose their programs and be reimbursed, and others want us to be very hands on in the delivery. If it's something that relates to the Minister of Learning, he's a very willing and compliant member. His estimates are up on Thursday, and perhaps he will be able to share the good news of the gospel on his part of that.

The hon. member has done me a great favour in giving me a chance to talk about some of our core businesses and our performance measures quite specifically. I think that in terms of the questions, although I may not have received all of them, in the performance measures we've reduced from 17 measures to 13 with a consolidation to better do a couple of things: fit with the national measures on early childhood development and not have so much wordy discussion about what outcomes should be but to simplify the measures so that everybody, both in the community and throughout, understands them. So we have tried to make our targets more understandable.

I want to look at just a couple of them; for example, giving children and youth a healthy start in life. The targets are constant at 29 per cent for each of the three years. The last result for this measure in 2001 was 29 per cent. We're looking at 29 per cent in close proportion to 28 per cent of Alberta's children being between the ages of zero and 19. We're trying to target the measure to the actual demographics of the children so that when we're making a contribution of 29 per cent to 28 per cent, it's because of the range for the age of the children. Information for this measure is from the audited financial statements of FCSS.

As you know, that program is actually a favourite of mine. It enables communities to take a look at: what are my demographics here? In communities where they have a larger elderly population, then it seems reasonable to target the dollars to that population proportionately, but if they are a very young community, then it's very useful to contemplate that the dollars should go to that population.

Twenty-eight per cent represents the 840,000 children that are zero to 19, so FCSS, generally, as a rough guideline should be spending about one-third of the dollars that they receive from the government on children, youth, and family programs. In the case of a community like Calgary receiving about $17 million, they look the biggest on the sheet, but actually Edmonton has $13 million, and then the surrounding satellite communities make up almost the equivalent of $17 million. So you look across Alberta at the dollars that FCSS receives and say: what are the demographics, and how are they apportioning the money? I would only be concerned if a community took 100 per cent of the funding they're getting from the province and made the decision to support, for example, all middle-aged adults from 20 to 50, because if they had children and elderly, then those two groups would be missing out.

So that's how that measure dealing with FCSS is written. It's just making sure that there's a target of support for the demographics of children in Alberta. When you look at other measures, they are almost all trying to target and focus on the number of people that really require them.

Let me talk about core business 2 and goal 2: "Families . . . safe, healthy, and able to promote children's development." We've got a target of 85 per cent over the three years, and this percentage is through our child welfare information system data, hoping to achieve a delivery system that resolves issues before they escalate, requiring child protection.

So to the hon. member and his questions, I'll look very clearly at whether or not later we should provide you a more complete breakdown on those performance measures, but the thinking is to make it readable so that the FCSS community understands it.

One final thing. There is incentive funding in this budget for FCSS partnerships with child and family services authorities and other agencies so that if they would have formerly received a dollar, they'll get $1.50 because of the partnership adding an enhancing value to the partnership so that we get more agencies collaborating and co-operating to benefit the family.

The Deputy Chair: I guess we have passed the one-hour mark. I'll recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for permitting me to join the debate of the budget for the Children's Services ministry. When I look at the amount of money that we spend on children's services in Alberta, I have mixed feelings. On one hand, I am very happy that we are able to set aside a significant amount of money, in the neighbourhood of $735 million, to provide services for the children of this province. On the other hand, many of my constituents have concerns about the rate of increase as far as the budget of this ministry is concerned.

We remember that about 10 years ago, in 1994, the budget at that time was somewhere between $175 million to probably about $285 million because there were different things being covered under the ministry of family and social services at the time. Over the past 10 years we've had an increase in the population of Alberta, but certainly we don't have that many more bad parents or that many more children at risk. Looking at the budget, it has increased at least a hundred per cent or even more. Some people had said that it has increased as much as 200 per cent. This begs the question: are we spending the money in the most cost-effective way?

You could take a look at the number of children that are in the system today. There are around 13,000 kids, 5,000 in permanent care and about 8,000 in temporary care of the government. Also, the ministry is helping about 7,200 handicapped children. If you look at those numbers and look at the amount of money that we spend on it, then we have to ask ourselves the question: can we find another way to spend this amount of money on that number of kids? Should we wait until the children come into the custody of the government to provide that kind of help, or should we spend that money at the family level to provide support for the family to reduce those numbers in the first place?

Going further down to look at how the money is being spent, you can see that there are nine regions that are receiving money from the ministry. When the money passes the ministry level going down to the region, what kind of control mechanism do we have at that point to ensure that the money is being spent at the right place, at the right time, and for the right purpose? Many of my constituents have expressed concern about the ballooning bureaucracy and the very heavy administration associated with each region.

In the year 2000 I had the pleasure or displeasure of working very closely with region 3, and I'm glad that Mr. Bill Meade is here this afternoon to hear this. My experience at that time was not a very good one. The practice of some of the staff at that time, in my humble opinion, was not as straightforward as it should be. I'd be more than happy to repeat what I say in the House outside this House if needed. The practice of making up stories and misleading the minister's office and misleading elected officials certainly is not something that should be taken lightly, and when you add that with the huge percentage increase year after year, it begs the question: who is actually controlling those monies once it has gotten down to the regional levels?

Looking at the money that we spend for the minister's office, I have absolutely no problem with that. I have no doubt that the minister is very committed and very responsible when it comes to spending taxpayers' dollars, but once the money is passed down to the regions, then we look at this and we see right now region 6, Edmonton and area, which I think Mr. Bill Meade is responsible for, spending $211 million, there is very, very little explanation as to exactly how that money is being spent.

Today if anybody is suggesting that the government should reduce spending money on Children's Services, that will not fly because as members of this House we'd love to see more and more money spent in this high-priority area. However, if we look at the number of children in the system and the things that we are doing today and the things that we used to do 10 years ago and the number of children 10 years ago and the amount of money that we spent 10 years ago, maybe we can learn some very, very useful lessons.

Tough questions need to be asked of the regions who spend more than 70 per cent of the budget of the ministry. Each of these regions should submit a detailed breakdown of how they spend their money. We should go over it line by line and compare how the money was spent in the past to ensure that the taxpayers receive the best value for their money.

I am not advocating reducing the amount of money for this ministry, but I'm advocating that we should have detailed reviews of how the money is being spent, and maybe we can refocus the money on the children rather than on the administration.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, just briefly I want to make a couple of observations. Coming back to the end of the discussion at the beginning of the hon. member's comments, let me point out how $203 million is spent.

Now, 10 years ago we didn't have a program for resources for children with disabilities, but 10 years ago we weren't identifying a hundred new cases of autism every year. So this year when this budget includes $72 million as support for resources for children with disabilities, that is a brand new program that wasn't there before. Ten years ago we spent a fraction of the $63 million that we currently spend on family and community support services going directly to municipalities to provide supports for preventive programs. Ten years ago we didn't spend money on daycares trying to improve the qualifications of their staff. We were subsidizing the daycare directly, but we weren't subsidizing the parents, and we didn't have the number of working poor, that were so-called categorized as working poor, that required assistance. So that would account for at least $203 million of the expense that has not been something that you would have seen in the same capacity 10 years ago.

I believe that the hon. member behind me here in the House has raised some issues that the Auditor might take an interest in, and he does. Every year, annually, we get reports and management letters on every single authority, how they've spent their money and how they perform according to their business plans and the expectations of the department and the legislation.

This past year in our letter to the Assistant Auditor General we cited and agreed with the issues that he raised specifically relative to recoveries from Canada Customs and Revenue Agency dealing with provincial systems and reconciling the dollars in that particular area. We agreed with and accepted recommendations on the expenditure and accounting officer role directly related to our articulation with Alberta Finance principles and making sure that our expenditure officers in the area of child welfare delivery were designated appropriately and that the delegated First Nations monies were properly accounted for. We dealt with access security for information systems. In short, we have now complied with everything that the Auditor General raised in his letter.

I'd like to take a moment and just address one other thing. I really appreciate that the hon. member wouldn't necessarily spend less on children but just challenges to see whether we're spending the appropriate amount in the appropriate way. I think that the families themselves receiving the more preventive style supports, a greater aggression in keeping children in the home with the Alberta response model, the two new pieces of legislation that work to more rapid family reunification, are very strong indicators that we're moving in the right direction.

In terms of the services that have been delivered in a region now identified as Calgary and area, I'd like to go on record as saying and stating that I believe that they are well delivered, delivered with integrity and in the appropriate fashion. Although there has been a question raised about them, I would be more than pleased once again to discuss those services and that history with the hon. member. I know that he would be prepared to do so as well if another occasion provides that opportunity.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, and thanks to the minister for her responses.

I have some specific questions about the programs. I would like to go back to the question about the $1.2 million increase in corporate administration. If we could get some indication of what that involves. The second item: under program 1, ministry support services, there was a $1 million decrease in expenditures on financial support to child and family research. I wonder if the minister could give us some information, some background on those two items.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, could I just beg the hon. member to give me that last item one more time, please?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thanks. Sure. The decrease in expenditures on financial support to child and family research. This is program 1, page 49, and it's the last item.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, we established, as the member would remember, last year some monies to be spent on a centre for family research. In fact, we had $5 million set aside, and they are currently exploring the ways in which we can put out an RFP, establish an appropriate mechanism. This is all related to that. The original amount of money was considerably more. If I'm not mistaken, it was an assignment of $5 million.

Now with the centre for family research this is to assist in the solicitation of proposals to fit with the fetal alcohol initiatives. The expectation that we have is that we will award some state of evidence reviews in the area of intervention to improve outcomes for children and youth affected by FASD. We are looking at a project right now, for example, in Lethbridge with the University of Lethbridge and looking at how we provide funding to look at comparisons and performance measures in Success by Six programs both on the Blood reserve and with the community of Lethbridge.

The research centre, being an arm's-length establishment from government, is in receipt of some administrative funding, which is a million dollars, but beyond that has an additional endowment of $5 million. They have not yet come back with the completed business plan for the sustainable development of those programs.

So until we really get a good look at what the dollars will be for each of the programs, this research centre – let me give you a little bit of the background on it. The research centre, which will be a part of our ministry but also a part of the broader government prospectus, will start by identifying programs for fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, early intervention for children with autism, family and community capacity building, and identifying the needs of rural and urban First Nations and Métis communities. The work they've been doing currently is to try and solicit proposals that might assure that there's adequate prevention in place and respite quite specifically for Kids Kottage.

So rather than a reduction in the research money, this is an amount of money to assure that there's an administrative fund in place while they are looking at the proposals for the $5 million. Ultimately they will be raising some funds, either through federal contacts or through national and international foundations that will hopefully help.

You asked about the $1.2 million in corporate administration. This represents the legal services protocol that I mentioned briefly in one of my opening remarks, including increased legal representation and supports for justice. You might later talk to the Minister of Justice, but we're accounting differently for the management of legal cases that are received under the auspices of child welfare, everything from claims that have been made, liabilities that have been claimed against our ministry, and this gives a way of accounting for how we serve those costs in government and how we represent the costs, more clearly exhibiting them under Children's Services.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Madam Minister, you talked about the research projects – I suppose the research being done on FASD in Lethbridge – and you made some reference to things that are being done in Edmonton. I have a question in regard to rural Alberta and what initiatives you have that would affect rural Alberta as far as FASD.

I tried to ask it in one question, but a supplemental to that would be: how do you co-operate or partner with other ministries in that direction? It is a serious problem – at least I see it as a serious problem – and it is a very preventable problem.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon. minister to respond, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

4:10head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my honour today to introduce a constituent from Vermilion. The Webb family is one of the longest inhabitants of the town. The family are the biggest private employers in Vermilion. It's been a real treat to spend an afternoon with Scott in some meetings. I would ask Scott Webb to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As the hon. member may be aware, the original composition of local community FASD program delivery systems had representation from Health, from Learning, from Children's Services, and the initiative was built on the basis of a collaborative framework where we would see a tremendous amount of partnership. The difficulty, obviously, arises when one partner chooses to withdraw and solicit other initiatives.

The fetal alcohol initiative has an amount in this year's budget added over last year, a 21 per cent increase to $2.85 million, along with the estimates of work that will be done through the FASD research. So there's a tremendous, I would say, increase in monies that are spent here. The frustration level for people in some of our outlying rural communities is when partners make other assignments for their funds and don't always follow through with initiatives that had been promised, with FASD for example.

We've been working to bridge that gap, have opportunities for local child and family service authorities to help bridge the gap and make sure that programs are in place. There's an excellent program in the hon. member's area. That is the Lakeland program that he's valiantly championed. We're doing our best to see that we can link in and continue with their excellent public education program. They are probably a leading light in Alberta. Perhaps through the research program that's being done with Lethbridge and the Blood reserve – we have actually mentioned to them that this may be another linkage with Lakeland so that we are assured that that rural partnership will not diminish.

Overall we believe that this year because of the additional grants for the FASD pilot projects and the initiatives, there will be some fruition, I think a better collaborative framework for understanding where the dollars go, and hopefully a little bit more prevention as well.

I thank the hon. member for his question. The research framework and capacity that will come under the research funding will give us, I would suspect, a very significant amount of extra money in this initiative by the time that projects are awarded. We'll assure and we'll make sure that the hon. member's issues of rural supports are kept front and centre of that group. I believe that Dr. Sutherland at the University of Lethbridge was very sensitive to the fact that that was a most needed item.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A supplemental to the question.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, the chair is recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to, if I may, move to program 2 with some specific questions. My question is: how much of the $12 million increase across the regions is going to be used to help pay for the new licensing laws by agencies?

I have a couple of questions. Why is there a $6 million increase, more being spent for accreditation services? How much of that $6 million, if any, will be going out of country? Will it be going to American companies?

The final one with respect to that accreditation: is the $6 million going to be given to the agencies and then passed on to the accrediting bodies, or is it going to go directly to the new and existing accrediting agencies?

Ms Evans: It's actually, in this coming year's budget, about $9.5 million that will be given, 80 per cent of which will be given for supports for salaries for the daycares themselves; as you know, the ones that have applied to be a part of the accreditation model, about 95 per cent of the daycares, about 98 per cent of the day homes. Eighty per cent of the monies that come directly to those daycares and day homes will be provided for supplements to staff salaries and training so that those daycare providers can't, as it were, take up those things for themselves.

So we're not charging more for the licensing. We're still in the consultation process. I haven't yet been satisfied that I've seen the final framework for what it really should look like to make sure that we're getting the quality of delivery standards. I mean, today the daycares have licences that are protecting the child, giving the child safe toys, safe food, safe environment, but the issues of enhanced quality development of the child are what we want to put the focus on in the accreditation process.

Whether this should be an arm's-length body represented by the people and arm's length from Children's Services and government or whether it should be under the auspices of the ministry, what the final form will be is as yet an undecided point, but what I think is most crucial to get is a proper accreditation framework or proper quality outcome delivery measures and then make sure that those monies get to the front line with a minimum amount of money spent on the administrative supports for accreditation.

Now, you asked originally in the House a question about contracts for outside agencies and people from out of country that might apply. The collaborative that's currently working on the accreditation project represents a number of different groups, even the Child Welfare League of Canada and other groups, that have come together to sit at the table and wrestle with the problem of defining an accreditation model that'll work for Alberta. We are somewhat hamstrung by the fact that nobody else in Canada, nobody in North America has an accreditation model for child care delivery services. But I believe that if our children are as important to us as our patients are in hospitals, we should have that type of a modelling and that we should be able to publish the ones that are accredited and the ones that aren't so that people can make educated choices about where their children should attend.

Ultimately, I'll go one step further on this gangplank. It's my belief that the government should support subsidies to quality care delivery systems at all costs and that someday we may be so well equipped with accredited facilities that that type of standard should apply before subsidies to parents would be provided. In other words, nonaccredited would not be given subsidies unless it was a situation of kin care or some other kinds of care provided to children that made it reasonable to assume that it was quality care.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. A bit of a supplemental going back to FASD. Madam Minister, excuse my ignorance, but, you know, what I want to say is that I think that the programs that we do have are very, very important, and I think that we end up in a situation sometimes in budget restraint times of some of these programs not being adequately funded. When I say inadequately funded, it does give me concern when some of the funding or some of the programs go through health authorities and the health authorities get themselves in some tight situations and the possibility of FASD being reduced or cut back. I guess I would just like to know your comments about: when this funding takes place, could it be a direct funding or at least a designated funding as opposed to into the general revenues of health authorities? Could you comment on that, please?

Ms Evans: Well, without the minister of health present, I would be loath to get too much into the actual mechanics of how Health supports programs like FASD. Suffice it to say that with our cross-ministry initiatives, the one Alberta children and youth initiative that we deal with, Health is a partner, and the member has given food for thought for our collaboration. I know that we're all trying to assure some type of co-operation, and perhaps the way that we can best address this in a cross-ministry framework is to provide members an opportunity to disengage in program delivery if there's been due notice.

Health authorities are relatively independent in the distribution of their own funds and priorities, and as you know, the child and family services authorities don't have quite that level of independence although they're very representative of the community initiatives.

So we'll take that up as a challenge and look at that. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to commend the Minister of Children's Services for her commitment to families and to children. I firmly believe that children are our most important resource that we have in this province and that we have to do all we can to help them to grow up to be responsible, accountable adults. I happen to be of the philosophy that families are the best way to do this and that the best thing we can do for children is to encourage the continuance of viable, functional families to raise children.

I think it's unfortunate that in our society we have gotten away from that a little bit, and therefore I realize the role the Ministry of Children's Services has to play, and I commend the minister for her philosophy in what she's doing. I know that she agrees that families are important and does what she can to keep the family intact.

My specific question to the minister this afternoon has to do with the current Roundtable on Family Violence and Bullying, which I believe the minister has underway at the present time. A few weeks ago she had a seminar in Lethbridge on this session, and I want to ask a couple of questions for the minister to respond to.

First of all, following the seminar in Lethbridge, I did have some contacts from one or two people who were at the round-table, and they felt like the representation at the round-table was too much weighted towards government people who were there versus people who would speak from the grassroots of the community. I wasn't there, so I'm not sure of the validity of this statement, but their point was that we needed to have more representation from grassroots at the round-table. So if the minister could comment on that and what her thoughts are on that.

Secondly, on the expectation that the minister has from the round-table: the results, how she would expect to implement the suggestions and ideas that come forth, and will that create an expectation in society that perhaps will be a challenge to meet?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the hon. member for the question. In the first instance, one of the things that we found very challenging in organizing the round-tables in communities was that there were varied expectations when we first sought points across the map for Albertans to come and become involved. Many of the providers of service immediately signed up. There was no doubt about it that people who worked in justice, police, people who were counsellors in schools, social workers, a number of those folks, came and were almost first up to the plate. So in the 13 regional round-tables we had a significant number of people that were practitioners for social change, who delivered essential change and support services and were accountable at the community level either through agencies or delivery systems.

What we have found in our other focus groups is that we have been able to engage regular community people. Let me give you the list: the aboriginal community; the youth services and youth in two separate groups identifying youth across the province for bullying; elder abuse best-practice groups; faith community leaders; I mentioned previously the gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgendered victims; immigrant women victims; male victims; the military community, which has been a mixture; older adult victims; perpetrators; persons with disabilities victims; women exploited by prostitution; women in emergency shelters; obviously, the male victims group; I mentioned the youth; and so on. What we have now in the final gathering of the guests for the May 7 round-table is a session that's being held on May 6 that's wide open to anybody.

Now, I say that advisedly because as soon as we advertised – Mr. Chairman, you're going to hardly believe this – that we were bringing in experts to talk about violence and bullying, we had 800 people registered at the Calgary Roundup Centre. Unbelievable. It's like they all knew that there had been five deaths since Christmas relative to family violence.

I don't know who all of these people are, but I do know that these people want to come forward and listen to what we've discovered in the round-table, fill out questionnaires, react to the issues that they see, listen to experts talk about bullying and how communities can build capacity and resiliency, and finally to make sure that the final product that we have will be a framework that the community will see fit to commit to, that the person and individual will see fit to commit to, that the province will see fit to commit to, and so on.

There are actually nine other ministries that are involved, and you could ask the Minister of Gaming, if you wish, because he so frequently funds shelter replacement and shelter programs through lottery dollars and has a very big stake in this as well. We have got almost half of the government ministries that are involved in hosting this round-table. I am simply the co-ordinator. I can assure you from the passion and compassion that I've seen in getting all the deputies and ministers together at least for meetings, sometimes two a month, that we've got people who are willing to take up the causes that come as a result of that dialogue and bring forward meaningful change.

Now, when this happened in Ontario, Ontario developed a three and a half to five-year plan with 140 recommendations, and I'm expecting no less in Alberta, recommendations that cover the gamut from what happens to the elder that's abused in a seniors' place or left by neglect to starve alone to what happens to the baby that might be unwittingly a participant or a victim in a family violence case. So the recommendations that will come back will come both to government and to the community level.

I'll make just one final promo on this. When we did one of our very first round-tables, at Fort McMurray, they told us at that centre: do you know that if nothing else happened as a result of this family violence round-table, the very fact that we've got all of these people in one room talking to each other is probably the first step towards making this community a safer place? So although there were some that were disappointed that at the local level the spots were predominantly filled by practitioners or people integrally involved in delivery of some form of service, what we will get on the 6th and 7th of May is a much broader spectrum of Albertans that will be considerate of all of those impressions from across Alberta. We'll consider as well the questionnaires, that we've received literally hundreds of.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to ask the minister if she would talk a little bit about the changes to the regional boundaries and if she sees the present boundaries now being in place holding for the next few years or whether there is going to have to be some further adjustment.

A couple of other specifics, Mr. Chairman. How much will the new regulation of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act cost to implement?

A third question: with the goal of the ministry being the enhancement of aboriginal children, why did the Métis settlements receive less than a hundred thousand dollars of the $12 million increase?

I guess those are a few questions, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you. In terms of the implementation of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act the implementation supports in the estimates this year are $4.3 million. They relate almost exclusively to training and to providing a lot of staff training. It's not simple to train the staff, because there have to be staff in place on the front lines. Removing those staff, talking to them about how they represent the legislative framework, how they respond on that is an important element, how they respond in court, how they work as multidisciplinary teams in assessments, and so on. But this particular amount of money is predominantly for training. It's an amount over and above last year's by about $1.8 million to make sure that we have adequate resources in place to make sure that that training is sufficient.

Now, in terms of the reduced amount of money for the Métis settlements I'll attempt to get you a response on that shortly. But let me just talk a bit about the number of regions. As you know, nine regions plus Métis settlements is really the 10th region. When you look at the way the dollars have been apportioned, it tries to account for both the demographics as well as the unique needs of each region.

In the Edmonton and area region, the newly created region 6, there are a considerable number of people that are a part of this region that may originate from other regions, predominantly from northern Alberta. There are a significant number of people that come from northern Alberta points, stay here for several months of the year and become part of our child welfare case rolls, either off-reserve in some instances or people along with families that have located here to be a part of the oil sands development, the military as a group who have located here. Ten years ago we didn't have that, so there are additional pressures as families who have been more transient than others try to find new systems of support.

So I hope that these will be, roughly speaking, the correct amounts of dollars for each one of these regions. Thus far with the business plans that I've received, I think that those supports should be there. There are not as many additional dollars being profiled in the regions, but that's predominantly because some of those dollars are in place in other places; for example, in the family violence initiative and in other initiatives that we have provided.

But as to the specifics of the reduction of dollars for the Métis settlements I don't note that on program 2, for example. In the operating expense I have, it looks to me like an increase of $300,000 over last year, so I might be missing the place. Could the hon. member clarify again?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The question was that the Métis settlements received less than a hundred thousand dollars of the $12 million increase.

Ms Evans: Mr. Chairman, give me a moment or two, and I'm sure that one of my angels will make sure that I get that amount clear.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, if you so wish, you may provide a response in writing as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to make a few observations on the estimates for the Ministry of Children's Services and to ask a question or two of the minister. Most of the specific questions that I had have already been raised, so I won't waste the time of the House in repeating those.

By way of general comments, Mr. Chairman, I first want to commend the minister for attempting to address the questions with some useful information coming out and trying to do the best job that she can. She may want to respond to some other questions in writing so that the House gets the benefit of more detailed information on the questions that have been asked. Some answers that the minister attempted may have addressed some of those questions only in part, so she might want to look at those answers and then see if she wants to supplement them in writing.

Mr. Chairman, I was looking at a couple of news releases from the department from last year and this year. I'll start perhaps with one of the more recent news releases concerning the minister's travel to San Diego in January to attend a conference dealing with maltreatment of children. The conference was designed to "increase professional skills and knowledge in the prevention, recognition, assessment and treatment of all forms of maltreatment including those related to family violence and substance abuse."

Then in the next paragraph the minister is quoted as saying, "I am looking forward to hearing from the experts in the area of child protection and family violence prevention." I'm sure the minister benefited from being at that conference and brought back some ideas. I'd like to ask the minister if some of those were reflected in the budget decisions that the minister has made since and if she would draw my attention to it.

I have one specific question in terms of needed improvements perhaps. I'm interested in asking the minister to respond to the training of child and youth welfare workers who provide services to children and families who are in the care of the government or are supported by the government while they remain with their families. Are there some changes or improvements being sought and made in the training of the service providers in order to both enhance the quality of service and to ensure that the measures that we take are directed as much to the level of prevention as are needed for the protection of children who are in need of those services? Has the minister made provisions in the budget to encourage professional development of these service providers? If so, what kinds of steps are being taken to enhance and encourage and increase access to professional development? So that's the one specific question related to training and professional development, if you wish.

I was looking at another news release from the minister's department in September of 2003, Mr. Chairman. This deals with the annual report for 2002-2003 from the Department of Children's Services. The minister refers there to "a child care initiative that will improve the quality of child care settings and help families select quality child care that meets their child's developmental needs."

In this budget what changes or what particular allocations reflect that continuing commitment, I guess, of the minister and of the minister's department? How are the child care facilities in the province going to receive more attention both in terms of the level of training required of child care workers and the accreditation of either agencies or families who provide that child care in their homes for, I think, four to six, eight children? So the question of requiring certain standards in terms of the quality of care to be delivered is what's begged by this particular commitment, and I want to ask the minister what kinds of budget decisions reflect concrete actions, to match the words with concrete actions.

Another item that's mentioned in the same September 30 news release is the publicly accessible adoptions web site to "promote the need for families of specific children in the permanent care of government." I'd like to ask the minister to perhaps give us some update on how that web site is working. It wasn't in use for a while, and some improvements have been made to it, I know, to make sure that private information on children is secure and appropriately protected. How is it working? What are the costs of it, if there are any costs associated with it? Where are they reflected in the budget if the program is to continue? So that's yet another question.

Now, I was looking at the budgets of regions in particular, taking a quick look at them, and noticed that, unless I'm mistaken, there's a pattern there more or less with respect to the budgets of each of the regions with the exception of one, I think. I think it was region 5. This was under expenditure programs dealing with child care and early intervention. Both of these programs, in my view, are exceedingly important to prevent harm to children, to make sure that they get very early on appropriate care and that early intervention is available when problems are diagnosed and detected.

The pattern that I notice, Mr. Chairman, and to which I want to draw the minister's attention and invite her comments is as follows. In the case of both child care and early intervention there's a reduction in the budget allocations for these regions. The only exception is region 5. In some cases the budget allocations are less than last year's for both cases, early intervention and child care. In other regions it may be that for child care there's a reduction and for early intervention there may be either stagnant funding, same as the last year's, or only nominally increased this year.

If I'm right in seeing a certain pattern of a general decline in the budgetary allocations, how does it square with the budget figures here in the Budget 2004 document where there's a $5 million increase with respect to child care, for example, from the forecast for 2003-2004 to the current budget, which is $68 million something? So there's close to a $6 million, $7 million increase on the child care side, yet I see systematic reductions in the allocations to that particular item in the budgets of most of the regions, if not all of the regions.

These are some of the questions for the minister to address.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to try and succinctly capture the essence of most, and if I miss any, I will submit them in writing. I realize that we have only a few minutes left.

With the indulgence of the hon. member that just spoke,

Edmonton-Strathcona, I'd like to just provide that the Métis settlements that was referenced by one of the previous speakers from the opposition, page 67, was to remove the variances in the removal of matching funds from the federal government. There's a minimal increase, and there's a low child welfare caseload, low resources for children with disabilities caseload, and provision has been made for community collaboration and delivery of service. So it's predominantly a reconfiguration of the federal funding there that's caused the change.

In the conference in San Diego – and I'm so glad you mentioned it. I actually could spend hours talking to the hon. member about what I learned there. I reacquainted myself with Judge Milliken and talked about the things that are fundamental in our Child Welfare Act that relate to what we really did develop, and that is a reduced time for families to be separated. You know, if you keep a child away, you can risk developmental detachment, a number of other pathologies in terms of the psychological profile of a child.

In California they work very closely with their courts to try and put families together as quickly as possible, so they've got a pretty stringent guideline to a reunification process. We talked about that, and we talked a lot there about bullying.

The additional dollars here in two areas, both in the parenting resource initiative as well as the additional dollars for family violence, relate in part to things experienced after our discussion with the experts in San Diego in child welfare, and hopefully after the round-table on family violence, the other ministries' profiled supports for those areas will show the hon. member opposite that we made some significant difference.

The training for the child welfare legislation I had mentioned previously was in excess of $4 million this year, and there are significant training dollars there for not only the service providers that are our staff but for those that are on contract to the ministry. So I can assure the hon. member that we believe that sufficient provision for this new legislation in the area of training has been made as well as some support for the advocate, as well, in terms of developing community-based mentors. There are significantly more dollars in this budget for that.

In terms of child care accreditation and the extra dollars provided there, I mentioned just a few moments ago that we have been looking at an elevated quality status for those dollars that are expected. The overall increase there is approximately $9.8 million, looking at early childhood development programs and increased respite for families and in the child care area more funds to provide supports to the staff so that they will be able to complete additional training.

In terms of parenting resources there's $2 million that wasn't in the . . .

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Children's Services, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, and after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Children's Services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, I must now put the question.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases

$735,801,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Department of Children's Services and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Maskell: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department: Children's Services, operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $735,801,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that the Assembly adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we return in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:52 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 20, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 04/04/20

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Before we commence our deliberations on the Department of Transportation, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, all members, for allowing me to make a brief introduction. I'm very privileged tonight to introduce to you and through you some very special constituents of mine. They are known as the Burnewood 207 Beavers, and they are accompanied tonight by their Beaver leader Mike Utley and some parents and helpers: Ken Bowridge, Wayne Kendall, Tracy Bunda, Gerald Bara, Rhys Davies, Randy Resler, Chris Spracklin, Tim Janewski, Catharine Schoendorfer, and I think Walter Breedevelt is here as well. I hope I've got all the names.

Mr. Chairman, many of us in this Assembly have come up through the Beavers or the Cub Scouts or the Girl Guides or the Brownies, and I am one of those. I'm very proud any time I have a chance to meet . . . Well, in actual fact I belonged to the Cubs and the Boy Scouts, but I think you all know what I mean. If I could ask these special Beavers and all of their helpers to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of all members here.

Thank you very much for coming. As soon as you're ready, I'll join you for a photo down on level 2.

Thank you.

The Chair: Any further introductions?

We'll begin this evening by giving a little bit of information to the people who are in the galleries and a reminder to all hon. members. This is the informal part of the legislative session. People are allowed to move around quietly. We still adhere to only one person standing and talking at a time, but it allows for, in this case, members to ask questions to the minister, the minister to give the reply, and to go back and forth rather quickly in that way. The first hour is the minister and the opposition members who go into response. After that it's anyone in the Chamber.

So we'll call on the Minister of Transportation to begin the 2004-2005 estimates on your department.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Transportation

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a real honour to serve as Transportation minister in the province of Alberta and, of course, present the ministry's estimates for 2004-2005 and also provide a few details about some of the ministry's programs and activities.

Before I do that, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the colleagues in the Assembly tonight our ministry's senior staff, seated in the members' gallery: my executive assistant, Ron Glen; Jay Ramotar, the deputy minister; Rob Penny, assistant deputy minister of transportation and civil engineering, and have a good look at him because he's going to be changing here in the next couple of days; Brian Marcotte, assistant deputy minister of transportation policy and planning; Gregg Hook, assistant deputy minister of transportation safety services; Gary Boddez, who is also the chair of the Alberta Transportation Safety Board and who will also be having a bit of a metamorphosis here soon; Winnie Yiu-Yeung, executive director of the finance and business management branch; and Leanne Stangeland, director of communications.

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister. May we again have permission to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of my colleague the MLA for Edmonton-Strathcona it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly 24 guests. These guests are members of the 66 Girl Guides in Edmonton-Strathcona and are here this evening to observe the proceedings of the Assembly. They are accompanied by Mrs. Donna Wilkie. Unlike the hon. minister I was never a Guide or a Brownie, but I was a Cub. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Transportation (continued)

The Chair: Thank you, hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. When I said that both Rob and Gary will be changing, they're going to be going bald for cancer. They will be having their heads shaved this week, so anybody here that wants to donate towards a very worthwhile charity, now is the time to do it.

I wish to publicly thank all my senior officials and of course all of the ministry staff for their outstanding work. As minister I get a number of kudos, praises from the colleagues and all Albertans, about the quality for our department staff, and I'm really proud to have such a great group of hard-working people in Transportation.

This upcoming year marks the second year the department's estimates have been done using the new fiscal framework. That means that the committee this evening will have two votes: one for the operating expenses and equipment and inventory purchases and one for capital investment. The new framework has worked well for Alberta Transportation. The ministry budget is more stable and predictable, and we've thankfully seen an end to significant mid-year spending adjustments. This stability is also beneficial for our municipal construction, design, and maintenance partners. They're better able to plan their operations because they can base their activities on solid assumptions.

The department's estimates include approximately $1.1 billion for operating expenses, equipment, and inventory purchases – that's really the preservation, municipal grants, and rehab component – and $442 million for capital investment. That's an overall budget of approximately $1.5 billion. Now, of that $1.5 billion, $257 million is for noncash items such as amortization and consumption of inventories. Consumption of inventories would be like sand, gravel, et cetera. This translates into an actual spending target of approximately $1.25 billion.

Safety is the ministry's number one priority and the prime motive for ministry activities and programs. The ministry will spend approximately $29 million directly on transportation safety programs and activities of the Alberta Transportation Safety Board. It's the entire traffic safety budget. This includes all of the inspection services of commercial vehicles as well.

I believe our current programs and services contribute to better safety on Alberta roadways, but it's important to keep looking for improvements. That's why I recently appointed one former RCMP assistant commissioner Don McDermid to review all of our traffic safety programs. Mr. McDermid will report back to me in May, and I'm looking forward to seeing what ideas and recommendations come from his review. There is no doubt that we need to reduce the number of collisions on our roads, and we all can do a lot to improve driver behaviour.

Another way to of course reduce collisions is to continue improving and expanding Alberta's highway infrastructure. There's a direct correlation between infrastructure improvements and improved collision rates. For instance, adding an interchange reduces collisions at that intersection by approximately 45 per cent on average. Twinning a highway when the traffic warrants are there reduces collisions by approximately 47 per cent.

So during 2004-05 Alberta Transportation capital investments in the province's highway network will be $411 million. Now, of that $411 million, $266 million will be invested in what is called the strategic economic highway corridors, such as the north/south trade corridor and ring roads in Edmonton and Calgary. Economic corridor development is a ministry priority. The remaining $145 million will be invested in other points of Alberta's highway system. Now, this does include $4.5 million for the new tourism highway signage initiative. This is a cross-government initiative, and it will convert existing tourism signage to new standards that are consistent with other North American jurisdictions.

On a final note regarding highway construction Alberta Transportation plans to begin building the southeast leg of Edmonton's ring road using our new made-in-Alberta public/private process. As you'll note in the estimates, the capital investment vote for 2004-05 does not include funding for this potential P3 project. The $24 million shown for this project on the statutory program page represents the projected first-year funding requirement if traditional delivery methods were used. Though we are partway through the process, the final decision to proceed has not been made yet, and we won't be able to make that until later this year. This is subject to the selection of the potential contractor and potential final contract negotiations.

The ministry will continue to support municipal transportation, waterways, water infrastructure through a number of grant programs. Overall the ministry will invest $355 million through its own municipal programs and a further $27 million through the infrastructure Canada/Alberta partnership program with the federal government. Edmonton and Calgary will continue to receive funding based on 5 cents per litre of road fuel sold within city limits. Other cities, towns, villages, and eligible municipalities will receive funding based on $60 per capita. Rural municipalities will continue to receive formula-based grants. They are also going to continue to be eligible for the resource road program. This program provides funding assistance to address increased industrial resource-based or heavy truck traffic on local roads. It was a real success in its first year, and in many cases the private sector contributed funding along with the provincial and municipal governments.

Now, cities other than Edmonton and Calgary can also apply for funds under the cities special transportation grant. The program, which assists these cities in addressing transportation infrastructure affected by rapid growth, will provide approximately $32 million through the Alberta municipal water/waste-water partnership. This partnership provides funding assistance to municipalities to address water/waste-water infrastructure issues. This amount is higher than last year due to almost $7 million provided through the water for life strategy for regional water systems. The program formula is enhanced by 10 per cent.

I did mention the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, or ICAP. It's entering its fourth year and is winding down. Ministry officials are in negotiations with the federal government for the new municipal rural infrastructure fund, which will be similar to ICAP. There likely won't be any projects approved this year under this program, but we are continuing to negotiate the program with the federal government, so that's why there's no mention of it in the estimates this year.

Finally, we will invest $30 million in the construction and rehab of the province's water management infrastructure. This includes such components as dams, reservoirs, and spillways. Of course, the major project is rehabilitating the Carseland/Bow River headworks system in southern Alberta.

So, Mr. Chairman, it's been a real pleasure to present the estimates for 2004-05. I'd be pleased to answer any questions the hon. members may have, and certainly if they're technical in nature, if I can't get the answer today, then I will certainly get those answers as quickly as possible.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to estimates and to thank the minister for his opening comments and also his staff who are present here with us this evening to certainly facilitate a very open and frank discussion about the Department of Transportation.

My questions this evening, Mr. Chairman, are going to centre around the overview of the ministry and certainly regarding the improvement of road, driver, and vehicle safety; the improvements of provincial highway infrastructure; the support of municipalities in the provision of their transportation and water/waste-water needs; and certainly talk about Alberta's interest in provincial, national, and international policy, which impacts transportation here in the province.

I was quite happy to see that in the estimates the ministry expense for 2004-2005 is going to be over a billion dollars, which is an increase of $166 million, or 19 per cent, from 2003-2004; that the ministry's capital investment will be $501 million in 2004-2005, another increase of $94 million, or 23 per cent, from the 2003-2004 budget; and to make note of the fact that the capital investment includes internal statutory funding of $24 million for the potential public/private partnership to build the southeast portion of the Edmonton ring road.

Certainly, as the minister indicated in his opening comments, we have many areas of growth here in the province. The cities of Edmonton and Calgary have experienced incredible growth over the last few years. I think that long-term plans that were made for the systems inside these cities to move traffic were based on projections that in no way could forecast the rapid growth that we've had, and it certainly placed a great deal of stress on our transportation systems within these cities. It is an enormous job to play catch-up and to try to provide these facilities for the drivers in these two cities. I think, certainly, that any of the people that have to drive in these cities, particularly during rush hour, would agree that there is much work to be done in order to facilitate the smooth, safe flow of traffic.

Looking over the operating expenses – and I'm referring to page 360 of the budget – transportation infrastructure and safety expenses have risen by almost $150 million since 2003-2004. Could the minister please give us a breakdown of these expenses?

As well, on page 360 under Capital Investment the capital investment in transportation infrastructure and safety has increased by almost $70 million. What will this money be going for?

When we flip over to page 361, ministry support services, the budget for the minister's office is increasing by $10,000 while the budget for the deputy minister's office is increasing by $14,000. If the minister could give us some explanation for the increase in costs in these areas. As well, if the minister could indicate the average salary of the employees in the ministry as well as the highest and lowest salaries. As well, if the minister could indicate how much was spent on bonuses last year and what is anticipated to be spent on bonuses this year. If he could also indicate what was the largest bonus that was given out.

Switching to program 2, transportation infrastructure and safety, on page 362. Highway systems expenses have increased by almost $36.5 million. If the minister could please give us some indication of why and where the $36.5 million in increases would go. Also, if the minister could indicate to us why the operating expenses funded by lotteries for road transportation partners decreased by $5 million. What services will be lost? As well, will the minister provide a breakdown of the operating expenses for the streets improvement program? Also, why has the operating expenses funded by lotteries for the streets improvement program decreased by $5 million?

Again, Mr. Chairman, when we look at the overall business plan for the province and for Transportation, we did ask questions earlier in the session as to why the business plan provides that they're allowing a decline in the quality of highways in Alberta. Is part of the reason that there is $5 million less here attributed to the decline in the quality of our highways here in Alberta? If the minister could please indicate, as well, why the operating expenses for municipal water and waste-water grants increased by more than twice the amount this particular year.

As well, continuing with program 2, the capital investment in provincial highway systems has increased by $8 million. Other road infrastructure has increased by $4.5 million. The strategic economic corridor investment initiative has also increased by over $61 million. Will the minister detail these increases and what Albertans can expect to see as a result of these increases?

The capital investment in water management infrastructure has increased by $1 million while the capital investment funded by lotteries has decreased by $5 million, which would indicate an overall decrease of $4 million. If he could please indicate why we have this decrease of $4 million.

I'd also like to make some comments on the southeast extension of Anthony Henday Drive, particularly in light of the announcement today. I have not confirmed this yet, but it was indicated that the cost of the Calgary courthouse, which is going to be built under a P3 model, has soared immensely. What protection do taxpayers in this province have in regard to the cost of the southeast extension of Anthony Henday Drive so that they will not be faced with these enormous increases in the cost of construction at this particular time?

Estimates say that for 2004-2005 $23,900,000 will be invested in the Edmonton southeast ring road. The minister had gone on to say that this would be the first-year funding requirements if we'd use the traditional methods for road construction and freeway extension along these ways.

In March of 2004 in the inventory of major Alberta projects Alberta economic development outlined that the southeast extension of the Anthony Henday ring road would cost $270 million over three years. How much can taxpayers expect this project to cost per year? Again, does the $270 million include the annual lease payments and the principal and interest costs for the project?

On the government of Alberta web site under Transportation a release on the southeast leg of the Edmonton ring road says that the federal government will be contributing $75 million to this particular project. Now, in question period the minister indicated that he had not yet seen the $75 million. Will this amount be deducted from the $270 million that it has already been indicated the project will cost, or does the $270 million that is forecast at this particular point not include the $75 million which we expect to get from the federal government? As well, does the minister have any indication from the federal government when we could expect to see this $75 million?

As well, yesterday in question period the minister suggested that because of the rising cost of steel, 15 to 30 per cent, taxpayers can expect to pay more for projects such as the southeast leg of the Anthony Henday ring road. Has this been included in the $270 million? As well, what percentage of the entire cost of the project does steel account for, and is there any way we can get a ballpark idea of just exactly what we are looking at in regard to an increase in the amount of costs for steel?

At one time we had asked about the cost of the southeast leg of Anthony Henday Drive, and it was indicated that this cost would be in the neighbourhood of $300 million. Since that time we've seen pressures, mostly on bridge structures, and that's related to a fast rising increase in the cost of steel. The minister goes on to say, "I believe it's gone up anywhere from 15 to 30 per cent, and in fact there are some that are only getting a seven-day commitment on the price of steel today."

In fact, the government's web site said that this particular project would cost $300 million minus the $75 million from the feds as a public project. So theoretically the project should cost less as a P3, accounting for any increase in building materials. As yet we still have many relevant and basic questions that have been asked on this issue, and we still are awaiting clarification on those questions.

Certainly, when we are looking at $300 million of taxpayer money, we should know where that money is going and how it's going to be spent before we make the commitment.

8:30

Albertans are wanting to know these particular costs in light of the fact that the whole idea of P3s has been a very controversial subject, and in many areas where they have been used, whether it be for the construction of schools, for the hospital programs, they have certainly not proven to be more cost-effective; they have not proven to be more efficient. As well, the ongoing costs to taxpayers down the road have also been immense. In the case of hospitals we certainly have not seen the level of service being provided to the claimants. It is a brand new area, and it's one where Albertans have to be protected not only from the cost of these but the services that they are to provide down the road.

That has covered my questions on Anthony Henday.

Now, then, as well, as I indicated earlier, I do have some questions that constituents have asked. One certainly refers to the funding for accessible specialized transportation in Alberta. It's one of these topics that crosses ministries, and it seems that at this particular time nobody's taking responsibility for it. It's one of those areas where those vulnerable Albertans that require transportation are losing out.

I heard a story today of a family who had to transport their mother to the hospital at 7 in the morning so that she could undergo dialysis. She underwent dialysis and then had to sit in the waiting room until 5 o'clock that evening before they could come and retrieve her. That was because they could not afford alternative transportation for her.

This is a huge issue, particularly in rural areas and particularly in light of the fact that I don't think there's been a full survey since 1994 with the Alberta Transportation study of seniors and disability transportation in Alberta. Certainly, nine years later one of the conclusions is still very relevant: given the current economic situation and the inclusion of the PTOAG money in the unconditional municipal grant program, it will be important that organizations co-ordinate services and pool their resources; failing this, many service providers might be forced to cease operation. That statement has certainly proven to be true.

What these providers require is certainly some clear comment and commitment on funding for this type of transportation. There are issues here when it comes to transporting people that require transportation but not ambulances because of medical needs.

Another situation that was brought to my attention was where a particular patient in Strathmore when they were not part of the Calgary health authority received funding and transportation to go to Calgary to receive their dialysis, and the trip home was covered as well. Since Strathmore has been absorbed into the Calgary health authority, this person is now bound by the policies of the Calgary health authority. This puts quite a strain on that family in that where once there was transportation for this type of disability, there isn't any more.

As well, when we look at Innisfail, it is my understanding that their bus was taken off the road because it failed inspection. So what's happened in Innisfail is that they haven't had any provider that's been able to come in and replace that bus, so the residents there that require accessible transportation don't have it any more. Particularly for those who require accessible specialized transportation, these are quality of life issues. Certainly, people are wanting to know who is going to take the bull by the horns and settle this issue, and it becomes a huge issue for those people in rural Alberta. The impact on families of not having accessible transportation is also huge.

I'll continue later. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stelmach: I'll certainly start answering some of your questions, but do you want to finish?

Mr. Bonner: Go ahead.

Mr. Stelmach: Okay.

Well, we'll start right from page 360. I do agree with the hon. member that both Edmonton and Calgary have seen phenomenal growth and put a lot of pressure on their transportation system and their roads, but equally as important is of course the situation we face in rural Alberta, where we may not have the traffic volumes but certainly heavier traffic on country roads in terms of the oil and gas industry and more in manufacturing. They see the large cities benefiting with the growth here, of course, and they certainly sympathize with the pressures, but they also would like to see some balance in kind of the infrastructure dollars that are spent across the province. So definitely growth is happening across the province, and it does raise a number of safety issues for us.

First and foremost, in terms of the budget increases for the minister's office and then the ministry operations, those reflect the 3 and a half per cent increase from the AUPE contract negotiations, and part of the ministry operations increased as a result of that. Now, we applied the same percentage to our staff in the minister's office, which is the people that are determined to be excluded from the agreement.

On page 360 there have definitely been increases in '04-05. This is now comparing to '03-04. Now, it's due primarily to a number of areas. One, $134 million, or 50 per cent, of the increase in 2004-05 was provided via the 2003-2006 budget cycle. There was an increase of $78 million for municipal transportation grants, $38 million for the strategic economic corridor investment, and also increased amortization expense because we took over all of the secondary highways, and we had to write those down in terms of the amortization.

The $19.6 million approved for 2004-05 during the '04-07 cycle does include $46 million for the construction and rehab of the provincial highway network system. Part of the additional $98 million was allocated to the ministry for '04-07. The balance, $52 million, is allocated to '05-06.

Now, $6.8 million is for the water for life strategy. It's part of the additional $16.1 million that was added to the ministry's '04-07. The balance, at $9.3 million, is going to be allocated in '05-06 at a rate of $7.2 million and '06-07 at a rate of $2.1 million for that year. It does include the four and a half million dollars for tourism highway signage and $2 million, of course, for the salary increases.

There will be, of course, $500,000. It's a recovery from the federal government for the Dead Man's Flats crossing. That's for wildlife, and that's to be built on the trans-Canada. It's part of a federal-funded project.

The increase of $165.7 million for '04-05. It's $78 million for municipal transportation grants, $13 million for increased amortization. The '04-05 estimate compared to the '02-03 actual shows a $366 million increase. Now, it's primarily due to the $220 million restoration to municipal transportation grants, $63 million for provincial highway systems, $20 million for the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, and again the $6.8 million for water for life, $2 million for manpower, and $1.2 million related to transportation safety services.

With respect to page 362, transportation safety services, they did see an increase of 4 per cent. It's $1.058 million. Salary increases are $0.7 million, and $0.3 million is for the traffic-related electronic data strategy. It's called TREDS, and it's a credit-recovery program with the government of Canada. That's why you'll see on the revenue side that we're expecting about $800,000 from the federal government in a recovery, about $500,000 for the National Safety Code – and it's partial costs from the government of Canada to the provincial government to assist in achieving consistent implementation of the National Safety Code – and $0.3 million for the traffic-related electronic data strategy; that's TREDS.

Now, traffic safety services. They're responsible for quite a list: vehicle driver safety programs, their driver licensing standards, licence monitoring and enforcement, impaired driver remedial programs, dangerous goods control, monitoring the motor carrier industry and provincial railways, and also the traffic safety initiative, which is a collection of safety measures and initiatives developed and delivered with stakeholders. This could be snowmobile clubs, the AMA, checkstop, safety education built into, actually, the Alberta Learning curriculum, and it's a very important program.

Now, with respect to the traffic safety board, it had a 2 per cent increase, $19,000, related to salary increases. This is a board that came into effect following the May 20, 2003, proclamation of the Traffic Safety Act. It replaces the previous Driver Control Board and Motor Transport Board. It functions as the appeal body for decisions to the registrar relating to driver training schools, driver instructors, examiners, vehicle inspection stations, vehicle inspection technicians, safety fitness certificates, carrier safety ratings, and administrative penalties assessed. It is responsible for appeals surrounding decisions and actions taken under the Railway (Alberta) Act, administers the ignition interlock program for impaired drivers. It does hear appeals under the Alberta administrative licence suspension program. That's where licences are suspended for either refusing to blow or blowing over .08. We do administer the vehicles seizure program, aimed at reducing the number of drivers who drive their vehicles while under licence suspension.

With respect to municipal grants there was one on street improvement. There are a number of municipal grant formulas. One of them is street improvement. Now, these are grants that go to cities, towns, villages, et cetera, that are smaller, of course, than Edmonton and Calgary. Edmonton and Calgary get the 5 cents a litre, and the rest are based on $60 per capita. The street improvement program provides $60 per capita, like I said before, and they're cost-based grants at 75 per cent government, 25 per cent municipality. It's really capital for street improvements. The eligible projects include grading, gravelling, chip seal paving, signal upgrades, just anything tied to the improvement of the infrastructure in those communities.

We did add water and waterline replacements in conjunction with roadworks. Sometimes the community would get the $60 to repair the street, but they didn't have enough money to repair the water infrastructure under it, so we made it part of the program if they were repairing the street. It's worked well in the past, and the program helps municipalities across the province immensely.

There was a question with respect to water. There is an increase of $6.8 million. Over the three years there will be $16.1 million into the program, and it's really cost-shared grants to eligible municipalities, those with populations less than 45,000. It's also to assist in the construction of very high-priority municipal water supply and water treatment and disposal works. Now, it does not pay for the distribution. It pays for the main line to the community, and of course it does ensure that all Albertans have equitable access to safe water supplies and environmentally acceptable waste-water treatment.

The next question was with respect to the southeast Anthony Henday extension. There have been a number of figures that have been thrown about in terms of: what is the anticipated cost of this particular road construction? When we made the announcement a few months ago, we estimated the cost at about $300 million, and since then there have been a number of figures that have been used, one that came off our web site and then the other, quoted by the hon. member, of $270 million. Of course, it raised a lot of curiosity because they couldn't figure it out. If we said $300 million, how did the price always seem to be decreasing over the last few months?

So we did a little bit of research, and with respect to today's question in the House that was asked by the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, it was an amount that was given by the Alberta Economic Development Authority where on a monthly basis they list construction projects and attach value to them. Our information is that there might have been a little overzealous individual in terms of reporting the cost. Where we said that it will be $300 million, the media asked: what do you think the savings might be? I said: "Well, it could be 10 per cent. Who knows?" Apparently they subtracted the 10 per cent from the estimated value, and they put it on their web site as $270 million when it should have been the $300 million. So that's the difference in the price.

The question raised earlier by the same member in terms of an amount shown on the web site really piqued my interest because I wasn't aware of that. We did a little bit of checking and found out that the information that was put on the web site for the southwest corridor – unfortunately, a staff member used that very same information and attached it to the southeast leg. That's why those two amounts were the same. Since then, we've made the adjustments appropriately.

8:50

The federal government has indicated that they will contribute $75 million towards the Edmonton ring road and Calgary. We are including them in the estimates on the revenue side. We did put them into the revenue from the federal government. We anticipate that we will be receiving the $150 million over the next three years as the road is being completed. It will be deducted from the total cost of the road, that was estimated to be $300 million. I don't know how much the inflationary pressures will increase the cost or if they will. There are 22 structures on this particular stretch of road. Maybe it will cause some innovation in the industry to look at other ways of constructing those structures, and they might look to some other method, maybe a combination of steel and concrete other than just steel. But there is definitely a potential for some of the prices to increase as a result of the huge and inflationary pressure on steel.

Now, are Albertans going to get value for their dollar? We're doing two things, Mr. Chairman. One is a public-sector comparison. What would that road cost if we were to build it ourselves? Secondly, we're going to follow that with what's called a dummy bid. We'll have someone bid on the project, just as if they were a regular construction company, and give us and all Albertans an idea of some of the costs – you know, where would the costs come in? – and use that as a cost comparative in terms of the public/private partnership.

The value, I believe, in the public/private partnership is in innovation. When a company will be responsible or has to share the risk of maintaining that infrastructure for the next 30 years, they would have to look to first of all innovation to build a product, a material that would last a lot longer and require less maintenance because they're going to be stuck with that maintenance by agreement.

Secondly, they can then manage the construction of that total road – bridge, grading, asphalt, all the interchange construction, the railway exchanges or the overpasses – bring people in as they're required and the equipment as they require and not mobilize and demobilize as dollars become available in a budget and build a long stretch of road in a multiple of years, generally through the traditional method.

We're looking forward to the RFP coming forward. As I said, we'll use those measurements, and we'll determine if we're getting value for the dollar.

With respect to special transportation, definitely mobility is a predeterminer of health, and we are hearing from some communities, especially small communities that are requiring some special modes of transportation, especially for seniors. Many communities have taken it on themselves in partnership with some of our lottery programs to buy vans and involve volunteers. There are a number of different strategies employed by municipalities, but between the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Department of Transportation we'll be looking at that over the next year and seeing what adjustments we can make.

I believe that could be the end. Maybe I've missed some, but we'll follow it in Hansard, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Minister, for those responses.

When we look at the Transportation business plan, the business plan refers to the changing demographic of our population on page 409. Again, when we were talking here, we were talking about specialized transportation services, and certainly the industry has felt pressures as well.

Quite interestingly, when I was talking with them, they've certainly seen some increases in their insurance, but what they find is that their fuel costs are the thing that's affecting them as well. At one time it was so much more advantageous to use propane in the buses that a lot of them converted their buses to propane. That certainly isn't the advantage today that it was at that time. So what we do have is a fleet of buses out there that is aging. Some of them are starting to have issues as far as safety goes, and the decision has to be made whether it is more beneficial to repair the bus or put it out of service.

One of the suggestions from the industry was that we certainly have seen an increase over time with the tax on aviation fuel. For those people that are providing specialized transportation, one of their questions was that if they are providing this specialized transportation and certainly to a very small percentage of our population, they would like to know if there's any possibility that there could be some adjustment in the cost of taxes they pay on their fuel bills in order to be able to continue serving this particular group.

As well, another group that is having a great deal of difficulty when it comes to the quality-of-life issue of transportation is our seniors. With our aging population and certainly more and more people getting to the point where they no longer wish to drive or they physically can't drive or their families don't want them to drive, then we have to provide some type of transportation. So that is certainly one of the areas where I think we have to start putting plans in place whereby we can have transportation for this particular segment of our society.

When we look at the performance measures on page 413 under the heading Performance Measures, why is the mechanical safety of commercial vehicles, both the percentage of inspected vehicles requiring on-site adjustments and the percentage of inspected vehicles requiring attention of a mechanic, targeted to decline as of 2005? It doesn't seem to me that if we are decreasing the percentage of inspected vehicles, if we're decreasing that number, we can improve road, driver, and vehicle safety. There just doesn't seem to be a situation here where we can decrease the inspections yet increase the amount of safety. So what has the ministry done in order to counteract the safety risk? Why are the percentages so low?

As well, one of the questions that I would like to ask the minister is: when will the actual and targets for involvement of commercial vehicles in casualty collisions be determined? Why is the percentage of drinking drivers in injury collisions in Alberta targeted to increase in 2004-2005?

In the business plan it was indicated that we were going to allow the physical condition and usability of our highways to deteriorate. This, to me, would seem to be a situation that if we were going to allow the decrease in the physical condition and usability of our highways at times when we are increasing traffic on these highways, then certainly as we've discussed in the past, the rate of deterioration and the cost of maintenance and repair is not a linear function but an exponential function. Does the minister have any indicator as to when we can allow highways to deteriorate and at what point those costs are going to escalate greatly because of the poor conditions of those roads?

If the minister does have some type of plan which indicates that we can have roads in a deteriorated state from what Albertans have been used to, if he could share with us that research that indicates that in the long run this will be a benefit or a cost savings.

Again, why are provincial highways in good condition targeted to decline through to 2007 and those in poor condition targeted to increase through to 2007? Once again, why is the percentage of those in good condition so low? Why is the percentage of utilization of provincial highways set to decline in 2004-2005? Why is the functional adequacy of provincial highways set to decline through to 2007? Why is the percentage of 79.5 so low?

Another issue that Albertans don't have clear-cut answers to. In October 2003 researcher Lisa Prescott prepared a report for the Parkland Institute. The study was entitled Un-accountable: The Case of Highway Maintenance Privatization in Alberta. The study attempted to compare the highway maintenance before and after privatization of the system. Specifically, its purpose was to answer the following question: "Has the switch to private highway maintenance resulted in lower costs for the Alberta government while maintaining the same level of service?"

I think that after the number of years that we have experienced the private model of highway maintenance, we can go back and compare it to any research that was done prior to the privatization of maintenance for Alberta highways. If the minister has any information that he could share with us where comparisons at this point have now been done to determine whether or not this was a cost-saving venture for Albertans.

As well, one of the recommendations of the Auditor General was on the driver examination program, not only the driver examination program but the driving school education. In talking with a constituent who is in the industry of driving school education, he did make a number of statements, he asked some questions, and he did provide some answers. The first one he indicated to me was a road test. What he suggested here was that there be an advanced road test given to those who come from another country with a licence.

One of the reasons that this particular recommendation was put in by him was that a person came to Alberta from another country, within three weeks of arriving in Alberta he had a class 1 licence, and just a few months later he was killed in an accident driving a rig. It upset the whole community quite a bit that a person could come to Alberta from another country, obtain a class 1 licence that quickly, and not have, certainly, the training and experience required to drive a big rig.

Another suggestion that this individual had was that there should be a road test fee cap on the amount an examiner may charge for a road test. Again, he went as far as to say that he's heard where some driving schools and examiners are involved in kickbacks, where they purposely fail a student and get some of the proceeds back to the driving school.

When I look at the Auditor General's recommendations on the testing in recommendation number 41, he goes on to state:

- We recommend that the Ministry of Transportation strengthen its monitoring of and audit processes for driver examiners by:
- preparing annual plans for monitoring and auditing examiners
  - promptly monitoring and auditing driver examiners, and reporting the results to senior management

- training driver program administrators to identify the risk factors of unethical behaviour and to investigate problem examiners
- making the license renewal process as rigorous as the application process

So could the minister please tell us where the department is in fulfilling this particular recommendation 41 of the Auditor General.

As well, another area that was indicated by my constituent was that “the examiner may not force the student to use the examiner’s car whereby they charge an extra fee for usage of their car.” Again, it just adds extra expense to people trying to get their licence right now.

He indicated that he felt it would be a very good recommendation that “every driving school must have their own classroom.” He goes on to say that this would “force many in our industry to clean up their act and provide better service and not treat it as a side business based only on profits.” I think that’s an excellent recommendation.

He goes on to provide some statements in regard to in-car lessons.

Currently the minimum driving time required for in-car lessons is only 10 hours. This is not sufficient enough for many drivers to become a safe and knowledgeable driver. The minimum amount of hours should be raised to 20 hours for the in-car portion. This should be also completed within 60 days but no faster than 30 days.

Again, a very solid and sound recommendation.

He goes on to make some comments about a computerized system using a database. He says that his recommendation here is to make a computerized system whereby every examiner enters into a database system where all registries are linked together along with the government. In the computer/database system there should be:

- The examiner giving the road test
- The name of driver and other personal information (Ex., date of birth, license number. etc.)
- Pass/Fail of driving exam – if failure occurs a reason why should be stated.

Again, I think this recommendation would also help to satisfy recommendation 41 of the Auditor General.

The last point that he raised was failure to pass a road test. He goes on to say:

- If someone fails the road test, there should be a minimum of one week before they can retake the road test again.
- Some fail one day and pass the other day. This is unusual because without any serious preparation or practice a person can pass the next day.

So, again, I think that would tie into this whole idea where he gets back to perhaps there are some cases where people are being failed and there is an association perhaps between the driving school education program and the road testing system. He did have a number of recommendations here.

Just before our break there was some question as to the retesting of drivers. I was wondering if the minister has done anything in regard to this. Certainly, it was quite a hot topic there for a couple of days, and I think we should not think out loud. Anyway, if the minister has given this any more thought and if, in fact, he is looking at further study into this particular issue.

The graduated drivers’ licences. Again, there are a number of concerns with the graduated drivers’ licences. One of those questions that I would like the minister to address if he could, please: what measures has the government put in place to ensure consistent practices with regard to the graduated licensing system in Alberta? What measures has the government put in place to ensure consistent practices with regard to drivers’ examinations?

I’ll stop there and give the minister a chance to answer those questions. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. I must commend the hon. member for spending a considerable amount of time talking about traffic safety because, without a doubt, traffic safety is, as I mentioned, the number one priority in the department. Also, if we’re ever to significantly reduce the tremendous cost to society, which some have pegged at over $4 billion annually, the only way, of course, is to reduce the number of incidents, not accidents but incidents. Accidents are something that we can’t prevent; most of these on the highways are incidents because they’re all preventable.

With respect to the aging transit system, there’s no doubt that public transit is an important component of the transportation system in the province. We have always taken the position with the grants we give to municipalities that it’s up to the local municipality to decide how much of that they’ll invest in their road infrastructure and how much they’ll invest into the transit system.

I will say, though, that with respect to the observation on the decrease in aviation fuel, that was done from a point of view of initiating and encouraging more wealth creation. I don’t know how I can simplify it in terms of what wealth creation is, but really government’s revenue comes from taxing the profits. We tax income, of course, and as a professional you sell your services as a teacher or lawyer or those kinds of professional services. That adds to the revenue stream. But it’s also that people sell things, and when they sell those things, they make, hopefully, a profit. The profit is calculated many times on how much it costs to transport that gadget to market.

Whether you’re selling a car, whether you’re selling a particular technology in terms of computers or whatever, you have to get them to the marketplace. Right now we’re finding that the average cost, the final cost of a product allocated to transportation is about 16 per cent, but that’s increasing. In those areas where transportation costs sometimes exceed 50 per cent – in grain, for example, there isn’t any profit left because the cost of transportation takes away any amount of profit that may be available.

Efficient transportation systems are very important. They’re important to Albertans because we export 60 per cent of what we produce. Most of that, of course, goes to the States. I think it’s about a billion and a half a day of trade between the two countries across Canada and the States. So that’s very important to our continued quality of life.

It’s significant that in Alberta close to 40 per cent of our GDP is transported by a medium where once it’s in the medium, nobody interferes with it, and that’s a pipeline. Okay? As opposed to a highway, where we would have someone out there inspecting the truck and, you know, the driver’s licence and checking what they’re hauling, et cetera, and maybe intercepting that vehicle at every boundary, most of our GDP is done by pipeline. It’s the most efficient. I believe that leads to the significant wealth that we enjoy in this province. Can you imagine if we had to haul by truck what we were selling to the States? It would be impossible.

Rail does contribute; 16 per cent is by marine. We’re, of course, very, very concerned with respect to the ever-increasing costs of marine shipping. For grain it just increased 50 per cent. It’s putting additional burden on the agricultural community, and there is nothing in sight to indicate to us that those costs will be going down.

What’s even worse is that we can move product from Alberta, but we can’t get it to the ports in B.C. To give you an example, containers, the amount of container handling. China in one year built 132 container handling facilities – 132 – when I say that we can’t build two. What’s even worse is that we have a trade deficit with the country that built 132, China. But you can’t get a truck or even a train very easily now into the Vancouver port.

We’re going to have to strategize and work in co-operation with not only the B.C. government but also the federal government because there may be one port still open. It gives us three days' quicker access to Asia, and other than some improvements, you know, to the railway, heavier rail line, it would be Prince Rupert. It's the deepest port on the west coast and gives us additional options in terms of reducing those costs. That's just a bit of an example of how important transportation is to the economic well-being of the province of Alberta.

When the hon. member talks about our highways in terms of the deterioration, it is a very important statistic. We're not going to modify it to make it look good; we're reflecting what Albertans are telling us. We are applying very rigorous targets, and it's telling Albertans that we have to invest more in transportation infrastructure.

The other thing that's going to impact us as Albertans is that in the late '70s, early '80s there was quite a large number of kilometres of highways that were paved, and that life expectancy now is coming to an end. So that's going to add more to the inventory of roads, of provincial highways that have to be rehabilitated, preserved.

Highway maintenance is a topic of discussion, it seems, every year. I know that collectively when you calculate the costs that municipalities have spent, a saving of about $53 million, roughly 25 per cent. Just by travelling Alberta highways, I do know that the summer maintenance in terms of crack filling and sealing has certainly been improved.

Also the movement of goods. Here's something that does not come up in many of these calculations of savings, and that is for the trucker. Let's say, for instance, under the old system if you were loading pipe in Nisku and you were hauling it to Fort McMurray, well, before you got off highway 831 you would have travelled through four municipalities, and they all set their own road bans. So you phone the first municipality on the long trek to Fort McMurray and say: "What's your road ban?" "Well, we're 90 per cent." Same country, same province, same weather: nothing different. Well, when you cross the North Saskatchewan River into the next municipality, you find that their road bans could be 80 per cent. So the poor trucker has to either turn around and leave 10 per cent of the load back someplace or risk facing a fine. Here we are just from one municipality boundary to another having a different road ban. Engineeringwise does it make sense? I doubt it.

However, now with the new one-call system the trucker can make one call to a 1-800 number, get all their road bans, and they are consistent in the province. Yes, we do have road bans on some roads that we have difficulty with, depending on the construction, often, and the age of the highway. Generally we like to allow as much free flow of truck traffic given the kind of appropriate weights, those that are legislated in terms of the weights in the province.

With respect to snow clearing, this year was quite unusual with the kinds of temperature changes and the amount of snow. As a reeve in the county of Lamont in the mid to late '80s I remember that there were a couple of years when we never had any road bans. There was hardly any frost, so why would you want to ban the road? Then, of course, we hardly moved any snow. The weather was excellent right through. Costs were down.

In the last couple of years we've had some unusual storms. It started with reasonably warm temperatures. The pavement structure was above zero. A front moved in, a lot of snow. It froze up the highway. Given the number of pieces of equipment out there and the fact that maintenance contractors do not get paid idling their trucks in the sand shed – they've got to be out on the highway, monitored very closely.

I know that there are some municipalities that feel that there could be improvements, and we're working with them, but generally speaking, when you compare the road maintenance in this province with our neighbouring provinces, I stand up and say that we're better and challenge them to show that we're not. That doesn't mean that there isn't continued room for improvement and for applying innovation to road maintenance as well.

Now, with driver education I'd like to inform the House and the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry that we are working very closely with the Auditor General. The first step, of course, was to send out a survey to the driving schools and the examiners, and the survey responses are coming back. We did meet with the Professional Driver Educators' Association of Alberta just this week. They've given us some information, but there are a couple of issues here.

I know, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry indicated, that there are these – I hate to call them stories – situations that may come up, and the person says: I feel something didn't quite happen right in this driver education school. So you would ask that member to make a complaint. Well, once they get their driver's licence, they're going to say: well, there was something wrong, but I don't want to complain because I'll lose my driver's licence and might have to come back and get it again. So that's something that we're facing. I can assure you that from meeting with the driver educators' association, they are committed to working with the department, with the government, and with the Auditor General to find ways we can ensure not only better service delivery but improve the integrity of driver education and driver testing.

The question came up with an other-country person getting a driver's licence. I'd be interested in getting information later in terms of the country of origin because we do have some reciprocal agreements with some jurisdictions and, you know, it may be one of those; I'm not quite sure. We'll certainly work on that. I can't answer this evening because I'd have to check into whether it applies also to class 1. I'm not quite sure, but we'll certainly find that out.

The comments raised by the hon. member actually are very close to those raised by the members of the Professional Driver Educators' Association: road testing, use of the car, classroom instruction. Right now, today, if any one of us took a road test and failed, automatically there would be a flag on the computer. Let's say I wanted to do a road test in Andrew, and I failed, so I figured I'd drive to Lamont and do my road test there the same day. There would be a flag that said, no, I've run the road test that day. Extending it a week, you know, might have merit. In many areas in rural Alberta they probably do that because the driver examiner doesn't come back until a week later, perhaps. That doesn't mean that you can't do that in the city, though, in a larger population. At least there is that flag for the one day, but we'll certainly look at one week.

You know, the House adjourns and allows members to be in the constituency, and there's always some issue that comes up very innocently. Retesting of drivers. Of course, this came to the House as a question raised by the Member for Medicine Hat reflecting a question asked by a grade 10 student, who said: "Boy, you're so concerned about testing young drivers, but what about these drivers who might have had their driver's licence for 50 years? When have they ever been retested?"

Well, following all the cards and letters and flowers, there was one perhaps common theme. Some felt that it would be a money grab: "Well, I have to go get retested, so all you want is more money." Okay; fine. On the other hand, some of those same people that were looking at a money grab did indicate that it makes sense to test those that lose their driver's licences to violations of the Traffic Safety Act. We'll see what Don McDermid puts in his report at the end of May and what he presents. That was something that was supported, actually, quite vigorously. Those that create the incidents on the highways, that create the cost to us in terms of insurance, that create additional risk should have to be retested and pay for it out of their pocket and not have the insurance industry or the average Albertan pay for their mistakes.

There are, as mentioned, the graduated driver's licences. This is the first year of operation. We're looking at the statistics at year-end to see how it's working for Albertans. One of the areas we are working on is the exit exam. It's part of the GDL in this province. Some provinces don't have the exit exam but do have some other restrictions in terms of number of passengers in the vehicle driven by an inexperienced driver and also have some curfew hours.

Again, many different ideas are coming forward on the GDL, support across the province for the program, but after we get the statistics and get the information, we're also looking at how we might have to change it or modify it or improve it. We are, though, working on the exit exams as well. We'll have to have those ready here soon because those that have got their probationary licences will then have to do their final exam next year before they can get their full driving privileges.

I do believe that it will reduce injury and fatalities. It certainly has in those provinces that have implemented it. Once we receive all the information and statistics, then we'll make the adjustments based on that evidence.

I think that's it so far.

The Chair: Before calling on any further members, just a reminder to all members that we're now in the second hour, and as it were, the net is cast wider.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Just a few more comments and questions here of the minister. When we talk about the retesting of drivers, I think one of the comments you made at the time that this issue came about was that we certainly in retesting drivers cannot test for attitudes when they're behind the wheel. One of the recommendations that has come forward to me since that time has been that perhaps more valuable than retesting might be sending these people to driver education again. So that was one of the things that came up.

Another issue that came up as well was the cost of whether we retest or retrain. Certainly, those costs should be borne by those people who violate the privilege of driving on our highways. One of the recommendations that did come forward is that perhaps those people that reach a certain number of demerit points are great candidates to go back, number one, to drivers' school and, secondly, to be retested.

If, for example, people have had numerous at-fault accidents – and I don't know what number we would pick and what period of time we would use. Certainly, another way that we can start to put pressure on these drivers that are abusing the privilege of driving on our roads and making them unsafe is that they have to start bearing the cost as well as receiving the training. I think there is merit in some type of program, and I don't know what the final model would look like, but I will be interested to see what does come forward.

The Premier was talking earlier about the government funding $1.25 million for a feasibility study on a rail link to Fort McMurray. Is this $1.25 million coming from the Department of Transportation? Again, why would government fund a study for independent business here in the province, something for the private sector?

In speaking to a number of people who are involved with the railroads between, first of all, Edmonton to Boyle and then Boyle through RailAmerica to Fort McMurray, they certainly are all great fans of continuing rail line. Just a few years ago they did upgrade that section of the line between Edmonton and Boyle. If we are going to have an increase in traffic on the present line, then certainly some work would have to be done. Whichever route is chosen, any route that goes over muskeg is going to be very costly, very costly to build a new line and even costly to upgrade the present line.

There are some pieces of equipment that are going to be required in the $50 billion of approved projects that have to be hauled by rail. They're just too heavy for our highways. So there definitely is a place where we can use both the rail and the highway. Certainly, one of the suggestions which might be a quick fix to the highway and the problems with the great amount of traffic on that highway is that there would be more passing lanes so that when we are hauling heavier pieces of equipment or in slower traffic for whatever reason, they do have a chance to pull over and allow others to pass.

Would the minister have any indication yet as to what the alternative route to the existing route is if there is to be a new rail link, say from Boyle to Fort McMurray, or would the present one be used? As well, would he make available to us the report which is going to be done on the feasibility study for the rail link? Will there be public consultations in regard to any new rail line or improvement of the existing line?

An issue that I brought up earlier was about highway safety regarding the intermodal yards on the west end of Edmonton and particularly during a strike, when we do have a disruption of skilled workers at a job and management is brought in to do some of the other jobs. Certainly, the skilled workers that were on the picket line were able to prevent, I think, some accidents there just by stopping traffic and letting people know that loads were not properly secured.

With other unions now entering into the negotiation part of their contract, we could have a situation again where there's going to be some disruption with Canadian National and perhaps with the movement of intermodal traffic. Has the minister thought about putting some type of contingency plan in place whereby if people that are not regularly doing that job or if the job is being done by management – and of course we have a skinny workforce at that particular point – there is some sort of contingency plan where we can ensure the safety of those vehicles leaving the intermodal yards with a load on and travelling on Alberta highways and that those loads are properly tied down?

I think that with that, Mr. Minister, that concludes my questions for this evening. Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Very quickly, on some of the questions I will respond in writing and also pass the question in terms of studying the rail over to the Minister of Economic Development. I can tell you, the money is not coming from the Department of Transportation.

When we talk about transportation, there are certain things that we don't normally think about, and one is of course the environmental emissions with the literally thousands of trips that'll be made to Fort McMurray if we don't have another way of hauling them there. Secondly, the social costs. Can we move people from Fort McMurray down towards Edmonton, towards their families much quicker? Wouldn't that save? And the other, health costs. You know, I think those are sort of important considerations.

Even if we calculate them for future major roadways, that's what we should be looking at also. We always look at the capital costs, but there are other savings that we don't really normally consider.

As time progresses, I think those will actually be calculated into the value of highway infrastructure.

With respect to the rail, the report, the public consultation, we'll make sure that the Minister of Economic Development gets those.

With respect to the disruption in intermodal yards we do have very strict rules in place once those trucks get out on provincial highways. We have the only accredited motor transport officer force in, well, Canada at least, if not in North America. They're very professional. Our percentage of incidents in terms of large trucks compared to passenger vehicles and compared to other provinces is below the number of accidents in other jurisdictions.

I can tell you that in this province you don't hear the horror stories of wheels flying off trucks, et cetera. We have a pretty good, stringent system, and we did add to the complement of our MT officers a few years ago when we took over the additional 15,000 kilometres of roads.

To the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, I will get back to him on the questions that I've missed and, of course, in more detail as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to listen to the minister's response to questions this evening and appreciate his being available and as well his staff taking the time to be here.

I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry has covered a lot of ground here. I have questions specifically related to the Fort McMurray railway project, first of all. The Department of Transportation has been named as the, quote, other department, together with Economic Development, that is collaborating on the Athabasca Oil Sands Transportation Corporation, but it is not spelled out in the Transportation department's business plans or budget estimates. On page 411 of the business plans reference is made to research and development under Economic Development Strategy, but there's not a line item in any of the department's budgets to deal with this.

So the first question is: can the minister explain what role his department is taking on this Fort McMurray railway study since it's apparently going to go ahead although the source of the funding has not been identified? And I'd like to know what the rules are with respect to tendering on studies and projects under his department, recognizing that it's important that we have some rules around that. So those, I guess, Mr. Chairman, will do for now.

I guess there are a couple more questions. Why is it that the Minister of Transportation isn't conducting the feasibility study? I guess that's a question that I'd really like to know. Maybe it has something to do with what's in the feasibility study. Is the feasibility study just looking at the economic value of such a railway, its economic impact on the oil sands development and so on, or is the feasibility study with respect to transportation aspects of a railway, the economics of the railway, and so on?

So those, Mr. Chairman, are my questions for the moment.

Mr. Stelmach: Very quickly, there is no line item because we're not paying for the study. We play a supportive role. We have people in the department that are experienced in calculating various costs, you know, and I'll put one out to you. Does anybody know what the costs of bridge repair and bridge strengthening will be over the next 20 years if we don't ship anything by rail and just ship by truck? You know, I don't have that information, but sooner or later we should cost that out or get an idea, because if we don't, a few years from now someone's going to criticize us and say: well, why didn't you even ask those questions?

So in terms of the Department of Transportation we're playing the supportive role in providing as much information as we can and facilitating the collection of that information, but the Minister of Economic Development is the one that will be conducting the study. He'll be responsible for it. We're there to provide the information.

Mr. Mason: To follow up on that, I guess the question I'm trying to get at is: is this a feasibility study that has to do with transportation infrastructure, and if so, why is Economic Development dealing with it instead of Transportation, and when will the Transportation department take over doing the studies for this project? Is there some particular point in time when you determine a particular mode of transportation or a particular line that the Transportation department will start doing the work on feasibility planning and so on?

Mr. Stelmach: We do a number of studies in the department in terms of five-, 10-, 20-, or even 40- or 50-year projections in terms of what highways require interchanges, trying to estimate growth in population in certain areas. With respect to this particular study our purpose here is to calculate the cost to Albertans in terms of transporting the number of vessels that will have to make their way to Fort McMurray, the cost of maintenance on highways, the cost, as well, perhaps – I don't know if it's the cost or just a real irritant. The hon. member doesn't travel on a daily basis those highways that these heavy vessels are on.

Quite frankly, the other hon. member says: well, maybe build more passing lanes. Well, when you're moving at five miles an hour and from one passing lane to another it may be 10 miles, that person behind that vessel is quite irritated, you know. We'll find that there are only certain routes that we can take because there are only certain bridges with the particular strength and also the design of those bridges. So those are things that we have to consider, and that's strictly from the Transportation side. That's our purpose there.

Like I said, there's the human cost, the human savings, and the environmental issues as well. One trainload hauling X number of pieces as opposed to – what? – maybe 15 trucks in one convoy, and they're only hauling one vessel. You've got two trucks up front, two in the back, all the flag people and the flag trucks, et cetera. And that's just one consideration, to see if we can bring those social costs down as well. But our purpose there, as I said before, is to provide that information as much as we can, that evidence in terms of some of the costs that we think will impact the Alberta taxpayer 10, 20 years from now with the unprecedented growth in Fort McMurray.

You know, I think we're in a very good position now in Alberta for something that happens internationally in terms of increasing the value of the tar sands, the oil, to the North American market. We should be planning. Yes, studies do cost money, but on the other hand if they save us a few hundred million dollars, it's a good investment. Let's first calculate, though, what some of the costs will be, and then Albertans will know those costs and make the determination whether it's wise to ship by rail or do it the traditional way.

Mr. Mason: Well, I'm still a little puzzled. I would certainly hope that at some point the planning for the project will be turned over to Transportation. I would be quite nervous travelling over a trestle bridge that was designed by the Ministry of Economic Development. I don't know that they're exactly qualified for that type of work. So at some point I hope that the government as a whole makes the decision to turn this project over to the appropriate department.

Now, I just have a question relating to the use of photoradar by the province. I'm wondering if the provincial government is going to go ahead with approving photoradar for Alberta highways and, if so, what criteria they'll use to do that.

I guess a related question has to do with the Edmonton/Calgary corridor. The four-lane highway I think is beginning to suffer at certain periods from a certain degree of congestion and overcrowding. I'd like to ask the minister if the government has any plans to expand the number of lanes in the highway between Edmonton and Calgary from four to six or whatever combinations would be appropriate at various points.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stelmach: With respect to highway 2 I believe we have something like 30 projects in our capital plan. Sooner or later we'll have to look at adding some lanes in certain stretches of the highway. There's a fair amount of the highway that has to be preserved as well. But it's a very interesting thought.

I don't know if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands was born when this happened. I think I might have been; I'm not quite sure. When that highway was first introduced by the Social Credit government of the day, the headlines in the Edmonton Journal were something to the effect of what a stupid idea, spending all this money on this road joining Edmonton and Calgary. You know, just look at the economic growth as a result of that transportation link. So I guess I just pose the question: did the roads in this province build the wealth, or did the wealth build the roads?

If we're to continue with the excellent quality of life that we enjoy in this province, we're going to have to give some serious thought to that question. I submit that it's the roads that built the wealth. It's the transportation links. So, yes, future investment in highways in this province will determine future economic wealth generation and, as a result, the quality of life. You can't put it any simpler than that.

With respect to photoradar there's no move on behalf of this department to make any changes to the current deployment policy.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments. It seems that we're into this rail-versus-highway discussion here this evening, and there has to be a role for both. The railroads can haul much heavier loads, but they're restricted to a maximum width of 14 feet 6 inches. Some of the projects that are built right now for Fort McMurray get up to 24 and a half feet wide. I think that's the maximum that can be hauled by highway. So we do need both of those systems in order to get these materials to the site.

As well, when we have a number of prefab parts for Fort McMurray that are built offshore, then certainly the best way to get those to Fort McMurray is by rail. So definitely there are advantages for both, and both serve their niche very well.

As well, we have to realize that any time we're going to take product and put it on a rail car and transport it to Edmonton or wherever and then unload it and put it onto trucks or move it by truck, that's going to take a lot of time. You're looking at least at a two- to three-day delay by the time you load it, you transport it, you unload it. So that highway is always going to be under tremendous pressure. As of right now I think that there are roughly only a thousand rail cars per month that are used, so, you know, ballpark, 30, 35 cars per day. So to rebuild a line that's worth $300 million, we have to increase traffic quite a bit. As well, one of the concerns I have is that a major product that is moving from Fort McMurray is moving through a pipeline. So we're really building almost a one-way railroad.

I think that there is a very big need for both a good rail line and a good highway. That will serve the development of the north very well.

Thank you.

The Chair: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Transportation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$1,073,732,000
Capital Investment	$442,000,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Department of Transportation and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Klapstein: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Transportation: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $1,073,732,000; capital investment, $442,000,000.

The Deputy Speaker: All those who concur in this report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. The motion is carried.

head: Government Bills and Orders

head: Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to make some comments with respect to Bill 22, and I have an amendment. So if I can get that photocopied now, I will bring that forward sometime in the future this evening.

Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate that I think a bill such as this, that regulates our elections, is probably one of the most important and fundamental pieces of legislation that we can deal with because it regulates our entire democratic process. So it's very significant when it does come forward, and it's important that there should be widespread consideration of this.

Chair's Ruling Amendments

The Chair: Hon. member, the chair has some difficulty. The regular practice of those members who are proposing an amendment is that they have them available first of all to the table and, secondly and equally importantly, to all members. We have none of those, so it's hard for us to be able to have you continue your explanation of the need for this amendment without a copy of it.

Mr. Mason: Sorry, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps you didn't follow my convoluted explanation of what I'm doing. I'm making comments to the bill.

The Chair: If you're on that, then that's fine.

Mr. Mason: I didn't know for sure what the Government House Leader intended with respect to it, so I haven't copied it. I have plenty to say on the bill, and when I get the copies of the amendment, then I'll switch to speaking to the amendments.

The Chair: Okay. As long as you're just making comments on the bill.

Mr. Mason: Yes. I'm not talking about the amendment at all.

The Chair: Fair enough.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: I'm talking about the bill, and I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that I do believe that the bills which regulate our electoral system and our electoral process are fundamental and need to be given a great deal of scrutiny. I just want to indicate that there are a number of issues related to this bill that I think bear some comment.

There are some good things about this bill, Mr. Chairman. First of all, there are sections which will increase the access of candidates to mobile homes and gated communities. One of the things that we've probably all experienced and I think more particularly those of us who live in built-up urban areas is sometimes the difficulty you have getting access to apartments. There are different ways of dealing with that, but sometimes building managers are unfamiliar with the legislation or ignore the legislation or don't care about the legislation and refuse to allow you access to the citizens. This is a basic democratic right, that candidates have the right to contact voters at an election. The voters have every right to slam the door in their face, but the candidate has the right to make the initial contact with a voter in order to present themselves as a candidate for election.

There is lots of difficulty. Those of us who have high-rise apartments with security systems and so on, condominiums as well, find that it is often very, very difficult to contact significant numbers of voters. I don't have a lot of gated communities in my constituency, but some may.

Ms Blakeman: You have some.

Mr. Mason: Do I?

Ms Blakeman: Yes, you do.

Mr. Mason: Okay. I'm sure that there can be similar problems there, so that's a positive change that this bill presents.

I think there is quite a bit of clarification and updating of the legislation, housekeeping changes; for example, having polling officers wear identification badges instead of wearing tags around the neck. You know, these are small things that clean up and improve the legislation, and I think nobody can find any difficulty with those kinds of things.

I also want to indicate that we support changes that would make funds raised through events considered to be contributions. That will have the effect of making them reportable and will also have the effect of increasing the transparency.

Now, there are some things we're not really clear about, and maybe the hon. Minister of Justice can help clarify that. There are significant changes which are being made to the advanced poll system. We're unclear on how this will affect the process of election campaigning. So I think that's one of the things that we want to talk about.

One of the issues that we have problems with is the increase in the deposit. Now, that will disproportionately hurt smaller political parties, of which we don't include ourselves. I'm talking about other groups that we've contacted, small parties like the Alberta First Party, Alberta Social Credit Party, Alberta Green Party, Communist Party of Canada, and so on. These are other parties that add to our democratic vitality. They increase the choices that are available to people, and they often have a very important function of raising issues that some of the mainstream parties may not want to talk about. I think that anything that affects their ability to participate in elections in this province has got to be seen as a negative thing. So that's a concern.

The government news release talks about this increase in the deposit as an attempt to reduce frivolous candidates. I have to pose a question, Mr. Chairman. In a democracy what is a frivolous candidate? The government has not defined that. I think it is very difficult indeed to define what a frivolous candidate is. Perhaps someone who is obviously intent on ridiculing the political process could be considered a frivolous candidate, but I think another point of view would be that if someone wants to ridicule the political process, that is a legitimate political point of view and should be expressed.

I feel that we have to reject the idea of frivolous candidates, although we've all been in elections where there were some candidates that we really wished weren't there, but I think to take concrete steps to exclude them through financial means is not appropriate. Mr. Chairman, in the election of 2001 nearly two-thirds of the candidates who ran lost their deposit. This is not an insignificant financial issue, and I think we ought to reconsider this question.

Now, I do want to talk at some point – and maybe I will wait until third reading for this – about the archaic first past the post system that we use in this country to elect candidates. It marginalizes smaller voices, and it tends to increase the representation in the Legislature of the larger parties and in particular in this case the government party. I think increasing numbers of Canadians are coming to see the first past the post system that we use in this country as a fundamental affront to democracy and one of the biggest stumbling blocks to a better and more functional democracy in our province and our country. Perhaps I will speak a little bit more about that at third reading, but I do think we need to get serious about bringing our election statutes into the 21st century, and this primarily housekeeping legislation doesn't do that.

As well, the contributions to constituency associations are being increased in this bill. Now, currently the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta is the only party that accepts donations in this fashion. Donations to the other parties – I stand to be corrected by my Liberal colleagues – certainly in ours, the contributions are not made to the constituency association. They're made to the party. [interjection] You can do both. Okay. It seems to me that there is some built-in bias here in the legislation in that it is being changed in a way which benefits the government party over and above the other parties. So we don't support that particular aspect.

Now if I can come to my amendment, I'll ask for that to be distributed.

The Chair: Hon. member, would you move it? We'll call it amendment A5 once you have moved it, and then we can have it distributed.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I'll do that. I will move that Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, be amended by striking out section 98.

The Chair: Okay. That's amendment A5. We'll just take a minute. Please hand it out to the people that are actually at their places.

Edmonton-Highlands, you may proceed. Most people now have them. There are only a few that have yet to receive them.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment will amend the Alberta Corporate Tax Act by striking out the entire section which provides tax breaks for campaign donations for corporations. The original section provides a 75 per cent tax reduction for the first $150, then $112.50 plus 50 per cent of the amount contributed up to $825. The proposed legislation will increase the top end of these tax reductions from $150 to $200 and from $825 to $1,100.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, it would be considered out of order to eliminate the tax breaks entirely by amending the particular bill that's before us, but this amendment would prevent the tax breaks for corporations' political donations from becoming any more generous than they already are.

Dr. Taylor: Only because you don't get any money from corporations.

Mr. Mason: The hon. Minister of Environment is saying that we don't get any money from corporations. We don't take any money from corporations, Mr. Chairman, and we don't think that the corporate sector should be influencing the policy of the province in such a profound way as it clearly is in this province.

Dr. Taylor: Do you take it from unions?

The Chair: Hon. minister, when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is finished, we will call upon you to give your comments so that we all may hear them.

Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, we've all read the various donations that have been released for the political parties in Alberta in the last little while, and anyone that takes a look at the contributions from corporations to the Progressive Conservative Party and their enormous war chest will clearly understand that corporate money in this province has an undue influence on who gets elected as the government of this province and thereby secures their own interests very well. Anyone with any political sense whatsoever and two eyes to see, Mr. Chairman, can see that that is in fact the case. The enormous war chest from corporate donations that has been raised by the Conservative Party creates an enormous imbalance in the political situation in this province and is largely to blame for the enormous tenure of this government. So I believe that we should change that and reflect a better balance.

It's my personal view, Mr. Chairman, that the only people who should have an interest in politics in a democracy are the citizens themselves. Other organizations such as corporations and unions should not be in a position to influence political policy and who is in fact the government. Only the individual citizens should be parties to the democratic process, and that is where we need to move. That is, in fact, where the federal government has moved in a fitful way with its changes to its election finance legislation.

The government of Manitoba has led the way by eliminating corporate donations altogether and also union donations altogether so that the only people that can contribute to election campaigns and political parties are individual citizens. That's how it should be in this province as well. Instead, the government is going in the opposite direction, and they're expanding the tax deductibility of corporate campaign donations. This amendment is designed to try and stop that from happening, and I think it's an important situation.

You know, I just want to indicate to the Minister of Environment and anyone else that is interested that we would gladly forgo union donations if the Conservative government and, in fact, the Liberal Party as well would forgo accepting donations from corporations. That would put it on a fair balance. I should point out, Mr. Chairman, not to brag or anything . . .

Dr. Taylor: Far be it from you to brag, Brian.

Mr. Mason: Far be it from me to brag indeed. In the most recent financial disclosures of campaign donations the party with the highest donations from individual citizens was the Alberta New Democrats. So I think it puts it a little bit in perspective.

Dr. Taylor: You're not speaking out of self-interest.

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Environment, the invitation still stands that once the hon. member has finished his comments, then you can make your comments.

Dr. Taylor: He's provoking me, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mason: I could read a speech from the Premier and I would provoke the hon. minister, I guess. I don't know.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, just to conclude, we categorically oppose the direction of the government in expanding the tax relief or tax rebates for political donations for corporations. They get far too much money from corporations. Corporations have far too much influence in this government's policies, as can be seen in any number of areas, and ordinary citizens have far too little influence in the policies of this government. To go even further and expand the ability and the capacity of corporations to influence who is the government of this province and what their policies are is unacceptable to us, and that's why we have proposed this motion, though by scant chance do we expect that this government will move away from its addiction to corporate donations.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A5.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. I should have allowed the Minister of Environment to speak. Oh, well, perhaps after me then.

This is an interesting amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has proposed. It's interesting because it doesn't strike out the sections which allow for an increase in the contribution limits or in fact strike out the ability for either corporations or unions or individuals to contribute funds to political campaigns, but it takes away the incentive that is offered through a tax receipt. In other words, the corporations would not be paying income tax on the amount that has been donated. There's always a percentage that's involved there as well.

So it's quite a canny way of approaching this. Corporations don't get any additional incentive through the sort of reward system of having a tax receipt issued for the amounts of money that have been donated to political parties or to individual candidates during campaigns. So it would really show where the interest was from corporations. Quite an interesting idea.

I always approach that from the point of view of forgone revenue, because essentially that's what's happening. When a tax receipt is issued, the government is saying: okay, we're not going to collect our income tax on that amount of money. So if they're not collecting that income tax, they're forgoing it. In the same way, there needs to be a measurement of what they expect to get from that forgone revenue, from that policy implementation that's happened through that.

As my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands has already pointed out, there can be a very close connection between corporate donations and government policy. I think that closely connected to this, it also shows us the need for a lobbyist registry. In fact, I was able to attend last September as a member of the Legislative Offices Committee, an all-party committee of this Assembly, a COGEL conference, the Council on Governmental Ethics Laws, in Texas. Some of the most well attended sessions in there were around campaign finance and lobbyist registries, interestingly enough, because there is a close connection between government policy and who's contributing to campaign coffers.

The choice in the United States has been to say: okay; there's no limit. They actually view political donations on the same par as freedom of speech, and they say: we will put no limits on that. But they are very clear that it all has to be above-board. You have to readily be able to access who is giving money where and through any possible source, including things like corporations that give bonuses to their senior managers with the expectation that those managers then in turn donate to political parties. That kind of information has to come out as well, because there's a recognition that there often is an influence between decisions that the government makes, policies they implement, programs that they introduce or withdraw, and those who are supporting candidates and political parties through political contributions. The saying that he who pays the piper often calls the tune is often brought forward in these discussions as well.

You know, I have to say that on a free vote I would certainly go towards severely reducing or eliminating corporate donations because I think that what's important here is the individual. I think that as legislators we're elected to represent the individual, not to represent corporations, and increasingly we see corporations take on larger rights than individuals have in our society, where we have multinational corporations that have more power than governments of countries. We're now facing that sort of a situation.

So curbing the influence I think is a good idea, and this is an interesting way to approach it. It doesn't set any limits on what corporations can donate, but it takes away that additional incentive, that icing on the cake that corporations have been able to enjoy. Not only are they able to help finance the campaigns and often the successful campaigns of the political parties and candidates that they support, but they get the additional incentive of being able to pay less taxes on that equivalent percentage of money.

So at this point I'm willing to support the amendment that's been brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and I encourage other members to join in. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wasn't really going to join debate on this, and I won't speak for long. Obviously, the amendment deletes a section, purportedly the section of the bill which really just is updating the amounts available for tax receipt, and there's nothing nefarious about that. There's no public policy process that's offended by that, in my viewpoint.

What is offensive about what I've heard tonight – and I don't mean this with any intention to denigrate the contribution of the two members opposite that spoke. I always find it offensive when people make the automatic assumption that by making a donation to a political party, somehow people are buying favour. I don't know what world they live in, but people do not buy my favour by making a contribution to my political campaign. I assume that people who are contributing to my political campaign and my constituency association and my party are doing so because they believe that the political process is important and ought to be supported, and whether that's done as an individual or whether that's done as a corporation, it's something that the citizens of Alberta do because governance is important and the Legislature is important and supporting people in the quest to represent people in the Legislature is important.

I get tired of people getting up – and I particularly get tired of people who ought to know better because they're elected representatives – and talking about how he who pays the piper calls the tune. That's not the way it works in my world. It may be the way it works in your world. I hope it isn't.

The reality of it is that you can't buy favour with a paltry donation to a political party in this province or, I would dare say, in most places. The fact that the Chief Electoral Officer publishes every year the donations to the party keeps the process above-board and makes sure that everybody knows who is making contributions. But I don't think we should sit quietly in this House and allow people to denigrate the political process by suggesting that those citizens, whether they're acting individually or through their corporations to support the political process and ensure that people who want to run for office are supported by more than just their own financial resources and those of their families, are somehow a denigration to the process. I just felt that I had to say that before we go to a vote on this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on amendment A5.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To close, well, I fear that the minister doth protest too much. You know, I didn't want to put it so crassly as this, but it is not individual favours that the corporate sector buys through their donations in this province. It is a government whose whole policy is favourable towards them, and they support this government because it's a right-wing government that supports corporations at every turn. They give this government a tremendously unfair financial advantage, which they use to secure massive majorities to ensure that the province is kept safe for the corporate sector, and that's what they're getting. They're not getting individual favours from individual ministers, but they give their money to this government because it's a right-wing, pro-corporation government, and that's why their provincial political party has $3 million in the bank and the election is still a year off.

An Hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Mason: I know because the financial disclosure statements were just released about two weeks ago, so it's clear. So I just want to say that.

The role of corporate financing of elections in this province is a scandal, in my view. It needs to be corrected, and it should be corrected. The Manitoba government has given an example of just how to do it, Mr. Chairman.

So thank you very much.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I had hoped that some of the amendments that had been brought forward during Committee of the Whole for Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, would have passed. I think there were some really innovative ideas whose time had come, particularly the amendment brought forward by the Official Opposition around the citizens' assembly. Certainly, we're seeing a movement from that from British Columbia. There's a movement happening in the Northwest Territories around those sorts of ideas. They're discussing things like citizens' initiatives, the assembly idea that they're doing in British Columbia. We need to move further forward on this than what's being allowed for in this bill.

This is, for the most part, a housekeeping bill. It's a little tidy up, a few adjustments of the lines, the parameters under which things operate. But I was really hoping to see some larger leaps forward, some movement towards a proportional representation, some of the things that would engage some of our younger voters. Unfortunately, everything that was brought forward that might have moved us in that direction was defeated.

I go back to my original comments when I spoke in second reading on this bill. I think we have a problem in this province at the point where governments are being elected with 50 per cent of the people eligible to vote and that percentage is dropping. We reach a point where the government itself has no credibility because it's been elected by so few people. I guess it's at that point that the government will be roused to start to engage in some of these more innovative modernizations of the democratic system that we have in Canada. I had hoped that that would happen sooner rather than later but obviously not with the co-operation of the current government.

The second amendment that had been brought forward by the Liberal opposition was eliminating the increase in the filing fee, that my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands also referred to, because it does make it more difficult for the smaller, some would call fringe, political parties, not because it's difficult for them once or twice with just a few candidates, but certainly if they're looking to field five or 10 candidates, then that increase in the filing fee does become a barrier to candidates running. I think that's wrong. I don't think that we should be putting up more barriers to people getting involved in the political process. I think we should be trying to take those barriers down. So I was disappointed that the government wouldn't support that.

Finally, there was a shared amendment, or I guess both the Liberal and ND oppositions had amendments on striking the introduction of the unique identifier number. In fact, it was brought forward with agreement but by the third party, the ND opposition. That was also defeated. There's been a fair amount of discussion, looking back over the Hansard, a fair amount of concern expressed by people over the use of a unique identifier number. I understand the argument that it was to make sure that where we had people with similar names in the same household, you know, to get rid of the confusion with the increasing commonness of names, or where people are living in one place and working in another or they're students or whatever, this identifier number would assist with that.

The concerns that have been raised for the most part are around the protection of the personal information that's attached to that identifier number, and the concern is that we've not been terribly successful at protecting that information thus far. We have to continue to find ways to safeguard that information.

I came at this from a different point of view because I felt that that unique identifier number could be used to start to help us move towards electronic voting, Internet voting, which I hoped was going to bring in a younger generation of people that are much more hooked into the use of the Internet, and that sort of participatory introduction or that way of participating in the process. Certainly, the younger people that I'm working with are indicating very clearly to me that that's what they find exciting and that's an entry route that they'd be interested in using.

So I think what we have here is a caution that's been expressed, and I hope that the government hears it and works hard to try and protect that personal information. We really will have a problem if it's not able to be protected and people can't trust that that information is not going to be misused in some way or stolen or left in a box in somebody's backyard or left on a computer hard drive and all the other things that have gone wrong recently.

One of the other things I was pleased to see was the firming up of the definitions around access to secure buildings, and that included gated communities, trailer parks, multifamily or multi-unit buildings like apartments and condominiums, very important for those in the urban settings and increasingly important to everyone else. That is about a basic tenet of democracy. It's about access to candidates, and it's about the candidate's ability to present themselves at the door of the voter. If the voter doesn't want to open the door, fine, but the candidates have to be able to get to that door, and they should not be stopped by an additional barrier that they can't get into the building itself. So I'm hoping that that strengthened definition is going to help us in the upcoming elections.

There are increases in the contribution limits on all levels that are allowed for in this legislation. I would prefer to see that decreased, particularly around unions and corporations. I would prefer to see campaign contributions limited to individuals, not get involved with corporations or unions at all. I think the key entity that we need to work with here is individuals, not larger groupings of bodies or legal entities, but that wasn't to be.

I was one of the people that was lobbying to have this legislation held over for a period of time to allow the public to be aware that the debate was happening and to get involved in it. I have to say that I didn't hear from a significant number of people who were keenly interested in what was going on here, but we also have gone through the Easter period and a number of other world events that may well have distracted people.

At this point I suppose we'll have to let it go and vote on the bill and see what happens once it's all implemented. But I am glad that we were able to give some people an additional few weeks to be able to access the proposed legislation through the Internet and be able to contact some of us and comment, or at least I hope they contacted some people and commented. I heard from a few, and for me that's worth it to hear from those few people.

So I appreciate the opportunity to add my comments in Committee of the Whole debate, and I look forward to discussing the anticipated effect of the bill during third reading. Thank you very much.

[The clauses of Bill 22 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 22.

[Motion carried]

10:40

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 22. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? The motion is carried.

Before I recognize the hon. Government House Leader, we did have a notice on all of our desks, but just a reminder. Tomorrow morning the young people that are with MLA for a Day are going to be in here, so if we could put all of those things either underneath or in the drawers or take them with you, that would be appreciated by all.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:41 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 21, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/04/21

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, the Royal Canadian Legion's Alberta-Northwest Territories Command takes a keen interest in promoting the value of good citizenship among young people throughout the province. The Legion is in partnership with the Legislative Assembly Office in a program that reflects that good work. It is Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day. We are very appreciative of both the Legion's financial support and their involvement for this annual event. In your gallery are Lenore Schwabe, command vice-president, and her mother, Mrs. Cecile Boyer, a life-time member of the Royal Canadian Legion. I would now invite our guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to introduce to you and to all members the 30 students participating in your MLA for a Day program. Our shadow colleagues are seated in both galleries today. They are accompanied by their Legion chaperones Dutchy Enders and Gord McDonald. I would now ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes. Hi, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. I have two introductions today, actually. First, it is my pleasure and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly several valued staff members who are participating in a public service orientation tour today. These staff members are dedicated public servants who provide human resources services to both the Solicitor General's department and the Justice department. Would the following please rise and then we will give them the warm welcome from the Assembly: Alissa Klapstein, Diann Connelly, Claire Paterson, Valarie McLeod, and Cindy Christman. I'll ask everyone to give them the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly former Alberta competitors and trainers from the 2003 WorldSkills competition and representatives of Skills Canada Alberta. I would like to introduce Bob Patterson from Drayton Valley, who competed in industrial wiring; Kirk Quast from Bassano, who competed in machining; Kirk's trainer, Mike Desjardins, instructor at the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology; Chad McConnell, trainer for Auto Service World, who is a trainer and was also a team member at the 36th WorldSkills competition in Seoul, South Korea; Guy Brookes, who is a trainer for the plumbing competitor Mark Chupik and is also an instructor at SAIT; Brian Pardell, who is the executive director of Skills Canada Alberta; Chris Browton, who is a communications co-ordinator for Skills Canada Alberta; and Karen Fetterly, program manager for Alberta Learning.

Mr. Speaker, before I ask everyone to acknowledge them, I will just put a plug in that Calgary has been chosen for a representative for Canada to compete for the 2009 WorldSkills Competition, and we will be putting forward this bid on May 10 in Hong Kong.

I would ask everyone to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a constituent from Coaldale. Mr. Peter King has brought his daughter Christa to be your MLA for the day. Peter has been in Coaldale for seven years, met the Premier a couple of years ago, has a general contracting business, NCA Development, and also operates, along with his wife and three children, Garden Grove Mobile Home Park. I would ask Mr. King in the members' gallery to please rise and receive the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly an old friend and past president of my constituency association, who is just finishing his articling as a lawyer. His name is Bill Smith, and I'd ask him to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are honoured today to have in our members' gallery, I believe, 33 visitors from Strathcona Christian Academy. They are attended to by their teacher and group leader Mr. Doug Zook. If they would rise, please, and this House give them the warm welcome that they so richly deserve.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans can't wait for lower auto insurance rates. While the government continues to fumble this issue, Albertans pay the highest auto insurance premiums in the west. An Alberta Liberal government would have solved this issue by now through our public auto insurance plan. To the Premier: why is the government locking in the highest auto insurance rates in Alberta history for another 15 months while it dithers on auto insurance reform?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are not dithering. You know, it's really time the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition started telling the truth – dithering – and stopped using controversial and confrontational and inflammatory adjectives to describe government programs. Quite simply, our government insurance program is to lower rates – lower rates for young, good male drivers; lower rates for older good male drivers – penalize those who are bad, and reasonably compensate those who are injured in accidents.

Dr. Taft: Well, does the Premier really believe that a 5 per cent rollback will compensate for average rate increases of 59 per cent since March 2002?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get into comparing apples and oranges and pears and grapefruits and all of those other things. I will say, however, that this government took very proactive action to address an issue that had been brought to our attention not only by young good drivers who were being severely penalized but by employers, especially small business employers, people who wanted to employ summer students, for instance, but couldn't, if these people were required to drive, because of the high insurance premiums they would have to pay.

So we have done a commendable job on behalf of the people of this province to address an issue. It was us, this government, that addressed the issue, not the opposition. The opposition only picked it up and started to complain and natter about it once we started to deal with the issue.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, if it's not dithering, then will the Premier tell us exactly when the new insurance grid will be implemented in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, obviously, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition is focusing on media reports that surfaced as a result of the SPC meeting last night.

Relative to the time frame as to when the whole thing unfolds, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, clearly, we've said all along that we would put forward a package that addresses the issues that were raised by Albertans: first of all, having an accessible insurance package, one that's affordable and one that's comparably priced, that meets the needs of Albertans. We will have that package move forward this summer.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Calgary Courthouse

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it looks like public/private partnerships, or P3s, will work for this government very much like a government credit card: the government will spend now; the taxpayers will pay later. The clearest example of this so far is the Calgary courthouse P3, which was first estimated at costing $150 million, then $300 million, and now half a billion dollars. To the Premier: given that the government was so sure that P3s would save money, how could it let the cost of its flagship P3 project spin so far out of control?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, this had nothing to do with P3s or any other form of construction. Had the government decided to go on its own on this particular project, the costs would have escalated. We are revisiting the project to bring the costs back in line. Now, if the Liberals, who are complaining now about this project, want to spend $500 million, well, let them do it. That is their nature – spend more, spend more, spend more – whereas this government will revisit a program, bring it back, scale it back to something that is reasonable, and even at the reduced scope we are confident we can build an excellent facility that attends to the needs of Calgarians and consolidates the Provincial Court and the Court of Queen's Bench.

Dr. Taft: Well, why is this government even considering providing public financing – a taxpayer loan, for heaven's sake – to its private partners in the Calgary courthouse, as the Premier indicated yesterday?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know where the hon. member is getting his information. No decision has been made. We're in the process of evaluating the project. This is so typical – so typical – of the Liberals: if someone was thinking about it or if someone was thinking out loud or someone suggested that that might be approached, then it becomes government policy. You know why? Although it isn't government policy, it makes for a good 15-second sound bite, and that's all they are concerned about.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, until this issue is resolved, will the government declare a moratorium on further P3s with for-profit partners, given that they're just a way to spend taxpayers' money?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker. We will not abandon the concept of P3s. We will continue to abide by our policy, and that is that if P3s work, if they work over the long term – and you have to understand that we're talking only about the construction costs; we're not talking about the long-term maintenance costs related to keeping up court facilities; we are talking about construction costs only – and in the short term, we will consider a P3 project. If it doesn't make sense, it will be discarded.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Government Expense Claims

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two months after the Alberta Liberal opposition raised the issue, the government still won't provide details on its spending on wining, dining, and travel. Yesterday the Premier failed to explain why he won't simply photocopy expense claims, receipts, and credit card statements his staff has and show them to Albertans. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why he still can't show us the receipts for a $26,000 trip to India in January, given that the federal government can provide detailed information on all expenses in less than three months?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again they allude to the federal government. You know, I've had the opportunity – let's put this in perspective – to be on Team Canada trips. Now, if they want to have this government spend like the federal government, here's an example of the Prime Minister taking the lead car, which is a stretched limousine, arriving in Air Force One or Two – you know, a great big A320 plane done up like a living room – leading a procession, having all the roads blocked off, the Premiers following in vans, the Prime Minister taking a huge, humongous suite. Oh, this is the way that these Liberals are suggesting we should spend. They're saying that we should follow the example of the federal government. Well, that's the way the federal government travels.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the Premier. Why is the Premier making vague promises about re-evaluating the system when all he needs to do is tell his staff to photocopy a few documents and show them to Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Well, I go back to what I said. I want this hon. member to stand up and say that we should spend like the feds, like their Liberal cousins. I would like this hon. member to say that the Premier should have this huge, humongous A320 done up like a living room. I would like this hon. member to say that I should have a house like 24 Sussex and all the trimmings that go with it. I would like this hon. member to say that the Premier should arrive in a stretched limousine and have all the ministers follow in vans. I would like this hon. member to say that I should have 25 or 30 or 40 security people around me, all at taxpayers' expense.

Mr. Speaker, they want us to spend like their Liberal cousins in Ottawa. Well, we're not about to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. All I'm saying, Mr. Premier, is: will you crank up the photocopier and give us copies of your travel and hosting receipts? Come on.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, again the same answer. They would rather talk about $25 or $23.50 items or a $27 jug of orange juice, which boils down to $2.70 a glass, than the multi, multi, multimillions of millions of dollars that are being wasted by their Liberal cousins in Ottawa.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Another week, another cornerstone of government policy crumbles into rubble. The centerpiece of the government's P3 strategy, the Calgary courthouse, has been put on hold after costs soared 66 per cent higher than originally planned. After months of hype about the advantages of P3s the government has finally had to face hard financial reality. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier admit that the government's P3 policy is in shambles as a result of the Calgary courthouse cost overrun debacle?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it is so typical of both the Liberal and the ND opposition to pick out any little thing that is negative about any project. This is a major project; there's no doubt about it. It hasn't been a failure. We have revisited the project. Had the government done it on its own, there was no guarantee that those costs wouldn't have escalated in the same way. As a matter of fact, it's quite common in government circles that if they know that it is completely a government job, the costs go sky-high.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this person was on city council when the costs of the Edmonton Convention Centre – or maybe he wasn't. I certainly remember reading about them going up and up and up and up and higher and higher and higher, and had he been on council, he would have said: oh, great; spend, spend, spend, spend more. Because that's the attitude.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, the Calgary contract was a good contract, as a matter of fact, and when the Saddledome went $16 million – we're not talking hundreds of millions of dollars – I put a stop to it.

I put a stop to it. As a matter of fact, I said that if you want more information, here's Tom Chambers' number. He was the minister of public works for the government at that particular time and opened everything up relative to that particular project.

So, Mr. Speaker, when they want to talk about overruns, this hon. member, the ND member, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, is the king of overruns. But he likes them because that is the way of the NDs.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you rose on a point of order, but I think there was clarification that you were not a member of council at that time. Is that what the point of order is going to be?

Mr. Mason: Well, subsequent things that the Premier has said. We may have a few more by the time my questions are over, Mr. Speaker.

Given that I got involved in politics fighting the Convention Centre and warning of cost overruns, will the Premier admit that he has nothing to teach me about fighting waste in government spending?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have learned more about waste in spending from the Liberals and the NDs in my 15 years in this Legislature than I've ever learned before. All of those lessons have come from the Liberals and the NDs, and that is how to spend, spend, spend, and spend more.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the courthouse is on hold and, hopefully, will be stopped altogether, will the government consider as an alternative to this project building a new hospital for the city of Calgary without going through the nonsense and expense of a P3?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the two projects are separate. I will agree with the hon. member that a new hospital is needed in the southern part of the city. The Calgary health region is now working on a plan, a concept. It is the Calgary health region's request that they proceed via the P3 process. That project will be evaluated, and hopefully it will turn out to be a good project. We are very intent and very committed to going ahead with that project.

I find it interesting, Mr. Speaker, because he said: put a stop to the courthouse. Put a stop. All you have to do is look at the Calgary court situation and you will see a hodgepodge, really, of court facilities throughout the city to the point where the Provincial Court judges especially, who, I understand, adjudicate about 80 per cent of the cases, both criminal and civil and family, are absolutely cramped. It's costing the government, because we have to maintain these facilities, a huge amount of money. So it makes sense to consolidate these activities. Now, if this hon. member wants to go down to Calgary and state publicly that this project should be halted, that there should be no consolidation, I would invite him to do so.

Organ and Tissue Donations

Ms DeLong: Mr. Speaker, April 18 to 25 is National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week, and a number of activities are taking place in Alberta and across Canada to increase our awareness of this important issue. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the government doing to further reduce the number of Albertans waiting to receive organ transplants?

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is true that the shortage of organs and tissues for transplantation is a long-standing problem here in the province of Alberta, but it is also a long-standing problem throughout Canada.

Right now, Mr. Speaker, over 400 Albertans are on waiting lists to receive an organ transplant, and unfortunately every year some Albertans do not survive the waiting period for that gift of life. Hundreds more are awaiting tissue that can restore sight, restore mobility, or improve quality of life.

Now, what the Department of Health and Wellness is currently working on, Mr. Speaker, is a comprehensive and co-ordinated provincial system for organ and tissue donation. An improved system to increase donation will decrease the number of Albertans waiting for a transplant and improve the quality of life for those individuals and their families.

We do need to make legislative changes to the Human Tissue Gift Act, that was originally proclaimed some 20 years ago, in 1973. Policies for the new legislation have been drafted, and the process to introduce such legislation will soon be under way.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my department is working with our tissue programs to improve self-sufficiency in providing tissues for transplantation.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much. Just one supplemental. Deciding to become an organ or tissue donor is a very important personal decision, one that can have extraordinary results. What can Albertans do to increase their awareness and help reduce waiting lists so that more people who are ill can receive the gift of life?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I will say this about Canadians and I'll say this specifically about Albertans: Albertans are extraordinarily generous individuals. Some 81 per cent of Canadians have indicated their willingness to donate their organs and tissues, but only 65 per cent of Canadians actually advise their families of their wishes. If there is one thing that we could do to help improve the donation rate for tissues and organs, it would be to do as I have done with my own family, and that is to indicate your desire to donate tissues and organs.

Mr. MacDonald: Albertans can't wait for lower auto insurance rates. If the government really cared about consumers and not just about the insurance industry, it would table its latest proposals in this Assembly this afternoon. My first question is to the Premier. Given that this government always discriminates against Edmonton, what proof does the government have that new drivers in Edmonton should have an entry-level premium that is $180 higher than new drivers in Calgary?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they're rehashing old, old, old news. The package went to SPC. I would remind the hon. member that we are the government and we are charged by the electorate to develop policy, not the Liberals. The Liberals do not develop policy. We go through the process. We're now in the standing policy committee process of developing that policy and finalizing that policy. There is a procedure that will be followed. It will go to cabinet and then caucus, and we'll make a final decision, and it will be reported.

Mr. Speaker, as we go through this process, we have to keep in mind what we want to achieve in the end, and what we want to achieve is commendable. We want to achieve a premium rate for young male drivers, in particular, that is fair. We want to create a premium rate for older male drivers that is fair, and as one of the newspapers reported, rates will generally come down for these drivers. We want to make sure that those who are injured in accidents are fairly compensated, not overcompensated but fairly compensated.

Mr. Speaker, these goals, I believe, are commendable goals and will not only enhance economic opportunities, particularly for those who operate small businesses and need young drivers to drive their vehicles, but it will also benefit the Alberta public at large. I can't understand for the life of me why they are complaining about something that is so good, that is commendable, and something that this government, by the way, saw as a problem and took head-on, addressed the issue, and brought a solution forward or is now bringing solutions forward.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: will the proposed auto insurance grid also apply to commercial auto in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to any details that might or might not come out, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, our focus has been on noncommercial vehicles, and we have been moving forward in that frame. We are not contemplating any further reform at this point until we complete this package. Quite clearly, we have taken a lot of time on this package because we're determined that we will meet the needs of Albertans: one that rewards good drivers, one that penalizes bad drivers, one that takes the discrimination out of the equation and provides affordable, accessible, and comparably priced insurance for all Albertans.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the premier: given that the freeze has been extended until 2005, is this government just teasing the auto insurance companies and secretly planning to implement public automobile insurance in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if he lies awake thinking about these things or if they come to him as dreams or nightmares and then he gets up in the morning and he says: I think that this is a good question I'm going to ask. I've often said that one of the most difficult things in politics is to provide intelligent answers to stupid questions, and I'm stumped.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Graydon: Well, I hope I don't fall under that category, Mr. Speaker.

Educational Opportunities in Northern Alberta and B.C.

Mr. Graydon: Earlier this week the Minister of Learning and the B.C. Minister of Advanced Education met with the presidents and board chairs of 16 colleges, institutions, and universities to discuss ways that their ministries can further educational opportunities in the northern areas of the province. My questions today are for the Minister of Learning. What objectives were identified as a result of this meeting, and how can they benefit Alberta's postsecondary students?

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a result of the B.C./Alberta cabinet meeting that took place in the fall, we were tasked by our Premiers to go forward and come up with ways that we can co-operate and collaborate between British Columbia and Alberta. On Monday was the result of that, in which case the Minister of Advanced Education in British Columbia and myself sat down together with some 35 or 40 other presidents and board chairs of the various institutions in northern Alberta and northern B.C.

Mr. Speaker, specifically, one of the issues that was looked at was barriers to mobility between B.C. and Alberta. One of the issues that has come forward is that welders, for example, electricians cannot go back and forth on the border. We have ironed that out. We will have solutions to that coming forward.

Another very important thing took place, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to distance education, what we have in B.C. and Alberta is BCcampus, we have eCampusAlberta, we have Athabasca University, and we have the B.C. Open University. The discussion was tailored around: why on earth should we be duplicating these services when we can actually consolidate them and use them together? Why should one province have a course in English 101 and the other province have a course in English 101, the same courses? So we are looking at how we can do this.

It was an absolutely excellent meeting, and just for the hon. member's information – and I think it will be particularly critical to him – we will be having the next meeting in October in Grande Prairie to continue discussions on this very important topic between B.C. and Alberta.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, we've proven that you can get an intelligent answer to an intelligent question.

My first and only supplemental question is again to the Minister of Learning. Can the minister advise what other stakeholders will be involved in achieving these objectives?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of other stakeholders that need to be involved. There are the First Nations. There's another very important stakeholder that was not at the meetings, and that's the Northwest Territories. Much of what is going to be happening in the upcoming future is going to be geared towards the Northwest Territories when we start looking at the diamond mines, when we start looking at the potential Mackenzie Valley pipeline coming down the Mackenzie Valley. There's also a huge bridge project that is occurring in the Northwest Territories. Realistically, the training elements of the Northwest Territories are very intimately tied to northern Alberta and northern British Columbia. So the Northwest Territories is one of these groups that has to be involved. The Yukon Territory also has to be involved.

Mr. Speaker, the meeting that we had on Monday is just the start of what I see as a truly great amount of collaboration and co-operation between two and possibly three or four jurisdictions as well as the First Nations. The very interesting part – and I think we can all learn from this in this Assembly – is that we had the Liberal Party from B.C. and the Conservative Party from Alberta sitting together and actually working together for the betterment of the citizenry.

Automobile Insurance Rates

Mr. MacDonald: This government was embarrassed when it released on its web site the new auto insurance grid last year. Alberta drivers checking out the new proposed auto insurance grid found that in most cases the rates went up, not down as promised by this government. My first question is to the Premier. Will the Premier guarantee now, this afternoon, that auto insurance rates for most drivers in this province will go down as a result of this proposed new auto insurance grid?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, no, nor can he guarantee that rates will go up or down. That is subject to the market, unless of course they have a socialized insurance company that they want to publicly finance out of taxpayers' money to stabilize rates and to make sure that they remain stable.

Mr. Speaker, what I will guarantee is that rates for young good drivers will go down and quite dramatically. I will guarantee that. I will guarantee that rates for older good drivers will go down dramatically. I will say that the rates for bad drivers will not go down. They will go up. If the hon. member is opposed to that, let me know now and state it publicly, because we would like to know where he stands on this issue. Generally – and I can't guarantee it – those in the mid-range, male or female in the mid-range, the people who are not affected because of age or gender, will remain, I would say, ostensibly the same. Our rates will stabilize.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that I've asked this hon. member before, and I will ask him again. Assuming that he is a good driver, assuming that he doesn't have a lot of traffic tickets, speeding tickets, and hasn't been involved in an accident, I have challenged him to table his insurance rates. I would be glad to table mine. Mine are comparable with what I would pay anywhere in Canada, and I'm sure that his would be comparable too. So to stand up there and try to tell the public that they're paying more is not being honest. It's not being honest at all, and he should be ashamed of himself.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: what specifically are the lower rates? What prices are older drivers with good records going to pay under your proposed scheme? Surely, you know that.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, the policy hasn't been adopted yet, but certainly a chart has been prepared. It deals with those in the so-called special categories. If one were to look at the charts, one can naturally assume that the rates for good young male drivers will go down and for good older male drivers will go down. So what is happening is good, and it's also good for those that are in the mid-range, whose rates will remain pretty well stable.

But again, Mr. Speaker, I would ask this hon. member to table in this House, because I'm willing to table mine, his insurance bill for the last three years. I would ask him to do that, and we would compare that against the rate that he would be charged in B.C. or Saskatchewan or Manitoba or Newfoundland or anywhere else in this country.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: if this proposed chart is as you say it is and it's going to reduce rates for so many drivers, will you put it on the government web site this afternoon so Alberta consumers can check it out for themselves?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance respond in detail, but the final policy has not yet been adopted. That is the function and the responsibility of government: to develop policy and bring that into effect.

The hon. member still hasn't answered my question. The question that I pose not directly to him but as a challenge – maybe he won't state it here – is: will he table his insurance premium for his private automobile for the past three years? I'll do the same thing. Will he do that? Maybe he'll answer that question outside.

The Speaker: Very, very briefly, please.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, insofar as the insurance grid going on the web site today, it's amazing how this hon. member can be almost a day late and a dollar short. We put a phantom grid on the web site last year to give Albertans an idea of how a grid would work. It's not been there for quite some time because we've been working on how an actual policy would fit so that Albertans could, once we've completed it, go to the web site directly and figure out where they would fit. That won't go back on our web site until we have completed all of the regulations and the policy direction over this next three months. So the hon. member is going to have to wait until we complete the final process through our policy development. Then he will have the picture on the web site.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Occupational Health and Safety Code

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents who own medium-sized construction businesses have expressed concerns about the effects of the occupational health and safety code, that was enacted in November of 2003 with a five-month grace period for employers to comply, which ends April 30, 2004. My first question to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: what changes do employers have to make to their workplaces in order to comply with the new code?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I would think that in most cases there really wouldn't be any change that would be required because, in essence, the code replaced, actually, 11 regulations that were already in place. Clearly, we believe that one code will be easier for all employers and employees to keep track of and keep up to date with than 11 regulations. There were some new industries that have risen that might cause some change. We think of the biohazard industry, and of course robotics are increasing in Alberta.

There is one area, though, that would affect all employers if they haven't done this up to this particular time. All hazards that exist in that particular workplace will have to be put in written form, and of course as common sense would tell you – it's probably already been done – these would have to be shown to the employees.

So given the fact that employers have always been responsible for the safety at their work site and the safety of their workers, I don't think there's any big deal here about assessing the hazard. It just might be putting it in writing that would be the big change.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what education and communication process was adopted to inform employers about the changes to the code?

Mr. Dunford: One of the ways that this government provides communications for employers and, really, for Albertans generally, of course, is the Queen's Printer. We actually have a best-seller on our hands here, Mr. Speaker. The demand for the printed version of the code has currently outstripped, as I understand it, the ability of the Queen's Printer to keep up with that particular demand.

Now, this can be had for free by going to the Queen's Printer web site and then simply downloading the code that way. In any event, we do have a workplace health and safety call centre, and that would be available. We have a call number, and of course we have the web site, and I won't ad lib any further than that.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister, a final question: what will happen after April 30 if an occupational health and safety officer finds an employer who is not fully in compliance with the new provisions of the code?

Mr. Dunford: This is an area where we're going to have to be quite vigilant because over time we all are aware that there has been some grinding between some contractors and sometimes our safety inspectors, so we want to make sure that we keep our eye on that particular area.

The kind of information that we as a ministry provide, though, to our people is that we have an education responsibility first. To take a page out of the Premier's book, if I could, within this area we have the five Es, and of course in that case we want to educate and we want to educate and educate and educate some more. Finally, of course, if we are dealing with people who are simply obstinate or recalcitrant, then of course we'll have to enforce.

But when you look at what's actually taking place, the contractors themselves would know of the hazards and should be in a position, then, to be able to correctly identify these hazards and correctly portray that information to their workers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Child Care Services

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today's Parent ranks Alberta child care services among the worst in the country with respect to the number of trained staff, wages, and overall quality. The Alberta advantage definitely does not apply to children in daycare. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Can the minister explain why Ontario has 82 per cent of its child care staff with two years of training or higher and this province has only a miserable 43 per cent at the same level?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Today's Parent review was done in 1998 from the document You Bet I Care! and, following that, from data that was generated at that time. That preceded and predated the efforts that we've made on child care accreditation, which will put us first in the country. It will elevate the quality standards for children in daycare and day homes. It will address the issues of standards and rates of pay. In the last year we have provided dollars through the advance on the accreditation. Eighty per cent of those dollars, by the way, will go towards staffing and giving staff modest increases to get involved with the program.

Mr. Speaker, there was a recognition that in Alberta we wanted to do more to enhance the child care services, and building on that, we wanted to do even more than that. We wanted to improve staff training and improve the qualifications of people who run daycares and day homes. If you look at Canada and if you look at the United States, there is nobody doing accreditation and improving as fast as we are.

Dr. Massey: This is a survey done this month.

Again to the same minister: why does the government continue to pursue a child care policy that is driving interested students and practising staff out of the profession?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that. I don't believe they're being driven out of the profession whatsoever. We have got enrolments at Grant MacEwan Community College, a lot of work being done on assessments of the effectiveness of that training tool. [interjection] I'm getting a lot of help here.

We are doing a lot with the scholarships for First Nations staff that want to become trained child care professionals, and we are working with the University of Calgary and the sociology department there to improve and enhance training.

I think most of all, Mr. Speaker, the new Alberta response model, which enables the child care delivery system to look at delivery in a new way, not removing children from placements but going into the home and providing support, means that it's not just the social worker that's involved. It is the nurse, it is the psychologist, it is the speech pathologist, and multidisciplinary teams are becoming more commonplace in the administration of child care and child care ancillary work that's being done in Alberta.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why has the government underfunded our daycare so badly that Alberta now leads the country in staff turnover rates?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, we don't fund the daycares. We fund the parents through a subsidy program, that they can apply for, based on the working salaries they receive. There's a sliding scale right up to and over $40,000. We subsidize the parents, and it's our premise – and I think it's the best premise of all – that the parent is responsible for the child and that the parent will do the best due diligence in any daycare or day home. They become daily monitors of what happens in those daycares.

We don't subsidize daycares. We subsidize parents who have children who attend daycares, and we subsidize them based on our belief that we should be putting our dollars where those people can less afford to do it. People that earn $60,000 and $70,000 can pay their own way. We are subsidizing those people that need the pay and those children that need that support.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Any hope that Albertans might some day have car insurance rates as low as other western provinces was dashed today. Although the Premier once promised that this government's reform package would result in rates as low as in B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba, that promise has mysteriously disappeared from the government rhetoric. Instead, the highest car insurance rates in western Canada are going to be locked in for yet another year or more. To the Premier: when the government finally gets around to implementing its reform package, will Alberta drivers be paying more than other western Canadians for auto insurance? Yes or no, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll explain it one more time. Our rates will be comparable, but on the good side, on the very positive side the rates for good young male drivers will go down. The rates for good older male drivers will go down. The intention, of course, is to end the discrimination against these people because of age and gender if they are good drivers. Having said that, we will continue to make sure as a matter of policy that the insurance companies have the ability to penalize bad drivers. On average it's proposed that within 5 per cent, give or take, the rates will remain pretty much the same for those in the mid-range.

Notwithstanding what this hon. leader of the third party says, these rates are comparable with rates paid in other jurisdictions. Mr. Speaker, my insurance rate is comparable to what I would pay in Saskatchewan, British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario. It's comparable. I would be glad to table that, and I'd be glad to table what I would be paying anywhere else.

My insurance rate for PL and PD and collision on a classic car which is insured full-time, which is a 1977 Volkswagen convertible, Mr. Speaker – and because of its age and because it is designated as a classic car, it's valued higher than it normally would be – is around $770 a year. That includes collision and PL and PD. That, according to the information I've been able to obtain, is very comparable, within a dollar or two, of what I would pay in any other jurisdiction.

I would invite the hon. member, as I invited the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, to table, providing he has been a good driver, his insurance rates. I'd be glad to table mine.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the government's reform package is so beneficial and so reasonable to drivers, why is the government waiting until after the next election is safely out of the way to implement this glorious new system?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. First of all, they say that it's a lousy plan. Then they say that it's so good that we're waiting until after the election, you know, that we're holding onto it. The truth is that we're in the process now of finalizing that plan. It is going through the political process. It went to SPC last night. It will go to cabinet within a week or so or maybe two weeks, then to caucus if necessary. So I would say that within the next two months or so it will be out, and I can assure the hon. member that an election will not be held within the next two months or so.

Dr. Pannu: My final supplementary to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given that the Consumers' Association of Canada has found that public insurance provinces are providing dramatically lower insurance rates than Alberta, isn't it time for the Premier to stop protecting his pals in the insurance industry and admit that private insurance is highway robbery?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I would be more than happy to table the insurance premium that I am paying right now for collision and public liability and property damage. That rate is comparable to the socialist rates charged in Saskatchewan and British Columbia, that are backed by taxpayers' dollars. Comparable.

2:30head: Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Big Brothers Big Sisters

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was going to do a recognition today on the marvellous Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day, but it's already been done.

I have another that is equally important, and that is that children matched with mentors do better in life because of improved self-esteem, school performance, and communication skills. They're more likely to finish high school and less likely to be involved in criminal activities. That is what Big Brothers Big Sisters of Edmonton area is all about. We can make a big difference in a child's life by supporting Big Brothers Big Sisters. As the leading mentoring agency in North America, they pride themselves on the high quality of service provided to children, families, volunteers, and supporters.

The total number of school-age children and youth in Edmonton and surrounding area is around 200,000. It's generally accepted that about 20 per cent of these young people need extra supports to succeed in school and life. This year approximately 2,000 young people will be helped; by the year 2010, about 5,000.

On behalf of all Albertans we thank those who have contributed and ask others to become so involved. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

National Aboriginal Achievement Award Hon. Pearl Calahasen

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1993 the National Aboriginal Achievement Foundation established the national aboriginal achievement awards in conjunction with the United Nations' International Decade of the World's Indigenous Peoples. The awards recognize individuals of First Nations, Inuit, and Métis ancestry who have reached a significant level of achievement in their respective occupations.

Myself and the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie had the great pleasure of attending the national awards ceremony in Calgary at the Southern Alberta Jubilee Auditorium on Sunday, April 4, 2004. Among the honorary recipients is a particular person that I'm going to talk about. This person was born and raised in Grouard, Alberta, and earned a Bachelor of Education from the University of Alberta and a Master of Education from the University of Oregon. So far this person continues championing for aboriginal issues, especially in the areas of education, children, and families.

Mr. Speaker, this outstanding national award winner is no other than our very own colleague the hon. Member for Lesser Slave Lake and the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. I would like to congratulate her and ask all members to applaud her for this award.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Dianne Greenough

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to recognize a superb teacher, gifted coach, and volunteer extraordinaire, Dianne Greenough.

Dianne is well known for her work in having cheerleading recognized as an exciting sport in this province and nationally. She's been a teacher/coach at Victoria School of Performing and Visual Arts for 26 years. She is worshipped by her students and is as enthusiastic as the day she first walked into Vic.

Dianne has received many awards for her commitment to cheer-leading, volunteerism, and teaching, including the CFRN Great Albertan award, city of Edmonton salute to excellence, ITV's woman of vision, Alberta's excellence in teaching, and she's been inducted into the American Cheerleaders Association coaches' hall of fame.

This year her Vic team won its 15th city championship and also its 15th provincial championship since 1985. Her team just placed third in the U.S.A. national cheerleading championships, the first Canadian coed team to reach this level.

In her spare time she is coach of the Edmonton Eskimos cheer team, and she is also the producer/choreographer for the 2005 Masters Games.

Congratulations and thank you to a great teacher, colleague, and friend.

Calgary Flames

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker and colleagues, how about those Flames. Wow. The 15-year dry spell for hockey fans in Calgary has ended, and our entire city has gone hockey crazy watching some of the absolute best games ever seen in recent years as our Flames have battled the Canucks to an edge-of-your-seat, right-down-to-the-wire victory these past few weeks. It has been an incredible experience. Calgaryans have been completely riveted to their television sets, culminating in that last hold-your-breath 3-2 overtime victory.

Our team, which consists of just about everybody in Calgary right now, has had to overcome incredible challenges to get to this point. Management, staff, and owners have had to meet the financial challenges. Our players, led by Darryl Sutter, with stars like Iginla, Kiprusoff, Gelinas, and Yelle and all the other great 28, have had to overcome almost insurmountable injuries, fatigue, and pressure playing against absolutely evenly matched opponents and have had to dig really deep, relying solely on sheer grit, determination, and hard work, Alberta qualities they obviously excel in.

Congratulations, Flames. We're all really proud of you. On to the Stanley Cup.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

University of Calgary Law School

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today in recognition of the University of Calgary being named best institution on the Canadian Lawyer magazine 2004 report card on Canadian law schools. The U of C achieved number one status based on some of the most important opinions, those of recent graduates. All recent U of C law graduates surveyed recommended the school, and the final grade given to the program was a B plus.

The Calgary law school admits about 70 students into the first-year program each fall. Small class sizes add to the school's learning environment, and teaching staff includes faculty members and practising lawyers. The university's curriculum was given top marks for its balance between theory and skill development, which, according to one graduate in the survey, gives, and I quote, an excellent foundation in theoretical aspects of law and particularly excellent practical experience.

Congratulations to the University of Calgary law school, and keep up the great work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Civil Air Search and Rescue Association

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That others may live: this is a noble and honourable motto that motivates the 2,700 Canadian volunteers who give of their time and energy to be ready at a moment's notice to search for a missing aircraft or missing persons.

Armed with pagers and airplanes, 300 Alberta volunteers are members of CASARA, the Civil Air Search and Rescue Association. These volunteers are trained to Canadian military standards in fields such as aviation safety, meteorology, survival awareness, and search techniques. Whatever time of day or night it might be, CASARA members are capable of being airborne within 45 minutes of an emergency call by the military rescue co-ordination centre at CFB Trenton in Ontario.

This weekend Edmonton will host a provincial training officers conference. Jim Thoreson, the national vice-president and director for the province of Alberta; Ted Sherback, the deputy director; Pat Fahy, the provincial secretary; and Bob Jablonski, the provincial training officer, will review training procedures with other CASARA members, once again all giving freely of their time and expertise so that others may live.

Our Voice: The Spare Change Magazine

Mr. MacDonald: I am pleased to have the opportunity today to recognize Our Voice magazine, which celebrates its 10th anniversary this month. The Spare Change Magazine is published monthly by the Bissell Centre in order to increase the ability of people to become self-reliant and to raise awareness of issues related to poverty and inner-city life.

Our Voice aims to provide an opportunity for economically marginalized people to gain employment and income while drawing public attention to the issues they face. Vendors buy the magazine at the Bissell Centre and sell more than 5,500 copies a month in high pedestrian traffic areas of Edmonton for between $1 and $2 each. Members of the community can also get involved by contributing stories, photographs, and poetry for publication. Our Voice has a strong, regular readership, and those people come from many diverse backgrounds.

Our Voice has meant a great deal to many people over the last decade, and I am certain it will touch many more lives in the future.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition signed by 127 capital region citizens from the Alberta Fire Fighters Association petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "support Bill 204, the Blood Sample Act, which will provide more security and peace of mind for people working in occupations who have a higher risk of exchanging bodily fluids with a potential carrier of a blood borne disease."

Thank you.

2:40head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to table with you some information that Albertans and MLAs here have been waiting for regarding the Alberta centennial. It is the announcement of three new programs today.

The first one is the Alberta centennial per capita municipal grant program totalling $10 million; secondly is the Alberta centennial legacies grant program, phase 3, totalling $16 million; and the third and final one is the Alberta centennial planning program for provincially run programs totalling $4 million.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: For tablings?

The Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do. It's my pleasure to rise today to table a letter from Dianne Strilaeff, which is addressed to the Premier. The author of the letter is very angry that while the insurance industry announces multibillion dollar profits, the government has locked in auto insurance premiums at the highest level in western Canada. She proposes a nonprofit, public auto insurance program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a program from the district finalists excellence in teaching awards, 2004, that was held at the McCauley Chambers Centre for Education last night. This was hosted by the public school trustees from Edmonton, and there were eight finalists nominated from different schools in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is a copy of a long list of individuals that was prepared by Daniel Dufresne of the Sundance Housing Co-op here in Edmonton, and this list is urging the government to raise the minimum wage in our province and also wants to advise the government that there is a connection between the low minimum wage and the housing crisis in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a point of order.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order under Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j); that is, "(h) makes allegations against another member; (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another member; (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder."

The Premier in his response to my questions engaged in a number of comments which were, in my view, entirely speculation on his part respecting my role on city council, specifically in reference to the construction of the Convention Centre. He used language – I jotted it down from memory; you will of course have the actual transcript – something to the effect that I was the king of cost overruns.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when one is in politics, really the only thing that they have is their reputation. During my time on city council I worked very hard to develop a reputation as a financial watchdog and a fiscally responsible member of city council. I have some examples which I think are important for the record and your consideration. There are four of them.

Before I was on city council, as a private citizen I opposed the construction of the Convention Centre and predicted the large cost overruns which later occurred. The Premier's comments in that respect are directly contrary to the facts. I fought and successfully stopped the construction of the unneeded Highlands sewer project, which saved taxpayers 17 and a half million dollars. I opposed and stopped an unneeded expansion of the E.L. Smith Water Treatment Plant, proposing instead a water conservation program, which saved the taxpayers of Edmonton over $100 million and which has reduced water bills in the city of Edmonton ever since. Finally, Mr. Speaker – these are just some examples, certainly not the entire record – I blocked a proposed P3 for an indoor soccer complex in Clareview and worked to put together a proposal for a city-owned and -financed project which saved hundreds of thousands of dollars for the taxpayers.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Premier doesn't know what he's talking about, and he ought not stand up here and cast aspersions on other members when he's supposed to be responding to questions unless he has some basis of knowledge for making the statements he has. So I'd submit that he is in violation of these sections of the Standing Orders, and he ought to return at an appropriate time and apologize.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on this point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think having heard the hon. member and his concerns with respect to his reputation as a fiscal conservative, it would be . . .

Mr. Mason: Responsible individual, not conservative.

Mr. Hancock: I'm sorry. Fiscally responsible individual.

It would be appropriate just to reflect for a moment on the give and take of question period as it's developed over time and particularly over the course of this session, and I think the Premier in response to another question today said it right. It's particularly difficult at times to respond to questions when the questions are nonsensical. That's my paraphrasing of what he said. The problem we have is that the rhetoric in the question promotes the rhetoric in the answer.

I take the hon. member's statements as he's put them, and I would acknowledge that from what he's said – and in this House we take people at their word – he has taken a fiscally responsible approach with respect to his actions on city council and being a fiscal watchdog, particularly with respect to the Convention Centre. I would be prepared to offer apologies to him for any suggestion that he was somehow a profligate spender or promoting spending in those circumstances in those comments that were made today.

I think there's a larger issue for us here, and that is that when questions are posed, the rhetoric of the answer often comes from the rhetoric of the questions or the rhetoric of the previous questions. Often the preamble to the questions is so rooted in inaccuracy, hyperbole, and rhetoric that it is very, very difficult to keep the answers to anything other than the same.

So while I think it's important to take the point made by the member opposite today with respect to the specifics of that particular question and the comments that were made, I think there's a broader question which all of us ought to be cognizant of, and that is that if you insist on twisting and creating hyperbole in the preamble to the question, you should expect that you'll be answered in kind.

The Speaker: Well, both representations are very important ones, and with respect to the actual question, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, the Blues basically say – there are two points. One, it says, "Well, Mr. Speaker, this person was on city council when the costs of the Edmonton Convention Centre – or maybe he wasn't." There was an intervention from the chair suggesting that, well, perhaps the hon. member wasn't, so that perhaps was clarified.

Then the hon. member advised me that, well, there might be more coming, so then when I read the Blues, I quote the following: "So . . . when they want to talk about overruns, this hon. member, the ND member, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is the king of overruns. But he likes them because that is the way of the NDs." That certainly was in the Hansard Blues.

Now, I've heard the response from the hon. Government House Leader, and as I understand it, there was a withdrawal or an apology with respect to this after hearing the position put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. So I presume that that will settle that in terms of parliamentary tradition.

I do want to make a further comment, though, with respect to what the Government House Leader has said. The Government House Leader is absolutely correct. This is a game of give and take. Somebody gives it; somebody else will take it and then give it right back. If you throw the boomerang, just make sure that you're standing when it comes back, because if you duck, it's liable to get you in the neck.

So, let's see: ad nauseam now on the part of the chair, maybe the 50th time or something like this. I won't go on to the same length that I've normally gone on. I'll just be brief today. Okay?

Beauchesne's 409 says, "It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate," and it "cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations." Now, those are the rules about questions. Today in the question period actually most of the questions could have been ruled out including most of the government members' questions because they either asked for legal opinions or something else.

There also is a similar rule that applies, then, to people who answer questions. It says, "Answers to questions should be as brief as possible, deal with the matter raised and should not provoke debate."

One day – one day – we will have arrived when we actually have questions and answers in the question period dealing with government policy rather than speculation, innuendo, personality attacks. Questions and answers. When we arrive at that point in time, we will be there. We will be there, hon. members.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I now call the Committee of Supply to order.

Hon. members, before starting consideration of the estimates for the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, the chair wants to bring to the attention of all members the provisions of Standing Order 58(5), which indicate that "the Committee of Supply shall be called not later than 3:10 p.m." on a Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoon and "rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m."

The chair realizes that there's been some confusion about when afternoon deliberations of the Committee of Supply are to end. In accordance, then, with Standing Order 58(5) this afternoon's consideration of the estimates will end just prior to 5:15 in order to allow the committee to rise and report by that time unless, of course, there are no members who wish to speak before we reach that time, in which the case can be made.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

The Chair: I would call upon the hon. minister to make her opening comments.

Mrs. McClellan: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments to make about the department's estimates for 2004, but before I do, I would like to introduce some very important people that are in the gallery. I am going to introduce the executive members that represent, I think, one of the hardest working, most talented and dedicated staffs in our government. I'm going to ask them to stand and remain standing until I conclude their introduction, if that's okay with the chairman, because I'd like all members to be able to recognize which of these members are which.

I'm going to begin by introducing my deputy minister, Mr. Brian Manning. I want to introduce Mr. Les Lyster, who is the assistant deputy minister for sustainable agriculture. Les is leaving us at the end of April, and I know that everybody will recognize the great service that Les has given to this department over the years. I would like to introduce John Knapp, who is the incoming assistant deputy minister for sustainable agriculture. Many of our members in this House on all sides of the House have certainly had reason to discuss programs with Mr. Knapp over the last couple of years because he has very ably steered his staff through some very complex programs that were certainly important to our industry. So, John, welcome with some regret from me because I don't know how we'll possibly replace you in your past job. However, I am confident that you've left very good talent there.

Ken Moholityn is our assistant deputy minister for planning and competitiveness, no stranger to any of you. You should know that he is affectionately called Super Moho outside the committee. Mr. Brian Rhiness, assistant deputy minister for industry development. I am not going to describe Brian's costume that he sometimes wears to show his support for the hog industry. We have Faye Rault, executive director of administration, who very capably keeps our financial activities on track. We have Krish Krishnaswamy, who is the vice-president of finance from the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. We have Terry Willock, our director of communications. Jeff Haley is here from my office. Jeff is special policy adviser.

Ladies and gentlemen, I'm proud to present this talented and dedicated workforce to you.

Mr. Chairman, I don't think anyone will disagree with my opening statement, and that is that this was a year unlike any ever experienced in Canada in the agricultural community, but I must say that thanks to the support and guidance from our industry leaders, we have been able to travel these uncharted waters with some success, I believe.

Despite the difficulties that we've experienced over the last year, agriculture continues to be a very constant and significant contributor to our province's economy. We continue to account for a high percentage of our nation's farm cash receipts. Employment in 2003 rose to 94,000 people; that's direct employees in our agrifood industries. Cash receipts including program payments were $7 billion. But maybe more importantly for the year of the last statistics that we have, Alberta farm capital assets were valued at just over $55 billion. I believe that signifies a huge confidence from the people in this industry to their industry.

At this time last year I don't think anyone could have imagined what type of year we would have. I was sure that the focus of 2003-04 was going to be on growth. We started the spring with some good moisture, prices were pretty good, and it looked like this was our year. Instead, we learned about the single case of BSE.

But by working closely with industry – and I must commend the industry leaders because, Mr. Chairman, at all of our meetings we have had the industry represented at a very high level right across the industry, whether they were small or large packers; whether it was the Canadian grocers and retailers association; whether it was the five beef cattle groups, including our dairy producers, because, of course, they're affected; diversified livestock, which was also effected; financial institutions. The list goes on, and the dedication from those folks to steer us through this was unparalleled in my experience.

We did move 1.2 million head of fat cattle through the system. Considering that we thought we had 650,000 in Canada, I think we did pretty well. We have to again thank the people of this province that I believe led the country in support for our industry. Thanks to our good fiscal management and the sustainability fund we were able to dedicate more than $400 million to the industry without impairing any government programs. We are very proud of that. We make no apologies for our programs. They indeed work. I have had letter after letter after letter, far too many, of course, to table in this Legislature, saying thank you to the government and to all members of the Legislature that supported this industry over the years, and believe me; the people out there know who those people are.

But the discovery of BSE also highlighted many areas where Canada can improve, and we have recognized that. We're ready and willing to do our part and, in fact, have started that. I raise that because that is part of our new budget estimates. The ability for us to do the new rapid test, the Bio-Rad test, in our level 2 biocontainment lab is a great boon to us. We're building the level 3 lab, which will not only aid us in testing but also offer us some opportunity for research, which is incredibly important.

I've explained, Mr. Chairman, why we chose the Bio-Rad test. I think that's well understood now. It is a multi-use test, and it is completely accepted and has been approved for use, as has our lab, as has our staff, for testing for BSE, for chronic wasting disease, and for scrapie. This certainly assists us in reaching the surveillance targets that the federal government has laid out.

I had the opportunity to accompany the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister when the Prime Minister toured our provincial labs in Alberta, and I think I would be correct in saying that the Prime Minister was very impressed by the calibre of the labs and the staff that man those labs.

We are committed in Canada to testing the number of animals that are required to prove statistically that we have an incidence of 1 BSE case in 1 million. That will come to be about 30,000 animals a year. At that rate we are considered a minimum risk.

I want to remind all members that testing is done for herd surveillance to understand the incidence of BSE in our herds. The safety/health side of it is kept safe by the removal of specified risk materials, or SRMs. By the complete removal of SRMs the safety factor is 99.96 per cent. That, I think, is the information that our consumers are most interested in.

The year ahead will see us implementing a number of strategic priorities that will help our industry in the future and contribute to the BSE recovery efforts; that is, our growth strategy, the rural development strategy, the research and innovation strategy, and the agricultural policy framework.

Our budgeted expenditures do increase this year by $17.2 million. These increases include the commitments under the ag policy framework, such as the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, the farm water program, and some other programs included in the agreement. It includes industry-supported research initiatives. It includes ongoing operating funding for the level 2 lab and the new level 3 TSE lab. As all members know, it's incredibly important that you not only build these but that you have the funds to operate them on an ongoing basis.

We have added 68 full-time equivalents in staff. They are there primarily to manage food safety programs and the new CAIS program, the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program.

Our budget is based on a number of assumptions, as it usually is in agriculture. Some of those assumptions are that commodity prices won't decline further, that interest rates will remain relatively stable, and that we will not have another disastrous claim year under the farm income disaster and crop insurance programs. We are hoping for good moisture conditions. Parts of the province have those now, parts of it need them badly, but it's still early for spring moisture in much of our province. We are of course assuming that we won't have any further major disease outbreaks such as foot-and-mouth.

When we're talking about disease outbreaks, I just want to mention avian flu because I know it's a concern to a number of people. I want members to know that when avian flu was detected in Asia – that's some months ago – our chief provincial veterinarian sat down with our feather industry, and they reviewed all of their biosecurity measures. Our feather industry has been very, very forward-thinking in implementing on-farm biosecurity, but it was important in view of this outbreak in Asia to talk about that.

That was before there was a breakout anywhere in the U.S. and certainly long before the unfortunate experience in the Fraser Valley and the lower mainland. I am confident, in discussions with the chairman of the Alberta Chicken Producers, that they are maintaining those biosecurity measures and that they are doing everything within their power to prevent this very highly contagious disease from entering our flocks here.

Other things that, of course, we have to watch for are changes in interest rates and changes in the Canadian dollar. The changes in the Canadian dollar have a huge impact on our export industry.

So those items can affect farm income dramatically and can impact the indemnities that we might pay out, but we are hopeful that this year is going to be a better year.

I just want to close by assuring all of our hon. members that the prosperity and sustainability of our agricultural industry remains a priority of this government. I want to thank each and every member in this Legislature for their support during the last year. It has been an incredibly difficult year for our industry, and your support on all sides of the House is appreciated.

I think we have to acknowledge that we have been treated fairly by media in this issue, and I think that is important as well. But I also thank the dedicated people that we have at the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, our own provincial veterinarians for their openness and transparency with the media and with all inquirers to make sure that people understood very clearly the issue and the science that surrounded the issue.

Our industry is growing and changing rapidly – we are not any different than any other industry – and we know that we have to change and grow with it. We believe that our business plan and our budget recognize that change and the opportunity for our industry to move forward and be stronger and better than it ever has been in the past.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat, listen to the questions, respond to some now. If they're technical or lengthy in response, in the interest of getting as much information out as possible, I will respond to some of them in writing, as I have, and I make the commitment to have those responses back to the hon. members that might ask them before our budget process is over. I have been able to respond to some questions that were raised during interim supply and will continue to do that.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I look forward to questions. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm looking forward to this afternoon's discussion on the budget estimates for the Agriculture, Food and Rural Development department.

Certainly, at this time on the record I would like to say that I agree with the hon. minister that it's been a very difficult year for this province's agricultural producers, specifically beef producers. It started off with such promise last spring, and unfortunately for all there was the detection of the single case of BSE in this province in the Peace River district.

When you look at the case in the Peace River district and how famous that cow has become and if you look perhaps before that, the most famous cow in North America would have been Mrs. O'Leary's cow in Chicago. Mr. Chairman, if you look at these two events – they've been separated by many years – exports are involved in both of them. The Chicago fire led to a lot of economic development in northern Ontario around the Lakehead because of the demand for lumber to rebuild Chicago. The contrast in this and the Peace River cow is that the Americans closed the border to our largest market for beef exports.

So there's a lesson here, and I would urge the hon. minister, perhaps in conjunction with the Minister of Economic Development – I'm surprised that we have such limited exports of beef to China. Certainly, I know that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has a fondness for ginger beef and Szechuan beef, and I have this view that we could increase our markets there. The Australians and the New Zealanders are exporting beef to China. There is an emerging middle class in that country with disposable income. I would hope that we would explore this market in detail, because if there's a lesson to be learned here, it's that we have all our eggs in one basket, Mr. Chairman, the American market, and hopefully we can diversify our export market.

I'm not predicting that this is going to happen again, a repeat of the identification of BSE in Peace River, because I think that since we've had the feed ban, since 1996, new cases are going to become less and less likely. Hopefully, we've seen the one and only case of BSE in Alberta. The cow that was found in Washington on the dairy farm that originated in Calmar was born a few months, I believe, Mr. Chairman, before the feed ban.

Now, we may have to change some of our feed regulations. We certainly have to work with other jurisdictions. As I said in this House yesterday, there's certainly a standardized form of cattle identification in this country. I think that a lot of people and, I'm told, a lot of people in the Alberta department of agriculture put a lot of work into this before it finally became standard.

I would hope that our department of agriculture this year is going to work with other departments provincially and with the federal government to convince the Americans that we need to have a North American licence plate, so to speak, or bar code for all cattle that are born on the North American continent, Mr. Chairman. This needs to be done in light of the difficulty they had in Washington around Christmas of tracing back and detecting possibly other examples of BSE-infected animals. This needs to be done, and I'm sure this hon. minister and this department are going to work very diligently with all jurisdictions.

I'm told by industry representatives that they have been working very hard to resolve this issue and have been working co-operatively. There's no doubt in my mind that this is being done in the interests of Alberta producers first and foremost, but we've got to convince others of some of our own sound practices.

Also, last year the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East was talking about having a committee. I don't want to call it a supercommittee of all jurisdictions in North America but representatives from both sides of the border. Of all industries, including the automotive industry, I would say that the beef industry is perhaps the most integrated in North America. I don't think we can stop this, nor do we want to. If the Americans want to buy our beef, they're welcome to it. If they want to buy our beef genetics, they're welcome to that too, as far as I'm concerned, because it's some of the best around.

Now, the Member for Lethbridge-East wanted a committee struck with representatives from all the provinces, the federal government, I believe, and the American jurisdictions, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the American beef council, I believe. It was an idea that, oddly enough, like many of the hon. member's other ideas, was before its time, Mr. Chairman. There has been a report that came out from the U.S. Department of Agriculture near the end of March – I believe it was March 26, to be precise – that indicated just exactly that. There should be a committee struck, and it should be dealing with science, not political rhetoric, and resolve this issue. This committee would understand, unlike some of the American members of the Senate, that this is an industry that is integrated across North America, and we have to look at solutions to our problems with that understanding, that this is a North American industry.

So hopefully the advice of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is going to be adopted and there will be significant new dialogue and we will ensure that the Alberta beef industry has strengthened credibility and the consumers, no matter whether they're in Edmonton, New York, Montreal, or Toronto, will have confidence in Alberta beef products.

Now, the hon. minister talked about the Bio-Rad test, and I can understand that this was a test that was initially used for chronic wasting disease in elk populations. I believe every animal that was slaughtered from those populations was to be tested . . .

Mrs. McClellan: Is tested.

Mr. MacDonald: Is tested. Okay. I find no fault or no harm in that.

I had the pleasure of attending a conference that was organized by the University of Lethbridge, the University of Calgary, and the University of Alberta last week in Calgary, and it was very interesting. Experts from all over the world were there to discuss and educate on this whole issue of BSE. It was a very good conference to attend. I learned a lot there, but many of these experts from around the world were expressing caution about rapid BSE tests that could possibly indicate a false positive. I would hate it and be very disappointed if the hon. minister did a lot of work with her staff and with others to promote and enhance our industry and have some false positive test ruin all the hard work that would be done.

Food safety and food safety issues. The hon. minister talked about the situation in the poultry industry in the Fraser Valley in B.C. We have our own situation with beef. Previously there were national news stories in regard to fish farming and salmon. Consumers are getting suspicious, but consumers have to realize that some of the food safety initiatives that are going on now are really second to none.

I have learned in the course of my research on BSE that more people will get sick from hamburgers that are barbecued improperly, where there is a lack of proper food handling techniques used in the barbecuing of the patties. In America 1 in 4 people, statistics state, will get sick on an annual basis because of contaminated food or water, and if we educate consumers on how to properly handle, in this case, hamburger patties, we can significantly reduce the number of people who will get sick from the consumption of barbecued hamburgers.

Now, hopefully that will come later. There's no doubt that this department is making every effort to enhance excellence in food safety. There's no doubt in my mind. That was one statistic that certainly caught the ear of this member, that 1 in 4 of us at least once in a calendar year will get sick from either contaminated water or contaminated food. It has nothing to do with poultry or the production of the poultry, the production of the beef, or in another case the production of fish. So there are a lot of stories that are sensationalized, but that's one that isn't, and it's centred around the preparation of the food that we eat.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very interesting department. There are a lot of programs in this department, and there is certainly a lot of use of these programs. This afternoon I hope to have many of my questions answered, and if they cannot be answered, I would certainly appreciate those in writing within a reasonable length of time from the department officials.

The total gross department spending is down slightly, by .3 per cent, from last year, Mr. Chairman. The department is largely the same as it was last year. There are a few real increases of merit with one notable exception, food safety, which is up 54 per cent from last year's budget, and that's probably for obvious reasons. Gross department spending is down, from $433 million to $431 million, I believe. This is interesting given last year's experience with agriculture. Does this reflect a restructuring of the department, especially the major restructuring of farm safety net programs?

The standing policy committee spending is up by 4 per cent from last year, Mr. Chairman. Why? Where is the money going? The chairs of the committees got, on average, $23,000 in the fiscal year ended March 31, 2003. What sort of hours have they put in in order to get almost as much salary as, say, a researcher in our caucus simply for serving on this committee?

Also, can the minister clarify some of the activities of the policy secretariat? Their gross budget has gone down almost 10 per cent from last year; however, the policy secretariat is forecast to spend 27 per cent over the line item from the 2003 budget. So why is that? What activities have they been engaging in?

Under Economics and Competitiveness, item 2.2, administrative support is up approximately 10 per cent, or $36,000. What is very interesting is that the forecast spending on administrative support for the fiscal year just ended is 1,460 per cent higher, or $5.1 million, in the line item from last year, which I believe was $374,000. What's up with this? Why is it so much greater than budgeted?

Now, the greatest increase in expenditures in the department is under the food safety reference, 4.3. The total increase for this reference is up 52 per cent, or $6.9 million. Obviously, this increase is due to the BSE situation in Alberta.

Hopefully, Mr. Chairman, we're going to have more time later on to talk specifically about this BSE situation, but there are some questions I want to get on the record in the meantime.

More directly, the agrifood systems element, 4.3.2, is up 43 per cent, or $1.6 million, and agrifood laboratories, 69 per cent, or $2.3 million. This is all to deal with the upgrades to the Provincial Lab in light of BSE I assume, or is this a separate lab?

Mrs. McClellan: Same lab.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay. Same lab.

Now, the chief provincial veterinarian's office has had an increase of 230 per cent, or $344,000, for this budget when compared with last year's budget. What are we going to get for this money? Is there going to be an increase in their recruitment of, let's say, senior 4-H club members that have a very good report card coming home in their satchels, a good science report card? I would really think we need in this province to attract, train, and retain a lot of young Albertans not only in the veterinary professions but in the pathology end of that profession. Is this what's going on here?

Now, element 4.3.3 under Equipment/Inventory Purchases deals with those purchases for the agrifood lab. The amount budgeted is exactly equal to last year's purchases, $380,000. It is interesting that the comparable forecast of money spent for the department in this line item for the 2003-04 fiscal year was 320 per cent higher, or $835,000. Can the hon. minister detail these expenses? Also, can the minister please tell us why the budgeted amount under these line items remains the same as before the single case of BSE was detected in Alberta?

In regard to this lab precisely what is going to be the final test cost for one rapid test of BSE, whether it's Bio-Rad or some other one, Prionics? What exactly is the department going to pay for that in this lab? There was a report in an editorial in a local paper where it was between $25 and $30. Now, the total cost of this surely has to be $80 or $90 or maybe . . .

The Acting Chair: Hon. member, your time has lapsed.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to just do kind of a quick answer to some of the questions because it may help for further questions.

The lab upgrading is in Infrastructure's budget, not mine. Infrastructure builds and does all restoration or re-formation of buildings.

The increase in my budget is in operating, and I did mention in my opening comments that part of the increase of I think it was $17.3 million to my overall budget is for the operation of that lab. So that's staffing, test kits, and so on. The kit cost does run somewhere around $30 a kit. Doing a thousand tests a week, if you were doing that many, your cost would probably be about $100, somewhere between $100 and $150 depending on that range, and of course it depends on volume as to the efficiency of the use of staff and so on that are allocated to that. If you can double that, you bring it down. If you double the number of tests, you can bring the cost down because of the efficiency in volume.

Turnaround time on a rapid test is some three to four hours. While we're on testing, I want to go back to false positives. That would only be an issue if you didn't have a confirmation test. I might say that we used the rapid test in testing some 2,700 animals that we had to test and eliminate from our herds from that incident in May of last year. We did not, as far as I know – and I think I'm absolutely correct on this – find one false positive, but if you had a false positive, it would be tested using the gold test. That is the more expensive test. That is the test that takes up to three, four days to conclude. It's an immunohistology test. I'm trying to learn the jargon – that's not jargon; that's scientific – the names of some of these.

So false positives are not the issue. If that's all you were using, yeah, it would be an issue. But if you had one, you would immediately go to the gold test and substantiate it. That would be the practice. So that kind of covers testing.

One of the reasons that you don't see as high an increase in food safety as you might expect given the one case of BSE is that we've been very proactive in food safety, and we've increased our budget over the years prior to BSE being found. Of course, it was a distinct advantage to Alberta that we were forward-looking. We did add dollars. I don't remember the exact amount. I do know that I think two years ago it was a million something. The year before that was more money. We've been increasing in food safety over the years, so we don't have to swallow a big gulp when an incident does happen.

The 4-H program was alluded to, and I'm going to give you the detail on that line item, but I can't let that go without saying that we have the best 4-H program in Canada. I will boast of that, but those aren't just our words. That is recognized across Canada. We're the envy of Canada.

I had an opportunity last evening to visit with a group of 4-H leaders. When I concluded a meeting I had, they happened to be meeting in the basement of the same hall, and we had an opportunity to talk about the program. There were some of their young people there, and I can tell you that they are extraordinarily pleased with and proud of the program that we provide in this province. There is no question that it does lend itself to outstanding young people in the industry. For the future we tend to think of the industry as going to the farm, but these are the leaders that go into food safety, food science, into veterinary services.

The number of veterinarians and pathologists is of concern to us. We're working with the Minister of Learning on that. We buy our spaces at the Western College. There's no question that we're not graduating nearly enough food animal veterinarians. It's difficult to control that, because while a student may go in with that intention, they have the right to switch their specialty as they go through, and they have the right to practise in whatever area they want to when they graduate. We do our utmost. As you know, we fund a chair in large animal practice at Western College. So we're doing what we can to improve that, and I must say that we're recruiting world-wide for pathologists. The shortage is not just here. It is a world-wide shortage, and that's of concern.

I want to just mention a couple of other things briefly. Mrs. O'Leary's cow. I didn't think you were at any of the things that I was talking at. I used that as an example of how one cow can disrupt the whole world as we know it. The difference in export ban in this case is that that is what happened. It's what we did when an incident was found somewhere. Immediately your borders are closed.

What's different in our experience – and it is unique to this experience – is that our borders opened with the U.S. within seven months, not seven years, which would be the norm, that as of Monday of this week a tremendous announcement, I believe, where all edible cuts of beef will cross the border. Prior to that, we had been limited to boneless cuts. Now bone-in cuts can go, like T-bone steaks, rib roasts, ground beef, and that's huge. Of course, we're all waiting with anticipation for the rule to come out, and it certainly was encouraging to us when they added product from over-30-month cattle to that rule. I'm hopeful that that rule will be implemented.

The difficulty we have, even with the expanded cuts taking place, is that we are at packer capacity. We had an industry meeting last Friday. We had all of our major packers there, the three of them, talked to them. They're going six days a week, full shift, flat out. We're slaughtering and shipping more product than we were prior to BSE, but we simply don't have the capacity in Canada anywhere. Remember: we slaughter 70 some per cent in Alberta.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mrs. McClellan: Seventy some per cent of the slaughter occurs here, and that is of concern to us, because even with this additional product going, the capacity is an issue. There's a lot of activity happening in that area, but we have to be realistic. To build a plant, if you started today, you're looking at eight, 10, 12 months for it to be operational, and it's also a huge investment. That's why it's important to us to have live cattle be able to move. Personally, I think that every agricultural product that goes out of this province, whether it's in grains, animals, vegetables, or fruits, should go in a box. It should be value added. Frankly, we don't have the capacity right now.

The other reason that you need this opportunity is that you need arbitrage in the market, you need price determination, and you don't have that in a closed market. It is encouraging to us to see that American buyers are buying here now and have been for the last several weeks. The Premier has championed this idea. It's taking different forms. The Prime Minister has carried this forward. We're pleased about that. Our officials, provincially and federally, are working on this. We had a discussion about it at our federal/provincial/territorial meetings a week ago, 10 days ago. We did discuss this with the undersecretary of agriculture in the U.S. as to their interest. They are also interested, whether we would do it together or we would do it singly. But we recognize that.

The other thing that is of great interest to us on the North American side is harmonization. We'll always be competitors, but if we can harmonize as much as possible some of our regulatory areas and scientific areas, it will be of benefit to all of us. We have to remember that one of the players in the North American market has perhaps not got all of the institutional ability yet, the scientific ability yet. That is a challenge, but those are challenges we are definitely committed, as Canada, to work on with the U.S. and Mexico.

ID system. It would be wonderful if it would be harmonized. But I think we are individuals; we will choose our own. I am most proud of the fact that the animal that we had in Alberta was traced back absolutely as to the origin of that animal and in very short order. The animal that was found in the U.S. was traced back into Canada very quickly. Their trace out beyond that was, frankly, less than good, and that speaks to the fact that we do have a national identification system and the U.S. does not. They recognize that they must, and they will work towards one. They will have what suits their industry the best. We will have what suits our industry the best. I can only say: thank goodness that our cattlemen did proceed with what was a very, very contentious issue on a national identification system. I am so pleased that they persevered and did it.

You talked about China. We are in China. It would be helpful if you had an opportunity to talk to some of our producers that are over there. They've been there for some time. They have been working on embryo and semen mainly because, obviously, transportation and utilization in that area is quite often easier, and it's that that they want.

We had a bit of a halt, obviously, with BSE, but those companies are still in China. We see that as a growth market. We are also in Russia. When I say "we," I don't talk about government. Our producers are the best salesmen. We're there to help them, to open doors if it's necessary, to work on issues around health protocols, regulatory things, but our producers go out there. We are well recognized in the world as leaders. Russia is another potentially important market.

Just as a reminder, today the U.S. is our largest market. That won't change. There are too many reasons for it to stay that way. We have an integrated market now. We have a natural advantage in transportation proximity, similar cultures, same languages, and so on. So it's going to be our largest market.

Japan was our second largest market; today Mexico is. You should look at the graphs that show the growth in the Mexican market. The Canada Beef Export Federation put an office into Monterrey. I'm trying to think of how long ago that was, maybe five years ago. It's somewhere in that range. The growth in that Mexican market was just absolutely phenomenal, and there's huge opportunity for future growth there. Then Japan is third, and on it goes.

One of the important things for those external markets is that they take product that we don't necessarily use as much here or in the U.S. They buy offal cuts that we are not as prone to use here, and they buy it at a very, very good price, because that's a premium item in other cultures. So that's important to us. But our industry recognizes that they have to diversify and expand their markets.

The Minister of Economic Development may want to comment because they're the salesmen in the world for us, and there have been additional dollars provided to Economic Development to assist our industry in enlarging our market base, and I can tell you that those dollars are working well.

The other thing that we increased that I should just mention quickly is product development, and those were dollars that were put in place to develop utilization of product for over-30-month animals, because that's going to be with us for a long time. We have put the Leduc processing centre at our industry's disposal. We have purchased some additional equipment there. There are some excellent initiatives.

I think that some dozen or 14, at least that I have seen, Alberta companies hold great promise in that they are going to develop more home for that over-30-month product, value-added right here, because that's going to continue to be a problem.

I'll point out that we're probably killing almost as many cows now as we were pre-BSE. Our difficulty is that we cannot and are not killing the 70 per cent of those animals that went into the U.S. mainly for slaughter, processing, and then sale. We don't have the capacity to do it. If you'd just look in western Canada, there's one major cow plant – it's at Moose Jaw – a small plant by plant standards. Tyson kills cows on a limited basis in Brooks, and there are some smaller plants in eastern Canada, Quebec and Ontario.

But if you were killing cows, B.C. cows would come to either, as we know it, Lakeside/Tyson or go to Moose Jaw. Some of the cows that our producers shipped went to Quebec.

Not a very good deal on the value of a cow today, so we need to do more there. We have probably five, six, or seven groups that are very serious about increasing our capacity in Alberta. We provided some dollars to help them develop business plans and expertise around this – you want to make a good business decision – and Ag Financial Services has a loan program that is available to people who are looking at developing plants.

So there's a lot of activity going on. I think you could spend three days talking about what is happening in this area, and you'd miss something. I just want to assure you that market development has been occurring, but the U.S. will continue to be our biggest market for all of those reasons that I laid out.

I would, though, certainly hope that at some point in the afternoon, the Minister of Economic Development might share with you some of that information, or if he can't do it here, when his estimates come up, I think it would be an excellent opportunity to get that information.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have one further question at this time before I cede the floor to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. If the hon. minister could clarify – she spoke about the trips to China, and they were there selling embryos. Now, I'm of the impression that when the BSE ban occurred, the border was closed, it was for live cattle and also embryos. I'm told now that the export of embryos to a large number of countries has resumed.

I have not read about this in the media. Maybe I overlooked it; maybe I missed it. Who's to say? But I think it's a good-news story that this trade has resumed, and it has not to my knowledge been reported. If it was reported, I missed it. It's the stepping stone we need to open the border to live cattle. Could the hon. minister confirm that, please?

Mrs. McClellan: Semen and embryo do travel. The disruption that I talked about was the total disruption in all trade initially, right after BSE. You didn't probably read about it in the newspaper too much because, you know, usually if it's kind of good news, we don't get an awful lot of coverage on it. I wouldn't get it because I'm not probably as prone to reading the newspapers for information as you are. I find other sources might be just as good to get it.

Embryo and semen are moving and continue to move. So the disruption is just overall in trade in beef. We're not only interested – and when I say we, I'm not talking government. I'm talking the agricultural industry, in this case the beef industry. We are interested in expanding those markets to meat products.

I said, when the border opened in Macao, how important that was, and some people thought: really, Macao is a little peninsula. I said island, and somebody corrected me very quickly. It's a peninsula, a very small country, but it has proved since how important the opening of Macao was, and product is moving to Macao. It's a step in opening all of Asia.

There have been so many things that have happened over the last months that may not seem significant to others but to the industry are huge. This is a marketplace that operates a lot on signals, on information. It's a commodity, and prices can be affected up or down. We have tried to be very careful as government members in what we say because we don't want to impact the market in the wrong way, and we know that that can happen. A statement by the Premier, a minister, or somebody in government can have an impact on the market in a negative way as well as a positive way. What we want is a true market situation, not one that is based on something that might or might not happen.

The actual announcement of the U.S. opening its border to all edible cuts of beef occurred Monday morning, but actually it was out late last week. If you followed the markets, you would have seen the markets on Friday and the TEAM sales went up 8 to 10 cents. Now, for the people that sold that week, the guys that sold before the rumors started would be a little sorry and the guys that sold after it were of course elated with the better price. What was important to us was that Monday opened with that same 8 to 10 cent increase. So this is a marketplace that's very fluid and reacts.

I'll leave it at that, and we'll have some more questions, and on we go.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to start by joining the minister in saying thank you to all of the individuals in the Agricultural, Food and Rural Development staff. They've been great to work with over the last 11 years, and it's been a real opportunity, I think, for me to learn a lot about their approach and the way they deal with policy. I commend them on their willingness to be open and to work for the industry, which is what we're all in it for.

I guess that I just want to conclude with a couple of comments and questions about some of the things that went on. I'd kind of break it down into maybe three different areas. Again, we all have to start with the crisis that faced our industry this year in the BSE area. Minister, you were talking about the idea that the use of the quick test might lead to false positives and that automatically transfers the test on to the gold standard test.

A question came through my mind as you were making that comment. This is going to mean a four-day confinement, in effect, for that product both in terms of the carcass, in terms of the head, all of that. What is being put in place there to deal with that, and how will that be handled in the context of who's going to take the impact? Will it mean that all of the meat at a plant is all of a sudden on hold, or can the carcass be isolated? Are these kinds of plans in place within the industry to deal with that contingency?

As much as we never want it to happen, I think we're learning that we have to be prepared. The potential, then, for the perceived contamination of other meats from the carcass that has that potential positive sets a whole mood for the industry, especially the consumers. I guess, you know, in terms of the industry and the public, maybe the best thing would be that that all happens quietly, but that doesn't necessarily always occur. So we have to make sure that there is a public awareness of this whole process so that the confidence stays there: okay; this may have happened, but precaution has been taken. If you could outline whether or not those discussions are even going on, I think that at this point that's all we can ask for because this whole process is both reasonably new and dynamic, so we have to be prepared for adjustments to go on continuously in this process.

One more comment on the BSE, then I'll move on to some others. You spoke about the 99.96 per cent risk. I guess the question comes up – and I've dealt with this when I was teaching at the university before – in terms of what constitutes appropriate levels of acceptance for risk, and we hear constantly the people say: well, we've got to test more. I've always answered back: you know, well, we've got this to 99 per cent. And I thank you for the extra few decimals that I can now use. You talk about improving beyond that just by testing a few more. The only thing we really can do is test everything.

What we need is some kind of an information process for the average Albertan, the average Canadian so that they understand that we are testing at a level which in effect is more than sufficient, is standard sufficient. To do anything other than that is just . . .

Mrs. McClellan: It's a waste.

Dr. Nicol: Yes. It's extra cost, extra effort which we don't as a public get a benefit out of. This is the thing we have to really look at. How do we get that kind of standard for Canadians and, I guess, for the international market?

A lot of people have come to me and said: what do you make out of this instance that occurs in the press all the time about this company in the United States that wanted to undertake the tests, prove that the animals were clean, and then enter the international market, in effect create a market niche or a market-differentiated product? Then they're saying: well, if they can do that for an international market, why can't they do it for us? I think we've got to start under the food safety initiatives and start talking about risk in all aspects of it, not necessarily just BSE, but we've got to get the consumer to understand that no matter what you do, there's a risk.

I went down to the grocery store when I came into town and bought my week's supply of groceries. You buy a can of something, and everybody says: well, canned food is ultimately safe. No. There is a risk factor to that. It's not a hundred per cent. If the consumer can understand this, they'll accept the fact that our beef is probably safer than that can I bought.

This is the thing that we have to look at in terms of: how do we make that transition now? It's so easy to have a bad-news story get out and create questions in the minds of Albertans and Canadians and our international trade partners about what the real risk they're facing is. So some kind of an education program in the future, Madam Minister, when we get to dealing with the new food safety initiatives that are coming out of the realignment of the ministry is something that we really need to look at.

I just want to conclude my comments now on BSE by saying that every Albertan and every Canadian, all of us, have to thank the scientists for the great job they did. They created an international standard on how to handle this that has been recognized and been commented on in Europe, in the United States, all around the world. That just shows the dedication that we have in terms of both our provincial vets and the CFIA, in terms of their actions. So I want to join you in putting it on the record that from the science perspective we really came through on this and showed that consumers can have confidence because of the work that our pathologists and our vets are doing.

I just want to touch briefly on a couple of other areas that we need to deal with. You talked a little bit about the incentive for the industry to grow and the way we wanted to do that. I guess that this is a question that comes to my mind every time we talk about, you know, the new directions of our ag initiatives. The ag summit process went on at length a few years ago. I guess there was a real initiative there to talk about what we need to do in each of these areas. There are a lot of initiatives, you know, in the food safety area. There are a lot of initiatives coming out now in environment conservation, all of these from that ag summit process. What's missing is how the ag summit talked about the vision for where we want to be.

I was looking back at, you know, the mission statement of the ministry, where you start off: "To enable the growth of a globally competitive, sustainable agriculture and food industry through essential policy, legislation, information and services." You know, that says a lot, but it doesn't tell Albertans what you see as the role that agriculture needs to play both in terms of public policy and the area that we're going into in terms of transition.

You know, if you read that and say, "Okay; this is great," being a free-market economist, I say, "This is going to mean that the market's going to work and we're going to let the market drive forces." Then you find somebody that says, "Well, if you let the market drive forces, we're going to end up, in effect, with great big farms in Alberta and nothing else." That's not what we want for rural Alberta.

So information needs to be presented to Albertans that talks about, you know, how we see this transition and how we see an end description, if you want to call it that, of the rural community. I got into a real debate last week in Lethbridge when somebody asked a question of me about what they called "factory farms." My response was that in many cases – and I think we've seen it in some crisis situations in Alberta – the big producers have the wherewithal to actually adjust and respond to a crisis more so than the small mixed operation. I made that comment, and it wasn't accepted very well by the individuals who asked the question in the sense that they said, "Well, if you've got it spread out a little bit more, then you don't have the concentration; you don't have the impact."

Well, you know, this is the kind of thing that if we're going to have the magnitude of an industry that we want in Alberta, we're going to have the same number of animals, whether there are 10 on each farm or whether there are 10,000 on each farm or whether there are 100,000 on each farm. There's going to be the same number of animals if we have that economic incentive and opportunity to produce that product in our rural communities.

So I guess that what we need to do is help inform Albertans about this area of what we see as the driving forces behind agriculture. If it's going to be the market in that way, then Albertans need to be made aware of the fact that the big farms are going to become more and more the standard rather than something to say: why do we have these? You know, that kind of vision needs to be put together.

Just a final comment on that. I was making a presentation to a bunch of individuals involved in the federal arena as well. I suggested that as a policy economist the ag policy framework provided me with all kinds of opportunities to deal with really constructive policy-making, but until you knew what you wanted in terms of agriculture, you didn't know what policy to put in place because you didn't know what the end was.

I think that's missing out of the ag policy framework as well, you know, in terms of an overview statement about what we see as the future of agriculture. If we're really looking at the commercial production of a safe food product for the consumer, then we have to separate production from this concept of what is a rural community. The rural community has got to be based on a diversified economy, not an agriculture/farm vision. I think that kind of a statement is good because at least if we have that kind of an answer, then when I get up in these meetings, it would be easier to give an answer as to what we wanted our end to be.

I've got a couple more issues that I wanted to raise, but I think I'm just about at the end of my time. I'll sit down now and let you get to those, and then when my turn comes up again, I'll hit the other ones. Just to give you a little forewarning, it deals with crop insurance and some of the other CAIS programs.

Mrs. McClellan: I'll try and be brief and, as I said, will respond in detail in writing when it's appropriate.

On testing. We have the capacity to deal with holding animals now. Primarily the animals that are tested are tested from provincial abattoirs, obviously, because the target group is over 30 months. So they have that capacity now. That's one of the issues that would be around testing every animal, but there are more issues than that. If we asked, even with the rapid test, one of our major plants how many animals they could kill if they were required to test every animal, they thought about 1,000 a week. We kill up to 6,000 a day, so obviously we wouldn't even satisfy our domestic market. If we were asked to do that, they would probably have to increase their freezer space by 10 times and even more.

A lot of people don't realize – you know, you have to stop and think this through – that when you test an animal for BSE, you have to kill the animal. There is no live test. You have to remove that small part of the brain, and then you have to put it through the process. But you also have to remove all of the SRMs from the animals when they are tested. So you today have to remove all specified risk materials from that animal. If you're going to test every animal, you have to contain all of those separately. So you would have to take all of the SRMs and bag them or whatever you'd do for that individual animal and store them until you had your results. Then you would have to take your sides, because this animal is now going to be sorted, and they would have to be tagged and bagged and separated. Every part of that animal has to be identified and held until your test results come back.

There's no point in saying: okay, we'll test every animal. You couldn't do it. We don't have the capacity. Even with our additional labs we couldn't do it.

The more important point in all this is that you shouldn't do it. There is no scientific basis to do it. The USDA in their decision on Cold Creek, as I understand it, is based strictly on that they are going to make a determination on the level of testing based on science. The danger is that once you stray from using science and the best information you have for making decisions, you get onto very dangerous ground. If you do it for one thing, then why wouldn't you do it for another? You shouldn't go there. Otherwise, why would you use the science? You know, what we're trying to do on feed policy, on testing policy is use the best science available.

The other thing is the cost. You are going to put in a cost that has no benefit to human health. I don't know how I could recommend to the people in this Legislature that we spend another $90 million or $100 million in our province, somewhere in that range, to do testing that has no scientific basis and is not going to improve or impact human health when we have people who need cancer treatments, when we know that if we vaccinated every baby for influenza, we would save lives. People are actually dying from that; children are dying. People died from SARS. The money would be better spent there.

I don't know how you would ever advocate or should advocate doing something that doesn't have a benefit on either herd surveillance or, more importantly, on the impact on human health. As you said, there is some level of risk in everything you do. I think a risk at 99.96 per cent is one that our public accepts. It's an interesting area how this thing with BSE went so wildly out of control. In Europe or the U.K. perhaps you can understand it: 183,000 positives that they know of prior to putting in the precautions that science said you needed to do. We have to step back and say that the U.S. and Canada both put in feed bans in 1997 that ban ruminant-to-ruminant feeding. Science says that that is the way this disease would be transmitted, so you've minimize that. The removal of specified risk materials, science tells us, takes us on the human health side to 99.96 per cent.

4:10

Now Japan. Interesting because it's always brought up that Japan is still finding younger cases. Of course they are. They did not implement a feed ban in 1997 when much of the world did. In fact, we did here in the U.S. and in Canada. Their feed ban went in in 2001, so they have some time before they can feel some assurance that, in fact, there isn't a transmission or cross-contamination problem there. So it's a different issue.

It's amazing that a disease that is so isolated, that so few human beings have contracted over 10 years in the whole world, has caused such a furor. I feel safer eating beef in this country than almost anything because I know the security and safety measures we have and I know that food safety is a priority for this country.

I know that three years ago when we began the ag policy framework discussions in Whitehorse, this was a key element of the ag policy framework for Canada. The ministers of the day, federal, provincial, and territorial, made a commitment to develop a policy that made food safety a priority, that branded Canada as the best supplier of safe food products. All of our work to this date has gone to that, whether it's in the food safety area, research, areas like that. So I am confident that we're on the right track.

Food recall is an interesting thing. Some people see it as a negative; I don't. You know, I feel much better knowing that they can detect problems in food and trace it back and take it off the shelves. The attitude that something else is better, like "if I don't know about it, it's okay," I don't feel real good about. So I'm pretty happy that we have these systems, whether it's in fish, poultry, beef, or vegetables, that we actually can trace it and identify it and remove the risk from our population.

I appreciate very much your comments about our scientists, whether they're with CFIA or our provincial vets. You're absolutely right; they are top-notch. They have delivered service far beyond any value of their salaries that we could have given them in this instance. They've been amazing.

The ag summit process, the vision. I think the key words in that are: enable growth and policies. We have to be careful as government that we understand that it's not us that will grow this industry, but it's the industry that will grow, confident that we will put in policies that enable it to grow in a safe and viable manner down the road. Agrivantage teams have done a lot of work in this area. I met with the Agriculture and Food Council yesterday and, in fact, coincidentally, talked much about the same thing. I think you're right. We could do a better job of enunciating some of this, but you always wonder who really is going to listen because it's too good of news.

I am so tired of the words "factory farms." I know you hate it as well. What you're really talking about are corporate farms. I want to remind everybody that in the last information that I saw, less than 3 per cent of the large farms in our province are held outside of families. So your so-called factory farm, or corporate farm, could have five family members that if they were individually not incorporated that way would be operating as a unit. What they've done is come together for management practices, for efficiency, and sometimes – let's be honest – for tax purposes. It just makes more sense.

So before we start talking about some corporate takeover of our farms, remember that the corporations are families. I have families around me where five family members are making their living off that corporate farm. It might be called a factory farm by some people, but I don't think they feel good about being labelled that way because they are contributors.

It's going to be an increasing difficulty for us because in many of the areas we do not find commodity prices rising at the primary level commensurate with the cost of providing them, and the grain sector is a very good example of that right now. If you look at the value of a bushel of wheat today compared to the value of a bushel of wheat 30 or 40 years ago, it hasn't changed a heck of a lot, but I can tell you the cost of producing that has. The only thing that has really worked for our industry is good research, good husbandry, good management practices, and their ability to increasingly become more efficient and more productive. But you do wonder where that line ends, and I think we're very close to it. I think it's going to be very difficult to produce product if people don't recognize a higher value at the primary level.

People wondered why the price of beef didn't go down more than it did. It did go down 20 per cent in Alberta. That's documented. But you know what? The cost of buying your meat at the counter is quite different than it was when it was produced at the primary level or, indeed, slaughtered at the packer level. None of the workers who work in any of those areas took a 50 per cent reduction in their wages. We continued to pay the people, whether they were the processors in the plants – and obviously we should. So all of those costs remained constant. The hit came down at the producing level. No question. That is one good reason why you will not see a huge difference in the cost of that product. It had to be retained, and the people that retail it had to be paid and should be paid. I mean, they work for their money.

So these are issues that I think are going to be of huge discussion by our industry, and I think the more sessions and conferences we have where people in this industry come together and debate and discuss these issues the better. But the marketplace has to be the final determinant, in my view. I think the hon. member that asked the question is totally a believer in that as well. The marketplace must be the determinant. Our responsibility in government is to ensure that we have policies in place that allow the market to work yet protect the areas that need to be protected, like air, soil, and water quality.

Of course, we've done a great deal of work to do that with the introduction of the Ag Operation Practices Amendment Act and the work that the NRCB is doing through the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development to make sure that we maintain that protection.

The ag policy framework does provide a vehicle. An interesting comment. I will have that discussion with my colleagues on whether the vision is well enough defined. The vehicle is there. I guess you should know where it's going. I'll have a look at that.

Part of the answer here is our rural development strategy. Again I want to commend the members for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and Wainwright for the work they did in going out and listening to rural communities and then writing a document that reflected what they said, not what the government said but what they said. I believe that there is a huge amount of interest in our rural communities in being a part of this.

We are now in the process of gathering information from other ministries. Obviously for rural development you have a large impact by Health – you've got to have Health – and, of course, Learning, Infrastructure, Transportation. There are many ministries that need to be involved in this. We're proud to be tagged in with our Minister of Economic Development to work on these strategies together. Our hope is to have that work done . . .

Mr. Smith: Don't forget the oil industry. Hands across rural Alberta.

Mrs. McClellan: Yeah. We work with them very closely because, frankly, in some areas that's what's keeping it going. It is the energy industry.

That strategy should be redefined. Go back to the communities and say: "Now, this is what we've put together. Is this really what you believe will move us forward in our vision for our rural communities and growth, and if not, where is it wrong?" It's my hope to have that information all completed and back to us so we can incorporate it into our new business plan.

Those are just a few comments. There are some more specifics that I will provide to the hon. member at a later date.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I welcome this opportunity to ask some questions of the minister related to her department's budget for this fiscal year, 2004-2005, but before that I have some general observations to make.

I was listening to the very last part of the minister's response to the questions just before she sat down. She made two comments which I thought needed some clarification. The minister said about the corporate and factory farms, the one area on which she commented, that the farms in Alberta owned by corporations, or corporate farms, constitute only about 3 per cent of the total ownerships, I suppose, related to farms. That certainly is one way of looking at it. I think that perhaps a more critical question is: what percentage of our total volume of production is related to corporate or factory farms, and what percentage is, you know, associated with the production of family farms? So that would be additional information that would be useful.

The second comment that caught my attention as she was concluding her comments had to do with the controversy over the BSE crisis problem and who got the hit and who benefited or didn't. She particularly, I think, focused on drawing the attention of the House to the fact that the packers' costs related to labour didn't disappear, that they remained in place, and I agree. Yet we do know that while the producers lost revenues – many of them, of course, complained bitterly about not receiving the benefits from the government aid plans – the packers' profits certainly quadrupled during the same period. So that's a question that needs to be addressed, I think, seriously.

Although labour costs didn't decline – and I presume they stayed more or less the same as they were around May of last year; they may have increased only incrementally, you know, by 3, 4, or 5 per cent over that period since – then why is it that the profits of the packers quadrupled? I was talking to our research people this morning, and I was informed that although the packer profits did go down a bit over the last few months, they've come back up to the level of having a fourfold increase in them. There is something there that needs to be addressed.

As a matter of fact, the House of Commons committee on agriculture I think is questioning packer representatives today, those who agreed to be available, on that precise question. I hope that the minister will pursue this matter seriously to get to the bottom of it. Consumers didn't benefit, although the minister claims that the consumer prices did drop by 20 per cent, but they dropped by 20 per cent only with respect to certain cuts and in particular, I think, to ground beef. So when we brought the figures back to the House, we did bring, in fact, the department's own figures from the department's own web site. [interjection] I want to set the record straight on that one. Not all cuts.

As a matter of fact, there was a letter in the Journal yesterday where a consumer complained that a T-bone steak that he bought in, say, May of last year, in the pre-BSE period, cost him $5.90 and a T-bone steak that he bought, the same size, this month or last month cost him $6.90. He was asking: why is it that the prices of these cuts have not been affected by this crisis while the incomes of the producers have been hit very, very hard?

So those are some of the questions that I just wanted to draw the minister's attention to related to her remarks which were, I guess, in response to the Member for Lethbridge-East's questions.

I have some general questions here, Mr. Chairman, to the minister with respect to some of the performance measures. I'm looking at the business plans, and there was interest in strengthened rural communities as one of the key programs that the minister's department has. Looking at the performance measures under Strengthened Rural Communities, I notice that the target for this year for investment in rural businesses is in fact at least 10 per cent lower than the actual for 2003-2004. Will the minister please comment on this particular reduction in the target from the actual by 10 per cent in terms of investment in rural businesses?

The other related questions to that are: what are the types of rural businesses that are covered under this reference with respect to this performance measure? What kind of businesses are you talking about? Are they agriculturally related businesses, or are they businesses related to retail? What forms does this investment in rural business take? I'm just curious. Is it in the form of loans, grants, development of some technologies, business strategies? Where is this investment made? What form does it take?

Another target there under the same performance measures is the per cent change in total employment in rural Alberta. You know, that certainly is a concern. I know that the minister is concerned about it. Rural communities are certainly concerned about depopulation, about their ability to maintain and keep the young people in rural communities and, of course, jobs there. The last actual I think I gathered is for the year 2003-2004 and shows a .4 percentage drop in employment in the rural areas. The projected target for 2004-2005 is zero, so it will stay at the reduced level. There'll be no change in it.

What measures in the budget are in place in order to address this potential threat to the health of rural communities and their vibrancy? If employment goes down, clearly the rural communities' sustainability comes into question. So I'm asking the minister to perhaps shed some light in terms of budget allocations that will address the question of this potential drop in rural employment.

There is another quandary that I have. It's primarily because of my ignorance, I think. In the business plan under Continued Excellence in Food Safety and under Performance Measures, on page 114 at the top of the page, there's something called a "meat (Hazard Analysis Critical Control Point (HACCP-based))" measure. What is it, Madam Minister? What exactly is meant by it, and why is it at level 0 at the last actual if it's an important sort of measure? What does it measure exactly, and why is it at that level, you know, as we speak? And how is it going to go up by 6 per cent in the year under question? So these are questions that came to my mind as I was going through it.

Now, looking at the core businesses, goals, strategies, and measures, I was looking at the strategies. "Encourage market access, market responsiveness, diversity and industry competitiveness." Under diversity there was a news item in the paper just last week, I guess, with respect to some producer group, beef producers in northern Alberta who want to set up their own packing plant where they would test a hundred per cent of the animals that are slaughtered there.

Two questions on that. To me it's good news that there are efforts underway to reduce the concentration of packer capacity, you know, by these co-operative efforts made by producers themselves. What is the government position with respect to these initiatives, and is there a way in which to assist, in fact, the development of such diversity with respect to packer capacity in the province? And, secondly, what's the government's view with respect to this intention of this group as expressed publicly to move toward a hundred per cent testing of the animals?

I know that the government has taken a very clear position driven by science, but here's a group of producers who want to move to a hundred per cent. What's the view of the minister with respect to that sort of initiative that this group of producers in northern Alberta proposes to take, and will they be supported by this minister and by this department if they get, I think, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency's okay to go ahead with it?

So those are some general questions. Now, let me look at my notes here. Oh, yes. With respect to diversification, the second part, the minister mentioned, Mr. Chairman, about Japan in the pre BSE crisis period being our second largest market. I've forgotten the figures. What percentage of our exports would that have constituted? Japan, that is.

Mrs. McClellan: Four per cent.

Dr. Pannu: Four per cent. I see. Still very small. So our primary dependence is on the U.S. market, I guess.

Mrs. McClellan: Mexico too.

Now, what will it take to recapture that 4 per cent? I presume that every percentage is important from the point of getting a diversified base for our exports. What measures would be needed in order to recapture that market, and is it worth the cost that those measures will entail in order to capture that market?

I do want to make the general point, though, that the diversification into export markets is critical. I think that's one of the lessons that we've learned from the BSE crisis. Every effort should be made without compromising our ability to take advantage of the market next door, which is huge in itself and is easiest in terms of access, in terms of, you know, historical flows of our goods in that direction, cultural sort of continuity, geographical contiguity. The minister mentioned all those factors. But I think the fact that our export markets are so dangerously heavily concentrated in the U.S. is something that is cause for concern, and I think it's something that needs to be addressed.

I want to therefore encourage the minister to share with the House any plans that she has to seek dilution of that concentration of export markets across the border, and if we can do that, I think it's something that's very much in the interest of the industry, the interest of producers, and the interest of the economy in Alberta.

One or two other questions here. What general lessons are there to be learned from this BSE crisis in terms of our testing capacity, testing intensity? I think we've already taken some steps, and I'm pleased to note that we are testing more now than we did before.

I remember the minister and I chatting on the day that she heard the news. She called me at home, and we chatted about how serious this crisis was going to be, and I think events have proven the seriousness of that crisis. One of the, I think, weaknesses of that crisis really was that we had rolled back our capacity to test, our lab capacity. So the question is: have we expanded our lab capacity? Is it the same as it was before, or is it sufficient now to deal with any new emergency that might arise?

The third question related to lessons from BSE. Is the program designed for helping producers directly? I think the fact that the whole controversy with respect to who really benefited from the very well-intentioned efforts perhaps on all sides to help the producers who were faced with this crisis because the animals weren't moving fast enough and the prices had plummeted – many families were facing bankruptcy or a complete economic disaster. What program design weaknesses have we discovered which explain the problems that these families faced in spite of the fact that a huge amount of public dollars were spent on that program? Are we now ready and willing and prepared to sort of plug those loopholes if we have learned about them and know what they are? That's another question, and as I say, it's a serious one.

It is the case that the producers didn't benefit very much from the initial sort of phase of the aid package, and certainly consumers didn't benefit very much. So the question is: how can the program design be improved to make sure that this does not happen in case the unfortunate case of the BSE crisis arises again.

Another question that I have for the minister – and this came from my reading of the general statement on strategies. One of the things in the strategies outlined in the core businesses of the department is enhancing “the development of new products and processes to assist industry in capturing additional value added market opportunities.”

Now, the first part of the statement: enhancing the development of new products. I haven't seen any reference in the plans here with respect to organic agriculture. There's obviously a growing interest in organically grown food and agricultural products. There's controversy over GM foods. Is there any attention paid to this growing interest among consumers here at home and abroad in organic agriculture and concerns about the safety of GM foods and GM products either in terms of consumer education or in terms of, in fact, encouraging alternative food products along organic production lines? Are there any commitments in the budget or any plans here that the minister can draw our attention to where organic producers and organic food consumers can be assured that due attention is being paid to this growing interest in this area of food production and consumption in the province?

A few other questions if I can get my pages straight here.

The Chair: Hon. member, your time is up. You'll have another chance.

Mrs. McClellan: There are a lot of things in this, and it's going to take a longer explanation than we have. Organics. Interesting subject. Niche markets. No question. However, there's a lot of work to be done in that area. How do you enforce the statements that are made about how it's grown? How do you audit that? I sell carrots; I tell you they've had no pesticides, no fertilizers, nothing. How do you know that? A whole issue around labelling.

I am concerned. I'm a supporter of the organics area, but I'm concerned that we don't have the methodology or the ability to actually back up these statements. It's a big concern. I'm a little more comfortable eating product when I actually know what they have to label and tell us what is in it and where it has been and what it has had applied to it. So I think we have a lot of work to do there. No question that it's a growth area. No question that I support the fact that there will be a niche market for that, but, boy, we better watch how we manage this whole area.

Capacity in testing. We're the only province in Canada who several months ago, in June, put out an overall plan. In fact, nobody else has done it at all yet. Fortunately, our Premier, although he may not have experienced this industry, understood the importance of it and definitely directed us to bring in an overall plan that included all of those things, such as program development to ease us through the situation, the importance of having the lab capacity that we might require.

I invited the Prime Minister to invest in this lab. I'm still hoping that he will. They've built a new lab in Quebec. I thought it would be nice if they just put a little money into this one. It was recognized that there was one needed. We have the level 3 lab coming up, and I'm still inviting them to participate. It would be great. But we did do it.

The Canada Beef Export Federation. I don't know how familiar the hon. member is with that organization. They are our salesmen of our products in the world. They've done an absolutely fantastic job. I mentioned earlier about them opening an office in Monterrey, Mexico, and the increase in sales there. We're there in government as supporters if we need to work with them on opening doors to get meetings, to get into countries, diplomatic ways, if they need us on policy, the federal government on health regulations and so on. That's government's role. Our industry is the best salesman. They don't need us to do that. They need us to be there as supporters and make sure we have policies that do that.

One of the lessons we've learned is that we'd better pay attention more to international protocols because I think we were all just a little easy on this issue around BSE. We didn't have it. Now we realize that there's a lot of work that needs to be done to update those.

I've already I think clarified off the record that the U.S. is and will continue to be our largest market. It just makes all kinds of sense. Beef is a perishable product. Most people want to buy it fresh. Most of the countries that we talk about have long transportation times and costs associated. It doesn't mean that we won't be there and that we aren't there now. We are. The other thing is they want a different product. If anybody really has ever butchered a beef animal, it is a very diverse product line. You know, there are people that eat virtually almost every part of it. I'm not there. I'm pretty imaginative and innovative and all of that, but I draw the line in some spots.

The issue around a packing plant in northern Alberta and testing: that is the CFIA's issue. As far as I know, they have not put that forward. The CFIA will determine it. Do I have a concern? I think every decision we make should be based on science. As I understand it, in the U.S. that's what happened with Cold Creek. You take one small plant for a niche market, and they do something that then becomes imposed on everything, everyone, and you take yourself right out of the marketplace because you're up against people who don't have to do that. I think you have to have a balance in the whole industry. I hope that CFIA and their determination in this will look at a balance in the whole industry.

I did make an error earlier. I said that we had some dozen or 14 projects under our using over-30-month beef. My goodness, I just added them up. There are 45. These are Alberta companies, and I'm excited about that. That says that they're going to do this. We had $7.1 million that was set aside to assist our companies in developing a home for this over-30-month product, because we know we're going to have it for some time. So we'll be value adding that product here instead of shipping the live animal to the U.S., where they value added it and sold it back to us. Some of that meant that they had to get new equipment or expand their operation. This, I think, is great.

There was a 20 per cent reduction, and, yes, most of it was in the lower end, but if you understand a beef carcass, you know that 26 per cent, 28 tops, is the high end, and something has to pay for the whole animal. So you didn't see the reduction, but the high ends did go down. You know, darn it, if you're going to use our web site, use it right.

Mrs. McClellan: You didn't. The information that you took off that web site was not used appropriately. Those were different dates and different cuts. What we were talking about was a period of 10 months on the whole animal. So, you know, I appreciate people giving me information, but I like it based on facts.

I'm going to say my last comment on this. You made the statement that the packers' profits quadrupled. I would appreciate the information that backs that up because, frankly, I haven't seen it. As the minister responsible for this industry and with the passion that I feel for this industry, I will not be somebody that flings statements around that I can't back up with fact. That is the most dangerous thing that could happen to this beef industry today. The one thing I've been proud of in our industry is that they have stuck together. They have had those debates and those discussions and I think have made responsible statements, and I believe I should do that. I don't have any facts that say that packers quadrupled their profits. I don't know whether you're referring to one week or one month, but I'll tell you that when we look at it, we will look at it over the period of time that this happened.

I'm looking at the time when packers were killing at 28 per cent. I know enough about the industry to know that they were in deep red ink in that period. So should I pick that period? Or should I pick the period in August where, thanks to the federal government's reluctance to listen to us on the issue of putting an adjustment period in and/or not putting a dollar figure on it, they announced the end of the program? Everybody panicked, threw their cattle into the market, and it crashed. You bet the packers made money, if they took the animals at all. Many days they refused them totally.

This is a complex, complex industry, and you have got to look at it in the whole, not just pick parts that maybe make for: oh, gee, this will sound like packers quadrupled their profits. I want to know whether that was on May 21 or May 30 of last year or August 30 or in September, and I then would look at who was taking the profit before May 20. The fact is that in this industry there will be times when the packers take profit; there are times when the producers take the profit. You know what? In a normal marketplace it all works out because they know when the ups and downs in the market are.

The fact is that for the last 11 months we have had a totally dysfunctional market. For the first several months of this issue, the first seven, we really had a dysfunctional market until some product started to move. The fact is that until we have the opportunity for free trade in cattle, we will continue to have a dysfunctional market. I will be the last person that will stand up and make statements unless I can back them up with facts, and I can't for a fact say that in the last 11 months, from May 20 to April whatever it is today, packers quadrupled their profits. I don't have that kind of information. I, frankly, will make this statement: I don't think anybody in this industry is going to get rich over this one. I don't care whether you're on the retail side or the packer side or the producer side.

I will defend our programs, and anybody who reads the title of them knows they were applied to fat cattle, and that meant cattle that were in a terminal feedlot. I will tell you that 90 per cent of that money went to the owner of those cattle, which is where it should be. What happened from there on is the producers' business. They are the ones. But I do know that the feedlot owners that received that reinvested that money by buying the cow-calf producers' calves last fall in the marketplace at as high or higher than the year before's prices. I do know that when December 23 came and we had another incident, those same people that invested that money stood to take huge losses on those purchases that they made in good faith.

I commend Minister Speller for coming in with a program designed between the federal government and industry that helped respond to that. Do I agree with the per head payment? No, I never did, because some people will benefit more than others. I always think it should be on the degree of the loss. However, I didn't design the program. It was their program. I'm just thankful they came in and recognized that there were still some huge losses.

I will respond in writing to some of the detail on rural development because it's a very, very important initiative. I'll sit down and let some of my colleagues speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister for many, many good comments and to those that have spoken and asked questions before.

Like for a lot of people here on this issue, the BSE issue, agriculture has had a phenomenal ride, and it hasn't exactly been a great ride this year: everything from May 20 preceded by record droughts that everyone was aware of last year.

I would like to mention, just as a way of starting, that although there aren't that many of us colleagues in the Legislature that are actually from rural areas any more or those that actively farm, the riding that I do represent has what is commonly referred to as Feedlot Alley, and that area is the livestock feeding capital of Canada. Now, if anyone, you would think, should have received an awful lot of calls from producers, it should have been me. But as I've told people at various meetings that I went to, my biased opinion was that without a strong minister and a champion in agriculture, a department that was totally dedicated to trying to help the industry through this difficult time, no doubt I would have gotten a lot more calls than I did.

The thing that I felt strongly ever since the minister asked that myself and a couple of my colleagues, like the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, who attended a lot of these beef industry meetings – the point I was trying to get at was that the people in the industry themselves helped the minister and her staff come up with programs and solutions, which I think is a very solid way to deal with a very significant problem. I know that had it been up to many of the MLAs or any committee that a government might create, it's impossible, number one, to ever come up with a program that's going to satisfy everyone all of the time. It's far more acceptable to know that as an industry you've helped put the solution together, that you've identified the problems.

I would almost guess that the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner and I could very much agree that as we sat in on some of these meetings, not to offer a solution or to make comment as much as to hear the concerns and hear the discussion on how we were going to see this problem through, the industry people that were there I think needed to have a pat on the back. These were the elected representatives from the various cattle groups, whether it was the Western Stock Growers' Association, Alberta Beef Producers, the Cattle Feeders' Association, the Alberta Milk Producers' Society. The meat packing industry was there and is there today.

It's a phenomenal thing to see these people with their own angst, because they all have operations of their own that are undergoing various degrees of financial difficulty or potential financial difficulty, be able to park all their personal problems at the door and come in and look at a solution to a huge, huge problem and look forward a year or six months or whatever time was required. I think it is a credit to the people that helped the ag department staff and the minister come up with some of these solutions.

Secondly, I know this doesn't specifically deal with the dollars that the minister has presented to this Assembly, but at the same time I do want to talk about the staff because there is a dollar implication. In earlier question periods we've heard questions about how much money was spent on this trip, how much money was spent on that hotel, and how much money was spent on this vehicle. Well, I would like to submit that without the staff that are in Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, who, by the way, from my understanding are the very same staff who are making sure that all these programs that the minister has come up with are in place and being applied for, adjudicated, and paid out to the various applicants – they are all done by the same people throughout many different programs.

Now, if I was worried about the rent of a Ford Econoline van or the price of a bottle of orange juice or a jug of orange juice, I think that maybe you'd be most pleasantly surprised to see that a lot of these people who are devoting six, seven, 10, 12, 14, 16 hours a day are the very same people who aren't getting paid any overtime and who have since May 20 been in that building probably six, sometimes seven days of the week, every day, making sure that the programs are up and running, handling not just one program, Mr. Chairman, but maybe two, three, and four different programs from a variety of producers across this province, anywhere from 20,000 to 35,000 different producers who might at various times submit applications.

So I do think that the industry, especially, is very much aware of the strong team that the minister has. I know that many of the MLAs are. I think they deserve a great amount of our gratitude.

The other thing that I think people in general, the general public, may not totally be aware of all the time – and the minister alluded to it in her last comments. Some of the programs were devised, the first one and the very last one, by the federal government. It's totally their own program. As the Alberta minister of agriculture had indicated, the very first program, which was put out as a reaction to a dire need for immediate injections of cash – well, our minister and the department had indicated that it wasn't being properly designed, that if it was in fact to be on a per head calculation and if there were no criteria established around it, that the market price would in fact drop, and it did.

You know, in retrospect, again going back to the group that has worked with the department and the minister over this period of time, they came up with programs that were more suited to the flow of dollars, that helped keep a marketplace much more in tune with what you would expect to happen in a normal situation. Probably the one thing that a lot of the public weren't aware of was that some of these programs excluded the packer cattle from payment. I think that's probably one of the best secrets that many people aren't aware of, because there were allegations that the government simply wrote cheques and it all went to the packers.

I don't think a lot of people understood that even before this issue came up, there was a varying number of cattle held by packers throughout the province, and it could have ranged from 10 to 18 per cent, which varied and would continue to vary according to market conditions. So my hat is off to a program that actually worked more to the benefit, although when you're hurting, you don't see it, of the smaller and the mid-sized producer than it did to the larger and especially to the packing plant.

I would also like to comment on the standing policy committee. Our members, who range from south to north, east to west, and urban and rural, have been involved, have been the most vocal critics within the committee to our minister and also have been very supportive of the efforts that have been a result of the work done by the program director people and by the industry. Our committee has in fact been able to vet their constituents' feelings to the minister, been able to talk to the department people and keep us in tune with what has gone on and what will go on in the future.

I do want to make a comment. I think I heard one of the former speakers ask about a cost overrun, perhaps in a standing policy committee. I would like to tell you, Mr. Chairman, that the minister of agriculture did ask me to attend a trilateral meeting on her behalf in Mexico, and that wouldn't have been something that would have happened had it not been for an issue like this. It's no deep, dark secret that if you suddenly have to go on a commercial airline from Edmonton, Alberta, through Phoenix to Puerto Vallarta, Mexico, and back, it's not very cheap. It's 1,500-plus dollars just for one person and hotel accommodations for the three nights that you are there. By the way, we never really left the hotel. It was meetings.

Mrs. Gordon: Did you have orange juice?

Mr. McFarland: No, I drink apple juice. I didn't have any orange juice, member, and I didn't have any dos cerveza. Is that the name?

The meetings that were set up rotate each year. They're held between the U.S., Mexico, and Canada. This year it happened to be in Mexico, and it was at the state and provincial levels. They would have our equivalent of ministers of agriculture from the various U.S. states, from the 38 Mexican states, and from our 10 provinces and territories. Fortunately for us we had a very strong contingent from Ontario back to B.C. There were probably half of the Mexican states represented there.

What happened was most interesting. It was at a time when there was some resolve to the anaplasmosis and bluetongue issue. That was basically settled during the course of this meeting.

The other thing that I think was most worthy of note was that during the time that I spoke to commissioners of agriculture, for instance, from Arizona and New Mexico, never once did I hear a comment that the border shouldn't open. Never once from any of the Mexican state secretariats of agriculture did I hear any comment that the border should not open. Every one of the Mexican state departments of agriculture wanted the border to open.

Do you know what I think was most important, Mr. Chairman? It was towards the end of the wrap-up. There had been an overview of the benefits of NAFTA between the U.S. and Mexico, between Canada and Mexico. If a person doesn't see graphically the numbers of dollars that have flowed because of the NAFTA agreement – albeit there can be times when there have been things that people question. The phenomenal growth in processed meat alone, just on the agricultural side, between Canada and Mexico, between Mexico and the U.S., is remarkable, and there's strong growth there.

The other thing that had to make you feel very proud was when the governor of the state of Jalisco – and granted, this was through an interpreter – stood up and said that Canada had a testing system that was, in his words, the model that should have been used by everyone. I think that in itself should have made not just producers but consumers feel not just proud but actually reassured that we do have a good system. The Mexican governor of the state of Jalisco wished that everyone would use that same model across North America, and if we could accomplish some of these uniform tests and regimes that we follow, not just in Canada and the U.S. but also, they meant, including themselves, it would be a huge step in making sure that our trade, our testings are all contiguous and following the same regime.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, the open borders that had been talked about I think finally came to fruition. We heard the news this past week. It is a slow, anguishing type of situation that everyone has been through.

I would like to close on the note that we still haven't talked about the Canadian Wheat Board, and I'm surprised that we haven't talked about the prospects for this year. Who knows what those could or couldn't be? To some degree we've not had an opportunity to discuss some of the changes, especially in crop insurance. In the overall scheme of things everything has seemed relatively minor compared to the BSE, but life goes on, and I do thank you for the opportunity.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I'll be very brief. I know that there is another hon. member that wants to get a couple of questions on the record, and there's very little time left.

I want to thank the Member for Little Bow for his comments. I want to thank him for his work as chair of the standing policy committee and for the attendance at the majority of our meetings. I appreciate the commitment of all of our colleagues that have invested a huge amount of time and energy into solving this.

I was reminded by his comments that all of the programs we have were designed by industry and government together. So maybe I get a little sensitive when I hear criticism of the program design because it's a criticism of our industry, who in uncharted waters were doing the very best they could. I can tell you that the people that attended those meetings and spent hours and hours on that design gave up time from their own operations that they probably should have spent there trying to keep their stuff together.

The last thing that I do want to say, because this may be the last time that the Member for Lethbridge-East debates estimates of the department of agriculture, is that I have appreciated him being the critic for my department for the last three years. We have not always agreed on everything, but we have always had an opportunity to have what I believe was a very informed debate, at least informed on his side and I tried to learn.

Hon. member, you have always treated me in the best way when it came to the issues around agriculture because, I believe, you have a strong interest in the health of this industry. I think the thing I appreciated the very most was my ability to call you prior to an announcement, discuss the detail and the design of the announcement, and know that you would hold that in confidence. I appreciated that integrity, and you never let me down in that area, so I wanted to say that here.

It's a great thing for a minister to be able to talk to their critic, to discuss issues, and to know that that member will treat the information in the manner that it was shared with them. I wish you well, and I probably will miss your debate. You've challenged me a good number of times and held me accountable at others. I do wish you well, and I thank you for your participation.

The Chair: In the two minutes remaining, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the time left I have many questions. The first one centres around crop insurance. Earlier today we heard from the hon. Premier that it was socialistic – I think that was the word he used – to have public insurance. I would like to know in regard to crop insurance precisely how much money the taxpayer is putting into those programs and if the minister considers that to be socialistic.

Also, in regard to the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation we're going to certainly see the CAIS program developed, but there are many other programs.

In the time permitting, Mr. Chairman, the Premier during question period makes reference to the selected payments to Members of the Legislative Assembly, mine in particular for $10,000, which I use. I would probably use a lot less with no electricity deregulation.

There are other members here who get significant money from many different government support programs in relation to agriculture. If I could have an explanation. How much money are we going to spend? How does one collect it; for instance, for the crop preharvest payments made by the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, the hay postharvest payments made by the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, the lack of moisture payments made by the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, the Canada/Alberta farm income assistance program payment made by Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and the farm income assistance program? I think that's going to be changed over into the CAIS program.

So we have a lot of programs here, and I would just be interested to know: how do you apply? What is each one of these individual programs based on? What is the budget for these income support programs this year? I see a lot of . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoon, I now must put the question after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$431,816,000
--	---------------

The Chair: Shall the estimates be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $431,816,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 this evening, at which time we'll return in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:16 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 21, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 04/04/21

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

For those in the gallery this is the informal part of the Assembly. People are allowed to move around and that kind of thing. They're not allowed to talk loudly, but they can converse softly with one another, and we have the agreement that only one person stands and talks at a time.

Before we commence tonight, I wonder if we might have the consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise tonight and introduce a group of people from Edmonton-Ellerslie. I'm introducing them on behalf of the MLA for Edmonton-Ellerslie, Debby Carlson. They are from LDS Knottwood Blazers Scout troop, and there are 30 of them in the public gallery, up here as you can see. I'll ask them to rise in a moment, but let me first introduce the people who are with them: Shannon Gilson, Raschel Mighton, Fay Paterson, Darcy Holthe, Jamie Gilson, Laura McGill, Marcela Mowser, Tod Thorne, and Lawrence Woodruff. Would all of them please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Chair: For the benefit of the group that was just introduced, the moans were not because of you but because the hon. leader forgot that we don't refer to each other by our first or our last names. We refer to each other by the position, so a minister of something or other, or by the seat which we occupy, which is our constituency. That's honoured sometimes as much in the breach as in the keeping, but anyway . . .

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

The Chair: The chair would like to clear it up at the outset so that we all know we're on the same line. It has been agreed that for the first hour the estimates of the Ministry of Finance will be considered. The procedure that has been agreed to by the House leaders is that the minister will take approximately a five-minute statement. The next 45 minutes will be allocated to questions from the opposition. The remaining 10 minutes will be allocated to questions from government private members should they wish to ask those questions. Otherwise, the members of the opposition may continue to question the minister. At the end of one hour we'll go to the next, and then we'll vote for both these issues at the end of the two hours. Is that basically what has been agreed? This is not a dictation by me but a question.

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: That's agreed. Okay. We may proceed then.

Finance

The Chair: For opening comments the hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a great pleasure to be here to present the Ministry of Finance's estimates for 2004-2005.

Before I start, I would like to introduce some very important people who are members of the staff of the Department of Finance. They've worked very hard in putting together our budget and our business plan. They are seated in the members' gallery. We have Bonnie Lovelace, our senior financial officer; Richard Shelast, our senior manager of budgets, who puts our budget together; Juliette Blair, who is the manager of business planning and reporting; and Barry Meilleur, our business analyst from the office of budget management; and I can't really see, but Tim Wade, my executive assistant, is around somewhere. So I'd ask the members to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

I'd like to say, Mr. Chairman, that the staff from the Department of Finance are very much involved in every ministry throughout government. They have special postings, and each of them has a number of departments that they work with to put together their business plans and budgets so that we can bring them together in the budget presentation. So I would like to thank all the other members of Finance who work very, very hard. Starting in about October they very rarely have a Saturday or Sunday off. So it's kind of nice when the budget does come in and is filed with the Assembly. They then only have to go through copious hours of being here as we debate the estimates of that budget. So I do welcome them, and I thank them very much again.

As Minister of Finance, Mr. Chairman, I am very proud again to say that we have filed our 11th consecutive balanced budget in the province. It's a budget that puts us on course to achieving the strategic vision that was outlined in the province's 20-year strategic plan. Budget 2004 also keeps us on route to achieving Albertans' priorities for fiscal responsibility while at the same time investing in programs and services that meet the needs of our citizens.

Albertans have so much that they can be proud of. Our province still maintains the lowest overall tax load in Canada, and there is no general sales tax, no capital tax, and no payroll tax. In fact, a typical one-income family with two children earning $30,000 pays approximately 85 per cent less in taxes and health care premiums in Alberta than the average family earning that same amount of money in any other province in this country. So to put this in perspective, Mr. Chairman, Albertans and Alberta businesses would pay over $6.2 billion more in taxes if they had to pay under the system in British Columbia and over $10.8 billion more if they had to pay under the system in the province of Quebec.

Tax cuts this year will save Alberta businesses roughly $142 million. On the personal side we see a saving of $1.5 billion less in personal income taxes. Mr. Chairman, Albertans have enjoyed the benefit of the single-rate tax system. That left Albertans paying $1.5 billion less than they would have otherwise.

The other thing that I can report, Mr. Chairman, is that we are in striking distance of eliminating our accumulated debt. I'm very pleased with the work that Albertans have done to help this government reduce the accumulated debt of over $20 billion by nearly 90 per cent. By the year 2005-2006 the debt forecast is at $2.7 billion. Lower debt means lower debt-servicing costs, and as a result of our debt reduction efforts $1.4 billion in annual debt-servicing costs have been freed up for Albertans' program priorities and to lower taxes. Alberta has by far the lowest debt load per person of any province in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to provide a few of the highlights from our budget as well as our business plan, and I'd like to provide you with a quick overview of our ministry's key roles. The department itself has four main areas, including office of budget management; pensions, insurance, and financial institutions; treasury management; and corporate support. The Ministry of Finance also includes the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation, ATB Financial, Alberta Insurance Council, Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation and their subsidiaries.

Alberta Finance's vision is "A province that is innovative and globally competitive with a fiscally sustainable and accountable government." Our business plan identifies five high-level strategic priorities. These include maintaining Alberta's fiscal framework, public/private partnerships, enterprise-wide risk management, automobile insurance, and public pension plan governance. In addition to these high priorities Finance will continue to do our day-to-day job of managing the province's finances.

Mr. Chairman, there are core businesses of this department, but I gather I don't have the time to go over them in this process that we're dealing with tonight. [interjection] Oh, the opposition says it's okay, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Taft: We always like to be helpful.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much.

Core business 1 is fiscal planning and financial management. Our goals are to have a financially strong, sustainable, and accountable government, to have a fair and competitive provincial tax system, and to manage financial assets, liabilities, and risks effectively.

The second core business is the regulation of the provincial financial institutions. Alberta Finance regulates the credit union, insurance, loan, and trust industries in Alberta. Our goal is to ensure that Albertans receive reliable and competitive financial and insurance products. Alberta Finance continues to work with the insurance industry to implement reforms based on the government's review of automobile insurance.

The third core business is pension policy, regulations, and administration. Our goal is to ensure that pension benefits for pension plan members are secure, and Finance will work in consultation with public pension boards and stakeholders to facilitate the improvement of pension governance frameworks.

Core business 4, financial services. Our goal is to have quality and competitive financial services accessible to Albertans and local authorities. ATB Financial and the Alberta Capital Finance Authority are key components of the financing servicing sector. ATB Financial will continue to develop their commercial banking capacity and wealth management services. Our targets include specific measures to reflect our position as the owner of ATB Financial, and we have targets for the Capital Finance Authority to maintain the lowest borrowing costs for Alberta municipalities and local authorities' satisfaction with ACFA policies and efficiency.

Mr. Chairman, that is a very quick overview of what we're going into in 2004-05. Now I'd like to give you a few highlights of our budget and our estimates.

Ministry revenue is projected at just over $797 million, a decrease from the $869 million forecast in 2003-2004. Our investment income for 2004-05 is $35.3 million lower than the 2003-04 forecast, primarily due to the lower interest rates on new loans issued by the Alberta Capital Finance Authority, lower balances in the capital account and GRF, and reduced interest received under the credit union stabilization agreement as a result of better than anticipated credit union deposit growth in 2003-2004.

We'll also see a decrease of more than $31 million for internal government transfers that represent contributions from the lottery fund to my department for the contingency reserve.

The net income from our commercial operations is projected to be $9.7 million lower than the 2003-2004 forecast. This is due to nonrecurring revenue of $19.8 million in 2003-04 by the AGT commission, partially offset by a $9.8 million increase in the net income of Alberta Treasury Branches.

In terms of program expense we're estimating it to be almost $438 million. This is a decrease of $6 million from the 2003-04 forecast. The decline is due to a drop in interest costs on money borrowed by the Alberta Capital Finance Authority to lend to local authorities.

I'd like to take just a couple of minutes to highlight a few other areas within our estimates that I think you will find of interest. Our total capital investment for 2004-05 is estimated at $2.3 billion. The Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation accounts for most of the capital spending with a budget of $2.1 million for computer system upgrades and facility upgrades.

Another area that we've always been interested in looking at is the full-time equivalents. Overall, the ministry has increased its staffing by five FTEs, to 384. The department's staffing levels will be 181, six more than last year. The increase is primarily for managing proposed changes to the regulation of automobile insurance. Alberta Pensions Administration has been provided with 183 FTEs, one less than last year. Alberta Insurance Council staffing levels remain unchanged from last year, at 20 FTEs.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, this is really a very quick overview of Alberta Finance's business plan and budget estimates for the year 2004-05. I look forward to hearing the comments and questions, and any that we don't get answered tonight, we will undertake to answer in writing at a subsequent time.

Thank you.

The Chair: Before I call on the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition, I wonder if we might have consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests, which will not count against the time that's allocated.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly this evening the following guests that are present for this evening's second reading of Bill 30, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004. They are seated in the members' gallery, and as I call off their names, I'd ask if they could please stand. With us this evening are Mr. Harry Supernault, the president of the Metis Settlements General Council; Mr. Randy Hardy, council member from Kikino Metis settlement; Glady Anderson, chair from Gift Lake Metis settlement; Dale Anderson, council member from Gift Lake Metis settlement; Gary Youngman; Horace Patenaude, chair from Buffalo Lake Metis settlement; and Peter Patenaude, chair of East Prairie Metis settlement. I'd ask that you all join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Chairman, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you three guests that we have here from Paris, France, that have come to visit the province of Alberta and have decided to come to the Legislative Assembly this evening. They are Helen Czarniecki, Marguerite Daire, and Gabriel Daire. J'aimerais bien vous féliciter et vous donner la bienvenue ici en Alberta. I'd ask all of you to join me in giving them the traditional warm welcome.

Finance (continued)

The Chair: The hon. Leader of her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciated the comments of the minister, and I assume I'll be able to follow a process of other years and do a sort of question and response back and forth. That would be more interesting for both of us; I'm sure.

The Department of Finance and the Department of Revenue combined are in many ways the backbone of the provincial government. They are the departments that collect the money, that ultimately control how resources are distributed in the government, and are crucial in planning the long-term health of Alberta's economy. In fact, that of course comes up in the first core business goal of maintaining "a financially strong, sustainable and accountable government."

I'd like to just ask the minister a general kind of question in terms of the managing of Alberta's nonrenewable resource wealth, which is really what separates Alberta in so many ways from the other provinces and from other parts of the world. Billions and billions of dollars of nonrenewable resource revenues flow through Alberta Finance and, I guess, through Alberta Revenue through the hands of the treasury, as it were, of the provincial government every year and have for decades. Yet I'm concerned that when I look at the position of the government, almost all of that money is gone. We do have the heritage fund, but that really accounts for a very, very small percentage of the total nonrenewable resource revenue.

Philosophically, as an Albertan I can't help feeling like we're living off the capital of our land. We are taking the resource revenue, and we are either spending it or we're paying down debt that was incurred by earlier governments. But what is the plan? What is the philosophy? What is the vision, if I dare use that word, what is the philosophy of Alberta Finance and, I guess less so, Alberta Revenue for managing the unbelievable wealth that the people of Alberta have inherited?

I know that's a very general question, but it underlies the decisions we make here. Ought we to be saving for the long term? Ought we to be trying to convert that nonrenewable wealth into something permanent? Should we be investing it and spending it on things that we think will generate wealth immediately? What's the view from your side of the Assembly here, Madam Minister, on those kinds of general issues? How do we manage our wealth in this province?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think that's an excellent question, actually, and one that's very key when you start doing budgets and business plans. This year we introduced a strategic plan, and that didn't come without a lot of thought as to where we're going. We know where we've been, and in the past we were fortunate to have the resource revenues come through, and they were healthy and strong. It enabled us to get our fiscal house in order: to get rid of our deficit, to pay off our debt quicker than had been planned, to take almost $20 billion of operating debt out of the equation and get rid of that. If we hadn't had those resource revenues, that would in all likelihood not have been possible.

So then we got into a new structure and said: now that we're getting close to the end of that goal and accomplishing that goal, where do we go from here? As you know, we introduced last year a new structure that was recommended by the Financial Management Commission. A lot of people focused on a lot of the recommendations, but to me probably the most important recommendation was recommendation 12, which said that governments have to start to think strategically. They have to think beyond the political mandate of four, four-plus years, that parties go through elections every four to four and a half years, and think beyond the five years, the 10 years, and the 20 years and try and visualize what Alberta will look like 20 years out. You have to be open-minded enough to think of what that's going to look like, because we don't really know. But if we're going to enjoy the growth, security, the dynamic of this province as we do today, then we have to do some planning.

Part of that recommendation that came forward from the Financial Management Commission was to not overspend, to not get caught in the flavour of the day, in the highs and the lows of the oil and gas pricing mechanism but to put in place a scheme that says: let's have some predictability, some sustainability, and some discipline in what we do with those resource revenues. That's why we allocate $4 billion on an annual basis to support programs that the Crown offers back to the people. The balance of the money goes over into a sustainability fund that helps us prepare for that long-term vision, helps us secure that long-term future.

Now, we still have some debt to clear off, which should be a priority because you want to get rid of the debt servicing cost. That's a dead cost that doesn't help anybody, particularly when it's as a result of operating overages in previous years. So as we prepare to move forward, we have to be cognizant of those resource revenues and protect them and make sure that they go into areas that count in the long term.

Your question of how do we save, how do we prepare is very, very apt. Our sustainability fund is substantially different from funds that have been put in place in other jurisdictions. We have some tight requirements on the use of that sustainability fund. Basically, what it says is that we can use the fund once it exceeds $2.5 billion to continue to pay off our debt or to invest in capital or other assets, on the asset side of the equation, so that we're developing long-term legacies or institutions or endowments that will be there for the next generation. It's a kind of saving, but it's a saving on the capital asset side of the equation.

So I think that your question is very appropriate right now and one that I welcome, quite frankly. It's one of the better questions we've had in a very long time. I'm glad you're thinking in the same direction that we are, that we have to be very cautious and safeguard those resources for the longer term. The Minister of Justice and Attorney General has been working very hard as the lead on that strategic plan. I think we're the only jurisdiction in Canada that has a proper strategic plan to date, and it's a start.

I can tell you that other provinces have asked us about it and said that we should all be forward-thinking. The difference is they're not in a position to do that. They're going through survival for the day. Our planning has got us to the point where we are now, and if we stay the course, then we should be able to have success not only today and tomorrow but 10 years out, 15 years out, 20 years out if we do the proper planning and if we think strategically now as opposed to at the last minute.

So that's the essence of what we're doing. Again, I welcome that question. I think it was very well done.

The Chair: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I guess my question comes down to when you say that if we stay the course, we can add prosperity 10, 15 years in the future and beyond. My problem is that it's not really very clear what the course is. Anyway, I've gone through the 20-year strategic plan, and it's too vague, too general, I find.

The minister spoke about tax levels. I was a little surprised at some of her statements. I've certainly seen analysis done by I think it was PricewaterhouseCoopers suggesting clearly that the tax rates at the lower and middle levels in Alberta are actually higher than in B.C. and Ontario. I don't have that material with me right now, but I've seen those calculations. I think I've got them back in my office.

I have a particular concern and a particular question with taxes. This will not come as a surprise to the minister, but the way the taxes add up in Alberta, if you include the health care premiums, which are a tax by any other name, in fact a family with a couple of kids at, say, a $36,000 income is paying a higher percentage of their income to the province in taxes than a family at a $100,000 income. Between the combined effect of the flat tax and the health care premiums it's actually a regressive tax hitting the working poor, say people at the $35,000, $38,000, $40,000, $45,000 a year income, if that's a family income, the hardest.

Let's see. How can I put this? Is there any chance, is there any hope that the people of Alberta will see a different tax system in which, for example, at the very least health care premiums are abolished or in which the tax system is reworked so that families at a $38,000 a year income aren't paying a higher percentage to the provincial government in taxes than families at $100,000? Can we not at least make some progress on bringing that kind of fairness to the tax system of Alberta?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Chairman, we've done a number of reviews on the tax policy that we have in the province of Alberta. Quite clearly, if you take all of the taxes and all of the fees that are there, the normal ones, including the health care premiums, and you compare Alberta to the other jurisdictions across Canada – and it's a good exercise to go through – if you actually take any other province and take their structure and transplant it on top of the demographics in the province of Alberta, it's quite a shocking equation to look at how fortunate we are overall in Alberta.

In fact, I think the lowest one I looked at was Newfoundland. If we took their structure, Albertans would pay something like an extra $4.9 billion on an annual basis in taxes. Now, albeit a good part of that is their provincial sales tax, but even if you take that out and you just focus on the more normal taxes – and I suppose in most provinces a sales tax is a normal tax – Albertans would be far worse off with any other structure in Canada.

Can taxes continue to go down? I sure hope so. I'd like to see them continue to go down, and we're on that track. However, when we are charged with offering core programs in health and education and social programs, et cetera, et cetera, we have to have dollars come through to fund those programs. It wouldn't be realistic to say that those programs could be offered without some form of taxing entity.

I've been asked several times if I would get rid of the health care premium. Well, I could go out and do that and become a hero on the front page of the newspaper, but I'd have to tell people that we're going to have to add it somewhere else, because it's still $8 billion. It cost $8 billion this year to run the health system, and it has to be paid for. You can always go, "Well, that guy over there" – and we can do that, make that guy over there pay for it, but the system still has to be paid for.

You know, I could do the hero thing, and I'd be the big hero of the province, but I would be fooling people. At least, when you have a premium, people know that the systems costs. When you go to other jurisdictions, they think their health system is free, and that's just not true. Their finance people hide it in their system.

Now, I have no problem with creative ways of collecting the money, and, you know, we've talked about different ways of doing it. Instead of a health care premium bill maybe you have a health fee that goes out and is attached to whatever. The bottom line is that you still have to collect the money. You have to collect the money. I'm always open to fairness on how you do that. I'm open to that.

I know that the minister of health will be going through some recommendations on reform over the next 18 months, and I'm sure he's going to come forward with some recommendations to me. I'm open. But to say that we're not going to charge for health is just not real. We're going to have to do that because it's still $8 billion. I can dance it, but I can't get away from having to collect the money to pay for the system. Now, how it comes in – I'm sure there'll be lots of recommendations come forward, so we'll have to wait and see, but I'm open to looking at all of them. I can tell you that.

Dr. Taft: Still on the tax system and actually combining my first two questions, at least in theme, how do we convert the nonrenewable wealth we're living on into something permanent, and how do we manage our tax system more fairly and effectively? How much of our tax revenues – I'm not talking about royalties or land lease sales and things like that. How much income tax revenues and thus direct sources such as, well, corporate taxes can be traced back to the activities of the petroleum industry in Alberta? In other words, if the petroleum industry weren't there, it's not just that we wouldn't have the royalties, but we also wouldn't have a lot of other taxes as well. [interjection] Should I repeat the question?

You may not have that right now, but if your officials could provide that information. Do you understand the question I'm getting at? That would be helpful.

Mrs. Nelson: It's a good question. You can all read the budget and pick up the resource royalty number. Then the question is: how much of the investment that's come into the province is picked up in corporate tax; how much is picked up on the personal tax side; how much is paid regularly through that? That's a good question.

Dr. Taft: How much is driven by the petroleum industry? How much is it worth to us beyond just the royalties?

Mrs. Nelson: Oh, a huge amount.

Because I don't have that with me, I will go back, and in the next while I'll get that back to you as a written question, because it's a very good question. What it will demonstrate, Mr. Chairman, which I think is really important, is how critical this industry is to the well-being of this province and how it should not be taken for granted. Not only is there a direct royalty, but when you look at the spin-out through the people who have come here through migration to work in that industry, how they have now started contributing on the personal side, and the support companies that have come in to support the capital investment, it's a huge impact to our province. So I will undertake to get that for you.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I appreciate that. It will be interesting to see where that comes from.

Now, I guess I'll switch gears, although I could continue on that. Actually, I'm going to ask one more question on that general theme. I'm not sure which minister it goes to, but it is basically this. There were some indications by the Premier a few weeks ago over a period of two or three days that perhaps some of the oil sands companies, because of higher oil prices, are actually moving through the generic royalty regime quite quickly. They're capitalizing their projects and will hit the 25 per cent royalty payout this year. I'm wondering, although that's not in the budget, if there is a chance that that will happen with any of the plants that have been built under the generic royalty regime.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, let's keep in mind that part of the generic scheme was that all companies were brought under one structure. As the capital was invested, they were required to pay 1 per cent of the gross revenue. So revenues have been coming in all along. Now, as the capitalization of that project goes through, it then starts to step up and transfer up to 25 per cent, which is a net. The transition from the 1 per cent gross to the 25 per cent net is on a project-by-project basis.

Naturally, with higher prices the recovery is quicker than was anticipated at the time. So there is a potential that some of those projects could transition over sooner as opposed to later because – let's be very candid – we've had higher than normal or anticipated oil and gas prices, oil in particular, which has a positive impact on the recapturing on those facilities.

Mrs. Nelson: I don't know if it will happen this year, but you may see it in the next couple of years, which would be a number of years ahead of schedule, quite frankly. That'll depend on if the price stays firm.

The forecasts from industry, quite frankly, are not that way. They're expecting that there would be a correction in the market and that the end prices will come off. However, we're not seeing that at this stage. So we're going to have to monitor that. That's one of the hard parts, to look at that on the long term when you have so much volatility and uncertainty in where that price is going to end up and, really, no control over what the price is going to look like. So we'll monitor it, but it may be ahead of time.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, let's switch gears completely and go to public/private partnerships, which are one of the business areas of this particular department. Certainly, on this side of the House we have serious questions about P3s involving for-profit partners and especially private-finance initiatives, as they're called in other jurisdictions. Today we've had information that the Calgary courthouse, for example, is really going through the roof in terms of costing.

So the frustration here for the opposition and I think the concern by the public is that the process seems very murky. Let's just pick the courthouse for an example. If the province had simply gone to tender in the traditional way for the courthouse and all the bids had come in and the envelopes were opened and instead of $150 million they were $300 million, the process is very clear: then it's back to the drawing board.

What we have here, it seems, is a much murkier process where we don't know and it's not immediately clear what's driving up the costs. Is it the cost of the money? Is it the borrowing costs of the private investor? What are their borrowing costs expected to be? Or is it changes in their rates of return? The lead investor in the Calgary courthouse is a big insurance company. Well, the insurance company's gone through some turmoil. Are they looking for higher rates of return? So there's all this turmoil and turbidity around the whole process of P3s, and that's being played out in the Calgary courthouse.

What is this government going to be doing to ensure that the process of selecting and improving P3s is as open and transparent as the traditional method of getting bids, publicly opening the envelopes, and going with the lowest bidder? What can we expect here? How are we going to know anything?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Chairman, when we entered into our new fiscal framework, we said that where appropriate we would consider using alternative financing mechanisms, which would be different from our normal pay-as-you-go cash purchasing or cash outlay. One of those alternatives was what's called P3s. Others were things such as REITs, such as bonds, or going to the market itself.

Part of my other role in chairing the Treasury Board table is to work with the proposals that come in. In fact, we actually have an outside body that helps with an assessment of what projects might qualify for a P3, and then we go through a cost-benefit analysis. We said that we would use the vehicle called P3 if in fact it made sense for Albertans to do that, if in fact the criteria that were there were laid out, and if they weren't, you heard our Premier in question period say that then we wouldn't do it.

Our job when the proposal comes forward is to do an assessment on it, and we go through quite a lengthy process. I can tell you that Treasury Board members sometimes get a little tired because we spend copious hours with officials going over this process and trying to make sure that we cover all of the issues that might be there so that we can assure Albertans that we have made the best selection for the use of their money. It's a very long, long set of deliberations. If they make sense, we'll go forward. If they don't, we'll ask for a redrafting or we'll go to an alternative.

I am not afraid to say to you that part of the evaluation is that I have to look at the strength of our balance sheet and the market of the day and the investment community at that point and say: is this a better investment based on the strength of the balance sheet of the province, or am I better off to go and see the benefits of the risk transfer that can occur with a P3 and move that over and do an investment analysis based on a lot of criteria? So it's not quite as easy as standing up when the bids come in and opening an envelope and saying: rah, rah, here we go.

Some of the most successful P3s that we have had in this province are very clearly our extended health care facilities that are built by the private sector that enter into an operating agreement and contract with our Minister of Seniors and our minister of health to deliver a service, and they're very successful. They're very successful and have demonstrated that not this year or last year but for a number of years and continue to be that way. Are there other potentials for P3s? Yes, and we will evaluate them, and if they make sense, we'll proceed.

We may very well proceed in this situation, but we're in a process of evaluation, and therefore we have to have that option to do that. We made a commitment to Albertans right from the very beginning that that's exactly what we would do, and that's where we are right now.

Dr. Taft: Well, the problem is that this very long and involved process is not at all open to public view or public comprehension. In fact, it gets so complex that there are going to be areas where the public doesn't have confidence in the process. So I think you're opening a can of worms with some of these P3s. I really do. I'm concerned that we're building into the very structure of government unnecessary long-term costs. So you can be sure that we will be watching these very closely indeed.

My last question – and then I'll allow the member from the third party to jump into the debate – is around auto insurance. I'm looking at page 209 of the business plan, for example. I guess my question really is very simple. I don't see anywhere in the material a clear statement that a performance measure for the government under auto insurance would be to ensure that less expensive auto insurance is available for Albertans; in other words, a performance measure that says: this year auto insurance premiums on average will be lower than they were last year. It's not in here. Can you tell me why not?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, our job is to make sure that the law of the province is upheld, and that is that Albertans must have a certain minimum amount of public liability and property damage for automobile insurance. In fact, it's against the law to drive a vehicle in Alberta without automobile insurance. Our job is to make sure that automobile insurance is available, that it's affordable, and that it's accessible to Albertans.

Also, as hon. members will know, there is an office called the superintendent of insurance, and his job is to make sure that insurance is being delivered in accordance with the criteria that we've laid out within the province. This last year he's had an added job trying to implement a new structure into the province. We'll be moving into a new dynamic once this implementation is in place, and we'll have a more hands-on approach to automobile insurance within the province, far more so than we've had before. The regulations for that are being developed right now as we speak.

Is it easy? No, it's not. Has it been a long road? You better believe it has. Our goal has been to make us comparable to the other jurisdictions in Canada, and we weren't. We haven't been. Particularly in certain categories, Mr. Chairman, we haven't been. So we are committed to doing that, and we believe that the structure we're bringing forward will put Albertans at an advantage compared to what they have been in the past.

Now, some categories of drivers will see a substantial change and lowering of their rates. Others will see a more minor change and lowering of their rates.

I think that by the time we get through the summer, you'll start to see the direct impact of this new structure. Now, everybody will get into it as their insurance policy renews. Someone asked me earlier today: why a year? Well, it's only fair that they get to get into it as quickly as possible, but it will take a year for everybody to be fully implemented into the system. In that time frame, Mr. Chairman, we will keep the freeze on so no one will be creeping up until the new implementation hits them on their renewal date. That was, I think, the most appropriate way to go through the implementation.

But our objective is to bring rates down. There's no question on that. They were out of line and out of reach for particularly most young or new drivers. In fact, quite frankly, they were outrageous. They hadn't done anything wrong. Now if you're a bad driver, you're going to pay. You're going to pay big time. So you need to take some personal responsibility and drive wisely and well because if you don't, you will pay. There's no question on that.

So we'll be there this summer, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few questions for the minister in connection with the government policy regarding reductions in the corporate income tax rate. This was announced as part of a package some years ago, when Dr. West was finishing his term as the Finance minister, with an objective of moving the corporate tax rate down from 15 per cent to 8 per cent, I believe. The government has not stayed completely on track with its four-year plan for this reduction, but it is continuing to move in that direction, and there's a further reduction in this year's budget.

Now, the Auditor General in previous years has raised the question of how the government justifies this as a program. In other words, he treats it very much like any other program of government. It's a decision which costs the Treasury money, so it's deemed almost as an expenditure, and there has to be some sort of objective which is to be reached by the expenditure. Furthermore, those objectives, or those goals, need to have some way of being measured.

So my question is, first of all, to the minister: is there a really clear and specific objective other than sort of the general philosophical answer from the government that we often get that, you know, if we can reduce taxes for corporations, it means more investment, more jobs, that sort of thing? But is there something very specific, and is there a way of measuring the loss of tax revenue for the province?

The government also in the past had talked about the need to stay competitive with jurisdictions like Ontario and so on, which also had a fairly aggressive plan under the former Conservative government to reduce corporate income taxes. Now, my understanding is that that's no longer the case with the new Liberal government in Ontario. So is there still a race to the bottom in terms of corporate tax rates with other provinces, particularly Ontario, that Alberta needs to participate in?

I guess that the last point on the corporate income tax is: how does the government assess this in terms of a priority relative to other forms of tax reductions? The Leader of the Official Opposition has raised the question which we've been raising for years, the question of the health care premiums tax and why a tax cut such as that, an elimination of health care premiums, wouldn't be more beneficial in that it would put money directly in the pockets of families in this province rather than in corporations. Presumably, Mr. Chairman, those families would then spend their money in Alberta, and it would have a strong economic impact. I just would like to get the minister's comments on that and why that wasn't chosen as an alternative form of tax cut.

Thank you.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Chairman, when we review our tax policy, we do a number of things. The first thing is to look at the competitiveness of the tax policy and make sure that we are not disadvantaging Albertans and Alberta businesses. The goal to reach 8 per cent on the corporate tax is still there. We believe that we can reach that goal, but we've always said that we have to do it if it's affordable. When we look at the balancing between other program demands, as you've alluded to, it hasn't gone as quickly as some of us would like to see it go, but it's on a steady decline.

Most people think we focus on being competitive east to west, and while that's important, our biggest competitor, really, is stateside. We have to look at the competition from the United States as to what it does to our industries and our competitive advantage of being in that integrated market system. We're an exporter, so we have to be alert and aware of what we're faced with down south of the border as well.

Now, we've got a number of jurisdictions in the States that have a far better competitive tax advantage than we have, so we have some goals to reach. We have surpassed all jurisdictions in Canada and continue to excel as a result of it.

Now, the trade-off is what happens when we lower taxes here on the corporate side. Well, you see clearly the reinvestment, those dollars being re-employed back into the economy, and actually we've seen that your city of Edmonton here, the capital, the last couple of years – I don't know what it will be this year – has been either the number one or number two economic growth success story in Canada. That's a result of industry re-employing those dollars – and some of them would be the tax-cut dollars – back into the economy and having development take place. I mean, the growth here is phenomenal, and I don't think that would've happened if we hadn't had a competitive regime and a structure that was conducive to investment coming into this province.

That structure has been the thing that has attracted the investment in the north and, consequently, has brought it into the service area, particularly in the financial services, in the city of Edmonton, the capital of our province.

So the benefit is there, and it keeps coming in, and as long as we maintain the best competitive advantage that we can afford while at the same time servicing other core programs such as health and education, et cetera, then I think we have struck the right balance in the priorities that we set within the budget. That's always the tough one to do because some would like more on the tax cut; some would like more on the program spending. Striking that balance is difficult when it gets down to budget time.

Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, that's where I applaud our standing policy committees. Our standing policy committee chairmen have a tough job because everybody has a great idea, and they have to cut through the endless list of priorities and bring forward a recommendation. I meet with our standing policy chairs after the business planning and sit down with them, and they have to then, even though they're representing different ministries, give me an idea of the priorities that they believe are there so that I can go to Treasury Board and say: this is what we have heard. It's quite a culmination through the process, starting in about September following through to the budget presentation.

So I applaud our standing policy chairs because there's never any end to requests that come through for them to look at, and every one of them is a top priority. So I thank all our SPC chairs and the committees that work so darn hard to bring forward recommendations to Treasury Board.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to flag the piece that didn't get responded to, and that is the measures and objectives that the Auditor General has talked about.

But let me move on to the question of royalties. There are a number of royalty give-away programs that this province has had for some time. Now, there is mention made that some of these programs may be reviewed, but no specific change is announced in this budget, Mr. Chairman.

For years the Auditor General has raised the alarm about the fact that many of the government's royalty give-away programs, including the Alberta royalty tax credit, do not have objectives that allow Albertans to assess whether they represent value for money, but unfortunately we haven't seen any move to resolve those issues, address those questions. We've just seen a number of additional delays in addressing the $400 million plus that are given away in royalties each year. So I'd like to ask the minister about that.

I'd also like to go to the question of property taxes. Now, at the same announcement, which I attended as a brand-new MLA, by the previous Minister of Finance, Dr. West, he talked about an objective of gradually eliminating the provincial government's role in collecting property tax for education. What he was going to do was freeze the total amount that the government took and not freeze the rate but let the mill rate decline because the total revenue from that source was going to be frozen.

Now, this has been changed since the current minister has been in office. I guess that I wonder how much higher the provincial government is prepared to allow property taxes on the provincial side to rise. The revenue from school property taxes will rise 5.7 per cent in 2004-05, so homeowners and businesses will be paying $77 million more in school property taxes when they get their tax notices later this spring. I'm wondering if the minister can explain the reasons for this change in policy as well.

Thank you.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Chairman, on the situation with the collection of school property taxes it has been the vehicle and the tradition to collect them on an annual basis. This year we in fact reduced the rate by 2.3 per cent. It wasn't frozen; it was actually reduced.

Again, when you have growth within a province, people come to our province, and we want them to come here. We want the migration, but we've often said – and I'm sure the hon. member opposite recognizes – that they don't bring the schools and the hospitals and the roads with them. So you have to accommodate these people, and you can't accommodate them if you don't collect the revenue and there's only one taxpayer. Now, you can do it this way or that way or the other way, but the bottom line is that you have to have everyone participate in providing programs within the province. The method that's in place today is the one that we use. I can't get it any simpler than that.

The Chair: Members of the committee are reminded that we now go to the next 10 minutes in which members who have not yet participated have an opportunity, and should they not, then we'll go back to the opposition, and the minister answers either way. So we're now going to start the final 10 minutes.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Sure. Thank you. It may be now most appropriate to jump from the generalities we've had to some specifics, and perhaps I should just read some questions into the record, and the minister could have her staff respond in the fullness of time, as they say.

In looking at the detailed line-by-line information in the budget, a number of issues come up that we're compelled to ask in the opposition as part of the process of accountability. This is on page 142. I understand that Alberta Finance is only requesting $3.9 million for pensions, insurance, and financial institutions. Last year it spent $4.9 million, so we're looking at a million dollars less this year, and percentagewise that's quite significant. Why?

On page 143 the budget for the minister's office is being increased, and this is a dangerous example to set. The minister's office is increasing its budget by close to 20 per cent. I am shocked and appalled, Mr. Chairman, and I would like an explanation. Well, she can respond in writing.

Mr. Mason: That's your first use of that phrase as the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: There I am.

An Hon. Member: It'll roll off your tongue after a while.

Dr. Taft: I'll keep working on it.

Equally, on page 143 the minister's communications budget jumps significantly, hitting $422,000 as compared to $352,000 the previous year, about a 20 per cent increase. Again, why? What extra communications are going on there?

My supplemental to that question on communications would be: how much money is being contributed to the communications budget by the Public Affairs Bureau? So this is, I assume, part of it. What's the other part of communications activities worth, that portion being from the Public Affairs Bureau? I'm wondering if this increase in communications might in fact be related to the need to promote the new auto insurance program being implemented.

The budget on page 145 for the corporate management services to the Alberta Capital Finance Authority is increasing by 21 per cent, from $298,000 to $362,000. Why would that be happening? Why is the government expecting a drop in internal government transfers this year as outlined on page 149? It's, I think, a pretty significant drop. The forecast amount for 2003-04 is almost $116 million. The estimate for the year in question is only $84 million. That's quite a drop. Why?

On page 149 if we look at forecast as opposed to budget for the last fiscal year in several of these categories, most of them, the expenditures are over the budget.

What is the minister going to be doing this year to ensure rigorous conformity to the budget standards? Is she going to crack the whip, or is she going to allow things to just kind of flow along?

On page 153 it indicates that the Alberta Insurance Council is expecting a 33 per cent increase in revenue from premiums, fees, and licences. Could you provide some details, please, on those fees, premiums, and licences? What's the explanation for that, and what are some of the details?

I think, Mr. Chairman, in light of the need to move on to the Department of Revenue, I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Minister of Finance, we have a little more than four minutes.

Mrs. Nelson: Four minutes? You just want to vote? Then we'll call for the vote, and we'll undertake to write back.

The Chair: Are you ready for the vote after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Finance for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005?

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$75,340,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$75,059,000

The Chair: Shall the estimates for the Department of Finance be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Revenue

The Chair: Just to quickly review then. The minister will take approximately five minutes, and if the opposition so agrees, longer. The next 45 minutes will be allocated to questions from the opposition. The remaining 10 minutes will be allocated to questions from government members or, failing that, members of the opposition. That's our understanding.

We're ready, then, for the next department. The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to be here and present the Ministry of Revenue's estimates for the year 2004-05.

Before I start, I'd like to introduce a number of individuals from the Department of Revenue that are here with us this evening. The first is Robert Bhatia, the deputy minister. Bonnie Lovelace is our senior financial officer, who works in multiple roles for both Finance and Revenue. Christine Oness is with financial services; Juliette Blair, manager of business planning and reporting; and Glenn Shepherd, my executive assistant. I'll have them all stand, and we could maybe give them a . . . So we thank them for the excellent work. We are fortunate to have very strong professionals in the Department of Revenue.

The Ministry of Revenue's business focus is on a number of aspects. One of the key ingredients is its focus with respect to the province's revenues. You'll notice in the estimates and in the business plan that the revenues of the government continue to grow: over $9 billion in our estimates, $9.275 billion, growing to about $10.3 billion over the next three years in the business plan. As such, the resources of the department will grow as we ensure that we have the right levels of personnel and people to manage and collect and ensure that the revenues of the department of the government are secure.

I thought I'd just clarify that, first off, the department is responsible, as you see, for the income taxes – personal, corporate, hotel, insurance, and tobacco taxes – and not directly responsible for any policies with respect to education property taxes, which reside in Municipal Affairs.

Other revenue sources such as royalties would be with the Ministry of Energy. Gaming would be in the Gaming ministry, though we work on one of our strategic priorities, five of which I thought I'd outline, one being the revenue management framework. In addition to the collection and policy with respect to the taxation we work with all of the departments and, clearly, closely with Finance with respect to what we refer to as a revenue management framework, making sure we have the right planning for revenue streams for now and into the future to see that we will have sufficient revenues to meet the needs of the services and programs that the government will need to deliver in the future.

Another strategic area is the endowment funds. The department is responsible for the investment policies, risks, and management of the endowment funds: the heritage fund, the foundation for medical research endowment fund, the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, the Alberta heritage science and engineering research endowment fund. So we are working hard at strengthening these funds and their policy aspects to ensure that they're affordable. We look to inflation-proof even the heritage fund as we go forward.

We are working hard with respect to our investment organization and management division. There are a number of things we're working with. This organization manages a portfolio of about $40 billion.

I thought I might mention that one of the areas of growth in resources is in this division. Last year alone on this $40 billion we added over a hundred million dollars over and above our benchmarks that we set for trying to assess performance. So we have added substantial value to all of these funds in earnings performance over the past year in record. That continues to be very critical to us, to ensure that we have the right resources for electronic service delivery, developing techniques to implement tactical market decisions quickly, keeping pace with evolving industry standards, enhancing data integration, risk management, straight-through processing, just a number of the things that face this division continuously.

Also, the fourth area I thought I might highlight quickly: securities regulation. Alberta is strongly committed to improving the efficiency of our capital markets, Alberta's capital market in particular. We are leading and actively promoting the development of an efficient, cost-effective provincial and pan-Canadian system of securities regulation. We chair a committee of provincial ministers with respect to securities regulation and are actively working toward ensuring that we have the best regulatory structures for capital markets in this country.

Fifthly, I thought I'd touch on our tax administration. As I'd mentioned, with the scope and size of revenues as they continue to increase in the province, the growth in the economy, and the growth in the revenue streams, it becomes even that much more important that we ensure that we have the right personnel, auditors, compliance to ensure that the full amount of revenues as would be due by the individuals are collected and it's fairly applied and to ensure that the compliance is met. We have addressed that by ensuring that additional resources are going into our department in this respect for hiring of systems personnel, and we will continue to over the next three years.

Certainly, in response to some of the Auditor General's comments we have actively been working towards a few things such as: we've updated our assessment of risk in each of the tax programs; we've determined the auditor coverage required to refine the assessment and assess the risk, and our budget contains a three-year plan to improve audit coverage; and the recruitment and facilities plan has been developed, and the first stage of recruitment is underway. So we're very pleased with the organization we have and the maturity of that and the resources that are allowed to ensure that the revenues are there for the future to provide for the needs of Albertans.

I'll conclude my remarks there and be happy to entertain any questions as they arise.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have some questions for the minister with respect to the heritage trust fund. I noticed in the February 25 news release from Alberta Revenue that the trust fund saw a total return of $2 billion, with $703 million being transferred to the general revenue fund. I guess my first question to the minister is: with the huge surpluses that the government and the province experience, why does the fund continued to be tapped for programs? Is this not the time when the . . .

An Hon. Member: We didn't hear that.

Dr. Massey: I said: why is money being taken from the fund to support programs? It seems to me that this would be an ideal time to inflation-proof the fund and to build it up. In all the door-knocking that I've done and every time the heritage trust fund comes up, many Albertans consider it, whether the government does or not, a rainy day fund. They look at it as something fairly sacred that shouldn't be touched unless absolutely necessary. I think some of that came through in the two surveys that the government did on the fund. There's a very protective attitude towards the fund. So I guess my first question would be: why is the fund still being drawn down?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to your question about the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the income has been, as you know, for years taken and put towards general revenues. In fact, it has been the policy for some number of years that that be the case. By legislation we are required once the debt is repaid to actually inflation-proof the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, to retain sufficient dollars to do that. So it is actually policy that we will, and we have a commitment and obligation even by legislation to do that. It then becomes a matter of timing and priority of use of the funds.

The heritage fund actually has been structured as an endowment fund so that the proceeds of the income would have a purpose, and that purpose has been to support the priorities of the government; therefore, that's why the income goes to general revenues.

As you've mentioned, Albertans do want us to see that this fund is retained for the future. They do want to see that we work towards retaining the real value of this fund, and therefore we do have the commitment to doing that. I would say that the priority when you come down to a choice of do you pay off your mortgage or do you invest in your savings for the future for your retirement are almost equivalent values. They're both good choices. It would be a very good choice to actually retain money in the heritage fund and build it up and have more income, but it's equally advantageous to get rid of the risk of the debt, pay off the debt and, therefore, not have any more interest expense. So you actually improve your financial position by an equivalent amount, and then it's subject to which one performs better.

Obviously, last year we made more income. The two years before we actually had losses and were better by paying off debt. But you do get rid of obligations to other third parties by paying off debt and not being bound to those, and it's a very wise and a prudent strategy, just as you would suggest: why not pay off your own mortgage. That improves your own net worth as an individual and your own financial stability to have that. So they're both good choices. It has been a priority selection of Albertans to tell us also to pay off debt, and that's why we take that approach first.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. To the minister again with respect to the fund. He mentioned that once the debt was paid off, the fund would be inflation-proof. Is that all that's going to be done?

Mr. Melchin: It's an obligation to do that as a minimum. Whether or not there could be more in future surpluses to add to the growth of the fund are still other options. Clearly, I can't foresee or predict or forecast what those future decisions might be, but certainly once the debt is paid, those are options. In fact, even in our requirements right now surpluses have to go towards either paying off debt, which in this case would be gone, or building up other assets, capital fund or endowment funds like the heritage fund. So surpluses could very much in addition to inflation-proofing be added to the heritage fund if that was deemed to be the priority.

Dr. Massey: Could I ask: is that same investment strategy applied to the other funds that are managed?

Mr. Melchin: As you mentioned, there is the scholarship fund, the medical research fund, and the science and engineering in addition to the heritage fund. Do they employ the same strategy? We have an endowment policy committee. It actually has a number of private-sector individuals and two MLAs specifically charged with looking at the investment decisions of those four funds. They are not yet identical though their policy benchmarks for asset classes are moving towards the same. The reason is that they all have some long-term attributes. They are all expected to be here for well into the future and therefore can take a longer term investment strategy. So we do look at all of them having similar attributes for being able to invest in equities, not just public but private equities, and other asset classes other than just fixed income. So, yes, they have not quite identical but very similar, very close to the same, asset class mix.

Dr. Massey: Thanks for those answers.

I guess one last question about the heritage fund. The heritage fund's key performance measure used to be a four-year annualized market value rate of return measured against benchmarks established by the clients. This performance measure has been changed. Can we have the reason why?

Mr. Melchin: I wonder if you could quote the page you're referring to so I can get to that page.

Do you want to go ahead?

The Chair: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I could have the same general discussion with this minister as I had with the last one in terms of securing the long-term revenues of the government of Alberta in the days in the future when our royalty revenues inevitably diminish. Or perhaps the minister actually has a different view on the situation and feels that with the scale of the oil sands reserves we don't face any time in the foreseeable future a decline in our revenues from petroleum resources. So I'll start with that question. In looking down the road 10 years, 15 years, 20 years in the future, which I hope he's doing, does the minister see a time when the provincial government's revenue from petroleum resources of any kind starts to diminish, or will we be in a situation throughout the next 15 or 20 years where while conventional oil diminishes, nonconventional resources will cover off the downfall? Will we have a continuous flow of wealth in all?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. One of the main focuses in the department is a revenue management framework, and that is looking much more long term at all of the revenue sources so that we ensure that we have the right mix of revenues that could be sustainable well into the future. So in answer to that question: yes, we work very closely with Energy on their longer term outlook.

There's no way of guaranteeing, but when you look at the various scenarios, what reliability is there in revenue from energy sources? For the foreseeable future, certainly in the next 10 years – it's hard to ever predict oil and gas revenues in the sense that price is such a significant factor in the quantity of revenue. One of the greatest factors, we all know, is the volatility of price in commodities. So we know that we are subject to that volatility continuously as we rely upon it. Therefore, that's why the introduction of the sustainability fund, to try to take some of that volatility out. Though when you look over the long term, you should be able to predictably expect certain averages.

It is true that conventional sources of oil are already on a decline. You can go through this a little more with the Energy department when they come forward for their estimates. But gas, certainly, when you look at the next 10 years – it gets harder to forecast with any certainty when you look at 20 years. But when you look at the total oil sands, conventional and gas, certainly Alberta for the next foreseeable future has a good sustainable source of revenue from energy. Very subject to the volatility of price, but production volumes and the like are going to look fairly strong.

When you look at the oil sands, those are long-term projects, even beyond 10-year projects. They are really the 20-years-plus projects. We know that the reserves are there for substantially longer, and we know that as the billions of dollars are being invested, even our own revenue streams start transferring from 1 per cent of gross to 25 per cent after they've recovered their payout. So we start then increasing our revenue streams on the oil sands almost to offset declines in the other conventional oils.

So we have a very good source of energy from the oil and energy sector for years yet to come, but our forecast and planning is still trying to look and plan for beyond those dates because we all know that this is a declining resource. It's not renewable.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Would it be possible for the minister to share the framework or share the documents underpinning that framework with us in the Legislature?

Mr. Melchin: I'm not certain what it is that I can get published. We're dealing with estimates. I'll certainly take that under advisement and see what it is that we can share.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Now, in that same framework we talked about what I imagine is the line for nonrenewable resource revenues or some line like that. I assume that there's another line going out years and years for gambling. Maybe there isn't. So my first question is: is there?

Secondly, then, given the foreseen expansion in casinos over the next three to five years, what is the projected revenue expected to be from those casinos? Are we expecting a dramatic growth or more casinos with less take per casino? Certainly gambling is a major source of revenue. I assume that you've looked at that. What's down the road over the next few years in those revenues?

Mr. Melchin: In some respects when you get into a lot of these, they're policy choices. Those would be better answered more directly by the specific departments because the revenue sources from them are very significantly impacted by what policy choices you make. Just for example, tax rates. As we make those, that impacts revenue amounts. Our main revenue sources, as we plan forward, are items – the major items are not those items, though we do acknowledge the gaming revenues in our three-year business plan. You see it already in front of you. Rather than trying to speculate in estimates on all of those – it isn't the purview, really, of my own estimates to actually speculate on the revenue streams of all of those well into the future.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should just confirm right now, just a really quick question, if I heard the minister properly that he's – what was I hearing? I don't want to put words in his mouth on inflation-proofing the heritage trust fund. I heard some phrase in there, but I didn't catch it. What was he saying?

Mr. Melchin: We do acknowledge even by our own recent survey a little over a year ago that Albertans do value the heritage fund and want it kept there well into the future, and as such I would fully support and agree that that means that you need to inflation-proof that fund. If you don't, then you're actually eliminating it over time. What I did say is that it is required legislatively that that heritage fund be inflation-proofed once the debt is repaid. Right now we have the option to retain some funds to repay it, but once the debt is paid, it is actually a requirement to retain sufficient funds to inflation-proof it.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Do the same provisions apply to the other endowment funds like the heritage medical fund and the science and engineering fund?

Mr. Melchin: Those funds actually have different thresholds or requirements legislatively. The medical fund, for example, was started at $300 million, and it cannot go below $300 million, but by policy that's long since been changed. The ingenuity fund: we're trying to retain that value of $500 million.

But we're putting in further parameters. We've been working hard on the scholarship fund, on the medical fund, and on the science and engineering fund to ensure that they have policies, spending decisions like you would have in a pension fund, that ensure that the value of the fund is there. So, yes, inflation-proof.

We are actually implementing policies which we call a spending rule; i.e., that the funds should spend no more than a certain percentage of that fund each year. We set a target, actually, of 4 and a half per cent. So if they can spend no more than the last three years' average of the value of that fund, 4 and a half per cent – the fund is expected to earn closer to 7 per cent – over the long term that will ensure that those funds retain an inflation-proof value. That's how we're controlling it. That will give a predictable level of cash flow that you can spend for scholarships and for medical and science and engineering research. They get a predictable level of cash flow without worrying about the volatility of the fund from year to year, but over the long term it will ensure that the fund is also inflation-proofed. So by policy we are specifically implementing that.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. I think that this question relates to the discussion we're having. On page 368 of the business plan there's a term used. Actually, I think it may be used in several locations, but it's used there. The term is "superior investment returns." I am wondering: how is that defined? How would we know if you were having or not having a superior investment return?

Mr. Melchin: It's a hard question to answer. That's why we set benchmarks. For example, when we invest in – and I'll take the Canadian exchange – the TSX, we might invest in the top hundred companies on the TSX. If we took that specific index for those top hundred companies, our objective is to add value over and above what that performed. So when you employ fund managers, they are expected to perform better than the index of that fund. That would be true for bonds and for equities, and they will all be benchmarked so that we do have an ability to assess our fund managers as well as our overall performance.

Now, to give you an example of recent performance. I only have it for the nine months of last year since the year-end has not yet been reported. I did say that on these four endowment funds we have actually added over a hundred million dollars over and above our benchmarks in the last nine months of last year. That's the excessive performance in dollars on these four endowment funds being managed. So that's what should be the requirement, that we add value over and above what the index is. Otherwise, you would just passably invest it in some index.

That is the expectation. That is the performance measure, and it is something to which we ought to hold everyone accountable.

Dr. Taft: Okay. Thank you. Obviously, in taxes there's a constant concern of compliance. You know, are we actually getting the taxes that we hope to get through the laws and regulations we put into effect? How much are we losing? Which program areas does the minister feel have a high risk of noncompliance with tax laws? Where are we at the most risk here?

Mr. Melchin: When we look at the taxes that we collect, I don't know that you could say one is the most. On the personal income tax side, for example, we actually have an agreement with the federal government, that collects our personal income tax. That whole area of responsibility has actually been transferred to the Canada revenue agency, and we work with them. So the risk component to us actually is there, and we work with the federal government in this regard, but it is their direct responsibility by the agreements which we have. In that regard, we would say that we are still satisfied with the level of the compliance work that they are doing.

On the corporate income tax, for example, even in some of those areas we have an overlap with the federal government. We agreed that we will use the same calculation on taxable income. Our corporate income tax: we collect the tax, but we rely upon the federal government, also, in their audits of corporations, in the verification of the calculation of taxable income. So we have a dual role actually. The federal government does quite a bit of audit on the corporations, and then we do very much specific audits on things like the Alberta royalty tax credit. Those are some of the more difficult areas.

Now, as we're moving on the federal government's transitioning out of resource allowance into royalty deductibilities, that's going to be more problematic in that it will shift more burden to our department. That's why we have actually added more in our budget this year to add more compliance and audit staff to specifically manage that program. We've identified that as an area that has some complexity to it and, therefore, have addressed it by adding more people and resources.

Mr. Melchin: The Alberta royalty tax credit program is still in place. There's no policy decision yet anywhere on the table to remove it, so by policy, even in the business plan going forward, that still is there.

It's a very small component, really, of the royalty structures. You know, the royalty income the last year has been $7 billion, $6 billion in the previous years. It's price and volume driven. The lower the price, the higher the royalty tax credit. So when prices have been high like this, the credit is smaller. So it's $120 million, $130 million. It certainly can grow beyond that to $200 million, but in relative terms to the billions of dollars that are collected, it is a very minor component of the program. It has helped spawn development by the smaller companies to invest and has played a very integral part of the overall royalty structure inside it.

So there's no plan at this stage. The policy decision for that still resides in Energy, so you'd specifically have to question Energy on the policy of that. We administer the collection of it through the Alberta corporate income tax. That's how it's actually administered.

Dr. Taft: Is there a serious discussion occurring in this department on separating federal and provincial income tax processes so that we end up with what I think is in place in Quebec, a two-tax system? There has been talk of that kind of thing from time to time. Is that under active consideration?

Mr. Melchin: We have actively worked, actually, with the federal government. The Canada Customs and Revenue Agency is now its new name. They've approached us about even collecting our corporate income taxes, for that matter, and our other taxes. So we have specifically questioned back: well, let's make sure that we first understand the arrangement and the value that we receive on the personal income tax. So we've done quite a bit of work to understand that.

We've come back to the assessment that we are going to stay with the federal government in collecting personal income taxes. It would be too expensive for us. They actually subsidize it; that concerns me a little bit. With their organizational structure it costs them more – our arrangement for the personal income tax is that they keep the interest and penalties assessed on personal income tax to offset their costs of collection, administration, and compliance. We get the full amount of the personal income tax. They remit the full amount of the personal income taxes owing to us, and they keep the interest and penalties for the work. It actually costs them more than the interest and penalties that they collect. We are not about to set up an organization. That would be very difficult given that the numbers of filers personally is substantially more than the numbers of corporations, you know, the millions of Albertans. So the scope and size and magnitude to do that would be very complex, and we are not entertaining that.

With respect to corporate income tax we actually provide that service for substantially less than the cost of the interest and penalties, so quite likely we'll retain collecting our corporate income tax rather than having the federal government doing that for us. There are smaller numbers. Some of the programs are very particular to Alberta, like the Alberta royalty tax for example, so we still have by objective decided to retain collection of the others.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. About two weeks ago I asked the Premier during question period about the federal government program to eliminate income tax for armed forces personnel who are serving in particularly dangerous overseas theatres, and the Premier undertook to produce an answer at some time in the future and to consider the matter. Now, yesterday the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, whose riding contains a fairly significant proportion of people in the armed services, jumped on the bandwagon of that issue and put a similar question to the Premier, and the Premier this time provided something of an answer. But I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if I could ask the Minister of Revenue to explain exactly what is going to take place, what the provincial role in this is, if anything, and what he expects the cost of the program to be to the Alberta treasury.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you. Actually, that question was addressed to me yesterday, which I did answer. When we were first asked it, it is correct that we weren't certain of how the federal government immediately after their budget was going to implement this. Depending on how they chose to implement exempting military personnel when they're on dangerous missions overseas or otherwise, it could impact whether it applied as a direct flow through for Alberta taxes or not.

What we did find out and discover is that there will be clearly an exemption from the calculation of taxable income. Therefore, if it's not included in taxable income for federal purposes, we follow the same calculation of taxable income for provincial purposes. As a result, the military personnel will not pay federal or provincial income taxes. We do agree on our systems, that the only way to keep any ability for the federal government to collect our personal income taxes would be to keep some semblance of the same calculation of taxable income. It would get too complex for us to start developing our own rules for everything, and as such that's part of our tax collection agreement.

That will cost us approximately a million and a half dollars. Certainly, we're pleased to support our armed forces and see that that policy would follow through. They do outstanding work, and we're proud of the great work they do. We'll see that that will flow through to them.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I much appreciate that answer from the minister, and we were certainly pleased as well to support that direction and glad that the government is onside with it, even though it apparently would happen whether the government wanted it to or not. What I take from the minister's answer is that it's a federal decision. Nevertheless, I think the result is very positive.

I want to ask a sort of general question. It has to do with what the government sees its core finances as being. I ask this question in light of the longer term reduction in revenues as a result of oil and gas. Particularly a high proportion of our royalty revenue comes from natural gas, and it is a declining resource, notwithstanding the prospect of coal bed methane coming on stream.

We've also seen a dramatic increase over the past few years of government revenue that is sourced from gambling activities, and at the same time we're seeing a reduction, which I asked the Minister of Finance about, in our corporate income tax. I guess my question is: are we at risk of becoming too dependent on more volatile sources of revenue or nontraditional sources of revenue such as gambling revenue, and does the minister feel that our core income tax revenue is sufficiently strong that we can base government programs on those revenues with a view to maintaining stability? I'll just recall for the minister the decision a couple of years ago to cut some programs, including some programs for native children at risk and so on, because of a sudden drop in oil and gas prices. Does the government feel that the core revenues of this government will be vigorous enough that they will be able to sustain all of the necessary programs without those kinds of hiccups which result in disruption of program delivery to people who need them?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Yes. We do view that income taxes, the tax structures are core revenue sources, clearly. So when you're planning going forward long term, acknowledging that nonrenewable resources such as oil and gas – they are going to be there for some foreseeable future, but they sooner or later are a nonrenewable resource.

Therefore, you have to plan that income taxes or some form of taxes, whether it's the exact ones we have today or not, will always form a strong basis of any government. That's true of all governments, to form one kind of a tax or another for its core revenue.

Now, with respect to policies putting more dependence on volatile sources, I'd say that actually the converse has been the case. The example I'm going to give you already is the personal income tax policy of two or three years ago, when we reduced personal income taxes by about a billion and a half dollars by the policy to go to the single rate 10 per cent. We actually collect more today in absolute dollars than we did then, and the personal income tax stream has been continuously strong growing. Estimates, for example, this year are going to be $5 billion. Going forward, a forecast of $5.4 billion, growing to almost $5.8 billion in personal income tax. Very strong growth.

What has happened – and this is true also of tax planning – is that if you make taxes too punitive, especially on income kinds of questions, you drive a lot of the income sources either out of the jurisdictions, underground, and a whole bunch of ways to avoid tax. So making sure you have the right macroenvironment does a lot in attracting people, which is what has to happen. We broadened the base. We're actually collecting more in absolute dollars to provide it and actually have a more stable base for personal income tax than we had previously despite a lower rate.

Now let's take a look at the corporate income tax rates that we've been reducing. This year's forecast has an anomaly from some past years' adjustments which dropped it down to about $1.8 billion, but it's still in the $2 billion threshold. So despite that we've been reducing corporate income tax rates, our absolute dollars we're collecting aren't dropping. Even by reducing the corporate tax rate from 12 and a half down to 11 and a half per cent, we say that we're saving businesses, by that calculation, $142 million, yet in our forecast we're going to collect still an equivalent $2 billion going forward, because what's happening is that we are providing an economic macroframework that is attractive to people for investing.

These are not so anecdotal. They're very real about people choosing to invest money here, which creates the jobs for people, creates the jobs for Albertans, which creates the tax base. We need the companies to come here. We need the individuals to want to locate here. So you need good personal structures and you need good business structures in rates.

I have yet to find without exception – and I don't mean to say that we follow what New York fund managers are going to have to tell us, but we do have a $40 billion fund that we invest on behalf of the heritage fund and pension funds, and some of that we deploy to fund managers throughout the world. I've asked this invariably of all of the fund managers that we've ever used, and these are very large institutional people out of New York: tell me about Canada. I don't solicit their response or the direction they ought to take. They all say some wonderful things about Canada, and we do have a lot to be pleased about with this country. We have a great country. In rank to the world we have much to be pleased with.

What they all come back with is this "but," which I find very annoying, and it's not my personal bias. They actually feel a little: I don't want to offend you. I say: well, tell me what you're going to say. They say: in Canada you tax too much, and we actually get better returns by leaving our money right here in the United States versus investing our money in Canada.

Whether you call it real or not, it is true our tax rates are higher here than in the United States. The largest financial centre of the world views Canada as a small market and not a better place to invest than the United States. It's that type of thing that actually makes our climate destructive to growth and opportunity. So we can't ignore the world competitive market forces of attracting capital. You need the capital to finance the oil sands of the future. We need the capital intensive industries here in Alberta to grow. We need the marketplaces of not just New York, London, Tokyo but anywhere else in the world to want to come to Alberta and say: this is a great place to come and invest.

So tax rates are critical. It is some of the fundamental analysis they look at with respect to the return on their investments

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, you know I appreciate the minister's comments in that respect, but I would just caution him that when any investor gets a revenue minister in their office, they are going to tell that revenue minister that they'd really like to pay less taxes.

Notwithstanding what he said, there is a high rate of investment in Canada and Alberta, which in my view has a lot more to do with the opportunities that are presented by the people of this country and their education. Even their health care system has been cited as a significant advantage for employers locating here compared to the United States and certainly the continuing high prices for petrochemicals in the world. There's a world shortage, and Alberta has some conventional petrochemical reserves left and significant resources in the Athabasca oil sands as well.

I guess I would disagree with the minister. It's not the low corporate taxes particularly that are attracting the investment into this country, but it is the many other advantages we have, not the least of which is the fact we've got the oil and gas, and that's what's driving the boom in Alberta, in my view, not the government's tax policy. I would submit that if our corporate income taxes were not reduced from 15 per cent, we would still see a high level of investment in this province simply given the high price of oil and natural gas at the present time.

Mr. Melchin: Obviously, we'll agree to disagree on the point. If you think you can independently put taxes up and also have the same level of growth rates – when Canada actually went on a divergent path, which we did, our tax rates compared vis-à-vis United States in the '50s and '60s were comparable. Canada chose to go a path of substantially higher tax rates through the '70s, '80s, and '90s, and our growth rates through those periods of time and our actual wealth, GDP per person substantially lagged and got wider and wider.

Now, we've been improving in Canada over the last number of years, so we are starting to narrow the gap. We are starting to reduce the productivity gaps, and they are measured and quantified and known by investment managers throughout the world. We can say that, yes, it's a revenue minister, but I'll tell you that a guy out of Goldman Sachs, a chairman who used to work for the Federal Reserve Board, a very senior official, could certainly give you a whole different perspective on the world economy and marketplaces and the impact of not leaving sufficient dollars in the hands of those that make the high-risk investments to see that they can and will take the risk.

They can go anywhere in the world to do a lot of these kinds of projects. The oil sands in Alberta is not the only place in the world where there are even tar sands. There are other places where they have alternative choices for energy. It's true that we have a lot of good things like highly educated labour, and those add to the great attractiveness of Canada. We have some great things like that. That's true. But the economic questions, the real cost questions of tax rates have a major impact.

The attraction of other companies to Alberta. If you ask a lot of the companies that have come to Alberta, individuals as well, it's not just for taxes. Many of them add that it is part of the contributing factors to the decisions to locate right here, because of the fiscal environment that is attractive in Canada, not just even to the world but right in Canada as to the major reason for the prosperity, even beyond just the oil and gas sector. Tax rates: very significant in that equation.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Going back to a previous question, the performance measure that I was asking about is one that's on page 368 of the business plan. I don't have my last year's budget. If the minister doesn't have it right now, maybe we can get it later. The performance measure was changed.

Mr. Melchin: I've just got to make sure that I'm clear on which one we're talking about. The measure is the "five-year weighted average market value rate of return for endowment funds compared against the weighted average policy asset mix rate of return." Is that it?

Dr. Massey: Yes.

Mr. Melchin: Okay. We actually have been continually revising a number of our benchmarks to make sure that we've got the right indices. None of them come with: you've got the perfect benchmark. They come with pluses and minuses. So this one in that respect we felt was better. It's not that the other one was bad; it's just that we felt that this was better. The issue was that it was more reflective to move to this one.

We've always had some benchmarks that measured some long-term rates; a four-year average, for example. We just wanted to move to a five-year partially because we hadn't also had on all of these funds a five-year historical record to do it. On the heritage fund, for example, we'd just barely gone from a transition, which was solely fixed income, to a blended fund now, an endowment policy which has got equities and real estate. We haven't had a long enough period with that to actually move to a five-year, and that's why we're now going to the five-year.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. I wonder if the minister could comment upon the Auditor General's . . .

The Chair: Now, hon. member, we go to the 10 minutes. Do we have anyone?

Then you're on. Please continue.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. I wonder if the minister could comment on the Auditor General's observation and his recommendation that "the Ministry of Revenue decide how much more audit work it should do to minimize the risk of revenue loss from taxpayers and claimants not complying with tax legislation." He goes on for a couple of pages about some of the audits that they did and the money that was claimed and seems to raise the issue of there not being enough audit work done for us to really be assured that the money that the government is owed is actually being collected.

Mr. Melchin: We're actually very supportive of the Auditor General's recommendation. His recommendation was such that he didn't know if we had or had not. He asked: "Let's make sure that we're clear. Do we have the right amount of resources to do the work to ensure that the risk is sufficient in measuring compliance?" He said that he would want to over this next period of time work at that and get better answers to it. So that's what's he tasked our department to resolve.

In that respect we have come back saying that we needed more resources to appropriately manage the growing revenue streams that we have, and they are growing numbers of people, growing numbers of companies, individuals, and tax filers. So from that, we have increased this year's budget to add additional compliance, audit, and systems work in our department. The department has actively worked, as I'd mentioned previously, to assess the risk in each program. We've determined audit coverage requirements, what would be the right level of coverage of audit, and we refined those in the estimates to address those risks. We have a three-year plan to actually improve audit coverage.

We've already started on recruitment. We've been doing this through last year as well. Actually, this isn't new; this has been ongoing. As the province continues to grow, so do we need to have a sufficient number of people to administer and collect those revenue streams, a very important, a very vital part of all of the tax programs. They are voluntary compliance in most cases. You expect people by law to file a tax return, and you have to have means to know if they have or have not or if they've reported the right amount of income.

Those are all parts of sometimes voluntary compliance, and therefore you need sufficient levels of audit and compliance techniques to ensure that you've reduced the risk. In that respect, I'm pleased to report that we have been doing a good job. We assessed that we need to add more, and this budget also responds by adding more resources, individuals as well.

Dr. Massey: Just one more question, and it was again a recommendation from the Auditor General that the objectives of the tax-exempt fuel users program be evaluated and be made explicit.

Mr. Melchin: We have spent quite a bit of time examining the tax-exempt fuel use program, worked with the industries that are specifically involved. There is expansion of scope in that that has probably gone beyond its original purpose. Its purpose was to ensure that a lot of these industries are working off-road and are not necessarily using the infrastructure of roads, but we wanted to encourage economic development in the rural areas, be it in areas like forestry, oil and gas, and so forth, and encourage the investment. So the policy was to ensure that in those areas they wouldn't pay the fuel tax for that area that's directly associated with incurring the work and the investment activity for providing the work in that area.

So it meets a very viable policy objective that was established back in the '80s for that program. It still is ensuring that there's a good, strong industry of trucking and you name it, all of the people that are associated with off-road vehicles that are partially on and off and those that are entirely off. We've reviewed the program. We're satisfied that the program is still meeting objectives. We are looking at simplification aspects of that program right now to make it easier for compliance both for the reporters and for ourselves in monitoring compliance.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Given that we're down to the last four minutes or so, what I would like to do is just read some questions into the record, and perhaps the minister could respond in writing.

I'll try to give the page references here. Page 308 indicates that the department is expecting a lower rate of return, substantially lower actually, on the heritage savings trust fund compared to last year. Last year was a good year. But the basic question is: why are we expecting it to perform less well than we did last year?

Page 309 lists various tax streams coming into the department. How much loss of revenue did the department predict for this year because of the cigar tax cut? Likewise, what loss of revenue is predicted because of the elimination of the aviation fuel tax on international flights? Some numbers there would be helpful.

On the same page, page 309, the Revenue department is expecting to receive exactly $60 million in hotel room tax, not $60 million and 1 cent but exactly $60 million. Has there been any examination given to the possibility of dedicating that to tourism marketing, or would that be done perhaps under other departments?

On the next few pages, pages 310 to 313, there are reports on the various funds managed by the Revenue department. Some of these funds, like the Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and the heritage scholarship fund, see I believe some significant increases in management fees, and an explanation of that would be valuable. What's happening there?

Page 314 indicates that spending on insurance claims, premiums, and services will actually be very considerably less than last year. Assuming that that's realistic, that's a great thing. But what was the basis of that calculation? Why are we seeing that drop there?

On page 315 under Alberta Securities Commission we are seeing operating costs rise fairly significantly. It's about a 14 per cent rise, something like that. In any case it's fairly significant: a million and a half dollars. Why would that be? So on page 315 that's the operating costs of the Alberta Securities Commission. Why is that increase so considerable there?

Finally, on page 317 we're seeing the number of full-time equivalent employees of the ministry increase, especially in the department, significantly I think, at 31. Why? Maybe that can be explained as well.

With those questions, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat, and I think we can wrap up this discussion. Thank you.

The Chair: Are you ready for the vote on the estimates after considering the business plan and the proposed estimates of the Department of Revenue for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005?

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$50,660,000

The Chair: Shall the estimates be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Department of Finance and the estimates of the Department of Revenue and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following departments.

Finance: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $75,340,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $75,059,000.

Revenue: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $50,660,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 30

Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure at this time to move second reading of Bill 30, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004.

Prior to discussing in more detail the contents of Bill 30, I would like to provide some background to the Metis Settlements Act. The Metis Settlements Act was passed in 1990 along with three other pieces of legislation: the Metis Settlements Accord Implementation Act, the Metis Settlements Land Protection Act, and the Constitution of Alberta Amendment Act, 1990. Together these acts established the first and still only recognized form of Métis governments and land base in Canada.

The Metis Settlements Act established settlement governing structures and responsibilities and the authorities of the province. The legislation passed in 1990 recognized the Métis settlements as a form of local government in Alberta. Although the legislation provides powers of self-governance for the Métis settlements in many areas, it is important to remember that neither the settlements nor the Legislative Assembly intended that the legislation should be viewed as creating a form of self-government based on concepts of aboriginal rights.

The Constitution of Alberta Amendment Act, 1990, underscores the continuing jurisdiction of the Legislative Assembly and specifically indicates that the legislation was not intended to effect any aboriginal rights.

When the Métis settlements legislation was passed in 1990, it was recognized that many of the structures and processes that were being established were new to both the settlements and the province. Both the settlements and the province took the view that proceeding with the legislation at that time would provide the experience necessary to evaluate its effectiveness and that eventually changes would likely be required. It has now been nearly 14 years since the legislation came into force in November 1990. While some minor changes were made to the Metis Settlements Act in 1998, it was apparent then and even more obvious now that significant changes are required to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of settlement governments.

A significant effort was made in 1999 to bring forward legislative amendments. That effort was not successful as critical issues could not be resolved. Since then, the problems that were identified in the legislation have continued to have a significant impact on the ability of the settlement governments to make decisions and to provide accountable and transparent governance for the communities.

Most importantly, the requirement that general council policies which use laws that govern the action of the eight settlements in the most significant areas receive the unanimous approval of all settlements has proven to be a barrier to good governance. Policies use laws that govern the actions of the eight settlements. The requirement for unanimity led to a situation in the spring of last year where the settlements were forced to ask the minister to pass a regulation to establish the budget of the general council and the allocation of funds to the individual settlements. The unanimity requirement has also been a barrier to the settlements arriving at compromise solutions to other critical issues such as how to allocate revenues associated with resource development.

Bill 30 would remove the unanimity requirement and provide that general council policies can be approved by six of the eight settlements. The elimination of the unanimity requirement will mean that one settlement cannot defeat the policy-making process by simply not showing up to a meeting. The settlements will now have to seek approaches that are based on the reconciliation of their individual views and interests. At the same time, it recognized that it is possible that future general council policies could unfairly disadvantage a particular settlement. As a result, Bill 30 provides that the general council can establish criteria for appeals on the basis that a policy unfairly discriminates against a settlement. The Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal would deal with those appeals.

Another area that has been identified as creating instability at the local settlement level is the current system of annual staggered elections. Currently every year in May elections are held for two of the five council positions. This system hinders long-term planning and the ability of settlement members to hold their elected representatives accountable for the implementation of longer term strategies. Holding the elections in May was also identified as a problem since the settlement budgets went from April to March. With the potential turnover of two-fifths of the settlement council a month after the beginning of the fiscal year, there have been concerns regarding the effectiveness of the budgeting process.

As a result of these problems, it is proposed to amend the current election system to provide that settlement elections will be held every three years in October for all five council positions. These changes will provide for greater stability at the local political level and enhance the settlements' capacity for long-term operational and fiscal planning.

While there has been significant progress in improving the effectiveness of the settlement governments, settlement members continue to express concerns regarding the accountability of their governments. Mr. Speaker, while not all of these concerns are justified, the lack of effective mechanisms to deal with allegations made by settlement members contributes to an atmosphere of mistrust.

As a result, Bill 30 contains a regulation-making power to enable the minister to establish a Métis settlements ombudsman to review and investigate complaints regarding the management of the affairs of the settlements. Since April 2003 a Métis settlements ombudsman has been in place operating under powers delegated to him by the minister. The proposed amendment will provide an improved legislative foundation for this important function.

One of the important components of the governing structure for the settlements is the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. This tribunal was the first one established in Canada to deal with issues arising out of the governance of aboriginal communities. Dealing primarily with issues arising out of land allocation and membership decisions by settlement councils, the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal has made a significant contribution to the good governance of the settlements.

Bill 30 contains amendments to adjust the process of appointing members to the appeal tribunal, seeking to further depoliticize the process and to provide additional opportunities for settlements to have input into the selection process.

In addition, Bill 30 provides significant new authorities to the tribunal. Currently the Metis Settlements Act provides that the minister responsible for the act has the power, if the affairs of a settlement are being managed in an irregular, improper, or improvident manner, to issue directives to settlement councillors or staff to dismiss them. This authority would be transferred to the appeal tribunal. As most of the tribunal members are from the settlements, this means that settlement members would be responsible for determining whether a settlement's affairs are being properly managed and to determine the consequences if they are not.

There are a number of other minor amendments that are being made that relate to the appeal tribunal. These amendments address matters pertaining to the Land Access Panel, which deals with surface rights matters; the establishment of an executive committee; and the responsibilities of the chair. In addition, as I mentioned before, the appeal tribunal would be empowered to deal with appeals by settlements that allege that a policy discriminates against them.

The majority of the amendments pertaining to the appeal tribunal will not be proclaimed immediately to allow time to prepare for their implementation.

There are a number of amendments regarding the making of general council policies. One of the most difficult questions facing the settlements is the issue of how to deal with individuals who have been members but have reacquired their status as Indians under the Indian Act. Currently the Metis Settlements Act provides that if a settlement member regains Indian status after November 1, 1990, settlement membership is lost. This provision was included in an attempt to preserve the Métis-ness of the settlements. This provision has led to serious divisions within some communities.

Bill 30 would enable the Métis Settlements General Council to make a policy that would have the effect of altering the current provisions of the act. This approach is based on the belief that the settlements themselves are best positioned to arrive at a new approach that can lead to reconciliation.

Additional policy-making powers to enhance the operations and accountability of the general council are included in Bill 30. These additional policy-making powers focus on such areas as the election and roles of general council officers, internal rules and procedures, conflict of interest, financial management, and human resource policies.

Bill 30 would also change the relationship of the minister to the process of making general council policies. Currently the general council can ask the minister to make a regulation about anything on which the general council can make a policy. This is what happened last year, when the general council was unable to pass the policy to establish a general council budget and to allocate funds between the settlements.

Bill 30 would enable the minister to address future situations where the general council was unable to pass policies necessary for the proper operation of the general council or individual settlements. The minister would have the authority to make regulations in areas subject to general council policies without the request of the general council. Such regulations would be in force for a maximum of two years and would be repealed if the general council were to make a policy to deal with the matter. Such an amendment is necessary to ensure that the basic components of good governance are in place if the general council cannot do so itself.

There are a number of other amendments that are included in Bill 30. The bill provides that every five years the general council can submit to the minister proposals to change the Metis Settlements Act directed at the creation of a more culturally appropriate and effective self-governance structure. The minister responsible for the administration of the act would be required to consider and respond to the proposals from the general council. This amendment was requested by the general council to ensure that the further evolution of settlement governing structures will be reviewed at least once every five years.

There was also an amendment to include a section outlining the purpose of the Metis Settlements Act. This amendment is being included to provide those who are working with the legislation a better understanding of the background and the purpose of the act. Another amendment ensures that subdivision approvals made by settlements since the dissolution of the Métis Settlements Transition Commission in 2002 are valid.

In conclusion, the amendments in Bill 30 are intended to provide for more effective decision-making, greater political stability, and enhanced accountability. Settlements have made significant progress since 1990. The amendments contained in Bill 30 will enhance the capability of the settlement governing institutions to meet the needs of their communities.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to support Bill 30 in second reading. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened to the comments from the member opposite carefully. I appreciated them. I appreciated his consultation with me a couple of months ago.

These are difficult issues. We're dealing here with issues of the very nature and manner in which parts of our society govern themselves, and we're looking at changing those procedures and those processes through this bill. We in the opposition have received various concerns about how the bill was developed and the processes it's proposing and have had correspondence and phone calls and conversations from people who are indicating that they are seriously opposed to this bill.

It seems to me – and I will claim no expertise in this area at all – that the most important aspect of this bill is rearranging the requirement for unanimous agreement on the general council to vote and make decisions and move forward. I find myself wondering what the discussions were at the time that the decision was made to have unanimous agreement for the votes on the Métis general council, for it does seem to me to be an awfully tight way to tie a group's hands. It basically, as I understand it, makes an all-or-nothing kind of situation for every vote on the council. It does seem like it will inevitably deadlock the work of the general council.

So I can see the common sense, if that's the word to use, in rearranging the voting structure and decision structure of the Métis general council and shifting from the unanimous requirement to a requirement for 6 out of 8 with the provision of an appeal, as I read the legislation.

This is a tough spot, because with the number of portfolios we each carry in the opposition, we haven't had the opportunity to consult extensively on this. My inclination right now, however, is to say that despite the correspondence that we've received, which appears to raise legitimate concerns about the process, there is simply an element of compelling good sense in the proposals put forward in this legislation.

While I feel torn, I guess I have to ultimately fall back on my own understanding and my own sense of what's going to work in the long run and what isn't. I am inclined to support the arguments presented by the government and the sponsoring member here, and I'm inclined, perhaps with some reluctance, ultimately to support the government's position on Bill 30.

So those are my comments for now. I know this will come back for further debate. As our opening position it's a judgment call given our limited knowledge and limited time, but this seems ultimately to make sense. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 30 as well, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004, and I must confess that I, as well, am rather torn in connection with this bill. I think the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake has made a good case about the requirement for unanimity in the council being a potential source of deadlock.

I want to indicate, however, that we've had conversations with and consulted with people from the Métis Settlements General Council and that there have been concerns, which I'd like to place on the record, about the limited nature of the consultations which were done in the preparation of this bill. I think that that is a concern.

There are a number of other concerns that have been raised. I think the only one that I want to talk about a little bit is the move to increase ministerial powers relative to a Métis settlement and the general council; for example, the ability of the minister to as they say force the hand of the general council on matters that the general council may have already considered and decided not to pass as policy. There are aspects of ministerial vetoes and so on.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the province has always maintained tight control over the settlements and the councils. Even when they moved away from appointing representatives to having elected representatives, the legislative and financial control is really all the government needs to keep the system working the way they wish. I want to give an example of the increased control of the minister. For example, one amendment removes the appeals of election results to the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal, whose chair is appointed by the minister, so there are elements here, I think, that bear investigation.

This information is based on consultations that we have conducted. If they are not correct, then I hope that the hon. member who's sponsoring the bill will stand up and say so.

In general, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government should go further in reducing government control and influence over Métis settlements; in fact, move towards eliminating it altogether.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my chair. I hope that the hon. member will have an opportunity either here or in committee to respond to some of these concerns.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you. I'd like to ask for the question, but I would like to offer to the members that had posed some questions that I will respond fully to them when we go to Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 30 read a second time]

The Clerk Assistant: For second reading, Bill 27, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2004, hon. Mr. Melchin.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Question.

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order

Unanimous Decision of the Assembly

Mr. Mason: I would ask if the chair could maybe enlighten me with respect to the question of a unanimous vote on a voice vote. If he doesn't hear any voices raised in opposition, is it considered in the record to be a unanimous vote?

The Deputy Speaker: If there are no votes to the contrary, that's the assumption, yes. On an important bill like this, then if anyone is opposed to it, they should speak up, or in support of it they should speak up, and no one did, unless somebody corrects me and they heard and I was unable to hear.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: No. We have a point of order, and I've replied to the point of order. Is there further comment from the hon. Government House Leader on the point of order?

If not, then maybe we could continue with the introduction and movement of Bill 27.

An Hon. Member: Question.

The Deputy Speaker: No. He hasn't moved anything yet.

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Melchin: I'd like to move second reading of the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2004, Bill 27.

This bill, just briefly, is a business tax reduction strategy of the government to reduce corporate income tax rates, presently at 12 and a half per cent, to 11 and a half per cent and the small business rate from 4 to 3 per cent effective April 1 of 2004. This means reductions of the general corporate income tax to the second lowest, and the small business tax rate is now currently tied with New Brunswick for the lowest among the provinces. This will save Alberta businesses about $142 million in this fiscal year.

Further amendments introduced in this bill are in response to some of the federal resource taxation legislation changes so that we can accommodate their changes. It does get into allowing corporations to continue to deduct the resource allowance or Crown charges, whichever is greater, until December 31, 2006. It sets an expiry date of December 31, 2013, on the royalty tax deduction program. It allows the Alberta royalty tax credit and royalty credits for individual trusts to remain nontaxable for Alberta purposes. It maintains a level playing field between corporate and individual and trust claimants by ensuring that Alberta's policy framework on resource taxation for corporations is similar to that for individuals and trusts.

It has some administrative concerns such as maintaining Alberta's small business threshold of $400,000. It ensures that corporations moving into Alberta from provinces which collect their own corporate taxes cannot claim excessive discretionary deductions due to different federal and provincial balances and requires corporations to file additional information concerning assessments from other jurisdictions only when there are changes in tax balances assessed by the other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, those are the main elements of the bill. I'd urge all members to support Bill 27.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, the Alberta New Democrat opposition will not be supporting this bill to cut taxes for corporations. Now, I could say that I was shocked and appalled. I am not shocked, but I am appalled that this government is proceeding with what we consider a reckless course of action.

We had an opportunity to have a little bit of dialogue with the Minister of Revenue previous to this in his estimates. I remain completely unconvinced that cutting corporate taxes is necessary for the economic growth of this province, and I'm very, very concerned that this has been made a priority by the government and at the expense of other priorities.

It may surprise some members opposite to know that we in the New Democrat opposition are not necessarily opposed to tax cuts. The question is: which taxes and which people pay those taxes? So we think that it's time to assess some of the other opportunities that the government could have taken advantage of in order to reduce taxes.

Now, in the area of postsecondary education, Mr. Speaker, of course tuition has tripled in the past decade. You know, in a way, in a very real way, the tuition fees are a tax – they're a fee for education – and, in fact, participation in postsecondary education in Alberta is amongst the lowest in the country.

When we were dealing with the Minister of Learning's estimates in the Public Accounts Committee yesterday morning, it was very interesting that a significantly increased number of people in this province, according to their own measures, now consider postsecondary education to be too expensive. It's moved from the range of – well, I won't try and go from memory, but it's been a 15 or 20 per cent increase over two or three years, Mr. Speaker, who think that postsecondary education is out of reach for them. So the question that I have to ask is: why are we continuing to increase tuition fees for postsecondary institutions, those very institutions that people's taxes pay for, and at the same time cut corporate taxes?

The second one, of course, that has been raised a number of times is the question of health care premiums. Now, we know that these are a tax because the revenue doesn't go to pay directly for the health care system. This money flows directly into general revenues, and it's a substantial source of revenue for this provincial government.

Every family, unless they're at a very low income, pays exactly the same, so there's no flexibility or no variability in what is paid according to income. A poor family pays as much as a wealthy family. It is a very, very regressive tax and an unfair tax and, Mr. Speaker, one that we think the government should get rid of. We urge them to at least get rid of it for seniors, and we're going to try and apply as much pressure as we can as the New Democrat opposition on this government to eliminate health care premiums for seniors before the next election. So I hope that the government is willing to listen to the opposition on this matter.

Nevertheless, health care premiums would put money directly in the pockets of Alberta families. The problem with a corporate tax cut is that many of these corporations don't necessarily have their base in this province, but they operate in this province. They'll receive the tax cut, and they'll spend the money in Texas or in Toronto or somewhere else. So there's no guarantee that there's going to be an increase in spending in this province as a result of a corporate tax cut, but if you cut health care premiums, there would be a direct and immediate increase in spending in the economy by families right here in this province. So we think families should come ahead of corporations, particularly foreign corporations, in terms of the government's priorities for tax cuts. Yet here we go: health care premiums stay, and corporate taxes go down.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there is a whole raft of increases in various user fees contained in this budget, and there was in the last budget as well. I think that, you know, the government should consider why it wants to increase a whole raft of user fees when it is cutting taxes for corporations.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm tempted to go on and on about this, but I'm not going to, given the hour. I just want to place on the record once again the very clear and strong and principled opposition of the Alberta New Democrats to this corporate tax cut and would point out that we have been very consistent in this opposition all the way through and will continue to do so.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this evening we spoke about the revenue framework that the Minister of Revenue apparently has somewhere in his office and may share little bits and pieces with us. But we don't know the big picture here from the government's side, and based on their work and the expertise they consult with on preparing that, we're at a disadvantage here.

I must confess to a real concern that we are not putting ourselves in a fiscal position that in the long term is sustainable. I am concerned – and I've had economists talk to me about this – that we are in fact cutting taxes so far in Alberta that if the petroleum industry hits the skids, as it does from time to time, we're in a crisis. We return to the kinds of problems that we faced in the later '80s. In fact, the tax cuts that have been brought in during this flush of prosperity, this boom that we're having right now, will have to be reversed when the boom ends, and end it will. Every boom at some point goes on long enough that people begin to think this is going to go on forever. I've been there. We've probably all been there. They don't go on forever.

While there are some parts of this bill that I like, I just wish I had confidence that there was a solid framework behind it. I am generally concerned that while taxes are undoubtedly an important consideration in stimulating economic activity and in generating prosperity and wealth, they're not the only consideration.

We do need in place a strong education system, for example. There are dramatic cases – Ireland comes to mind – of a country that turned around its entire economy by investing heavily in education. So education is important to our prosperity.

A good health care system is. Our health care system in Canada is an enormous competitive advantage over our biggest competitor in the global marketplace, and that's the U.S.

Quality of life issues are important: spending money and having sufficient money for police, for parks, or for all kinds of things that make for a quality of life. More and more evidence is showing, good solid evidence on economic development and prosperity, that quality of life is the key to attracting and holding the people who create a strong economy.

Another factor that is crucial to a successful economy is something as basic as roads. If members of this Assembly will turn to the business plan of the Department of Transportation, they will see that year after year the plan is for worse and worse roads in Alberta. This government is planning for the roads of this province to steadily and markedly deteriorate. It's as deliberate as can be. It's in the plan. The reason for that is that there's apparently not enough money available to maintain our roads.

So when those components of the government's responsibility are not getting proper attention, then I do worry that tax cuts may not be in order. On the other hand, in this province, because we have unbelievable natural wealth, the government continues to run surpluses. So there is enough money to meet many competing needs at once, and we're in a luxurious, perhaps too luxurious, position.

The tax cuts proposed in Bill 27 will cost the province about, I believe, $142 million a year. Certainly, given the size of the surpluses the last several years, that's an affordable amount, it seems, the way things are at the moment. But who is that $142 million going to go to? Well, in some cases it's going to go to small business owners, and you know what? I like that. That's part of this bill that I like, and it may be on the basis of that alone that we may end up supporting this bill.

Perhaps the minister could fill us in during committee: how much of that $142 million is going to small business owners, and how much will go to corporations? I am concerned that the portion going to the larger corporations isn't going to stay in Alberta. In fact, this is a tax cut for people outside of Alberta and, indeed, people outside of Canada, and I'm not at all convinced that we need to do that. I'd love to see everything possible done to grow the local small business community and grow small businesses into medium-sized and large businesses so that we end up with a huge corporate sector based right here in Alberta.

I think of countries like Korea. Forty years ago Korea was the poorest of the poor countries, a war-torn Third World country. Today you buy Korean cellphones; you buy Korean cars; you buy Korean television sets. A magnificent job of developing their economy. The same thing done in Taiwan; the same thing done in Japan; the same thing done in Singapore. They built those up through cultivating their own economies. I'm concerned that instead of us doing that, we're giving tax breaks to people outside of this province. So the long-term wisdom of this I really have to question.

I would very much prefer and I know that all of us in the opposition caucus would very much prefer a tax cut that went to everybody. We've hammered away on this for years, and that is eliminating health care premiums, a larger tax cut which raises questions of affordability, I fully acknowledge, but it's a tax cut that would benefit virtually every Albertan one way or another. So that would be an exciting tax cut to see.

In the end, I think because of the support here to small business we will support this bill, but I think we'll wait and see how the debate goes during committee and how some of the details work out before we – well, in fact I don't expect myself to wholeheartedly support this because I can't see where it fits into the larger framework of sustainability. If through the debate in committee I'm convinced that this is part of a big plan that's credible and makes sense, then more power to the government. As it is right now, I have concerns about the general corporate tax cut here.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and look forward to debate in committee. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue to close debate.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just two quick comments. We have actually acted first for individuals before businesses got tax cuts. That was the plan all along. We gave a billion and a half dollar tax cut to individuals. That happened a few years ago. Personal income tax was a substantial cut.

We'll be happy to respond to the remaining issues in committee. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

House are clamouring for the next bill to come forward, but I have to resist that and move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

[Motion carried; at 10:53 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know members of the

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 22, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/04/22

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Let us keep ever mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work let us find strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we're very privileged to have guests from the Pacific Northwest Economic Region visiting legislators and ministers in our Legislature Building. Just prior to coming into the House, we had a number of members who met with them over lunch, and they will be meeting with a number of ministers throughout the afternoon. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly two of the three guests who are with us today. Unfortunately, Representative Jeff Morris of the Washington State Legislature is not able to join us for question period. He will however be returning very shortly.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you Mr. Matt Morrison, who is the executive director of PNWER, Pacific Northwest Economic Region. Jeff hails from Seattle. Joining him in your gallery is Mr. Marvin Schneider, who is with our own International and Intergovernmental Relations. He is the director for U.S./Mexico relations and has been working diligently with Mr. Morrison and Mr. Morris in facilitating their meetings throughout the day. I ask that they rise and receive the normal warm welcome of all members in the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Catherine Ripley of my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. Catherine is here this afternoon to observe the estimates of the Department of Learning, which come before the House this afternoon. In addition to being a great parent of two teenage children, one of whom attends Harry Ainlay high school and the other attending Strathcona composite high school, she has for the past number of years been the chair of the Whitemud Coalition of Schools, an organization for which I have a great deal of respect and which I've had the opportunity to work with over the past number of years. Catherine and the coalition do invaluable surveys of the schools in our area and provide me with a great deal of information with which I can harass the Minister of Learning from time to time, and I take the opportunity to do, and it's great background and help to an MLA to have that kind of support. If that doesn't take up enough of her time, she's the author of children's books. I'd ask Catherine to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly eight very special guests from the Bruderheim seniors' centre seated in the members' gallery, all very strong volunteers in the community of Bruderheim. They are Helen Romanchuk, Iris Penonzek, Ron Martineau, Mona Bovell, Des Bovell, Eileen Loeffelmann, and Alfred Loeffelmann. I would ask all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's a unique occasion and a pleasure to introduce to you and through you a Polish television camera crew that is visiting us in the members' gallery, led by Mrs. Agata Konarska, and assisting her is Mrs. Madej, a member of our Edmonton Polish community. I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of our Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce 11 people that work in my department. These people work in an area that is really a hidden jewel in my bureaucracy and in my department, and it's a hidden jewel that the hon. Leader of the Opposition and I have had discussions about before. They're from the Learning Resources Centre. I would ask Ruth Juliebo, Whitney Masson, Renice Richel, David Chowne, Lois Rogers, Bill Vandermeer, Edd Semeniuk, Donna Vincent, Cathy Daoust, Susan Graham, Tim Tornberg – I do apologize for my pronunciation of those names – to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to the Assembly and to you somebody who has driven many, many miles to come here today to watch the proceedings of the Assembly. He's seated in the public gallery. He's the principal of not one but two schools in Bow Island, Alberta. His name is Stuart Angle, and I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of all MLAs.

Thank you.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and to members assembled 44 students from Win Ferguson community school in Fort Saskatchewan. They're accompanied by their teachers Mr. Jeff Spady and Mrs. Joanne Simpson as well as parent helpers Mrs. Bonnie Bowes, Mr. Paul Kristensen, Mr. Ernie Hansen, Mrs. Deb Parent, and Mrs. Vicki Kippen. I would ask that they please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the honour and the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to members of this Assembly 56 bright and energetic students from the Red Deer Christian school. They are accompanied by their teachers Mrs. Carolyn Stolte and Mr. Jim Driedger and by their parent helpers Mrs. Marilyn Pleadwell, Mrs. Elaine Campbell, Mr. Alan Ten Hove, Ms. Chris Thiessen, Mr. Gordon Smith, and Mrs. Sheila Van Alstyne. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a number of members of the International Order of Odd Fellows and Rebekahs. I had the opportunity recently to be a judge at a public speaking contest for young people that is organized by the local chapter of the Odd Fellows and Rebekahs, and what a wonderful group of young people they were. They are going to be a credit to this House some day. Their speeches were tremendous. I'd like to extend my appreciation to the Odd Fellows and Rebekahs. The winner, I believe, gets a trip to the United Nations, and I think it was a wonderful part of the work that this group does. So I'd like Florence Ponto, Arlene Coates, Bob Whalen, and Marilyn Nichols to please rise. Also, the gracious hostess accompanying them is my new constituency assistant, Mary MacKinnon, and I'd like her to rise as well and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature Mr. Albert Mastromartino. He's the president of the Nissan Canada Foundation. Mr. Mastromartino joins us today following a very special event celebrating the donation of three brand new vans provided by the Nissan Canada Foundation, Ericksen Nissan, and Mills Nissan for use by the Meals on Wheels program. I'd like to commend both the Nissan Canada Foundation and Meals on Wheels for making a very real difference in the lives of seniors in terms of their health and independence. I'd ask Mr. Mastromartino, who is seated in your gallery, to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a constituent of mine who is here to observe the proceedings this afternoon. Lynn Odynski is an Edmonton public school board trustee. I would ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Travel Expenses

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's cabinet, unlike those in other provinces, exempts itself from freedom of information legislation and is strangely reluctant to release detailed information on the travel and entertainment expenses of the Premier and his ministers. There is no reason the Premier can't make public photocopies of cabinet expenses. My questions are to the Premier. Given that a photocopier can copy a thousand pages in 18 minutes for $10, why doesn't the Premier just photocopy Executive Council's receipts and make them public?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we are evaluating the way we handle expenses. But I would remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that it's not so much the revelation of expenses – and that's not a problem for us; it's not a problem – but it's how much government spends.

If they were really concerned, they would look at their Liberal cousins in Ottawa and see the opulence, the extravagance, and the use of taxpayers' dollars to fund the swimming pool and all the trappings of 24 Sussex, to accommodate the huge living room that occupies the A320 Air bus that the Prime Minister flies around in, to accommodate the four or five Challenger jets that were bought at taxpayers' expense to cart ministers and MPs back and forth and to and fro, to accommodate the multitude of security people around the Prime Minister, to accommodate his stretch limousines, to accommodate the lavish dinners that he holds. They should be talking about that instead.

Dr. Taft: Given that other governments are able to post their cabinet ministers' expense receipts on the web for everybody in Canada to see within three months, why doesn't this government do the same?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, we are evaluating the way that we report our expenses, and that will be reported. We are not going to take the advice of this Liberal opposition, which, by the way, wasn't elected to be the government. We will do what is right, what is open, and what is transparent. The simple fact is that a $27.50 jug of orange juice comes nowhere near the opulence and the extravagance of their Liberal cousins in Ottawa.

Dr. Taft: How does the Premier explain to Albertans that they aren't allowed to see these receipts when they pay the tab?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the expenses are reported yearly to Public Accounts.

The $10,000 that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar spent to travel across the bridge, the $10,000 he spent last year to travel to and fro and wherever, is reported to Public Accounts. The only difference is that they do not post their expenses or details of those expenses on the web site. Instead, he just says, "I spent $10,000 to travel within the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar," which you can spit across.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question.

Health Care Reforms

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals are committed to a strong public health care system, a commitment shared by most Albertans. What Albertans do not want are taxes on the sick and health care based on what one can afford instead of what one needs. The best way to meet legitimate health care needs is through a public health care system, yet this government has said that everything is on the table when it comes to health care reform. To the Premier: will the Premier reassure Albertans here and now that this government will not introduce health care user fees?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition pointed out, everything is on the table. While it's not our intention to go out of our way to contravene the Canada Health Act, there may be some things in the reforms that could. As he pointed out, everything is indeed on the table.

Relative to the caucus discussion today our caucus was adamant that we need to take bold steps now to make sure that we have a health system that is there for us in the future. All the premiers, all the ministers of health fully agree that the system we know now is simply not sustainable, and it will bankrupt a number of provinces. Although it might not bankrupt Alberta, the costs of providing funding for health care are very severe indeed.

At caucus today the Health and Wellness minister laid out what he called a road map for reform. He spoke in very, very broad, general principles about cost pressures in areas such as drugs and new technologies. He talked about finding new and innovative ways to fund the system.

An Hon. Member: User fees.

Mr. Klein: Well, they're saying user fees. That's about a three-second sound bite, but it's good enough, and that's what they like to play on. They have no notion, no idea, nor do they have any responsibility for developing policy.

He talked about making better use of privately delivered services within the publicly funded system to reduce pressure and waiting times at hospitals. Already we have evidence that some of these procedures are very useful in relieving pressure at publicly funded hospitals. A number of procedures now are contracted by regional health authorities, and for years and years, of course, the RHAs and the government generally have been contracting services to private operators for seniors in long-term care.

Caucus members raised many questions, including questions about access and labour costs and whether the Canada Health Act needs updating and the impact of an aging population. Mr. Speaker, all of this will be brought together in a package. It will be released to the public – I assume that the Liberals will go out of their way to get it; I hope that they do, anyway – and then we'll bring that package to caucus and have a good discussion.

The Speaker: Hon. members, caucus meetings and the subject therein are not normally the subjects of question period, but if the leader of the government chooses to discuss it, that's certainly his prerogative as the leader of the government.

The Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier rule out health care insurance deductibles, which require patients to pay the first portion of their treatment costs before public payment kicks in?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you're absolutely right. Normally we don't talk about what takes place in caucus, but I had the courtesy today to explain exactly to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition what we discussed generally in caucus. I would point out that this is far more than the Liberals would ever do. They never share anything that comes out of their caucus. Nothing.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question comes out of our caucus meeting this morning. Given that Albertans already pay taxes and they pay health care premiums, will the Premier rule out reforms that would force patients to pay even more money out of pocket based on their income?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, he's looking for an answer that will provide the good 15-second sound bite so that they can take that out and tout it as government policy. I'm not going to fall into that trap other than to say that we had a good discussion in caucus today.

We agreed with the minister's road map leading to reform. We agreed that a package will be brought together, that it will be released to the public, that it will be discussed by caucus. Then, following that, there will be a public consultation process. At that time the Liberals can make all the political noise they want and spew out all the rhetoric they want. I fully expect it.

Automobile Insurance Reforms

Mr. MacDonald: This government's insurance reform has become both a tragedy and a farce for Alberta motorists and a foreign language film without subtitles for Conservatives at their private, behind-closed-door standing policy committee meeting on Tuesday. It is reported that the government's leading actor, the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, hadn't even seen the latest version of the script before last Tuesday's meeting. Albertans demand to know who was in charge of the insurance file. My first question is to the Premier. How open and transparent can Albertans expect this government to be with them when it doesn't even let the person in charge of the insurance reforms see the advance copy of the proposed changes?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't speak for the hon. Member for Medicine Hat and what he knew and what he did not know, but obviously the Liberals know a lot. So something must be open and transparent.

Mr. Speaker, the reason there are only seven of those people over there, or six now and soon to be five, is that they don't understand the essence of politics. They don't understand the essence of people.

People, at the end of the day, are not concerned so much about process or what happened at an SPC meeting or what didn't happen at an SPC meeting. What they are concerned about at the end of the day is their pocketbook and whether or not young good drivers will see a reduction, albeit phased in, of their premiums, whether older male drivers, who are now penalized, will see a reduction overall in their premiums, and whether those in the middle range will see their rates being comparable to other rates, that they're being treated fairly.

That is what the people are concerned about at the end of the day. These people are concerned about the nitty-gritty, picayune kinds of things that don't mean a tinker's damn to the public.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. People in this province are concerned about what the insurance policies are doing to what's left in their pocketbook.

Now, if the government's own MLAs will not endorse the insurance reforms that are proposed, how does this government expect Albertans to be satisfied with this latest attempt to reform the insurance file?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, the reason there are 73 of us and only five of them is that we listen to people. Do you think that this caucus is going to do something that is going to hurt consumers when we set out, relative to our insurance reforms, to protect consumers? Get real. He doesn't get it. That's why there are only five of them, and after the next election there will be even fewer.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier. Did the proposed reforms stall at the closed-door private meeting because the insurance industry wasn't there to direct the action?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't at the SPC.

The Speaker: The leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Health Care Reforms

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Conservative caucus met behind closed doors to discuss this government's radical plan to charge the sick and injured for health care. Rather than release their plans to the public and allow Albertans the benefit of a full and vigorous debate on these issues, the government prefers to engage in a campaign of cover-up and misrepresentation. Not only has this government invoked the name of Tommy Douglas to defend charging the sick for health care; they incorrectly point to a number of European examples to justify their plan to turn health care over to insurance companies. My questions are to the Premier. Given that Tommy Douglas actually envisioned a health care system that covered all health services, including drugs, dental care, and other services not presently covered, isn't the Premier completely misrepresenting the Douglas vision for medicare when he uses Tommy Douglas's name to dismantle health care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not using Tommy Douglas's name . . .

The Speaker: I really have no idea how that leads to government policy. That's a personal interpretation. If the Premier wishes to proceed with this related to government policy, please do, but we're not going to get into a debate on the historical merits of Mr. Douglas.

Mr. Klein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are some ways that the words of Tommy Douglas fit into health care. Now, I'm reading from a document, albeit coffee-stained, that is entitled Man's Destiny Cannot Be Settled in the Marketplace. This is a speech given by Tommy Douglas. I'd be glad to share it with you. I will quote so as to not be misquoted or so as to not have any of my comments misinterpreted by the hon. member. I will quote verbatim.

In his speech on page 142 he says, "I want to say that I think there is a value in having every family and every individual make some individual contribution." Do you believe that? [interjection] Right. Do you believe that?

I think it has psychological value. I think it keeps the public aware of the cost and gives the people a sense of personal responsibility. I would say to the members of this House that even if we could finance the plan without a per capita tax, I personally would strongly advise against it. I would like to see the per capita tax so low that it is merely a nominal tax, but I think there is a psychological value in people paying something for their cards. It is something which they have bought; it entitles them to certain services. We should have the constant realization that if those services are abused and costs get out of hand, then of course the cost of the medical care is bound to go up.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that's what Tommy Douglas said, and that coincides somewhat with the policy that we're now developing. We're saying that there is a cost to health care. We're saying that, as a matter of fact, it's getting close to $8 billion in this province. It consumes up to 50 per cent of some provincial budgets. We're saying also that unless something is done and people realize that there is a cost to health care, then the health care system as we know it will collapse. It will collapse completely, and it won't be there for these young people in the future. It won't be there for the hon. leader of the third party or his seatmate. It won't be there for any of us. It will collapse. It will either collapse or it will bankrupt the provinces and the country.

Mr. Speaker, those costs are going out of control. You cannot sustain a system with costs that rise by 7 or 8 per cent each year when the annual increase in revenues is about 3 or 4 per cent. It simply is out of whack, and it needs to be brought back into line.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we've now spent four minutes on a discussion of a philosophy of a person. It has nothing to do with this Assembly and the question period. Now, let's move on. I've got 14 members.

The hon. member. Second question.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Tommy Douglas's daughter has come forward and accused the Premier of being dishonest and twisting Douglas's words, will the Premier apologize to the Douglas family for using the Douglas memory for . . .

The Speaker: Okay. Hon. leader, that is not a question within the purview of the question period in this Assembly. Now, this has nothing to do with government policy, so go on to your third one, please.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that according to the British Medical Journal Sweden is actually reducing the private-sector presence in health care, isn't the Premier's use of this country to justify his agenda just more false and misleading spin?

Mr. Klein: No. It's not a false and misleading spin to say that we want to look at what works in Sweden. If they are reducing their dependency on the private sector, fine. We will look at that, and we will ask the question: why are you doing this? What didn't work? What did work? I'm sure the hon. member would like to take out of that system and other systems in other jurisdictions those things that work and work well.

Mr. Speaker, I have to comment because the hon. member alluded to Mr. Douglas's daughter, but he didn't allude to his grandson, Keifer Sutherland, who spoke in Calgary but thought he was in Manitoba. So if he's going to give credence and credibility to the Sutherlands, then I think that we should mention the whole family.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Traffic Safety in Calgary

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the Easter break a tragic traffic collision in our Calgary-Fort constituency took the lives of a young man and his son and severely injured his daughter. This deadly collision involved a heavy semi truck and a compact car and took place at the intersection of the Barlow and Peigan trails just at the end of the Deerfoot Trail exit ramp. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Given that our provincial government is responsible for the Deerfoot Trail and traffic safety in general, could the hon. minister ask the department to undertake improvements at this intersection such as putting in speed bumps?

Thank you.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the department is currently in the process of commissioning a consultant to review this particular intersection. The consultant will have to work with the city of Calgary to ensure that whatever improvements we do make at that particular intersection and interchange will also phase in with the city of Calgary's road plans as well.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Could the minister ask his department to review the accident exit situation from the Peigan Trail into the Deerfoot Trail interchange and recommend improvements?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, yes; we are. Safety, of course, is a top priority in terms of building our roads and road improvement. Here again on this particular section we're also in the process of hiring a consultant as well. There will be considerable activity on the Deerfoot Trail over the next three years. In fact, it'll be one construction zone from one end to the other. Unfortunately, for the people in Calgary it will be interrupted traffic, but it all is going to lead to a much safer freeway through that city.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that the tragedy occurred in that specific intersection, could the minister tell the Assembly if anything else is being done to improve the safety conditions?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's a good question, but there's only so much that can be done in terms of improvements to a roadway. We know that adding an interchange where the traffic warrants it will reduce incidents by 47 per cent. We know that widening a highway when the traffic warrants it will reduce accidents by about 50 per cent. But at the end of the day, when we look at all collisions and all accidents in this province, 90 per cent of them are driver error.

So, yes, we can decrease a number of these incidents with improved roads and road design, but we also need the co-operation of all Albertans to ensure that they handle themselves appropriately when they're at the steering wheel and pay attention and try and reduce the significant percentage, 90 per cent driver error, to something that perhaps is a little more acceptable. But at the end of the day it's still the driver behind the wheel.

Mr. MacDonald: The Official Opposition has learned that the regulation regarding caps on minor injuries reads like this: the $4,000 cap will cover all sprains and strains or whiplash-associated disorders that do not result in serious impairment; serious impairment is defined as substantial impairment to physical or cognitive functions that result in substantial inability to perform employment, training or educational or daily living activities; further, the impairment must be continuous with no reasonable expectation of substantial improvement. My first question is to the Premier. Why is this government forcing an unwanted $4,000 cap on pain and suffering on Albertans who are involved in traffic accidents when the government's own poll recently indicated that only 5 per cent of Albertans support the cap?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't at the SPC meeting, and this will have to work its way through. Policy is discussed. The way it works – and you will never know because you will never be in government – here in our system is thus. An item goes usually from the Agenda and Priorities Committee, or it can be initiated through any other committee or any source, to a standing policy committee, where the policy merits of a proposal are discussed. If there is a recommendation, either negative or positive, or no recommendation, the matter is then brought to cabinet, and cabinet either approves it or amends it or rejects it. If the matter is something that is . . . [interjection] Well, it's very important because he has to understand the process.

Then if the matter is of broad, general importance – first of all, all matters are reported to caucus. Some matters are brought to caucus without a recommendation or even with a recommendation to seek caucus approval. [interjection] No. I'm explaining the process. I know that you don't have a process because you can't. You're not the government. Therefore, you can't have a process, but we do. We are charged by the people of this province to make government policy, to make policy on behalf of the people.

So where we are right now is at the standing policy committee stage. Whatever was decided at that committee has not come to cabinet, has not gone to caucus, so we are not there yet. We are not there yet. Now, if the hon. member has something constructive, other than nationalizing or socializing our car insurance system, as the Liberals would like done, other than that, if he has any bright suggestions, any constructive criticism, we'd be glad to hear it.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: given that this cap is a huge financial break for the insurance industry, which has recently posted record windfall profits, how much money will the $4,000 cap save the insurance industry at the expense of innocent accident victims in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, could I pose a question to the hon. member? Is he deaf or just stupid? I explained the process. He's talking as if policy had already been developed.

Now, I don't know what was discussed. I will see the reports, obviously, before they come to cabinet. [interjection] Well, he doesn't want to understand. He doesn't want to understand. He doesn't want to think and contemplate what government procedures are, and that is frustrating because what he is doing is talking about something that presumably was in a report, and he's talking in the context of that being government policy. Well, nothing is policy yet. Nothing.

The Speaker: Actually, to answer the question from the Premier, the Premier cannot ask a question in the question period. That's only reserved for private members.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: The question "Is the member deaf or is the member stupid?" is probably a most inappropriate question. One might suggest that the member might be handicapped, and the other one might suggest something else. So I would really ask the Premier to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Klein: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry for calling the member stupid and deaf.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: because we know that the voters of this province aren't stupid and they're not deaf either, how many innocent motor vehicle accident victims in Alberta will have their legal rights limited by this government's $4,000 cap?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, on the point that was raised by the hon. member in his preamble, I agree with him a hundred per cent. That's why there are 73 of us and only five of them.

Mr. Speaker, again, I don't want to conduct a clinic in politics, but all we're doing relative to car insurance reform is responding to the people and trying to create a system that is fair for young male drivers between 16 and 25, who are now penalized; to make sure that those in the mid-range are treated fairly and pay comparable rates to those in socialist provinces; that those who are penalized because of older age are treated fairly; and that victims, people who are injured in accidents, are fairly compensated, not overcompensated, not undercompensated but fairly compensated. There can't be anything wrong with that.

Now, if the hon. member disagrees with that policy and that direction, then stand up and tell Albertans that he disagrees with a policy that wants to achieve fairness for young male drivers, good drivers, that creates fairness for those in the mid-range, that creates fairness for older good male drivers, that fairly compensates those injured in accidents. If he is opposed to those policies, please stand up and say so. Say so, so that all the media and all the public of this province can hear this hon. member, because we want to know where he stands on this issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

4-H Club Beef Sales

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In May and June hundreds of cattle will be sold by 4-H club members across this province. Many of these animals need to be slaughtered shortly after they are purchased, but the current regulations state that the cattle must be owned for 30 days before mobile butchers can slaughter them. This requirement may deter some businesses and individuals from purchasing 4-H steers because they won't be able to slaughter them right away. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What is the minister doing to address these concerns for 4-H members?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, a number of members, particularly rural members, have raised this issue, as have some of our 4-H beef clubs that are looking at their upcoming sales.

The regulation that the hon. member is referring to is the meat inspection regulation. It is designed to ensure that meat is produced, slaughtered, and sold in a very safe manner. When we initially consulted on these regulations, we found that individuals that were purchasing animals might not necessarily know the history or the health of the animals and hence the condition that you had to hold it for 30 days. However, understanding that there are people who may want to purchase an animal from a neighbour for their own use, that we have many clubs that are looking at their sales in June, we've asked our department to review this regulation and try to accommodate these special circumstances while still addressing the food safety concerns.

There are a variety of ways that we could do that, and we're in the process right now, and I think we are going to be able to make this work.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the proposed regulatory amendments address the concerns that the mobile butchers have, I guess, in their desire to provide a competitive choice for 4-H animal purchasers?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are 52 provincial abattoirs in the province that are inspected and, I must say, operate at a very high standard. We also have a mobile slaughter industry in this province that operates very well. The change to this regulation would allow, particularly in communities where there isn't an abattoir, the opportunity for the mobile slaughterer to accommodate those animals.

Now, any one of us might purchase a 4-H animal. My colleague the minister of health might purchase one and would not have any place to accommodate that animal for 30 days save on the deck at his office, I suppose. It might be a little large. So, Mr. Speaker, common sense has to prevail in this, and that is the approach we're taking. It is my expectation that we will conclude this review and have this amended, dealt with in a way that accommodates those special circumstances and also preserves food safety.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the minister for acknowledging the concerns that are out there with 4-H members.

My second supplemental is again to the minister of agriculture. Can she give us any indication when the regulations will be changed, and will they be changed in time for the June 4-H sales?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the very simplest and probably the best way to address this would be to remove the 30-day requirement. That would not be difficult to change in the regulation.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a reminder of how far reaching the BSE crisis has been in this province. We have a number of young 4-H people who have worked very hard raising their animals and are about to sell them and, of course, some limited market. I want to commend the community organizations that have addressed this, such as the Medicine Hat chamber of commerce, who have done fundraisers by selling promotional beef T-shirts, and those dollars are going to assist in the purchase of 4-H calves. That is one example of what is happening across this province. The people in this province recognize the fine work of the 4-H movement and also recognize that we have the strongest 4-H program in Canada, and we want to maintain it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Grade 12 Diploma Exams

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last November the Minister of Learning supported students writing parts A and B of the grade 12 diploma exams a week apart in the face of criticism from parents, students, and teachers. Now the diploma exam schedule for 2005 on the Alberta Learning web site shows a return to holding parts A and B on the same day. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Is the web site correct?

Dr. Oberg: Yes.

Dr. Massey: Okay. Again, then, Mr. Speaker, to this same minister: given that Alberta Learning's web site states that students' marks were higher when the exams were staggered, what is the rationale for reverting to the old schedule?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, it is not exactly the old schedule. We still have the exams split in two parts. What we found is the concentration of the students first of all on multiple choice so that the students will specifically go on multiple choice. The second part of the exam will be the written part of the exam, where the students concentrate specifically on the written part.

What we postulate happened and in talking to students after we did split apart the exams about how they actually wrote the exams was that the majority of students went through and wrote all the multiple choice answers. Then if there was time and if there was the ability to do it, they concentrated on the written answers. What we found is that those students who were doing extremely well had the capability to go through and do all of it. Those students that were borderline did the multiple choice and then, realistically, did not pay full attention to the written. When we went and split the exams, what we found was that by concentrating specifically on the multiple choice and then concentrating specifically on the written component, the students' exam marks went up.

One of the criticisms of the past schedule was that there was too far a split between social and social, for example. I will say that we have always said that we will compress it as much as we can. What we have now done is put social A and social B on the same day. The next day we will have science A and science B. Biology A and biology B. Those types of things. We're confident that we can get it marked by the end of the year. We're confident that students will do better, and, Mr. Speaker, this is just another example of government going out and talking to the people involved and coming out with a solution that's going to give answers to everyone.

Dr. Massey: Again, then, to the same minister: if that's the case, why didn't you talk to people in the first place?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there were several issues that were out there. We did not know that we could get the exams marked. One of the issues was, as the hon. member knows, that following the strikes, all the markers of the exams were pulled off, and we had an extremely difficult time marking the exams. We signed an agreement with the Alberta Teachers' Association that guaranteed that the teachers would mark the exams for one year only, so we did not have the assurance that we have today that teachers would actually mark the exams. What we found out – and I will say to the hon. member that this was purely by chance – is that the students did considerably better by splitting the exams, as I already stated. So we are now working on refining the schedule as much as we can to compress it as tightly as we can.

The only very interesting component about this is that one of our concerns was actually getting the written tests back to us. What we did – and I think the Legislative Assembly might find this interesting – is that we put a $5 fine out there if they didn't get the exams back to us in time. Mr. Speaker, with the last set of exams every exam in Alberta was returned on time, which allowed us to continue to mark them on time. So with all these refinements we've been able to refine the exam schedule, and I think we have something here now that's going to prove to be excellent for all students in Alberta.

Workplace Fatalities

Mr. McClelland: Mr. Speaker, Albertans don't leave home thinking they may be killed on the job. Regrettably, 127 Albertans lost their lives at the workplace last year. Next Wednesday, April 28, is the National Day of Mourning for those killed in the workplace. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How will the government honour those men and women who died on the job?

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks to the hon.

member for the question. Yes, in fact, Wednesday, April 28, will mark the day of mourning for people that were killed on the job site, and we do have plans to commemorate these poor, unfortunate folks. Probably the most visible commemoration will be the fact that all flags at provincial buildings will fly at half-mast on that day in remembrance of those workers that didn't make it home.

We'll also be making requests of you, Mr. Speaker, for a couple of things. Right now I would hope to plan a ministerial statement, but also we would like to ask you if on that particular day you would see fit to lead us in 127 seconds of silence.

We want to say, Mr. Speaker, that these were needless deaths. This is something that we're working hard to try to overcome, but the fact that they have fallen, we must remember them.

Mr. McClelland: My supplementary is to the same minister. What is the government doing to ensure that workplace fatalities are not just seen as a cost of doing business?

Mr. Dunford: Well, to pick up on the question if I can, they are a tremendous cost to business, and we are trying as best we can to educate employers about the actual trauma and stress that family and friends and fellow employees must go through when there is such a fatality, you know, all of the people that surround that employee. This is a very serious situation when we talk about 127 deaths. We of course will recognize the following week National Occupational Safety and Health Week and try to do our best in that situation. Again, this is something that calls for constant enforcement and reinforcement on the tragedy that takes place inside our province much too often.

If you have been following the types of advertising that we've been trying to do around this situation, we lose a worker about every third day, and every three and a half minutes there's an incident that causes injury that prevents a worker from reporting at their next shift. I empathize with what the Minister of Transportation talked about earlier, the fact that of these 127 deaths the overwhelming majority are happening on the roadways and the highways within this province. Mr. Speaker, as a government we are going to have to do something sooner or later about this epidemic.

Highway 3

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, Coleman area residents are still in shock over this government's decision to suddenly conduct another functional planning study on the highway 3 route when this government has already approved a southern route. To the Minister of Transportation: given that considerable development has taken place to the north of Coleman and that the citizens paid high prices for acreages with the knowledge that the highway was going south, what liability is this government prepared to accept if the north route is approved?

Mr. Stelmach: A couple of things, Mr. Speaker. First of all, these questions came up in the House before, and I mentioned at that time that the department is conducting through the work of a consultant various open houses. No decisions have been made, and as a result I'm not going to speculate on what is tied up in some sort of liability in terms of ownership of property.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how much is this new study costing Alberta taxpayers?

Mr. Stelmach: I don't know, but I'll present that to the House.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: when does the minister expect that a final decision on the route will be made?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe that when I get the exact amount of this particular contract, the cost of the consultant, I'll be able to advise the member of a date as well, when I get that information, in terms of what the expected completion is of this particular review and open house.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Calgary Courthouse

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last October the Conservative government selected a private consortium to finance and build a new court centre in Calgary based on a design that the company itself had come up with. Six months later the cost of this flagship P3 project has ballooned to half a billion dollars, an overrun of 67 per cent, causing the project to be put on hold. My question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. What exactly caused this increase in cost for the Calgary courthouse project?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, once again, as our Premier has been mentioning, the opposition loves to try to find a 15-second bite that is going to be great in the media. The fact is that the number that the leader of the Liberal opposition came out with yesterday, the $170 million, was for the Provincial Court, not anything like the project that we embarked on in the city of Calgary with the consolidation of all three courts. So to start comparing bananas and apples and oranges is the typical thing that they're up to.

The fact is that the number that they're now working with was not the construction cost alone, but it was all of the cost. Unfortunately, when we build something with our own money, we don't include the cost of the money. There's a cost to money, and we don't include it. But the number that they've been throwing around is a number that is in the ballpark if you take the whole cost and you bring it back to present-day value. Now, I know they wouldn't understand that, but that's what it is. It's unfortunate that they keep bandying around numbers that are not true capital costs.

Mr. Mason: I know what net present value is, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate that I gave the minister a chance just to answer the question and he chose not to do it, so I'm going to ask him whether or not the P3 developer lowballed the costs to win the bid only to reveal the true costs once it had been selected to build the project.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, that's terribly unfortunate that the member would call into question the integrity of these great people that put all of the time and effort and money into coming forward with a proposal.

The fact is that we estimated internally the cost of a project with over a million square feet. This is a huge project. Actually, there were three replies to the requests for proposals. Two of them came in below our estimated cost. Then we negotiated with the final one, and we brought the cost down even more, Mr. Speaker. To make sure that we were being accurate, we put out a dummy bid, and the dummy bid came in higher than our estimate. So you got the dummy bid high, we got ours above, and then we've got the actual one down below.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's terribly unfortunate that they would make those kinds of comments about people that are in business and that are very, very conscious of what they're doing.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's too bad the dummy bid didn't win.

Why are Calgarians being forced to accept a scaled-back court facility not adequate to meet future needs just because the government is stubbornly refusing to accept that P3s have been proven almost everywhere they've been tried to cost more and deliver less?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, he said, "Too bad the dummy bid didn't win." Well, the fact that it didn't win is because it was the highest of the three. That's why it didn't win.

It's very interesting that just yesterday the member was standing up and saying: cancel it; don't build it; just don't build anything. Now today he's saying that we should be concerned about the fact that there isn't one being built.

Mr. Speaker, I think that there are actually two departments that are involved in this, and as it relates to the necessity to build in Calgary, I'll have the Attorney General supplement my answer.

The Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government is on record as indicating that we need in Calgary to build a facility which will adequately house the Provincial Court, the Court of Queen's Bench, and the Court of Appeal. We have succeeded; we have a facility which adequately houses the Court of Appeal. Unfortunately, the Provincial Court is scattered around the downtown in inadequate facilities, and we need to deal with that. So we've moved ahead with an appropriate facility to accommodate both the Court of Queen's Bench and the Provincial Court.

We're still moving ahead on that project, but as the Minister of Infrastructure has indicated, we are looking at the most appropriate way to build it and a cost-effective way to build an appropriate facility. We will build an appropriate facility. We will house the courts in an appropriate manner with a good, long-term view with respect to the type of accommodation that they need in order to serve the citizens of Calgary and region. We're committed to doing that; nothing has changed on that. But the government does look, as a government prudently should, at all the different aspects and all the different ways of building and financing and choose the best way in the interests of the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on this day in the first part of the 20th century the hon. Member for Little Bow entered the world, so we wish him a happy birthday today.

Before I call on the first member to participate in Members' Statements, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce some guests to you. I'm not sure whether they are still in the House or not. They are from the constituency of Wainwright. It's a group called the Alliance Fun for All social club. It's a seniors' club. There are 10 of them. There are three names that I have from them: Norman Johnston, Emma Bullee, and Mary Wold. So if they are in the House, could they please stand to receive our greetings.

head: Members' Statements

Cochrane Branches and Banks Environmental Foundation

Mrs. Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, today I would like to recognize the community of Cochrane's Branches and Banks foundation. In 1996 when the federal and provincial governments asked municipalities to begin working towards sustainability, the town of Cochrane gladly took on the challenge. As a result, among other programs the town developed Cochrane Branches and Banks foundation, which hosts a signature event that promotes environmental stewardship and community spirit.

The foundation, which has evolved into a registered nonprofit society supported by the town of Cochrane, organizes an annual tree plant and waterway cleanup in Cochrane every spring. Since the event's inception over 2,400 volunteers have planted approximately 20,000 trees. This family event grows in popularity every year and teaches young Albertans the benefits of volunteering and protecting the environment.

In addition, the Cochrane Branches and Banks foundation was selected as the 2003 community group emerald award winner. This is a very prestigious award recognizing environmental excellence in the province of Alberta and an important recognition of the outstanding efforts of this community, its volunteers, and sponsors.

Mr. Speaker, a core group of volunteers has dedicated their time and energy to organizing this event over the years. I would like to honour those volunteers as well as the town of Cochrane for exemplary community spirit and dedication to environmental initiatives.

I ask all members of the Legislature and the people of this great province to recognize the following community and environmental advocates: Tim Giese of the Cochrane Environmental Action Committee; volunteer co-ordinators Keith and Evelyn Milne, Brent Schmidt, Andy Degraw, and Terry Robertson; Garry Murdoch of Aquila Networks Canada; Rob Olenick of Spray Lakes Sawmills; volunteer residents Alice Laine and Joan Mansfield; Rebecca McElhoes of NOVA/TransCanada Pipelines; and Jill Knaus and Al Weidman from the Bow Meadows Community Association.

Please join me in congratulating the town of Cochrane, the Cochrane Branches and Banks foundation, and the many volunteers involved with this program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Humanities and Social Sciences Research Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Imagine a world where only thoughts and ideas that will result in a tangible outcome are pursued because they are the only ones viewed to have any merit. This is a frightening prospect that is sadly becoming more and more a reality in our country, where the federal government funded 2,000 research chairs in the year 2000 but only 20 per cent of those were allocated to the humanities. This year's federal budget also seems to emphasize hard results over ideas.

While humanities and social sciences, which include disciplines like psychology, history, education, law, economics, and literature, continue to attract more than half of Canada's university students, a rising percentage of government money is focused on hard sciences that show results in practical terms. This erosion of the value placed on the exploration of humanities and social sciences is causing concern on university campuses and is a major reason for the proposed revamp of the federal research granting agency, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council.

Unfortunately, the council's recent consultation framework on its transformation caused alarm when it suggested that the council's core values must expand to include interactive engagement and maximum knowledge impact. This would not promote the development of ideas but, rather, force people involved in the humanities and social sciences to continually justify the practical application of their work.

A university should be a place where ideas can be explored without always looking at the bottom line. Measuring the impact of a project before it has been undertaken could discourage people from completing projects that prove to be valuable to our society.

A decade ago a humanist book on the history of gay marriage was criticized and labelled as a waste of research money, but now it seems only to be ahead of its time. The value of research into the humanities and social sciences is everywhere, shaping thoughts and policy, challenging opinions, and informing casual conversation. We err badly when the only view we foster is an economic view of humans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

2:40 Year of the Coal Miner

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Year of the Coal Miner and the contribution that this industry and its people make to our province.

Since the last decades of the 1800s coal has been the foundation of many communities and individual lives throughout Alberta, including in the West Yellowhead constituency. Coal mining was first developed in southern Alberta, where it was often quarried by pick and shovel and hauled out in wooden crates on skids or by horses. During that time two miners, of course, worked together and produced on average five or six tons of coal a day.

Today coal is a high-tech industry that extracts resources in a more environmentally friendly manner. When someone mentions coal mining, the image of an underground miner, that would normally come to mind, no longer holds true. Open-pit or strip mines now dot the landscape where electric shovels, trucks, and excavators work to mine the coal. All told, between 30 million and 35 million tonnes of coal is produced in Alberta every year by highly skilled workers.

The resource goes on to help provide electricity for homes as well as other uses. For instance, gases, oils, and tar extracted from coal can be used in the manufacture of products ranging from gasoline and perfumes to mothballs and baking powder. From Bankhead and the Crowsnest Pass to Hinton and Grande Cache coal has been instrumental in the development of Alberta, providing jobs to our citizens.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate and thank all Albertans involved in coal mining this Year of the Coal Miner.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Small Business

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government often claims to be a friend to business in Alberta. This is only partly true. The government policies favour its friends and large corporations and the highly profitable oil companies and other operators in the energy sector. Small businesses, on the other hand, have been abandoned.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I've heard complaints from small-business owners across the province and throughout my constituency. Problems began when electricity deregulation gave business owners sky-high electricity bills. Many business owners have been forced to choose between hiring staff and turning on the lights. Some had no choice but to close their doors altogether.

Further, this government has allowed rising insurance premiums to increase the squeeze on small business. While big insurance companies announce record profits, many small-business owners struggle with massive increases to property, business, and auto insurance costs. In fact, a recent study by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which was tabled by my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands, shows that over half of Alberta businesses had experienced a 20 per cent increase in property insurance and nearly 70 per cent felt that high insurance costs are a serious problem.

Of course, there are the ever-present health care premiums. This regressive health tax gives nothing to small businesses except administrative headaches. Premiums also make it harder to compete with larger corporations who can offer to pay premiums as part of employee remuneration. Many small-business owners cannot afford to provide those benefits for their employees and are therefore at risk of losing them. For years average Alberta families have struggled with user fees, health premiums, and hidden costs, and small businesses now face a similar battle.

Mr. Speaker, small-business owners must overcome enough challenges just to stay afloat. It's time the government stopped burdening small businesses with unnecessary and entirely unavoidable additional costs. It's time small businesses got a better deal.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Visiting us today in the members' gallery is a group of 60 Vietnamese seniors who have decided to build a seniors' home in my riding of Edmonton-Castle Downs, and for that I would like to thank them. They're today led by Reverend Thich Thiën Tam, four Buddhist nuns, and also Vinh Hang, who is showing them the Legislature and the precincts.

I'm particularly excited, Mr. Speaker, because chances are that the Member for Calgary-Fort will be my constituent one day. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition signed by 161 emergency medical service workers in the city of Calgary who petition the Legislative Assembly to "support Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act, which will provide more security and peace of mind for people working in occupations who have a higher risk of exchanging bodily fluids with a potential carrier of a blood borne disease."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 48, 66, 68, 69, 71, 75, 76, 77, 78, and 79.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I'll move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 24 through 31, 34 through 42, 44 through 49, 52, 53, 55 through 62, 64, 66, 69 through 73, 75, 78 through 83, 88 through 105, 108 through 123, 128, 134 through 143, 146 through 160, 162, 164 through 168, 174 through 180, 183 through 189, 197, 200 through 205.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three documents to table today. The first one is an article from the British Medical Journal from February 28, 2004. This article indicates that the government of Sweden has decided to ban the development of private, for-profit hospitals and take other additional steps to stop the development of a two-tier health care system in their country.

The second document, Mr. Speaker, is a report from the CBC headlined "Douglas accuses Klein of twisting her father's words." This report cites Shirley Douglas's claim that the Premier is being dishonest about the origins of medicare and that her father "stressed that medicare should be available for all, regardless of income."

The third document, Mr. Speaker, is a backgrounder entitled Myth Buster: P3 Hospitals – A Closer Look. The backgrounder was published by the Ontario Health Coalition and demonstrates the consistent failure of P3s in building hospitals.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is the Canadian property and casualty premiums and profits key financial data for 123 insurers provided by A.M. Best. It's a comprehensive look, and it is from Thompson's World Insurance News. It's for the benefit of all members of this Assembly.

The second is a completion of a tabling that I did yesterday. I apologize to the Speaker, to the table officers, and to members. I inadvertently did not table all the relevant documents.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from myself to the Minister of Transportation. With the onset of the summer construction season I'm urging the minister to offer immediate protection for emergency workers and construction workers on the highway with a change to the regulations under the Traffic Safety Act.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness, pursuant to the Health Professions Act: the College of Physical Therapists of Alberta 2002-2003 annual report.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Deputy Government House Leader under Standing Order 7(5) to please share the projected government business for the week of April 26 to April 29, 2004.

Thank you.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response I'm pleased to advise the member and all members here that on Monday afternoon we'll be dealing with private members' business, written questions and motions for returns, followed by public bills and orders other than government bills and orders. In the evening we'll deal with motions other than government motions, and at 9 p.m. or thereabouts we'll be going to Committee of Supply for the Department of Innovation and Science.

On Tuesday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders and under Committee of Supply we will deal with the Department of the Solicitor General, followed by second reading of Bill 28, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004, and Bill 29, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004, and otherwise as per the Order Paper. In the evening under Government Bills and Orders and under Committee of Supply we will be dealing with the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and, if required, second reading of bills 28 and 29 and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders and under Committee of Supply we will deal with the Ministry of Health and Wellness and third reading of Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, and otherwise as per the Order Paper. In the evening under Government Bills and Orders we'll deal with the Committee of Supply for the Department of Justice and Attorney General and Committee of the Whole for Bill 25, the School Amendment Act, 2004, and Bill 26, the Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004, and third reading if necessary of the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders and under Committee of Supply we will deal with the Department of Energy and if necessary third reading of Bill 22 and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Just a point of clarification, hon. members, before we go on. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, there was an exchange during the question period today. Your colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre moved. I think we dealt with the matter. There's no point of order arising. Is that correct?

Mr. MacDonald: No. There's no point of order. No. Certainly not.

The Speaker: Okay.

head: Government Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee

16. Mr. Zwozdesky moved on behalf of Mr. Mar:

Be it resolved that

- (1) A Select Special Health Information Act Review Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be appointed to review the Health Information Act as provided in section 109(1) of that act consisting of the following members, namely Mr. Jacobs, chair; Ms Kryczka, deputy chair; Ms Blakeman; Mr. Broda; Mr. Goudreau; Mr. Lougheed; Mr. Lukaszuk; Mr. MacDonald; Dr. Pannu; and Mr. Snelgrove.
- (2) The chair and members of the committee shall be paid in accordance with the schedule of category A committees provided in the most recent Members' Services Committee allowances order.
- (3) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid subject to the approval of the chair.
- (4) In carrying out its duties, the committee may travel throughout Alberta and undertake a process of consultation with all interested Albertans.
- (5) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Assembly or the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner.
- (6) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned.
- (7) The committee must submit its report, including any proposed amendments to the act, within one year after commencing its review.
- (8) When its work has been completed, the committee must report to the Assembly if it is then sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

Mr. Zwozdesky: This is of course the legislation that safeguards the health information of individual Albertans yet allows health professionals the access they need to make the most effective care decisions. The act was proclaimed on April 25, 2001. Section 109 of the legislation requires a special committee of this Legislative Assembly to conduct a comprehensive review of this act within three years of its coming into force.

Also, as required in the act, this committee has one year to submit its report including any recommended amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: It's a debatable motion.

The question should be called then?

[Motion carried]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Good afternoon. I'd like to now call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Learning

The Chair: I'll call on the hon. minister for his opening comments.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I would like to thank the House for supporting my ministry's budget in the past years. We've made excellence in learning a priority, and quite frankly the world is taking notice. Countries around the world seek our advice in improving their own educational systems as they strive to attain the kinds of results achieved by Alberta students. Thank you very much to everyone in the Assembly for helping to make this happen.

Learning's business plan starts on page 333 of the Alberta 2004 budget document On Route, On Course. The business plan highlights several strategic priorities for Alberta Learning over the next three years. I would like to draw your attention to a few of these priorities.

Alberta Learning is developing implementation plans for government-approved recommendations made by Alberta's Commission on Learning. The commission provided some excellent recommendations that will help enhance Alberta's learning system well into the future. Government is supporting 86 of the 95 recommendations, including class size guidelines, greater emphasis on physical activity and wellness, fine arts and second-language learning, and increased focus on supporting aboriginal students and students with special needs. There still are some recommendations that are yet to be implemented, Mr. Speaker.

The recommendations to provide an additional $60 million to fund an identified shortfall in the system and to implement the renewed funding framework have already been acted on. Work with stakeholders to develop and execute implementation plans to address other recommendations has already begun, and more will be done over the next five years.

Three recommendations remain under review: establishing full-time and junior kindergarten programs and implementing a new collective bargaining process for teachers.

Another key priority this year is to increase access to adult learning opportunities. The '04-07 business plan incorporates strategies to ensure that Albertans are ready to be successful in the lifelong learning system. We want to ensure that transition points into, within, and out of the system are appropriately bridged for all learners.

Other key priorities for Learning include improving First Nations, Métis, and Inuit learner successes, working effectively with partners and stakeholders, and strengthening intergovernmental relations as well as enhancing Alberta learner and stakeholder opportunities beyond the province's borders. These priorities are aligned with and support Learning's three goals: number one, "high quality learning opportunities for all;" number two, "excellence in learner outcomes;" and number three, a "highly responsive and responsible ministry."

As we continue, you will see how Learning's identified priorities are reflected in our 2004 estimates. The estimates for Learning begin on page 273 of the '04-05 government and lottery fund estimates. These estimates reinforce government's commitment to leading in learning and ensure that Alberta's learning system is flexible and responsive to the changing needs of Albertans.

Government has said that education is a top priority, and Budget 2004 confirms it. Once again, this year my ministry received the second largest dollar allocation of all departments. In this coming fiscal year total investment in our learning system will exceed $5.4 billion.

An Hon. Member: How much is that?

Dr. Oberg: Five point four billion dollars, which includes $171 million in support to opted out separate school boards. This planned spending represents an increase to base program spending of $284 million plus $10 million more in support to the opted out boards. This increase is over and above the $76 million injected during the course of the '03-04 budget year, which brings the total increase to well over $350 million, Mr. Chair.

Our focus on increasing access to postsecondary programs, including apprenticeship, and responding to the commission's recommendations will continue in '04-05 and beyond. Spending on the learning system will grow to $5.9 billion by '06-07, a three-year increase of $763 million, or roughly 15 per cent.

This year will be the year of building and adapting to the growing needs of Albertans. We will continue to strengthen our already excellent learning system to ensure that students of tomorrow have every opportunity for success and that Alberta has the skilled and knowledgeable workforce needed to be competitive for the future. This year will see some strategic enhancements made to our K to 12 learning system to ensure that our system is sustainable and responsive to Alberta's changing society.

Beginning September 2004, the renewed funding framework will be fully implemented. Through collaboration with stakeholders we have established clear goals and strategic priorities for enhancing our basic learning system. This framework will provide funding to school boards based on their unique circumstances, with additional support provided for students with special needs, aboriginal students, and English as a Second Language students as well as for school boards with higher cost pressures, smaller schools, and declining enrolments.

Boards will have the flexibility to use their funds to address their local needs. These include issues such as class size or supporting other recommendations made by the Learning Commission. Boards will also be accountable to their constituents for outcomes as well as how their dollars are spent.

Government has shown support for many of the recommendations of the Learning Commission. As I mentioned, work is already underway to implement a number of recommended initiatives which will continue in the coming year. Some of these initiatives include implementing new second-language and physical activity/wellness programs. Mr. Chair, I will say that the second-language initiative was officially launched today at the Telus centre at the University of Alberta and was met with extreme accolades from both parents and educators alike.

We are also undertaking a number of technology initiatives, including video conferencing, and setting up a new practice review process for teacher competency. Mr. Chairman, I really must commend the Alberta Teachers' Association on the teacher competency practice review process. This will be initiated in our present bills 25 and 26, which are before the Legislature right now. This is truly revolutionary and sets a standard for what is going to come in the rest of the world.

We will continue to work with stakeholder groups to look at options and implement the remaining supported recommendations. Ongoing support to the K to 12 system will increase by roughly $250 million budget over budget this year. It will increase by $260 million, or an increase of 5.8 per cent, forecast over budget. If you take into account the funding injected, as I said, this will be $250 million, and it's going to grow to $4.3 billion by '06-07.

On page 277 of your estimates book operating support to public and separate schools has increased by $189 million, or 5.9 per cent, to almost $3.4 billion. This budget gives school jurisdictions increased funding to operate their schools and provide a quality education to their students with the flexibility to choose how they will use funding to address their local needs and priorities.

We have also renewed our commitment to identify provincial priorities. The Alberta initiative for school improvement will receive over $68 million this year, and, Mr. Chairman, as you fully know, this has been one of the most successful initiatives that Alberta Learning has ever put forward.

Funding for student health services will increase $4.4 million, or 13.3 per cent, to $37 million this year. As well, the funding for the high-speed networking will be maintained at $11 million.

Other increases include an additional $1.5 million for curriculum supports through our Learning Resources Centre, the people that were here this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, who do just an absolutely superb job in purchasing textbooks and resources for the schools, as well as an increase of $16 million for teachers' pensions, raising government's contribution to $274.7 million for teachers' pensions.

There's also an increase of $4.4 million, or 3.7 per cent, to private schools, for a total of about $121 million in '04-05.

On the postsecondary side, Mr. Chair, the postsecondary system plays an absolutely critical role in the preparation of a highly skilled workforce as well as in the creation and application of new knowledge and technology. Our government is committed to ensuring that this system can continue to fulfill this role. New legislation is in place, Bill 43, that's going to guide the adult learning system well into the future. The Post-secondary Learning Act, as Bill 43 is called, along with significant investments in adult learning will make our adult learning system even more adaptable and responsive to the needs of our students.

Funding to support the adult learning system will increase by $93 million forecast over budget, Mr. Chairman. I will say again that budget over budget this is going up $125 million, which is a much more accurate figure than the $93 million that's in the budget.

I would also like to direct your attention to page 279, in which support to postsecondary institutions will increase by $85 million, or 7.5 per cent, to more than $1.2 billion. Again, I keep reminding you that this is forecast over budget. This is not the number that I use, because I don't believe that it's a true number. The increase will provide a 4 per cent increase to base operation grants for publicly funded universities, colleges, and technical institutes and provide additional funding to create new spaces in high-priority programs and enhance our world-leading apprenticeship programs.

Government will also provide $7 million in ongoing operating supports to accommodate the merger of the University of Alberta and Augustana University College in Camrose. Mr. Chairman, this merger alone will support more than 1,200 degree completion opportunities to meet the increasing demand in rural Alberta. We are going to see Camrose become an absolute gem of the province due to the merger between Augustana and the University of Alberta.

In our continuous drive to create and maintain a well-educated workforce in Alberta, we strive to ensure that financial need is not a barrier to further education. While we recognize that the cost of postsecondary education is a shared responsibility between students, their families, and government, government does its share to maximize opportunity for students and keep debt levels down.

The support to postsecondary learners this year will rise by 7.3 per cent. This provides for an increase in funding for scholarships, for bursaries, and for grants in '04-05. Through Alberta's scholarship program about 27,700 students will receive almost $42 million in scholarships this year alone.

We also expect to disburse some 97 million dollars in student loans in '04-05. Yearly loan limits for all students will also increase by roughly $400. The Alberta student loan relief benefit and the loan relief completion payment will reduce students' debt in their first and final years of study.

This year $4.3 million has been allocated to implement the new Alberta centennial education savings plan, that has recently been debated in this Legislature. It begins January 1, 2005. This significant new investment will grow to about $20 million a year beginning in '05-06, will encourage parents to save for their children's education, and help pay the future costs of postsecondary education.

Budget 2004 will also help alleviate some of the province's infrastructure pressures due to the rapid economic and population growth in recent years. Alberta Infrastructure's '04-07 capital plan provides $1.1 billion for new and improved school and postsecondary facilities, $636 million to support school capital projects throughout Alberta, and $416 million to support postsecondary projects.

Mr. Chairman, the '04-05 budget and business plan continue to maintain government's commitment to lifelong learning and ensure that all Albertans will have access to an affordable, high-quality education system.

Mr. Chair, I now would invite any questions, and I will say to the opposition that if there are any questions that I either cannot answer or inadvertently do not answer, I will give them to the opposition members in writing.

So, Mr. Chairman, with that, I'd be more than happy to take questions from any Member of the Legislative Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the minister for that overview of the budget.

I have questions in two categories, Mr. Chairman, that I'd like to pursue this afternoon. The first are sort of broad questions about the implications of the budget and the possibilities in the budget, and then the others are some of the more mundane, specific-information questions.

I wanted to start with the first question, about special education and special education funding. One of the problems that is constantly brought to the attention of, I know, the minister and certainly the opposition is the problem of the parents of special-needs youngsters being bounced around from school boards to the department of health to the Department of Learning to Children's Services and really having a very, very difficult time in many cases trying to get the services that they need for their youngsters.

One of the initiatives that are included in this year's budget is the cross-ministry initiatives that are outlined on page 342. My question to the minister is: has there been consideration of a one-stop window for parents? For many of them it involves trying to learn a lot of political skills, who's who, and they end up frustrated at one level or another. It just seems to me that it's so hard on them because they have difficult children to try to get services for in the first place. Do these cross-ministry initiatives include that kind of involvement?

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do believe that I owe the hon. member one, so I will say that that's an excellent, excellent question that the hon. member has asked.

That is what we're striving towards: to have a cross-ministry initiative that would in essence be one-stop shopping. Included in my budget this time is the student health initiative, and we have increased the dollars to the student health initiative quite substantially at this particular time. One of the issues that we had with the student health initiative, quite literally, was that the health care workers were actually going up at a higher rate than what the educational workers were doing. So we had to put more money into the student health initiative to do that.

We are working on this, hon. member. We're working as hard as we can because the issues that you have brought up are extremely laudable. When we have a parent that has a special-needs student, he doesn't care who supplies the services, who gives the services, where the services come from as long as the services are there. We attempt to do this as best we can on the one-stop shopping system. Are we perfect in that? No, we're not. Are we working towards that? Absolutely. Yes, we are.

One of the issues that we have, quite frankly, is the transition between the PUF funding and the severe disabilities funding. This is something that we're working out to make the transition as easy as possible. One of the things that we have done, for example, is that a PUF student does not have to be reassessed for severe disabilities funding in the school system. This is an issue that occurred probably in the last three years, and we have taken that out so that they don't need that. We have attempted to make it as easy as possible. I would love to be able to stand here and say that we have one-stop shopping and that the world is great. The only thing I can answer to the hon. member is that we're working on that. What he stated is absolutely the direction we're going in and absolutely what we need.

The Chair: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Chairman, and thanks, Mr. Minister. It is a long-overdue initiative and one that would really, I think, be appreciated by a lot of parents who have a lot of difficulties in trying to get those services.

I have some questions about the language initiative that was announced today. I applaud the government. I've been an advocate of second-language instruction. I find it a personal embarrassment that I don't speak both of the official languages of my own country, and I'm delighted that we have this initiative by the government. But my concern is the kind of advanced preparation and the kind of resources that such an initiative is going to require. To insert that first one in the program across the grades is going to mean that something has to give, and what's that going to be?

The second question I have is with respect to teacher preparation. It's going to be, it seems to me, a huge demand for teachers that can handle that, and I would really hate language instruction in this province to go back to what I had: the old French programs that leave people not even able to read labels on a cereal box let alone speak the language. So the need for really high-quality teachers who not only speak the language but know something about the children that they're trying to teach is going to be requisite for this being a success, and I'd like to know how that's going to be addressed.

Curriculum development. It talks in the news release – and that's all I have to go by, but it seems to me that before that's in place or that's being asked of boards, the curriculum development and the resources needed to support those programs have to be well along the way.

So I'd appreciate some comment from the minister.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much. I find myself in a little bit of an awkward position here, agreeing with the hon. member on the things that he has said. I, too, am embarrassingly unilingual, and it's something that I'm not really that proud of.

Mr. Chairman, we announced the second-language initiative today amidst quite a considerable amount of fanfare from both parents and educators alike. Is this an easy initiative? No. Let's put it on the table. It is not an easy initiative. Is it a necessary initiative? Absolutely. Personally I find it embarrassing that our education system has not done a better job in languages. What we have seen right now is we're sitting at about 23, 24 per cent of students that take a second-language course, and keep it in mind that that could be something as simple as French 10 or French 20 or something like that. To me as Minister of Learning that's an embarrassing figure, and it's my job and it's my initiative to do something about this, and subsequently we have launched the second-language initiative.

This initiative will start off in 2006. It will start in grade 4. Mr. Chairman, the first year will be grade 4. The second year will be grades 4 and 5; the third year, 4, 5, and 6; and so on. So if you're in grade 9 in 2006, you do not need to expect that you will be expected to have fluency in a language. That's not going to occur. It will follow the students up through the system. At the end of grade 9 you will have what is called a beginner level of competency in the second language. If you continue on in second languages in grades 10, 11, and 12 – at which time the courses are going to be optional at this moment; I would at some point in time like to make them mandatory as well, but the logistics of that are a little more complicated than what we can realistically do right now – you will have an intermediate level of competency in a foreign language. If you choose to go on to university, you will be able to have the full level of language competencies.

When it comes to curriculum development, what we have done is we have taken seven different languages and have looked at curriculum in all seven languages. The important thing to remember here, Mr. Chair, is that we have not developed these curriculums ourselves. We have gone out to other jurisdictions and we have gone out to other countries and actually taken their curriculums, ones that we find satisfactory for Albertans, and we'll utilize their curriculums.

One of the things that we have done, for example, is worked very closely with Spain to develop a Spanish curriculum, and indeed we are in the process of purchasing the Spanish curriculum from the Cervantes Institute in Madrid, which is one of the world-renowned institutes when it comes to Spanish language. We have also borrowed a lot of other curriculums. A lot of them, though, we have developed ourselves. We have a very extensive Cree curriculum in the city of Edmonton and some of the northern units, so what we're doing, quite simply, is taking those curriculums and making them available to all Albertans. So from a curriculum point of view I'm confident that we will have the curriculums in place for this initiative. My people tell me that we are well on the way and do have these curriculums available.

The teacher preparation is probably the question that I get asked the most. When I talk about this undertaking, is it an ambitious undertaking? That's putting it mildly. It's a very ambitious undertaking, not necessarily in Edmonton and Calgary. In Edmonton and Calgary we have a lot of teachers that speak a lot of different languages. The ability to teach language is there. Where we're going to run into some issues is in rural Alberta. In the hamlet of Gem, Alberta, for example, with a student population of somewhere around 25 to 30, is it going to be a problem? Yeah, it is.

What we're going to be relying on is the SuperNet with video conferencing capabilities. We're doing some experiments right now in the Prairie Rose school division on the ability for the SuperNet and for the video conferencing to be able to teach these languages. It's looking very, very good, and I truly believe that we will be able to do that.

I have taken the approach, Mr. Chair, in this initiative that we simply cannot afford not to have a second language. Therefore, we are putting in a lot of resources and we're doing a lot of things to ensure that this occurs.

Another couple of things, if I may have time to say this, is we announced today as well some bursaries, $2,500 bursaries, some grants of up to $5,000 for teachers to go back, for example, and learn the second languages, more so learn how to teach second languages. We have a considerable amount of teachers that already have a second language, but having a second language and teaching a second language are two completely different things. So we're doing that.

About five months ago I opened up the language institute at the University of Calgary. Quite simply, what this is is a research institute within the University of Calgary to look at how to teach language, to look at different types of languages, to find out how children learn from languages, and, Mr. Chair, through to all the Members of the Legislative Assembly, I would certainly encourage the hon. members to tour that institute. It's very, very impressive. There is cutting-edge research that is being done there, and what they have told me – and realistically I'm only as good as what they tell me – is that it is absolutely a one hundred per cent world-class structure and institution. So we look forward to getting that.

The hon. member has asked some excellent questions about an initiative that I personally have taken a lot of stake in. It's something that Albertans want. It's something that I wish I had when I went to school. The hon. member wished he had it when he went to school, and I think that's what I hear all over Alberta when I talk about this.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again just a couple of questions on the same topic, Mr. Chairman. The resources in the budget for technology – the minister mentions video conferencing, and video conferencing requires some fairly sophisticated technological hardware and software. The minister is aware that there have been questions in the House the last couple of weeks about the costs of SuperNet, schools getting hooked up to it, being able to maintain it, having money to pay the monthly hookup fees. Is there money in the budget? Will there be money that will allow schools to gain that equipment and to be hooked to the system? Right now we hear from a lot of people that evergreening of their equipment is just not possible. So is the minister happy that there's money in the budget that will make that possible?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member has asked a couple of questions. First of all, the costs of SuperNet are included in my budget. There's $11 million that is specifically set aside to pay for the cost of the broadband access. Also, I will add that included in the funding formula the line costs for SuperNet are enveloped. Quite simply, the reason that they are enveloped is that I did not want the cost of hooking up to SuperNet to be a detriment to school jurisdictions doing it or not doing it.

The SuperNet will be there. The SuperNet will be in every school, and a significant portion of the costs are going to be borne by the government. I will say that there have been questions in the House about the cost of SuperNet, and it's my understanding that for many jurisdictions you're actually going to see a decrease in what their line costs are as to what they're paying today.

Another interesting point is something that we've been working on, Mr. Chair, which is evergreening. The whole idea behind SuperNet is not just to provide broadband wavelength. SuperNet gives us opportunities that are actually going to be quite incredible. What we're looking at doing is setting up a server-based system so that what we will do is put all the programs, basically the programs that we need, all the resources that we need, on the server.

There are two advantages to that. First of all, we have the ability to review all of the resources and all of the programs that go on the server, so we can be assured that when our students in the school access the SuperNet server – and in just a second I'll get to how they access it – all of these resources have been prescreened by my staff, by Alberta Learning staff, so that it is good, high-quality resources. What we are in effect doing is setting up an Intranet as opposed to the Internet.

The other advantage, Mr. Chair, directly to the server-based system is that we can utilize the economy of scale of all the students in the province to get a better price. We have about 580,000 K to 12 students. We have about another 110,000, 120,000 postsecondary students. We can use those 700,000 students to get a better economy of scale on programs. If you were to go out and had 10,000 users, you are not going to get as good a deal as if you had 700,000 users in order to purchase programs. So we're looking at that.

Lastly, Mr. Chair, the most exciting part about a server-based system is what the hon. member has raised, which is the evergreening. We will have the ability to sign contracts that would include – and what I'm setting down as a minimum is 10 years of evergreening. So when it comes to programs, when it comes to resources, it will be 10 years, but more importantly what we will be doing is at the actual school site they will not need a computer per se. What they will need is a screen, a monitor, and a card-reading type of system or some variation of a system that will take them into their server. The other advantage of this is that the evergreening cost to the school district should be almost nil because all you're going to have to replace are the monitors and the keyboards.

So that's what we're looking at, Mr. Chair, and albeit we do not have anything firm yet, we are looking at putting out an RFP this month or next month to actually attempt to do a pilot project on this exact concept. We have a concept like this in the Chinook's Edge school division, but the problem has actually been that we are ahead of the technology companies. The technology to use the broadband capability on the server-based system is just coming out now. We feel that the technology is out there. We obviously are going to test it in a geographic pilot project, and hopefully there will be more to that as the RFP is put out. We have not finished the RFP. It will however be put out within the next month to six weeks.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Oh, I should have mentioned that on the IOUs I don't consider us wiped out and even. He's not getting off that easy.

I'd like to ask if we will be seeing as a result of the Learning Commission a performance measure with respect to class size. It's one that I've seen elsewhere, where states have had not a performance measure but a reporting, for instance, of the number of kindergarten students that were in classes, the percentage of kindergarten classes that were over 17, the percentage of grade 1 classes that were over 17. It seems to me, as I've talked to parents and heard from parents across the province, that that is something that really is of high interest to them and a major concern. I think that next September there are going to be a lot of parents who are going to be watching very carefully, expecting that their children will be in smaller classes, and somewhere down the road getting into the area that was recommended by the Learning Commission. It seems to me that the kind of reporting that we've had of averages doesn't do that. There has to be something that really gives a better picture because of what happens with averages.

The second with respect to that was the reports that this budget is not going to be adequate for progress to be made with reduction to class size and the chair of the Learning Commission indicating that the monies that they were recommending are above and beyond volume and rate increases that would normally be a part of the budget. Is the minister confident that we are going to see, in September at least, movement in the direction of the commission? Given the multiyear projections that the commission made, is the minister confident that in three or four years we will actually have reached the standards that they have put out?

Dr. Oberg: Thanks, Mr. Chair. First of all, when it comes to the performance measures, starting in November of this upcoming year there will be a requirement for all school jurisdictions to have an accountability profile that would be given out to the constituents, that will be made public, which will include class size. It will include absolutely how they spend all of their money, administrative costs. All of these things will be required to be made public and, indeed, not just made public but given to all the constituents. The key – the key – to accountability is transparency, and we have attempted to make the whole funding system as transparent as possible.

There are two excellent, excellent things in the Learning Commission, but the unfortunate part is that these two are a little bit at odds with each other. The first one is the whole idea about class size, about the reporting of class size and how we should try and get down in the province to the averages that were iterated in the Learning Commission. The second is the funding formula. What we're attempting to do is reconcile those two differences.

First of all, Mr. Chair, the funding formula gives ultimate – ultimate – flexibility to the school boards. In the new funding formula effective September 1, there are only three things that are enveloped. As I mentioned previously, there is the SuperNet hookup line charges, which are enveloped. There's a student health initiative, and there's the Alberta initiative for school improvement. Everything else, or roughly 95 per cent of the dollars, is going to be flexible to the school jurisdictions.

So, Mr. Chair, a type of answer to the question is: if the school boards chose to use that money in a flexible way in a fashion other than class sizes, could they do it? Yes, they can. Under the new formula they do have the ability to utilize that. However, what we're doing is forcing the school boards to be transparent in how they spend the dollars. They have to be transparent in what the dollars are used for, such as number of teachers, administration, class sizes. All of these things have to be given out to the public.

So there is a little bit of difference in the Learning Commission recommendations and how these are going to work. The key thing that I talked to the school boards about is that, realistically, this funding formula entails a great amount of trust. With that flexibility comes a great amount of trust that the school boards are going to put the money where it's needed.

I believe in local autonomy. I believe in school boards. I believe that they have the ability, that they know better what is happening in the classrooms, in many cases, than my department and, certainly, than I do, and that they will go ahead and do it. But there's a huge amount of trust there, and, Mr. Chairman, if politics enters into this, we're going to be in a severe amount of trouble. Therefore, the accountability piece of the funding formula is going to have to force the school boards to report to the general constituents about what they are doing, about where they're spending dollars, where their dollars are actually, 100 per cent, being spent.

This is going to cause a specific problem, and I don't mean to pick out any specific school boards, but one of the great attributes of the Edmonton public school system is that they give all the money out in a very decentralized fashion. One of the problems that is going to occur with the flexibility of the funding formula is exactly reconciling the accountability behind those dollars, and we are attempting to do this in a reporting mechanism.

I will say to the hon. member that this is a work in progress, and this funding formula is something that we're very, very concerned about on the accountability side. The Alberta School Boards Association has assured us that they are up to the task, and we will be working closely with the School Boards Association to ensure that that accountability and that transparency are there so that everyone knows how the dollars are being spent, the amount of dollars, all of these other issues. Mr. Chair, as you fully well know, to me transparency is the best political tool that is out there.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I also have questions, obviously, at this time for the hon. minister. It's a pleasure to participate in the debates this afternoon on the budget for Alberta Learning.

When I talk to parents about the Learning Commission – and I talked to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods – they compare it to a Sears or Eaton's catalogue at Christmastime. It's a wish list. Unfortunately, there doesn't appear to be money to back up so many of the recommendations that are needed, and I would certainly hope that the department and the government can make the financial commitments that are necessary to fund adequately the recommendations of the Learning Commission report.

Are we going to see class sizes go down next fall, Mr. Chairman? Unfortunately, I don't think so. I routinely visit classes, particularly in elementary schools, where there are in excess of 30 children, sometimes 34, 35 children, and they're split between grades 5 and 6. The teacher literally has to have a whistle around his or her neck like a hockey referee, and the whistle has to be blown if there's a stop in the action. I know that there have been strides made to improve this situation, but those strides, in my opinion, are not long enough.

Now, I have a question, and I would really appreciate a clarification from the minister. I believe that is all that's required in this regard. In regard to students with special needs or special-needs funding, I was talking to a constituent who has a child in a junior high, in grade 7, and this constituent is particularly concerned that there will be no special-needs funding for her child once that child leaves grade 9. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has wisely advised me that, well, there are programs at L.Y. Cairns for special-needs students. What other alternatives or avenues does that parent have, once that child graduates from junior high, to further that child's education? If you could explain that, I would be very grateful.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The hon. member has two sets of questions there. First of all, the money for the Learning Commission. Included in the Learning Commission's recommendations was roughly an increase of about $600 million over the next five years. What was not included, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods pointed out, was the cost for increases in salaries, things like that. So it's $600 million over five years.

What you see in this budget to the K to 12 system is an increase budget over budget, recognizing that we did put in an extra $90 million, that we did put in an extra $30 million for operations and maintenance. Budget over budget is a $250 million increase. In three years I believe it's something like $730 million. I don't think I need to look; it's pretty close to that. So the monies are there.

Are we committed? Absolutely. There are some excellent recommendations, Mr. Chair. When I set up the Learning Commission, I did not set up the Learning Commission to give us recommendations that we could not fulfill. I did not set up the Learning Commission to be able to put the Learning Commission's recommendations on the shelf never to be opened again. That is the deal that I made with those people on the Learning Commission, and I believe that that is the deal that we have followed through on.

Is there going to be that $600 million in the first year? No, there isn't. It is not going to be in the first year. Is it going to be in the five years? Yes. Are we going to implement the recommendations over five years? Yes. Are some going to be implemented today? Absolutely. Some already have been implemented today. Are there others that are going to be implemented tomorrow and the day after? You bet. Mr. Chair, we're working hard, but more importantly I really feel that we're working smartly, and that's something that's absolutely important to do.

With regard to the member's direct question about special-needs funding, the way special-needs funding is given out to the school boards is on a pro-rated number of students. For example, I'll give a little bit of history if the hon. member will tolerate this.

Initially, we were putting in money for assessments, so every student, before they received the severe disability funding, would have to have a thousand-dollar assessment. In essence, you would have a thousand-dollar assessment so that they could get $13,000 extra in funding. Obviously, for the principals and the school boards it was their best effort to put through that these kids would be assessed as severe special needs.

First of all, I don't like the label of severe special needs. I think there are people that have children that have to be individualized when it comes to their educational plans.

Secondly, I just absolutely cannot tolerate the waste of a thousand dollars on an assessment when you don't need it. We were having situations, through to the hon. member, where a child was blind, and every three years they were having to have a thousand-dollar assessment to determine if the child was still blind or deaf.

So we cancelled the need for the assessment, and we've pro-rated it. We've taken the last five to seven years of a school jurisdiction's growth in special needs and simply pro-rated it. If the school board feels that their pro-rate number is wrong, they have the ability to appeal to us, and actually, Mr. Chair, in the first year that this occurred, there were only about two or three school boards that actually put in an appeal. Unfortunately for the Member for Strathmore-Brooks, two of those appeals came from, you got it, Strathmore and Brooks. But we attempt to do as accurate as we can an approach for that.

So, to the member, the parent's child will still receive special-needs funding. How the school board chooses to put that out into their school programs is up to the individual school board. In many cases, for example, they have specialized programs in specialized locations. In other cases – and I don't want to get into the actual disability that the child has – the attempt is there to tailor the program to the individual child, to the individual child's disability and then put the child in the best location for that child.

The parent does have the ability and, in fact, the necessity to sign off the individual program plan on each and every child with disabilities. So the parent will have to sign and say that this is the best place for the child to be; this is the program that's going to occur. I expect and I hope that these parents will hold the school boards and the teachers and the school system accountable to ensure that that individual program plan is followed through as written out, as they've signed on the dotted line.

Those dollars are still there. They follow right through. I can't get into specifically what program would be best for this child because I don't know the child, I don't know the disability, but Edmonton public does an exceptional job when it comes to disabilities, and I would give it to you that they're probably the best people to answer that question.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. To the hon. minister, I appreciate that answer.

Now, does that set of rules also apply to mild special-needs students as well which are included in the per pupil grant? Yes?

Dr. Oberg: Yes, it does. The individual program plan needs to be in place for the mild to moderate special-needs students as well.

Again, I'll reiterate a little bit. Mild and moderate: I don't like using that definition. The problem is that – and I'll use the terminology – many mildly disabled students can improve and come out of that category. The unfortunate part about our school system is that once they're labelled "mild" or labelled "moderate," that label tends to stick with these children right through the school system. I don't agree with that.

I don't agree with the labelling of students. I don't agree with how that is done. That's one of the reasons why we changed the way the funding was put in. It drove me crazy, Mr. Chair, when I would go to a school and they would point out the code 43 students. They wouldn't use the child's name. They would say, "Here's a code 43," as opposed to "Here's Johnny" or "Here's Sarah" or something. "He's code 43; he's code 44," and so on. Drove me nuts.

So, Mr. Chair, that's one of the reasons why we did that. Again, it takes a little while to move through the system, but it is something that we're attempting to do. The individual program plan is in place for mild and moderately disabled students through to grade 12.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now, I'm concerned about the high cost of tuition fees at universities. Last year in your annual report 2002-2003 – and I'm going to look forward to checking this a little later in the summer when your next annual report comes out – under the primary reasons listed on page 21 "for not taking education or training (percentages and rank) is a category simply stating that it "costs too much." In 1998-99 5.9 per cent indicated that that was the reason for not taking education or training: it costs too much. This went up in steady steps to 2001-2002 when 11.3 per cent of individuals stated that it costs too much to take any further education or training. It went down significantly in 2002-03, actually, to 8 per cent. So in 2002-03, the last time we had access to this information, 8 per cent of students could not afford to take further education or training.

In light of the fact that we have since put tuition fees up again, what number does the minister expect to see? Hopefully, it's not going to be anywhere like 1 in 10 students has financial reasons as a barrier to furthering their education. What steps are we going to take to reduce this significantly in light of the fact that we've increased tuition fees?

Dr. Oberg: Thanks, Mr. Chair. First of all, it's nice to see a drop in that number from 11 per cent to 8 per cent. The one comment that I will make on that is that the way the question is worded, this is the perception of being able to go to school. So it's perceived that they don't have enough money, and that's why they're not going to school.

I will take this opportunity to talk a little bit about the student loan program. Since I've been minister, the student loan program has increased by anywhere between 50 and 60 per cent in the last five years. It's gone up quite significantly. We're now at a time when we have $97 million that is spent each and every year to go out to Alberta students. That's just from Alberta; that isn't from the federal component of student loans.

So one of the criticisms that I have of my department is actually not in how it runs the student loan program, because if you talk to students anywhere in Canada – and our students say that as well – they will tell you that our student loan program is by far the best of anywhere in Canada. Just by way of advertisement, we are the only jurisdiction that has increased loan limits in I believe the last 10 years. The rest of the student loans, the rest of the provinces are actually tied to the federal government, and the federal government has not increased its loan rates, although thankfully it is talking about increasing them this year.

The other key component, Mr. Chair, is our remission program. I think everyone here who has gone through – and at least I have – university with a student loan is well aware of the remission program. We've taken the remission program one step further. We have increased the amount of loans available to a student, but we have kept the amount that you have to pay back constant. We've kept that amount that you have to pay back at $5,000.

Since I've been minister, the amount of student loans that a student would be eligible for if he was at the maximum amount has increased from around a little over $10,000 to this year where we increased it another $400 to around 11 and a half thousand, $11,400. Mr. Chair, the amount that you pay back, though, during that time has remained constant. It's constant at $5,000. So for a four-year program, if you have full student loans, you can expect to have realized about $45,000 in loans from the government. You can expect to pay back about $20,000.

Put that in perspective, Mr. Chair. Those of us in here who pay taxes, those of us who drive taxis, those of us who drive trucks have contributed to your student loan, contributed to your education, $25,000 in one degree, a four-year degree. This truly, I believe, is an accomplishment.

The other point that the hon. member was alluding to was the whole point on tuition. I get a little perturbed at times when we talk about tuition and talk about the expense of tuition. First of all, I believe that tuition and postsecondary education is absolutely, 100 per cent the best investment that any citizen in Alberta can make for themselves. It's absolutely fabulous. We have high-quality institutions. We have institutions that can essentially teach anything anywhere any time to anyone. It's a true credit to our province to have the institutions that we do.

When it comes to the tuition fees, one of the issues that we have – and again this is an issue that I have with my department – is that people overestimate the costs of postsecondary education. When you do the polls, the average cost for a university education is seen anywhere between $6,000 and $8,000, while in reality the actual cost is right around $4,500 for tuition at a university. At a college it is sitting around $3,300, $3,400 on average, and at a technical school you're sitting in the $2,500 to $2,700 range.

To put that in context – and I really do believe that when it comes to tuition, we have to put some of these things in context – a pack-a-day smoker will spend $3,650 each and every year, which is more than tuition, to smoke. To go to a technical school is about a quarter of the cost of purchasing a skidoo. To go to a technical school is about an eighth of the cost of purchasing new the lowest priced car that you can.

Mr. Chairman, again, I'll just reiterate. I have a responsibility. I will have three students in the postsecondary education system next year. Is it expensive for me to do? Yeah, it is. Is it worth it? Absolutely. My kids going to postsecondary education is absolutely the best thing that I as a parent could do for my kids. Do I want the education system, the Alberta government, to pay exclusively for my kids to go through? No, I don't, because I have a responsibility as a parent, and it's something that I feel very strongly about.

In Alberta with our tuition policy we have stated that the individual will pay up to 30 per cent of the actual cost of the degree. With Bill 43 we have actually changed that, so once the 30 per cent rate is hit, then it moves up to cost of living plus 2 per cent. To put that in perspective, Mr. Chair, there are about three institutions in Alberta that actually hit the 30 per cent rate, and the reason they hit it is not because they were raising tuition. The reason they hit it is because their expenses went down. I don't think anyone anywhere would want us to penalize these institutions when their expenses go down when their tuitions have not gone up. So that is why we put in the cost of living plus 2.

Again, to put it into perspective, our universities are sitting at about 24 or 25 per cent of the actual cost of your education. So, Mr. Chair, when you're paying $4,500, the government, the university, investors into the university are paying that other 75 per cent. When you pay $4,500 for your child's university education, you can rest assured that there is another group of people out there, being the government, being the university, that are paying another $18,000 to educate your child.

Mr. Chair, I do think that I have a responsibility to educate my children.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Continuing along that line, to the hon. minister: are you tracking the private debt that is accumulated by students attending technical or university courses? Also, since we were talking about technical schools, and everyone is talking about the labour shortage in this province – and we all know that there's not a labour shortage; there's a shortage of cheap labour – whenever we consider that between 10 and 11 per cent consistently of the age group between 15 and 24, Mr. Chairman, are unemployed in this province, I think that is a good pool of workers for the government to target apprenticeship programs to. Before we look at introducing other measures in training foreign workers and bringing them here, let's reduce that group of young Albertans between 15 and 24 to the provincial average, which is around 4 and a half, 5 per cent unemployment, and get them into the skilled trades.

Also the First Nations people – there is chronic unemployment there. If we could work at that, I think it would be a benefit to all.

Because there is certainly not a shortage of labour; there's a shortage of cheap labour in this province.

Also to the hon. minister: what percentage of Albertans who enter into a registered apprenticeship program, whether it's an optional or a compulsory trade, actually finish that trade four or five years later? There are registered apprentices; there are new apprentices. How many graduate? How many attend technical school? Is there a large percentage that go into the system and then come out the other end, I assume, four years later? Or is there a significant number that, for whatever reason, just drop out? If you have statistics on that, I would appreciate hearing from you.

Thank you.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. First of all, when it comes to private debt, the figures that we use are actually StatsCan figures. We don't have the ability to go in and actually assess a private debt. Because of the implications of freedom of information and privacy, we cannot go in and actually do it. So the numbers that we use are Stats Canada data. Obviously, StatsCan tends to be two or three years later than what the actual year is, but that's the only way that we can get the issues on private debt as well.

The hon. member has raised some other really interesting questions. First of all, I'll disagree with the hon. member about the shortage of labour being the shortage of cheap labour. I'm in regular conversations with people in Fort McMurray, where there is a huge number of workers that are needed. Just in the four or five companies that I can name off the top, they're probably 10,000 to 12,000 workers short as of today and potentially over the next year.

Mr. Chair, these workers are getting paid prime, prime salaries. They're getting paid, I'm assuming, $30 to $40 an hour. Quite simply, they cannot get enough workers to go up to Fort McMurray. Fort McMurray, albeit a wonderful place, is not necessarily the vacation capital of the world, and there are some issues with getting people to actually work up there. People don't want to leave their families, et cetera, et cetera. So I disagree with that. I think that those are excellent, excellent wages and that there is an actual shortage of labour.

The hon. member raised some excellent points when it comes to apprenticeship. In the apprenticeship system, Mr. Chair – I'll reiterate some of the numbers that I love to use. We have 10 per cent of the country's population, and we train 20 per cent of the country's apprentices. We presently have 40,000 apprentices in our system at any one time, and that just absolutely makes every other province pale in comparison when it comes to those numbers.

Our apprenticeship system is something we take very, very seriously, and I believe that when you take a look at our budget, you have seen inordinate increases in the apprenticeship. We have increased the number of apprentices going out in a year from 1997-98, I believe, by 50 per cent, so we have really ramped up the apprenticeship system.

Obviously, contingent on the apprenticeship system is the red seal program. We will not – we will not, we will not, we will not – decrease our standards just to get workers in here. The red seal program is the gold standard for any apprenticeship anywhere in the world, and that's what we continue toward, although I will say that we have had a lot of people who have asked us to decrease the standard just a little bit, just cut them down a little bit. But we have steadfastly refused to do that and continue to refuse to do that.

question the hon. member asked. There certainly is a pool of talented people out there that we can get into the apprenticeship system. We've done extensive work with the aboriginal population through our First Nations, Métis, and Inuit policy. We've actually gone in and asked these students: "Why are you dropping out of school? Why are you leaving school? Look at what you can have the advantage of doing."

Consequently, they said to us, different from the rest of the population, that the decision to drop out of school is often made in grade 8 or 9. So what we have done is put in an aboriginal youth apprenticeship program to target these kids as early as grade 8. So in grade 8 we will start these kids along their apprenticeship pathways, and that has proven to be very successful in keeping some of these kids in school.

Since I talked about Fort McMurray, I will put a plug in for Fort McMurray and the employers in Fort McMurray when it comes to apprenticeship. Almost to a T the employers in Fort McMurray have 20 per cent apprentices on their staff, and that is something that they feel strongly about and it's something that they're pushing towards.

The other thing that's equally as important is that they are pushing and pushing and pushing their workers to have a grade 12 education. In many construction jobs it would be much nicer to be able to take the, you know, six foot five, grade 11 student, but the employers in Fort McMurray – and I give them full credit – have said that they want high school educated students.

So in many aboriginal communities these people when they quit school cannot go into the workforce in Fort McMurray, and in talking to the aboriginal people in northern Alberta, they are fully cognizant and fully aware that they must finish grade 12. What we've seen actually, albeit it is not as good as the rest of our province when it comes to the grade 12 completion rate, is an increase in aboriginal completion rates of grade 12, an inordinate increase. It's still nowhere close to what we would like and nowhere close to what the rest of the system is, but we are seeing that increase.

The other pride that I have to stand here before you today and speak about is something that we have developed: the registered apprenticeship program. That was developed by my predecessors and instituted in about '98-99. This program has worked absolutely excellent. It has captured students that, in effect, would have dropped out.

For the information of the Legislative Assembly you're able to retain 40 credits towards graduation by taking the registered apprenticeship course, and it has helped many, many students who, in effect, would drop out. I don't have the exact number that the hon. member was asking for. I certainly will strive to get that number. Again, it's a very tough number for us to get in order to correlate the number of students in the RAP program. I can tell you anecdotally and purely anecdotally that I would expect that number to be around 75 to 80 per cent completion. So it has been a truly successful program.

One of the other things that we have done, which is unique to Alberta – and I believe it shows the importance that we have for apprenticeship – is we have given the RAP scholarships. Each and every year there are 50 students in the RAP program that receive $1,000 scholarships. This is assessed by their employers; it's assessed on their school studies and the marks that they get.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Chair, last year of the 50 apprentices that received the scholarships, I believe there were around 20 of them that also received the Rutherford scholarships. This is not a lower class people; it is not a lower class occupation. It is something that's extremely important to this province, and it's something that is going to continue to be important in this province.

Mr. Chair, as I said in this Assembly on Wednesday, I had excellent conversations with the minister in British Columbia about the mobility of workers across our borders, between British Columbia and Alberta, and again I did not opt to decrease the quality of what our workers have. B.C. is going to be going through to the red seal program. They will however probably be laddering some of the steps to the red seal program, and we're presently working on exactly how that can be done.

But quality, quality, quality when it comes to our apprenticeship. If you ask any person in the apprenticeship industry, any person in business they will tell you – and it's something I strongly believe – that we have the number one apprenticeship system in the world, bar none.

The Chair: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I would just like to draw to the attention of the members of the Committee of Supply that the first hour is well past, so that opens up the opportunities for questions.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are other members who want to ask questions of the hon. minister, so I will be quite brief here.

Following up on the minister's comments, certainly in the – I call it the brag book of the government. Under Low Operating Costs the annual labour costs here in Edmonton are certainly lower than other places listed on page 119 of the fiscal plan, and when we look at the general satisfaction rates of employers with Alberta workers, the employers' satisfaction rate is excellent, and also the productivity of the workers is excellent.

There are those that malign our labour force and say that it is unproductive and that that is the reason for these cost overruns in Fort McMurray. That argument holds no merit. There are many electricians, unionized electricians, over 2,000 of them as a matter of fact, who are on their union's out-of-work board, and if they can make $30 or $40 an hour in Fort McMurray, I'm certain that they would go there. They're well trained, they're skilled, and they're very anxious to work. I would urge the hon. minister and his colleagues just to contact some of those respective unions, and they will see for themselves that these workers are well trained, and they're anxious to participate in the growth of this province.

Now, I would like to thank the hon. minister. Certainly, there have been some individual files which he has shown a great deal of time and attention to – hopefully they can be resolved – in regard to compulsory trades in this province. I am looking forward, after this discussion we had regarding apprenticeship dropout rates, to working with the minister and his department because I, too, am working on a series of statistics, and I really hope that the dropout rate in the apprenticeship programs is as low as the minister has indicated today, because that's good news.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I neglected to add a couple of things for the hon. member's last questions, and it's something, as well, on the apprenticeship side that we're extremely proud of. In talking to the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology – obviously, we have just put a very huge investment into the apprenticeship side with them – what we've seen is that the median age of our apprentices is now down around 21 or 22, which is extremely positive. Our mean age, our average age, is still up around 26, 27, but that quite simply means that we have more 45 and 50 year olds coming in. But our median age, which I think is extremely important for apprentices, is now down in the 21, 22 range.

Would I like it lower? Yeah, I would like it a little bit lower, but it's still a huge, huge step forward on this, I think. I don't have any facts to back this up, but I think it's really shown the acceptance of the trades and the acceptance of apprenticeship as a very valuable occupation. Certainly, in my department and every place that I speak, I speak about the trades often as a very valuable occupation.

Just in closing, Mr. Chair, I will say that one of the best decisions that this government has ever taken was to put the apprentices in the same system as the postsecondary system. What it's done is shown that the apprentices are truly equally as valuable as any student in the postsecondary system. Whether they're in medicine or teaching or an electrician, they're equally as valuable to the society of Alberta.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm impressed with the minister's stamina, so I'll take advantage of this and ask him a few questions.

I was listening to the minister with rapt attention when he was talking about the investment in postsecondary education as being the best investment that any individual or family can make. I don't think there's any dispute over that. What we need to do is to find ways of encouraging more and more Albertans to in fact seek that opportunity and take advantage of it and develop policies that from this side, from the government side, will not only encourage but help students in fact fulfill their dreams and their aspirations.

There is some evidence around which says that while Albertans aspire to postsecondary education, they're unable to pursue those aspirations and turn them into solid expectations and plans. So we need to ask the question: where is there a place in this picture for public policies to come in and help students do that? Obviously, the current policies leave a gap there that needs to be filled. The point is: what additional policies are needed there? I'd like the minister to respond to that.

Related to that is the question of: it's the best investment because, you know, the returns on it are the highest of many other forms of investment. Being a former university professor, I used to spend quite a bit of time trying to get that message out and look at literature which, in fact, produced very sound and strong evidence done by economists all over the world, particularly from the University of Chicago, which is one school that neo-Liberals love to of course pay attention to. Economists of education did lots of studies and won Nobel prizes on investment in education and returns on it. What they did in this analysis was to look at it not just on the returns on investment that individuals make but the return to investment that societies make. So they distinguish between individual or personal returns and social or community returns to investment in education.

That data, that information, that research was used then to shape public education policies which led to a large investment by governments in postsecondary education. The point was that if you have more university- or college-educated students, if you have more apprentices with complete and practising trade papers in their hands they, first of all, have much higher levels of employment. They get salaries and wages and incomes which are much higher than their counterparts who don't have these papers, whether at the college level or the apprenticeship level, the trade level, or the university level.

What's so good about high incomes other than that it's advantageous to individuals? Well, from the government side it produces a large number of people who have high incomes, therefore more taxes. So the government revenues benefit from it, which the government then can use to bolster other of its programs.

My question to the minister is this specifically. Has he commissioned some studies of his own or accessed some more recent studies on social returns to investment in postsecondary education which he can share with this House to either shed some light on the efficacy of decisions that are made with respect to this or in defence of his refusal to freeze tuition fees for our students, which would mean, obviously, increasing the social investment portion in the education of students who are in our postsecondary learning system, be they college, university, apprentices, or trades? That's my first question.

Dr. Oberg: Sure. Thank you very much. To the hon. member, I am again in a little bit of an uncomfortable position in that I do agree with 75 per cent of what the hon. member has said. It would have been a hundred per cent except he added that last little phrase there.

Mr. Chairman, certainly, the hon. member is well versed in postsecondary education, is well versed in the university system. That certainly is evident.

There is no dispute between myself and the hon. member when it comes to the importance of postsecondary education or the value of postsecondary education or, I will say, the value of the investment in postsecondary education. From a government point of view – and this is purely biased, purely my own, from society's point of view as well but purely from myself – I think that it's absolutely the best place to put money in a government's budget. Some of my colleagues who have very important ministries as well tend to argue a little bit with me about that, but that's just my personal view on postsecondary education.

The direct question that the hon. member has asked is a very good one, and that is: have I commissioned any studies to look at the social and societal returns for a postsecondary system? The answer is no. The reason that I haven't is because I believe strongly in a postsecondary education system, and quite frankly I don't care if $1 brings back $8 or $1 brings back $9 or $1 brings back $12. I feel strongly enough that I don't want to waste money to do that. However, I equally feel that whether it's $9, $10, or $12, it doesn't make any difference because it's still extremely important. The postsecondary education system is still the most important area that we can spend money on, and that statement is something that I will argue with anyone about.

The hon. member has talked about freezing tuition fees, and I've already stated in this Assembly my belief that a parent has responsibilities for their children to pay tuition fees. One comment that I have not made is that our universities right now are sitting at about 25th, 26th, and I believe 29th in the country, although I think that has even grown lower in the past as British Columbia universities have come up quite significantly in their tuitions in the last year. So we're sitting at about the middle of the pack when it comes to the tuition rates.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Chair, the government in Ontario recently froze tuition fees and received a great amount of publicity, but equally it has created a huge, huge amount of angst amongst the postsecondary school system, because at the same time that they froze tuition fees, they did not increase the amount of dollars to the same rate. So, in essence, what we're seeing in Ontario is a decrease, a cut to the postsecondary education system, and I think that that's going to be extremely detrimental to Ontario in the future. That's keeping in mind that they have also had a $9 billion deficit this year. So how the postsecondary institutions are going to survive is going to be very difficult.

I recently came from a day and a half of discussions with the British Columbia ministry, and they're extremely proud because they will receive $105 million over the next three years in their postsecondary system. I didn't have the heart to tell her, Mr. Chair, that we had put in $125 million this year alone to a smaller system than British Columbia has.

So when it comes to postsecondary education, we're seeing a very large increase this year. There was a large increase last year, albeit much of it came during the year. But it is something that I believe strongly in, and I feel that certainly one of the best ways we can spend taxpayers' dollars is in the postsecondary education system, including – including – the apprenticeship system.

As I've been minister, I have attempted to give as large an increase as possible to the postsecondary education system, and I will say – and this really, really needs to be said today – that the postsecondary education system absolutely one hundred per cent has responded to that call.

One of the biggest issues that we have in the postsecondary system is access spaces. I apologize to the hon. member for going on so long, but one of the best examples that we have is that we put out money for an expected 500 spaces in postsecondary education through the access fund. The universities and colleges and technical schools came back and told us: no, we don't need that much money for 400 to 500 spaces. Instead, we received 700 spaces. So the postsecondary system is just an absolute delight to work with, and they certainly have the interests of students in mind when they make their decisions.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was pleasantly surprised that the minister agreed with 70 per cent of what I had to say. I encourage him to undertake that study. If he had the facts at hand, real, solid, evidentiary facts at hand with respect to the kind of study that I'm urging him to do, I'm sure he'll come around to the other 25 per cent on my side as well, so long as he's willing to be led by facts and evidence, you know, rather than by something else.

His reference to Ontario is a very, very interesting one. Alberta and Ontario are in very different situations. Mr. Harris's Conservative government left the present government holding the bag with the $5 billion of hidden deficit, which now you say has moved up to $9 billion, so a very different situation. Comparisons there are I think somewhat out of place.

You also visited Ireland, I understand, over the last two months or so, just before the session started, and I haven't seen you make any reference to the experience of Ireland with respect to how they have dealt with funding postsecondary education and with the tuition policies in particular and how enormously – how enormously – that country has benefited from that smart commitment that they made to make sure that every citizen of school-going age at the postsecondary level had the opportunity, and the results are quite clear. There's something to be learned from that as a different kind of example.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the minister did talk about $125 million more this year. When you create more spaces – and there are growing numbers of students who are in our colleges and universities and other places – more money is needed even to stay still; that is, in terms of the facilities that we provide. But I understand that in terms of federal transfers, most of which I believe are in support of postsecondary education, Alberta has received close to $55 billion or $54 billion. Those are my numbers. I'm seeking confirmation of these numbers if you have that information with you.

Freezing tuition fees would cost $40 million, no more than that. So there is for Alberta in particular an opportunity to consider taking the Ontario route. We often see ourselves as competing with Ontario as another economy, another jurisdiction in many ways, and here is one where I think we could perhaps try and do that. The study that was quoted in the House today and again last year, done by TD Bank, I think, Calgary-Edmonton Corridor, clearly indicated two things: that our high school completion rate needs to be improved – we are behind the national average – and, secondly, that our postsecondary participation rates are below other jurisdictions within the country that we compete with and perhaps outside.

When we're looking at the business plan and under Performance Measures, there are two things that I noticed here. One is under outcome 2.2, "High school completion rate of students within 5 years of entering grade 10." We don't have a Canada-wide figure to compare our numbers with. I wonder why. Is that information inaccessible? What's the reason for us not being able to compare our rates with that? The TD study certainly had some information. Why is there no information on Canada? In some other categories, you know, the (b), (c), (d) following that, there is some sort of Canadian benchmark.

The second thing that I was curious about is the high school to postsecondary transition rate, again under Performance Measures. I've been drawing attention to the absence of this performance measure in our business plans for some time, and I've been around now for seven years. Yet I still see that there's no start made on this. We say: new. I wonder why the minister didn't think it appropriate to perhaps use the numbers – I don't know how totally firm they are – from the TD study, which uses some of those numbers to draw attention to it. It is page 341 I'm talking about, the very last part of that page. It says, "High school to post-secondary transition rate" with no information on it, yet to be determined, under 2005-2006.

I find this quite curious, this absence of information, any commitment to measure ourselves in terms of performance on this very, very critically important aspect of the system performance of the learning system at that very important juncture where the transition takes place from high school to university.

Would you like to perhaps respond to those? I have two other important questions that I would like to ask.

Dr. Oberg: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I'll start with the last one. The answer is actually quite simple. The hon. member did raise a point several other times when we have had estimates. At those times we had said that the necessity for this measure is actually the one student number, and we are just in the process of implementing the one student number. We started last September. Once that one student number is there, what we'll be able to do is follow through right from high school into postsecondary. So we will be able to track them.

What we haven't had the ability to do is actually track the students. We will be able to track the individual students. We will know now if student 53781 has gone into the postsecondary education system, and we will know accurately whether or not they have gone into the education system. So that is the rationale as to why that number is not there. We can track them through. What we had to do was go through the Privacy Commissioner. We had to do all of these other things in order to ensure how we could do it.

What I will guarantee to the hon. member is that the number that comes forward in '05-06 will be accurate, and it's going to be something that's incredibly important. The hon. member has raised this on numerous other occasions, and again I find myself in a very difficult position saying that we actually took his advice on some of this. [interjection] Ah, God, say that it isn't so. But believe it or not, we actually listen on this side to some of the very important things. So that's what we're doing. That's the reason we don't have the number at the moment, and as soon as the number is there, it will be a very important number, but again it will also be a highly accurate number.

The other thing on the high school completion rates. I answered a question about this from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods in question period, and at that time I suggested that we should have 100 per cent as the goal that we attempt to move towards. Unfortunately, each and every year I do have a fight with my department as they want to put an achievable number, but through to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods I will say that I'm gradually, gradually winning the battle on that one.

The Canadian standard on completion rates. I can't answer right now as to why it isn't in here. I can't answer what the difference is. I will certainly look at that. I do believe that the information is being collected in other provinces, but it may be collected in a different way. I just can't answer that right now, so I will put that as an undertaking to give that answer to you, especially as to where exactly we sit.

A couple of other points, just starting from the top. Ireland was an interesting country when I was over there. I attended as the leader of Canada's delegation to the OECD. Although I didn't get much chance to actually talk to the Irish minister, as there were some 45 or 50 countries present, it is a country, in talking to some of the people around, that has been very interesting. It used to be called the Celtic Tiger. The issue is, though, that apparently the unemployment rate is starting to come back up.

The other interesting point is that Ireland had a great deal of European Economic Community money, EU money being put into Ireland when it joined the European Union. That being said, I think they did invest very wisely, and they saw a huge increase in their economy, a huge increase in what was happening in Ireland. It's my understanding that that has levelled off and, indeed, may be stagnating. So they're going to have to take a very serious look at what they're doing as other countries increase their education rates as well.

One of the interesting comments that I will make to the hon. member is that when you look at what we have done – and there's an interesting study that just came out about two weeks ago. It showed according to socioeconomic status the number of students that attend university. What has happened in Alberta over the last 20 years is that the number of high economic status students has gone down quite dramatically. The number of lower socioeconomic students has increased by around 25 per cent from 20 to 24 per cent of the total, and the number of middle socioeconomic status students that are going to university has increased equally as well. We have seen the shift from the lower socioeconomic class, the middle socioeconomic class, and the other classes improve. So that's the direction that we want to go.

I think you're probably in the ballpark with the $55 million. I can't say for sure if that's exactly what we've received. Put that in perspective though: $55 million out of $1.3 billion. We spend $1.3 billion on postsecondary education in Alberta, so $55 million, albeit very important, is a pittance compared to what we actually ultimately spend on postsecondary education.

The $40 million for a tuition freeze. Again, Mr. Chair, I feel that I need to increase the amount of money that goes to universities and postsecondary institutions, and this budget shows that we have indeed done that. Equally, I feel that there is an obligation on behalf of students, on behalf of parents to pay for some of their own education, and that's something that we followed through. We are attempting to limit it to a reasonable increase this year, and I may be a dollar or two out, but I believe that the maximum amount of increase was $274. Again, to put that into context that we can all understand – and maybe I don't understand it – 27 packages of cigarettes was the increase to tuition this year in Alberta, the maximum allowable amount.

Postsecondary participation rates. Yeah, that's an interesting one; right. What we've seen in Alberta is a very hot economy over the past eight or nine years. What we're finding out is that a lot of students have elected to go into the oil patch, for example, where there are jobs. Rather than going into the postsecondary system immediately, they've jumped into the oil patch. Unfortunately, many of these students are not returning to the postsecondary system.

I think that when you take a look across Canada – and I may be wrong on this – I believe that one of the highest percentages of participation rates is actually in Nova Scotia. One of the rationales for that is that their economy has not been that hot, and indeed students who have come out are faced with two situations: either, one, no job or, two, going to university. [interjection] Ontario? Okay. Those are certainly some of the situations.

The point that I will bring up, though, is that Alberta has the highest number of university graduates of any province in Canada. I believe the number is around 55 per cent of the working community has a postsecondary diploma or degree.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have two more questions for the minister that I must ask. We'll see what happens then.

I was looking at the budget estimates here. This is again the business plan book, page 347. At the bottom of that table there's a star after Total Program Expense. Did you get that line? Then there's a footnote underneath which explains that the "total program expense includes the province's cash payments towards the unfunded pension liability" – I don't know what the amount is for this year – "(which will be eliminated under a separate legislated plan)." When is that plan forthcoming? I understand that some sort of negotiations are underway with the ATA, but there's no provision in this particular budget in anticipation of an agreement being struck with the ATA on this issue. So if the minister would shed some light on that first, and then I have a second question.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thanks, Mr. Chair. This is in reference to the agreement that has been in place for about 12 or 14 years where we have assumed two-thirds of the existing unfunded pension liability of the teachers.

Dr. Pannu: On the actual fund; right?

Dr. Oberg: Right. We're now putting in about $130 million dollars. So this is apart from the teachers' portion of this, which is running in the $60 million to $65 million range. The agreement that was struck proposes that the unfunded pension liability will be paid off in I believe the year 2060.

The other issue – and this is a very important issue when it comes to the unfunded pension liability – is that the liability is predicted to increase over that time frame to $18 billion before it starts to go down. So there certainly are some issues.

With regard to the unfunded liability for teachers the ATA and the Alberta School Boards Association are in talks about this exact issue as we speak. There has been nothing forthcoming, but I will say, Mr. Chair, that I will be one of the happiest learning ministers in Canada if I can come forward at some point in time and make some announcements about that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you for your kindness, Mr. Chair. My next question to the minister has to do with the allocations to boards from this budget. I'm glad to hear from boards – and the minister has been hearing this too – that the new funding formula is being received well across the province by all kinds of jurisdictions which are very different from each other in many ways, which is good news. The use of this formula, of course, translates into the number of dollars each school board gets and the funding profile that develops from it.

Will the minister share this information with us, and how soon can he do this so that we don't hear competing claims on how much money a school board is getting, how much more money this year a school board is getting than last year, and whether or not that money is enough for them to retain a few teachers that were hired back last January or whether or not they are going to be doing anything at all by way of taking steps to increase the number of teachers within the school system in order to move towards reducing the class size towards targets which the minister himself must meet over the next four or five years? The chair of the Learning Commission, Pat Mackenzie, herself has publicly expressed both frustration and disappointment at the allocations and the confusion around the additional dollars that school boards are getting.

So to come to the point, can we get that information for each school board with respect to the additional total money? We'll figure out how much more money is there this year as compared to last year. Secondly, some sort of funding profile for each school division.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thanks, Mr. Chair. I certainly have the funding profiles. One of the issues that is out there quite simply is there are negotiations with the teachers and with other unions that are ongoing, and there has been a request that we not share the profiles. Each individual jurisdiction has their own funding profile, so they all have their own funding profile.

To give an example, the amount of funding – and I'll use Edmonton public as the example – for Edmonton public prior to our November announcement where we added in the dollars was $454,376,760. After the November announcement where we saw the annualized $90 million put in, it went up to 461 and a half million dollars. Under the new framework, without any other increases at all, Edmonton public will receive between $3 million and $4 million extra.

There are a couple of assumptions that I want to point out here. If we assume in Edmonton that there is no enrolment change – so it's the same number of students this year as last year – what you see in Edmonton is a 5 per cent increase, which is very close to a little over a $22 million increase that has been given to Edmonton public. Again, these are not the figures that they have given us. This is the assumption that the enrolment is flat. If we use their numbers that they have given us, what we see is a 4.9 per cent increase that has been given to Edmonton public. So around I believe – my math isn't that good right now – a little over a 21 and a half million dollar increase is what has been given there.

I do have some problems with some of the media items that have been out there lately regarding the number of dollars that they have received. Indeed, I have been in touch with the people at Edmonton public, and they say that absolutely they will be hiring more teachers.

To put that in perspective, Mr. Chair, Calgary public, which is another major board, obviously, in the province, is going to see an increase budget over budget of around $36 million, a huge amount of money. Their budget is going to be going up around 6 per cent. One of the reasons for this is that they have seen an enrolment increase. The other reason is that the new funding formula recognizes some of the issues that Calgary public had and subsequently has rewarded them.

Those are the numbers. There is $192 million directly that goes to school boards in this budget.

Is there some misunderstanding out there? I think there is. I've had a very long conversation with the president of the ATA about this as well, and both of us want to get out the actual exact numbers. We're still looking at whether or not we publish the total funding reviews that are out there for all the school jurisdictions, but that's up in the air at the moment. A decision hasn't been made on that.

Dr. Pannu: Further to the same question, Mr. Chairman, it's not the media numbers that I'm talking about. I'm talking about school boards' own releases here. So I hope you correct yourself in attributing any disputed numbers only to the media reporting. You talk about $21 million for Edmonton public; they're talking about $13.4 million at most. In that, they include the $9 million that they received in January to hire back some teachers, and their claim is that they won't be able to retain, much less hire, many new ones given their numbers.

The reason why it is, I think, appropriate for this House, too, to have those numbers is so that we don't have to go back and forth between the media, the minister, the school board, and the ATA. As legislators I think we need to have the information that the government has at least so that we can make up our own minds and not be led by five different people talking about five different things about the same numbers. What's the problem with that, I'm asking, and why won't you release that?

Dr. Oberg: Again I'm in the uncomfortable position of agreeing with the hon. member. I agree with you. As I mentioned earlier, I'm a strong believer that transparency is the most powerful political tool that there is, and I will endeavour to have all the funding profiles tabled in this Assembly before the Assembly closes down. I'm presently in some discussions with some of the school boards about this exact issue, but I will endeavour to table all of the profiles in this Assembly before it closes down this year.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to follow on with that if I may. One of the pieces of information that I asked for last year and haven't received was the assumptions on which the budget is built. Rather than going to the school boards, I wonder if the minister could share with us the assumptions that are built into the budget about teachers' salaries – what numbers do you build in? – about the different categories, the assumptions about principals and phys ed teachers and substitute teachers, the numbers of students in classes, what schools should need for resources.

It seems to me that the impression that's left is that the budget-building process hinges on people saying that it should be 3 per cent, that it should be 5 per cent, that it should be 10 per cent. I mean, we get these differing views of what it should be, and then the government tries to play this game of trying to come down someplace that won't cause too much grief. But it is never really related to the costs that schools and school boards are going to be faced with paying. I wonder if the minister might comment upon that.

Dr. Oberg: Certainly, Mr. Chair. One of the issues that we had when we brought in the new funding formula, which took us about two to two and a half years to actually do, one of the huge discussion points was the actual price and cost of teachers. We debated and debated and debated how exactly to do that, whether we put the exact price of what it costs a particular jurisdiction, remembering and recognizing that that changes year to year, or do we not build in any costs for those jurisdictions that have higher priced teachers than the other ones?

With representation of everyone around the table – we had probably 25 to 30 people in the room from all the educational partners – it was decided that we not put in the formula anything to do with teachers' salaries because the school boards felt that they did have some ability to move that and that it should not be put in the formula, recognizing that it doesn't necessarily mean that the money has not been put in. In essence, it goes into the basic per student grant.

The other issue that I believe the hon. member has asked is: do we just simply take it from 3 per cent and say that the system needs 3 per cent or 2 per cent or 4 per cent this year? The answer is no. We have gone away from that, and indeed five or six years ago that is the way it used to be done. What we're looking at now – obviously, volume is something that's a very real number. It's a very concrete number that is built into this formula.

On the disabled side we look specifically at volume, and we also look at the amount of increase that is needed in the severe disabilities. One of the things we've been concentrating on, for example, which I'm very proud of, is bringing the severe behavioural disabilities up to the same level as the severe physical disabilities, and this will be the first year that the two have actually balanced out and are exactly the same.

We've also taken a look at English as a Second Language in the funding formula. Again, these are needs that are out there for the school system. We've dramatically increased those dollars up to a little over $1,600 per ESL student. To put that in perspective, hon. member, about two years ago or three years ago it was down at around $550. So we've seen it almost triple, and again this is recognition that the costs of an English as a Second Language student are considerably higher.

I'll give you another example: the outreach schools. It used to be that these outreach schools were funded purely on the per student basis, and simply by having an outreach school, bringing more students in, they actually received more funding. Well, what we've done this year, as well, is we've added an extra $52,000 for each and every outreach location. We've recognized that the cost of an outreach school is more expensive. It cannot necessarily be a straight extrapolation from a high school that has 1,500 students to an outreach school which has 50 students, but the importance of the outreach school cannot be overstated. So we have added in a $52,000 per location grant for that.

We've added in small board administration costs. We've added in jurisdictional declines or increases in enrolment. So if your jurisdiction experiences an unwarranted decline, a sudden decline in enrolment after September 30, then that is now recognized. The same thing occurs for an unexpected growth in number of students, and we've added in extra dollars for that.

We've looked at northern allowance. We've looked at aboriginal students. We've built in socioeconomic status. So I think it's overly simplistic to say that we quite simply took the number and went from 2 per cent to 3 per cent to 4 per cent, et cetera. There are a lot of wide variations in this new funding formula that we have put in, and again it is an attempt to rationalize what we do with the system and rationalize how the dollars are distributed out to the school boards.

Do we have it perfect? Probably not. I'd love to be able to say that we have the perfect formula, but it's taken us three years to get to this point. Are we going to have to change it again? We may well, but I think that this is as close to a perfect formula as there exists in Canada today. I would love to be able to say that I sat down and worked it out all by myself and came up with this formula, but I can't. This was truly a collaborative effort by all departments in education in order to put this funding formula out. I really must stress that it is not simply taking a base number, adding in 3 per cent or adding in 4 per cent and saying: that's enough. It's showing where these dollars are going. It's distributing it on an equitable basis as opposed to an equal basis, and I think we've hit it about as well as we can.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to go at that again. I agree with the minister, and the government has I think done a good job with equity. I think they took the money in and decided to redistribute it on a per pupil basis. They eliminated the huge differences that we had with respect to geography.

If you look at the literature on school finance on the continent, 10 years ago everyone was trying to address equity. But it seems to me that the whole field of school finance has moved past equity and is now really addressing the question of adequacy. That's, I think, a whole new area. I guess that my question to the minister is: how do you assure that the per pupil grant, whatever it is, is adequate to pay the costs that school boards face in trying to deliver programs?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Yeah. Thank you. That's a very difficult question the hon. member has just asked. One of the things that we rely on to a very large degree is the expertise of the school jurisdictions on how they allocate the resources that are available. I'm just attempting to do a little bit of math here, and if you would bear with me for about two seconds, I'll have something for him. No, I won't because my calculator isn't big enough. It only goes to eight digits.

Dr. Massey: Don't rely on technology.

Dr. Oberg: That's right.

The point that I'm making is that when it comes to funding a class, if you take a class of 25, that class of 25 is getting now, probably, around $7,400, $7,500 per student. So you're looking at a huge amount of money that is being put in per class.

I in no way – I in no way – would say that every class is a class is a class. That absolutely is not true, and I don't think anyone has said that for years. The issue comes down to: when we allocate that money, we depend on the school jurisdictions to put that money in the place that they see fit. There are some classes that may have five or six; there are other classes that may have 35 or 40. It is up to the school jurisdiction on how that is given out.

With regard to the adequacy there have been a lot of attempts made to see exactly what adequacy is. I think you've got to recognize that there are a huge number of wild cards in this. For example, do you use the average teacher's salary in Canada, in which case there would be much more than adequacy here? Our teachers are paid considerably higher than anyplace else in Canada on average. So there are a huge number of issues when it comes to the actual adequacy.

When it comes to equity and how it is distributed, we do that in what I believe is as fair a manner as possible. When it comes to an actual number to put down and say that each student must have $7,363.27 in order to have the best possible education system, I won't buy that, because it's impossible to do. A student is not a student is not a student. Every student is different. Every student has different needs. Every student has different resources that should be put towards that student. That is why we have school boards. That is why we have professionals out in the school jurisdictions to decide how those resources are spent.

My job as the Minister of Learning is twofold, and I think that this warrants speaking about. First of all, I'm an MLA, and I have to be responsible and accountable to my taxpayers as to how their tax dollars are being spent.

Second of all, I am the Minister of Learning, and I attempt to get as many dollars as possible within that context for the learning system and to ensure that the learning system dollars are spent – are spent – in the best possible fashion. When I see 5 per cent increases to school jurisdictions, when I see across Canada that British Columbia, for example, is at zero per cent for three years, when I see the amount of dollars that I've put into the education system, it astounds me.

The point that I will make: can I actually, scientifically sit down and say that this is the adequate number, that this is the scientifically proven number that should go in? I can't, and I don't think anyone in budgeting can. I don't think that number has ever been arrived at. Even if there were a number that was arrived at, I would have severe difficulty in agreeing with it, because I'm a firm believer that you have to individualize school programs, that the individual has different resources that are needed for each one.

Mr. Chair, the question is a good question, but the reality of it is that it's simple to say: look for the adequacy. What is the magic number? In reality, it's almost impossible to come up with the magic number.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, just to pursue it a little further, Mr. Minister, in a number of American states the literature is filled with adequacy. There have been three or four, at least, different schemes of trying to arrive at adequacy. You know, they've used expert panels going in and saying: here are the programs that the government wants delivered; if you have an average elementary school, this is what you might expect. Others have gone to very successful school districts and said: what kind of resources did they put in to achieve those kinds of results? They've really, I think, focused on the outcomes and said: this is what we want.

If you look at Wyoming, for instance, one of their outcomes is that every graduate of the high school system will be eligible for a postsecondary program. It may just mean, you know, a program at some sort of a skills college; it could be a vocational program; it could be a university program. But when they leave those school districts, they must be eligible for further education. So they've approached it that way.

If you look at places like Maryland, they've gone to 28 measures of what they want those youngsters to be able to do when they leave school. So the adequacy has gone sort of backwards. They've started at what we want youngsters to be able to do, what the graduates will look like, and then what kind of programs do we need in place to make that happen, and then what will it cost us.

And it is hard. I mean, I agree with the minister: there's no easy answer. I don't pretend to be any expert in educational finance, but I suspect that the impetus was court action, that parents went to the courts in a number of states, 20 at least, and said, "My youngster is not being provided an adequate program," and that's opened up the whole can of worms in terms of adequacy.

I think that at some point all the arguments about whether it's enough or whether it's not enough would be dissipated when there is something the government could point to saying: "Look. These are the programs we want delivered, this is what we want youngsters to be able to do when they leave this system, and this is what we are going to fund. You have a school; you need a librarian for every 300 youngsters; you need a counsellor for every 200." I mean, they've gone at it in a variety of ways, and I think that it may not be now, but I would predict that somewhere down the road in Alberta we'll be addressing adequacy because it does seem to be a growing movement.

Dr. Oberg: You guys are going to get sick of hearing me today. I'm going to start losing my voice.

Mr. Chair, the point that I will add: when it comes to enough or not enough, the single biggest wild card in that is salaries. Quite simply, if we were to say enough or not enough, what we would have to do is we would have to be able to say: "Here is what the salary increase is this year. Here's what the salary increase is next year."

I'll use specifically the 14 per cent salary settlement that we saw as an increase to teachers' salaries. What we did not anticipate and we would never have anticipated even if we had an adequacy formula that said enough or not enough – we would never have anticipated a 14 per cent teachers' settlement. That teachers' settlement was retroactive for a year and a half, which was the single biggest expense in the education system.

The other point that the hon. member has brought up is outcomes, and I'm not saying that just because someone has 20 outcomes – well, we actually have 52 outcomes, which is something that we'll be reporting on in the November report card back to the constituents. We've been working on this for about three and a half years.

I do not believe that the system should be measured on input costs. I do not believe that the system should solely be measured on how much you spend, and if you spend more than another system, you have a better system. That's absolutely not true.

However, I do believe that we need to watch outcomes, that we need to focus on outcomes, and that's one of the situations that we've addressed over the last three and a half years. We are getting to the end of it, and hopefully it will be out here in November. You saw part of this outcome indicator in the February questionnaire that went out to parents, teachers, and students.

The other issue, though, that I really take offence with – I don't take offence with the hon. member, but I take offence to the assertion that you can actually say that you have an average elementary school. You know, I have yet to go to a school and say: okay; well, this is an average school. Do you know what answer I get back?

"No, no, we're not average, because we've got this, this, this; we've got this, this, and that." I challenge the hon. member to actually find an average school.

I'm a firm believer in individualized lesson plans and individualized education, and the average component just realistically is not there. From my department's point of view I do not want to spend a lot of time and resources to determine a number such as the average school. To me that's just money that's very, very poorly spent.

Dr. Massey: Well, you know, that's fine, Mr. Minister, but you do put out a per pupil grant, and I'm sure that that per pupil grant doesn't fit every youngster in a particular school. I don't think you can have it both ways. You can't base the system on a per pupil grant and then – you know, the experience elsewhere was that they looked at what they would like for an ideal as a basis for distributing money, and that's what you do with the per pupil grant. You use it as the basis for distributing money across the province or at least in part.

If I could just change because the time is running out. I have a couple of questions about postsecondary education, Mr. Chairman, if I might. One of the pleas that the students have been making is that there be an increase in the living allowances for the student loans program and also that the parental contribution be looked at and the role that that plays in students getting or not getting or only getting partial financing through the students finance program.

The other was their proposal with respect to the remission program. I'm sure the minister is aware of it. "The program would better serve Alberta students" – and I'm quoting from one of their publications – "by allowing those who have less than $5,000 in debt per year to have a portion of their debt remitted as well."

Of those three proposals that the students have made, it seems to me that the most urgent one is that cost of living one. If you come to this city or Calgary and try to live on those allowances, it's really difficult.

Dr. Oberg: Yeah, certainly. Actually, there are two ways I want to answer this. First of all, when we look at the cost-of-living adjustments that are in the student loans, we attempt to look at what is called, I believe, the agricultural market basket or something along those lines. It's what is actually used. So there is a scientific basis to it. We are, however – and we're just getting the data to do this. I've asked my department to start giving out student loans, and we will be adjusting it. It won't be this year but probably next year.

In conjunction with Economic Development we have actually looked at the cost of living and the cost of expenses in the various communities around the province to address the issue that you just brought up. Realistically, a student in Brooks, Alberta, has different basic living costs than someone in Calgary going to the University of Calgary or someone in Fort McMurray. It's been an element of attempting to get these numbers, getting good comparative numbers. We do have these. We're in the midst of getting those now, and that will be brought out when it comes to the living expenses. I think that that's only fair.

The interesting point that we've looked at is that there is a significant difference. You know, there can be up to a 15 to 20 per cent difference just in the cost of living, the cost of eating in some of these communities. So we will be incorporating that into our student loan program, and again that will be the first in the country.

The other issue on the remission side and why we picked $5,000 is quite simply because often that's the federal government's component of it. We're not going to remit on behalf of the federal government. The federal government has no remission program.

Quite simply, the dollars that are borrowed from the province the majority of times by far the majority of the dollars are given back to the students. We're not going to remit dollars back to the student that the federal government has given them and demanded to have back. I encourage the federal government to go to a remission-type program. It has served us very well in the province and will continue to serve us well. Unfortunately, they haven't done it.

I'll just add one other plug, Mr. Speaker, and I answered that in a question today. Prime Minister Martin has talked about raising the student loan limit. It will be the first time in 10 years that the student loan limit has been raised on the federal side. We in Alberta have been the only province in Canada that has raised it each and every year and will continue to raise it.

Dr. Massey: I guess it was the third question that I had about parental contributions, if that had been addressed.

Dr. Oberg: Yes, that was one question. Parental contributions is something that I get a lot, and I get it from two different sources. I get it from the source where parents just absolutely won't give any money to their students, where they have said: listen; you as my daughter or my son are completely on your own. What we've done is that through the appeals committee they can appeal that. If the parents actually sign these affidavits that they bring into the appeal committee, the majority of the appeal committees are won on that behalf, where the parent shows that they absolutely categorically refuse to put in any money towards their child's education. Personally I think that's deplorable; I think it's horrible. But some parents do that, and we have taken that to appeal and the student has overthrown that.

The other side that I get it from is those parents that are in the $50,000 to $60,000 range with more than one child. Again, the appeal committee looks at each individual circumstance if they want to appeal. If you have specific students with student loans and they want to appeal the amount, it's a very good way to do it. If the facts are at all legitimate, the appeal committee on the student loan program tends to be very lenient on some of these appeals. So that's what I certainly would encourage.

Those are the two extremes that we get on parental contributions. On the one I have empathy for the student, but absolutely no sympathy for the parent. On the other one I think I do have empathy and sympathy for the parents, and we attempt to accommodate that as best we can.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt hon. members and the flow back and forth, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 on a Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoon, I must now put the question after consideration of the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Learning.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$3,799,734,000
Nonbudgetary Disbursements	$142,500,000

The Chair: Shall the estimates be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's been an exciting afternoon of debate, and I would now move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Ministry of Learning.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Learning: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $3,799,734,000; nonbudgetary disbursements, $142,500,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That having been said and given the proximity to 5:30, I would move that we would call it 5:30 and adjourn until Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 5:15 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 26, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/04/26

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon, and welcome back. Hon. members, at the conclusion of the prayer please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem. It will be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Increasing awareness and education about the law is important to helping Albertans better understand how the justice system works. Over the past 35 years the legal studies program at the University of Alberta has remained a leader across Canada in public legal education.

An hour ago Alberta Justice and the legal studies program released A-Link, Alberta's law-related information network. A-Link is the first of its kind in Canada as an on-line directory that increases Albertans' access to information.

It's my pleasure and privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly three key individuals from the University of Alberta's legal studies program. Dr. Cheryl McWatters is the dean of the Faculty of Extension. Dr. McWatters is a dedicated continuous learner and a member of Canada's academic community for more than 10 years. Professor Lois Gander is the associate dean of the Faculty of Extension and director of the legal studies program. Dr. Gander is recognized as a Canadian leader in promoting public access to law and justice information. Dr. Diane Rhyason is the associate director of the legal studies program. Dr. Rhyason was the project director for the A-Link directory.

I'd also like to introduce Karen Machura, the legal education coordinator for Alberta Justice. Karen has done a phenomenal job for the department in this role, and once again it was shown today with the successful launch of the A-Link initiative.

They are standing in the public gallery, and I'd ask the House to give them their warm and traditional welcome. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the great honour of introducing to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly some incredible young people, who are accompanied by teacher Ms Tracey Crain – I'd ask that they stand as I name them – and parent helpers Ms Wanda Amor, Mrs. Michelle Lukan, Ms Joanne Perry, Ms Inga Lanctot, Mrs. Barb MacIntyre, Mrs. Nancy Skrynyk. Of course, they are students from the Roland Michener secondary school in Slave Lake. I'd ask that they all rise and receive the warm welcome. I believe they're sitting in the members' gallery.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 43 students from the St. John Bosco Catholic school. I had the pleasure of attending their grand opening. They are spending their first year in this beautiful school, and I want to commend them on that. They are accompanied by their teachers Mr. Zydek and Mrs. Adolf and their parent helpers Mrs. Donna Ballantyne, Mrs. Lina Brietkreutz, and Mrs. Val Obrigewitch. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one of those strange introductions. My group will not be in until 2 o'clock, but I did want to put on record that they are coming in. It's a school from the city of Airdrie called George McDougall high school. It's a great school. Both of my sons graduated from there, so a lot of time and energy by everybody was spent at that awesome place. This is a group of 35 people coming in, five adult supervisors and 30 students from the French side of the George McDougall high school. The grade 10 students will be in between 2 and 2:30, and I wanted to mention that they would be in.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure, but I hope that this group of special guests are here. They are 40 students from Greenfield school. They're led by their teacher, a wonderful, dedicated Stacy Morgan, a very loving teacher, and parent helpers Sarah Henderson and Kim Aime. If they are here, we would ask them to now stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you may know, today members of the ALS Society of Alberta are meeting with MLAs throughout the building to discuss issues related to ALS and the treatment and programs that are available through the Alberta government. This morning the Member for Redwater and I had the pleasure of meeting with a delegation from the ALS Society of Alberta, one of whom was a constituent of mine. I'm very pleased to see that he has joined us in the members' gallery today, and I would like to ask Mr. Rod Helfrich, who is an ALS victim himself, to rise and receive the recognition of all Members of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 33 students from Mill Woods Christian school in Edmonton-Mill Woods.

They're accompanied by their teacher Mrs. Judy Krahn and parent helpers Mrs. Kathleen Landsman and Mrs. Christine Silva. They're in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 16 representatives of the Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis Society, ALS for short. These guests represent individuals living with ALS, volunteers, and staff of the ALS Society. They include representatives from the ALS Society of Alberta, ALS Society of Canada, as well as the ALS societies of Manitoba and British Columbia. Today is ALS Awareness Day at the Legislature, and that's why I'm wearing these cornflowers.

These guests are meeting with various caucuses to share information on the effects of ALS on people living with the disease, the services the ALS Society provides, and to identify ways to collaborate strategies to better meet the needs of those living with ALS. These guests are seated in the public gallery. I would now request them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly one of the members of the ALS Society of Alberta, Mr. Victor Beland from Grande Cache, who has really worked hard on this, so at this time I'd like him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The first Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 11 the Premier said he would release the controversial Graydon report on health care in six weeks, but last Thursday, when asked about that promise, the Premier said, quote, well, I fibbed, end quote. It's time for the Premier to start telling the truth and admit to Albertans that rather than strengthening health care, as the Alberta Liberals would do, this government plans to undermine public health care and leave Albertans paying more out of their pockets for fewer services. My questions are to the Premier. Why are Albertans hearing fibs about health care from this government instead of the truth?

Mr. Klein: Well, I'm not a 'Fiberal.' Mr. Speaker, quite simply, it was our original intention to release the Graydon report, but having second thoughts, which those in politics are allowed – and anyone is allowed to have a second thought, a second thought about any issue – it was decided that we would release the Graydon report in conjunction with a multitude of other reports.

The reason for that, Mr. Speaker, is that I have seen the actions of the Liberals in this Legislative Assembly, and basically what they want to do is take that report and pick out of that report those things that make for a good 15-second sound bite, and they will try to sensationalize elements of that report. They won't consider it in its total context. So it was decided that that report would be released along with numerous other reports as well as best practices in other jurisdictions.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Will the Premier confirm that under a plan circulating in his government and in his department of health, user fees for health services will escalate with each additional usage of the system, penalizing those that need health care the most?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the question alludes exactly to what I was speaking about, and that is user fees and those things that make for a good 15-second sound bite. The Graydon report, along with all other reports, will be released prior to caucus meeting, and caucus will consider an overall plan of action. That plan will be taken out to the public for consultation and everyone, including the Liberals, will have an opportunity to comment.

Dr. Taft: Why is this government embarking on its fifth attempt at health reform in 12 years instead of doing what Albertans want them to do, which is provide more beds, reduce waiting lists, and reduce emergency room overcrowding?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we want to achieve all of those things, but we want to do it at a cost that is affordable and sustainable so that we will have health care for all of us, our children, and our grandchildren in the future. That's what reform leading to sustainability is all about.

Government Aircraft

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While everyone else drives to get around Alberta, cabinet ministers last year alone took over 1,100 flights on the government's fleet of passenger aircraft. My questions are to the Premier. How does the Premier justify employing 12 pilots, a flight attendant, and four aircraft on standby 24 hours seven days a week at taxpayer expense when the great majority of flights are simply for cabinet ministers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is not entirely true. I've been on many government flights that involve public service employees, and of course public service employees and firefighters use the planes as well.

It's impossible to put a price tag on the time required to do government business by all of those in government, including cabinet ministers, MLAs, and the 22,000 people that we have working in the government. Use of government aircraft allows MLAs and government staff to quickly attend to issues in all parts of the province. It allows ministers, especially, to get more done in one day, which would not be possible with commercial aircraft.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention the cost. Government fleet flights can save taxpayers' dollars. For instance, not including fixed costs such as salaries and insurance, a full flight on a King Air 200 costs $76.71 per seat round trip to Calgary. What we try to do is make sure that the plane is loaded.

Mr. Speaker, the plane is available to opposition members as well, those who want to fly to Calgary. There was one member who lived outside the city of Edmonton. I don't know why the others would require it, but certainly on Thursday afternoons and Monday morning or Sunday night there is a shuttle from Calgary to Edmonton. We load up that small aircraft, and we land, conveniently, at the City Centre Airport.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out that on many occasions, especially in North America, including Mexico, we use the King Air rather than commercial aircraft at a cost of about $400 an hour as opposed to the $3,000 or $4,000 per round trip it would cost to take commercial airlines. Unlike the federal Liberal cousins that they so want to emulate, we do not fly around in A320s or Challenger jets. These are turboprop aircraft. We do have the inconvenience from time to time of having the toilet seat loaded with pizzas or sandwiches as opposed to a full galley, so sometimes we are denied the use of the toilet as well.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, since the purpose of these flights is most of the time unknown and undisclosed, will the Premier publish for the public to see the flights taken by cabinet ministers and the purpose they serve?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, all flight manifests are kept, and any member of the public is welcome to view them. The hon. member knows that, and to stand up and say that he doesn't have access to the information is at least, at very, very least, misleading the public.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Lund: The reason for the flight is included on every manifest.

Dr. Taft: Since the vast majority of these flights, over 1,100 last year alone, were approved for use by cabinet or Executive Council, not firefighting, and since a one-way flight on the King Air to Ottawa is over $11,000 according to the government's own figures, can the Premier estimate the cost to taxpayers for flights taken by his Executive Council alone?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'd be glad to. Again, he's using figures. If we load the King Air 350 and have someone sit on the toilet, that would make nine people. If we were to book economy class or even business class, the cost to Ottawa would be approximately $4,000 per person round trip. Multiply that by eight or nine. That is $36,000. So at $11,000 it's a bargain.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is almost no public accountability on the 1,600 flights taken on government aircraft in 2003. Contrary to previous procedure government is now telling opposition that they may look at the records but cannot copy them or bring any computer equipment into the room. To get a copy of the records, we have now been told by the minister's office that we must FOIP for them, so once again less transparency, less accountability. My questions are to the Premier. In order to inform the public, can the Premier explain why in February 2003 a government aircraft was used by the minister of health to fly to Camrose and back?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea. I would assume it was government business.

Relative to the procedures with respect to viewing the manifests, I'll have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure respond.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, those manifests are all available to the public, and they can be viewed at any time. The opposition is asking for us to copy all those manifests, and there's a cost to all of that. Through the FOIP they would know what those costs are. But certainly they're open. They can come in and view them, but we are not going to copy them for free. That's a cost to government; it's a cost to the taxpayers. If they want those manifests copied, we'll do it, but there will be a fee.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. You wouldn't even allow us to take electronic copies.

My next question is to the Premier. Can the Premier inform Albertans what the purpose was of an October 2003 series of flights taken by the Premier and others from Edmonton to Calgary to San Jose, Albuquerque, Houston, Cheyenne, and back to Calgary? Please tell us.

Mr. Klein: Probably can, Mr. Speaker. It was government business. I would remind the opposition that the opposition is certainly part of PNWER and takes government aircraft. I've been on the plane with members of the opposition.

I would assume that that was a mission perhaps in conjunction with Team Canada – maybe not; I don't know – or in conjunction with Premier Campbell or the western governors' conference. It could have been any one of those things. I'm not sure. I don't have that information in front of me. Had they had the courtesy of submitting the questions long before question period, I could give them specific answers, but they are not courteous people.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: will the Premier lift the gag order, recommit to openness and transparency, and ensure that anyone who wishes to copy or make electronic records of the Infrastructure flight logs can do so again? Will you commit to that, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there is no gag order. When the opposition talks about three King Airls, one 350, two 200s, and a Dash 8 that are in the air most of the time, allowing people – staff members and MLAs and ministers – to conduct government business, they conveniently forget the extravagance, the absolute extravagance of their federal cousins who flip around in Challenger jets and A320s.

By the way, when they report expenses, while we're on it – I gleaned from the Internet how the federal government posts their expenses. This is the travel and hospitality expenses detailed report from the Prime Minister for all of 2004 thus far. Now, four months have almost expired, and he has one expense. Where? The Challenger jet broke down. Poor dear soul had to take commercial to Montreal at a cost of $420.39. That's all I've been able to get off the web relative to federal government expenditures. These people are trying to tell the public that the Prime Minister of this country has only spent $420.39 on expenses and travel. That is balderdash, to say the least.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That wouldn't even pay for the Premier's orange juice.

Beef Recovery Strategy

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, both the federal Liberal and the provincial Tory governments are experts in designing BSE compensation programs where the money seems to end up where it's needed the least. Moreover, while we all hope that the U.S. border opens to live cattle exports soon, it continues to be abundantly clear that there is still no strategy to deal with the situation should the border remain closed. My question is to the Premier. Given that it's been almost two months since the Premier first committed the province to developing a plan B scenario should the border not open to live cattle exports, can the Premier explain just where the heck plan B is?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it is in front of the minister as we speak. As a matter of fact, we had the opportunity to discuss it briefly at Agenda and Priorities this morning. It'll be coming to cabinet tomorrow.

I'll have the hon. Deputy Premier speak more on this matter.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the beef recovery plan strategy or contingency plan, if you wish to call it that, has been worked on by the industry. We have a round-table that numbers up to 60 persons periodically, sometimes a few less, sometimes a few more, as well as some very diligent government MLAs, who try to attend as many meetings as they can. Last Friday we had our final meeting, and the final report was drafted. I received a copy of it about 9:30 this morning. I've had an opportunity to very quickly peruse it. As the Premier indicated, our cabinet will be reviewing this document tomorrow.

We've had a conversation with the industry as to when we would make that public. I think the hon. member would understand that it would be only courteous to share that report with the 60-odd industry people who had input into it. Because we had a drafting team of about a half a dozen people from the industry, designated by the industry, they would like the balance of their members to see the report. The Premier has said over and over again: by the end of April. I don't know where this member is going with this. By my reading it's the 26th today, so we're actually a little ahead of schedule on this issue. As soon as the industry indicates how they would like to release this with us, we'll commence with the release.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that six weeks ago the government promised to table in this Assembly an itemized list of every recipient of BSE compensation and the amount that they received and at that time the minister indicated that it was 97 per cent complete, what's the holdup with this one?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're at about 98.7 per cent now. When you consider that in this House some weeks ago I indicated that we had issued cheques to some 1,564 feedlots and owners of cattle at that time, I think the hon. member would understand that with the moving of 1.2 million head of cattle through the system, through almost 1,600 owners, there might be just the odd chance that you would have one, two, or three of these claims or maybe four or five or six that you would have to do some further work on.

I have made a commitment to release that. I have not backed off from that commitment. But, Mr. Speaker, I will not release it until it's complete. We anticipate that happening very, very shortly.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that meat packer margins are once again on the rise, as evidenced by the most recent Boxed Beef Report, which shows that they're running 300 per cent higher than at the same time last year, why is the government not supporting the House of Commons agriculture committee in demanding that meat packers open their books?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, this is purely in the hands of the federal government. They have two avenues: of course, the agriculture committee, who is doing this, and also the Competition Bureau. I know that maybe not a lot of concern is there for duplication and waste, but frankly I have a concern for it, and I don't see any benefit in our replicating the work that's already going on.

Mr. Speaker, we did a review of this to satisfy our own information needs and released that some weeks ago. He will have to contact the federal agriculture committee and ask them why they're not getting this done faster.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Direct Energy

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After months of speculation I understand it is now confirmed that Direct Energy has come to terms with ATCO's retail sector and is now officially setting up shop here in Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. What does this transaction mean to my constituents who currently receive natural gas or electricity from ATCO?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, what it means is that for the first time in Alberta there will be one provider who can sell both electricity contracts and natural gas contracts throughout Alberta. In other words, there'll be one provider, one bill. I understand that this company can also offer other services as well. So it puts a completely different perspective on the marketing of electricity and natural gas utilities across Alberta. What it means is that there is a new provider.

What it also means, what does not change, Mr. Speaker, is that the entry of Direct Energy does not affect payments that will be made under our natural gas rebate program. Those will continue for the five important months of the year, and even if you sign a contract with Direct Energy, you will still be entitled to save the money as the rebates are applied.

Also, Mr. Speaker, Direct Energy will be the retailer of electricity and natural gas services. ATCO will continue to remain in the marketplace as the distributor, as it were.

Mr. Klapstein: My second question is again to the Minister of Energy. Is this deal a good deal for the 180,000 electricity customers and 840,000 natural gas customers affected by this private-sector transaction?

The Speaker: There's a lot of opinion here, so let's be careful.

Mr. Smith: Well, that is calling for an opinion, but I think, Mr. Speaker, that the circumstances are appropriate. The government has in an open and transparent manner through regulation, through passage of a bill from the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and last year through the passage of Bill 3 from the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky — there is a playing field now that is level. The EUB is observant and examinative of rates that are put forward to them by all providers of electricity, all providers of natural gas, which includes city-owned utilities.

What we do know is that Albertans will continue to have the absolute lowest natural gas rates in the country. We also know, Mr. Speaker, as the competitive market model has worked – we don't have the hundreds of billions of dollars of debt against the Crown, and we do have some of the lowest wholesale prices of electricity in Canada – that we have the right model for the right companies at the right time.

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Government Services. Given that some of the marketing practices of Direct Energy's international parent company have come under question in other jurisdictions, what is the government doing to protect Albertans?

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and it is a good question. We like to let Albertans know what their rights are. The rights of the consumer are protected in a code of conduct and regulations under the Fair Trading Act. Direct Energy as well as all other electricity and natural gas marketers in this province are well aware of the provisions in the Fair Trading Act, and if anyone is caught violating those conditions and those regulations, we can and do prosecute. If anyone has any questions, they can call our consumer toll-free line at 1-877-427-4088. If they're curious about what their rights are, we will advise them.

Marketers have to provide identification when they come to your door. They must provide you with a written contract, and they must give you the opportunity to sign that written contract and leave you with a copy of that written contract. If they do not, then there is no contract. They also must have a provision in the contract that there is a 10-day cancellation clause so that after you've signed it and you wish to cancel after a 10-day cooling off period, you can do so.

So Albertans have lots of rights, and they can call our toll-free line to get more information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Classroom Conditions

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Teachers in 42 of Alberta's 62 school authorities do not have contract settlements in place. Twelve of those districts are currently in mediation, and two have conducted strike authorization votes. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. Given that classroom conditions have changed little from two years ago when most Alberta teachers went on strike, what plans does the minister have to ensure that the issue is not again mismanaged and results in similar actions by teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, two years ago there was a very substantial strike in Alberta. The arbitrator's settlement came back at 14 per cent, which resulted in the teachers being paid the highest in Canada. This year we put $250 million in budget over budget. There's a considerable amount of money that has been put into the education system, and I will hope that the school boards and the ATA find ways to resolve this, find ways to sign contracts, as it is in the local jurisdictions' purview to utilize that debate.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: has the minister done any board surveys to determine what additional teaching staff reductions are being considered for next September?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I would be extremely, extremely surprised and disappointed if after putting $250 million into the school system, into the K to 12 education system, there was a decrease in teachers that was being contemplated by any board. The only circumstance that could allow that is where you have the enrolment decrease, and I think everyone in this Assembly certainly would understand that.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. My third question is to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister is the only one living with the fiction that classroom conditions in the province are actually going to improve, will the Premier take charge of the situation now before we drift into another strike?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the education system is in good hands with the Minister of Learning, so I see no need to interfere with negotiations that are all part of the collective bargaining process, nor do I see any need at this particular time to interfere with the workings of the Minister of Learning.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Dr. Oberg: Thanks. I'd just like to add, Mr. Speaker, that in the two school jurisdictions that are looking at potential strike votes, it's my understanding that the issues are not salaries. Quite simply, it's conditions, it's classroom size, and it's things like that, that are fully negotiable between the school board and the local ATA. The local ATAs want it to remain that way, I want it to remain that way, and it's part of the negotiation process.

I think that if the hon. member were to look back over the last 20 years, there have been a significant number of negotiations that have been done in exactly this way. We look forward to the conclusion of negotiations. We look forward to that. I believe and I certainly would hope that this would not lead to a teachers' strike after a considerable, huge amount of resources, $250 million of taxpayer dollars, Mr. Speaker, have been put into the K to 12 system this year alone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Clean Coal Strategy

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of the West Yellowhead constituents are aware that coal is an important resource for energy in this province, not to mention that Alberta has an abundant source of coal. What many Albertans may not know are the positive steps that Canada and the United States and especially Alberta are taking to address this issue of clean coal technology. My question is, then, to the Minister of Energy. What are Canada and the United States doing regarding clean coal strategies?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions outside Ministerial Responsibility

The Speaker: Hon. member, with due respect, this is the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta, and it's really not within the competence or the purview of a minister of the Crown of Alberta to be concerned about nor be responsible for what happens in other jurisdictions. If you want to deal with the question about Alberta, that's fine, but America and some other country do not fall within the administrative competence of a minister of this Crown.

Mr. Strang: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is again to the Minister of Energy. How are Canada and Alberta working together to accomplish this goal?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the Member for West Yellowhead sees himself as an Albertan first and as a Canadian and, as such, would be looking at Alberta as a leader in clean coal technology and one that does work on a bilateral basis with the United States and with certain states inside the United States as well as across Canada.

I think that, firstly, Mr. Speaker, the need for clean coal technology is one that's very evident. Alberta has well over 700 to 800 years' supply of low-ash, low-sulphur coal. This is the best thermal coal in the world and, in fact, is only surpassed by the low-ash, low-sulphur coal deposits that exist in Wyoming. It is to Wyoming that we've actually looked for a co-operative program. In fact, when I heard earlier of a trip to Cheyenne, I can remember speaking in Cheyenne, Wyoming, on Heritage Days with the governor of Wyoming on the subject of sharing clean coal technology.

An Hon. Member: You mean by plane?

Mr. Smith: We were fortunate enough to be able to use the government of Alberta aircraft and travel at less than commercial expense.

So through those efficiencies, Mr. Speaker, we have found that there are, one, commonalities that exist between Wyoming and Alberta with respect to burning coal with reduced emissions. If we can reduce the emissions rather than take the head-in-the-sand approach that the Ontario Liberal government has done about banning coal producing generators by 2007, why not take advantage of this good fuel source and find a way to burn it cleaner, better, more completely to allow us to use that low-cost generation? The low-cost coal generation has delivered today the lowest wholesale prices of electricity in Canada.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Energy. How is the minister going to ensure that the integrated clean coal strategy is carried out?

Mr. Smith: Very simply, Mr. Speaker, I'm going depend on the hard work and the good reports coming forward from the Member for West Yellowhead and the work that he's doing under the review of the Alberta royalty structure on coal and his recommendations that will be forthcoming for a new Alberta coal policy that positions coal as an important and reliable option for energy generation and value-added products while continually addressing environmental requirements for clean air, clean water, nondisturbed land. I know that this committee can put together an appropriate strategy that combines the work of the Clean Power Coalition, that works across Canada, as well as the bilateral efforts that we have with the great state of Wyoming and the ability to work with the private sector and with nongovernmental organizations as well.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government through the Alberta Energy

Research Institute is also spending money to push the limit for reduction in emissions. We know that the supply of this low-cost fuel is important to low-cost electrical generation, and we know that good environmental practices are the norm in Alberta.

Mr. MacDonald: Deregulation has been an economic disaster for the consumers of this province. The transfer of assets from ATCO to Direct Energy, which is going to be finalized later this week, is yet another example of that. Direct Energy has already been given the green light to increase billing charges on utility bills by $40 to $45 per year. My first question is to the Premier. In light of this increase in utility costs on our bills, how is the entrance of Direct Energy to the Alberta market going to enhance consumers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the sale of ATCO's retail activities to Direct Energy has absolutely nothing to do with deregulation. I would point out that the sale of ATCO's retail services to Direct Energy has been approved. Power and gas prices won't be affected, but I understand that an administrative charge between $3 and $4 a month will be added to consumers' bills.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out that this is a transaction between two private-sector companies. The Alberta government's role through the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is to review the sale to ensure that ATCO customers are treated fairly and equitably, and that's exactly what the AEUB did.

There was a thorough review, extensive hearings, Mr. Speaker, and I don't know nor do I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar attended those hearings or made any attempt to intervene, and that's a shame.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: given that the big promise of deregulation was an increase in competition and that now that we have this transfer of assets, Direct Energy will have an 89 per cent market share of the gas retail market, how is this an increase in competition? This is not deregulation as you promised.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, deregulation, I would remind the hon member, relates to the generation of power, and with respect to gas that deregulation took place close to 20 years ago. But, quite generally, consumers will benefit by having a wider range of options available through Direct Energy than they did under ATCO; for example, the option to purchase energy packages that include both gas and electricity.

If he wishes to know more about the sale, perhaps the hon. Minister of Energy can shed some light on the situation.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Let me say that this additional entrant into the marketplace, combined with the appropriate legislation, allows more companies to provide more products across Alberta. This stimulates competition; this stimulates choice. In discussions that I had with Direct Energy this morning, when they informed me of this sale, they said that they have well in excess of 40,000 inquiries wanting to switch right now, wanting to move towards the Direct Energy offerings.

So, Mr. Speaker, we're going to see what this market does. We've already seen how Albertans have benefited from the supply of gas in this province. We've seen how Albertans have benefited from the supply of generation, and contrary to this member's idle meanderings about the transfer of wealth and all that other hocus-pocus that he comes up with, there has not been a blackout in this province. The only blackout is in his mind.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: when will this government force rural electrification associations and rural gas co-ops to allow Direct Energy access to their customers? When are we going to see that?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I will defer to the hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset that rural electrification associations have done a good job – a good job – of delivering power far and wide across 660,000 square kilometres, a vast area, of this great Alberta. They will continue to do a great job.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, rural gas co-ops are the model for gasification of rural areas. Alaska has talked to me about it. Other jurisdictions have talked to us about the success of rural gas co-ops. Rural gas co-ops, the strong management that they have, and the strong management units of rural electrification associations will deal with this new entrant in the marketplace, and they will find appropriate ways to do business together. Let's encourage them to be what they want to be, and let's find out where the market will lead us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Minimum Wage Rate

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minimum wage issue is an important issue to many Albertans. Many of my constituents are earning minimum wage and would strongly agree that it should be raised. My question is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What is the minister going to do regarding minimum wage in the province, which is now at $5.90, the lowest in the country?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we have to understand that minimum wage is not a horse race, so whether you're first or last or whatever is a matter of conjecture. The other thing is that there seems to be confusion amongst many people here within the province as to whether or not a minimum wage is a tool of economic policy or a tool of social policy. It's my view and the way that I've administered this portfolio that minimum wage is a tool of economic policy, and when you deal in terms of economic policy, then what becomes of paramount importance is the levels of unemployment.

One of the curious things we discover when we look at a comparison of minimum wage rates and, of course, then levels of unemployment, especially levels of youth unemployment, is that it's not a correlation of 1.00, but we find that there's a very high correlation between the minimum wage and the level of youth employment. The higher the minimum wage the higher youth unemployment. So I am very reluctant to announce at this point any increase in the minimum wage.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister give us an idea about – he said he was reluctant – the timing of an increase and how much the increase would be, since I have so many small businesses in my constituency?

Mr. Dunford: Well, the small-business sector is likely to be the one that would be most impacted. I'm not sure how many small businesses we have in this province, but there are 12,300 workers in this province that are at the minimum wage, so there's going to be obviously some impact if this were increased.

Once again, I think we have to understand that we're talking about economic policy here and we are not talking about government money. If there's an increase in the minimum wage, we're talking about employers that will have to pay a higher price for labour versus the fact that we do have a situation where this government as an employer has 19,000 or 22,000, whatever the number is, employed. Of course, they are paid much higher than the minimum wage. Yes, businesses would be impacted and unemployment would be impacted, so I'm taking a very cautious and a very conservative view on this matter.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that 1.1 per cent of our workforce, representing over 12,300 people, earn minimum wage, what is the government doing to help these working poor people make ends meet?

Mr. Dunford: Well, that's the thing that's missing in most of the criticism about Alberta and its minimum wage rate. People simply refuse to acknowledge the other kinds of benefits that are accruing to people who would be considered low-income Albertans. Certainly, anybody working at a minimum wage would be in that category.

Let's talk about it. Let's start with the tax, first of all. With the exemption that this government provides for each and every working Albertan, whether they're married or not, these folks can earn up to $15,200 before paying any tax. It's so hypocritical in some of the provinces where they talk about this high minimum wage area and then, of course, they claw it back through income tax. Well, this doesn't happen in Alberta.

If, in fact, there are children involved with a worker that is working at minimum wage, we have, first of all, medical cards. We have children's health benefits. We have top-up of income. If we take all of these benefits and these supports that are put in place and if we find what kind of salary you would actually need in order to combine this, well, you know, in Alberta you're looking at somewhere north of $7 an hour.

Ambulance Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Transferring ambulance services from municipalities to regional health authorities is going to have a major impact on a number of communities, particularly those like Lethbridge where fire and ambulance services have been integrated for over 90 years. Emergency workers, municipalities, and the public at large have been kept in the dark about how the transfer of ambulance services will impact the integrated services in these communities. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What plan does the province have for dealing with communities that have integrated fire and ambulance services?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we've said all along is that right now, as best as we can estimate, approximately $55 million a year is spent by municipalities to support ambulance services throughout the province. We've recognized, through the report led by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, that ambulance services in their substance really are an extension of health services. So as a result of that, we feel that it is a provincial responsibility to cover that $55 million, and we'll do that.

The budget is set aside, $55 million, for the next fiscal year to cover that cost, and the money will flow from regional health authorities to providers of ambulance services. In the current year, Mr. Speaker, we have $13 million set aside to prepare the transition plan. We've said all along that if the services are already good, there is no compelling reason why we'd want to change it. So it will depend upon the regional health authorities working with the municipalities. Where there are integrated services now, if they're working well and they're co-ordinated well, perhaps they'll continue in exactly the same manner. I don't see any reason why you'd change it if it's already a good service.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: given that some regional health authorities are already running deficits, how can the minister guarantee that ambulance services will be given the priority they deserve and receive the funding necessary to meet the emergency standards of Albertans?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, I want to say this as a follow-up to the minister of health. What I'm hearing from both rural and urban municipal associations is simply this: we welcome the provincial government's recognition of the service, we provide an excellent service to Albertans, and through municipalities the additional $13 million this year, the additional $55 million next year, which is totally new money, is going to give Alberta municipalities even greater breathing room.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I think the hon. member was asking specifically about regional health authorities. As it relates to regional health authorities, the money has been estimated as best as is possible in terms of how much it will cost to run these ambulance services, and that amount is being transferred to regional health authorities, who will then be able to flow that money through to whoever happens to be providing the service, whether it's an integrated service in a municipality or whether it's a private operator.

However the service is now, we want to improve it. We want to establish a standard for delivery of ambulance services in this province, so, Mr. Speaker, this money will be dedicated for ambulances. It will not be used for other purposes.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: how will the government ensure that emergency workers who work with integrated fire and ambulance services will continue to be fully utilized once the control is transferred to the RHAs?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I wish to correct the Minister of Municipal Affairs. It's not $30 million for the current year; it's $13 million for the current year. The purpose of it is for exactly that: to ensure that there is a smooth transition so that, again, good services that are already in place will not change.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we get to the next item, we had only 10 hon. members able to participate today, so my apologies to the seven who are on the list. We'll try and do better tomorrow.

Before we go to Recognitions, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to do this because my students are in now, and I just wanted to make sure that I had their names on the record properly. This is my group from George McDougall high school in Airdrie, which, of course, as I mentioned earlier, is my favourite school in my whole riding. The teacher is Mr. Tyler Leavitt, and the parent helpers are Geoff Martyn, Al Black, Patti Rice, and Nicole Opel. There are 35 visitors in the group. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: In 30 seconds, hon. members, I'll call on the first of seven.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

ALS Awareness Day

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and recognize ALS Awareness Day at the Alberta Legislature. ALS is often called Lou Gehrig's disease, and it means amyotrophic lateral sclerosis. It is also known as motor neuron disease.

ALS is a rapidly progressive neuromuscular disease. It attacks the motor neurons, resulting in muscle weakness and wasting. Eventually the ALS patient is left completely paralyzed with loss of speech, swallowing, and breathing. However, the mind remains completely alert and lucid. Sadly, a lively unimpaired mind is trapped in an immobilized body. The average life expectancy of an ALS patient at diagnosis is less than three years.

Mr. Speaker, ALS is not rare. Between 6 and 7 people out of every 100,000 in our population will be diagnosed with ALS. Almost 3,000 Canadians currently live with ALS. More than 90 per cent of the people with ALS have no family history of the disease. It is almost always fatal. A person living with ALS relies on access to $40,000 worth of equipment, and nursing care can cost many times that amount. There is no known cause; there is no known cure or life-prolonging treatment yet.

Mr. Speaker, all members have been provided with a cornflower. The cornflower is the symbol of ALS because despite its fragile appearance, it shows remarkable strength. This is symbolic of the strength of the ALS patient.

I would ask all hon. members to rise with me and salute ALS Awareness Day at the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association for their ongoing support for Alberta's film, television, and new media industry.

On Saturday AMPIA hosted its 30th annual Alberta film and television awards, or Rosies, which celebrate excellence and outstanding achievement. This year's awards drew a record 510 submissions.

It's thanks to organizations like AMPIA that Alberta has become a hub for this creative arts industry. The financial support provided by the Ministry of Community Development through its Alberta film development program is an integral part of this success story. The arts certainly help make Alberta an exciting and vibrant place to live.

On behalf of the ministers of Community Development and Economic Development, the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, myself, and all members of this Assembly, congratulations AMPIA and thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Alice Lewis

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Alberta we are blessed with a great number of outstanding community volunteers in every community. I frankly don't know where we would be without them. That's why it's such a pleasure for me to be able to do a recognition statement for some of these unsung heroes, specifically today one from my own constituency of Calgary-Currie.

Alice Lewis was born in the very first Red Cross hospital built in the United Nations, which made her a special person right from the beginning. That was at Taddockwood, Saskatchewan, but for 33 years now she has made her home in Calgary, where she raised four wonderful kids and where she first joined the board of the Richmond community association in 1972.

Her goal then was to build a new community hall, but it wasn't happening fast. So 15 years ago she took over the fundraising committee, which now has 72 people on the slate, and they raised in excess of half a million dollars over that time. The new hall just recently opened, and everyone knows that without Alice and her 72 other volunteers it just wouldn't have happened.

Congratulations, everyone, especially Alice, and keep up the great work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Excel Resource Society

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize the outstanding work being done in our community by Excel Resource Society, an organization that celebrates their 40th anniversary this year.

Excel started in 1964 as a community project created by the Alberta Hospital. The organizers recognized that if the hospital's clients were to reintegrate into the community, they would need help in developing personal and employment skills. Excel's programs have always focused first on the needs of the clients, whether it's learning to plan and cook their first meal or preparing for their first job. Excel continues to develop plans for their clients of the future. Excel has successfully operated a private vocational school, the Excel Academy, to train community support workers.

From their humble beginnings with 15 clients in the basement of the Robertson-Wesley United Church Excel today supports some 150 clients in residential programs, about a hundred in the employment placement program, and 120 in the day program at Gerry Raymond Centre. I salute their efforts.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

British Commonwealth Air Training Memorial

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday, April 25, 2004, I had the honour of attending a special ceremony at Memorial Park in Calgary, where a monument was unveiled. It is in memory of the young men and women of Australia and New Zealand who came to Alberta, received aviation training, and died on duty during the Second World War.

These young individuals, like many Canadians of their time, stood up and fought against tyranny. They made the ultimate sacrifice to uphold democracy and freedom. Their sacrifices have provided us with a strong foundation for the just, civilized society that we all value and enjoy in the world today. To them I am always in deep gratitude.

The ceremony was on the ANZAC Day of Australia and New Zealand. Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity in my younger days to live down under in the land of kiwis and kangaroos. To Australians and New Zealanders the ANZAC commemoration is equivalent to our Canadian Vimy Ridge event. The Gallipoli battle was a landmark of the nationhood of Australia and New Zealand. I ask the Assembly to applaud the organizing committee of the ceremony.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

2:40 Red Deer Rebels and Medicine Hat Tigers Hockey Teams

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to recognize the outstanding play of the Red Deer Rebels and the Medicine Hat Tigers in the WHL eastern conference final. As you can probably tell by this beautiful sweater that I'm wearing, Medicine Hat won.

The Red Deer Rebels had a very successful season and were able to surprise fans and opponents alike during the playoffs when they beat the Calgary Hitmen and the first-place Moose Jaw Warriors. Due to the outstanding work of players like Cam Ward, an incredible goaltender, Derek Meech and Dion Phaneuf, both members of Team Canada who won silver in world junior hockey this year, and our three retiring 20 year olds, Justin Taylor, Shay Stephenson, and Ladislav Kouba, and the very effective coaching of Brent Sutter, Dallas Gaume, and Cam Ondrik, the Rebels gave their fans an exciting season.

Congratulations and best wishes to the Medicine Hat Tigers, who will compete in their first WHL final in 16 years. The torch is passed to Medicine Hat, who will have a good chance of bringing back the Memorial Cup trophy to the WHL. After all, if you're good enough to beat Red Deer, you're good enough to win the cup.

The Speaker: I am not sure if the hon. member has an exhibit, but it has not gone unnoticed by other hon. members, the envy that they would have. I suspect that if I were to ask the question, it would be unanimous that the hon. Member for Red Deer-North provide to each and every other member of the Assembly a similar exhibit to the one that she's wearing. It would probably be passed very, very quickly. The hon. member might want to consider this. There are 83 members. Minus herself, that's 82 jerseys.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

International Day of Mourning

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the International Day of Mourning. In Canada April 28 became officially recognized as the International Day of Mourning with the passage of Bill C-223, the Workers' Mourning Day Act, which was introduced by New Democrat Member of Parliament Rod Murphy and which received royal assent on February 1, 1991.

In Canada more than 900 workers die each year, which works out to more than two workers every single day. In Alberta there have already been more than a dozen workplace deaths this year, which is twice the amount recorded at this time last year.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take this opportunity to recognize and thank the labour movement in Alberta, including the Worker's Health Centre for their contributions to workplace safety. Joint health and safety committees are a key element in the fight for a safer workplace. Unionized sites, as a result, tend to be the safer ones.

So on the International Day of Mourning I encourage all members to renew our commitment to mourn for the dead and fight for the living.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As per protocol I rise today to present a petition signed by 292 Albertans from across the province, including firefighters, police officers, and emergency health workers, petitioning this Assembly to support the passage of Bill 204.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table copies of a letter that I've sent to Connie Edwards, president of the Alberta Motion Picture Industries Association, congratulating AMPIA and all the nominees and award winners on the resounding success of the Alberta film and television awards, which I was privileged to attend this weekend.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure this afternoon to table for the benefit of the Assembly a folder entitled Meet, Think, Learn and Explore. It's a folder put together by the University of Alberta Faculty of Extension. Today at noon I had the honour and privilege of participating with the Faculty of Extension on the unveiling of A-Link, Alberta's law-related information network, as a resource for Albertans to find information about law programs and legal resources. The folder includes a postcard with respect to A-Link and how people can attend it, a bookmark with respect to A-Link and how they can find it, and a pamphlet, Alberta's Justice System and You, a compendium of useful information for Albertans about how to have and get access to legal information, legal programs, and information about how the legal system affects them. I'd like to table five copies for the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I'd like to table a letter from Mr. Gordon Steele addressed to him and me. The letter, dated March 26 of this year, provides an excellent analysis of why health care premiums should be eliminated.

I would like to table a copy of the Canadian Boxed Beef Report dated April 19, 2004. This report indicates that beef packers' margins are nearly four times higher than at this time last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the benefit of all Albertans the Alberta government aircraft passenger manifest from April 1, 2002, through to June 30, 2002. This is a comprehensive list, and I'm disappointed that further lists like this are denied the Official Opposition.

Thank you.

Mr. Lund: Point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure on a point of order.

Point of Order
Factual Accuracy

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely wrong. We made it very clear in question period that these are available to them. Yes, there is a cost of doing it, but there's a cost to the taxpayer through Infrastructure for providing those. To say that they're not available is absolutely false, and he should apologize for having said it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, I'm trying to answer the point of order. There was no citation so . . .

Mrs. McClellan: Twenty-three (h), (i), (j).

Ms Blakeman: Well, that's not the citation that was given.

The information that the staff the opposition sent over was given I repeated very succinctly in my preamble, and that was that the opposition could look but could not take notes. They could not take an electronic version on computers – they were not allowed to bring computers in – and they were not allowed to copy. Those were the instructions that were given. When we asked how we were expected to get the information aside from looking at it, we were told by an assistant to the minister that we would have to access it through freedom of information.

The minister seems to be indicating that somehow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has misled the House. That is not our understanding of it. We are repeating the information that was given to us and to our staff by the minister's assistant, and that is that we can look at it but we cannot copy it, that we cannot make an electronic record of it, that to get an actual physical copy that we could walk away with or examine at some other time for detail, we would have to access it through freedom of information. Therefore, the member's statement that he's disappointed that we can no longer access information as he has tabled is correct. We cannot access that information in hard copy form any longer.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on this point.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's quite obvious that there's a little bit of misrepresentation emanating from the opposition benches on this issue. Both the Premier and the hon. Minister of Infrastructure clearly indicated that there is a process in place, and I find this to be a violation of the normal rules of this House, particularly under 23(h), (i), and (j). [interjection] Will you stop for a second and shut up and listen, please. Okay. Excuse me. I said earlier 23(h), (i), and (j) four minutes ago. Okay. Just pay attention once in a while.

Now, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the rude interruptions that just occurred from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, let me make it very clear that that information has been and will continue to be available under the policies, rules, and guidelines that exist and under the conditions and circumstances that were just enunciated very clearly in this House by the Minister of Infrastructure.

So let's ask all hon. members on the opposition benches to please stop misleading in this way. It's dangerous, it's harmful, it's hurtful, and it sure as heck is not helpful to them or their purposes.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I would say in my consideration that the point of order raised by the Minister of Infrastructure is not a point of order, the response from the Official Opposition was not a point of order, and what the Deputy Government House Leader has cited doesn't even apply. So I would submit that there's no point of order.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, in regard to this tabling that has caused such concern on the opposite benches, in the past these passenger manifests were available to Liberal Party research staff. They could go to the Infrastructure department; they could make photocopies. There were no limitations, there were no restrictions put on their activities there. This has changed. Members of the general public, where we got this information from, were free to look at the lists and to photocopy them, and that no longer applies. The big question here should be: why? Why can't we just go in and have a look at this? It is our job, it is our duty to hold this government accountable. There's no point of order here in my view.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, there obviously is a difference of opinion. That is very, very clear. It's very difficult for the chair to stand up here and get the nuance about somebody having told somebody else third-hand or second-hand and this being part of the whole scenario with respect to this.

As best as I understand, there's great umbrage being taken with respect to certain words that were used in here which only belies the most important point: when it comes to Tablings, tablings should just be tabled without comment, which wouldn't give rise to this sort of thing.

Now, having been a former minister of such a department that would release this information, I'm not sure what the current policy is with respect to this now, existing today, but it seems to me that if certain individuals have a copy of the document, it must be made available. That seems to be part of what is true in all of this, that the information is available.

Number two, it need not be tabled if it already is available. Nevertheless, that seems to be the situation that does transpire in here from time to time.

So then we come right down to a difference of opinion as to how someone certainly accesses information. Now, if I understand this correctly, it is available on a computer?

Ms Blakeman: No.

The Speaker: It's not available on a computer, but it's available in hard form?

Ms Blakeman: No.

Mr. Lund: Exactly.

The Speaker: I can't deal with this. We've got two different opinions here. One says, yes, it's available on hard copy; the other one says no. The point of the matter is that I'm sure that by tomorrow you'll sort this out. We won't deal with this as a point of order. We'll recognize that we'll probably have another question, probably have another answer tomorrow, and maybe by the end of the week it'll all become very, very clear to everyone just what is available, and we'll get it first-hand from individuals in this House, not second-hand from anyone else. Okay? Thank you.

Any more tablings?

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 22, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 48, 66, 68, 69, 71, 75, 76, 77, 78, and 79.

[Motion carried]

Government Hotel Expenses

Q48. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted. Who stayed at the Sheraton Suites hotel in Calgary on February 5, 2002, that was charged to the government through the Premier's deputy chief of staff, James Davis?

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, this is one of those instances where we get a little bit of information but not enough to clear up any misunderstandings, and I'd like to offer the opportunity to the government to provide all of the details so that there are no misunderstandings. Thus, we'd like to get some additional detail as outlined in the written question.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to indicate on behalf of government that we're prepared to accept this question. I don't know if the date referred to is exactly right; nonetheless, we'll do our best to provide the information being sought.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much.

[Written Question 48 carried]

Natural Gas and Bitumen Development

Q66. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

When was the government made aware of the dispute between companies surrounding natural gas and bitumen development in the Athabasca-Wabasca-McMurray region?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would really appreciate some detailed background information in regard to this matter. When you consider the whole issue of natural gas over bitumen and some of the implications of further development in the Fort McMurray region, the number of leases that are going to be affected by this dispute, the number of companies that are affected by this dispute, it would be very important to learn when the government was made aware of this dispute.

Certainly, this hon. member is aware of discussions in the past between government officials and the industry in regard to gas over bitumen, but when we're looking at possibly enhanced compensation programs for those companies that are going to be adversely affected by this, this is a very important question, and I hope that the Department of Energy through the government provides us with that information.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Written Question 66 I'm pleased to indicate on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy that we are prepared to accept Written Question 66.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I must say at this time that I would like to publicly express my gratitude for that information, and I look forward to receiving it and reading it.

Thank you.

[Written Question 66 carried]

Utilities Consumer Advocate

Q68. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the procedure followed by the Utilities Consumer Advocate in order to track and resolve utilities consumers' complaints and/or problems?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, again, anything that we can do to shed light on the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate would be in the best interests of consumers. Certainly, in light of the transfer of the retail assets of ATCO to Direct Energy and the finalization of that sale – the final date, I believe, is the 4th of May of this year – it's important that we know what procedure is followed.

There have been many complaints to date to the department. I would have to say that there have to be close to 900 at the moment. Is there a different procedure for a complaint in regard to a gas billing issue than there is for a complaint about electricity billing issues?

Now, hopefully, the transfer of assets is not going to mean an increase in the workload of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, but we will have to wait and we will have to see. I would really be interested and I would be grateful if we could get a detailed written explanation as to: what is the procedure followed by the Utilities Consumer Advocate to track and to resolve utilities consumer complaints and problems?

Thank you.

3:00

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only comment will be to respond and indicate that the government is willing to accept Written Question 68.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I will again look forward to receiving that information and reading it and, hopefully, sharing it with anyone that is interested. I would express my gratitude to the Department of Government Services for providing it.

[Written Question 68 carried]

Royalty Reduction Programs

Q69. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the Ministry of Energy taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report to assess whether royalty reduction programs are achieving their intended objectives?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, again, this is very, very important. We know that there have been concerns expressed in many quarters regarding our royalty reduction programs. Certainly, there are many people from across the province who have expressed concern to this hon. member that perhaps we're not getting as much as we should in royalties in this province.

We look at the last time we had a good look at royalty programs. It was back, I believe, as the Conservatives say, in a different administration, the former government of Premier Getty, when Mr. Orman, I believe, was Minister of Energy. There was an extensive discussion paper, and there was significant change to how the royalties were to be calculated in this province. A lot has happened in the global energy market since, the most significant, of course, being the dramatic increase in the price globally for crude oil and here in North America for natural gas.

The price is what our whole royalty structure is based on. Specifically with natural gas, we have three different tiers and many other little agreements in regard to conventional oil, and then we have the stages of royalty – I don't want to use the word "take" because the citizens own the resource – share and how that is calculated. There are many, many issues surrounding royalty calculations and royalty reduction programs. Are these royalty reduction programs achieving their intended objectives?

The Auditor General had some questions. With many of these royalty reduction programs citizens and members of this Assembly have no idea what exactly is being reduced. What are the amounts being reduced? The only amount we see in the budget is the net amount of royalty. What's been taken off that? We have no idea. These royalty reductions are net. No one seems to know how much and to whom?

I think this is very important, specifically in light of what the Auditor General has said. Hopefully, we can receive this information as well. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: On Written Question 69 I need to indicate on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy that this question is being recommended for rejection.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, I am disappointed to hear the news that Written Question 69 has been rejected. For all the same reasons that I expressed in my opening remarks in regard to Written Question 69, I think this is very, very important. If we are going to have an open and transparent and accountable government, we should be able to receive this information. We need to know if it's $1,000, if it's $10,000, if it's $100,000, or if it's $2 million that one can receive in royalty reduction programs. If there's a cap on how much one can receive, tell us what the cap is.

I can't for the life of me understand why we can't have this information, when you consider that we rely in this province so much on the collection of resource royalty for our prosperity and our government spending. We need to know the structure of our royalty calculations and our royalty reduction programs if we are to plan to set aside a lot of money now that we have the debt under control thanks to the Alberta Liberals. Now that we have the debt under control and almost completely eliminated . . .

Mr. Magnus: Thanks to the Alberta Liberals?

Mr. MacDonald: You bet. It was our policy in '93, hon. member, and imitation is a fine form of flattery.

When we have the need to set aside billions of dollars, because at some point in the future a government is not going to have the luxury of this large amount of resource royalty, we should consider putting substantial amounts of the current money that's generated from resource royalty away for future generations, not for our own election purposes but for future generations. That's why I'm very, very disappointed that this written question has been rejected.

Thank you.

Natural Gas Rebate Program

Q71. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

How much money in total was distributed to utility customers in February 2004 through the government's natural gas rebate program?

Mr. MacDonald: It would be good information for consumers and certainly members of the Official Opposition to have. These natural gas rebate programs can't be centred or focused around one specific party's re-election campaign. That has been the case, in the view of some Albertans, with past natural gas rebate programs. Surely, someone on that side of the House knows down to the penny – I would be surprised if they didn't – how much money in total was distributed to utility customers in February 2004, because we have to plan for the future.

Now, there are two different types of gas rebate programs. There's one for the residential customers, and there's also one for people in the rural parts of the province, which may have different needs. They may demand large amounts of natural gas at different times of the year, whether it's for grain drying or whatever purpose, Mr. Speaker.

Specifically for February, let's see how much money was spent. February being one of the coldest months of the year, residential users are certainly going to be looking at a natural gas rebate next February, which probably will be just before the provincial election. I'm not to say – the hon. Minister of Infrastructure would certainly know a lot better than I – when the next provincial election is going to be, but we have to be prepared. This information would not only help the consumers but help the Official Opposition and certainly would help the budgeting process so that we'll know how much precisely is being spent in one of the coldest months of the winter.

Thank you.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you Mr. Speaker. If the member had been listening and looking, he would have known that this is a three-year program, so if he can tie that in with some kind of an election, hop to it.

Mr. Speaker, in keeping with this government's openness and accountability, we will be only too happy to provide this information to the member at no cost because it doesn't cost the taxpayers a lot of money to compile and copy and produce it. So we will accept this one.

[Written Question 71 carried]

Casino Construction

Q75. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

Which groups, companies, and stakeholders recommended to the government that final approval authority for casino construction is best left with a centralized bureaucracy rather than with local communities?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. minister I would be pleased to respond to this written question. The government's role with regard to horse racing and Horse Racing Alberta is to ensure accountability in relation to the funds that are received by Horse Racing Alberta through the racing industry renewal initiative. It's up to Horse Racing Alberta to determine how best to spend those monies that they have earned through the racing industry renewal initiative.

The objectives, of course, are the revitalization of the horse racing industry in the province and the continued employment . . .

The Speaker: Hon. Deputy Premier, if I understand, we're dealing with Written Question 75.

Mrs. McClellan: Yes, and I'm getting to it.

The Speaker: Okay. It just says, "Casino construction." I don't know where horse racing comes into this. Sorry, but we're on Written Question 75.

Mrs. McClellan: Sorry about that.

Anyway, racing entertainment centres are a part of this, Mr. Speaker. I should have been more explicit, because I realize that the nomenclature isn't known to everyone, but that's a review. Local communities do make those decisions.

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, the government is rejecting Written Question 75 with regret.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thank you. Well, I too regret, as the minister does, that the government won't make the information available.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 75 lost]

Premier's Deputy Chief of Staff Dinner

Q76. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

Who attended the dinner with the Premier's deputy chief of staff, James Davis, on January 12, 2002, at Il Pasticcio Trattoria restaurant in Edmonton that cost $395.53?

Ms Carlson: I would urge the government to accept this in the spirit of openness and accountability.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Written Question 76 on the Order Paper I need to respond that the government of Alberta needs to reject this question, and I want to indicate briefly a few reasons why. To begin with, I think all members here would know, because it has been said in this House on numerous occasions, that there are circumstances and occasions when the names of individuals attending various functions with elected members and/or with senior staff members are not something that become open and able to be given out publicly, and there are reasons for that.

In this particular instance we have the deputy chief of staff at the time who likely met with a number of individuals for a business-related dinner. In respecting the confidence of what may or may not have been discussed at that dinner, I think it's important to draw present individuals' attention to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. It's a very excellent read, and I would encourage all members to in fact read it, learn it, and become better acquainted with it. In particular, division 3, which talks about third-party intervention, is an interesting read, obviously. So, too, is another section which I will refer to as section 17(4), specifically (e.1) and g(i) and (ii), wherein it reads:

A disclosure of personal information is presumed to be an unreasonable invasion of a third party's personal privacy if . . .

- (e.1) the personal information consists of an individual's bank account information or credit card information . . .
- (g) the personal information consists of the third party's name when
  - (i) it appears with other personal information about the third party, or
  - (ii) the disclosure of the name itself would reveal personal information about the third party, and it goes on.

There are occasions, Mr. Speaker, when meetings – dinner meetings, business meetings, whatever have you – are necessary to perform on behalf of the government, and that applies right across the board. I should also indicate that these meetings – business or dinner meetings or luncheons or breakfasts or whatever they might be – don't just occur Monday through Friday. They frequently occur on Saturdays and Sundays. In other words, the business of the government of Alberta goes on literally seven days a week, virtually 365 days a year, and that's important to keep in mind.

The final point I just want to mention, going back to my references to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, is that I know there was an all-party committee that addressed this matter prior to this particular act being ushered in and through the Legislative Assembly. As I recall, there were members from all parties in the House who sat on that who helped design the report, and my information and my recollection going back a year or so ago – I think it was 2003 – is that, in fact, the FOIP Act was largely predicated on that all-party committee's report. So on that basis – I'm sorry, hon. members – this question will have to be rejected as worded.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the minister we didn't ask for minutes of the meeting or topics under discussion. We simply asked for who was in attendance. In the absence of a lobbyist registration act in this province, which is very unfortunate, this government does not like to disclose who is lobbying them and who isn't, and this is the only venue in which we can find out this information or could at least attempt to find out this information on behalf of Albertans.

The minister spent a great deal of time talking about the all-party FOIP review committee, which I happened to sit on and in which case I voted against very many of the recommendations that the government ended up passing because of their large majority. Some of those included pieces that he was speaking to specifically here. I would suggest that anyone who is prepared to meet with and lobby the government should not be opposed to having their name disclosed as such a person. We're not asking for the specifics of exactly what it is that they're talking about in those meetings, simply that if taxpayer dollars are being paid out for meals, then the taxpayer has a right to know who in fact was in attendance.

3:20 Private Vocational Schools

Q77. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. For the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03, and for the period beginning April 1, 2003, and ended March 15, 2004, what was the total amount of funding that each private vocational school received from any program administered by the Ministry of Learning either paid to a private vocational school directly or paid to individual students for the purpose of attending a private vocational school?

Dr. Pannu: Brief comments, Mr. Speaker. As a way of rationale and background there are under 40 private institutions licensed by Alberta Learning to offer vocational training to adult Albertans. While, for the most part, these schools receive no direct government assistance, indirectly they receive both student loan programs administered by the Minister of Learning as well as large amounts of indirect funding through various programs administered by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

The New Democrat opposition frequently receives complaints about the quality of instruction offered at these government-licensed private vocational schools. We also receive frequent complaints about how these schools treat students attending them. The information being sought through Written Question 77 is intended to ensure that Albertans are aware of exactly how much direct and indirect funding is received by each of the more than 140 licensed vocational schools. I urge the acceptance of Written Question 77.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We are willing to accept this written question with the following amendments, and I will say that it has been shared with the mover of the motion prior to 11 o'clock today. I would like to make the following amendments by striking out "and for the period between April 1, 2003, and ended March 15, 2004" and substituting "2003-04" and by adding "on a full-time basis" after "attending a private vocational school."

Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, the reason for substituting '03-04 is that that is our fiscal year. It doesn't make much sense to do everything in the fiscal year except two weeks. It would put my department through a considerable amount of work, and realistically I don't believe it would give them any extra information. So what we would suggest is that it was for '03-04, which would be the fiscal year '03-04, as well. We are also adding "on a full-time basis" following "attending a private vocational school," as those are the students that we fund.

So the amended written question would now read:

For the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03, 2003-04 what was the total amount of funding that each private vocational school received from any program administered by the Ministry of Learning either paid to a private vocational school directly or paid to individual students for the purpose of attending a private vocational school on a full-time basis?

I would therefore move the amended written question.

Speaker's Ruling Amendment to Written Question

The Speaker: Just for clarification. The hon. minister added one additional word to the document that was circulated to hon. members. Hon. members, if you take a look at the amendment to Written Question 77 that has been circulated, what was added by the minister in terms of the oral overview just given was the word "individual" that would have to be added after the word "to" at the end of the third line. That's the way it reads on the Order Paper, so I believe there's probably just a typing difficulty. It's important, however, because sometimes if one says, "It will not be released," and you forget the word "not," it changes the intent entirely.

In this case we have an amendment, and there's debate on the amendment now.

Debate Continued

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the minister for sharing the proposed amendment with me in advance. I certainly appreciate the part of the amendment that will make available information for the entire 2003-2004 fiscal year.

I just want to seek some clarification on the second part of the amendment. Is it the case that the Ministry of Learning funds at these institutions only full-time students? If that is the case, that only full-time students are funded, then clearly the amendment is in order and I have no objection to it. However, if part-time students are also funded, then I'd be disappointed because the information provided would be incomplete, and Albertans would certainly appreciate having complete information.

The Speaker: Okay. We have a debate on the amendment. If I recognize the hon. Minister of Learning on the amendment, that will close this section on the amendment. Nobody else?

The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, what the hon. member has asked me – there are part-time students that are enrolled in our private vocational schools. Unfortunately, it is very difficult for us to find that. Full-time students are much easier for us to do in that we can identify them purely on a full-time basis. By doing it on a part-time basis, the part-time students could be at other institutions as well, so the information would not be accurate. Therefore, I have added in "full-time" students to clarify what information we have available and will make available to the hon. member.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, I appreciate very much the minister's readiness to share full information, full in the sense of including part of fiscal 2003-2004 which wasn't part of the original written question request, but I am disappointed with respect to the minister suggesting that the department has difficulty maintaining or collecting or putting together information with respect to the funding of students who take their program on a part-time basis, although they are funded by the minister. So I express my disappointment with respect to the incompleteness of the information that I'll be receiving. Nevertheless, having half a loaf I guess is better than having none. With those remarks I will sit down.

[Written Question 77 as amended carried]

Private Vocational Schools

Q78. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. For the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03, and for the period beginning April 1, 2003, and ended March 15, 2004, what was the job placement rate six months after program completion for students attending each private vocational school licensed to operate in Alberta?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, brief comments on the reason for the written question. It is important that Albertans know whether value for money is being achieved for the investment of public dollars to support learners attending provincially licensed private vocational schools. One of the best indicators of the effectiveness of these schools, which operate as profit-making commercial businesses, is their job placement rates after students attending those schools complete their programs. This written question is specifically to question job placement rates for each of the private vocational schools from both the Ministry of Learning and the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment.

I'm aware that both of these ministries use slightly different methodologies for tracking job placement rates from these schools, and I emphasize that this written question seeks information on job placement rates from both ministries. I understand that job placement rate information collected by the Ministry of Learning is based on information reported by the private vocational schools themselves whereas the information collected by Human Resources and Employment is based on interviews with students six months after program completion. Again, that is why it's important that responses be received from both ministries.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We will accept this question with the following amendments. Again, I will state that it was circulated to my opposition colleague prior to 11 o'clock this morning as per Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker, I'll seek your advice on this. I do want to alter the typed amendment that is before us – and I would seek your advice on how to do this – by striking out the "2002-03, and for the period beginning April 1, 2003, and ended March 14, 2004" and substituting "02-03, and '03-04."

Mr. Speaker, I would ask your indulgence on specifically how to do that. I feel that that's more in line with what the hon. member has asked me. The same arguments hold for what I said on the last question about March 14 and keeping it as the fiscal '03-04 year and, actually, what the hon. member just stated about the six months after.

And striking out "what was the job placement rate six months after program completion for students attending each private vocational school licensed to operate in Alberta" and substituting "what were the job placement rates attributable to each institution currently offering programs licensed under the Private Vocational Schools Act." As the hon. member has stated, we do not collect that information in the type of format that the hon. member has asked for.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, before we get that explanation, just please read, then, to this Assembly exactly what the amended written question would now read. All hon. members have a text. If I understand the minister correctly, then what the minister is saying – let me just try this. The minister says: that for the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004, what were the job . . . and going on. So what the minister is basically saying is the document in text that we'd be dealing with now that would become the official one would have added "2003-2004."

Okay. That's the clarification that's important. All hon. members have that.

Dr. Oberg: That's absolutely correct, Mr. Speaker, and if I can, I will read the complete amended written question as follows:

For the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03, and '03-04 what were the job placement rates attributable to each institution currently offering programs licensed under the Private Vocational Schools Act?

I would move the amended Written Question 78.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Is it clear to the hon. member what has just transpired?

Dr. Pannu: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay.

Dr. Pannu: I think it is, Mr. Speaker. I stand to be corrected if my understanding is somewhat incomplete.

As I understand now, the minister in fact has included the full fiscal 2003-2004 information. Right? I thank the minister for doing just that, and I look forward to receiving the information from his ministry.

I had also of course requested in my comments to receive information for the same period to the same question from the Minister of Human Resources and Employment as to whether the job placement data based on student interviews six months after program completion collected by the ministry would be provided in response to Written Question 78, and I'm still awaiting some sort of response from the hon. minister in this regard.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly want to thank the Minister of Learning for his co-operation in getting to the House the requested information. I would certainly urge the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to respond in a similar way to the request that I made, because information from his office is just as important as the information that I now have been promised I would be receiving from the Minister of Learning.

Thank you.

[Written Question 78 as amended carried]

The Speaker: Now, just a clarification for everybody, hon. members. Please note that what we just did in here did not have the initials of Parliamentary Counsel. Our rules suggest that this is a requirement, but I will exercise and use my authority under Standing Order 2 to override that, but this will not come back as a precedent in the future. Okay?

Thank you.

Private Vocational Schools

Q79. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. For the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03, and for the period beginning April 1, 2003, and ended March 15, 2004, what was the total amount of funding that each private vocational school received from any program administered by the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment either paid to a school directly or paid to individual students for the purpose of attending a private vocational school?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, the reason for this question, the background to it, is that the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment provides hundreds of millions of dollars per year to support adult vocational training and upgrading. Much of this funding supports students attending private vocational schools. In fact, funding criteria for many of the ministry's programs – for example, in most cases the ministry only supports training programs of one year or less in duration – seem designed to direct adult learners to private vocational schools rather than public institutions like NAIT, SAIT, or NorQuest College. As a basic measure of accountability Albertans have the right to know what amounts of funding went from the public purse to these schools.

I urge the acceptance of Written Question 79.

Mr. Dunford: We'll accept.

Dr. Pannu: I want to thank the minister for his readiness to provide the information to the House. I look forward to receiving it at the appropriate time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 79 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been served on Thursday, April 22, it is my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 24 through 31, 34 through 42, 44 through 49, 52, 53, 55 through 62, 64, 66, 69 through 73, 75, 78 through 83, 88 through 105, 108 through 123, 128, 134 through 143, 146 through 160, 162, 164 through 168, 174 through 180, 183 through 189, 197, 200 through 205.

[Motion carried]

3:40 Business Credit Card Statements for Government Services Department

M24. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Government Services.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Mr. MacDonald: Certainly, in the interest of being open, transparent, and accountable to the taxpayers, I can't see why we would not accept this motion for a return. In light of some of the questions surrounding government expenditures, I think that this is reasonable. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate to the hon. member and to all members of the House that we're recommending that Motion for a Return 24 be accepted with amendments, and I would like to inform the House that the amendments were shared with our opposition colleague prior to 11 a.m. today as per normal procedure. I hope the amendment has been circulated and all members have a copy of it. I understand that is the case.

I would like to just outline and move what the amendment would be should it succeed. We are simply making similar amendments to what we've discussed in this House before by way of grouping and categorizing, which will enormously speed things up and at the same time will also allow the provision of whatever information is able to be provided under the policies and procedures established and also with respect to upholding the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, as I enunciated earlier this afternoon.

In the spirit of that particular gesture, Mr. Speaker, the newly amended Motion 24 would read as follows:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a statement of all credit card expenses for the fiscal year 2002-2003 incurred by all deputy ministers, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders in aggregate for each government department categorized by accommodation, travel, hosting, and miscellaneous expenses.

Mr. Speaker, that should sum up the gist of our acceptance as outlined and for the purposes indicated earlier.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the proposed amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is in regard to the amendment, and for the record I would like to express my gratitude to the hon. minister for providing this information this morning, at 9:47 a.m. to be precise. I appreciate it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the amendment.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister would take a question in connection with this amendment.

The Deputy Speaker: If he takes a question, that ends the debate.

Mr. Mason: Oh. All right.

The Deputy Speaker: You can offer the question, and when the minister speaks, then you might get an answer.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Maybe he would be so gracious as to respond to this question when he concludes.

The concern that I have with respect to this amendment is that if there were a few expenses which were out of order – that is, one or two by someone in a very senior position that was far too extravagant – would the effect of this be to blend it all in so that you couldn't tell what individual expenses were there? Of course, by spreading it over all of the administration, including branch heads, managers, unit leaders, and so on, you greatly increase the number of people who are aggregated in this number. It could look very reasonable because you would spread these expenses over a lot of people, so if you averaged the expenses per person, they would be very small.

I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, of the story of the man who drowned crossing a lake that was only on average one foot deep. I think this is the problem with the aggregation. I guess my question is: if there were particular expenses that were very expensive which accrued to just one or two individuals, would this amendment allow those expenses to be reported, or would they just be averaged in with the entire department?

The Deputy Speaker: There being no further debate, then, to close debate on the amendment.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you. I'm pleased to rise to close debate on the amendment and, in doing so, perhaps to comment briefly on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands' question. He's asking whether this particular amendment would somehow obfuscate or otherwise, perhaps, not present accurately or in some way cover up extravagant expenses. The short answer, Mr. Speaker, and the honest answer is no. In no way would this occur.

I think it needs to be mentioned for everyone's pleasure, Mr. Speaker, that all of these expense accounts are carefully and thoroughly reviewed not only by the internal processes but are also subject to the very thorough scrutinous eye of the Auditor General. They would certainly have been identified if any of those kinds of extravagant expenditures might have occurred. This amendment is in no way an attempt to do anything that might be of concern to the hon. member, but I do thank him for having raised it.

That having been said, I would seek the support of all members for the amendment to this Motion for a Return 24 as presented.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have reservations about this, but I will have to wait and see. Hopefully, I will be proven wrong.

A thank you is I guess in order, and we'll wait and see what information we do get. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 24 as amended carried]

3:50 Business Credit Card Statements for Human Resources and Employment Department

M25. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Human Resources and Employment.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reject.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Just briefly following up on the hon. Minister for Human Resources and Employment. I will support his recommendation, obviously, to reject Motion for a Return 25 based on the discussion we just had on Motion for a Return 24, where this particular issue was dealt with.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I respectfully ask that he give us more of an explanation than that.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Are we into debate at this point?

The Deputy Speaker: No, we're not. We're actually closing the debate. It can't come back.

Anyway, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has moved Motion for a Return 25. All those in support of this motion, please say aye.

Some Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, please say no.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: The motion is defeated.

Ms Carlson: He didn't close debate.

The Deputy Speaker: He didn't close debate.

Okay. We'll disregard that vote, and wax eloquent, hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. That's what I thought I was signalling to you before, but anyway, let us close debate.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was a little confused when both the minister rejected it and the Deputy Government House Leader also stood up and did the same thing, so there was a little confusion.

I think it's unfortunate, to say the least, Mr. Speaker. The kind of information that we're seeking is information that should be readily available to taxpayers in this province. No matter how it's construed, it is an attempt to keep that information from the public, so I think it's unfortunate that this is not being accepted.

[Motion for a Return 25 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Community Development Minister's Office

M26. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Community Development and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to clarify briefly before I talk to Motion for a Return 26, which we intend to accept with amendments, that the reason for rejecting 25 was only because it's already covered in 24. That's why I rose at the end of the hon. Minister of Human Resource and Employment's comments. We may see a similar pattern develop here shortly if the amendments before us on 26 are accepted. I think there was just a little bit of chatter going on at the time, and some members may have been misdirected in their listening temporarily.

With respect to Motion for a Return 26, Mr. Speaker, I'm recommending acceptance with amendments. I'm pleased to inform the hon. member and the other colleagues that our opposition were informed of this particular amendment prior to 11 this morning as per procedures. I understand that the amendment has been circulated to all members present.

I just want to outline briefly that anyone looking at the Order Paper would notice that there are a number of rather identically worded motions for returns similar to 26 where the only difference might be the name of the particular ministry in respect to the information being sought. If we're successful in approving the amendment – and I hope we will be – to 26, that will certainly speed things up a great deal in this House by being able to refer to 26 and say: well, this has already been opened up now, and all Executive Council members and their assistants will provide the information that's being requested.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, I'm recommending that we accept Motion for a Return 26 with the following amendment so that the amended motion would read as follows:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a statement of all credit card expenses for the fiscal year 2002-2003 incurred by members of Executive Council and their executive assistants broken down by department and categorized by accommodation, travel, hosting, and miscellaneous expenses.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: On the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleague who put this motion on the Order Paper has some concerns. Those concerns are particularly about the monthly breakdown being lost now. Specifically, what else may have shown up on a government card that will not in this particular breakdown that we're going to get? If those questions could be answered, then we'll be in support of this amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, I'm unclear as to why my questions can't be answered on this particular amendment and the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I don't know if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has had a chance to have as in-depth a briefing perhaps as she might have liked from her House leader, but we did have about an hour and 40-minute discussion on how this particular business would be approached. I think it was generally speaking agreed to, albeit with reluctance, I have to add, on the part of the Opposition House Leader, that we would try and provide whatever information we could under the groupings that we have available. Then if there was additional information that might be needed, that might be pursued on a one-off basis or it might be pursued through FOIP or whatever. But we have the information that can be readied in the fashion as outlined here and as organized here, so that's the reason for the grouping.

The second part of the issue is with respect to grouping together all members of Executive Council who will report individually on this. For purposes of speeding up the process in the House, rather than dealing with each ministry one by one by one by one for the identical question, we would simply amend the first one in the series, and it would in the spirit of co-operation apply equally to all the others that are on the Order Paper. So there is no change with respect to this particular point, from that point of view at least. I hope that clarifies something for now.

[Motion for a Return 26 as amended carried]

4:00 Business Credit Card Statements for Justice and Attorney General Minister's Office

M27. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Precisely now we have the amended Motion for a Return 26, which will include all members of Executive Council for the question being put or as near to it as you can read. In this case, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General and that particular minister's executive assistant would be covered under the amended Motion for a Return 26, so on that basis I would recommend that Motion for a Return 27 be now rejected.

[Motion for a Return 27 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Seniors Minister's Office

M28. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Seniors and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Motion for a Return 28 again comes under the same spirit of co-operation that we saw with the amended Motion for a Return 26 a few minutes ago. In the case of Motion for a Return 28 it's the same information being requested, but in this instance it's from the Ministry of Seniors and from the minister's executive assistant in that department. That having been said, with the amended Motion for a Return 26 all members of Executive Council and all their executive assistants are now covered, so there is a recommendation that I would like to put forward on that basis: reject Motion for a Return 28 before us now.

[Motion for a Return 28 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Solicitor General Minister's Office

M29. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Solicitor General and the Solicitor General's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you again to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on behalf of the other hon. member for raising Motion for a Return 29. The same basic explanation applies here, the only difference being that under Motion for a Return 29 the department from whom the information is being sought is the Solicitor General and the Solicitor General's executive assistant. As I indicated earlier, Motion for a Return 26 will serve the purpose because all members of Executive Council and their executive assistants will be reporting the information under the amended motion. On that basis, I would recommend that we are able to reject Motion for a Return 29, which is before us now.

[Motion for a Return 29 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Seniors Department Staff

M30. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Seniors.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thanks, hon. member, for the question. Motion for a Return 30. I would like to apply the same explanation here as I did to Motion for a Return 26. However, in this particular case the reference needs to go back to Motion for a Return 24, where, in fact, we already have approved a motion as amended, and that would include "all deputy ministers, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders."

So what we have in Motion for a Return 30, Mr. Speaker, is simply the citing of one particular department, which in this case happens to be the Department of Seniors. However, Motion for a Return 24 as amended simply states that all deputy ministers and so on working with government will be reporting the information as presented in the amendment, and therefore Motion for a Return 30 can be rejected since the information will be provided under the aforementioned Motion for a Return 24 as amended. Thank you.

Breakdown of Government Purchases

M31. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown by ministry of the total number and total cost of items that were purchased during the 2002-2003 fiscal year in the following categories: televisions, flatware, wineglasses, beer glasses, golf balls, golf tees, alcoholic beverages, jams, jellies, preserves, games, and toys.

Mrs. McClellan: We're going to try this one more time. We'll try and be on the same page.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to reject Motion for a Return 31 on this basis: from time to time government does buy promotional items. I can assure hon. members that we're not awash in them, nor do we just hand these out without thought or consideration as to the potential return on the investment.

Promotional items, Mr. Speaker, normally are of nominal value. They could be friendship pins, pens, key chains, postcards. They're used, generally, to promote positive awareness of our province with investors, tourists, potential immigrants. They're used to alert Albertans to programs and services that are of benefit to them, directing them to relevant sources such as web sites.

Mr. Speaker, it is our consideration that to track every one of these items and ensure that we've given a thorough accounting of every item that may or may not have been produced for the large number of valuable programs directed by this government to the people of Alberta would necessitate an enormous effort on behalf of everyone involved in all those programs. It is the government's consideration that this time and effort is far better spent in delivering the actual programs and services in question to the people of this province.

Department of Energy Salary Bonuses

M34. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of the amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Energy over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by the position of and amount paid to each official.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to point out before I indicate the recommendation on this one that in fact this is another one of those types of motions which, in this particular case, is referring to one specific ministry. There could be a number of other ministries that might be asked to provide similar information under a separate written question.

Therefore, in order to speed up and move along the processes in the House, I'm going to suggest an amendment that would allow us to accept this particular motion for a return and at the same time would help us deal with future ones that may come up as written questions that simply deal with a department other than the Department of Energy, which in this case comes up under Motion for a Return 34. I should also indicate that the amendment I'm proposing, Mr. Speaker, was shared with my opposition colleague prior to 11 this morning in accordance with our procedure.

That having been said, it's my pleasure to move that Motion for a Return 34 be amended and that in the final analysis it read as follows:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of the aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to employees within the government of Alberta listed by department over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by the range of bonus dollar amounts and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range.

I move that on behalf of the hon. Minister of Energy.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Speaking to the amendment, Mr. Speaker, I'm at a bit of a disadvantage in that the Deputy Government House Leader indicated that he'd been in contact with the House leader for the opposition, but he didn't indicate whether or not the House leader had actually agreed to this amendment.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Agreed with reluctance.

The Deputy Speaker: Apparently, under Motions for Returns there isn't a closing off of debate to the amendment. It's a one-off kind of thing, so that's why it's awkward. The only thing, I guess, is that when we get into the debate on the motion itself, then the Deputy Government House Leader or other persons who are going to speak to that particular matter that you're raising could address it. It seems a backwards way to go, but that's what I'm doing.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the impact, of course, of that amendment – and I can understand why the Opposition House Leader was reluctant – is to mask the kind of information that we'll receive with respect to this particular motion for a return, and I think that that, again, is unfortunate.

Mr. Speaker, the government has been very clear in making public the salaries of many public officials across this province. I can think of the superintendents of schools, who now have that information published and made quite public, and that was done at the instigation of the government. So I can't quite understand why they're reluctant to provide the same level of information about their staff.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Yeah. This is now on the main motion as amended. I will close debate if I speak to it.

The Deputy Speaker: I'm sorry. Apparently, once the hon. member concludes debate, you've had your chance. So it truly is an awkward procedure. Anyway, we have now closed debate and have to rely on alternate methods of communication.

[Motion for a Return 34 as amended carried]

Business Credit Card Statements for Finance Department Staff

M35. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Finance.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Motion for a Return 35 is an important motion, and it falls under the same explanation as Motion for a Return 24, which was accepted as amended earlier this afternoon. Under Motion for a Return 24 we are simply bringing all of the government deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, and so on under one particular amended motion. Therefore, Motion for a Return 35 can be rejected because it refers specifically to only one ministry, in this case the Department of Finance, but Motion for a Return 24, which otherwise would be identical, does already include all ministries with respect to their top staff members.

So it's on that basis that I'm going to recommend that Motion for a Return 35 be rejected, since the essence of it is already covered under Motion for a Return 24 as amended.

Thank you.

4:20 Business Credit Card Statements for Sustainable Resource Development Minister's Office

M36. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on Motion for a Return 36.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should just indicate to all members, who I know are interested, that we, myself and the Opposition House Leader, did meet for an hour and 40 minutes to try and ensure that we could speed this process along, because I have to put my arguments on the record each and every time, which the Opposition House Leader did understand and agree to, albeit with reluctance. Still, we will do that now, and I'll keep referring back to the relevant motion for a return as amended, which impacts the particular motion for a return that might be before us at the minute that we are speaking.

In this particular case, we have Motion for a Return 36, which refers specifically to one ministry, that being the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development, and to the minister in particular of that department and to the minister's executive assistant in that department. As was previously indicated, Motion for a Return 26 as amended already expands the question and the information being sought to all members of Executive Council and all executive assistants reporting to them, broken down by department and categorized by accommodation, travel, and so on.

Therefore, it's on that basis, Mr. Speaker, that Motion for a Return 36 can be rejected, because it only identifies one department, whereas Motion for a Return 26 as amended covers all departments and all EAs and all ministers.

Thank you.

Business Credit Card Statements for Environment Minister's Office

M37. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Environment and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the reasons just indicated by me regarding Motion for a Return 36, Motion for a Return 37 can also be rejected since in this case it's only the Ministry of Environment that is referenced, and in fact Motion for a Return 26 as amended and already approved earlier today will already cover all departments including the Ministry of Environment.

Thank you.

Business Credit Card Statements for Economic Development Minister's Office

M38. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the Minister of Economic Development and the minister's executive assistant.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, with reference to Motion for a Return 38 it refers specifically to only one ministry, in this case Economic Development, and as enunciated earlier, just a few minutes ago by me, Motion for a Return 26 as amended will already accommodate the gist of this particular motion for a return because Motion for a Return 26 as amended covers all government ministries including the ministers and the ministers' executive assistants. So Motion for a Return 38 can be rejected on that basis at this time.

Business Credit Card Statements for International and Intergovernmental Relations Department

M39. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I just want to indicate what he's indicated to me, and that is that his particular department is already subject to Motion for a Return 24 as amended since that particular motion as amended will cover the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations, and the information being sought will be provided there pursuant to the amended Motion for a Return 24. Therefore we can recommend the rejection of Motion for a Return 39 on that basis.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 39 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'm given to understand that we have an agreement that at approximately this time – is it after Motion for a Return 40 or before Motion for a Return 40? – we were going to have another motion. There's agreement.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for that opportunity. I would ask all members of this House for unanimous consent to revert to private members' bills at this point.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: 4:30 Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 203
Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes
Amendment Act, 2004

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure to rise in the Assembly this afternoon and continue debate and discussion on Bill 203, the Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. I would like to begin by thanking all members for their support and allowing this bill to proceed to Committee of the Whole. As expressed during the debate in second reading, Bill 203 would allow for ex-spouses or ex-partners to enter into agreements that ensure committing them to opt out of the Canada pension plan credit splitting program. Bill 203 amends both the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act. The amendments to the acts are identical and serve to obtain the same objective.

Amendments to section 27.2 of the Domestic Relations Act and section 82.2 of the Family Law Act state:

A written agreement between spouses or common-law partners entered into on or after June 4, 1986 may provide that, notwithstanding the Canada Pension Plan (Canada), there be no division between the parties of unadjusted pensionable earnings pursuant to that Act.

Mr. Chairman, as I stated at second reading, provinces have the authority to opt out of the program under section 55.2 of section 3 of the Canada Pension Plan Act. The CPP Act expresses that divorcing or separating partners can only opt out of credit splitting if they have entered into an agreement on or after June 4, 1986, and that that agreement specifically mentions the Canada pension plan and it is the intentions of the parties that there be no division of unadjusted pensionable earnings under the act. This is the same stipulation outlined before us in Bill 203.

It is also important to note that the provisions under the CPP Act also express that these agreements must not have been invalidated by a court order and, very importantly, that the spousal agreement must be permitted under provincial legislation. Again, as I stated in second reading, Bill 203 would provide the appropriate provincial law.

Since the Canada pension plan specifies the date of June 4, 1986, in its legislation to honour agreements entered into on or after that date, Bill 203 recognizes that same time frame and makes retroactive these agreements in its amendments to both the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act. Therefore, with the passage of Bill 203 any agreements entered into on or after that date which do express the CPP and the intention of no division will be upheld and validated in this province.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment to the Domestic Relations Act would only be a temporary measure to serve the purposes of the bill, while the amendment to the Family Law Act would take effect once the appropriate section of the act is proclaimed into force. The Family Law Act will then repeal the Domestic Relations Act. The Family Law Act is replacing the Domestic Relations Act, and therefore by amending both pieces of legislation, the intent of Bill 203 and the ability to provide immediate authority to previous waivers is accounted for until the Family Law Act is proclaimed into force.

Mr. Chairman, the option of entering into spousal agreements is afforded to both married spouses and common-law partners. The Canada pension plan credit-splitting program is applicable to both types of relationships, and therefore Bill 203, to keep consistent with the intentions of the program, has extended the opt-out to both. Section 27.1 of the Domestic Relations Act and section 82.1 of the Family Law Act provide the provision that defines common-law partner and states that this term applies as defined in the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Chairman, there is an important point which I would like to stress regarding the splitting of CPP benefits. The credit-split decision is never changed or returned to an ex-spouse even if the applying ex-spouse's financial situation improves drastically or if he or she should die. There exists a finality to the splitting of CPP benefits. Credit splitting permanently alters the record of employment. Therefore, it is important that these decisions are made mutually and with the full knowledge and understanding of both parties.

Also, there is an appeal process available to dispute resolutions. However, the process has limitations. It is really important to recognize that the appeal will not overturn the decision to split the credit but, rather, may affect how these credits are split.

Mr. Chairman, there have been a couple of concerns regarding the implications of Bill 203. This legislation will not refuse the right of individuals applying for credit splitting unless they have already signed an agreement which waives the right to any future division of CPP pension earnings. In this case Bill 203 will uphold or legitimize any of these previous agreements which must have been signed on or after June 4, 1986, so that ex-spouses or ex-partners cannot make future claims. Without the provincial legislation which Bill 203 provides, these agreements are invalid.

Bill 203 would now allow individuals to enter into spousal agreements during their divorce or separation proceedings and have them binding on the federal minister responsible for the CPP. If an individual discovers after the fact that he or she did not receive any portion of CPP pension benefits from a previous relationship regardless of this bill, they are still entitled to those benefits as long as he or she did not sign an agreement that stated no division of CPP credits. Then the agreement would be upheld, and they could not apply for a split. The terms that the parties signed to would be adhered to.

Mr. Chairman, I believe strongly in this bill. It will allow couples on the breakdown of their relationship to make important and informed decisions regarding their financial future. This is indeed a choice which should be afforded to all Albertans. I strongly encourage all members of this House to again support Bill 203, the Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act.

Mr. Chairman, I am also happy to circulate an amendment to Bill 203 that covers a couple of changes. Bill 203 states that an agreement is binding "whether or not there is valuable consideration for the agreement." It also purports to invalidate any agreement that was "induced by fraud, duress or undue influence" or if "one of the parties lacked the mental capacity to understand the nature of the agreement."

Before the bill was introduced, Alberta Justice officials recommended that the above provisions be removed as they are unnecessary restatements of the common law. Further, since there are no similar provisions regarding other types of agreements governed by the Domestic Relations Act and Family Law Act, inclusion of such provisions solely with respect to credit-splitting agreements may jeopardize the argument that the common law applies to these other types of agreements.

As well, the bill currently has a provision for one section to come into effect upon proclamation. The amendment as proposed will make the whole bill subject to proclamation.

Therefore, I move an amendment to Bill 203 as currently being circulated as follows. Would you like me to read the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

The Chair: You're moving it; you read it.

Ms Kryczka: Okay. Bill 203, Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, is amended as follows. A. Section 1(2) is amended by striking out the proposed section 27.3. B. Section 2 is amended (a) in subsection (2) by striking out the proposed section 82.3 and (b) by striking out subsection (3). C. The following is added after section 2: "Coming into Force. 3. This Act comes into force on Proclamation."

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: This amendment will be called amendment A1. Does everyone have it already? They all have it. Okay.

Then if you wish to further explain it, or are you finished speaking on the amendment?

Ms Kryczka: I'm basically finished speaking on the amendment, sir.

The Chair: Okay. Further comment on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the hon. member who proposed this amendment to correct me if my understanding is incorrect, but the sections that are to be deleted include protection for people who have been induced to make such an agreement if "one of the parties was induced by fraud, duress or undue influence to enter into the agreement" or if "one of the parties lacked the mental capacity to understand the nature of the agreement."

This is part of the section that is going to be deleted, so is the intention to take away these protections, or does the amendment in some way provide similar protections in a way that I'm not clear on? I would ask the hon. member if she'd be prepared to stand and respond to that question.

Ms Kryczka: Yes. I guess I would just briefly expand on what I've already stated, that agreements under these acts that I've referred to are already afforded this type of protection. Therefore, these sections may be viewed as redundant and unnecessary.

Since these precautions are already addressed and considered under both the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act, they really do not need to be included in Bill 203. As well, if these clauses are included under Bill 203, they may raise questions regarding all other agreements under the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I apologize to the hon. member. She obviously did cover that in her statements, but she was clipping along at a pretty good rate, and I didn't catch it.

I guess the concern I have, if the hon. member is willing to respond, is if there is a legal opinion that has been received to that effect, and is that the basis upon which these amendments have been made?

Ms Kryczka: Well, as I said in my initial statement, I was advised that it was not necessary initially, but I guess I would have to stand here and say that I am stubborn, and I felt personally at the time that from my point of view it was necessary. However, I am not trained or educated as a lawyer, and I do not know the law as it applies in many areas. I've worked in personnel for lawyers, but that is totally different from knowing the law. So I totally respect the advice that I was given by the Justice department.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is raising more questions for me than it's answering actually, so just let me be clear on what the bill was before and what I see it as being amended to now.

Prior to this amendment under the proposed section 27.3 and all the subsections, then, you wanted in this bill for it to be an absolutely binding agreement between two parties in terms of there being no splitting of the pension, but what I'm hearing you say now is that the legal department has told you that you can't have that happen, so you're taking that out of the bill. Would that be correct?

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make some remarks about the amendments put forward this afternoon by the sponsoring member relative to her bill. She has very ably described why these amendments are being brought forward in that they are duplicating sections that already exist in the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act, which are two central pieces of our family law legislation in Alberta. So in the interests of having tidy legislation that is not repetitive and duplicative, I support her in these improvements to her bill.

I can certainly assure all members that the protections that we all want for the validity of these spousal agreements will be and is already provided for. I would urge all members to support the amendments that go to removing these sections from the Family Law Act and the Domestic Relations Act.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Carlson: Okay. If what I'm hearing is correct here then, once this bill is passed, in terms of the agreements for the pension, people will be referred to the Domestic Relations Act. So then, in fact, there still will be binding agreements between the parties for any written agreement given, whether or not there's been any valuable consideration given for giving up a pension right or whether or not these agreements have been signed under duress. Would that be accurate? To whomever would like to answer it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I'll try to address that. The provisions in the Family Law Act and the Domestic Relations Act that contemplate these types of written agreements, as I say, already exist, and they are for purposes beyond just Canada pension plan credits. They address support generally and other matters that need to be determined between divorcing spouses, separating spouses, be they common-law or married people. So these agreements are not solely for CPP credits. CPP credits are one type of item that can be addressed by these written agreements.

The same is provided for in the Matrimonial Property Act. You might be familiar with those kinds of written agreements where parties agree on the division of their matrimonial assets. They seek independent legal advice and attach certificates of independent legal advice. Matrimonial Property Act certificates are signed by the attending lawyers to give assurances that the parties have had independent legal advice, that they know what their rights are, and that they know what they're signing. So that's basically what is provided for.

I don't have them in front of me, unfortunately, but those are the kinds of assurances that you find in the Family Law Act and the Domestic Relations Act. We could probably bring those in so that you could see them and be assured of that.

Ms DeLong: Perhaps I could be of a little bit of assistance. I've got a little detail here. These sections include protection measures which would guard against "fraud, duress, or undue influence," and, as well, if one party "lacked the mental capacity to understand the nature of the agreement."

So, essentially, there are protections in both of these acts already. If we were to add the same protections in Bill 203, it would actually weaken those sections in the original documents. Because they're already in the original documents, if we have to reinforce it in this one particular place, then that also brings into question whether or not they were strong enough in the originals. We're actually in a stronger position if we don't have them in there.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on amendment A1.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to be clear about the amendment. The principle of the bill, allowing people to essentially sign agreements to give up their rights to pension benefits from their partner, is another question. This amendment deals with whether or not it's necessary to have some specific protection when people do that to make sure that they don't do so under duress. So I just want to be clear.

I see that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed is digging out probably what I wanted, which was to hear some specific language in the Domestic Relations Act and the other act that would give assurance that those protections in fact extended into the Canada pension plan credits statutes. That's really what I'm looking for. I'd like to hear some of the language there that could assure me that these bills do in fact provide this protection. If that's there, then I don't really have a problem with the amendment per se.

But the bill itself is certainly another matter, because the principle of allowing these things to be traded away in a prenuptial agreement or some other agreement is something that I have a lot more difficulty with. Perhaps the Member for Calgary-Lougheed has found the section and might help with that. She's still looking, Mr. Chairman.

I just want to indicate on this amendment that we have taken a look at the bill and have contacted people who are involved in these types of issues, and there's a lot of concern about it. Particularly if the amendment does even take away some more of that, I think it's a real concern. But I'll wait to hear from members opposite in terms of what the language is in the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act.

Ms Kryczka: Well, I guess I would just be repeating myself. As I said, I would welcome the legal expertise of the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, but the common-sense approach that I took to the drafting of the bill was more on this section that we are deleting, which, I have been assured by the Minister of Justice, is already included in the acts. We were mainly looking at if one of the parties was being "induced by fraud, duress or undue influence to enter into the agreement," which is separate from what the bill looks at as a whole – this was only a small part of the bill – or, for instance, if "one of the parties lacked the mental capacity to understand the nature of the agreement." Again, I think that is really the approach of this.

I would be repeating myself in terms of what I said to you earlier, that these precautions are already addressed and considered under both the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act and that they do not need to be included in Bill 203. It was a case of repetition and, therefore, redundancy that was simply the reason for bringing in this amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, not that you need more pressure, but how are you coming?

Ms Graham: Well, Mr. Chairman, maybe I'll take a moment to confer with the Member for Calgary-West. That might speed things up a little bit.

The Chair: Okay. We're just going to have a pause in the events unless there's someone else that wishes to speak on the amendment.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I'm wondering if we couldn't defer the debate on this amendment and go back to debate on the bill in the best interests of time.

The Chair: That's a wonderful idea in the interests of time. Unfortunately, our rules don't cover that. I suppose we could try and get unanimous consent to do such.

I think that maybe time has worked in favour of resolving this Gordian knot. The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I haven't really been, you know, on the inside track on this particular amendment, so I'd like to suggest that perhaps the sponsoring member undertake to provide the information sought by the opposition – I don't know that that's going to be possible at this moment – before this matter is dealt with at the final stage. That might be the most efficacious way of dealing with it today.

The Chair: If I understand your proposal, hon. member, there is an undertaking to be given, that would have to be accepted, that some time during third reading, presumably as soon as the member moves third reading, this matter would be dealt with ahead of time to the satisfaction of all of the members who raised the question. Is that agreeable, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

Ms Carlson: Well, it isn't really, Mr. Chairman. I have to say that if that's the way we're to proceed, then I definitely have to vote against the amendment, because I don't think you can vote for an amendment that you don't have full disclosure on.

Mr. Mason: I agree with her.

The Chair: Well, there are two contrary propositions being put forward here, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: I agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

The Chair: Okay. Fine. Good. All right.

Any further discussion on the amendment? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's impossible to further discuss or debate an amendment when we don't have the full information in detail on what the impact of it is going to be not only on this piece of legislation but on other directly affected pieces of legislation. You know, what I heard were some nice platitudes, but I want to see something substantive. For the amount of time that this bill has been before this Assembly, I'm very surprised that we don't have any backup on it.

Mr. Mason: If we proceed to a vote on the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that if it is as the hon. members have said – and I believe that they are saying that in good faith – then as far as I can see, it makes the amendment neutral with respect to the intent of the bill before us. If they are mistaken, however, it could have the effect – and this is my fear – of removing even the protections that were envisaged for what would otherwise be, in my view, a fairly bad bill.

So that's the difficulty that I have and why, unless we get this information, I would vote against the amendment. At best it's neutral, but at worst my fear is that it could be very retrograde. Thank you.

The Chair: The rules are such that I think we're going to have to go with the vote on the amendment. You decide which way you're going to go.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Chair: Now to continue the debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the bill itself, on the clauses of the bill.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On the bill. I just want to indicate that, in general, I don't agree with the thrust of the bill. Now, we've been assured that even with the amendment, protection exists for partners who have been induced by fraud, duress, or undue influence, and protection is afforded to people who lack the mental capacity to understand the nature of the agreement, and that's fine. That's fine. If those protections exist in other acts, that's very good and positive.

What other kinds of things, though, might intervene that aren't envisaged by this amendment? Well, Mr. Chairman, inequalities in power relationships are not accounted for. Inequalities in economic relationships are not recognized by this amending piece of legislation. What it does, quite simply, is allow an agreement to be reached that allows someone to give up the rights that they have to the pension of their spouse.

What about people who give it up without understanding what they're giving up? You know, they don't have to be put under duress. They don't have to be mentally incompetent. They may simply just not understand, or they may give it up because they believe in a romantic notion that their relationship will be, you know, forever and they don't accept that it might in fact come to an end. So what this does is that it basically makes the more vulnerable partner in a relationship – and that is normally but not always the woman in a marriage – even more vulnerable because they can give all this up without understanding it, leaving them with potentially a very poor existence.

You know, in 1987 the government took a very progressive step in issuing an entitlement to a credit split in the course of a marriage. That was about the same time that the 50-50 property split came about. So women would be missing access to public pension before 1987. The problem, as I see it, is that the rights to this are often given away for nothing, and one spouse can be at a disadvantage by not being able to get that split. It's particularly difficult for older women, Mr. Chairman, so I don't think that we should support having the Canada Pension Plan split becoming a bargaining chip in a settlement.

As the law currently stands, Mr. Chairman, either ex-spouse can apply to have the CPP credits accumulated during the common-law or marriage relationship split upon the breakdown of that relationship. If such an application is made, then the split is automatic, and it's not open to negotiation. This legislation would eliminate the possibility in exchange for making a split of CPP credits part of the divorce settlement negotiation.

I think that the kind of thinking that assumes that everybody negotiates on the same basis of equality is maybe typical of some conservative thinking, but it's not how we view the world at all. We take into account the fact that people have different economic capacities and that people have different amounts of power within a relationship, and that is I guess the real difficulty. What happens, Mr. Chairman, if somebody offers to reduce their claim of child custody, for example, in exchange for an agreement not to split CPP credits? That would put ex-spouses and, likely, mothers in particular in the terrifying position of choosing between her children and her economic security. I think that other examples could be brought up as well. The government can't be satisfied with enforcing contracts especially when these contracts are negotiated in unfair circumstances and when these contracts could significantly reduce the quality of life of one of the parties.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the legislation opens a door that did not need to be opened and, indeed, would have been better left shut. So I will be opposing Bill 203 as I think it is a step backwards in marriage relationships in this province.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just like to say that I believe that Bill 203 addresses a gap that has existed in our family law legislation in Alberta for nearly 20 years, which was when the federal government legislated the mandatory sharing of unadjusted pensionable earnings, or credits, under the Canada Pension Plan Act. Under section 55.2(5) of that act they did allow provinces the option of passing legislation to allow separating and/or divorcing couples, be they married or common law, by way of a written agreement to make their own decisions on how to divide their assets including their CPP credits.

So I would just like to speak from the perspective of a family law practitioner, which was something I did in my previous life, acting for clients that would find themselves in divorcing or separating circumstances. Typically, you would have people coming in who would want to deal with all of their outstanding issues: custody, support, and the division of matrimonial property.

Under the Matrimonial Property Act people can make these kinds of agreements with independent legal advice and full knowledge of what their rights are. Lawyers would go to great lengths to assist people in evaluating their assets and coming to an equitable division of these assets as best as possible anyway. The point was to give certainty to divorcing spouses and the knowledge that they wouldn't be subject to subsequent claims from their spouse down the line.

We were able to do this with a great deal of certainty on all assets except for Canada pension plan credits, because you were always in the position of having to say: even though you people have made your own agreement that you don't want to divide them, we as lawyers cannot draft an agreement that is ironclad, that will protect you. We would have to say: as long as you both live up to it, great, but if one of you doesn't, we cannot really do anything that's practical to make this enforceable.

You could put in a provision that would say that you could sue the other party if they went and applied for their CPP when they said they wouldn't, and they could apply for damages, but that wasn't practical because it was costly. It was another court action. So there was really nothing that you could do. So from a lawyer's perspective this was not a good situation because you couldn't really provide the certainty that your clients wanted. Oftentimes they might not have heard you or they would forget that that was your advice and then be very shocked in the future when this happened to them, that their CPP cheque was cut in half potentially.

I would just say that this bill does serve the interests of Albertans that are divorcing and separating because you will get consistent treatment of CPP credits along with other kinds of pensions and other marital assets. You'll have certainty. There'll be finality in the division of property. Most of all it does allow for people to make their own agreements. They know what's best for them. Assuming they've had proper legal advice, they can make the decision on what's best for them. Maybe the case would be that one party has a pension from work and would want to retain that pension, and the parties would want to leave all of the CPP to the other party rather than potentially dividing that in half.

So for that reason, I do think that this is a good thing for Albertans. I support the member in her bill and ask all of you to support her in it as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't support this bill. I spent too many years prior to being in politics and in politics having to try to assist people who are in circumstances where they spent decades or years being a stay-at-home parent end up in a divorce situation and do not feel that they are equal partners in negotiating the divorce. Often they are not, and in spite of what my colleague here in the Legislature has said about the importance of independent legal advice, often because of the situation, the conditions under which the marriage breakup occurs, they are under duress at that time, irrespective of what kind of excellent legal advice they may or may not be getting. I would like to remind my colleague that not all lawyers are created equal, and that often he who can afford to pay the big bucks gets much more aggressive representation than the other party.

Time after time I have seen during this circumstance what is essentially an unequal agreement taking place, and often just in the interests of getting through the process, one party will agree to things that if they were in a saner frame of mind or a more comfortable setting would never in a lifetime agree to. Particularly, I have seen situations where the only opportunity for any kind of redress in this situation is to take a look at the CPP credits down the road.

This is something that I believe for the most part will solve itself as time passes. These days most women have a work record, but that is not the case for certainly my mother's generation and for many people in my generation. They are left in an unequal bargaining position, and I don't care how good their lawyer is. I don't care how that argument can be made. They are not in an equal bargaining position, and often they get left out of the loop.

I am reminded by several women that I chatted with this morning, visiting a seniors' lodge that was for low-income people – one of the women there was 95 years old. She gets a pension. She gets one pension per month, $560, and that's what she lives on. Why? Because at the time that her husband died, it was before the pension transfers even were available, and having never worked outside of the home, that's the only thing that she's been eligible for. She's been living on that for 35 years, on just that one piece of pension. Now, that's a travesty in my mind. That's completely unfair.

Several of the other women who were there were in circumstances where they were the sole caregiver in the home and didn't work outside the home for their whole lives. If they had negotiated away this, what would they be living on? It's incomprehensible to imagine that anybody in this day and age, even in subsidized lodging . . .

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, but under Standing Order 4(2) "if at 5:15 p.m. on Monday, the Assembly is in Committee of the Whole and the business of the committee is not concluded, the committee shall rise and report immediately." So, therefore, I'm directed.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. On the basis of what you've just indicated, I would move that the committee now rise and report progress on Bill 203.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 203. I would like to table copies of the amendments considered by the committee on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That being the case and given the hour, I would move that we now call it 5:30 and that we adjourn to resume at 8 p.m. to consider private members' motions.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:18 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 26, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2004/04/25

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Game Conservation Fund

507. Mr. VanderBurg moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to add a fish and wildlife surcharge onto existing fines and penalties related to illegal hunting and fishing practices with the proceeds allocated directly to a conservation fund to support programs that restore and protect game species and species at risk in Alberta.

[Debate adjourned April 19: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to stand and support Motion 507 in this evening's debate. I believe that this motion will add a significant change to the way we deal with poachers and other environmental criminals. I'd like to thank the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for bringing this motion forward for debate.

The motion is built upon a solid principle. If someone or something is harmed, then that person or thing ought to be compensated for the injury or damage that is incurred. It is only right because while society at large suffers, the actual victim suffers a great deal more. While we cannot have laws tailored to the circumstances of individual suffering, we need to be mindful of the effects of suffering. Normally this sort of thinking surrounds issues of victims' rights, especially in cases where the victim is a human being.

This is the case with Alberta's victims of crime fund, which ensures that the emotional pain of a crime does not traumatize an individual for the rest of his or her life or that restitution is granted for crimes that are committed. However, it is just as appropriate in cases where the victim is not an individual person but is wildlife and the environment that the wildlife use as a habitat. It is appropriate because wildlife is important for maintaining a sacred balance in our environment. We need to remember that we are talking about animals and their homes, the damaging of which causes significant problems not just for the wilderness but for all parts of this planet.

Hunting levels are set for specific reasons: to balance the needs of hunting and the thrill of sport hunting with the needs of the environment and the surrounding environment. The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that poachers aren't just a problem for the animals that are killed and they don't just cause damage to individual animals and animal populations, but they ruin ecosystems.

Poachers are the lowest sort of hunters. They obviously have no regard for the animal, and they have even less regard for the environment. Pictures that have come from fish and wildlife officers show that poachers don't walk into the woods; instead, they take giant vehicles and do not care about where or why they cut a trail with their machines. When they hunt animals out of season, it shows that they have no regard for the population levels of animals, that they have no regard for the animals or the species itself, and finally it shows that they have no regard for the etiquette of hunting.

Hunters have a particular code. You hunt fairly, you leave the environment as you found it, and you respect the animal you hunted by using all of it and by respecting hunting seasons and off-seasons. Further, you respect the hunt limits placed upon you by those who are employed to ensure that the province and its hunters undertake sound environmental stewardship. Poachers do none of these, Mr. Speaker. They are there out of self-interest and thus are disrespecting of animals, the environment, other hunters, the government, and, finally, the law.

Just like other criminals who show no regard for the laws of the land, poachers should have to pay a certain amount of restitution, and it makes perfect sense that the restitution should in some way benefit that which is being harmed. The inherent suggestion of Motion 507 is that the surcharge collected under the motion will provide wardens and officers in sustainable resource development with more funds for catching other poachers.

Mr. Speaker, I like the irony of this. I like the sound of poachers catching poachers. It shows poachers that their actions won't be tolerated and, instead, takes steps to ensure that the payment they shell out in fines will in some way go towards protecting that which they have destroyed. By making the fund dedicated, we also spell out the importance of respecting the environment, especially to those who are destroying it through illegal activities related to poaching.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, there have been some questions raised in relation to Motion 507. It's been asked whether or not Motion 507 will generate enough revenue for it to be cost-effective. Will the terms of Motion 507, therefore, actually put more environmental officers into the woods protecting our animals and ecosystems? I'd like to hear more of the Assembly's thoughts on this issue, but I think that what the question shows is that there is a real concern regarding the need for a more stable source of funding for our Sustainable Resource Development wardens and officers. These provincial employees often just do not have the resources to do the first-rate job that we know they can do. That's a concern, for while they are strapped, a lot of poaching goes uncaught, and it's only afterwards that we see the effects and the damage that is done.

Mr. Speaker, I will support this motion based partially on the fact that it highlights this point and is one idea of how we can get more funding to our SRD officers. What is being asked for in Motion 507, however, should be supplemented by greater funding for our wardens so that they can put a stop to poaching once and for all.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, before I close, I want to address the argument that Motion 507 and the terms presented by it represent a type of penalty overkill. It's been noted by some critics that poachers are already paying into the victims of crime fund and that this fine already exists should be enough to get the point across. My response to that argument is that if you don't do anything wrong, you won't face any penalties whether they are onerous or not. It's the same argument I would give to those who drive recklessly or to those who do not respect other sorts of environmental laws such as spills from leaking underground gasoline tanks. The average, law-abiding Albertan will not be unduly affected by this law. Instead, they will be positively affected because of the fact that it will be a good deterrent and it will provide our SRD officials with more resources to undertake their duties.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will reiterate my support for this motion. It may have a few kinks in it, but I think we are on the right track, and I think that it shows an excellent way through which we can provide greater protection for fish, wildlife, and their habitats.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Good evening and thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and join the debate on Motion 507, sponsored by the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

When I look at Motion 507, I see an idea with some definite merit. The establishment of a conservation fund to support programs that restore and protect game species and species at risk within the province is an idea that I support, but I do feel that we can do more. I find it appropriate that the proposed fund be supported through a fish and wildlife surcharge placed on existing fines and penalties related to illegal hunting and fishing practices. In essence, we would be making conservation support programs stronger by penalizing those that put Alberta's game species at risk and push those species at risk closer to extinction.

Mr. Speaker, as Alberta moves into its second century and the government looks at ideas such as that brought forward by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, I think we should take a moment to look at the history of wildlife conservation. When Alberta became a province almost 100 years ago, it passed its first game laws to control hunting. In 1908 the Calgary Fish and Game Protective Association was formed to lobby governments and educate citizens about the importance of wildlife conservation. That organization grew into the present Alberta Fish and Game Association, which represents many local clubs of hunters and anglers throughout the province.

It is apparent that due to the actions that took place early, the province was able to protect some of Alberta's species that were at risk. That work has resulted in the survival of these species and the assurance that they will continue to survive in the future.

These early efforts at wildlife conservation concentrated on enforcing hunting regulations and paying bounties for killing predators. Trained wildlife biologists were hired to do scientific studies of populations and make informed decisions about how species should be managed. Trained enforcement officers were also hired to ensure that people obeyed wildlife laws. These laws were developed to protect wildlife and assist the public with problem wildlife concerns. Currently, wildlife biologist, technicians, and enforcement staff work with hunters, trappers, naturalists, farmers, ranchers, and industry to maintain our wildlife heritage.

Mr. Speaker, as Alberta grew as a province, it was able to move forward in its attempt to preserve wildlife species and ensure that their numbers were properly maintained through programs, laws, and legislation. As the province moves into its second century, I find it important that we continue to strive to ensure that Alberta's species remain preserved and viable for another hundred years at least.

Alberta's growth is important, and it is necessary to promote this growth to ensure that the province remains economically stable, but at the same time government must do what they can to protect and preserve Alberta's wildlife and fish. Motion 507 is a step in that direction. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for bringing forth this proposal as I believe it follows in the spirit of Alberta's past practices conserving the province's species.

In my opening remarks I mentioned that I felt that we could do more, go beyond what is called for in Motion 507. The establishment of a fish and wildlife surcharge on existing fines and penalties related to illegal hunting and fishing practices is a small step at a time when we should look at doing more.

In essence, the concept that I am referring to falls close to what is proposed in Motion 507. However, what I find perplexing is why all of the proceeds from fish and wildlife fines are not put towards the proposed conservation fund. Currently, there is discussion of insufficient funding in this area, and I believe this is an excellent way to put money into programs that would alleviate these funding pressures. So although I agree with the proposed idea, I would also agree with not taking funds from fish and wildlife fines and putting them into the victims of crime fund but, instead, putting all the funds into the conservation fund.

Mr. Speaker, my concern is that the proposed surcharges may not generate the required additional resources to have the necessary effect on the conservation of Alberta species. These additional funds would support many activities important to the protection and management of Alberta's game species and species at risk. This could result in and enhance enforcement efforts and the ability of enforcement agencies to invest in improved equipment that would have a positive effect on their ability to protect and maintain the indicated species.

This type of initiative is practiced by the Alberta Conservation Association, which uses the funds acquired through the sale of licences, stamps, and tags to help finance conservation initiatives throughout the province. Mr. Speaker, I can't see why the fines and penalties related to illegal hunting and fishing practices can't be used in the same manner. In doing so, the individuals that disrespect Alberta's game species and species at risk would be providing funding to help the damage that they have inflicted.

In closing, I would again like to commend the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for his proposal and encourage all members to vote in favour of Motion 507. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to join debate in support of Motion 507. The Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne has proposed an interesting concept to help conservation officers carry out their duties. Now, as an MLA from the city you might say: what are my interests in conservation out in rural Alberta? But I am the MLA that has three man-made lakes in her constituency that are stocked with fish, so I think there are some parallels here that we can draw.

Unlike oil or natural gas, Alberta's fish and wildlife are a renewable resource as long as the government equips conservation officers with the tools to keep this resource sustainable. Healthy fish and wildlife open many doors for tourism, and tourism, like any other business, is driven by supply and demand. There are a number of tourists who come to Alberta to fish and to hunt. However, according to many conservation officers, poaching is becoming a big problem.

Mr. Speaker, the people who visit Alberta want to come to a beautiful place – and we need to preserve that – to visit Alberta, to hunt and fish until they're satisfied and not simply go to another province. The conservation fund will play a small role in keeping tourism dollars here in Alberta.

Obviously, protecting Alberta's fish and wildlife resource is an important goal. This Assembly has to decide whether or not a conservation fund would make a significant improvement to current conservation efforts. The tourism industry in my area benefits a great deal when lakes are healthy and well stocked with fish. There are only a small number of people who break the law listed in the Fisheries (Alberta) Act. As we know, Mr. Speaker, it only takes one offender to cause serious, long-term damage to a lake. Once a lake is poached, it can take years for the fish population and the lake's ecosystem to recover.

There is a significant financial benefit to a conservation fund. Giving people the resources to sustain and improve Alberta's fish and wildlife populations will also sustain and improve Alberta's tourism industry. I realize that a large number of tourists visit Edmonton and, of course, Calgary for the Calgary Stampede, shopping, and various festivals. On the other hand, there are more who visit Alberta for its ecotourism opportunities. We shouldn't underestimate the potential of ecotourism. People may travel to B.C. for salmon fishing, but hundreds of people come to Alberta for trout and grayling fishing. Alberta is a unique tourist destination because it combines outdoor activities in rural Alberta with popular attractions in the city.

Mr. Speaker, imagine if someone opened a successful music store on Whyte Avenue here in Edmonton. People visit this store from around the city because they like the location of the store and the variety of the music. But then for unknown reasons the owner removes the most popular item from the shelf. The customers, frustrated that they cannot find the music they want, take their business to another store. Tourism in rural Alberta is the same way. As long as there are outdoor activities for people to enjoy, then there are opportunities for tourism. Right now we are removing the product without making every effort to keep up with demand.

Tourism in rural Alberta is directly linked to healthy fish and wildlife populations, and Albertans have a right to expect a healthy fish and wildlife resource. Poaching and illegal hunting practices are largely to blame for the depleting levels of species. Enforcement is an integral part of sustaining and improving the health of species and species at risk.

The sponsor of this motion mentioned the fine increase passed by this Assembly in December 2003. These increases will help deter some hunters from breaking the law. However, the officers in the field must have the resources to enforce these laws. I don't believe that this fine increase will have a significant effect on illegal hunting and poaching practices. I'm sure most people will see these changes as a significant deterrent for potential poachers. However, most Albertans know that fines by themselves do little to prevent illegal hunting and overfishing. The money collected from fines goes to general revenue, and most of the money collected in general revenue is dedicated to health and education. This leaves very little for other provincial priorities. In a perfect world we could cut the fines in half because we know they do not provide a meaningful deterrent for offenders and do not fund conservation efforts directly.

Critics may say that the idea of the conservation fund is an example of the Alberta government's neglect of wildlife issues. It's believed that ministries such as Sustainable Resource Development have been underfunded, perhaps, by the provincial government, creating more opportunities for criminals, but there are many areas for improvement. More enforcement is a costly and reactive response to illegal hunting. If the government relies solely on enforcement, it would need conservation officers at every lake and on a regular basis to catch every poacher. The majority of people who do nothing wrong but will still be closely monitored by conservation officers would feel very uneasy.

A conservation fund that supports programs to restore and protect fish and wildlife species could help conservation officers in a number of ways. A few examples include educational displays that could be used in malls, museums, and schools. A fund could provide one-time funding for specialized equipment such as cameras, night-vision glasses, and tracking equipment. Funds could also be used for additional youth and hunter education programs.

Management and protection of wildlife relies heavily on public awareness and support. One of the best ways to use a conservation fund would be to develop and deliver education programs that enhance the public's understanding of wildlife management and promote behaviour that supports the government's objective of sustaining wildlife populations. I believe that many fish and wildlife offences are committed by people who are ignorant of the law rather than by those who intentionally break the law.

Illegal hunting may not be the most pressing issue on the minds of Albertans. That being said, fish and wildlife species are a very delicate resource. I believe that this Assembly has an opportunity to dedicate monies collected from criminals to help Alberta's conservation efforts. I support the concept of a conservation fund, and I urge all members to vote in favour of Motion 507.

I'd like to say in particular that I know that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne spends much of his vacation time fishing in beautiful Alberta. I mean, his wife might want that curtailed to have vacations at other places. I know that he really does honour the lakes in this province, and I would like to support this motion and thank him for bringing it forward.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening to also put a few thoughts out in favour of Motion 507. First, may I congratulate the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for bringing this great idea forward.

It's pretty clear, Mr. Speaker, that Motion 507 is intended to address some behaviours we'd like to discourage in this province, and those are poaching endangered species and creating problems for our environment throughout the province. This is an issue, of course, that we're all very concerned with. Motion 507 would expand the spirit that we see behind Alberta's victims of crime fund, and really it would create new funds that are directly dedicated towards a conservation fund so that we could in fact help to promote some of these endangered species and bring them back to the point where they're more common and not endangered any more.

The problem that we often have in this area is finding the funds in government to dedicate to this program. We have many competitive pulls on us for funding. We have, you know, children that need funding, we have people on disability, we have health care, we have demands for education spending, we have demands for infrastructure and roads, and somehow at the end of that very long line of great needs in this province it's hard to find money sometimes for issues like environment and endangered species and things that perhaps not everyone is well aware of.

This idea, in fact, would help create a dedicated fund that is addressing the problem by going after the people who are creating the problem. It's a concept, I guess, from my experience in corporate troubleshooting in years past, where I used to go in and have to advise people on how they might help create better finances within their companies – you start by looking at: what are the problems in the company, and what's causing them? You start matching revenues to expenses.

Well, if you have expenses that are being incurred in an area and you start looking at the revenues attached to it and you start matching those revenues to expenses, that's how you start finding a proper balance. If something is causing you a lot of expense and has little or no revenue attached to it, in corporations you may have the option of dropping that product line or doing something different, but in government when it comes to environment, it's much more difficult.

By taking some of the fines that we're collecting from people who are breaking the law and applying that to creating a better environment for the endangered species and with these additional revenues going after the people who are poaching and the people who are creating the problem, you're in fact finding, in a sense, a market balance or an invisible hand that would help you address the problems that are arising here. So it's a concept that is very applicable in the corporate world, and basically it's just taking the same concept and applying it in government to a small but very important area, Mr. Speaker, and that is protecting the environment.

Clearly, it's not a tax when you think about taxation and people being opposed to that. It's not a tax because it really is only applied to people who are breaking the law. I think the general public is very supportive of the idea that if someone is willing to break the law, they should be punished for that and that if their breaking the law causes great damage, they should be greatly punished for breaking the law. Fines commensurate with the damage that they're creating are a very good idea when, I think, it's supported by the public. The greater the damage that they're causing, the greater the fines that we could then collect against it. It is such a significant deterrent and an increasingly significant deterrent that, frankly, it would go a long way, I think, towards solving the problem.

Right now we have a victims' surcharge on fines levied in Alberta in the Alberta Solicitor General's department, and that fund has gone into the victims of crime fund. So we already have a precedent in how this could be used. The act that is before us would allow a surcharge to be added to the penalties associated with various pieces of legislation – that would be, for example, the Wildlife Act and the wildlife regulations and the Fisheries Act and the general fisheries regulations – so it would apply to a number of different areas and cover a wide variety of species that are being poached and being endangered in this province.

It is a significant problem, and that's why I think we should look at passing this motion. You know, this is not a small thing. Undercover operations conducted over the past six years, in fact, found more than 180 individuals and 17 businesses involved with over 1,100 offences. That's an incredible number of offences under the Wildlife Act and the Fisheries Act. Consequently, this is not a small problem. This is something we really should be addressing.

Of course, wildlife enforcement is part of Alberta's broader goals not only in improving the environment but educating the public about wildlife issues, and we'd like to ensure compliance with the regulations. Sometimes there's an issue where people are not aware of what they are doing and not aware of the fact that they are creating an environmental problem, so we do need education. Of course, where does the money come from to do that? This could also perhaps help do an education piece in which people are informed about the issue and therefore are not out breaking the law, endangering species, and that, of course, is a highly desirable direction to go in as well.

We do have a number of fish and wildlife officers. They are highly trained, but they just can't get to everybody out there without very much funding. We do have I guess about 200 fish and wildlife division staff with Alberta Sustainable Resource Development, and they do their best, but with 3 million people in the province obviously that doesn't go that far.

The overall idea of allocating surcharges from fish and wildlife offences would help fund important conservation and protection initiatives. That's really the main thrust of this motion. Increasing the existing surcharge or, in fact, adding another surcharge for the conservation fund will definitely offer a stronger financial deterrent, especially when you start dealing with repeat offenders. The very notion of a repeat offender by definition means that the deterrent was not significant enough. If we start looking at whether or not there are repeat offenders, well, clearly they weren't deterred by the current fines and penalties. That's another argument in favour of surcharges being added here, because clearly there have been repeat offenders.

The creation of this fund would create an opportunity for the government to dedicate revenue to initiatives that enforce laws that protect Alberta's fish and wildlife. It would basically have a real deterrent effect on illegal hunting and fishing practices. Of course, we have seen in Alberta, particularly in the last decade, some pretty significant environmental problems coming up. We hear about lakes that have no fish in them any more. We see fewer and fewer animals. And it's not just the poaching or anything else: the dry weather patterns, the forest fires that we have seen, a number of environmental factors, much less water in the rivers. So the fish and wildlife in Alberta are clearly under stress already just from normal weather patterns and other issues coming to bear recently.

That makes it all the more incumbent on this government to do as much as we possibly can to reduce the human-caused stress on fish and wildlife in this province. This motion speaks to that and, in fact, would go a long way to reducing the human-caused injuries to the environment. As I mentioned, there is a fair bit of this poaching and a fair number of offences – 1,100 offences are a lot – so we definitely need to do something about it.

In the past three years fines imposed on and collected from those who violated Alberta's wildlife and fisheries laws already total $1.6 million. The victims' surcharges collected were approximately $300,000, or about $100,000 per year. This is over three years. The addition of another $100,000 per year could support several areas that protect and manage Alberta's game species and species at risk. For example, with that kind of funding we could get night vision, remote monitoring equipment, and other high-technology devices that would help our 200 officers go after these poachers and help them catch them.

The surcharge would have a multiplier effect. Not only would the extra $100,000 go a long way to getting this extra equipment, but they would catch more offenders and levy more fines and penalties as well and, hopefully, really bring this sort of activity to a stop. So there's a multiplier effect on this surcharge that is being proposed.

I realize, you know, that there are some arguments against this. We hear arguments that if this department is allowed to collect fines and keep those fines within the department, there may be other departments that wish to do the same thing. It's long been an item of contention. For example, in Calgary we always had lots of contention that the police were allowed to do the photoradar and that they're allowed to keep those revenues, and there's always the question of: are they doing the photoradar properly, in a fair manner, or has it turned into a cash cow for the department? I'm sure those arguments will continue, but clearly a significant portion of the police budget in Calgary now comes from that revenue.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, but I just urge everyone to speak in favour. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much and good evening, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to join debate on Motion 507. I'd like to congratulate and thank the hon. Member for Whitcourt-Ste. Anne for taking the initiative to introduce Motion 507.

This is a very timely and sensible initiative that I think will prove to be of great benefit to all Albertans both today and in the years ahead. Whether you're a person who is at his or her best when you're outdoors or someone for whom an armchair is the place to be, I'm sure that most Albertans are in agreement when it comes to our environment. It is something that we must treat with great care and respect not only because it behooves us to do that but perhaps even more importantly because it will be passed on to future generations.

Not only will they deserve to get as much pleasure and wonderment from the environment at that time as we do in the present, but also in what shape they find it will reflect on us to a great extent.

As a society we are fully aware, I'm sure, that poaching has been and continues to be a very real problem. The lure of a rare bird or mammal, the temptation to overcatch fish and sell it at a pure profit, or the desire to simply kill something solely for the sake of the kill: temptations like these are simply too much for some people to handle. I don't know what it is that exerts such an irresistible force on them, and perhaps it doesn't make much difference. The net result is the same: a devastating impact on our wildlife, dissemination of the herds and flocks of many species, and a loss of diversity of wildlife. Taken as a whole, Mr. Speaker, poaching represents a formidable assault on our province and our environment carried out by people who have little or no respect for others.

Mr. Speaker, as we've heard, Motion 507 would levy a surcharge of 15 per cent on the fines levied for anyone caught violating the Wildlife Act or the Fisheries (Alberta) Act. The funds so collected would be deposited in a wildlife conservation fund whose express purpose would be the restoration of species disseminated by the poacher's dastardly activities.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 507 is the right initiative at the right time. I've been advised that in the last six years major undercover operations resulted in charges being laid for more than 180 individuals and 17 businesses. Collectively they were charged with over 1,100 offences under the Wildlife Act and the Fisheries Act and attendant regulations. During the last three years alone convictions for violations of Alberta's wildlife and fisheries laws have netted close to $1.6 million. Knowing just how active the poachers who were caught must have been, I cringe at the thought that for every poacher who gets caught and punished, there are several more who get away whose deeds go unnoticed and unpunished.

Mr. Speaker, this is a longstanding problem. We've been aware of and seen the effects of what poachers do for many, many years. Thus far the penalties we offer in exchange for what they do seem not to have been a sufficient deterrent. If they were, I doubt very much whether we'd be discussing this issue here tonight.

In Swedish there's an old expression that when translated says that you don't notice the cow until the pen is empty. What that means, Mr. Speaker, is this: when you take things for granted, you tend not to acknowledge the importance of something or someone until one day when you notice that it's missing. While I certainly think that most if not all Albertans are fully aware that we live in one of the most scenic and beautiful parts of the world, I think there are times when we just take this beauty for granted. It's as if we are inclined to think that because it was there when we got here, it will also be here when we leave.

Well, Mr. Speaker, part of that beauty comes from the great number and variety of species that call our forests, our rivers and lakes, our fields, our meadows, and our mountains home. Who has not been awestruck by eagles or other birds of prey? Who has not looked at deer in flight and noticed how graceful they are? Who has not found the sight of enormous schools of fish remarkable as they move through the crystal-clear waters? These are the very sights that poachers threaten. These are but a few of the species that populate our wilderness and make it such a treasure not just for Albertans but for people from all over the world.

Let us not forget that tourism generates about $5 billion in economic activity for Alberta each year. One of the foremost reasons why people come here is to experience nature and the outdoors, something many of them cannot do in the towns, cities, or countries where they live. We have something they don't, and we give them an opportunity to experience something once that we can experience almost every day.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, as is the case so often in situations like these, there are those who will go to great lengths to spoil the fun, to destroy the experiences that others would otherwise enjoy.

Motion 507 will not end poaching as we know it once and for all. Poachers will continue to violate the law, and they will continue to place their own perverted interests and desires ahead of those of others. However, Motion 507 will provide a deterrent. It will I believe give some would-be poachers pause and allow them to consider the risks of poaching in Alberta. It will I hope lead them to reconsider and refrain from engaging in such appalling behaviour.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support Motion 507 and the implementation of a 15 per cent surcharge to be dedicated to wildlife conservation and restoration activities in our beautiful province, and I urge all members of this House to do the same.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this evening in support of Motion 507 and in support of my colleague from Whitecourt-St. Anne. I have to go back a number of years, Mr. Speaker, to lay a bit of groundwork for my support of this particular motion. As many members will know, I actually reside in a part of Alberta where hunting and fishing are kind of in your backyard, and I mean literally in my particular case in your backyard. The serious situation with respect to predation and poaching by certain members of the hunting community with respect to this particular resource and, I might add, what we think is an extremely important resource in the province of Alberta has been, as has been indicated, a very serious problem for a number of years.

I'll go back, Mr. Speaker, to a time in the mid-70s, probably 1973, '74, when we used to go in – guides were common in those days in the mountains west of Grande Prairie – to some beautiful lakes in that part of the world and fish. Partly the advent of industrial activity, partly the availability of things like charter helicopters and other modes of transportation opened up that part of the world. I can stand here this evening and tell you that in places like Belcourt Lake, where we used to go and legitimately fish for beautiful cutthroat trout, today that fishery is closed. The reason for it is totally, totally because of illegal fishing in those particular parts of the world.

In the mid-60s I did a lot of stream fishing along little creeks in the area that I lived in – Eagle Creek, Windfall, Rainbow Creek, the Simonette, Waskahigan, the Little Smoky River, and all of those places – in those years and into the mid-70s and early 80s. Mr. Speaker, they were wonderful places to visit for even two or three hours on an afternoon. You could take your son, park, and walk up some of those little creeks two or three hours, catch a couple of fish, have a beautiful experience doing it. I have to say that for the large part that particular enjoyment is now a piece of history and, again, mainly because of situations where people did not respect, number one, the resource and, secondly, the law.

The Little Smoky River, of particular interest to me, and of course the Waskahigan: I live about a half a mile from where these rivers converge. The headwaters of the Little Smoky still are reasonably good fishing, but anything much past where it comes out to highway 43, the north/south trade corridor, Mr. Speaker, you can pretty much forget fishing. If you want to just go for an afternoon to get wet, it's all right, but the fishing there has certainly gotten to the point where because of pressure, mainly from people who won't observe the rules, it's really become more of a situation where you've got to get farther and farther into the wilderness in order to enjoy it.

There's been some discussion, and rightfully so, with respect to dedicated revenue. Mr. Speaker, I have to put myself on record as being one of the individuals in this government that feels that there are certain circumstances where dedicated revenue is warranted. I believe that this is one of those circumstances.

We have a particular problem. We have a tremendous resource. We have at the moment a very difficult time putting enough presence on the ground in places in Alberta where it can actually make a difference. There is in my opinion a shortage of officers necessary to do the work that's required with respect to maintaining and protecting game species and species at risk in Alberta.

Certainly, in northwestern Alberta one of the most common complaints that we would get from avid hunters, fishermen, guides, and even people in the general public, Mr. Speaker, is that fish and wildlife, Sustainable Resource Development, do not have enough presence on the ground. I believe that this particular initiative could assist us in that respect.

I'm also a landowner in that particular part of the world, south of Valleyview along the Smoky River and the Waskahigan. We've owned land there for 40 years. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that the pressure on private land is another one of the problems associated with this particular initiative. There's a lot of pressure on private land, I believe, mainly because it's easy and, secondly, the penalties that are there are very, very difficult to enforce. I believe that an initiative such as this will increase the awareness of the problem and perhaps assist the officers that we do have to make some inroads into this particular problem as it relates to private landowners and their problem with illegal hunting.

Mr. Speaker, I'll close by saying that throughout the relatively short history of my family in Alberta we always until this generation were hunters and fishermen. My father and my grandfather before him told me on many occasions that there's absolutely nothing wrong with hunting what you eat as long as you eat what you kill.

We have a particular problem with individuals that kind of manoeuvre around slightly outside the bounds of the regulations and the law, and I believe that any initiative that we can put forward as a government to assist the guiding community, the people that enjoy hunting and fishing, the people that make good use of this resource and enjoy it in maintaining that right for future Albertans and curtailing the problem that we have with respect to individuals that operate illegally can be nothing but a positive. I am pleased to be able to support Motion 507.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to continue the debate surrounding Motion 507. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne has asked the Assembly to support the concept of levying a surcharge on top of fines that are imposed for illegal hunting and fishing offences in Alberta. I'd like to begin my remarks by saying that I fully support this motion because I believe that harsher penalties are in order for offences of this nature. These people are breaking laws as surely as the person who is driving while intoxicated or an individual that is committing tax evasion.

These laws and regulations are in place for a reason, but there is a more cavalier attitude towards them because they can be perceived as not affecting people. I feel that these types of crimes are serious and they should be treated as such. They do not directly affect one person or a small group of people as other crimes tend to, but they affect Alberta and its people as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, passing Motion 507 will serve to accomplish two goals. First, by levying a surcharge on top of the existing fines, it will effectively increase the penalty to be paid by those who break these laws, and secondly, these lawbreakers will be directly funding a pool that will be used to improve wildlife management in Alberta.

The proper management of Alberta's natural resources is an issue that concerns every person in this province. By properly managing Alberta's natural areas and wildlife populations, we can ensure that these areas and animals will continue to thrive for generations to come.

For myself I would expect that for most Albertans this would be reason enough to work for proper management. However, there is another, perhaps more concrete reason to ensure that our environment is sustained. This one reason is economics.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta attracts thousands of visitors each year. These people are both intranational and international tourists. They come to Alberta for the great natural beauty that our province offers. They come to ski in the Rockies, hike in our parks, and see the rugged beauty of Alberta. These people also come to see the wildlife that is abundant in our province. The herds of elk in the provincial and federal parks draw tourists as well as the fishing that is available in Alberta's lakes and rivers and streams. It is Alberta's natural spaces that draw tourists and their dollars into our province. The tourism industry in Alberta provides over 120,000 jobs for Albertans.

In addition to tourism, Alberta is also attractive to the film industry for the same reasons. It is imperative that our natural resources be afforded every protection that we can offer, not only because of the economic implications attached to it but also so that future Albertans are able to enjoy the same natural habitats that we enjoy right now.

Mr. Speaker, there exists a precedent for this type of surcharge on fines right here in Alberta. The Alberta Solicitor General is responsible for administering a 15 per cent surcharge on all provincial fines assessed in Alberta. This 15 per cent is used to service the victims of crime fund, a fund that provides services directly to victims as well as assistance to organizations that provide support to victims. This fund is not tied to a specific department or program but is available for those persons who have become victims of violent or serious crime.

The motion sponsored by the hon. member asks that the Assembly urge the government to install a similar fund. This fund would be specifically dedicated to financing programs and initiatives that would enhance our understanding of wildlife populations and could lead to the institution of better conservation measures.

To me a fund of this type makes sense. A person that is caught poaching fish or wildlife has committed an act that has the potential to permanently damage a specific wildlife population. As they have committed a crime affecting the environment, it seems fitting to me that part of the punishment they are subjected to should serve to benefit the environment. The money that is gained from this surcharge can be used to fund extra wildlife surveys and other programs on top of the efforts currently made by Sustainable Resource Development.

Currently, judges presiding over cases that are tried in court have the option of issuing court orders that would contribute to the protection of the environment. An example of this is the judgment that was passed in 2003 on a poacher and wildlife trafficker. This individual was ordered to pay $20,000 after he was found guilty as charged. This money was used to conduct an aerial survey to measure the effects of poaching on big-game populations in a northern Alberta region. Motion 507 would serve to expand this reasoning to apply to all incidents of this nature.

By levying a set surcharge on fines, all persons who break these laws would be subject to equal treatment. It is entirely possible that increasing the penalties that must be paid will be a more effective deterrent to those considering perpetrating crimes of this nature.

Mr. Speaker, it is for these reasons that I support Motion 507. I feel that the idea it puts forward holds within it the possibility of curbing poaching and other crimes against wildlife that occur in our province far too often. Therefore, I would ask all members of this Assembly on both sides of the Chamber to support this motion as well.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure. We only have about a minute left.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for bringing this motion forward. I think it is a very timely one and one that we need to take very seriously and give due consideration.

Mr. Speaker, the motion talks just about a surcharge, but I believe there's another element that we need to look at. That is the whole concept of having through the court system alternate penalties, and by that I mean having the judges allocate portions of the fine money to specific programs. I'm thinking along the line of a lot of the conservation programs that are out there to assist in bringing back the species that are endangered or at risk. What can we do to enhance their habitat? What can we do to protect them in that manner? Quite frankly, in a lot of cases that will probably do more for the wildlife than just simply increasing the number of wildlife officers.

I wholeheartedly agree that we do need to have more officers out there, but in a lot of cases it's the degradation of the habitat that has caused a lot of the problem. I don't mean for one moment to ever suggest that I'm condoning poaching, because certainly that is also a very important problem that we have, and of course the increased number of officers and new technology and equipment would go a long way to answer that question. But with the combination of conservation programs that would enhance the habitat and increased wildlife officers, I believe that it would go a long way to help.

I listened with great interest to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, and he talked about having all this wildlife in his backyard. I have the same situation.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close debate, I would invite the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne to close debate on Motion 507.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all the members that took the time to raise issues.

The issues raised by the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul talked about dedicated revenues, including the full fine revenue. A great idea, and I thank him for that.

The Member for Red Deer-North expanded on the role of conservation officers and the need to equip them with the tools to do the job. I think this is something that I've heard over and over again from the conservation officers in my area.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw did point out that this is not just a rural issue. You know, the city of Calgary has a world-known trout fishery right within the city, and the Bow River is a great trout fishery.

The Member for Calgary-Currie pointed out how all Albertans are affected by those that abuse our fish and wildlife laws with over 1,100 abusers convicted last year alone. That's why I like the concepts of this motion: again, abuser pay.

The Member for Calgary-Buffalo, in his lifelong career enforcing the laws of this land, expanded on the problems that occur by not paying attention to these very serious issues. He explained very well why we must pay attention to this and the whole issue of the problems that we have in not restoring a fishery or something similar.

The Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky gave us some history on the fishery in northern Alberta and how things are today. Well, every river and stream that he talked about are places that my father took me fishing, but sadly to say, my dad didn't take his grandchildren because of the pressures on the fishery in about half of those rivers and streams.

I thank the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose that brought up the economic points of why we need as government to fund our programs and departments properly.

And, too, the Member for Rocky Mountain House raised some great ideas to enhance our species and habitat that effect his area.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that out of all of this come some serious points, you know, the serious points raised this evening. I need the ministers of Economic Development, Finance, Revenue, and Sustainable Resources to take this debate very seriously and draft some meaningful legislation to address the seriousness of this motion. I think that the idea for me raising this through a motion was to do exactly what was done tonight, to bring out some discussion on how we can do this. I'm not saying that Motion 507 addresses it all, but it will give those ministers the ammunition they need to draft some good legislation.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I'll call the question.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Innovation and Science

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour is dedicated between the hon. minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We are here to look over the estimates for Alberta Innovation and Science, but before I begin, I should let the Assembly know that we have staff members from the Department of Innovation and Science in the gallery today, and I'd like to introduce them to the Assembly. They say that you're only as good as the people that work with you, and these people are very good, so I guess that makes me – well, you can fill in the blanks. So thank you very much to the staff for being here. They will be taking note of the comments, and if I'm not able to provide specific enough information tonight to the questions, they will follow up with information in writing.

I'd like to provide a brief overview of our business and financial plan, which are based on our commitment to two major core businesses, the first one being research and innovation and the second being corporate information and communications technology. Alberta Innovation and Science provides leadership and makes strategic investments in science and technology, which contributes to the sustainable development of the Alberta economy. That contribution helps to make the province increasingly competitive in global markets and positions Alberta as an attractive place for world-class researchers to come and to work.

Alberta Innovation and Science has three strategic research priorities in energy, information communications technology, and life sciences, and we're also focused on technology commercialization. We continue to look for ways to diversify the economy and to find the mechanisms to enable that to happen and to be able to invest in our future. Mr. Chairman, we look for ways to transform the delivery of government programs and services through ICT. I'm proud that we are part of the overall government plan for the next 20 years, and our business plan addresses key strategies needed to unleash innovation.

We're also committed to the other pillars of the government plan with respect to leading in learning, building the research capability and capacity to enable that key pillar to progress. Competing in the global marketplace, of course, is another one of the pillars, and we do that through the Alberta SuperNet technology commercialization and making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. Long-term goals and a commitment to build a solid foundation for the future are key components of the plan.

Mr. Chairman, under core business 1, research and innovation, the vote estimate for research and development in 2004-05 is $117.8 million. That's found on page 238 of the estimates. Goal 1 under that core business is to build Alberta's research capacity.

Mr. Chairman, I'd be remiss at this point if I didn't pay a small tribute to the outgoing chair of the Alberta Science and Research Authority, which is a key advisory body which advises the government of Alberta through this ministry in particular. Dr. Bob Church has served this province extraordinarily over many, many years. He has provided advice to a multitude of government ministers and government people, and his work and contribution cannot be overstated. We have designated Dr. Church as chairman emeritus of the Alberta Science and Research Authority in honour of his contribution to this province. He assured me that I could hang on to his phone number, and we have done that.

In building Alberta's research capacity, we continue to build that research system through a skilled workforce, through internationally recognized research capabilities in areas of strategic priority, and a supportive environment that encourages innovation and collaboration. Some of the key initiatives in this area have been the National Institute for Nanotechnology, which is the first national institute in the province of Alberta and housed here in the city of Edmonton at the University of Alberta. We do this through the health research innovation centres which are currently under construction in both Calgary and Edmonton. We support our researchers through the Alberta science and research investment program and expand our efforts using leverage opportunities from the Canadian Foundation for Innovation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to reference one other program, just by way of example, in terms of some of the things that don't necessarily come to the attention of people but which are really significant, and that would be the Banff International Research Station. This is a collaborative Canada/U.S. venture that operates an international centre for mathematical innovation and discovery and is the only facility of its kind in North America. It's a fulfillment of a remarkable effort led by the Pacific Institute for Mathematical Sciences and the Mathematical Sciences Research Institute.

ASRA supported BIRS to the amount of $1.7 million to enable this initiative to proceed. Other partners were Natural Science and Engineering Research, which contributed 1 and a half million dollars, the U.S. National Science Foundation in the amount of $1.2 million, and PIMS and MITACS for $1.3 million.

Projects undertaken at BIRS bring some of the world's leading experts in mathematics and science to Alberta. Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Economic Development could pay attention to this kind of strategic tourism initiative because not only does it bring the top mathematical people to Alberta, to our province, not only does it allow them to do their scientific and mathematical development, but it allows them to be tourists in one of the most spectacular places in the world, and of course that's in Banff. So we get a tremendous spinoff by having that important research station in Banff.

Mr. Chairman, moving on to goal 2, we talk about the energy innovation priorities. Of course, in this area I'm guided by the good advice of the Alberta Energy Research Institute, that implements the energy innovation strategy. We are focusing on the priority areas of oil sands upgrading, clean carbon technologies, and CO<sub>2</sub> management among others. Some of the specific examples in that area include the research called the Dover/Vapex heavy oil extraction project, which is underway. We have a fuel cell project that is currently operating, and I understand successfully, at NAIT. Of course, there's a lot of work going on right now at EnergyINet, trying to bring the collaboration of all Canadians – universities, the two levels of government, research institutions, and industry – together to solve a common problem.

Goal 3, Mr. Chairman, talks about ICT innovation. Again, following the commitment in the throne speech, we will look to the formation of an ICT institute to guide our research and innovation. This goes back about five years to when we first announced our ICT strategy. From that was the formation of the Alberta SuperNet, the formation of ICORE, and the formation of encouraging the increase of spaces in our universities and colleges in this important area. We want to use this opportunity now to update that strategy and to look forward to the next five years in terms of what's important.

In the particular research area, Mr. Chairman, we continue to invest in high-priority ICT research areas like wireless, high-performance computing, nanotechnology on a chip, among several.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Goal 4 talks about life sciences innovation. Again, the throne speech talked about creating a life sciences institute, which will link and co-ordinate agriculture, environment, forestry, health, bioenergy, and water research. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important area of focus for us and one that we will be paying more attention to over the next years. We are working closely with the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute and the Alberta Forestry Research Institute, finding ways to collaborate and bring platform areas of research together to make sure we can have the maximum impact for the work that we do.

Goal 5 is a globally competitive economy, and our priority there, Mr. Chairman, is to create an environment where ideas are developed and commercialized. We support the implementation of the value-added strategy, which was released last week and is one that sets the plan for the Alberta economy over the next 10 to 20 years. Our role in that strategy is to make sure that we provide the innovation capability that is necessary for these strategies to occur.

Core business 2 relates to our corporate information and communications technology. This plan is supported by a new strategic direction for the use of ICT by government, and in accordance with this, in October we created the office of the corporate chief information officer to focus on the transformation of delivery of government programs and services through the innovative use of ICT. Updating the ICT strategy, as I referred to earlier, to reflect the change in the technology and the changing business needs of the government is important in terms of our delivery to Alberta's citizens. Investments in ICT must be carefully planned and implemented to maximize the benefits and minimize the risks.

Mr. Chairman, the government is always looking at new ways to interact with Albertans and looking at new ways of delivering programs, services, and access to information for Alberta's citizens.

The voted estimates for the corporate ICT strategy, which excludes the SuperNet build for 2004-05, is $58.4 million, and that amount does include $12 million for SuperNet amortization. You can see that at page 240 of the estimates.

Goal 6 under this core business talks about an integrated ICT strategy. We want to establish and implement cross-government business and technical standards and continue to implement the government of Alberta enterprise architecture framework, which minimizes duplication in government. We are working with Alberta Government Services to develop a corporate electronic information management framework and also using the corporate project management office for promoting ICT project management best practices.

Key initiatives in this area. We're currently working on developing a business plan around the ICT service co-ordinator strategy that will help us to align ICT investments and maximize our benefits to government and to utilize ICT to provide services to Albertans by ministries or service delivery partners. We must ensure that technical standards best practices are used in system design and business standards that are adopted across government.

Goal 7 talks about the ICT infrastructure, and of course the priorities in there are to complete the Alberta SuperNet build and to develop and implement a common, shared ICT infrastructure.

The voted estimates for the SuperNet build in 2004-05 are $41 million, and that's on page 241 of the estimates.

Goal 8 refers to using ICT to improve service delivery in the government. Our priorities are to identify, evaluate, adopt, and implement approaches to improve service delivery and/or reduce costs and to leverage the capability of the Alberta SuperNet to transform the delivery of programs and services to Albertans. We wish to optimize the internal administration of government by re-engineering business processes to make them more efficient.

One of the key initiatives that has taken place in this area is Service Alberta, which is a web site that provides citizen access to many services inside government. We want to eliminate unnecessary duplication in application development, and of course, Mr. Chairman, we're always looking for improved productivity of employees due to the use of the tool of information technology.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, Alberta's blueprint to unleashing innovation is to support research and attract skilled workers and investment. The most important element in any innovative economy is having the right people here to help us do the right things. We want to create an environment where research is applied to produce new products, processes, and services that are commercialized in Alberta and to use technology to improve the delivery of programs and services to Albertans.

Thank you for the opportunity to present our priorities. I look forward to answering any questions. As I indicated earlier, should I not be able to answer them in their entirety, we will provide a written response.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods, who has allowed me to jump the queue in order to get in some of the questions that I wanted to make sure I had enough time to ask.

In the first question I'll reference something that the minister brought up. Looking at page 240 of the estimates, under vote 3.4.4, Alberta SuperNet, the minister, if I heard him correctly, said that the $12 million that's reflected here is an amortization payment. I'm asking him to expand on that and to give some details. If it is an amortization, is this the beginning of the amortization period then? There's no payment in that vote that appears in previous years, and I'm wondering how this relates to the $193 million total cost of the SuperNet. I'm wondering if that $12 million is included in the $41 million that is noted as capital investment to be voted on for this department.

So if I could get some details on that, please. That was not what I was expecting him to say that that $12 million meant.

Dr. Massey: Are you going to let him answer?

Ms Blakeman: No. I'm going to put all my questions on the record and then let him answer.

I also note that on page 302 of the ministry business plans document there are a number of strategies that are outlined for the SuperNet and some performance measurements as well. Under the strategy of co-ordinating and managing the Alberta SuperNet operations for the government, I'm wondering if this department is charged with controlling the costs of the SuperNet. Under that would also come co-ordinating the costs of the SuperNet.

From questions asked in question period, we started to establish that not only is money being spent from this department on SuperNet, but it's also being drawn increasingly from other departments like Learning and Municipal Affairs to help pay for things like the connection costs for municipal buildings and libraries and schools. I'm interested in whether the minister is able to provide me with a total cost paid out by the government from all departments in this fiscal year on the cost of the SuperNet including the assistance which is being offered to various municipalities, libraries, educational institutions to help with the additional charges that the opposition has brought to light. That is not only what I would call the capital cost of laying the backbone and the actual connections, but then there's a connection cost to actually meld the two wires together.

Then there's a service cost that is billed on a monthly basis. We were in Daysland, and that library was struggling because they were going to be assessed $250 a month for – sorry; not the hookup. The hookup charge comes first, then comes a monthly service charge, and then they still have to get in touch with Shaw or Telus or whoever and actually get hooked up to the Internet.

So there are a lot of additional costs that are coming up, and I'm wondering if the minister is able to provide us with a total cost that the government is expecting to spend. In other words, as the co-ordinator can he pull those numbers together from all of the departments?

I'm also interested in the contracts with Bell, who is the primary contractor for the SuperNet. How are those contracts (a) monitored, (b) reviewed, and (c) enforced? I'd like to get some working detail on how that happens. I'm also interested in how the contracts with Axia are monitored, reviewed, and enforced. Further to that, where Axia has access to government-owned equipment, how is Axia's use of that equipment monitored for appropriate use? Still on Axia, do all payments to Axia flow through Bell?

Is the minister able to tell us if Bell is taking a management percentage or a cut or a subcontractor fee or a general contractor fee? I'm fishing here for the right words. What I'm trying to find out is: is there a contract set up with Axia and Bell takes its 10 per cent off the top and off goes the money to Axia? Do we know what that percentage is that's going to Bell, if there is one, and what it covers? Management: are they doing the monitoring and enforcement? What's the deal here? How is this controlled?

I'd also like to hear some detail from the minister on the arising complexities around wireless technology and the SuperNet. Now, I think I heard the minister respond to one of my questions by saying, "No problem; the SuperNet is wireless," which I thought was a bit odd because there was all that money to lay the cables and stuff in the ground. But if it's wireless, as well, then perhaps he could explain how that works or what he meant by that response to me.

Now, on pages 302 and 303 of the ministry business plans, under Performance Measures there are some numbers here that are causing me concern. There may well be a very good explanation for this, but I'm just an Albertan looking at these numbers right now. What the performance measurement around the extended area network is telling me – there's a sort of chart laid out here in which we're given the total connections or total kilometres, in some cases, of line, one assumes, and then a column for "in place", "in progress", and "to complete."

When I look at the bottom half of the list, I'm looking at numbers that are significantly under 50 per cent complete. I start looking at wireless towers: a total there of 101; to complete, 70. So significantly more than 50 per cent still to go, and these are all to be available in 2004. Well, we're a few days shy of the fifth month in 2004. Now, I understand that it's reasonable that there would be significant progress made over the summer months, but I'm also aware that they've been working all winter. So I am very interested in whether the minister is confident that these performance measures will be achieved, because it strikes me that we are – well, if I were managing this project, I'd be pretty nervous about any kind of early completion bonus. Let me put it that way.

Following down that list then, wireless shelters: 83 in total and 57 to go. Communities fully connected: 402; 391 to go, so we've only got 11 in place, and we're five months into this year in which we're supposed to have all of these connected. Government facilities fully connected: 558; to complete, 526. We've only done 32 of them. Health facilities fully connected: 201 is the goal; 185 to go, not completed in other words. Libraries fully connected: 244; to go, 237. We've only got seven of them done; that is, connected. That's not the hookup, that's not the monthly service fee, and it's not the Internet provision. Schools fully connected: 883 is listed; 835 to go. Only 48 of them are finished, in, done, complete, finito.

When I look at the base area network, which is performance measure 2, again "SuperNet services available from Bell West in 2004." I'm assuming they mean by December of 2004, and these numbers are all status as of January 15. Again, I'm only picking the ones off the list that are significantly worse than 50 per cent incomplete. So government facilities connected: I'm assuming here that we're talking about what I would know as the backbone as compared to the extended area network. We're looking for 744; we've got 526 to complete, like five-sevenths to go. Health care facilities connected: 258 is the goal; 242 to go – in other words, incomplete. Libraries connected: 65; to complete, 63. Schools connected: 1,231; to go, 1,203.

So this isn't looking very good. It's possible that I'm misunderstanding something significant here, but I don't think I am. I've been watching this and consulting with people and going out to centres and looking, and I'm pretty sure that I understand what's going on here. So these don't look hopeful.

What's in that contract? Is that contract from Bell available? Can I get that somewhere? Is it on your web site or something? Can you let me know that? Because I'm wondering about completion targets. Are there penalties for not being complete? If Bell is implementing at least the base area network, which I would call the backbone, and they don't get this stuff done – and, frankly, from here they're a long way off – what kind of retribution do we stand in line to get from them for failing to achieve these completion dates? Who is responsible if we don't complete the ones under the extended area network under performance measure 1?

So those are the issues and concerns I have. As you can see, Mr. Minister, I'm mostly concerned about, you know: what is the contract? What are we laying out here? What did we expect? What's in place if it doesn't go well? Where are we right now? It doesn't look good, having read off our status as of January 15. Who's responsible for monitoring Bell, and who's responsible for monitoring Axia?

Now, my concern here, Mr. Minister, when I keep bringing up Axia, is that thus far I've only heard the government talk about Axia as a subcontractor of Bell, and I have serious concerns that this could get away from us, that if there were concerns about any of the work from Axia, in fact the government wouldn't be on top of it and wouldn't be monitoring it and wouldn't be able to catch it and wouldn't have any monetary recouping mechanisms or processes in place or any punishments in place because this is all a contract of a contract. Also, I know that in some cases Axia has access to equipment that's owned by the government. How do we know that they're using that government equipment appropriately? Who is monitoring them?

This is a business that works very quickly. The government has invested $200 million. The minister says $193 million. That's enough to make anybody's head spin and visions of sugar plums to dance in their head. So how are we to be assured that all is progressing as we expect and that appropriate measures are in place to monitor and to enforce? That's overall what I am seeking to be reassured about, because I certainly have some concerns about what's happening here.

I really have concerns that we will spend a lot of money trying to do a good thing, which is to get that broadband out into those communities for their use and, great idea, used by municipal buildings, the schools, the libraries. But what we've done in doing it – and this is essentially a P3. In subcontracting, we (a) lose control of it, and (b) by the time it all gets done, it's too late; technology has passed us by. Everything is now wireless, being beamed down from a satellite somewhere. We didn't need all that wire in the ground or fibre optic cable or however else this is being achieved.

In fact, we cripple our libraries, municipal buildings, schools, and health facilities because we've now hooked them into 10 years' worth of service connection fees at, you know, three grand a year for a library. As we know, having already gone through the Community Development estimates, there is no additional money being forwarded to libraries to cover that $3,000 cost. So they're now expected to do additional fundraising to come up with that money. If they can't do it – and that's quite possible in some communities – then they've got a bunch of wire sitting in the ground or sitting in the basement that they can't afford to hook up to.

Beyond that, you're now talking all the wonderful equipment that you need to be able to make really good use of that broadband: you know, those whoop-de-do new cameras and the video recording equipment and the sound editors and all the rest of that stuff and the software that makes this all possible. You're not going to do it with an eight-track and some sort of home video camera. So my concern is that we commit our nonprofit public agencies to a significant outlay of money and they are never able to keep up with the requirements in the cash and in the technology and equipment and software to keep up with it. That's where I'm afraid we've gone off the rails on this project.

By the way, the last time I talked about this, Axia sent out some guys in suits from the communications department to talk to me. If they're reading this, they can save themselves the trip this time, because they didn't, obviously, reassure me enough. I did stay quiet for about a year, and now I'm back again because the same concerns are coming up. So the guys in suits can save their time. I'll hear from the minister.

Thank you.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, I know for sure that the hon. member would not want us to go back to eight-track technology.

I'll try to answer a few. You gave me a barrage, so this might be more broad in its explanations than maybe more specific. But to the specific point of the $12 million amortization: yes, this is the first year that it's being recorded. This is actually a change in all government accounting procedures in terms of recognizing our capital assets and showing the amortization number, so that is why that is there. The $12 million amortization figure is not part of the $41 million. Those are separate figures. The $41 million completes the cost of building the infrastructure, which is part of the contract, and we have a $193 million contract.

Now, more to the questions around the contract, performance measures, Bell West, and Axia, let me make some comments that I hope are somewhat connected. Let me start by making sure it's clear we understand that there's infrastructure, and then there's a cost to build the infrastructure which builds the highway which permits the broadband or the traffic to flow along that highway. So there's that element of the cost which is infrastructure. The $4,000 grant that we announced to municipalities is part of the infrastructure bill, which only helps them take the infrastructure to their door. So if you can imagine, keep that separate in terms of building the infrastructure.

From there, in a municipality's case they are responsible, then, to pay the – I'm going to use the word "access" fee, although I think that confuses people. It would be a monthly charge to them to have broadband services, no different than they would have to pay a monthly fee to have telecommunications services. Because we have taken the infrastructure to their door, they can now deliver better quality, different kinds of services because they'll have access to broadband and can use different kinds of technology. So they have a choice to make now in terms of the service levels that they wish to purchase, how much capacity they want to utilize, and that's their decision.

So let's move now to the case of Learning. Learning, through its budgets – and I think that's been explained already in this House – provides the access fee. Again, the schools have to purchase the broadband capacity with a monthly charge. That's provided for in Learning's budget, so Learning provides a certain level of service through their budgeting process. Again, the infrastructure is already there. Now, if you go to Learning's budget, just like the schools have to pay for telecommunications or network services that they already have, they now have competitive rates in all of their schools through the Alberta SuperNet, and they get expanded broadband capabilities and capacities that they didn't have before. I hope that explains keeping the infrastructure separate from, now, the operating cost.

I just want to make sure that I have all my information. The other point that I want to make on the SuperNet I want to make clear because this has come up a few times in questions even in question period. You have to realize that the Alberta SuperNet is more than just Internet. Okay? Internet is a service that runs on top of a network, and the Alberta SuperNet is the network; it's not the service. But you're not having to go somewhere else to purchase the Internet services. [interjection] Well, Mr. Chairman, we'll make sure that this is completely clarified, but that is certainly not my understanding.

The other thing that I want to clarify is that SuperNet provides a dedicated, high-speed broadband telecommunications circuitry where the quality of the service can be guaranteed. This is important for video conferencing or transmitting huge files like X-ray files. Often on the Internet quality can drop off and video-conferencing signals can be lost. With SuperNet this won't happen. All right? So you're getting capacity.

I want to refer the member again to the estimates, and I've got it here somewhere. If she looks on page 240 of the estimates, she will find an operating expense which shows $14,820,000 for corporate network services. That's to cover the costs that we use on AGN-PAC, which is currently the service that we use to provide data networks to the government, and that will be replaced as the SuperNet infrastructure is built. The data track will now run over SuperNet as opposed to AGNPAC. We will be providing greater bandwidth to more sites for approximately the same cost. So that begins to show you the benefit of the network that we are envisioning. The short answer is that it's more sites, more community service, better service for less money.

On the contracts between Bell West and Axia, I'm going to be careful here because some of this is likely subject to confidentiality.

I'm going to speak in general terms about this. As part of that, I want to go to the comments you made on performance measures and the build. It was quite clear in this House several times that we had a contractual dispute between Bell and Axia, and that goes back probably a year from now. That did cause us some delays in the build, but we were open with that to the Assembly and in our comments. Axia is no longer engaged in the build of the network. Bell West is solely responsible for the build, and we are working diligently with them to ensure a 2004 completion, so this year.

When you look at the performance measures, you should think of the build in several stages. One would be that the top lines talk about the intercommunity conduit and the intercommunity fibre. You can see the progress that has been made in terms of actually laying the fibre over vast distances across this province. Once you get the conduits and the fibre in place, then you can start taking it into the communities and from the communities into the various buildings. I understand the member's concern on whether we'll get there, and I assure you that we're working diligently to ensure that they live up to their contract to deliver the service on time.

The member mentioned the concept of wireless, and again I want to emphasize, as I think I did in answer to the question, that wireless has always been contemplated as part of the SuperNet build. There are some areas where it just made no practical sense to dig fibre, so we've always contemplated the use of wireless in the network.

We had the question with respect to some of the school boards. The contract that we have requires Bell to deliver the service levels we asked for, and that's the important element, that the schools and the hospitals and the libraries and the government buildings will get the required levels of service that we have indicated have to be met inside of that contract. That's their performance measure, that they can deliver that bandwidth to that area in a reliable manner. We certainly have to sign off on the engineering to make sure that we agree to the service levels that are being delivered.

Those are some general comments around the contracts. Again, for more specific answers, if we can provide them, that aren't in violation of the confidential nature between private business, we'll see how we can address those.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think I will sit down and see if there are some more questions that I can take.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to, if I may, deal specifically with the estimates with respect to programs 1, 2, and 3, starting on page 237. If I could maybe go through them program by program and have the minister respond. With respect to program 1, ministry support services, the first question would be: what is corporate services using the $608,000 increase in the budget for? And why does the deputy minister's office have a $105,000 increase in the budget?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, if I could just beg the indulgence of the member to help me out with what page he's on again.

Dr. Massey: I'm sorry. It's page 237, and it's program 1. It's 1.0.2, the deputy minister's office, and 1.0.4, corporate services.

Mr. Doerksen: Okay. In 1.0.4, under corporate services, the – Mr. Chairman, if you don't mind, on that one we'll provide you more details. I'm just struggling to catch up to my notes here, but carry on.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm only going to add to your grief, I'm afraid. Program 2, research and innovation, on pages 238 and 239. What is the $7 million innovation program that's been added to the budget? That's line 2.2.1. Could we have some details of the innovation program? There is a $2 million addition in the innovation implementation budget. I wonder if the minister could enlighten us in terms of what that is being used for.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do want to talk about the $7 million point that the member has raised. I know I had this information here somewhere. I do beg your indulgence. This is an important question, and I do want to provide the answer to this one.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, in the event that you need to submit the response in writing, that is acceptable as well.

Mr. Doerksen: Okay, Mr. Chairman. I'll try to answer because this is an important question. This is a new program, and it follows from the government's commitment to create an innovation culture in the province of Alberta. We've not completely defined the competition that we're going to have for this money, but it's designed for government departments and agencies to come forward with proposals that will encourage innovation within government service delivery and to see how we can accelerate innovation within the government and also within our agencies.

We're going to have a competition where ministries which require seed capital – this is not ongoing program funding – come up with some innovative suggestion that can improve service delivery to Albertans or can improve our economic performance and perhaps could follow along the lines of something that I commented on with respect to BIRS, where we saw an investment of $1.7 million from the government over a number of years that brought in outside capital to establish that institute at Banff. It has generated far more economic activity and goodwill and tourism for this province through that initiative than any other kind of program could have done. So that is the $7 million. It does go out, I think, over three years for a total of $33 million if I have my numbers right. It's an exciting program, and it's one that we want to use to encourage and develop an innovation culture within the government and its agencies.

Dr. Massey: Is the assumption that the $2 million for the innovation implementation in 2.1.1 is part of the same program, or is that different?

Mr. Doerksen: What is happening in there is that there's been a transfer into that fund – if I'm wrong in this, we'll correct it – of the strategic investments research fund from the envelope to do with Alberta science and research, the ASRA program. I moved it under this program to aid our innovation particularly with research and technology commercialization and, again, for strategic innovation kinds of initiatives that will come forward.

Going back to your first question in the first program, some of those costs in office support will go to administrative support for these new programs. That $7 million will require some administrative due diligence, so some of the increase in the office expenditure shows up in that line from your earlier question, particularly 1.0.4, which you had asked about earlier.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to the Alberta Forestry Research Institute and the increase in the budget, can we have an explanation as to what that increase is for? Where are the findings of the Alberta Forestry Research Institute reported?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Chairman, the Alberta Forestry Research Institute is co-chaired by the Member for West Yellowhead. He assures me that there is an annual report filed by the Alberta Forestry Research Institute, so you would be able to examine their reports. As a matter of fact, if I look now on my web site here, it should be on there. I don't see it.

Let me assure you that they have developed a research program, particularly in the development of fibre and the uses of fibre, that complements the direction that we're trying to go under our value-added strategy. Rather than just ship raw product out of the province, we want to add value to it. The fibre initiative also begins to move into the life sciences area and agriculture in terms of fibre uses with respect to cereal crops or the straw that comes out of it. I'm not the scientist around it, but they tell me that there are overlapping technologies that are applicable right across the piece, and they're providing us with direction and suggestions in terms of where we should put our research dollars in forestry.

Let me assure you, hon. member, that the amount of increase we were able to give them pales in comparison to the amount that they would really like to see. They keep reminding me that we mustn't forget the amount of impact that the forestry industry has on the provincial economy.

There are reports available.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. I guess that I'll wait for the answer with respect to the increase to the Alberta forestry institute.

If I could move on, Mr. Chairman, a question I had is: why is $6 million being cut out of the operating expenses grant to the Alberta Science and Research Authority? It's program 2.3.1, and it's the third line, the operating expense line, on page 238.

Mr. Doerksen: Under our objective of increasing research capacity – this isn't going to specifically answer your question, but it's going to answer it in a more general way – we have a number of different program areas that increase the innovation and research capacity in the province. We do this through a number of different programs.

One of the more significant programs, of course, is the competition we have under the Alberta science and research – we call it ASRA – that researchers can apply to to help fund their particular projects. We want them to follow our three strategic thrusts, being energy, ICT, and life sciences. We place a higher importance on those. Also, this is the money that they then use in terms of matching their applications to the federal granting agencies, particularly CFI. In the last couple of weeks we just announced our matching component to the CFI awards, and we were able to accommodate all of the requests that came forward that met the criteria that we were looking for, that met the criteria of the peer-reviewed scientific body to make sure that these were scientifically demonstrable, is the word I think I'm looking for. That's one program.

Also, through the various institutes, the Alberta Energy Research Institute – they work very closely in terms of their program. They work with the research institutions. They work with industry. We use their money to leverage research and innovation not only in the research institutions but also in industry research for trying to leverage off of our investments and use industry resources, federal government resources. Similarly, Alberta Agricultural Research Institute provides us with key direction in terms of where our thrust should be, and again we use that money for leverage. So we use all of these different programs.

Well, let me talk about another one. ICORE, for instance, informatics centre for research excellence, particularly targets research in the areas of ICT. Their objective was to bring top talent to Alberta. We've been extraordinarily successful in that program bringing top people to our research institutions. The benefit of that is that then they attract top-quality students and other graduates to build a critical mass of people around that area.

So we use all of these programs, and sometimes you almost have to put the entire package in an envelope to look at the amount of support that we are providing to build the research capacity. The best performance measure to show that, really, is a report that we do in terms of research funding at Alberta universities which shows some very significant increases. If you go back to '91-92, for instance, total sponsored research revenue to Alberta universities was $143 million, and if you fast-forward to 10 years later, '02-03, we were up at $434 million in total sponsored research. They're able to do this because of some of the programs that we use to help them leverage industry money and federal granting agency monies.

That's pretty general, hon. member, and we'll get you more specifics through the written answers.

Dr. Massey: I was looking for the $6 million.

Because of the time, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask maybe just a couple of questions and leave them with the minister.

I've got questions about the objective of trying to increase the number of Albertans working in the information and communications technology sector. What impact does having contracts for programming going to international companies like IBM have on that objective? Related to that is: how many companies does the government use for IT technology and outsource their programming to places in the Far East?

I'm looking at, I guess, the outsourcing of jobs really, and I notice in the performance measure – sorry; I'm not quite sure where it is right now – that the goal is that there would be 500 less workers in the ICT sector next year than this year, if I remember that. Yes. It's on page 297. Last year the actual number of Albertans employed in the ICT sector was 54,500, and the target for 2004-2005 is 54,000. So I think the questions are related to that performance measure, Mr. Chairman.

A related question, I guess. On page 295 of the business plan one of the strategies is to encourage youth to enter careers in science and technology. I wonder if there's information on the impact of tuition on those programs and if anything has been looked at in terms of what is being done at universities in the way of increasing the number of students that choose IT as a career.

I think those are some of the general questions that I'd leave with the minister for response. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Doerksen: If I could provide a brief response, would that be acceptable?

Just in terms of the number of ICT employees one of the benefits or disadvantages of having a performance target is that you need to report on it, and without question the IT sector has undergone some severe downturns over the last number of years. Actually, I think that in view of what was experienced globally, Alberta did exceptionally well in terms of pretty much maintaining our ICT base and have positioned ourselves well as we come out of that decline.

In terms of outsourcing I'm not aware of any outsourcing that we do in the Far East. As a matter of fact, on that issue Alberta is viewed as a place to outsource because we have a very talented workforce and we're in fairly close proximity to of course our major trading partner, the United States, and are a stable political climate. We are actually ranked very highly in terms of countries, including Far East countries, in terms of being a place to have outsourcing done. So that's actually a growth area.

I don't want to get into a debate on tuition. We certainly do encourage youth in the science and technology areas. Mr. Chairman, in terms of whether it has any impact on science or technology, I don't think so. I think what we're trying to do is encourage some interest in those areas, and the financial question comes at a different place. Clearly, we have programs that are trying to encourage youth with respect to science; for instance, our support of science fairs. We have a function called Scitechweek, and we try to engage all of our schools in this area. So we do a lot of work in that particular area.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, after considering the business plans and proposed estimates for the Department of Innovation and Science for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$185,910,000
Capital Investment	$41,000,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee now rise and report the estimates of the Department of Innovation and Science.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Innovation and Science: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $185,910,000; capital investment, $41,000,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: 10:20 Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 25 School Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to once again speak briefly about Bill 25, the School Amendment Act, 2004. At this Committee of the Whole stage I'd like to specifically address some House amendments to this bill.

As mentioned during second reading, Bill 25 reflects government's action on yet another recommendation of the Learning Commission. It balances the interests of teachers with the rights of our children to receive an education that is responsive to their needs. It will achieve this by improving the functioning of the Board of Reference to make sure there is a process to deal with situations where an educator might not fulfill the high standards of his or her peers. The intent of the bill is quite simple. We need appropriate measures in place to ensure the highest quality of service in the profession, and all measures taken must be effective and fair.

Mr. Chairman, there are five House amendments to Bill 25 that I'd like to discuss during my time this evening. These changes are relatively minor in nature, but they are important to help ensure that the bill achieves its intended goals.

In relation to section 61 of the existing School Act, the House amendment will clarify that the power of a school board . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, sorry to interject. Are you moving these amendments so they can be circulated now?

Rev. Abbott: I would like to move these amendments so that they can be circulated now.

The Deputy Chair: Thank you. You may proceed.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. These five House amendments are changes that are relatively minor in nature, but they are important to help ensure that the bill achieves its intended goals.

Firstly, in relation to section 61 of the existing School Act the House amendment will clarify that the power of a school board to either suspend or terminate the services of a teacher may only – and I stress “only” – be delegated to a superintendent. This reflects the original intent of the amendment to the School Act proposed under Bill 25 that other than a school board only the superintendent may fulfill this responsibility.

The second House amendment I'd like to discuss refers to collective bargaining. Section 96(2) of the School Act currently allows school boards and the Alberta Teachers' Association to agree to exclude certain central office administrators from the collective agreement.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I'm sorry to interject again.

Since there are a number of different portions of the amendment, are you proposing that we deal with all these amendments together as amendment A1?

Rev. Abbott: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. If that's okay, then we shall deal with them as one amendment, refer to them collectively as amendment A1.

You may proceed.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The second part of the one amendment is that the proposed House amendment ensures that central office staff members who choose not to be active members of the ATA will also be excluded from the collective agreement. Central office staff who fall under this category will have their own contracts with their employer.

The third part of amendment A1, Mr. Chairman, deals with eligibility to appeal to the Board of Reference. Bill 25 excludes central office administrators who are not covered by a collective agreement from appealing their suspension or termination to the Board of Reference. This amendment ensures that central office staff members who elect not to be active members of the ATA and who are therefore excluded from the collective agreement are also not able to appeal to the Board of Reference.

This preserves the original intent of the amendment, which is to exclude all individuals who are not covered by the teachers' collective agreement from accessing the Board of Reference. The Board of Reference was originally established to ensure that classroom teachers' terminations or suspensions were fair and reasonable. It was not intended to protect school board administrators or managers who have their own individual contracts with school boards.

The next House amendment, Mr. Chairman, refers to the disclosure of evidence in advance of a hearing before the Board of Reference. The changes to the School Act introduced in Bill 25 are intended to improve the way the Board of Reference functions. Although its current role will change in terms of assessing professional competency of teachers, it will continue to fulfill an important role in terms of hearing matters on employment issues, such as cases of misconduct.

A provision under Bill 25 required all parties to a Board of Reference hearing to fully disclose to each other the evidence they plan to present to the board. We recognize that the timing of the disclosure is important in giving both parties appropriate time to prepare their cases and to make decisions on whether they need to introduce any additional evidence. Therefore, we are going to consult with stakeholders to develop a regulation on disclosure requirements to ensure that the process is fair and effective.

Mr. Chairman, the final portion of this amendment that I'd like to discuss tonight is in reference to decisions that are made by the Board of Reference. While the act indicates that there is a 45-day time limit within which the board must render its decision, the bill does not explicitly state the time frame within which the reasons must be released. This House amendment will specify that both the decision and the reasons together must be released within the 45-day time frame.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, Bill 25, including the House amendments I've discussed tonight, will help maintain and ensure the integrity of the teaching profession in a way that protects the best interests of both students and teachers. I urge members of this Assembly to support Bill 25 and the House amendments we've discussed this evening.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the member for having shared with us earlier today the intent of the amendments that are before us this evening. I think that more importantly we have that member's assurance that these amendments are supported by both the Alberta School Boards Association and the Alberta Teachers' Association, and they are the two groups primarily involved with these sections of the bill.

I don't think we should let it go by that it is, I think, unfortunate that we have to amend the bill as quickly as this. That indicates that something happened in the drafting that wasn't paid attention to at the time.

The only one that I have some concerns about is the one that has things being resolved through regulation, and I hope that works out.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

The Deputy Chair: Does anybody else wish to speak on the bill?

[The clauses of Bill 25 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Today at the committee stage I'd like to discuss some House amendments which have been introduced for Bill 26, the Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004. I'd like to move these amendments. I have consulted with hon. members of the opposition and would have these moved as A1.

As discussed previously in the Assembly, this bill deals with important changes to reflect the Learning Commission's recommendations regarding the teaching profession, and it has been a pleasure to respond to this bill on behalf of the government.

The Learning Commission identified a number of different opportunities for Alberta to enhance our learning system to meet the needs of today's students. Likewise, we must keep our legislation up to date to keep pace with Alberta's evolving learning system. The amendments to the Teaching Profession Act introduced under Bill 26 are very much a companion piece to Bill 25, the School Amendment Act, 2004, sponsored by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

As mentioned during second reading, Bill 26 will achieve two main goals. It will allow a new practice review process to be established for teachers whose competence is in question. It will allow certain certificated nonteaching central office staff the option to be members of the Alberta Teachers' Association.

Rather than getting into the details of the bill again today, I'd like to instead use my time to discuss four House amendments that are currently before the Assembly for consideration.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, before you proceed further, I just wish to have an understanding that there are amendments to various sections. Are we to consider them collectively as amendment A1?

Mr. Maskell: As A1.

The Deputy Chair: That's in agreement? Okay. We shall proceed and deal with them as one amendment, amendment A1.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Section 4 of Bill 26 refers to the ATA membership of certain teachers who are employed by a school board but who may not necessarily be carrying out teaching functions, such as those who are carrying out administrative duties for the board. As drafted, Bill 26 will allow these teachers to choose whether to be an active member of the association, an associate member of the association, or not to be a member of the association.

Another line in the bill stated that "notwithstanding anything in the bylaws" the ATA would act in accordance with the affected teacher's choice. In response to a request by the ATA this phrase will be deleted through this House amendment. Eliminating this phrase will allow the ATA to address exceptional circumstances in which the association does not wish to admit an individual as an active member. It would achieve this by allowing the minister in appropriate circumstances to authorize the ATA to not act on an individual's election regarding membership. In order to provide certainty for both school boards and the ATA with respect to these members' status, another clause will be added to make the option elected by the teacher irrevocable for so long as the individual occupies the central office staff position.

The second House amendment I'd like to discuss will allow the provincial executive council of the ATA to pass the practice review bylaw as opposed to having it done by the association at an annual general meeting. While the association can currently pass bylaws at its general meetings, this House amendment recognizes the unique nature of the practice bylaw and that it will be approved by the Minister of Learning. For practical reasons it is appropriate to have this bylaw developed and passed by the ATA's provincial executive council. This will help ensure that the bylaw has been approved and is in place for the 2005 school year.

The next House amendment involves complaints made about a teacher's conduct. The Teaching Profession Act allows a complainant to request a review of a decision if the complaint about a teacher's professional conduct does not result in a hearing before a professional conduct hearing committee. This amendment would allow the ATA to charge a fee to a complainant who requests a review. A request for reviewing a decision not to refer a teacher to a professional conduct hearing committee involves a thorough review of the decision by the complainant appeal committee. This process should not be automatic and should involve careful consideration on behalf of the complainant.

The introduction of a standard fee is intended to encourage reflection on the part of the complainant and help ensure their commitment to the issue. Because similar fees will also be charged to complainants who request reviews under the practice review bylaw, the introduction of this fee will help ensure consistency between the practice review and conduct review processes.

The final House amendment I'd like to discuss today addresses the section of the Teaching Profession Act that allows teachers to appeal decisions reached by the professional conduct hearing committees.

This House amendment would allow the ATA to require an appellant to post a deposit of up to the cost of the appeal. This deposit would be forfeited to the ATA should the appeal not be successful, it would be returned to the appellant if the appeal were successful, and it would be split between the appellant and the association should the appeal be partially successful.

Currently a hearing committee can require an appellant to pay the cost of an appeal. However, if the appellant does not pay the costs, the ATA must recover them from the appellant in a civil debt action. This amendment will allow the ATA to collect a deposit from the appellant against the cost of the appeal and provide for the appropriate disposition of the deposit pending the outcome of the appeal. As mentioned, because it is planned that deposits will also be collected in matters involving practice reviews, this change will ensure consistency between the practice review and conduct review processes.

To ensure that our learning system maintains the high-quality services Albertans have come to expect, it is essential to ensure that appropriate, professional conduct and practice review processes are in place. That's why we worked closely with the ATA in developing Bill 26. The House amendments I discussed today as well as other amendments to the Teaching Profession Act outlined in Bill 26 will further this government's efforts to continually improve Alberta's learning system.

With that said, I urge this Assembly to support these important amendments. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In speaking in support of the amendments, again we thank the hon. member for sharing the essence of the amendments with us earlier today. There was a concern that the fees being talked about might be a deterrent for some teachers taking action, and we are assured that that was not the case. We were given some indication of the level that the fees might be, and that seems reasonable.

Again, one of the reasons for our being able to support the bill and to do that so quickly is the assurance that the member gave us that these amendments have the full support of both the Teachers' Association and the School Boards Association. They are the two groups that are very intimately involved in actions that are taken under these sections of the act, and that seemed to be a necessary prerequisite. I'm pleased to support the amendments.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to speak?

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 26 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that the committee now rise and report bills 25 and 26 as amended.

[Motion carried]

Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following with some amendments: Bill 25 and Bill 26. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you to all members for the excellent progress tonight. Given the hour, I would move that we now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

[Motion carried; at 10:39 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 27, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/04/27

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly the Minister of Education from the Basque Country in Spain. The Hon. Anjeles Iztueta is here, and with her in the Speaker's gallery is a delegation which includes education officials from the Basque Country: Abel Ariznabarreta – and I do really apologize for my pronunciation of those names – who is the Vice-Minister of Education; Amaia Goikoetxea, who is the press and public relations adviser; Josu Sierra, who is the director of the Basque Institute for Research and Evaluation in Education.

Minister Iztueta and her delegation have come to Alberta to learn more about our learning system. They will be examining our best practices and some of our new initiatives that contribute to the success of Alberta's learning system. I'm proud to share with the Assembly that it was the high achievement of Alberta's students both nationally and internationally, in particular the success of the students in the PISA 2000 assessment, that initially captured the Basques' attention.

I'd like to thank Minister Iztueta and her delegation for the opportunity to exchange knowledge and experiences, and I will say that we had an absolutely delightful lunch today while talking about our respective education systems. I would ask Minister Iztueta and her delegation to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Shariff: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly four individuals from Tanzania who are studying here in Alberta as part of the Canadian International Development Agency ethics promotion project in Tanzania in collaboration with the University of Calgary: Mrs. Adieu Nyondo, director, and Mr. Peter Mushi, administrative officer, both of the ethics division, office of Public Service Management; Mr. Cathlex Makawia, inquiry officer, and Mr. Waziri Kipacha, inquiry officer, both of the Ethics Secretariat, President's Office of the Ethics Commissioner. Escorting them are Mr. Don Hamilton, Alberta Ethics Commissioner, and his senior administrator, Ms Karen South. [Remarks in Swahili]

Mr. Speaker, my remarks in Swahili translate as follows. With your permission I would like to extend to our honoured guests a very warm welcome to our fine province of Alberta and this great Legislative Assembly. I hope that when they return home, they take back with them fond memories of our province and are able to implement their learnings in developing good governance in Tanzania.

Mr. Speaker, our guests are in your gallery. They have now risen, and I request this Assembly to accord them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two sets of guests to introduce. I'll do the first one on behalf of my colleague from Athabasca-Wabasca. There are 34 students and a number of group leaders and teachers and parent helpers from Mistassiniy school in Wabasca. I'll just name the teachers and group leaders, and I'd ask that they stand as I name them: Mrs. Christine Gullion, Ms Doreen Gullion, Ms Joanna Schroeder, Mr. Bruce Joudrey, Mr. Leon McLeod, Shaina Merrieu, Kelly Auger, Jesse Auger, T.G. Taron, Kaine Young, Terrance Alook, and all the students from the Mistassiniy school in Wabasca. I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I also have the great pleasure of introducing to you and to Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of students from Roland Michener secondary school. We have 37 visitors. I'd ask that they stand as I introduce the teachers and group leaders: Tracey Crain, Gail Nelson, Rose Barore, Mike Sowada, Kris Reucker. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: The first Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Government Aircraft

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to opposition questions yesterday on government flights the Premier mentioned that "what we try to do is make sure that the plane is loaded." Well, according to the government's own passenger manifests, this is hardly ever the case. Indeed, in 2002 nearly one-quarter of the flights taken by the government had only one or two people on them out of a maximum of a seven- to 36-person capacity. My questions are to the Premier. How can the Premier claim that 128 flights with only one person on them is cost-effective?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it is wrong and misleading, to say the least, to say that a King Air 200 or a King Air 350 holds – whatever she mentioned – 30 or 36 people. One aircraft holds six people; the other aircraft holds eight people, nine if someone sits on the toilet seat. The Dash 8, which is used to transport people to do energy sales in Calgary and forestry crews and others, is never used unless there are more than at least 10 passengers. So the hon. member is misleading this Legislature and the Alberta public by saying that government aircraft accommodate in excess of 30 passengers. That simply is not true.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: how can the Premier claim that 239 flights with only two people on them is cost-effective?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it depends on where you're going. Indeed, many of the members from Calgary and the surrounding region fly to Edmonton and fly commercially, and that is hardly cost-effective to go to the International Airport and pay the price – I don't know what a ticket is right now, but I understand it's fairly expensive – and then take a cab or rent a car or pay the parking fees to have a car there and to drive it.

There is a matter of convenience as well. I don't apologize, not one single bit, for this afternoon, for instance, going to Calgary. I don't know who is going to be on the airplane with me. I book it and invite anyone who wants to come along to Calgary. They can come on the aircraft. I have to be in Calgary, and there is no way – there's no way – that I'm going to leave here at 3 o'clock, when I have my obligatory scrum with the media, to arrive at the International Airport – I have to be in Calgary by 5; that means I have to be down there by 4 o'clock – and wait around an hour, when I can go 10 minutes to the City Centre Airport, which they didn't defend, by the way, as Edmontonians, and get the aircraft and be in Calgary. So it is a matter of convenience.

Believe me, to put one's rear end in a seat and go back and forth to Calgary or to Oyen or to all points in this province is not a luxury. I'll tell you that for sure.

Ms Blakeman: Edmonton voted against the City Centre.

My final question to the Premier: given that on January 31, 2002, there were 14 flights within Alberta on the government aircraft, six between Calgary and Edmonton and one of those carrying a backbench MLA flying solo, how is this filling the plane?

Mr. Klein: It happens, and it's wide open, Mr. Speaker. What would the Liberals have us do: have these planes and park them? Park them? We want to keep them in the air. The best use of an aircraft is when the aircraft is flying. The worst use is to park it.

I'll have the hon. minister comment.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I don't know about that particular day, but let me tell you what very often happens and likely what happened in this case. At times the aircraft will go to Calgary, and people will stay there. We keep a list of people that are in Calgary that want to fly back to Edmonton. If that individual that was on the aircraft coming back to Edmonton had gone back in some other way, then the plane deadheads back to Edmonton empty. So is there anything wrong with one person coming back when in fact they need a ride back to Edmonton?

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Water Use for Enhanced Oil Recovery

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's water for life strategy isn't worth the recycled paper it's printed on. Today industry, communities, and farmers were looking to the Environment minister for clear rules on the use of potable water by industry for injection. Instead, we got a clear message from the Minister of Energy that water is not for life but rather for industry. My questions are to the Premier. Why is your government putting the fox in charge of the henhouse by allowing industry to voluntarily monitor its own use of potable water?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister had a news conference on this issue today in which the preliminary report, as I understand it, on practices that remove water from the water cycle, primarily oil field injection, was discussed.

Before I have the hon. Minister of Environment respond, I wish the Liberals would stop pretending that there are easy answers to every public policy question. And they do. If they ever, God forbid, got into government, they would learn that that is not the case. These are difficult situations.

The government, quite briefly, has struck a provincial committee of stakeholders, including the energy sector. This is not the fox being in charge of the henhouse. This is meaningful consultation. It involves environmental agencies and advocacy groups. Are they suggesting that these environmental agencies and advocacy groups are part of the fox that guards the henhouse? If they are, then stand up and say so. The stakeholder group included rural municipalities to look at this extremely complicated issue.

Relative to the details I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Premier. I would point out that what we had today was a preliminary report that we have consensus on. This is a consensus-based process, and I would remind the opposition that flaring will be reduced probably by over 80 per cent because of consensus. I would remind the opposition that we have the toughest standards in North America on emissions coming from coal-fired plants because of consensus. So consensus works.

I pointed out very clearly at the press conference – and this member obviously didn't listen at the press conference either – that we will have a final report by June 30. In regard to the specific issue that she identified, I will . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you will have another chance. We'll just keep the question period going.

The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: when is the government going to invest the research and resources into making CO<sub>2</sub> injection economically and technologically viable?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is an interesting question. Certainly, there is technology available, and there is the ingenuity fund that can be used to enhance and develop research into the use of CO<sub>2</sub> for oilfield injection. It's my understanding from speaking to industry leaders that the technology now, although it exists, is very, very expensive. It's uneconomical at this time, but as research and development progress, I'm sure that this technology will become less expensive.

I will ask perhaps the hon. Minister of Energy, because he's been involved with this issue, and maybe the Minister of Innovation and Science to respond.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this is the only jurisdiction in Canada that is taking active steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. One of those components is carbon dioxide sequestration, or storing CO<sub>2</sub> in areas below the ground.

There is a substantial flood going on in Saskatchewan. It's called the Weyburn miscible CO<sub>2</sub> flood. This has replaced water in some cases, or it's mixed with water. We co-operate with the province of Saskatchewan and with EnCana, the company that's responsible for this.

Do you know where they get their carbon dioxide from now? They buy it from the United States. So what has to happen, Mr. Speaker, is that we have to get the carbon dioxide. It has to be sourced; it has to be piped; it has to be cleaned up. There are a whole bunch of steps other than just saying something off the top of your head that says: CO<sub>2</sub> when stored. Lots to be done. We're on the file.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: when will this government get serious about its water for life strategy and put a moratorium on its use of potable water for injection?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister indicated, there is a process right now involving all stakeholders, including environmental advocacy groups, industry, and municipalities, to look at this complicated issue.

I would remind all hon. members that while this issue is one that's important to Albertans and obviously to the opposition – it certainly is to this government – it represents a fairly small portion of the province's water. I'm given to understand that only 4 per cent of Alberta's total water allocations, including both surface and groundwater, is used in ways that remove it from the water cycle.

Mr. Speaker, looking at that in context, we allow over 50 per cent of the water that comes down the east slopes of the Rocky Mountains to flow freely into Saskatchewan and other jurisdictions.

An Hon. Member: That's by treaty.

Mr. Klein: We allow much more than 50 per cent. We are obligated to send 50 per cent. We send far more than 50 per cent. So this is to put it into context.

But we do understand that even that 4 per cent is an issue that needs to be dealt with, and the hon. minister is dealing with it.

The Speaker: Sorry, hon. minister. We've now spent seven minutes on this set. I've got 15 members who want to raise a question, and we're getting into a debate.

Coal Bed Methane Development

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, clearly the hon. Minister of Energy is calling the shots when it comes to water management and industry. This is troubling news for stakeholders concerned over this government's incompetence on coal bed methane development. Coal bed methane could be and should be Alberta's next big energy bonanza if it is done right. My first question is to the Premier. Will the Premier guarantee that no – not one – freshwater source in Alberta will be contaminated as a result of coal bed methane developments?

Mr. Klein: Again, that is a very interesting question. I've asked the Minister of Energy to provide me with some information, and he has quite capably. Indeed, I've spoken with EnCana, one of the companies doing major development relative to coal bed methane.

I'm given to understand that unlike the Powder River basin project in Wyoming where, indeed, extraction of gas from coal bed produced a lot of waste water and there were problems disposing of this water, the coal bed methane development, ostensibly, in Alberta – and I don't know to what extent – involves dry coal, and it doesn't involve water. I'm given assurances that the processes used here are entirely different and much safer than those that were used in Wyoming.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Environment: given that no two coal bed methane basins in Alberta are the same, what is the chemical composition of the saline, or brackish, water that is produced as a result of coal bed methane production?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have a PhD in psychology, not chemistry, and even with my PhD in psychology it doesn't help me understand him. Certainly, that's a question that I can't answer here, but we will get that technical chemistry-based information and provide it to the member.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. My third question is to the Minister of Energy. Will this government promise to preserve water for future generations and place a moratorium on coal bed methane drilling until Albertans see for themselves – if this hon. minister doesn't know, hopefully someone else does – what kind . . .

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Practices

The Speaker: Hon. member. Hon. member, please. Now, hold on. The second question that the hon. member raised had nothing to do with government policy. I could have ruled it out. So having said that, please don't then extrapolate from the fact that you were given the right to proceed with your second question that the hon. minister doesn't know. This is this baiting that goes back and forth. I've got 15 members who want to ask questions. I'm going to keep this thing going along. Let's deal with policy.

The hon. Minister of Energy to respond.

Coal Bed Methane Development (continued)

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly can't speak on behalf of all government. I can speak personally about my commitment to future generations of Albertans to ensure that not only is there water here but that there is a healthy lifestyle, there are sufficient resources, and there are sufficient jobs created so that they can get educated in this place, they can live here, they can raise families here and maybe sit in this Legislature some day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Calgary Courthouse

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Information that I released earlier today reveals that the P3 partners involved in the Calgary court centre project consortium had contributed over $21,000 to the Alberta PC fund in the last three years. No wonder this government is continuing negotiations with this consortium for a drastically scaled back court centre rather than cancelling the flawed bidding process and starting over. My question is to the Premier. Can the Premier please explain why the BPC consortium, with its close political connections to this government, wasn't sent packing when it became obvious that they had lowballed their bid to win a project now facing cost overruns of 67 per cent?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, I don't know to what steps and to what depths the opposition parties are willing to sink to find something. The suggestion in the ND press release is that this company, BPC – and I thought it was Kingsway or something – donated $21,000 over three years to the Alberta Progressive Conservative Party. Over three years. First of all, I don't advise myself of who makes donations and who doesn't. Maybe the Liberals and the NDs do because they get so few donations that they monitor every single penny that comes in, but I don't. I leave that up to the party's finance committee.

Mr. Speaker, companies in this province compete for, win, or lose government contracts, and they do this all the time regardless of whether they contribute to the PC Party, the Liberals, or the NDs. Now, the Calgary courthouse project is moving ahead through an open and transparent bidding process. It's an innovative approach in that it's a P3 initiative and that it's been carefully reviewed every step of the way.

Now, here's where the ND press release is totally and absolutely wrong, misleading. Mr. Speaker, when we saw that the costs were going up on this particular project, we revisited it, and now the costs, instead of $500 million, are back to $300 million, the original price. Even at a reduced scope we are confident that we can build an excellent facility that attends to the needs of Calgarians and consolidates the Provincial Court and the Court of Queen's Bench.

Mr. Mason: Can the Premier please confirm for this House that the new courthouse, the scaled back version, will in fact not contain all of the elements that it was originally planned for?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what it will or will not contain other than courthouse facilities. I'll have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure respond.

Mr. Lund: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's terribly unfortunate that the New Democratic Party would go to the extent that they've now gone because, quite frankly, what they have said is simply not factual. The whole process was so open and transparent right from the start when we put out a request for interest and then a request for qualifications and then a request for proposal. There were three companies that replied to the request for proposals. We took the lowest one and then worked with them, and as a matter of fact the price came down through the negotiations.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the government yaps on about the transparency of this process, in order to make sure that Albertans aren't getting taken for a ride, will the government table in this Assembly the project estimates of the two bids that were rejected as well as the results of the so-called dummy bid as well as the process that was used to evaluate them?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll leave that up to the hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, I noticed on the back page – well, I don't pay much attention to the front page of an ND news release, but the back page . . .

Mr. Mason: Yes, you do. Yes, you do.

Mr. Klein: Well, I happened to have it here because it was on the desk of my colleague the hon. Attorney General and Government House Leader. So I was able to pick it up and look in absolute amazement and disbelief at how a press release could be so misleading. And then I saw: New Democrat opposition. I said: well, there you go.

Now, I just looked at the back page, and here BPC as a company made no donations. I understand that some partners did. GWLRA donated $3,750 over two years. Cana Construction donated $5,000 to the 2001 election, and for that we are truly grateful. Kasian Kennedy, the architectural firm, donated $4,700 in 2003, $4,500 in 2002, and $2,000 in 2001. SNC-Lavalin ProFac property operations donated the huge sum of $1,000.

Mr. Speaker, you know, it goes from the sublime to the absolutely ridiculous, but again, when you're dealing with an ND press release, how can you expect anything more?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

2:00 Oil Sands Royalty Regime

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents and Albertans have questions about the royalty regime as it applies to the Alberta tar sands projects. Recently we have been hearing about Suncor wanting their Firebag project included for royalty purposes with their Steepbank project. Also, Albertans are starting to ask questions in regard to the actual revenue Alberta is realizing from the tar sands, especially in light of demands for more infrastructure. My questions are all to the Minister of Energy. Could the minister tell this Assembly: what is the present royalty rate, and how is it applied to tar sands projects?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's an important question because the member refers to what is an area of Alberta larger than the state of South Carolina on which much of our future revenue depends. But it is not conventional oil and gas exploration; it is mining. With mining comes a large and substantial investment. Billions and billions of dollars must be spent in order to extract that resource, then take the resource and convert it, take the sulphur out of it, and turn it into crude that is marketable at today's prices.

In order to facilitate the movement of investment into this area to develop these oil sands, Mr. Speaker, we applied in 1996 a generic royalty regime. This means that 1 per cent of all the company's revenues from its investment are subject to royalties. We charge that 1 per cent rate. When those investments are paid out, we then take the revenue minus the cost and charge 25 per cent on that rate, and that rate occurs at the time of payout.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Are any projects at or nearing payout that will soon be paying a higher royalty rate?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, at present the department has on file some 52 projects paying royalty under the oil sands royalty regime. Of that, 37 are in prepayment status; 15 are in postpayment status. I don't want to get into the individuals, because a lot of that is proprietary commercial information, but I can say that the removal of the machinery and equipment tax in 1995 combined with the generic oil sands royalty regime has resulted in some 50 billion plus dollars' worth of investment.

This investment, if I can put the numbers forward, in projected payout, all by 2017, if you assume 1 per cent inflation, means that the price of oil would be $60 a barrel. Roughly a $10 spread for operating puts us at $50. At $12 for operating, that's $38. Twenty-five per cent of $38 is nine and a half dollars. At 3 million barrels a day, Mr. Speaker, that's $11 billion a year that is contributed to the coffers of Albertans for their building, for their use, for their development.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you. To the same minister again: what is the present cash flow that Albertans are realizing from the tar sands projects per day?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. I can say that for the 2003 production year the 37 prepayment projects paid $8.1 million in royalties, and the 15 postpayment projects paid over $217 million in royalties.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Firebag Oil Sands Development

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Firebag is an in situ oil sands development which will increase Suncor's oil production to more than one-half a million barrels per day in the next six to seven years. This government currently classifies Firebag as a separate project from Suncor's existing operations, while Suncor believes that Firebag is an expansion of its existing operations. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. What information is this government using to determine that Firebag is separate from the existing Suncor operations north of Fort McMurray?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, we use the terms and conditions and details as outlined in the oil sands royalty regulation.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: will this dispute harm future investor confidence in future northern Alberta tar sands developments?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the oil sands royalty regulation has proven to not only stimulate investment today but to stimulate investment as far back as 1996, will continue to stimulate investment, and will continue to ensure that Albertans share in this great resource as well as the companies that are in there mining the resource.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: what is the difference in royalties payable by Suncor to the people of Alberta if Firebag is classified as a separate project?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a question subject to a great many variables. Those variables are as tangible as the changing price of oil, which changes on a daily basis, when suicide bombers are found close to oil field terminals on the coast of Iraq, to holes drying up in the North Sea. We don't know how that will specifically impact it. We don't know what's going to happen with future construction costs and how they will change with respect to labour rates, budgeting, engineering procurement, and contracting. So, in fact, it is impossible to give a definitive impact.

But let me finish the question by saying that we do know we have the right regulation. We also know that we have the right companies up there and that they're developing this resource in an environmentally responsible fashion.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Norris: Yeah. I would just like to supplement the Minister of Energy. I'm sure that he wanted to tell people, but the actual amount of construction that's estimated or underway in the next 10 years is $70 billion, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Norris: Seventy billion, and that translates to about $3 billion or $4 billion per year. The hon. member's question to the minister doesn't translate into what's happening now, and I thought I'd put that on the table.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Edmonton City Centre Airport

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton City Centre Airport is located within the Edmonton-Calder constituency. A recently released airport consultation report recommends continuation of 10-passenger flights' access to and from the airport. My questions are for the Minister of Economic Development. Since his department participated in the consultation group, what steps is his department taking to ensure that the Edmonton airports authority follows the recommendations?

The Speaker: The hon. minister. [interjections] The hon. minister has the floor. [interjections]

Mr. Norris: Apparently, I don't.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, you do have the floor. You've been recognized now three times.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. member for the question and, before I give an answer, would like to make reference to the outstanding work done by the Member for Peace River, the chairman of the Northern Alberta Development Council, who did an awful lot to bring this issue to the front.

As every member here knows, the committee has finished its work, Mr. Speaker, and is reviewing the recommendations. We're very, very pleased with the process that took place not only through our department but through the Member for Peace River, who is on the committee. Obviously, we feel very, very strongly about the importance of that airport for economic development not only for northern Alberta but for all Alberta. This is Alberta's capital city, and it came out loud and clear that that was a big concern.

The process, as I understand it now, will be that the authority is reviewing all the recommendations. Where we can work and are working with the hon. Minister of Justice is on enforcement rules. One of the complaints was that if some of the planes are capped at 10 seats and 10 passengers, why isn't that happening? So with the Minister of Transportation we're looking at that. But our ongoing role in this now is to observe what comes out of the airport authority's recommendations, and at that point the committee is still in place to act on any future suggestions, Mr. Speaker.

2:10

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if 19-passenger planes are landing and taking off at the airport, why can they only have 10 passengers on board?

Mr. Norris: Well, that's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. Our government planes are actually not part of the equation, and some clarification might be good for the hon. members opposite. What the airport authority had talked about at the outset was never the charter flights, the medevacs, or the government planes. What they were talking about is scheduled flights, which is what we're talking about. So if they want more information, I'm happy to provide it.

The issue as such is I guess one of economics. Whether the planes that are flying are able to do so economically at a 10-seat or 19-seat capacity remains to be seen, but the understanding that we have is that it's cheaper to fly a 19-seat plane. The airport authority wanted a 10-seat cap so as not to cannibalize activity out at the International Airport in Leduc, and that made some sense.

So the reality of it is that if both sides are going to work together to promote what I believe is a remarkable economic jewel, they're going to have to come to a compromise, and that was the compromise that was suggested with the exception, Mr. Speaker, of High Level and Fort Chipewyan, where it was indicated that they may have more of a compelling case to have 19-seat planes with 19 passengers due to the length of time to fly in and out. That's something that's being reviewed as well.

So the answer to the hon. member's question is that it's one of economics, but it's certainly something that we're going to stay on until it's concluded.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister assure that both runways at the City Centre Airport will remain open?

Mr. Norris: Well, clearly, no, I can't, but I can certainly say that we are vitally concerned that the suggestion that one of the runways should be shut down was put out there. Clearly, anybody who's involved in aviation knows that after a certain degree of wind either way, 20 knots I believe, it makes one of the runways very difficult to land on.

The suggestion that one or the other should be shut down was not received well by the consultation group, and as such they recommended that both be left open. Our belief, Mr. Speaker, is that in order for that airport to remain viable and to continue in the future, both must remain open. So the committee that the Deputy Minister of Economic Development and the Member for Peace River sit on will continue to push for both runways being open because it's just that important.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Daycare Accreditation Policy

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hope of the new daycare accreditation policy rests on adequate funding to support implementation. With wages less than $8.50 an hour and the highest staff turnover rate in the country, we could see the promise of accreditation lost. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. What good will accreditation do if no one is willing to work in a field with such low pay scales?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to reflect on the article in the parent magazine that so poorly quoted the issues surrounding accreditation, daycare, and costs in Alberta. There was a reference point to the lack of opportunity to sustain qualified daycare staff. In this House I will be tabling what will be sent to Today's Parent and talk about the actual truth of the matter as it relates to the funding for daycare, the experience for daycare. Fundamentally, the comparisons across the country in that study were evaluated on the basis of children from zero to 12 years of age, and we count those children that we are providing care to between zero and six years of age. So there was a flaw in the gathering of the data right off the bat, and I want to make that perfectly clear.

In terms of salaries and standards and the accreditation process we have looked at the opportunity for contracted service providers to engage a qualified accreditation authority to come in and evaluate the quality service standards. But today, Mr. Speaker, we are not only looking at daycares and day homes but for all of those people through parent resource centres or other preschool/early-years programs to have some type of accreditation standard to make sure that parents and children and families are engaged and that staff are qualified and well trained.

Mr. Speaker, the short answer for the hon. member opposite is that I will table exactly what our intentions are on qualifications, and I will provide what we're currently doing on the training of qualified staff.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a question of wages.

How will the current small income supplements to parents result in better qualified care workers, required under the accreditation, actually being hired?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, while it will rest finally with each individual service provider, the amounts that we're providing aren't all that will be done. The supports for training, the supports for building qualified personnel, the other kinds of service provisions and supports that will be provided will assist in enabling those service providers themselves to pay a higher wage. The very minimum that was provided at the outset was recognizing the willingness of each daycare and day home to get involved in the process, but we have yet to achieve accreditation. We have yet to deliver more than what the current programming has required. An accreditation in the system will require significantly more supports provided by the providers, and at that time then we will be evaluating what the salary differential is from today's rates and see if we've achieved success.

Mr. Speaker, on the level 3s, admittedly, I think we can do better, but again it's the providers of that daycare as opposed to this government paying those people that are delivering the service.

Dr. Massey: A third question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: when will the government commit funds to improve the current meagre daycare resources so that those qualified daycare workers are actually able to do their job?

Ms Evans: Let's be clear that the provision of funds or the lack thereof is not something that inhibits a person from doing the job of taking care of children. That is not something that stops people from doing it, nor do any of those daycare workers tell you that because they're paid more, they'll do better at the job.

Let's be clear that when we have got the full accreditation process in place, then the evaluation about the credits and the standards will be maintained. Last year we provided $6 million for the system of daycares and day homes. We've added almost double that fund this year.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are extra resources, and the accreditation isn't complete yet. We're at the outset of this process, and I think we'll be well satisfied that we've achieved results by the time people are fully accredited.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Seniors' Benefits Program

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Funding to the Alberta seniors' benefits program was increased in Budget 2004 by $21 million, yet the seniors haven't seen any positive changes to their benefits. To the Minister of Seniors: as a result of this increase, are there any plans in place to increase the thresholds for the Alberta seniors?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2004 increases the benefits program to some $199 million. With respect to the $21 million increase $11 million will be used to accommodate new entrants to the program as well as to deal with the increased support in the long-term care accommodation rates. The remaining $10 million will be added to the seniors' program, but currently we are looking at where we can get the best effect with the $10 million to ensure that the largest number of people get the support that they should get.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. How does the ministry arrive at the thresholds, and who did the ministry consult with to arrive at the current threshold levels?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that the Alberta seniors' benefits program was designed to act as a supplement to the federal financial assistance provided through old age security and guaranteed income supplement. The original thresholds for the program were established in 1993-94, and that was done through consultations directly with seniors and with a variety of seniors' organizations. The current thresholds are reviewed on an annual basis, and we continue to monitor the costs that the seniors are facing, costs such as increases in utilities, taxes, cost of living, and so on. Whenever possible we make adjustments to the program, depending upon our ability to get resources and the ability to show the need. I might point out that during the last 10 years the thresholds have changed several times.

2:20

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister. How do the seniors' benefits in Alberta, the richest province in Canada, compare to those of other provinces?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say at the outset that Alberta's benefits program compares extremely favourably with the other provinces. For example, we have a maximum of $235 per month for seniors who are not in long-term care. Seniors in long-term care get much more. No other province offers as high a cash benefit to low-income seniors, and in fact some provinces don't have any cash benefit for seniors, no program similar to this.

In addition, our eligibility thresholds are currently very generous. An individual senior whose income is under $18,850 would be eligible for the beginning of cash benefits; $28,740 is the threshold for couples. Approximately 126,000, or 38 per cent of all the seniors in Alberta, do receive a cash benefit. If you add to that, Mr. Speaker, the number of seniors who get some health care premium exemptions, that number rises to 56 per cent of all the seniors.

In addition, seniors on the benefits program are eligible for special-needs assistance. Alberta is the only province with that program. Mr. Speaker, this year's budget allocates some $33 million to that program. The number of individuals who have become eligible increased to some 35,000 last year. I might point out that some provinces have no support for seniors at any level for dental, no support for optical, no support for hearing aids. Not all provinces but some provinces don't have those. We are quite generous in how we support our special-needs seniors. I might add also that about 1 in 3 of the seniors in this province receive some support with their housing.

Mr. Speaker, I'll close by saying that the Alberta seniors portion of the budget is $250 million for the whole package, and to that you have to add what Alberta Health puts in, and that comes to well over a billion dollars for seniors.

Highway Safety

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, as the road construction industry swings into high gear for the summer, public safety is a major concern for construction workers working on or near Alberta highways. To the Minister of Transportation: what policies is the government undertaking to enhance the safety of construction workers who work on the province's highways, bridges, and overpasses?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a number of projects that we're working on co-operatively with various municipalities and the contractors in the province. One of them is RIP, which is really rest in peace. It's a sign of a cross, trying to impress upon Albertans to please not rush through a construction zone; there may be a construction worker that may not see the oncoming car or lose attention while they're working on the site. So that's just one of the many media campaigns that we'll see occurring in the province.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: does the minister not have the power under the rules of the road, section 112 of the Traffic Safety Act, to govern the utilization of highways and the use and operation of vehicles on Alberta highways?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the law is in place. It is a matter of communicating to Albertans that they should obey the rules of the road, that they should pay attention while they're on a public highway and have respect for those individuals that are employed in making our highways much better and improving the infrastructure in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: with the authority granted the minister under rules of the road, section 112, will the minister then implement a reduction of speed on roadways and areas where emergency vehicles are attending to an incident and have their flashing lights in operation?

Mr. Stelmach: He's referring to a section that's defining emergency vehicles, and there is a private member's bill before the House looking at bringing about some amendments to the current legislation. [interjection] I hear the hon. member insisting on talking over there. Obviously, he must need the practice. He's not listening.

What we are looking at is the total definition of emergency vehicle and then looking at how we can make those particular circumstances, when emergency vehicles are out there, much safer and looking at incorporating construction zones at the same particular time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Utilities Deregulation

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just before Christmas the province's Energy and Utilities Board quietly allowed Direct Energy to add an extra $40 million a year on the gas and electricity bills of Albertans as part of the deal to buy ATCO's retail business. Now that Direct Energy has finalized this deal with ATCO, the city of Calgary is challenging the decision to approve these extra charges in court. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Why is it that with every additional step down the government's utility deregulation road Albertans are being asked to pay more, not less, for so-called competition and customer choice?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, this particular charge was put forward as a result of the passage of Bill 19, which was the final step in the natural gas competitive market restructuring that started in 1986 and culminated in 2003.

The member, if he wasn't here, should have been here to attentively listen to the debate and determine why the bill was passed and what benefits should accrue from that. [interjections] Now, instead of listening to the reply, just as listening to the debate, they choose to heckle. I can't make them listen, Mr. Speaker.

Again let me try. How does the minister keep his nose from growing in peddling the fiction that Direct Energy's entry into Alberta is beneficial to consumers when the cold hard truth is that an extra $40 million per year is quietly being added to customers' utility bills?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is not quietly being added to utility bills. That was a very clear decision made by the EUB. They publish their decisions. One decision is just like the other decision, and they make no differentiation. It's posted on a web site. We do know that the separation of the ability to market this product and the ability to deliver this product through distribution has represented a 10-cent a day charge put forth, approved by the EUB.

The EUB has also asked for a detailed study from Direct Energy to examine those costs to determine if they're prudent, and in fact, Mr. Speaker, if you look at being able to purchase rates that are now combined, as I said yesterday in the House—I hate to go forward and recap it, but because they won't listen, I guess I'm forced to use the good time of this good House to do that. Those rates combined with the flexibility in marketing should more than override any additional cost that was publicly approved through a legislated process in a matter of a press release posted on a web site, nothing surreptitious, nothing designed to put one company ahead of another but just simple good, hard, honest, open, transparent legislation.

2:30

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the same minister: will the minister or the government order its toothless Utilities Consumer Advocate to support the city of Calgary's attempt to overturn the EUB decision to allow these extra charges, and if not, why not?

Speaker's Ruling Sub Judice Rule

The Speaker: Hold on, please. The hon. leader of the third party in raising his first question indicated that there was a court action. The difficulty the chair has in understanding this is determining whether or not this is sub judice. If the hon. member now in his third question is asking for a minister of the Crown to interfere in an ongoing court process, that clearly is not within the rules of the Assembly.

Now, the difficulty the chair has: the chair does not know if this is actually before the courts or not and usually would turn to the Attorney General for some guidance with respect to this.

Mr. Hancock: Far be it from me to contradict the chair, but the Attorney General also does not know every court case that has been filed in the province of Alberta on any given day.

The Speaker: There was no contradiction. It was a matter of guidance to the chair with respect to sub judice matters.

Now, the hon. minister.

Utilities Deregulation

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think it's only appropriate that we finish this line of questioning by saying that the member is asking the wrong minister. The Utilities Consumer Advocate is directly placed with the Minister of Government Services.

So had the member listened to debate on Bill 19, had the member followed the discussions in the EUB and the posting on the web site and the transparency in the decision, and had the member read the report from the Bolger commission, the advisory council on electrical issues, that showed the creation of a utility advocate, he would be up to date in Kansas City. Mr. Speaker, he's long and lost somewhere in NDP land.

The Speaker: Did the hon. Minister of Government Services want to supplement this final answer?

Mr. Coutts: No.

The Speaker: No. Okay.

head:

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four members to participate.

The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Jim Dixon

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 21 the members of this Assembly and the Alberta public service lost a trusted friend, a colleague, and a leader with the passing of former Public Service Commissioner, Mr. Jim Dixon. His career in the public service spanned more than 35 years, including 25 as Alberta's Public Service Commissioner.

Jim began his long career with the Alberta government in the 1960s. His extensive career in human resources with the personnel administration office and his strong leadership within the Alberta government earned Jim the deepest respect from everyone he worked with. Jim brought vision and integrity to the public service. He was a leader not through his exercise of authority but through his example of competence, reason, and influence.

As Alberta's top human resource executive Jim positioned the Alberta public service to succeed through decades of challenge and change. A man of renowned talent and insight he created and implemented innovative human resource policies which positioned the government of Alberta as a preferred employer. This is demonstrated by the creation of the award-winning corporate human resource development strategy under his leadership. It was one of the first cross-ministry initiatives and remains a key administrative initiative today.

Over his career Jim was involved in many rounds of bargaining since the first collective agreement was reached with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees in 1975. His characteristic sense of balance, respect, and fairness contributed to Alberta's prolonged productive relations with the union. Jim's colleagues across Canada looked to him for his wisdom and counsel. Thanks to Jim's leadership and abilities the Alberta public service has rightfully gained a reputation for excellence across Canada.

Jim was also a dedicated family man. I'm sure that you, Mr. Speaker, and all Members of the Legislative Assembly will join me in extending our deepest condolences to his wife, Pat, his two children, Jay and Julie, and to other family members, colleagues, and friends.

Jim Dixon's legacy of achievement in this province will live on for many years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Education Week

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. From the time we're born through to enjoying our grandchildren in our golden years, every day is an opportunity to learn, be it an elementary school classroom, a lecture hall on a postsecondary campus, or perhaps seniors learning to install new software on their home computer or maybe just trying a recipe for the first time. Lifelong learning results.

This week, April 25 until May 1, is Education Week. This year's theme is The Learning Edge in recognition of the fact that Alberta's learning system, its students, and its educators continue to be among the best in the world.

Mr. Speaker, learning is a priority for Albertans. Education Week is an opportunity to celebrate learning successes that are taking place throughout Alberta and recognize everyone who contributes to Alberta's leading edge in elementary, secondary, and postsecondary learning systems.

These successes exist because of the partnerships between government, institutions, school boards, teachers, parents, and students. They also exist because of the special dedication of professionals that devote their lives to the formation and education of all of our children.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's knowledge-based economy and society requires innovative, well-educated, well-mannered, skilled, and adaptive citizens. The people of Alberta have long recognized that learning is the cornerstone of Alberta's future. Those involved in the learning system today have an awesome responsibility to help model and preserve the values and attitudes of successful Albertans and nurture the calling from within of their children for tomorrow's promise.

I hope that everyone will take time this week to celebrate learning, to thank those who contribute to our world-class education system, and to make Education Week special for everyone involved. Mr. Speaker, hug your teacher today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Internationalization of Alberta

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a dream or rather a vision for Alberta: an internationalized and competitively enterprising Alberta with its operational focus on being the most efficient, effective, economical, and ethical.

Why does Alberta need internationalization? History has many times over proven that a country, even small in population and landscape, becomes strong and influential when it goes beyond its borders. Historical city states such as Athens, Changan, Rome, Carthage, Venice became prosperous when they traded beyond their borders. Small countries such as Portugal, Spain, England, Holland roamed the world beyond their borders to become influential all over the globe. Recently small jurisdictions like Singapore, Hong Kong, South Korea, Switzerland have become respected economic world powers when they go beyond their borders. Many businesses that started out very modestly locally became big enterprises only when they went international.

For the benefit of Albertans Alberta needs to grow beyond its borders and go beyond its modest population. Let's look at public revenue development, for example. Alberta needs to go international, beyond our 3 million Albertans and 30 million Canadians. Let's obtain international revenues for Alberta. Our public institutions should be allowed and encouraged to look for revenues from international sources as our population is very modest and we want to maintain a low tax environment.

In general, a public strategy for dealing with continuous growth is to build extra or buffer capacity on top of the public capacity with private and international resources for the use of clients who pay. This extra capacity is turned over to our local public use as our public needs grow. It is a buffer we can count on for our tight public system, assuring our citizens that when they need it, it will be there. It is also the revenue earner for the public systems.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Week

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I join the Member for Calgary-Egmont in recognizing Education Week, which runs from April 25 to May 1. The theme this year is Public Education: The Learning Edge, which is especially fitting for Alberta public and separate schools who are learning to do more innovative programs with less funding.

Alberta teachers and principals have striven to respond to parents with new alternative programs to meet the needs of all children. In the process they have redefined public education. School boards have responded to a desire by communities to have local control over school resources in order to meet local needs by introducing school-based budgeting, which allows principals and parents to decide how resources should best be used in their own schools.

Competition from private schools in the late 1970s encouraged school boards to offer programs that were as good as those in private institutions. Plans entailed eliminating school boundaries, allowing students to attend any school in a district, offering alternative programs such as dynamic arts and athletics, and inviting independent schools to join school boards.

Alberta schools are not rigid cookie-cutter copies of one another. Parents and students have a wide selection of programming from which to choose thanks to the creativity and dedication of principals, teachers, school officials, parents, students, and the support of the Alberta public. In Alberta there are choices of modified school calendars, year-round schooling, and specialized programs such as academics, arts, or athletics.

During this Education Week we must take time to reflect on the value of a strong public education system not only to the young people it moulds into productive citizens but also to society as a whole. It's not good enough for Alberta children to have a right to an education. All Alberta children must have the right to an excellent public education.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that the following private bill proceed with amendments: Bill Pr. 4, Northwest Bible College Amendment Act, 2004. As part of this report I will be tabling five copies of the proposed amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I request the concurrence of the Assembly in these recommendations.

The Speaker: Shall I call the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Law Society of Alberta annual report 2003. The mission of the Law Society of Alberta is to serve and protect the public interest. They promote a high standard of legal service and professional conduct. I appreciate the work that the members of the Law Society do in the community and their commitment to providing excellent service. Their feedback is always valuable as we work together to achieve the best possible legal system for Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, many of us here sometimes indulge in humour with respect to lawyer jokes, but I like to take every opportunity that I can when speaking in public to thank members of the legal profession for the work that they do in our community organizations, not-for-profit organizations, and elsewhere on a pro bono, or free, basis to help improve our communities.

The Speaker: No other tablings?

The chair would like to table a letter he received at 11:30 this morning from the Opposition House Leader concerning certain events that occurred in the Assembly yesterday in conjunction with comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar during his tabling and a subsequent point of order raised by the Minister of Infrastructure. As well, I'm tabling a handwritten note from the Minister of Community Development respecting this matter.

Speaker's Ruling
Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: I would like to make some comments as well with respect to these events that occurred yesterday. I indicated a little earlier that I received at 11:30 a.m. a letter from the Opposition House Leader concerning certain events that occurred in the Assembly yesterday in connection with comments made by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar during his tabling and a subsequent point of order raised by the Minister of Infrastructure. Both the Government House Leader and the Minister of Community Development were copied on the letter sent earlier today. As this is the last tabling under this item of business, I want to make some comments about the contents of the letter.

The chair should explain that essentially the Official Opposition House Leader takes exception to the manner in which the point of order was raised and some comments by the Deputy Government House Leader. First, as hon. members who have been here for at least three years will know, certain things develop quickly in this place, and the atmosphere can become very, very heated at times. In the chair's view that was the case yesterday when the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar made some comments in connection with his tabling which carried on the exchange from question period. The Minister of Infrastructure took exception and raised a point of order, which was dealt with by the chair by essentially saying that there was no point of order.

During the discussion the Deputy Government House Leader made some comments which the chair did not hear as a result of certain activities in the House – not only did the chair not hear, certain table officers did not hear – but which were found on pages 1020 and 1021 of yesterday's Hansard. The Deputy Government House Leader said, "Will you stop for a second and shut up and listen, please." Clearly, this is unparliamentary, and the chair appreciates the fact that the Deputy Government House Leader has indicated an apology by way of a handwritten note that he said that he had provided to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a first-name basis.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader also indicated that he will have his comments withdrawn. How might that occur? We'll come to that in just a second. Then we'll call on the hon. Government House Leader to in fact withdraw those comments on behalf of the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Members must know that this chair is absolutely committed to preserving order and decorum in this Assembly, but the chair is also aware of the games that go on in this place. He has been here since 1979. He's observed nearly all of the games, not to suggest that there aren't some new ones being invented on a daily basis, but he has seen them. He's been victimized by some and has been perpetrator of some. As the chair noted yesterday and will repeat again today, tablings should just be tabled without comment. That started the whole incident. The chair has also said many times that members know that they can do better.

Speaker's Ruling
Oral Question Period Practices

The Speaker: Now, the chair has absolutely no difficulty standing up ad nauseam and intervening in the dealings of this Assembly, but he has also said on many, many occasions that in essence this would completely bring to a halt the question period in this Assembly. There must be an ebb and flow.

Today let me just give you three examples of when there could have been interventions and questions could have been ruled out. There was one on the third question that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona raised. After the first question the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said that there was a matter before the courts. Well, clearly, we know that if certain matters are before the courts, subject to certain interpretations of our sub judice rule, specifically Standing Order 23(g)(ii), those questions could just very easily have been ruled out, and they would not have been applicable, and they should not have been proceeded with.

Hon. members will know as well that Beauchesne 411(1) basically says that there's no provision in the question period for legal interpretations to be given by ministers themselves. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on several occasions asked the hon. Minister of Transportation to provide a legal interpretation with respect to a certain question. Well, those questions could have been ruled out, but under the wide-ranging guise of government policy they were let proceed.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder raised two questions. One, he wanted to know about airplane seats being 10 or 19. Subject to correction the chair is unaware of any law passed by the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta which will determine the number of seats that are applicable to aircraft in the province of Alberta. Neither is the chair aware that the province of Alberta owns the Edmonton City Centre Airport and has any jurisdiction whatsoever in terms of either of the two runways operating within the city of Edmonton at the City Centre Airport. Yet questions were raised; policy was presumably wide ranging.

There's an ebb and flow; there's a give and take. However, there is no great difficulty in the chair's purview of applying all the rules. It would make a very, very different Legislative Assembly. But subject to wide consultation of all 83 members, that will not occur in the interim.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you indicated, the Deputy Government House Leader, the Minister of Community Development, had provided a handwritten note, and in that handwritten note he indicates, in reference to the comment that he made, "However, it was also inappropriate" – I'll delete the part in brackets – "for me to use the words 'shut up'" and "I will have my comment withdrawn!" He specifically asked that I rise on his behalf, withdraw those comments and apologize for them.

Mr. Speaker, on my own initiative, not on behalf of the Minister of Community Development, I would just say that I can understand how one is tempted to make comments of that type because sometimes when you are speaking and there are interjections, it's really difficult to concentrate. That does not, however, in any way suggest that one should use words like "shut up" in this House, and the hon. minister has ask that I withdraw those remarks and apologize on his behalf.

The Speaker: Just one addendum to that. If all hon. members would read their own Standing Orders, Standing Order 13(4)(b), and ask themselves what it really means. When the chair has given a certain person recognition to speak, what does that mean for all other members?

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: We'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Solicitor General

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Order the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which anybody else may participate.

The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to present the Alberta Solicitor General business plan for 2004 to 2007. Before I begin, I would like to introduce members of my executive committee and senior officials who are attending the meeting with me today: the Deputy Solicitor General, Jim Nichols; Bob Dunster, my ADM of public security; Arnold Galet, ADM of correctional services; Dan Mercer, assistant deputy minister of strategic services; Don Mottershead, chief information officer and executive director of strategic management services; Shawkat Sabur, senior financial officer and executive director of financial services; Maureen Geres, my executive assistant; and Debbie Malloy, my special adviser.

Mr. Chairman, these people are incredibly dedicated to what they do. Their support over the last three years has made my job a lot . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. Solicitor General, just for the record, just for correction: you are presenting not only the business plans but also the estimates for 2004-2005.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes.

The Deputy Chair: You may proceed.

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, Mr. Chair. Thanks. I would be remiss if I didn't acknowledge all the staff that work in the Solicitor General area also. They do an unbelievable job in sometimes very difficult situations.

Mr. Chair, I'll open with a few remarks and then respond to any questions that might come up from the House. To the extent that either time does not permit or I'm unable to answer questions in sufficient detail, we'll certainly be prepared to respond in writing to any questions that were not addressed.

The Financial Management Commission recommended that the ministerial business plan and estimates address our strategic priorities rather than activities and operational manners. I'm sure you have noticed, along with other government ministries, that we have responded to this direction by developing a more strategically focused plan that reflects our priorities.

Our vision and mission statement remain unchanged. We have a vision of a province where Albertans feel safe in their homes and in their communities. The ministry works to achieve this vision through joint initiatives with community partners and through its participation in cross-ministry policy initiatives.

While we have not changed our core businesses, they have been aligned more closely with our goals. Under the core businesses of policing and crime prevention is goal 1, "ensure safe communities in Alberta," $179 million, 52 per cent of our budget. Under the core business of victims programs and services is goal 2, "provide services to victims and ensure that they have a more meaningful role in the criminal justice system," $12 million, 3 per cent of our budget. Under our third core business – custody, supervision, and rehabilitative opportunities for offenders – are goal 3, "facilitate the rehabilitation of offenders," and goal 4, "ensure secure and efficient custody, community supervision and transportation of offenders," $138.9 million, 40 per cent of our budget. Under the core business of security services is goal 5, "ensure the safety of Albertans by providing government security services and crisis management planning," $16.4 million, 5 per cent of our budget.

As I've already alluded to, our 2004-2007 ministry business plan outlines our strategic priorities for the next three years. These priorities rise from our environmental scanning process and from consultation with Albertans through three major reviews that we have undertaken over the past several years. Our seven strategic priorities for 2004-2007, the main drivers for action, include action on the MLA reviews, crime prevention, organized crime and terrorism, offender management, children and youth initiatives, aboriginal initiatives, and utilization of emerging technologies.

With regard to our strategic priority of taking action on all three MLA reviews, we recently released both the policing and corrections reviews, with the victims review coming in due course. For example, Mr. Chair, we recognize that towns and cities are experiencing serious financial problems in meeting their policing needs, so we are adding $58 million in extra funding to bolster policing services in the province, a 50 per cent increase in spending on policing programs. This boosts spending on policing programs to $174 million for 2004-2005. Likewise, as part of the response to the corrections review we are set to hire more probation officers, launch an electronic monitoring pilot project, and implement a smoking ban in adult jails.

In order to meet our financial targets back in 2002-2003, a significant part of the crime prevention and restorative justice program budgets were eliminated. I'm happy to say that crime prevention and restorative justice grants will be restored. My ministry will work towards addressing the strategic priority of crime prevention through continued community partnership, agreement with provincial crime prevention associations, and adjustments to crime prevention and restorative justice program funding.

Another one of our strategic priorities is organized crime and terrorism. If we are to maintain our safe communities, we must strengthen our police resources to bring these groups to justice.

Back in June 2003 Treasury Board provided funding to move forward with the implementation of the integrated response to organized crime and gang units in Alberta, commonly known as IROC. IROC is unique in that it will not replace any existing enforcement efforts. Instead, it will conduct investigations currently difficult to undertake because of the complexity of the scope.

This unit will be in addition to the continuing efforts of the Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta, CISA. The security and information management unit, SIM, developed under the 2002-05 business plan, will enhance security information, risk awareness, and develop and implement counterterrorism strategies. Together, IROC, CISA, and the SIM unit will go a long way towards addressing crime and terrorism.

We are working towards a number of initiatives that address the strategic priority of offender management. We are furthering the development of the youth justice committee program and working closely with other departments and agencies to divert individuals with mental illness away from the criminal justice system. We are also looking towards expanding the availability of domestic violence treatment programs, in addition to working with Children's Services to prepare a provincial-wide response to family violence.

In support of the strategic priority of children and youth initiatives we are preparing a strategy with law enforcement agencies and government departments to address all types of child exploitation, including child pornography, child prostitution, family abuse, and Internet crimes.

Another priority from my ministry as well as a cross-ministry priority initiative is the aboriginal policy initiative. In co-operation with the federal government and First Nations communities we are developing a strategy to enhance the effectiveness and efficiency of First Nations policing in this province.

For the strategic priority of utilization of emerging technology we are evaluating a project that we are involved in with Alberta Justice on the implementation of video conferencing for first appearances and setting final trial dates at the Edmonton Remand Centre and the Calgary Young Offender Centre. Video conferencing is intended to enhance the safety of the public, staff, witnesses, and the accused, because fewer prisoners need to be transported to and from court. If the pilot project is successful – and it does look like it is successful – we are looking towards implementation across the province.

As with the rest of our business plan over the past year we have also worked to enhance the strategic focus of our performance measures, attempting to move away from the operational or output measures. Our focus is now more on measuring the long-term outcomes of the goal. Several measures which have appeared in previous ministry business plans have been removed from this year's business plan in an attempt to enhance the strategic focus of this document. These include public satisfaction with police, number of victim service initiatives, and successful transportation of prisoners to court. Although all these measures have been removed from the business plan, we will continue monitoring our performance in these areas to ensure that we continue to provide satisfactory performance.

The 2004-2007 business plan financials, the financial content of our business plan, reflect Treasury Board's approval over the past year as well as federally funded programs and funds for continuing core programs and services. The Alberta Solicitor General's budget for 2004-2005 is $334.4 million. This is an increase of $62.6 million over last year's comparable forecast and $66.1 million over last year's comparable budget. This is almost a 25 per cent increase in program funding.

Overall spending on policing and crime prevention will increase by $61.2 million over the 2003-04 budget. We have heard the concerns from communities across the province. We have come to an agreement with the municipalities. Funding for supervision and rehabilitation of offenders has increased by $3.5 million and continues to account for roughly 40 per cent of our total budget. There is also increased funding of $0.9 million for protective services and counterterrorism operations.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my comments on the 2004-07 Solicitor General business plan and estimates. Our strategic business planning and budget decisions are all guided by and focused on making Albertans feel safe in their homes and their communities, and I'd be pleased to address any questions regarding the plan and will provide a written answer to any questions not fully covered today.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the minister for her opening comments and thanks and welcome as well to the staff that are joining us in the gallery.

I know that in the past I've been accused of speaking very quickly and giving a barrage of information, and I hadn't quite understood that until now. I didn't catch everything that the minister said. I did try and take notes, and I'll apologize in advance if I repeat something that in fact she has already provided information on.

I'm just going to give the minister an overview of the categories of issues that I'd like to discuss with her today. We have about two and a quarter hours. I'm hoping, unless there is participation from other members, after the initial discussion of performance measurements and core businesses, to do a give-and-take on much shorter exchanges so that we can get into the detail of specific categories, sort of three or four minutes from me and three or four minutes from the minister, if that's possible. It may not be, in which case we'll revert to the usual 20-minute style.

Essentially, the categories I'm discussing today – there are some questions and comments around performance measurements and core businesses; then some discussion around the remand centre, the corrections review, including the phone policy, the smoking policy, electronic monitoring, young offenders, private prisons, and alcohol-addiction treatment; then some discussion around victims of crime, going on to integrated organized crime, the sex offender registry, the MLA policing review, and Amber Alert.

I tried to slow down for the folks taking notes. I hope that's better.

I'll refer the minister to page 334 of the estimates book. Specifically referencing vote 2.2.1, crime prevention, in which there is an increase, it looks really impressive on the page. In fact, it comes out to $1.1 million. I'd like the minister to please provide some detail on what's included in that increase, if I could get a list of the programs that are going to be funded or expanded, allocations of money to each of those programs so that I have an idea of where that increase in money is going. So I'm really looking for an expansion of detail, and she may want to provide that in writing.

Also on page 334 of the estimates book, reference 2.2.2, provincial policing programs, there is an increase there. It looks like $19 million. Yes. Again I'm looking for a detailed breakdown there. This is where I'm assuming that the costs for additional protective wear, high-tech equipment, training of officers, that sort of thing is coming under. So not only the detail on what is anticipated in this increase but also what we're looking for for the rest of the '04-07 business cycle. I find the detail helpful to avoid misunderstandings, and the more detail the minister is able to give, the more I'm likely to understand the examples and the direction that the minister is going.

I'd now like to look at vote 2.2.4, policing assistance to municipalities. Now, this is a new amount of money. It's not showing up in previous budgets, and I'd like confirmation. I've heard various numbers tumbled about, and I'd like to get some confirmation, please, around this number. Is this reflecting the $16 million that was from the unconditional municipal grants through Municipal Affairs, that the $16 million came from that and is somehow rolled into additional money and shows up as the $37 million? It is a new entry into the budget line item, so I would like a breakout, please, of how that $37 million is arrived at and, specifically, if it includes the $16 million that previously was under the Municipal Affairs budget under unconditional municipal grants, which, in fact, is how policing was paid for in many municipalities prior to the changes introduced by the Solicitor General.

There's also a new reference, 2.2.5, special policing assistance. I would like a detailed breakdown of where that money is going. Where is it being allocated? Is there a formula? Can we look forward to that formula being in place for a number of years? Is it allocated to specific sizes of municipalities that are receiving it, or is this covering some of the special units that she discussed, like IROC? What exactly is it being used for? Again, it has not appeared in the budget previously. It is a new vote, and I would like the detailed breakdown on it.

Maybe I'll stop there, and let the minister answer that, unless she prefers to do it, because it is detailed, in writing. Then I'll go on to the Edmonton Remand Centre category.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Chairman, some of her questions are quite in depth, obviously. We'd be pleased to provide the answers to you in writing, hon. member. I could start with some and then provide you with some, but my staff, as I indicated earlier, is great and would be pleased to provide you with things in writing.

You are right in some of your questions that you've asked in regard to the reinstatement of crime prevention programs and what new initiatives are planned in the area of crime prevention. You know, if you recall several years ago, because you've been the critic, it was in our budget at one point in time. Then when we had to make some difficult decisions in our budget, it's one of the things that we had to let go. What we're planning on doing with the crime prevention is similar to what was done in the past. People with crime prevention initiatives that they feel are important to their community will apply, and it will be distributed on a grant basis.

3:10

Restorative justice is a philosophy that we believe focuses on understanding crime and acts against individuals. Again we're looking at restoring some sort of grant process where they can apply for restorative justice. It's something that we're currently working on. The community is excited about bringing back the grants. It's a decision that we made, and it's a good decision, and we hope that many of the communities that participate in regard to crime prevention and restorative justice are looking forward to the establishment back of those particular grants.

I'm like you. As you were talking very quickly, I was trying to grab some of your questions. Yes, we've got new money in policing, and we believe it's a substantial increase for policing. It's something that we've worked long and hard on. It's something, in consultation with the AUMA and the AAMD and C, that they came to an agreement with over 30 years. We knew that policing was a priority for every community in this province. The first thing we did was take the level from 2,500 and raise it to 5,000, and we're providing a grant of $16 per capita back to the community. That's a significant increase for a lot of communities in this province, and they're pleased with it.

I'm going to ask the hon. member to talk, and I'll continue to write and try and answer some of your questions. If I miss anything, please tell me till I get going here.

Ms Blakeman: Sure. Happy to oblige. I'm just picking up on one specific question on the comments that you've made. I'm assuming that this is under crime prevention, the 2.2.1 vote, and that's specific to the Edmonton restorative justice centre. I guess what I'm looking for is whether an agency like that would be in line for operating grants; in other words, if that's a sort of general administrative grant to help them run all of their programs or whether what's being contemplated is a project grant that organizations like that would have to apply for and would only be eligible for a small amount of funding to cover something very specific that they're offering. I'm urging the minister to consider the wider general funding of operational grants, but I'm interested to hear what the choice is that's been made there.

I think that there's a larger argument that I won't spend a lot of time on now. If we want these agencies to do this work and in some cases pick up programs and services the government used to provide, we need to be willing to provide them with stable, predictable long-term funding. Kind of lurching from project to project, year to year, and having to redesign everything that they're offering in order to fit into new project funding guidelines is certainly one way to use the administrator's time, but I think there are other good uses that could be put into delivering the programs. So I'll wait to see what the answer is on that one.

I'm going to go on and talk a bit now about the Edmonton Remand Centre. I have questioned the minister a couple of times in question period about the condition of the Edmonton Remand Centre, and I'd like to go more into detail about what the minister is considering addressing and how she plans on alleviating the situation that's been created there.

Just as a brief recap, we're now in a situation where people who have served time in the Remand Centre, which is essentially a holding facility – this is prior to court or during the court process; they have not been convicted of anything. Generally, if they are convicted, the judges will allocate two-for-one time. So for every one day served in the Remand Centre, they get credit for two days, and that is taken off their sentence. In at least one instance – I think there's only one at this point, but I could be wrong – the judge recently gave three-for-one time. So for every day served in the Remand Centre awaiting trial, that particular individual was credited with three days that were taken off their sentence to be served in a provincial correctional facility.

We certainly do have a problem with the Edmonton Remand Centre. I've heard the minister say: "Well, you know, nothing we can do about it. We don't create them. We just have to deal with them once they come out." But I respond equally that the minister is the minister responsible for this and has to deal with the conditions. Some of those conditions – they've been documented other places – have been described as Third World.

There's a significant problem with overcrowding, with the number of inmates. Sorry; inmates is the wrong word because that indicates that they've been convicted of something, and in fact they haven't. The number of people being held there is far above and beyond what the Edmonton Remand Centre was designed to handle. There are a lot of complaints and concerns around a lack of fresh air, complaints around poor food quality, complaints and a lot of concern around the lack of exercise. All of this usually can be explained by the fact that there are so many people in that facility, and it wasn't built to provide, you know, high-quality, hot food to the number of people that are currently in there. It was built to deal with considerably fewer people.

Some of the things that I'm being told by people that work in the field and who know enough that I will take their word for it is that inmates instruct their lawyers to plead guilty in order to get them out of the Remand Centre because they can't hack one more day, which I find appalling and also hard to believe. I don't know that if I were in a facility, I would be willing to barter away my freedom, but I think that also underlines to me how desperately people do not want to have to spend any more time in the Remand Centre if that's what they're considering.

I think that, if I may paraphrase the minister, there's been an indication from her that people don't end up in the Remand Centre if they're angels, that there's a reason why they're not released on their own recognizance, why they, in fact, are remanded to the Remand Centre. I think I have the minister saying: you know, they've got a previous conviction, or there's a reason for them being there.

But the Solicitor General, I'm sure, is aware that having a previous conviction does not mean that a given person is guilty this time. Really, the recidivism rates simply don't support that. We do tend to do that a lot. We've got that phrase about: well, round up the usual suspects. Well, fine. The police go out and they round up all the people that they know of that were convicted last time of something, but when we actually look at the recidivism rates, that simply is not supported. We still, ultimately, are in a society where we say that you are innocent until proven guilty.

Who tend to be the people who cannot meet the tests set by release on your own recognizance? Well, there are two tests there. One is that the person is a danger to themselves, and the second is that there's a likely failure to appear. What are some of the ways that they ascertain that failure to appear? Well, things like a current address. Do you have a stable home? Do you have a place to go to? If we can't find you, you're going to make us want to hold you in one place so we do know where you are. Okay. Well, another way is: do you have a job? Again, is there a place where we can go and find you when we need to find you if for some reason you have not appeared? Or do you have money? Money means that you can in fact set bail, and it'll be in your interest to show up and get your cash bond back.

Well, who are the people that are least likely to have a permanent home address or a job or ready cash? Those people are most likely to be homeless. In this society they're likely to be aboriginal, and quite often they are mentally ill. Those, in fact, are the people that we have in our Remand Centre in a lot of cases. Those are the ones that don't meet that test of permanent address, job, ready cash.

Yes, there are gang members in there, and we certainly just went through an episode where there were a lot of gang members in the Edmonton Remand Centre. But I'm questioning, given the overcrowding in those circumstances, whether we've really got the people in there that it was intended to have in there or whether in fact, without really paying attention, we've gone a long way down a road where we now look around and go, "Gee, that's not really who should be in there: the homeless, a disproportionate number of aboriginal people, and the mentally ill." We're using the Remand Centre as a shelter in that case but a very restrictive shelter and, given that these people are still innocent until proven guilty, quite unfair.

I'm looking to see what short-term action the minister is taking to alleviate the conditions at the Edmonton Remand Centre. I had asked her the questions in question period. I did bring forward suggestions that had been brought to me about moving some of the people that have been remanded there for a longer period of time to Fort Saskatchewan, to one of the closed wings there. If it was, you know, longer than a month or two that they were expected to be in, they could be housed there, or they could be taken there and bused back in or something like that.

But there are really two questions with this. What short-term action is the minister taking to alleviate the conditions that are actually there? Those are the ones that I'm talking about: Third World conditions, overcrowding, lack of fresh air, poor food quality, lack of exercise. What long-term action is the minister taking to alleviate the conditions at the Edmonton Remand Centre?

When I look at the budget, what I'm seeing is that there's about a 3 per cent increase to corrections overall, and that's appearing on page 335 of the estimates book. I'm assuming that the 3 per cent is not in there to cover changes to the Edmonton Remand Centre. Perhaps the minister can confirm, then, that there is no money to deal with this problem and that we can expect it to get worse. I guess that starts to involve the Minister of Justice, who I get to deal with tomorrow, about how he's going to start to handle even four-for-one time or, potentially, cases being thrown out, because there's an argument there that people have been treated cruelly.

A couple of other specific policies are coming out of the corrections review. Would the minister like me to stop so that she could respond to the Remand Centre or keep going?

Mrs. Forsyth: Whatever is easier for you is fine by me.

Ms Blakeman: I'll stop.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thanks, Mr. Chairman. The first thing the hon. member talked about was restorative justice. In response to the '99

Alberta Summit on Justice the department at the time under the Attorney General developed the community justice policy, that was based on restorative justice principles.

The policy aimed to make restorative justice processes more widely available in the province, if you remember.

With the recent provincial announcement of new and increased funding, the $1 million that we're looking at has been made available for crime prevention and restorative justice programming. The department is looking at renewing the community justice policy as a framework which will guide us in the allocation of new money for restorative justice. I know that doesn't exactly answer your question, because you mentioned I believe it was the Edmonton restorative justice centre, on operational. They're all things we're developing, but at this time I would have to say that it's probably all going to be on a grant basis. They'll have to apply for restorative justice grant funds that will be accessible, similar to what we had in the past. I believe that's the way we're going.

The member talked a lot about the Remand Centre and the overcrowding, and I appreciate that this is something that's dear to her heart. You know, I have to say to her that in the remand centres right across the country the populations are going up. So really it's nothing that's unique to Alberta and something that we have to deal with. I think that one of the things I clearly want to make sure that everybody understands – and I know the member understands – is that we do not send people to the remand centres. We have to deal with the people that are sent to us by the courts.

One of the recommendations that was in the corrections review was the establishment of a judiciary committee where you hear from the probation officers and things like that and try and establish maybe a working relationship with the judiciary and talk about some of the things that are concerned.

I know that she's brought it up to me in question period, and it's something, as I indicated a little earlier, that's dear to her heart, but again, you know, it's important to understand that we have to deal with the people that are sent to us in the remand. They are sent to us, and it's the courts that make that decision. So you can't put up a no vacancy sign – and I've said this in the House – but we try and deal with them as best we can with a very dignified, humane, as kind as we can policy.

We have reconfigured the interior of the building to make better use of the space we have. It's important that you understand that the population varies in the Remand Centre day to day, and what we're finding is that the average stay in the remand is approximately 13 days. We also have a special unit for those in long-term remand because of lengthy trials. They have single cells, and we've provided greater freedom.

I can tell you that the number one priority for corrections is a new remand centre, but that doesn't necessarily mean that it's a number one priority for Albertans. I want to be cautious on some of my answers, because as you're well aware, we're dealing with this in front of the courts. But Albertans have continually told us over and over again that their priorities are a new hospital, schools. I can tell you that the priority in my riding is a hospital in the deep southeast, where the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw and I live. It certainly, unfortunately, isn't a new remand centre.

We have been also dealing with considering how we can deal with this and long-term options, and one of the things that we're trying to do is that remanded offenders who are sentenced but facing other charges are sent to the Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre. They're carefully selected when they're sent there, and they're low risk. We certainly can't jeopardize public security by putting maximum security remanded offenders in there, because it's not designed to do that.

We're doing the best we can to accommodate the people that we're dealing with and that are sent there. As I explained to you earlier, the population changes day by day, and we have tried to reconfigure the Remand Centre and tried to deal with some of our people at Fort Saskatchewan in some of the empty units. I know that you've asked me that in the past.

I'll let you continue.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Just a couple of follow-ups, responding to the minister's comments on the Remand Centre.

Yes, I understand that the issue around overcrowding in remand centres is taking place across the country. Nonetheless, I'm looking to the minister for her plans on what's going to happen in Alberta. Yes, she doesn't send people to the Remand Centre, but what I think and what I'm sensing is that there is a concern over public safety. People wouldn't like to see cases punted out of court or people with significantly reduced sentences, once they've been sentenced, because of the conditions that are in place based on choices that this government has made.

3:30

What is the horizon on a new remand centre? Obviously, the minister has thought about it. What is the horizon we're looking at? Are we looking at five years? Are we looking at 10 years? Are we looking at 25 years? I think this needs to become part of the public discussion if we are at the point where courts are making decisions about time served. The onus is on this minister to be making those decisions. So I'm going to put that question back on the table.

Out of the corrections review – I'm pretty sure it's the corrections review. There was a change in the phone policy in which there's a $1.85 charge now being charged against the recipient of phone calls made from people in provincial facilities. I could be wrong here. It could be out of the Remand Centre. I'm wondering what the rationale was behind that. What I see happening here is that there is a definitive bias against those people that are incarcerated or remanded that have less resources or with families that have less resources.

Essentially, for anybody that's poor in this day and age getting a phone is darn tough to do because the phone companies now require a fairly significant deposit, whether you've got a history with them or not. You can have a perfect history and still be levied a $300 to $500 sign-up fee, a deposit to get a phone. In many cases working low-income or poor families don't in fact have phones. They often have those pay-as-you-go cell phones. They use it for those emergency phone calls, and that's all they use it for. But my understanding is that this policy specifically prohibits calls to cell phones.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Has the minister now set up a policy where someone that has been remanded or incarcerated in fact could not contact their family if the family doesn't have a regular phone, if all they have is a pay-as-you-go cell phone? I'm assuming – but I'm looking for clarification from the minister – that that was not what she was trying to accomplish. But that is, it appears, what in fact is the outcome. Is there any anticipation of changes to that?

I understand that the point of this was to stop harassing phone calls and stalking phone calls, and frankly I don't like getting those phone calls from the Remand Centre at 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning or 10 o'clock on a Friday night from somebody that's been remanded there and because I'm the Justice critic, they're going to phone me and think I'm going to get them out of jail. I don't like those phone calls either. Okay? But I think that what we've done here is cut off someone's nose to spite their face. When we're looking for the conditions that help people not offend or help them exhibit good behaviour, strong role modelling, one of those things is support of family, and if we cut them off from family, how are we accomplishing that?

I'm moving on here to the no-smoking policy. I would like the minister to detail, please – and, again, she may want to provide me with written material here, particularly if a policy does exist – how the no-smoking policy is going to be implemented. I'm looking for: what is the phase-in time? Is there a target date that's set, and then six months in advance programs start to kick in and notices and group sessions and availability of smoking cessation programs and encouragement of people that are remanded or incarcerated to take advantage of that? What's the anticipated rollout of this program?

I'd also be interested in how the minister plans to deal with an anticipated black market in cigarettes. Having quit smoking and recognizing myself as a lifelong recovering addict to nicotine, I understand how addictive nicotine is. It's more addictive than heroin, and I understand what that does to people. And, by the way, I approve. I've been pushing for a no-smoking policy in all provincial buildings, and I think they need to be the same, and the prisons are one of the places that it needs to happen. So no misunderstandings here that I'm saying that this shouldn't be instituted. It should.

What I'm looking for is: how's it going to roll out? Two, how's the minister planning on dealing with a black market? Once there's this supply and demand – and that works even inside prisons and remand centres. Once you can't have it any more, everybody wants it and they want to pay more for it. So a $10 pack of cigarettes will likely be in the hundred dollar range. What's in place or planned to deal with that black market? What's in place or planned in helping or anticipating those addicts that are going to look for alternatives? And they will be looking for those alternatives. I'm back to reminding you about being more addictive than heroin.

Finally, as the minister mentioned, most of the people that are incarcerated in provincial facilities are in there for 13 days. Frankly, some smokers might be able to just make it through in the 13 days and they're out. But how is that being worked in? How is the fact of what the average length of stay is being worked in with the no-smoking policy and rolling out, one presumes, smoking cessation.

I'm going to go on to electronic monitoring, which was also included under the corrections review. I'd like to hear from the minister: what is the goal? What is the minister trying to achieve that she is using electronic monitoring to achieve?

I would argue that if the goal is to protect the public, then the only thing we have that is provable repeatedly in protecting the public is effective treatment programs for people that are on probation or parole situations. That is the only thing that has been proven over time to be effective. Electronic monitoring does nothing to protect public safety, absolutely nothing. It just tells you where the bracelet is, and the jury is definitely out on the success of this program.

So I'm curious as to what the ministry was looking at: what studies, what reviews, what literature reviews, what cost-benefit analysis? What were you looking at that brought you to a decision that you wanted to pursue this? Why do I not see with equal vigour treatment programs that include things like job skills, literacy, other treatment programs that we know reduce recidivism? You know, if somebody can get a job and have a decent life and a paycheque, that's easier than committing crime and being incarcerated. And literacy is a huge part of that, and numeracy goes along with it, of course, and other programs that help people to literally get on their feet.

On the one hand, the government has got this Alberta Works, and we're going to give people a hand up and not a handout and the other rhetoric that they use there, but I don't see that reflected in the choices that are being made in the Solicitor General's department. So I'm interested in the policy discussion that points staff members and the minister toward implementation of programs like electronic monitoring versus implementation of treatment programs around literacy, job skills, and that sort of thing.

I'll pause now and allow the minister to offer comment on my last question on the remand centre and on the corrections review phone policy, smoking policy, and electronic monitoring.

Thank you.

3:40

The Acting Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Chair. The hon. member started talking, first of all, about phones. We currently have phones in our correctional facilities, and one of the recommendations in regard to the correction review was to expand those phones, and we are doing that. We had tenders close in December, and we're moving forward to a fully integrated system expected to be in place by the summer.

I think it's important, first of all, to understand that there are no charges – no charges – for calls to the lawyer, the Ombudsman, agencies such as the John Howard Society, Elizabeth Fry Society, and so on. You are correct; there is a $1.85 charge per call. We are well aware of the cell phones that don't accept these charges of $1.85, and we've thought a great deal about that. But we also believe that if someone is in the Remand Centre and they need to talk to their family, then, you know, they can make some arrangements for that call to take place, whether it's at a friend's house or whatever they can.

On the charges themselves if we have somebody – and you referred to that – that doesn't have the money to be able to accept the call, we certainly will make arrangements for those individuals and have no problem making those particular arrangements for those individuals that, you know, feel that their family on the other end can't afford the call, et cetera. I mean, we're not going to cut them off from the world, for goodness' sake.

The no-smoking policy that you referred to and you've indicated you support is something we've been watching for some time now. It was another recommendation from the correction review. We've been watching what's been happening around the country and how they've been dealing with no smoking, and so far this has been fairly successful. We hope to implement this policy by the end of September. People will be well aware that the correctional facilities in this province and the Remand Centre are smoke-free. We think it's important.

One of the things we've noticed by watching what's going on around other jurisdictions and what they have told us is the fact that it was important to give ample notice. So we were going to do that. We will move into that on September 30. That will be the roll-out. There'll be good notification for everybody that the facilities are going to be smoke-free.

The black market cigarettes is in my mind no different than what we try and deal with in our centres on drugs. We've got wonderful correction officers that do an incredible job in this province on a daily basis, and they'll be monitoring the black market cigarettes. The AUPE supports this initiative, so the correction officers that work in the facilities are well aware of some of the issues that they're going to have to face.

Yes, we're looking at smoking cessation. You asked about that. One of the things that we had found in one of the jurisdictions – I'm sorry; I'm not exactly sure – is that popcorn was working really well, believe it or not, so they were providing popcorn. That surprised me, but that's one of the things that they found. Yes, we're definitely looking at smoking cessation, to provide our offenders with that.

You're right. It's a terrible, terrible addiction, and it's something that we're going to take time to put into effect and be able to make sure that it rolls out, as you say, fairly smoothly so that people know when they are coming into our facilities that they're smoke-free. Again, I want to emphasize the fact that we've monitored what's happened across the country.

The last thing you talked about was electronic monitoring and why we're doing that. Again, one of the recommendations that is contained in the correction review that was done by three of our members, who did a remarkable job and looked a lot at what was happening across the country within the correctional facilities – and, yes, again we're looking at a pilot project. Which way we go is yet to be determined. But I said, again, it's going to be a pilot project. We want to have a pilot project to see if it's successful or not.

The offenders that are subject to electronic monitoring are those sentenced by the court who will be serving their sentences in the community, and as such they've already been determined to not pose a risk to the public. I think the advantage of the electronic monitoring is that the technology provides an immediate notification if an offender fails to comply with their curfew by leaving their residence, and this also provides solid evidence for the probation officers to use in proceeding with violations against that particular offender. Once it's been determined that the offender has breached a condition of the court order, then the police have the authority to arrest and detain that particular offender.

We have been talking to British Columbia and will continue to talk to them because they have electronic monitoring in their province, and I think it's a good idea to always talk to your neighbours or people and see if they think they're effective and if they're worthwhile and if they're useful. I want to emphasize again that it's a pilot project. It's not going provincial. We want to see if it's working. If it works, great. If it doesn't, then, you know, we'll have to look at something else.

Thanks.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you to the minister for those responses.

With the electronic monitoring pilot project I understand that it's a pilot project; I understand that you're going to monitor it. I am still interested in what background you considered or looked at or reviewed – studies, reports, literature reviews, cost-benefit analyses, whatever – that brought you to this point where you thought you might do this. I understand that you've spoken to people in B.C., and if that was what you did and all you did, fine. Let me know that. Otherwise, I'm interested in knowing what those reports and studies were, and I'd love to get a copy of what you were looking at that pointed you in that direction.

Before I move off corrections, once again I will ask the minister if she has any plans to institute harm reduction strategies in provincial facilities, because this is a protection for the staff and a protection for the individuals. It's been noted before that the likelihood is that they are incarcerated for 13 days or less, and we are still running the likelihood or the opportunity to be infecting people who will have served their time and be out in two weeks. We run the risk of infecting them with hep C or worse because there are no harm reduction strategies in our provincial facilities.

So I will ask the minister again and I'll probably continue to ask the minister as long as I'm the critic on regular interviews how she's planning on addressing this. I know that she searches for drugs more often, and I know that she has made punishment for people that smuggle drugs in and use drugs well known in the system. Fine, but I am looking at the other side of that coin, which is around harm reduction strategies.

I'm looking at moving on to young offenders. When I look at strategic priority 5 appearing on page 387 of the business plan, it's noting:

Children and Youth Initiatives. Youth are our future and we are working to protect them from becoming victims of crime, holding them appropriately accountable when they commit a crime, encouraging and facilitating rehabilitation, as well as preventing future offending.

This links to goals 1, 2, 3, and 4.

I am curious what the thought process was, what the decision-making/policy-making process was that led the Solicitor General to the changes in closing the young offender centres in Medicine Hat and Red Deer for a couple of reasons. We now move the young person further away from their support systems, given what we've got about the $1.85 charge and if they don't have the wherewithal to insist that their legal aid lawyer get in touch with the family and tell the family to go down the street to the neighbour's place at such and such a time, at such and such a place so that the kid can phone them and the neighbour or friend can accept the $1.85 charge. I am curious about why these decisions were made, because other facilities, in fact, were less well used, like the alcoholic treatment camp. It was kept over, but this was closed.

The second issue that's been raised with me around this is around officers' time and transport to move a young – I don't know that they'd be a young offender at that point – person charged with a crime. If they can't hold them in Red Deer, for example, because that facility is now closed, then they're going to have to be transported to Edmonton.

So it's 11 o'clock on a Friday night. You've got a young person that you've picked up. You think there's a problem here. They're going to be charged with some kind of crime, and you can't hold them in Red Deer. So what are we going to do? Well, you're going to have to transport them to Edmonton or Calgary, one presumes. I don't know if policies allow you to put that young person in a squad car with one officer or whether you need two officers, so potentially you've got one or two officers and a car now spending a round trip driving time of three hours to move that young person to either Edmonton or Calgary.

Not that I would ever believe that police would be anything else than absolutely rigorous in enforcement, but even I can look at that and go: hmm. What's the officer going to do? Go back to their supervisor and say: "Gee, Supe, sorry; the rest of my shift I'm gone; I'm busy because I'm going to drive this kid to Edmonton, book him in there, turn around, and drive back; booking time and everything included, probably looking at five hours, so my shift is done; see ya; I'm on the road"?

I'm wondering if we aren't setting ourselves up for a position where, oops, we just look the other way as soon as we realize the age, that they're under 18, and that we would have to spend this amount of time and resources. So I'm wondering: what was the logic behind that decision? How much money are we saving by closing that centre versus the amount of money we're going to have to spend sending that police car and gas, frankly, and wear and tear on the vehicle, and the officers' time, whether it's one or two officers, to ship him off to Edmonton or Calgary, plus the booking time, and lose them out of performing their duties in Red Deer or surrounding area. The logic in this is escaping me, so I'm looking for the details of how this particular idea was arrived at.

Also as part of the corrections review I note that there's been no definitive answer coming from the department around private prisons. There's a sort of: well, we'll continue to monitor this and think about it; it might be possible. I'm interested why there is not a definitive answer: no, we're not going to go there.

Without exception everything I've looked at around private prison use in the United States and other countries has been not a happy situation, where we end up with, you know, delays in reporting escapes to the local community, recidivism rates, more complaints, more court cases around their treatment, et cetera. It's just not worked. I'm wondering why the minister keeps leaving the door open on that one, keeps leaving the back gate open, saying: well, you know, we're going to continue to look at it or monitor it or consider it. Why can't the minister just go: "No, we're not going there. For sure we're not going there in what this business plan covers to 2007"? What is the interest? What is the draw? What studies is she looking at that tell her that she wants to keep that door open to be able to move to private prisons?

At the same time, we see a discussion around provision of private security services, which is kind of a stepping stone for some people. Privatization of police and security and public safety services is how that all gets rolled in in some people's minds. So I'm just continuing to be really curious about why, when there's been I think fairly clear direction from the public that they don't want this, this government continues to consider it and to leave the door open. So what's she looking at that I'm not looking at? If she is looking at something specific, could I get a copy, please?

I'd like to move on and talk about the victims of crime fund. Now, it is referenced on page 337 and 338 of the estimates, and what I'm starting to piece together from this – and the minister, I'm sure, will tell me if I'm misreading this or misunderstanding it. This fund is designed to give grants to various victims' services programs and also to offer financial compensation to victims and to help with expenses related to judicial operations that could be incurred by victims. There's a 15 per cent surcharge that is levied on fines against people that have been convicted, and the money collected from this goes into the fund. I actually was at the launching of the original fund when I was with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues. I think this fund is configured slightly differently, but I do remember the intentions behind the first one. The victims of crime fund also seems to have some sort of joint federal/provincial part to it.

When I look at this year's estimates, there appears to be a surplus that's being expected of around $6 million. There's also a forecast surplus from last year of around $6 million, and the year before that, in 2002-2003, there was a surplus of $3.8 million. So there is money accumulating in this account, and it's accumulating year after year. Now, the accumulated surplus doesn't show up in the books that I'm looking at, in the estimates books, for example. So, one, I'd like confirmation that there are these surpluses accumulating and that I have the numbers right. What I have is $6.2 million surplus this year, $6.16 million from last year, and in '02-03, $3.8 million.

I want to know where these surpluses are going. Are they going back into general revenue? Are they being directed to some other program? Are they part of the money for some of the other funds that we've discussed here that are new funds, crime prevention or something like that? See, I'm remembering that original one, and with the original version that money sat there. It sat in that fund for victims of crime.

I am very interested in this because I know that the Member for Calgary-Shaw under the direction of the Solicitor General did a consultation on the victims of crime fund, and I know that there were recommendations that came from it. I don't know what the recommendations are because they haven't been released.

Once again, the water torture method of releasing information is the favourite method of this particular Solicitor General. It took two years to get the MLA review of the Police Act out. It took almost two years to get the corrections review. I'm wondering how long it's going to take us to get the victims of crime fund.

Now, I think there are 35 or 38 recommendations that came out of the victims of crime fund consultation. I'm wondering: if there's a surplus sitting there and if you add the $3.8 million, the $6.16 million, and the $6.2 million, we've got $16.16 million sitting in a surplus fund there, if it is in fact sitting in a surplus fund and hasn't gone back into general revenue. I don't think you can do that legally because that money was levied on fines and has to be used for what it was collected for. So it must be sitting there somewhere, but the minister can confirm that with me.

So we've got recommendations that are made by Calgary-Shaw. We don't know what they are. There are some 16 million dollars that are sitting in a fund. Now, why are we not seeing that $16 million used to implement the 35 recommendations? If we are, then what's the delay?

I, off the top of my head, can't remember when the victims of crime consultation was done, but I think it's been at least a year now. We have organizations out there that could really use this money, and I'm going to talk about one of the sectors that could really use some of this money. Why is it being sat on? Why is there a delay in implementing this? What is it that we're waiting for or studying or doing a cost-benefit analysis on before this money is released when we have organizations and individuals that I'm sure can make use of it? I'm just interested in what the policy is that's being developed that would hold this money for an extended period of time.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

I'm going to reference page 16 of the minister's annual report, the most recent one that's available. When I reference information that's available in that annual report and I look at what's available in the business plan and in the estimates, some interesting things start to come up. This is basically a discussion around performance measurements. On page 16 of the annual report we've got the goal to "facilitate the rehabilitation of offenders," and a number of measures and targets and results appear. When I look at page 388 of the business plan, the goals from the previous year are not carried forward, but we are getting a reduction in the target. I'm curious about that.

Percentage of cases of adult probation sentences successfully completed did not meet the targets set at 70 per cent in the '02-03 year. The actual result was 66 per cent. When we look at that carried forward . . . I'll use another example. On page 388 we've got the one about people feeling that they're safe walking alone at night in their neighbourhood. Now, when you look at the annual report, the target there was 80 per cent, and 77 per cent of the people felt they were comfortable. When I look at the target carried forward in the business plan '04-07, the target has gone to 82 per cent. That's good. So we're expecting that one to go up. It stays flat at 82 per cent.

Now, the other one. When we look at the "outcome of correctional sanctions: successful completion of adult probation" and the percentage of "offenders involved in work, education, treatment or life management programs,” that one was at 90 per cent and the number of hours of community service was at a million. When I look at what’s appearing on page 390, the supervision cases that were successful was at 66 per cent. The target for this year is being dropped from 70 per cent to 65 per cent, and I’m wondering why the minister is dropping the target.

The target percentage of offenders “involved in work, education, treatment or life management programs” was 90 per cent in ’02-03. The target for ’04-05 is 80 per cent, 10 per cent less. What’s leading to a 10 per cent reduction in the target? And it stays flat at that 80 per cent.

When I look at the target number of hours of community service at a million, offenders actually completed a total of 827,900 – I’m going to round up there – hours of work. But we’ve now got the target dropping from a million to 825,000. These are the targets that the minister kept, and I know that there were targets that were jettisoned, so I’m just curious about why there’s such a downgrading of expectations for performance in the ministry. It looks like things are being reduced so that they’re easier to achieve. That’s what it looks like, but I’m sure the minister can tell me why those choices were made.

The references for that last discussion are page 16 of the annual report ’02-03 and reference back to page 390 of the business plan and 388 matching with 15.

Now, page 385 of the business plan, Significant Opportunities and Challenges. There are special challenges presented by the use of the Internet for criminal . . . [Ms Blakeman’s speaking time expired] Oh, I’m going to have to let the minister respond.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, just for your information the one hour that was allocated has passed quite some time ago, so if anybody else wishes to participate, the chair will recognize those individuals.

The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chair. We’ve had a lot of questions thrown at us for the last 20 minutes, so I’ll endeavour to answer what I can and again my commitment to obviously get you some answers in writing.

The first thing that the hon. member talked about was her harm reduction strategies, and I think she said that she will continue to talk about harm reduction strategies. I guess, for me, I have to understand what she considers harm reduction strategies. If I recall some questions during question period some time ago about a needle exchange program and bleach – I’m on that kind of same track – I have to again emphasize that we don’t support drugs in jail and we are concerned about the safety of our corrections officers, and I’m not going to change my mind on this. My number one priority is my correction officers and their safety.

What we try to focus on is education, prevention, and withdrawal of the drugs. Every offender that comes into our facility is assessed for their unique needs when they are admitted. It’s sad, but it’s true that most of the offenders that come into our facility have an addiction one way or another, whether it’s drugs or whether it’s smoking or whether it’s alcohol, so we try and provide programs to help them.

We offer several different programs. It can be a core addiction awareness program that’s available in our correctional facilities. Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous, life management programs are offered, and we’ve got a New Dawn program for First Nations offenders offered at our Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Centre. We provide awareness programs that address unique needs of impaired drivers and First Nations offenders. And we’ve got the Alsike centre that you alluded to some time ago, wondering why it had not been closed, but it’s something that’s very, very successful. The other thing that I’d like to mention is that offenders who are on medically supervised methadone programs upon admission are kept on that program under medical supervision. They are maintained on that program while they are in our facilities.

We have done our utmost to keep drugs out of jail, and it starts with the Corrections Amendment Act and some legislation and dealing with that in providing our facilities drug-free. We announced a little while ago about our drug dog. It’s a problem. It’s something that needs to be addressed. Utopia would be a drug-free jail, but we don’t tolerate drugs in our jail. Yet we try and help the people who are in our facilities deal with their drug addictions.

I want to emphasize again that my number one priority is the protection of my correction officers. I need to make sure that they’re safe at all times when they’re at our facilities. So starting a needle exchange program isn’t going to happen while I’m the minister responsible.

You talked for some time about our closing our centres. You referred to, actually, Medicine Hat Young Offender Centre, Red Deer, and we’ve also made a decision to close the Lethbridge Young Offender Centre. Difficult decisions; very difficult decisions.

You alluded to some smart remark about the minister taking her time on her reports. Well, I’m going to tell you that this minister takes that time to make sure that she’s doing the right thing and to make sure that she has the funding available to be able to do these. You know, you have hard-working MLAs that go out. They work their little hearts and souls out in regard to a review, come back, and they provide you with all sorts of recommendations. Well, with those recommendations come expectations, and with those expectations usually comes money.

So, yes, the corrections report was a two-year process. I wouldn’t say that I sat on it. I would say that I was monitoring all along some of the recommendations that were made in that report. That goes to the closure of Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, Red Deer young offender centres, work camps.

I can tell you that this province and many, many other provinces across this country and our Attorney General and Minister of Justice have been advocating since even before I arrived on the scene about the huge number of conditional sentences we’re dealing with in this province and the huge number of intermittent sentences we’re doing in this province. If you do not have the offenders in the facility, then why keep the facility open? I mean, we’re talking five, four, six. While I appreciate that a young person should be near their family, we have many, many offenders in this province that, whether they’re in Lloydminster or Peace River, their family has to travel. We have to do what we can to look at what’s happening generally across this country.

You know, the unfortunate thing is that when we looked at closing the work camps, we had feedback about that and the wonderful job that the offenders did at these work camps. No question; absolutely no question. That goes to the community service hours that you talked about when you said: you had one million; now you have 827,000. Well, unfortunately I don’t have the minimum offenders to be able to do all of those community services hours. I think we’ve accomplished a huge amount of community services hours.

I was driving home a couple of weeks ago from a function, and the offenders were out on Deerfoot cleaning it up. So we’re trying to accommodate, when we have the ability, to have offenders working out in the community. They like to do that. The public likes to see them do that. They do a remarkable job.

You talked about private prisons and why I won't just close the door. Well, I guess it's always nice to watch what's happening. The corrections committee went down, and they looked at the private facilities that are in Ontario, and they didn't say privatize. What I believe they said – and I don't have the report in front of me – was to monitor on a continuing basis.

You know, I may be wrong, but it's always okay to watch what's happening across the country. It's okay to watch what other provinces are doing. It's okay to monitor and see what they're doing. If you're asking if I'm going to privatization of prisons tomorrow, no, but I'm going to monitor and see what other jurisdictions are doing. You know, it never hurts to keep the door open and watch what's happening. I think it's important.

You alluded to the fact that you've never seen anything good happen in regard to private prisons. I don't disagree with you, but it doesn't hurt to continue to watch and see what's happening, as I explained. Will I privatize tomorrow? No. But I think it's something where you learn from what other people are doing. You learn from their experiences. You learn if it's working or if it's not working. The corrections review committee, I believe, in their report said to watch what's happening.

You talked a lot about the victims of crime fund, and I think it's important first of all for me to make it very clear that victims are a priority for this government. I think it's important for Albertans or anyone who reads Hansard to know that the funding for victims of crime comes from a portion of fine revenue, and you understand that. That means that how much is going into the victims of crime fund is unknown every year, and it depends on how much and how large the fines are on a yearly basis.

Will every dollar we receive go to victims? Absolutely. Yes. Every dollar that we receive goes to victims. Will we distribute every year the same amount that we received during that year? No. It's simply because fine revenues are unpredictable. We hold back a portion so that we'll have stable funding for next year, and I think that's good financial management.

When we look back over the last four or five years, the number of victims receiving financial awards has increased almost every year. I think that's good but sad in some way, because when you see that we're increasing the funding every year for victims, it means that we still have victims. But we will continue to support the victims of this province, and the number of victim programs that we support, I must say, has also increased every year.

You alluded to the victims of crime consultation, and I've said that we'll respond to that report. One of the things that I want to do and I'm waiting to do is our involvement on family violence on I believe it's May 7. I want to listen to what they have to say. I know from reading Hansard that you brought up about the sexual assault centres, which was good, and the co-ordination. By listening about family violence and going to hear what the people say and spending the day listening to what they have to say, what the round-table has to say, there might be some relevant discussion around that.

I think that one of our priorities on victims is to establish a 10-year strategic direction for victims' programs and services – you will like that – and to ensure that, obviously, the victims have a meaningful role in the criminal justice system, and it's a priority.

I want to assure you that the victims of crime fund is a regulated fund and is separate from the government's core voted budget, and all of the monies or funds are dedicated to victim programs and services. The money that is in that particular program is not diverted to any other programs.

The one last thing I want to say is that as a result of the increased fund for policing, law enforcement is going to be stepped up, and hopefully we'll have fewer victims, and I think that's a good thing.

To see fewer people applying for funds means that we're dealing with them, that fewer things are happening to them. I don't know, hon. member, if that will ever happen. I guess that if you don't have victims, then you certainly don't have crime, and that would be something that I think is important.

I will let you or the other hon. members continue with your questions.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have a very simple question for the hon. minister, and I know it's certainly something that she is concerned about. It has to do with the drug detection issues that she was mentioning. One of the things that apparently happened today, in watching the news, was that a truck of anhydrous ammonia was stolen. One of the issues about anhydrous ammonia is that certainly it can lead to things such as explosions.

One of the other very important uses of anhydrous ammonia, though, is in the making of crystal meth, and anhydrous ammonia combined with lithium is one of the ways that crystal meth is manufactured. I'd like the hon. minister's comment on the whole manufacturing of crystal meth and whether or not she feels that this potentially could be a severe problem, considering that an amount of anhydrous ammonia was stolen, and how in direct relation to her budget something like this would impact her budget.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, the minister has brought something up that we've been monitoring for a bit. We're well aware of the theft of the tanker truck, and we're well aware of the contents of the truck, of what's involved, and he referred to the ammonia. Yes, he's correct. It's one of the main ingredients in meth, and it's one of the things that we're concerned about, and that means meth, period.

Alberta has taken the lead in how it's dealing with meth in this province. I had the honour to be able to go to the States on sort of a three-day trip to several states on how they're dealing with meth, and they've acknowledged that Alberta has taken the lead on this to try and get in front of the problem instead of behind.

We have been very vigilant on the stolen truck that the minister alluded to. Our SIM unit is watching it very carefully. We're working very closely with the RCMP. We're well aware of what it can be used for. It also is fertilizer, obviously, for fertilizing farmers' fields. It's something that we're watching and have been keeping very close contact on with the SIM unit and our RCMP.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I just wanted to go back very quickly to something I heard the minister say that's puzzling me, and this is around the surpluses in the victims of crime fund. She seemed to be saying that we could be having fewer victims and fewer crimes and less money going in there.

There are two issues that arise. When I look at the comparables that are supplied on page 338 of the estimates, in fact in '02-03 the revenue for the victims of crime fund was $13,700,000. The actual forecast for that in '03-04 is going to be $18 million and the estimates for '04-05 at $18,105,000. So there's certainly an expectation of increasing amounts of money going in here.

When I looked at the minister's explanation around the surplus building, she seemed to be saying: well, there's a holdback because we get differing amounts of money every year.

Mrs. Forsyth: Crimes are unpredictable.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'm just looking at a fairly regular increase in the amount of revenue. Even if you wanted to say, "Well, okay; let's get as close as we can, and we'll commit to spending $13 million" – that was from almost two years ago now – "and let's keep it at that," that's still not going to account for what's being done in this budget. You've got revenue coming in of $18,105,000. You are expecting to expend $11,870,000. You're creating a surplus of $6.2 million. That's almost 50 per cent of what you're spending. That's way more than a sustainability fund, way more, and you've now done that for three years running.

So you're socking away a lot of bucks under the mattress here, Minister, that really need to be spent in assisting all of these groups out there. I don't understand the argument that's put forward by the minister that somehow there needs to be an almost 50 per cent holdback to account for a variation in the money that's being received as revenue into this account. Obviously, it's not a variation. It continues to increase, but I'm not seeing a corresponding increase in the money going out. So that explanation didn't make sense.

As well, if the minister is now waiting for the family violence round-table on May 7, can she not give us some indication that's a little narrower window about when we can expect to see the victims of crime fund consultation report released? Please, let's be reasonable. I think we're a year out now. Can we not get some kind of indication? Would it be fall? Could it be before November, before December? Something. She must know what is being anticipated. The recommendations are in. Even I know there are 30 some odd of them. We've talked about the amount of money that's available here. I hear her saying that we want to be careful, but how careful? You've had an awful lot of time to consider this. Can you not give us some window of expectation about when that would be out?

My thanks to my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona for allowing me to leap in and just get that little bit on the record.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and provide some relief to my hard-working colleague from Edmonton-Centre, who's been on her feet for a considerable time.

I have some general observations to start with as we move along in our discussion and debate on the estimates for the Solicitor General's department. In looking, Mr. Chairman, at the business plan for the ministry and looking in particular at page 387, under Strategies, 1.1, the first item is of course to "implement a Policing Strategy incorporating the approved recommendations of the MLA Policing Review Committee Report." There are four bullets under this. I'd like the minister to perhaps comment on how these four bullets, these four strategies or action plans, if you wish, are reflected in the 2004-2005 budget.

One particular item here – it may not have a direct relationship to the budgetary allocations, but the minister might want to comment on it – is: "Promotes citizen oversight of policing in Alberta." Clearly, the minister accepts this issue in principle. Yet when I look at the news release from the minister's department dated I believe it's March 26, she has turned down the one important recommendation of the committee on policing, which has to do with the committee's recommendation for an Alberta policing secretariat to investigate complaints and oversee police services and police commissions. While the minister accepts the need for enhanced civilian oversight of police services, she has rejected the specific recommendation of the committee regarding the establishment of the Alberta policing secretariat to investigate those complaints against police.

So my question to the minister is: what alternative does she have in mind? She does agree with the principle, yet the mechanism proposed is something that she has rejected. What specific alternative plans does she have with respect to making sure that the recommendation that she accepts in principle takes public policy form, and what will that public policy form be? That's one question there.

I'll move on to some other questions. There is a news release, the same news release as a matter of fact, where the headline is Provincial Policing Standards and Enhanced Civilian Oversight Coming for Alberta Police Services. With respect to the first part of this commitment, having to do with establishing policing standards, I've been looking at the persistent way in which the Auditor General's department has been urging the government and the department to establish policing standards. I have from the 2002-2003 Auditor General's report some observations that I would like to share with the minister. I'm sure she's familiar with them, but it's good to reiterate them so that they're on the record.

In this respect, the findings of the Auditor General, which are stated on page 273 of the annual report for 2002-2003, say the following: "Progress is not satisfactory on this recommendation." That's the recommendation with respect to the need to establish policing standards. This recommendation was made by the Auditor General's office over several previous years.

The manual has not yet been issued. The delay in issuing the manual is a result of the Ministry decision to wait for the government response to the committee's recommendations because the response to some recommendations in the report may impact the manual. While the MLA report was released publicly in July 2002 . . .

Over a year and a half ago now, Mr. Chairman.

. . . the MLA committee subsequently conducted further consultations on its recommendations.

I acknowledge that.

These further consultations resulted in a supplementary report being issued by the committee in late 2002.

So we are nearly 16, 17 months from the time that the second report, the supplementary report, has been available to the department and to the minister.

The statement from the Auditor General's department goes on to say that "the government is currently considering its response to the initial and supplementary MLA reports; however, the response date is uncertain."

Now, when I look at the news release dated March 26, 2004, there's still uncertainty about the dates and about the manual and its preparation and its release. So my question to the minister is: are we any more certain now about the response date? It's not clear to me that that date is specified here in the latest news release from the minister's office.

The Auditor General observes that "the Ministry intends to issue the manual once the government response to the recommendations in the MLA report is known." Now I guess we know the government's response. I think that it is stated in this news release of March 26, 2004. With the exception of two or three recommendations, the rest of the recommendations of the MLA report are accepted. Given that that acceptance has been indicated by the department, when is the manual to be released?

Now, the Auditor General further states that "the Ministry also needs to obtain funding to proceed with the audits of police services. There is no date as to when audits of policing standards will commence." My question again is: does the current budget, the budget for 2004-2005, the estimates that we're debating today, include the money that the minister was waiting for in order to undertake audits of policing standards? If the money has been allocated in this budget, when will these audits commence?

These are questions which are raised by the Auditor General, and I'm sure the minister would like to respond to these. Under Implications and Risks the reason, I suppose, that the Auditor General wants to give for urging the department and the minister to take action on enforcement of policing standards is that "until the plan is implemented, the Ministry does not know whether police services meet the province's minimum policing standards. Public safety could be at risk." That's the concluding statement, so there's lots at stake. How long will Albertans have to wait before they see some action along these lines, which, in the judgment of the Auditor General, is needed in order to make sure that public safety is secured for Albertans?

I will just sit down with these questions, and perhaps the minister would like to respond.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you. I want to answer the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre's question. If I've confused her, I apologize for that.

Will every dollar that we receive go to the victims? Yes. Will we distribute in a year the same amount we receive during that year? The answer is no. Why? Because the fine revenue is unpredictable. We hold a portion back so that we have stable funding for the next year. So it's important for us to understand.

Yes, it's increased, and there's no question it's increased, but with the work that we're doing with the Minister of Transportation, in the future you can't continue to count on high fine revenues. The work we're trying to do with the Minister of Transportation is to provide the roads and our citizens that drive those roads safety. So we're hoping that we don't have to count on the revenues.

I want to go for a minute to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who talked about several things. First of all, he talked about goal 1, strategy 1.1, in regard to the implementation of a policing strategy "incorporating the approved recommendations of the MLA Policing Review Committee Report," that, first of all, talks about enhanced provincial leadership in policing, about sustainable funding for policing and restructuring responsibility for policing and promoting citizens' oversight of policing in Alberta.

We've accepted the majority of the recommendations, as you're well aware, of that report. One of them you referred to is on citizens' oversight. I've also said that I'm not accepting that particular recommendation in the report, but I also support citizens' oversight. I think it's important for us to establish and ensure a fair, objective, and impartial investigation into the complaints against police.

I have to say that as the Solicitor General for the last three years I'm honoured, first of all, to be in this position and, secondly, that the police in this province do an incredible, incredible job in very, very difficult situations. I've been on many, many ride-alongs with them, and honestly I can't even explain what they do on call after call.

I think the objective of citizens' oversight is to enhance the credibility of the process and to obviously ensure public confidence that there is a proper review of the conduct of members of the police department. We will be working on that over the summer and hope we'll have legislation ready in the fall. I think it's important for us to understand that the system that we have in place right now works, and I believe it works. But it's a huge process of education so that people understand that there is a mechanism in place for them to complain.

The police in this province do an unbelievable, remarkable job. I think that what's unfortunately happened lately are some of the things that have come out in regard to allegations against the Edmonton police from something 20 years ago and how it was dealt with then. How it was dealt with then and how you deal with it now – again, I want to say that there is a process in place that's credible and ensures that the public feel confident in how the complaint was established. So we are working on it and hope to, as I said, have legislation ready in the fall.

The police report that was done by the committee talked about several things that we're working on. One of the key things that has been very well accepted in this province is the establishment of a centre of excellence, and we're working on that currently. I will be putting together a committee to look at the centre of excellence. We believe that it's not only bricks and mortar. We can utilize the centre of excellence with distance learning, et cetera.

So we'll be putting together a working committee on how they see the centre of excellence. That will be the stakeholders that we think are part and parcel of that centre of excellence. We'll ask the Minister of Learning to participate, obviously the police. We will have colleges, the university, anybody that we believe is a stakeholder in opening up and talking about the centre of excellence.

You talked about standards. I want to assure the member that the standards manual has gone out, and the police now have the standards manual. You refer to the Auditor General talking about that. All the police in the province now have a standards manual to operate from. We want to make sure that the standards manual is followed, and we will be doing audits and looking at if they're following the standards. We're looking forward to that.

I think that's all I have actually: the centre of excellence, citizens' oversight, standards, and the audits you referred to.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of questions and perhaps a comment with respect to the hon. Minister of Learning and his question on how the crystal meth situation might affect this particular minister's budget. It came to mind that that may end up being more of a health-related issue in the long term. Perhaps if we could get the Graydon report released, we might find some answers to that.

More to the topic, on page 385, under Significant Opportunities and Challenges, there is some information that the crime rate in Alberta had increased by 2 and a half per cent in 2002. My question on that particular issue is: is there any more recent information, and can we from the information have some idea of whether this is a trend? That type of an increase, 2 and a half per cent, seems on the surface to be quite large, so I'm wondering if there's more recent information and if, in fact, that appears to be a trend.

The second concern that I have comes in the area of effective provincial crisis management planning. There is an issue with respect to that, and of course it's addressed in there as well that we do have some very, very serious cross-border connections, not only in our transportation system but certainly with respect to energy supply and security and that type of thing. Alberta has been shown to be a leader in this initiative, and I'm wondering if the Solicitor General's department is prepared or will prepare itself to engage with other states and provinces with respect to a more collaborative effort. I believe that certainly now the U.S. Energy Council and PNWER both have cross-border initiatives, and I'm wondering if there could be some co-operation there.

My last comment and question is with respect to aboriginal policing. We do have I think some successful First Nations policing initiatives in the province. However, in certain circumstances these initiatives come to an end in a rather rapid fashion. In other words, you have perhaps an on-reserve police detachment this week, and next week you don't have one. It puts quite a load on other policing resources in certain areas. The initiative, of course, says that they would like to enhance "the effectiveness of policing on First Nations communities." I wonder if there could be a bit more explanation as to how you see that happening.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member alluded to the issue of meth and the Graydon report and the release. I have enough issues on my plate worrying about his report, to be quite frank, but I know it's one of the reports that the Premier has talked about releasing.

Overall in western Canada the crime rate is down, but that doesn't mean that we should be less vigilant. We continue to monitor what's happening in this province. I mean, it doesn't take anybody to read in the news what's happening with organized crime and some of the issues that we're dealing with with organized crime. I think it was important. One of the reasons why we established the IROC is because of what we're finding out.

If I would have sat down with any of my rural colleagues three years ago, we would have been talking about their mailbox being vandalized or a piece of their farm equipment being vandalized, but now we're seeing organized crime moving into the rural areas. Our colleague from Drayton Valley has a huge problem with methamphetamines in his riding, and there are several other areas within that corridor that are dealing with meth. So it's the rural areas that are trying to adjust with some of the bigger, if I may use the term, city crime that we need to work on.

He talked about the crisis management planning. Alberta is way ahead on that, further ahead than any other province in this country. In fact, the federal minister announced a national security plan today with I think it was $690 million in regard to securing an open society, and they talked about borders and things.

We're very, very lucky in this province. After 9-11 the Premier put together a ministerial task force in regard to dealing with terrorism, that was chaired by the Member for Ponoka-Rimbey, and right from the gate, because it's the critical infrastructure that we have to deal with in our oil, we've been vigilant.

I know I kicked off a conference – I believe it's going to be two years in November – and the minister for security at the time, the hon. Minister Easter, was here. He was very, very impressed with what we were dealing with at the conference and said to us at that particular time: why would I even invent the wheel considering what Alberta has done in regard to dealing with crisis management? So we have been very, very active in that, and it talks about the borders.

I know Ottawa has been down looking at our centre that we share with the Minister of Municipal Affairs. They were very, very impressed, and they talk about in their press release, which I don't have handy, establishing the centre, exactly what Alberta has here. I think that is something that is a compliment to Alberta. We have as the security task force taken a number of steps to deal with some of your security questions, and it goes back to the Alberta crisis management plan that we've established. We've gone out and talked to our partners. We've established a state-of-the-art crisis management operations centre for when we determine that there's a terrorist threat.

I keep referring back to the people, not only in my department, that have done an incredible job monitoring what's going on around the world with the terrorist activities under our SIM unit and their contacts that they have established with CSIS and how they can at all times know what's going on in this world in regard to terrorism. It's great, but it also can be at times very frightening. One just has to look at the borders and see what's happening.

One of the things that Alberta has done is talked to our partners in the United States, and I think that's important. I know that shortly after 9-11 I had the opportunity to discuss in detail and at length with the FBI what's happening and our borders.

So I think Alberta is as planned as we can be in regard to what you discussed with our borders. All of our partners, whether it's oil related or it's transportation or it's anything to do with the border, are always vigilant about what's happening. I don't want to get into too many details, obviously. It's working. They're on top of everything and doing a very good job at what they are doing with the SIM unit and all of the other counterterrorism.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A few more questions to the minister. I would like to invite the minister's attention back to the business plan, page 388. Under Strategies 1.6 and 1.8 are the two items which I have brief questions on and would like the minister to comment on. At 1.6 it says, "Reinstate crime prevention and restorative justice program funding to support the Provincial Crime Prevention Strategy and the Community Justice Policy."

Now, I notice that on page 334 in the budget document crime prevention has got about $1.1 million extra in the current year's budget, if I'm reading it right. The two actions mentioned here in 1.6 are the community justice policy and the provincial crime prevention strategy. How does this $1.1 million additional allocation in the budget break down for each of these two categories? Or is there more than just these two things that are covered under crime prevention and therefore the increase is also distributed to more than just these two activities? I'm not sure, so I'd like the minister to comment on that.

The second question has to do with 1.8: "Work in partnership with Children's Services to develop an integrated province-wide response to family violence." I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre asked some questions in that regard already. I see that that strategy certainly focuses on partnership, but in terms of resources that might have been allocated in this budget, I'm wondering if the minister has in fact made some budgetary commitments to give substance to this commitment for the strategic action that she mentions here.

While I'm up on my feet, may I have a few other questions, Mr. Chairman, with your permission and with the minister's concurrence? The minister, of course, has said repeatedly how our government has put new money back into policing to assist municipalities to do their job, and $58 million dollars in new funding to bolster policing services is indicated in the minister's March 26 news release. This, of course, includes $16.5 million that the municipalities were already getting, so it seems to me as if the government is giving with one hand and then taking away with the other hand. That $16.5 million has disappeared now from the budgets of municipalities because it's been taken away and then reallocated in terms of government money.

The second point I want to make about this is let's not forget that this new money in a sense is restoration, and only in part, of what the municipalities used to get until about '95-96 when all these policing grants were taken away. So my question to the minister is this. It will be difficult, I'm sure – it would be difficult if I were sitting in her place – to answer this question right now, but I'd like to get an answer to it, maybe a written answer. What was the amount of government funding for policing purposes in the mid-90s to municipalities? How does the new funding now as indicated in this budget, which was a resumption, in a sense, or restoration of part of that, compare to the total amount of money that municipalities used to get for policing purposes, say, eight years ago, when this was discontinued? I sympathize with the minister if she doesn't have an answer for it. She can certainly provide it to me later.

I must make another observation here. I'm very pleased that the government has made a commitment to pick up the costs of policing for all communities now up to, I guess, 5,000 strong? Right. I certainly support that and commend the government for doing that.

Another question. This question arises from a quick look that I had at the amount of money that the city of Edmonton would be getting, new money for policing purposes. The city will receive new money for policing estimated at about $10.7 million, but this is offset by a reduction of about $5.3 million in the municipal unconditional grant received from the province. So the annual increase is for a net of about $5.4 million. I just wonder how much the city of Edmonton was receiving, say, in '96 when this grant was discontinued. I'm sure you'd like to get an answer to this question for yourself, and I certainly would like to know how this amount compares.

The question of sustainability. You know, we want to of course provide sustainable funding, sustainable both from the point of view of what the government thinks it can afford but also in terms of providing adequate policing services, which the municipalities are responsible for but need sustainable funding from this government to do, so they determine the adequacy of funding in order to make our communities safe, which is the title, I guess, of the business plan that I am referring to under the core businesses: policing and crime prevention and ensuring safe communities in Alberta. After all, if the goal is to make sure that our communities are safe, then surely I think that we have to ask the question about the adequacy of funding that municipalities get from the provincial government to achieve that goal.

Perhaps one or two other questions here. I'll let the minister speak to those questions while I'm looking at my notes. If I have a question, I'll ask again.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to respond to the Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky. He asked a question about aboriginal policing, which I had on another piece of paper. I apologize; I wasn't ignoring him. He's brought up an interesting issue in regard to the aboriginal policing model. We have some very, very, very successful aboriginal police forces in this province who are doing an incredible job, and we've had some struggles with some aboriginal policing in the province also. The government is committed to an aboriginal policing model; aboriginal policing is important.

We were at a function a few weeks ago at the Blood tribe. They have put in what they think is a successful idea in regard to aboriginal policing, and that's having elders travel with one of the aboriginal police officers. They were quite proud of the initiative and quite excited about the initiative. It will be interesting to see.

I was at a graduation in Regina a couple of months ago. It was the first graduating all-aboriginal police force, which was initiated by my department. I'd love to take credit for it. It wasn't me. It was a fellow who works very hard in our department by the name of Ron Hepperle. That was something that he was pushing. He said to me three years ago: Minister, if I get this together and I put it together, you have to promise me that you'll be at the first graduating class of the aboriginal police force. And he did. It was very, very nice to be there. All of those aboriginal police officers that graduated came back to Alberta, which was especially nice to see, because they're from Alberta. They're going back to Alberta, and it's quite exciting.

We have signed several tripartite agreements, and we're also working on some community tripartite agreements with some of our aboriginal police forces that have been struggling in regard to aboriginal policing. We're not going to give up on them. We think they're an integral part of the community. We think it's important. They know their communities best. We will continue to be with them on their successes, and we will be with them on their failures and continue to help them work through some of the struggles that they have. So I hope that answers some of your questions.

The hon. member asked about the crime prevention grants, and I did answer, I think, some of the questions when Edmonton-Centre asked them. We're pleased to be able to put approximately a million dollars back into crime prevention/restorative justice, and I mentioned earlier that in 1999 under the Minister of Justice the department developed a community justice policy based on restorative justice principles. The policy aimed to make restorative justice processes more widely available in the province.

With the recent announcement of the new and increased funding we have made available a million dollars for crime prevention and restorative justice programming, and the department is currently reviewing the community justice policy as a framework to guide the allocation of new money. My visualization is that it'll be through a grant and that people will apply. I think they're the most important, and they know their community best. So if there is a problem in Edmonton-Strathcona and your Block Watch decides that they want to put together a program, then I think they know the needs of your particular constituency or community better than anybody and will be able to apply for a grant. That's how I visualize it, and I think that's the way we'll move. I hope that answers that.

You talked about our partnership on family violence. I think one of the things that we in government have to be committed to do is partnering instead of putting up silos all the time. Although family violence is the responsibility of the Children's Services minister, I think there are numerous departments that it spills onto, mine and the policing end, obviously. We have spent time training our police officers on how to deal with family violence relationships. You asked: is there any money in the budget at this particular time for family violence resources? Well, resources can be looked at as two things. If you mean resources as far as staff to train, we will continue to do that. Staff to work with our partners? Yes. If you're talking about a dollar value, no.

Certainly looking forward to the family violence day on May 7. The Children's Services minister has done an incredible job of putting this together. It's going to be well attended. It's going to be well worth spending the day listening to people about what they have to say. I'm looking forward to what comes out of that particular family violence day.

You talked about the police funding, and I'm sorry. I would like to get into dollars. I think the unconditional grant previously was $32 million. I could be wrong, so I'd rather have my department talk to you and send you some information. Yes, part of the funding that we're talking about is the 16 and a half million dollars that was transferred and appreciated very much from the Minister of Municipi-pal Affairs. The money, the 16 and a half million that was under Municipal Affairs, was an unconditional grant. I want everyone in the House to understand that one of the recommendations of the AUMA and the AAMD and C, who worked very hard in regard to a funding model, was that the unconditional grant come back under the Solicitor General and be a conditional grant because, like anything, if a grant is unconditional, it doesn't necessarily mean it has to be spent on policing.

You talked about Edmonton. Their new per capita grant total is $10.7 million; $5.3 million of that was a portion of the unconditional grant, which is now a conditional grant, which means that it has to be spent on policing. The other $5.4 million is new funding under the $16 per capita. I also think it's important to understand that we've continued to spend $2.4 million on CISA funding, which is the intelligence gathering for the police on the organized crime and other activities that are going on in this province. Plus we have given the integrated response to organized crime, IROC, an additional commitment of $5.2 million, I believe. That is a joint operation with the RCMP and police, separate and apart from the funding that they're already receiving and the money that they're using in regard to what they're doing with gang activity in their particular riding.

We sometimes forget about that, but that is a huge, huge amount of money and dollar value for a big problem that a lot of the major cities are dealing with in regard to organized crime. So we're providing them with some additional money. The IROC teams are working with CISA. CISA's doing the intelligence gathering; IROC is providing them with the information. I look forward to seeing some very, very good work done and some takedowns in regard to what's happening in this province by the IROC team. So I think it's something that we have to keep in mind.

Is it enough for policing? Probably not. I don't think that you'll ever have enough for policing, because when you have a rich and vibrant province like the province of Alberta and the organized crime and gang activity that we're seeing in this province – we're seeing an increase in meth – it's something new every day. The only thing we can do is continue to be vigilant, continue to watch what's happening, continue to support the police as much as we can, and, obviously, continue to carry on discussions with the police in this province.

We've got a good working relationship. I'm going to a meeting in the next couple of weeks once again with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police. I meet with them twice a year – they bring forward the concerns of the policing communities that they represent – and still continue to talk to the police in this province. So we will continue to watch, listen to what they have to say, be vigilant, and continue to work on their behalf.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's rare that I get up to speak on some of my colleagues' budgets, but I think I'd like to bring up some issues and some concerns and some kudos.

I want to first of all thank the minister and her staff from the northern communities regarding the dollars for policing. The municipalities that have really been concerned about the costs, most specifically Slave Lake and High Prairie, have really suffered a lot in terms of the dollars that were coming. So I want to say a special thank you to the Solicitor General for being able to alleviate those concerns. I also want to thank the minister for her support for aboriginal issues.

One of the things that I do have is: what strategy do you have to alleviate the high numbers in jails?

Aboriginal policing. I know you brought out some of their concerns. As Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development I'm concerned about what we will be doing regarding aboriginal policing. I just heard that you were giving a status on what's happening with that, but any help that you can provide would be helpful.

The Indian Regional Council is one of the best police services in Alberta. They never complain. They always work with us to service their people. They have done really great things and tried to live within their means, but they're having some problems now. In fact, they were the first ones ever established, in 1992-93. I think it was '93-94 that the late Chief Walter Twinn came to speak with the Premier and suggested that this was probably one of the greatest things that could happen. So I'm just trying to find out what we can do to make sure that they continue to have their aboriginal policing and what can be done.

The Deputy Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5), which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report no later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$334,425,000
--	---------------

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Solicitor General: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $334,425,000.
--

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we'll reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:16 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 27, 2004 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2004/04/27
 head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Municipal Affairs

The Chair: We'll do the usual of the opposition and the minister for the first hour, and after that it's open to whomever, of course including the opposition. So without further ado I'll call upon the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to say that at this point I present the Committee of Supply estimates for Alberta Municipal Affairs for the 2004-2005 operating expense and inventory purchases to be voted on of $124,304,000. This is a reduction of about $9.3 million, or about 7 per cent, from the '03-04 budget of $133.6 million. I would also like to say that my ministry is committed to working toward safe, sustainable, and enhanced communities, serving 356 – you ask again: 356 – municipal governments across Alberta from every corner, and to working with our municipal stakeholders that make up these municipalities.

You may ask how many are elected. Of the 356 municipalities we have 356 mayors or Reeves, but in addition we have 1,575 – that's 1,575 – either councillors, town councillors, rural councillors, or aldermen that make up these councils. This is not including the administrative side of each municipality, which is literally in the thousands.

You may also ask: of the 356 municipalities here in the province of Alberta how many are cities? Does anyone know? I have posed the question: how many are cities?

Mr. Mason: Fifteen.

Mr. Boutilier: The answer, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has indicated, is of course 15. He is correct: 15 cities. I appreciate his information on that.

Now, the next question I ask is: how many towns are there? How many towns are there in the province of Alberta of those 356? Do you know how many towns there are? Anyone? I see that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry is indicating with his fingers, and I see that he has got the right numbers: 110 towns are in the province of Alberta. I appreciate his knowledge.

You may ask also how many villages there are. How many villages do you know that there are in the province of Alberta? I see that the hon. Member for Wainwright is one hundred per cent correct when he is indicating to me that we have 102 villages in the province of Alberta.

How many summer villages are there? I know that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne is absolutely correct when he says 51 summer villages. Many of them are in his municipality. How many improvement districts are there? There are seven. How many specialized municipalities are there? There are four. How many special areas are there? There are three.

Now, each one of these municipalities serves their citizens proudly through an open, effective, and accountable government, governed in accordance with the Municipal Government Act or, as it's referred to, the MGA.

I'd like to say, Mr. Chairman, that many of the very members of this Assembly here tonight started their political and public service in an elected capacity at the local municipal order of government. I'd ask that if you, in fact, served at a local municipal elected council level, could you put up your hand tonight? It looks almost like it is in fact unanimous. Almost everyone served at a local order of government, so it is very clear to me that this Legislature understands local municipal government.

Now, each one of our municipalities in fact serves our citizens in an effective, accountable way in accordance with the MGA. I'd like, Mr. Chairman, also at this time to say that municipal governments play a key role in terms of the Alberta advantage.

Before I continue on my estimates, I would like to acknowledge my deputy minister, Brad Pickering, and my executive assistant, Laurent Auger, who are in the members' gallery tonight. They are making up my contingent here in the gallery. I appreciate their continued support and the support of each and every staff member of the Municipal Affairs ministry. You have played a key role in the preparation of my ministry's budget estimates tonight.

Finally, in the coming year our budget will support six key goals. Number 1 is a well-managed local government sector that strives for municipal partnerships in excellence. I might also say that municipal partnerships are something I would love to hear examples of in questions tonight. I will attempt to use examples from every single municipality. Maybe it could be a give and take in terms of examples of best practices and municipal partnerships. I think I can pick out partnerships from every single geographical area in this province where partnerships are working well.

Number 2, I would like to be able to say that the goal of financially sustainable and accountable municipalities is a key goal that we continue to work towards enhancing.

An efficient assessment and property tax system obviously is key.

The fourth is an excellent safety system that protects Albertans and their families.

Number 5 is an emergency management program that helps Albertans prepare for, respond to, and recover from any major emergency and disaster.

Finally, there's 6. Last but not least is an independent appeal system that issues timely and impartial decisions of the highest quality.

All of these goals will be achieved through the excellent work of many people both internally through our public safety divisions and local government services divisions but also through the municipal government board and external stakeholders from every corner of our province.

I want also to thank the numerous members of the Assembly who sit on the minister's council on roles, responsibilities, and resources including the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, who's the co-chair; the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who is of course a member; and the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who sits on the committee with me.

I might also say that we've made excellent work on numerous fronts through the council on roles, responsibilities, and resources. Just one example is the members for Calgary-Buffalo and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who headed up the ambulance committee that my learned colleague the Minister of Health has worked so diligently on in terms of helping and assisting municipalities in conjunction with regional health authorities. That, I think, has been a key factor in terms of roles, responsibilities, and resources.

All of this work and more will continue to strengthen our municipalities now and into the future.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Again, it is a pleasure to have the opportunity to speak to the estimates of the Department of Municipal Affairs. I would like to thank the minister for his opening remarks and his staff who are present tonight and ready to certainly answer any questions or assist in these all-important estimates.

The Ministry of Municipal Affairs is one of those ministries that impacts the lives of Albertans on a daily basis. It is one of those areas in government where people look to leadership from the ministry and from their local leaders. They look forward to a good working relationship, and certainly over the years that working relationship has been very good.

As well, Mr. Chairman, as the minister was making his opening remarks and informed us about the number of municipalities and mayors and reeves and cities and towns and improvement districts, it outlines how important it is that municipal governments have autonomy and have the resources required to develop the strengths of their communities. That is certainly one of the goals of the department, and one that all Albertans wish for is that we have safe, healthy, and sustainable communities.

In recent times we've certainly had an increased emphasis placed on the role and significance of our major cities in the country and the increased importance that these cities remain strong and the increased importance of these cities having the financial resources to fulfill their mandates to their citizens and to the province and the country. I think what we are seeing particularly from announcements made by the federal government earlier this year is that they are certainly more prepared than ever before to assist cities with the financial strains that all of them find themselves under at this time.

As well, municipalities do require the resources to chart their own course. The minister did refer to his three R's committee, and in speaking with a number of municipal leaders across the province, they continue to have faith in that committee. But the one area that gives them the greatest concern is the whole aspect of resources. I'll speak more to that later.

Again, in our province, because of our economic success in the last decade, we've had tremendous growth. That growth has taken place in a number of different areas in the province, and with that growth municipalities have been placed under stress. They not only have the stress of rapid growth; they also have the stress placed on them of aging infrastructure and the cost of maintenance of existing infrastructure. So certainly our municipalities are under a financial strain.

As well, they have a growing demand for social needs and especially low-cost housing. I know that this particular minister certainly has felt very strongly about developing partnerships with other government departments, local authorities, various organizations that focus on local issues, and the private sector to ensure that Albertans live in safe, healthy, sustainable communities. I think that if there is a department here that we could call grassroots, it would be Municipal Affairs.

Now, then, in looking at the estimates and the highlights of the estimates, as the minister mentioned, program spending in 2004-2005 is $123 million. This budget includes a reduction of $16.5 million that is being reallocated from the existing unconditional municipal grant program to the Solicitor General's department for policing and a continuation of the ME First program to provide $100 million in interest-free loans to Alberta municipalities for energy efficient improvements. It's certainly a good program. I've heard many good comments, particularly from our communities that are experiencing the pressure put on them to keep facilities open when energy costs are high. ME First is a program that will assist them in that particular area.

I also had the opportunity today, Mr. Chairman, to read through Sustaining Prosperity Together. This is a 10-point plan for getting on the provincial radar screen. It's put out by the AUMA. In here it certainly points out quite clearly that improvement is required. Improvement is desired in the relationship between municipal governments and the department.

I quote from page 1 in their introduction. It goes on to say that AUMA members agree new revenues are urgently required in order to meet the demands put on municipalities around the province. They go further to say in The Challenge:

Every municipality in Alberta is currently facing the same challenge – how to achieve a truly sustainable prosperity using the limited financial resources within their means. To meet that challenge we need a fairer share of provincial tax dollar.

Regarding this particular statement, they had asked the Premier about the possibility of having 20 per cent of the surplus revenue that the province has enjoyed over the last few years. One of the questions the Premier asked was: "Well, where were these people when times were bad? They weren't here." But that is incorrect. When I was, again, speaking with a number of municipal leaders, they said that they were here in tough times. They were the people that were downloaded on. Certainly, with the cutback funding for municipalities hasn't been restored to the levels that it was at before the hard times. They are feeling the crunch here as well, and they felt that those comments by the Premier were certainly not well thought out given the fact that they had been there during the tough times and they have been experiencing these tough financial times from that time.

As well, you know, it was pointed out to me today that in the city of Edmonton they are now offering transit passes to people on AISH to help them get around the city. They've reduced the rate to $29 instead of $59, and that certainly is a great assistance from a municipal standpoint in assisting those people that are receiving assistance from the province.

In talking to them, other concerns that these people have were with the WCB facility at the city airport. Certainly, there seem to be differing views on the amount of property and business tax that is owed on that facility. The city of Edmonton is saying that it is not a hospital. This is also not part of a government department. It is a facility that first of all operates at arm's length from the government. It is also a facility that is funded totally by private business in this province. So, again, the city of Edmonton would like some clarification on this particular issue. As well, some of the people I talked to were saying that they still feel that there might be the question that taxes on the Belgravia site, where the Millard facility used to sit, are still owed. So we look at those issues.

In reading through the book put out by the AUMA, Sustaining Prosperity Together, they certainly have indicated that support from the provincial government to municipalities is lacking. On page 19, under Step VII, Engage Your Community, paragraph 2: "The current government has all but taken the support of smaller communities for granted. If it begins to perceive that support is either slipping away or at least is at risk it will have no choice but to act appropriately." Again, this points to the fact that communities in Alberta are certainly under some financial stress.

This is further highlighted by moving on to Step VIII, Sustaining Prosperity Resolutions. Some sample resolutions have been put forward from those municipal leaders. One, "Whereas, during the last 10 years municipal governments have been given increasingly greater responsibilities but not the resources to meet them.” Again, it points to the fact that municipalities in this province require more funding.

Their second sample resolution, “Whereas, provincial transfer payments to municipal governments were cut by more than $392 million between 1992 and 2002.” Again, to get back to the comments I heard on the radio this morning that were attributed to the Premier, certainly if this particular statement is correct – and I have no reason to believe it isn’t – then this is a clear indicator that the municipalities in this province did more than pull their weight during the tough times.

Their third sample resolution, “Whereas, municipal governments receive just eight cents out of every tax dollar collected in Canada and are forced to rely on property taxes.” Certainly, I want to say some more about property taxes later on, particularly in the case of Jasper and Banff, where because of their unique situation the value of their homes is quite in excess of any homes in many other locations here in the province.

The best example for me is the fellow who was best man at my wedding and I was best man for him. We built our homes at roughly the same time for comparable prices back in 1972. My house is now worth just under $200,000. His house is probably in excess of $400,000 and primarily because he lives in a national park, where further development is limited. Increasing values on homes like that certainly drives out young families, and I think the impact of this has been seen more so in Banff and Jasper, where the high school enrolment in Banff has dropped drastically, again just because young families cannot afford to live in these national parks.

As well, for the average person who has owned a home there for 30, 40 years, as the value of their home continues to rise and they continue to struggle with increasing property taxes because of the value of those homes, then certainly that puts them under a financial burden. You know, at some point these people, and particularly those that are retired, are looking at retirement outside of their own community, where they’ve lived and worked all their lives, just because they can no longer afford to stay there with, again, not only the high cost of living in a national park but the high cost of taxes on these homes.

We look at their fourth sample resolution. “Whereas, this shortfall has produced a municipal infrastructure deficit in Alberta of some $7-9 billion and forced municipalities to curtail services affecting the quality of life in their communities.” I know from conversations with this minister and, as well, from his track record that he is very concerned about these issues. He has a long history of involvement in his community, a very outstanding record of commitment in his community, and quality of life issues are certainly something that he is very concerned with.

Getting to the estimates themselves, I have a few questions that I’d like to ask the minister at this time. If the minister would like to answer those that he is able to tonight, any that he wishes to put in writing would be fine as well.

When we look at the government and lottery fund estimates for 2004-2005, the operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases on page 290, the Municipal Government Board operating expense rose by $69,000 over the 2003-2004 forecast. What was the reason for this increase? If the minister could also indicate why the equipment/inventory purchases for the ministry support services have risen by $77,000. Also, why have the equipment/inventory purchases for public safety decreased by almost $350,000 from the 2003-2004 forecast? Again, when we start talking about public safety, I will have some more comments, as we move through the estimates, on this particular issue.

Under program 1, ministry support services, and program 2, local government services, I will focus on program 2, on page 292. The operating expenses for division support have increased by over $1 million. If the minister could please indicate some of the reasons why we had this increase. As well, the operating expenses for assessment services have also increased by over $616,000 from the 2003-2004 budget. This seems to be again another large increase. If the minister could please point out why we had this increase.

Now, as well, one of the changes in this year’s budget was that $16.5 million is being reallocated from the existing unconditional municipal grant program to the Solicitor General’s department for policing and the continuation of the ME First program. Could the minister please outline which programs have lost funding due to this reallocation?

One of the issues that continues to plague smaller communities is specialized transport, and it was a question that I asked the Minister of Transportation when we had the estimates on Transportation. It was something that the municipalities were given control of when the unconditional municipal grant program was changed. For the allocated portion that at one time had been designated for specialized transportation services, that designation was removed. Certainly, we have, particularly in rural Alberta, an aging fleet of vehicles that are providing specialized transportation services.

I look forward to more comments. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to first of all thank the hon. member for his recognition of Alberta municipalities and the grassroots that municipalities clearly are in this province. I know that he, clearly, by his example in the many grassroots organizations – and I speak of hockey arenas and others, which are truly grassroots here in Alberta and, for that matter, all across Canada. I appreciate his acknowledgment of how important it is for each of us as provincial representatives to be connected to the grassroots, to the people who get us to where we are today.

The hon. member has asked some very important questions. I would like to say that, clearly, the province of Alberta through our three R council – the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford actively participates on our committee – is doing some excellent work relative to that. I would also like to say to the hon. member that the president of the AUMA also participates. When we talk about sustainable communities, clearly we are all in agreement in terms of the importance of sustainable communities now and into the future. I want to also say that the mayor of the city of Edmonton also sits on this very important ministerial committee, and relative to the issue of his participation I really want to acknowledge the excellent work that he has provided.

Now, I would like to say that on a variety of the questions that the hon. member has brought up, I think it’s important to acknowledge as well the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane and the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, who have been working very closely with us relative to the uniqueness of the municipalities that are within our national parks, specifically Banff and Jasper. I want to say that the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, in fact, has provided some excellent advice in terms of how we bring this to a successful resolution. We want these communities to be successful. The hon. member indicated that from a perspective of education property tax we haven’t found, simply, a better system yet towards that end, but clearly we are all committed in this Assembly to look at better ways of serving Albertans. The role that education property tax plays in this province is a very important one.

I might add that in the Learning budget, which makes up over $5 billion, the education property tax collected is about $1.4 billion, so it makes up just over 35 per cent of the actual total funding for young people that are going to school. I think everyone in this Assembly and all the moms and dads that are here tonight watching this budget estimate can agree on the importance of educating our children. I also want to say clearly that the Learning Commission reflected that in some of their findings.

I would like to say, though, in terms of the AUMA that the president and the members that sit on our roles, responsibilities, and key resource committee play a very key role that I value significantly. I would like to say to the hon. member on his questions that in the 2004 business plan there is a commitment to completing the work with the AUMA that we have undertaken regarding the new relationship, specifically on the third R, that being resources. In terms of roles and responsibilities I think we have made significant progress on that.

If I could give an example on the resource side of things, I'm very proud this year that the recommendations of the roles, responsibilities, and resources committee – in fact, the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo headed up the ambulance review – that we put forth were accepted by the government. I might say that the additional $13 million for ambulance as well as the additional $55 million next year is a fine example of the resources that are going to allow municipalities to have greater breathing room. I think that's so important.

In addition, on the policing side, as the hon. member acknowledged, the $16.5 million is of course being transferred over from unconditional to the Solicitor General's ministry. I can say that the additional almost $60 million that is going to be assisting the city of Edmonton, the city of Calgary, and all of our municipalities I think is without question welcome news. I think it's something that was very active.

If you were to ask me the three key components of roles, responsibilities, and resources: the ambulance recommendation, the policing recommendation, and I also say ME First, which the hon. member acknowledged, municipal excellence, $100 million, again, providing and retrofitting aging infrastructure issues within municipalities. I'm proud to say that $25 million a year over the next four years is a program that is unmatched anywhere within the province of Alberta. So I appreciate the strategic priorities that the AUMA working with my ministry is achieving relative to and in conjunction with the roles, responsibilities, and resources.

Regarding education property tax, though, I would like to also acknowledge that one thing we want to avoid is any jolt in our system or any surprises. In one small way of assisting in that, ensuring that there are no jolts to our system, I am very proud to say that the province has reduced or frozen the education tax rate for 11 straight years. Not only that, but we are also capping an average formula to ensure that there are no jolts to homeowners, and that's either seniors or suburbanites. What's very important is that we want to ensure that there continues to be no jolt in that regard. So that's important to acknowledge.

Now, the hon. member also talked about the issue of aging infrastructure, which is so important. I want to say that I agree with the opportunities and challenges that all municipalities are facing relative to the challenges of growth, which he mentioned as well. As the hon. member is aware, not only in my community in the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo but in many other communities we are facing challenges of growth. As municipalities continue to face that pressure, of course we want to continue to look at ways to be able to provide, in rapidly shifting demographics, reliance on technology – and also the fact of the vulnerability of a resource-based economy impacts local governments. Industry clustering and potential threats to security are also very complex in terms of the challenges that are facing our ministries.

So I would like to acknowledge the fact that from an infrastructure perspective we want to ensure that these challenges of growth are something that we will continue to sustain in terms of people coming into Alberta. As the hon. member acknowledges many times, when people move to Alberta, when they move to the city of Edmonton, or if they move to any municipality in Alberta, they don't bring their school or the hospital or the road or any of the infrastructure that we all know as former aldermen or councillors or a mayor or reeve that we have to provide to them.

I would like to say, though, that the new legislation, Bill 46, is enabling legislation for municipalities allowing municipalities to be able to have partners contribute to that infrastructure. I'm very proud to say that it was another product of roles, responsibilities, and resources, where the enabling legislation now is at the very least validating a code of practice regarding road levies where municipalities are allowed in fact to ensure that everyone contributes, not just someone who has been in the community for the last 50 years, but that new members that come to the community pay their share in terms of new infrastructure that is required in a growing community, that the hon. member has mentioned.

Now, also, the hon. member in his question regarding the MGB, I believe – and I'm trying to keep notes on what he was asking. Under the MGB, the Municipal Government Board, I would like to say that there was an increase of about $69,000, which is 2.6 per cent. The Municipal Government Board, as the member is aware, is a quasi-judicial body and tribunal set to adjudicate appeals and disputes as provided for under the Municipal Government Act, of course the hearing of appeals of decisions of municipal assessment, review these types of situations.

Did you know that in this past year we had 16,000 hearings and we had about 700 appeals of those 16,000 hearings? I want to acknowledge tonight – and I'm sure that members of this Assembly would agree – the excellent work of Albertans who sit on the Municipal Government Board. Those stakeholders play an important role relative to the decisions they make in a fair and equitable and high-quality way in terms of providing a mechanism for reviewing all of the facts and making a decision that is fair and proper.

I would like to say to the hon. member that these expenses – the $69,000 essentially is for the budget for this upcoming year – include the cost of a new salary settlement increase. Amortization costs are also included in the new database currently being developed to offset somewhat the reduced spending by the board. So I'm very pleased with that initiative as well.

Now, under Local Government Services I would like to deal with that question relative to divisional support. Under the issue of local government services we have an increase of about $601,000; it's about 13.5 per cent. I want to say that a portion of that is due to our increased workforce costs, but also I would like to recognize the increased amortization costs pertaining to the estimates due to projected equipment/inventory purchases of about $512,000, which are amortization costs related to development.

I'm very proud of this system, which is ASSET. We are very familiar of ASSET, assessment shared service environment, which is a system, you know, unparalleled in this country. So that has played a key role, which makes up about $512,000 of that 13.5 per cent increase. I wanted to be able to say that that is attributed under the local government services question that the hon. member asked.

Relative to the issue of assessment services, another very good question, I would like to say that the increase of $616,000 is allowed, again, for workforce costs that have been negotiated, but also an increase in the contract services to accommodate anticipated increases in linear assessment appeals, which is a normal course of action in any province. We've also allowed for the increase in contracted services to accommodate these linear assessment appeals. It's difficult to predict what they are, but we are giving our best estimate relative to that, which is very important as well.

Now, also there was a question on the unconditional grants. There's a decrease of about 16.6, but actually – the hon. member is very astute and aware of our situation – the majority of our unconditional grant money has been transferred over to our Solicitor General and of course is being directed to policing.

Relative to that, I would like to give him just a bit more detail. The grant allocation of about $15.1 million is for the ongoing unconditional grants to municipalities to assist in providing for municipal services. The remaining $4.4 million is for restructuring grants. These grants are for actual restructuring costs. Grants may be provided to address critical infrastructure deficiencies in communities. This component also includes funding for regional partnerships, which the hon. member acknowledged and I appreciate, in terms of our partnership initiatives, which contribute to establishing or expanding intermunicipal partnerships that involve shared services.

Now, I want to say something that's really quite controversial, so it may get attention. If we were creating the province of Alberta again, would we have 356 municipalities? Probably not. But the purpose of this intermunicipal co-operation is to eventually work like there are six or seven regional centres across the province including the two major centres of Edmonton and Calgary. So those regional centres are those intermunicipal kinds of partnerships that we're continuing to explore to promote and enhance the service that Albertans receive through their municipal leaders. So that's something that I'm very proud of.

In fact, usually when a municipality applies for a grant, they are penalized if they haven't talked to their neighbour relative to the monies that they're applying for, because we believe that good neighbours work with each other. It comes to the words that I think are so important, these three words: and then some. You want to be a good neighbour and then some. You want to help each other and then some. You want to work with your neighbour and then some. Those three words "and then some" are something that I think separates Alberta municipalities from other average municipalities in other provinces across this country. So I want to acknowledge their good work relative to municipal partnerships.

The hon. member also asked a question, I believe, relative to equipment. Again, very astute relative to the equipment regarding inventory purchases. As you know, we have an increase in one area of $122,000, but we also have a decrease pertaining to another area regarding the EMA branch management programs. What I'd like to say on the $122,000 increase is that this reflects the purchase of equipment for the predictive monitoring system to warn residents of an imminent landslide and allow them ample time to respond. That was one of our initiatives.

The hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who I had the opportunity of visiting in fact just this past week – and I met His Worship Dr. John Irwin, the mayor of Crowsnest Pass, where they suffered a disaster last summer – took me there. In fact, I might add that the Premier made an announcement regarding the monitoring of Turtle Mountain. That was welcome news, I might say, from much of the feedback from the same municipal leaders that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry has been talking with. That's another example of "and then some." It's again not just average but excellent work by our municipal leaders.

I would like also to say that the reduction in the EMA branch management programs reflects the one-time costs associated with the improvements of our EMA operations centre and the media room and the web-based event management system. This has been decreased significantly, and I might say that I'm very proud of the fact that in this past year under disaster recovery in my ministry, Emergency Management Alberta, the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada indicated that every single province in Canada should be following what Alberta is doing. I might also say that the Auditor General echoed those words in terms of the quick action that we've taken relative to our new emergency operations. In fact, I invite the hon. member some day to go for a tour through that.

In that centre we have satellite dishes, where we actually could go to his residence. I went to my own residence to see what actually was taking place. It was close to the holiday season, and I thought I might be able to determine what, in fact, my wife was buying me for the holidays, but I wasn't able to determine that because that would have been a breach of privacy. So I could not do that. But relative to the incredible technology we have, I might say that it is quite significant.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, before I take my seat, regarding specialized transportation, I would like to just ever so briefly – and I thank the hon. member as he acknowledged the Ministry of Transportation, where a large portion of that is covered off. Under the issue of specialized transportation, which is under local government services, we continue to work on finding ways to assist our communities. I can say that we are working closely with the Minister of Transportation, and this is again a joint effort in terms of how we can assist in providing the greatest support for those in need relative to specialized transportation, and we will continue relative to that commitment in conjoint with the Minister of Transportation.

With that, I think I've covered the questions that the hon. member has asked, and I'll take my seat.

Mr. Bonner: I was very interested in the minister's comments on, certainly, the satellites and what can be seen, and that raises a number of questions. How is the ministry guaranteeing the personal privacy of people who are being monitored in that particular process, and which people have the authority to review those tapes to see what types of actions are taking place? As well, how long are those tapes kept on file? How long is that record of people's behaviour kept?

I think the general population certainly wants the added security. Events have certainly changed in this world since the beginning of the year 2000, so we do want a more secure world. We do have threats on facilities in this province, in this nation, around the globe that even five years ago we had a totally different view on. So those are some of the questions I have in regard to that.

Now, then, when I was speaking before, I was talking about specialized transportation services and how critical it is to the quality of life for people in rural areas. It is a question that I did ask the Minister of Transportation. I did not get an answer. I am now asking the Minister of Municipal Affairs the same question in that, certainly, it seems to be one of those issues that crosses ministries. Who is going to take responsibility to make certain that the people that require specialized transportation, particularly in rural areas, get that type of transportation? Also, who's going to ensure that their needs for such services are met?

Municipal debenture interest rebates have been cut by over $1.6 million. Along with the $16 million transfer from the unconditional municipal grants this presents a significant reduction in financial assistance programs for municipalities. Altogether there is a decrease of $12 million in financial assistance programs since the 2003-2004 budget. What strategies are municipalities supposed to use in order to address cutbacks of this amount?

Earlier on I had said that I wished to make some comments and ask questions regarding program 3, public safety. Branch management and programs for Emergency Management Alberta went over budget by almost $700,000 in 2003 and have risen by almost $250,000 in 2004-2005. Does the minister anticipate that these numbers will likely increase again this year?

8:50

The same applies to disaster recovery. Will the cost of this expense again increase by almost $6.5 million? Particularly given that we seem to be in a part of a cycle right now where we have increasing drought and certainly a greater incidence of forest fires in the province, does the minister anticipate that equipment and inventory purchases for Emergency Management Alberta's branch management and programs will rise due to last year's expenses?

Under the ministry statement of operations by program on page 296 my question would be: why is there a decrease of $40,000 in premiums, fees, and licences from last year's revenues?

I now have a few comments and questions regarding the Municipal Affairs business plan for the period 2004-2007. This ministry's vision is outlined in the business plan as "viable, responsive, and well-managed local governments and a public safety system that results in safe buildings, equipment and facilities, and effective emergency management." This comes from page 351.

With regard to safe buildings, has the minister had a chance to investigate further the stucco wall systems issue? Certainly, when we look at the stucco and home building industries, they have long been ignoring the minimum stucco wall thickness of 19 millimetres laid out in the Alberta building code. If the minister would please indicate how this issue is going to be addressed so that we don't end up with the situation that Vancouver and Victoria ended up with whereby the walls on their buildings had damages in the billion dollar range because of inadequate exterior coating. As well, would the minister please indicate what his department is doing to enforce compliance with the Alberta building code?

The business plan also refers to "the vulnerability of a resource-based economy" and "potential threats to security" as two among a number of challenges for the Department of Municipal Affairs on page 352. What work does this ministry plan to undertake to deal more specifically with the issue of sour gas and emergency preparedness in order to prevent any security risk to sour gas facilities and the populations around them? As well, what other departments will the minister be working with in order to address what issues arise out of the placement of sour gas facilities in and around populated areas? What possible responses are there to each of these issues?

Related to this issue, there is another issue on which we would like a more clarified response. On March 3 the Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked a set of questions on a recent report entitled Impact of Oil and Gas Activity on Rural Residential Property Values. He went on to ask:

Given that a recent report entitled Impact of Oil and Gas Activity on Rural Residential Property Values says that property values in this area could depreciate by 10 per cent if they're located in the emergency planning zone of sour gas wells, what is this minister doing to ensure that [those people in those particular situations] . . .

And we are referring more specifically to Calgarians.

. . . will not suffer a hit to their property values?

As well, when we look at core business 1, local government services, pages 354 to 356, why has the target level of satisfaction with the local government services division's activities, services, and programs decreased in 2004-2005 and 2005-2006? Again, another question regarding core business 1: why has the target for the percentage of municipalities meeting the ministry's criteria of financial accountability decreased from 2004 through to 2007? My final question under core business 1: why has the target for the percentage of municipal assessment rolls meeting standards decreased from 2004 through to 2007?

Under core business 2, safety services and fire protection, why has the target for the percentage of accredited municipal entities, corporations, agencies, and delegated administrative organizations administering the Safety Codes Act that achieve a satisfactory rating decreased from 2004 to 2007?

Under core business 3, Emergency Management Alberta, why does the damage assessment team have such a large window of time, 30 days, to arrive on site after receiving a claim? Certainly, I think that in the interests of all Albertans, particularly when we're dealing with emergency management, we would like to see that 30-day window reduced. My second question: why does the target for the cumulative percentage of the municipalities confirmed to have exercised their emergency plans decreased by 60 per cent in 2006-2007.

Under core business 4 shouldn't the government be targeting an increase in all of its performance targets each year, including for the percentage of parties satisfied or neutral regarding the board's services and processes?

As well, referring to the financial statement audits on page 254 of the Auditor General's report, section 2.1, reservations of opinion, the Auditor General goes on to say:

We audited the financial statements of the Ministry for the year ended March 31, 2003. The financial statements are prepared in accordance with the corporate government accounting policies established by the Department of Finance. We had the following two reservations of opinion on the financial statements:

1. The Ministry understates capital assets. Since this problem applies to 17 ministries, we discuss it in the Government of Alberta Annual Report . . .
2. Ministry financial statements contain only the results of operations and net assets of the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. The financial statements of the delegated administrative organizations . . . and the Safety Codes Council should be included in these financial statements. These organizations require the Minister's approval for revenue-raising, expenditure and resource allocation policies related to their functions.

So I would like the minister to comment on these reservations as put forward by the Auditor General.

I notice on the same page, 254, recommendation 37 provided by the Auditor General.

We recommend that the Ministry of Municipal Affairs not record the acquisition of its assets as grant expense. We further recommend that the Ministry not disburse funds for the development of its systems before any development occurs.

If the minister could please update us on these observations and recommendations by the Auditor General.

In past years the ministry has allocated millions of dollars to the underground petroleum storage tank site remediation program. If the minister could please inform us whether the underground petroleum storage tank site remediation program has been completed. If so, how many sites were remediated? If it has not been completed, how many more sites are there to be remediated? If indeed the program has wrapped up and the final report on the remediation program has been prepared, would he please indicate that to us. If it has not been completed, has additional funding been allocated for this program in 2004 and beyond? If there has, could he indicate how much.

9:00

Under national emergencies, Canada front lines update report 2004. This report talks about a lack of support from the provincial government for regional emergency preparedness. What is the ministry doing or planning to do to address this issue? Of course, this report, I believe, was just released in March of 2004. The report also talks about a lack of co-ordination between the federal and provincial governments over emergency preparedness jurisdictions and their lack of willingness to respond to regional initiatives. What is this ministry doing to ensure that senior levels of government respond to initiatives that the regions and municipalities propose with regard to emergency preparedness plans?

As well, referring to national emergencies, when referring to funding mechanisms for reforming the joint emergency preparedness program, or JEPP, the report outlines stakeholder concerns that they are neither transparent nor user friendly. Will the minister comment regarding this observation in the report, and will he commit to ensuring that emergency preparedness funding is accessible for our communities? If indeed these issues have been addressed, if he could please update us with any information.

The report outlines how smaller municipalities felt that the preparedness of their communications structures represented a problem for two main reasons. These were that different services – police, fire, ambulance – had incompatible equipment, and a second reason was that they lacked up-to-date communication devices. Overall, these problems were largely due to a lack of funding. If the minister could please indicate what his department is doing to address issues of funding for preparedness communications for smaller municipalities.

The following is a quote from the report:

The regional emergency response structure is basically non-existent, with the exception of a steering committee that is attempting to rationalize emergency preparedness within the region. Success has been elusive due to non-funding at the municipal, provincial and federal levels.

If the minister could please comment on what is happening to counter concerns over regional command of communications.

So with those questions, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and look for the answers provided by the minister. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. I am certainly prepared to answer the questions that the member has raised, some very good questions, I might add.

I guess I would start off with the issue relative to the emergency operations centre. Obviously, the member asked a question about tapes. There are no tapes. What they are, actually, are maps of the province of Alberta, and consequently they're an important level of inventory that we use in terms of helping to access where a hospital is, where an emergency centre is, where disaster services are, where pipelines are. All of this information we have on our critical infrastructure through what is an Alberta-made system called the Smart program, which is an incredible, quite sophisticated technology made right here in Alberta. So I want to say to the hon. member that there are no tapes.

I would also like to say regarding privacy, which we in this government take very seriously, that ultimately through our system, which is the Telus geomatics system, which is in the public domain today – that is the system that we are utilizing. It's a very important one that I believe helps our first responders, and those are the people – every single municipality in Alberta has an emergency management plan that they have to follow. It used to be called the disaster services plan. First responders are there, and we want to arm every municipality with the technology through this geomatics system to assist them in making decisions relative to helping and protecting their citizens and families. So I appreciate the question now by the hon. member relative to that.

Now, if I kept track of all these questions, you talked about municipal interest. It was on the issue of the municipal debenture interest rebate, and I think it's a decrease of about $1.62 million, which is substantial. But this is really quite a good-news story because this grant subsidizes the interest on certain debenture borrowing from the Alberta Capital Finance Authority made prior to 1985. The reduction in the 2004-05 estimate is due to the high interest rate debentures being repaid by municipalities as their terms end. So, essentially, fewer higher interest debentures requiring a subsidy remain.

This is really a tribute to the good work of our municipal leaders, and despite this budget reduction the municipalities are receiving everything that they are entitled to under the program. The reduction is solely the result of certain debentures that are expiring or being paid off, which ultimately corresponds with the $1.6 million decrease. So that is actually a real positive in terms of sustainability for our municipalities that the debt is being paid back. I appreciate the hon. member's highlighting that, and I'm sure all the municipal leaders do as well.

The next question is relative to the issue of – if I remember correctly, I was writing on the issue of EMA, Emergency Management Alberta. Now, what's really important is that under these programs we have an increase in the program which is managing provincial emergency programs and supporting municipalities with preparedness for major emergencies and disasters through four key activities regarding mitigation, preparedness, response, and recovery. The increase in the estimate reflects the operating costs associated with the new EMA operating centre and the expansion of the crisis management program, the Turtle Mountain predictive monitoring system, as I mentioned earlier, and the cost of the negotiated salary settlement. So I want to say that this is, I believe, taxpayers' money being very well used to meet the needs and priorities of Alberta municipalities, and I appreciate the fact that it's being highlighted here as well.

I would also like to say that relative to the issue of the federal government, which the hon. member also talked about, under disaster recovery we have a decrease of about $6.45 million, which is quite substantial. Essentially, the reason is that the forecast includes one-time expenses for Grimshaw, the Crownstest Pass fire, and also the '03 northwest Alberta disaster recovery program. You may recall that. Our first responders, Alberta forestry – many people were involved. Of course, the hon. Member for Athabasca-Wabasca's ministry played a key role in terms of fire protection and the water bombing that went on. We did on-site visits, in fact, with the Premier as well. But it's interesting that the funding for these disaster recoveries was approved through supplementary estimates in the '03-04 year, so obviously I'm quite certain that will satisfy the hon. member and the question that he raised.

Regarding the issue of revenue which the hon. member raised, I would like to say that essentially from an internal government transfer perspective, the estimate of $24 million represents a transfer of funds from the Alberta lottery fund to support the municipal sponsorship program. I thank the hon. Minister of Gaming for that. But I would like to say that that made up about $12 million with an unconditional municipal grant program also of about $12 million, which makes up the $24 million. The funding received for unconditional municipal grants was about $40 million, and the decrease is primarily due, hon. member, to the transfer of the police assistance component, $16.5 million, to the Solicitor General. I might also say under disaster services that the revenues reported under the line referring to the disaster recovery program represent cost recoveries only received from the federal government.

Now, there is no budgeted amount as disasters are not projected in an estimate. When you do your budget, you can't say: is there going to be a tornado or is there going to be a fire? We try to use averages in what we do to be able to meet what we refer to as an average year in terms of what is taking place. The forecast for disaster assistance in '03-04 was $240,000 and in '02-03 it was $8.44 million that actually took place. So it's important.

Now, the hon. member did ask about premiums, fees, and licences. I would like to say that the safety services program collects fees for a number of safety services. These include labels sold to agencies under contract with the ministry to provide permit inspection services in nonaccredited municipalities. Of course, automated labelling is through the electronic permitting system. EPS will replace paper labels, and this fee is currently under review. Also, certificates for construction and operation of elevating devices and certificates to private sewage disposal system installers issued upon payment of the annual fee, and costs for inspections are charged on a hourly basis for the inspector, professional services for staff to participate as expert witnesses and code interpreters. Also, labels for manufactured homes, relocatable industrial accommodations, and labels that verify that the trailer complies with the Alberta building code. So these are some of the important points the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry has asked that I touch base with him on.

Regarding the business plan on the stucco – and the hon. member asked about stucco in the House just the other day – and addressing this. I just wanted to assure the member that my wife did verify that I am not a carpenter. She did do that, and I was actually quite disappointed to hear that she actually verified and validated your comments. I would like to say that there is no change regarding the question. There's no change in the code relative to this issue of stucco that the hon. member did bring up.

Now, regarding sour gas the Minister of Energy, the Member for Calgary-Varsity, did indicate that, of course, the Ministry of Energy pertains to deal with sour gas through the EUB. What I am very proud about in our emergency management system is that relative to that, we have a very, very exact protocol that is being used in terms of protecting the Albertans that may be affected. We hope that is never required, but there is a plan again in place relative to the issue of sour gas.

On the level of satisfaction, the hon. member did mention that within his questions, and I can say that I'd just like to take a brief moment to talk about the sustainability and accountability of ministries. Really, the ministry monitors and assists.

Now, I had the pleasure of visiting with the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, and I certainly appreciate his former experience as a reeve in that area. I might say that he's indicated to me that I am speaking too slowly. I'm unfortunately not able to move at the lightning speed of his Harley-Davidson motorcycle. I am very pleased to say that the hon. member is wearing a helmet, but then again sometimes in wearing that helmet you can't hurt steel. Of course, I'm referring to the steel in the motorcycle, not what is taking place there. I would like to say that indeed I appreciate his good counsel relative to a variety of municipal issues in his particular area of Lac La Biche-St. Paul and always appreciate his wisdom that he shares with us.

I would like also to talk about our targets and the terms of our targets that are taking place. I want to say that in terms of level of satisfaction within the local government services division – you know, what I'm very pleased to say is that the level of satisfaction that we're shooting for is over 85 per cent. Of course, in our last actual we were at 100 per cent.

But it's important to say that with the level of satisfaction with the local government services division in enabling and promoting a co-operative and well-managed sector, we calculate the percentage of the units within the local government services that achieved their individual performance targets. I like to break them down from a unit performance perspective, and that unit performance perspective is determined through a satisfaction survey that goes out to our municipal stakeholders. You know, I do believe that if it's not measured, it's not done. I'm very proud to say that that satisfaction clearly indicates those three words which are the theme of my estimates tonight and then some.

I would like to go on regarding the issue of performance that is taking place within our three-year business cycle. It's important to recognize that from a core business perspective relative to an effective and responsive appeal system that is seen as being fair and impartial to all parties, we have strategies regarding key result areas: one, the "timely processing of appeals filed with the Board" to get that high level of satisfaction; two, "high quality, independent processes, decisions and solutions." Of course, that's managing the recruiting program to ensure that the board maintains the required range of professional skills.

I might say that I appreciate all of the recommendations I've received from members of this Assembly who have recommended members for the Municipal Government Board. We just recently had appointments to the board. Many of those members, in fact, are former municipally elected members themselves, which brings, I believe, important competency when it comes to making fair and just decisions in terms of disputes that may in fact take place.

Now, relative to the annual report on capital assets I want to say that this is consistent with our finance policy, but more importantly I want to say that we are following the points that the Auditor General has made. We have complied with and are complying with the Auditor General's recommendations, and I'm very proud to say that we have worked very closely.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Boutilier: Now, I see that some hon. members, the hon. member from Strathmore, are asking perhaps to go to the question, but I would like to take this opportunity since I very seldom speak in this Assembly.

Again, I look for quality not quantity, and in doing so, on that quality tonight I want to say that without question our EMA system that we have in place today, working with the federal government, is something that's been recognized across the country. It goes without saying that it's such an important issue.

Regarding new initiatives, Amber Alert is a wonderful example that has taken place. In fact, just recently we had what I believe was a good-news story in terms of the key role that the RCMP and family members played in recovering a girl in the St. Paul area, and what a relief to the family. I want to thank the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and everyone that was involved: people, Mounties that came in off duty to assist. It says that the system works and works well regarding our early public warning system and the Amber Alert that we use. I know the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul appreciates their work and has acknowledged it here in the House.

Regarding the issue of underground petroleum tanks, as you know, we have covered over 700 of the most severe sites in the entire province. There is no budget implication in this upcoming year, but I want to say that I'm very proud that this is a system that is unmatched, again, anywhere in Canada. I do know that over 700 sites, in fact, were remediated. In terms of the work, the remediation that took place, the maximum amount that was allowed to an application was $120,000: $10,000 for the review, and then the bulk was for the actual work of remediating. We've had some excellent work there, and of course, as I said earlier, I'm very proud of that.

Let me just conclude. I hope I have addressed most of the questions, as I was trying to write as quickly as I could.

Under disaster recovery the budget is $340,000. This amount seems to be far from adequate when one compares it to the forecasted expenditure of $6.8 million that took place in '03-04. That covers ongoing programs such as emergency preparedness as well as cost sharing with the federal government. I would like to say that the work that took place in Grimshaw, in Crowsnest Pass, in northwestern Alberta are disaster recovery programs that have worked very well.

Ultimately, at the end of the day we're here to assist our municipalities as the first responders. I want to also compliment them on their excellent disaster services plans that they have put in place.

With that, Mr. Chair, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate this opportunity to ask some questions in connection with the Municipal Affairs estimates for the upcoming budget year. I want to talk just about two things. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry has been very comprehensive in his questioning with respect to the department's budget.

The first issue I want to deal with is the issue that has been raised by the mayor of Calgary with respect to revenue sharing. The mayor of Calgary has been quite vocal, and he's indicated that infrastructure money in Calgary is a critical priority. That city, according to its mayor, has accumulated a $1 billion, 10-year backlog in road and transportation projects and is vigorously lobbying both the provincial and the federal governments.

[Ms Graham in the chair]

Now, the mayor has indicated that he would like to see a greater proportion of the provincial surplus allocated for capital projects including roads, the C-Train, and other needed infrastructure. He's also critical of the government with respect to the take on education property tax, which he indicates is poised to take $30 million out of the city of Calgary.

Now, I know that to a degree the city of Edmonton has been supportive of Calgary's approach, and I know as well that the Premier has fired a couple of shots back at the priorities of the city of Calgary in suggesting that all the capital money or the vast majority of it ought to go into solving that city's difficult transportation problems.

So I'm wondering what the minister's view of this is. I think that all of the individual programs are well and good, and whether or not they go up or down or they get transferred from this department's budget to another department's budget are important questions. But the fundamental question is whether or not municipalities, particularly the largest municipalities or the largest regions, including a number of municipalities, have the ongoing financial capacity to do the job that's expected of them both by the provincial government and by their own citizens.

Some sort of revenue sharing has been touted. Different schemes have been put forward at different times. The mayor of Calgary is suggesting a proportion of the provincial surplus. The Premier has responded by saying that the province doesn't always have surpluses, so that's not a stable source. That's a reasonable point, but it begs the question whether or not the Premier has another alternative in mind. So I'm curious about that.

Then there's the operating side. It's interesting to know that there was at one time in this province revenue sharing. A proportion of tax revenue under the Social Credit government was allocated to municipal purposes, and that has been ended. It's gone back and forth, Madam Chairman, between more targeted programs – specific grants for policing, specific grants for roads, specific grants for transit, and so on – and a more general approach. The municipalities have generally said that they would like to see uncommitted amounts that they can use for any purpose, but of course whenever the government offers them some very specific grant, they're ready to grab that too.

I'm interested in whether there's a long-term solution. Municipalities, particularly in large urban areas, have very strong demands on them for housing, for low-income programs, preventative social programs, transportation, and particularly I think a priority is the extension of the LRT system as well as roadways in Edmonton and Calgary. So I'd like to know if the minister has anything specifically in mind with respect to this.

At one point – and I think it's still the position of the AUMA – they had urged the government to vacate the property tax altogether. Dr. West, when he was at the end of his time as the minister of – wasn't it Finance? What was his last position here?

Mr. Bonner: I believe you're right.

Mr. Mason: Yes.

I attended a speech that he gave to the AUMA where he indicated that the province was making a commitment to vacate the education property tax over a period of time and leave that for municipalities. Now, the current Minister of Finance has modified that position very considerably. She is saying that no longer will the province limit its total take, but it will freeze the rate, and then of course as assessment rises, the province's take rises with it.

I know and other members know and the hon. minister knows – he's been a mayor – that when property values rise dramatically in a municipality, the municipality normally will offset that by changing the mill rate so that the amount of revenue and people's taxes don't skyrocket as a result of a sudden jump in property tax. I'm not sure that the province quite gets that, you know. Does the province still have a long-term strategy of exiting the property tax altogether and leaving that room for municipalities? I guess, Mr. Minister, that what I'm looking for is in fact some indication as to whether or not the government has a long-term strategy in mind that will give a substantial degree of independence to municipalities to solve both their operating and their infrastructure requirements.

The second point that I want to raise has to do with the ME First program. When this was announced – and I was present when the minister announced it at AUMA – he indicated that a hundred million dollars was going to be allocated over I believe three years, four years to assist municipalities in energy savings and to find cost savings and so on. And that's a good approach.

There are just a couple of problems. The first is that this was money that was a surplus in the Municipal Financing Corporation books that was seized by the Provincial Treasurer, and it was given back, in a way, after intensive lobbying by municipalities in the province. It was given back in a way but not completely. This was money that they, of course, contributed by repaying loans that they had drawn upon from that Municipal Financing Corporation or municipal finance fund.

It's a great idea, you know, the idea that you invest money in energy savings. You reduce your energy and you reduce your energy bill and you use those savings to repay the fund. Except it's not being used to repay the fund, Madam Chairperson. It is going back into general revenues. So over the four-year period the fund of a hundred million dollars will be liquidated and will no longer be available to help municipalities with energy savings.

The suggestion I made – I had the advantage of speaking after the minister at the AUMA – was that we turn it from a ME First fund into a we-first fund and have the payments of municipalities go back into the fund so that it became a permanent revolving fund that would finance on an ongoing basis energy savings on behalf of Alberta municipalities, and it would be there in perpetuity in order to achieve that goal. Energy savings, of course, are not all going to be completely resolved in a three- or four-year time period. There will always be energy savings that are required, that will be beneficial for the citizens and will save an awful lot of money.

I know that this is not entirely within the minister's control. Perhaps if he had his druthers, he'd like to do what I'm suggesting, but then there's always the problem of Treasury Board, and there's always the problem of the Minister of Finance. I don't expect him to be able to just make this policy on his own, but I would like to get his comments on that. I think that in five or six years there are still going to be financial pressures on municipalities, there are still going to be opportunities to reduce spending on energy, and there's still going to be a requirement on the part of the province as a whole to reduce its energy use as climate change heats up and international pressure on Canada and other countries intensifies.

So those, Madam Chairperson, are my two major issues. First of all a comprehensive, systematic, long-term plan for financial independence for municipalities in this province and, secondly, an energy fund that is a revolving and permanent fund in order to allow municipalities to realize cost savings and energy savings over the long haul.

Thank you.

9:30

The Acting Chair: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Madam Chair, indeed it's my privilege to respond to some very good questions that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is very aware of as a former alderman himself with the city of Edmonton.

First of all relative to many mayors, not just the mayor of Calgary but most municipal leaders, talking about how they get more money from the province. In fact, at one point I recall the Premier saying that when he was the mayor of Calgary, one of his favourite things was that what you do is that you beat up the province in terms of looking for greater resources. So I think that it's something we all understand.

But one thing that I think citizens have an expectation of in terms of their municipal council no matter where it is in the province of Alberta is that with the resources they have, the question is: what decisions do they make based on the priorities? It's kind of like how I run my home. In fact, right now I'm fixing the roof in my home. Actually, I had to crawl through the attic a couple of months ago because it was leaking. I didn't like doing that, and I have a new roof going on; it's a 25-year roof. So we're fixing it.

Now, that means that we're not going to be able to go ahead and fix some of the other stuff that I had, because the fact is that we try to plan our priorities in the best way we know how with the resources we have. I know that the hon. member would be very familiar with that, that quite simply you can't please everyone as an elected mayor or alderman when you come in front of council in terms of where the money goes, the resources we have.

So I don't have a short answer to the question other than that we have to strike the right balance. But I think a key for any mayor or elected official in this province is that they have to strike a right balance that reflects what they believe the majority of citizens in the city or the municipality are looking for and that they have to be allocated in a wise decision.

If you're talking about something that you believe that you would do if you had extra money, then, naturally, when the extra money comes, you usually do that with the extra money. Of course, some of the discussion is that you have so many competing priorities that council and mayors and elected officials always struggle with how you try to keep everyone as happy, you know, as possible. That's the challenge, be it the mayor of Calgary or the mayor of any municipality. I know that the hon. member is very familiar with that as a former alderman. Quite simply, I do believe that if you keep everyone happy, the chances are that you're probably not doing your job. I think it's a good reflection. But what we try to do as we run our homes is allocate those resources in the best way possible.

In terms of a long-term plan I feel very comfortable with our minister's committee on roles, responsibilities, and resources. Again, there is no other committee like it in the entire country. So we are trying to be not only looking out over the horizon, but we're looking around the corner past the horizon. We want to be out in front.

I was speaking in Quebec about a year ago in Gatineau, where the president of the FCM, Yves Ducharme – it's his municipality. In fact, they are going to be here in Edmonton. The city of Edmonton is celebrating its 100th anniversary, and the Federation of Canadian Municipalities from all across Canada is being hosted right here in Edmonton as they celebrate their 100th anniversary, and of course I'm going to be inviting all members of this Assembly to attend an Alberta night at Fort Edmonton that's coming up at the end of May.

But in speaking there, what I'm very proud of is the recognition by the province of Quebec of the fact that Alberta still has the most permissive Municipal Government Act of any province in Canada, the most permissive. I can say that there is much other work being done to model what the province of Alberta has done. The province of British Columbia is just one example of that.

I want to say that my attitude as minister is that we can always do better no matter what it is. In health or education and certainly within Municipal Affairs, no matter what it is we're doing and even though we're leading, I do believe we can do better and be out in front of everyone else. My commitment to this hon. member and this House is that we will continue to lead and have other provinces and municipalities follow our work.

Now, I want to just say on the very good question on education property tax that in this Assembly Motion 501 by the hon. Member for Wainwright indicated that it is urging the government over the next 10 years to vacate education property tax. In fact, the hon. member mentioned Dr. West, when he froze it at $1.2 billion. I want to say, as we all know from the Learning Commission on education, that of the $5 billion that goes into the Minister of Learning's budget for educating our young people, it's important to recognize that education property tax makes up about $1.4 billion of that.

The issue will be: what will be the alternative to that $1.4 billion? I don't think that any of us in this room are recognizing that in a growing community like the city of Edmonton, where the hon. member is from, as we have more people moving to the province, we require, in fact, facilities and resources to educate our young people. How we strike that balance is ultimately a challenge that we'll continue to struggle with, but I can say this: I believe we are making progress.

I also believe that there are other alternatives that we can examine. I think that the hon. member can acknowledge that there's not an easy fix to this issue because if we vacate it from one area, then the question is that it still has to come from somewhere else. I'm sure the hon. member will acknowledge that we still want to ensure that the $1.4 billion is going into educating our youth in the province. The question is where that resource, in fact, comes from.

So there is a motion that's been accepted here. I believe it was unanimous, in fact, so a compliment to every member of this Assembly for working towards eliminating it over the next 10 years. It is something that, obviously, I believe is very important, and I'm influenced by that.

Now, I'm working closely with AUMA and AAMD and C, but it has to be a staged process of moving off the education property tax system. In fact, if you don't take care of your home, if you let your home get rundown and the assessed value ultimately goes down, your reward is that your taxes actually will go down because your assessed value is down.

If we want to think differently, one would think that those who are improving the value of their home and the assessment is going up because they're caring for their home as opposed to someone who is not – should they really be penalized because of the value going up versus the fact that if you have a wooden door versus an aluminum door, you may pay more based on the assessed value of your home? You know, in the hon. member's time in municipal council, these are questions that we always face in municipal and in provincial government, relative to: is education property tax the best way to go?

What I'm hearing from corners of Alberta and in this Assembly and from the hon. members is that there's got to be a better way. So I'm committed to find that better way. I think I have some examples that we continue to work on. It is about striking that right balance based on the challenges we all face. That's what every mayor and councillor has to deal with as well.

Now, just before I take my seat, I can say relative to the mill rate this past year, as you know, hon. member, that it has gone down. It was minimal. I appreciate the Minister of Finance in recognizing that it is still moving in the right direction. I want to just say on the Alberta finance corporation – we talked about ME First, which is important, and I'm very proud of his acknowledgment of that program – that for ME First the $25 million a year that we're using will be repaid, and it's coming out of the Alberta finance corporation board and its new name, that municipalities fund, that they use. But I want to say this: did you know that just a couple of years ago we were able to return $137 million to Alberta municipalities from that same fund? Some municipalities, in fact, refunded it to their taxpayers. Other municipalities used it for some of the infrastructure and some of the points that have been made by both the Member for Edmonton-Highlands and the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

The deal is that the revolving fund idea, I believe, is worthy of further examination, and I want to acknowledge that because retrofitting hockey arenas, retrofitting swimming pools is what that money, $25 million a year, is going to be used for. What I have heard from our municipal leaders in the conference that we both attend and members of this Assembly attend is that they say that they like the idea. But even more important than that is the money being used with new technology, because new technology will play a key role in terms of how we manage our own homes as well as our province and all of our municipal infrastructure.

Now, if I could give the example, the mayor of Canmore, Mayor Glen Craig, in fact had some students recently that I was reading about whom he was showing energy efficiency. Their town hall is more energy efficient. It's a wonderful example because the payback in the saving is that they save their money by their operational reduction in costs during the course of the year, so at the end of the five-year or seven-year period they're able to pay back the loan that we give interest-free, and their operating saving is in perpetuity and sustainable.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

So I think these initiatives are very important and have been certainly acknowledged as welcome news relative to the ME First municipal energy program. But five years from now, I want to say, after the $25 million over the next four years is utilized, I'd like to think that we'll continue to use the resource through the Alberta finance corporation. I thank the Minister of Finance for acknowledging that and getting $100 million to assist municipalities.

The Chair: Before going any further, Calgary has triumphed in the game 3-2.

After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Municipal Affairs for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$124,304,000
--	---------------

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I move that we rise and report the estimates of Municipal Affairs and seek leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Municipal Affairs: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $124,304,000.
--

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I now call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 30
Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have two minor amendments to propose to Bill 30. I'd like at this time if the amendment could be distributed and if it could be considered as amendment A1.

As the amendment is being distributed, I'd like to take a few minutes to address the comments and questions that were raised during second reading of Bill 30. The amendments to the Métis Settlements Act contained in Bill 30 are intended to adjust the existing structures and systems for settlement governance to allow for more effective decision-making, provide for greater political stability, and improve the mechanisms in place for accountability to the settlement members.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Leader of the Opposition, in agreeing with the need to adjust the requirement that Métis Settlements General Council policies be unanimously approved so that six of eight settlements can approve them, asked what the original thinking was in establishing the unanimity requirement. Originally, in the late 1980s the proposal discussed by the settlements and the government was that policies would require approval by only six of the eight settlements. As discussions continued on the finalization of the Métis Settlements Act, settlement representatives expressed concerns about what the future would bring as they moved into a new system of governance with significantly increased powers. As a result, the unanimity requirement was included in the act. Since 1990 the crippling effects of the unanimity requirement have become clear and can no longer be allowed to continue.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands also raised a few questions regarding the process for developing the bill and the responsibilities and authorities of the minister responsible for the administration of the Métis Settlements Act. I would like to address first the process for developing Bill 30.

The first thing that needs to be understood is that many of the areas that are being amended by Bill 30 have been under discussion for a number of years. The problems associated with the unanimity requirement and the election system at the local level along with the need for adjustments to the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal and the concerns about effective accountability mechanisms, which gave rise to the establishment of the Métis settlements ombudsman, are not new issues. Discussions were held in 1999 regarding most of these matters in an attempt to arrive at a consensus on change. The amendments regarding the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal are largely the result of the report of a joint settlements/Alberta task force.

The idea of a Métis settlements ombudsman was the subject of a report in 2000 by another joint settlements/Alberta committee that talked to members on every settlement who endorsed the need for a mechanism to address concerns about accountability.

When the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development informed the settlements that she intended to propose amendments to the Métis Settlements Act, they were invited to participate. A working group of officials was established, but the settlements withdrew. The minister and I met with settlement leaders more than half a dozen times. The minister ensured that funds were available for the Métis Settlements General Council to consult with the members.

The Métis Settlements General Council arranged meetings on every settlement, and government officials were present at all the meetings to explain the proposals for amendments and answer questions. I was able to attend five of these meetings. Information regarding the proposed amendments was included in the Métis Settlements General Council's newsletter, that is sent to every household on the settlements. As recently as the end of February the Métis Settlements General Council proposed changes to the amendments, and they were largely accommodated. In short, every reasonable effort was made to seek the views of the settlements.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands also raised a concern regarding the amendments that would give the minister the ability to pass a regulation in areas where the Métis Settlements General Council can make policies. This amendment has been included to ensure that should the Métis Settlements General Council be unable or unwilling to do so, the minister can by regulation put in place policies necessary for effective and accountable governance. Regulations made by the minister are intended to be temporary. They would be enforced for a two-year time frame and would be repealed if the Métis Settlements General Council passed a policy dealing with the subject matter.

A question was raised regarding the process to appoint the chair of the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal, with the suggestion that the minister have more authority over this appointment. Currently the chair of the tribunal is appointed by the minister from a list of nominees submitted by the Métis Settlements General Council. The amendments would establish an independent committee composed of the Métis Settlements General Council and settlement appointees to interview prospective candidates. In effect, the intent of the amendment is to depoliticize the process.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to speak to the minor amendments to Bill 30. I'd like to move these amendments. First, section 47 identified section 13 as one of those to be proclaimed later and left section 7 off the list. Consequently, it is proposed to amend section 47 by striking out "13" and substituting "7".

The second minor amendment is to strike the proposed section 175.2(2). This section deals with the Métis settlements ombudsman and would have provided that the ombudsman and staff could not be compelled to give evidence before a court or in proceedings of a judicial nature. Upon further consideration, it is proposed to strike out section 175.2(2) as its effect would be to prevent the Métis settlements ombudsman and staff from presenting evidence to the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal, which would hinder the tribunal in fulfilling its jurisdiction under section 176 once it is proclaimed.

In conclusion, Bill 30 will provide both the settlements and the government with improved tools to enhance the governance of the settlements. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on amendment A1.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to basically stand and say that these are the kinds of amendments that show that the process of consultation did provide for further input by the Métis communities and the general council and that this is a process that's ongoing, you know, leading up to the eventual self-determination or self-government by the Métis councils in 2006 and that if they are going to make this work, the whole set of amendments have to be put in place. These two amendments to the act will allow for a more operational and a better understanding of what the intent was and fit it with what the council was asking the government to do.

I hope everybody supports these. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 30 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that we rise and report Bill 30, Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004, as amended.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill and reports the following with some amendments: Bill 30. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 9:54 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 28, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/04/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. On this day let each of us pray in our own way for all who have been killed or injured in the workplace. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted.

In a moment of silent contemplation may we now allow our thoughts to remember those taken before their time, those who have suffered through tragedies and reach out to the families, friends, neighbours, and communities most immediately impacted. May God provide them eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Tannas: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to introduce Mr. Christopher Shyne. Mr. Shyne recently retired as member of the Oldham metropolitan borough council in England, where he was a member from 1992 to 1996 and again from 1999 to 2003. He was also elected as a member of the Greater Manchester county council in England from 1977 to 1981. In addition, from 1999 to 2003 he was the leader of the Tory group.

Mr. Shyne is accompanied here today by his son-in-law Mr. Andy Holt, creative director of Rose Country Communications Ltd. They are seated in your gallery this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you someone who has done a tremendous amount of work with the Alberta Association of Colleges and Technical Institutes. He's a former president of Keyano College in Fort McMurray, and he is someone who is now doing a tremendous job in bringing the colleges and technical schools together. I would ask Doug MacRae to stand and receive the very warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly three members of my department that investigate fish and wildlife offences. They are seated in the members' gallery: Dr. Rick Jobin, Tom Packer, and Richard Lyons, and also my acting executive assistant, Dave England. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today and introduce 21 bright minds from my constituency. They are from Glenora elementary school, and they are here to tour the Legislature. Accompanying them are their teachers and parent helpers, which include Mrs. Lynne Spencer, Mrs. Jan Zechel, Mrs. Dawn Haack, Mrs. Karen Cromwell, Mrs. Linda Richards, and Mrs. Heather Klimchuk, who is also the president of the parent council. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glegarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly 80 bright, intelligent, enthusiastic students from Northmount elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Glegarry. They're accompanied today by teachers Ms Gloria Arsenault, Mr. Terry Butlin, Ms Irene Siedlecki, Ms Charmaine Francis, Mr. Paul Anderson and teacher assistants Karen Lowes and Leslie Yankee. I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, my group isn't here yet. They're not going to be here until about 2:30, so at that point I'd like to revert to Introduction of Guests.

Thanks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my great honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of 37 enthusiastic, energetic, and active people. Thirty-seven seniors from central Alberta are here to visit us today to observe their government in action. Their group leader is June Wade, and John Parsons is the tour group operator. I would ask the members of our group from central Alberta to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have another introduction as well. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to our members Mrs. Elizabeth Lund, the mother of our very distinguished and dedicated Minister of Infrastructure. Mrs. Lund was born in Scotland and came to Canada at the age of three. She has been married to her husband for 65 years – they celebrated their 65th wedding anniversary last month – and they have been working on the family farm, which was established in 1906. Mrs. Lund, welcome, and I think that you should stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly once again.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, it just goes to prove how great the influence of central Alberta is on the rest of Alberta and Canada.

Among this group is another example of that, and I'd like to introduce especially Eugene and Loretta Moran, who are also there, and ask them to rise. They are the parents of Charlotte Moran, who is the executive assistant to the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's certainly a great day to introduce great Albertans, and in that light I would like to introduce to the House and through you to the Assembly Mr. Kamil Umar. Kamil is working in my officer prior to entering law school in the fall. His father is a distinguished professor of political science, his mother has a master's degree in political science, and he's here in the laboratory. So I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Special Olympics Edmonton is a local nonprofit organization whose mandate is to provide opportunities for people with mental disabilities to participate in sport and training programs. As a member of the Kiwanis club I've had occasion to work on Special Olympics, and there can be no more rewarding an afternoon than being at Special Olympics and helping children and adults with mental disabilities achieve in that arena and feel so good about what they're doing.

On March 13 this organization, with the support of the good folks at Capital City Savings, held a fundraising event called Bowl for Special Olympics Edmonton at the Bonnie Doon Bowling Lanes. The event was a resounding success, raising over $52,000, and I'm proud to note that many of the Legislature staff and members of government caucus who were asked contributed to that fundraising total to the tune of $750.

We all know that these events are only successful because of the hard work and dedication of the people who organize them and run them. So through you I'd like this Legislative Assembly to welcome and thank Mr. David Armstrong, director of member services and direct banking at Capital City Savings – David has been involved in the Edmonton Special Olympics for over 15 years and has served in virtually every capacity, including chair, vice-chair, treasurer, volunteer co-ordinator, and currently past-chair of the organization – Ms Jacqueline Broverman, community investment adviser for Capital City Savings, who's involved in the organization as well; Ms Louise Suru, who's the office manager for Special Olympics Edmonton; and last but not least, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Lenny Andrichuk. Lenny was this year's chairman for the Capital City Savings Bowl for Special Olympics in Edmonton. In addition to this role, he has also served in a volunteer capacity for many years as a track and field coach with Special Olympics.

I'd ask these four individuals to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and sincere thank you of the Legislative Assembly for the work that they do to make our community a better place.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and, indeed, to all hon. members of this Assembly a very special constituent of mine who also happens to be the deputy leader of the Alberta Social Credit Party. His name is Alan Cruikshank, and Alan is sitting in the public gallery. I would ask Alan to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

National Day of Mourning

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. April 28 is our National Day of Mourning for workers who have been killed or injured on the job. One hundred and twenty-seven people died from job-related injuries or illness last year in this province. Someone was injured on the job every three and a half minutes. Even though our workplace safety performance is improving, this is still too many deaths and too many injuries and too many devastated families and friends. Everyone in this province should make it back home to his or her family in good health at the end of their workday.

Last year the Alberta government launched the WorkSafe Alberta initiative in conjunction with labour, employers, and safety associations to make improvement in workplace safety. We've made substantial progress in this province in reducing the workplace injury rate. However, some industries still increased their injury rate, and the number of work-related fatalities actually increased. That is just unacceptable.

We have to keep the pressure on employers, workers, and the public to keep safety as a front-of-mind issue. We in this Assembly have the privilege and the responsibility of leading societal change. I'm calling upon my fellow members to help lead this change. I would like to ask the members of this House to show that they accept that responsibility, first of all, by remembering injured and fallen workers but also by attending ceremonies that are being held in their communities across this province not only today but through the weekend.

I want to say thank you for honouring and respecting our fallen workers by having observed the moment of silence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf of the Official Opposition.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One hundred and twenty-seven Albertans died as a result of their work last year. One hundred and twenty-seven families struggle to cope with the unexpected and unnecessary loss of a loved one as a direct result of that person's commitment to provide for their family by going to work. Those families continue to struggle. Sadly, the number of people who died as a result of their work was up last year compared to previous years; 98 people died in 2002 and 106 in 2001.

About half of last year's work-related deaths were attributed to occupational disease. We need to reduce this frightening statistic. We need to reduce health care costs, and we need to improve the health of all Alberta workers.

The Minister of Human Resources and Employment has made some great strides in the effort to reduce workplace incidents. It is clear that what the minister and his department need to do next is initiate a public information campaign for employers and employees to ensure that proper respiratory equipment is supplied and worn on every dangerous job site across this province.

In the last four years the number of workers dying from occupational diseases on an annual basis has unfortunately increased by 70 per cent. That is unacceptable. In order to turn the tide of workplace fatalities, it is necessary to reduce workers' exposure to toxic substances that can slowly and painfully kill that worker over a number of years. The high number of workers killed last year was also due to an increase in the number of people killed in motor vehicle accidents. Albertans need better traffic safety programs to prevent needless deaths that occur on the way to and from work.

On this National Day of Mourning we must reflect on all the lives wasted or ruined by workplace fatalities and accidents. We must remain vigilant and strive to improve conditions for all Alberta workers so that this time next year we can report that fewer workers have died and fewer families have been torn apart.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would request unanimous consent of the House to respond to the minister's statement.

The Speaker: Hon. members, unanimous consent will be required under the rules that we do have, so should such consent be given? Anyone opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all members of the Assembly. April 28 is recognized across Canada as the day to mourn victims of workplace accidents. It should as well be a day for the renewal of the pledge to make the workplace safer.

The canary was once the safeguard that miners had against a dangerous gas buildup in the mine. If the canary died, it was a signal to evacuate the mine and quickly. Today's workers are exposed to dangerous substances and dangerous practices at the workplace with no canary to give them advance warning of danger. It is up to government, employers, and unions to work towards the goal of eliminating deaths, accidents, and illnesses caused by inadequate health and safety procedures.

My colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona stood before this Assembly on this very day two years ago with a message that employers cannot be permitted to get away with infractions of health and safety laws and regulations. He insisted that political will must exist to prosecute employers who break the law. I stand here today reiterating this same message. Last year Alberta recorded its highest number of work-related fatalities since 1986. The WCB reported 127 workplace deaths in 2003. This is 127 too many, Mr. Speaker.

Today is the day to again commit ourselves to organize, mobilize, and fight for safe jobs for everyone. Every worker must return home safely at the end of the workday, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Private/Public Partnerships

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government seems committed to privatization no matter what the consequences, but as Albertans are learning, that commitment to ideology can come at taxpayers' expense. Public/private partnerships, or P3s, are no exception. The Alberta Liberals have warned for a long time that building roads, schools, hospitals, and courthouses as P3s means higher financing costs. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier tell the Assembly how much the failure of this government's flagship P3, the Calgary courthouse, is going to cost taxpayers given that the government will have to pay for work already done by the private consortium?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the courthouse is not a flagship. It was a proposal that . . . [interjection] It is not a flagship. Had the Liberals been paying attention to what has been happening in this province over the past 20 years or so, they would have found that there are numerous public/private partnerships.

The Twin Atria building in Edmonton, built in the early 1980s, and the Provincial Building in Athabasca, built in the early 1990s, are both examples of successful P3s. Keyano College in Fort McMurray – we have representatives here today – has constructed a new building and leased 60 per cent of it to Suncor for training facilities. Olds College and a local company established a compost testing facility on the Olds College property. It also joined with John Deere, a private company, to construct a building extension. Building use is split between the company and the college.

Fairview College: a tree nursery was built on land provided by the college. The college uses the facility as a lab for its students. The town of Fairview provided the water connections. SAIT: the TransAlta epiCentre was built through a partnership between SAIT, TransAlta, and other businesses. The Centre for Rail Training and Technology . . .

Dr. Taft: How do we know these things?

Mr. Klein: How do you know these things, he asks. Mr. Speaker, they only want to research those things that make for a 15-second sound bite. They don't want to research and tell about the successes because it's not in their interests. Their interests are only to be negative. That is the only justification for their existence.

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Dr. Taft: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: Just a second, hon. member.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Yesterday I received a letter, that I tabled in the House, from the Opposition House Leader which said, you know, that decorum is very important. Today I'm going to repeat again Standing Order 13(4)(b). Now, what does it say? It says:

The Speaker shall preserve order and decorum and shall decide questions of order . . .

(4) When a member is speaking, no person shall . . .

(b) interrupt that member, except to raise a point of order.

Which means that we listen after we've been recognized.

Private/Public Partnerships

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, let me try again. What are the liabilities to the taxpayer of the failed Calgary courthouse P3 project?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, it has not failed. The project is going ahead, and it will consolidate all the Provincial Court activities – if the opposition is opposed to that, have them stand up and say so – and the activities of the Court of Queen's Bench. We don't know what's going to happen with the Court of Appeal at this particular time. They are safely functioning in the TransCanada PipeLines' building, which, by the way, is a bit of a P3 itself, albeit an expensive one.

But, Mr. Speaker, relative to the question of the ongoing costs which would have to be paid for one way or another, I'll have the Minister of Infrastructure respond.

Relative to the issue of private/public partnerships, I was about to say that the Centre for Rail Training and Technology was built by SAIT in a partnership between Canadian Pacific railways and SAIT to provide training for the railway industry. Now, here's one; this is the Brazeau bridge. It was opened to traffic in September 2002 under a partnership between Alberta Transportation and a local industry. I know of that quite well. Highway 63: another public facility. The government partnered with Suncor to build an access road from highway 63 into the Suncor site near Fort McMurray.

The Deerfoot interchange: now, this is a good one. A $22 million interchange at Airport Trail and Deerfoot Trail and a connecting roadway from Deerfoot Trail to the Barlow Trail and the Calgary International Airport were constructed with funds from the Alberta government, the city of Calgary, and the Calgary Airport Authority. An example of a P3.

Long-term care. Mr. Speaker . . .

The Speaker: That's fine, hon. Premier. We've now spent six minutes on these two questions.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: Why did this government ignore the evidence from B.C. and Nova Scotia where one of the same private developers involved in the Calgary courthouse project racked up major cost overruns at taxpayer expense?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there are no cost overruns. The project's been scaled back with the concurrence of the developer over the long term, and I will have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure respond relative to the long-term costs associated with this project.

I would like to cite other examples of P3s that have been in this province for many, many years. Of course, the Liberals have deliberately – and I say deliberately – ignored these examples of P3s. I'm alluding to long-term care centres. These have been P3 projects since time immemorial, literally hundreds of millions of dollars. Long-term care centres have been built by the private sector, in some cases costing the government half, less than half, of what they would have cost had we built them ourselves.

The Liberals conveniently ignore these wonderful examples of P3s. Why do they ignore them, Mr. Speaker? I would suggest that they ignore them because they are positive and the Liberals by nature are negative.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Premier's Trip to Fox Harb'r Resort

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period the Premier said about government aircraft: "We want to keep them in the air." The Premier has certainly done a good job of that given that last year alone cabinet flew over 1,100 times on these aircraft. Ontario's cabinet, in comparison, took 282 flights. My questions are to the Premier. Was it this mentality of keeping the planes in the air that led the Premier to take one of the government's planes to the private landing strip at the exclusive Fox Harb'r golf resort in Nova Scotia before the 2002 Premiers' Conference in Halifax?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker. There was a meeting there, a gathering, albeit there was a little golf involved. I don't apologize at all. I think there were 40 business leaders from across North America there, and there was some good networking and good discussions.

These people will never be in government, so they don't understand the need to associate with the top decision-makers in North America. The plane was going to Nova Scotia anyway. Big deal. So it stopped twenty minutes prior to the final destination to let me off. Big deal. It's only a big deal to them. Martha and Henry and Mr. and Mrs. Grundy don't give a tinker's darn about this at all. Only the Liberals do.

Only the Liberals do because they don't understand; they won't understand. They won't, nor will they talk about their Liberal cousins in Ottawa, who flip around the country and around the world in their Challenger jets and their A320s. They don't talk about the Liberals in Quebec, who flip around their province in Challenger jets. They only want to talk about our little turboprop King Air 350, two 200s, and the Dash 8, which is used to haul, ostensibly, firefighters and people who are going down to Calgary to do the land sales, which generate a lot of dollars for the province, Mr. Speaker. But they don't want to talk about those things.

You know, Mr. Speaker, they even went so far as to send the media – or maybe the media went over themselves – to the air hangar to take pictures of the airplane. If they want a picture of the airplane, you know, I'll be glad, hanging on with my arms wide open, to say: take a picture.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier tell us how much taxpayers' money beyond government airplane costs was spent at the Fox Harb'r Resort?

Mr. Klein: I have no idea. I don't think much was spent, Mr. Speaker. There was one night's accommodation. I don't know, but I'm sure that the information is available. But to what advantage? What are the Liberals driving at? That's what I want to know. They have dome disease. They seem to think that this is important. There is no waste of money whatsoever.

Well, this is interesting. The Liberal government of Ontario has 22 aircraft in their fleet: two King Air 350s used exclusively for executive transport, six Twin Otters used occasionally for executive transport but also for forestry, six turboprop Beavers, two Maule Rockets – I don't know what they are – six helicopters. Saskatchewan, still running a deficit, has six aircraft in their fleet: three King Air 200s, one King Air 350, two Cheyennes. Manitoba has 10.

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, thank you very much. I'm sure we'll get to it on the next one.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the lack of a lobbyist registry in Alberta, can the Premier tell us who was at the meeting at Fox Harb'r and whether he was lobbied by them?

Thank you.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can't name all 40 people at Fox Harb'r, but the meeting, I can tell you, was hosted by Ron Joyce, who is a well-known Canadian, a member of the Order of Canada, former CEO of Tim Hortons doughnuts, former co-owner of the Calgary Flames. He really has a lot of time and a lot of respect for Alberta because of what we have done in this province. As a matter of fact, he moved from Ontario to Alberta at one time because of the tremendous economic climate we have created in this province. But the Liberals want to ignore that because it's positive.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, in question period the Premier has told the House that others pick up the tab for him when he travels, and that's an interesting policy. To the Premier: can the Premier confirm that his assistant at the time, one Gordon Olsen, used a government credit card to charge about $2,500 in expenses at Fox Harb'r?

Mr. Klein: I have no idea. Mr. Speaker, if he did, so be it. I don't know what those expenses would be other than for the accommodation. That seems to be awfully expensive for, you know, one or two nights' accommodation. I forget how long it was we were there. We were there at the invitation of Mr. Joyce to join with other business leaders. I understand that other political leaders were invited as well. I can't remember precisely who was there. I know that Mike Harris was there. He was no longer the Premier of Ontario but still a very good friend of mine, although he's not a good friend of these Liberals or the Liberals in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this is all part of doing business. It's all part of doing business, and these people will never ever know. They will never ever know because they are so intent on picking up on the picayune, minor, minor issues and so intent on focusing on the dome. They are fully consumed with dome disease, and they have dome syndrome, to say the least. It's time to get out of here.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that an invitation was extended to the Premier for this exclusive meeting, can he indicate to us what the purpose of the meeting would have been?

Mr. Klein: The purpose of the meeting, as I explained first, was to network, to tell those who don't know about Alberta about the Alberta advantage. You know, I remember that one other person who was there was also the person who bought Tim Hortons. The president and chief executive officer of Wendy's was there. You know what, Mr. Speaker? I remember him arriving in a great big airplane, that stayed there, although that wasn't at taxpayers' expense. But our plane landed, dropped me off. I stayed there. I networked with these business leaders and political leaders.

An Hon. Member: You golfed.

Mr. Klein: And I golfed too. Yes. So what? Big deal. The only people making a big deal out of this are the Liberals. Big deal. You know why they're making a big deal of it? Because they didn't get invited, and they never will get invited.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question: is it government policy that the cost of the aircraft when booked and used by Executive Council members is paid by the Executive Council budget or paid by Infrastructure? Is it billed to Infrastructure?

Mr. Klein: I don't know. That's an interesting question, and it relates to policy or departmental procedure. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the cost is to Executive Council, so it flows back that way with the exception of some specific trips where the aircraft goes to a destination to pick up a member of Executive Council and then goes to another location. Those are charged back to the department that the minister is responsible for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Utility Charges

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta consumers are really having a tough time understanding the reasons for yet more additional charges on their utility bills as a result of the ATCO sale to Direct Energy. They do, however, understand the fact that every single time the government makes any move to further deregulate, the consumer pays more. What these extra charges really mean is that thanks to the government's botched deregulation system, Direct Energy will collect enough money in new charges to fully pay its purchase price for ATCO within 26 months. My question is to the Premier. Why are Albertans being charged an equivalent of the purchase price of ATCO to finance a foreign company's takeover of a Canadian utility?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out previously in this House, this was a private deal between two private-enterprise companies.

Relative to the details insofar as the government was concerned, this was reviewed by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and I'll have the hon. minister respond if he has anything further to add.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member's preamble is, again, so error riddled that it's difficult to make sense out of the subsequent question. Let me pick up from the fact that, yes, the EUB approved a 10-cent a day charge, which is, oh, I don't know, maybe 2 and a half to 3 per cent of the total bill. Secondly, they cannot use those funds for covering their purchase price. The supposition that they'll pay back from collecting these funds is wrong, erroneous, and false.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing we do know – and he can bring any graph, any survey by any socialist organization that he wants to bring to the table – the bottom line is that Albertans have the lowest gas prices in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier explain why, if in fact these extra charges are supposed to make up for the ending of the cross-subsidization that existed between the distribution and retail sections once they've been unbundled, ATCO's distribution charge has not been reduced by the same amount that has been increased for Direct Energy?

Mr. Klein: It's a very involved and complex question. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that the ATCO price was reduced. Their distribution costs did shrink. They did not shrink to the same amount as what was charged. The difference is about 2 per cent on the bill. The advantages that come from this: not only will Albertans continue to have the lowest priced natural gas rates in Canada, but they'll also start to have many different options on how they're able to purchase these products for their home.

Then what we've found, Mr. Speaker, is that this has led to increased conservation. I know that they pay lip service to conservation, but this government actually pays real attention to conservation. Since the period of 2001 natural gas consumption in the average home has been reduced – and I think this is a tribute to Albertans – by 10 per cent.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. So is the minister telling the House that consumers will have to pay $86.40 more per year for their gas and electricity in order to have Direct Energy make more money so that they can conserve their gas and electricity? Is that the purpose of this?

Mr. Smith: No.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Forest Fire Prevention

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the B.C. government released a provincial review on the 2003 wildfire season. The report outlines steps that need to be taken in the future to reduce wildfires on homes and people's properties. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. While the report focused on what needs to be done in B.C., I understand that Alberta faces many of the same challenges. One of them is management of dangerous forest fuels. What is the minister doing to ensure that Alberta's forest communities are protected from this type of threat?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is a very good question. In Alberta, of course, as you're aware, we take a proactive approach, basically, to protect forest communities and also, of course, Albertans. We feel that early detection is the best way to ensure that we get there on time, and that's done through lookout towers, sometimes air patrol, and other communication systems we use. Early response is another key. For an example, if a fire starts in the evening or late evening, that the bombers can't get at at night, we will have them in the air at about 4:30 in the morning, as long as it's daylight, to hit the fires. So that is the key.

The best way to protect from fires is to ensure that they don't have a place to start. What we do in that area is prescribed burns. We have the FireSmart program, which does work around communities in Alberta to protect homes. We have an education program.

Dr. Taylor: Jasper the Bear?

Mr. Cardinal: Yes. Jasper the Bear.

Forty per cent of the fires are caused by humans. Therefore, we need a good education program, Mr. Speaker. We have fire bans, forest fire closures, and of course we also have over 500 sprinkler systems that, for an example, we used at the Lost Creek fire. Over 45 homes were saved, actually, from the fire when the fire went through the community, and the homes still stood after that. So prevention is the key.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report also indicates that better recommendations should be taking place with respect to communication, such as with the fire at Lost Creek. What procedures have the government and the department developed to communicate timely and accurate information to Albertans?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The staff in the wildfire information branch are to be commended. They do a great job communicating with the media. Of course, the Lost Creek fire, which happened last summer, is again a good example. We responded to over 2,000 visitor inquiries in a day, conducted two media briefings each day . . .

Dr. Taylor: How many?

Mr. Cardinal: Two.

. . . maintained 49 community information boards, and of course worked very closely with the local MLA also.

Mr. Masyk: My final question, Mr. Speaker: how prepared is your department for the upcoming wildfire season?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, generally, Mr. Speaker, because this year is not so dry, we've commenced our forest fire season in April of this year. Last year, of course, we started March 1 because it was much drier. So we are well prepared.

Lobbying Government

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, the B.C. lobbyist registry tells us that lobbying or, as the Premier prefers, consulting firms Global Public Affairs, Hill & Knowlton Canada, GPC International, and National Public Relations are also operating in Calgary. The Alberta government encourages organizations and companies to pay for access or events and, indeed, refuses meetings if opposition MLAs are involved. My questions are to the Premier. How has the government allowed this situation to deteriorate to the point where public institutions like NorQuest, who are dependent on government funding, are forced to wine and dine Tory MLAs in order to get a hearing?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, such balderdash and such nonsense. I'm sure that the Minister of Learning has met with officials from NorQuest.

Mr. Hancock: I've met with them.

Mr. Klein: Oh, the hon. Attorney General, Government House Leader. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness indicates that he has met with NorQuest. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure has indicated. If they properly set up an appointment, just like anyone else they can meet with me. I get lots of requests for meetings. We try to accommodate everyone as best as we possibly can.

If I can revert just for a second to a question asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition, he asked the question: who picked up the $2,500 tab? I understand that Gordon Olsen used his government credit card but immediately – immediately – reimbursed the government, Mr. Speaker. So to answer the question, it was paid for by the party. By the party. Now, I know that the Liberals can't afford that kind of a bill, never will be able to, but it was paid for by the party and not the taxpayers.

So, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member ought to stand up and apologize for not doing thorough research and trying to mislead the Legislative Assembly and the people of Alberta that this was a taxpayer expense.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. [interjections] Again to the Premier: has the government been lobbied by representatives . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, I quoted Standing Order 13(4) with respect to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. I now quote it for all the other members who are now interjecting when the hon. member has the floor.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you have the floor.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the Premier: has the government been lobbied by representatives from Global Public Affairs, Hill & Knowlton Canada, GPC International, or National Public Relations?

Mr. Klein: I have no idea, Mr. Speaker, if we have been lobbied by those organizations or any other organizations. The way it works with the opposition or any organization or any citizen sitting up there: if they want to meet me, if it's a constituency matter, I'm usually available in Calgary on Fridays to deal with matters in my own constituency. If it's a general government matter, I will try to have the individual meet with his or her MLA, opposition or government, or the appropriate minister, and if it's something that can't be resolved, I'll meet with the person. It doesn't matter who lobbies.

I have told people who hire these firms: for God's sake, all you need to do is phone my appointment secretary and set up a meeting. I've said: you don't have to pay to have someone lobby to get a meeting because I'll meet with anyone at any time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Then to the Premier: why doesn't the Premier take the plunge and create a lobbyist registry just like his federal cousin did in the late 1980s?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if we want a reason, it's that this government is open and transparent, and if you're open and transparent, you don't need to put in a lot of rules, a lot of rules relative to lobbyists' registries. If this hon. member wants to meet with me, send a note to Debby, and I'll meet with her on that issue or any other issue. As a matter of fact, she happens to be my MLA. Maybe I want a meeting with her.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Crop Insurance

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the deadline to sign up for crop insurance approaches, some of my constituents have been unhappy with their discussions with the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation about increasing the number of insured acres and subsequently getting reductions in the coverage due to some major adjustments. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What changes have been made to crop insurance programs in regard to increasing insured acres?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Dunvegan is not the only one who is receiving calls on this matter, so in the interest of all members who have producers who are in the process of signing up for crop insurance with the approaching deadline, I would give this general information.

Prior to 2004 under indexing a producer would achieve an index by production. Unfortunately, what has happened in a small number of cases but has happened is that producers will seed a small acreage, perhaps 50 acres of a crop, do that for two years, build up a high index, and then switch to a very high acreage in a subsequent year. It is pretty clearly shown that you cannot maintain that kind of an index when you go from 50 acres to a thousand acres. Mr. Speaker, we've had some problems in that area. We've had to pay some fairly high claims, and the corporation had to look at how to manage this.

Now, I will say to hon. members that if you have this issue and it is a matter of changing from 600 acres of barley to 1,200 acres of barley this year because of rotation or because of production price changes, I encourage them to deal with those on an individual basis. But, Mr. Speaker, you could in essence have somebody paid out at over a hundred per cent coverage if we did not deal with this issue on moving from a very small acreage to a very large one.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental then is: how can our producers be assured that their coverage will be maintained, and basically, you know, how can they adapt to those changes?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is not an issue under what you would call normal or ordinary conditions, and most producers who insure crops do maintain an index by growing a crop consistently and a similar acreage.

As I said in my previous answer, Mr. Speaker, we want to be fair to producers. We want to reflect that there are times when you will double your acreage in a particular crop, and on an individual basis we will look at that. We will look at the producer's production history, and we will probably adjust that rule, if you wish, or guideline in those instances. But where a producer has put in a small acreage of particularly a specialty crop, built in a high index, and moved from, as I said, 50 to a thousand or 5,000 acres, we will in fact will reduce their coverage on the first percentage of it, and subsequent percentages will follow.

Labour Relations Code

Mr. MacDonald: Yesterday the Premier announced changes to the Labour Relations Code by prohibiting salting and MERFing. MERF funds are workers' pooled savings accounts developed to stabilize wages in a very competitive construction sector. Salting is a labour organizing tactic where union members, after being hired by a non-union contractor, begin a certification drive. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given that no evidence exists that any union certifications in this province are a result of salting, why are we prohibiting this practice in the Labour Relations Code now?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, the issues surrounding salting and MERFing have been coming into this building now for some period of time. Through a study a couple of years ago we determined that there was no need to make any major changes to the Labour Relations Code but that around issues involving allegations of salting and/or MERFing further discussion would be required. A committee was put together in order to examine those situations. That committee has now provided me with their report. I'm currently reviewing the report, and we're having discussions on the internal process of government as to what to do with the report and with the recommendations, and at an appropriate time we'll make a public announcement.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what evidence does this government have that indicates that market enhancement recovery fund, or MERF, targeted funds are an unfair trade practice?

Mr. Dunford: There's been quite a bit of discussion about MERF funding and, first of all, Mr. Speaker, as to whether a competition issue, whether a labour relations issue. Again, I have a report that a committee has provided to me providing some direction. We've had discussions with colleagues inside the government caucus, and we'll continue to discuss until we're ready to publicly release the government response to the report. Until that time, he can continue to speculate however he wants.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what other changes are now being planned for Alberta's Labour Relations Code?

Mr. Dunford: I sometimes wonder why we bother to answer questions when they don't listen. Perhaps it's a good thing that there's Hansard. We can, you know, give it to them again, I guess.

As I explained earlier, there was a situation of examining whether there were changes that should be made to the Labour Relations Code. I put a committee together to see whether or not we should do that. They came back and basically recommended that, no, in most if not all cases the Labour Relations Code in Alberta works very well as, I guess, the rules of how employers and employees will conduct themselves as it relates to labour relations.

We enjoy the best completion rate of all of our collective agreements and negotiations that take place. We have the highest productivity in the nation, indicating again that employers and employees are able to work together at work sites. We do have initiatives around workplace health and safety, which is always kind of an issue. Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, we have the lowest time lost due to strikes in the country.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Government Fees and Charges

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Several years ago I worked with a number of other Albertans in recommending to the government that the fees and charges that are charged by the government for services should be aligned with the cost of delivering that service. My first question is to the Minister of Government Services. Is that principle still operative, and is there any kind of current oversight to see whether that principle is in effect?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the services that are provided by government to the people of Alberta are through legislation, but more importantly there was a Supreme Court decision called the Eurig decision that actually set out the fact that you absolutely cannot charge a fee that is greater than the services rendered.

In Alberta Government Services we set fees based on the legislation and that decision that governs our fees for all our services. If you take drivers' licences, those rates are set, and they're designed to keep the revenues in line with government spending on motor vehicle initiatives. That would include things like driver education, vehicle safety programs, driver monitoring and enforcement, as well as road safety and maintenance. Those set fees help us to recover those costs of operating not only those services but also our registry and the computer systems that help provide that service to Albertans. So the answer to that question is yes.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you. I have a supplemental to the same minister, and that is: how do we as a provincial government in determining or approving our fees and charges stack up with or compare to those fees and charges charged for similar services in other jurisdictions?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That is a really good question, and it's a question that I get a lot in terms of Albertans wanting to know basically what kind of fee they're charged in terms of other jurisdictions across Canada. Let's just take our new drivers' licences for example. In Alberta the government fee for that is $55 for a 5-year licence, which is comparable to the rest of Canada. Fees range from $50 in Ontario and the Yukon to as high as $125 in Saskatchewan. What you find, say, with drivers' licences: the average range is about $71 for a driver's licence across Canada. So you compare that to the Alberta fee of $55, and we're well within the range and we're quite a bit lower than the average.

Now, there are other services that we provide, and we've done some comparisons, and pretty well with all the other services that we provide through Government Services to the people of Alberta, we are in the middle range, around sixth out of the 12 jurisdictions across Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Wildlife Protection

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development has been asked twice this session about government wildlife protection policies. The minister responded that "I know for a fact that we have a good balance at this time." In a report released this week, however, Environmental Defence Canada revealed that Alberta received a failing grade in wildlife protection. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. How are you protecting a species at risk such as the grizzly bear when you allow them to be hunted?

Dr. Taylor: Liberals are a species at risk.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes. The Liberals are a species at risk.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberals, of course, would close everything down. That's how they operate. In the government here we don't do that. We take the balanced approach. We have a strong economy, and we will continue having a strong economy. At the same time, we will continue protecting the animals and the resources that are out there.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again, to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: why does this government continue to show – and I quote the report – "remarkable willingness to ignore the advice of its own Endangered Species Conservation Committees on whether to protect species"?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, we work very closely with the committee that's in place. In fact, the Member for West Yellowhead chairs one of the committees, and they do make recommendations on an ongoing basis. We've been proactive for over 25 years already in relation to animal protection here in Alberta, and we'll continue doing that.

Specifically on grizzly bear, that the member mentioned, at one time we allowed about 130 hunting licences in one year. We've reduced that to 73 now.

Dr. Taylor: How many?

Mr. Cardinal: Down to 73, a 44 per cent reduction.

In fact, we also removed hunting from the more sensitive areas of southwestern Alberta to northern Alberta, Mr. Speaker. The average taken when we were allowing 130 licences was about 15 animals. We assume that if things go the same way, the maximum animals that will be taken will be 10.

Dr. Taylor: How many?

Mr. Cardinal: Will be 10.

And this member should know that their cousins in B.C. in fact allow the hunting of 200 animals, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member. But first of all, Sergeant-at-Arms, would you kindly deliver to the Minister of Environment an earphone? It seems that the Minister of Environment is having a difficult time hearing.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: well, given that the government allows hunting of species at risk, ignoring the advice of its own committees, can the minister tell us if there is any intention to implement stand-alone legislation and adequate funding to protect our species at risk here in Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, the most threatening piece of legislation that is in Alberta that we have to deal with right now is the federal endangered species legislation. The legislation is in place; the regulations have not been developed yet. If your opposition is going to play an important role in the economy of Alberta, you'll do the wise thing by advising your cousins in Ottawa that as they unfold the development of new regulations, we participate so that we benefit Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

Calgary Courthouse

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Tory government, with its ideological blinkers firmly in place, wasted two years and who knows how much in taxpayers' dollars pursuing a P3 scheme for the new Calgary court centre. It took a cost overrun of 67 per cent to finally bring the government to its senses. Happily, the government is slowly coming around to the New Democrat opposition's view that it's more economical to use conventional public financing to build capital projects like the court centre. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Now that huge cost overruns have forced the government back to square one, will the government abandon this obviously flawed P3 approach and instead build a publicly owned and publicly financed Calgary court centre? If not, why not?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the preamble is just unbelievable. If people were to believe it, they would be – I know that we're not supposed to use words like "misled," but I don't know any other way to describe it. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that P3s work very well, and the Premier clearly showed today in many examples how well they work.

The member is so wrong as far as saying that there were huge overruns. That is simply not true. But as we worked through the system and saw what the final cost was going to be – and where the cost was going had nothing to do with the way it was financed – and because of all of the components of the project, we have scaled it back. If he stays tuned, he will find out how it's going to be financed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Given the Premier's refusal to answer this yesterday, I ask again: will the government table in this Assembly project cost estimates for the winning bid from the BPC consortium, project estimates for the two rejected bids, and the results of the so-called dummy bid, and, finally, the process used to evaluate all of these bids? If not, why not?

The Speaker: That's five questions. Take your choice.

Dr. Pannu: One question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are currently in negotiations. Now, I hope that covers all five with one answer.

Dr. Pannu: Let me try again, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Calgary courthouse has been significantly reduced in size in order to avoid the 67 per cent cost overrun, why is the government sticking with a P3 consortium that has a track record of not staying within budget?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that that is extremely offensive language that the gentleman is using. The fact is that the people that worked on that project are very outstanding people, and for him to stand there and make those kinds of comments when he doesn't know the facts – I think that he should stand up and apologize to those people.

Mr. Speaker, the fact is that in the whole process we had two outside groups. We have the committee that looks at any alternate financing, and we also had a committee set up that was to look at fairness and openness and accountability. There are very outstanding people on that committee, and they came back and said that it was a fair and open process and everything was above-board.

So for that individual to make those kinds of comments is really offensive, Mr. Speaker.

2:40

The Speaker: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven, but in the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you 65 of the brightest minds from my constituency, and they come from a brand new school in my constituency, the Innisfail middle school. When they were getting their picture taken today, they said that their school was just the greatest. Along with them are their teachers Mr. Grant Klymyk and Mrs. Linda Pederson, along with parents and helpers Mr. Gary Clutton, Mrs. Gloria Beardsworth, Mrs. Cheryl Bilton, Mrs. Lori Maldaner, Mrs. Roxane Ure, Mrs. Lisa Boyd, Mrs. Tina Wagers, Mrs. Brenda Bennett, Mr. Chris Harper, and Mrs. Wanda Lohman. They're in both galleries, and I'd like them all to rise and have the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor.

Mr. Rathgeber: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Miss Jessica Moe. Jessica is a grade 12 student at Ross Sheppard high school in the Edmonton-Caldor constituency. Jessica is one of three Alberta recipients of the Canadian merit scholarship foundation prestigious award that provides graduating high school students with up to $60,000 to pursue postsecondary education. I understand that our colleague the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake will be recognizing these scholarship winners in a few moments. I understand that she's in the members' gallery, and I'd like Jessica to rise and receive the traditional warm reception of this Assembly.

Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Active Youth

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today during Education Week I rise to recognize the importance of our young Albertans and the importance of exercise and active living.

A healthy mind needs a healthy body to be successful. A well-rounded education both in and out of school involves activity and play. Live Outside the Box is an initiative of our Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation that encourages youth to spend less time in front of the TV and computer and more time being physically active. Programs such as Active8, Schools Come Alive, and Ever Active Schools help students, parents, and teachers to develop active living attitudes in Alberta schools.

Adding more physical activity to your day equals better health, strength, and well-being. I invite everyone to join me and the Minister of Community Development, responsible for active living in Alberta, and the Minister of Learning to encourage more physical activity and play in our schools.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Canadian Merit Foundation Scholarships

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today during Education Week to recognize three outstanding Alberta learners. Allison Keating, Kate Welwood, and Jessica Moe are each recipients of the Canadian merit foundation scholarships. This prestigious scholarship provides graduating high school students with up to $60,000 to pursue postsecondary education.

Currently Allison is a student at Central Memorial high school in Calgary, Kate is from Cold Lake and attends Grand Centre high school, and Jessica studies at Ross Sheppard high school in Edmonton.

This year 30 national scholars from across Canada were selected from an initial pool of 4,000. These scholars must demonstrate service to the community, character, leadership potential, entrepreneurial energy, and, of course, academic excellence.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that all members of the House will join me in celebrating our education system and in congratulating Allison, Kate, and Jessica.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Southeast Calgary Hospital

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize the need, the absolute need for a hospital in southeast Calgary. Despite the Premier admitting over five years ago that the next hospital should be built in southeast Calgary, there is still no hospital, and the people of Calgary are still waiting. Despite five years of feet dragging between the Calgary health region and the Alberta government, there is still no hospital, and the people of Calgary are still waiting. Despite the fact that the Alberta government has taken on average over $2 billion extra in taxpayers' money each year over the past five years, there is still no hospital, and the people of Calgary are still waiting. How much longer must Calgarians wait?

There is no excuse – no excuse – in a rich province like Alberta for a five-year delay in constructing this hospital. An Alberta Liberal government would begin construction on this badly needed hospital immediately. An Alberta Liberal government would provide the funds publicly. It's time this government made good on its commitment to the people of Calgary. It's too late to turn back the clock and reverse five years of stalling, but it's not too late to provide the public funds to build this hospital.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Grant MacEwan Literary Awards

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I truly rise to recognize the winners of the Grant MacEwan author's award and the Grant MacEwan young writer's scholarships, which were awarded on April 17 at the Alberta book awards gala. In recognition of the late Dr. Grant MacEwan these awards commemorate his achievements in literacy excellence and support Alberta's established and emerging writers to further develop their craft.

The 2004 Grant MacEwan author's award of $25,000 was given to Fred Stenson of Calgary for Lightning. The 2004 Grant MacEwan young writer's scholarships of $2,500 each were presented to Rachele Delaney of Edmonton for her essay Student of the Boreal, to Meghan Masterson of Bragg Creek for her story Wolfsong Winter, to Carley Okamura of Edmonton for her story Matsuhito and His Journey, and to Wela Quan of Edmonton for her essay The Economics of Immigration. Please join me in congratulating these talented Alberta writers.

Dean Lien, Farmers' Advocate

Mr. McFarland: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the retirement of Mr. Dean Lien, the province's Farmers' Advocate. Since 1998 Mr. Lien has been working on behalf of Alberta's farmers, helping them with dispute resolution and sharing with them information about the complex business of farming.

The services of his office are well used. More than 10,000 calls are taken every year. The Farmers' Advocate is an ally for both individual producers and the industry as a whole. Comfortable in both the farmyard and the boardroom, Mr. Lien, a former ag producer and county reeve, has exemplified the skills needed by a first-class Farmers' Advocate: a good ear and a fair mind. Mr. Lien has spent his six years as the Farmers' Advocate working with farmers on a wide range of issues, from mineral leasing to trespassing.

Mr. Speaker, the agricultural industry has been fortunate to have Dean Lien on its side. We wish him a wonderful, well-deserved retirement.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Perky McCullough

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with pride and pleasure that I rise today to recognize an individual from the Grande Prairie-Smoky riding, one Perky McCullough, who on the 28th of May will be inducted into the Alberta Sports Hall of Fame.

Perky was born in Peace River, moved to Edmonton in 1956, and was a member of the Edmonton city police force, serving as a policewoman. She served with Grande Prairie parks and recreation; was a zone representative for Alberta Amateur Fastball; was president of the Alberta Ladies Curling Association; was northern zone representative for the Alberta Golf Association and chaired the Alberta junior golf championship in 1985; was appointed as a director of Alberta Games Council in '84; served on the Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation, completing a term in '96; served on the Alberta mission staff for the '87 Canada Winter Games; chaired the 1986 Alberta Seniors Games in Grande Prairie; was chairman of the Grande Prairie Amateur Games Society and instituted the first zone 8 Summer Games; was volunteer of the year in '79 and '83; served on the Alberta mission staff for the 1990 Arctic Winter Games; was director of special projects, 1995 Canada Winter Games.

Mr. Speaker, I offer congratulations on the recognition by her peers and thank Perky McCullough from the people of Grande Prairie-Smoky and all of Alberta.

Worker Safety

Mr. MacDonald: On this National Day of Mourning I would like to rise in recognition of all the employers, workers, unions, government agencies, and other organizations who went out of their way to ensure worker safety. Unfortunately, there isn't a way to measure how many people returned home safely to their families night after night because someone went the extra mile to reduce or eliminate potential hazards in the workplace. As we remember the 127 Albertans who lost their lives due to their work last year, we should all count our blessings, because if not for the actions and ideas of safety-conscious people, it could just as easily have been one of us.

So today I would like to say thank you to the employers who spent the money on safety equipment, to the people who develop and enforce safety regulations, to the employees who abided by the rules of the road and encouraged their peers to do the same, in addition to all the other people who contributed in ways we'll never know. Please continue to strive for zero workplace fatalities. If you save just one life, it is worth all the extra effort.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition signed by 32 people from the Camrose Police Service and another one signed by 226 members from the Alberta Fire Fighters Association petitioning this Assembly to encourage the passage of Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act.

Thank you.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Sorry, Mr. Speaker; I had a little trouble hearing you.

I'm pleased to rise this afternoon to table the appropriate number of copies of two reports. One is entitled Water and Oil: An Overview of the Use of Water for Enhanced Oil Recovery in Alberta. The other is entitled Advisory Committee on Water Use Practice and Policy. These are both good reports, and I recommend them. They are available through MLAs' offices or through our Department of Environment office. I recommend them to Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter to the leader of the third party in response to a question he raised regarding the Seniors supplementary estimates.

The second is a letter to the chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts in response to questions raised during the March 10 meeting of the committee.

The third is to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in response to Written Question 50.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the Alberta Real Estate Foundation's 2003 highlights. The Alberta Real Estate Foundation initiates and supports all initiatives that enhance the real estate industry, that ultimately benefit the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is the Alberta Law Enforcement Review Board's 2002 annual report, being tabled in accordance with section 14 of the Alberta Police Act. This board is the appeal body for complaints concerning police members.

The second document I am tabling is the Victims Programs Status Report for 2002-2003. The annual report shows that nearly $2 million in grants were provided to 81 victim assistance programs. These programs reported handling more than 30,000 new cases, with over half of those involving assistance to victims of violent crimes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table two separate reports. The first report is the results of a survey conducted by Ipsos-Reid for the Royal Bank of Canada and contains many interesting findings regarding the benefits and employee experiences of teleworkers. Now, in order to save on paper, I'm just tabling the highlights of the report, which includes the finding that the overwhelming majority of teleworkers report greatly increased job satisfaction. Interestingly enough, 18 per cent report that they can get by with only one vehicle.

The second report I am tabling is a report called Lemons and Peaches: Comparing Auto Insurance Across Canada. It's from the Fraser Institute, and it makes a very compelling case that if you want to save lives and reduce accidents and road carnage, you absolutely should not go with government insurance monopolies at all. It also praises Alberta's and Ontario's insurance policies as amongst the best in the nation from a consumer's viewpoint.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is an article from the April 2004 edition of Business in Calgary, and it's titled Charged Up: Empty Government Promises, Cranky Business Owners and the Real Cost of Electricity Deregulation. It's written by D. Grant Black.

The second tabling I have this afternoon is correspondence I have received dated April 16, 2004, and it's in regard to a request for a review of a FOIP application that I made in regard to the KPMG study on the real cost of auto insurance in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a news release where stakeholders participating in the RTO West Regional Representatives Group, RRG, endorse changing the name of RTO West to Grid West.

Thank you.

Health and Wellness

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be dedicated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Joining us in the gallery this afternoon are the following individuals who I think will be familiar to most of the members on the floor of the Legislature: the Deputy Minister of the Department of Health and Wellness, Dr. Roger Palmer; Alexandra Hildebrandt; Peter Hegholz; Charlene Wong; and Elsa Roehr. I'd ask that they stand and please be acknowledged by members of the Assembly.

Mr. Chairman, it's my pleasure to present the Alberta Health and Wellness estimates for 2004-2005. Even outside of the regular budget process this is an especially timely discussion. So much of the talk on health reform centres on affordability and with good reason. A service that we cannot pay for becomes a service that we cannot sustain.

My budget for 2004-2005 shows an increase of 8.4 per cent over the 2003-2004 forecast, and that is consistent with our average annual increase over the last 10 years based on data from the Canadian institute for health economics. Increases like that have been necessary, but they will get harder to manage, and that is because the growth in health funding has outstripped the 4 per cent annual increase in provincial revenues.

The impact is predictable. Ten years ago health care took one-quarter of the provincial budget. Today it is over one-third, and by 2020, with its current trends, it will take over half, 53 per cent, of every dollar that we spend in Alberta. That is just to maintain the system that we have now. Some hon. members might say that that's a good thing.

Past budgets and business plans have accomplished much. The fact is that Alberta has a very good health system. We lead the country in cardiac care, organ and tissue transplantation, and the use of information technology in health care. We made Canadian history with the first ever trilateral agreement with physicians. In no other province are health regions partners in the agreement between a province's physicians and its government.

Two of our nine health regions are among the top 10 in all of Canada. We have a provincial diabetes strategy. We have a response plan in place in the event of a life-threatening pandemic. Our immunization program expands every year, most recently to protect more Albertans from hepatitis A and whooping cough. Our telehealth system leads the country, and now it is expanding to deliver more clinical services to people in rural and remote areas ranging from tele mental health to cardiac monitoring to teleradiology.

With the focus on what we need to do, it is worth remembering that health reform is already two years old in the province of Alberta. Since the Mazankowski report we've worked across ministries and the health system to launch a province-wide Health Link system, an on-line wait list registry, and an electronic health record that is improving care here at home while it attracts interest from abroad.

The Alberta Medical Association and the health regions worked with us to make history with Canada's first trilateral agreement. For the first time regions are a partner in an agreement between the province's physicians and its government, and we have a model to implement primary care across Alberta.

We restructured our regions. We moved mental health services under regional governance where they can be integrated with front-line health care. On a commitment to primary care Calgary now has linked four psychiatrists and five other mental health professionals with 44 physicians to better meet patients' mental health needs.

Every other region in this province has its own examples of achievement. Chinook launched a new partnership envisioned for service delivery and supportive housing in Picture Butte. Palliser opened a family medicine/maternity clinic in Medicine Hat for the hundreds of women with low-risk pregnancies who do not need a specialist. In the David Thompson region Drumheller became the first community in all of Canada wholly connected to an electronic health record. East Central reconfigured the Camrose rehabilitation services to reduce wait lists and improve outcomes and opened a cardiac rehab program in Wainwright. Aspen launched the first blood-thinning clinic in rural Alberta to help treat conditions like deep-vein thrombosis. Peace Country expanded access to health services by opening a new health centre in partnership with the Grande Prairie Regional College. Northern Lights is expanding access with the new Northwest health centre in High Level. Capital launched six new multidisciplinary clinics to make it easier for specialists to team up with other care providers in the community. Those are just some of the examples, and there are many, many more, and success is attractive.

Alberta is home to the secretariat for the new national patient safety institute and the national secretariat for the Canadian council for organ donation and transplantation.

Over the past few years while Canada has scrambled for scarce health professionals, we attracted more than 600 physicians from 1999 to 2002 and in a similar period of time over 1,500 registered nurses and 740 licensed practical nurses. They will be joined by the over 12,000 students training for health careers in Alberta today, augmented by over 2,100 postsecondary seats added in the last four years.

Now, despite the anecdotes Albertans remain consistently satisfied with the care that they receive. My ministry's annual results reports show that the number of people who rate the quality of care as good to excellent consistently is in the mid-80 per cent range. We want to keep that satisfaction rating. We want to improve it. Albertans are entitled to receive the best public health care.

Therein lies the crux of the debate on sustainability. Our goal is to sustain our ability to meet the health needs of Albertans; however, sustaining our ability is not the same as sustaining our system. In fact, the system we have now is part of the problem. It must change, and so must we.

No argument is more persuasive than my budget for 2004-2005. This year we will spend $618 million more on health care. That adds $1.7 million to health care funding in this province every single day. Over the year health care will take almost $8 billion. In just the two hours that this committee will use to debate my estimates, the health system will have spent an additional $1.8 million. Eight billion dollars this year, and the system needs every nickel. We could not afford to spend less and maintain access. We could not afford to spend more and meet other public responsibilities.

Total allocations to the province's health authorities are up $390 million this year, 8.4 per cent. This includes the increases for specialized care provided centrally to all Albertans as province-wide services. That brings total funding for health authorities to over $5 billion to pay for nurses and other health workers, for hospitals and other health programs and supports. Even with an 8.4 per cent increase over the last year and the largest regional allocation ever, already several regions have expressed concern over their ability to manage health care delivery. My department is committed to helping the regions work within their budgets, and I am confident that together we will succeed this year. But to continue to do so over the next three years, the system will need to change.

Physicians are paid out of a different portion of the ministry's budget. I commend the Alberta Medical Association and Alberta's physicians on agreeing to a modest 2.9 per cent negotiated increase in fees that comes into effect on October 1. But physician funding is about more than just fees. In these estimates the allocation for physician services totals over $1.5 billion to pay for not only fees but also benefits, on-call compensation, alternative payment plans, office automation, and primary care reform. That means, taking health authority and physician allocations together, more than 4 out of 5 health care dollars, over 80 per cent of the health care budget, support care delivery in our regions and physicians' offices.

On top of that, we are allocating over one-half a billion dollars to other programs like addiction treatment and prevention through AADAC and allied health services: chiropractors, community physiotherapists, optometrists, and podiatrists. This half billion dollars also includes air and ground ambulance, which I will mention again in a moment.

To complete the look at my estimates, human tissue and blood services will cost a total of $137 million, up from $123 million. Prescriptions and other nongroup benefits will cost $532 million, up from $456 million. Health protection through vaccines, Aids to Daily Living, and wellness initiatives will cost $177 million. All but 1.6 per cent of the health budget goes directly to support health care.

It has been suggested that administrative changes alone are the answer to sustainability. With just 1.6 per cent of all health funding my ministry administers the province's health insurance plan, updates legislation, regulations, and standards, administers the accountability process and measures, and provides information and staff to handle the 1.15 million telephone calls, the 1.14 million written inquiries, the 4,000 e-mails that we received last year, and the more than 126,000 walk-in clients that we serve.

I also point out that Alberta's health authorities spend less than 4 per cent of their budgets on administration. Capital spends in the range of less than 3 per cent. On average, 70 to 80 per cent of health authority budgets is spent on the health workforce, leaving just 20 to 30 per cent for drugs, materials and equipment, operations and maintenance, and other expenses. The challenges that face health care go beyond administrator solutions. They call for fundamental reform of the system itself.

The Health and Wellness budget plan for 2004-05 continues the reform agenda started in 2002 and sets the stage for taking health care where it needs to go. The budget strikes a delicate balance between the urgent need for acute, long-term, and community care and the equally urgent need to change the system. What I have for direct health reform is $116 million. That is just 1.5 per cent of the entire health budget, but it is almost as much as I will spend on my ministry's entire operations for the year.

Primary care is identified nationally and in Alberta is holding the greatest promise to improve access and co-ordination with other health services. In all, $20 million is allocated to primary care through Health Link and capacity-building projects and the federal primary health transition fund. Just over $25 million continues to build the electronic health record to give physicians, hospitals, pharmacists, and medical labs a link to better health care delivery.

Despite the advantages of technology no public service is more people dependent than health care. Twenty million dollars is budgeted for training, and another $20 million is dedicated to alternative funding plans for academic medicine to fairly compensate physicians for their teaching, research, and clinical work. Another $13 million will support the transfer of ambulance services from municipal to regional governance, where this sophisticated mobile health care service can be better integrated with other health services. In years 2 and 3 that allocation jumps to $55 million as health regions begin to take over the funding of the operations of ambulances.

The small budget allocated directly to health reform is not the whole picture. Other reforms will be funded through the existing funds as we work through the strategies listed in my ministry's business plans. The Premier of this province has made a public commitment to sharing the health reform plan with Albertans for their input. Our mission statement confirms my department's commitment to partnership in health care. That includes partnership with Albertans who use and depend on and pay for their health system. Decisions on how people manage their own health and access care make every Albertan a vital partner.

3:10

Recognizing the need for strength in a time of change, my business plan adds leadership as a new core business to the established two core businesses of healthy living and quality health services. A more comprehensive list of strategic priorities identifies the need to strengthen our public health protection and enhance the sustainability. New goals focus on health protection through healthier personal choices and public health protection. Over and above the simple reasons of compassion and avoiding suffering, we know that over time preserving health is less costly than treating illness.

Goal 1, to encourage and support healthy living, looks at the impact of personal choice and responsibility on health and the health system and how to leverage that untapped resource through education, early intervention, and treatment.

Goal 2 affirms our commitment to well-managed public health in the face of emerging threats like SARS.

Goal 3 directly addresses access through use of technology, primary care, a rural health strategy, and a co-ordinated approach to long-term care.

A new goal 4, to improve health service outcomes, makes sure that accountability is strengthened for quality, system performance, chronic disease management, effectiveness, and response to complaints. The newly expanded and renamed Health Quality Council of Alberta will report directly to Albertans on how well the system is performing. My department will use those findings to do even better. It is entirely intentional that our commitment to improved outcomes comes before the commitment to sustainability.

Goal 5 in my business plan recognizes the need for fundamental change in how we manage and fund health care as well as in how, by whom, and where care is delivered. The 11 strategies are grouped under three headings: System Management, Health Workforce, and Technology. They focus on innovation, flexibility, and collaboration across responsibilities and jurisdictions including with our regional, provincial, national, and federal counterparts and colleagues.

Finally, goal 6 applies the same collaboration, information, and support within the health system to my ministry's own interactions with our government and health system partners, including our staff.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, this is a business plan that looks at the future and identifies priorities, responsibilities, and actions. This budget is significant in what it empowers our health system to do and what it cannot do. The business plan is evidence that this government is taking a system-wide approach to health reform. The limits of the budget are compelling evidence that we need to be more bold than we have been before. However, the hard policy decisions are for the near future. They are the subject for another debate at another time.

Today I have given you a picture of how the health system will use the $7.994 billion you will vote on. I've shown you how absolutely necessary this year's increase is for $618 million. I believe these estimates give us the time and resources to deliver the health system Albertans expect and need now and continue on the recent course of necessary change while we consider and plan for the future.

Mr. Chairman, as has been my practice over most of the last 11 years that I've had the honour of serving as a minister of the Crown, I will entertain as many questions as possible, but it's my intention to of course take notes and respond to inquiries in written format so that we can get through the most number of questions that we can.

Thank you, sir.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister's staff for being here today. I know that they'll get back to us in some detail for those questions that are not fully answered by the minister during this time. As is my habit in this Legislature, I will ask a specific question or a small grouping of questions and ask the minister to answer them during the first hour that's allotted to the opposition.

As the minister can well imagine, I'm very interested in some detail on the health reforms that the government is currently talking about. I see that on page 198 of the estimates there's a line item titled Health Reform. We see this as being a substantial increase this year from a net expense of just over $46 million last year to $100 million this year. Other than the very small tidbit of information he gave us in his preamble, can you tell us what that money is dedicated to that would be outside of those strategies outlined in your business plan, please?

Thank you.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I'll be happy to do that in written format so that I can provide the exact detail of the increase. I can say that, by and large, it is an expansion of some of the reforms that were started as we were replying originally to the recommendations as set out in the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, or the Mazankowski report. I, of course, will be equally interested when the hon. member is perhaps a Member of Parliament that she might be able to provide me some details on their health reform as well.

Ms Carlson: I hope he gets his before I get mine.

I know that when you came in as minister, you were quite keen on turning the kind of sickness model of health care delivery that we have to a wellness model. Is there any detail you can give us on that and how far that's progressing? Do you see that as being an integral part of what's going to roll out over the next year or few years?

Specifically, I'd also like to know: of this $100 million that's designated for this year, how much is being spent on a communications plan? How much of that will be directed to telling people in the province what you currently believe to be wrong with the system?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I don't have the exact figures for the amount spent on communications, but I can advise the hon. member that we have spent significant sums on programs like the Healthy U campaign. We have spent significant sums on programs for a tobacco reduction strategy. I think that was in the magnitude of some $12 million. We can report on the results of that effort. There are now some 40,000 fewer smokers in the province of Alberta than there were last year, and I think that is something that ought to be lauded.

In answering the simple question asked about whether we will continue to promote wellness, the answer is: yes, we will. That is a critical reform. What makes me think about it in particular and should make us all acutely aware of this today is that earlier this morning the Minister of Justice and myself and the hon. Member for St. Albert were at the Cross Cancer Institute to announce a capital expansion of some $5.5 million to meet the needs of that particular facility because Dr. Tony Fields of the Cross Cancer Institute indicated to us that the number of patients that we're having was growing by some 6 per cent a year. Six per cent a year was the increase in the number of visits over the previous year. We've responded in part by adding additional capital resources to this facility but also by increasing their budget in the magnitude of 12 per cent. So we do recognize that this is a growing area.

Dr. Fields would also be able to tell us with some detail that there are many cancers that are preventable through proper exercise, proper diet, avoiding smoking, and so on and so forth. Don't spend too much time in the sun. I think that it would be very important that we indicate to Albertans that they are a partner in their own personal health and hence their health system as well. So we do want to continue with those messages. It will cost money to do so, but those messages about how individuals in Alberta can take responsibility for their own health will continue to be supported by this government.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Minister, and thank you, Mr. Chairman. Can you tell us how successful the program has been where people can phone in their complaint or their ailment and get help over the phone as compared to walking into an emergency room or doctor's office?

3:20

Mr. Mar: I do not have the exact figures before me at my fingertips, Mr. Chairman, and I could be corrected, but my recollection is that in the first year of the province-wide Health Link line, there were 800,000 calls. I don't know what that translates into in terms of the number of people who used it. There could have been a number of people who used the system many, many times, but 800,000 calls were made.

In terms of the outcomes, of course, people have to recognize that the Health Link system does not replace emergency rooms and that in many cases in those 800,000 calls people still would have been referred to an emergency room. The people at Health Link would have been able to direct them to the best place possible for them to go and get their emergency service. The Health Link line program, which, for those that are not familiar, provides 24 hours a day telephonic doctor-approved, nurse-delivered advice, has demonstrably reduced the growth of unnecessary visits to emergency rooms, so we would call this a great success.

The final thing that I'll say – and this was an extraordinary thing for me to find out – was that the Health Link line can deliver the service to Albertans in over 100 different languages. I think that it is a fair criticism that our health care system does not always serve all Albertans equitably, and to improve access to people who might not have facility in the English language, I think, was another great success.

The final success that I would say of the Health Link system is that some very, very experienced nurses who otherwise would have retired from the health care system because they cannot meet the physical rigours of practising nursing are now providing their service through Health Link. Therefore, we have expanded the longevity of their professional lives, and I think that that has been a very positive outcome as well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. Next I'd like to have the minister explain for us, if he would, the extent that you're investigating the use of user fees and graduated user fees for things like increased use of the health care system or attaching user fees to lifestyle choices like those who are smokers or are obese. Can you tell us how much investigation you've done into that and where you stand on that now?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I cannot confirm a government position on this perspective, which I think should be the function of this committee and this Legislature. I can share, however, some personal perspectives that we should examine how we finance the health care system, that there are jurisdictions in other parts of the world where there is a connection between an individual's utilization of the system and what they pay for the system. The hon. member mentioned, for example, risk factors like smoking. Should there be a connection between what an individual pays for the system based on their risk factors? I think that those are legitimate questions to ask. As a government we have not yet drawn any final conclusions on what may or may not make sense.

Overall, Mr. Chairman, I think that there are a couple of principles that have to be front and centre, the first one being that nobody should ever suffer a financial catastrophe as a result of a health care catastrophe. I think that that is well within the spirit of what Tommy Douglas had in mind when he brought this forward in the House of the Saskatchewan Legislature in 1961, and we agree with that. But in looking at health care systems in other parts of the world, I believe that there are other ways of funding the health care system than simply out of the general revenues of the provincial government. What our final conclusions on that will be has not yet been determined.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. Can you expand for us on just the kinds of options that you're taking a look at? There's of course the private insurance route. There's a direct billing route. There's an incremental cost route. What countries are you looking at? I'm not asking which ones you are going to follow or even highly recommend, but in general which specific styles are you looking at?

Mr. Mar: I think, Mr. Chairman, that there isn't, in the words of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, one particular style that we're looking at. What we are doing, however, is looking at other jurisdictions. Many European jurisdictions, for example, have programs where core services, say, for cancer treatment would be covered by the state, but if you want services that are outside of that core, you pay supplementary health insurance premiums. I think Canadians would be surprised at the wide range of services that are provided within those packages.

So when we look at our budget, of the $8 billion that we spend, almost one-third is on non Canada Health Act related services. One might make the argument that the most critical of those services are those that fall within the Canada Health Act. Perhaps those should be covered by the province or a government, and anything that is outside of those core services ought to be taken care of through some form of supplementary health insurance. That's one iteration of what could happen. I think that's a proposal that's come forward.

But, again, I acknowledge the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie when she says: I'm not asking for what you are you planning on doing. This is simply a consideration that is on the table.

Ms Carlson: Thank you for that information. When would you anticipate would be the first possible release of a new health reform package by the government?

Mr. Mar: By the end of June of this year.

Ms Carlson: And will we see the release of the Graydon report prior to that date or at all?

Mr. Mar: It will be prior to that date, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Carlson: While we're on reform and fees, I just want to ask: do you anticipate as a part of that reform that you'll be talking about dealing with Alberta health care fees at that time?

Mr. Mar: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman; I didn't quite catch the last part of that question.

Ms Carlson: It's with regard to the Alberta health care fees. Are you looking at the premiums that we pay? Will that be a part of your reform package?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I think that there have been many legitimate questions raised here. I think it's a legitimate question to be asking: how will we fund our health care system? It's a legitimate question to ask whether health care premiums should increase. It's an equally legitimate question to ask: should they be eliminated altogether? So both of those considerations are on the table, sir.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the minister's comments, his answers to the questions, and I look forward to the opportunity to ask him a few questions myself.

The first question I have is on the notion that increases in health care spending are normally presented as a percentage of total government expenditures. So it goes from, you know, 40 per cent of total government expenditures to 50 per cent, or whatever the figures may be. I wonder if the minister can comment on the suggestion that as a percentage of the gross domestic product – that is, the total economic output of the province or the country – health care spending has remained relatively constant and that it has been reductions in other government expenditures during the 1990s that contributed to the perception that the proportion going to health care has risen, because health care spending has not been cut as much as other areas.

Generally, what I want to start with, Mr. Chairman, is the general notion that health care spending is out of control. Maybe the minister could comment on what areas in particular have driven the increases. Have they been able to identify those?

For example, the aging population is certainly one. I think he's touched on that relative to cancer rates and so on. Certainly drug costs, technology, and the distinction between what would be considered a core service and something else. Normally an example of that would be heart surgery or cancer treatment, on the one hand, and cosmetic surgery not related to disfigurement but cosmetic surgery for the enhancement of one's personal appearance, on the other. So I wonder if he can say where the government is looking at drawing the lines in those sorts of things.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hon. member's questions. I will say this about gross domestic product and expressing health care expenditures as a percentage of GDP. I first give the disclaimer that I'm not well versed in the science of economics, but I can say that gross domestic product is not the same as having money in the bank. You cannot pay out of gross domestic product. We pay out of the revenues that the government of Alberta or any government across Canada would collect from its taxpayers, and the notion that some suggest, that the Alberta provincial government is driving this agenda to suggest that we've got a crisis in health care funding – if that's true, then apparently we've been able to persuade everybody across Canada of exactly the same thing.

The reality is that whether you're a minister of health for the province of Saskatchewan, an NDP government, or Manitoba, an NDP government, or a Liberal government in Ontario or British Columbia, we are all facing the same challenges. Health care spending is outpacing the growth of government revenues in all those provincial governments that I just gave as examples, in fact I'd suggest to you in all 10 provinces and three territories across Canada.

As far as the cost drivers in health care I appreciate this question as well, and I would be happy to forward a copy to the hon. member's office of a report done by the Conference Board of Canada that sets out some of the cost drivers and escalators in the health care system. He identified one quite capably. When we talk about aging, I think that people understand that as we get older, we tend to use more of the health care system and particularly in the latter parts of our lives. As our population ages so, too, does our utilization and costs associated with health care.

Drugs have gone up an average of 17 per cent in each of the last five years. I think it's a legitimate question to ask: are we spending too much on drugs? It's an equally legitimate question in some cases to ask: are we spending enough on drugs? There are examples where utilization of drugs can actually lower our overall costs of delivery of health care. So we have to look at that issue carefully.

Technology. New services that were not even thought of even 10 years ago are now available that are costlier than what we do now. An example of that would be the Birmingham hip. Ten years ago the Birmingham hip did not exist, and today it does exist, and it is costlier than the standard prosthetic that is covered under the health care system.

Home care is another area that's grown dramatically. Costs in that area have gone up in rough terms about 15 per cent on average over the last five years.

These are all areas that are resulting in health care spending being much greater than the normal rate of inflation and greater than the rate of growth of our population.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the minister's response to those questions.

I would like to ask the minister about the federal contributions. They've given an additional $228 million, $200 million of which is coming from the promised payout of the federal government's surplus. This has been declared a one-time payment, and for some reason the department seems to have slotted this under the heading Other.

The total federal contribution, now at $1,625,112,000, amounts to 20.27 per cent of the Alberta Health and Wellness budget including capital investment. I'm just wondering what the use is of this one-time money. Is the government taking steps to try and ensure that this payout becomes a permanent and ongoing transfer?

I recall – and I'm sure the minister is very much aware of this – that medicare was originally established as a 50-50 cost-shared program. What's his sense of what the federal government's stance is now with respect to meeting its commitments? I know that there were some negotiations a couple of years ago and lots of fanfare about the federal government starting to recognize its responsibility and so on, but I think it's been coming rather slowly.

Does it look like the federal government will be placing any strings on the federal money? Will it be available for just about anything that would be allowed under the principles of medicare, or has the government been pushing them to allow different uses for the money than originally envisaged by the Canada Health Act?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me say that it is very difficult to know exactly where the federal government is right now. I can tell you where the provinces are at. The provinces are at the recognition that there's no credibility in saying that you're interested in a 10-year sustainable program for health with $2 billion in one-time-only funding. So the provinces and territories continue to push forward on health reform in their own jurisdictions, Alberta included.

Let me give you an example of why it's difficult to know exactly where the federal government is going. Yesterday the federal Minister of Health spoke before the Standing Committee on Health. I have a copy of the Hansard here before me. It's titled Standing Committee on Health, evidence number 12, unedited copy. So this is the equivalent of their Blues.

Following his comments in here and questions that were asked of him and in the media questions that Minister Pettigrew, the federal Minister of Health, answered, this is what he said.

Public administration is the principle, not public ownership. There's a difference between public ownership and public administration.

If . . . provinces want to experiment with the private delivery option, my view is that as long as they respect the single-payer, public payer, we should be examining these efforts. And then compare notes between provinces whether . . . it doesn't work. If it doesn't work, they'll [have to stop]. But if it works, we'll all learn something.

So the federal Minister of Health yesterday stated that they were interested in the possibility of experimenting with private deliverers of services within a single-payer model, meaning that like our Health Care Protection Act you would allow private surgical facilities to be under contract to regional health authorities. Today he completely did a 180-degree turn on that.

It's obviously very frustrating to know where the federal government stands and its policy in terms of commitments that it might make to money and commitments that it might make to real reform of the health care system. We're accustomed to sometimes having the federal government say one thing and then change its mind and do something else several months later. It's not very often that it happens within a 16-hour period.

Now, as far as the dollars go, the federal contribution of $2 billion, Alberta's share of that is in the magnitude of $200 million. Again, what we spend per day is in the magnitude of $22 million a day. You can see that the federal government's share, its contribution to Alberta of an additional $200 million doesn't really amount to that much reform. It'll help pay for another eight or 10 days of health care.

The Conference Board of Canada report that I referred you to earlier suggests that some $5 billion is needed on an annual basis by the provinces just to keep the system as it is now, and that's without trying to put money into improving access or improving quality or expanding services.

So in answering your question – will we continue to press the federal government for a greater contribution? – the answer is yes, we will, but Alberta won't be alone in making that request. We'll be shoulder to shoulder with other provinces who'll be making the same press of the federal government.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for that answer.

I'd like to just touch on another matter which has to do with people's need to access health care in – I'm searching for the right words: a considerable, intense requirement to receive health care services. Just to indicate that about two years ago the New Democrat caucus had a round-table with a number of health experts including people from the health care system and people who were academics and so on. One of the interesting things that we were told is that in terms of dollars the average person consumes about 80 per cent of the health care that they receive in their lifetime in the last year of their life. Now, I don't know if that's absolutely true, but I suspect that there is a very significant element of truth to that statement.

That puts the suggestion that we ought to limit people's access to health care to a certain fixed amount of money in a given year in quite a different light.

I just wonder if the minister could comment on whether or not that aspect has been taken into account. Surely if you're in the last year of your life or the last period of your life and you really need a lot of health care, such a system would quickly break down or, alternatively, create considerable problems, indeed suffering on the part of individuals who needed a large amount of health care as they approached the end of their life. So I wonder if the minister could comment on that.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, this is a very, very difficult issue to deal with, as I think everybody in this Assembly would recognize, and that would be regardless of the political banner that we carry. We don't deal particularly well with end-of-life issues. We know that, for example, the average cost of renal dialysis is somewhere in the range of $50,000 per person per year. That is very, very costly care. It perhaps yields two responses. There are some that would suggest that perhaps we shouldn't be providing the service. There are others who would suggest, I think perhaps with more public support, that this statistic should focus our attention on the need for trying to avoid the need for dialysis in the first place. I think that most people find that to be a more palatable approach to how you deal with end-of-life issues.

I've heard Dr. Mo Watanabe, a very well-respected physician in the city of Calgary, say that an ideal health care system would promote a long, long, long, healthy life where people would die instantly. They would not die lingering deaths. They would not suffer pain, but they would be healthy right up until the day that they died. That would be an ideal world. We don't live in an ideal world. If the hon. member has any suggestions for how we deal with end-of-life issues, because I think that there is some merit to his idea that there's a large percentage of health care dollars spent in the last year or the last months of life, I'd welcome him to share them with us because I'd be more than happy to entertain them.

Mr. Mason: Just to clarify, Mr. Chairman. The real concern is the notion that in a bid to control health care costs you would somehow place a limit on how much value or money's worth of health care someone could get at the public expense in a given year. So the concept that you consume – and I hate to use that term – 80 per cent of the value of the health care that you use in your entire life in your last year of life would seem to suggest that such a notion would be nonfunctional and not of very much value because it would only kick in in the last, you know, period of your life, and then it would be a tremendous barrier to receiving the care that you need.

Mr. Mar: Perhaps I misunderstood the hon. member's question when he first asked it. If he's suggesting that we are going to entertain a notion that an individual should be entirely responsible for the cost of their health care in the last part of their life, the answer is no. It would offend the original principle that I set out in answering the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie's question when I said that a financial catastrophe should not follow upon a health catastrophe. If an individual is suffering from a terminal disease and incurring a great deal of cost, it would not be our consideration to bankrupt such an individual as a result of their health catastrophe. In any form of patient participation in the financing of the health care system, there have to be limits on the amount that such an individual would contribute to their own services at any stage of their life.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to ask some information on any public/private partnerships that you may be looking at in health services now. Are there specific areas that you're looking at? In the process of making these decisions, are you looking at specific studies or reports that you could make public to us?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, from the perspective of the Minister of Health and Wellness I am more interested in the delivery of health services. As far as an edifice may go for the provision of those services, such as a P3 hospital, that is not really something that I've devoted a great deal of attention to. It's more within the purview of my friend and colleague the Minister of Infrastructure.

I know that there have been some examples of P3s that have been examined in the United Kingdom. Some have worked; some have not worked. Similarly, there have been proposals for P3s by a Conservative government as it then was in the province of Ontario and the current Liberal government in the province of British Columbia. But I'm not intimately familiar with plans that the Minister of Infrastructure may have for P3 hospitals or anything else.

I'm focused on the delivery of the service. How the edifice is paid for and provided for is not really within my scope of expertise.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Minister, can you tell us how much participation the Premier's new chief of staff will have in leading or participating in the health reforms that we're going to see in the next year?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I can't answer that question on behalf of either the Premier or his chief of staff, Dr. West. My opinion, though, is that a chief of staff is there to facilitate the policy directions of a government. He is not there to create policy; he is there to facilitate it so that the expressions of government policy are seen through.

Ms Carlson: Thank you for that.

Mr. Chairman, I'd now like to ask a little bit about the Alberta Blue Cross Review Committee. We saw that committee last year recommend that Alberta Blue Cross should retain its tax-exempt status, but then instead you chose to take away the Blue Cross tax-exempt status and introduce that payment-in-lieu-of-tax program. My question is: has the minister looked at the potential cost to government as an employer to pay the employee's share of increased Alberta Blue Cross insurance premiums for those government employees now covered by Alberta Blue Cross?

Mr. Mar: There is a cost associated with that, Mr. Chairman. I can say that the reason why that payment in lieu of taxes was put in was so that the private-sector services provided by Alberta Blue Cross would be on a level playing field with other providers of similar types of insurance. With respect to the exact number I will have to get back to the hon. member.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for that. Then can you tell us with regard to this: have you looked at whether the increased Alberta Blue Cross premium will have an effect on negotiations between the government and workers like the APE workers? I would expect that there would be some impact on those negotiations.

Mr. Mar: That may be so, Mr. Chairman, but the amount is relatively small, and I wouldn't expect that that impact would be particularly onerous.

Ms Carlson: Okay. One more. I'll just finish this. Still on the Alberta Blue Cross Review Committee recommendation 5 there is for the minister to negotiate agreements solely with Alberta Blue Cross, as is quoted from the report, "until such time as the Minister deems it would be in the best interests of Albertans to tender the Agreement." When we see this tax-exempt status withdrawn and the requirement is to pay the 2 per cent premium tax, what advantages are there left as you see them?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I can say that the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, who was responsible for this review, would be able to answer this question with a great deal more completeness than I possibly could hope to. I would say to you, hon. member and Mr. Chairman, that the review was done in a very, very thorough way. It did not yield what I thought it would yield. I thought that it would be found that Alberta Blue Cross would not have any advantages in the provision of its services, but it in fact has demonstrated itself to be a very good organization. As a consequence, I've seen no compelling reason at this time to put the work that's done by Alberta Blue Cross out to tender. But, again, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed would be able to identify those advantages much better than I could ever hope to.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, one final question from me, and it's still on this particular issue. Then is it possible for us to get a list of the people who presented or who were in correspondence with this particular committee so that we have a better feel for what actually happened there?

Mr. Mar: I can take that question under advice, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Just following up on the questions, actually, concerning Blue Cross. I appreciate that the minister wasn't leading that review, so he may not be able to answer, but he may be able to.

One of the disadvantages of a nonprofit group such as Blue Cross is that they're unable to raise capital through an equity issue. They aren't able to issue stocks, for example, to raise capital that way. That means that they always have to borrow money, which adds to their operating costs compared to a for-profit corporation, which can raise capital through issuing shares. Is the minister aware at all if that issue was factored into the decisions of the committee?

Mr. Mar: Not to the best of my recollection of all the discussions that I've had on the subject.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Boy, where to begin? Well, there are some reforms underway through this government on the health care system. One that the minister's very proud of, and maybe in the long run rightly so, is the development of the electronic health records. I don't believe those have been discussed yet today.

I can understand the appeal of this reform and the kind of excitement it generates. At the same time, it makes me nervous, makes me concerned for two or three reasons. One is that it tends to be the case, in my experience, that where an organization leads the process of developing major new electronic applications, they end up paying the costs of the mistakes and the development costs. At times the costs can actually soar unbelievably, and the timelines can stretch out, and all kinds of complications can arise.

I'm also concerned because as I think about the sheer scale of health information generated every day in Alberta through all the visits to the doctors and all the lab tests and all the hospital procedures, I picture an incredibly big, complicated system. Frankly, you know, when I watch a little PC crash when it's overloaded, I worry about: how big is this system going to get? How much is it going to cost? What's the backup provision going to be? Does it all have to be on paper in case the computer goes down? So I have real concerns about the costs of developing the electronic health records, particularly if we're the province leading the way.

Maybe we can spend a few minutes to and fro on this. Has there been some genuine cost-benefit analysis done? Do we have any sense – clear, firm, well-documented sense – of what an electronic health records system will provide as compared to what it will cost?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, this is a difficult question to answer. Let me try and preface it by saying that I share some of his concerns. I believe that when you do embark on a program as large as this, you have to be cautious. We witnessed examples in other jurisdictions right here in Canada where large-scale information technology programs have failed. Notably, I think, in the province of Manitoba, where some $60 million was spent in that province on IT initiatives that ended up being written off by their Treasury Board.

I think that we've learned from that, and we structure our agreements with our service providers better.

That's not to say that we get it perfect. We don't always have exactly what it is that we need.

4:00

Overall, my focus is on the delivery of better outcomes in health care services. Every time we can use an electronic health record to avoid a drug interaction that will be bad, every time we can avoid an unnecessary diagnostic test, every time we have our pharmacists hooked up with our physicians and our physicians linked up with our laboratories, that is not only cost-effective; it's better patient care as well. If we can use our electronic health system in physicians' offices so that the very best of clinical practice guidelines can be at a physician's fingertips while they are in the examining room with their patient, that will provide better health outcomes.

So I look at it not only from the point of view of cost effectiveness from avoiding unnecessary tests and avoiding bad drug interactions; I also look at it from the point of view of the value that it can provide. As far as being cautious, I agree. We do have to be cautious, and we are being cautious, and as best we can, we've learned from the mistakes of others and endeavoured not to repeat them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few brief things, Minister, and I would just like to get a sense from you of where we might be at.

As you know, I have an urban city inside a rural riding, 24,000 people living in Airdrie, and we have virtually no health care delivery in Airdrie other than our doctors that are there as well as our paramedics. For a number of years now we have been trying as a community – that would also include health care delivery for Crossfield and the rural area surrounding Airdrie as well as Beiseker, Balzac – to get an indication on when we can anticipate that there might be something that would help us deal with 24-hour emergency care. So the question from my constituents is: when is something going to happen?

I'm wondering, Minister, if you could give us a sense of when the diagnostic and treatment centre that would service not only the Harvest Hills area of Calgary but would also serve my constituency might be announced or be ready for development. Also, if there's been any consideration at all, in fact, to utilizing the paramedic service in Airdrie, which is an incredible advanced life-support system, as a way of trying to provide some cover-off to people between the hours of, say, midnight and six in the morning prior to the doctors' offices opening. So I'd just be grateful for any ideas you might have on that.

Mr. Mar: This is one of the questions, Mr. Chairman, that often dogs MLAs who are responsible for areas like the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View. I know the minister responsible for Children's Services also has this issue as it relates to people in Strathcona county. Now, in the case of Airdrie it's a population of roughly 10,000 or 12,000 people?

Ms Haley: Twenty-four thousand.

Mr. Mar: Twenty-four thousand people in the overall area. It's a large area. In the Strathcona county area it's probably in the magnitude of 50,000 or 60,000, but the same question persists. What I can say is that there are examples where people in such communities that are just outside of the major cities are able to have their health care needs met.

In Strathcona county there's a clinic that's open after doctors' normal clinic office hours, and we're looking at how that's providing services to people in that area. It's open late at night, and the early indication appears to be that in combination with our Health Link line it's providing very good services to the people in the county of Strathcona.

What I'm hoping is that the good experiences there that are the result of an innovative idea set up by the Capital health authority in the city of Edmonton would be, in fact, learned by the Calgary health region and that a similar or analogous type of program might be exactly what's needed to serve the people in the area of Airdrie. The hon. member and I share a boundary at the Calgary city limit. That kind of service would equally be applicable to the people who live in my riding and right in my own home community of Harvest Hills.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask the minister about his view of the future of a couple of models of health care delivery which are quite similar, but there are important differences. In my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands there exists the Boyle-McCauley health centre, which is a nonprofit, community-based clinic which provides tremendous services to residents of the inner city and has many specialized programs related to their needs, and that includes around substance abuse and HIV. There are a number of programs as well for seniors in the area. It's my belief that this is perhaps one of the most cost-effective and sensitive delivery systems in the entire province.

Another one is the Northeast health centre, which was originally started by the Royal Alexandra hospital, which later became the Capital health authority, and it was based on needs in urban areas. At that time the needs assessment showed that in Edmonton there were no medical specialists whatsoever north of 118th Avenue. This spoke to the need for this type of facility. There were particular needs, including dental, where there were tremendous deficiencies. It's a little different than the Boyle-McCauley health centre. It's operated directly by the health authority. It's bigger. It's 24 hours. It's got an emergency room and so on.

Does the minister see these particular models of health care delivery as worthy of further development and ways in which we can deliver sensitive, community-based health care in a cost-effective and nonprofit fashion?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister, followed by the Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Mar: The short answer is yes, Mr. Chairman. I note that right in the hon. member's own question he acknowledges that they are two very different models. I think that that's an important acknowledgment to make because as a provincial government we recognize that there may be many different models for the effective delivery of health care and that the nonprofit models as set out at Boyle-McCauley and the one run by the regional health authority, the Northeast clinic, are two examples of services that seem to be provided in a very cost-effective way. Both of those examples have been cited not only by me but by federal Minister of Health Anne McLellan, as she then was, in comments made in other parts of Canada as being the kinds of innovations that we would want to emulate across Canada.

Within Alberta we are starting to learn from these examples. We compare that with primary health care that's delivered through medicentres, which don't appear to be particularly cost-effective by comparison. So we do learn from these comparisons, and we look at what has happened since the time Boyle-McCauley and the Northeast clinic have emerged. There have been other examples here in Alberta of similar types of models. The Crowfoot Centre in Calgary is an example of a different way of looking at primary health care.

Our whole AMA agreement is helping to drive different models of primary care delivery where we might have multiple health care providers working as a team in delivering services, which is exactly what is done in the models that the hon. member identified. In our budget for physicians' services we have $100 million set aside for physicians to use that money to hire the services of other health care professionals so that they can be encouraged to work in multidisciplinary teams. Now, I know that this is not exactly on point, but I think it's illustrative.

I often use the example of two doctors that I have, Dr. Wong and Dr. Wong. Leo is my dentist in Calgary. Paul is my physician here in Edmonton. When I go to Leo's office in Calgary, I get my teeth cleaned by a dental hygienist, and nobody ever complains about remunerating Leo's office for services provided by someone other than Leo. In fact, the hygienist might even do a better job than Leo does of cleaning my teeth. By comparison, when I go and see my physician, Paul, we only remunerate Paul's office when Paul performs the service even though I know that my flu vaccination could be competently dealt with by a licensed practical nurse or an RN or a nurse practitioner.

So the purpose of our hundred million dollars for local primary care initiatives is to encourage physicians to group together and pool their money so that they might be able to purchase the services of physiotherapists or chiropractors or licensed practical nurses. The average full-time physician carries a roster of about 2,000 patients, so if you had five doctors pooling together, that would be 10,000 patients times the $50 per patient that they would be able to get out of this hundred million dollar pool. That would be a half a million dollars collectively that these physicians could use to have the resources to pay for a licensed practical nurse so that that person could do all the flu vaccines for their 10,000 patients.

So we are moving in the direction of encouraging models like the two that you described, and we're putting our money where our mouth is, as well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to ask a few questions of the minister as well and comment on the budget. It's obviously an area that my constituents in Calgary-Currie have a great interest in. In fact, we even have an upcoming town hall meeting, which I really appreciate the minister's assistance with.

For the questions I have to ask, I'm not sure if the minister would have all the facts and figures at his fingertips today, so I would certainly be satisfied, if he doesn't, with perhaps answers that could just be provided at a later date. I guess to save a little time today, I'll just ask all those questions, and then if the minister does want to comment, that would be fine.

Now, health care costs and health care spending are obviously very difficult areas for us to try and contain costs in as a society. I mean, part of the difficulty that we have, really, is wrestling with the value of saving a known life versus a statistical life. The usual example given in that regard, of course, is: do we spend millions saving the life of a little girl dying of cancer knowing that the same amount of money invested in guardrails and better roads might in fact save dozens of lives instead? But, of course, one is a known life; the other one is a statistical life. So we have incredibly difficult challenges as a society to wrestle with those very hard emotional choices and trade-offs.

My first question, I guess, to the minister just in regard to, perhaps, some other areas that we might look at in treating some of the causes of these cost drivers in health care as opposed to treating symptoms. I'm wondering if the minister is aware of any studies or evidence to support the notion that doctors may be running more tests than necessary, unnecessary medical tests, because of fear of malpractice lawsuits. If there were evidence to that effect, then perhaps we should be looking at legal reforms as opposed to just spending more money continuing to do tests that perhaps are not providing much benefit. So that'd be my first question.

My second: is it true – and I've seen evidence to the effect – that Canada is now spending more money as a percentage of GDP than any other country except the United States? I'm wondering how Alberta's expenditures as a percentage of GDP, now and projected into the future, stand up to that of, for example, Britain's expenditures or Japan's expenditures as a per cent of GDP.

Another question: is there any evidence to support the notion that – you know, a built bed is a filled bed I think is the cliché – the more you choose to spend, the more you have to spend in future? Sort of like, you know, feeding a growing dragon in that the more you feed it, the more it grows; the more it grows, the hungrier it gets, the more you have to feed it. So by refusing to cap our percentage of GDP expenditures on health, are we creating something similar to the mythical Hydra, that you cut off one head and you get two and so on?

The other question I'd like some information on if possible: is it true that despite all our spending and the spending that the United States is spending, the life expectancy and the health care outcomes are virtually no different than for Britain or Japan or most other developed nations? I mean, how does Canada rate in that regard? How does Alberta rate within Canada in regard to health outcomes as compared to some of these other nations? Is it true that British doctors are apparently performing only half the surgeries that American doctors do per capita yet still have almost equal outcomes? I'm wondering how Alberta rates within Canada in that regard in that similar comparison.

I guess, you know, there's evidence that Japan performs in fact only a tiny fraction of the surgeries that we do and has been criticized for it, even called backward for it. However, it seems that their health care expenditures are about a third or more less as a percentage of their GDP, and their health care outcomes are the best in the world. So that really starts to beg the question: is there an issue about maybe more surgeries being performed than necessary? Of course, there are epidemiological studies that indicate that 20 per cent and maybe even 50 per cent, as I understand it, of surgeries performed cannot be claimed to have statistically significantly affected the outcomes, meaning that these costly surgeries may have not done much good.

Of course, that brings up, you know, a number of questions around health care outcomes. In fact, what are the iatrogenic complications and maybe negative health outcomes of these surgeries? I understand – and I guess there was some media recently that the minister may be aware of – that there are some committees and that there are in other countries other committees and studies ongoing in regard to iatrogenic complications. I'm wondering if perhaps some of that could be looked into or explained. What are the results, if any, at this point?

I guess that in defence of our current health care system and our expenditures, are the expectations that the public has as to outcomes perhaps too high? Do we ask too much of our health care system? I haven't got the study, but I understand that, actually, mountain climbing is safer than some surgeries are, yet we expect 100 per cent results every time of all surgeries. I mean, people have very, very high expectations of our health care system. Has that been really addressed? Should we perhaps be looking at a little bit of awareness and education of the public into what the risks really are, into what we can expect? You know, is the idea that we can expect perfect results every single time no matter what it costs, especially when to the individual it's free, really a realistic sort of expectation to have on our health care system?

With that, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate all the comments and support from my colleagues as well.

Mr. Mar: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie was right: I don't have all those at my fingertips. But maybe I'll address the issue of expectations first.

People do have high expectations of our health care system, and they should. They should have high expectations of our health care system, but they should have equally high expectations of their own responsibility for their health. When we survey Albertans, the overwhelming majority of Albertans say: I'm in very good or excellent health. Some 90 per cent of Albertans will say: I'm in very good or excellent health. That's the reason why when we say, "You've got to take responsibility for your own health," they don't think that message is being directed at them.

The reality is that the majority of people in this province could be doing a better job with respect to what they eat, their regular exercise. We demand accountability out of physicians, out of nurses, out of our health care regions and appropriately so. We demand accountability out of the people in this Legislature and the people who work in our Department of Health and Wellness and appropriately so. My question is: when will we be asking for accountability of the user of the system? That is a critical question that I think needs to be asked as an important policy point.

Are doctors running more tests than necessary because of the practice of defensive medicine? I haven't seen any statistics to suggest that, but I can suggest to you anecdotally, based on discussions that I've had with many physicians, that the answer is yes. I think that it speaks to the reason why we need to continue to focus on clinical practice guidelines. I would want individuals who are using the health care system to have the demonstrably best practice of a treatment protocol used with them. I'm not interested in what Dr. Brown's or Dr. Smith's protocol is. I'm interested in what is the best demonstrated protocol of the treatment of my particular condition.

Are we spending more as a percentage of gross domestic product? I don't know what the answer to that question is, but as in responding to the hon. member from the third party, I think that that's a bit of a red herring. I don't think that the expression of health care expenditures as a percentage of gross domestic product is a particularly useful measurement of anything.

On your comment that a bed built is a bed filled, I think that there are other jurisdictions and other health systems in the world where we can show that there are fewer beds per thousand than we have here in Alberta. Even here in Alberta I think that there are examples where the aggressive pursuit of a policy of using designated assisted living, in the Chinook health region, has reduced the real needs for more hospitals to be built in that area. I think that there are things that we can learn right here, from inside the province, where we could be doing a better job.

On the subject of health outcomes you talked about Japan and Great Britain. If we look at the OECD comparisons of health care systems, according to the rankings done by the Conference Board of Canada, Canada is the third highest per capita spender, and we would be among the highest among provinces and territories within Canada. Yet our results as a nation are ranked at about only number 13. Now, we can argue – we can debate whether or not the criteria that were used to rank those nations were proper or not – but we should be motivated at least to find out what is being done with respect to health care delivery in other jurisdictions.

Why does Japan, why does Sweden, why does France get good outcomes that seem to be better than those that we have? There may be some things that are cultural that we ultimately can't compare. I think the diet of people in France and Japan is quite different than the North American diet. It leads us to ask the question: should we be doing something to dissuade North Americans or Albertans from eating the kind of diet that we have here on this continent, or are there other solutions? I think that the inquiry into the outcomes achieved by other jurisdictions compels us to pose important questions as to how we can learn from their experiences and, if applicable, put them in place here in Alberta.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to raise an issue that's extremely pertinent to the budget discussion, which is the entire budget process between the department and the regional health authorities. I know that I had contacts from RHAs across the province last year that even in the third quarter and possibly the fourth quarter but certainly well into the third quarter of last year the RHAs were still waiting for their budgets to be approved. They were getting pretty frustrated because they weren't sure what their plans were. They were expected to live up to delivering services, but the final budget decisions hadn't been made. I assume that eventually those got resolved, but my question to the minister again now is: when will the process of sorting out and finalizing the RHAs' budgets and the minister signing those off be completed in this budget year?

Mr. Mar: The regional health authorities already know as of today what their allocations are going to be in the current budget.

Dr. Taft: So this debate, then, is pretty academic.

I just need to confirm that the minister is stating that he has approved the budgets of the RHAs as of today and that they're finalized. That's what I heard him say.

Mr. Mar: What I've indicated, Mr. Chairman, is that we have advised the regional health authorities what their allocation of resources will be. On average it was 8.5 per cent. In the case of the Cancer Board it was higher; it was 12 per cent. But each entity knows today what they will be allocated. Their responsibility now is to come back with a business plan for how they will spend it and deal with the needs of the people that they serve within their budget envelopes.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. I'd like to go two or three questions back in the exchange to another of the minister's favourite projects and one that I think is pretty interesting, which is primary care reform. Like the minister, I share his concern that we need to reform the primary care system, and I think the commitment of some extra money to that – $100 million is a lot of money actually – is a good one.

The one concern I have is that it is, as I understand it, channelled entirely through the physician side of the health care system. In other words, the $100 million will have to be channelled through individual or groups of local MDs rather than, for example, a group of RNs or nurse practitioners or somebody else coming together and applying for some of this $100 million. Can the minister confirm or correct me on that view? That's where we'll start.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, for budget purposes it is all coming through the medical services budget. But keep in mind, as I indicated at the outset of my comments, that this is a tripartite agreement with the regional health authorities, the physicians, and the government of Alberta. So the involvement of groups like nurse practitioners or other health care providers who would want to provide primary care would be co-ordinated through the regional health authority. The regional health authority would have to be satisfied that such a local primary care initiative in fact set out appropriate criteria for what such an LPCI would accomplish and that there would be the need for a plan for how that LPCI would provide 24-hour primary health care, what kind of providers it would use, and so on and so forth.

So there will be ample involvement of these other health professionals, other than just physicians, within these LPCIs. But he's right that for budget purposes it does come through the medical services budget.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Just for my clarification, I understand that there are the RHAs, the doctors, and the department involved in this process, but would it be possible – and this is hypothetical; I hope that's allowed here – for a group of nurse practitioners, for example, perhaps going through the RHA, to directly tap into this funding, or would they have to have a medical organization, a doctors' organization, between them and the funding?

Mr. Mar: It would have to be done with the co-operation of a physician group.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Calgary health region and the Capital health region and perhaps all of them are always looking for new options and opportunities to bring extra revenue into the system. One of the interesting things the Capital health region has done, as I understand it, is to contract with the Workers' Compensation Board to provide joint surgery and other significant surgeries to Workers' Comp clients and bill the Workers' Compensation Board and, as a result, earn a substantial amount of money. I can't remember exactly how much it is, but it's I think quite a few millions of dollars. As far as I know, everybody's pretty happy with the arrangement: Workers' Compensation, the Capital health region, and presumably the patients.

Is the minister aware of a similar kind of initiative at all out of the Calgary health region to try to bring the Workers' Compensation surgical work into the Calgary health region in a similar way to what's done in Edmonton?

4:30

Mr. Mar: Not that I'm aware of, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Taft: Does the minister have a role in encouraging a health region to undertake that sort of initiative? Clearly, the Calgary health region is looking for business opportunities. If there's one involving the WCB that's worked out extremely well in Edmonton, does the minister have a role to say: hey, why don't you folks in these other regions look at the same model?

Mr. Mar: The answer is yes, Mr. Chairman. We do try and facilitate that through regular meetings with regional health authorities, but regional health authorities themselves take the opportunity to meet from time to time. The hon. member may be familiar with the Council of Chairs, which is a council of all of the chairs of regional health authorities throughout the province who meet on a regular basis, and they take the opportunities to share their best practices. I hope that we are able to extend those practices not only to matters as they might relate to revenue generation but also to practices as they might relate, for example, to the safe handling of potassium-containing solutions that may be in a central laboratory in a hospital.

We are meeting regularly. I think that those exchanges do take place. There may be WCB work done in the Calgary health region. If there is, I'll certainly advise the hon. member by correspondence. But that I'm aware of, it hasn't been done thus far, and I don't know what the reason would be or if the circumstances exist for them to be able to take advantage of that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. There's been a lot of talk here about better health outcomes or sometimes disappointing outcomes in comparison to other developed countries. I'm not sure exactly which outcomes we're talking about, but I think we could also focus a lot more on better inputs. By that, I mean improving the health of the people who go into the health care system or perhaps don't need the health care system because they're healthier. Again, I'm being very generous to the minister today. He's shown some initiative and interest in that and has moved some issues forward in terms of healthy living – tobacco use abatement, I think, is very important – and a number of other issues.

What is the current status of the wellness fund? Is there any hope of that getting established and growing into something that I think the minister might like to see and certainly I would eagerly support?

Mr. Mar: I continue to advocate for it, but there are no plans for it at this time.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. The issue of conflict of interest is one that I've raised quite a number of times in this Assembly and even brought in a private member's bill on the issue, although it didn't get very far. I have a particular concern about this issue in relation to the Calgary health region, but it applies across the board, and I think there's a need in the health care system to directly and courageously address conflict-of-interest issues in the same way that the legal profession has had to address them, the accounting profession and other professions.

Now, I do understand that there have been internal discussions and debates in the Calgary health region on conflict-of-interest policies, and from time to time in the last year those have gone up to the minister's office for signing and approval. I'm not sure, actually, where they stand right now. Maybe the minister can provide some information on that.

I raise this in the context of a budget debate because I'm concerned that until we get the conflict-of-interest lines clearly drawn for the medical profession in general and particularly for physicians in senior and influential positions in regional health authorities, we may be contributing to the cost pressures because we are having people who actually have a vested interest in costs going up.

Has the Calgary health region finalized its conflict-of-interest policy, and has the minister signed that off?

Mr. Mar: I'll have to reply to the hon. Leader of the Opposition by written response to that question.

Dr. Taft: All right.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate, the questioning? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The regional health authority boundaries were changed exactly a year ago, as I recall, and there was inevitably the to and fro around how those boundaries were drawn. There was some question in particular about I think region 7, just north of Edmonton, the very stretched out one. My question is essentially this. Has the department done any work that would indicate whether there's been administrative efficiencies or losses as a result of the change in the regional health authorities? Have those changes made for more efficient health care expenditures or not?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, this is an interesting question in this context. Earlier this week members of the ALS Society came to meet with many members of the Legislative Assembly, and they outlined that one of the key challenges put forward by their group was the differing levels of support for people suffering from ALS throughout the province. They said that when you are on one side of the boundary of a particular health region, you might get one service, and on the other side of the boundary you might get another service.

We can't look at the boundary simply as an academic exercise or simply as one of administrative savings. We also have to look at how it may improve the equity of delivery of services throughout the province. Within larger regions you'll have fewer conflicts between the kinds of services that you might receive. We still want to strive to have a completely seamless health care system whereby an individual with ALS or any other chronic disease would be able to access on an equitable basis, perhaps not an equal basis but an equitable basis, services regardless of where in the province they lived.

So one of the most important outcomes of reducing the number of regional health authorities is that we are starting to make our services more equitable. We've got some work to do, but we are doing a better job as a result of having nine health regions now instead of 17.

Dr. Taft: If the minister has any studies to confirm that, I'd be very interested in any cost-benefit analyses or anything like that, any review going back and saying, "Okay. Are these boundaries right, or can we tweak them a little bit more?" That would be helpful.

I know the question of ambulance services came up earlier this week in question period, and it's certainly one that's come to our caucus a number of times, concerns on how the transfer will be handled and what the plan actually is. It's of great concern to the people right at the front lines understandably. It's a genuinely tough issue; I acknowledge that.

One of the questions that has come up to us – I think it was raised at least in general in question period a couple of days ago, but I need a clearer answer here from the minister. When ambulance services are turned over to a regional health authority, the concern is that they will then have to compete with heart surgery or pediatrics or everything else for priority on the list of spending. What precautions or safeguards if any is the minister putting on the transfer of ambulance services to ensure that they will get a fair shake, or is that decision being given over to the RHAs in its entirety?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, we'll want to be careful to do this in a proper way, and that's the reason why we're taking one year to make the transition from where we are today to where it is that we want to be. Over that period of time I imagine that municipalities or regional health authorities may make the argument that they want that funding enveloped, that it will be for the dedicated purposes of running ambulances. Certainly, if they make that recommendation to me, I'd give that serious consideration. It seems to me to make sense.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few questions before we conclude for today. I'd like to ask some questions on the money being spent in primary care, if I can. I refer the minister to page 198 in the estimates, where we see that primary care is receiving quite a large increase, going from $8 million last year to $20.5 million in the year 2004-2005. We would like to get a breakdown of what these costs will be and how much of it is going to be directed to the local primary care initiatives established under your agreement with the Alberta Medical Association and regional health authorities.

I would expect some of that detail to come in writing, but can you give us an overview of that at this point?

Mr. Mar: The amount that will go to local primary care initiatives is separate and apart from our other reform funds, and it will be in the amount of $100 million. As I indicated earlier, it comes through the budget line of the medical services budget, which in aggregate is in the magnitude of $1.5 billion.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, are there some focus groups being held right now relative to the local primary care initiatives? If so, can you tell us what the purpose is? How many are you holding, and what will be done with that information?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, there are no focus groups for the purposes of designing LPCIs, but I can tell you that there are approximately 12 submissions that have been made by groups for entry into LPCIs. Hopefully, we'll be able to have the first of these, if not most of them, up and running by the end of June, but it remains to be seen. I have not personally seen what these letters of intention have expressed yet, but I'm hoping that we'll be able to move this forward early this summer.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. Then are those letters of intention from independent businesses or consulting groups? Can you expand on that? Also, what participation will community groups or individuals have in this, or will there be no way for them to participate?

Mr. Mar: These will come forward from groups of physicians who believe that they can serve their patients better through an LPCI.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. Will there be any review process, then, for members of the community at large or individuals in this?

Mr. Mar: There are none planned, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Carlson: Thank you for that.

Then I'd like to just talk a bit about: nongroup health benefits, also, has seen quite a substantial increase, as we see it, by more than $77 million. I'm not sure what the nongroup health benefits are. Could you explain that to me and tell me why they're increasing so significantly?

Mr. Mar: I could do that more completely through a written response, but my recollection is that the largest increase in that area is in the area of pharmaceuticals.

Ms Carlson: The largest increase is pharmaceuticals?

Mr. Mar: Yes.

Ms Carlson: So then for people who are accessing benefits, is that what it is? Is it just the increase in cost? Are we seeing an increase in access?

Mr. Mar: I don't have the breakdown between increase in access versus increase in cost. It's something that I could provide to the hon. member.

Ms Carlson: Okay. But essentially you're saying that it's both.

Mr. Mar: Yes.

Ms Carlson: Okay. Good.

Now, can we talk a little bit about West Nile? I know that you're doing some work in conjunction with the Department of Environment here. Everything we hear from the media reports would indicate that the outbreak is expected to be larger this year, perhaps again largest in southern Alberta. Can you give us an update on what your department's doing in that regard?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, we are taking this very seriously, and we are using the very best information that we can from jurisdictions throughout North America that have gone through this outbreak before. It appears that the progression of the disease is that there's a spike in its occurrence rates, and then it seems to drop. What we're anticipating is one of the spikes, so we've been very, very aggressive in having a larvicide spraying program, that we did not have last year. There was no evidence that there was last year West Nile virus in overwintering mosquitos, so a larvicide program wouldn't have made any difference.

This year there is evidence that overwintering mosquitos do have West Nile virus, so we are spending several million dollars on a spraying program that's being distributed through municipalities. We're focusing our greatest amount of monies on those municipalities in southeastern Alberta where the outbreak of the mosquito that does carry West Nile virus will in fact be present.

We're also being very aggressive in terms of monitoring and working with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, continuing to monitor animal health, birds, horses. Of course, through our regional health authorities we're looking for evidence of West Nile virus in humans. We're working very closely with the Canadian Blood Services organization. Every blood donor now is being screened. When they're donating blood, they're being screened for the presence of West Nile virus.

Finally and perhaps most importantly, Mr. Chairman, we are working very hard on a public education program to indicate to Albertans that no matter how aggressive we are in spraying mosquitos, we can't get every one of them and that Albertans themselves should be educated about the need to protect themselves, wearing long-sleeved shirts and long pants, particularly at hours when mosquitos are feeding, in the morning and in the evening, using, if you don't wear long sleeves, a DEET-based repellent, and that that DEET-based repellent is safe even for children.

Fortunately, most people who get West Nile virus won't suffer serious consequences, but some suffer very serious consequences. Again, the most important thing that we can do is to advise Albertans how to protect themselves. They need to take responsibility for their own health, because no matter how many mosquitos we spray in the adult stage or the larva stage, we can't get them all.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. I'm happy to see that there's going to be an increase in spraying this year, because that is what we had asked for last year. But it looks like to me that in your budget there's a decrease in funding. So what will you not be doing this year with regard to West Nile that you did do last year?

Mr. Mar: Everything that we did last year we'll be doing more of this year, Mr. Chairman. I indicated that the reason why we didn't do larvicide last year was because there was no evidence of West Nile virus in larva stage mosquitoes. This year there is. My recollection is that our program this year would be in the magnitude of $4 million to $5 million for spraying. That is new money that we did not spend at all last year. Our public education program, which was aggressive last year, will continue this year. So to the best of my recollection, hon. member, there isn't anything that we did last year that we won't be continuing this year, but in fact we are expanding what we do this year, the larvicide program being the best example.

Ms Carlson: Okay. But, Mr. Chairman, doesn't the spraying program come out of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development's budget?

Mr. Mar: My recollection is that the answer is no, Mr. Chairman.

This is new monies that have come from the Department of Health and Wellness.

Ms Carlson: That's good. Thank you for that.

I have just one more question. Like you said, Mr. Minister, some people are severely affected by West Nile, and it's expected that they will have at least short-term if not long-term neurological effects from this disease. What kind of support can we anticipate seeing from your department or some other department to help those people through that time period, specifically with regard to loss of employment?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I can't speak for issues of income support during a loss of employment. That wouldn't be within the purview of the Ministry of Health and Wellness.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. While we're on issues like West Nile, we might as well talk about SARS as well. I know that some of the regions have taken very significant preparatory steps in case there's even a single case of SARS in Alberta. Are there any contingency funds in this budget in anticipation of a SARS outbreak, or would the extra costs of that be borne at the time of the outbreak, if one were to occur?

Mr. Mar: It would be the latter, not the former, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Taft: Changing topics to – actually, I'm going to stay on SARS for a moment. My information, as I said, is that there have been significant preparatory steps taken for SARS both in terms of training of staff, in terms of equipping of staff, and, frankly, in terms of some changing of spaces, ventilation systems, renovations, and things like that. Can the minister give us an indication of what those preparations have cost so far?

Mr. Mar: I don't have the exact figures before me, Mr. Chairman. I should say that this is not a preparation for SARS alone. It's a preparation for any pandemic that may occur, most notably for influenza. We don't know exactly when the next influenza pandemic will occur, but we know that it's coming. So it's in that context that we have an overall plan for dealing with it, which has included capital. There are capital improvements that have occurred in intensive care units that would have separate ventilation systems, as an example. The training that the hon. member mentioned would include training for how to handle a potential SARS virus within your laboratory.

Our regional health authorities have been very, very good in terms of disseminating information on what to look for in the event that SARS arrives in this province. There are some six cases, suspected cases at this point is my latest information from China. I can say that airlines and the federal government have been instituting the kinds of protocols necessary to be aware of what to look for from flights arriving from that place, and we'll be cautious and we'll be vigilant.

I think that one of the great learnings from SARS last year in comparing what happened in Toronto with what happened in Vancouver is that in Toronto, where they don't have a regional health system as we do here in Alberta or as they have in Vancouver, each hospital was left to rediscover this thing on its own. The result was that a secondary and tertiary spread of this disease happened without them really being aware of it. Compare that to the example with the presence of SARS in Vancouver, where because they had a regional system, they were able to disseminate information quickly and contain the secondary and tertiary spread of that disease. This speaks to the strength of having a regional system. It's something that we've learned from, and we continue to learn from reports by people like Dr. Naylor, who did the review in Ontario following the SARS outbreak.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Currently negotiations are underway between the nurses and the Provincial Health Authorities association on their next contract. They're into arbitration. It's gotten very quiet, and none of us know what the outcome will be, but whatever the outcome is, it's going to have a significant impact on the budget of the health care system. How is the potential outcome of the negotiation of the salary settlements worked into the current budget year?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, regional health authorities in this province have an average increase of 8.4 per cent. We expect them to be able to live within those budgets, and that would include a portion for reasonable increases to nurses and other health care workers.

Dr. Taft: All right. Let's hope that plays out successfully.

The minister talked a few moments ago about the strengths of regionalization, and certainly there are some. As with any organization there are also weaknesses. One of the concerns that comes to me and I'm sure comes to the minister is the challenge of interregion transfers of patients. So somebody from Chinook needs treatment in Calgary and the concern that the patient from Chinook maybe gets a lower priority than the person in Calgary or the concern that billings aren't fairly handled. Either there's double billing or there's inadequate billing or whatever.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Now, maybe this is getting sorted out. I haven't had these concerns raised to me as much this year as I did the previous year. Maybe it's a function of the larger boundaries. Can the minister comment on the issue of interregion transfers? Is he aware of a better system in place, and how is it working?

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think the hon. member answered his own question in part. I think partly it's because we're getting better at it. It's also partly because there are fewer regions and larger regions. The regions were based upon, as best we could, the service areas where people actually got their health services from, so there would be as a result fewer transfers among and between regions.

Dr. Taft: One of the concerns that hasn't gone away, in fact has gotten worse, is the very, very real sense, especially in Calgary and Edmonton, that there need to be more acute care beds and they're needed urgently and quickly. I listened several minutes ago to the minister indicate that perhaps there are jurisdictions he's aware of in the developed world where there are actually lower acute care bed ratios per population than in Alberta. I'm not aware of them, and I'd be interested to see those. But, certainly, by Canadian standards and by the international standards I've seen, Calgary and Edmonton are absolutely at the lowest levels, the absolute tightest acute care beds supplied for the population.

Both regions have put forward expansion plans. There have been some announcements of approvals over the next – I'm trying to recall – 18 months or two years or something like that. Can the minister fill us in a bit more on exactly how the need for expanded acute care capacity is going to be met in this current year? I understand that it'll involve the Minister of Infrastructure as well, but frankly it's one of the frustrations of Infrastructure existing at all. It feels like on capital questions there are two people in charge when it would be nice to go to one for the answer.

Can the minister tell us what he foresees in this budget year and in the foreseeable future, let's say the next two years? What's going to roll out for Edmonton and Calgary in addressing the acute care bed shortage?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, I think that that has been well expanded upon in this Legislature during question period, but if the hon. member would like a list of the billions of dollars that we've got planned in our capital budgets across this province in many areas over the next three years, I'll endeavour to do my best to provide that to him by written response.

In Calgary, as an example, we are moving forward on the Children's hospital, which, if the hon. member has seen the site, is progressing quite nicely.

We will proceed with the south Calgary hospital, but I think that it's important to know that you cannot build such a facility overnight. There's a great deal of planning that needs to be done not only on the capital side but in terms of where you will find the staff to fill such a place. You don't suddenly find thousands and thousands of staff at the snap of a finger either. So the regional health authority is currently planning how it will staff up such a facility as the plans move forward on the building of a south Calgary hospital.

In Edmonton, Mr. Chairman, they're moving forward on a repatriation of beds that currently are administrative offices in facilities throughout the city. This is a good plan. The regional health authority is trying to do what the Calgary regional health authority did some time ago, and that's to move all of their administrative staff into a single place. The Calgary health region did that by moving to Southport, I believe, four or five years ago thereby freeing up space in the facilities that they had at that time. Capital health will be moving forward on that as well.

My recollection is that that is some 50 million dollars, money in that magnitude, to repatriate some 170 beds. That is a much more cost-effective way of doing it than simply building a new facility.

So there are plans for short-term but also long-term needs of residents of both of the metro areas.

The Chair: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Subsequent to that, is the minister aware of any funds either in this budget or, I guess, in the Infrastructure budget to move along the planned ambulatory care centre just immediately west of the University hospital site in Edmonton?

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Mar: I don't recall off the top of my head, Mr. Chairman.

Dr. Taft: In many ways I regret that I've focused so much on the traditional aspects of health care delivery – the bricks and mortar, the doctors and nurses – when I think the minister and I both agree that so much emphasis really needs to be placed on issues like education, issues like poverty, strong communities, diet, exercise, lifestyle, those kinds of issues.

Are there initiatives that will be supported through this budget to encourage a co-operative approach between, say, the Department of Health and Wellness, the Department of Learning, the Department of Seniors to heighten the awareness of those departments of the health impact of their work? For example, the Department of Learning comes into contact with every child in Alberta by the age of five or so and can reach those kids on health issues immediately. Likewise, at the other end of the age spectrum, the Department of Seniors is in contact with virtually every senior in Alberta in one way or another.

Is there something like an interdepartmental health and wellness task force? Or are there mechanisms through which the departments work together, led by the department of health, to ensure that people in other government departments are thinking: gosh, this policy on kindergarten or this policy on housing or this policy on building codes has a health impact that I'd better think about?

Mr. Mar: The short answer is yes, Mr. Chairman, and I can give you tangible evidence of its success. Take, for example, the Minister of Learning's announcement that we will be moving to daily physical education in our schools. I think that this is a very, very good move and clearly will have an impact upon our acute care system, albeit not one measurable immediately, but it will yield results down the road. I think this is a step in the right direction.

This is where we have great challenges, of course, in health. Many of the things that we will do to improve people's health will not accrue immediate benefits or immediately result in the sustainability of our health care system. But 20 years from now we can have no hope of being able to stop the wave of type 2 diabetics that will accrue to our health care system unless we deal with the rates of obesity and overweight children who are currently in school.

I think that the Minister of Learning made a very cogent and compelling comment when he said that he was shocked, as should we all be shocked, when there are epidemiologists who are suggesting that this may be a generation of young people who will not outlive their parents. That should be shocking. It's for that reason the minister brought forward programs like daily physical education.

That's one of many, many examples, but the short answer to your question is yes.

Dr. Taft: Good. Well, I would encourage all of that and more because I think that's absolutely crucial to the long-term viability of health care and to the wellness of our society.

What will probably be my last question, Mr. Chairman, in light of the hour concerns the wait list registry that was announced about six months ago or so, last October, and was put on the Internet. I visited it a couple of times although not recently.

An Hon. Member: Have you moved up?

Dr. Taft: I haven't moved up because I'm not on there.

The theory is interesting: it allows Albertans to view where they stand and pick and choose where the wait list might be the shortest. My question basically, like so many of my questions, is: has there been a good evaluation of this, or when will the evaluation be done? Is it somewhere in this budget? Will we have some sense of whether this registry is actually reducing waiting lists, and will that evaluation be made public? How might it be conducted?

Mr. Mar: We're not finished with the wait list registry, Mr. Chairman. We hope that by 2006 it won't be just a waiting list registry, it will be a centralized on-line booking system. We are moving towards that.

With respect to whether it will reduce the wait list for a particular individual waiting for a particular service from a particular doctor the answer may be no. If an individual sees that they're waiting for Dr. Brown for a period of 12 months to get a particular procedure done, that individual may decide: I really like Dr. Brown; I don't want anybody else to do my particular procedure. So the wait list for that individual might not change. But if the individual sees that Dr. Smith, who may be located in another hospital or even another town, can do that procedure in six months or maybe even six weeks, that individual may decide: I'm going to see Dr. Smith instead of waiting to see Dr. Brown. As a consequence, they'll have their wait list reduced.

To be able to measure it in global terms is very difficult. It would be the individual experiences of patients waiting for a service who actually decide to change, or they may decide to wait.

I think that even if the person is waiting for Dr. Brown and they see that they're waiting 12 months, there may still be a value in that person seeing the length of that list because they'll recognize that they're not waiting to see a specialist; they're waiting to see this particular person. I think that has some value because they would recognize that if Dr. Brown is just not taking any more people, we can't force them to see people faster and move you up the list.

I think there's value in it. Even if the wait list doesn't change for that particular individual, they'll see that they're waiting for a particular person to do their work, and therefore at least they'll understand why they're waiting. It's not because there's a shortage of specialists; it's because there's a shortage of the time that Dr. Brown has to see people.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. I will just stay on this topic with my question. I guess I would say that if I were designing an evaluation of the wait list registry, I'd try to connect with the people who are logging on and using it and see what their experience is and whether they're finding it useful or not. It would be a little tricky to track those people down but certainly not impossible, and it might tell us whether it's serving their needs or not. So many people may be just clicking on and clicking off and not using it or not following through. So I think an evaluation of the wait list registry's probably a good idea.

This really will be my last question, and it's on the wait list registry. I assume this will have to be done in writing. Could the minister just provide us with the number of hits and visits, a log count or a log assessment of the wait list registry? I'm thinking, in fairness to the registry, maybe month by month for the last six months. I assume it's probably building up or something like that. It would be useful for us and I think for all interested Albertans to know the number of visitors, how long they're staying, what they're using, and I assume there's a tracking system on the web site that will do that.

That's my last question. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Mar: I'll do my best to provide that, sir.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to participate?

After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$7,994,063,000
Capital Investment	$24,895,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates for the Department of Health and Wellness and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Health and Wellness: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $7,994,063,000; capital investment, $24,895,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we'll reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:14 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 28, 2004 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2004/04/28
 head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order. Before we begin this evening, may we receive consent from the committee to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise this evening and introduce to you the 159th Brownies pack from the La Perle community – in fact, they also attend La Perle school – their two leaders, Ms Tiffany Conrad and Ms Rachael Raffray; helper Mr. Chris Hewitt; and nine lovely grade 2 young ladies: Erin Onufrichuk, Sarah Jessop, Carrie Jessop, Shy-Lynn Serafinchan, Samantha Bartlett, Cassidy Stilling, Debbie Kenakin, Deanna Carrier, and Madison Porter. Would you all please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Legislature.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Chairman, while I was out in the hallways earlier, I saw a group of army cadets who are obviously on a tour of the Legislature Building. I know from my own experience as a young cadet that civics are part of the things that they learn about, and I'm certain that they've learned about levels of government including the provincial government of Alberta. I say this of the cadet program: it's a program that turns girls and boys into young men and young women. I ask that this group of cadets please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Justice

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm really pleased tonight to be here to present Alberta Justice's 2004-2007 business plan. I'm really, really pleased that the Minister of Health and Wellness introduced the cadets in the members' gallery, because some of my colleagues were believing that that was all Department of Justice staff coming to help answer questions. They were worried that they were all lawyers being paid by the hour. I have assured my colleagues that even those who are up there who are Justice staff and who are lawyers aren't paid by the hour. That's a good thing because the value that they would earn in the private sector in terms of an hourly rate and the number of hours that they work on behalf of the people of Alberta would blow the budget that I'm about to ask for permission to spend.

I'd like to introduce these very hard-working and dedicated civil servants, people who act on behalf of Albertans every day. I'd like to ask for the respect of my colleagues as I do that, because as much as it may be fun to free Oscar Lacombe – and I'm happy to get back to that question later on – I would like to be serious for a moment and I'd like the Member for Edmonton-McClung to be serious for a moment, too, as I introduce members of my executive staff and thank them for the work that they do on behalf of Albertans. Truly, I have the privilege of working with a very dedicated group of people.

Mr. Chairman, I know they won't be offended if I say that they're but the tip of the iceberg, that working with them and for the Department of Justice and for the people of Alberta are many, many other employees who work in each of the divisions that are represented by their executive heads here today. I've had the opportunity to speak at some of our conferences for various divisions and speak with the staff about how we work towards building safe communities for Albertans and with Albertans. I know that the staff in Alberta Justice is dedicated to that, is very hard working. As I say, if we were paying them by the hour at the private-sector rates, we wouldn't be able to afford it.

Representing the department staff here tonight is Terry Matchett, the deputy minister, who is someone I have the opportunity to work with on I won't say a daily basis because often he has to work for two or three or four weeks at a time before we get together to figure out whether I'm going in the right direction. I'd just like Terry Matchett, the deputy minister, to stand so that people can see you as I introduce you.

Nolan Steed is here as acting assistant deputy minister of the legal services division, and he's here acting on behalf of Peggy Hartman, who's the assistant deputy minister. I can tell you that Peggy Hartman does yeoman service, but Nolan is here, so I'm going to talk about Nolan. Last year we went through considerable work on family law and adult interpersonal relationships and a host of other topics that I could raise. Nolan Steed is one of those people who, whenever I got into trouble or whenever there was an issue that needed to be explained, whenever there was work to be done on those, was able to make it clear, to enter into the discussion, to challenge our thinking, to provide the policy options that we could bring to the political table for discussion and decision. I really can't speak highly enough of Nolan Steed and of all the people that he works with in the legal services division.

The legal services division, Mr. Chairman, provides legal advice to all other departments of government. I'm really proud that we've been able to take on a corporate model where we work with every other department as part of their executive teams to help them identify risks and help them to avoid those risks before they become problems, which is really the sign, I think, of true legal services. It's not, as most people think, accepting the brief after the problem is there and fighting it through the courts. That's not the real challenge of law. The real challenge of law is helping to identify risks ahead of time, helping to find ways to achieve results, knowing what the risks are and knowing what risks you're prepared to accept or deal with. Our legal services division does that and does that so well.

Of course, they also take care of those issues that do go to the constitutional law area or to the aboriginal justice area or to some of the many other areas, because government is a large organization, and from time to time we do have to accept statements of claim and defend on behalf of government. Legal services acts well for us in that area.

We also have tonight Ken Tjosvold, the assistant deputy minister of the criminal justice division. It's Ken's fault that Oscar Lacombe needs to be free, but that's only because he's doing his job very, very well. The people of Alberta can be proud of the fact that we have a criminal justice division, the prosecutors who act on behalf of the people of Alberta in prosecuting crime, who act on a professional basis, make decisions without political interference, without political direction as to when to take cases to court, when to prosecute, in what circumstances there's sufficient evidence to prosecute and achieve a conviction and when it's in the public interest to do so.

We can be very proud of the fact that in Alberta, as in I think most jurisdictions—I don't want to suggest that any other jurisdictions are not like this – the criminal justice system works very, very well, without political interference or direction. Our direction to the criminal justice system is on the policy level. We ask them to send out a policy directive with respect to how to handle matters, but they make professional judgments, professional decisions in the context of the criminal law, in the context of the laws that they're enforcing, and they do it very, very well on behalf of Albertans.

They also, Mr. Chairman, act in our communities. [interjection] You're a day late and a dollar short on that one. It's already been done.

We have prosecutors who are sitting on community committees across this province – domestic violence committees, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder committees – working with others in the community not just to prosecute alleged criminals and to get jail sentences, not just to take people out of the community in cases of serious and violent crime but to work with others in the community to avoid those problems again before they happen. I'm very proud of the work that the criminal justice division does under the direction of Ken Tjosvold and does so well.

8:10

We have with us Barbara Hookenson, the assistant deputy minister of court services. We managed to steal Ms Hookenson away from Saskatchewan. She's joined us this year – I think it was about January 1 – in our court services division. I have to say that she knew what she was coming to, knew what she was getting into. We made sure that she understood that we had ambitious programs going with respect to talking about how we might restructure the courts if that's appropriate after examination but, most importantly, how we make our court services and court services division accessible to the public so that it's understandable, so that people can use it when they have a problem, so that they know how to use the system and where to access it and can do it in a manner which is not too expensive.

Our court services division has to work with the Provincial Court, with the Court of Queen's Bench, and with the Court of Appeal in terms of providing the administration side of it, but they also work in many ways to make sure that people have access to family law information centres, have access to justice in so many other ways. They work with other parts of the department. We're talking about, for example, expanding our mediation programs and moving into other areas so that people only go to court as a last resort, not as a first resort, and so that dispute resolution, which is so important in a civil society, is available to people when they need it and that the tools are available to them.

We also have with us Dan Mercer, assistant deputy minister of the strategic services division. Strategic services is extremely important in the Department of Justice. We still do share – don't we? – with the Solicitor General. Yes. They're nodding. Before the last election the two departments were one. They were split in two, but we share our strategic services division, which means that for the budget process and the business planning process this group of people do yeoman service because they work with two departments to get the work done.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the budget process takes more than just a month. It's a long-term process. Dan and his staff do excellent work in terms of making sure that we have our business plans and our targets and that we know the direction we're going and that we do the strategic planning we need to do.

With him is Shawkat Sabur, our senior financial officer and executive director of financial services. Shawkat keeps us on budget and makes sure that we know where we're going on the financial side, works with us. As most people will know, there's never enough money to go around, so you require people who can actually make sure that every dollar that you have is most effectively used. That's Shawkat's job, and he does it very, very well for Albertans.

Then, of course, most of you will know by name, if you don't know his phone number, Manuel da Costa because Manuel heads up as executive director our maintenance enforcement division. Our maintenance enforcement division, sorry to say, generates probably 35 per cent of our mail if not more. It's a division, though, Mr. Chairman, that does yeoman service on behalf of children in Alberta, collecting maintenance on their behalf, both maintenance that's paid on a voluntary basis and, on far too often an occasion, maintenance payments that are not paid voluntarily. Manuel and the staff that work with him have to remind some Albertans of their obligations to their children, their families, and do that, I'm proud to say, very, very well.

Sometimes there have been complaints about how people are treated on the phone, and that's not a surprise because it's a difficult job. When people are being chased for money, they often are not that nice. But I'm happy to say that the maintenance enforcement staff has had excellent training and have responded exceedingly well to our requirement that all Albertans be treated with respect even when we're having to remind them of their obligations to their children.

So I'd like to thank Manuel, particularly, for the good work that's happened. I think it's safe to say that the number of inquiries from MLAs has gone down significantly over the past year or so. Maintenance enforcement is on target with respect to the turnaround time frames. There sometimes have been delays, but we've managed to put more resources into the area to deal with that, and maintenance enforcement is doing very well.

I'd ask all those members – well, I shouldn't yet because we also have Sharon Lepetich. I wouldn't have left you out. Sharon actually has one of the toughest jobs in the department. She works for Terry Matchett and keeps him on track and makes sure that he knows where he's going. I know that there are two or three people in my office that do that for me, and I know how hard they have to work, so I'm sure that Sharon works just as hard in that area. I don't know exactly what Sharon's title is because I'm not really ever good on titles unless they're written down. I'd like all of the members of the Department of Justice staff to please rise, and I would ask you to give them a very, very warm thank you and welcome for the work that they do for Albertans.

Just a reminder, again, that this is but the tip of the iceberg. We have dedicated staff in the department who work day in, day out to make Alberta a safer place for us to raise our families.

I see Betty Ann Hicks is also in the gallery, and I'd be remiss if I didn't ask her to stand. Most of you will know Betty Ann because she's here morning to night, day in, day out. If anybody has a problem, they approach me about it. If I remember to give it to her, she gets it solved. If I don't remember to give it to her, most of my colleagues here know better and go to her directly, and she gets it solved. I just wanted to say publicly how much I appreciate the work that Betty Ann Hicks does in my office to help make my work go very well but more importantly, again, for the people of Alberta because she is the person who channels the Department of Justice work in and through my office. We've had, I think some time ago, well over 10,000 action requests come through our doors and into the department: a phenomenal amount of work that's done.

Mr. Chairman, having said that, I don't know if there's much more to say about the Department of Justice, but I will try to provide a brief overview of the department – and don't anybody yell: too late – because there are so many exciting things to talk about in Justice.

Time won't permit me to provide sufficient detail or to answer all questions, so I'd be more than happy to respond in writing to anything that requires a detailed response or, quite frankly, that I forget the answer to.

Having made that commitment, let me just do a brief overview of the department and where we're going. Mr. Chairman, I'm sure you will wave at me as I move close to the time frame when I'm supposed to quit. Strategic direction, though. The Minister of Environment will really appreciate this because I know how much he appreciates the concept of strategic thinking and strategic direction. Having done the water for life policy, which is one of the finest pieces of policy work in government, I know that he'll appreciate . . .

Dr. Taylor: Justice does an excellent job.

Mr. Hancock: I knew you'd believe that.

Last year the Financial Management Commission, Mr. Chairman, called on the government to clearly articulate a strategic plan for achieving a sustainable economic vision for the province. In February through the Speech from the Throne and the Premier's television address Albertans were provided with a big-picture view, a long-term view of the government's renewed vision and 20-year plan. On March 19 that plan was released to the public, and it was included in the business plans of government that were released.

The 20-year plan lays the groundwork for growth and prosperity for our province in the future, focusing on the four pillars of unleashing innovation, leading in learning, competing in a global marketplace, and making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. Mr. Chairman, it will come as no surprise to colleagues that Alberta Justice and Alberta Solicitor General along with their partners focus primarily on that last pillar: making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit.

One key way that we help to ensure that we work toward making this province the best place to live, work, and visit is through a solid and focused business planning process. You'll notice that along with other government ministries, the format of the Alberta Justice business plan has changed to better reflect strategic priorities and the commission's recommendation of improving the business planning process.

It's with little doubt that governments of today must be more forward looking and policy driven than ever before. As we move into the 2004 to 2007 business cycle, we continue to set our policy-driven course, one that identifies significant opportunities and challenges, one that's guided by best practices and lessons learned, one that helps us to better identify the ministry's strategic priorities while at the same time working to achieve the government's overall strategic plan.

As I said before, our primary outcome is seeking safe communities. Our strategic business planning and budgeting are all guided and focused by this outcome. Often when speaking to staff in the Department of Justice, I indicate to them that each of us in whatever job we're doing has to be able to answer the question: how does what we do help us to achieve safer communities?

You'll notice that this year our department has an updated mission and vision statement. We believe that these changes better reflect the role the government plays in Alberta and that this will better direct our department to meet Albertans' justice requirements. Our new vision statement, Mr. Chairman: "A fair and safe society supported by a trusted justice system." To support this our new mission statement is:

To protect the rights of all citizens and advance the goals of society by fostering: Safe communities; Access to justice; Respect for the law; Understanding of, and confidence in, the justice system; and the legal foundation for social cohesion and economic prosperity.

This year we've also aligned our core businesses more closely with six goals. Goal 1, "promote safe communities in Alberta," and goal 2, "work with Solicitor General to ensure victims have a more meaningful role in the criminal justice system," are under the core business of prosecutions, $42.9 million, 15 per cent of our budget.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on and on and on about the goals in our department, and I would like to and I probably will over the course of the evening get into more detail about our goals because we have six goals. We have in those six goals strategic priorities, our strategic priorities being partnerships, families, victims, aboriginal policy initiative, Alberta children and youth initiative, public knowledge, business and policy practices, and organized crime and terrorism.

I am going to be delighted to come back to some of those items the next time I have an opportunity to speak because I'm just so very excited by the work that's done by the Department of Justice and the people in the Department of Justice, those some 4,000 people who work every day to make Alberta a safer place to live.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you for the opening remarks from the minister. A special thanks to the staff who come out and join us in the evening. I can certainly see by the minister's remarks his genuine admiration and respect for the staff that support him.

If I might just launch right into the questions, Mr. Minister, I will do that. I will endeavour to give you page numbers that you can refer to, and of course where the detail is beyond instant memory recall, I'm happy to accept the answers in writing.

Generally speaking, what I'm seeing in the Justice budget this year is a minor increase. I think the total spending is up between 8 and 9 per cent overall, and I think that in past years I have called for most of those increases if not all of those increases to support the work that's being done. I think that in this department there are examples of where spending money saves money. We'll come to those later.

Into the detail of it. On page 261 of the estimates book under Ministry Support Services there's a reference under vote 1.0.4 to strategic services, and there's an increase there which is a significant increase.

Some Hon. Members: Free Oscar.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, I really don't like working Wednesday nights. There are all those events that the backbenchers are attending, and the minister is led off by some. It really makes it a special night in here, a very long night.

So directing our attention back. Vote 1.0.4, the strategic services. This budget went from $6 million to $7.9 million, a fairly significant increase just given the amount of the budget. Cross-government initiatives I think fall under this vote: freedom of information, information technology. But I'm interested in how the expenses break down under this particular vote. So if I could get a detailed breakdown with numbers attached of what is covered under this particular vote, what programs are covered, and what the allocation of the money is. How does that $7.9 million break down?

Also on page 261 of the estimates, vote 1.0.6, management information services, there is a decrease. Not a lot of money; I'm just interested in why. Has something been shifted or dropped or is no longer relevant or moved to a different area? What's happening?

The standing policy committee, which is vote 1.0.8. I'd like to get a detailed breakdown of how that $98,000 is spent, please. What's salary? The chairperson of that committee gets a salary allocation out of this amount. What's that? Is there a vehicle included with that? What's the allocation for that? How much for the meals that the committee enjoys when they're meeting? How does this all break down, with details, please? I may bring forward an amendment later in the evening around that standing policy committee money.

Moving to page 262. Under Court Services, vote 2.1.1, which is program support services. This is an increase, and I'm looking for details on what the increase is covering.

Also, still on page 262, law libraries have dropped by 11 per cent or so. It's about half a million dollars, and I'm wondering why. Has there been a major change? It was over $4 million; it's dropping to $3.5 million. I'm just wondering why there's less money in there. Has something been moved, a program moved or transferred? What's accounting for that drop? I know the minister just launched the A-Link, and it's connected with providing information and researching. So has it been moved out of here and got its own line item, or is that what is accounting for the drop in the money? I'm always concerned when I see money going out of library allocations, so what are the details there?

The Calgary court operations, which is vote 2.2 and the subvotes therein, are up about 5 per cent, and Edmonton Court of Queen's Bench is up significantly more. Provincial Court is down a bit. Can you give me some explanation of what's happening with those increases? The 5.6 per cent could easily be cost of living or something, but it's almost a million dollars for the Edmonton Court of Queen's Bench, so I'm looking for what's happening there. Then the Edmonton Provincial Court is down by it looks like $368,000. So what's happening there? Then when we get into the regional court operations, they're also up by 11.5 per cent. So if I could get the breakdown of the Edmonton, the Calgary, and the regional court operations and why they are respectively going up or down.

When we look at maintenance enforcement, appearing on page 264 as vote 3.0.5, the equipment and inventory purchases are going down. This may well be my standard question to the minister. He was asking if I'd have it on the record this year. Yes, I will. Where are we at with the implementation of the new computer systems? What's the $1.4 million covering there under the equipment and inventory purchases? When I look up, I'm seeing a slight increase in the budgeted amount for maintenance, so I'm looking for what's happening there. Are we getting more staff in place?

While we're on maintenance enforcement, all of the standard questions that I usually have. What is the staff complement there now? How does it break down between the different areas? What is the breakdown of the collection rates? I'm still looking for a collection number that tells me the total amount of court-ordered support in Alberta. What is the total amount that the government is collecting? You can even do that by a monthly breakdown, but at the very least what are we looking at over the year?

So percentage collected against the total ordered, number of active files. Amount of arrears that are to be collected, because that's a figure that doesn't show up because it's not so much an active number. It's not rolling out every single month as a new number into the pot. Those arrears numbers often disappear. So where are we with arrears? How much of the arrears is subrogated to the government, and how much is not subrogated?

Where are we with the computer system, staff, and the office space? There was a problem – now, I'll admit that this was back when I first started about this, so we're probably five or six years back; it could be seven or eight years – where the office space was very cramped, and they'd been in the same place for some time. There was a desire to move them, and I think that did happen. But I'll just cross-check that. [interjections] Oh, yeah, that's right. Okay. That's why I was confused.

So we've actually decreased in the equipment purchases for maintenance enforcement. It was $1.75 million last year; this year it's $1.4 million. Is this the final instalment, then, for the upgrading of the equipment and the computer purchases? Where are we at with that? I'm looking for why the decrease and what the $1.4 million actually represents.

On page 271 we've got the FTEs, and it looks like there are 53 new FTEs. Could I know where these FTEs have been allocated into the different programs that fall under the minister?

Now, I'm going to switch over to the business plan. Looking at page 321, under Crime Trends there's a discussion there of the "rising frequency of criminal activity on the Internet" presenting a threat to public safety. Could I get the minister to expand on that? It does go on later to talk about child exploitation including child pornography and Internet luring. [interjection] I'm sorry. Page 321 of the business plan under Crime Trends. I'd like some detail on what the department feels that they're dealing with here. What exactly are we talking about, and what kind of resources are going to be committed there? Is that where some of the 53 new FTEs are going? Is that where some of the increased funding is going? How does this start to roll out? If it's perceived as something that's affecting what the department is doing, then how? What is the department going to do about it?

On the same page, 321, of the business plan, a little further down under Crime Trends, it's talking about, "Substance abuse and related criminal activities, such as the presence of methamphetamine labs in Alberta, is also cause for concern." What I'm interested in here is: what piece of this is the Department of Justice taking?

Increasingly what I see are cross-ministry initiatives or the same issue turning up in more than one place. In this instance, just yesterday I was debating on the Solicitor General's budget, and a lot of these issues were coming up there, and it's sort of a cross-ministry initiative. But later when I go back and say, "Okay; where are we with this? Update it," or I try and track this down: "Well, it's not this department. Somebody has the lead on it. Well, talk to Health and Wellness. They're really, you know, doing something." Nobody seems to be where the buck stops. Who's the chairperson at the committee? Who's actually responsible for making sure that something is happening.

So specific to this concern about substance abuse and related criminal activities and the presence of these meth labs, what's the piece that the Department of Justice is taking? What's their responsibility? What are they responsible for? If I come back to you in six months and say, "Okay; you said you were doing this piece. Where are we with it?" I want to know what that piece is and, of course, what you're doing with it.

On page 322 of the business plan under Aboriginal Albertans – again, this is a repeat of things I've seen in other budget debates – there's a note that "the Aboriginal population is over-represented at all stages in the criminal justice system, both as victims and offenders." True, and we all know that. Again, what is this department's piece of that? What specifically are they doing to address that overrepresentation? What resources are dedicated to it? What kind of staffpower, staffing time, is dedicated to that? Where does it play into the decision-making of what the department is doing? I'll come back to the piece around restorative justice and aboriginal concerns.

There's also on page 322 the issue of the single trial court. I know that this is a real interest for this minister. I, in fact, did follow through and used the federal freedom of information to get correspondence between the Minister of Justice and the federal Minister of Justice over this issue of a single trial court. Reading through that, there's an indication of some tension, and I would like to hear from the minister where he feels Alberta is on this. How far along the continuum are we to a single trial court? Are we 50 per cent of the way there? Twenty-five per cent? How far along the continuum are we? Is this still a concept that's being discussed, or have there been more concrete steps taken towards that?

And clarification of what the relationship is and it is expected to be between Alberta's justice system and the federal minister and the federal justice system. How are those two things starting to mesh together? Maybe they're not. Maybe what the minister will tell me is, "No. This is another one of the firewall issues, and we're going to go it alone, and we're well on our way there, and the discussions with the feds don't matter because we're going to go it alone," or whatever. But I'd like to know how far we are into implementation of this particular issue. I know that it's one that's very close to this minister's heart.

Could I also get an update please, on where we are with the unified family court implementation? This is notating that the public consultations were held in 2000, and there's been subsequent government response. We've had legislation passed in the House. Where are we with it? I'm just looking for an update or a status report, in essence: the resources that are dedicated to it, the number of staff, et cetera.

I'm going to stop there and let the minister respond on the ones that I've set out this far. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. We have a wide range of questions there. I'll do my best to see if I can hit on each of them to the extent that I can, and as I say, where I don't have an answer or don't give an answer, we'll try and respond later. I can't guarantee that we'll give answers to all of them. In some cases the questions were quite detailed, and I know that we don't necessarily maintain the information in the fashion in which the member has requested, but I think we can probably satisfy most of her concerns.

She started with item 1.0.4, strategic services, concerned about the increase in the budget. I can assure the hon. member that in this case the increase in the budget is primarily one of moving the place in which the resources are dealt with. So in the case of strategic services the increase of $1,882,000 consists of the transfer of $700,000 from maintenance enforcement with respect to the MIM system, maintenance information management system, and the transfer of $762,000 from court services and criminal justice with respect to Justice's on-line information network. That's really just a realignment of resources to have strategic services deal with our information and data resources rather than have maintenance enforcement and court services and criminal justice deal with them. So it's really not an increase in the budget, at least not of any magnitude; it's really just a reorganizing to have them in a better place.

That would also answer the question as to why the maintenance enforcement budget, 1.0.6, went down.

With respect to standing policy committees and the detailed breakdown I have no problem with providing a breakdown of expenses in that area to the extent that that's available. In a general sense, I believe the stipend for the chairman of the standing policy committee is $15,000 a year. Maybe one of the chairmen of the standing policy committee could just nod if that was accurate. Yeah. I don't know off the top of my head whether or not they have a car potentially. I don't think they do. Yeah. They don't have a car. That was something, I think, that was changed a long time ago.

With respect to the budget for the standing policy committee, the $98,000, as I say, about $15,000 of that would go to the stipend for the chair, some would go to maintaining the office, and the rest, presumably, would go to supporting meetings and, as I mentioned, staffing the office. So that's probably most of the budget actually because there would be a full-time staff member allocated to the chair of that committee.

On the court services budget there was a concern about the drop in the library budget, and again I can assure the member that that's just a reorganization. Really, the $458,000 decrease, or 11.3 per cent, represents $152,000 due to the transfer of the responsibility for the Bowker library collection to civil law and the remainder due to indirect costs which are allocated to ticket processing. The member will know that we have a dedicated revenue process with respect to – I think it's 16.667 per cent of the revenue that comes in on traffic tickets or other tickets that is retained by the department for the purposes of enforcement because the volume was rising at such a rapid rate that we couldn't really keep up with it and we weren't getting the revenue necessary to put the people in place necessary to do the work. So we figured out how much the processing of traffic tickets was costing.

An Hon. Member: About a year ago.

Mr. Hancock: Yeah, that was last year. We figured out how much the processing of tickets was costing, and we raised the tickets by 20 per cent and then kept 16.667 per cent of the traffic ticket in order to run the system. Then we looked through our system for those costs which could appropriately be allocated to that side, and that's where you see a change here. So, again, it's not a big deal in the budget; it's just really allocating resources in the most appropriate places.

It is an indication of one of the overall issues – and I mentioned that when I was introducing the members of the department's executive team – in that it does take careful shepherding and looking at each of our resources to allow us to be able to do some of the innovative things that we want to do to provide better access to justice and make sure that we deal with those issues.

There was a comment that the courts went up by 5 per cent. In general, it won't surprise the hon. member that a lot of the increases in virtually any part of the department can be firstly looked at as being increases in services, because we have a very manpower-intensive department, particularly in the court services area. One bit of the court services increase that is new and interesting is that we will be doing some pilot projects.

One of the pilot projects, for example, is the introduction of a mediation process. We're hoping to pilot it in Edmonton and Lethbridge. Possibly, if we had the resources, we would pilot it in other areas, and I hope that we can move to get those resources in place early. To me this is a project that doesn't really need piloting. We know that it's going to be successful. We know that it's going to save people time, energy, and money, and we really ought to get at it, but the overall resources don't go up that fast. So it's hard to squeeze out resources to start a new project that we know is going to be successful and save people money but is not going to actually reduce any of our other costs in the system. It's just going to allow us to serve the system and serve the people of Alberta better.

So some of the increase in the court operations – for example, $361,000 of that $572,000 – is for pilot projects. I think that the budget for the mediation project is close to a million, a little over a million dollars. That accounts for a lot of the increase in the court services budget really: a few pilot projects.

We're trying some new things that we want to get up and running, and that increase in compensation, not the least of which is an increase in judicial compensation – in fact, if you look at the pilot projects, I think there's $361,000 in Edmonton court operations and $208,000 in regional, and I presume that if we add those together, that's $569,000, which would be a good chunk of the budget that we expect for that pilot project amortized over the portion of the year that's remaining by the time we get it up and running.

Maintenance enforcement, one of our favourite topics. It's exciting. There are some really good things happening in maintenance enforcement. The hon. member asked about the increase in full-time equivalents, and I can say that I think the number is about 33 more staff in maintenance enforcement. We're doing that because we want to dramatically increase the results, not that the results are bad. The results are very, very good. In '02-03 we collected about $147 million, which is a 78.4 per cent collection rate; in '03-04 it was up to $153 million, or a 79.6 per cent collection rate. I think that in 2002-2003 it was $147 million of $187.4 million that we collected.

So the rates are good, but that means that there's still 20 per cent that's not collected. Now, some of that is not collectable; we understand that. People can't pay, or, you know, they don't have any assets, or they're impossible to find or whatever, but we still believe that there's a lot that can be done. So we've moved up in the maintenance enforcement from 151 employees with a vacancy of 20, because of budgetary reasons and others, to 184 full-time equivalents, fully staffed.

Moving through the training process with the new staff – I don't know. Have we completed the training program of the new staff yet? Almost completed the training on the new staff. I'm getting the high sign from Mr. da Costa, who's ably assisting me with this tonight.

That new staff will allow us to do a number of things. First of all, it's important that we keep our turnaround times manageable, that files are registered quickly when they're referred to us, that action starts early on files when they come in so that there's not an opportunity for arrears to build up. When we get information about the location of individuals that we need to start collecting from, we need to be able to act on that. Or where there are assets that we need to find, when we get information on that, we need to be able to act quickly. So it's important to have staff available and able to turn those files around quickly.

That sometimes has been a problem, but I have to say that I think the staff in maintenance enforcement has worked very, very well and very, very hard in this area. Sometimes I'd have to say that they've been overworked. The file load has been growing. It's an incredible task, but it's a very, very important one for Alberta's children. I just wanted to cover some of those items.

I know that the hon. member is always interested in what's happening in maintenance enforcement, and I can say – I mean, 48,400 account files of 95,000 clients, clients being both creditors and debtors. Mr. Chairman, more than 63,600 children are assisted by the work of the maintenance enforcement branch. So to provide that kind of service to that number of clients and that volume of work, it's essential for us always to look for new and more efficient and effective ways of conducting business: the 24-hour Internet, telephone access to account information, providing clients with an account number and an access so that they can get on the Internet or they can get on the telephone line and find out what their status is.

The Help Us Find web page proved to be a very effective tool. As of February 2004, 70 per cent, 45 of the 64 debtors posted, have been located thanks to tips received through the web site. Mr. Chairman, I think that's a great success. I make no apologies for putting pictures up on the web site and asking the people of Alberta and people, quite frankly, around the world, because the web site is accessible to anybody, to help us find those people so that they can be reminded that they have to maintain their responsibility to their children.

Maintenance enforcement has reciprocal enforcement agreements with all other provinces and territories of Canada as well as 25 other jurisdictions including the United States, Great Britain, Germany, and Australia. We enforce on behalf of those jurisdictions, and we ask those jurisdictions to enforce on our behalf. Again, that works well, and members will know that we passed new reciprocal enforcement legislation not that long ago – last fall I believe it was or last spring – to assist in making that process easier for Albertans.

The MEP accounts on-line and the MEP info line that I've spoken about allow clients to view payments and account balances, change addresses, provide information. A client satisfaction survey, Mr. Chairman, in the spring of 2003 showed that 73 per cent of respondents were satisfied with the quality of service that they'd received from MEP employees, an increase from the 56 per cent satisfaction rate recorded in 1999. I think that's phenomenal. When you're talking primarily about people who either are not getting their payments on a timely basis or are being asked to make their payments on a timely basis – those are our clients – and we have 73 per cent of respondents who are satisfied, I think that speaks to the quality of the people who are working in maintenance enforcement for Albertans.

The maintenance enforcement program funding increased by $2.9 million over the 2004-2005 year. This funding will enable us to recruit new collection officers, pursue field investigations to locate debtors, accept payments at Alberta registry offices, pursue other initiatives that improve services for program clients. It will allow us to hire additional staff, as I mentioned, and improve services that promote compliance with court-ordered maintenance and ensure that more support actually reaches Alberta families.

The hon. member asks annually about the progress on the MIM system, the maintenance enforcement computer system that's been redesigned over the course of the last four years, and she's absolutely correct in her surmise that the $1.4 million that's in the budget this year is the last portion of that project. That project will be in place, up and running this fall. In September all MEP staff will be trained in preparation for MIMS to launch on-line, which is scheduled for October 2004. Hopefully, if I'm so fortunate as to be able to present estimates again next year, the hon. member will not need to ask. She'll know because the information that we're getting from that system will be so valuable to us.

Maintenance enforcement. Just to give you an idea, in the current fiscal year to date each month on average maintenance enforcement has received and disbursed approximately 64,200 payments. Maintenance enforcement received approximately 10,900 correspondence items. The client services centre responded to more than 13,500 calls. The MEP info line received more than 112,400 calls. Internet service and MEP accounts on-line were accessed more than 46,300 times. So, Mr. Chairman, I think it's fair to say that the modest budget that's provided to the Department of Justice and particularly maintenance enforcement does good work for Albertans.

The hon. member asked about office space. As far as I know, we did change office space shortly before I became minister. When I went over there – and it's too long ago that I made my last visit over there; I'll have to go over there again – we'd just moved into and changed a lot of the space. Space is always an issue. I don't know that I can say that we don't have an issue with space, but I haven't heard of that being a high priority recently, so I think we're probably in good shape there.

The specific information that was requested with respect to arrears: I'll have to leave that and see if there's anything further that I can add in that regard.

With respect to crime trends and the rising incidence of Internet crime the hon. member I'm sure is aware that we have a dedicated prosecutor – I believe it's Steve Bilodeau, who's dedicated to Internet crime prosecution. His job is to work with police in the area of Internet crime to help ensure that we know how to put together the files most appropriately so that we can pursue and achieve convictions. He works with other prosecutors across the province in that same regard – train the trainers, so to speak – to make sure that we have the knowledge base that's necessary.

In the area of Internet crime, Mr. Chairman, I think it's really important for us to recognize what an absolute scourge this is.

Mr. Smith: Scourge?

Mr. Hancock: It's a scourge. It is.

The bottom line, Mr. Chairman, is that we have an Internet which is a very, very valuable tool that we get all sorts of good information on. It can be used for many, many positive things. We're putting a SuperNet across the province so that people can have access to high-speed Internet, can download all sorts of material. But one of the problems with it is that there's a whole lot of material on that Internet that ought not to be downloaded, ought not to be uploaded, ought not to be on the Internet at all.

We're talking about child pornography. We're talking about some of the most disgusting things that you might see. In the past, one hopes, they would have been limited to those squalid bookstores that people could find in perhaps seedier areas of town, and those that wanted to go there could go there and get this seedy stuff. But now it's accessible on the Internet. Of course, if it's child pornography, then we have to really be alert to that, and we have to be able to do something about it.

We need to be able to prosecute. We need to be able to put those files together. We need to co-operate with other jurisdictions. We need to work together to get best practices, and we need to work with people in the IT community. So I was really pleased about a month and a half ago, two months ago, when the president of Microsoft Canada, for example, was in Alberta here in the Legislature and met with the standing policy committee to talk about the Be Web Aware campaign, about how Microsoft, as a company that makes a great deal of money off the Internet, understands that there's a social responsibility that it has to work to keep things like child pornography off the Internet and to reduce the access and to really try and deal with this area of Internet crime.

The Be Web Aware campaign is so important that I asked each of my colleagues, and I don't know whether I asked the members of the Liberal opposition or the ND opposition, but if I didn't, I should have, and I'll send them a copy of it, to send a letter to each of the schools in their area to let them know about the problem of Internet luring – and I'll quit in just a second here when I finish this sentence, Mr. Chairman, because it's just too important to stop in the middle of, and I'm sure the hon. member won't mind if I just finish this – and the Be Web Aware campaign and the need for us to be aware that every, every day children across this province, children in this city and all cities across the province, are communicating with others, and those others may not be who they say they are.

They're communicating over the computers, and they're agreeing to meet people. I don't have the statistics right at hand now, but it's a very, very big concern. So when we have in our business plan that "criminal activity on the Internet presents an increasing threat to public safety," Mr. Chairman, it does that, and it does that in spades. We have to be ready for it, and we have to work at it.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I'll try to be brief. I notice that there's some advantage to being very interactive with the chair. You get half a minute extra if you really make an appeal for it. I'm very pleased about it, as it's possible to negotiate some time that way.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise and take part in the estimates debate for the Department of Justice, and the Minister of Justice and Attorney General is always forthcoming with information, with some consultation on various initiatives that he undertakes. All of this is appreciated on this side of the House.

Lots of specific questions about the numbers in the budget have already been raised, but one question that has not been addressed – I haven't heard it addressed, but it certainly is on my mind – is with respect to the legal aid line item there. There's an increase in the budget of about $3 million. Now, I know from previous years that there used to be a concern about the low payment rates to members of the legal community who provided legal aid services, so it's possible that those rates have been adjusted and part of the costs resulting from that adjustment may be reflected in this increased portion of the budget.

The other possible explanation of this may be the larger number of cases in which legal aid is being requested, so that increase in numbers may explain it. I'm just surmising, so if the minister would have more specific answers to what accounts for that increase, I'd appreciate getting some information on that. It's about a 10, 12 per cent increase; closer to 12 per cent. So I just wondered if the minister would kindly shed some light on that, please.

There is another question that I have. There was $13 million, I guess, transferred from the federal government in terms of funds. I noticed some were here. Are federal transfers targeted to legal aid, or how does the money come? I'm just wondering about that. If the minister would please give me some idea about that.

A couple of other questions here. Motor vehicle accident claims, under expenses, an item that in previous years I've not paid attention to, I must confess. A considerable amount of money in terms of program expenses, about $27 million. Some comments on that just to tell me what these expenditures entail. Why those expenditures?

Court services, $117.4 million, is close to $7 million more. I wonder if court services includes the salaries of judges and justices or not and whether this increase reflects the government's decision with respect to increases to those salaries. If they are included in here, the minister would, I'm sure, like to comment on that. So these are some of the specific questions.

I have a few others. I may as well, to save time, put those questions now to the minister, and he can choose to answer them either now or later. In the business plan, the minister has done a good job of drawing the attention of this House and Albertans to some sobering facts. I'm referring to statements included on pages 321 and 322, significant opportunities and challenges. Looking at page 322, the references made to aboriginal Albertans and their contact with the justice system, I think the reference is made there that "approximately one-third of admissions to custody in Alberta were of Aboriginal descent." Now, does custody mean people who are in provincial prisons, or does it include people who are in remand centres?

My understanding was that up until a couple of years ago the percentage of aboriginal prisoners in provincial jails who had been sentenced was close to 40 per cent. I wonder if the minister would confirm that. Regardless of whether it's one-third or more, it certainly is quite a disturbing statistic. All of us, I know, have concern. It's a persistent number that appears year after year and is a source of concern, I'm sure, to everyone. The minister's reflections on it would be appreciated.

Also, on the community issues at the bottom of the page, "incidence of impaired driving is increasing compared to the rest of Canada." I suppose it's not just an absolute or gross increase. It's an increase per 100,000 or whatever, so it's comparable with other jurisdictions.

There can be a whole number of reasons, I suppose, for it, but does the minister have some idea about why it might be? Is it the proliferation of our access to liquor because of the proliferation of liquor stores across the province? Certainly, in the cities that's much more easily available now than was the case before. Is it just access? Is it consumption or something else that's leading to it? Is it an infestation of irresponsible drinking here in Alberta? If so, why? I'm just wondering if the minister has some thoughts on it that he'll want to share with us. This news, the increase in numbers, certainly is not welcome news. Clearly, all of us would agree.

9:10

Family violence is another issue that the minister brings up under community issues. It continues to be a serious problem. What kind of co-ordinated efforts are underway or is the minister proposing in order to put a dent into that particular challenge or problem?

These are some of the general sorts of observations that I have here. I do want to commend the minister and his department for putting these matters up front and not being either silent about them or pushing them in some sort of little corner where they're less visible for readers or for us to look at.

Now, some questions. I've got about, I think, four or five. I'll put them before the House and the minister, Mr. Chairman, and then let him address them in whatever order he chooses to. The Calgary court centre certainly is being funded by Infrastructure, so there's no direct reflection here in the budget, I guess, on that, but the sole tenants of this new facility will be the court system. Certainly, the concern has been expressed by the judicial and legal community that as a result of scaling back the project in an attempt to stay within the budget, the court facilities will be inadequate to meet the medium to longer term needs of Calgarians. Does the Minister of Justice share this concern?

Does the Minister of Justice agree with some comments made yesterday by the Premier, who attributed the concern about security and other improvements to the court centre project as rather exaggerations, which he attributed to the judges and the legal community? Does he share the Premier's view here that the problem is being overblown by the judicial community? For security areas there's a real problem. I think it's important that we be assured that security will be good. Are the concerns being addressed?

Another related question: what are the operational implications for the court system in light of the fact that there'll be insufficient space within the downsized Calgary court centre to accommodate the Court of Appeal? I know that at one time the minister was very excited about the possibility that every level of court would be housed in the same structure. It seems that because they're scaling back, that won't be the case. So what are the operational implications of that?

Moving on to the next question, about the unified family court. In the business plan the minister makes reference to single-trial court. I guess in our meeting where the opposition Justice critics were at the table in the minister's office, he did at that time also share information about his desire to move forward with the unified family court. Now, there are obviously underway consultations with the federal government. A question: has the Minister of Justice determined whether any cost savings will be achieved by these initiatives? Within what time frame would these initiatives be put in place? Is there any resistance to this initiative on the part of the minister from any quarters in face of the firewall initiatives that seem to be, once in a while, cropping up in the government circles or in the caucus?

Next set of issues. The Premier and the government ministers have talked about challenging the federal government across a range of hot-button issues. These issues include legal challenges to the single-desk powers of the Canadian Wheat Board, the proposed federal legislation to allow same-sex marriages, and possible challenges to the universality and accessibility principles of the Canada Health Act. How does the Minister of Justice normally budget for such challenges? How does the minister make sure that any such challenges have a reasonable likelihood of success to ensure that money to cover legal and court expenses isn't simply wasted to pursue a political rather than legal agenda? I must confess that the question is sensitive. I can't guarantee that it's not somewhat political in nature, but certainly the whole controversy over these issues is political, so I can't avoid this. I want to be up front with the minister on this.

In the current budget is there an allowance made? I thought there was some on legal services or legal costs, $7 million extra there. Would the minister indicate if he has allowed for these possible expenditures in the current year's budget?

My question is with regard to the public confidence in the justice system under the performance measures there on page 330, the two categories of "some confidence" and "a lot of confidence." I suppose there's a difference between these two responses, some confidence and a lot of confidence in the justice system. When the categories are collapsed, I guess the number comes to about 80 per cent, 79 per cent, as indicated under the performance measure. Would the minister have a breakdown on the two sets of numbers that have been put together to get the 79 per cent figure? What percentage of Albertans have only some confidence and what percentage of Albertans have a lot of confidence in the justice system? He would appreciate that certainly the confidence of the people of Alberta in the justice system is a cornerstone to their sort of commitment to the rule of law and their trust in the system as such. So I'd like to get the breakdown, if there is one, in order to assess better the degree to which Albertans have some concerns about whether the system really does the work it's supposed to do.

Last question is judicial compensation. Several weeks ago the minister announced that he was not accepting the recommendations of the Judicial Compensation Commission when it comes to salary adjustments of Provincial Court judges. It does raise the question of the whole rationale behind the appointment of the Judicial Compensation Commission if its recommendations are not to be followed. Isn't the minister concerned that any savings in terms of salaries to judges would be temporary should this decision be challenged in the courts?

I'll stop, Mr. Chairman, with those questions and let the minister respond.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. I think the hon. member does deserve a response to many of those questions. I'll try to move quickly through them. Legal aid budget was his first question. If I remember correctly, there's about $3.1 million additional to that budget, and that, as I recall, is a flow-through from a federal contribution. We have a three-year agreement, I think it is, with the federal government with respect to a contribution for legal aid, and I think, subject to somebody nodding at me, that it's about $3.1 million that the federal government is supposed to contribute this year, which will flow through to the legal aid budget as an investment fund. However, that doesn't speak to the fact that we have increased the legal aid budget over the last number of years in accordance with an agreement which we had with the Law Society and the Legal Aid foundation, and we have increased rates, not as high as some would like but certainly, I think, high enough to ensure that there are quality legal services available.

There are other exciting things that have been happening on the legal aid side; for example, the family law clinics in Edmonton and Calgary, where I think we're working very, very well at providing family law advice to people who need it from a clinic basis rather than on a certificate basis. I think we're coming close to the end of that original pilot, but my understanding is that it has been well received, it works very well, and it's something that we would want to continue. Quite frankly, I think it provides a model, although it may cause more problems than I'm solving by saying so, if we were able to move forward and look at providing that type of legal aid service in that manner in other areas of the law as well.

Motor vehicle accident claims. The hon. member didn't really ask a question on it other than just to ask for a comment. Yes, we budget about $27 million. That's a statutory amount, as I recall it, that's put in, not a program amount. We, I think, typically in each year spend about $23 to $24 million. It's basically uninsured motorists.

People pay a registration fee – the Minister of Government Services can correct me if I'm wrong – of about $65 a vehicle, I believe. About $10 of that is nominally allocated towards the motor vehicle accident claims fund, I believe. I could be wrong on that, but we build the fund. Up until last year the nominal allocation from the motor vehicle fund covered only about $13 million of the expenditure every year. We did increase the motor vehicle registration last year, and some of that increase is allocated, again nominally because it all really goes through general revenue – we don't have a separate fund any more – towards the concept of paying that motor vehicle accident claims fund. As I said, the motor vehicle accident claim process essentially affords an opportunity for people who are injured in a motor vehicle accident to make a claim against the fund if the person that caused the damage is either unknown or uninsured.

It's an important service to provide. I think there is a limit to compensation in a motor vehicle accident claim of about $200,000, so it's not a bottomless pit, but it's some compensation for people who can't find who hurt them or if the person who hurt them is not able to pay. Of course, we have then some subrogated claims. In other words, we pay the claim, but then we go and collect from the people who caused the damage if we can find them and if they're in a position to pay. So we do follow up on that.

Court services' $7 million increase: does that include judges' salaries? Yes, of course it includes judges' salaries for the Provincial Court. Salaries for Queen's Bench and for Court of Appeal are paid by the federal government because they're section 96 judges. Judges of the Provincial Court are paid from this budget, and of course the whole administration of the courts at all three levels is paid from this budget.

We did have the Judicial Compensation Commission for judicial salaries for the Provincial Court effective April 1, 2003. In the past we've done them on a three-year basis. We've made some changes, and we hope to do them on a four-year basis in the future once we can get the cycles aligned. It's an important process, the whole question of paying judges and how much they should be paid. We have a very, I think, difficult paradigm here that we need to deal with. That is that government has to be accountable to the public for the public's resources. The government has to be able to respond and set priorities in terms of where those resources are allocated. Yet in this one area we have the concept developed through cases to the Supreme Court of Canada of a judicial compensation commission in order to ensure the independence of the judiciary.

It's my personal view only that independence of the judiciary is well maintained at the salary levels that we have now achieved, both at Provincial Court and at Queen's Bench and Court of Appeal. That's not a significant concern any longer, so the main concern now is not, in my humble opinion, the independence of the judiciary but rather whether the judiciary is paid appropriately for the work that they're doing and how we account to the public for the priority in terms of increased resources that are put in that direction as opposed to where else those resources might serve the public. That's the balance that we have to try and achieve.

In this year the Judicial Compensation Commission was appointed and reported in December and then, with some amendments, reported again in January. We had 90 days to respond to that. We looked very thoroughly at the Judicial Compensation Commission's report. They made many determinations, or recommendations, based on their analysis and comparisons with judicial salaries across the country, where they thought federal salaries might go, and the comparisons to salaries in the private sector. But we had to look at that and say with respect: we don't agree. We agreed that there needs to be an increase. The position that we had put on the table, which we thought was a fair position, would have allowed for 3 per cent increases in each year, which would have been similar to what other people in the Alberta economy are achieving and what other people working for the public in Alberta, government staff, are achieving. We thought that was an appropriate determination.

The compensation commission obviously didn't agree with that and came forward with rather more significant increases, and we couldn't in all honesty justify those kinds of increases when you look at the priorities that are available for Albertans and the expenditure of resources of Albertans and the accountability that we have to Albertans for those resources.

However, we did take some direction from the commission in looking at what they determined, what they looked at. So we modified our position in looking at that information and the information that had been received after we had put our position in relative to what the Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission in Ontario came down with and the positions being put forward by both the judicial side and the government of Canada with respect to the quadrennial commission, and we said: "Well, the last time increases were made was, I believe, 2000. So if you take the 3 per cent concept, that could be 9 per cent in the first year and 3 per cent or so for the second and third year."

That would get provincial court judges into the $200,000 range, which by any measure is a very decent salary, very comparable to what people might expect in the private sector, and recognizes the fact that when you look at salaries and when you look at how much you need to pay in order to attract competent people, there is no shortage of very competent people who are applying to serve on the Provincial Court or Court of Queen's Bench, for that matter. There's no shortage of people who would like to move to that sort of a challenge and like to make that kind of a contribution in our society. The salaries are certainly not driving people away. There's nobody quitting because they're not being paid enough. In fact, the evidence at the hearing was such that most people didn't put forward salary as the reason they were going to the bench. They were interested in the challenge. They were interested in providing that type of service. They were interested in a change from what they were doing now.

Also, I guess the other thing which I think is well enunciated in the reasons that we provided with the order in council would suggest that sometimes in looking at the salary ranges and comparing to what lawyers make in the private sector, it may not be appropriate to look at the 75th percentile of all lawyers between 45 and 55 who earn more than $50,000 and narrow that pool of people that you're comparing to down to that and then say that that's the level at which you should be paying judges, because it ignores the fact that those people, first of all, don't have pensions. They have to contribute to their own pension plan, and there's an analysis in the reasons that we gave to deal with that. It ignores the fact that those people are at the peak of their earning power and likely are going to decline in later years. Of course, once you're appointed to the bench, your salary doesn't decline in later years. It ignores the fact that there are billing and collection and economic implications with respect to private-sector salaries such that while Alberta is in a great position now and people are doing well, that's not always the case. It ignores the fact that some of those people that you're comparing to are actually in mergers and acquisitions in Calgary and are being paid at a very, very high level and are not the regular lawyer.

So there are all sorts of things that we looked at and said: while this process was set up in order to ensure an independent process for determining judicial salaries, this process has achieved that. Salaries are not a problem across this country with respect to judicial compensation. You do have to look and say: how much is enough? You do have to as a government, I think, from time to time stand up and say: "There has to be accountability for the public's resources back to the public. The buck actually stops here. It doesn't stop at the Judicial Compensation Commission."

For those and the other reasons enunciated, the judicial salaries were dealt with in the way that they were. We'll have to accommodate the increase in salary within our budget, and if that doesn't prove doable, we'll have to ask for some money to cover it. Particularly because we're in this year, we'll have to pay for last year as well as this year, so we'll have to deal with that double-up. That's about a $6 million touch that we'll need to deal with. Of course, we won't want to back away from any of the important and progressive changes that we're making in access to justice in order to accommodate that.

The hon. member raised a question about aboriginal Albertans and the prevalence of aboriginal Albertans in our jail system. I have to say that while the custody in jails and those areas fall within the Solicitor General's area, certainly we've been doing a lot of things in the Justice area. This may answer some of the questions the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raised earlier about cultural awareness for prosecutors. Many if not most of our prosecutors have now gone through awareness training.

We have a number of different models of aboriginal courts, not the least of which, of course, is the Tsuu T'ina court and peacemaker system, which will be under review this year because it's been up and running for a few years, but other models as well and initiatives taken by the Provincial Court, by individual judges of the Provincial Court in some areas dealing with First Nations that they either sit on or near in working with people in those communities to deal with some of these issues. This is a very important area.

I went through my first year of university in 1972. One of the first papers I wrote – I think it was the first paper I wrote – was in a sociology class. [interjection] Yes, in 1972. Your hair was probably already grey by then.

In any event, it's a very serious topic. The first paper I wrote was on the overrepresentation of aboriginal people in the justice system, and the numbers were about the same. I believe it was about 36 per cent. It hasn't changed much. We have to do more in that area.

We are co-chairs with the minister of aboriginal affairs in the cross-government initiative on the aboriginal policy framework and aboriginal policy initiatives. I'm very pleased, actually delighted that the aboriginal policy framework came forward, because we initiated that when I was in the ministry of aboriginal affairs. It was one of the things that I felt was very important. One of our cross-government goals was that aboriginal people should have the same socioeconomic status as all other Albertans. We've got a lot of work to do in that area, and Justice is playing its part in that area.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre was asking questions about what specifically is Justice's role and that sort of thing. Fortunately or unfortunately, it doesn't really parcel out that way. I think these are things that we have to work together at in terms of capacity building, in terms of education, in terms of helping people to have the opportunity and the ability to meet the opportunities to have better economic status. Those are all factors in the equation.

But for Justice's part, dealing with people who come into contact with the law and come into contact with trouble in the many ways that we are dealing with it, whether it's the Tsuu T'ina court or whether it's the work that His Honour Judge Bradley was doing in Alexander and other areas in the north, there are many different ways in which we've brought the aboriginal equation into the context.

We have the Justice Policy Advisory Committee, which is the old steering committee from the justice summit. First Nations and Métis people are represented on that committee and provide us with input there. At one point we had started a First Nations advisory committee and a Métis advisory committee. Those didn't take off, but there's now some interest in re-establishing those and getting more directly involved with First Nations and Métis settlements in finding better ways to deal with issues and problems in those communities.

With respect to impaired drivers and the increase in impaired driving, Mr. Chairman, I think it would be folly to say that that's a result of the increased access to liquor. I'm not an expert in the area of what's causing it. I think it's fair to say that our economy is growing at a rapid rate. We have more and more young people coming in. We have a lot more access to dollars. We have a lot more cars on the road. There are all sorts of factors that go into this. The thing that we have to do is to continue the efforts that have been engaged in by many people. We have a cross-ministry initiative with the Solicitor General's department and the Department of Transportation, the three departments working together, to find better ways to deal with impaired driving.

One of the things that we're going to be doing – I mentioned this in December – is that we're looking very strongly at the whole question of how we deal with people who seem to have no respect whatsoever for the law, who break it on an ongoing basis, and how we could perhaps deal with them as dangerous offenders. I made no secret of the fact that I don't believe that conditional sentences should be accorded to impaired drivers who cause death or serious injury for that matter.

I think enforcement is important, being able to make sure that people on our streets know that there's no tolerance for impaired driving, that endangers the lives of people in our community, that makes our community less safe. So we're going to be dealing with that, and we're working very hard on that, as I say, with three ministries focusing in that area.

Family violence is a very, very important subject, so important that the Minister of Children's Services and I chaired a round-table on family violence at the Progressive Conservative convention this weekend. Of course, there have been round-tables hosted across the province which will culminate in a round-table in Calgary, a province-wide one, on I think it's May 7, whatever the Friday is there. That's a very, very important initiative which is being headed up by the Minister of Children's Services, who's got the office on family violence in her portfolio, an area, again, of a cross-ministry initiative where there are nine or 10 ministries participating because it is so important.

We have got to bring out of the closet and into public discussion the damage that's being done by domestic violence in our homes and in our communities. If our goal at Alberta Justice is to have safe communities – and one of those things is that people have to feel safe in their homes – we have to be talking about domestic violence, and then we have to be doing something about it. So I'm glad the hon. member raised that.

We have a partnership in Calgary with the HomeFront project. We have allocated resources to that, and we've encouraged other departments to do that. I'm really pleased that Health and Wellness has put forward money through the mental health budget. Some people don't like the fact that it comes from the mental health budget. I don't care where it comes from as long as we have the resources to provide treatment services to people, to both offenders and victims in the domestic violence program in Calgary, the HomeFront project.

We've got dedicated domestic violence courts in Edmonton and Lethbridge. We're moving ahead, and we're going to be making some exciting announcements in that area in the next week or so with respect to new initiatives that we're taking with respect to the whole violence area.

Calgary courts. I don't know how much time I have left. One minute? I'll come back to that very important topic the next opportunity that I have, as I will to the questions that were raised by yourself and by Edmonton-Centre with respect to the unified family court and the single-trial court process and those all-important topics of court challenges in areas that are important to Albertans such as health care reform, same-sex marriage, universality of health care, and single desk.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get this chance to participate in the budget estimates debate for the Department of Justice this evening. Certainly, the hon. minister talked earlier regarding I believe it was put this way: the restructuring of the Alberta courts. I am wondering if this is going to be his legacy as Justice minister and how all this restructuring is going to work. I have a number of questions, and I would appreciate answers.

What studies have been completed on behalf of Alberta Justice regarding this notion not of a unified family court but of a unified criminal court? What exactly is the proposal by the hon. minister to unify the courts of this province? Is this, as I said earlier, his own legacy project? How do the Chief Justice of Alberta, the Chief Justice of the Alberta Court of Queen's Bench, and the Chief Justice of the Provincial Court feel about this proposed restructuring that you mentioned earlier? Following that, what position would the federal Justice minister have on this issue? Again, how does the Canadian Bar Association feel about the restructuring of the court system in this province? This is specifically on the unified criminal courts or one-stream court system, whatever is being proposed over there; I'm not so sure.

The minister was talking about his first study in 1972. What studies has the Canadian Bar Association prepared, if any, in regard to the streamlined court systems, and can that information be provided to us if they do have any studies or any other studies that may exist on this matter? I would love to read them, and I would.

Now, if the criminal courts were united – the hon. minister talked about section 96 judges, and I find that quite odd. Is it correct that if this were to happen, the federal government would be responsible for judicial appointments? If that is correct, why does this government whine and snivel so often about federal interference in their affairs when there's the potential that they would give up the right to appoint some members of the judiciary in this province? I think it's a good idea that various governments appoint members of the judiciary.

Now, in the private/public partnership that is the courthouse in Calgary, is this initiative an indication of this hon. minister's and this government's commitment to this single criminal court or the restructuring of Alberta courts? Is this one of the reasons why we're so gung-ho about these private/public partnerships?

Yesterday the Premier was talking about not only the private/public partnerships and the cost overruns in the courthouse in Calgary but also about the revised plans, Mr. Chairman, of this court in Calgary. Apparently, there was going to be a reduction in some of the security measures, the building integrity was going to be changed, and there was to be an elimination of an 800-seat amphitheatre. The Premier was of the impression that this was for judges when they're sworn in and for their families and for interested members of the public. The Premier stated: there's no need for this. He stated, quote: they can use Government House. This was the Premier of the province yesterday, April 27, with a statement.

That worries me, and it concerns me – and I think it should concern the hon. minister as well – in regard to judicial independence. Public confidence is the foundation of judicial independence, and all judges must remain independent and free of any extraneous influences. For the Premier to make that comment that we could use Government House – it astonished me. I have to question if the Premier understands this principle of judicial independence to make that remark. I would like the minister's thoughts on this.

Now, what steps is this minister taking to ensure that the public remains confident in all levels of our court system and to ensure that they are remaining independent? It was after 1972 that the hon. minister went to law school, but the concept of judicial independence is a very important one, and I'm not going to say anything more on that. Specifically, what steps is this minister taking to ensure that the public remains confident in all levels of our court system?

Also, the faint hope clause. This comes up, and I would like to know if the minister is working with other jurisdictions to initiate some changes to the Criminal Code. Are you having discussions with other jurisdictions? I think the faint hope clause should not be used by some convicted criminals when their time is just about up for those crimes. I'm speaking of charges of sexual exploitation or contact with children. Perhaps murder could be incorporated into this. Are we looking at changing anything? [interjection] Of course, some hon. members over there may want to commit that act of murder on this hon. member. I certainly hope not. I certainly hope that's not what I heard.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that takes care of that series of questions, but another question is: who paid for the high-tech, secure courtroom that was built for the gang trial here in Edmonton last year? What was the total bill, and which jurisdictions shared portions of that bill?

In his remarks earlier I was pleased to hear that the minister is very concerned about porn and its distribution. The porn industry – many people in this Assembly may not realize this – is larger in the state of California than some of the high-tech enterprises. It's an industry that's worth billions of dollars in North America. People in my community and across the province wanted leadership from this provincial government when there was a discussion about limiting where porn stores could set up.

It was my view that this government tried to pass the buck: it's a municipal issue, or it's this guy's issue, or it's that guy's issue. I was disappointed in that. I heard you tonight talk about porn and its distribution. Well, I want more action from this government on this matter and so do the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar and so do the people across the province. We just can't say that, oh, it belongs in a seedy area or try to dismiss it in that way. In the next year I would appreciate more leadership from this minister in regard to that.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate getting those questions on the record, and I await the minister's response. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort wanted to ask a question.

Mr. Cao: Yes. Mr. Chairman, now we are in the process of business planning and the budget for the Justice department. The Justice department has done a great job for this province, and the staff of the department has administered the justice and the administration services very well.

The only thing that I have from my constituents is something to do with the pay for the Alberta courts interpreter and translator service. I believe that to administer justice is one thing but also to educate people about the laws of our land. Given that languages are needed to help the message be understood by those involved with the law, the service of interpreters and translators in Alberta courts becomes very important. It's not just a provision of fair, equal access to a trial, but more importantly it's a deterrent, a prevention factor through understanding.

As far as I know, the rate of pay is very low in comparison with the fee rates of other provinces and jurisdictions, such as the RCMP and WCB, who use translators and interpreters. So my constituents asked me to relay a message to the minister and the department to work on this issue, and I hope that in the detailed implementation of the business plan and the detailed budget items your department can look into such an increase in the rate of pay which is fair and equitable.

Thank you.

9:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, and thanks to the minister for allowing me to get a couple of other issues on the record and then turning the rest of the time over to him. I want to talk about two issues just in closing here. One is the funding of sexual assault centres in the province. I'm glad to see that I've got the Minister of Children's Services, the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General, and the Minister of Health and Wellness all in one place at one time. This is another one of these sort of cross-ministry initiatives that requires everybody's co-operation, yet when I actually try and nail this one down, it's like trying to nail pudding. Nobody actually takes the piece of it that I need them to take.

What I've been looking into recently is that nobody takes responsibility for the operational funding for sexual assault centres in the province, which is a surprise. We all assume that that's done, you know, that the rent and the phone and the staff salary is all paid for, but that's not what's happening. What is happening is that there are a few little bits that are funded, but they're very restrictive pieces.

Yes, the upcoming May 7 round-table on violence is important, and I'm glad I get the opportunity to talk about this in advance of that meeting, but even in watching the run-up to that, sexual assault, the issue of sexual assault, the funding of sexual assault, treatment, and prevention, if that were possible, in Alberta is not a major component. If you read through the books and the workbooks that go along with it, there's a big emphasis on bullying, but occasionally you get "and sexual assault" thrown in after the fact. It's not being regarded as an integral component here.

The Solicitor General is paying for counselling around court appearances, and that's the piece that she's taking, but that doesn't cover a whole series of people that need counselling. For example, adult survivors of child sexual abuse are not in the court system. They're not about to be in the court system, and they can't get counselling paid for through that funding that's being provided by the Solicitor General.

The minister is referring to the report of the victims of crime consultation in his document on page 326, working with the Solicitor General on reviewing it, but I'm also looking for one of the four of you to take the lead on this issue.

Mrs. McClellan: I'll do it.

Ms Blakeman: The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development is offering to do it, and if she would, I would be very happy because then I know it would get done.

There needs to be a look at this and a clear commitment to funding, and whether each department wants to throw the money into a pot and have the minister of agriculture administer it or whether each of you is going to make sure you take enough of a piece that all things are paid for, fine. But there is such a hodge-podge quilting together of funding, and there's a huge hole in the middle of the quilt which is not paid for at all. So that's an issue I wanted on the record, and I'll look to further consultation from those four ministers to come, five including the lead that's being taken by the minister of agriculture.

Finally, I wanted to spend more time than I have talking about the role of mediation and restorative justice in the province. The minister in some cases is way ahead of everybody else, and I encourage him in that. We're using mediation in small claims, which is now called civil mediation. We're looking at it in a restorative justice concept, landlord and tenant disputes, and family mediation at this point.

I have a concern about the funding for the restorative justice centre in Edmonton. Their funding seems to have dried up. There was a commitment in '86 from the then Minister of Justice to take over the funding of that centre. It never quite got allocated and it's never happened. They've been living on seed funding repeatedly from a number of philanthropic foundations and organizations like the Rotary and the Muttart Foundation, and they're just not able and there was no intention and their funding programs are not set up to sustain over the long term that kind of funding. They had to shut down their victim offender mediation program this year. They ran that program from '94 to this year, 2004, and now they've shut it down. So they really are struggling for funding. We know it works, so where is the responsibility to take over and make sure that this can continue to be offered?

The second piece that I want to talk about there is around the funding, the payment allocation for mediators that are involved in this system. As this minister takes the lead on this and we end up with more mediators involved in the justice system—in other words, empowering people to work their own way out of their legal disputes, and that's a good thing. But what's happening is that the amount of money that the minister started out with is really poor. I think it said $50 allocated for two hours.

There are two problems there. One, the $50 is way too low for developing and maintaining a profession of mediators, not people that, you know, kind of do this as a sideline but people that are committed to this and are committed to professional upgrading and a profession and all that that entails.

The second part of that is the expectation that somehow this will be resolved in two hours. That is violating one of the basic principles of mediation, which is to stay at it. To look at some sort of closure rate as a success rate, a settlement rate as a measurement, is not a good way to measure because sometimes just getting the parties to understand or come to a point where they agree what the problem is is a huge step forward and will save the legal system a great deal of money.

When we look at what's being offered by mediation, restorative justice services, it can save the justice system so much, especially as we move forward. More people are coming to the courts to resolve. If we can move them off to the side, great. We can save a lot of money, but you need to invest some money here, and the rate that you're offering people is way too low. I'm sorry; I just had to get those two points in.

Thank you to the minister.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice in the three or four minutes left.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Sadly, only three to four minutes and so many good things to talk about, so much to pick and choose from in terms of the things that are exciting as we go forward into another year with Justice in Alberta and working with all of the stakeholders in our community and all of our community partners and forming partnerships and working with others so that we can promote, as the hon. member was just saying, ways of resolving disputes in our province in a way which is not adjudicated, which determines things at a point of time but is collaborative and empowers people with the tools that they need to solve their own problems and have lasting dispute resolution processes.

The collaborative law processes that are taking place across this province as we speak with family law lawyers making an agreement with their clients up front that they won't go to court, that they'll find an interest-based mediated solution: what a wonderful process. The dispute resolution officers in Calgary and the DROs in Edmonton. Family law lawyers who are donating their time to sit down with families in crisis really to help them come together, come to a resolution, and then if they can't come to a resolution, write up a consent order and take it into the court and get the endorsement of the court so that the solution will continue to hold long term, and helping children across this province in a very substantive way, donating their time. I think we ought to say a thank you to the family law lawyers for donating their time, both in Edmonton and Calgary, to those projects.

So many other ways that members of the community are getting involved in mediation processes or restorative justice processes that are so important, and I think we have to say thank you to the members of the community that are working together with Alberta Justice and other partners in the system to make the communities a safer place.

I would like to launch into a discussion of the Calgary court strategy, but all I'll have time to say is this. We've had 24 years of discussing the needs of the court system in Calgary. I don't think anybody should get excited about the fact that in this last month, when we're trying to get it to a close and get a shovel in the ground, there are some last-minute issues that have come up and that need to be dealt with. Twenty-four years is a long time. We've done yeoman work even in the last five years that I've had the portfolio. We've come to a solution. It's a good solution. We'll build a courthouse that people will be proud of, that the courts will be able to operate in. It will be functional. It will be effective. It will have enough space. The concerns of the court that we're not going to have enough space are not a problem.

10:00

The fact of the matter is that we will build a court facility in Calgary. We will do it right. It will be a good facility, it will be accessible to the public, which is the most important part of it, and it will house the Justice staff who administer the courts in an appropriate way. And, really, if there's one thing I could say about the Calgary court strategy that's more important than any of the others, it's that the people who work in the Department of Justice—the court clerks and the people who provide services across the counter, the people who service the public—will finally have a decent place to work when we get this building built.

Those are the things we should be focusing on. We don't need to be focusing on the question of whether we need to take the Court of Appeal out or leave the Court of Appeal in. That's not quite all that relevant. The Court of Appeal has a great place to sit now and will have a great place to sit for the next eight years. It's a great deal that they've got there. Quite frankly, we're the only province in the whole country where the Court of Appeal has two places to sit. So that's not the issue.

The issue is to get our trial courts together into an appropriate building so that people know where to find them, they have access to the court service staff who help them deal with their problems—the Family Law Information Centre, the associated Justice resources—it's made available to the public, they know where it is, it's an appropriate facility.

We'll do it the right way. We'll be very careful with the public's money when we build it. We'll be very, very concerned about getting the best bang for our buck. We'll look at it, whether it's a P3 or whether it's government built. Quite frankly, we've looked. We'll do it the best way we can. We'll make sure it's effective, and all those other things that people are talking about are not relevant. The most relevant thing is that court staff will be well housed, the public will be well served, they'll know where to find it, and it'll be done in an appropriate manner.

Mr. Chairman, I think that to focus on some of the questions—I mean, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona asked about security. Security is a very important issue, and we will not compromise the security of the court facility. We'll deal with security in an appropriate manner not just in the Calgary court strategy but across the province in the other courthouses. So it's an extremely important subject.

I could go on at length. I know that you don't want me to because the time is up, but I sure wish I had more time to tell the hon. members across who've asked about the Calgary court strategy what an important strategy it is and how well we're going to serve the people of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: I regret that we have to interrupt the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, I must now put the question after consideration of the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Justice and Attorney General for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$256,645,000
--	---------------

The Chair: Shall the estimates be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm glad you recognized me. I have a few more things to say about the Calgary court strategy, but I gather you want me to move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Department of Justice and Attorney General and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Ms Graham: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Justice and Attorney General: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $256,645,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.

Third Reading

Bill 30
Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I go into third reading of Bill 30, I'd like at this moment, if I could, to introduce a good friend that is here this evening to witness third reading. He is Mr. Floyd Thompson, chairperson of the Kikino Métis settlement. He's seated in the public gallery, and I'd like all of my colleagues to join me in giving him a great warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise this evening to move third reading of Bill 30, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004.

I have the privilege of representing two of the eight Métis settlements in Alberta. The Elizabeth and Fishing Lake settlements reside within the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency. Over the past seven years as an MLA I've had the opportunity of getting to know the Métis leadership and its membership, and I wish to thank them for their patience, hospitality, learning, and friendship.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to recognize the present Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and the two previous ministers of intergovernmental affairs responsible for aboriginal affairs, today's Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and today's Minister of Justice and Attorney General for having allowed me to work on their behalf on numerous committees relating to Métis governance. This has been a great experience that I will forever cherish. I hope that together with the Métis we have been able to make a positive difference as they move forward in their governance and prosperity on their respective settlements.

Many of the amendments in Bill 30 pertain to the structure and role of the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. In 1999 I had the pleasure of co-chairing with Mr. Fred Martin a committee which reviewed the MSAT structure and duties. Over the past year I have been involved in the consultation process on the remainder of the amendments. Mr. Speaker, I must be honest. At times it was a very challenging task. However, at the end of the day my heart tells me that the amendments will be for the betterment of individual Métis residing on settlements.

I wish to thank department staff Mr. Thomas Droege and Mr. Cameron Henry for their assistance, knowledge, and wisdom as we moved forward with this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of the Assembly to support third reading of the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief in my comments on Bill 30 in third reading. Thank you for this opportunity to participate in the debate at this stage of the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004.

The Métis people have fought for generations, going back to the time of Louis Riel, for recognition of their collective rights to a land base and to govern themselves within that land base. The November 1990 legislation that led to the establishment of eight Métis settlements with powers similar to those of municipal governments was a significant achievement of the government led by former Premier Don Getty. While the government's motives in meeting the Métis settlements accord were not entirely altruistic given that the Métis in exchange put on hold some legal challenges for a share of resource revenues in northern Alberta, the establishment of the Métis settlements was in fact a significant step forward for the Métis people of this province.

I have also carefully reviewed the remarks of the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake at second reading and at the committee stage. It's apparent to me that some changes to the governance structure of the Métis settlements are warranted. For example, I understand that the requirement for unanimity of all eight settlements prior to any policy changes at the Métis Settlements Council would be an impediment to effective and timely decision-making.

The Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake indicated in his remarks in committee that consultations with the Métis settlements and the Métis Settlements General Council on Bill 30 have been taking place for a number of years. If this is so, Mr. Speaker, I can only express disappointment that a greater degree of consensus was not achieved with the Métis community prior to these legislative changes being brought forward.

Not long after Bill 30 was introduced, our office began receiving a steady stream of phone calls from representatives from both the Métis Settlements General Council and individual Métis settlements expressing concerns about some of the amendments being made. More importantly, however, the concerns are about the adequacy or lack thereof of the consultation process that was undertaken to bring these amendments about.

As a legislator, Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred a greater degree of consensus among those from the Métis community prior to making changes to the legislation that formed the basis for the self-governance. I would have similar concerns if amendments were being made to the governance powers of municipalities, for example, despite the opposition of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association.

I'm aware that the amendments to Bill 30 approved yesterday evening go some way to addressing some of the identified concerns. Nevertheless, this has not entirely alleviated my concern that by giving third and final reading of Bill 30 in the absence of a greater degree of consensus within the Métis community, we may be opening ourselves to problems down the road.

In conclusion, I can only urge the government to continue working hard to achieve this consensus prior to the changes in Bill 30 being proclaimed. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, and thanks for the opportunity to speak in third reading on Bill 30, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004. This is one of these bills that is a real struggle because it's not perfect. It's not addressing the concerns that have been brought forward by differing sides. Certainly, some people have written to the Liberal opposition indicating that they felt that there wasn't enough consultation or that they weren't included in the consultation, and that's a great concern for us. In this party that kind of dialogue is very important, and if we could possibly afford the time to work to a consensus-based agreement, that would be the ultimate.

The struggle for us is that we need to move forward. We need to see some move off of this sort of stasis. So it's one of those questions of half a glass is better than none or half a loaf is better than none, or is it? It's always that struggle. How long before we can get back to this and get what we want or, more to the point, get what the organizations want out of this. But when we look back and we're building on legislation from '89 and '99 and we're now five years later, are we going to make everybody wait another five years? I don't think so.

At this point we are willing to support this bill going forward. We recognize that it is not perfect. It is not what everyone wanted, but we believe that it's best at this point to pass the bill and to get that forward movement happening. We do charge the government to continue to work on this issue, and that's what's really needed here: to go at it with an open heart and an open mind and ears working in proportion to the mouth. At this point that's our position on it, and we're willing to support the bill in third reading.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake to close debate at third reading.

Mr. Ducharme: Question.

Second Reading

Bill 28

Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 28, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004.

This bill expands the mandate of the act by allowing feeder pigs to be included under the act, allowing Alberta's hog producers to take advantage of Alberta's successful feeder association structure.

Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that many of the hon. members are unaware of Alberta's thriving feeder associations. In fact, Alberta's cattle and sheep producers have been availing themselves of this successful program for the past 66 years. Alberta currently has 61 associations with more than 7,500 active members.

Feeder associations work by allowing members of the association to purchase cattle and sheep for growing and finishing. Financial institutions lend money to feeder associations, which then in turn contract the livestock out to local producers, who feed and sell them. All of the loans to feeder associations are partially guaranteed by the province, often giving members a more competitive interest rate on contracts. The program also allows producers the ability to purchase animals at a much lower capital investment and utilize Alberta's abundant forage crops.

Alberta's successful feeder association program works directly with smaller producers who may not have the equity to acquire loans from banks to purchase animals. Mr. Speaker, this program directly benefits Alberta's family farms and small producers.

But why hogs, and why now? Simply put, Mr. Speaker, the hog industry has changed in the past few years. Previously all of the raising of the animals was done on one farm. Now Alberta's hog industry operates much like the cattle industry. Weanlings, or young hogs, are sold to a finishing operation, which raises them until they reach a slaughter weight.

It's appropriate that hog producers are allowed to access the same successful feeder association structure. It will make it easier for them to add value to farm feed grains and increase the competitiveness of Alberta's hog industry. I know that discussions are ongoing with Alberta producers and our present feeder associations to determine how hog producers will fit within the current program and what regulations need to be amended to reflect changes to our dynamic agricultural industry.

Mr. Speaker, allowing hog producers to take advantage of Alberta's successful feeder association structure will help our agricultural producers prosper. The hog industry is the second-largest feeding sector after cattle. Adding feeder hogs to the feeder association program is a positive move and will help to promote their growth and also help to add stability to their sector.

I urge every member to give this amendment their full support. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated those comments from the hon. Member for Dunvegan. Certainly, I have a few questions in regard to Bill 28. I was looking through this year's government and lottery fund estimates to determine the exact cost of the operation of these feeder associations, and that would be my first question: what exactly is this costing us today? I thought I saw the sum of $52 million in the budget estimates, but surely it cannot be that much.

However, when we're looking at this bill and we're contemplating adding hog producers to the feeder associations, I would like to know: how will this affect hog producers with regard to the CAIS program, or the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program?

I want further details on why we need this. What is the rationale for doing this? Certainly, fewer people are buying feeder pigs and feeder cattle. Most operations are farrow to finish. So we need more explanation on this, please, hon. member. What is the expected number of producers who will be affected under these hog feeder associations?

Certainly, if those questions can be answered in detail in a satisfactory manner, hon. members on this side of the Assembly will contemplate full support of Bill 28.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise to speak to Bill 28 in its second reading. I'm looking at the news release of April 1, 2004, which is about the amendment that this bill is proposing to the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act. The amendment that's being sought by way of this bill proposes to of course expand the definition of cattle to include feeder pigs. Previously the act only covered cattle and sheep.

The question of who will be impacted by the bill – a number of people, a number of hog producers – is a good one. I think we need to know the scope of the effect this amendment will have and how it will increase the opportunity for a substantial number of producers of hogs in this province to add value to their activities when financial institutions are allowed to lend money to them as they presently do to those who raise cattle and sheep.

It's been pointed out at least to me that feeder associations have tracking mechanisms that they use to verify which cattle they've financed. Even with this safeguard in place, a recent story, I think out of Red Deer, described how either alleged fraud or fraud was committed through the financing of phantom cattle. From what we have determined so far, no such tracking mechanism exists for hogs in the province.

So the questions I have are about: what kind of assurances or guarantees are there that this system will not lead to similar problems, particularly in the absence of the fact that there's no tracking system? If my information is correct, then I think that's a legitimate concern that we must address before we pass this bill. I'm raising this as a question. I'm sure the hon. member will have some satisfactory response to the concern that I just expressed.

The other thing is that if there's no tracking system in place, then what's the time frame for the implementation of this amendment to the existing act? We'd need some time within which to put in place the safeguards so that the funds go where they're intended and are properly used.

There also are, of course, some environmental concerns with respect to hog production in the province. Much of the hog production is, as far as I know, dominated by a few large corporations or packing plants. This is unlike the case with beef production, according to my understanding. There is a definite oligopoly in place here in the case of hog production, with Maple Leaf being the largest player, I think, in the game. If that is the case, wouldn't this bill simply strengthen the monopoly position of this one big player to the detriment of a few other smaller producers?

The environmental consequences of this kind of concentrated hog farm are a concern that's well known in this province. Many communities across this province have had serious concerns about the impact on their environments, neighbourhoods, their quality of water, and the land around them where these concentrated operations are presently located. So that, to me, is also an important concern, and I think that although the amendment itself doesn't address that issue, if the amendment is passed by way of this Bill 28, it could lead to increased production of hogs and could exacerbate the environmental problems that many communities across this province are very much concerned about already. Exacerbation of this difficulty is simply going to heighten those concerns even further.

So while we debate this bill, the environmental side of the equation needs to be addressed, and that's why, Mr. Speaker, I think it's appropriate to raise this matter in this second reading stage of the debate with respect to this bill, which otherwise seems to seek only a minor change. There are some important issues that are begged by the increased pork production which I'm assuming, if this amendment is made, will further result from this change. So the need to address what cautionary measures need to be taken in conjunction with this change in the legislation I think is a legitimate one.

So I raise some of these concerns at this stage, and hopefully these matters will be addressed as we proceed with this debate in this stage of the reading and perhaps later on. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan to close debate.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Members from the opposition are asking some very legitimate questions, certainly those on cost of this addition to the feeder association, the numbers of producers impacted, as well as the tracking mechanism for hogs and the time frame for implementation. If I heard them right, those are the issues that they brought up, as well as some environmental concerns. I would suggest that I would bring those responses at committee. So at this stage I would call for the question.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

Bill 29

Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to stand and move second reading of Bill 29, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will amend the current act to allow the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation to make loans or execute guarantees in excess of $2 million to businesses with two or more investors. The current act restricts the dollar amount lent to specific businesses to $2 million regardless of how many investors are involved in a project. The limit will still stay at $2 million, but it will allow a $2 million amount to be loaned to more than one person in the same operation.

This act is being amended to allow Ag Financial Services to facilitate investment in larger value-added projects as well as to lend support to investment vehicles such as new generation co-ops. The act will still mandate that all loans and guarantees continue to satisfy all of the requirements set out in the regulations regarding eligibility and all of the normal lending criteria established by Ag Financial Services. The risk to the lender, Mr. Speaker, will not be increased.

I urge all members of this Legislature to give this bill their full support. Mr. Speaker, I would adjourn debate on Bill 29.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:33 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 29, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/04/29

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly 35 students, two teachers, and one parent from the Grassland school. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. Also, we have one special student, an exchange student from Australia, to whom I would say: we'll give you a special welcome. I would let them rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Community Development 11 staff from his department who are involved in the preservation and protection of our provincial parks and protected areas. They are joined today by parks planners who work on protected areas, regulations, and policies, and I'd ask that they stand as I name them. They are Bill Richards, Doug Bowes, Scott Jones, Ken Sloman, Travis Sjovold, Avelyn Nicol, Dawn Carr and also parks visitors services staff Michael McCready, Mary Fitl, and Stephanie Yuill and, of course, a parks biologist, because you can't do without them, Ksenija Vujoovic, who works on the Alberta Natural Heritage Information Centre, which is the province's biodiversity database. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured today to have four people from Rocky Mountain House in my constituency and especially to have the new president of the Alberta Society of Engineering Technologists. So I would ask Scott and Yvonne Turner and their children Calum and Brenna to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is really a good pleasure today to introduce to you and through you the Vauxhall elementary school. There are 34 students, three teachers, five parents. I think it's really remarkable that this is the 13th year in a row that they have managed to bring the kids to see the Legislative Assembly. Mr. Terry Olfert has been with them as long as I can remember, helping them out. There's Mrs. Trina Mantler-Friesen, a brand new teacher on staff, who grew up in Coaldale. There's Mrs. Lori-Jo Plotzki along with parents Mr. Pete Pepneck, Mr. Bill Sowinski, Mr. Ed Palmer, Mrs. Joanne Enns, Mrs. Jan Tolton. Two of the students are wearing Calgary Flames jerseys, and I think they're going to be more interested in watching a game tonight than, maybe, paying attention to their moms and dads and the teachers. But welcome – it's been a long trip – and have a great day. Would you please rise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 69 visitors from Spruce Grove. These students attend Millgrove elementary school. The residents of Spruce Grove value education, and these kids are a reflection of that. They are a great, enthusiastic, bright, and energetic group of kids. The staff and parents are to be commended on the great job they do at Millgrove.

The students are accompanied by teachers Mr. Randy Williams and Mrs. Deb Schellenberger and parent helpers Mr. Ken Richards, Mr. Gary Wagner, Mrs. Val Coates, Mrs. Karen Whyte. They are seated, I believe, in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and be granted the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some special women celebrating a 50-year anniversary of their graduation from the Royal Alex School of Nursing.

My aunt Enid Blake was a member of this 1954 class. They have honoured her in their remembrance of her. She died many years ago now, but her friendships with her classmates live on. I would like to introduce some members of the class, and my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry will also be introducing members.

This is the class of 1954, the second class, and I'd ask you to rise as I say your name: her special friend Jean Davidson, Maxine Thomson, Grace Penrice, Joyce Primeau, all from Edmonton; Audrey Willmer from Red Deer; Edna Steffens from Sunnyside, Washington; and Barbara Ritchie from Toronto. Please give them a warm welcome to the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It also gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some other members of the 1954 Royal Alexandra School of Nursing. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would like to introduce them: Margaret Shea, Minot, whose grandfather was A.J. Robertson, the leader of the Conservative Party in the province here in 1905; Kathy Riddell from St. Albert – her father's uncle Frank Walker was a Liberal member in 1905 – Dorothy Engen from Eastend, Saskatchewan; Shirley Caldwell, all the way from Nashville, Tennessee; Ann Champion from Edmonton; and Hugh Algar. Mr. Speaker, with your permission I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly today two guests who are well known to most of us. First, Doug Graham, who is the Progressive Conservative Party's new president, voted in by party delegates at last weekend's AGM in Banff. Doug is an Albertan who is outstanding in many ways: professionally as a lawyer, as a husband and father, as a community volunteer, and as a dedicated member of the PC Party for 20 years. I have to say that I've been fortunate to have his support on the Calgary-West board for many years. Now party members will benefit from Doug's broad experience and leadership, especially as we move into an election year. I would also like to introduce my second guest, Marilyn Haley, the very capable executive director of PC Alberta. As they are both standing, I would now ask all members of this Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly another important guest that we have seated in the members' gallery, a guest that I have had the pleasure of actually introducing before but in another capacity because, like the senior Progressive Conservative Association, there is another organization that has recently had a change in its presidents. It's my pleasure to introduce to the members someone who previously was the vice-president of the Progressive Conservative Youth and now is serving that great organization as its president. A long-time Alberta resident, an individual who has just completed his master's degree at the University of Alberta, I know he will do an outstanding job in his capacity as president and leader of PC Youth. I would ask Mr. David McColl to rise and receive the usual warm welcome of members of the House.

head: 1:40 Ministerial Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Calgary Flames

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As everyone knows, it's springtime in Alberta, and with spring comes playoff hockey. Last year at this time I rose to talk about the beloved Edmonton Oilers. This year I don't have that option, so I rise to talk about the remarkable Calgary Flames.

Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Flames' playoff presence makes a number of important impacts in Alberta. It speaks to a vibrant economy. I'm told by my colleague from Calgary that there are no available Flames jerseys left for sale in Edmonton, if you wanted to buy one. It speaks for great inputs into small business, particularly those in the hospitality sector. It is a true showcase of Alberta. I'm told by my department that some 24 million Americans and Canadians tuned in the other night to see the Calgary Flames defeat the Detroit Red Wings, obviously great advertising for this glorious province and the absolutely beautiful city of Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to suggest to Edmonton MLAs and others who have supported the Oilers with a great vengeance that we now recognize that our true hope lies in the Calgary Flames and we refer to them now as Alberta's team. To that end I would like to offer on behalf of all government members both north and south to Ken King, the general manager; Coach Sutter; the ownership group; and his team who have put so much effort into getting Calgary back into the playoffs: we all support you, we all wish you well, and we hope that things go extremely well.

One other comment, Mr. Speaker, that I have to make: Flames in six. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a proud Edmontonian I was rooting for the Oilers all the way, but now only one Alberta team has a shot at the 2004 Stanley Cup, so as a proud Albertan I hear myself chanting: go, Flames, go.

The friendly rivalry between Alberta's major cities has been put aside as many Edmontonians cheer on the Calgary Flames as they do their best to return the cup to western Canada. In a gritty, hard-fought win over the Detroit Red Wings on Tuesday the Flames showed that speed, determination, and teamwork gets the job done. Let's hope that this speed, determination, and teamwork never burn out on Calgary's Flames.

The Flames have been propelled to victory by the support of Albertans watching them with pride, and we would be remiss not to recognize the fans because it is their support that helps spirit the team to victory. Flames fans have made the Saddledome a formidable place for any opposing team this season. Calgary supporters truly feel that they are valued by their team, and the Flames always respond with 60 minutes and sometimes more of spirited effort every game.

The Flames rely on the determination of their players and their fans to stay alive in the playoffs. The small-market team does not have the salary base of rivals like the Detroit Red Wings. Flames players have proven that they are talented, and even the Detroit coach admits that talent is the heart of the Flames team. The Flames have proven that you can't buy a cup with money. It takes team effort to get you there.

The Flames' roster is well oiled. Team captain Jarome Iginla was born in Edmonton. Defenceman Mike Commodore hails from Fort Saskatchewan. Let's hope that tonight they can continue making all Albertans proud with their performance, and let all of Alberta stand behind the team because they are Alberta's Flames for the rest of this year's playoffs. Let's hope the Flames can extinguish the Red Wings. May the red light behind the Detroit goal burn bright red often and not be lost in the sea of red.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I suspect, hon. member, that if unanimous request were asked for, it would be provided, so I'm anticipating that. Would that be fine, to recognize . . .

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I almost wish that it had been withheld today, but nevertheless I will do my duty.

Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Flames are ruining some good jokes here in Edmonton. No longer can Edmontonians confidently tell how you spell "dynasty" in Calgary: o-n-e. No longer can we chuckle about the first sign of spring in Calgary: not robins, but the Flames on the golf course. These jokes, enjoyed for years by countless Edmontonians, no longer have meaning. They have been ruined by the outstanding performance of the Calgary Flames Hockey Club in this season. But ample compensation has been forthcoming. The great hockey, the outstanding performance in the series against the Vancouver Canucks, and the chance to cheer on an Alberta team all the way to the Stanley Cup are more than sufficient recompense.

I'm sure I speak for almost all Edmontonians in wishing the best of luck to the Calgary Flames in bringing the Stanley Cup back to Alberta.

Oral Question Period

Municipal Funding

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, for the past decade Alberta's municipalities have borne much of the brunt of this government's deficit-cutting policies. They've had to make do with less, increase user fees and property taxes, and curtail services. After all this the Premier belittles their contributions by saying, quote, I didn't hear any municipality offer to take up their share of the deficit, end quote. My questions are to the Premier. How can the Premier say that municipalities have not carried their weight when they had almost $400 million cut from their budgets between 1992 and 2002?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, my earlier remarks were not meant to imply that municipalities weren't part of the work to pay off the deficit in the 1990s. I know they experienced cutbacks, just as every sector of this province did. It was applied equally. But what unnerved me, I guess, and what bothered me was the mayor of Calgary saying that automatically 20 per cent of any surplus should go to municipalities. Well, it wasn't automatic that 20 per cent of any deficit went to municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member – he wasn't around then, but he was in government at that particular time – that we were going through some very tough times, '93, '94, '95. We had a structural deficit of $3.4 billion annually that had accumulated into a debt of $23 billion. We had to take some very strong and sometimes innovative actions to get that deficit off our back and to start paying down the debt.

One of the things that we did and municipalities did not do is that we immediately rolled back all salaries, including those of MLAs, by 5 per cent. We did a number of things to eliminate that deficit. All of them, of course, weren't on the backs of municipalities. We targeted every sector of government, including ourselves.

So when municipalities talk about an automatic 20 per cent of any surplus, I'm saying: will they automatically take 20 per cent of any deficit?

Dr. Taft: Can the Premier tell us how many millions of dollars the province saved and put towards the deficit by downloading provincial responsibilities onto municipalities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I guess the fundamental question is: are the Liberals now ashamed and are they now criticizing this government for doing what no other Canadian government had done at that particular time, and that is to eliminate the deficit? Are they now criticizing this government for doing what the people told us they wanted us to do?

You know, had the Liberals been the government – and they came closer than ever in 1993 – I'm sure that we would still be swimming in a sea of red ink. These Liberals over here are saying that deficits are the Canadian way: we love deficits; have a deficit. That's the way they operate, and that's the way they want us to operate. Well, we aren't going to do that.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will this government contribute its fair share of the $3 billion surplus to all those municipipalities who did in fact contribute their fair share to eliminating the deficit and reducing the debt?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it was in conjunction with municipalities that we worked out a different funding formula for transportation. They get a percentage now of the gas tax. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has struck, I think, a very worthwhile, fruitful relationship with the AUMA, AAMD and C. We negotiate with municipalities relative to funding and funding formulas. We try to discuss these things in a rational manner. I was only responding to things that I heard in the media and through the media, and normally that's not the way that municipalities negotiate, and normally that's not the way the government negotiates with municipalities.

I know that that's the way the Liberals negotiate because the news media is their only negotiating power. They're quite content to simply fall into the trap – well, not fall into the trap, because they love it – and follow the fundamental premises of journalism, which are the five Cs of controversy, confusion, chaos, conflict, and confrontation. That's the way they operate, and that's the way they will continue to operate.

Government Aircraft

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Infrastructure revealed that on some flights using the government's air fleet, costs "are charged back to the department that the minister is responsible for." It appears that these costs are in addition to the over $4 million it costs Executive Council per year to operate, maintain, and fly the government's air fleet. To the Premier: how much higher than $4 million is the actual cost per year of the government's air fleet?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that answer. Perhaps I'll defer to the Provincial Treasurer.

I'm wondering, you know, and I was contemplating yesterday: where are they coming from? What do they want us to do? The media are going to be asking the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition: what is their end point? What do they want? Perhaps the hon. leader can stand up and tell me. Do they want us to park all the planes? Do they want us to sell them all off? Do they want us to use them only to go to Small Town, Alberta? I have no idea.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that opposition members are entitled to use those aircraft, and there is complete disclosure. The manifests are available. Obviously, they're getting the information through FOIP and simply asking for the manifests. I have a manifest here dated 11-19-98, and it shows the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, the hon. Minister of Energy, the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, Gary Severtson, a former member of this Legislature, Gary Dickson, a former Liberal member of this Legislature representing Calgary-Buffalo, all going to the Grey Cup. I mean, that was public. It's wide open.

So I'm just asking the hon. member: to what end is he asking these questions? What does he want? Maybe I can provide him with an answer. What he is doing is creating an environment of suspicion and, as I said, feeding into the fundamental principles of journalism, those five Cs of controversy, confusion, chaos, conflict, confrontation, and so on. But he has never stood up and said: here's the agenda; here's what we want to do. Maybe he'll be honest for a change, stand up, and say precisely what he wants.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. How much of this government's travel and communications budget, which has skyrocketed by 47 per cent to $131 million in just the past five years, is spent on keeping the government's air fleet in the air?

Mr. Klein: Well, again, I go: what is the end? What does he want? Does he want me to stop using the aircraft? Does he want the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, the Minister of Seniors? Does he want opposition members to stop using aircraft?

Mr. Speaker, relative to the figures, they're all available for examination by the opposition members, and ministers are available to answer questions relative to expenditures for communications and for air travel and for expense. There's the Public Accounts procedure where they can ask more questions. But what is the end? What is he leading up to? I'm curious.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, the information isn't as available as the Premier says. Why won't this government be accountable – be accountable – to Alberta taxpayers and permit anyone to make copies of flight information as well as releasing the Premier's past travel itineraries? What are they hiding?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if you ask for it, you will receive. I'd be glad to table this. This is a manifest from 1998. These are made available all the time.

But to what end? You know, whether I'm flying alone or flying with my wife or whether there are eight people on the King Air or six people on the 200, whether we're going to Oyen or to Toronto, I mean, to what end is he asking these questions? I'm perplexed, especially since the airplanes have been around since the 1970s.

Now, we did scale down; we sold our helicopters. Considering our fleet, outside of British Columbia, it's far smaller than most fleets in most provinces. What is the problem? Especially since we aren't flitting around like their federal cousins in Challenger jets and A320s fitted out like a living room. We don't use military people to act as stewards and stewardesses, flight attendants, and we aren't spending millions and millions and millions and millions of dollars on airplanes like the federal government.

Dr. Taft: Well, we don't know.

Mr. Klein: Well, they do know. They've alluded to what the feds post on their web site. Well, Mr. Speaker, you can get this information. All the hon. member needs to do is ask for it.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Premier's Travel

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, yesterday in response to questions about taking a government aircraft to an exclusive golf course in Nova Scotia the Premier said, "Big deal." Well, Mr. Premier, it is a big deal to Albertans when they see the government abusing their tax dollars. To the Premier: can the Premier make it clear? Was the Fox Harb'r trip government business, or was it PC Party business?

Mr. Klein: Well, that's an interesting question. You know, he didn't need a researcher to dig up the question because the same question was asked yesterday by a member of the media.

Mr. Speaker, I considered it to be government business, but if the party paid for it, that's fine too. So what? And that's what I say again.

Mr. Speaker, I stopped there at the invitation of Ron Joyce, a well-known businessperson in Canada, the former CEO of Tim Hortons, a former co-owner of the Calgary Flames, a member of the Order of Canada, who brought together about 40 business leaders from throughout North America. He invited me down to do a little golfing and to do a little networking with some of these people and said: this is a good opportunity for you to tell some of the biggest players in America about the Alberta advantage.

As it turned out, the party picked up the tab for Fox Harb'r, but I would have considered it a government expense. If the party picked it up, all that much better. I don't know what he's complaining about other than that their party, being as bankrupt as it is, could never afford it.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is puzzling. Is it government policy to allow the PC Party to pay for government business?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't care. He can pay for my trips, if he wants, out of his own pocket. If it saves the taxpayers' dollars, who cares?

Mr. Speaker, I'm not getting a lot of cards and letters, notwithstanding the fact that he's trying to make this an issue. I'm getting no phone calls, no mail on this particular issue because people, good-thinking Albertans, understand, you know, the need to travel, the need to meet people, the need to influence especially those people who can . . .

Mr. Bonner: Lower your handicap?

Mr. Klein: Fine. That, too, if a golf game goes along with it. Are you telling me that no members over there, none of them, golf or participate on the golf course? If none of them golf, then stand up and say so. If you have never ever been on the golf course and have never discussed business on the golf course, stand up and say so, because I'll challenge you. You'll be telling a big fib if you stand up and say that you've never done that. It's all right for them to do it, but it's not all right for me to do it. I mean, do I see a double standard here?

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Can the Premier, in the spirit of openness that he's suggesting here, tell Albertans how many times he has used their tax dollars or perhaps their tax deductible political contributions to help fund other golfing trips or other vacations?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely none of his business. Absolutely none of his business. How I use party money, how I use my own money is none of his business whatsoever. He should be ashamed for asking that question. Will this hon. member stand up and tell me how much of his own money he spends on anything? I don't question him about, you know, his government pension with the university and the salary he gets, but they seem to take the liberty of questioning us on everything when they're as guilty as sin on most things. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, for instance, spent $10,000 last year to travel around a constituency that you could spit across.

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have every right to be cynical about this government's latest phony fight with Ottawa over health care. It's pretty clear that the federal Liberals, despite yesterday's backtracking, are onside with the Tory government in wanting to expand private, for-profit delivery in the public health care system. This position of the Martin Liberals nicely dovetails with that of the federal Conservatives under Stephen Harper, leaving only the New Democrats opposed to the agenda of creeping privatization and two-tiered health care. To the Premier: why has the government delayed the release of its two-tiered health care proposals until after the likely date of the next federal election if not to protect the political hides of their federal Conservative cousins?

Mr. Klein: To protect the hides of the federal Conservative cousins? Well, the federal Conservatives, like the provincial Liberals, do not develop policy. It's the federal Liberals that develop policy. So we're not doing anything to protect anyone's hide.

We're doing health reform and undertaking health reform initiatives to protect the health system so that it will be there for our children and our grandchildren and our great-grandchildren in future years. That's why we're doing it, Mr. Speaker. We aren't paying any attention nor do we quite frankly care what the feds do or what the federal Conservatives do or don't do. We will participate with them on matters that will achieve efficiencies in the health system nationally, but relative to our responsibilities we will proceed with our health reforms with or without a federal election.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this government is hiding its two-tiered health care plan to avoid creating political troubles for the federal Conservatives during the federal election, can the Premier please confirm that one of the proposals in this government's health care package is to delist some services and force Albertans to buy supplementary private insurance to cover them?

Mr. Klein: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, he's trying to draw us into that 15-second sound bite that is so appealing to the provincial Liberals and the provincial NDs. I'm not going to be drawn into that.

Mr. Speaker, all of our health reforms will be brought together in a package. We hope to have that package tabled by the end of June, at which time it will be discussed by caucus. Then it will go out for public consultation. I can see then, for the first time in a long time, both the Liberals and the NDs hitting the road at great taxpayer expense, racking up mileage, to lambaste the report and try to influence the way the public, the ordinary Albertan, reacts to that report. Just watch them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans are wondering what it is about the province's two-tiered health care plan that this Tory government wants to keep hidden from Albertans and Canadians until after the upcoming federal election is safely out of the way.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm interested to know what the hon. member means by two-tiered. You know, there are some across Canada, including NDs, who say: well, the system is now two tiered. It's two tiered to the extent that people with money can go to the United States, but I'm not going to get into that.

Mr. Speaker, we're interested in reform to achieve sustainability, and this will include a multitude of things, hopefully. I've said that perhaps there may be some interpretations of what we do that might or maybe might not be in contravention of the principles of the Canada Health Act. That remains to be seen.

Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member to wait and see, and when the report in its entirety comes out, when that report along with the Mazankowski report and the plan comes out in its entirety, then he can get all excited about it and all itchy and all tingly and say, "Oh, boy, is this ever good stuff," and then start to travel the province to tell the people, as I suspect he will do, how bad we are. And you know what? I hope that he does, because they will finally get to see the great Raj Pannu for what he actually is: a nothing.

The Speaker: Well, we do have a rule about names. I will suggest to the Premier that he should recant that and not mention names.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

2:10 Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every day my constituency office and those of some of my colleagues receive calls from people who are struggling to make ends meet on $850 a month that they receive through the assured income for the severely handicapped, which is better known as AISH. They have to cover rising costs in utilities, housing, and groceries on an income that has been fixed since 1999. The average rent for a two-bedroom apartment in Alberta is $665 a month. My question is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How can you justify giving most AISH recipients what amounts to less than minimum wage?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. The AISH income that we provide of $850 a month is meant, really, to cover basic needs. I'll grant the hon. member that it's not a lot but still one of the most generous programs of its kind that is available in Canada.

Even though, as he indicates, there has been no increase in the AISH income support levels since 1999, we've actually increased the AISH budget by more than $120 million over that particular period. Now, most of that, of course, is due to growth, but also we are experiencing what anyone else is that has to pay for medical costs, and this has been a dramatic increase. In 1999 the number that we were spending on medical costs for AISH recipients was $63 million. This past year that had risen to $118 million. It's an increase of 87 per cent.

Now, obviously, we just cannot stand here and do nothing about this, so we've provided for an AISH review to come up this fall, and these are some of the issues that we're going to have to deal with.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. How can families afford to live on such little income?

Mr. Dunford: The first thing, I think, to understand is that of the 32,000 Albertans that we have covered by the AISH program, about 90 per cent are single without any dependants. So we need to bring in the context here that, of course, they are just supporting themselves.

The other thing that we have to remember – and of course it applies to other support programs as well but particularly to AISH – is that they get a health benefits card that provides them comprehensive health coverage. So we're looking at premium-free Alberta health care. We're looking at prescription drugs, dental and optical services, emergency ambulance, and, if they happen to be diabetic, then essential diabetic supplies. The value of this, of course, will vary by unique individual, but really what we're looking at, Mr. Speaker, is an average of $300 a month.

So we have the income, we have the medical support, and as a matter of fact many AISH clients actually have additional income as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the same minister. If they are only earning $850, what do you suggest I say to my AISH constituents?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I get the calls as well as any other member here in the House. You know, we have started to keep track again of how people do make ends meet. We're told that some folks have started to move into shared accommodation, and we try to accommodate that. Certainly, my hon. colleague in Seniors has been working very, very hard on affordable housing throughout the province. Of course, some of them, because they want to contribute, have gone into part-time jobs. Others, of course, perhaps like many of us here, have quit smoking, all of these kinds of choices. There are resources in the community that are available. It's not just the provincial government that tries to help out low-income Albertans. AISH clients would certainly fall into this area.

Again, if the person is capable of taking on work, they can earn up to $1,332 through employment before they would lose their AISH benefits.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Electricity Pricing

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Instead of leading the charge on consumer protection, this government is falling far, far behind other jurisdictions. Recently the Montana Public Service Commission began investigating whether the state's consumers lost millions in the electricity market manipulations that plagued the west in 2000 and 2001. Of the 14 companies under investigation seven are able to operate in Alberta. My first question is to the Premier. Will the Premier park his plane in the hangar long enough to commit to conducting an independent public investigation into the possible manipulation of Alberta's electricity market in 2000 and 2001?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, the preamble and the reference to the plane is completely uncalled for. The plane is parked right now. I think it is, but it should be flying because the worst thing you can do for an airplane – as I understand, it's like a boat – is to park it. The best thing you can do is to park a Liberal. Airplanes are built to fly, not to be parked.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the situation in Montana and what they are doing there, that is entirely up to that state. The Alberta system is working. I can say this before I have the hon. minister respond: clear rules are in place and are continually being examined to ensure a fair and efficient market.

With respect to the Montana situation I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

The Speaker: Well, the Montana situation has no jurisdiction in this House.

Proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: without an independent public investigation, how can Albertans be sure they weren't ripped off in this electricity deregulation boondoggle that your government caused?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the hon. member – he either has a very short memory, or he prefers not to remember or prefers for political reasons not to mention the investigation into similar allegations that was undertaken in the year 2000 relative to market manipulation. That issue was investigated. I don't know by whom. I think it was consumer affairs. If it wasn't, it was by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, or the EUB. The ruling was that there was no clear evidence that Alberta consumers ever bore any costs arising from market manipulation.

So, Mr. Speaker, for this hon. member to stand up and imply that there has never been an investigation is, to say the least, misleading. Like so many other statements that come from the Liberals that are misleading, I would ask him once again to stand up and apologize to Albertans for trying to mislead them.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: when will this government finally stand up for consumers and initiate an investigation into electricity price manipulation in this province in the years 2000 and 2001? What are you afraid of?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I already said that in late 2000 allegations were investigated and that there was no clear evidence that Alberta consumers have borne any costs arising from market manipulation. I would add that the market surveillance administrator has always had the authority to take action against unfair market practices.

Now, I would suggest that if this hon. member has any evidence of market manipulation other than innuendo – and they're so good at innuendo. They're so good at standing up and implying something is wrong without stating it, but through innuendo they imply it. Will this hon. member commit to the media that there is something wrong? Will he commit to the media that, yes, there is something wrong and that he is going to demand that the market surveillance administrator investigate? He has not, Mr. Speaker. He has not.

I have not received a copy of a letter. The public certainly haven't been informed of any official request by this member or any other member to have an investigation launched, but if he has evidence of market manipulation, then take that evidence to the market surveillance administrator and let him investigate it. I suspect that he doesn't have any evidence at all, and he is simply using vicious innuendo to create suspicion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Home-schooling Regulations

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Home-schooling is becoming a popular and effective means to educate Alberta's children. In fact, nearly 10,000 students in Alberta are educated using this method. However, proposed home-schooling regulations appear to threaten the flexibility and the individual model on which home-schooling is based. My questions are for the Minister of Learning. Is the minister contemplating standardized testing for home-schoolers?

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much for that excellent question. We have gone through our regulations, and as the hon. member knows and you know, Mr. Speaker, every one of our regulations is sunsetted. After the sunset has passed, it is time to review the regulations, and consequently what we are doing now is reviewing our home-schooling regulations as per the sunset clause.

When it comes directly to testing, Mr. Speaker, there is testing that is available for the home students. About 20 per cent of the home students right now take our provincial achievement tests. About 80 per cent take another form of learning evaluation. What has been put out in the discussion paper about home schooling is to have more and more students take the provincial achievement tests.

Mr. Speaker, I can only speak as a parent, but if I were a parent who was home-schooling my children, I would want to know how they stack up against other students around the province. Are they actually learning? What is occurring? Are they learning the objectives of our education system?

Mr. Speaker, we will be looking at all of the regulations. Is there going to be anything that absolutely forces these home-schoolers to take achievement testing? There is nothing like that. There will be recommendations, though, that will allow them to take it. We'll talk to them about how they possibly could get a higher percentage of their people taking it so that, quite frankly, we can find out exactly what is happening with the curriculum of the home-schoolers that are out there right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the minister contemplating making home-schoolers follow some sort of modified standard curriculum?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, in a perfect world I would certainly like the home-schoolers to follow a standardized curriculum so that we know exactly what is being taught out there, but a lot of the home-schoolers do an extremely good job in what are called, again, learning objectives. So there is no contemplation of forcing home-schoolers to follow the standardized curriculum.

We are working together with the home-schoolers to ensure the goals of this ministry and my personal goals, which are to ensure that every student receives an excellent education in Alberta, whether it's in the home-schooling system, whether it's in the private system, whether it's in public system.

I think we need to take a very serious look at all of these issues. But are we going to mess around, so to speak, with the home-schooling system? No, we're not. We have a good system in place. However, again, as I stated with regard to the regulation, because of the sunset clause we are obliged to look at it. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, if we can improve it to help home-schoolers, we certainly will.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you. Finally, what input will home-schoolers have before these regulations become finalized?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations that have been out there with the home-schoolers. There have been the home-school groups talked to. In talking to my MLA colleagues around the Assembly, there have been a number of home-schoolers that have contacted their MLAs about specific issues, and I would certainly encourage the home-schoolers to do that.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I met with one group of home-schoolers two days ago, and I suggested that I sit down with all the home-schoolers and actually have a very frank conversation about how we in Alberta Learning can help the home-schoolers to ensure that they get the best education possible. I think that that's in all of our interests, and we will be doing that. Presently we're aiming for around the first or second week in September to do that, purely from a logistical point of view. I strongly feel that it's important.

Mr. Speaker, just to finish, what I would say is that all the recommendations on the regulations will come back to me, and the hon. member will subsequently see them before any changes are done. But, again, I really, really must emphasize that the reason for this is a sunset clause, and it's to help home-schoolers to make things better if at all possible.

Calgary Courthouse

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, this week the Premier tried to lay the blame for cost overruns on the proposed P3 Calgary courthouse on excessive demands from the judges. However, the judges have denied any such demands, and now even a spokesperson for the Premier's office admits that the Premier got it wrong. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister please explain why there's such poor communication between the judiciary and the government on the issue of the Calgary courthouse?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that there is poor communication between the judiciary and the government on the issue of the courthouse. We've had communications going back 25 years with respect to the Calgary courthouse strategy. In the last five years, since I've been minister, we've had numerous meetings on the Calgary courthouse strategy.

Now, I will indicate this. The Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal about last February or March decided that they didn't wish to participate in the focus groups and the consultations for reasons of their own, and I wouldn't want to paraphrase their reasons for the House. Essentially, they withdrew from the process, but they were always welcome to come in.

However, the Provincial Court participated all the way through the process, right through to now, and they're still participating, and about two months ago the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal withdrew just before we dealt with the request for a proposal, which was, quite frankly, untimely. Nonetheless, the process proceeded and proceeded well and proceeded with good input from the other courts. Justice had the requirements that each of the courts had put together. We amassed those, put them together, and created the requirements that we then provided to Infrastructure in terms of what we thought was defensible in terms of public spending, was appropriate in terms of housing the courts, and appropriate in terms of access to justice for Calgarians and people in southern Alberta.

So I don't believe that we had any problem with respect to the communication. I don't believe we had any lack of understanding with respect to what the courts' desires were, nor did they have any lack of understanding of what we thought was appropriate. There were certainly disagreements, and there always will be disagreements between what they think is appropriate and what we think is inappropriate. But it's an interactive process, a consultative process, and they've been involved all along the way. So I don't think there's any lack of communication other than the fact that for a period of time they chose to withdraw from the process.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: is it the minister's understanding that that is why the Premier was confused between a consultant's recommendation that the building be built airplane-proof versus the judges' request for a safe working space?

Mr. Hancock: You know, it's only the Liberals who would expect that the Premier would know every detail of a process that's been going on for 25 years. In fact, there are a number of issues that were raised that suggested that there were additional costs to the process and to the building, and some of the examples that were used in various meetings, appropriately or inappropriately, as to what might have caused extra costs to be in the process were some of the security features in terms of overbuilding the building for collapse status in case of a threat by bomb or airplane or whatever, bullet-proof glass in appropriate places. Those were mentioned as items which added additional costs to the building over and above what you might expect for a normal building built to normal standards in downtown Calgary.

If the Premier chose to use those as examples of what caused the cost of the building to be higher than a normal building, that's entirely understandable. The question of where those came from can be misconstrued or misunderstood by anybody. But only the member opposite would expect that the Premier would know every detail of where every item in a building came from.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. How much money will the Alberta government have to pay to the private developer in order to abandon the current P3 model for the Calgary courthouse? How much money will we owe?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, in the process that we are currently going through, we are using the same builder, the same people as far as the operations are concerned; we're using the same architects. So the work that has already been done on the project will in the main part still be used. Yes, there will have to be some additional work done as far as the things that we have taken out that we believe will not adversely affect the function of the new courthouse, but certainly the majority of the work that has already been done will be used in the new courthouse.

Teachers' Pension Payout

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, when discussing public-sector wage settlements, a lot of attention is always paid to the percentage increase in annual salaries, but I'm curious about the impact of wage increases on total pension payouts. My questions are for the Minister of Learning. Could the minister tell us what would be the approximate total value expected of an average teacher's pension plan in Alberta given current life expectancies? In other words, how much do we expect the average teacher to earn in retirement, total payout?

The Speaker: The minister has this information?

Dr. Oberg: I'll try, Mr. Speaker. I will try my best.

Mr. Speaker, the teachers' pension plan is based on 1.4 per cent per year for the first $38,000 of a teacher's salary, which is I believe something to do with the federal taxation system. It then is 2 per cent per year of the next amount of their particular salary. A teachers' average salary right now after nine years' experience is roughly $70,000. If we use the average retirement age of 55, which would be 30 years plus 55 equals 85, which is the magic number when it comes to the pension plan, the amount of dollars that a teacher would receive assuming that they live for 25 years is roughly $875,000.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you. My second question, again for the same minister: what would be the approximate financial impact of last year's wage settlement on the total value of an average teacher's pension payout if any?

Dr. Oberg: Again, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will give the hon. member all of the actual figures, and I'm just speaking from the top of my head as I say this.

First of all, the teachers' pension plan is based on the best five years of a teacher's work experience. So if we saw a 14 per cent increase, which is what the wage settlement was two years ago, what you're going to see in rough increase value amount is about an extra $150,000 over a 25-year life expectancy, keeping in mind, Mr. Speaker, as I say this that there are a lot of variables in there. The length of life, when they retire: all of these things are also involved in that calculation.

Mr. Lord: My final question for the same minister: given that a 15 per cent pay increase is a very different amount of money for someone earning, say, $100,000 a year than it is for someone earning $40,000 a year, for example, and that it may be viewed as inequitable on that basis, has there been any thought given to reverting to an equal dollar amount of raise versus an equal percentage amount of raise when negotiating wage settlements?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, the largest factor in this question, quite simply, is that we don't negotiate. It is up to the teachers and the School Boards Association as to what negotiation takes place. I will say, though, in direct response to that question that in the arbitration settlement there were actually two years taken off the payment grid, which would in effect do exactly what the hon. member has said.

I really feel that for sake of brevity the best answer to this question is purely that the school boards and the teachers have the ability to negotiate and have the ability to do what they see is fit.

Highway 3

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, today wildlife and environment experts are meeting in the Crowsnest Pass to discuss the highway 3 functional planning study. However, residents only heard of this meeting through word of mouth, and numerous requests by residents to attend have been denied despite the fact that a preliminary decision is anticipated to be reached as early as June of this year. To the Minister of Transportation: why are residents not allowed to attend the meeting even as observers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, part of the process is that we hire consultants to carry out the functional plan for the highway. The reason we're back at this whole thing is at the request of the elected council of Crowsnest, and as a result we're going through this whole process of public consultation again. If there is some meeting that somebody somehow feels that they haven't been given proper access to or notice of, we'll certainly look into it. I just can't keep track of all of these hearings that occur in the province of Alberta on a daily basis.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the consultants for the socioeconomic studies haven't been chosen yet and the environmental studies won't be completed until September, how can a preliminary decision be made as early as June 1?

Mr. Stelmach: Purely speculative on behalf of the member. Really there are so many different groups that will be delivering evidence and information. Perhaps part of the first step will be June, but I'm not aware of any closure date in terms of June 30.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: are these studies simply a smokescreen to ensure that the northern route is chosen, which would facilitate future coal bed methane development that is anticipated to take place in the Crowsnest Pass?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, it's the first time I've heard this speculation on behalf of the member. We're there, as I said before, because there was a genuine request by the mayor to review again the first study that was done in terms of where the location of highway 3 should be, and that's why we're going through this process again.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four members for Members' Statements, but in the interim might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you eight visitors from the Good Samaritan Society facility in Spruce Grove. They are a great group of seniors and also very positive advocates for other residents in Spruce Grove. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they either wave or rise as they can and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House a few guests that I have here. Two of them are my children, Samantha Beck, who is working on genetics research at UBC, and my son James Beck, who is in fourth-year physics, though he talks about running off and joining a motorcycle gang, and their two friends, Kelly Davidson and Kenan Jallad. If they would rise and accept the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a distinct pleasure today to introduce four very special guests that are seated in the members' gallery: Angelina, who is in grade 9 and who attends St. Rose junior high school; her sisters Sarah and Christina in grade 6 and grade 3 respectively at St. Paul elementary; their beautiful mother, Marissa, who is a gourmet cook and just happens to be the wife of our assistant deputy minister in Children's Services, Bill Meade. I'd ask the Assembly to honour their presence here today as the girls learn about the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour of introducing to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly the chief and council of Sucker Creek. They're here to discuss the flooding of Sucker Creek First Nation. They're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they all stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Members' Statements

Beef Industry

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on March 26 of this year the U.S. Department of Agriculture provided the results of its bovine spongiform encephalopathy investigation. The report made some recommendations to help prevent BSE in the future but also commented on the current state of the North American cattle industry.

The report made it quite clear that the "first case of BSE in the United States cannot be considered in isolation from the whole cattle production system in North America." This is a recognition of what we have been saying all along. We are a truly integrated cattle market and industry on this continent. The beef industry is perhaps one of the most integrated industries in the entire North American economy.

The report also recommended that a "BSE task force, which includes governmental and non governmental stakeholders" be established to ensure that policies are developed and implemented in a consistent and scientifically valid manner. It is a relief to know that the USDA was reading the weekly report of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, as he proposed such a task force last year when the single case of BSE was found in Alberta.

The report also recommends that mechanical tissue processing methods should be banned from use thereby decreasing the risk even further of contamination by BSE-infected animals. Of interest to many, no doubt, is the recommendation that all specified risk material be excluded from all animal feed, including pet food.

The report spells out quite clearly that the "feed ban that is currently in place is insufficient to prevent exposure of cattle to the BSE agent." The report is available on the USDA web site for all to view. We should seriously consider these recommendations in Canada.

There is another matter that we in North America should be examining as well, and that is a North American integrated cattle identification system. Serious concerns were expressed about the United States' ability to effectively trace all animals that had come in contact with the index cow from last December. We should continue to urge the federal government to start talks on developing such a system with the U.S. and the Mexicans immediately.

Let us make some real changes to protect our food supply and enhance confidence in our beef industry.

Thank you.

Municipal Funding

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is among the leading provinces in economic growth with its economy expected to grow by 4.1 per cent in 2004. With this growth comes increasing responsibility for municipalities, who are charged with providing many essential services to Albertans. The quality of these services is crucial to Albertans as they act as indicators of our quality of life here in the province.

With service and infrastructure needs increasing and costs going up, municipal revenue simply isn't enough to close the gap even with major cost-cutting measures in place and limited tax increases. Combined with other factors such as the mad cow scare and the rising cost of natural gas, it is abundantly clear that municipal budgets are not financially equipped to deal with the rising cost of operations.

Municipalities require provincial support now more than ever if they are to adequately fulfill the responsibilities that have been handed down to them. Provincial support must come not only in the form of councils and consultations with municipalities on roles and responsibilities but, more importantly, in the form of stable and reliable funding in the form of general purpose grants and grants for specific projects. Municipalities have long dealt with the issue of instability of provincial grants. Grants that are announced and then retracted deny municipalities the stability they need to survive and to plan.

With the provincial government's recent reported surplus in the neighbourhood of $3 billion municipalities feel stronger than ever that the province should be contributing more to municipal budgets. The Alberta Liberal caucus believes that municipalities need stable, equitable, and predictable funding. We also believe that provincial funding for municipalities must be based on a clear statement of principles, roles, and responsibilities. The provincial government must take a stronger leadership role in addressing the problems that municipalities in Alberta are currently facing. It must provide the necessary funding to ensure that all Albertans, no matter where they live in the province, are ensured of a high quality of life. Most importantly, it must realize that its strong municipalities are the key to sustainable growth in this province and that by choking off funding to them, we are stunting our own long-term growth.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Armenian Genocide

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year on April 18 we remembered the slaughter of over 6 million Jews, Poles, and others. On April 24 of every year we remember another slaughter: the massacre of over 1 and a half million Armenian men, women, and children. World recognition of the Armenian genocide is a monumental step towards eliminating future genocide. As long as nations in the world continue to accept alterations to the facts of history that moderate the suffering and the horror that actually happened, we will face future systematic annihilations of entire cultures. Just as the human monster Adolf Hitler said, "Who remembers the Armenian genocide?" and then counted on denial and apathy to alter history and proceeded to terminate the lives of over 6 million people, so will others.

On May 13, 2002, the Canadian Senate, by an overwhelming vote of 39 to 1, adopted a motion to recognize the Armenian genocide. Motion 44 was sponsored by Senator Shirley Maheu and seconded by Senator Raymond C. Setlakwe. On April 21, 2004, the Canadian House of Commons voted 153 to 68 to support the motion declaring the events of 90 years ago as genocide despite a request from the Canadian Minister of Foreign Affairs not to aggravate our NATO ally Turkey.

It is with great appreciation that I personally thank our federal government for having the courage to do what is right. I extend special thanks to our two Senators and especially to Sarkis Assadourian, MP, Brampton Centre, Ontario, for having the courage and tenacity to carry this motion through the Senate and the House of Commons despite many challenges. An entire generation of Canadians with Armenian heritage, including my family, can now overcome the wounds of the past and the agony of denial. However, it will be a long time before this world of ours accepts the humanity, the dignity, and the rights of all people.

On April 21, 2004, the government of Canada took one giant step towards preventing future genocides, and should anyone ask who remembers the Armenian genocide, Canadians can now stand up and say: we remember.

Canadian Citizenship Rights

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, as Canadian and Alberta citizens we are blessed with and maybe even take for granted sometimes citizenship rights that are the envy of many nations worldwide and even have some that have been almost unknown in world history. Unfortunately, recent events in Ottawa and elsewhere seem to be undermining some of our national pride and confidence and support for these rights. Many feel that these rights are being abused by some and maybe even being used against us by those who would actively work to undermine our nation and our very way of life but still demand to benefit from our national generosity in the meantime.

Every citizen has equal rights, whether they have done anything to earn them or not or whether they are doing anything to protect them or not, because, after all, isn't that the definition of a right? This controversy has caused some to question the value of these rights, whether or not they should be tempered with less idealism and more pragmatism and whether they should just be granted so freely and permanently to almost anyone based on simple trust alone. It seems unfortunate that our trust is sometimes misplaced.

The question I and many others are therefore asking is: what can and should be done about it when it occurs? Under what circumstances could someone ever lose some rights, such as the right to vote if in prison, for example, or even lose a Canadian citizenship once gained? Should that ever be considered? It seems that as a society we've grumbled but never really done anything definitive to answer such a question. I am therefore concerned that public support for hard-fought rights may be further eroded if we don't seek those answers.

As one suggestion I propose we look at amending our Bill of Rights to become a bill of rights and responsibilities instead, starting with the Alberta Bill of Rights, perhaps creating a sliding scale of rights that you may expect based upon your upholding some minimum responsibility requirements first, such as not breaking our laws or taking up arms against our country.

I recognize that I might be questioning motherhood and apple pie, but the fact remains that having any citizen rights at all is a very fragile and expensive asset indeed. Rights are never achieved without fights nor kept without being carefully guarded. It's a new century, Mr. Speaker. Let's start it on the right and responsible path.

Thank you.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands to present a petition signed by 105 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "return to a regulated electricity system, reduce power bills and develop a program to assist Albertans in improving energy efficiency."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday the Deputy Government House Leader will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I'd also like to give notice that on Monday the Deputy Government House Leader will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 40, 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 66, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 88, 89, 90, 91 to 105, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114 to 123 inclusive, 128, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 162, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 197, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, and 205.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two letters. The first is from Robert Swanson, a resident of Edmonton-Strathcona who expresses deep concern at the prospect of further privatization of health care and the delisting of services.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is from Ms Suzanne Lawrence, a registered nurse from Canmore, and she also expresses her worry about the cost of privatized health care and the negative impact that the Premier's proposed health care reform could have on an already overworked health care staff.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to Standing Order 7(5) I would ask that the government please share the projected government business for the week of May 3 to May 6, 2004.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, May 3, at 9 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill Pr. 4, Northwest Bible College Amendment Act, 2004; Bill 29, Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004; in Committee of the Whole Bill Pr. 4; Bill 27, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2004; Bill 28, Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004; Bill 29, Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004; and for third reading Bill 22, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004; Bill 25, School Amendment Act, 2004; Bill 26, Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004. Just for the information of the House I'm expecting that we will start actually with Bill 25 in third reading.

On Tuesday, May 4, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders we'll continue to be in Committee of Supply, day 20 of 24, the designated department being Human Resources and Employment; time permitting, Committee of the Whole on bills 27, 28, and 29 and third readings of Bill Pr. 4, bills 22, 25, and 26 and as per the Order Paper. On Tuesday, May 4, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply, day 21 of 24 with the estimates of the Department of Gaming and, time permitting, Committee of the Whole on bills 27, 28, and 29 and third readings on Bill Pr. 4 and bills 22, 25, and 26.

On Wednesday, May 5, 2004, under Government Bills and Orders continuing in Committee of Supply on day 22 of 24 with the designated department being Infrastructure and, time permitting, Committee of the Whole on the bills on the Order Paper and third readings on the bills remaining on the Order Paper. On Wednesday evening, May 5, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply, day 23 of 24, the estimates of Executive Council and, time permitting, in committee and third readings as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, May 6, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders continuing Committee of Supply, day 24 of 24, with the Department of Seniors designated.

Thereafter, we would anticipate asking for unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Bills as is the normal course of the House to introduce the appropriation bill coming out of Committee of Supply and, time permitting, Committee of the Whole and third readings as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on this day in a year in the first part of the 20th century, year undefined, the Clerk of the Legislative Assembly was born. Tomorrow on this day in the first part of the 20th century the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills arrived in the world.

Now, hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, your colleague moved during question period with respect to a proposed point of order, but I think that with the reprimand given to the Premier about using your name in the Legislative Assembly, that probably dealt with the matter.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, there is no point of order.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to Members by Name

The Speaker: Well, I suspected there wouldn't be because if an individual name is mentioned in the Legislative Assembly, that provides more coverage for the member than just mentioning his constituency. However, just let me remind all members once again.

There's a television program, a British sitcom, called Keeping Up Appearances. I don't know if anybody's seen it. It's a wonderful, funny program. The main character in the program spells her last name B-u-c-k-e-t. Most people pronounce it "Bucket." She insists that it be pronounced "Bouquet."

Now, some members have difficulty pronouncing certain people's names in this Assembly. We see it all the time in the introduction of visitors and guests. So to avoid this difficulty for certain members, the tradition throughout all of parliamentary history is that you never mention the individual's name. With a name like "Bouquet" or "Bucket" you can understand that because there are other names that might be similar that have different interpretations of pronunciation which may just give the opposite ring and allow scandalous situations to develop among all the little children in the province of Alberta. So that's the reason.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Energy

The Deputy Chair: As per our standing order the first hour will be dedicated between the hon. minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Energy.

3:00

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I can't tell you the amount of relief that I have when addressing this House that I was not blessed with the family surname of Mr. Fuchs.

Having said that, let me move along to address the estimates for the Department of Energy. Mr. Chairman, if I can start by introducing the members from the department who are here today to watch and be able to assist members of the Assembly who have questions. With respect to the estimates, if we can shine light on or provide immediate answers, we certainly will.

Mr. Chairman, if I could just note the presence of Ken Smith, the Deputy Minister of Energy; Mr. David Breakwell, the assistant deputy minister of electricity and gas; Mr. Don Keech, the assistant deputy minister of forestry and mineral development; Mr. Mike Ekelund, the assistant deputy minister of oil development; Mr. Joe Miller, executive director of policy and planning; Ms Katherine Braun, senior manager, gas in Alberta markets, electricity; Mr. Bob Taylor, special adviser, oil development; Mr. Mike Boyd, senior manager, policy and planning; Mr. Douglas Borland, manager, mineral development; Ms Donna McColl, assistant director, communications; and from the Energy and Utilities Board Mr. John Giesbrecht. These individuals are here from the department and from the EUB and are more than pleased to help answer any questions.

I just thought I'd open with some cursory or preliminary opening remarks, and then I know that members will be keen to engage in a lively question and answer session to proceed through to – it must be 5:15? It can't conclude any earlier?

The Deputy Chair: It can.

Mr. Smith: Oh, it can conclude earlier. It can conclude earlier than 5:15.

Mr. Chairman, we're very proud of this department as it relates to protecting this resource for all Albertans and collecting the economic rents, the royalties. It has a rich and a great history. I'm very pleased to be a part of it. I feel very privileged to represent it as its minister.

Without using more time in the House than is absolutely necessary, Mr. Chairman, I'm more than pleased to entertain questions. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get an opportunity to discuss Alberta Energy's budget estimates this year. Certainly, as the minister is very fond of reminding all Albertans, it is a vital department. It is a department that is in charge of ensuring that Albertans get full benefit from the natural resources that we are blessed with in this province.

The Department of Energy this year is requesting a total budget of over $113 million for operating expenses and equipment/inventory purchases. Our research indicates that the ministry was $13 million over budget last year. Comparing the 2004 budget to the 2003 budget, there's a 3.5 per cent spending increase this year.

Whenever one looks at the department, it's quite an operation. We've got the EUB. We have certainly, when you look at the operational overview, such a wide range of very important activities. You look at conventional oil, you look at synthetic crude oil, and you look at natural gas, electricity, coal and mineral development. One would only think that in the near future there will be a separate department to hopefully ensure that the development of the coal bed methane resource goes on in an environmentally sound and economically viable manner.

We can't overlook the importance of coal bed methane development, and I'm certain there are very devoted, dedicated public employees employed in the Department of Energy to ensure that this happens. How long before we see 10 per cent of our total natural gas production coming from coal bed methane? Well, that's up to the minister to tell us.

There are so many issues with this department. I think we'll start, Mr. Chairman, with questions for the hon. minister in regard to the intentions of the department with the Regional Transmission Organization West, which has now become Grid West. This announcement was made near the end of last month after the hon. minister and the Premier returned from New Mexico indicating that, yes, we are going to have an integrated electricity market.

I have this to ask the minister: what cost-benefit analysis has been done to indicate that consumers in this province will as a result of this integration have lower power bills? What exactly is going on with this Grid West? Will the minister make all presentations by either Department of Energy officials or representatives from the Alberta Power Pool public? This is perhaps one of the most important initiatives going on in this province at this time. Consumers, those who pay electricity bills, whether they're residential, commercial, or industrial consumers, deserve an answer, and they deserve to be informed.

Now, with the transfer of assets that's going to be finalized on the 4th of May, the transfer of the retail assets from ATCO to Direct Energy, it's astonishing that this sale is actually going to increase gas customers' bills in some cases between $40 and $45 annually. It's another hit for energy consumers that they just can't afford. What is the difference between sharing the proceeds of the sale of the Viking-Kinsella gas field, which was also owned by ATCO, and this sale with Direct Energy?

Why are not at least part of the proceeds, if not all of them, being shared with the consumers who over the years have through their utility bills paid for some, if not all, of the infrastructure that ATCO has for distribution of gas to customers? Now those retail accounts, that information, is being sold, and surely consumers have been responsible for at least, Mr. Chairman, a portion of that. So why is there no sharing of the proceeds in this sale and in the past with Viking-Kinsella there has been?

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

I believe that this employee or this contract employee, Mr. Kellan Fluckiger, who was involved with former governor Gray Davis in California as an energy adviser, has been hired or contracted or whatever by the Department of Energy. I believe he's the business unit manager under electricity. I think that's the title. That position may have been vacant when the last annual report came out. What are the details of this adviser? He certainly has a long history with electricity in California and I believe, previous to that, in Arizona and is, there's no doubt, a very qualified individual with a great deal of experience. Has he been hired here, really, to manage rolling blackouts if we do have any, because certainly that would be part of his job in California? What exactly are the details surrounding this gentleman's contract here in this province?

Now, I'm very disappointed that the minister isn't going to unplug electricity deregulation. I'm very disappointed that he's persistent in his refusal to do so. Perhaps there would be a light, a ray of hope, a beam shining on the minister in Calgary-Varsity some evening, and he would be urged to go to the Internet and look at liberalopposition.com and see our policy. Competition for electricity belongs at the generation level; it does not belong at the retail level. If we're going to have competition, it belongs at the generation level.

We have to recognize once and for all that electricity is not a commodity. It's not a commodity, like some hon. members on the Conservative side insist. It's an essential service. The sooner we unplug deregulation, admit that it was a mistake, and recognize that electricity is an essential service, the better off we will be. I can't imagine, for instance, the Saddledome tonight. What would happen if the lights went out?

Mr. Hancock: They won't go out.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister of Justice is assuring me that the power won't go out, and I certainly hope that it never goes out. I really do. The consequences of this would be enormous. We don't have a system that works as well as the previous system.

Is the minister or is the department considering organizing a referendum around electricity exports or further integration to the Pacific Northwest grid? Certainly, the Minister of Justice would be aware of the referendum that was held in 1948, the last time the province sought direction directly from the people on what they wanted with the electricity generation, distribution, and transmission system. That's a novel idea for this government.

We have all these stakeholder consultations. We have all these reports and committees that have been struck. I can count at least 14. I'm sure the hon. minister knows of many more, and perhaps he would save us the time of FOIPing them by just tabling them. I think he would be tabling documents for a considerable time because energy deregulation is a well-documented ideological experiment in North America, and it doesn't work.

Now, later on we'll get a chance to talk about coal bed methane, but I do have some concerns about the directions that are currently occurring in the department, and that is in regard to EUB hearings. How are interveners to get information to participate in the hearings when the minister refuses to make it public?

I'm talking about ministerial orders. Yes. One specific ministerial order deals with approval of professional and other costs in regard to the Utilities Consumer Advocate. This would be going back to December of 2003. I was naive, and I thought that all ministerial orders were public documents. I was fortunate that I finally got a copy of this.

Does the minister not consider that to be in a way undermining the confidence of the whole regulatory process when individuals cannot get access to this important, vital information before they go to a regulatory hearing? I know that I hear all the time about this government being very proud of its open, transparent policies. Well, why wouldn't documents like that in particular be public? I'm not satisfied that the current process works to instill confidence in the EUB.

Now, also the whole system of rate riders, that have been paid off with the exception of some of them in Calgary. At one time probably two, two-and-a-half years ago the government even denied that these rate riders were there. But they were there, and eventually people paid them off. These are for the costs of electricity that couldn't be charged on people's bills in the run-up to and during the last election.

How can consumers be confident that the calculation of those rate riders and the amount owing is accurate? Does the minister know of any cases where consumers have taken retailers to court because of inaccuracies in the calculation of those rate riders? I have certainly received complaints. I haven't had time to look into it yet, but I've had people suggest to me and point out that those calculations have not been accurate. I'm asking the minister what sort of information he has in regard to this matter. I'd be delighted and anxious to hear exactly how many complaints the minister has heard.

I have a few other questions at this time, and perhaps it would an opportunity for the minister to respond, but from the Alberta Energy business plan, 2004 through to 2007, on pages 165 to 185 of the budget, we're looking at the top of page 166: the EUB's "operations are jointly funded by the Crown (37%) and by industry (63%)." Previously the funding was 20 per cent from the Crown to 80 per cent from industry. Why did the minister make this conscious decision to shift the funding formula? Is this an attempt by the government to reclaim control of the EUB from industry?

Further along on page 169, strategic priority 5, the department will focus on "ensuring right of access of resource developers to . . . First Nation 'traditional use' lands." How does the department intend at this time to go about doing this?

On the next page, page 170, the department will "regularly review Alberta's royalty regime," especially that of the oil sands and coal bed methane. In addition, the department will "work with leaseholders affected by" the bitumen versus the gas issue "in the Athabasca area . . . to find fair and equitable solutions." Again, in the interests of openness and transparency will the minister make this review public, and will the review include royalty tax credits and royalty reduction programs?

How many oil sands projects are currently paying the full 25 per cent royalty? How many oil sands projects does the minister expect will begin paying the full 25 per cent royalty this year? Is the government considering increasing the 1 per cent royalty on new oil sands projects? And this has been in the news lately: what is the current status of the royalty agreement between the government and Suncor?

I'm certainly not satisfied from the questions we asked earlier this week in regard to this matter, and perhaps the minister has had a chance to talk with others in the industry since then and can update not only this hon. member but members of the House in regard to this matter.

Now, the whole issue of royalties is ongoing, and so is the gentleman that is going from Red Deer to Edmonton, Mr. Chairman. It is amazing that as we sit here and stand here and discuss the energy estimates and we're having this discussion on royalties and whether we're getting enough money and how the whole system works – does it need to be improved? – we have a student from Red Deer, as I understand it, Mr. Andy Davies, who is rolling a barrel from Red Deer to Edmonton. I don't know whether it's full. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry calculates its weight at over 400 pounds if it's a full barrel of crude oil. I don't know whether he's accurate. I don't know if he intends to get to the Assembly with it or not. He's protesting our royalty structure, I believe.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Much of what the member has asked refers to subjects outside of the estimates, but being inclusive, being transparent, being accountable, being open, they're all subject to the litmus test of estimates, and we'll proceed ahead with that. I'll try to take them in chronological order, and I'm going to do the most difficult thing in the world, Mr. Chairman: I'm actually going to try to follow his line of logic. So if I can do that, then it will indeed be a mental flex day.

I think the first part I heard from the member was on coal bed methane. Coal bed methane, as everyone knows, is a potentially critical resource to increase natural gas supplies in the province of Alberta. We have a great deal of experience with natural gas, as anybody knows. Methane by definition is natural gas, so it's treated as such. It has a royalty structure associated with it, and it has some changes from traditional conventional development. The most salient change is of course that you need more wells per section than what you would with conventional gas.

We're very fortunate in Alberta in that most of our coal bed methane is extracted without any disposal of fresh water. There are more than adequate rules to deal with the disposal of fresh water. It is illegal in Alberta to dispose of fresh water. It's also the EUB regulation that you must case, or provide steel around, any hole that's drilled into an aquifer deposit. I know that because I used to place casing in the hole down through the Milk River formation in the Taber area.

Coal bed methane has been subject to extensive consultation over seven communities in Alberta. I think that there is extremely positive dialogue taking place between the people who own land, the people who live in the area where coal bed methane is to be extracted, and those who are going to help develop the resource and also between the regulator and the department from a policy perspective.

He then moved to transmission and talked about Grid West and, I believe, the signing of the protocol. When the Premier and I were attending the Western Governors' Association that dealt with the energy summit, actually I heard Governor Bill Richardson turn to the Premier – Governor Bill Richardson, a four-time Nobel peace prize nominated Democrat – and say: would you accompany me in my helicopter to the governor's mansion? He uses a helicopter every day to get back and forth from work. It's interesting that we didn't hear any questions about that. He turned to the Premier and said: because you're the most important person here.

It was a reflection from a former Secretary of Energy for the United States government that realized the tremendous importance of Alberta to the U.S. energy solution: the fact that we supply over 20 per cent of their energy requirements; the fact that if you converted every molecule of natural gas to air conditioning, we would cool one out of seven and a half homes in the United States. This relationship is important, this relationship will continue, and we need to develop this relationship.

Part of the energy reservoir in Alberta is electricity. Part of the resounding problem in electricity has been – oh, I guess I'd call it a Liberal lack of attention to transmission networks. This Liberal lack of attention over the last 25, 30 years has resulted in a transmission patchwork design that's not efficient to the consumer or to the producer of power. Part of that is to build on bilateral relationships to facilitate the movement of power in crisis conditions.

Also, on the electricity front the member referred to the transfer of assets from ATCO to Direct. He knows full well that the decision by the EUB, which is a public decision, public hearings, where we have no record of his attendance at any of those events, covered completely why the decision was made as such, why the change in price on the natural gas side of about 10 cents a day, and the fact that it has no bearing on electrical prices, and the fact that these prices in fact could not exist if people enter into contracts.

I struggle with the understanding the member has of this important and complex piece when he's quoted in the paper as saying that the Alberta grid was one toaster short of a blackout. You know, when I was in the oil and gas business, we had comments like that too: that you were one brick short of a load or that you were drilling three stands off the bottom or that you weren't the sharpest pencil in the box or that you weren't the brightest lightbulb burning, those kinds of definitions.

So as to being one toaster short of a blackout, you look back to see who made that kind of comment, and it indicates a very superficial understanding of a very complex network that, not surprisingly, Mr. Chairman, has not blacked out once, has delivered solid electrical power to this marketplace from 1998 to 2004. This is going to continue because of the structure of this market.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the only thing worse than being a Liberal in Alberta when it comes to electricity is to be a Liberal in Ontario, because that province is struggling with a very immense electrical issue today. I feel a great deal of sympathy for them, particularly because of their current administration. Much sympathy flows from that decision. Secondly, in the last blackout, that was caused by the kind of dithering that the chief ditherer talked about, that blackout cost $2 billion to small business. That money is never recoverable. That type of blackout is enough money to build generation to supply another city in Alberta the size of the city of Calgary. It's immense.

I have a friend, having lived in Ontario, who is in a small area, the birthplace of Larry Robinson, a great hockey player. It's called Metcalfe, Ontario. He runs the Metcalfe Variety and Food Store. It's a small family business. His name is Mike Campbell, a good friend of mine. He came out to see the Calgary Flames in the first playoff game, which I thought was very good of him. He told me at that time that he was spending $30,000 to put in a standby generator to keep his coolers running at the time when the power blacks out, because he fully expects a blackout this summer, this spring, as temperatures warm up in that area. I have not had one call about people buying a generator. I have not had anybody phone me and say: we need to buy our own power standby.

Mr. Chairman, we have withstood the onslaught of empty criticism, of slanderous talk. Abraham Lincoln once said that truth is the vindication of slander, and I would submit to you that the truth of an operating power grid with ample generating capacity and the lowest wholesale rates in Canada is evidence that we have an electricity policy that is good, that is effective and is going to be here for the long term. The only thing that gets unplugged will probably be www.liberal.com. But I digress.

Mr. Chairman, the comments on Mr. Kellan Fluckiger, on a third-party agreement. The members know full well how to obtain that information. He is the manager of the electrical business unit and, as he said, is very qualified, indeed as we expect from all our business unit leaders. We expect that high performance, and that's why we generated a North American wide search to find this individual.

The member also knows that there are ample studies out reflective of the price: the IPPSA study, the Seabron Adamson study. There's information out that supports the deregulated model of electricity as it sits today. I would point him to those studies, openly and widely available. I would even suggest that maybe Mr. Evan Bahry, who is the executive director of IPPSA, would be more than pleased to make a presentation to a seven-member caucus – or to a five-member caucus, I guess, because a couple are running Liberal federally now – to get a really strong look at that analysis and to see how private generation has impacted on price. I know he'd be more than willing to spend time with the five members.

Mr. Chairman, the discussion on the funding to the EUB. We continue to move up that funding because we believe it's important, and it's an objective of this government to return to 50-50 funding. The EUB is an independent body, as they have shown by their decisions certainly since the time I've been minister. I think that 50-50 funding is in place.

If the member is at all concerned about the viability of a deregulated electricity market, I could only direct him to two hard spots: one is the premium that Fortis recently paid to purchase the Aquila assets – that premium was about $120 million over the original price – and, secondly, the $90 million that Direct paid. You know, these are hard-cash dollars injected into a market that shows market confidence, market growth, and it's really the best place to put your dollars in Canada from an investment perspective.

He talked about oil sands royalties. Let me briefly say that the oil sands royalty regulation, which I remember discussing last year in estimates, continues to be clarified. The decision with respect to Suncor and the declaration that Firebag is to be treated as a new project and not as an expansion project is one that's the result of much discussion, many meetings with Suncor, and also brings clarity to the oil sands royalty regulation. It is not – and I must repeat: not – a change in policy. It is a reaffirmation of the existing policy. Nothing has changed. All this does is provide further clarity to the oil sands players, who are participating in some 52 projects in the oil sands today.

We continue to work with Suncor. We continue to look at Suncor with respect. As a matter of fact, was the member there last night at the Suncor reception prior to Suncor's annual general meeting, which is being held today in the great city of Edmonton? I think it's always important, if you're having an annual meeting, to have it in an area where you can focus attention on that company, have some media attention. I thought: you know, this is probably the best hockey-free area in Alberta to do that right now. So I'm glad that they're here in Edmonton.

I must say that one of my comments to the crowd at Suncor last night was that in 1995 I was the Minister of Economic Development, that Alberta had a $21 billion debt, and they were difficult times. We were moving out of deficit financing. At that time Mr. Rick George, the president and CEO of the company, made the decision to move his head office from Toronto to Calgary. I sent Mr. George an Alberta advantage T-shirt. Now, the value of that T-shirt was $8, but the value of Suncor moving to Calgary was priceless.

Mr. Chairman, Suncor has continued to develop the resource from the point of 67,000 barrels a day to well over 200,000 barrels a day today. They're an important partner in oil sands development, and they will continue to be a partner with the Alberta government. We will continue to work with them with respect but also remembering fairness and the fact that we are the custodian for royalty collection for the people of Alberta and that the royalty program is designed at 1 per cent of gross revenue while investment is being encouraged and until investment is paid out and then reverting to 25 per cent of revenue minus cost. That will continue. We will be working with the industry and the investment community to ensure that there is clarity surrounding that direction.

Mr. Chairman, I think that covers for the most part the comments from the member, and I will sit and continue to attentively listen to further comments.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. minister. I'm pleased to see, finally, a change in colour in the hon. minister. The solid rose pink shirt is certainly an indication that the minister is changing direction and the Tory blue is fading, and next year it'll be a bright red shirt. He's in transition.

Now, he spoke briefly about the transmission policy, and we all know the change in policy that has happened as a result of this minister's decree not in this Legislative Assembly but in a ballroom in Banff last year, where we transferred full costs of any new transmission lines to consumers. The EUB in the past had ruled: let's have generators pay for half and then consumers pay for roughly half. That was a compromise situation everyone could live with.

But when the minister makes these changes, it reduces investor confidence. If electricity deregulation needs any further reductions in investor confidence, I don't know what they would be, but that was certainly it. Whenever you have the lack of a long-term planning process, which has occurred in this province because of electricity deregulation – the players didn't know what the rules were going to be; they weren't going to put their money down – this is why we have deficiencies in our transmission system. It has nothing to do with anything other than that it is the fault of electricity deregulation.

The hon. minister even went on. I believe the New Democrats were mentioned, and certainly the Liberals were mentioned. Mr. Chairman, if he can tell a story, then so can I. Now, I would remind not only the minister but all members of this House of this definition. A New Democrat is a blind man in a dark cellar at midnight looking for a black cat that isn't there. He is distinguished from the Liberal in that the Liberal finds the cat. He is also distinguished from the Progressive Conservative, who smuggles in a cat in his overcoat pocket and emerges to brag in triumph. Well, the Conservatives can brag all they want about electricity deregulation, but it is simply not working.

Now, it's the Progressive Conservatives in Ontario who were defeated for a number of reasons, but certainly one of them was their mishandling of the file on electricity deregulation, this stop/start proposal they had. To blame it on another government is wrong. This ideology that has resulted in electricity deregulation is a faulty ideology. It doesn't matter whether it's Ontario, Alberta, California, New York state, Pennsylvania, Oregon, or Nevada. Certainly, Montana, which we discussed earlier in question period, Mr. Chairman, has had significant issues, and they're trying to deal with them.

In regard to the whole issue of royalties, I don't think we can dismiss it as casually as this minister would like to do. We talked about it last year, but, yes, it continues to be a problem. It's a significant problem, and that's reflected in the initiative taken by the young man from Red Deer, who is rolling this barrel to Edmonton in protest of our royalty structures or at least to bring attention to the whole issue of our royalty structures.

There are many significant issues around royalties. The Auditor General has some issues, and we're going to discuss these. I don't expect the hon. minister to listen to this side of the House because that would be an historic first if he did, but perhaps he would listen to the Auditor General.

Now, I wonder if the young man in Red Deer is aware of this. Under the current gas cost allowance industry can apply all applicable natural gas costs on a corporate basis prior to paying royalties.

Now, this is what the Auditor General has to say, and the Auditor General deals in detail, and this is the annual report of the Auditor

General of our province, 2002-2003. Systems audits: timely program reviews and measure program effectiveness.

- 1.1 The Department needs to assess whether its royalty reduction programs are achieving their intended objectives . . .
- 1.2 The Department needs to identify the objectives of the Alberta Royalty Tax Credit program and develop measures to determine the effectiveness of this program . . .
- 1.3 The Department should [also] improve the communication of its needs for assurance on well and production data to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board . . . and evaluate the extent of audit work done by the EUB in relation to the Department's needs.

Now, let's have a look at this. The Auditor General states that the ministry received $7.4 billion in revenue. There was the nonrenewable resource revenue, the freehold mineral rights tax, industry levies and licences, and other revenue.

There have been some recommendations made here not only for the attention of the hon. minister but for the attention of all members. The first recommendation is, "We recommend that the Department of Energy assess whether the royalty reduction programs are achieving their intended objectives."

Here are some of the findings.

Mr. Smith: Royalties are up.

Mr. MacDonald: Royalties are up because the price of natural gas is up.

Now, the findings are this: four programs need to be reviewed, according to the Auditor General and his staff. "The low productivity and reactivated well programs have not been reviewed since their inception in 1992." The price of petroleum has certainly increased. "The Department has not finalized," the Auditor General adds, "its 1999 reviews of the horizontal re-entry and deep gas holiday programs."

Here's another recommendation, and this is in regard to the Alberta royalty tax credit program, recommendation 11 on page 96. "We recommend that the Department of Energy document and communicate the objectives of the Alberta Royalty Tax Credit program and develop measures to assess whether the program is meeting its objectives." The background on this, Mr. Chairman:

The Alberta Royalty Tax Credit program refunds a portion of the royalties paid to the Province. The refund is available to individuals and corporations to a maximum of $2 million of eligible royalties. The total credits in the 2003 fiscal year were $83 million.

Is that good enough? Do we need to have a look at this?

Now, we can go further in the recommendation, and the Auditor General states:

We found that

- although various reviews have discussed the objectives of the [Alberta Royalty Tax Credit], there is no formal documentation or communication of the program objectives
- the Department has not developed measures to assess whether the objectives of the program [have been] achieved.

Are we doing everything to ensure that as this young man from Red Deer rolls his barrel from Red Deer to Edmonton, his generation is getting maximum benefit from the royalties that are a result of our natural gas and oil exploration? If not, perhaps we should have a look at this, and perhaps we should dedicate the extra revenue that we would get from this into the Alberta heritage savings trust fund for the rainy day that, unfortunately, will come sometime for this young Albertan. We would be very wise, we would be very prudent to set aside as much revenue from our resources as possible for future generations.

3:50

Now, another recommendation from the Auditor General on well and production data:

We recommend that the Department of Energy

- improve the communication of its needs for assurance on well and production data to the EUB.
- evaluate the extent of audit work done on well and production data by the EUB in relation to its needs.

We've got to take the Auditor General seriously, and hopefully next year, next September or October, whenever the Auditor General's report comes out, these recommendations will have been dealt with. This is not good enough. It's not good enough for this generation nor future generations in this province. We have to ensure that we're getting maximum benefit from these resources.

The minister also talked about seven Liberals becoming five Liberals. Well, if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie goes to Ottawa, she's going to have specific instructions to deal with some matters that this government is negligent in dealing with, and those are getting our fair share of royalties and perhaps natural gas liquids from the north.

We have to have a good process. We can't simply talk about building a firewall around this province, like some Conservative politicians. We have to share our technology with the territories in the north that are developing their resources. The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie would be a good advocate for this province. As the natural gas liquids are coming from the north, perhaps she could advocate that we have some for Fort Saskatchewan, we have some for Joffre to run the petrochemical . . . [interjections]

Chair's Ruling Decorum

The Chair: Hon. members. Hon. members, Edmonton-Castle Downs and others, we're on the estimates of the Minister of Energy, not in the business of speculating on all kinds of other possibilities and propositions that may be around at this time of year or later. So let's stick with this, and remember, all hon. members, that you will have a chance to speak to these estimates later. The hour will be up at 4 o'clock – it started at 3 – and we will have other people.

But right now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: There is an issue surrounding an affordable, accessible supply of ethane for our petrochemical industry, and this government has been negligent in ensuring that there's a long-term supply. Now, perhaps the minister is going to stand up and say: well, we're going to take a process and establish an upgrader in Edmonton, and we're going to use bitumen from the north as a source of feedstock for our petrochemical industry in Fort Saskatchewan. But in the meantime, we need to show some real leadership and we need to be negotiating with the northern territories, with the Northwest Territories and with the Yukon Territory, and ensure that as those natural gas liquids are developed and coming through this province, if our own industry needs access to them, we'll have them.

I'm certain that if the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie goes to Ottawa, she will stand up and speak out on behalf of that vital industry in this province. This government, in my view, has been negligent in protecting ethane.

Now, not only do we have development in the Norman Wells area, the Mackenzie Delta, but also in the Cameron Hills, in the Yukon, and we have to ensure that we have an adequate supply. It's a very, very important issue. We need to show leadership on it, and talking about taking our marbles and going home and building firewalls is not going to work to anyone's advantage. I'm sorry; that's not going to work.

Now, will the government also be introducing, while we're on the issue of royalties, a new royalty regime to deal with nonconventional gas like coal bed methane? This is a big issue. We're not getting a chance to discuss it, probably, in the time allotted this afternoon. If so, will this royalty regime be retroactive for current coal bed methane leases?

How does this government intend to solve the dispute between bitumen leaseholders and natural gas leaseholders in the Fort McMurray area? How much financial compensation is the government currently providing natural gas leaseholders in the disputed areas? How much does the government forecast it will have to provide in total compensation?

With those questions, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to the hon. minister and other members who want to participate.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Where to start, where to start. It's kind of like going back to question period, you know, where you have to correct all the errors, falsehoods, and erroneous preambles to actually get to the question, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to start this time maybe from back to front instead of going from front to back, particularly because he was pumped up about sending the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to Ottawa to the point where it was advocating for our resources, ensuring that we get our fair share.

Well, you know, isn't that just like a Liberal? Who owns the resources? They're owned right here. They're not owned in Ottawa. It's that kind of Liberal attitude that got us into the national energy program, buddy, and I'll tell you what: there are people in here who lost their jobs, went bankrupt, lost their homes, lost their businesses, and it's that very attitude that started it. So if anybody's going to Ottawa, buddy, I hope it's you.

If you look at the Alberta royalty tax credit, it was established in defence of what Pierre Trudeau and John Turner did when they tried to disallow deductibility of our royalty payments. I would direct the member to go back in time, about two years from his present state, go back to 1930, 1931 and the work of John Brownlee, Premier Brownlee, the seven years that he spent to ensure that these resources belong to the people of Alberta and will be protected by the people of Alberta.

But I digress. Mr. Chairman, I'm the type of Conservative that would really believe in free trade, the free trade that's made this province great, the free trade that's moved this product. We are so blessed to have this much resource beside the world's largest customer, this seamless network of hundreds of thousands of kilometres of pipe that moves into the United States. So as a free trader and a Conservative I'm more interested in breaking down walls, not building walls. I think that we can continue to break down the walls, whether they exist between a territory and a province or whether they exist between another country, another state and this province.

In fact, I met with Premier Handley in Albuquerque. He was there as well last week, and we did talk about how best to organize the proper and appropriate movement of natural gas from the Mackenzie Delta through to Alberta so that we could maximize the capacity of the Alberta natural gas hub, the most salient trading hub in the world, and also to ensure that the producers get an appropriate benefit from shipping that gas on that pipeline. I think that we can come to a very, very good solution. I've got to commend the government of the Northwest Territories for their forward thinking, their stance on devolution of royalties and also congratulate them on soon becoming the world's third-largest producer of diamonds, by the way.

Mr. Chairman, the next one back, or his next to last – that would be his penultimate point – was on the petrochemical industry. Now, that member should know because of his experience in the oil patch that we have the world's largest ethane cracker located in the fair constituency, the Conservative-represented constituency of Lacombe-Stettler, whose member is listening intently to estimates. That cracker – the removal of the machinery and equipment tax in 1995 hastened the construction of that – combined with the natural supply of ethane here in this province, combined with transportation efficiencies has resulted in a thriving petrochemical industry, an industry that has been supported time in and time out by the Premier of this province, who has said that natural gas moving through Alberta will be processed; the liquids will be processed. There are compelling commercial alternatives to use Alberta as a gas-processing hub.

That will continue, but we're prepared to build on those strong building blocks by taking new technological steps into the oil sands working in partnership with the Alberta Chamber of Resources to see if there are additional feedstock opportunities from the oil sands. Already the oil sands sends down propane into Redwater, where there's a propane fractionation plant. So we know that we have that opportunity.

We also see the oil sands as an opportunity to continue on clean-burning coal technology as they respond to the challenges in using steam and generating steam and what input they're going to use to generate that steam.

Mr. Chairman, what he doesn't mention, as is always the case with this fella, is that the petrochemical industry is in a price-cycle bottom, and in fact nobody in the petrochemical business is making money. We are not short of ethane in this marketplace, and as the cycle changes and as the demand changes, we will be there. We will continue to respond to the needs of our petrochemical industry.

Now, Mr. Chairman, he did go back and talk about royalty and royalty structure, and of course, again, if you do the macropicture and if you look at the last four years of royalties and add them up, you'll realize that they're equal to the previous 10 combined. For the last three years the number one export in Canada has been energy, the number one investment product in Canada has been the oil and gas industry, and the number one province that is the recipient of that investment is Alberta. That is macroeconomic proof that the royalty system works and that citizens and investors and those who apply for the extraction of this great resource benefit from the same.

Mr. Chairman, we continue to monitor our royalty index. We have two world-wide organizations that spend a great deal of time evaluating the fairness of our royalty system and in fact its contemporary value.

I would turn the hon. member to The Armet Report. I'm sure he subscribes; most people in the know are recipients of it. I don't know if I have the copyright authority to table this; it does have copyright to it. It does talk very candidly about a royalty structure for the future.

It's always a fond Liberal stunt to say that we're exploiting all our resources and leaving nothing for tomorrow. Well, let's talk about tomorrow for just a second, Mr. Chairman, and let's assume that the inflation rate is a modest 1 per cent. We get through to 2020, which is not far from now. Your golf game will be even better than it is today, all the projects in the oil sands are paid out, and outside external forecasters are estimating that we're producing 3 million barrels a day by that time, 3 million barrels a day at roughly $60 Canadian a barrel for light synthetic crude oil at the refinery gate.

Let's take $10 off for the spread between heavy oil and light, and that takes us down to $50. Let's assume that there's been no change in operating costs, and operating costs are $12 a barrel. That gets us down to $38. And let's assume that we get 25 per cent revenue minus costs, as the oil sands royalty regulation has affirmed. That gives us about $9.50 a barrel. Let's multiply 3 million barrels a day by $9.50, and everybody knows the answer to that on the Conservative side of the House. That's about $30 million a day. If we take the $30 million a day and apply it to a 30-day month, that's $900 million in a month. Twelve months of the year times – I know you're with me – $900 million comes out to $10.8 billion, roughly $11 billion. Mr. Chairman, $11 billion is real money in anybody's lexicon.

That's the architecture that we have tried to put in place for the future of Albertans so that they can indeed have the opportunity to see roads built, infrastructure, education, highways. In fact, government's job is to create the wealth that allows us to build the tools that allow the private sector to build wealth, and we can do that through the oil sands. We will continue to work hard with our partners, the Auditor General, the companies that are there, and I know that we're going to be able to see hard, substantive results in our lifetime. This is not a long-term dream.

I think I've covered most of the fact, half the fiction, and some of the politics, so I'll sit down now, Mr. Chairman.

Oh, I'm sorry. I do have to return to electricity for just a moment to talk about transmission. The member knows full well the story on it, and we'll have to just take the time up to correct the record. We did not change a decision by the EUB. We reaffirmed the existing policy where consumers pay for transmission.

We must remember that there are business consumers; there are residential consumers. Insofar as the 15 per cent of the marketplace which is residential consumers, the price that they pay for the transmission is that percentage piece. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the member to look back, and if he looks at it and he says, "The generators would pay 15 per cent; where would the generators get their money from?" Well, the generators sell into the grid. They sell at a particular price. Consumers purchase the power. The power is then consumed, and the consumer pays the bill. Do you not think that would include transmission? I would think so. It's an easy economic tenet to follow, and of course we'll continue to help the member whenever we can.

Of course, I must finish with the comment about the rose shirt and the move to red. I'm not in transition; I'm in season.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll be brief because other hon. members have expressed an interest in participating in the debate. The hon. minister was talking about fact and fiction and politics, and while there are some things that certainly need to be corrected, the minister's sense of history is, to say the least . . .

Mr. Smith: Excellent.

Mr. MacDonald: He may maintain that it's excellent, but perhaps he should table his history mark from Notre Dame College for all to see.

Mr. Smith: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. member has a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

Mr. Smith: It would be under Standing Order 23(i), imputing false motives. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I had an honours mark at Notre Dame College. Notre Dame College is in fact noted for its scholarly excellence, and I think he is actually attacking the integrity and the viability of that great residential institution and would ask him to withdraw that remark.

4:10

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the purported point of interest, point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: Point of interest? Yes, Mr. Chairman, I believe it is a point of interest, not a point of order. If the hon. minister would allow me to continue . . .

The Chair: It's the chair that does that.

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps he wouldn't be as sensitive to my remarks. They're in no way – any way, shape, or form – to do with Notre Dame College.

The Chair: As I Freudianly slipped, I think it was a point of interest, clarification, and not a point of order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Debate Continued

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Now, in regard to the transfer of the natural resources to the control of this province, for the minister's benefit and for the benefit of all those assembled here this afternoon, it was a Liberal government under Mackenzie King that allowed this to happen.

Certainly, there was a Conservative government in power under Arthur Meighen, a long-serving Conservative Prime Minister: had the chance, didn't make the transfer. But after the election, when the federal Liberals were returned to power, in conjunction with the U.S.A. this transfer to the province occurred. This transfer to the province provided all the remaining Crown rights in land and resources with certain exceptions, Mr. Chairman, such as Indian reserves, national parks, and the like but subject to all the leases and licences already granted.

So it was a Liberal government in Ottawa that transferred these rights to Alberta, not a Conservative government. A Conservative government had an opportunity, but they did nothing.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you. I was glad to hear about the department's plans with regard to enhanced oil and gas recovery through CO<sub>2</sub>. I was also glad to hear about ongoing reviews of royalties to ensure that Albertans are getting their fair share.

One thing I didn't hear from the minister – and maybe he can comment – is what our plans are with regard to the precious mines and minerals opportunities that we may be overlooking in Alberta or maybe not overlooking. I've heard from some of my constituents that are involved in the diamond and gold junior mining companies that we have great opportunities here in Alberta yet hear very little about it in our Legislature.

We'd just like some comments on that.

Mr. Smith: Well, I'd like to commend the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne for his interest, not only today but in the past, in mineral development, particularly diamonds. He has ably been able to provide information to the House and to the standing policy committee and to this government on a diamond strategy, on mineral development.

One of the parts about diamonds particularly, Mr. Chairman, is that it's similar to the movie business. Each province, each jurisdiction, has its own form of subsidy. What we need to do is to continue to look at competing with other jurisdictions for a superincentive to write off their exploration expense. They do have the opportunity to participate in flow-through shares in the normal course of exploration in this province. We are assisting them by putting more money into the mapping function. I think that will assist them. We hope to see continued mineral development just as we see continued coal development in this great province.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the minister for an update on what his department is doing in terms of climate change and who you're working with: bureaucrats, industry, other levels of government.

Mr. Smith: Tomorrow, Mr. Chairman, we will announce four projects on CO<sub>2</sub> sequestration. We are to the best of my knowledge the only jurisdiction in the land that is actually doing something substantive with respect to CO<sub>2</sub> management. I'm sorry; I had an advance copy of the press release, but I don't have it with me now. We think that that's an important piece. We also want to work on some royalty innovation that would facilitate, not only enhance, the oil recovery but also work on behalf of further development of carbon dioxide management.

We also, Mr. Chairman, continue to work with the Clean Air Strategic Alliance for Alberta, Climate Change Central, Voluntary Challenge program, all the partnerships that are designed to work in co-operation with the private sector where we could get co-operation by collaboration as opposed to regulation for reduction. I think that that is shown and is shown across Canada as being an outstanding practice.

The other part is of course the oil sands technology, driven both by price and the social desire to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. We're seeing continued progress on the front in reducing the use of steam as a driver in both steam-assisted gravity drainage as well as some of the other projects up there. Some of that new technology by companies like Petrobank, a toe-to-heel air compression format – that technology is being tested in the lab. Of course, OPTI raised in excess of a billion dollars to partner with Nexon to reduce gas consumption in the oil sands. Devon is working actively with propane – it's called vapex – to be used as a solvent for diluting the bitumen.

So, Mr. Chairman, there is a great amount of activity that is driven not only by economic drivers but also a social desire to reduce greenhouse gases. The long-term prediction I've seen is from a percentage of output. I've seen reductions somewhere in the neighbourhood of 33 to 45 per cent in the oil sands.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the minister could expand on what he means by royalty innovation. What is that going to look like for this province?

Mr. Smith: We're not entirely sure at this point because we haven't finished moving it through the process, but what it's primarily envisioned to do, Mr. Chairman, is lever about tenfold investment from the private sector and, in fact, from the federal government to move on ways of developing our enhanced oil recovery industry.

We believe that we can use a number of factors: one, federal participation, because I think that it's time they put their money where their mouth is. And they have. I've got to commend Minister Efford's efforts for his contribution in the carbon sequestration program. That has been positive. Secondly, I want to commend the University of Calgary for the creation of the international institute for energy, environment, and the economy, that will address these issues; thirdly, Mr. Len Bolger and the Alberta Energy Research Institute for the work that they have done, particularly on the paper Spudding Innovation, that talks about another Alberta waiting to be discovered.

In fact, we're waiting for technology that can create another Alberta in terms of flushing out the final 50 per cent of oil in our conventional oil wells, finishing the last 30 to 50 per cent of natural gas extraction that sits in existing reservoirs. I think that we maxed out our production at 1.3 million barrels a day in 1973, and we've declined from there. That still means that there's an incredible amount of oil waiting for new technology. If we can lever that and we can lever that on a 10 to 1 basis, I think that there is exceedingly clear and compelling evidence that Albertans would benefit not only from the investment, the jobs created around it but also from the royalties associated with it.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My next question is with regard to the trading of CO<sub>2</sub> credits. What's your position on that, and what dollar figure do you think they might be pegged at eventually?

Mr. Smith: All I know is that we have a written agreement between the industry and the federal government that the price of carbon shall not exceed $15 and that the oil and gas industry will not be burdened with more than 15 per cent of all the emissions in Canada.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to spend a few moments now talking about orphan wells. I see in your budget this year that you're predicting a reduction in orphan well abandonment activities. That wouldn't necessarily coincide with what we're seeing or hearing, so could you explain why that's happening and where the program is at this stage?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, the orphan well program is one that is collected and supervised through the Energy and Utilities Board but is, in fact, private-sector money that is raised through a levy. It's my understanding that the well program is functioning. I think that there are some accounting issues about taking the money out of the EUB and then putting it directly to work in the orphan well fund. Mr. Geisbrecht is here from the EUB. I see him scribbling intently, so we will provide you with written information on that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman and to the minister. I appreciate his comments and answers today, and I look forward to asking him a few questions. I want to start with a basic question, and that is: how do you define success when it comes to energy deregulation? I would assume that key factors might include price, reliability of supply. Choice is another one.

I guess my concern here is that we have seen a significant increase in price. It's true that rate riders have come off, but they were merely paying back the power companies for basically selling electricity at below their cost before the last election. So people had to pay those prices. They just spread it over the next couple of years. Those have come off, and that's a fair comment, but Alberta's position in price relative to other provinces has also increased quite a bit. So we have higher prices, and I don't think that there's really any doubt about that.

Also, if we look at the issue of choice for the average consumer – I'm talking about homeowners, small business, farms, that sort of thing – we don't really have a wide range of choice. The entrance of Direct Energy, which is going on right now, basically is having a company from offshore buy up an existing company, so they don't add to the mix in terms of choice. Of course, there's really the question of how you define choice. Is it just, you know, you buy the same electrons from a different company, but they restructure the extra payments in a slightly different way? What does choice really mean in the government's mind? Can we expect more entrance to the market, and will that bring the price down even to what it was before deregulation?

The issue, I guess, of consumer protection is an interesting one and not directly under the minister. I understand that the advocate reports to the Minister of Government Services, but really I think there is some question about what kinds of things these companies are allowed to do. Certainly, Direct Energy has a very bad record. It was voted one of the worst retailers in Britain and was convicted of falsifying people's names in Ontario, and I understand that there are a number of convictions in a number of American states as well. So it's not really the cleanest or the most savoury in terms of its reputation for dealing with consumers.

The question of debt is another one that the minister brings up, and I'd like to deal with that a little bit. The minister talks about public debt in other places. Now, other provinces, of course, have publicly owned power and utility companies, and Alberta has a mixed system. The majority of it is privately owned, but of course Edmonton Power, which is now EPCOR, and Enmax, which is the city of Calgary electrical system, are publicly owned although not owned by the provincial government but, rather, by municipalities.

So it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that all utilities use debt to finance the capital projects, and then the ratepayers support the debt, and they repay the debt. This is true whether or not it's a publicly owned or a privately owned company. We were able to demonstrate that, in fact, in Alberta the private utilities have a very large debt. Now, it's not as large as Manitoba's. Manitoba has quite a bit bigger debt because of the massive hydroelectric projects that they've been involved in.

The question, really, for the minister is: how is the debt here different from the debt there? I guess I take issue with the characterization that taxpayers are, quote, on the hook for this money, when in fact it is the ratepayers of the utilities that are actually on the hook for the debt in Alberta and in other provinces and in public systems and in private. So that, I guess, is a question I have.

I would like to hear the minister's view on what electricity prices for consumers are likely to be, if there are projections that the ministry has for a year out, two years out, and so on.

Another aspect, Mr. Chairman, that I'd like to ask the minister about is the progress on implementing recommendations in the Bolger report. I'd like a bit of an update with respect to that as well.

So with those questions, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat and anxiously await the minister's replies.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, I would direct the member to pages 179 to I believe it's 186, where it talks about a fair and responsible regulatory framework for the energy and utility sectors, industry compliance with energy and utility regulatory requirements. It has our performance measures, and it has targets from last year, how we did, and what, basically, we're measuring.

I think, also, that from a consumer perspective, success is defined as not being in the position of other jurisdictions such as Ontario – as you can see, they're in crisis state; there's no question – not being saddled with $357 million worth of added debt from the Manitoba hydro operations, that were a result of the drought as well as other factors.

I think it's very clear that anybody who's walked into a bank to purchase a business or to look for a loan will find that they'll say: what do you owe? If you say, "I have signed to pay off the debt on bringing all the new light bulbs into my house," that registers on your balance sheet as a liability. However, if a government comes in and puts all those lights in or a third party comes in and puts all those lights in and then charges you rent on those lights or a fee on those lights, you are not responsible for the debt; that other party is.

Mr. Chairman, not only from the creative and wonderful accounting that Crown corporations have brought to Canada but the astonishing debt load, the mismanagement, the bad decisions, the lack of market forces – all I have to do is direct the member to a great New Democratic Party adventure in British Columbia when they decided that B.C. Hydro was the right organization to build a huge dam in Pakistan. In fact, members of the New Democratic Party were accused of buying shares in that entity and being in a conflict of interest. But, you see, you couldn't get through the cloak, the camouflage of New Democratic accounting in order to move into an examination of that. I think that fiasco probably got docked with the B.C. Ferries adventure of the last New Democratic administration there.

So, you know, electricity and market restructuring in this province is in full sail, Mr. Chairman. We have evidence from the private sector, that third party, that shows prices would be where they're at now had it been a regulated model. I know there is no other jurisdiction – no other jurisdiction – that has the mix of environmentally conscious power, environmentally sensitive power, and power generation that this great province has. In fact, to the right of me sits the Minister of Infrastructure in this session, and that minister is a signatory on North America's largest green power contract.

Now, to me success is no blackouts, reasonably priced power, ample generation, good billing practices, presence of a robust wholesale and business marketplace, green power additions to the point where we're the largest wind power producer in Canada. Those look like pretty good indicators of success to me. You know, Mr. Chairman, they're a long time coming. This has been a work-in-progress that's reached over six or seven years.

There are organizations in Grande Prairie that are going to heat buildings and fire electricity through the use of biomass. You don't see wood-burning teepees in the pulp and paper industry any more in this province. Mr. Chairman, there's even an organization in Lloydminster, the beautiful border city, that crushes canola. With the price of natural gas as a feedstock they were looking at a cogeneration machine that would feed canola and natural gas into the system, and then you use what is most economically opportune. So, in other words, marginal cost became very important to people around the province.

You know, Mr. Chairman, the one other thing of having a true price signal – not cloaked, not camouflaged, not darkened by New Democratic accounting – is the fact that people conserve. I noted from figures that I saw from TransAlta Utilities that Albertans actually use 7 per cent less electricity in their homes than they did when we started competitive market restructuring, that combined with a 10 per cent reduction in natural gas usage. All the right signals.

I applaud the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for continuing to watch this unfold and continuing to look at it with a fair and unbiased eye, and when he sees the very company that he was a part of, EPCOR, now being recognized for its leadership, its innovation, its contribution to the city, its pricing to consumers, he has to be proud of this. He has to be proud of the way this has evolved.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. You know, that rekindled my zest for this Chamber this afternoon.

It's interesting. You know, this minister is taking his lead from his Premier and from other members of the government in his manner of answering questions. When you're put on the spot about what you're doing and people are asking you to be accountable, what does the government do? What does the Premier do? What did this minister just do? He starts pointing fingers at other places, whether it's trying to divert attention from the Premier's flights to the A320 that the federal government has or whether it's trying to divert attention from the high electricity prices that we're saddled with under deregulation and trying to point fingers at some long-past B.C. government.

You know, if we responded in the same vein, if the opposition acted the same way that the government does, we'd be pointing out things like a Conservative government in Saskatchewan that is largely still in jail because they were a bunch of crooks. We could extrapolate that to say by implication, as the minister just tried to do, that all Conservatives are crooks and probably should be in jail and that these guys just haven't been caught yet.

But we aren't saying that, Mr. Chairman, not at all. We're trying to hold the government accountable and ask it specifically about what it's doing in Alberta. That's its responsibility. It's not really its responsibility to think about past NDP governments somewhere else or the federal government but what this government is doing and how is it answering for its performance in this Assembly.

I guess maybe I'm going to have to answer my own questions today, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to have to answer my own questions. How is electricity deregulation doing? Well, we have electricity prices that are, you know, 40 to 60 per cent higher than before deregulation. Alberta used to be one of the lowest in the mid-range of electricity prices before deregulation. We now have the highest electricity prices in the entire country, and this is directly related to deregulation by this government.

In terms of the term "deregulation" itself, Mr. Chairman, it's a complete misnomer. One of the first things I did after being elected was to ask our research staff to give me all the bills and regulations that existed before deregulation occurred, because I heard the minister and previous ministers talk about, you know: we're going to simplify the process; we're going to streamline it, deregulate it, make it more efficient, and save a lot of money. So guess what? There were actually three documents, and if you stack them up, they're a stack of paper that is about six inches to eight inches thick. That's quite a bit of paper, but that was for the regulated system.

Then I asked for all of the bills, all of the laws, the regulations, and so on to govern the new streamlined deregulated electricity system. Guess what, Mr. Chairman? It took two pages – that is, the pages that work in our Chamber – to carry all of the documents governing the new regulated system, and it's been added to since.

So the amount of bureaucracy, the different boards and management bodies that have been put in place to keep an eye on the transmission system and all of these things and all of the regulations, all of the people, the bureaucrats that are trying to run the system and make competition work in a natural monopoly is enormous, and it's multiplied manyfold. The bureaucracy has grown; the costs have grown.

I'll remind hon. members that just before the last provincial election there was a dramatic spike in electricity prices – a dramatic spike – much higher than we've seen since. I remember that Dr. West was leaving that portfolio about that time, and the current Minister of Sustainable Resource Development was thrown into the breach to try and solve this very difficult problem. He struggled with it, and we were changing ministers there for a while very quickly.

What did they do? Well, they put a cap on what the power companies could sell electricity to the people for, and this turned out to be way less than the power companies paid for it in the first place because they'd gone through all these auctions. People remember these auctions where, you know, you had to trade power. You couldn't sell your own power to people. You had to buy somebody else's, and they had to buy yours. You had this series of auctions that were a complete failure even by that government's own standards.

What did they do? The power companies went crazy because now they were going to take big losses, and they were promised that this system was going to work for them. They went after the government, comparing the government's strategy to the national energy program of the federal Liberal government, that the minister has referred to. Then the government allowed the power companies to get that money back by spreading it over the next couple of years. So we had rate riders, and thank goodness those are gone because they were a major irritant and just a clear political move to ensure that there were low power prices just before the election but not after, because we all had to pay for it after.

The government then imposed some other programs, and if you combine the natural gas programs and the electricity programs together, the various subsidy programs before the last election, the total value was $4.2 billion. If you add the increased costs to that that consumers have paid since, it's another $4 billion or $5 billion, Mr. Chairman. So the total cost of electricity deregulation since its inception in this province is probably close to $6 billion, because half of the $4.2 billion was for electricity, half was from gas, so that's about $2 billion plus another $4 billion in increased costs since deregulation. So the increased cost to the Alberta economy of this failed experiment has been about $6 billion and counting.

Then there's the question of choice because consumers have not benefited by greater choice as a result of this. The government has desperately tried to get some foreign companies to come in, but all they've done is displaced Canadian-owned companies. The level of choice is minimal, and you're buying basically the same electrons from a different company. Consumer choice is in many cases nonexistent, and competition is certainly nowhere to be seen. So, Mr. Chairman, electricity deregulation has to be judged, from the consumer's point of view, to be a dramatic failure.

I do want to indicate that I am quite proud of EPCOR as a city-owned corporation. It's been very successful, and it of course supports deregulation because now it operates just like a private company where profit is the motive, and they're very excited about deregulation because they can make buckets and buckets of money at the consumer's expense just as if they were a private company. So it's not the kind of company that I had in mind when I was on city council. It's just a private company that happens to be owned by a city, and I think there are advantages financially to the city, of course, but otherwise it's not the kind of corporation or approach to electricity that I would like to see.

I would like to remind the hon. minister that I was never on the board of EPCOR, but while I was on council, we did appoint the board members, and one of the board members that we appointed for a couple of terms was Peter Elzinga, who, of course, we know just stepped down as the Premier's chief of staff. You know, when the Premier kept thinking that I was a member of the board, I could just kick myself that I could never remember that Peter Elzinga, who worked in his office, was actually really on the board of EPCOR. I wish I had remembered that long before now.

But he did a good job for EPCOR, and certainly his connection with the government was beneficial because there was a lot of discrimination on the part of the provincial government against EPCOR because it was publicly owned, and we know that it does drive some members of this government completely mad to think about a publicly owned company outcompeting private companies. You know, it's just not in their frame of reference. They can't even imagine such a thing would be possible, Mr. Chairman, but there you go.

So I did want to just reiterate a question to the minister in a completely nonpartisan fashion because I think he missed it in his zeal, his trip down memory lane to the B.C. NDP government. You know, how fast ferries got in there, I don't know. I would like to ask the minister again how the progress is coming on implementing the recommendations of the Bolger committee.

Mr. Smith: Very well, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Lund: From bad to worse.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure just said that it's going from bad to worse. Well, that could describe the P3 system that's trying to build a courthouse in Calgary.

Mr. Lund: Well, it's still a P3.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, isn't it. Pity, pity, pity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, why doesn't this government encourage more coal-generated electricity, considering it's much cheaper than natural gas-generated electricity? And if we're going to encourage coal-generated electricity, what plans are being made – I heard them discussed briefly earlier – in regard to the capture and compression of the flue gas stream and using that as a source of CO<sub>2</sub> for enhanced oil recovery? What exactly are the minister's plans in regard to that?

Also, on page 174 the performance measure chart indicates that only 37 per cent of Albertans know the role of energy and mineral resources in Alberta's economy and only 60 per cent of Albertans think the government is doing a good or very good job of providing energy information. What is the minister doing to improve these paltry figures?

Again, on page 174-175 the department in the budget is committed to establishing a competitive market framework for electricity and natural gas. Considering that energy deregulation has been, as calculated by the hon. member from Edmonton-Highlands, an $8 billion boondoggle, why is this government still clinging to such a huge public policy mistake?

In the time that we have, Mr. Chairman, when will Albertans start seeing the $3 million industry-funded pro energy deregulation propaganda campaign? Are you holding on to this propaganda campaign until just before the election?

Again – I didn't receive a satisfactory answer – once and for all: what is this government's precise position on joining the Grid West or the Regional Transmission Organization West?

And, certainly, for the benefit of the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, what exactly are you planning for the rural electrification associations? It's quite interesting that they've sort of been moved from the Department of Energy to the protection of the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I suspect – and citizens do as well – that this government is planning to dismantle the REAs and the gas co-ops as well. So, you know, I believe this will be the second fiscal year that they've been moved under the protection of the minister of agriculture, and I would like an explanation of that.

The electricity exports. We talked about those briefly before.

Now, on page 180 the EUB will "ensure energy and utility hearings are . . . open to broad public participation." I have had the opportunity of attending some of those regulatory hearings, just as I have had some public meetings on electricity deregulation, and the meetings on electricity deregulation haven't been government friendly. Will the government commit to allowing all consumer groups to participate in EUB utility hearings and not just its own Utilities Consumer Advocate?

On page 181, the EUB will address public safety concerns by continuing to incorporate "the recommendations of the Provincial Advisory Committee on Public Safety and Sour Gas." When will the government abolish the drilling of critical sour gas wells near populated areas? Why does the EUB spend money on granting hearings to applications that should be dismissed from the onset; for example, Compton Petroleum's application to drill six critical sour gas wells that could affect over 300,000 Calgarians?

On page 182, the EUB will "ensure accurate, comprehensive and current information," and it is going to be "readily available to stakeholders." Why are stakeholders not allowed to review all EUB applications on its web site?

Now, the financial overview of the department from the Energy estimates. I have some questions. Why was the ministry spending allowed to run $13 million over budget last year? What were the causes for this overexpenditure? It had nothing to do with communicating that totally dysfunctional electricity deregulation propaganda campaign. I can only imagine what the communication strategies are on that. If electricity deregulation were a movie, it would be a horror movie.

Mr. Mason: A horror movie?

Mr. MacDonald: It would be a horror movie. Yes.

Mr. Mason: Night of the living dead.

Mr. MacDonald: A lot of it would be shot in the darkness, hon. member.

What steps are the minister taking to ensure that these cost overruns do not happen again this year? Why is the department only budgeting for $191 million when it spent $198 million last year? Why does the government predict a reduction in orphan well abandonment activities considering that there are so many maturing oil fields in this province?

Mr. Smith: She asked that already.

Mr. Mason: But did you answer?

Ms Carlson: Yeah. He didn't answer.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm told that you have failed to answer that question, so I thought I would . . . [interjection] He's going to give this answer in writing? Okay.

Now, on page 113 the Minister of Energy has the dubious distinction not only of having a lot of airplane flights – he's certainly a frequent flyer, Mr. Chairman; he's a busy man – but the highest communication budget at over $990,000, trying to sell a defective product, which is electricity deregulation. Why doesn't the minister save some tax dollars by quitting trying to sell Albertans a defective product that they clearly do not want?

Earlier this afternoon I tried to encourage the minister to finally accept the fact that electricity is an essential service. It is not a commodity. We could save a few dollars here, and this is a government, in my view, that needs to save a few dollars.

Also, will the minister provide a complete breakdown of the communications budget?

Here on page 117, where you're talking about expected revenue and expense, why is the ministry expecting to take in only $5 billion in resource revenue, 35 per cent less than the $7.8 billion it raked in last year? Who is responsible for these estimates? Is it the Department of Finance, or is it the Department of Energy?

In a department that stresses deregulation, why has the cost of energy regulation increased by $16 million, or 17 per cent, since the fiscal year 2002-2003?

The Department of Energy will – I see on page 122 – increase its full-time equivalent employment by 12 to 556. The EUB will increase its full-time equivalents or employees by 18, to 818.

Now, going back to the former tenure of Dr. West – I never looked this year, and I might have to – regrettable staff turnover was an item.

Mr. Smith: It's going to be an item in Edmonton-Highlands in the next election – or in Edmonton-Gold Bar, sorry.

Mr. MacDonald: It's going to be an item in Edmonton-Highlands in the next election.

There are a lot of fine people working for the EUB, and many of them after they were let go were hired by private enterprise for probably a lot more than what they were getting at the EUB. There seemed to be a problem there with the EUB recruiting replacements.

Now, this is not the first time that this has happened after Dr. West has been involved in a department. Hopefully, we've seen the end of that. The only place I would encourage Dr. West to look now is at the size of his cabinet. Let's leave the EUB alone; let's leave the public service alone. Let's, perhaps, shrink the size of the cabinet.

Mr. Smith: The only thing Dr. West is intent on shrinking is right over there.

Mr. MacDonald: Our seats are going to be reduced if Dr. West has his way. That's interesting.

Mr. Mason: Well, now you've got it on the record, hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: That's the purpose.

An Hon. Member: The NDs could go up.

Mr. MacDonald: You would hope. Yeah. You would hope.

The EUB has had a great deal of difficulty getting over that period of turmoil in its staffing. Is this the reason we've had to hire 30 additional full-time employees? Certainly, with the increase in activity in the oil patch I, for one, couldn't find fault with that because we need people to ensure that the development continues in an orderly fashion.

We have some questions that, unfortunately, weren't answered from last year, and they are these, Mr. Chairman. What are the Department of Energy's responsibilities in the implementation of the government's action plan on climate change? Why isn't there a performance measure to measure consumer satisfaction with the implementation of deregulation? How many energy retailers does Alberta need before prices decrease substantially? Is there any money allocated to a consumer education program about buying electricity from a retailer, and if not, why not? This is something we had proposed. The minister has got that confused with a propaganda campaign.

There are also other issues that, certainly, we need to deal with.

The issue surrounding water. The minister is not distinguishing between fresh or potable water and produced water as a result of coal bed methane production. What measures are being considered to get rid of the produced water as a result of coal bed methane production?

5:00

The minister in his own report – and certainly I hope he's had a chance to read this. This would be good reading on an airplane, so I can only assume that the minister has had a chance to read it. The potential water disposal and diversion strategies for coal bed methane: no two coal beds are the same in the province. No two coal bed methane basins are the same. So we can't assume that produced water is going to be the same from every well. We can't assume that the chemical composition of that water, whatever is in it, arsenic or beryllium or mercury, that any of those elements that may be present in the water would also be present in a coal bed methane bed that is, let's say, 30 kilometres west of Sylvan Lake.

So what exactly are we doing about produced water? Are we going to use that as a dedicated source for enhanced oil recovery? What are we also going to do with the studies that I'm sure are being done? They're not public, to this member's knowledge.

As coal bed methane production increases, what exactly is happening to the water table? Is the water table going down? Is it staying the same? What sort of tests are we doing on that? I see the minister shaking his head, but I think this is very, very important. With every test well we have in production right now, we should have adjacent to it a well to check the water table to see what effect, if any, this is having on the water table. If this is being done, please provide the information not only to the Energy critic but to the landowners, who are very interested in this throughout the province.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: I would like to provide answers, Mr. Chairman, as well as to continue to separate fact from fiction. Oh, where to start? Where to start? Such a task. You know, just when you think you've heard it all from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, in comes his cleanup batter, the member for Edmonton-Gold Brick. I've got to tell you that when the Member for Edmonton-Highlands was speaking, it was getting so thin that I thought I heard the sound of the automatic pumps kicking in. It's indeed thin gruel to shovel.

There is no Grid West. There is no RTO West. So there's in fact nothing to join, Mr. Chairman. The member knows full well the story about consumer reputation at the board. There's been lots of work on that.

The member turned his attention from his concept of gas to sour gas, and sour gas is one of the great success stories in Alberta. Over 30 per cent of our natural gas is derived from sour gas deposits. When we say sour gas, Mr. Chairman, we mean gas that has the presence of hydrogen sulphide in it, and at that time you have to find a process that separates the hydrogen from the sulphur.

In fact, we've created at the University of Calgary, where the Institute for Sustainable Energy, Environment and Economy is, the Alberta Sulphur Research Institute. That institute is known worldwide for its ability to attack difficult issues with respect to sour gas and to be able to remove the sulphur from the gas, condition the gas, and get it ready for your furnace. Without the great work of that sulphur institute over the years, we would have lost billions – billions – of dollars of royalty revenues, Mr. Chairman. So this is a good time to congratulate those scientists who work at the Alberta sulphur institute, housed actually in the former Imperial Oil Building, which is close to the University of Calgary, which is now owned by the University of Calgary and will subsequently house the sulphur institute as well as other energy-related chairs.

The member can go back to the minutes from many EUB inquiries as well as to a concentrated study on sour gas recommendations, some 87 recommendations from the EUB and a joint stakeholder committee to manage sour gas in Alberta. That program has accelerated ahead, and it's a success. Recommendations in the 60s, 70s levels are now being implemented. One of the major stakeholders, a noted veterinarian from Rocky Mountain House, has indicated that she was extremely pleased by the response the government had in the management of sour gas at the EUB level. We have reduced flaring by 56 per cent. We have reduced venting. There is no jurisdiction more competent to handle sour gas than the Alberta industry and the Alberta regulator.

Mr. Chairman, the fact is that sour gas does not endanger 300,000 people. The fact is that the mere policy of ignition would hold those individuals safe. It is a tribute, I think, to the EUB and to those who are applying for sour gas licences of the care and handling that they have in detailed emergency response plans. The member's rhetoric belies his experience in the oil patch. He's actually much more knowledgeable than he lets on or shows, and he knows full well how competent members are with respect to sour gas in this province.

With respect to his discussion with consumers and the EUB, he knows full well that there are consumer intercessions, that there are lots and ample opportunities for the consumer to be heard. There's the Consumers' Association of Alberta. There are singular interventions. There's, of course, the good work being done by the utilities advocate, that is housed in the Department of Government Services.

About everything being placed on the web site. I don't know if everything is, but the member should know that there were well over 54,000 applications for licences and permits at the EUB last year and that he should be able to get the information he needs from the EUB.

While we're on the subject of the EUB, I just want to refer back to his question on the orphaned well funds because I think it's an important piece to cover here so that he won't be burdened by having to read even more in a written reply. Of course, they're wrong, as usual. The orphaned well fund is not being reduced. In fact, it is being increased $1.9 million from calendar year 2003 to calendar year 2004 and a further $100,000 from '04 to '05. The program levy: in 2003, $8 million; in 2004, $9.9 million; in 2005, $10 million. The fiscal year '03-04 has captured two calendar year levies, Mr. Chairman, of $8 million and $9.9 million, for a total of $17.9 million.

He knows full well that these orphaned wells are funded by industry and managed by the EUB in terms of the money, and it has worked. It has worked better than any other program in any known oil-producing jurisdiction in the world. So instead of being critical, I think he should be applaudatory, Mr. Chairman.

He knows full well that each sour gas well application is evaluated separately, assessed on its own risk, weighed on its own merit, and cannot be, as he would so injure the royalty structure of Alberta to be, summarily dismissed.

I do want to comment briefly on the $13 million that the member talked about. That $13 million, Mr. Chairman, is a flow through to reflect the increase in the orphan abandonment dollars paid by industry. It reflects two FTEs' – not 20, not 50, not 100 – increase due to the Energy and Utilities Board's workload, that has increased.

Of course, we have to remember, Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier – if he had only been listening, it would've been so much more helpful – that we have in the last four years collected royalties equal to the previous 10 combined. That's a combination of price and activity. So when you do the work to license, let's say, 8,000 wells and then you do the work to license 20,000 wells, you could use a couple of extra people. That incremental workload – they must be wonderful people because they can move from 8,000 wells to 20,000 wells. I think it's a good story and reflects the increased activity in this province.

I also think that that activity is a reflection of investor and industry confidence in a very strong and competent royalty structure. So we can dismiss, I think, with fact any concerns expressed by the member with respect to the royalty structure.

I think that the communication budget is well known to the member, and he's fully aware that that's applied to the public information work that has been done with respect to a new competitive market. In many cases previous to it he's asked for it; then he complains about money being spent on it; then he wants to know when more is going to be spent, but then it's not information, but it's propaganda. So we'll just continue on, Mr. Chairman, with a good program. Any further program with respect to consumer information will be carried on by the Minister of Government Services.

With respect to his comments on produced water and for some reason wanting to double the amount of coal bed methane drilling, I think that in the only two instances where they thought they were going to apply for a freshwater well, it turned into saline or brackish water. That water was then reinjected back into the formation. We have not had to deal with water disposal in a coal bed methane well to date of the some thousand that have been drilled.

The Chair: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Energy, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5) which provides for the Committee of Supply to rise and report not later than 5:15 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday afternoons, I must now put the question after consideration of the business plan and the proposed estimates of the Department of Energy for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and

Equipment/Inventory Purchases

$113,833,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Energy: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchase, $113,833,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; at 5:16 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 3, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/05/03

[The Speaker in the chair]

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

Let us pray. Guide us so that we may use the privilege given to us as elected Members of the Legislative Assembly. Give us the strength to labour diligently, the courage to think and speak with clarity and conviction and without prejudice or pride. Amen.

Hon. members and to all the people in the galleries, let's all participate now in the singing of our national anthem. We'll be led today by Mr. Maurice Lorieau. Please participate in the language of your choice.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Mr. Lorieau is from Calgary, so we appreciate him coming today. Thank you very much.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Graham Kelly, high commissioner for New Zealand. He is seated in your gallery and is accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Janette Kelly. The high commissioner has had an opportunity to visit with a number of my colleagues in the Legislature, including I believe yourself, where you had an opportunity to discuss Canadian Parliamentary Association days.

We have a number of links with New Zealand, and we have much in common. We, of course, have our ties to the Commonwealth. We share a history of British parliamentary democracy. As a member of the Cairns group of agricultural exporting countries, New Zealand is a strong Alberta ally in supporting increased liberalization of world agricultural trade. Our educational institutions in Alberta and New Zealand are enjoying student and staff exchanges. Mr. Speaker, many, many opportunities abound for us to continue our relationship in trade, cultural, and educational opportunities. Certainly, I enjoyed the opportunity to discuss that with the high commissioner.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that our honoured guest, along with his wife, please rise and receive the very traditional warm welcome of our House.

head:

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to members of the Assembly two school groups from the Ponoka-Rimbey constituency. First of all, I wish to introduce 48 students and three teachers from the Bluffton school. The teachers are Mrs. Sharon Johnston, Mrs. Connie Jensen, and Mr. Nolan Krauss. Please rise. I would ask that you give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Also, Mr. Speaker, from the Rimbey elementary school we have a group of 27 students and three leaders plus helpers and one nurse. The teachers are Walter Johnson, Val Warren, and Kathy Turner. Parent helpers are Guy Beaulieu, Karen Weisgerber, and Ila Lyster. Grace Johnson is a nurse supervisor with the group. I would ask that they stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you a number of people who work with the Department of Health and Wellness, specifically in the population health strategies area. Helen Legg has been our lead on diabetes in the Alberta diabetes strategy. Sherri Wilson is our project manager on the Healthy U campaign. Fern Miller has an area of expertise in mental health. Irene Mazurenko has an area of expertise in perinatal health. Finally, Annette Lemire is responsible for areas of child health and children and youth with complex needs. I had the opportunity to take a photograph and meet with these fine women, part of our civil service, earlier this afternoon, and I would ask that they rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is the greatest pleasure of mine to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 17 students from Coronation school, which is located in Coronation, Alberta, my hometown. They're accompanied today by their teacher and a friend and neighbour of mine, Mr. Dan Kinakin, as well as by parent helpers who are also friends and neighbours of mine: Mr. Mark Zimmer, Ms Colleen Rush, Mrs. Hilda Gardner, Mrs. Lisa Plenhert, Wanda Merchant, and Wendy Glazier. I'd ask that they rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to stand and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly my summer student, Mr. Peter Davis. Peter is the son of Mr. Jack Davis, who is a well-known figure in this Legislature. Peter is in his fourth year of communications at Mount Royal College and will be a great addition to our staff over the summer. I'd like to ask Peter to stand – he is seated in the members' gallery – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a friend of long standing, Dr. Baldev Abbi. Dr. Abbi is a lifelong educator and a psychologist. He taught in Alberta schools for 18 years and then worked in the department of psychology at the University of Alberta for several years following his school teaching. Dr. Abbi is seated in the public gallery, and I would ask him to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly Louis and Ruth Maria Adria, who represent the Elder Advocates of Alberta and are here to observe the proceedings of this House. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I want to ask Louis and Ruth Maria to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Hospital Services

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. New information from the Capital health region shows that emergency rooms in the Edmonton area are under siege. The Liberal opposition has learned that on some nights as many as 90 to 100 people in Edmonton area emergency rooms are assessed and waiting to be admitted to hospital beds, more people than in this entire Assembly. An Alberta Liberal government would never have allowed this to happen. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that Capital health has indicated that 350 beds are needed immediately – immediately – to alleviate its bed crisis, why has the government only committed to adding 170?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the Capital health region treats approximately 370,000 people in emergency rooms throughout the year. Patients are all assessed in emergency, and any patient with a life-threatening illness or injury receives treatment immediately. So this is a very important point to note: that people are not waiting hours to be treated. They may wait to have a bed assigned to them if it is determined that they require one.

We know, of course, that the population of the province is growing. We know that there are a higher number of visits to emergency rooms here than, say, in the Calgary health region. We are putting forward $41 million in our capital plan to repatriate some 170 beds that exist in hospitals throughout the Capital region, space that is now being freed up because of the consolidation of administrative space in a central location, which is a step that the Calgary health authority took some number of years ago. Mr. Speaker, we are working with the Capital health authority to meet the real needs.

The Health Link line has reduced the number of unnecessary emergency visits each year by thousands. It takes 800,000 calls a year. We know that that's helping, but we also know that in moving these 170 beds forward, it's not simply a matter of snapping your fingers and having all those beds and all the staff that is required to fill them. It requires careful planning on an ongoing basis to make sure that you not only open beds but that you actually have people who can staff those beds and look after the needs. It's not simply a capital decision.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. How does the minister explain that in Alberta, the wealthiest province in Canada, Edmonton and Calgary have some of the lowest acute care bed ratios for their population in the entire country?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have led this country in terms of the kinds of innovations that we have. We put enormous amounts of effort into things like designated assisted living, into long-term care. We make sure that acute care hospitals are reserved for those people who have the most urgent needs. But there are other ways of dealing with people in our health care system than hospitals. I want the hon. member to understand that health care does not equal hospital care. There are many different facets of health care.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it's difficult to compare our province to other provinces when the average age of our population is generally younger than most other parts of the country; our needs are different. This kind of simple analysis does not lend itself to good policy direction.

Dr. Taft: Well, will the minister commit here and now to providing the 700 new beds that the Capital health region needs for the Edmonton area?

Mr. Mar: Over time, Mr. Speaker, certainly, we'll be looking at the real needs expressed by not only the Capital health region but health regions throughout the province. I think that it is important to know – and the hon. Minister of Infrastructure may wish to supplement – that we are investing billions of dollars into health care over the next five years. We have a significant plan, but again capital decisions are not the only part in the planning for the delivery of health care. We also have to deal with the real and legitimate needs of operating costs associated with such facilities.

Government Aircraft

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, before the Liberal opposition started asking questions about the government's air fleet, the Minister of Infrastructure said, "Those manifests are all available to the public, and they can be viewed at any time." But since 10 a.m. Friday the government's infamous code of silence has been imposed. For this government democracy seems an inconvenience. To the Minister of Infrastructure: what is the government hiding?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we're hiding absolutely nothing. As a matter of fact, what was available before the Liberals started asking questions about the aircraft flight is still available. They're available over at the department. If those aren't good enough, then the Liberals and others can use the FOIP process, and then they can get a hard copy of the logs that they're requesting. There's nothing to hide. As a matter of fact, I would challenge the member: why doesn't he ask for a year, FOIP a year, then compare that with what has been available all the time and see if there are any discrepancies? I trust that there won't be.

Dr. Taft: Can the minister explain why on this last Friday flight manifests suddenly became subject to the costly and bureaucratic freedom of information act when the day before they were available to anyone at any time?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, that's very easy to respond to. All of a sudden we became overburdened with requests. The media started asking. The Liberals asked, and the Liberals, to put this in context, wanted to send over five researchers – we only have the capacity to handle two at a time – and they wanted to look at all of the manifests for over 10 years. The fact is there are some 1,200 manifests a year, and they wanted to go over 10 years, so that's about 12,000 manifests that they were wanting to look at.

If you break it down – and I don't know what they're looking for – I suspect that they couldn't do more than 60 an hour. That's one a minute. With the amount of information that's on those, I suspect that that's all they could handle. If you worked that out, Mr. Speaker, that's over 200 hours – 200 hours – that we would have to provide staff so that they could look at these manifests, and that's just for one request.

There were a number of other requests, Mr. Speaker, so we just simply couldn't handle those kinds of requests, and 200 hours at, say, four hours a day – we've got to remember that we've got staff that are assigned other duties. They're not just assigned to babysit the Liberals. So if you take four hours a day, that's some 50 days. They can get it even faster through FOIP.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Was it the minister who gave the order to classify this information, or, if it wasn't, could he tell us who it was?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, once again, we are not classifying the information. They can get that information through FOIP, and I would urge them to do it.

Mr. Speaker, he commented about the cost, but I find that very interesting. They get a large sum of money for research. If they want to spend it that way, they're welcome to it. But why should we in the department spend a large amount of taxpayers' dollars in order to satisfy their witch hunt?

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Finance: given that Executive Council and Infrastructure alone spent $6 million on air travel last year, how much do all the other ministries spend?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition has had almost a daily occasion to be able to access that information through Committee of Supply to the ministries as they come forward, and I suggest that you direct it to each minister.

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Government Services: did the government consult the Privacy Commissioner before arbitrarily blocking access to flight information behind the freedom of information act?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, there is a provision in the FOIP Act. When the process is properly followed, if applicants have felt that they have not been served properly by the departments that they're requesting information from, they have an opportunity to go to the Information and Privacy Commissioner and ask for a decision on the activities they have requested. That is part of the FOIP Act, and it is there for the use of any applicant who doesn't feel that they have been properly served by the process.

Dr. Taft: To the same minister: when will the government stop stonewalling its democratic duty and simply post information about flights on a web site so that all Albertans can see how their tax dollars are being spent?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Government Services is responsible for the overall Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. For that act, as it's depicted amongst the various departments in this government, every single solitary department has a FOIP co-ordinator. They are trained by our department folks, and they follow the process that is outlined in the act.

The Minister of Infrastructure has stood in this House and has recommended that anyone wanting to get access to the summaries can do that. That's the decision that has been made, and the process is there. That process is set out in the FOIP Act, and that department is familiar with that process, and we ask that those folks that have been asked to follow that process do so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Beef Recovery Strategy

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since the first case of BSE was found in Alberta, this government has adopted a strategy of simply hoping for the border to be reopened rather than working to offset the disastrous consequences BSE has inflicted upon ranchers. After the second BSE case was traced back to Alberta, the government promised it would not be caught off guard again and would develop a plan for the beef industry in the event that the border did not open soon. Eleven months later that so-called plan B, released Friday, contained few specifics and no hope for ranchers that the government might protect them against packer monopolies if the U.S. market remains closed. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why has the minister reneged on her promise to produce a real contingency plan and instead has just produced a vague document that promises yet another plan sometime down the road?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that the maybe deputy leader of the third party knows more about the beef industry than the some 65 people from the industry that sat around the table and drafted this document.

I would like to put on the record just a few names of the drafting team of this document that he holds in such low regard: Arno Doerksen, chairman, Alberta Beef Producers; Jeff Warrack, past chair of the Alberta Cattle Feeders' Association; Willie Van Solkema, Canadian business manager, Cargill Foods; Bob Kalef, president and CEO, Centennial Foods; Gary Sargent, general manager, Alberta Beef Producers; Brad McLeod, meat committee, Alberta Food Processors Association; Glenn Brand, director of marketing, Beef Information Centre; Colin Campbell, senior marketing and trade officer, Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada. Then, Mr. Speaker, we do have Dale Engstrom, Rick Frederickson, Darcy Willis, Jackson Gardner, and Alan Ford from AAFRD.

The majority of the people that made up this report, which I think is a fine document that actually talks about the issue, that actually puts it into context, that actually talks about a vision for the industry and guiding principles and strategic priorities, and goes into themes – Mr. Speaker, I know you want to give him an opportunity to ask the next question, and I'd be happy to go over the rest of the document in the answer.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the minister: just how long will the border have to remain closed – and we all hope that it doesn't remain closed – before this government will take concrete action to regulate the monopolistic practices of the American owned and controlled beef-packing industry in this province?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the one thing that this government and this minister will continue to do is work with the industry and listen to the industry. We'll continue to talk about the issues that are around the unfortunate continued closure. However, we're fairly optimistic that this situation will resolve itself in the near future, especially after the federal minister of agriculture, the Prime Minister, the U.S. Director of Agriculture, and the President of the United States had a conversation about this issue last week, and the American President, Mr. Bush, made it very clear that it is his desire and his government's desire and the industry's desire to see this solved as quickly as possible.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the government's Republican cousins in the United States may in fact be in serious trouble in this election and may not in fact be back after November, what will the government do if the border does not reopen?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a part of the family of cousins that I hadn't really thought of, you know, being related to.

Mr. Speaker, I want to go back to the document. While it may not be what the learned member across the way wants, it is what the industry players – and I go back and repeat that there were 65 persons from the industry, from all aspects of the value chain that prepared this document and talked about market access and how to achieve it. There is a strategy in that. It includes harmonization of the end users. It talks about the theme of consumer confidence and the safety and quality of beef and a strategy to deal with that.

Building capacity is about packing plants' capability and advantage within the value chain. That is about recognizing that we do need additional capacity even if the border does open, Mr. Speaker. What we really need the border open for is to create some arbitrage and some price determination in the marketplace.

Then if you continue on in the document, which is extensive – and I know that we don't have a lot of time – it does talk about short-term considerations. I would point the hon. member to page 10, and it is: "Border remains closed to live animals." Slowly I will read it: (a) situation, (b) consequence, (c) responses and possible actions. Just read those sections.

The Speaker: Perhaps the hon. Deputy Premier would be able to file the document a little later.

The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Natural Gas Royalty Rates

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For low natural gas prices and low oil prices the royalty rate return to Albertans is low. This is to allow the companies to recover their costs of exploration and development. However, at a price of about $3 per gigajoule, which is much less than the current $7 per gigajoule, for the price of natural gas that is, the royalty rate for natural gas flattens out. After about $3 per gigajoule the rate is a constant 30 per cent no matter how high the price goes up. Since the companies are protected at lower prices, it seems that Albertans as the owners of the resource should receive higher royalty rates as the prices rise. Could the Minister of Energy explain why that's not the case?

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's a very good question. In fact, I think that when the price-sensitive royalty model was first constructed, the contemplation of $4, $5, $6, $7, $8, $9 gas was something that was extraordinarily infrequent. From that perspective perhaps it is a good message to examine that royalty structure.

From the perspective of royalties being structured so that they attract investment – and we all know that no job is created without adequate investment – this royalty structure in Alberta is such that it reflects the types of gas pools that we have throughout Alberta. Alberta is characterized by a bountiful amount of gas but in difficult-to-find areas and with greater geological differences than what is usually encountered. So with that, Mr. Speaker, came the royalty structure that encouraged the private sector to find new and creative ways to find gas in this province. The second thing was, of course, that all that data is kept for a year at the EUB and then made public. So that has allowed us to have a very successful private sector.

Now, let me just briefly, Mr. Speaker, talk about: for every dollar the price of oil increases, the royalty change is about $65 million.

For every 10 cents increase in the price of natural gas, Alberta collects a further $105 million in royalty. So what we do know is that we have a royalty structure that reflects some low productivity, high finding costs, and it's created the biggest bonanza of drilling in the history of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We often hear of much higher royalty rates paid to other jurisdictions. How does Alberta's royalty share compare to the royalty share of, say, Norway or Alaska?

Mr. Smith: Well, the royalty discussion is always one that continues on an ongoing basis. For example, developing the oil sands created another opportunity to have even a different type of royalty structure, so we put the generic royalty regime in place. That's resulted in a great deal of investment, Mr. Speaker, and we're seeing the resulting payback starting to accrue to Albertans, particularly in this high price environment.

Now, as companies throughout the world look for competitive ways to place their capital, they also look for the people who have the expertise to benchmark the toughness or the competitiveness of the royalty regime. We use a couple of groups. Dr. Pedro van Meurs and Daniel Johnston are internationally recognized petroleum experts. They rate Alberta as one of the toughest fiscal regimes in the world in terms of the high share of nonrenewable resource revenue received by government: continuing to do a good job, Mr. Speaker, continuing to be competitive.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, could the minister explain how Alberta's royalty rates compare to those of our adjacent provinces?

Mr. Mason: How about Norway?

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, not only has this member mentioned adjacent provinces, but a member of the third party chipped in, "How about Norway?" Well, Norway doesn't deliver some 7 billion to 9 billion dollars in transfer payments to another jurisdiction each year. This government does. These Albertans, through the prosperity of oil and gas exploration and oil and gas economic grants, participate in Confederation to the tune of 7 billion to 9 billion Canadian dollars per year.

Is our royalty regime competitive? It's being copied, it's being imitated, and it's being duplicated by British Columbia and by Saskatchewan. As well, we continue to support the efforts of the Northwest Territories and Nova Scotia and Newfoundland to have their own royalty structure independent of the federal government.

Automobile Insurance Reforms

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2002, the latest year that statistics were available, bodily injury claims and adjustment expenses incurred totalled $725 million here in Alberta. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. What percentage of the total bodily injury claim costs will be eliminated in Alberta with the $4,000 cap on pain and suffering damage?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell the hon. member is that the changes to automobile insurance that have been put in place and are moving forward for implementation this summer in the province of Alberta will see roughly $200 million come out of the premium side of the equation, and that will be in the form of returns back, savings for Albertans. That's being accomplished in good part by the cap that is going on plus the revamping of the structure. It's there to give Albertans an accessible and affordable automobile insurance package. The exact percentage: I don't have that number with me, but we can get it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that there were 19,190 claims in 2002 for bodily injury in Alberta, private passenger, how many of these claims would now be included in the $4,000 cap on pain and suffering?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, that would be something to anticipate, and I can't give him that number, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: if we're going to see roughly $200 million in savings, if that is part of the percentage of the total loss costs, how will this be affected for total loss costs for all auto insurance coverages combined when we change in Alberta and go to the $4,000 cap on pain and suffering? Where will the $200 million come in?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the structure that we're bringing forward deals with the compulsory automobile insurance that we require through law in this province, so when the hon. member talks about all automobile insurance being covered under this change, we're looking at the compulsory automobile insurance in the province, which is the PL/PD that has to be in place for every person that operates a motorized vehicle in the province.

Now, as we move into the new structure, we anticipate that $200 million will come out of the system on the premium side, and of course then that is offset by a balancing on the benefit. Clearly, the cap should deal with the claims and actually be beneficial for people, because part of the process will be to get people into treatment as quickly as possible and try and get them back to a healthy position as quickly as possible without going through a long process of debate between insurance companies and lawyers, et cetera.

We expect that this will be beneficial all the way around for the consumer of automobile insurance and that it will come into effect this summer. To give you an idea of what will be and what is as we go through this, I think you'll see the benefits to Albertans quite clearly.

It has been a very long process, Mr. Speaker, to get to this point of implementation, and we're almost there. I hope that the hon. member will bear with us as we go through these next six weeks of finalizing regulations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Repeat Impaired Driving Offences

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In memory of loved ones lost to drunk drivers, 90 white crosses were carried through the streets of Edmonton yesterday. The 90 crosses represent the number of Albertans killed each year in drunk driving accidents. In some of these incidents the driver had previously had multiple convictions for impaired driving, which proves that more needs to be done to deal with repeat offenders. My question today is to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell the House what his ministry is doing to get these killers off our roads?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue of impaired driving is one that we take very, very seriously. I've had the opportunity to work with the Minister of Transportation and with the Solicitor General with respect to finding better ways to deal with not just traffic safety, not just impaired driving but also with people who have numerous convictions for impaired driving. It's very, very important. As the hon. member has indicated, 90 people each year are killed by impaired driving. It's criminal. It has to be treated as criminal. It may even be worse than some of the other criminal activity which hurts or kills people in our communities, because people ought to feel safe on our streets, and they don't even see it coming.

Our prosecutors have been instructed to monitor those high-profile cases closely. We've appointed a specific prosecutor to monitor the situation and to work with other prosecutors across the province to identify cases where there have been multiple convictions.

If a person has been identified as a chronic drunk driver, we will now be attempting to secure the maximum protection for society by seeking substantial sentences including dangerous offender and long-term offender status. This is important, Mr. Speaker, because long-term and dangerous offender designations carry some of the most severe consequences in the Criminal Code. These designations will help us to take people out of the community who are not learning their lessons about the safety of the community.

It's important to understand that applications for long-term and dangerous offender status can only be used in the most serious of cases. It would involve a repeat impaired driver who's been convicted of an offence that has caused death or bodily harm and where it's been established that the communities would not otherwise be adequately protected from the offender.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Pham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the minister's answer, do we have to wait until somebody is hurt or injured or killed before we can take action against these people?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the long-term offender or dangerous offender status, there does have to be a conviction for a crime which involves a serious injury or death, so impaired driving causing death or impaired driving causing serious injury. However, it doesn't stop there. We will be toughening up on all repeat drunk driving offences, such as seeking more serious penalties for repeat drunken drivers, even those who do not fit the criteria for long-term or dangerous offender status.

We'll be working with police services to identify and effectively prosecute chronic drunk drivers and make sure that those prosecutions are better co-ordinated, emphasizing in court the section of the Criminal Code that requires a sentencing judge to consider severe alcohol impairment as an aggravating factor in sentencing.

We'll be continuing, Mr. Speaker, with the efforts that we have taken – Alberta has taken a leadership position in conjunction with British Columbia, Manitoba, Ontario, Nova Scotia, and more provinces are getting on board all the time – to have the Criminal Code sections with respect to conditional sentences changed so that conditional sentences cannot be used in areas of serious and violent crime, including impaired driving causing death and serious injury.

Midwifery Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Midwives could help ease the pressure of physician shortages caused for a number of communities that don't have a practising obstetrician. This government's failure to pay midwives to deliver babies is forcing midwives to return to nursing or leave the province. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. In recognition of International Midwives Day could the minister explain why this government won't publicly fund midwifery, as some other provinces already do?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it's true that midwives can provide an important service. Regrettably, there are not that many of them. There are on my last count I believe 17 midwives in the province. There are a number of them that are working within regional health authorities, that are working in collaboration and co-operation with physicians.

We recognize that midwives are competent to deal with low-risk births and that it makes some sense to involve them. We think, Mr. Speaker, that through our local primary care initiatives, where physicians are provided certain amounts of money to hire other health care professionals to work within a local primary care team, there may be an opportunity for midwives and other health professionals to be practising much more within the scope of their practice.

We have not yet seen any of the LPCIs come forward – it would be premature to expect them to – but over time, Mr. Speaker, I think that midwives, like many other health professionals, will be able to demonstrate the value of what they can provide to a multidisciplinary team in providing primary health care, including matters related to the competencies that exist within the profession of being a midwife.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. To the same minister: why must midwives pay the first $5,000 of their liability insurance before the government steps in while physicians must only pay the first $1,000?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I can correct myself at some later juncture if I'm incorrect, but to the best of my recollection we cover approximately $10,000, in round numbers, per midwife for their professional liability insurance. I think that that is a significant contribution on the part of the provincial government.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: well, given that 10 years ago we had 150 midwives – now we're down to 17 – the government has had a working group on funding midwives, which reported a year ago, and there have been numerous pilot projects that have and continue to be run, why does the government continue to delay, deny, and defer? What's the problem?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I refer the hon. member to review the Blues of my first response to her initial question, and that is that we are providing an opportunity for all health professionals to work to the much fuller scope of their practices and their competencies. We recognize what competencies are within the profession of midwifery, and we think that through our local primary care initiatives there will be opportunities for midwives to practise in that area if that's what they choose.

Crossborder Sale of Prescription Drugs

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents and friends are increasingly concerned about crossborder Internet sales of Canadian drug supplies to the United States. A research organization, the Pharmacy Alliance for Canadians, estimates that Alberta is leading Canada with the highest growth rate, 216 per cent, of Internet sales of pharmaceutical products to Americans. The Alliance represents local companies such as Canada Safeway, Shoppers Drug Mart, and London Drugs. They say that the increase in crossborder pharmacy sales is already causing prescription drug shortages at the pharmacy level in some provinces such as Manitoba, where crossborder drug sales first began. In fact, 79 per cent of pharmacists there report drug shortages. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Are crossborder drug sales affecting the supply of prescription drugs in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sir, the sale of prescription drugs by Canadian distance pharmacies to American consumers has been occurring for some time. By last count I've been advised that there are some 100 such distance pharmacies operating within Canada that quite likely are selling pharmaceuticals to American customers. The largest number of such distance pharmacies, I'm advised, are in the province of Manitoba.

While the Pharmacy Alliance for Canadians does report that some drugs are in short supply, we do not have any information to support that claim here in the province of Alberta. We are continuing to monitor it, Mr. Speaker. My department informs me, again, that there's no evidence that crossborder sales of prescription drugs are resulting in a shortage of such drugs being available to Albertans, nor is there any evidence to suggest that prices are increasing as a result of this activity going on.

Ms Kryczka: My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Given that the alliance does believe that recent prescription drug prices are directly due to the rising crossborder drug business, does the minister have a plan to protect Albertans from prescription drug shortages and drug price inflation?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that there has been a recognition of this issue not only by the Department of Health and Wellness here in the province of Alberta but really across Canada. I think it would be important to recognize that even if an individual province within this country were to take action against distance pharmacies or Internet drug sales, as they're sometimes referred to, really all that would do would be to move the industry to another province.

Last December, I can advise this House, all provincial and territorial deputy ministers of health identified Internet pharmacy sales as a potential issue. This province is participating in a Canada-wide review to assess the scope and impact of distance pharmacy or Internet pharmacy sales on public health drug supplies. We'll continue to work provincially with our own Alberta College of Pharmacists and other stakeholders to monitor this issue.

We will take whatever steps are necessary in the event that there is a legitimate issue as alleged by the Pharmacy Alliance, but again, Mr. Speaker, there is no such evidence available at this time.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The president of the students' union at the University of Alberta has taken issue . . . [A loud thumping sound was heard]

Dr. Taylor: I can hear your heart, Don.

Dr. Massey: At least I have one.

The Speaker: Hon. member, there seems to be something malfunctioning with the system that we have.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The president of the students' union at the University of Alberta has taken issue with the answers given in this House by the Minister of Learning with respect to tuition. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why did the minister characterize the CPI plus 2 per cent tuition solution as the students' choice when what they really wanted was a tuition freeze?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the CPI plus 2 came in at discussions with the students' unions. It was suggested and recommended by one of the presidents of a students' union in Alberta. It was not the students' union from the U of A.

Dr. Massey: To the same minister: why did the minister tell the House that "student debt in Alberta has consistently gone down" when student debt has increased substantially during the 1990s?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, student debt has been going down. What we've seen is that with the increasing amount of student loans, the increasing loan grants that are given to the students presently in Alberta, with the full student loan they will have approximately $5,000 to pay back on a loan limit of $11,600.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why does the minister persist in the myth that there's a 30 per cent cap on tuition when as soon as an institution hits the 30 per cent, that cap disappears?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, in Alberta right now the main universities are sitting at – approximately 24 to 25 per cent of the expenses is now tuition. They have the ability to go to 30 per cent. They raise their tuition by approximately $275 to $280 per year in a prescribed formula that is included in the legislation. Once they reach 30 per cent, the increase to tuition is not as much as it is now.

We currently have approximately three or four institutions around the province who have hit 30 per cent, and the reason they have hit 30 per cent, Mr. Speaker, is because they have decreased expenses. It's very simple. It's a very simple numerator/denominator issue, and the expenses have gone down.

The University of Lethbridge, for example, is sitting at I believe $4,100 for tuition, which is significantly lower than the $4,400 or $4,500 at the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta. Because of the tuition policy they were not allowed to increase their tuition and indeed had to freeze it because of that 30 per cent policy. So what you see, Mr. Speaker, is that despite the fact that they're at 30 per cent, their tuition is still substantially lower than any place else.

The Lethbridge Community College had frozen their tuition for three years, which put their tuition considerably lower than any place else. Why did this occur? This occurred simply because they're being very efficient in what they do. They're lowering their expenses. Their expenses are increasing at a lower rate than any other institution in Alberta. Those are the kinds of practices, Mr. Speaker, that we should encourage, and indeed we do. They still have the ability to increase once they hit 30 per cent. They can go to a cost of living plus 2.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

Direct Energy

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The more the fine print of the ATCO/Direct Energy deal is examined, the motive becomes obvious that this is a bad deal designed to rip off ATCO's 1 million natural gas and electricity customers. Direct Energy isn't even doing its own billing but is contracting these services back to an ATCO subsidiary called ATCO I-Tek. Yet thanks to this government's wrong-headed deregulation policy, Direct Energy gets to pick the pockets of ATCO's gas and electricity customers to the tune of $42 million a year. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. Why are the minister and his toothless Utilities Consumer Advocate failing to protect Albertans by allowing this $42 million a year rip-off of gas and electricity customers?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, this whole issue of the ATCO and Direct sale came up well before the Utilities Consumer Advocate was put in place. The Utilities Consumer Advocate opened up its doors in November of 2003, and over that time we have been dealing with intervention policies with the EUB, which was part of our mandate in the first place. This whole deal with ATCO and Direct came up well before the advocate's office was put in place.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that ATCO I-Tek has announced that it's creating 180 new positions to carry out the Direct Energy contract, why are ATCO's gas and electricity customers being asked to pay for the additional private-sector bureaucracy that's been created as a result of the Direct Energy deal?

Mr. Coutts: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a comment about the role of the advocate. One of his key duties is to provide representation on consumer issues in front of the EUB. The other thing is that the advocate is also there to help consumers help themselves, and the other thing that the advocate does is make sure that if a consumer has difficulty with a company in terms of paying a bill, whether the information that is on the bill is accurate, or correct, or there needs to be an understanding of the information that is on the bill, he will act on behalf of that consumer to make the company's customer service more responsive to the needs of the consumer.

In this particular case, ATCO and Direct have struck an arrangement by which they make sure that their customer service will perform on behalf of the consumers, and if consumers have difficulty understanding that process, they can call the consumer advocate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister take advantage of the opportunity afforded by Direct Energy's appearance before a Tory standing committee meeting this afternoon to ask them some tough questions about why Albertans are $42 million worse off as a result of this obviously flawed deal?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the consumer advocate of this province is a very hard-working, knowledgeable individual who is very dedicated to the job . . . [interjection] Yes, that's right. He is an individual with the utmost integrity, and he does not shirk any of his duties. I am quite upset by the line of questioning. This is twice in this Assembly that the hon. member has called my consumer advocate, my deputy minister, toothless. He is anything but toothless.

He is acting on behalf of consumers of this province in many, many ways, and it's a very, very effective tool for consumers in this province. He attends all of the meetings that he can possibly attend all across this province and in this building, and that deputy minister, consumer advocate, attends those kinds of meetings because those are the stakeholders that he deals with. He takes that responsibility very, very carefully, and he goes to all of the meetings that they go to and works very, very closely with Direct and ATCO as well as all other companies in the province. Our advocate is anything but toothless.

The Minister of Energy may want to add to that.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, it's always a pleasure to rise and correct the third party's errors, and some of those errors are important to correct.

The EUB has ruled categorically that all start-up costs must remain with the shareholder, meaning that these costs cannot be passed on to the electricity and the natural gas consumer. This member knows exactly what the EUB ruled on. He knows that the EUB has said: no recovery of the $90 million. What they have said is that 10 cents a day is added to the natural gas bill so that other call centres' billing operations can be put in place and the way to purchase natural gas in Alberta can lead to further efficiencies and better competition. The electricity customers of ATCO do not pay a nickel more.

In conclusion, had this company not contracted with ATCO, not created these 200 new jobs, he'd have been the first guy to stand up and say: they're off-shoring; they're outsourcing; jobs are leaving Alberta. Jobs are staying in Alberta. You should support this. Come on.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Second-language Instruction

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning has indicated that it will become mandatory for every student in grade 4 through grade 9 in 2005 and 2006 to learn a second language. Many of my constituents have called to express appreciation for such a plan but have serious concerns about the implementation and logistics of such a policy. My first question to the Minister of Learning: where will small rural and remote schools who already have challenges finding and retaining qualified staff such as speech pathologists and math 9 teachers find the resources to set up video conferencing or hire a second-language teacher to deliver such a policy?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, included in the implementation plan for second languages is the whole idea of expanding the number of teachers that have second-language skills. So, first of all, what we have done is we've put in bursaries and scholarships to the universities. I've also included second languages in what are called the KSAs, which list the knowledge, skills, and attributes that students are required to have when they graduate from the universities with a teaching degree.

Directly to answer the hon. member's question, we are looking at ways to ensure that there are video conferencing suites in every school in Alberta. We are very close to putting out RFPs to that effect. We have established standards to ensure that they're there. So, Mr. Speaker, I certainly see the day very soon when there will be video conferencing suites in every school.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question, my first supplemental: how will home-schooled students in rural and remote schools receive such services?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, one of the ways that students have been learning second languages for a long time is over computers. If, for example, the home-schoolers choose to home-school their children, there will be courses that are available over the Internet. Of course, it is going to require that they have a computer though, and that's something that they're going to have to do.

Mr. Griffiths: My final supplemental, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what will be removed from an already full curriculum to make room for this mandatory second-language instruction?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, currently there's about 15 per cent of the curriculum that is not spoken for. There is 85 per cent that has all the social studies, language, mathematics, art, and music, things like that, so there's about 15 per cent open. Our estimates are that second languages will take about 95 hours a year, or roughly 30 minutes a day, so there is the 10 per cent there. There is time available for that.

One of the other areas that we're looking at is the relationship between second languages and English language arts. Certainly, there is a very intimate relationship between learning another language and learning language arts. So we're taking a look at that.

Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, that's one of the reasons why it isn't going in this September. We have the curriculums in place, but there is going to have to be some study, and there is room in the curriculum for this. It's a matter of how we do it and how we do it in the best possible fashion.

Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, in a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate.

Louis and Ruth Maria Adria

Mr. Yankowsky: Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize Louis and Ruth Maria Adria, who established Elder Advocates of Alberta in the early 1990s. A scripture verse that appears on all their letters, posters, and research states: "Rise in the presence of the aged, and honour the face of the old man." Leviticus 19:32. Indeed, this is what Louis and Ruth Maria are doing as they continue to advocate for a very vulnerable segment of our society, the frail elderly.

The Adrias' mission is to bring mercy and compassion to our sick and helpless elderly and bring public awareness to the situation frail elderly sometimes find themselves in. Sometimes they are criticized for the length and extent of their zeal, and sometimes they get into trouble for their tactics, but, Mr. Speaker, they cannot be criticized and indeed should be commended for their heart and their dedication to a cause which is very important. May we all rise in the presence of the aged.

God bless you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Floyd McLennan

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize Mr. Floyd McLennan, who passed away on April 24, 2004. Floyd was the mayor of Grande Cache until his passing, and he was a personal friend of mine for over 20 years. Floyd, a true friend, a true champion of Grande Cache, served as councillor since 1982 and as its mayor since 1990. As mayor Floyd always put the needs of the community ahead of his own, and you could see that by the time and commitment he devoted to the community projects and programs. He was an avid supporter of the Royal Canadian Legion, the Grande Cache Golf and Country Club, and seniors organizations, and he was always willing to participate in various charity fundraisers. He was instrumental in laying the groundwork for the seniors' complex in Grande Cache, which should be starting construction this year.

The town and all who knew Floyd will miss him, his wise counsel, his keen sense of wit. The community and I offer our heartfelt condolences to Gudrun, Stuart, Shauna, Scott, and their families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Edmonton Folk Music Festival

Mr. MacDonald: I rise to recognize the 25th anniversary of the Edmonton Folk Music Festival. The folk festival began in 1980 in Gold Bar park as the vision of Don Whelan. With his vision and the energy of 300 volunteers this event has grown and matured into one of the world's leading folk festivals. The four-day festival now makes its home in Gallagher park. The park is a wonderful outdoor venue, offering a natural amphitheatre in pristine parkland with an outstanding view of the beautiful Edmonton skyline.

Today over 1,800 volunteers work very hard in many capacities to ensure the smooth operation of this vast undertaking. The values of the folk festival include: to provide a quality, diverse music program that is accessible to all, to develop Alberta artists, and to increase the awareness of folk music. Every year this festival showcases some of the world's best musicians, including outstanding Canadian talent. The folk festival offers a mosaic of music delivered in the finest tradition of Celtic, bluegrass, blues, gospel, roots, world beat, and country music for the enjoyment of all.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

International Business Round-table

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday morning in Calgary the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations organized a session where the Alberta government briefed foreign diplomatic corps from all over the world about Alberta. These diplomats were very appreciative and pointed out that Alberta is the only jurisdiction that does such a briefing.

In the afternoon the diplomatic corps were invited to join the Alberta international business round-table discussion. This roundtable was organized by the Ministry of Economic Development, chaired by the Minister of Economic Development and co-chaired by myself and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. To this round-table we invited over 30 immigrants who are in business and have cultural connections in other countries. The idea is to include them and get them involved in international business development for Alberta. New Canadian citizens bring with them valuable hidden assets; that is, their personal connections in other countries. I believe that Alberta needs to capitalize on this networking asset in our global economic development and competition.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

St. Albert Saints Hockey Team

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize all that the St. Albert Saints hockey team did for our community of St. Albert. The owners, organizers, supporters, volunteers, and players themselves have given us entertainment for our sporting fans, economic encouragement for our businesses and service industry, joy to the families who billeted out-of-town players, and, of course, pride and provincial sporting identity for all our citizens.

As the Member of this Legislative Assembly for the constituency of St. Albert I wish to express my personal thanks to our exciting St. Albert Saints and my sorrow in seeing the club leave my community. To the Saints, formerly known as the St. Albert Saints, you have been a great and exciting organization in our community. I wish you well in your new home facility in Spruce Grove. Thanks for the memories.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

May Day

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. May 1 commemorates the historic struggle of working people throughout the world. The holiday began in the 1880s in the United States with the fight for an eight-hour workday. In 1884 the Federation of Organized Trades and Labour Unions passed a resolution stating that eight hours should constitute a legal day's work from and after May 1, 1886. During a strike to achieve this goal, police attacked workers from the McCormick harvester company, killing six. We must recognize and commemorate May Day not only for its historical significance but also as a time to organize around issues of vital importance to working people today.

On May 1 working people and their families marched down Whyte Avenue to celebrate May Day and to kick off the May Week Labour Arts Festival. This festival brings together the labour movement and artists to celebrate the contribution of workers to our economy, culture, and society.

I salute the labour movement in Alberta and its continuing efforts to win a better life for working people.

Irene Besse

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize an outstanding Calgarian for spearheading a major fundraising drive for the Children's hospital in Calgary-Currie. It's just one of dozens of such projects for this incredible lady who has also just finished a $4.6 million project to provide 90 new Steinway pianos to the University of Calgary.

Her name is Irene Besse. She is a household name in Calgary and even internationally, and in fact her name is in many households on pianos purchased from Irene Besse Keyboards, widely recognized as the best equipped, organized, and designed business and performance facility of its kind in North America.

Winner of so many awards I can't even begin to list them all, she's an Alberta woman entrepreneur of the year lifetime achievement award winner, a Pinnacle winner, a woman of vision winner, was featured on the Women's Television Network. It just goes on and on. Sports organist for the Calgary Flames, the Cannons, the Stampeders, first organist in the world to provide live organ music at the Winter Olympics figure skating and hockey, she started the tradition which continues to this day.

I was fortunate, indeed, to work with Irene to bring back the carillon bells in downtown Calgary, Mr. Speaker, so I understand completely why she won the award for best in sheer positive energy at the SabreTEC best in business awards.

Congratulations, Irene, and keep up all that incredible work.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am presenting a petition signed by 120 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "urge the Government of Alberta to return to a regulated electricity system, reduce power bills, and develop a program to assist Albertans in improving energy efficiency."

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development I'd like to table Alberta Beef – Focus on the Future that she referenced in her answer today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got three tablings today. The first one is an ATCO/Direct Energy joint news release dated April 29, 2004, regarding their long-term contract.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter dated April 29, 2004, to the government by Colleen Smith of the triparish peace and justice ministry, written on behalf of over 14,000 parishioners, asking the government of Alberta to increase the minimum wage so that people working on it can make a living wage.

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is another letter, dated April 27, again addressed to the government, by Aline McMillan, chair, social justice ministry of St. Agnes, St. Anthony, and St. Thomas More Roman Catholic churches. This letter is written on behalf of, again, more than 14,000 parishioners who are asking the Premier and the government to recognize the dignity of work and raise the minimum wage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table a copy of the May Week Labour Arts Festival event calendar. From April 28 to May 9 Edmontonians will be taking part in film viewings, poetry readings, and other activities to celebrate the numerous contributions and sacrifices made every day by working people.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from constituent Colleen Babiuk-Ilkiw, outlining her mother's journey in trying to beat cancer, including her battle for a diagnosis and battle for treatment.

The second tabling is from a second constituent, Diane Oxenford, asking why the provincial government is ignoring the original historic site of Rosssdale flats and asking for consideration to improve the entrance to the capital city and the front garden of the Legislature, that being Queen Elizabeth Park Road, Walterdale bridge, the Terrace Building, and the Rosssdale industrial site.

Thank you.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness: pursuant to the Public Health Act, Public Health Appeal Board annual report 2003.

head: Statement by the Speaker

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 29, it's now my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 29, or perhaps earlier, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 40, 41, 42, 44 through 49, 52, 53, 55 through 62, 64, 66, 69 through 83, 88 through 105, 108 through 123, 128, 134 through 143, 146 through 160, 162, 164 through 168, 174 through 180, 183 through 189, 197, and 200 through 205.

[Motion carried]

The Clerk Assistant: Motion for a Return 40, Ms Carlson.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

2:50

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, there seems to be a malfunctioning going on at some of the desks. Would the hon. member mind moving to perhaps the place where the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry is.

Mr. Smith: Come on over. Move to the right. One more.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No, this is far enough right for me. Thanks, fellas.

Business Credit Card Statements for Environment Department

M40. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Environment.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've already indicated previously but I'll indicate it again that there are likely going to be a number of similarly worded motions for returns which at this stage are not required to be accepted, so we will be rejecting them because they have in fact been, for the most part at least, covered by MR 24 as amended, which in fact opened up all of the issues of business credit card statements for the year in question that were issued to deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, and so on within the government of Alberta. So that will affect all ministries, and as such MR 40 is going to be rejected on that basis since it is perfunctory in nature at this stage.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I disagree with the Government House Leader that it is perfunctory at this point. The reason that the opposition submits the same question for a number of different ministries is that history has taught us to do this.

In the past where we asked for aggregate amounts, we would get a response that did not allow us to do accurate comparisons ministry to ministry, for example, because we just weren't given information that allowed us to do that kind of comparison. So history taught us to put in a question for each ministry.

Despite having had Motion for a Return 24 passed, we are not getting the information that we sought. We are missing a level of detail that allows the Official Opposition to be accurate in what it does with that information. I've heard the members of the government complain in the past that, you know, we were unfairly extrapolating, that we were moving the numbers around unfairly, that we weren't giving an accurate portrayal of things, and frankly – what's the computer phrase? – garbage in, garbage out. If we're not given good information to begin with, it's very difficult for us to do a good job coming back out again.

We have requested the information from the Department of Environment because we would like to see that information. There are a couple of problems that we had with Motion for a Return 24, and they carry themselves forward into Motion for a Return 40. That is, we asked for the monthly business credit card statements, actually a copy of the statement. What we're going to be given is a retyping, a statement of credit card expenses, which is a difference.

There's been no explanation that we've received for why that difference is given, why the need to retype what's on those credit card statements. Is there something being omitted there? We don't know that, and that may cause us problems in the future when people say: well, you should have known. Well, how? We weren't given the original documentation, which is what we were seeking here.

The other change that happened here is it doesn't allow us to understand where we didn't get the same information from a department. So, for example, the Department of Environment submits, and they give information into the aggregate for the deputy minister but no assistant deputy ministers. Why? Well, they didn't have credit card expenses. But we're not given that information in the aggregate, so we now will be doing inaccurate comparisons, or we could be put in that position. We're not given the detail when it comes through that tells us that we didn't get exactly the same format, a grid if you will, from all departments.

I would urge, even given Motion for a Return 24, that the members of the House understand the difference in the level of detail that the Official Opposition has asked for and what is now being given in, sort of, much vaguer terms, the information diffused out and the detail removed. I would urge all members of the House to vote in favour of Motion for a Return 40.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened to what the deputy House leader had to say last week about Motion for a Return 24 and all the information that went on and then the subsequent denial of information that we had requested. I specifically wanted the information in detail from the particular departments that I'm asking for, and I am not satisfied that it has been denied.

I also would urge all members to vote for the information requested.

Business Credit Card Statements for Economic Development Department

M41. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister, all assistant deputy ministers, executive directors, directors, branch heads, managers, and unit leaders for the Department of Economic Development.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 41 I'm going to indicate on behalf of the Minister of Economic Development that here again, given the MR 24 amendment, MR 41 now becomes redundant, so we will be rejecting MR 41. But in doing that, as I indicated in the previous discussion on MR 40, which I did on behalf of the hon. Minister of Environment, I want to make a couple of comments just briefly, if I could, to address some of the concerns that have just been expressed.

I believe the Opposition House Leader indicated something about: all they're going to get is a retyped version or whatever. In fact, according to MR 24 as amended, they will be receiving "a statement of all credit card expenses . . . incurred by" and the amendment goes on. So that should provide the information that I hope they are looking for, and it will provide it in a consistent, similar sort of grid basis. At least that's my understanding, and that's what we've asked for to be done.

The only thing wrong with trying to provide copies of the actual credit card statements as requested in the original motions – and there are many of them here – is that, of course, you'd have to provide the credit card numbers and specific names and so on. I think what the members opposite are more interested in are probably the amounts and what the categories are, and that's what MR 24 as amended attempts to incorporate and address.

I hope that that will not lead to any inaccurate conclusions on the part of the opposition as the Opposition House Leader indicated. I hope that it in fact helps out somehow.

On that basis, again, Mr. Speaker, Motion for a Return 41 has its explanation, really, contained in the amendment for Motion for a Return 24. Therefore, I am suggesting on behalf of the Minister of Economic Development that we reject MR 41.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Speaking to MR 41, there are some additional points that I'd like to raise around the reference back to Motion for a Return 24.

The minister and I met and had long discussions, and the result of that was an agreement on one motion for a return, and that was 23. I gave a number of reasons and concerns in that meeting about why we wanted the level of detail that we were asking for.

Here's another example, Mr. Speaker. From the original motion to the amended Motion for a Return 24, it changed "issued to" – credit card statements issued to certain individuals – to "incurred by," and there's a difference there. The difference is that they would only be providing the information from these credit card statements that was incurred by the individual whose name the card was in. So if we had expenses that were incurred by someone else but paid for on that credit card, we would not be getting the information that's there.

I believe that that was the reason for the change in the wording, to make sure that we didn't get that information or that it was excluded from what was being offered to us. That's why I objected to it at the time, and it's why I continue to object to it: because once again we will not understand, where we've been given equivalent information between departments, whether we got every deputy minister, every ADM and we can cross-reference between them. No, we are not able to do that.

In addition, we had asked for monthly credit card statements. We were looking for the tracking around the times of year: were expenditures higher in certain times, lower in certain times, connected to certain events that happened throughout the year, connected to travel, before or after? That was why we were asking for it on a monthly basis. Now, the amended motion is simply giving us a statement of all credit card expenses for the fiscal year. So we've lost that monthly breakdown. We've lost the ability to compare between times of year, between events, that sort of thing. So again there's a level of detail that we have requested that we are not getting, and we also cannot tell who contributed information in what category and who didn't.

Now, I've heard the Deputy Government House Leader say that, well, we're going to get it on a grid. If that's true, then that will be helpful. If we're able to see specifically where we did not get information in a consistent way from every department, then that's helpful to us.

I know as well that particularly on these ones where we were asking for the credit card statements themselves that are government credit card statements, we're not asking for these people's personal credit card statements. Let's be, you know, absolutely careful about that. What we're asking for are those credit cards that are issued to them to be used in the course of their duties as a government employee. So all expenses on there, one presumes, should be incurred as a result of their duties.

I know that there was some concern expressed that, well, they didn't want to be hung out to dry on the famous orange juice problem. My point is that that's the argument for detail, because the confusion around the – whatever it was – $27 glass of orange juice was in fact $27 for three jugs of orange juice. But the second bit of detail didn't come with the first bit of detail, and that's how mistakes are made, Mr. Speaker. That's why we're asking for the level of detail that we're asking for, so that we don't make those kinds of mistakes, so that we don't subject anyone to unnecessary embarrassment or unnecessary scrutiny. The scrutiny that resulted from that orange juice, that $27 orange juice, has lasted for months.

If you want to avoid that kind of scrutiny, give the information, complete details, up front, and there isn't a problem. As soon as people think that there's something being hidden, they're going to start to dig. Right now there's the Sierra Madre waiting over there, and that's why there's been such interest evoked in the community and from Albertans and from the media around these expenses.

So I urge all members to vote in favour of Motion for a Return 41 for the reasons I've stated.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like people to vote in favour of this particular motion. It's for the Department of Economic Development, and that is somewhat distinct from other departments because this is really the marketing arm of the government. The way to benchmark and monitor their success or lack thereof is very much through this kind of expense reporting. For us to get an aggregate as is outlined in Motion for a Return 24 is not nearly as helpful as getting the detail requested in the original motion, particularly for this department.

Once again this is a case of the government having said, "Ask for it this way, and you shall receive," and then finding a way to deny access to the information.

With this particular motion, I would urge all members to vote for it.

[Motion for a Return 41 lost]

Business Credit Card Statements for Sustainable Resource Development Department

M42. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all monthly business credit card statements for the fiscal year 2002-2003 issued to the deputy minister and all assistant deputy ministers for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, with Motion for a Return 42 this one also needs to be rejected because effectively it is covered, for the most part at least, under Motion 24 as amended.

In stating that, I just want to comment briefly with respect to some of the comments we've just heard from members opposite. It's true that the Opposition House Leader and I did meet for about an hour and a half or an hour and 40 minutes a couple of weeks back. I will be making a correction to something I indicated on page 1030 when we get to motions for returns that are affected by the amended Motion 34.

In any event, during that meeting we did have a very frank and very open discussion, and I thought that some progress had been made. I think that I had indicated and I will indicate again that all of these expenses and so on, regardless of whom they are incurred by, are very carefully and thoroughly reviewed not only by internal processes but also by the Auditor General. I always assumed that opposition members were interested in getting their hands on what the actual expenses were in the various areas, and that's what MR 24 as amended should be able to provide.

There may also be other processes and procedures that any member of the House might wish to pursue should they want additional information thereafter. Nonetheless, that is the process, and that process does respect the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, which I know members here are very familiar with.

I should just point out, Mr. Speaker, that in fact government always has the option to accept an MR or to reject an MR or to accept it as amended. In every case those decisions, I know, are arrived at after considerable consideration to try and provide all the information as requested. It's just that from time to time when you see the constant repetition with all 23 or 24 Executive Council departments, you can amalgamate the information in a presentable way that allows whatever we're able to flow out and save the House a considerable amount of time by not having to go through a debate such as we're going through now on each one individually.

That having been said, I'm well aware that the members opposite are not asking for personal, residential if you will, credit cards from the deputy ministers and so on that are cited in this particular MR 42, but the fact is that personal names do appear on these statements and so do personal account numbers on behalf of government. That was the point I was trying to make earlier.

The two final comments I would make are again with respect to the jugs of orange juice. I don't know. I suppose you could be here for a whole year trying to provide all of that level of scrutiny, because you'd be getting into who drank a whole glass and who drank half a glass and how many pots of coffee were ordered. I mean, it just gets a little bit silly after a while, I think people would agree.

The point is to provide as accurate and as comprehensive information as possible, and that's what this amended Motion 24 is going to do. It applies also in this case to Motion for a Return 42. Therefore, there's no need for us to accept 42.

To the final speaker from the opposition: it doesn't matter, hon. member, you know, whether it's Economic Development or any other ministry. We try to apply the same standards right across the board.

So we'll be looking to reject MR 42.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you for the opportunity to join the debate on this. I think that it's important that it be understood that we're not questioning the integrity of employees here. We're not interested in that, and I don't think that it should be cast in that light. We actually did not ask for names. We asked for positions. Since we didn't ask for the names or the credit card numbers, I still don't see why the statements can't be taken, block out the number, block out the name, write on it "deputy minister" or "unit leader" or whatever they are, and provide it. That's what we asked for. It's giving us a level of detail that we think would have been helpful. The government has committed itself to significantly more work than it needed to had it just done what we'd asked for. They're now retyping it.

Secondly, we'd asked for monthly statements; we're getting a statement by the year. Again we lose the opportunity to watch for an ebb and flow of expenses and to connect them to particular events across the year. Once again, it was changed from credit cards "issued to" certain positions to expenses "incurred by" certain positions. Very different from what we're talking about. Again, it excludes expenses that were in fact on a credit card not specifically incurred by the individual whose name it is. So there's missing information there. I think that the argument is that whenever we are spending taxpayers' money, Albertans should be able to review that expenditure of money. We very clearly were looking for personal and travel expenses.

Around what the Deputy Government House Leader calls the constant repetition, the fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that those motions that were put forward were ruled out of order because the government has substantially changed the information that we were looking for. It does not expressly deal with the detail that was requested. Giving general statements in aggregate does not satisfy the intent of the original.

We would have been very happy if the government had given us exactly what we'd asked for. We would have been happy to group all ministries together at that point. But they were not willing to do that, and they altered what we were asking for – and I've given you some detail of how it was altered – and then tried to group it all together. That, in fact, was ruled out of order by Parliamentary Counsel. I mean, to try and put it out there that somehow the opposition was not willing to group these – in fact, we were very willing to group them if we got the information that we requested. We're not willing to wipe these off the books when we didn't get the information that we requested.

When the Deputy Government House Leader is talking about accurate and comprehensive information and isn't that what we want: yes, and we asked for a certain level of detail, and that's what we'll continue to pursue.

So for those reasons among others already stated, I would ask for support for Motion for a Return 42. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Government House Leader talked about constant repetition. Since these motions have been introduced and I've been standing up to ask for the information for the departments that I'm responsible for as the critic, what I have heard is the constant deniability of this government to be open and transparent in any remarkable sense. We have heard constantly the Deputy Government House Leader hiding behind the freedom of information act. That act was never designed to hide behind. It was designed to afford information to the people of the province in terms of how their government was being run and how they were spending their money.

When he talked about these statements coming forward with personal names and personal account numbers, well, really, Mr. Speaker, we know how well their whiteout pen works on anything else that they give us, and we would hope that the smallest amount of work involved in processing this is to white out those personal factors rather than completely aggregate and retype them. How much time is the government wasting by doing that?

I have to say that this is the end of the ministries that I'm asking for how they spent their money. I think that that's a justifiable request. I think that it's one that is laughable in the reasons that we have seen the government come forward with in terms of denying access.

I would ask all members to please support this motion for a return.

East Central Health Authority

M44. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the East Central health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am compelled to reject Motion for a Return 44. The reason is that in the year 2002-2003 we had 17 health regions, not nine. Therefore, I cannot provide the requested information for the restructured East Central health authority for the 2002-2003 fiscal year, nor can I provide information broken down by contractor as requested. The ministry does not require information to be reported by contractor, so these data are not included in the financial statements.

However, Mr. Speaker, this fall after the financial statements for the nine health regions are audited, I will be able to provide the total dollars spent on information technology services by each of these regions.

This will be the basis for my rejection of a number of the motions for returns to follow subsequently, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude the debate?

[Motion for a Return 44 lost]

Acute Care Beds

M45. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of the number of acute care beds per 1,000 people for each regional health authority.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the government is prepared to accept Motion for a Return 45.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude the debate.

Dr. Massey: Yes. I'd like to thank the minister for supplying that information, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 45 carried]

Public Affairs Bureau

M46. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total number of staff in the Public Affairs Bureau broken down by job title, job description, salary, and bonus range for each position.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 46 I would refer members of the House back to MR 34 as amended, wherein the original Motion for a Return 34 cited virtually the same type of information pertaining to salary and bonus ranges and so on specific to the Department of Energy. We thought it would speed the process up here in the House if we were to bring in an amendment to MR 34 and then just reference it as we go through other similarly related motions for returns, such as we're doing starting now with Motion for a Return 46.

In any case, the amended Motion 34 simply opened up the bonus question to apply to employees within the government of Alberta listed by department for the fiscal year in question, and it goes on. So in this case, Mr. Speaker, Motion for a Return 46, again, finds itself redundant in the light and background of amended Motion for a Return 34. Therefore, we can in fact reject Motion for a Return 46 because that information, by and large, will be provided for under MR 34 as amended.

That having been said, I would just like to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that the salary ranges for the Alberta public service are available on the personnel administration office web site, I'm told. The breakdown of performance bonuses, as I indicated, will be provided under the amended Motion for a Return 34 to augment that.

So, on that basis, we're able to reject MR 46, before us now.

3:20

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Speaking to MR 46, I noticed that the Deputy Government House Leader referenced Motion for a Return 34, and during the discussion of Motion for a Return 34 on April 26, as recorded in Hansard on page 1030, I think that the Deputy Government House Leader hornswoogled us, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, he did. He put it out that in fact I had agreed to this amendment, and I most definitely had not.

What we have here are a number of differences in the way the amendment comes out.

Let me start out by saying that, once again, if the government wanted to speed up this process, they could have done it like the autobahn if they had been willing to provide the information that was requested without amending it and diffusing the information that was being provided and then trying to have all similar motions grouped together. If they had been willing to provide the information, we would have happily grouped things, and we would have been out of here weeks ago.

But the government's insistence on changing the information that's being given and controlling the information and, as I have shown already, Mr. Speaker, diluting the information being provided and in some cases completely cutting out information that has been requested has now resulted in the process before us. So, as usual, complete control in the hands of the government, and this is the way they have chosen to go at this.

What are the changes that are problematic in Motion for a Return 34 which end up being reflected in Motion for a Return 46? Well, first of all, we asked for the amount of each bonus, not an aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to all employees. We asked for the amount of each bonus, and we asked for it for senior officials, for each position, not all employees in a department. Again, I'll point out that we're not asking for people's names. We don't want that. We're not interested in people's names; we're interested in the position. Staff change; people come and go. We're interested in what the position is being offered a bonus for.

Now, another thing was changed here. We were asking for the position and the amount paid to each official and the number of employees who received a bonus within that range. What we get is a range of bonus dollar amounts. Well, that's not the exact amount. That's certainly not what we asked for. So what we're likely to get from this is rather than a listing of all of the senior officials and the bonuses that were given to them in a given year is a range which says, "Well, between" – and I'm guessing here – "$8,000 and $15,000 in this fiscal year." And how many people got it? Three hundred. Well, that gives us very little useful information. The level of detail that we were seeking has simply been erased from our request here.

It does not clarify. It in fact creates confusion. I'm beginning to think that the government is deliberately creating this confusion. Over and over and over again the same arguments are presented which diffuse the amount of information that is being provided to the opposition and to all Albertans.

So I think that having that clarified, all members of the Assembly would want to support MR 46, particularly because it's around the Public Affairs Bureau, which is of intense interest to many Albertans these days, and support the information requested under MR 46.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to close the debate.

Dr. Massey: Yes. I think it's abundantly clear, Mr. Speaker, that what is being done is that the information that's being requested is being masked, and it really is going to be produced in a form that is of little use, and I think that that's unfortunate.

Thank you.

Aspen Regional Health Authority

M47. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Aspen regional health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am compelled to reject this motion for a return, being Motion 47, for the same reasons outlined earlier in responding to Motion for a Return 44.

[Motion for a Return 47 lost]

Capital Health Authority

M48. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Capital health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to Motion for a Return 48 I am again forced to reject this motion for the same reasons outlined in my response to Motion for a Return 44.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I'd just like to argue with the minister a bit there because my understanding is that there were no changes in the Capital health authority, and the earlier reasoning that the minister gave for not providing the information was that he'd not collected it in the form in which we were asking for it. He was saying that we were now down to nine and that we were asking for the old version of 17 or whichever way round that goes. My understanding is that there were no changes to the boundaries of the Capital health authority, so that should not stand.

I would argue that this motion for a return should in fact be accepted, particularly in light of the minister's argument, which in fact supports the acceptance of this motion for a return.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there in fact were changes to . . .

The Speaker: I think, hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, that I was out of order there. I should have recognized the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Did you rise too?

Mr. Hancock: Not if he's going to be able to rise. I just thought that he couldn't.

The Speaker: No, he's unfortunately not able to rise.

Mr. Hancock: The only reason I was rising, Mr. Speaker, was because I thought that the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness was not able to any longer.

I was going to make the same point, that there were significant changes to the boundaries of the Capital health authority, including moving all of the area west of the city including Stony Plain and other areas into the Capital health authority. So the same reasons that were given by the minister earlier are still extant with respect to this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods? Okay.

Anglo-Canadian Clinics

M49. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing any and all contracts and memoranda of understanding between the Calgary health region and Anglo-Canadian Clinics regarding the transfer of any doctors, nurses, licensed practical nurses, technicians, or any other employees of the Calgary health region to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mar: The government will accept Motion for a Return 49.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Just again to thank the minister for the information. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 49 carried]

3:30

Executive Council IT Contracts

M52. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the current information technology services contract tendering policy and process for the Executive Council.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Motion for a Return 52 I think we need to refer back to Motion for a Return 16 as amended. We'll probably notice there that one specific department had been cited for providing this information. I believe it was the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Motion for a Return 16 was amended to withdraw specific reference to one ministry, and it was amended to open it up to all ministers and departments in the government of Alberta regarding the provision of current information technology services contract tendering policy, process, et cetera.

Motion for a Return 52 can be rejected on the basis that MR 16 as amended will provide precisely the information that's being asked for in MR 52. So MR 52 becomes totally redundant and not necessary since it's accommodated effectively under MR16 as amended.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this may be an example of where other similar ministries could have in fact been grouped in as long as the information is exactly the same. MR 52 reads: "the current information technology services contract tendering policy and process for the Executive Council." MR 16 is: "the current information technology services contract tendering policy and process for ministers and departments in the government of Alberta."

I think, in fact, that if this would have provided each and every ministry, then we probably could've grouped all of these and gone on, in which case I wonder why the minister didn't ask for the grouping, but if it's meant to come out that we would just get one policy for everybody across, then it's not the same thing at all. Otherwise, we certainly would've been willing to consider grouping.

Thanks very much.

Electronic Health Records

M53. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total costs associated with the establishment of electronic health records for each regional health authority broken down by costs associated with implementation, dissemination of information, equipment costs, and conversion of hard-copy records to electronic format.

Ms Blakeman: This is following with a particular theme brought forward by my colleague on a number of occasions. We have a concern that what's happening around access to information and electronic health information records may in fact be walking us into a huge outlay of money. We wish to start examining whether in fact that may be the case, and that's why we've asked for this particular information, and I hope that we're successful in encouraging the minister to provide it.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to vote in support of MR 53. Thank you.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the government will be rejecting Motion for a Return 53. The information requested is not broken down in the manner in which it is requested.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I regret that that's not available in the way that we've asked for it. If this information does come up again or even if it doesn't, perhaps the minister would be so kind as to provide us with some helpful hints on how the information is available so that we could request it in the proper format the next time out.

Thank you.

Palliser Regional Health Authority IT Contracts

M55. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Palliser health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government will be rejecting Motion for a Return 55 for the same reasons set out in my response to Motion for a Return 44.

[Motion for a Return 55 lost]

Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development IT Contracts

M56. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. The motion before us, MR 56, is again one where we can refer back to a previously amended motion, and that would be Motion for a Return 10, which, in fact, when it was debated – and as I recall, it was quite a lengthy debate. It was determined then that the intent of the motion here before us today was actually reflected back when Motion for a Return 10 was discussed.

Motion for a Return 10, incidentally, dealt specifically with one ministry only – as I recall, it was the Ministry of Health and Wellness – where specific information was requested regarding contracts for information technology services, and the provision of a listing of vendors was also requested for a specific fiscal year. Here before us is Motion for a Return 56, and it does exactly the same thing except that in this case it refers to the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

So what we did when we accepted Motion for a Return 10 is we simply withdrew the reference to one specific ministry, and we reworded MR 10 to the following.

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the government of Alberta on contracts for information technology services and a listing of vendors providing these services for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, Motion for a Return 56 can and should fall away because effectively it is covered by Motion for a Return 10 as amended, which will provide all the information about contracts for IT services as well as a list of the vendors who provided them for the year in question. As such, Motion for a Return 56 is redundant and not necessary, and the government is prepared to reject MR 56 on that basis.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I very much disagree with the Deputy Government House Leader that this motion is redundant and that the intent is reflected here. In fact, it's not reflected here at all, and this, in fact, was the motion upon which all others floundered and foundered, depending on whether you're a sailor or not, because the intent of the information was altered so dramatically from what was requested to what's being delivered. So this is not redundant, and the intent has not been addressed.

What we asked for was the total amount of contracts on information technology services broken down by company and the total dollars of the contract. What we get is the total amount spent on the contracts and a listing of vendors. Those two things are so far away from being the same thing that they might as well be summer and winter; they are so far apart.

So this motion is not redundant. Contrary to what the Deputy Government House Leader would like people to believe, it simply is not the case.

Again, the Official Opposition is seeking detail for a reason, so that we can make better decisions and do better work. When the government provides us with information that is vague, it's diffused, it's diluted, it's masked, or it's simply omitted – and we don't know that it was omitted, so we can't do a reasonable comparison – they just cause problems for themselves. They do create things like the $27 glass of orange juice, which none of us want to see and none of us enjoyed.

So if you want to see accurate information, give accurate information, but don't try and diffuse it as in what's being done here with this referral back to Motion for a Return 10. I would urge all members to support . . .

An Hon. Member: What motion are we talking about?

Ms Blakeman: Motion for a Return 56, please. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 56 lost]

Peace Country Health Authority IT Contracts

M57. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Peace Country health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is rejecting Motion for a Return 57 for the reasons outlined in my response to Motion for a Return 44.

[Motion for a Return 57 lost]

Single Trial Court

M58. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all reports or documents dealing with the consultation process with Albertans over the creation of a single trial court.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm proposing to move an amendment to Motion for a Return 58. I believe the amendment has been circulated. That amendment would amend Motion for a Return 58 by adding "public" before "reports" and striking out "documents" and substituting "consultation papers" so that the motion for a return would read as follows.

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all public reports and consultation papers dealing with the consultation process with Albertans over the creation of a single trial court.

Quite frankly, I anticipate the hon. member opposite saying, "By making that amendment, it means that we won't be getting the stuff we want to get" and all that sort of stuff. I don't really care whether they reject the motion or accept the amended motion. I can tell the hon. member that I'm quite happy to give her all the information that I can give her about the consultation process with the single trial court. There is nothing secret about it; it is a public consultation process. But the way the motion is worded in terms of "all reports or documents" might put me into conflict with the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act with respect to the release of certain documents where there might be a privacy concern because it's written by a particular member of the public that hasn't given permission and all those sorts of things.

In proposing the amendment, what I'm trying to do, Mr. Speaker, is to accommodate the desire of the member opposite to have access to all the documents relative to the single trial court consultation. I'm happy to meet with her at any time to talk about one of my favourite topics, to give her whatever information I can give her. In fact, I have some information ready to send to her about the consultation documents, et cetera. It's just that the nature of the wording of the motion for a return that's on the table could put me in a position where I could get into difficulty with the law, and I wouldn't want to do that.

Ms Blakeman: No. I would imagine that as Attorney General you wouldn't want to put yourself in a position of conflict with the law.

It does seem a little odd to be agreeing to give me any public record. Well, yes, because they're public, I could probably get them from somewhere else. But I understand what the minister is saying, and in good faith I'm believing him when he tells me that he's going to give me everything he can possibly give me.

Given his remarks, I would add that if he feels that there's something that given the wording of this particular amendment he can't accommodate that he has available and would be willing to share with me, then would he please indicate that in some form of written communication with me? I will find a way to request it some other way.

I also understand that there is an interim report at this point, which perhaps is not public. Maybe that's one of the documents that I could get access to if it's not already a public document. I believe at this point – and I have no reason to believe otherwise – that the minister is acting in good faith in trying to give me the information that I'm seeking at a level of detail that I'm seeking.

I will support the amendment as proposed by the minister. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 58 as amended carried]

David Thompson Regional Health Authority IT Contracts

M59. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the David Thompson regional health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking to Motion for a Return 59, I am forced to reject this motion for the same reasons outlined earlier in my response to Motion for a Return 44.

[Motion for a Return 59 lost]

Department of Human Resources and Employment IT Contracts

M60. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total amount spent by the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is again another case where one particular ministry is cited. In this case, it's the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment, but in fact the essence of this particular MR does go back to the very first one in the series, so to speak, which was Motion for a Return 10, and that one specifically dealt with the Ministry of Health and Wellness. When we were debating Motion for a Return 10, we did approve an amendment that simply withdrew the reference to one specific ministry and in its place substituted the entire government of Alberta.

Information regarding technology services and a listing of all the vendors and so on will be provided under Motion for a Return 10 as amended. Therefore, Motion for a Return 60 is redundant in that regard. So we are able to reject Motion for a Return 60 on that basis.

Thank you.

3:50 Department of Government Services IT Contracts

M61. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Government Services on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

Dr. Massey: I think it's clear, Mr. Speaker, that the intent is to have information about each of the departments and not have it masked by being amalgamated. So I don't think we can call this redundant with the motion the government has proposed. What they had passed is something quite different from what the Official Opposition has requested.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, here we have one specific ministry being asked to provide information. It's the Ministry of Government Services in this case. The motion before dealt with the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment. We'll go back again to the amendment that was proposed for Motion for a Return 10, which was the Ministry of Health and Wellness, and in fact the bulk of the information, I'm sure, requested here under MR 61 will be provided for and dealt with under the amended Motion for a Return 10. So for the same reasons as I just enunciated regarding MR 60, we are able to reject MR 61 on the same basis.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude debate.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. I think that's unfortunate. The information that we're asking for won't be provided should this motion fail, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 61 lost]

Department of Energy IT Contracts

M62. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Energy on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the motion for a return that's before us now cites one particular ministry – in this case, it's the Ministry of Energy – and it ties back directly to Motion for a Return 10, which as amended will provide the information regarding contracts for information technology services, and it will provide a listing of vendors who provide those services for the year in question.

So on the basis of what I've indicated regarding MR 60 and 61 and now 62 and previously MR 10 as amended, we are able to reject MR 62.

Thank you.

Dr. Massey: Again, that rejection, Mr. Speaker, is denying the opposition the information that we've asked for.

Calgary Regional Health Authority IT Contracts

M64. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Calgary health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm forced to reject Motion for a Return 64 for the reasons outlined in my earlier response to Motion for a Return 44.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude debate.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can understand the reasons the minister has given, that there have been changes in the authorities and in the reporting procedure. I'm not sure that there isn't another way to get that information, but I thank him for his response.

Department of Human Resources and Employment Bonuses

M66. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Human Resources and Employment over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by the position of and amount paid to each official.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, back when we were discussing Motion for a Return 46, I had intended, as I had indicated and telegraphed a little earlier, that I wanted to make a comment regarding the lead, so to speak, motion that had been introduced back on April 26 regarding the issue of bonuses and so on because during the discussion on MR 34, which in a moment I'll tie in with MR 46, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods had in fact gotten up to speak right after me and had indicated that he hadn't "been in contact with the House leader for the opposition" and so on. So he was wondering essentially whether or not the Opposition House Leader had actually agreed to amendment 34. I, in the spirit of the moment, had indicated "agreed with reluctance," and of course that is not the case.

In fact, the agreement that emanated at the end of an hour and forty minute discussion between me and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was really quite specific to certain motions and concerns that were expressed, something between motions 19 and 23. It was on those that she agreed with reluctance to that particular agreement.

But we did talk about a number of other things that we hoped would help speed up the process but at the same time allow for the provision of as much information as possibly could be provided regarding a number of written questions and motions for returns and at the same time would alleviate the House of burdensome paperwork regarding each one and at the same time – I'm talking about the MR amendments or the written question amendments – would also help speed things up so that we could move on to the important private member's bills, which I hope we will be able to do at some point again later today as we have done on two previous Mondays.

So I do apologize to the Member for Edmonton-Centre for that and also to the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. It was not my intention to – I forget the word she used: hornswoggle or something. That was certainly not the case, and I would like to correct the record in that regard.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, Motion 34 as amended certainly does apply here to Motion for a Return 66. I think I have already indicated previously that under MR 34 as amended we will be providing a breakdown regarding bonuses awarded to government employees listed by department for the fiscal year in question and broken down by the range of bonus dollar amounts and so on.

So on that basis, MR 66 can be rejected since MR 34 as amended, I think, captures the spirit of what is being requested.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on Motion for a Return 66.

4:00

Ms Blakeman: We're in an interesting tug-of-war here. The government very much wants to control the information, hold back the information that they're releasing, and of course the opposition is seeking all the information that they can possibly get.

You know, I'm a fan of mysteries, Mr. Speaker, and I'm much reminded of the little Belgian detective with the impressive little grey cells. He always gently explains to people that, you know: you can't withhold the information from me; give me all the information, and I'll sort out the stuff that I don't need from it and be able to take what it is that I'm really seeking. When people try and, for whatever their personal reasons are, hold back the information and only sort of dole out a little bit at a time, that's when great confusion and terrible dramas and heaving bodices and fainting gentlemen and all kinds of things pursue from the mystery.

If I'm allowed to bring that analogy in, Mr. Speaker, I think that part of what we have going here this afternoon is the opposition's seeking of the complete details from which we can then see a story, and we will happily not use the information that is not useful for us. For example, I earlier talked about, you know, we wouldn't be interested in what the actual credit card number is – you're free to block it out or black it out or white it out or whatever colour the government wants to use there – and the personal names. We were interested in the positions and exactly what came out on the statement at that level of detail. That's the position that we're facing again here with 66 and the reference back to the bonuses, which refers back to Motion for a Return 34.

Again, we're asking for: what bonus did each position get? What we're being offered is a range of bonuses, a total amount of bonuses granted by a department, and then the total number of employees that get it. So we're not getting the positions that are getting the bonus. We're not getting the detail of what position got what amount of money and in what department. So once again we can't compare across the board between deputy minister and deputy minister and ADM and ADM and executive director and executive director. We can't.

We've been given information in a way that is deliberately, I'm assuming, being diffused and diluted and masked so that we can't figure that out. That just causes people to go: "Well, then, why? Why are they not giving us the information?" People's minds go: what are they hiding? I encourage the government to help themselves by giving the information, and that would stop the great curiosity about: what's being held back? What's being set aside? Why aren't they willing to give this information?

So I encourage people to vote in favour of Motion for a Return 66. Thank you.

Department of Government Services Bonuses

M69. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total amount of each bonus and aggregate amount of all bonuses awarded to senior officials within the Ministry and Department of Government Services over the 2002-2003 fiscal year broken down by the position of and amount paid to each official.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to address Motion for a Return 69. We will be rejecting this one because the essence of it is contained in Motion for a Return 34 as amended back on April 26.

I just want to make a comment. I know there's been a lot of discussion and comments made regarding: "Why don't you just give us the actual credit card statement and so on? Just block out what you don't want us to have." We've been down this road before, Mr. Speaker. Whenever you try to provide information and you have to block certain things out, you can't win on that one. Then you get accused of blocking stuff out. Members opposite or whoever's asking for that information complain that you're blocking out information without telling them what you're blocking out, so what's the point in providing that stuff if you're going to be blocking it out anyway? It's one of those arguments that you just can't really win no matter what you try to do.

On the basis of the fact that MR 34 as amended will provide information regarding bonuses listed by department for the fiscal year in question, we are able to reject Motion for a Return 69 as being redundant in that regard. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude debate.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find that unfortunate for a couple of reasons. One, I hear comments about: why do you want the information? That quite astounds me. We're the Official Opposition. It's our job to seek information and to monitor government spending, and that's exactly what these motions for returns are about.

As to the level of detail it's no different than what the minister asked for when he was on this side of the House. So I find the arguments that are being used quite astounding. It's unfortunate that this is rejected.

Department of Seniors IT Contracts

M70. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Seniors on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

Ms Blakeman: What we're seeking here is information on a level of detail that tells us: what was the amount of money spent on information technology services? How much was allocated or how much was contracted with for each company? What was the company? How much money did they get? Next company: how much money did they get? At the bottom, the total line, how much money was spent on information technology services for the department?

We would like to be able to look at and compare all of the different ministries because we are beginning to believe that there is an extraordinary amount of money being spent here, and we want to start looking at whether there are comparisons and considerations that we should be making as the Official Opposition.

Anticipating that the minister or the Deputy Government House Leader is going to get up and refer us back to Motion for a Return 10, that in fact is not giving us the information that we're seeking. It's giving different information and, I would argue, probably not in a useful or as useful a format or level of detail, because this is providing a list of the vendor services. Well, you know, how do we tell whether ABC got as much as HYJ or whatever? We can't. We just get a listing of vendors, and then we get a total amount that's been spent on information technology services. They're not linked together in any way, and exactly what we were seeking was that linkage. I hope that the government doesn't do that, but that has been their pattern this far.

So I would encourage all members to accept MR 70 as it appears on the Order Paper. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise here again to point out that in MR 70 we're basically citing one individual ministry, that being the Ministry of Seniors in this case. Earlier and I think earlier this afternoon as well we had indicated in the House that MR 10 as amended withdrew the name of one specific ministry, which at that time was Health and Wellness, and opened it up so that all government of Alberta departments would be covered in the provision of information about contracts on IT services and include the provision of a list of vendors who provided those services for the fiscal year in question. On the basis of previous explanations that I've made that tie back to MR 10 as amended, we are able to reject Motion for a Return 70 since it is already covered for the most part at least under MR 10 as amended. So we can reject Motion for a Return 70 on that basis.

[Motion for a Return 70 lost]

4:10 Department of Justice and Attorney General
IT Contracts

M71. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Justice and Attorney General on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

Ms Blakeman: Now, anticipating what the Deputy Government House Leader is going to say, he's going to be referencing back to Motion for a Return 10. You know what? In having read this again, it's worse than I thought, Mr. Speaker, because what we're getting there is the total dollar amount spent by the government of Alberta. Like, it doesn't even give us the amount by department, which is what the Deputy Government House Leader would like us all to believe, that somehow this is supplying us with the information that we've requested and giving it to us by each department. No, it isn't.

We're going to get two numbers here. One is the total amount spent by the government of Alberta, and the second is a listing of all vendors for every single department, government of Alberta, and, one is presuming, all of their Crown agencies. So this is deliberately giving us obfuscated material so that we can't do any of the work that we're seeking to do and we have no level of detail at all.

You know, I hope that they don't bring forward and refer to that other motion, because it really is absolutely almost the antithesis of what I'm asking for. On one hand, we've got detail; on the other hand, we've got no detail: two documents that we're going to get. I hope that the government will understand that we're seeking that level of detail and not some other totally different information, which is what they seem intent on providing.

It just makes people ask: what are you hiding? That's not a good thing, and I want to help the government out here so that they don't get accused of that. So come on; give us the information. Thanks.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the information regarding contracts for information technology services and a listing of all the vendors who provide it for the year will be forthcoming pursuant to MR 10 as amended. That impacts MR 71, which is before us now, so we can obviously reject MR 71.

I should point out that there are other processes and procedures that can be followed to access information. We've talked at great length about FOIP and how it might apply, but there's also Public Accounts, and there are individual ministry debates that occur. There are various ways that this kind of information can be asked for or requested, and I don't see any reason why some members don't follow that particular route.

In any event, since the essence of MR 71 is already covered off in the amended MR 10, we are able to reject MR 71 on that basis. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to say that the Deputy Government House Leader just makes me so angry when he goes off on that kind of a rant that I have to get up and speak to it. In fact, if we can get the ministers to appear at Public Accounts – and you can only get a small number of them each year, about a third of them – they don't give you the level of detail that you're asking for. We're dealing with the prior year then, not the current year under discussion, so it's old information at that stage. I have never in all my years on Public Accounts, which were numerous, been able to get that level of information from a minister.

If we make a FOIP request, it's either outrightly denied or we get a bunch of white pages without any information on them, or the cost associated with recovering a small amount of information is outrageously expensive. Whenever possible this government has done a superb job of denying us information at every possible opportunity. Repeatedly, when we ask for the information in a FOIP request or when we ask for the information in question period or when we ask for the information in Public Accounts, this government says: "Well, why don't you ask for the information in motions for returns or written questions? That's more properly asked for in that manner."

Well, here we are, Mr. Speaker, and that's why we have literally hundreds of these questions here at this particular time. We listened to this government, and we believed that maybe just once they'd give us the information. But what do we get? The royal runaround one more time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to conclude debate.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you and my thanks to my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie for covering off a number of points that I was going to raise. She's exactly right, and I'll just raise a couple of additional ones in reaction to remarks that the Deputy Government House Leader has made here.

In the Public Accounts Committee, as she noted, we're seeing eight or nine ministers a year, so that means that every three years we would actually see all of them. Of course, you can only question the year that's under consideration, so by the time you get three years later to the minister that you really wanted to ask, you've probably moved out of the year that had the information you wanted. So that's one way that we get stymied.

The other thing is that of course it's an all-party committee, and there's a back and forth between opposition members and government members asking questions. So these days on average there are about five questions that the opposition is getting on the record during the Public Accounts Committee. Well, we've today gone through far more than five, so actually if we were granted the information, we would be getting more information here because we would be processing through it faster. We get about five questions per session with eight or nine ministries in Public Accounts. So you can see that that's not a heck of a lot of information that we're able to get.

The Deputy Government House Leader concluded his remarks by saying: well, you know, this motion has been covered off by Motion for a Return 10. It most certainly has not. They are offering to give us two things: the total dollar amount spent by the government of Alberta, which is not the ministry. That is why we asked for each and every ministry, because in some cases in the past a minister will give us the information and the next one won't, but at least we got some information. What we're getting here is nothing.

We're going to get one aggregate number of the total amount of information technology service contracts for the entire government. It's not broken down by department. It's not giving any additional information or level of detail that we requested. One number. Plus we're getting a list of vendors. Well, those two things are most definitively not what we asked for. For the Deputy Government House Leader to say that this has been covered off is fanciful at best, and I can't think of a word to describe what it is at worst.

I urge all members to support the original motion for a return that I moved.

[Motion for a Return 71 lost]

Department of Gaming IT Contracts

M72. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Gaming on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You know, this is getting very interesting. Here we are as a government trying to give information, and there they are trying to reject what we're prepared to give and then criticize what might be forthcoming before you even know what you're going to get. I just don't understand that. Why don't you wait until you see what you get and then make the criticisms and observations that you might want to make? To me that would make a little more sense. However, let's wait and see what you get. Maybe some of your comments will be valid; I don't know.

What I would like to correct, though, are the comments that the Opposition House Leader made about what I said about the information that would be provided. I think that if you check Hansard, I never said that you would be getting exactly, word for word, what it is that the original thing had intended. I think that I probably said that you'd be getting the essence of the information or you'd be getting stuff that's covered by the spirit of the amendment or words to that effect. So please check that for yourself, hon. Opposition House Leader.

Now, with respect to Motion for a Return 72, which again can be rejected because MR 10 as amended covers the gist of what has been requested, we are going to therefore recommend that it be denied at this point, and I think the arguments have already been made on the record as to why. Again, we're trying to move this process along not only from the point of view of using the House's valuable time as efficiently as possible but also in the spirit of providing as much information as can be provided without violating some of the laws and procedures and, in particular, the FOIP Act, which was passed by this House.

So, on that basis, we're going to recommend rejecting MR 72 since the gist of it is included under MR 10 as amended. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to conclude debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. Well, bitter experience and long history have shown us that we should not be hopeful about waiting to see what we get. That's certainly been the experience here on the opposition side since 1993 in trying to wait for information from the government. So, you know, I take what the Deputy Government House Leader says, but history and experience show exactly the opposite.

I guess if he wanted things to move along, then perhaps if his comments weren't quite so provoking of debate, it might move along a little faster, but when he keeps saying things like "it's been covered off" when it hasn't been, he's going to get comment back. So maybe his colleagues might want to advise him to restrict his comments to things that are a little less incendiary to the members over here.

I hope that members will not take the advice of the Deputy Government House Leader and will in fact vote in support of MR 72. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 72 lost]

Department of Community Development IT Contracts

M73. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Community Development on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Community Development is of course part of government, so it is covered under MR 10 as amended, which talks about having the entire government of Alberta reflected in the information provided. So Community Development will be included there.

On the basis as outlined earlier in this House and earlier today in particular regarding MR 10 as amended, I can tell you that MR 73 can also be rejected since the information requested will ostensibly be provided for through MR 10 as amended.

On that basis, I would recommend that MR 73 be rejected at this time. Thank you.

Horse Racing Industry

M75. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing any and all accounting statements in the possession of the government regarding the use of monies by Horse Racing Alberta collected and distributed for the racing industry renewal in Alberta.

Ms Blakeman: The genesis behind this question was that as we started to look at a comparison, we found that there were different ways of accounting and of explaining expenditures between the department, the horse racing initiative, ARC. In order to get clarification, we're looking for all of these accounting statements so that we can figure out what exactly is going on.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I urge the Assembly to reject this MR. The government's role with regard to horse racing and Horse Racing Alberta is to ensure accountability in relation to the funds received by Horse Racing Alberta through the racing industry renewal initiative. It's up to Horse Racing Alberta to determine how best to spend those monies that they have earned through the initiative, the objectives being the revitalization of the horse racing industry in the province and the continued employment of thousands of Albertans in the agricultural sector.

In the past, annual reports of the Alberta Racing Corporation were tabled in the House to provide Albertans with an account of how that organization spent its funds. This practice continues under the Horse Racing Alberta Act, which requires the annual report of Horse Racing Alberta to be tabled each year.

Mr. Speaker, more detailed accounting information relating to Horse Racing Alberta is in the possession of the Alberta government. However, this information is commercial information of a third party, was provided in confidence to representatives of the government who sit as nonvoting members of the Horse Racing Alberta board of directors, and disclosure of such information could reasonably be expected to be harmful to the competitive or negotiating position of the third party and result in undue financial loss. As such, I'm not at liberty to satisfy the member's request.

If the member opposite would like access to any information that is not reflected in the Horse Racing Alberta annual report, the member may contact Horse Racing Alberta directly or follow the process contained in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Northern Lights Regional Health Authority IT Contracts

M78. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Northern Lights regional health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, government will be rejecting Motion for a Return 78 for the same reasons given earlier for Motion for a Return 44.

[Motion for a Return 78 lost]

Community Development Minister's Travel to India

M79. Ms Blakeman moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all activities, meetings, and events the Minister of Community Development partook in during his trip to India between January 11, 2004, and January 21, 2004, inclusive broken down by his itinerary for each day.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This one refers to the ministry I'm privileged to serve. The dates are not quite correct, but I think I understand what is being requested here, and I have no problem providing that to the best of my ability. I think, in fact, that the hon. member would probably want things from the date that I actually arrived in India, which was January 9, but I won't bother amending it. I'll just provide whatever I can and include the dates that are here.

I'll accept this particular question as it is. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 79 carried]

4:30 Assistance with Utility Bills for Seniors

M80. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total number of seniors who applied to the Ministry and Department of Seniors for financial assistance due to rising utility bills in fiscal year 2002-2003 broken down by how many were given assistance and the range of amounts each received.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to amend this motion to read:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total number of seniors who applied to the Ministry and Department of Seniors for financial assistance due to rising utility bills in 2003 broken down by how many were given assistance and the range of amounts each received.

The reason for the amendment, Mr. Speaker, is simply that the request as it's printed would break it up into two fiscal years, and the actual assistance was given during the calendar year. We'd like to give complete information. That's what the amendment would do.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Edmonton-Centre assures us that this is a good amendment and she's in favour of it, and we appreciate the information being provided.

[Motion for a Return 80 as amended carried]

Government Advertising Budget

M81. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total television, radio, billboard, and print media advertising budget broken down by each advertising campaign for each ministry and the Public Affairs Bureau for fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and 2003-2004.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to respond to MR 81 with an amendment on behalf of the Premier's office. In fact, the amendment I believe was circulated to the Opposition House Leader prior to 11 a.m. on I think it was Monday, April 26. I should probably be going back at least one Monday. Normally it's the day of the debate, but I think we have to go back to April 26. In any case, it's been shared in accordance with the rules.

I'd just like to move an amendment, so MR 81 would read as follows: "That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total advertising costs incurred by government departments broken down by each department for the fiscal years 2001-2002 and 2002-2003."

Just a couple of other quick comments, Mr. Speaker. All that we've done is really just tightened up the wording here a little, but they'll get all the costs that have been incurred broken down by each department as requested. Unfortunately, 2003-2004 figures – I'm not sure, but I don't think they're available yet. I don't think they've all been compiled, which is why '03-04 has been withdrawn. So that's my understanding in any case.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move the acceptance of the amendment as it affects MR 81. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In speaking against the amendment, I think the second provision, (b) striking out "budget, broken down by each advertising campaign for each Ministry and the Public Affairs Bureau," and substituting "costs incurred by Government Departments, broken down by each department," really emasculates the motion. I think it's unfortunate because in judging government policy and the efforts that the government is going to in terms of promoting that policy, (b) really is at the heart of the matter. I think it's very unfortunate that this kind of amendment has been brought forward.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to conclude debate.

Dr. Massey: Well, yes. The information that was asked for, Mr. Speaker, is information that Albertans should expect to have readily available. The very fact that the government spends money on advertising and promoting its policies is I think something that bears closer scrutiny.

I think that there was a time – I remember from being a municipal politician – when spending money in that manner, spending tax dollars in that manner, was certainly frowned upon. There were some huge issues that came before the school board when it would have been nice to go out and try to present one view of the issue to the public. We always resisted that because the appropriateness of spending any money in that way, I think, was questioned.

This government has gone far down the road from even questioning it, and we see a minimum of over $4 million in the budget being spent on advertising campaigns, and that's just the tip of the iceberg. I think that it's unfortunate that the kind of transparency and clarity that the government often touts doesn't seem to extend to their advertising campaigns.

[Motion for a Return 81 as amended carried]

Watershed Stewardship Groups

M82. Mr. Mason moved on behalf of Dr. Pannu that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the Department of Environment's mandate for watershed stewardship groups, WSGs, and any other documents indicating the timeline for establishing WSGs, their terms of reference, criteria for membership, the process of becoming a member, what recruitment efforts will be undertaken, and on what basis funding will be provided to these WSGs.

Mr. Mason: If I may just speak to that, Mr. Speaker. We've asked for this information so that we can better understand the Department of Environment's water for life strategy and how it's going to be working in individual areas and with these groups. We're asking for the timeline for their establishment and terms of reference and how people become members. Who becomes members? As well, the funding. I think that these are all issues of interest to all members of the House, or should be.

I would urge hon. members to support the motion.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that the member is correct. It is the case that this motion for a return does provide for some questions regarding the provision of information that would be of interest to all Albertans. Unfortunately, the motion is just slightly premature, I'm told by the Minister of Environment, hon. member. It's just a little bit premature at this time, so on behalf of the Minister of Environment I'm having to reject it because of that prematurity.

The reason that it's premature is because the Department of Environment has not yet established any of these stewardship groups, but the Minister of Environment did encourage me to indicate to you that, perhaps, if you wouldn't mind asking this question a little later – my understanding is that they won't be done within the next 30 days, so if you could come back with the question a little later or just send him a letter asking for what you're looking for, I'm sure he'll do his best to respond.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to conclude debate.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to renew the question in a month or so if I had any reason to believe I would be here.

Mrs. Nelson: Where are you going?

Mr. Mason: Well, I don't think any of us will be here in a month, Madam Provincial Treasurer, because I think we've only got a couple of weeks to go. So I guess that if the work is not done, it's not done, but perhaps the motion will have the benefit of encouraging the minister in these areas to proceed expeditiously since these are important areas.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 82 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: It's my understanding that another motion is coming forward at this time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Maybe, Mr. Speaker, we'll delay it by a couple more minutes.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

M83. Mr. Mason moved on behalf of Dr. Pannu that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of any documents from the Department of Human Resources and Employment for the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03, and April 1, 2003, to February 24, 2004, indicating the terms of reference for any review of the assured income for the severely handicapped program, the membership of the committee undertaking such a review, and a list of the groups and individuals who were consulted.

Mr. Mason: We are interested in the review that we understand is being undertaken by this ministry, and we are interested, of course, in the assured income support for the severely handicapped. It is a critical issue that the minister has indicated in the past needed to be reviewed.

We would be encouraging all members of the Assembly to vote for this so that we may understand what the terms of reference for this program are and just who is doing it and what the consultation is.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I want to notify the House that we would reject this motion for a return. The reason is that we have not commenced a formal review of the assured income for the severely handicapped program. The AISH Act requires the program to be reviewed every five years, and the next review must commence by September 30 of 2004.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to conclude debate.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would think that the minister needs, I guess, to deal with these questions. I believe that the AISH program cries out for such a review and that when the minister does undertake such a review, the information which we are asking for ought to be part of the initial release of the program.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 83 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise and request unanimous consent to revert to private member's business in the Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 203
Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes
Amendment Act, 2004

The Chair: Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was asked to just comment briefly in committee about some of the amendments which I understand were actually passed, so I won't speak to the amendments themselves but speak to what we now have as the bill. When Bill 203 came forward, it had in it sections relative to the Family Law Act and sections relative to the existing Domestic Relations Act. The purport of the bill is to allow the splitting of Canada pension plan credits, but when drafting the bill, the sections were included with respect to each of those two acts which purported to suggest that an agreement was binding if there was not valuable consideration and would be invalid if it was done by fraud, duress, undue influence, or if one of the parties lacked mental capacity.

Now, the problem with including those items in the bill is that those are already covered by common law. If any of those things exist, the agreement could be voided in any event, but by putting them in the bill, it then raises the question about other agreements in those particular acts. So the Department of Justice lawyers suggested that those amendments were surplusage to the actual intent of the bill and should be removed because by not removing them, we would cause problems with the remaining acts, the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act. That's why I requested that those amendments be brought forward and passed, so that if this bill in fact were passed, it could be proclaimed if necessary and be effective. Otherwise, we would not be wanting to move ahead with proclamation until we changed the rest of the act so that the laws of interpretation wouldn't confuse matters further.

I wanted just to put on the record that the Department of Justice was recommending that if this private bill is passed, it be passed with amendments to take those sections out, as has now been done, and to take those sections out not to decrease the protection of the individual but rather in recognition of the fact that the individuals are already protected and that by putting these sections into the Family Law Act and the Domestic Relations Act, we would actually be perhaps endangering other protections that people already have with respect to other agreements in the act.

I hope that that clarifies the purpose for the amendment and makes it easier for people to support the bill.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

4:50

Ms Kryczka: Yes. My thanks to everyone for their involvement in preparation and debate on discussion of Bill 203. Mr. Chairman, I would now like to close.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak in committee to this bill.

The Chair: Yes.

Ms Carlson: Okay. Thank you for the clarification on that amendment. That helps clarify what we had discussed and debated last week.

I have to say that I'm still not in favour of this bill as it stands for all of the reasons that I outlined last week. I still believe that these are not always fair negotiations that people are involved in when a marriage breaks up and assets are divided and that we need to ensure always that it's the protection of the weakest party in the negotiating that the law sets out, to ensure that they have every right and every facility available to them to protect themselves and their families. I don't believe that this bill does that, Mr. Chairman, so I will not be supporting it.

Ms Kryczka: Question, please.

[The clauses of Bill 203 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 204
Blood Samples Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much. It's an honour to bring into debate in Committee of the Whole Bill 204. I have been actively promoting the concepts proposed by Bill 204 for nearly a year. Since June 2003 I have had the pleasure of meeting dozens of firefighters, police officers, and health professionals to discuss the merits of this bill and areas for improvement. The support for this legislation has been tremendous and unanimous among all affected, Mr. Chairman.

As discussed in second reading, section 4 of Bill 204 creates a framework for the very rare instance when someone refuses to provide a blood sample after exchanging bodily fluids with a health or emergency worker defined in section 4(2)(a). Not providing a blood sample causes significant mental and physical stress for the infected workers. The mental distress extends beyond the infected persons to their family, friends, and co-workers, Mr. Chairman. The physical side effects are due to the noxious drugs that the infected officer must take for months.

The current system fails workers who are exposed to someone's bodily fluids through the course of their duties. I think the vast majority of Albertans, Mr. Chairman, would agree that some mechanism should be in place forcing a person to give a blood sample. The goal of section 4 is to make sure that no one can torment people who work in professions that protect communities and save lives and that health information cannot be used for other purposes at all.

This bill also, Mr. Chairman, will cover good Samaritans who voluntarily expose themselves in saving the lives of others in whatever situation may occur.

There are a number of people who oppose issuing a court order for a blood sample as proposed in section 4(8). The goal is to help emergency workers, as you know, Mr. Chairman, and the bill is written in such a manner that the information cannot and will not be used for any other purposes than that as intended in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, the opposition to this bill has been meek at best. As you may have found through the tablings in the House, the support has been rather vast, and as such I would encourage all members of this Assembly to support this bill and pass it into third reading.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak to this bill at committee, and I have a number of questions. I have taken the opportunity between this time and the time of second reading on the bill, when I spoke against it, to consult with the police association of Alberta and the union representing correctional officers in provincial facilities and have had an opportunity to discuss their concerns with respect to this issue. I think that it's assisted me to have perhaps a more balanced view in connection with that bill.

It's a difficult one. It's a bit of a conundrum, actually, because we have a situation where people's civil liberties are infringed, and that can be done, I think, in a democratic society under very specific circumstances. For me this is not a clear issue. There are a number of aspects to it.

Now, someone who is in a position of believing that they may have received an infection as a result of dealing with another party during perhaps an arrest or moving people around within a correctional facility or calling at a fire or an accident, all those things – there's no doubt in my mind that this creates tremendous strain on the individuals. This is what I heard from talking to the different people while I was consulting on the bill. They told me very clearly that they were aware of concerns that have been raised by others; that is to say that someone might be infectious but not be testing positively to a test. A test might give some false relief. I'm told that these matters are explained carefully to them.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman, that I learned was that sometimes suspects in the case of an arrest will spit on an officer and then use that as a bargaining chip: "I'll give you the information about my status relative to being infected in some way if you are willing to negotiate on the charges," or something like this. This was quite a revelation to me, that this is apparently becoming a fairly common tactic among people who are arrested. That is a very serious concern.

Now, balancing that, Mr. Chairman, are concerns that have been raised with me by other organizations that there may in fact be only particular categories of people who are targeted for this mandatory testing, and those are the poorest sections of society, aboriginal people, and people who may be considered to be what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs described as lifestyle. That is a really serious concern for many in our community, that people who might be gay, people who might be native, people who might be living on the street would be the ones that would be subjected to this kind of situation. So that is a difficulty.

I was pleased to contribute toward the unanimous consent so that this bill could be dealt with. [A cell phone rang] I'm still struggling with the bill and some of the concepts, but I do believe that it was only fair that this bill ought to receive consideration by the Assembly. I'm sure, Mr. Chairman, that by the time third reading comes around, I will have resolved all of the various issues in my own mind. I find it a very difficult bill to deal with because of the very strong conflicting and legitimate concerns on both sides.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

5:00

The Chair: Hon. members, we are not allowed – hon. minister, I think you're included in this – to take or send phone calls in the Chamber.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise this afternoon and continue debate on Bill 204. I think that it is a great bill, and it should be considered very seriously by all members of the Assembly.

Even though the bill is a positive step in the right direction, Mr. Chairman, it does raise a couple of questions. My questions stem from the good Samaritans and their role with confidentiality. If a good Samaritan can request a forced blood sample under section 4(2)(a), how does the rest of the act apply in the area of confidentiality? What I mean is that section 5 states:

Except as expressly authorized by this Act, no person shall disclose to any other person the name of or any other information that will or is likely to identify a person in respect of whom an application, order or physician report is made under this Act.

What I understand with this is that if a good Samaritan – for instance, a regular person who helps out someone in need – requests a blood sample of the person helped, that good Samaritan cannot share this information with anyone.

However, if he or she does, does that mean that that person is subject to the same penalties outlined in section 9 under the title Offence and Penalty? If it is the case that a good Samaritan can be penalized for disclosing information, then I think that this would solve some of the concerns that Albertans may have about giving their blood. I'm not completely sure whether or not section 9 applies to just those who refuse to give blood or if that would also apply to an individual who contravenes section 5.

As well, does section 9 also apply to emergency personnel? If an emergency worker is proven to have disclosed information as it relates to this bill, does that mean that they can be fined upwards of $5,000? I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the answer to the question is yes, because there must be mechanisms in place to ensure that the privacy of individuals is protected as best we can. If a person is asked to give a blood sample, they need to have the peace of mind for themselves that this information will not be going public.

I think that the way we ensure this is by punishing those who do disclose that information. In fact, the argument can and should be made that we consider making the punishment for disclosing the information more severe than refusing to give a blood sample. That might help encourage those who are asked for blood to give without opposition.

I do realize that health care workers, police officers, and other emergency personnel are governed by other legislation, but do those pieces of legislation cover this sort of situation?

Personally, I think that this bill is an extremely good idea, and we should all consider the benefits that it will have for the people of Alberta. Through a lot of the discussions that we've had in second reading, the term good Samaritan has been used a number of times, yet it seems to only be implied in section 4(2)(a)(i). Will this cause us future problems? I don't know, Mr. Chairman. It is for that reason that I raise the hypothetical situation of the good Samaritan helping a fallen soul on the street. I know that when I read the bill, I understand that it would mean those people who stop to help who aren't the trained professionals; i.e., helping a fallen soul in the street. Could the sponsor please clarify this for me and for the House?

I think that this bill has a lot of positive aspects to it, and I would encourage all the members present to consult with their constituents and to support the bill. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As the Member for Edmonton-Highlands indicated, it is a difficult bill not with respect to its intent, certainly. I think that all support the intent of the bill, but for the protection of those workers – peace officers and police officers and firefighters, emergency workers or good Samaritans – there can be no question about wanting to do everything we can to ensure their safety.

The problem comes, of course, with the essence of the bill, and that's the questions that are raised about individual rights and the broader rights of the greater community. I think that it's been indicated in the House that the Privacy Commissioner has indicated that any proposed measure that would infringe on privacy has to meet four tests, and the Privacy Commissioner was very critical of the federal legislation that was proposed in this same area. In his arguments against the federal statute he used the four tests, and I think they're the basis for the questioning that's gone on in the House and elsewhere with respect to Bill 204.

The first test, of course, is necessity. Is the bill really necessary? Does the bill do what it purports to do? The magnitude of the problem has been questioned. I think that the information given was that there have been two probable cases of occupational transmission of HIV in Canada and only one confirmed case and that, in fact, those cases wouldn't have been covered by the bill that's before us. So there's some question about the necessity or, in particular, the nature of the bill that's in front of us, and that's related to effectiveness.

The Privacy Commissioner's second test for a bill such as the one in front of us is: is the bill effective? Of course, the questioning of Bill 204 is the timing that it would take to get an order and carry out testing and then the fact that the results wouldn't be conclusive. The Privacy Commissioner pointed out that a negative result doesn't necessarily mean that the source person isn't infected. That's of great concern, that there is a window of incubation before the virus is detected and, particularly if the object is a knife, that there could be more than one person's blood on the weapon. So is it effective, I guess, is a critical question for the workers that are going to be affected by this legislation. They'll want legislation in place that is truly effective in dealing with the problem that they face.

The third test that the Privacy Commissioner put forward was: how much of an invasion of privacy is this? That's of course an area where the objections to the bill are most strongly voiced. According to the Privacy Commissioner, mandatory blood testing is a massive and unprecedented invasion of privacy. It's that privacy issue, Mr. Chairman, that I think those in government charged with bringing forth legislation have to be keenly aware of and very sensitive to anything that undermines or takes away a person's right to privacy. I think that it has to be embarked on with the most serious of consideration. Again, this does take away the privacy of individuals that are suspected of having contaminated blood.

The fourth test is: are there less invasive alternatives? The case has been made for voluntary consent, and I'm not sure that I agree with that. Given the kind of circumstances that would seem to surround these kinds of incidents, even though the track record has been fairly good in getting voluntary consent, that's of little comfort to those individuals who find themselves in the situations where consent isn't given. So the substitution of voluntary consent I don't believe is a solution to the problem. It has to be considered. As I said, voluntary consent is not something that I think I could endorse.

A bigger issue, of course, is that the tests may not be effective, and that would be tragic if we went to all of the effort of having legislation passed and giving those workers the assurance that somehow or other they're going to be protected, and in fact no protection was there for them. The fact of the matter is that police and emergency workers would still need to take drug cocktails following an incident, whether there was mandatory testing or not, just to prevent HIV or hepatitis because they have reason to believe that a person whose body fluids they have come in contact with is infected. If there's contact, they automatically have to go on the cocktail.

Even if there's a negative result of the test, that doesn't mean that the person that they suspect of having infected them is really free of infection because of the incubation period that those viruses require. So the concern that workers would be protected when in fact they're going to end up having to take . . .

The Chair: Hon. member, under Standing Order 4(2), "if at 5:15 p.m. on Monday, the Assembly is in Committee of the Whole and the business of the committee is not concluded, the committee shall rise and report immediately."

Dr. Massey: I had concluded my remarks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Oh, sorry. Okay.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: There isn't a question. We've already moved one. This one now must report progress.

Are there any further requests to speak on this? Are you ready for the question then?

All right. We have for our consideration Bill 204, Blood Samples Act, as moved . . . The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Yeah. I was going to speak, but I guess it's 5:15 now.

The Chair: When the question has been called, that's the trigger for anybody to get up, but once we're into it, then it's a little late. And we're into it.

[The clauses of Bill 204 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I move that we rise and report bills 203 and 204.

Thank you.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 204. The committee reports the following with some amendments: Bill 203. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Second Reading

Bill 206
Alberta Wheat and Barley
Test Market Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour for me to be able to rise today and speak to Bill 206.

Before I begin my remarks, I'd like to once again acknowledge the Alberta . . . I'm going to move it, Mr. Speaker, I promise, as I get into it here. I would like to acknowledge the Alberta farmers. I've taken on this fight on behalf of them. This has been a burning one for them.

I would like to move second reading, Mr. Speaker, of Bill 206 to get us started.

Mr. Speaker, when you meet face to face with someone who has gone to jail over the most simple of economic rights, the right to sell the product they've created to whomever they choose, you begin to understand just what a commitment many of them have made to this cause. I would say to this province and to this country that my commitment to this cause takes great inspiration from the commitment of the farmers who've gone to jail or who've been fined. It is my hope that this entire Assembly rallies behind this bill in a show of support for our farmers and for their freedom to have a choice.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the farmers who have been penalized, I certainly, again, will move Bill 206 on second reading, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Amendment Act, 2004.

This act, if passed, would do the following. First, it gives our government the ability to set a date. If the federal government and the Canadian Wheat Board have not agreed to set up a 10-year trial market in Alberta for wheat and barley by this date, then our government would have the ability to set up a 10-year trial market with or without the federal government's approval.

What's more, Mr. Speaker, this bill gives our farmers the hope they deserve after carrying on this fight for as long as they have. I think it is important that we go into the history of this bill so that we might be able to get a sense of why we are taking this step today.

In 2002 this House passed Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act. That bill was an olive branch to our federal government. It took the dreams and aspirations of farmers and built them into a goodwill act toward the federal government and the Canadian Wheat Board. The bill was simple. It mandated and showed governmental support for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development as she worked towards providing choice for Alberta's farmers. It did so by using the lesson that many of us learned when we were young: if you want to do something, prove that you can handle the pressure and do it well. That's all the farmers wanted. They wanted the chance to show that they could do just as well on the open market as if they had to sell their wheat and barley to the Canadian Wheat Board.

The members of this Assembly know quite well that our farmers can farm as well as anybody and can make it on their own in the free market. We have faith in them, we have faith in their abilities, and we understand that the free market is the best marketplace for any commodity.

The Canadian Wheat Board, on the other hand, wasn't so sure, so we offered a compromise: allow our farmers to market their grain privately for the next 10 years, and if they aren't succeeding, review the decision after the 10 years. If farmers are doing well, then allow them to continue to market their grain freely and get rid of the Canadian Wheat Board monopoly, but if they choose to use the Wheat Board, use it.

Mr. Speaker, it was my belief when I introduced Bill 207 and when it got passed in the Assembly that finally we were getting somewhere. Unfortunately, I think I was wrong. The federal government has not responded to anything around Bill 207. They have not respected the wishes of Alberta wheat and barley farmers.

Sixty-eight per cent of barley farmers wanted the option of selling their product on the open market. Sixty-four per cent of wheat growers in Alberta wanted the option of selling their wheat on the open market. These were studies done in '95 and '97. More recently we have 81 per cent of Alberta farmers and 75 per cent of farmers across the prairies simply wanting a choice. Didn't say: get rid of the Wheat Board. Simply want a choice. They want the option, Mr. Speaker, but apparently the Wheat Board doesn't think that they're capable of handling it.

As I said at the outset, Bill 206 gives this government the opportunity to set a date by which we will establish a wheat and barley test market on our own should the federal government refuse to negotiate in good faith. Bill 206 also gives the government the ability to make regulations for the selling of wheat to whomever a farmer chooses. Mr. Speaker, I believe having the choice of whoever they want to sell to is really what the farmers are looking for.

I know this is a controversial bill. Some are going to argue against this bill. They'll raise concerns that it is unconstitutional, which I disagree with, and that the federal government has the right to control our wheat and barley farmers. This group has the federal government on their side, and this group may be right, but it's time we took up this fight, Mr. Speaker.

We've constantly been forced to fight the federal government, and our farmers have always had to go to the courts alone only to be turned down. But I believe a government-to-government fight is what we need to get to to make sure that we know where this stands in Confederation. When you look back to the BNA Act, no government signed on to the Wheat Board as the sole marketer. We have at least 50 per cent of the right to be able to market our agricultural products any way we choose or allow our farmers to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's time that we created a law and forced the federal government to fight us. Let's see what they've got. Let's see if they, by the end of a court fight, feel the same way as they do today or if it's been opening up enough that there's actually a push across Canada to allow for an open-ended choice in marketing.

Others will argue, as the opposition party and third party have, that the Canadian Wheat Board does a good job on marketing from a single desk so we should leave things as they are. Mr. Speaker, that's just simply not true. There is about 25 per cent of wheat and barley farmers who are onside, and I do acknowledge that. But when you compare the prices, whenever we've had a chance, farmers have never even come close to getting the prices that they were able to.

When the farmers crossed the border a few years ago and then were arrested accordingly, what happened was that they were getting 50 per cent more on the American side of the border than they could get from the Wheat Board on the Canadian side of the border on that particular day. A 50 per cent commission, Mr. Speaker, is completely out of line. If that's administration and fees, it's ridiculous. For any broker in the brokerage industry the 3 per cent range is a good commission, 1 per cent if it's a big order. If they're taking that kind of money, there's no way the farmers could ever be getting the proper price for their grains when they sold them.

I'd certainly put forward some questions to our opposition in regard to this. Why are they opposed to marketing choice? What have you got against allowing the farmer to go alone if he wants to? Are you concerned for the farmer? The farmer wants a choice. He doesn't want to be told how to market his wheat or barley.

Are you concerned about the well-being of other farmers whose price may fall due to the competition? Well, the free market has worked extremely well in oats and canola and other non-board grains. We've seen very, very great success for our farmers in those areas, and many farmers have been moving away from the board grains because they can make more money by being in the other grains.

Those farmers who argue against free marketing must remember that nobody is taking away the Wheat Board. It will be there for the farmers who feel confident in using it, and this government has no designs on getting rid of it. We are cognizant of the fact that many Albertans use and enjoy the services, and we are not aiming to take those services away.

Mr. Speaker, I don't ever want to see the day when this government is forced to set a date for the establishment of this trial market. I want to see the day when the Canadian Wheat Board, or at least the federal government, agreeably relinquishes the monopoly and allows us to do this. I want to see a day when the federal government and the provincial government work together to create the 10-year test market. Then I want to see the day when our farmers show the politicians in Ottawa and the Canadian Wheat Board just how successful they will be when allowed to market their own grains.

I urge all members to support this legislation. Let's show the Canadian Wheat Board and the federal government that we stand behind our farmers here in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I'd like to adjourn debate on this bill at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and that we adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening.

Legal Drinking Age

508. Mr. McFarland moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to raise the legal drinking age in Alberta to 19, as is the current requirement in the neighbouring provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise in the Assembly tonight and to begin discussion and debate on Motion 508 and the potential increase of Alberta's legal drinking age to 19 years of age.

Before I begin, Mr. Speaker, I did want to acknowledge that earlier this evening I did have the opportunity to speak with many of the young students from the Forum for Young Albertans who are up behind us in the members' gallery. One of the things that they asked was how MLAs responded to constituents' concerns, how they brought them forward, and I tried to indicate to them that this is one of the methods that we use to reflect constituents' wishes.

The other thing that they asked was how useful things like surveys were. I said, Mr. Speaker, that although surveys are useful, in some areas they're not useful at all, and sometimes just by experience you can tell what the reception is to a certain idea. I told them that tonight's speech might be a little bit short simply because I could tell from the reception that I got from the youth that they weren't exactly enamoured with the potential of raising the drinking age. However, I'll do my best. I do have to say that the folks that you're looking at over my shoulder here are probably some of the most responsible youth and probably not the ones that we have to worry about.

I'm getting off my speech, but maybe that's the best way to do it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hlady: Just go from the heart.

Mr. McFarland: It is from the heart.

You know, maybe you and I and some of the students in the gallery have known somebody who's been the victim of a horrible accident. When a person's gone out that night to have a little bit of fun and maybe have a beer or two with a friend, they don't really expect that anything is going to happen except that they will arrive back home safe and sound. How many of them, including myself, are aware of kids in that very same circumstance who might have gone out to an otherwise innocent party knowing that they were going to come home and one thing led to another, somebody that was under the influence happened to get behind the wheel or in the worst case the responsible four or five in a vehicle were going home with a designated driver and were hit by somebody who was totally impaired and didn't have the responsibility that many of our young people today exercise?

Mr. Speaker, I proposed this idea as a private member's bill in 1999, and I continue to feel very strongly about this initiative and believe that it's a measure that we need now more than ever. The overriding objective of this motion is to reduce the negative impacts of alcohol on Alberta's youth. Motion 508 has a crucial role in achieving a safe and more responsible use of alcohol.

I would like to shift my focus and speak briefly about a news article that appeared in the paper over a month ago. This article expressed that Albertans outpace most provinces in drinking as well as driving while drunk. This news story was reporting the findings of a study conducted by the Canadian Journal of Public Health.

The results of the research indicated that Alberta outdrank all of the other provinces in 2000. I can see a couple of grins from a few of the colleagues, but when you consider that the average Albertan was consuming 8.8 litres of alcohol – and that includes every Albertan – it's an amazing statistic, Mr. Speaker. The only territory that outdrank Alberta, so to speak, was the Yukon, and I find this very unsettling. The increasing alcohol consumption rates are alarming, and they'll have an impact on all Albertans.

In this province we promote the ideal of wellness and healthy living. We talk and express concern about FAS, the effects on young women who are pregnant who consume alcohol and the horrible costs . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we have a lot of young visitors, and I think the noise level is fairly high. The hon. Member for Little Bow has the floor, and I hope we can accord him the courtesy to at least listen to what he has to say.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, I believe alcohol is the one area where we've kind of fallen down. We talk about FAS, we try to curb smoking, we try to get in everyone's face at every turn of the road, but the one thing that we don't seem to want to address, maybe more for political and voting reasons than any, is the alarming rate of statistics that involve our youth in alcohol-related motor vehicle accidents.

The Alberta Medical Association and the Alberta Motor Association endorsed raising the drinking age one year when I proposed this in '99. I believe they still raise it as a substantial issue. I have to be totally honest. Although one of the highest numbers of alcohol-related motor vehicle accidents does occur during the ages of 18 to 21, the other significant number is 21 to 24 years of age. I know that those that don't agree with this motion will simply point to that statistic, but I'm ahead of you. I'm aware of that. I will throw this back at the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, that when you combine a relatively young driver who may have had at best two years' driving experience along with an alcohol component in their body, it's a recipe for an accident.

I can't understand, Mr. Speaker, that when our provinces to the east and to the west of us are already at 19, Alberta, Manitoba, and Quebec are the only provinces in Canada, including the territories, who are not at least at 19. It would only make sense to me to standardize it when we look at the overall effects that alcohol can have on a family.

You know, there was a time when a young girl in a community that I'm very familiar with – the kids at that time would go out to the bush, and they would have a party on Wednesday night, and they would kind of plan a party for the Friday or Saturday that followed. Well, unfortunately, one night this young gal had gone out with her boyfriend. Over the course of the night it was decided that she should get back home. On the way back home two of her school classmates met them on a hill, and the classmates coming back with more liquor for the party were the only survivors. The sad part was that when the RCMP knocked on this young gal's mother and dad's door to ask if, in fact, they had this person in their house, the mother responded: yes, she's asleep in bed. Well, she wasn't, Mr. Speaker. She had snuck out.

You know, those kinds of things will happen. It's a horrible thing to inflict on any family, but at the same time, Mr. Speaker, had this life been saved with this proposed amendment, just the one life, it would've been worth it. As it is, it happens too often. Sometimes it happens every week.

Mr. Speaker, I'll go back to the comment that I made earlier. If we would only sit back and look at the measures that we seem to get in front of everyone in Alberta on a yearly basis, again whether it's FAS, making people aware of the things that are not in their best interest – we're trying to do things that make Alberta a better place – I believe you might see the merit in this motion.

With that said, Mr. Speaker, I want to again congratulate the young people that are here tonight. I did appreciate their comments. I would recognize the young gal from Austria who's here on a student exchange. She asked me if I knew what the age limit was in some of the other countries, and although I couldn't tell her that this country was 16 or that one was 17, she did tell me that in her home country of Austria they can drink when they're 16. I don't really have an answer for that except to say that this is Canada. We've always done things a little bit differently. In Alberta we do things quite a bit differently.

I would ask for the concurrence of this Assembly to support the motion. This is not a private member's bill for those in the audience. It's a motion just urging the government to consider raising the legal drinking age to 19.

Thank you.

8:10

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with interest that I rise to participate in the discussion around Motion 508 to raise the legal drinking age in this province from 18 to 19 years. Certainly, there are compelling reasons why we need to have this discussion in this Assembly. As a parent of three children who are constantly being influenced by marketers, this is a very interesting motion.

Along with a discussion on raising the legal drinking age in this province, perhaps it's also time that we have a discussion or a debate on curtailing some of the marketing that goes out to young people and how young people and alcohol relate. I certainly would want us to look at some of the ad campaigns that are bombarding some of our postsecondary institutions and some of our technical schools. If one were to believe those ads, you can't have fun unless you drink. I think that is unfortunate, and I think we are doing the young people of this province a disservice when we neglect to discuss this. Advertising can have an enormous influence on young people. As a matter of fact, it can have an enormous influence on anyone, but the idea that you can't have fun without a beer or a cooler is not something that we should promote, Mr. Speaker.

When we consider looking at raising the drinking age from 18 to 19, I would urge all members to just reflect on the implications of an advertising campaign. Let's say that a beer company, for instance, hosts an event at NAIT, or we could pick the university during frosh week or orientation week. We're trying to build at that age a brand loyalty, and we're doing that by associating drinking with fun. If one is to visit, like the hon. Member for Little Bow has suggested, the hospital where there have been some young people involved in a traffic fatality or to visit a police station where the police have just come back from a call in the middle of the night where, unfortunately, someone has been in a serious accident as the result of alcohol consumption, it is a sobering reminder, so to speak, to all of us of our activities surrounding young people and drinking.

Even before people are of the legal age, there is a pressure. There's peer pressure, and also there is in my view pressure from the advertisers to start drinking. This is a consumer that has to be, so to speak, Mr. Speaker, captured and programmed to be satisfied with one brand or another or one product.

I was looking before I had my opportunity to speak at the number of coolers that are sold in this province. It's quite significant. That's another brand of alcohol, if I could use that term, that is targeted, in my view, at young people.

It was, I believe, last week in Public Accounts where in the Gaming minister's annual report from 2003 there was a list of beverages and the government revenue as a result of those. I could be mistaken on this, but I believe, for whatever reason, it was in Gaming estimates in the annual report. I was shocked to see that in some of the categories there was a slight decrease in total volume sales but not in coolers.

So that would be another reason to have a good debate on increasing the minimum legal drinking age in this province. We are one of the few Canadian provinces – there are others who use 19 as their age of permission, but here it is 18. Certainly, the hon. member is correct. If you look at Austria, 16 is the minimum drinking age, and that's probably the lowest. Egypt is 21. Belgium, again, is 15. But in Alberta, Manitoba, and Quebec it is 18. All other provinces are 19.

There are many people, Mr. Speaker, who would like to get some remarks on the record in regard to this very important motion, and I would cede the floor to another member of this Assembly. I would be interested to hear what they think of this motion.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming. [some applause]

Mr. Stevens: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker and fans. First of all, I'd like to commend the Member for Little Bow for bringing forward this motion. As he indicated in his preliminary comments, he brought a private member's bill in '99, I believe, so this is a matter that is of concern to him and of concern to some of his constituents.

As the Minister of Gaming it's my pleasure to respond. However, I must say that I will be speaking against Motion 508, which proposes to raise the legal drinking age to 19 years. To explain why, I'd like to introduce to you two hypothetical Albertans whose experience reflect the typical youth in Alberta: Bill and Sharon. Bill and Sharon are two young adults who turn 18 in May 2003. They were high school sweethearts, and they got married last year right after they graduated. In August Bill and Sharon announced that they were expecting their first child. A month later, in September, Sharon started school at the University of Calgary. At this time Bill decided to enlist in the armed forces, and they bought their first house in December.

I would like to ask all the members here a rhetorical question. Are Bill and Sharon responsible enough to drink? Of course they are. They are hard-working, taxpaying Albertans that have as many rights as 19 year olds. Most of Alberta's young people are responsible people who make responsible choices every day. As the argument as old as time goes: how can we deny an adult, who is by every other right an adult, the privilege to make the choice whether or not to drink?

Mr. Speaker, there's much evidence to support my position. First of all, I'd like to say that the drinking age in this province has been 18 years since 1971, and as such anybody who has been born in this province since 1952 has been raised in a jurisdiction where the drinking age has been 18 years.

In the fall of 2003 AADAC released a report that took a look at the drinking activities of youths in grades 7 to 12. The Alberta youth experience survey was a major study of youth in Alberta's schools. The information in this study is valuable as it allows us to compare the experiences of our youth to youth throughout North America.

The survey shows that adolescent alcohol use in Alberta is 56 per cent. This trend is prevalent across a number of provinces, including those where the legal drinking age is 19. In fact, Alberta's rate of adolescent alcohol use is lower than Ontario's, which is at 65 per cent, and the legal drinking age in that province is 19. All of the information that has been released in the last year clearly demonstrates that the legal drinking age has little bearing on the number of adolescents who consume alcohol.

As AADAC conducted the Alberta youth experiences survey, it is understandable why they have also taken a position against raising the legal drinking age in Alberta. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that AADAC has been in this business for 50 years at this point in time.

Recently AADAC released a position paper on this issue, which is available on their web site. It states:

Raising the legal drinking age can encourage and promote increased illegal activities such as bootlegging, binge drinking or drinking in high-risk situations, procuring false identification, and possibly the use of other drugs as substitutes for alcohol.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that AADAC does not support raising the legal drinking age. Its commitment is to the education of Albertans in order to encourage responsible and informed decisions about alcohol use. They have resources for parents, teachers, and children that provide information about making responsible choices. Education is the key. We all need to take responsibility for ensuring that our children have the tools to make responsible choices.

The teachers in Alberta meet this challenge every day. Alberta Learning provides materials and resources to help teach children how to make responsible decisions regarding drinking and regarding drinking and driving. Programs that have been developed by Alberta Transportation are also in place to educate, enforce, and increase the awareness of the effects of drinking and driving.

Overall, national statistics have shown that young drivers are the least likely of any age group to drink and drive or to have a blood alcohol content in excess of the legal limit. Unfortunately, however, of all the provinces in Canada, Alberta and Saskatchewan do have the highest proportion of adolescent drivers who are fatally injured and are legally impaired. Given that this trend is common to both provinces, which have different legal drinking ages, Saskatchewan being 19, you can't substantiate the argument that a higher legal drinking age will ultimately decrease impaired driving among youth.

As I've pointed out, the government is actively working to ensure that adolescents have the tools to make responsible choices when it comes to alcohol. As the minister responsible for the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, my role is to ensure that there are effective enforcement and education programs in place for licensees, and it's the top priority to ensure that minors are not being served alcohol by our licensees.

In fact, over the past two years I've overseen three initiatives that have emphasized that commitment as a priority. The first is that the AGLC increased penalties to licensees who were found in violation of policies relating to minors accessing alcohol. Secondly, the AGLC increased awareness and enforcement of its under-25 ID policy, and thirdly, the AGLC initiated a joint effort with all liquor industry stakeholders to create a uniform training program for licensees and their staff.

You may have heard of the significant efforts taken by the AGLC to increase awareness under the under-25 ID policy, which helps ensure that minors are not obtaining alcohol. The AGLC has taken significant steps to increase the number of licensees asking for ID from people who appear to be under 25, including sending letters to licensees and stakeholders, providing training sessions, and providing awareness materials such as the It's the Law poster. The AGLC found that almost 67 per cent of licensees, including liquor stores, bars, and lounges, complied with the policy in 2003, and I have directed the AGLC to conduct another audit this year, which we expect will show another significant increase in compliance.

The third initiative mentioned that will help combat underage drinking is the new mandatory training program, that is a collaborative initiative. This program is called the Alberta server intervention program, or ASIP. It's a uniform training program that has the highest level of standards. Everyone involved in the sale or service of liquor will be required to take ASIP.

Alberta's young adults have the ability to make responsible choices when it comes to alcohol, and they prove that every day. It is imperative that parents of our young adults take responsibility and teach their children by example how to consume alcohol responsibly. It's important that parents find the time to teach their children how to make responsible choices. In today's world of drugs and violence kids have to grow up fast, and they have to make the choice to drink or not long before they're 18. Every day children, adolescents, and young adults make responsible choices because they have learned how to.

I'd like to conclude my remarks by congratulating the young adults who make the choice to be responsible and drink responsibly.

As a last comment, often in this House we hear people talk about how we can get our young people involved in the democratic process and in political issues, and I must congratulate the hon. member opposite for bringing this matter forward because if indeed it does go beyond a mere vote here today, I imagine that we will have gained the interest of all of the 17 and 18 year olds in Alberta, who I'm sure will take the time to find out where their MLAs live so that they can communicate with us.

So once again, Mr. Speaker, I recommend to my colleagues in the Assembly that this motion be turned down.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and join in the debate on Motion 508 this evening. I think this motion is very important, and I'm glad that those of us here this evening have an opportunity to debate this issue.

We've heard a few times this evening that the intent of this motion is to "urge the government to raise the legal drinking age in Alberta to 19" years. This would be quite a change, Mr. Speaker, and would affect a large number of Albertans in this province. That being said, I find it's very pleasing that we can discuss this issue tonight, and we can discover what's good about this motion and what's not.

The legal drinking age has been 18 years of age for quite a long time in this province, over 30 years, so making a change like this would have to be done after a significant consultation process with Albertans. That being said, if we do decide to support this motion before us today, I think the government should begin the process of consulting with Albertans immediately to see what their views on this subject would be. I assume that the debate would be quite divisive across Alberta because there are many around the province who like the freedom to choose whatever they want when they reach that age that's considered adult.

Then we have before us a motion that will affect Albertans who reside in our high schools and in our universities. I would be very interested to find out how some of our young Albertans feel about this motion.

Mr. Speaker, the evidence that has been collected over the years does not conclusively conclude that having a higher drinking age is better suited to stopping things like alcohol abuse or drinking and driving. I think we'll find that these problems are going to continue regardless of what our drinking age is. I think the best strategy for stopping these problems is still through our education programs, such as those offered by AADAC or through local high schools. I also believe that these programs are working somewhat as we are seeing fewer cases of young people drinking and driving.

However, this motion does have one strong advantage going for it, and that is that it will eliminate drinking, albeit legal drinking, from our high schools. It is the case that many students in our high school system are at a legal age where they can drink. There are many who enter grade 12 at the age of 17 and turn 18 before the end of June. Those kids do get that opportunity to be adults, and they can currently choose to drink. What I worry about are those kids who are 17 who are at parties with the 18 year olds that bring all the alcohol they want and feel peer pressure to drink.

Now, I'm not so ignorant to think that this would stop outright if the drinking age were increased. Kids will be kids, and if there's an opportunity to make poor choices, they usually do, but that's how they learn. If we raised the drinking age, I think that would limit the access that many 17 year olds have to alcohol, because I don't feel that it's the 18 year olds that are truly at fault for underage drinking but, rather, those 17 year olds who are not strong enough to realize when a choice they are about to make is not the wisest.

I think that it's important to realize that 17 year olds would know more 18 year olds than 19 year olds; therefore, I think that an increase in our drinking age would stop some of those 17 year olds from getting their older friends to bootleg for them.

As well, we can look at the graduation ceremonies that will be happening across Alberta during the next couple of months. There are a lot of high schools that have what are termed wet grads. This is where there's a bar and alcohol is served. The only way you can purchase a drink is if you receive a stamp or a tag that shows that you are at least 18. But we all know what happens. Little Johnny 17 year old gets his buddy who turned 18 three days prior to the grad party to buy him some drinks. Then Johnny is passed out sick in the bathroom, looking like he's been run over by a drunk tank.

I think that if the legal drinking age was 19, we could avoid some of these situations. I think that a lot more graduating classes would choose to have dry grads because none of the graduates or very few of the graduates would be able to legally drink. When the option to drink is taken away, a lot of the time the problems that usually follow are diminished. I think that it's those problems that come with drinking alcohol that we should try to eliminate.

I realize that there are plenty of kids who are very responsible when it comes to drinking, but we have to face the facts that most kids are not all that responsible, especially when they've just turned 18. Responsibility is a lesson that some of them must learn.

Alcohol is a very dangerous substance, Mr. Speaker. If we went across the province, I'm sure we could find many instances of bar brawls, domestic disputes, and other instances that can be directly related to alcohol. If we can stop a kid who is still in high school from having those problems so early in life, I think that we will be better off.

I'm reminded of the tragedies that happened in Calgary that are alcohol related. I think of the tragedy that occurred in the Member for Peace River's constituency a few weeks ago, where a young man was killed in a bar fight. As well, there was a tragedy in Lethbridge I think four years ago where a young man was killed in a fight after a night in the bar. All the tragedies are related in that they are linked to alcohol. Would these tragedies have been avoided by having a higher legal drinking age?

Mr. Speaker, I think that one thing we really should realize is that there might be an argument made that when a person turns 18, there are rights that are given that person. The biggest right is of course the right to vote. I think that a lot of 18 year olds believe that since they are of the age that is considered adult, they should be allowed to do those things that adults do. They should magically have the same rights as the rest of the adult population.

I agree wholeheartedly with that assumption and that 18 year olds should be given every right that's coming to them, but drinking is not a right. It never has been a right, and I think that is where we run into the problems when we debate issues such as this one before us tonight. There are too many young people out there who think that drinking alcohol is a right. However, it's not a right; it's a privilege. It's a privilege that can be taken away if that is what the majority of Albertans prefer.

If we pass this motion today and we eventually decide to raise the legal drinking age, what benefits are we going to see from this move? For one, I think it may stop cross-border drinking, meaning that there might be fewer kids from Saskatchewan, where the drinking age is 19, coming to Alberta to get in a night of partying. I think that that would keep our children safer. As well, a higher drinking age would keep alcohol predominantly out of the high school system. I'm not saying that that's in the school lockers of our local high schools, but I think that children who have yet to learn about responsibility have far too easy access to alcohol. I think that raising the drinking age just might reduce that peer pressure to drink.

As I stressed earlier this evening, I still think that education is the best way to alert our youth to the problems that are associated with alcohol. If we as a government decide to raise the legal drinking age, we should do it for the right reasons. We must study the impact that such a move would have on Albertans.

As well, I don't think this should be the only thing that we do in this area. One of the big reasons for raising the legal drinking age is not only to get alcohol out of our schools but to curb the traffic deaths that are related to alcohol. Since this is the case, I think that we should come up with a comprehensive strategy so that raising the legal drinking age is not all that we do. I think it should be part and parcel of a far-reaching, Alberta-wide strategy to curb the abuse that is seen in regard to alcohol.

I'm looking forward to seeing what other members have to say on this motion this evening, and with that I'll conclude my remarks. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join in the debate on Motion 508, which calls for raising the legal drinking in Alberta from 18 to 19. I'd like to take this opportunity to thank my colleague from Little Bow for having the vision and initiative to introduce a motion which aims to protect some of the most influenced and vulnerable members of our society, our youth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the intent of Motion 508 is not to demonize the consumption of alcohol. I am of the belief that most adult Albertans are responsible consumers who are aware of the health and social risks associated with the abuse of this particular substance. By having this knowledge and experience, adults are able to make informed decisions with regard to how much they choose to drink and what amount is right for them.

However, while adults have the luxury of knowing how much they can drink before it starts to affect them in an adverse manner, younger Albertans, especially teenagers, may not be aware of the inherent dangers associated with alcohol abuse. Furthermore, those who are aware of the dangers choose to ignore them as a result of the it-won't-happen-to-me type of mentality. What they don't realize is that drinking, especially binge drinking, which many adolescents are prone to, can lead to some serious physical, emotional, and social consequences.

One of the risks associated with adolescent drinking in our province, Mr. Speaker, is traffic accidents. According to Alberta Transportation, young males, especially those between the ages of 18 and 24, are most likely to be involved in collisions involving alcohol. However, it should be noted that those at the highest risk of drinking and driving tend to be in the 20 to 21 age group. This suggests that raising the legal drinking age to 19, as proposed in Motion 508, may not help lower the number of alcohol-related traffic accidents because the motion does not target the age group that is most likely to partake in such high-risk activities. While this may be true, I still believe that Motion 508 is a step in the right direction because it will hopefully raise further awareness of the dangers associated with drinking and driving.

With this in mind I believe that raising the legal drinking age to 19 would also complement our province's graduated driver licensing program, which was introduced in May of last year. Alberta Transportation instituted the program to provide first-time drivers with the necessary driving experience and training and to minimize the number of traffic accidents that are caused by driver inexperience.

The graduated driver's licence, GDL, as this program is commonly referred to, consists of two stages, the learning and probationary stages. During both of those periods new drivers are taught how to operate motor vehicles and follow traffic laws in a safe and responsible manner. The instruction also includes a strong message concerning the dangers of drinking and driving and emphasizes the legal and social implications of such dangerous behaviour.

8:40

While new drivers are enrolled in the program, a strict zero-tolerance alcohol policy is enforced, and any student drivers who violate the policy face an immediate licence suspension. Judging by the experiences of other jurisdictions like Ontario, which has had a similar program in place since April of '94, results have been extremely positive. According to the latest collision statistics the number of traffic accidents in Ontario since '94 has decreased by 30 per cent. It should also be mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that the legal drinking age in Ontario is 19.

I believe that through the provisions outlined in Motion 508 and the goals of Alberta's graduated driver's licensing program, our province would be in a position to achieve results similar to those achieved in Ontario. I say this because by the time young new drivers complete the program, they would still be too young to legally purchase liquor. More specifically, Mr. Speaker, most young drivers enrol into the GDL program at the age of 15, and it takes them three years to complete the course. They would still be one year away from being legally entitled to buy alcohol.

It is my hope that through the training and instruction they receive as part of the GDL program and the fact that they would have one more year left before they could legally purchase liquor, young Albertans would have the time to consider the risks associated with drinking and driving and make the right choices and decisions. I believe that through a combination of such measures and positive reinforcement, we will be able to address the systemic problem of impaired driving and lower alcohol-related collisions in our province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in my remarks today I have mainly focused on the dangers of drinking and driving among young Albertans. However, it's also important to highlight other equally dangerous consequences associated with adolescent drinking. Medical studies have found that there is a direct correlation between alcohol abuse and physiological development. More specifically, teenagers who are prone to binge drinking may inadvertently be compromising their physical growth due to the fact that alcohol can suppress the growth hormones, that are fundamental to the development of their bones and muscles.

In other cases alcohol abuse leads to learning difficulties, depression, brain damage, liver problems, and many other health-related complications. Furthermore, adolescents who start drinking before the age of 15 are approximately four times more likely to develop alcohol dependence later on in their lives compared to those who have their first drink at the age of 20 or older.

As I mentioned earlier in my remarks, Mr. Speaker, peer pressure is one of the main reasons why teenage Albertans pick up the bottle for the first time. This is further encouraged by the fact that the current legal drinking age of 18 has created a situation where students can legally purchase alcohol before many of them graduate from high school. I believe that this sends the wrong kind of message to younger students, particularly those between the ages of 15 and 17, who try to emulate the behaviour of their older peers. Undoubtedly, seeing their older friends consume alcohol will encourage them to do the same, thus risking their physical and emotional health and well-being and their future success.

Motion 508, Mr. Speaker, would help alleviate this problem by raising the legal drinking age from 18 to 19, which means that the majority of students will have graduated from high school before being able to purchase liquor products. Therefore, by making it illegal for 18-year-old students to purchase alcohol, Motion 508 would help create a deterrent for younger students to follow the actions of their older high school peers.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we as Albertans must take it upon ourselves to educate and warn our younger generations of the inherent dangers of alcohol use and abuse. We have to teach them to treat this potentially dangerous substance with respect and caution. We need to get the message out to them that alcohol abuse, especially at their young age, is extremely dangerous and may end up costing them dearly. In order to get this message out, we need the full co-operation of the parents, schools, communities, media, and the government.

Motion 508, Mr. Speaker, provides us with one of the means to accomplish these goals and, as such, requires our full support. Concerns that raising the age to 19 will increase illegal activities such as bootlegging and false ID, et cetera, already happen, and I think that it already happens to the maximum. I don't think that you can increase it any more. Although it's legal to marry at the age of 18 and perhaps younger with the consent of your parents, not too many young people do that nowadays. They kind of intrinsically know that that's not such a great idea.

We know that we have a problem with alcohol in Alberta because we are forbidding the use of alcohol in some of our provincial parks over the long weekend this year. It's a pilot project, and if it works in helping families and groups and associations have a better holiday during the long weekend, we may take that regulation and use it for other long weekends.

Also, in Red Deer we know that we have a serious drinking problem with youth in our clubs because we have a bar owner who owns two of the largest clubs in Red Deer who is seriously considering making his clubs only for people 21 years and over, because he insists that it's basically people under 21 who are drinking to levels that create all kinds of complications in his bar. He recognizes that the age of 21 and over is important for him.

I don't think there's much difference between teens in Canada and the United States. I have a couple of facts here that are American facts, but I don't think we're that different, so I think that they could probably apply to us. Certainly, I think it's something for us to think about. Using national data on alcohol and drug use among high school seniors from 1976 to 1987, one study found a decrease in marijuana use associated with increases in the legal drinking age. Between '79 and '84 the suicide rate was 9.7 per cent greater among adolescents and young adults who could legally consume alcohol than among their peers who could not. The earlier a person begins using alcohol, the greater the risk of current and adult drug use and harm to the developing brain.

I, too, like the Minister of Gaming, would like to congratulate all those young adults who drink responsibly, and I thank all those good friends that take their turn as designated drivers and safely return their friends to their homes.

This is a good motion even if it only serves to raise the issue of our deep concern for the safety of our young adults. Motion 508, Mr. Speaker, provides us with one of the means to accomplish these goals and, as such, requires support. As a result, I urge all my colleagues present today to support our youth and their safety and vote in favour of Motion 508. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity this evening to address the Assembly and share my thoughts about Motion 508. I think the idea of raising the legal drinking age to 19 is worthy of discussion, and I would like to express my thanks to the hon. Member for Little Bow for bringing it forward.

What is interesting about the legal drinking age is that it is one of the laws that almost all Albertans know about. Just this evening, Mr. Speaker, talking to my five students at the Forum for Young Albertans, this was a subject that was very much on their mind. In Alberta turning 18 becomes a right of passage as it is on this birthday that society begins to look at you differently. You are afforded the right to vote, the legal system looks at you as an adult and expects you to act accordingly, and legally you become old enough to consume alcohol.

When such a law becomes so ingrained in our being, we accept it without thinking because it seems that this is the way that things have always been. The member presenting this motion is right in questioning whether we could better serve Albertans by making changes to this long-standing law. While most Albertans consume alcohol in a responsible manner, this substance does create problems in our society, and that is why there is a legislated age for alcohol in Alberta in the first place and in just about every other country in the world.

Mr. Speaker, as a former counsellor and minister I know first-hand that alcohol has wrecked marriages, cost people jobs, and killed people on our roads. It has affected our unborn children, our communities, and our province. Now, to make this clear, I am not arguing in favour of prohibition; I am just stating that with the use of alcohol comes great responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, the main crux of my argument revolves around the fact that by allowing youth to wait the extra year to legally drink, we are also giving them an extra year to mature. It is my hope that young adults then would be in a better position to make the right decisions when it comes to alcohol-related matters. I also think that by extending the drinking age to 19, we would have an opportunity to reduce alcohol use among underage Albertans, thereby curbing some of the social problems associated with youth and alcohol. I believe that we need to do what we can as legislators to make Alberta as safe as possible and to create an environment where our children have the best opportunity to safely enter adulthood.

Now, I'm not naive enough to believe that by changing the legal drinking age, we would eliminate the practice of underage drinking. It is a fact that youth under 18 currently do consume alcohol. That will continue if the legal drinking age is changed to 19. According to the Alberta Youth Experience Survey 2002 as conducted by AADAC, Alberta adolescents in grades 7 to 12 are consuming alcohol. The survey indicated that 56.3 per cent of this demographic had consumed alcohol in the previous 12 months to being questioned. To me this number is too high, Mr. Speaker, and we need to be open to options that would help to lower the number of youths that participate in drinking alcohol.

An age change would make it more difficult for youths to have access to the substance. As many grade 12 students in this province turn 18 before they graduate, they are able to legally purchase alcohol. But what also happens is they have the ability to illegally purchase it for their 16- and 17-year-old friends. Of course, not all 18-year-old grade 12 students participate in this practice, but they are put in a position where they may be pressured to do so. While this measure would probably do little to curb the will of youth to experience the drink before they turn the legal age, there's no question that it would make it harder for high school students to purchase alcohol for other students not yet of age.

Research has shown that the behaviour exhibited by 18 year olds is partially influential on youth 15 to 17 years old. Younger students typically imitate the actions of slightly older individuals rather than those who are significantly older. If we can reduce the drinking influence that an 18-year-old student could have on others through school relationships, it may reduce the number of younger students who engage in this activity.

Mr. Speaker, alcohol impairs the good judgment of adults and youth alike. As I would like to speak to some of the social problems that can be experienced by youth who drink, I would like to make my intentions very clear. The problems with alcohol do not discriminate by age. I say this because I don't want to come across as someone who's picking on our youth. On the contrary, I believe that our youth are among the most talented in the world, and I believe they have proven this on an ongoing basis. During this debate it's important to recognize that fact. If we intentionally or unintentionally paint our youth as a segment of our population that is prone to drink, well, then, we make the suggestion that we expect them to drink.

This is prevalent in how postsecondary school students are viewed in our society. The misconception that young adults go off to college and will become involved in heavy drinking is not only false, but it's dangerous as well. If this mindset becomes ingrained in future college and university students, they will more likely engage in this behaviour or in alcohol abuse as an effort to conform.

So with this disclaimer I'd like to continue with some of the negative effects that alcohol has on our youth. Suicide, unplanned pregnancy, automobile deaths are just some of the issues that Alberta teenagers face. I would argue that all three of these issues are a result of poor planning and bad decisions. However, when we also add alcohol to the mix, I believe that the occurrence of these incidents is increased. I would like to quickly address each of these issues.

Suicide is tragic in itself, but it is further disturbing when one takes into account the number of extended people that it affects. Tragically, suicide is the second leading cause of death for males and females who are 15 to 24 years of age. According to the United States National Committee for Injury Prevention and Control the use of alcohol is often a contributing factor for suicide. Research indicates several possible explanations. Drinking, as well as drugs, may reduce inhibitions and impair the judgment of someone contemplating suicide, making that act more likely. Further, alcohol may also aggravate other risk factors for suicide, such as depression or other mental illnesses.

Moving on to teen pregnancy, I'd like to touch once again on the issue of impaired judgment. Add alcohol and peer pressure to the mix, and you may have a recipe for a poor decision and, subsequently, an unplanned pregnancy.

Finally, I'd like to touch on drinking and driving. While alcohol impairs all drivers of all ages, inexperience behind the wheel makes drinking and driving especially dangerous among youth. Recently it seems as though there are more graduations in this province where a certain amount of time is put aside to honour a friend and a classmate who was lost in an automobile accident, sometimes – not always, but sometimes – where alcohol was involved.

It's worth noting that Alberta Transportation has implemented the graduated driver's licencing program, an initiative that allows progressively greater authority to drive based on experience and demonstrated competency. One of the restrictions placed on young drivers under this program is a zero tolerance attitude for alcohol consumption. Violation of this will result in an immediate licence suspension. This motion ties in nicely with what the Ministry of Transportation has put forward on this issue, as the hon. Member for Red Deer-North has aptly stated.

Mr. Speaker, it's probable that raising the legal drinking age to 19 would reduce the access that school-age children would have to the substance, and in turn it would be my hope that the negative effects of alcohol would also be curbed. If anything, the move would provide some consistency among the provinces of western Canada in having a standard drinking age.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to once again state that I believe that raising the legal drinking age could be an important step to reducing some of the negative social effects that plague our youth. If young Albertans are able to deal with alcohol in a responsible manner at a young age, I expect they will also become more productive adults in the future.

I'd like to once again thank the hon. Member for Little Bow for bringing forward this important motion and allowing us a forum to discuss this excellent idea. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What do I have: about two minutes?

The Acting Speaker: No. We have until 9.

Mr. Maskell: Until 9. So this will be a Reader's Digest version.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and speak . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, you will have an opportunity to continue next Monday as well.

Mr. Maskell: Next Monday?

The Acting Speaker: Yeah. You're not limited to four minutes.

Mr. Maskell: This still may be the Reader's Digest version.

Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 508, which urges the government to raise the legal drinking age to 19. I believe measures like the one being suggested by the Member for Little Bow are important to consider if we want to continue to make forward progress where alcohol and youth are concerned, and I certainly appreciate the comments earlier from the hon. Minister of Gaming and the AADAC stats that he provided us.

Alcohol can be a dangerous substance to all members of society. It affects young and old Albertans alike. However, it is necessary to do everything in our power to teach our youth that with the use of alcohol comes responsibility. Youth who learn the lesson at an early age are less likely to have alcohol-related problems later on in life.

This has been suggested in many studies. The Journal of Substance Abuse finds that the younger a person is before using alcohol, the greater the chance he or she will become dependent on the substance or will abuse alcohol later on. About 16.6 per cent of those who begin drinking at age 18 will become dependent on alcohol, with 7.8 per cent of those abusing alcohol at some point in their lives. However, the same statistics show that if a person waits until they are 21 years old before taking their first drink, these risks decrease by over 60 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, even if we raise the legal drinking age, there will be underage youth who will drink and sometimes drive, but I believe that raising the legal drinking age could help to reduce this trend.

The big mistake we made over 30 years ago, of course, is that we changed it from 21 to 18, and there are some people in this room who remember the coming of age was 21 years of age, and this has changed our society, changed our youth a whole lot.

I was really disturbed when I heard the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow talk about wet grads. I mean, I'm flabbergasted to believe that there are schools in this province that have wet grads. I spent over 32 years in this business and more than 20 years of them as a high school principal, and I can't remember wet grads. They were dry grads, and we were not a part of any of this whole business of after grads. We would not in any way allow that to even be organized within the school, as least formally. This must be happening south of Red Deer somewhere because it certainly isn't happening in the Edmonton area, certainly not in any school I was involved in and not in the district that I was involved in.

Also, what happened when we reduced it from 21 to 18 is that there was a time when students went to football games, they went to watch high school basketball games, they went to the dances, and so on. Now when there's a high school basketball game or a football game or whatever, the girlfriends or boyfriends are there, maybe the odd parent cheerleader . . .

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

Third Reading

Bill 26
Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to rise and move third reading of Bill 26, the Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004.

The legislation is the result of the most comprehensive review of the K to 12 education system in more than 30 years. As a member of Alberta's Commission on Learning I am proud to state that all the stakeholders as well as any interested Albertans were involved in the process.

I know that all members in this Assembly agree with me when I state that improving student achievement must be a priority. This legislation will contribute significantly to that end.

I urge all members to vote in favour of Bill 26 in third reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for bringing in this bill. This bill does some very important things. One of the things it does is operationalize the practice review process, which is a way of getting rid of incompetent teachers. It's a fairer way. It's a way that is a lot easier. It's cheaper. But, most importantly, it is a fairer way.

Mr. Speaker, I will say that there is some controversy with this bill between the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association when it comes to the central office administrators. The Alberta Teachers' Association is concerned about the central office administrators not having any disciplinary process. The Alberta School Boards Association is wanting all of the central office administrators out of the union altogether. Included in this bill is a provision for regulation-making powers to set the category of central office administrators that will be out of the union.

In conjunction with the Alberta Teachers' Association I have looked at this, and I have decided that it will not be proclaimed until the regulations are done. Once the regulations are done which define the class of central office administrators, that portion of the bill will then be proclaimed. Mr. Speaker, this is something that has been done in conjunction after a lot of discussion with the Alberta Teachers' Association, keeping in mind that the bill is at third reading. The discussion also was that this bill be put over until the fall.

The important thing about this bill is not the central office administrators, Mr. Speaker. The important thing about this is the practice review process, which has to be put in in order to operationalize it. Once the regulations are brought in, the specific central office administrators will then be potentially taken out of the union.

Mr. Speaker, it is a good bill. It is a bill that operationalizes a lot of things that were done in the Learning Commission, and I would urge all members to vote for this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like the opportunity to make a couple of comments about Bill 26. One of the things that I find really unfortunate was that I supported the bill and expedited it as much as I could at second reading based on the assurance that both the Alberta School Boards Association and the Alberta Teachers' Association had agreed to the amendments. It's much to my chagrin that I find that that's not the case.

I think it's unfortunate that what happened happened. It's not just that I was misled, Mr. Speaker, but I in turn misled my colleagues, and that, I think, is regrettable. We have a tradition in the House of dealing with each other frankly and in a spirit of co-operation to try to move legislation through as quickly as we can, and when things like this happen and there's deliberate misleading, I think that makes that kind of process much more difficult.

I'm pleased that the minister has addressed the problem and spoken to the ATA and agreed to address through regulation some of the concerns they've had, but I don't think that that excuses not having the courtesy to let me know that before the amendments were pushed through the House as quickly as we did.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make some comments on Bill 26, the Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004, in its third reading.

I want to begin by saying that it's my considered view that the education system has been well served by having a unified association that represents teachers both in their professional capacity and represents them in collective bargaining. In fact, if you look back, I believe the evidence shows that a unified association representing teachers in both of these capacities has worked as well or better than it has where different organizations represent the professional and collective bargaining sides.

In fact, what's remarkable is how few times Alberta teachers have taken job action. Other than the job action of two years ago, which was precipitated by an unusual set of circumstances including a ham-fisted attempt by the Tory government to impose wage controls on teachers, teachers' strikes in Alberta have tended to be few and far between.

If you look at the track record of the provinces that have separated the professional and collective bargaining functions into separate organizations, again Alberta compares very favourably. To me this demonstrates the success of the existing legislation and arrangements. There's an old saying that if it ain't broke, don't fix it. I'm concerned that by moving away, as Bill 26 does, from the principle that all certificated teachers should be represented by a single association, we may be going a ways down the road from something that's been working well.

Last October the Learning Commission submitted what was a very good and in some respects even a visionary report into the future of K to 12 education in this province. There was one area, however, where the Learning Commission report uncharacteristically missed the mark. This was the report's recommendations dealing with the teaching profession. The Learning Commission did not favour eliminating the teachers' right to strike nor completely breaking up the ATA into separate professional collective bargaining organizations despite the fact that these two policy options seemed to have considerable support in the Tory government caucus. I believe it's somewhat of a relief that the Learning Commission rejected these more radical options.

Nevertheless, the recommendations the Learning Commission did make – namely, the removal of principals and assistant principals as well as certificated teachers performing central office functions from the ATA – in my view were not conducive to enhancing the learning system.

Bill 26 further refines the Learning Commission recommendations to make membership in the Alberta Teachers' Association optional for teachers who carry out central office administrative functions for a school board. The existing Teaching Profession Act exempts only school superintendents from membership in the ATA. I listened to the minister's remarks carefully, and I hope that this issue, which is a matter of concern to the ATA, will be resolved to the satisfaction of all parties through regulation.

Going back to the exemption, the existing Teaching Profession

Act exempts only school superintendents from the membership. While this is a limited exemption affecting only several hundred certificated teachers across the province, I'm concerned about the incremental approach being taken eroding the membership of the ATA. I remain unconvinced that even this step is warranted, and I am further concerned that this step may be followed by more serious ones in the future.

The Bill 26 amendments point to a policy direction whereby the ATA represents only teachers in the classroom and not the teaching profession as a whole. What is the purpose of this fragmentation of the teaching profession, however limited it may be, in Bill 26? That's the question. I simply don't see the justification at this stage or a compelling argument made to justify moving in this direction.

I see other practical problems as well, Mr. Speaker. Individual teachers go back and forth between being classroom teachers and performing central administrative functions. It's been the case, and there has been very healthy movement back and forth between teaching and nonteaching positions. Each time they move, they will be required to make a choice as to whether they wish to be represented by the ATA or not. Will school boards favour teachers who opt out of the ATA or those who choose to stay in the ATA when they're hiring for central administrative positions? Does this open up the possibility of new conflicts between the ATA and school boards? These are some of the questions that come to mind and cause me to worry about the impact that this bill could have whether it's intended or unintended.

For all of the above reasons I'm not supportive of this particular change to Bill 26 despite the fact that I'm aware that the government has gone some ways to try to accommodate the concerns of the teaching profession as articulated by the ATA.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you and take my seat.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark to close debate.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to speak to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods' comments that he feels that he was misled. I, along with the minister's EA, met with the hon. member and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to discuss the amendments. At that meeting – and I know people were rushed to get back into the House – we did state, both the EA and myself, to the members that everything was moving ahead except for that one piece, the central office staff, and that the minister and the president of the ATA were going to be discussing these and working out the bits there. I mean, that was made very clear in that meeting as we discussed these amendments, so I'm very sorry if that wasn't stated clearly enough to the hon. member and that it appeared to him that he had been misled. That's something that I would not do, and I am very disturbed by those comments.

Mr. Speaker, I move closure and the vote on the question. Thank you.

Bill 25 School Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to move third reading of Bill 25, the School Amendment Act, 2004.

As mentioned during second reading, Bill 25 reflects this government's action on yet another recommendation from the Learning Commission. It balances the interests of teachers with the rights of our children to receive an education that is responsive to their needs. It will achieve this by improving the functioning of the Board of Reference to make sure there is a process to deal with situations where an educator might not fulfill the high standards of his or her peers.

The intent of this bill is quite simple. We need appropriate measures in place to ensure the highest quality of service in the profession, and all measures taken must be effective and fair. As amended, Bill 25 will ensure a good education for all Alberta students.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 25 will add the following responsibilities for Alberta's teachers. They will

- (a) participate in curriculum development and field testing of new curriculum;
- (b) develop, field test and mark provincial achievement tests and diploma examinations;
- (c) supervise student teachers.

Section 18 adds on to the current statutory responsibilities of teachers.

As mentioned earlier, Bill 25 will also allow the Board of Reference to function more smoothly and more in accordance with Bill 26. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark with his bill that we've just passed will work in conjunction with Bill 25 in order to ensure that Alberta's teachers are performing to the ability that all Albertans expect them to and know that they can.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the amendments and everything that has been accepted, the changes to the Board of Reference and to the teachers' responsibilities, I would like to move third reading and would leave it at that.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 25 in its third reading. Bill 25 is the School Amendment Act, 2004. In many respects Bill 25 makes parallel amendments to the School Act that Bill 26 made to the Teaching Profession Act. I'll focus my remarks about some changes that are made in Bill 25.

I'm pleased that Bill 25 retains the Board of Reference and did not follow the Learning Commission's recommendation to abolish it. The government is taking the view, not surprisingly, that changes proposed in Bill 25 will improve the effectiveness of the Board of Reference.

That remains to be seen, Mr. Speaker. The jury is still very much out on this. In fact, the changes proposed to the Board of Reference are illustrative of a more fundamental problem that I have with Bill 25. Quite frankly, I'm not sure that any of us can reasonably predict whether the changes being brought about through Bill 25 will improve the learning system or not. It's a bit too early to hazard that guess.

To further complicate matters, the bill's sponsor, the Member for Drayton-Valley-Calmar, last week brought significant new amendments during the Committee of the Whole debate. These were amendments to what's already in the amending bill, Mr. Speaker, creating even more uncertainties about how these changes to the School Act will improve or harm the learning system.

Bill 25 as amended makes a number of complex, highly technical changes to the School Act which have largely unknown implications for school boards, teachers, and students. I would have much preferred, Mr. Speaker, to have had more opportunity to examine and consult on the proposed changes prior to being asked to give third and final reading approval to Bill 25.

Be that as it may, this is all too typical of how this government sometimes operates and is yet another indicator of the severe democratic deficit that exists in this province. There are no all-party committees to examine a bill such as this and to question and ascertain the views of education stakeholders, whether school boards, teachers, parents, or school administrators. Instead, an amendment is brought to this Assembly late in the evening, receives limited debate, and is approved that very same evening.

While there are a number of areas in Bill 25 where I have questions, there is at least one provision in Bill 25 to which I'm strongly opposed, and I want my opposition to be clearly on the record. This has to do with the changes to section 18 which redefine activities that are now voluntary or extracurricular and makes them mandatory. These have to do with requiring teachers to participate in the curriculum, supervise student teachers, and mark and field test provincial diploma exams. Most teachers undertake these extra responsibilities voluntarily, and I remain unconvinced that it is necessary to make them mandatory.

Requiring teachers to mark, for instance, diploma exams as a condition of their employment by a school board is particularly heavy-handed. Finding teachers to mark diploma exams was only a problem two years ago during the dispute when the government itself provoked the teachers and attempted to interfere with the collective bargaining by imposing those controls on teachers. It has not been a problem in any other year. Again, the government's approach is akin to using a sledgehammer to swat a flea.

In conclusion, given the lack of consultation prior to the introduction of Bill 25 and particularly given the lack of time to examine the amendment introduced only last week, I would urge somebody to take the necessary time to consult all education stakeholders – parents, school administrators, teachers, and school boards – before proclaiming this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 29

Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004

[Adjourned debate April 28: Mrs. McClellan]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to stand today and speak to Bill 29, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004. As the minister stated when moving second reading, this bill will amend the current act to allow AFSC to make loans or execute guarantees in excess of $2 million to businesses with two or more investors. Currently AFSC is only able to make loans to specific businesses for a maximum of $2 million regardless of how many investors are involved in a project.

The amended act, while increasing available funding from AFSC, will still limit the amount of debt an individual investor can carry at $2 million. Presently AFSC is limited by section 29 of the act to $2 million in loans or guarantees to or for the benefit of any person. The term "benefit" has been cautiously interpreted by AFSC, and as a result loans made to a company are considered a benefit to the shareholders, and similarly loans made to a shareholder are considered a benefit to the company.

Mr. Speaker, the reason the act is being amended is to allow AFSC to facilitate investment in larger value-added projects as well as lend support to investment vehicles such as new generation co-operatives. Farmers are looking for ways to add value to their product right here in Alberta. They want to improve their profitability and limit their exposure to risks such as export restrictions.

The BSE crisis is a vivid reminder of how vulnerable we are to the uncertainties of the export market. We need to process more of our product here in Alberta, and that also goes for all of our primary products: wheat, barley, beef, pork, and others. Of course, we'd have to have wheat and barley outside of the board to do that, but we're working on that, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta needs to develop more processing capacity to add value to these products. There are farmers and others out there ready to invest. Whether it is through a new generation co-operative or some other investment vehicle, there are groups out there that are anxious to get their projects off the ground. However, some of the projects being proposed require millions of dollars of investment. While farmers may have the capacity to borrow for such investments, conventional lenders are being extremely cautious in the current environment. AFSC has the capacity to fill this important void.

This government does not want it to be difficult to do business here, Mr. Speaker, nor have we made it so, so we're amending the act to allow entrepreneurs to capitalize on the opportunities that are in front of them. Whether it's the development of a new slaughter plant or a grain-processing facility, we want to help Alberta investors expand our value-added industry. This investment will create jobs and opportunities, particularly in rural Alberta communities.

Mr. Speaker, the risk to the lender, AFSC, will not increase with the changes to this act. All of the loans and guarantees will still need to satisfy all the requirements as set out in the regulations regarding eligibility and all of the normal lending criteria established by AFSC.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Legislature to give this bill their full support. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly with interest that I listened to the remarks from the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and the minister of agriculture last week in regard to Bill 29. If one listens to the remarks from the hon. member, it would certainly warrant support, but what he's also talking about is that we are gradually getting back in the business of being in business as far as supporting some enterprises over others. This isn't about supporting the family farm. This is about increasing the ways that corporate agriculture can get more and more money from Agriculture Financial Services Corporation.

I don't know what the object of this bill really is. Is it to provide funding for meat processors, beef processors? Certainly, we all know that the BSE crisis has alerted both urban and rural Albertans to the fact that we do not control in this province our processing industry. It's controlled from another country, in this case America. We have lost control of that industry.

At one point in this city's history there were many meat-packing plants, both for beef and for pork. That no longer happens. We have two large processing facilities and another one that is not so large, but it is vital to the interests of the producers.

On the face of it, it appears that the goal of this legislation is to eliminate provisions preventing individual persons from receiving more than one loan of up to $2 million, but the question here is why. I would be grateful for an answer. Is this because farms have become such large corporations? Up until this bill the total amount, as I understand it, that any person could get was 2 million bucks. Indeed, even after this bill, if it's to become law, there would be an appearance that the total amount of any loan or guarantee would be $2 million. But that said, more than one individual could get that $2 million. Where would all this end? How much will this cost?

An Hon. Member: Wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: This is wrong. Okay.

How much additional money will we as taxpayers have to set aside for the Alberta Agriculture Financial Services Corporation? Who will be eligible for these loans? These are very important questions. There are hon. members in this Assembly who receive support payments from the Alberta Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. Farmers from across the province receive money. How much in additional funds will be needed if we make these changes?

Those are my questions at this time, and hopefully they can be addressed at committee or later on in debate in second reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise and speak to the Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act at Committee of the Whole. I would like to start off by thanking Mr. Andrew Horton and Brad Fournier for their backup and help in bringing this forward.

As I mentioned during second reading, this bill expands the mandate of the act by allowing feeder pigs to be included under the act, allowing Alberta's hog producers to take advantage of Alberta's successful feeder association structure. Consultations have occurred with the hog industry, the AFRD staff, the feeding industry, and even the trucking industry.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona raised some very legitimate questions at that time that I'd like to address. The actual cost of the program is two and a half full-time equivalents who run the program for Alberta Agriculture, significantly less than the $52 million listed in the lottery fund estimates. We need to recognize that this is a producer-driven process, and they bear much of the cost of that particular program. In fact, the $52 million is the liability of guarantee that is allocated to a feeder association, and it's held as the guarantee for the feeder association loans. The total guaranteed cap for the program is at $55 million, so that leaves about $3 million to expand the guarantee to the hog feeding industry. It's important to remember that over the past 10 years the government guaranteed draw has been less than 5/10,000ths of a percentage, a very stunningly low number for any industry.

There was also some question as to how this program would affect producers under the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, or the CAIS program as we know it. Because there are no actual dollars delivered to producers and members of feeder associations, the feeder association program does not affect producers when it comes to their CAIS claims.

Both hon. members asked why hog producers should be eligible to use Alberta's feeder association structure. When I spoke about this bill at second reading, I noted that the hog industry has now defined two distinct feeding industries, much like the cattle industry. A straight feeding operation now exists that did not exist a decade ago where feeder pigs are introduced to the barn and fed until finished. This is similar to what occurs in the cattle industry. The second more traditional operation continues to be the farrow-to-finish operations. It's important to remember that the act itself does not restrict either operation from getting involved, and it will be again through a thorough industry consultation process that regulations will be developed and in place to build a program that is legitimately useful for hog producers.

Both hon. members wondered how many hog producers would use the feeder association program. While I'd love to give them an exact number, I really can't. However, a simple questionnaire recently done of all the hog producers in the province estimated that up to one-quarter of the feeder pigs may be contracted, depending on the full implications of interest rates and administrative fees. There's a potential to save some dollars on both these aspects, but without the full regulations in place it is difficult to establish exact estimates of producer and hog involvement.

I know that there was some concern expressed on the tracking of hogs that were purchased through a feeder association. Obviously, Mr. Chairman, branding a hog is out of the question, and while there hasn't been a final decision made about how a hog purchased through a feeder association will be identified, there are a number of options already in use on farms across Canada. These options include anything from tattooing feeder pigs to the use of the national identification program that Canada's pork industry has been working on. The pork quality assurance program is also widely used in the province of Alberta. Identification in co-ordination with inspection of hogs should all but eliminate the risk involved with contracting feeder hogs.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was concerned that this bill would help the large hog operations but not the small ones. In fact, Mr. Chairman, on the contrary, Bill 28 gives more decision-making capabilities to smaller pork producers. It offers smaller producers more financial alternatives than simply going to the bank, which will allow them to increase their competitiveness. There are maximum loan limits that are placed on members. This benefits mostly our smaller family-operated units therefore.

He was also concerned about the possible environmental damage that can occur with feeding operations. The hog producers that would commit to a membership with a feeders association would meet and comply with any environmental regulation within the province, just as members of feeder associations already do. In fact, I would argue that these hog producers would be leaders within the industry that are involved with the quality of pork initiative and food trace-back systems. There is no more jeopardy to the environment from having hogs defined within the definition of livestock within the Feeder Associations Guarantee Act.

I'm sure that all hon. members are interested to know what the next steps would be if Bill 28 is passed, and I'm pleased to share that with them. The time frame once Bill 28 is passed in this House – there will be further consultation with the pork industry and current feeder association members and those involved with the current feeder association structure. This includes the lenders of feeder associations. Thus, consultation will continue over the next few months. Once a comprehensive set of guidelines has been established to govern feeder pig association contracts, only then can eligible members take advantage of the new opportunity. I estimate this to be sometime in the late summer or fall. It could go as late as early 2005.

I hope that I've answered your questions in a satisfactory manner, and I urge every member to give this amendment their full support. Thank you, Mr. Chair.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the hon. Member for Dunvegan's answers to questions that were posed earlier in debate at second reading on Bill 28. That certainly answers my question satisfactorily in regard to the CAIS program.

I have now this question for the hon. member: what is the total of all loans to feeder associations at the current time that are partially guaranteed by the province? If this bill was to become law, in the future how many additional loans or how much additional money would have to be set aside or guaranteed by the province if we were to allow hogs as well as cattle and sheep to be a part of the feeder associations?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The province has set aside $55 million in total for the guaranteed portion of that particular program. Presently $52 million is being used as a guarantee to the livestock feeder associations, and that leaves $3 million available as a guarantee for the hog industry. That's exactly what it is. It is a guarantee, and it's not actual cash that's given out to the producers or to the associations. It's money set aside in case there's a massive amount of default that occurs in the industry. Then those dollars would come in as a guarantee.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again I would like to express my gratitude to the hon. member for that answer. My next question would be: has there ever been a default involving the feeder associations before, and if there has been a default, how much money was involved?

Mr. Goudreau: If you remember my comments when I discussed this in committee a little earlier, I talked about 5/10,000ths of a percentage in the last 10 years as what the province has paid out in default. So, basically, it's very, very insignificant and nonexistent. In the 65-year history I believe that there were only three claims against the feeder association program. We're 65 years in existence. So the claim numbers have been very, very low.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 28 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 29

Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to take just a couple of minutes to address some of the issues that were raised during second reading. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had a couple of questions, and I'm certainly appreciative of his commenting that the amendment does warrant our support.

I just wanted to bring some clarity to some of the comments that he made with respect to the loan limits. I wanted to emphasize that this amendment will not allow AFSC to make larger loans to companies. The loan limit for a company will remain at $2 million. What the amendment does is allow individual shareholders in a company to access loans up to $2 million. It does increase the aggregate amount available for a single project, which is something that we need to do in this province for our value-added agriculture sector, which I know our Minister of Economic Development is very keen to do. Certainly, on the rural development side it is very, very important that we have these types of available lending institutions to get value added off the ground.

The goal of the amendment is to provide a provision so that we can have a value-added facility that is larger than the $2 million, although each individual borrower would have to come up with his own repayment terms and his own assets to back up the maximum $2 million loan.

The other question was how much additional dollars and who would be eligible for the loans. The people that are going to be eligible for the loans are the same people that are eligible for the loans today, and that is the family farm in Alberta, Mr. Chairman. AFSC will handle this additional program absorbed within its approved business plans today. They had a $25 million proposal for value added already in their budget with limited take-up because of the fact that these projects are much larger than an individual $2 million.

I can give you an example for the members' benefit, Mr. Chairman, of five family farms. The family farm of today is different from the family farm of 50 years ago; it may have four brothers, and it may be a $10 million operation. But let's say we had five different family farms. Each one wanted to invest into a facility that would value add what they're doing in the province of Alberta.

Under this proposal each one can only borrow the maximum $2 million. The company that they create can only borrow $2 million, but each one of them could borrow on their own $2 million and actually invest that in the project. So individually they are only borrowing $2 million, and AFSC would take the same due diligence on that credit facility that they would take on any other credit facility that they do today. The only difference that we're doing here is we're allowing a facility, like a new generation co-op, to be able to have those investors access financing through AFSC. So the whole objective here is to actually add value-added facilities in our agricultural sector.

I think that answers the questions that the hon. member had. Again, they were good comments, Mr. Chair, and I think we've added that clarity for him. With that I will conclude my comments.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I appreciate that response from the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. Now, if this bill were to become law, would the interest rates that would be available to the borrowers be slightly matched with the Alberta Agriculture Financial Services Corporation? Would there be a better rate than what they could find at, say, a commercial bank?

Thank you.

Mr. Horner: To clarify the comments. Again, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is simply taking the one aspect of the $2 million aggregate or for the benefit of. It's not changing anything in the way that AFSC operates in terms of the interest rates, their due diligence, how the farm community or AOC community would approach AFSC. It doesn't change any of that type of criteria with AFSC at all.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. It's interesting, Mr. Chairman, to participate in this debate this evening, particularly in light of the fact that we are expanding the loan provisions, essentially, in one sector of the economy backed up by the government, yet in another sector of the economy or another sector of the government we're promoting this notion of a P3, this private/public partnership, or pity, pity, pity, as some would say.

I find it quite ironic that we're making more government money available to one sector, yet with schools and hospitals and specifically courthouses and in some cases roads, we're going gung-ho for the private sector. We're forgetting just how much financial muscle a government with a good credit rating can provide.

Thank you.

9:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, just for clarity. I don't want to play politics with this because this is something that our agriculture community really needs to help value add our province's commodity-based ag community.

The funding under this amendment is not restricted to simply agriculture value-added products. I'm sure the member is aware that AFSC is an amalgamation of the Alberta Opportunity Company as well, so that expanded the corporation's mandate to provide loans to many small-business ventures, especially those that will enhance rural development. That really is the key. This is not a change, really, in the raison d'être for the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. In that regard, I think this will only add to what it can do today.

[The clauses of Bill 29 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that the Committee of the Whole now rise and report Bill Pr. 4, Bill 28, and Bill 29.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 28, Bill 29. The committee reports Bill Pr. 4 with some amendments. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very good night of progress, and I hope the Calgary Flames have equally good progress in their business. It's sometimes hard for an Oilers fan just to admit that, but we're all cheering for Calgary.

I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; at 9:55 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 4, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/05/04

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all the people of this province. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm honoured today to introduce you to a group of 15 former Members of Parliament from British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan. They're attending the Canadian Association of Former Parliamentarians' regional meeting here in Edmonton, and they are in the public gallery. So let me introduce them, and if they represented a riding in Alberta, I'll give you the name of the riding in Alberta. If they're from outside Alberta, I'll identify the province as well.

Now, we're all parliamentarians, so I'd appreciate it if we could withhold the applause until the end because of the competitive nature – okay? – and we'll ask them all to do it at one time. First of all, the Rt. Hon. Don Mazankowski, Vegreville; the Hon. Jack Horner, Acadia; the Hon. Nick Taylor, Senator; Mr. Douglas Rowland, representing the constituency of Selkirk in Saskatchewan; Mr. Clifford Breitkreuz, Yellowhead; Mr. John Browne, Vancouver Kingsway; Mr. Cliff Downey, Battle River; Mr. Norval Horner, Battleford-Kindersley in Saskatchewan; Mr. Bill Lesick, Edmonton East; Mr. Willie Littlechild, Wetaskiwin; Mr. Bob Porter, Medicine Hat; Mr. Jack Shields, Athabasca; Mr. John Skoberg, Moose Jaw in Saskatchewan; Mr. Walter Van De Walle, Pembina; Mr. Bill Wright, Calgary North. They are accompanied by their partners as well as Mrs. Susan Simms, assistant to the president, and George and Myra Letki.

Hon. members, later in the day one of our own, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who is a member of this group, will be joining with them as they participate in their regional meeting of former parliamentarians.

So I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each year one student from every Alberta high school receives the Premier's citizenship award in recognition of their contribution to the community through good citizenship, leadership, community service, and volunteering. From this group of very special students the five most outstanding individuals are then selected to receive the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal and, along with that, a scholarship of $5,000, which they may use towards future education or development.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I and some of my colleagues had the pleasure of meeting these young men and women along with their parents during a special luncheon hosted by Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole, Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. During the luncheon we had an opportunity to talk with each of them, and I'm sure my colleagues would agree with me that they are truly exceptional individuals and deserving of the award.

Mr. Speaker, among the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal recipients for 2003 are Samantha Saretsky from Lacombe composite high school in Lacombe, Alberta. Samantha is accompanied by her parents, Tony and Marilyn Saretsky. She is currently attending the University of Saskatchewan, or was until about the end of April, in political studies. She was joined today by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, the chair of the Standing Policy Committee on Justice and Government Services.

We also have Laura Abday from Edmonton's Jasper Place high school. She is currently attending the University of Alberta in atmospheric sciences. She was joined today by the hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, the Minister of Economic Development.

We have Evan Wisniewski from Hairy Hill, Alberta, graduating from the Two Hills high school. Evan is here with his parents, Orest and Rosemarie Wisniewski. He is studying engineering at the University of Alberta. He was joined today by the hon. Member for Vegreville-Viking, the Minister of Transportation.

We have last but certainly not least Wilma Shim from Archbishop MacDonald high school here in Edmonton, someone who, I'm pleased to say, Mr. Speaker, is here today with her parents, William and Dr. Margaret Shim. The Shim family live in Edmonton-Whitemud, and as their MLA I couldn't be happier about Wilma's achievement in winning this prestigious award and scholarship. Wilma is attending the University of Calgary in kinesiology.

Unfortunately, the fifth recipient, Michele Romanow from St. Mary's high school in Calgary, was unable to attend this afternoon's luncheon, but her MLA, the Member for Calgary-West, joined us for lunch as well.

I'd ask these four outstanding young Albertans to rise in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, with their families and receive the traditional warm welcome and appreciation of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour today to introduce special guests from Jean Vanier elementary school in Sherwood Park. There are 27 students, two teachers, and two parents here today. Vicki Whalley and Linda Murphy are the teachers, and Pat Lemire and Suzanne Biamonte are here with the students. I've met with them. They've had their picture taken, and they're enjoying the tour of this beautiful building. I would ask now that they rise, please, and that we give them the worthy recognition of which they are so deserving.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on behalf of my constituency and my colleague the hon. Minister of Seniors, the Member for Stony Plain, and introduce to you and through you to members of the House 36 visitors from Parkland county. These students and parents are the Parkland Home Educators and are here today to tour and observe what happens here at the Legislature. The students are accompanied by parents Mrs. Margaret Doige, Mrs. Janice Freund, Mrs. Glenda Foster, Mrs. Marie Tutt, Mrs. Nancy Gammon, Mrs. Janet Sawatzky, Mrs. Darlene Taras, Mr. Willy Freund, Mrs. Tami Garside, and Mrs. Carol Preston. I believe they are in both galleries, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You have already introduced Mr. Willie Littlechild, but perhaps members and those joining us in the gallery would be interested in knowing that Mr. Littlechild has been given a singular honour in being Canada's – I believe that it's Canada's, but it could be the United Nations – representative for aboriginal peoples. Mr. Littlechild, if you would stand and receive the recognition of the House for that honour.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and indeed to all members of the Assembly Peyman Razavi. Peyman is a recent graduate of the University of Lethbridge. He has a bachelor's degree in management, and he is here this afternoon to observe the proceedings of the Assembly. Peyman Razavi is seated in the public gallery, and I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Automobile Insurance Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On December 3 last year the Premier said that he'd consider his government's auto insurance plan, quote, an absolute failure, end quote, if it failed to reduce premiums for 80 per cent of Alberta drivers. Unfortunately, the plan currently before cabinet does not save money for 80 per cent of drivers. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the government considering an auto insurance plan that by the Premier's own definition is an absolute failure?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the hon. leader of the Liberal Party is not telling the truth again. There is no document, as far as I know, before cabinet, and I would be the first to know. So that statement is misleading, and before he proceeds, I wish he would stand up and apologize for saying that there is a government document before cabinet, because that is not true.

Mr. Speaker, the regulations surrounding the government's auto insurance reforms are still working through the approval process. As I understand it, it was at a standing policy committee, which is not cabinet, last night. So I can't comment on the speculative media reports about what will or won't be approved. I can tell you that I've heard third-hand – and this is media scuttlebutt. The report that the hon. member alludes to was not a government report. That is being reported by one media outlet. Another media outlet said that it is a government document.

Perhaps the hon. minister can shed some light on the situation.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition has made some bold statements about the path that we're going on for reform of automobile insurance in the province of Alberta. I hope you'll give me the latitude on this.

Let's be very clear. When we started this process, we recognized that we needed to have a fair, accessible, affordable, and comparably priced insurance package within this province. We also recognized that there were spiralling costs that were being incurred last year by people who were purchasing insurance, and to make a long story short, some of the people in the province were not doing that.

So the path that we have gone down is to bring a new structure into Alberta that will bring down insurance premiums so that they are in fact affordable. The process we're into right now is going through the regulations to back up the legislation that we've already passed in this House to support this structure.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why under this government's plan will most good drivers be locked into the highest insurance rates in Alberta history?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there is no plan. As I say, no decisions. I would ask the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to listen very carefully: no decisions have been made about the detailed regulations. No decisions. It has not been to cabinet. It is working its way through SPC. I don't know about the document that was reported in the media, but I will say that it is absolutely premature to be talking about the government breaking its promise. In fact, we don't intend in any way, shape, or form to break our promise.

The reforms, quite simply, are based on personal responsibility. Good drivers will pay competitive rates, and bad drivers will pay more. Our basic goal with auto insurance reform is to have premiums that reward good drivers, penalize bad drivers, as it should be, and provide fair compensation for those who are injured in traffic accidents.

Again I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

The Speaker: No. We're spending a lot of time here.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, here's a plan the government could adopt. Why won't the government do what the Alberta Liberals and the vast majority of Albertans want and simply bring in public auto insurance?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I've said before in this Legislature, we subscribe to the policy of entrepreneurship and free enterprise, but we do know that there is a problem relative to a privately operated regulated industry, and we want to make that industry more responsive to, first of all, the needs of those in small to medium businesses that have a hard time hiring young drivers because of rising insurance premiums. We want to be able to be in a position to have insurance companies recognize that just because a person is a male between the ages of 16 and 25 doesn't necessarily make that person a bad driver and that therefore good drivers in that age bracket should be rewarded. We don't want to penalize those in the mid brackets, but we want to make sure that older drivers, male drivers in particular over 65, are not penalized because of age and because of gender. We don't think that that is fair.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked this hon. member and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to table in this Legislature their insurance premiums for this year and last year and the previous year and also what they would pay in Saskatchewan. I would be very, very happy to table what I pay right now and what I would pay in Saskatchewan and what I would pay in Manitoba and what I would pay in British Columbia. I find that within a dollar or two or maybe 10 it's ostensibly the same.

Government Aircraft

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, only last week the Premier said, "All flight manifests are kept, and any member of the public is welcome to view them." But since 10 a.m. last Friday this government wants Albertans to wait months, maybe forever simply to find out how the Premier, ministers, and their staff are spending taxpayers' money on flights in the government-owned air force. To the Premier: was it the Premier's decision to deny access to information about how he is using the government-owned aircraft?

Mr. Klein: To answer the question, the answer is no. It was not my decision whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the flight manifests I don't have a problem generally. The flight manifests, as the hon. Minister of Infrastructure pointed out, are made public I think on a quarterly basis and are generally available for anyone to view.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to create a scenario. If Mr. or Mrs. Grundy want to look at a flight manifest, what they do is they phone the minister's office or they phone the hangar or they phone an appropriate authority and they receive permission to look at flight manifests. They sort of indicate what they want to look at, not 10 years of flight manifests that add up to 12,000 – I think that you save 12,000 or 13,000 different manifests, that would tie up literally countless hours of public service employees' time at great expense to the taxpayer. Nor do Mr. and Mrs. Grundy arrive at the hangar with a microphone and a bevy of media people. So one has to wonder: is he seeking legitimate information, or is he trying to create a media circus? I suspect that the latter is true.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Infrastructure minister has said that government-owned aircraft cannot be used for political party business, why did the Premier take a government-owned aircraft to Fox Harb'r golf course for an event that was funded by a political party, the PC Party?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that plane was on its way to Halifax for an annual Premiers' Conference. Fox Harb'r is about 20 minutes from Halifax. I was let off there. The plane came back. It was deemed that part of the expense would be party expense and part of it would be business. I considered it all to be business, but if the party wants to consider some of it to be party-related activities, then that is entirely up to the party. I don't pay attention, nor do I ask who pays what for what, when, and why. It's all there.

It's no secret that I went to Fox Harb'r. I explained in this Legislature that I was invited by Ron Joyce to go there to meet and network with about 40 business leaders from around North America. I consider that to be part of my job as government, but if the party decided that part of it was not politically related and related to my job as the Premier, perhaps the golfing part, then they should pay for it.

Dr. Taft: The lines are too unclear, Mr. Speaker.

Has the government ever been reimbursed by the Premier's leader's fund for the cost of a flight on a government plane?

Mr. Klein: I don't know, Mr. Speaker, nor do I pay attention to those things. If business is deemed to be – well, I wouldn't use the plane for strictly party business. As a matter of fact, when we have Premier's dinners, when we have strictly party events, the party charters aircraft. There are times, admittedly, when government aircraft is used to do other business, and perhaps some party business will be done at the same time, as it was done in Fox Harb'r, but you can't separate the two. You can't walk and fly at the same time. It's like, you know, walking and chewing gum. Well, I guess you can do that, but you can't walk and fly at the same time. If it so happens that some party business is mixed with ministerial business, so be it. What is the big deal? I'll tell you: their Liberal cousins . . .

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Automobile Insurance Reform (continued)

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Alberta drivers have been involved in a hit-and-run collision. Their government is at fault for hitting them with double-digit auto insurance rate increases and running behind access to information laws to hide its incompetence. My first question is to the Premier. If New Brunswick's Conservative government can quickly provide the Official Opposition with its KPMG study on auto insurance reform, what's stopping this government from publicly releasing its own KPMG report on auto insurance reform which was prepared at the same time by the same author?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the timing relative to release of the report, but I will have the hon. Minister of Finance respond. I believe it will be released publicly once the information from the report is used to properly draft the regulations.

I'll have the hon. minister respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Nelson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I've said numerous times in this House that once we have finalized the regulations associated with the reform package, which will go to cabinet when they are completed through the SPC process, and they are put in place, then the report will be finalized by KPMG and we will release the report. Until such time we won't release the report because it's not complete.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: why are the government's Conservative cousins so open and accountable regarding auto insurance in New Brunswick while this government disregards the FOIP commissioner by refusing to release even parts of the Alberta KPMG study, as the commissioner's office has instructed?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should understand that this is not New Brunswick. This is Alberta, and we do things the way that we deem to be proper here in Alberta. There is a process. We are following that process. The legislation to lay out the framework for the regulations vis-à-vis insurance has been passed. We are now working on the regulations. We are doing it in the normal manner, and the only people who are asking for that report, which is a working document or a document from which we can work, are the Liberals. I don't know what the circumstances are in New Brunswick, and although I have the deepest respect for Premier Lord in New Brunswick, he does things his way and we do things our way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. Again to the Premier: is this government reluctant to release the KPMG study because the study tells the truth and doesn't back up this government's proposed reforms?

Mr. Klein: I don't know anything about the report other than that it's a document from which the SPC, cabinet, caucus can work to arrive at reasonable solutions. Those solutions are to reward good drivers, punish bad drivers, and make sure that accident victims are fairly compensated, Mr. Speaker.

Relative to the report itself I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether the hon. member opposite stays up too late at night and dreams these things up, but I have said dozens of times in this House that once this process is complete and the report is finalized, we will release the report publicly. Now, I don't know how much clearer you can make that, unless I have it go in slow motion to send the message over there.

We are not hiding anything. We're in a work in progress right now, and we're moving forward to have a new insurance system implemented in this province, a made-in-Alberta solution, this summer. We're on track and we will move forward, and hopefully he'll come with us.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The sand under the government auto insurance reforms keeps shifting, and it's quickly turning into quicksand. Last fall the Tory government claimed that Albertans would see their auto insurance premiums reduced to comparable levels with other western provinces. Now it appears that 80 per cent of Albertans will see no reductions in their premiums, which are already 35 to 50 per cent higher than in those provinces that enjoy the benefits of a public auto insurance plan. My question is to the Premier. When will the Premier admit that it is impossible to deliver through private insurance rates on par with those in other western Canadian provinces and that this is the real reason that 80 per cent of Albertans will see no rate reductions under the government's so-called reforms?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, two comments before I turn it over to the hon. Minister of Finance. One comment is that this hon. member has never responded to my request, a reasonable request, to table his personal insurance premiums and those that he would pay in Saskatchewan or Manitoba or British Columbia for this year or the last year or the year previous. He has never ever responded to that challenge because what he says is misleading. He knows that his insurance premiums are comparable. Are comparable. So he misleads the public of Alberta when he says that we are paying higher rates, because he is not paying a higher rate. He knows it, and I know it. Within $10 or $15 I know that ostensibly my rate is about the same.

Mr. Speaker, the second comment I have – and I'm trying to remember it.

Mrs. Nelson: Eighty per cent.

Mr. Klein: Oh, the 80 per cent. Yeah, the second comment was that it is so typical for this member in particular to do his research in the Edmonton Journal. Honestly, he gets up and he reads the Edmonton Journal and says: oh, boy, have I ever got a question today, and if it's in the Journal, it's gotta be true.

Well, you know, I hear from my communications people that there's a little spat going on between the CBC and the Edmonton Journal as to whether it was a government document or not a government document, and I don't get involved in media spats. So perhaps he should leave the Chamber and maybe get a tape of the CBC news and see what the CBC has to say about it, and maybe he'll come back with a changed tune, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's the government bureaucrats that can't get it straight whether it's a government document.

My question is to the Premier. Since he and his Minister of Finance are both on the record as saying that Alberta will have rates similar to those in the other three western provinces, will he stand again in this Assembly and recommit to that promise and promise that we will have those rates in place before the next election?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy if the hon. member – well, I'd be happy without the hon. member, but it's going to take me some time.

Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to table my insurance rates for this year, last year, the year before, and the year before that and also table what I would be paying in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia. I'm not afraid to do that. You will see that they are comparable notwithstanding what the hon. member says or tries to tell the Alberta public in a misleading way. I would hope that the hon. minister, or the hon. member – I'm sorry; never a minister – would do the same thing.

Relative to the question I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, we've been on this path of reform now for quite some time, and our goal has been to provide insurance that is affordable to Albertans – comparable, competitive, et cetera – and accessible. We have stayed on this path through a lot of turmoil up and down.

I can tell you that as this path evolved last summer, we recognized that rates were going up, so we took steps immediately to stop the spiralling increase of rates by putting a freeze in place. People who were going to have their rates increase after October 30 were frozen at the prior year's rates. So they've already experienced a decrease in their premiums that they would have had.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is important, and I hope you'll let me . . .

The Speaker: I know, hon. member, but I also have a list of 15 other hon. members who want to participate as well.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Premier has two chauffeur-driven Buicks, I'm sure his rates are not comparable with the average person's.

If the Premier cannot deliver on his promise to provide automobile insurance premiums on par with those in other western provinces before the next election, will he do the honourable thing and resign?

Mr. Klein: No. Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last part of the question is absolutely not. I look forward to the absolute annihilation and elimination of this individual in the next election. But, again, I speak to the honour, the integrity, and the truthfulness which this hon. member swore an oath to uphold, and then to say that I don't have insurance rates because of the chauffeur-driven red Buick.

Mr. Speaker, in Calgary, although it is a government vehicle, I have a PT Cruiser, hardly a luxury car. In Edmonton I have a vehicle of my own. It's my own vehicle. It is a 1977 Volkswagen bug. Now, because of the nature of the Volkswagen it is classified as a classic and therefore is subject, unless I drive it on a limited basis, to a special insurance rate. I don't drive it on a special occasion; therefore, it is subject to the full rate. That Volkswagen is assessed as if it were almost a brand new Volkswagen.

Mr. Speaker, I say again that I will table the insurance that I pay on that Volkswagen as a full-time driver.

Mr. Mason: Do you promise?

Mr. Klein: I'll table it tomorrow.

Since the hon. member seems to be reluctant to table what he pays on his personal vehicle for insurance, I will take it off the Net if he will give me the information relative to his driving record, his age, and so on – well, I can get that off the Net, but I can't get his driving record – and he will find that it is comparable.

Education Funding

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Red Deer public school board has recently expressed concern about its funding for the upcoming year and has stated that it falls far short of government promises in Budget 2004. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. How much of an increase will school boards receive this year?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In our budget, that was just approved a couple of weeks ago, there was a $250 million increase budget over budget for the basic K to 12 education system. Of those dollars, $192 million went directly to school boards. The remaining $58 million accommodated things such as increase in teachers' pension, curricular changes, things like that. There was a $60 million injection that was announced around November of last year, and I do include that in that number. So be perfectly clear: $250 million is from budget to budget. This represents about a 6.9 per cent increase to the amount that actually goes to the basic K to 12 system. The amount that actually goes to school boards has gone up by 5.8 per cent.

The thing that I really must say, though, as well, is that the way the money is being given out to school boards has changed. With the new flexible funding formula that is there, there are new conditions that have gone out to school boards. Each school board, however, is guaranteed at least a 2 per cent raise over last year, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: based on the annual increases due to inflation and the anticipated increases for all district employees and specifically in the case of Red Deer public, has the school board received enough funding to cover their increasing costs and to hire new teachers?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, in direct relation to Red Deer public they have received a 4.8 per cent increase over the last budget year, so that's a considerable amount of dollars. They received about $1.1 million in November with the $60 million that I just referenced. They received about another $1.7 million.

Mr. Speaker, the interesting thing about the new funding formula is that it's very dependent on the school boards and how they spend it. If they choose to spend it in hiring new teachers, which I certainly hope they would, then it is up to them. If they choose to spend a million dollars on technology, it is up to them. They are accountable to their constituents. That's the way the funding formula has been arrived at.

Overall – overall – it's a 4.8 per cent, or roughly $2.7 million, increase on a $55 million budget, so that brings your budget up to around $57 million for 6,000 students.

Mrs. Jablonski: To the same minister: is this enough money for school boards to begin to address the Learning Commission's recommendation on class sizes?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly hope that $250 million can go a long way to do it. The Learning Commission recommended that their class size guidelines be implemented over five years. I think that this is a start. Can we get to the class size guidelines in one year with these dollars? Probably not. There are some school jurisdictions who will do it.

Mr. Speaker, they have raised a very interesting question, and this question in itself begs a question, and that is, quite simply: what is the funding for each of the individual school jurisdictions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods asked me in the estimates to table all of the funding profiles for the school jurisdictions, and indeed, through to the hon. Member for Red Deer, they will be on our web site today. I will be tabling all the profiles for all the school jurisdictions in Alberta later on this afternoon.

Coal Bed Methane Development

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a number of occasions the Minister of Energy has indicated that there is very little freshwater production associated with coal bed methane drilling in Alberta. Then on April 20, 2004, the Minister of Energy said, "There is no evidence of fresh water production to date." My question is to the Minister of Energy. So which is it? Is there or is there not any freshwater production associated with coal bed methane drilling in Alberta?

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, again, if I had the ability to predict the presence of water in coal bed methane – how much, if it's fresh water, if it's saline or brackish – believe me, I wouldn't be here. People pay millions of dollars a year to somebody who can predict that with any kind of accuracy.

What we do know is that originally two wells in the Drayton Valley area which applied for freshwater production had, in fact, when they produced, saline or brackish water; that is, water with salt in it. We also know that the wells that are being drilled today in upper coals do not have water in them.

So our results to date with coal bed methane in Alberta are extremely encouraging in that there is very, very little, if any, fresh water associated with coal bed methane production.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My next question is directed to the Minister of Environment. How many applications to divert fresh water from an aquifer within a coal bed methane seam are currently before Alberta Environment?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Energy has quite clearly identified, we do not know what is in coal bed methane until there's some application to it.

Now, in my constituency, Mr. Speaker, we have people we call water witches, that can test for water, and it appears that the member opposite might be considered one. I don't know.

As we move forward, we will review all of those applications as they come forward, and if there's any evidence that there is fresh water to be diverted, then they will have to go through a full licensing procedure. As well, Mr. Speaker, there are hearings in the province right now that are being conducted by Energy and Environment to review with Albertans the whole issue around coal bed methane.

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Environment, there was an interjection there. There will be a point of order. There'll be some stormy waters ahead. You might want to rethink what you've just finished saying.

Ms Blakeman: Back to the Minister of Energy. Given that over a thousand coal bed methane wells have already been drilled in Alberta, why does the government continue to classify many of them as experimental, thus preventing people with CBM wells in their own backyards from obtaining information on them?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I do not have any information at my disposal that would indicate that somebody who is having a well drilled on the property that they owned would not have access to the data or not know about the water situation.

I would point out to the hon. member that there are regulations set out in the Water Act, very, very clear regulations, and by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board that guide the use and disposal of any water produced in association with natural gas and coal development. Most wells and shallow gas in Alberta have produced little or no water. The water that's produced in the deeper coal is brackish or saline. So it's not as if the fact that there's methane gas, which virtually goes directly into the sales stream, is brand new to Alberta.

The member, if she'd cast back, would realize that Alberta has been a gas producer for a long, long period of time and with that becomes . . .

Ms Blakeman: Answer the question.

Mr. Smith: Am I answering the question? Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that focus, given the interruptions from the very person who asked the question. I would just simply deduce by normal logic that she would want to be quiet and listen to the answer, and then I would use up less time in this important Assembly, Mr. Speaker, to you.

Having said that – and I don't want to go through the entire history of gas evolution in Alberta, although there are others that would like me to, Mr. Speaker – suffice it for me to say that the Alberta government, the Department of Environment, the Department of Energy, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board do a very, very good job of managing our resources, and inside that resource envelope is included a very precious resource called water.
