We have under Standing Orders our own process for written questions and motions for returns. Standing Order 34 is very, very clear on the process and the manner in which we deal with this. On the Wednesday or Thursday of each week there’s an opportunity for one of the government House leaders to point out and make comments with respect to motions for returns and written questions and which will be dealt with the following Monday. In our Routine we have time set aside on Monday – it’s also the same afternoon that’s set aside as private members’ day – to deal with these particular matters.

Now, openness and transparency is something that this Assembly by way of the very Standing Orders basically said that it would deal with in this kind of a situation. So we had an amendment that was suggested last Thursday. The amendment was reviewed by Parliamentary Counsel, who basically initialled it, and there was advice provided to, I think, the drafter of the original question by 11 o’clock this morning, so that process was met. Then we had a point of order this afternoon.

During the debate something else was added to this discussion, and it had to do with the number of other written questions or motions for returns that this was to apply to. That’s not part of the motion. It’s not part of the amendment. I have no idea how the chair is supposed to determine subjectively to which one of these other motions for returns this particular amendment is to apply. That would be a very unfair situation.

There is a process that this Assembly has written for its Standing Orders. There’s a process agreed to as to what the rules would be and not to be open, clear, and transparent with respect to what the intent of the amendment would be. I have no alternative right now but to ask the Government House Leader: what is the intent of this motion as amended supposed to be? We’re going to hear other comments on this as well.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that because I was about to rise on a point of order to deal with that precise question. Having dealt with a motion, whether it passed or not, which has now included that that information be provided for all government departments, it would be my submission that pursuant to rule 558, which says that “a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the House.” Unless such a rule were in existence, the time of the House might be used in the discussion of a motion of the same nature and contradictory decisions would be sometimes arrived at in the course of the same session.

Pursuant to Beauchesne’s 558 and the fact that Motion for a Return 10 has now been passed as amended in a form which encompasses all government departments, motions for returns 12, 13, 14, 15, and 18, which are on the Order Paper to be dealt with today, and motions for returns 61, 62, 70, 71, 72, 73, 103, 122, 123, and 146, which are on the Order Paper but not to be dealt with today, all of which are exactly the same motion except for the description of the government department, have now been subsumed by passing Motion for a Return 10 as amended, which deals with all government departments. So it would not be in order, in my humble submission, to deal with those other questions.

We could I suppose deal with a matter of this nature by amending the motion to actually include those numbers in the amended motion, but I think you cover the same ground by saying that if private members have put on the Order Paper a motion for a return which is identical in every respect with the exception of the name of the department and you amend the motion to say that that information relative to all government departments is to be returned, then you’ve subsumed the other motions. So I would ask that motions 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 61, 62, 70, 71, 72, 73, 103, 122, 123, and 146 be struck from the Order Paper as having already been determined by the vote on Motion for a Return 10.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would submit that that’s an unreasonable request. He should have named those particular motions and the numbers of those motions in the amendment if that was what his intent was. As it stands, I think that Standing Order 34 takes precedence over what he has just stated and that when we get to those motions – motions for returns 12, 13, 14, 15, and so on as he listed – he has to stand up and say that they’re going to reject them on the basis of this amendment that was just passed.

It is not possible that he could reasonably after the amendment has passed then declare which motions for returns are now going to be subject to that particular rule. Under our orders they are to be accepted or rejected, and I believe that means on an individual basis, and I would expect us to deal with them accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I certainly can understand the dilemma of the chair in respect to this since we’ve now passed a motion which relates to all government departments, but it also limited the scope of the original motion. So I think it’s not possible to argue that it necessarily applies to every other similar motion because this motion that was passed does not include those things asked in the motions for other departments that were excluded by this motion.

So I would submit that when each of these motions is put, it must be incumbent on some member of the Assembly, be it the Government House Leader or someone else, to stand up on a point of order and to argue that that particular motion has been rendered out of order by the passage of the motion that we just dealt with. Then the chair would have to rule on each case as we proceed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, there are two things here that bother me. In this Assembly each week as is per the custom and the tradition of this Assembly the Government House Leader or a Deputy Government House Leader advises the House which written questions will be dealt with in the subsequent week. Last week motions for returns 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and then beyond – there’s no 61 or something else. Other numbers were going so quickly that they went way beyond the chair's ability to write these down. They're not identified as coming up today, and that's a disconcerting thing.

The second thing. There is clearly a definition difference in terms of what the intent of these motions is. I'm going to reserve judgment on this because as far as I understand, the next motion for a return to come up is Motion for a Return 11, and that would be the one that would be called, and it would not fall under the purview of what at least the Government House Leader suggested it should fall under in terms of Motion for a Return 10.

This is unprecedented in our Assembly to my knowledge, and it has some other deviations that I'm not sure all the members really would want to see happen without further contemplation of this. Now, one thing that's becoming very, very clear to the chair – for all intents and purposes one of the most important parts of the Routine was time provided for private members' business in a session, and with an Order Paper as thick as this, it becomes highly unlikely that any private members' business will be dealt with during the duration of this session.

So, Clerk, call the next motion for a return.

Chinook Regional Health Authority IT Costs

M11. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Chinook regional health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the purpose of this motion for a return certainly is to provide a number of different avenues of detailed information on technological services. It also, if passed, would allow Albertans to see the companies with which these contracts are signed and the total dollar amount that goes to each company.

So I would urge all members to support Motion for a Return 11. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm speaking on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness, and he is forced to reject Motion for a Return 11 for the following reasons. In 2002-2003 we had 17 health regions, not 9. Therefore, he cannot provide the requested information for the restructured Chinook regional health authority for the 2002-2003 fiscal year, nor can he provide information by contractor.

His ministry does not require information to be reported by contractor, so these data are not included in the financial statements. However, Mr. Speaker, this fall, after the financial statements for the nine regions are audited, he can provide total dollars spent on information technology services by each of these regions.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, in regard to Motion for a Return 11 I can't understand why the total dollar amount spent by the Chinook regional health authority on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amounts for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year couldn't be determined and put before the Assembly. When we look at the next year, 2003-04, there are estimates for the nine different regional health authorities for diagnostic and medical equipment funding, so surely somewhere in the previous fiscal year there would be a breakdown of the information in regard to the provision of information technology services.

As this government expresses more and more of an interest in contracting out and privatizing health care delivery in this province, this Motion for a Return 11 is certainly appropriate. When we look at the detail that is provided not only in the respective budget year but in the respective annual reports that are filed by the regional health authorities, I fail to understand why this information cannot be provided.

Certainly, we're back in the year 2002-2003. There have been a lot of questions asked about how the budgets are finalized for the regional health authorities. Sometimes it's months after the budget is tabled here. But we're going back almost two complete years now, so surely this information can be provided in regard to information technology services.

In other departments there is an increase in the number of service contracts. Certainly, in Government Services for information technology every year there seems to be a step up, so one is only to assume that the same will also apply to not only the department of health but the Chinook regional health authority. I can't believe that we as members of the opposition and taxpayers would be not given that information, and I am disappointed.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly am disappointed, as well, that this would not be agreed to by the government. This is important information that we all should have and the public should have.

I just want to be placed on record as saying that the government doesn't have good reason to deny this request, and I think that the public should, taking a look at this action of the government, raise questions with members of the government and the government caucus as to why this seems to be an ongoing practice of this government.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. members for Edmonton-Gold Bar and Edmonton-Highlands for their input on this very important question. Once again, in order to analyze information, it has to be provided, and by not being given that information, we certainly don't have the accountability that's required on these huge amounts of dollars, so I would urge all members to support Motion for a Return 11.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 11 lost]

The Clerk: Motion for a Return 12, Ms Carlson.

The Speaker: Now. Okay, hon. Government House Leader. A point of order, I presume?

Point of Order
Amendment to Motion for a Return 10

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. You indicated earlier that you were going to reserve decision with respect to the questions that I had pointed out were redundant due to the passage of Motion for a Return 10, so I would ask for your advice and direction. I'm prepared to suggest that the House deal with this motion on a without prejudice basis so that you can continue to reserve or look for your alternate method of handling this particular issue, because this is the first question that comes up.

This question relates to: "do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Economic Development." Motion 10 was: "do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Health and Wellness." By amending Motion 10 to include all government departments, it clearly includes the Department of Economic Development, and therefore it is our view that this motion is redundant.

I appreciate the fact that you would like to look at this. I'm prepared to suggest that the House, if it's appropriate, can deal with this motion on a without prejudice basis, come back to and deal with the remainder that we haven't dealt with under your decision, your determination to reserve judgment.

The Speaker: Quite frankly, I think that's the proper approach for the House to deal with this matter.

So the question is there for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to move.

Department of Economic Development IT Costs

M12. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Economic Development on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

Ms Carlson: We don't get enough breakdown of how the dollars are spent in budgets. We certainly don't get enough information on the breakdown of dollars requested in appropriations. We don't get enough information coming forward in the business plans. We can't get the minister to answer the questions in Public Accounts. We can't get the minister to answer the questions in question period, so we are doing what has been in fact recommended to us by many of the ministers and the Premier, particularly in this session; that is, to put it in writing, put it on the Order Paper as a written question.

Given that we have followed their advice on this and followed all other possible alternatives to get in touch with this information, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request that the government provide this information.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the government and cognizant of the remarks you made earlier about without prejudice to any ruling you might make with respect to the appropriateness of Motion for a Return 12, given the passage of Motion for a Return 10, I would indicate that we would have to reject the motion.

The information that's being asked for will be provided by the Minister of Innovation and Science pursuant to Motion for a Return 10. Members opposite voted against Motion for a Return 10 asking for a complete return from all government departments with respect to contracts for information technology services, but the Minister of Innovation and Science, who is in fact responsible for technology services for the government, has been I think generous in suggesting that, rather than dealing with each of these motions on a motion-by-motion basis, on a department-by-department basis. Given the need for this House to deal with some 79 written questions and 180 motions for returns that are currently on the Order Paper, it doesn't make sense to deal with them on an individual, motion-by-motion basis.

In this case the Minister of Innovation and Science has said that he'll provide the technology contract services pursuant to Motion for a Return 10. That covers what's being asked for in Motion for a Return 12. I'd ask the House to reject Motion for a Return 12.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly in regard to Motion for a Return 12 I listened with interest, and I would remind all hon. members of this Assembly just why this information is necessary and why it should be provided. I would remind the hon. minister of how many times in the last month we on this side of the Assembly have been reminded to ask for this information. To now hear that we may be denied is disappointing.

You go through the budget and look at the fiscal year 2002-03 for the Ministry of Economic Development, and there's just one line, one element, 2.3.1: information management and dissemination, $2.6 million. That is not good enough, and I'm disappointed at this time that we cannot be provided with that information in the interests of being open and accountable and transparent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to conclude the debate.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I would challenge one of the statements made by the Government House Leader, and that is when he states that the amended Motion for a Return 10 covers Motion for a Return 12. It does not, particularly with regard to the way it was amended in the (b) section.

This Motion for a Return 12 asks for "contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year." Motion for a Return 10 was amended by striking out "broken down by company and total dollar amount for each," and substituting only "a listing of vendors providing these services." So it can't be taken as a precedent for this particular argument at this particular time because it is a different motion.

I would urge all members to please support Motion for a Return 12 as it stands on the Order Paper at this time.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion for a Return 12 lost]

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Department of Environment IT Costs

M13. Ms Carlson moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Environment on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again, this is information that we need to assess how much money is being spent in the department on administrative-type expenses and whether they're getting good value for money and whether or not they're shortchanging the operations of the department.

When we take a look at the amount of budget cutting that's been done in this particular department over the past 10 years, it's significant. When I hear from people who work within the department, I hear repeatedly that operations on the ground are being cut back, and they're not sure where the money is going. So this is one more way for us to ascertain whether or not this government is getting good value for its money. It is certainly information that should be available for the scrutiny of the Official Opposition and opposition members and, for that matter, all members of the public in Alberta so that they also can ascertain whether or not we're getting good value for the dollars that are spent in Alberta.

Further, we should have asked for even more information on this motion for a return. We should have asked for the kinds of competitive bids and the bidding process that we see in this area because, as we all know, information technology is a very competitive environment at this particular time, and that would be one more piece for us to be able to use to ascertain whether or not we're getting good value for money. We didn't go to that amount of detail, so we respectfully submit that this is a very modest request to be made in order to see whether or not we're getting good value.

Once again, we have asked for this information in a number of other venues: question period, Public Accounts, general debate during the Assembly. None of those questions have been answered, all of us at all times being referred to using other methods for discerning this information. One of those listed by the government themselves is to use motions for returns or written questions. Well, we have availed ourselves of that process and now expect the government to live up to their word and actually provide the information.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, I would renew my objection to this question under rule 558 and, of course, indicate that I understand that you wish to reserve decision with respect to the point of order that was raised earlier. Therefore, it's appropriate to proceed on a without prejudice basis in dealing with this particular question notwithstanding that the ruling may in fact rule it out of order if that's the determination you make.

So in proceeding, then, I would indicate that it would be appropriate for the Legislature to reject this question because the stuff and substance of the question has been dealt with in Motion for a Return 10, and the House has already agreed to a motion for a return requiring the return of the information as was approved in that amended Motion for a Return 10.

Just out of interest's sake, the hon. member, in promoting this motion, indicated that this information has been asked for. I'm going to make a point of going back and reviewing Hansard because, while I know that there have been questions asked for and responses made with respect to expenses, I don't recall that similar questions have been asked with respect to information on technology services. So I'm not sure that members of Executive Council have been asked in question period to respond, and even if they were, it would be appropriate to say that there are other ways of dealing with this information.

However, Motion for a Return 10 has been passed. The Minister of Innovation and Science has indicated that he's prepared to provide to the House as a result of that motion all of the information technology services contract information as provided for in that Motion for a Return 10 for all government departments, so this motion is redundant.

There's one last thing that I would like to point out. This afternoon, since Orders of the Day have been called, we have dealt with Motion for a Return 3, Motion for a Return 10, Motion for a Return 11, and Motion for a Return 12, and we're now on Motion for a Return 13. There are 50 motions for returns that are due today. There are another 48 motions for returns which will be due next Monday. We will never get back to discussing private members' business in this House in this session if we deal with each of these questions on an individual basis. So I can only assume that the members opposite, by demanding that we deal with it on a department-by-department basis, are really trying to do away with private members' business instead of getting any information that they want.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make two points. The first is that it's inappropriate for the Government House Leader to refer to Motion for a Return 10 as being the basis for why this particular motion for a return should be rejected. For one thing, a judgment has been reserved on that, and for another thing, if this motion is defeated, then it disappears from the Order Paper forever, never to reappear. So it's an inappropriate basis of argument for him to use.

Secondly, I will not apologize to the Government House Leader if he's getting tetchy because democracy is slow and not to his liking. This is the process that we have in place for dealing with these particular issues. It was up to this member and his government to decide when these motions for returns would come up after their due dates, and that they all come on this particular day is not our fault. This is the process that they have been recommending to us to find out detailed information, and, Mr. Speaker, we are taking full advantage of it and would like them to reciprocate by actually sharing the information with us.

Speaker's Ruling

Private Members' Business

The Speaker: Okay. This has been an interesting afternoon to watch and to think and to say, so I'm going to make some comments. Monday afternoon in our Routine is private members' business, very, very important in terms of the history of this Assembly and everything else that we deal with. Now, among the private members' business is the right for written questions and motions for returns. That is just as important as private members' bills. The problem is time. It's finite. It must end by 5:30 in the afternoon.

Now, there's a whole series of different things that can happen in a parliament. Of course, skilled parliamentarians are supposed to try and figure out the rules and deal with the rules and do it in a democratic way in the sense that we all smile at one another as, you know, certain things happen. So let me just throw out some scenarios to you.

We have private members' bills. It turns out, as I look at the Order Paper, that the first 10 all seem to belong to a private member who belongs to the government caucus.

An Hon. Member: The luck of the draw.

The Speaker: That's right. It was a draw. It was a very, very fair and transparent open draw.

So I suspect that one of the strategies that an effective opposition might do is to make sure that there's never ever any time on the agenda for those bills to come to the agenda. Not suggesting that for a moment. I might also suggest that it could also in some circumstances fall into the game plan of a Government House Leader that if a private member's bill might be of a certain nature – because these are private members' bills. So that might suggest, on the other hand, that opposition members seem to be, at least on this Order Paper that I'm looking at – they're the only authors of the written questions and motions for returns. I do not see any government private members, who have the right to do that, but they haven't. So there's a whole bundle in here.

The way it's going right now is that I sit back and I look here, and my subjective view is that the only private members' bills that will ever reach the floor this session would be government private members' bills, but with all the written questions and motions for returns, if we spend as much time as we did today on five of them, none of those will ever get to the point.

On Wednesday, March 31, 1999, the Government House Leader of the day requested and received unanimous consent of the Assembly to deal with eight motions for returns as a collective. There was also on that same day another government minister in a certain capacity who requested that six motions for returns be dealt as a collective, required unanimous consent. It wasn't granted. So you have all kinds of scenarios.

Now, motions for returns: again, private members most important. Please remember, everybody, that one of the options given to the Government House Leader is to give notice on Wednesday or Thursday of a motion to be dealt with in the Assembly the following Monday: putting all of the motions for returns and all of the written questions in one motion or two motions in this case and dealing with them in one motion, one debate, either to accept them all or to defeat them all. Those are all options.

The Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that wonderful advice.

The Speaker: It was no advice. It was just postulation.

Mr. Hancock: It was advice to the House. In light of that, we should probably all go home and think about it for a while, so I move that we adjourn till 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:27 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 22, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/22

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder

504. Mr. Hutton moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to (a) continue to develop and implement strategies to reduce and ultimately eliminate alcohol consumption prior to and during pregnancy, (b) develop and implement initiatives to support Albertans affected by fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, FASD, and (c) continue to work with all levels of government, partners and stakeholders, and members of the public to create an environment that would address the systemic problem of women consuming alcohol while pregnant.

[Debate adjourned March 15: Mrs. Ady speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to resume debate on Motion 504, brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. As I was saying, prior to coming into office, I had never understood that fetal alcohol syndrome existed. It wasn't a condition that had come by me in life. I'd never really thought that I knew anybody that had the condition and wasn't particularly well educated about it. Yet surprisingly to me I did know somebody with the condition.

I had a friend who had adopted a young daughter. They hadn't been able to have children of their own and were so excited when they got this little baby girl. By about grade 1 they started to notice some major deficiencies. We weren't sure what they were. Nobody was really aware. They just worked harder. They tried to help her with her learning disabilities more, and they tried to help correct her behaviour more. It seemed like the harder they tried, the worse things seemed to go, and there was no understanding for why things weren't going well.

As this child got older and older and moved into adolescence, of course we as other parents started to notice that she had other behaviors that we weren't all that impressed with, and because things were not going well with this daughter, I know that sometimes her mother felt discouraged because she felt like she was being judged as a parent. It wasn't until she was 18 years old that she was diagnosed with fetal alcohol syndrome. So all those years she and her mother lived under this kind of almost cloud or criticism as they didn't understand the condition they were living with, and it was quite a long ways along in her life before they did discover what that was. It made a big difference to her mother to have an explanation and a reason for why things didn't go well.

So when I looked at the hon. member's motion, I said that this is something that I'd really like to speak to because there are some important messages in here. One, we need to prevent it. We need to find a way to help women understand that they should not drink alcohol during pregnancy. Two, we need more strategies and designs to support those that actually have the condition. And its final objective is to request that we continue to work together as governments, as partners, and as stakeholders.

At this point I would like to compliment the hon. Children's Services minister for the work that she and her department have been doing around fetal alcohol syndrome. I know from attending a conference with her a year or so ago that Alberta is looked to as one of the leaders in this area, and a lot of that is because of the work that she's done and the awareness that she's brought around the issue.

Mr. Speaker, fetal alcohol syndrome is most commonly referred to as FASD, and it's preventable. That's the thing that we need to remember. Many of the problems that surround this disorder revolve around the misconceptions as to the medical impact of alcohol consumption during pregnancy. Medical disability is specific, and it relates directly to the amount of alcohol consumed, but it's uncertain. We know that the severity of this disorder can be great.

When I was first exposed to the condition, I remember hearing the statistic that a fetal alcohol syndrome child can cost the system up to a million dollars by the time they turn 18. Then after age 18, of course, if they enter the criminal justice system, it's very difficult to track what that in fact costs us as a government.

People with fetal alcohol syndrome have distinctive physical appearances and generally have lower IQs. Individuals with fetal alcohol effect, or FAE, may look normal and have relatively normal intelligence. I was really struck by this as the chair of the social care review committee when I was interviewing a boy in a foster care facility one day. He was telling me about his ambitions and what he wanted to do someday. He said that he'd like to go to university and then he'd like to go to med school, and he was telling me all about his plans. I thought: here's a boy that has an idea of what he wants to do, and I was impressed with him. So later I said to his foster care mother: you know, here's a boy who has a plan. He seems to have some direction and some focus. I said: he wants to go to med school someday. She said: you know, that's really great, and once he gets used to using a toilet properly, I'm sure he's going to be able to go to med school.

Mr. Speaker, I was completely fooled by this boy. He had such high verbal skills and for all intents and purposes made me think, because he spoke with such confidence about his future, that he really did understand the parameters of his future, which he did not. I think that's the part of the condition that is so deceiving, that sometimes they do have high verbal skills, so they seem or look relatively normal when they are working with great disabilities.

Some of those disabilities can be impulsive actions, lying, violence, and aggression. FAE can result in limited cognitive responses such as the inability to predict consequences or the incapacity to learn from experience. Imagine if you couldn't learn from your experiences all the lessons you would be relearning over and over in life. Individuals may also have a lack of conscience and be prone to addiction. Many individuals with FAE or FASD never get diagnosed like my friend's daughter. Research indicates that there's a high presence of homeless people and roughly 50 per cent of juvenile and adult offenders that suffer from undiagnosed FASD.

Mr. Speaker, the possible outcomes stemming from this disorder are extremely alarming. Research indicates that 95 per cent of individuals who suffer the effects of FAE and who are between the ages of 12 and 51 will have some sort of mental health problems. Moreover, 68 per cent will experience trouble with the law, and 55 per cent will be admitted into a drug or alcohol treatment centre.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the most crucial point to be made this evening is that this disorder is preventable. Prevention strategies along with treatment programs for alcoholic women are the most important parts of alleviating the incidence of FASD. These steps are prudent to battling the effects of alcohol during pregnancy.

I'm remembering a beautiful young girl that I met at an FAS conference. She spoke to the conference about her future. She was just this stunning young woman. She got up there, and I remember she said: yes, I have this condition. She said: I know I'll never marry, and I'll never have children, and I'll never have a credit card. She talked about all the things that she would never be able to do. She seemed to have enough of an understanding that she was working under capacity and that she would not have those futures. I remember looking at her and thinking how tragic it was that her future was so limited by someone who probably didn't understand or wasn't aware or perhaps was aware and not able to prevent addiction, but if someone could have helped her mother, her whole future could have been different.

Therefore, I ask all members to join with me in supporting Motion 504 and encouraging the development of new strategies to combat fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, and I thank the member for bringing it forward. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Kathleen Marta. Kathleen is a parent of two children attending Lendrum elementary school. Kathleen is here as part of the Education Watch initiative. She's concerned about the quality of education her children are receiving and the funding for public education in this province. She's in the members' gallery, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I'd have her rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly some guests who are present in the members' gallery this evening. They have come to observe our Legislative Assembly in action. They are also concerned about the quality of public education that is offered in the schools that their children are attending, and they're also concerned about the funding, the entire funding structure for public education in this province. The people in attendance this evening are Debbie MacLeod, and she is the parent of a child attending Rutherford elementary school. Heather Pick is also here with her oldest son, Fraser Pick. Heather has children attending each of Strathcona high, Vimy Ridge, Strathearn elementary, and Garneau elementary. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm and traditional and gracious welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to members of the Assembly it's my pleasure to make two introductions tonight. The first is to introduce Pat Sawatzky, who is known to many of us because she's been an advocate for education for some time and is here tonight as a part of the Education Watch. She has two children attending MacKenzie school. We'd ask Pat to rise and accept the welcome of the Assembly.

My second introduction tonight is on behalf of the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud. If I may, I'd like to introduce Shauna Gervais. She is a constituent of Edmonton-Whitemud, the parent of two children, one of whom, the elder, is attending the Catholic School of Hope for home-schooling. She's here this evening because of her concern about support and funding for special-needs students within Alberta schools. She is part of the Education Watch initiative. She's seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that she please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder

The Acting Speaker: The hon. member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It does not give me pleasure to rise today and join in the debate on fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. However, it would give me great pleasure to stand one day and celebrate the total eradication of this devastating disorder, and that is what Motion 504 hopes to achieve.

I'd like to say thank you to the Member for Edmonton-Glenora for bringing this motion forward. I know that finding a strategy to reduce and ultimately eliminate alcohol consumption during pregnancy is a goal that this hon. member hopes one day to achieve, as do most hon. members in the House. Although we all know that this goal will take considerable time and effort and the will of Albertans to achieve, it is a worthy goal and one that is very necessary for the safety and stability of our future.

Fetal alcohol spectrum disorder is a very complicated and devastating disease that affects not only those who are afflicted, but it affects all of society. Society pays for this disorder in more than one way: special-needs funding in early childhood, special-needs funding throughout school, special-needs funding through Justice, and special-needs funding for lifelong supports. Funding for individuals with FASD reaches into the millions.

Fetal alcohol spectrum disorder is a lifelong condition. A child with FASD becomes an adult with FASD. There is no cure for this disability. The damage is irreversible. The brain damage to an unborn baby that is caused when a mother drinks is permanent. There is no way to fix that brain damage. FASD is a life sentence. Some people estimate that 50 per cent of the people that are in our correctional facilities have FASD, so you can see that having FAS is a severe problem for crime in our society. We have FAS youth justice committees that try to give supports to our youth that are afflicted.

I have seen the horror in the eyes of a young mother who has suddenly become aware that she has damaged her beautiful child forever, because you see, Mr. Speaker, children don't necessarily have the visual effects of FASD although they have the brain damage. Therefore, they're expected to act normally, and when they don't make the right choices and when they get into trouble, it's called defiance. It isn't really recognized as a disability unless they have been diagnosed with this disability. I have seen the sadness and the tears in the eyes of a 16 year old who suddenly realizes that her problems are because she has fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, because she knows that her mother is an alcoholic.

So what is this government doing to combat fetal alcohol syndrome? Well, I think we need to look at the remarkable job done by our illustrious Minister of Children's Services, as the Member for Calgary-Shaw has mentioned, to see how effective our strategies are. I think our education programs are getting the message across to young Albertans, and I know that there are a lot of Albertans who know that if they are pregnant, drinking alcohol is unacceptable. But I think what we should realize is that the concern is there. A lot of people realize the harm that they can do to their child if they are not careful, which makes me feel that the work being done on FAS is slowly starting to show results.

In a healing circle that I experienced with a group at an FAS conference in Saskatoon, I met a mother and her daughter who had a very strong bond. The daughter suffered many years of believing that she was stupid and defiant because she couldn't remember things and she made bad choices. When the mother and daughter finally understood what was wrong with the daughter, the daughter turned to her mother and asked: why did you drink when you were pregnant with me? The mother, in obvious emotional pain, looked at her daughter and said: because I didn't know; I didn't know.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage every member of this Legislature to support Motion 504 so that we can eradicate FASD, so that we can support those who will always be burdened by FASD, and so that no mother will ever have to look her child in the eye again and say, "Because I didn't know."

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate this evening on Motion 504, drinking during pregnancy, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. This motion deals with the problem of drinking while pregnant, and the motion certainly urges the government to do three very appropriate things.

But one of the things that I have not heard to date this evening, Mr. Speaker, is: how are we going to control advertising of liquor, particularly to young people, particularly to young females? There seems to be an increase, if one visits the University of Alberta, in liquor advertising. Every event seems to be tailor-made to a beer or wine or spirit company. The same applies at Grant MacEwan. The same applies at NAIT whenever one visits there. Certainly, there seems to be an impression left that young people can't have a good time unless there is liquor involved.

We all know that there are marketing programs that are targeted to young people. I'm not going to get into the tobacco companies, but certainly there are with liquor marketing campaigns and liquor sales, and this is something that I would urge the government through AADAC to perhaps have a look at. How are these marketing programs targeting young people, and how are they changing their drinking habits or their drinking patterns?

I had the opportunity not too long ago to visit Braemar school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and there are some very, very good things being done by the Children's Services ministry in regard to pregnancy and young mothers, particularly those who have a need to continue their education. But in this matter, that is certainly one of the things I would like to see addressed.

I would also like to see a dedicated amount of money from the total sale of liquor used to combat this problem. I know there are those that say that there is adequate money for AADAC, but I for one was listening with a great deal of interest to what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre had to say in this Assembly last week, I believe, during question period in regard to the amounts of money that are being set aside for those who have problems controlling their liquor consumption.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are two of the issues that I would like to see added to the scope of this motion. Certainly, this motion is worthy of support. I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to accept it.

I also at this time would like to thank the Assembly for their time.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to speak to the Assembly today in support of Motion 504, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, and I congratulate him for bringing this debate to the floor of this House.

Mr. Speaker, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder is one of the leading known causes of mental illness in North America today. Despite the widely publicized warnings that drinking during pregnancy harms the unborn child, alcohol use by pregnant women continues at alarming rates. Some general figures suggest that the cost for one FASD child is estimated anywhere between 1 and a half million and 2 million dollars over their lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, the total population of FASD in Alberta is unknown. However, due to demographics approximate statistics suggest that in Alberta 3 to 6 out of 1,000 are born with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder while 1 to 3 are born with fetal alcohol syndrome, and that is recognized as significantly high. With that said, it is a birth defect that can be prevented.

I address this Assembly today to reiterate the importance of increasing public awareness through educational resources and a public advertising campaign targeted at prevention amongst high-risk populations here in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, with an increase in public awareness geared toward the systemic problems associated with women consuming alcohol while pregnant, the ability of the government to minimize alcohol-related birth injury and neurodevelopmental disabilities would be increased greatly. Fetal alcohol spectrum disorder cases are spawned from a vicious cycle of substance addiction and pride that must be halted for the sake of generations of Albertans to come.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the solutions to this extremely preventable defect will not happen overnight. I urge the government and all members here to support Motion 504 and further examine other jurisdictions' strategies coupled with the current steps taken by the government in the prevention and treatment of those afflicted with FASD.

Mr. Speaker, a Health Canada study has suggested a three-step prevention process in stages for methods of curbing the progression of fetal alcohol spectrum disorder in Canada. The three steps in sequence are primary prevention, secondary prevention, and tertiary prevention.

Firstly, primary prevention is a broad-based approach that seeks to address socioeconomic factors related to FASD and the effect it has on the health of a population. Primary prevention activities typically focus on behaviour change, systems, and/or the environment. Statistics in Canada and the United States suggest that prevalence of FASD is greater in lower socioeconomic families and communities. Therefore, two relatively effective methods of prevention of FASD, through a Health Canada study, looked at reducing the availability of alcohol through community-supported prohibition or price increases. Prohibition broadly supported by the community or price increases can reduce heavy alcohol use by pregnant women at least in the short term.

The second, moderately effective means of prevention saw the implementation of school/community substance abuse preventative programs coupled with a multicomponent media FASD awareness campaign involving warning labels and posters that resulted in a moderate success rate. However, I believe we should really concentrate in this area. Secondly, the aim of secondary prevention activities targets women of child-bearing age who abuse substances and includes outreach, screening, referral, and brief intervention. The intent is to promote the health of the mother and prevent or minimize harm to the fetus.

Mr. Speaker, secondary prevention activities can only occur when a pregnancy is recognized, which is often four to six weeks or more into a pregnancy. However, studies have shown that absence or reduction in the consumption of alcohol as late as the third trimester may increase the viability of the fetus. This may be achieved through the use of brief and early intervention programs for pregnant women, which has yielded reasonable efficiency. For example, some evidence supports the effectiveness of drug education programs in reducing substance use among pregnant adolescents attending prenatal clinics.

There is also some evidence among experts that advanced training can be effective in helping physicians and other professionals who work with women who suffer from substance abuse. Educating all of those persons involved in a pregnancy at all levels of care would potentially produce a decrease in FASD in Alberta.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, tertiary prevention activities included in the Health Canada study targets those for whom FASD is already a concern. The aim of tertiary prevention is to minimize the damage to the fetus, reduce the likelihood of further affected pregnancies, and increase the capacity of the mother to care for her FASD children effectively. Tertiary prevention involves intensive multicomponent activities including strategies such as substance abuse treatment, birth control, and parenting programs.

Experts have identified that when dealing with tertiary prevention, the potential key for success is the ability to provide women with a comprehensive, co-ordinated, and consistent range of prenatal and substance treatment services. Case management has proven effective when providing for the various health and social needs of pregnant women who use substances. Furthermore, there is no evidence to support the use of punitive measures such as mandated treatment as being effective in improving maternal and fetal health. In fact, such measures discourage at-risk pregnant women from seeking assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the efforts of Health Canada and the continued efforts of this government and its partners in reducing FASD. However, in light of the previously mentioned statistics, in order to eliminate this preventable birth defect, the government should consider focusing its resources on primary prevention, as stated in the Health Canada study, and build upon the already positive initiatives this government and its partners have embarked upon in the last five years.

I believe that Motion 504 will further enhance this government's already steadfast approach to eliminating FASD through the education of our children and addressing the overall health of at-risk pregnant women in Alberta communities. The potential of this preventative education will serve all socioeconomic regions of Alberta for generations to come.

Coupled with the seriousness and complexity involved with the prevention of FASD in Alberta, I would also like to bring to the government's attention the financial and societal risks that have resulted from persons afflicted with FASD. Mr. Speaker, evidence suggests a correlation amongst individuals affected with FASD and the portion of those incarcerated in the Canadian prison system that may be afflicted with FASD. With an inmate population, male and female, of both federal and provincial prisons estimated at 148,979, studies have concluded that those incarcerated in Canadian prisons afflicted with FASD may range from a conservative estimate of .33 inmates per thousand to as high as 9.1 inmates per thousand.

Statistics of those suffering with FASD in our prisons have not really yet been solidified. However, Dr. Christine Loock, a noted expert in FASD research, estimates that at least 1 out of 4 inmates incarcerated in federal correctional institutions are not in prison because of a conscious crime but because of their fetal alcohol affliction. Alcohol injury to the brain impairs individuals with FASD and their decision-making abilities. Therefore, those individuals afflicted with FASD have difficulty in deciphering the difference between right and wrong. It is important to identify those individuals at high risk of FASD and associate the correlation of FASD victims and the likelihood for criminal behaviour. As a result, the potential of individuals in the Canadian prison system afflicted with FASD could be larger than anyone expects.

In light of these potential findings, I would ask the government to consider expanding its funding to support the Prairie Northern initiative, which was designed in 1999 to combat fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. I also urge the government to further enhance the strategies of the initiative along with Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and the Northwest Territories and to investigate more closely preventative practices and methods in deterring alcohol consumption among pregnant women. I believe that the support and co-ordination of the numerous partners and stakeholders working alongside the Alberta government would enhance and further develop the message of the seriousness of the consumption of alcohol during pregnancy.

For those individuals who are already living with FASD, it is recommended that we continue to advocate for a model of service delivery that involves accurate diagnosis, long-term intervention, adequate funding, realistic expectations, and a lifespan approach for those Albertans who are injured. However, Mr. Speaker, wherever possible I would urge the government to further assist in the prevention of FASD in Alberta communities so as to limit the amount of those affected by FASD, therefore reducing the financial and, more importantly, the emotional costs associated with caring for individuals with FASD. That would benefit our society. Supporting initiatives such as DARE, Clean Scene, and other Alberta's Promise members should be a high priority for all of us.

Mr. Speaker, FASD is a significant issue for Albertans and often has devastating consequences for the affected individuals and their families. Abstinence from drugs and alcohol during pregnancy is the key to prevention. Therefore, I would strongly encourage the government to increase our funding for research and development in promoting public awareness campaigns within all Alberta communities. This would undoubtedly identify the horrific consequences of consuming alcohol and/or drugs during pregnancy.

I believe that coupled with an increase in the education of Alberta's youth through things like DARE and Clean Scene, two good examples, enlightening them to the disabling consequences of substance abuse during pregnancy will be the potential solution to combating FASD. As I have previously said, FASD is a birth defect that the government and our society can prevent if Albertans are willing to work together for the common good of all.

I urge all members to vote in favour of Motion 504. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise in the Assembly this evening and add my comments to the discussion and debate surrounding Motion 504, the encouragement of new strategies to combat fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, or FASD.

Mr. Speaker, as we have already heard this evening, this motion works to support the steps already taken by the government but, further, addresses the issue by encouraging new strategies to deal with the effects of fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. The motion takes a balanced approach. It recognizes the important work the province has accomplished to deal with this problem but also acknowledges that we need to take these initiatives further. I feel that we have a challenge before us to increase awareness and develop new strategies in an effort to combat this problem, which has a visible presence in our society. This is especially evident in our corrections system.

Mr. Speaker, I was on a corrections committee led by the Member for Red Deer-North that visited our correctional institutes in Alberta, and this was a continuing concern of personnel and administration. It became very evident to us the challenges that these personnel had in our corrections system.

We need to create a greater understanding surrounding the consequences of drinking while pregnant. Since 1973 the medical profession has known that alcohol consumption during pregnancy impedes fetal brain development, affecting intelligence, learning skills, and behaviour. Studies have not been able to determine the frequency and the amount of alcohol consumption that results in children with FASD. The general consensus of the experts, however, is that there is a risk and that the risk increases with the amount of alcohol consumed.

The levels of alcohol and the direct effects on the fetus are unclear; however, what is clear is that no consumption of alcohol during a pregnancy has been established as safe for the fetus. Because researchers have not been able to determine a safe level of drinking during pregnancy, Health Canada recommends that women who are pregnant or wish to be pregnant – and I stress “wish to be pregnant” – should abstain from drinking alcohol completely.

One of the leading problems surrounding fetal alcohol spectrum disorder is the lack of understanding. This deficiency of knowledge is evident throughout the general population, and there tends to be an inconsistent message amongst professionals. FASD is believed to be one of the leading causes of preventable birth defects and developmental delay among Canadian births. Mr. Speaker, I must stress that it is one of the leading causes, but it is also preventable, a problem the public tends to understand very little about. Addressing FASD is a priority for this province. Preventing the disorder is one of Alberta's major health strategies.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to highlight some of the important steps the province has taken to deal with fetal alcohol syndrome and its related disorders. The Department of Children's Services has supported many programs and has designed services to prevent FASD and assist children who are affected by the disorder. These include demonstration and educational programs along with research and partnership initiatives. I stress that our education systems are new, and there need to be innovative ways to try to bring the message to all individuals.

The department budgets $4.75 million for FASD initiatives. Of that money, $2.4 million gets administered through child and family services authorities and, therefore, goes directly to addressing regional considerations. The local region is allocated control in planning and delivery of services to accommodate the local needs and determine how best to assist individual communities.

Children's Services supports partnerships and cross-ministry initiatives that reflect a multijurisdictional approach to addressing FASD because this is a disorder that affects all Canadian provinces. The Alberta government recognizes the importance of working with other jurisdictions to develop strategies and build on each other's knowledge and expertise to address this disorder. Alberta is a member of the Canada/northwest FASD and the prairie/northern Pacific FAS partnership. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the province takes this issue very seriously.

However, our work is not done. We need to continue providing information to the public about this disorder. We must reach more Albertans and alert them to the dangers of consuming alcohol while pregnant. We also need to create new strategies in the battle against fetal alcohol spectrum disorder.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Member for Edmonton-Glenora for all his hard work on this important initiative. Fetal alcohol spectrum disorder can have a devastating impact on the fetus and the health of a child. It is imperative that we raise awareness about the dangerous consequences of alcohol in pregnancy.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I believe the 38 minutes allocated have run out. Is that correct? As per Standing Order 8(4) the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora has five minutes to close debate.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to just reinforce the comments made by all of my colleagues. I particularly would like to thank the hon. Minister of Children's Services for the work that she is doing right now in regard to this very preventable condition, fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, as well as the Minister of Learning, who actually spearheaded this government's policy with regard to fetal alcohol spectrum disorder. I would like to thank him as well.

I'd also like to make the comment that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned a campaign geared towards discouraging youth and women, in particular. The hon. Minister of Gaming addressed that in his remarks. That certainly is the intent of my motion, and I think it was reinforced by the hon. Minister of Gaming.

With that, I'd like to just thank all my colleagues that have supported this motion, and I encourage all members to support it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 504 carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Health Care Premiums

505. Dr. Massey moved on behalf of Dr. Taft:
Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to eliminate health care premiums.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The debate over the elimination of health care premiums has gone on for some time in the province and continues. A bit of the background. Our caucus has long called for the elimination of health care premiums. We called for it during the 2001 election. Our plan called for the elimination of premiums first of all for seniors with a full phase-out of premiums in five years.

Even members of the governing party were musing prior to the 2001 elections about the elimination of health care premiums. It was at a Conservative convention in October of 2000 that a resolution was passed calling for the end of health care premiums. Members that are in this House were on record at that time as supporting such an elimination. The upshot of that was that instead of the premiums being eradicated, they were actually increased by 30 per cent in the spring of 2002. So quite a reversal from what the convention had asked of the government.

I think it's important to note that the increase in premiums was across the board, including all seniors. That is a direct contradiction to a promise that was made in 1996 by the cabinet that premiums would not be increased for seniors in the near future. As recently as the fall of 2003 there have been musings by some government members about eliminating premiums either for seniors or for low-income Albertans.

That's some of the background to Motion 505, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to note that Alberta is one of only two Canadian provinces that charge health care insurance premiums. It really is a regressive tax that puts the burden on everyone but particularly on middle-income earners and the working poor. Recently that burden became even greater. Based on recommendations from the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, the government boosted health care premiums by 30 per cent in 2002. This represents a huge tax increase, $120 a year for individuals and $240 a year for families.

The application of that premium charge is uneven, Mr. Speaker. A family with children earning $35,000 per year spends approximately 3 cents of each and every dollar on health care premiums while a wealthy family earning $100,000 a year or more spends 1 cent per dollar.

Most Albertans don't mind paying for public health care, but health premiums are not the way to do it. It's time, Mr. Speaker, to eliminate health care premiums. Of course, it's one thing to advocate eliminating those premiums, but it's another to figure out how it's going to be paid for. Health care premiums generate a lot of tax dollars. In the 2003-2004 fiscal year the Alberta government expected to collect $871 million from those premiums. I think that there is the capacity within the system to compensate, however. In the past eight years the government has recorded on average a surplus of $2.27 billion per year, almost three times the revenue generated by the health care premiums.

By introducing the flat tax in 2000, the government decided to forgo approximately $1.5 billion from taxes, putting most of those dollars back into the pockets of Alberta's wealthiest citizens. Mr. Speaker, it would seem that if we can't afford to eliminate health care premiums, how could we afford that kind of a tax break? Eight provinces seem to be able to get along without resorting to premiums.

I think that the change would even be easier to absorb if we didn't know the kind of spending that the government has done, spending that would have allowed in part for those premiums to be eradicated. The topic has been raised a number of times in the last budget in terms of the addition of six new ministries to the government, the money that was spent on committees for health care reform, the money that was put into replacing video lottery terminals. So from one perspective it seems to be but a matter of will and priorities, Mr. Speaker, for the government.

Decorum

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, decorum under 13(1). There's a radio playing or a cellphone or computer of some kind.

The Acting Speaker: I thought I also heard a little bit, but I'm not sure where it's coming from.

Hon. members, that is not allowed in the Assembly as you know. If you're using your Internet, please, you should have your volume turned off.

An Hon. Member: It's over there somewhere.

The Acting Speaker: Well, I'm just cautioning all members. We have an understanding that that should not be the case.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has the floor. Thank you.

Debate Continued

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In closing, I think we have to remember that the money from health care does not go directly to fund health care. It goes into the general revenue just like income tax, corporate taxes, fuel taxes, and school property taxes. Eliminating the premium tax would be like eliminating any other tax, except I think in this case it would benefit those who deserve it most, Alberta's middle and low-income earners. I think it's abundantly clear that health care insurance premiums are unfair, and it's time that this motion was supported and those premiums were done away with.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I just want to put on the record a few comments relative to this motion. I was provoked a lot by what the Interim Leader of the Official Opposition said when he talked about the flat tax and the fact, he said, that the rich were the ones that benefited most from that. Well, the fact is that some 130,000 Albertans were taken off the provincial tax roll by that move. Those were the folks down at the bottom end, and they had a hundred per cent reduction. While it's true that some people all along the way had a reduction, there were those at the bottom that had a hundred.

But I think we have to also look, when we're talking about the elimination of this particular fee, at the fact that it does generate about $900 million in revenue. While it's true that that does go into general revenue, as do all other forms of taxation, if you look at the cost of doctors in the health care system, it doesn't even cover that cost. We are spending about $7.3 billion on health, and so $900 million is – while it's a lot of money, it's necessary to help pay for that huge expenditure.

Now, I am the first to advocate that we need to raise the level at which people start paying and have the graduated scale go farther up. It certainly is a burden for fixed-income people and those that are just above that current level because there are those at the bottom that currently don't pay anything.

But there are other ways that we can help people, I think, even broader and help poorer income people more, and that is to follow the bill that was presented by the hon. Member for Wainwright. He was talking about the removal of the funding of education from property. That is a very complicated system, Mr. Speaker, and I'm sure that the reason the Liberals are honing in on the health care premiums is because that's a 15-second bite. It sounds great. But try to explain the removal of funding of education from property.

I believe that if we start by removing that tax – and it generates some $1.4 billion, and of course with the great management that this government has presented over the last number of years by paying down and paying off the debt and eliminating the servicing of deficit, we are going to have the opportunity to do a number of things in the upcoming years. Certainly, I would hope that one of them will be a reduction in taxation.

8:50

But when you look at what's happening with the funding of education on property, even though we have frozen the mill rate, the fact is that the amount of money that people are paying out of their pockets annually increases. That's because of the way the assessment system works. I believe that if we started with the elimination of the assessment on land – the reason I say that, Mr. Speaker, is because, well, right here in the city, if you go down along the river valley into the older area where there are smaller homes and usually seniors and/or lower income people living there, the fact is that the land that those houses are situated on is going up in value every year. That means that the amount of taxes that they're paying for education is going up every year even though the mill rate is frozen.

That's getting to be a real burden, particularly on seniors and low-income people. So by eliminating that as the first step towards reducing taxation, we would do far more to help people on a low income and a fixed-income than we will by eliminating these health care premiums.

I would urge that we vote against this particular motion but look at two things: look at the gradual elimination of the funding of education from property, and raise the level at which people start having to pay health care premiums. That way we're going to help the very people that really need help.

There's another thing that I must mention about health care premiums. For many, many professional people and out in industry the employer pays for half and, in some cases, the total health care premium. So even if you eliminate them, you don't help those individuals. But if you remove the funding of education from land to start with, everybody gets help.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and speak to Motion 505, the elimination of health care premiums, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Certainly, I have to support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview whenever he wants to cut taxes, and this simply is a tax. It has grown larger and larger as time has progressed.

There were promises made in the past by this government to eliminate this tax. In fact, before the last election, on October 29th in the year 2000, Alberta's grassroots provincial Conservatives endorsed plans to scrap health care premiums, or the health care tax, but four years later it hasn't been done. We were leading up to the election in the winter of 2001, and that was the talk. I'm disappointed to say that it hasn't been done.

We have seen in fact from that time health care premiums go up from $700 million to over $900 million last year. If we're looking for a real tax break for everyone, this is it, and this is why we should support the motion as presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Now, in 2000, before the winter election of 2001, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford also said that getting rid of health care premiums was a bigger priority for him than cutting income taxes. The hon. member went on to say – and I'm pleased to learn that he agrees with us – that this is a tax. It's a tax, and it's got to go.

How could we pay for this tax reduction? Well, there are many ways we could pay for this, Mr. Speaker. We could look at among other things changing our rules on VLT purchases. We recently have spent over $100 million on replacement of VLTs. In the fiscal year 2002-03 we spent $33 million on horse racing. We could forget about that. Let's eliminate health care premiums and forget about the horse racing industry for the time being.

There was $5 million on committees implementing health reform. Some of these committees have yet to report to this Assembly. In 2001 after the election we created six new cabinet spots, and that cost a handy $50 million in salaries, wages, and employee benefits. We've seen the communications and travel budget go up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. The former Minister of Energy is apt to reduce that cabinet. I don't think we could call him a cabinet maker. We might be able to call him in the future a cabinet breaker because I think he will probably reduce it in size.

Now we have this travel and communications budget that has skyrocketed totally out of control. The government may be sensitive whenever people on this side of the House bring up what all this costs, including pitchers of orange juice in London, England, and travel costs in Mexico. We've got vans, limousine services in New York city.

But I was pleased to see on the news tonight the Premier doing some good work in Washington trying to get the borders open for cattle exports. He had a wee glass of orange juice in his hand as he went into this room. It was a glass smaller than this, Mr. Speaker, and it was only half full, so I'm glad to see a fiscal conservative working.

There is money available if we do not have a large amount of money raised from premiums and fees and licences for health care.

Rev. Abbott: Relevance.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is talking about relevance. Well, this is one of the broken promises by this government leading up to the election. This government has continually promised that the only way taxes in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, are going is down. But it's been broken. I'm sorry; this has not been delivered. In 2002, just one year after the election, the government increased health care premiums, a regressive tax, by a whopping 30 per cent. That's not the only way taxes are going is down. That certainly is not.

Now, we can go down memory lane a little further to 1996. The Conservative cabinet promised that premiums would not be increased for seniors in the future. Another broken promise. In 2002 health care premiums for some seniors increased by 30 per cent.

Now, I suppose I cannot talk about the regional health authority boards and the election of those boards and then the firing of some of them because the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar may not think that that's relevant, so I won't go any further with that.

Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons to reduce taxes. There are many taxes that could be reduced, but the first one should be the health care insurance premium. Now, we are only one of two provinces that collect this tax. The other one is British Columbia, and it amazes me that in all the years that the New Democrats were in power in British Columbia, they never eliminated that tax. They never even discussed it that I'm aware of. But we have with this motion the ideal opportunity to reduce taxes in this province, and I can't think of a better way to start than to get rid of this regressive tax.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

head: 9:00      Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance it's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 24, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2004.

As you know, the current fiscal year ends this March 31, and the budget with respect to the year 2003-2004 comes to an end. The budget for the upcoming year will be introduced this upcoming Wednesday, and the process associated with the debate of that will take us into the second week of May. As such, this bill will allow the government to continue to operate while this Legislative Assembly debates that budget into the new year.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and discuss Bill 24, particularly in light of the budget that is going to be brought down for all Albertans on Wednesday.

Now, there are many items of interest in this bill. One only has to look at the office of the Chief Electoral Officer, for instance. We are looking at providing that officer with an operating expense of $3.4 million.

Ms Blakeman: That's interesting.

Mr. MacDonald: It's quite interesting. One would only have to conclude that the government is preparing for an early election. If not, why are we so anxious to fund that office so quickly?

Ms Blakeman: How much was it last year?

Mr. MacDonald: I have no idea what it was last year, but it's certainly something that I'm going to research.

We're looking at Learning, for instance. Here we're looking at close to a billion dollars, just a whisker under a billion dollars. One only has to look at the newspaper or turn on a television set and you look at the financial dilemma some young students are facing in this province. Postsecondary education is getting unaffordable for some; 10 per cent of those, I'm told, that are attending the University of Alberta had in one way or another to apply for some form of emergency funding.

This is the government's idea, this Bill 24, of emergency funding, and I think we would be better suited to starting the budget debate much, much sooner, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the session should start the 15th of January, maybe the third week of January, and then it wouldn't be necessary to have these large sums passed as interim funding.

When we look at education and we look at the billion dollars in here and I go back to previous budgets and previous budget announcements, there was the same government, different Learning minister or education minister, and the former education minister used to get very frustrated with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods whenever he would ask questions about adequate funding for public education in this province, and the former education minister would say: $300 million. He would repeat this figure over and over and over again.

That was money that was allocated over a period of time, and people were left with the impression that this was a large sum of money that was going to be immediately put into the public education system and we would see a reduction in class sizes; we would see infrastructure repairs; we would see a lot of things for public education. But when the public figured out that this was money that was to be brought in over a period of time, then it was much different.

I'm wondering if history is going to repeat itself in a day or two and we're going to be on initial reaction thinking: oh, my, there is a government that is finally coming to its senses. Not only are we going to see the billion dollars in interim supply, but we're also going to see additional funding for public education. It's not going to be an orchestrated public relations exercise, but it's going to be a commitment – finally a commitment – to hire more teachers, reduce class sizes, and fix up a lot of the infrastructure problems in our schools.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we look at this $1 billion amount in Learning, and we think of what's going on in the city of Calgary. In the city of Calgary alone the infrastructure deficit for schools is in excess of $400 million. That's a lot of money. When you add up that infrastructure deficit for schools and hospitals and roads throughout the province, it is in excess of $7 billion. It's a lot of money.

Whenever we keep putting off much-needed repairs or naturally occurring repairs because of the age of the building or the road, the final repair bill is going to be much higher. So sometimes when we talk about deficits, when we talk about public debt held, we forget the entire picture. A government that doesn't, for instance, look at the repair costs in Calgary for the schools is probably a government that in the future is going to have to pay more money to repair those schools and in some cases even build new schools. I don't know how those communities around Douglasdale are doing, how the parents feel. Maybe they're getting new schools already. But there's a need for infrastructure across the province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, whenever we look at this bill department by department, I don't think there's anyone that's been left out. When you consider that we're looking at over 5 and a half billion dollars to operate for two months and we have six pages to explain it or not to explain it . . . What is the plan for the use of this money? Well, it's for operating expenses.

This is a big operation, and usually Conservative governments pride themselves on fiscal responsibility, but in my time in this Legislative Assembly this government has gone from roughly a $14 billion budget to – I suppose on Wednesday we're going to find out that it's a handy $21 billion, maybe $22 billion. That's a significant increase, yet we still have the same problems. We have a public education system that's underfunded. We have a public health care system where we seem more interested in manufacturing wine lists for people recovering from surgeries than we are in reducing waiting lists. I don't think we've got our priorities right here. The hon. Minister of Infrastructure is shaking his head, but I don't think we do.

Now we are requesting to proceed with Bill 24, Mr. Speaker, this interim supply bill, without first tabling the budget. Thus, in my view, the lack of details within the bill is where and how all this money will be spent. Ministers may be reluctant to provide any details on spending in Committee of Supply because of concern of giving away budget secrets. That's fair enough, but it was just in here last week that I heard that with Municipal Affairs we could be pleasantly surprised – I believe that was how it was put – and I also heard that from another minister as well. So I don't know exactly what to believe, but I guess I'll just have to wait and see.

When we talk about this government and its history, the Alberta government has a long history, in my view, of poor budget management. Albertans have been on a fiscal roller coaster for years, facing spending increases and budget cuts all within a matter of months. An excellent example of this is the fiscal year 2000-2001 when this government had to make a 1 per cent cut to all departments as a result of a global economic slowdown. Nevertheless, by the end of the year the government had started to spend again. There was this panic, there was this supposed reduction, but it didn't last too long. You could open your weekend paper and you could see where the government was spending money again.

Now, the lack of budget management was further illustrated just a few weeks ago when this government brought forward their second request for supplementary supply in the current fiscal year, Mr. Speaker. The amount of unbudgeted spending brought in over the course of fiscal year 2003-2004 totals $1.35 billion. The government has said that this is because of economic and environmental disasters that they could not foresee.

To be fair, no one could have predicted BSE or the forest fires our province suffered this year. However, unbudgeted spending of more than $1 billion is not a new habit of this government, nor was it simply brought on by last year's disasters. Last year this government racked up over a billion dollars in unbudgeted spending. The year before it was $1.4 billion. So it's obvious that this government is unable to stick to the budget plans that it develops. Hopefully, with the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East's stability fund we're not going to see any more of the panic that was displayed back in 2000-2001.

This is a government, Mr. Speaker, that's very fond of saying that it's in charge of a $20 billion corporation or $21 billion corporation; however, their brand of fiscal irresponsibility would never fly in the business world. If the CFO of a $20 billion corporation could not have a budget aired and implemented in time for April 1, he would not be the chief financial officer for very long. I think there would be a shareholder revolt. It would be interesting to go to that meeting. However, if this individual were in government, perhaps they would be in charge of the Ministry of Finance.

Something needs to be improved here, I believe, Mr. Speaker. This government cannot maintain stable funding, this government cannot manage program cuts, and this government does not listen to Albertans when setting priorities. So why should we rely on Bill 24 that this government is presenting in regard to interim supply? Certainly, one looks at the continuity of the civil service, and there are certain government programs that have to be delivered and in some cases administered. But if we're really concerned and we really want to improve, I think we should take the advice of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, and let's get the budget process going a little earlier. If that means that we have to start the session in January, then that is fine.

Now, in regard to this bill, Mr. Speaker, with the $184 million that's going to Children's Services, how much of this money will go to implementing the five recommendations the Auditor General made in his last annual report?

We're looking further here at $215 million in Community Development. How much of this money will be contracted out to private operators who run provincially owned parks? That is a real bone of contention, if I may use that term, with campers and outdoors people in this province. They're sick and tired of this government charging them $5 for a little armload of wood whenever they go camping. It's wet wood; it's dirty wood. I don't know where they find this wood. Whenever we talk about privatization, Albertans bring this up, and they're not happy.

Now, Economic Development. What have we got for Economic Development? Fourteen million dollars. How much of this money will be spent towards opening Alberta's new trade office in Washington, D.C.? How much of this money will be spent on out-of-province trips? [interjections] How much of this money will be spent trying to promote the agricultural economy after BSE?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor. If you wish to participate in the debate, you may rise after he's finished.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, with Economic Development I don't want to be giving the hon. minister encouragement when others would caution me not to, but certainly Alberta's exports to the People's Republic of China indicate by industry that with livestock from January of 2002 to December of 2003 we saw a significant reduction, to zero, of the number of cattle that were shipped there.

At some point if there were to be a trade mission to open up these markets to Alberta products, whether they be boxed beef or live cattle for breeding purposes, I would have no objection to that. I just see this as something that really needs to be done. It's a large market, and I'm surprised that we have no participation in that market. If the minister were to go there sometime and try to sell cattle on the hoof or boxes of beef, you wouldn't hear a complaint from this member, providing he tabled his expenses when he returned.

Now, Energy. The Energy department is spending $50 million here. How much of this money will go towards this government's $3 million propaganda campaign to promote electricity deregulation and other communications campaigns? I'm astonished that we're trying to convince rural Albertans that are participating in REAs and gas co-ops that this isn't in their interests. REAs, of course, operate on a not-for-profit basis; so do gas co-ops. They're both managed democratically by the people they provide the utility to, and they're sort of an Alberta tradition that works. It astonishes me why we would have a communications plan to convince Albertans that this is not in their interests.

Again, Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Energy be doubling the communications budget this year, as he did last year? How much of this $50 million will be spent on the minister's travels? Certainly, this minister travels a lot. He travels more than Pepe. You know, he gets around. There's no doubt about that. Again, how much of this money will go towards ensuring that Albertans are paying the lowest prices for electricity and natural gas instead of the highest prices, as they are paying now?

Now, the Environment department is also going to get $30 million. How much of this money will be spent on a water conservation strategy? How much of this money will be spent on initiatives to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and on other Kyoto requirements? How much of this money will fund green technologies?

Executive Council, further down here, is getting $6 million. Why is the Executive Council requesting almost double the interim supply that it has requested in the last two years? Where are the extra dollars going? How much of this money will be spent on spin doctors, and how much of this money will be spent on out-of-province travelling, on the Premier's and his staff's dining bills and hotel rooms?

Finance is getting $18 million, and then nonbudgetary disbursements are going to bring this up to over $36 million, Mr. Speaker. How much of this money will be spent on improving the Finance minister's budgeting skills? Last year the government spent $230,000 on advertising for Budget 2003. How much will the government spend this year trying to convince Albertans that Budget 2004 is good news?

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, this debate for me is always about two things: timing and information. We always get the same line from the government members about, well, just given circumstances, sometimes circumstances beyond their control – once there was a reference to circumstances that the federal government had under their control. All kinds of reasons and sometimes no reasons as to why the government is late bringing its budget in and therefore needs to get an interim supply in order to keep running and pay everyone's salary and the rent and keep everything going.

Frankly, that argument just does not hold up. The government is in complete control of the agenda here. They can bring the session in whenever they wish and certainly well in advance of the time needed to debate the complete budget and the accompanying supply bill and get it all passed before the fiscal year-end so that we didn't have to do an interim supply. But this has now become common operational timing for this government, so they keep coming up with these frankly rather feeble excuses as to why they're late and why it can't be done on time and why, therefore, they need this interim supply, all the while pretending that somehow this isn't their fault.

Well, it's feeble and I expected better out of the government, but that's the one they keep using. I think the best one was that they had to wait for the federal government to table a budget and they couldn't do it until after the federal budget had come down. Well, if you look back over the last eight or nine years, I think the federal government has actually tabled a budget anywhere close to this time twice, maybe. So that was a particularly feeble year for excuses, that they had to wait for the federal government budget to come down before they could do theirs. It really is hardly connected, and most times you don't get a federal government budget tabled anywhere near it.

The second part of it is around information and just having one or two lines that appear in the supply document saying: well, you know, it's covering supplies and salaries. And there's a sort of little catch-all line. Here we go.

Operating expense includes salaries, supplies, grants, amortization of capital assets and debt servicing costs. Equipment/inventory purchases consist of consumable inventories and movable capital assets.

Then it sort of gives you a breakdown on how they do that. Then nonbudgetary disbursements and lottery fund payments. That's it. That's the description that you get for – what are they asking for? – over a billion dollars.

So there's a rather glaring lack of information. You know, it's as though asking for information is somehow a bad thing in this Assembly, because whenever the members of the opposition ask for information – you know, how am I supposed to make up my mind whether to support this interim supply? I'd like to know what the money is going to be spent on. They're asking, I think, for three months' worth of operational budget. That's going to cover April, May, June. Well, in some departments that's a very significant period of activity. Maybe most of its activity or significant activity takes place in that time.

For example, the budgets that the schools use are late this year, I understand, but basically they have to make up their mind about what kind of requisition they're going to have or how much money they're going to have to operate the following year, and that all has to be done before June. So for money coming from the provincial government to the school boards, that's a very important period of time, because by June all the budgeting cycles are done and everything is set for the following year. So that period of activity is very important.

I had raised a number of questions during the Committee of Supply debates on this request for interim supply connected with points that had been raised by the Auditor General. I did in fact have one minister who did her best to answer my question on the spot, and that was the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I didn't hear from any of the other ministers when I raised issues and concerns from the Auditor General. I didn't get any kind of answer back as to whether they were addressing those concerns and, therefore, whether I could rest a little easier when I was to trust them with voting through three months' worth of supply for their particular department.

So ever questing for information, I'm going to try again, Mr. Speaker, with a number of areas. Now, I have some in each department, and then I've collected a whole file folder of little bits and pieces that I've tossed in there to question various departments on. I don't want to go over territory already discussed by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. I believe he went as far as the Gaming budget?

Mr. MacDonald: I didn't get to Gaming.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, he was just going to start on Gaming. Okay.

So I have some questions, then, starting with Gaming. That department is requesting $364.1 million. I'm wondering whether any of this money will be spent on rehabilitation programs for gambling addicts. In particular, I have raised a number of times in the past whether the department will tie together the amount of money raised through specific kinds of gambling or alcohol-related revenue to treatment of problem gambling or problem drinking. So two questions there: whether any of that money will be spent on rehabilitation programs and whether there would be a ratio or a direct link between the amount of money raised through, for example, VLT revenues and the amount of money spent on treating problem gambling.

I'm wondering how much money this year will be spent subsidizing the horse racing industry. I'm sure the minister will leap to his feet and go: we don't subsidize the horse racing industry. Of course, he knows that what I'm referring to there is the special deal through the RECs, racing entertainment centres, where there was a particular deal that was requested by Horse Racing Alberta and, in fact, granted by the government whereby they would be able to keep a larger percentage from the slots and VLTs. Maybe it was just slot machines.

Usually the deal was about 15 per cent back to the operator of the facility, 15 per cent to the charity, et cetera, et cetera, and in this case it came out to a much larger percentage that went directly to the operator, and that's how they were helping to pay off their machines, I think. Specifically, how much money is flowing through there to the horse racing industry? I think that last year it was $65 million or $81 million that flowed through. So three questions in that department.

Under Government Services, which is requesting $59.3 million, will any of this money be used to offset the cost that energy consumers are being forced to pay for the Utilities Consumer Advocate office?

The second question: how much of this money will be spent protecting Albertans from door-to-door energy marketers? Is there another campaign being expected there? Again, there is an expectation that Albertans will move to a contract basis where they will be signing a contract for purchase of electricity and gas. What other kinds of consumer protection, consumer enlightenment programs does the government have in mind around this new system so that we don't get ripped off?

How much of the money will be spent on updating the Fair Trading Act in order to protect Alberta's energy consumers from Direct Energy? That's an interesting one, but we keep hearing that poor Direct Energy keeps getting sued. They're up in the United Kingdom, and they're also before the courts in several places in the States, every time, I think, because they have unsavoury practices in pressuring people to sign these energy contracts. I know that the government has worked hard to entice Direct Energy. We even changed some legislation to make it more appealing to them to come into Alberta.

So is there any balance on this enticement that's going to be around protection for consumers in Alberta from any of the unscrupulous practices that Direct Energy has exhibited in the United States and in the United Kingdom? [interjection] Well, I didn't have to bad-mouth them actually – I'm getting heckled by one of the Calgary members here – because they did that to themselves by having such unscrupulous practices that they ended up before the courts. Of course, those court documents are in the public purview, and anyone can go and look it up. So I don't have to bad-mouth them; they managed to do that to themselves.

Under the Health and Wellness department $2 billion is being requested. Now, the government recently announced a $5 million boost to education and health, and I'm wondering how that breaks down. How much of that $5 million is coming into Health and Wellness, and will any of this money particularly be directed to help the emergency room situation in Calgary and Edmonton? My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview has raised a number of times the code burgundy situation in the Calgary emergency rooms in their hospitals there.

Mr. MacDonald: Does that mean there's no red wine in the hospital surgical suites?

Ms Blakeman: No. The code burgundy is not about whether there's red wine available in the surgical suites. It's about having to create an additional code reflecting an emergency situation that is even more severe than a code red. That's what a code burgundy is, but I can understand how the member might have been led to believe it would be about something else.

Specifically, then, when we're looking at the emergency room situation in Calgary and Edmonton, how much of that money would be directed toward the code burgundy occurrences, and how is it expected that this money will decrease waiting lists? I know the government is planning on publicizing waiting lists, but what's being done to decrease the waiting lists?

Looking at Human Resources and Employment, $286.9 million is being requested. How much of this money is earmarked for the nurses' salary settlements and for the AUPE salary settlements? Surely that is going to pertain to the first three months here that is under examination.

Under Infrastructure we have $400.7 million that's being requested. How much of this is the Department of Infrastructure's budgeting for natural gas rebates for next year? The government has accrued a $7 billion infrastructure gap from the outstanding requests for infrastructure support from school boards, health authorities, and postsecondary institutions. How much of this money will go toward paying down this $7 billion infrastructure gap?

That's always an interesting debate. We have the government quite proud of itself, although frankly I think that the credit goes to Albertans, for having paid down debt. I think they're now down to owing $3.5 billion, but at the same time we've created a $7 billion infrastructure debt. So I don't know how much smart managing can really be credited there when we're down to $3.5 billion on the one side and we've increased a deficit on the other side to $7 billion. I think there's a problem there.

How much of that $400.7 million will go toward building new schools or upgrading existing schools in Alberta? How much of this money will go toward building a hospital in southeast Calgary? We've had a little hint of an announcement there, but how much exactly? One presumes that some of the money will be advance-planning money that would probably be spent in the first three months. Therefore, this budget is under scrutiny, so what's the answer to that?

Ah, Innovation and Science. How much of this money will be going into the SuperNet project? How many more things will be added onto that running total that we have under SuperNet, which by the time it's all finished and done may in fact have been overtaken and will become obsolete technology.

Mr. Herard: Aw, come on. Why don't you learn about that?

Ms Blakeman: I have actually spent quite a bit of time learning about it. This member is very interested in getting into the debate, so I'm looking forward to what he's actually going to say.

I'm wondering how much of this money, if any of it, is going to go toward making sure that the other 4,400 and some hospitals, schools, and municipal buildings will get actually hooked right up to the SuperNet.

International and Intergovernmental Relations: $2.3 million is requested. How will this money contribute to the reopening of the U.S. border to Alberta beef, and how much of this money will fund activities related to the softwood lumber dispute?

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions?

Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a second time]

Third Reading

Public Trustee Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General it is my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 19, the Public Trustee Act.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 19 is a complete revamp and updating of the Public Trustee Act. All of the bills are progressing very quickly through the Assembly in this spring sitting, mostly because we are not able to hear from the many government members here who are not adding to the debate, which is a pity, actually, because then their members don't know where they stand on particular bills.

I spoke fairly thoroughly during second reading of Bill 19, the Public Trustee Act, to the various updates that were being done. I spoke about the different catchment, whether it was a legal update, an administrative update, or whether it was around changes to the funds and how the funds would be administered. There is an additional section that is meshing with the new changes that are being brought forward under the Minors' Property Act, which is appearing in this session as Bill 20.

I did the usual stakeholder loop that I would do with bills like this. In fact, a number of the requests for the updating and modernization of the bill have come from the legal community and those that deal fairly frequently with the Public Trustee Act. I have actually heard no reservations or concerns expressed, at least that have reached my ears. The only request that I did have was concerns around power of attorney, so there is still some confusion in the minds of the public as to what the Public Trustee does and what powers they have. The one concern that I heard really wasn't pertaining to Bill 19, the Public Trustee Act; it was to a different act entirely.

So I'm happy enough with what I've seen in the updates and modernizations that are appearing in the act. As I say, from stakeholder groups I've heard no concerns expressed, so at this point I'm happy to support the passage of Bill 19 in third reading. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 9:41 p.m. the Assembly adjourned until Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 23, 2004 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 2004/03/23
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Give to each member of this Legislature a strong and abiding sense of the great responsibility laid upon us. Give us a deep and thorough understanding of the needs of the people we serve. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, on your behalf I would like to introduce 15 visitors from the Barrhead-Westlock constituency and Tokoro, Japan. The town and county of Barrhead formally twinned with the town of Tokoro in 1991, and each year Tokoro sends a group of high school students to spend a week in Barrhead. With us today are eight students from the Tokoro high school. Accompanying the students are Mr. Shuji Abe, Ms Miwako Nakadai, Mr. Hiroshi Minagawa, Ms Debbie Bender, Mr. Kim Kalmbach, Ms Louise Rau, and Mr. Michael Ward. They are seated in your gallery this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Dr. Angèle Leong-Sit, a constituent of Edmonton-Whitemud. She's the parent of three children, two of the children attending Earl Buxton elementary school in the Edmonton-Whitemud constituency. Dr. Leong-Sit is here as part of the Education Watch initiative. She's here this afternoon because of her concern about the quality of education her children are receiving and the funding for public education within Alberta schools. Dr. Leong-Sit is seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that she please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's my pleasure today. When I first arrived in Alberta 26 years ago, I met some friends that are with us today. In fact, one of these gentlemen sat on the city council of Fort McMurray for many, many years. He's here today in the public gallery with his wife and friends. It's my pleasure to introduce Bill and Carol Gendreau, Sandy Williams, and Helen Gallant. I want to say that they are truly good friends, and it's a pleasure to see them here today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a constituent and someone whose name is quite well known to Albertans and to us politicians, and that is Mr. John Carpay, the Alberta director of the Canadian Taxpayers Federation. John is here to observe this afternoon's House proceedings. John and his wife, Barb, also have a brand new baby boy who is exactly six weeks old today. John is seated in the public gallery. I'd like him to stand and receive the very warm welcome of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two guests who are seated in the public gallery. First, Mr. Laurie Hawn. Mr. Laurie Hawn is the recently nominated candidate who will carry the colours of the new Conservative Party of Canada in the new riding of Edmonton-Centre. Mr. Hawn is in the public gallery. I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm response of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 52 constituents of mine, 50 being students from St. Lucy Catholic school accompanied by two teachers, Mrs. Lynn McLagan and Mr. Paul McNeely. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 55 constituents of mine from St. Dominic Catholic school. They are seated in both the members' gallery and the public gallery. They're accompanied by their teachers, Ms Sherri Anwender, Mrs. Karen Letwin, and their parent helpers are Mrs. Monique Malo, Mr. and Mrs. Shokoples, and Mrs. Deanne Riley. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly several guests from my constituency who are seated in the members' gallery. I'll ask them to rise as I read their names: Peter Duncan, who has one child attending McKernan elementary junior high, the school from which I graduated; Jane de Caen, who has three children, one attending Harry Ainlay, one at Avalon, and one at McKernan; Liz Miller, who has four sons, one at Scona, two at McKernan, and one at Windsor Park; and Karen Ferrari and Preet Sara, who both have children at Windsor Park and McKernan. These people are here today as members of the Education Watch initiative. They're observing our procedures and are very concerned about both the quality of education and the level of funding. Please give them all a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much again, Mr. Speaker. It is also my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Stephen Kushner. Mr. Kushner is well known to many members of the Assembly as the president of Merit Contractors. They represent open shop members of the construction industry, and he's here to view the proceedings of the Legislature. Mr. Kushner, could you rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one other guest to introduce who is here also as part of the Education Watch initiative, and her name is Danica Wolkow. She is seated in the members' gallery. Please give her a warm welcome as well.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Government Expense Claims

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government still won't come clean on its big spending habits, which should worry Albertans given that a budget is coming down tomorrow. The Liberal opposition has asked questions about government expenses in the House only to be told to put the questions in writing. We put the questions in writing only to be told we should do motions for returns, but yesterday our very first motion for a return on ministerial expenses was voted down. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. What is this government hiding?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Justice on my behalf filed a document. It's called the report of selected payments to ministers and former members of the Legislature and lists off all of the payments that were made to every member in this Assembly, even opposition members: their salaries, their expenses, and any payments that were paid to associates of members.

I also said in this Legislature earlier, as this carping keeps going on, that we have a full disclosure and we are audited on an annual basis by our own Auditor General, who has made reference in the audit report, Mr. Speaker, that he has audited the expenses and reimbursements of members of the Legislature, which includes everybody on both sides of the House, and has found nothing untoward.

We also have another process, Mr. Speaker, that I think is very, very important, and that's our Ethics Commissioner. He is obligated – I'm going to be saying something that you already reminded us of – that if there, in fact, are things that have come to his attention that need to be looked at, he would let us know. From the last conversation I had with him, there were no outstanding issues that needed to come before this Assembly, so members on both sides of this House have been following the rules and regulations that have been put forward.

Again I will say that our government is open and accountable to Albertans. We have been the only government in all of Canada that releases these documents on a quarterly basis and updates Albertans on the actions of their government. Quite frankly, from the results I think they're quite happy with us.

Ms Blakeman: Then answer the questions.

Why did government members vote down a motion to provide the expenses for the Minister of Energy, who with 23 trips under his belt is this government's most frequent flyer?

Decisions of the Assembly

The Speaker: The decisions of the Assembly are not to be the purview of the question period. Votes in the House that were taken yesterday are recorded in the documents of the Assembly. This is not a question to be answered by a minister of the Crown. It was the members of the Assembly that made the decision, not one person.

The Speaker: Second supplemental, hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: does this government expect Albertans to believe that its spending habits are reasonable when it refuses to provide the spending figures to prove it?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I believe that by filing this document that, quite frankly, lists off all your expenses as well so that people can ask questions as to why you have huge travel expenses when you live in the city of Edmonton – it's something you may want to answer to your own constituents.

Quite frankly, this was filed in this Assembly yesterday, and we are open and accountable. I can go through each page, Mr. Speaker, if the Assembly would like, but it is clearly here. It's available, and if people want to read this document, please pick it up or go into the library and get it.

Out-of-province Government Travel

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, when the government doesn't outright refuse to provide information about its lavish spending habits, it prices the information out of reach instead. This government wants over $3,000 from the Alberta Liberal opposition just to tell Albertans how it spent their money on three recent government out-of-province trips. My first question is to the Minister of Government Services. Why should it cost almost $1,800 just to access information about the expenses incurred during the Premier's mission to the United Kingdom when in the year 2002 over $2,000 was spent on lunch alone in London on a previous trade mission?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, under freedom of information and protection of privacy there is a process by which fees are charged for the service of getting that information, because there is a cost to assembling the information, photostating it, and making sure that it is presentable and ready for the people that have requested specific information.

If a request for information comes in that is very broad based, asking for a lot of information that isn't specific, well, then, of course, the cost is appropriately higher than if you should ask for specific information. The costs for freedom of information and protection of privacy requests in Alberta are the lowest across Canada, and it's directly attributable to the amount of information that is being requested.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the same minister: why should it cost another $1,200 to access information about expenses incurred during the Premier's recent missions to Washington and New York and to India and Hong Kong when over $8,000 was spent on a car service alone in New York City in 2002 on a similar trip?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I certainly wasn't on the trip, and that question has been answered in this Assembly on two other occasions, if I recall.

Mr. Speaker, our Department of Government Services is responsible for the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. We are responsible for training privacy commissioners in each and every department. Those are the people that provide the information upon request, and that is the extent of Government Services' responsibility for the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. So I am not responsible for every single solitary department that gives out the information through their privacy commissioners.

Mr. MacDonald: Given that it's apparent that this government is more concerned about protecting the information from the taxpayers than they are about spending less on their trips, why is this minister admitting that charging such outrageous fees is a disincentive to democracy, to accountability, and to transparency in government?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, there is a $25 fee for the application to come into any minister's office. That is the lowest fee across Canada. The lowest fee across Canada. If a member or someone from the public is not satisfied with the information, they can also go to the Privacy Commissioner and ask for an appeal. That is part of the process, and that is also part of what the select standing committee of this House put into the report when the freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation is reviewed every three to five years in this Assembly.

In terms of actual costs that were on that trip, the hon. Minister of Economic Development was on the trip, and maybe he can shed some light on what the member is offering.

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Speaker, it would be a delight to rise. [interjections] Do you want an answer, or are you just going to . . .

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please. Through the chair.

Mr. Norris: Mr. Speaker, I did indeed have the honour of being with the Premier on both those trips. The limousine service they're talking about was organized by our department. It was actually two Ford Econoline vans. Our department did a cost comparative analysis to put four cabs on hold in New York City for the 12 hours a day that we were there or get the service, and we saved about $2,500 by doing the service.

Aside from the security risks not addressed by having the Premier of the province in another country wandering around in New York City trying to get cabs, the reality is that to have an efficient business trip, you have to have your time organized, and your time and your meetings are very important. I don't know if you understand that, not having owned or run a business, but it's very important to be punctual when you're visiting other people.

The reality is all of those costs can be documented. Our department and others have made an effort to get the lowest cost for Albertans because the trips are vitally important for our exports.

Calgary Health Region

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary health region has again been caught in its own web of political spin. After claiming last week that an error in June 2000 with potassium chloride led to, quote, immediate and corrective action, end quote, we now learn that a similar incident occurred only two months later. In response the region has put forward one of its spin doctors, the Minister of Health and Wellness's former executive assistant, now acting VP for the Calgary health region, to backpedal by claiming that changes weren't immediate and that things take time. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that this minister was so quick to disband WestView regional health authority for failing to balance its books, why is the minister not taking similar action with the Calgary health region for needless deaths resulting from years of mismanagement?

Mr. Mar: Because the important thing, Mr. Speaker, is that we move forward on helping ensure that system errors in fact don't occur in the future. To that extent, what we've done as a government is we've asked the Health Quality Council of Alberta to work with the Canadian Patient Safety Institute to work with other experts to report to Albertans on the best practices that can be employed for the handling of materials that contain potassium. I expect that the experience and the recommendations of other jurisdictions will be reviewed. I want the Health Quality Council to work with other reviews, such as internal reviews being conducted by the Calgary health region and any external reviews that are being done by professional associations, like the pharmacists.

I would expect that the outcome of these reviews will result in health authorities throughout the entire province adopting the very best practices to ensure that errors in potassium handling will not occur in the future. I also expect, Mr. Speaker, that the process will be undertaken and completed on an urgent and timely basis over the next several weeks.

Dr. Taft: Given that we've heard too many reassurances and have seen too many deaths, Mr. Speaker, what will it take for this minister to finally act and remove the Calgary health region's senior management and appoint an independent administrator?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member has received similar correspondence as I've received from the Canadian Society of Hospital Pharmacists because I was copied with a letter that was sent to him, and I will table this at the appropriate time. I want to quote out of this letter.

System failures contribute to the majority of errors in health care – not the negligence of individual providers. Although we do not have all of the facts, it would appear that the incident in Calgary may have occurred as a result of system failures. Much has also been made of the fact that pharmacists did not check the dialysate product. Studies have however proven that a tech-check-tech system is a safe and effective standard of care. Hospital pharmacy technicians receive proper academic instruction and their training is supplemented by additional certification within hospitals.

Finally, this paragraph concludes by saying:

Studies have also shown that the optimal place for pharmacists within the health system is advising and recommending therapies at the point of prescribing, not in the checking of drug products.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a letter dated 22 March 2004 from the Canadian Society of Hospital Pharmacists.

The Speaker: It will be tabled at the appropriate time.

Mr. Mar: Yes, sir.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is the Calgary health region continuing its policy of hiring well-connected Tories for senior positions within the Calgary health region?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the issue is not whether one's political credentials are right. The question is one of one's qualifications. I think it's important to know that association with the Conservative Party is not a barrier to getting a job, nor is it a requirement to getting a job.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for West-Yellowhead.

Learning Commission Recommendations

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last September for no good reason this government laid off 1,000 teachers, leading to a spike in class sizes and deteriorating classroom conditions for Alberta students. Tomorrow's budget is the government's last opportunity to correct these errors by fully funding the Learning Commission recommendations in accordance with the timetable laid out in the report. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Has the government decided to fully fund the implementation of the phase 1 recommendations of the Learning Commission, in particular the reduction of class sizes, to make sure that parents, teachers, and school boards once again don't feel let down by this government?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just in my opening comments I would say that the budget would be tabled tomorrow, so I will not be talking about anything specific when it comes to the educational funding.

In the Learning Commission phase 1 is recommending approximately a little over $300 million over the first three years of the plan. It recommends over five years that there be put in right around $600 million. Also included in that was a recommendation for the funding formula to be put in and to be added to the funding.

I will say to the hon. member in regard to his specific question about class size, about teachers, about parents that included in the funding formula is a great amount of flexibility which allows the school boards to spend the money as they see fit.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that over one-quarter of kindergarten to grade 3 students in Edmonton public schools are packed into classrooms of 25 or more, within what time frame will the government implement the Learning Commission's class size guideline of 17 students in kindergarten to grade 3?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, included in the Learning Commission is that that recommendation be over five years. We are working on that, and I hope it to be considerably less than five years.

Dr. Pannu: My final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: given the Learning Commission's focus on improving early childhood education, what is the government's time frame and action plan for implementing the recommendations for full-day kindergarten and half-day junior kindergarten for children at risk?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm certainly glad the hon. member added in the last statement, which was "at risk." One of the current issues that we are dealing with is: how exactly do you define an at-risk child? Many of the factors that are out there are indeed only proxies, and we're attempting to get the most accurate proxy.

I will say to the hon. member that one of the things we're looking at at the moment is actually language and speech delay. That seems to be the most accurate proxy that is out there for high-risk needs, and we're currently looking at how we could implement that. It does have a lot of ramifications to not just the K to 12 system but also to the postsecondary system as speech pathologists and the like are very few and far between right at this moment.

We are working at it hard. I would anticipate that it will be done probably within the next two or three months. But, Mr. Speaker, the key thing to this is that when we do it, it's going to be done well. It is going to be done accurate; it is not necessarily going to be done quick.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the World Trade Organization panel ruled that the process the United States used to determine whether softwood lumber poses a threat of economic harm to the United States producers does not comply with international trade law. The panel also said that the United States must take steps to comply with the WTO ruling. My main question is the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. How will this WTO decision impact the future NAFTA ruling in the dispute against Canadian softwood lumber for our Alberta industries?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Jonson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are two resolution panels involved here that are looking at this overall matter, one under the NAFTA, the North American free trade agreement, and one under the World Trade Organization. The issue is whether the U.S. International Trade Commission currently determined that our softwood threatens injury to the United States producers. Duties cannot be imposed unless it is established that imports are causing or threatening harm to producers in the importing country.

Mr. Speaker, back in September a NAFTA panel also found flaws in the International Trade Commission's analysis and have told the ITC to fix those flaws. The ITC issued revisions to its original ruling in December, and the NAFTA panel will make a decision on those revisions in April.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Will the WTO ruling result in a reduction in duties or monies being returned to the Canadian softwood lumber producers?

Mr. Jonson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the simple answer is: not right now. Legal processes are not yet over, unfortunately. So far the U.S. has failed to make its case that our softwood lumber is threatening cause or harm to producers. However, the U.S. still has the option to appeal the WTO ruling. If it loses the appeal, it has to take steps to comply with WTO rules. It may have to redo its injury analysis to meet those rules. If they cannot do this, they will have to drop the duties completely. However, regretfully, we are not at that stage yet, and these legal processes are complex and lengthy and are running their course.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. In light of the softwood lumber dispute how have Alberta mills been able to keep their rate of production up?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question because there are some articles in the local papers today in relation to the forest of gold, talking about the forest industry, in fact, in Alberta and how well the industry is doing. They've increased production in the last number of years by 30 per cent. We used to ship 1.1 billion board feet of lumber to the U.S. on export markets. Now, we're shipping 1.5 billion.

So the industry is doing very well, and the reason for that is we probably have the most efficient mills in North America, Mr. Speaker. Our forestry practices are probably the best in North America, and we know how to keep a balance between economic development, environmental management, and fish and wildlife management. But as a government we do not create the jobs. We don't do a very good job creating the jobs, but we do, I think, a good job of creating the environment for private industry to create jobs and the wealth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A recent study shows that the use of credit scores for a person's credit history in the rating process as an insurance underwriting tool has a negative impact on low-income and minority groups. In 2003 at least 40 U.S. states were drafting legislation ranging from full bans to limits on credit information use, while in Canada only Ontario has banned credit scoring as far as auto insurance premiums are concerned. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. To what extent are Alberta automobile insurance companies using credit scoring as a means to accept or reject drivers for automobile insurance in this province?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have an answer to the hon. member on that question. It's not something that I've gone into on their financial records and asked them. I do know that they probably should refer that question to the individual company and have them answer it themselves.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm astonished, Mr. Speaker.

To the same minister: given that Ontario has banned this practice, will this government ban the use of credit scoring as a factor in calculating insurance rates and coverage in Alberta for Alberta drivers?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, under our new framework that we're putting forward, that would not be a criterion for qualifying for insurance. We would have in place under the new structure what's called the all-comers rule, so people would have an opportunity to access insurance within this province. So that would not be relevant at that point.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: can the minister guarantee Alberta consumers and drivers that no Albertan will be denied automobile insurance under the government's insurance reforms based on their credit scores or their personal credit history?

Mrs. Nelson: What I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that under this new structure Albertans will not be denied insurance within this province. Now, how it will be determined will be from their own driving record and their accident record. If they've had at-fault accidents or they have a bad driving record, then they are going to pay for insurance.

Access to insurance is critically important, and one impetus for this whole structural change is to make sure that the law we have in place that says that you have to have automobile insurance can be adhered to. That's one of the reasons we made the structural change that we did.

So I'm glad to see that the Liberal Party or the member opposite at least is onside for the new restructuring of automobile insurance.

Environmental Initiatives

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, my constituents are consistently expressing a very strong concern and interest in environmental issues. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Given that Canadian cities such as Halifax are now recycling about 60 per cent of their solid waste stream and other countries are moving towards 100 per cent recycling and reportedly even making money doing it, are there any new or recent initiatives being introduced by your department that would greatly encourage and facilitate recycling in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Let me start by saying that Alberta has one of the best recycling programs in the country. We recycle beverage containers, we recycle tires, we recycle used oil, we recycle milk jugs and, recently, fluorescent light bulbs. As we move forward, we still need to do more. About 80 per cent of our waste still ends up in landfills, and we need to reverse that so that 20 per cent ends up in landfills and 80 per cent ends up in recycling. As the member correctly pointed out, many other jurisdictions do.

So we've set a goal for Albertans to reduce the amount of waste they produce. Each Albertan, everybody in this House, everybody in the gallery, produces about 750 kilograms of waste a year. To us older folks that's about 1,600 to 1,700 pounds a year. We want to reduce that to 500 kilograms a year. To do that, we have to move into more recycling. We want to move into recycling of electronic waste, we want to move into more recycling of hazardous materials, and we want to move into more recycling of organics. So those are the areas that we're looking at moving into.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that widespread pesticide use is of concern to many Albertans, what policies or practices is your department involved in to ensure that pesticides are being used and disposed of appropriately?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we have worked with the agricultural industry as well as the pesticide industry, and I can tell you that over 1 million pesticide containers have been recycled. This is an operation that is a co-operation between the private sector, industry, Operation Clean Farm, and the Department of Environment. This program is an easy sell in rural Alberta because farmers are educated users of pesticides. They use them yearly. They know how to handle them, and they know how to dispose of the containers. When you have an educated population, recycling works very well, and this has been a very successful program.

Mr. Lord: My final supplement again to the same minister: is Alberta Environment considering incorporating proven to be effective environmental management systems such as ISO 14000 into provincial programs?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, as has been correctly identified, ISO 14000 is an international environmental management technique, I guess one could call it. There is only one jurisdiction in Canada that has mandated or implemented ISO 14000, and that's the city of Calgary. Perhaps the hon. member who asked the question was on council there when it was mandated; I don't know.

We are looking at ISO 14000 in the Department of Environment, but we have to set standards that are appropriate to Alberta conditions, Alberta industry, Alberta environment. As we continue to look at them, we will set the standards that are appropriate to Alberta and Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Student Loan Program

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A millennium scholarship study confirms what Alberta students have been telling this government about student finance for years. The government's assumptions are plain wrong. Living cost allowances, expectations of parental contributions, and the overall plan based on increasing student debt just isn't working. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. When will the government's assumptions about parental contributions be adjusted to reflect reality?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the millennium scholarship fund put out a study about one to two years ago that said essentially the same type of thing. At that time it was criticized because the sample size was extremely small, and the millennium scholarship group said that they were going to go back, expand the scope of the study, and expand the numbers of people that were involved. It's our information that this did not occur and that, indeed, they were actually utilizing the same size sample group as they did before.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, Stats Canada put out a study about two weeks ago that stated that university today, when it takes into account the expenses, the fees, the books, and everything, is actually cheaper than it was in 1965, which I think is a very good deal for the citizens of Alberta.

Dr. Massey: He's been away too long.

To the same minister: when will the government take action to help Alberta students living away from home to reduce the $3,000 gap between their living costs and student loan allowances?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, it would be very nice if the hon. member would read the study. What the study actually says is that Alberta has probably done the most of any province in Canada to address this. Rural students, for example, who are required to move to the cities to go to school now receive approximately $2,250 in order to enable them to do this. I think that when you ask any of the student associations, they will tell you that the student loan program in Alberta is one of the best if not the best in Canada.

The other comment that occurred in the article basically stated that loan limits had not been increased for approximately three to four years. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, this is false because the loan limits in Alberta have consistently been increased over the past four to five years. Indeed, more than a 50 per cent increase has been put into the student loan program since I've been minister.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: when will the government simply overhaul the entire student finance plan and bring it into the 21st century?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member seems to tend to forget is that a considerable portion of the student loan program is actually overseen by the federal Liberal government. Our student loan program provides automatic remission; the federal Liberal student loan program gives no remission. We allow the interest to be phased in over a six-month period. There are differences with the federal student loan program. We have been working very hard to harmonize the Alberta student loan program with the federal student loan program, and finally we are at a point where it's very close to being harmonized.

Mr. Speaker, in today's budget – and it's probably just being read as we speak or will be a little later – there will be some significant changes to the federal student loan program, and I commend them for doing this. They have actually raised limits for the first time. Today in the budget they have kept pace with what Alberta has been doing. It's very good.

I would say that the student loan program currently in place in Alberta is the best of its kind in Canada and will continue to be the best of its kind.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Calgary Police Service Investigation

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Police Service has concluded its investigation into a police officer's fatal shooting last fall of Mr. Deng Kuol, a member of the Sudanese community. The investigation and the review by a Crown prosecutor have found no criminal wrongdoing on the part of the officer involved. Members of the Sudanese community are unhappy with the process followed in investigating this incident, which happened to take place in my constituency. They have also questioned whether the investigation was truly fair and impartial. To the Solicitor General: is the minister satisfied with how this incident was investigated?

The Speaker: We're asking for an opinion here about a legal instrument.

The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member indicated, the Calgary Police Service did release the results of the investigation. The past few months since this incident have been a very difficult time for many people: the man's family and his friends, the Sudanese community, the police officer involved, and the Calgary Police Service itself. The police service understands the stress on the community affected and has said that it will try to rebuild a better relationship.

I'm assured that all proper investigation procedures were followed and that everything that could have been done to review the incident was done. The report of the investigation was reviewed by a Crown prosecutor as it is required by police service policies in incidents of this nature. The prosecutor has concluded that the officer involved acted reasonably and justifiably in self-defence. Mr. Speaker, the prosecutor has concurred that the investigation was impartial, objective, and exhaustive.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since many residents of my constituency called for a public inquiry at the time this incident took place and they're still calling for one in light of the findings, will the government hold a public inquiry?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, there will be a fatality inquiry into this incident. That is required by law and is automatic in events of this nature. A fatality inquiry is held before a provincial court judge. It is a public hearing open to the media and open to community members who wish to attend. Witnesses will be called, and all evidence will be presented in an open, public, and objective manner. The inquiry will look at all the factors surrounding what happened, and the presiding judge may make recommendations on how to prevent similar incidents from happening in the future.

Kananaskis Valley Development

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the Evan-Thomas alluvial fan, where Evan-Thomas Creek meets the Kananaskis River, is one of the most important regions for wildlife in Kananaskis Country. It's a home to wolves, grizzly bears, moose, and bighorn sheep as well as the site of most of the existing commercial development in the Kananaskis. To the Minister of Community Development: given that the levels of development proposed for the Kananaskis Valley will negatively affect wildlife in the region, why is this ministry considering allowing further commercial development in the area?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, the Evan-Thomas review draft management plan was put together after a great amount of public consultation with local groups in the environmental sector, with local businesses, with the KID Council, and I myself have been down and met with them on numerous occasions over the past couple of years. I think we have made some very good progress toward some compromises that can be looked at so that we recognize the importance of the Evan-Thomas area not only to wildlife and the ecological systems that support it but also to tourists and to resident Albertans who like to visit that place and don't want to see it totally shut off from some of the amenities, that are in desperate need there. So we are looking at arriving at something very soon that would help move that particular project along in a very environmentally sensitive yet palatable way for all Albertans.

Ms Carlson: But, Mr. Speaker, why is this minister ignoring the protests of Albertans who do not want to see further development in Kananaskis?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, back when Evan-Thomas was established as a provincial recreation area – I think it goes back to the 1980s – there was always an understanding that on this issue of what would or would not be permitted in the future by way of development or other proposals that might be considered, there would always be an opportunity to review it at an important time in the history and development of that area. That time did come a couple of years ago, and that's what's being done.

But I want to assure the member that the policy that we are adhering to, the Kananaskis recreation policy, will be followed. It specifically says that there will not be any large-scale new developments allowed in that area, but there will be some consideration given to some small expansions to existing facilities so that we can accommodate the tremendous growth needs of the area and of people who want to visit that absolutely gorgeous jewel in the Canadian Rockies area.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, will the ministry expand surrounding provincial parks and wild-lands to protect this sensitive area from further commercial development?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, that's one of the best questions I've had in this regard, and it's a very good one. As part of the compromises and in sort of coming together on this issue with many groups, we have looked at how we might alleviate some of the concerns. One of them would be if we allow some type of an expansion, on the one hand, to existing facilities, which would help not only the tourism industry but also the important staff members who service the Evan-Thomas facilities that currently exist, but also to take a look at what we might do by way of including some other areas that would be desirable for expansion such as the hon. member is referring to. So we'll be getting back to the Assembly very soon with some further indications of what we're planning to do there, but I do thank the hon. member for a very good question.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Health Care Premiums

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Health care premiums are a regressive tax that hurts seniors, middle-class families, and working Albertans. Scrapping premiums will put over $900 million directly into Albertans' pockets, saving $1,056 per year for a typical family, yet the priority of this government is to keep implementing a multiyear $1 billion tax cut for large and profitable corporations. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Why is the government's priority to keep cutting corporate taxes at the expense of scrapping health care premiums, which would provide far greater benefit for average Albertan families?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I read the member opposite's press release again today, and I have to be honest with you.

An Hon. Member: Which one?

Mrs. Nelson: Which one? They put them out by the dozen, and they all say absolutely nothing.

Insofar as taxes are concerned, this current year, that we're under right now, saw Albertans receive the benefit of us protecting them from the indexation of the personal income tax to make sure that Albertans have the lowest personal tax in the country, and we've done that very successfully. We are the only province, I can say again for individuals, that doesn't have a sales tax. That's a huge advantage for Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why doesn't the Minister of Finance admit that a $1,056 health care premium bill for a typical family is a huge tax that is paid primarily by people who can't afford it?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, our job here is to provide a package for Albertans that is one that provides them with core programs and a quality of life that we believe is the best in the country, and that's a balance. It's a balance of making sure that we profile certain areas, such as health and education, but also making sure that our fees and charges and taxes are the lowest overall in the country. Quite frankly, we've been successful in doing just that.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, why has the government let down

Alberta's senior citizens again by failing to scrap health care premiums for all seniors at a modest cost of only $90 million in lost revenue, preferring instead to keep cutting corporations' taxes?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get into the particulars because we are bringing a budget down tomorrow, and this little game that comes from the opposite side on a regular basis before we bring down financial statements is just that: it's a little game. So we're not going to fall into the game that's being played, but I can tell you that I believe that what we will be presenting tomorrow meets the needs of Albertans, quite frankly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Contaminated Groundwater from Ogden Rail Site

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Part of my constituency is greatly concerned about an underground plume that has been migrating away from the contaminated site of the Ogden rail site into the community. I understand that Alberta Environment has been aware of this contamination since 1999, and it continues to spread into the community and toward the river. My question today is to the Minister of Environment. Why after five years are residents in my community still exposed to the toxic vapours that are associated with the contaminated groundwater?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a serious issue, and the member is correct: we have some problems in that area. We have been working with the Calgary regional health authority to ensure that CP Rail is living up to its responsibilities and fulfills its responsibilities to the residents.

Currently concerns, as the member has identified, have been raised, Mr. Speaker, about possible health issues related to off-site contamination. That off-site contamination would take the form of vapours actually happening in people's basements. What we have insisted on and where these vapours are detected, CP Rail is putting in something called subslab depressurization units. These subslab depressurization units vent the vapours out of the affected basements, and this actually works. When these units are installed, the basements are vented and there are no more vapours in the basements.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My second question is to the same minister. Given that many residents have used the devices in their basements to remove the vapours, my question is: what is your department doing to ensure that all affected homes are identified and outfitted with the devices?

Dr. Taylor: Well, we need to put the number of homes in context. I mean, if it's your home, it's important and significant, but overall, Mr. Speaker, the total number of homes affected is about 35 homes. As I said, for those 35 families this is a significant issue.

So I can tell you that the testing for vapours in these homes is continuous, and CP Rail is actively testing the groundwater around the community. We've insisted on that to determine the extent of the contamination, where it is, how much there is of it, and that is actually happening right now.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. What is your department doing to ensure that there is no further contamination leaving the CP Rail site?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member has touched on an important point. Alberta Environment has required – this is not an option – CP Rail to place a barrier on the site to stop any further migration of the toxic materials off the site. So we've stopped it. To make sure that is happening, we require CP Rail to test any groundwater that does leave the site. So we know exactly what's happening around that site. Results to date have indicated that the barrier is working. The contamination is contained. It is not leaving the site. What we have to do is work on cleaning up the existing contamination. There is a 1-800 number that the residents can call if they wish to find out more information, and that 1-800 number is available at their MLA's office.

Transportation Department Survey

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, in 2003 Banister Research & Consulting Inc. conducted a client satisfaction survey for Alberta Transportation. To the Minister of Transportation: what was the mandate of this survey?*

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of the Banister survey. Maybe he can give me more details.

Mr. Bonner: Since the minister is not familiar with this survey that was conducted by Alberta Transportation, perhaps he could give me answers to my following two questions once he's had an opportunity to look at the information. Those questions would be: could the minister forward to us the cost of this survey to the Alberta taxpayer, and when will the results of this survey be publicly released?

Thank you.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour to bring that information forward. We do a fair amount of work in the department through various consulting agencies, including engineers, looking at various plans for Alberta Transportation well into the future. I'll get that information to the House.

The Speaker: Well, that worked well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Identity Theft

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Solicitor General. Identity theft occurs when someone steals the identity of an unsuspecting victim. The thief then empties the bank accounts, runs up credit cards, and generally ruins the credit reputation of the victim. Last month someone stole credit files and personal information of 1,400 Canadians, many of whom were Albertans, as the result of a security breach at Equifax Canada. My question: what is being done by the Solicitor General to ensure that law enforcement considers identity theft to be a serious crime?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member brings up a good question. Obviously, the department and the police in this province are very, very concerned about identity theft. Albertans take their privacy very seriously. Identity theft and, in this case, cybercrime are fraud, and all police services treat these incidents of crime very, very seriously.

We must keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, that crime is becoming more high tech and sophisticated. We will be announcing a significant increase in police funding in the provincial budget tomorrow to help provide police with more tools to keep up with this type of crime. The Alberta Solicitor General is currently working with other government departments and the federal government on a cross-government strategy to combat cybercrime. Lastly, we'll continue to push the federal government for a national strategy because these are crimes that have no borders.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the Attorney General. Are maximum penalties for identity theft sufficient to deter criminals?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member has referred to, there are provisions under the Criminal Code which would come into play with respect to areas of identity theft. The first which comes to mind would be the charge of personation which would carry, if I'm not mistaken, a penalty of up to 10 years in prison. Other charges might be available in the areas of fraud, false pretenses, false statements, uttering forged documents. All of those carry rather significant maximum penalties.

The trick, of course, is to get the appropriate penalty in place. Crown prosecutors, in taking these cases to court, consider them very, very serious because we're seeing more of an impact from identity theft situations, particularly with the onset of the use of the Internet. Our special prosecutions branch handles these cases, tends to aggressively prosecute them and try and get actual jail sentences attached to convictions in this area. So, yes, the maximum penalty is there. The trick is getting it put in place with respect to these crimes.

Of course, as the hon. Solicitor General mentioned and as I just mentioned, we have the special prosecutions branch, and we have a cybercrimes prosecutor specifically dedicated to looking at areas of Internet crime and crime using computer technology and information technology. That's very closely intertwined with this whole area of identity theft.

So we're taking it very seriously, we prosecute it aggressively, and we attempt to get very solid penalties in order to deter other citizens from engaging in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the Minister of Government Services. Is our government being proactive in educating Albertans about the threat posed by identity theft?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, the quick answer to that is yes. We tend to kind of complete the picture here in terms of Albertans whose identities or assets have been stolen. What we do in Alberta Government Services is we offer a tipsheet for them as to how to get themselves out of the predicament that someone else has put them in.

Alberta Government Services has gotten together with all of the consumer protection ministers from across Canada and put together a national identity theft kit. What this national identity theft kit does is it provides a standard form that's used all across Canada by people who have had their identity taken away from them. It provides a standard form for them to reach out to credit card companies, to banks, financial institutions and to take this form and process it to clear their name.

In addition to that, Alberta Government Services has just embarked on a new highly secure driver's licence card as well as the process and the delivery of that card that helps preserve people's identity. The last thing that we are involved in, Mr. Speaker, is that when you go to get your driver's licence, there is a stricter enforcement into proving who you are before you can apply for that driver's licence.

So those are the things that we are doing in Government Services to protect people's identity.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four members to participate in Members' Statements, but let me say, first of all, thank you to all members today. Shorter questions have led to shorter answers, and we were able to deal with 14 different sets of questions, and that's appreciated.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bernie and Sheila Inman

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 8, 2004, Bernie and Sheila Inman launched a very important safety video. In 1994 while working in the petroleum industry, Bernie Inman was critically injured and, as a result, is now confined to a wheelchair. His video The Other Side dramatically re-creates the incident and traces the impact of the accident on his wife, Sheila, and his coworker Al.

Since his accident Bernie and Sheila have become ambassadors for workplace safety. They have travelled throughout Alberta and Saskatchewan sharing their story and raising awareness about the importance of workplace safety. Their courage and commitment to this cause and each other are truly amazing.

Bernie and Sheila have been working closely with the Job Skills Safety Society to promote workplace safety. This society works tirelessly to address the unacceptable number of workplace injuries and fatalities and to ensure that young workers are properly trained for safety before they enter the workforce.

To accomplish their mission, they have designed JobSafe, an award-winning workplace safety training program. JobSafe educates youth about workplace health and safety issues, promotes the development of a positive attitude towards safety, and gives our youth a solid foundation for future workplace training.

I also thank EnCana, Talisman, and Toromont Process Systems for sponsoring and hosting this event. They are truly industry leaders in workplace safety awareness.

Alberta has set a record low for lost-time claim rates in 2002, and we are looking at setting another record for 2003. It is very exciting to see the work of Bernie, Sheila, and the Job Skills Safety Society pay off.

Workplace safety is everyone's responsibility. Government has to set standards and enforce them. Employers need to integrate safety into all their operations. Workers need to take personal responsibility for themselves and their coworkers.

It is time for everyone to choose safe, not sorry, and as Bernie puts it: Safety Starts with Awareness; Awareness Starts with You.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Alberta Athletes

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize some of Alberta's outstanding athletes and teams for their national and international achievements.

Spruce Grove's Jennifer Heil was crowned as the women's overall moguls champion on the World Cup freestyle ski circuit this year after competing in 14 different events and reaching the podium nine times. She is also the first Canadian woman to ever win this prestigious championship.

Vermilion's Beckie Scott continued her success at the Canadian cross-country ski championships in New Brunswick, where she won three national titles in the 30-k race, the sprint race, and in a 10-k two-day pursuit event. One week previously Beckie finished second in the pursuit event at the world championships in Italy, missing the gold by a fraction of a second.

Red Deer's Jeremy Wotherspoon maintained his dominance in speed skating by winning the 500-metre event at the long track speed skating championships in Korea. He also won the overall title for this distance, proving yet again that he is the fastest man on ice in the world.

Edmonton's Chris Benoit recently won the world heavyweight wrestling championship in New York's Madison Square Garden. He is one of the most respected wrestlers anywhere, having begun his career in 1986 in Calgary Stampede Wrestling.

Alberta's college teams also achieved great success this season. The Lethbridge Community College Kodiaks won the Canadian Colleges Athletic Association's national championships in women's basketball, and the Red Deer College Kings won the men's volleyball national college championship for the fifth year in a row.

The U of A Bears basketball team captain, Kevin Petterson from Spruce Grove, won the 2004 Ken Shields TSN award for his outstanding commitment to athletics, academics, and community involvement. He was chosen over all other male university basketball players in the country.

Mr. Speaker, we are all very proud of our Alberta athletes, and our sport programs do indeed develop great athletes and great citizens. I would like everyone to join me and the Minister of Community Development in congratulating these talented Alberta athletes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Weldwood of Canada Limited

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to clarify an issue that was raised in the House last week regarding Weldwood of Canada and IKEA. In a question raised in the House by an hon. member, it was suggested that Weldwood was dropped as a supplier of wood to IKEA because its forestry practices did not meet IKEA's wood purchasing standards.

It should be noted that this is incorrect. Weldwood was never a direct supplier of wood to IKEA. Until August 2003 Weldwood sold a wood product to a local Edmonton-based manufacturer which in turn remanufactured it into a shelving product for IKEA. However, the local company stopped using the supply from Weldwood for this particular product because the product specifications from IKEA changed. This decision was based on the adequate nature of the supply, not a concern for environmental standards. Weldwood continues to sell its product to the local company, but it is used in the manufacture of products.

I wish to clarify that Weldwood's Hinton forest management agreement is recognized nationally and internationally as an exceptionally well-managed forest, receiving numerous awards over the 50-year period they have managed Alberta's first FMA. Weldwood's Hinton FMA was the first in Alberta to commit to sustainable forest management as a fundamental component of management plans, and Weldwood was also the first company in Canada to have all of its forest management tenures certified under the CSA standard.

They are proud of their excellence in sustainable forest management, Mr. Speaker, and so, too, are Albertans. I would encourage all members to take the time to learn about this company and the valuable work they do in sustaining Alberta's forests for future generations.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Democratic Renewal

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about the Citizens' Assembly on Electoral Reform. A wave of democratic renewal is sweeping this country. From News Brunswick to B.C. governments are establishing secretariats, assemblies, and entire government departments on democratic renewal.

Liberal governments are leading the charge in democratic renewal in Canada. In Ontario a Democratic Renewal Secretariat has been set up. In Ottawa for the first time in a long time there is a secretary of state for democratic renewal. In Quebec there is a commission on democratic reform, and in B.C., our good neighbour, they are taking steps to look seriously at changing the first past the post electoral system in that province.

How are they doing it? With something called the Citizens' Assembly on Electoral Reform. The 160-member assembly is looking at alternatives to our present-day electoral system, which overcompensates governing parties and truly does a disservice to every other party.

The assembly in B.C. has met several times and has received presentations and submissions from electoral experts on what to do with the electoral system. Best of all, the results that come out of the citizens' assembly will be put to a referendum of B.C. residents so that the people can decide which system of elections they like the best.

Today I will be introducing an amendment to the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, which would allow Alberta to set up a citizens' assembly on electoral reform. I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to support this amendment. Let's vote to take a step towards democratic renewal in Alberta. We certainly need it.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition signed by 119 Alberta seniors petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to recognize and value the contributions and sacrifices the seniors have made in building the Province of Alberta, and treat them with due respect and dignity by reversing those policies that cause unnecessary financial hardship for them and undermine their quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give notice that I plan to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 40 at the appropriate time. I will send the notice of motion to the table.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give oral notice to members of the Assembly of a motion which I intend to move.

Be it resolved that since the mandatory registration of all nonrestricted firearms is an unnecessary intrusion on the property rights and cultural heritage of Albertans, fails to discourage criminal activity involving firearms, and has wasted an enormous amount of money, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta recommends that the government of Alberta urge the government of Canada to introduce amendments to the Firearms Act of Canada and the Criminal Code of Canada to remove the requirement for the registration of all nonrestricted firearms.

head: Introduction of Bills

School Amendment Act, 2004

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the School Amendment Act, 2004.

Bill 25 implements some of the recommendations of the Learning Commission regarding the statutory responsibilities of teachers, and it also makes legislative changes to improve the board of reference.

The Speaker: I've been advised, hon. member, that you are doing this on behalf of the hon. Minister of Learning. Is this correct?

Rev. Abbott: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 25 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, who is doing it on behalf of myself, I would like to move first reading of Bill 26, being the Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004.

Mr. Speaker, this puts into force what has been negotiated with the Alberta Teachers' Association, specifically the practice review process, which is the first of its kind in North America and indeed maybe the first of its kind in the world.

This is a very progressive bill, and I would urge everyone in this Assembly to support it on first reading.

The Speaker: I take it, hon. Minister of Learning, that your name is on the bill.

Dr. Oberg: Yes.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to file today on behalf of the Deputy Premier copies of the news release and attached presentation to the United States Department of Agriculture stating Alberta's views on the reopening of the border to ruminant livestock trade. I commend it to everyone's reading.

Thank you for your attention.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness I have six copies of a letter dated March 22, 2004, from the Canadian Society of Hospital Pharmacists. I wish to table those.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand and submit today the required number of copies of the environmental protection security fund annual report. This indicates how much security we've taken in the form of bonds and so on from various companies that are having actions under the act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter dated February 20, 2004, from Mr. Albert Opstad, president of Seniors United Now, known as SUN, addressed to the Premier in which Mr. Opstad is expressing concern on behalf of the members of the organization that the throne speech had failed to make any reference to restoration of seniors' lost benefits and is asking the government to remedy the growing inequities.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from Peter van Hal, who's the president of the Water Valley Community Association. He is making note that their community centre and heritage building is being charged on a demand or needle meter. He feels that "the argument is not the rate but the classification and the huge portion of electricity charged but not used, this is not logic, unreasonable, unjustifiable and needs to be rectified."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table copies of the correspondence I discussed in question period today. This is from Economic Development and dated March 11, 2004, and it's asking for close to $3,000 in access to information FOIP request fees. It's very high. I can't afford to pay it.

Thank you.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a Standing Order 40 application.

Ministerial Travel Expenses

Ms Blakeman:

Be it resolved that an order of the Legislative Assembly to call for a complete disclosure be tabled in the Legislative Assembly by all members of Executive Council of all expenses incurred during travel outside the province since March 12, 2001, and that each member of Executive Council table receipts for those expenses in the Assembly.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a Standing Order 40 application to present a motion to the Assembly. The motion has been distributed.

Standing Order 40 applications are to be made in cases of urgent and pressing necessity, and I would argue that that is the case. This government claims that it is open and transparent, and this may be true, but you're going to have to fight your way through a lot of smoke and stone walls to see it.

In 1998 the government spent $89 million on travel and communications. In last year's budget that number had jumped to $131 million, representing a 147 per cent increase. We've been told by the government when we've requested expenses before that we need to write the members of Executive Council to get the information. The response that we received was to go to Public Accounts. When we asked the question in Public Accounts Committee, we're told that Public Accounts isn't the right venue to discuss expenses, that we should bring it up in the House as a written question or a motion for a return. We bring it up as a written question and a motion for a return, and we are told that it's too much paperwork to table the information.

Mr. Speaker, this is it. This is our last stop. This is one of the last places that we can ask. I think that in true-blue bureaucratic style this particular government has passed us from one body, from one process to another to another and refuses to be open and transparent with the opposition and with Albertans. They rail against big government, but they certainly like to use it when it suits their needs.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is a chance to show all Albertans that the government is open and has free information exchange for all. Will they do it? I certainly urge all members to grant unanimous consent to this request. A vote no is a vote for big, closed-door government, and I hope and live in hope that this government will do otherwise.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hancock: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: We'll deal with the point of order after we call the question.

Under Standing Order 40 applications it requires the unanimous consent of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Now the Government House Leader on a point of order.

Offending the Practices of the Assembly

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 23(1), "introduces any matter in debate which offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly," the hon. member in a very inappropriate way, I would submit, in a situation where she is the only person who gets to speak to a matter before the House, tries to characterize what the meaning of a person's no vote might be with respect to her motion.

Very inappropriate to do it in that circumstance in particular, where no member of the House has an occasion to rise and respond to put forward to the House what might be behind their indication of support or nonsupport for a motion. I would ask that the hon. member be cautioned to not do that.

We've seen quite a number of Standing Order 40s, and in each case there has been a characterization of some sort which no member of the House gets to respond to except by a no vote on the request for unanimous consent, but this one is particularly egregious because it purports to suggest that members of the House have some other purpose than representing their constituents when they say no to such a Standing Order 40 application.

The Speaker: On this point of order, the hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I take the citation that the Government House Leader has listed, 23(1), introducing a matter which offends practices and precedents of the Assembly. What just happened here is a plea in support of a request for a Standing Order 40, and I don't see how it offended the practice of the House, certainly, in urging members to vote for it. It's a free vote. In this case it's requesting unanimous consent. Members can certainly withhold that, but I don't think the characterization that I made is untoward, and certainly the members have it well within their command to either support or deny the application that was put forward. So I don't think that any practices of the House were offended by what just happened.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Anyone else on this point of order?

Well, one thing is very clear. Under Standing Order 40 with respect to a Standing Order 40 application – and these are our Standing Orders; these are written by the men and women of this particular Legislative Assembly and agreed to by them – it says in 40(1), "A motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 38." Only one person can participate. There is no debate. There's a call for a question, for the mover of the motion to explain the case of urgent and pressing necessity. That's what our Standing Order says.

So I agree with the Government House Leader with respect to this. If there's no opportunity for any individual to participate, then one has to be very, very cautious about what they say in moving their Standing Order. The Standing Order basically says, "In case of urgent and pressing necessity," and that is the case and the reason and the basis for the argument.

To introduce anything else that might impute motives on behalf of another member puts that other member at a total disadvantage, where they cannot come back and say anything. It's an acceptable argument and one for clarity of at least decorum and good manners in an Assembly. There can be no imputation of motives as to how any individual can vote or should vote, and no one else should be able to speak for that individual member other than the individual member himself or herself.

I know that in the past, when I sat in the chair in front of me and I had an opportunity to vote, it was no one's business, no one's reason, nor could anyone impute to me why I would vote in a particular way. Oftentimes my reason for voting either yea or nay was probably different than the person sitting beside me. Never ever was it as a result of belonging to a group. It was a conscience decision, and that is the important thing with respect to this. I have no idea what goes on in the minds of the men and women in front of me when they vote on a particular issue. So I could never ever impute a motive, never ever make the suggestion.

Standing Order 40 is a technique that's available to all members in the case of urgent and pressing necessity. So that's where it's going to end, please.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I take leave to move third reading of Bill 21, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004.

This bill proposes amendments to the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003, a very valuable piece of legislation that received royal assent last spring. I say "valuable" because this act is all about protecting and providing support to Alberta's children, youth, and families. Few things are more valuable than that or more worth our time and attention. We are currently drafting regulations and working with stakeholders to get ready for the implementation. It was in the course of this work that the need for some minor amendments arose.

These amendments are largely a matter of housekeeping. In general, Mr. Speaker, these amendments will ensure that the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004, is aligned with the Family Law Act, the Vital Statistics Act, and the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, or PCHIP. They will also ensure that the implementation of the new legislation proceeds as smoothly as possible. That's the overall intent of the amendments.

Members of the Assembly have raised some questions and concerns, and although we've already responded to the vast majority of them, there may be some value in touching on them again.

We heard in Committee of the Whole from the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry for additional clarification regarding the reporting structure of the children and youth advocate. Mr. Speaker, the advocate works with the ministry. The current reporting relationship is direct with the minister and allows for issues to be identified quickly and for resolution to be obtained effectively. This is a relationship that works well in supporting children and youth and their families when dealing with our child protection system.

Under the new legislation accountability will be further enhanced by increasing the number of times per year the advocate must report to the minister. This reporting will now be quarterly. Accountability to the House is achieved through the advocate's annual reports, which are tabled in this Legislature.

A question has also been raised about the advocate's role. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has asked for clarification on why the child and youth advocate is not able to investigate complaints. The advocate does not conduct investigations in the formal sense of the word. The advocate represents the child's views and ensures that his or her voice is heard. The advocate works with the system, children, and youth to resolve issues in a collaborative way that is supportive of youth. Again, the children and youth advocate is there to support children in understanding the child protection system and to assist children or youth who wish to review the decisions made by a director.

There are a few points around the amendments related to alternative dispute resolution processes that are worthy of reiteration. Alternative dispute resolution processes, or mediation, can be highly effective and conciliatory means of dealing with conflict. In fact, these processes are already being used to help families resolve issues in a quicker, more effective, and less intrusive manner.

In response to questions related to the availability of funding for alternative dispute resolution processes, it should be noted that this option is generally less expensive than proceeding through the courts to resolve an issue. We are also planning to build this program on existing programs. In terms of the regulations in this area both opposition parties received copies of the proposed regulatory framework in December 2003 and were invited to seek further clarification if it was required.

Another area where there appears to be some continuing confusion is the removal of provisions allowing Children's Services to obtain child support. I'd like to re-emphasize that these provisions are entirely manifested in Alberta's new Family Law Act. This keeps Alberta's legislation simple and avoids unnecessary duplication.

I would like to quickly recap the reasoning behind changing the duration of an initial secure services order from 10 to five days. Mr. Speaker, this amendment will ensure that Charter rights are protected. This change will also ensure consistency with the confinement provisions of the PCHIP legislation. The details amending secure treatment are exactly as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has indicated. Secure treatment is a serious restriction on an individual's rights of freedom. Even when that individual is a child, these rights must be protected. For this reason secure services are reserved for extreme situations.

The goal is to quickly stabilize youth and transition them to the supportive follow-up treatment or services they require. This is very much in keeping with the legislation's focus on providing a full continuum of community services and minimizing intervention.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments in Bill 21 will prepare Alberta's new Child Welfare Amendment Act for implementation. This is important legislation that will help us better support and protect Alberta's children, youth, and families. I ask for the support of the House on third reading of Bill 21.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. We've had not a lot of discussion on this bill, but we did manage to put our comments and questions on the record, and thank you very much to the member for answering them. I'm sorry; I was a little bit distracted, so I didn't hear if he answered my questions about maintenance enforcement, but I'll check the Hansard.

Our concern is less specific to this bill but more that we seem to be adjusting, trying to achieve perfection with the Child Welfare Act in fits and starts. This is one in a series of minor changes to the Child Welfare Act that we have seen since, in fact, we redid the act a year or two ago. So our concern is more about the process and the need for these sort of small adjustments which become cumulative.

We are willing to support Bill 21. We have all the way through and given it very rapid passage. We did not hear from any stakeholders in the community that expressed grave concerns about it. Therefore, we are willing to support the passage of the bill, but I do want to put our concerns about amending a larger bill with this sort of instalment program and our concerns about how that reflects on the whole bill in the end. At this point we're willing to support third reading of Bill 21.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo to close the debate.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I'd like to close the debate on Bill 21 and call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order. Before I call the next bill before us, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's indeed a great honour and privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an icon in the business world, both a friend of mine and a constituent. Mr. Jim Gray is here visiting from Calgary, and I would ask him to rise and please receive a warm welcome from this Assembly.

Bill 24 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure for me to stand and discuss the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2004. The focus of interim supply is to make sure that the government has operating grants when they've not yet completed the budgeting process.

I guess one of the things that's really difficult as we go about talking with Albertans about interim supply is focusing on the kind of debate around: what expenditures are there? I know that the normal answer to that is: well, wait till the budget. But if we're supposed to vote on this judiciously and in the spirit of appropriate government recognition of expenditures, we need to have the detail that's associated with being able to say that these are the types of expenditures.

As an example, in Learning we've heard all kinds of announcements, pronouncements, expectations being set out by the government to deal with changes in expenditures within the Learning budget, but also we need to know, in order to see how that works, what is the appropriate level of mix. As an example, the government has been talking about basically a $500 million boost to the education and health budgets. Well, how much of that is going to go into the Learning budget as opposed to the Health budget? How much of it is going to go towards the implementation of the Learning Commission's report? These are the kinds of things that we have to be able to look at in terms of: are these interim supplies in line with the budget, or are they in effect not going to reflect relative increases or relative decreases in line with what we can see in the budget?

There's been a real debate about postsecondary education. How much of the money is going to be used there to provide assistance? Students are talking at length about the additional costs of education, the impact that this has on their ability to borrow money, the ability that they have to, in effect, get out and make sure that when they get finished with their education, they're not burdened with unbelievable debts, financial obligations that prevent them from participating as fully as they'd like to participate in the context of the benefits that come both to them as individuals but mostly to us as a society from a population that is properly educated.

There's approximately $29 million going to Municipal Affairs. How much of this is going to be out there in line with the new Roles, Responsibilities, and Resources discussions? Will that reflect any of the new agreements that are there? Is it going to outline some of the things that are associated with the approach that the government is taking toward providing a new sense of participation by the order of government that's closest to the people of Alberta? We need to make sure that this kind of approach is put in place.

The question that comes up in my community most of all, you know, is: what is going to happen to the expenditures for seniors? The seniors lost both their dental and optical benefits, or some of them, in recent budgets. Will they be restored through this program? Is that going to be part of the focus that will be there for seniors?

The focus also that comes up in a number of other discussions would be: will there be dollars in the budget and are they included in this interim supply to initiate and expand the investigation of complaints by all Albertans about abuse of elders? You know, the elder abuse situation is really getting to be critical when we look at it from the point of view of the number of concerns that come to our offices and get raised about: are seniors getting proper care? Are seniors being looked after appropriately in their homes and in care facilities? These are the kinds of things that individuals want to know and want answers to.

When we see just major lines with departmental expenditures, we don't know where these are going, so how can we comment on them appropriately when individuals ask us? They're not in a position to accept the answer: well, let's wait for the budget.

We also noticed with interest the fact that the Solicitor General has requested an interim supply that is much higher in proportion to what was in the interim supply budget in the last three years. Well, what's going on in the Solicitor General's office that necessitates such a significant increase for interim supply? Will this be used to initiate and start a program for policing standards, provide more support to local communities for policing so that they can put that into their budget? What was the rationale behind trying to make sure that the Solicitor General had such a significant increase in budget for the interim supply component this year when it hasn't been there in other years?

The same kind of an argument is there for Sustainable Resource Development, where we see $52 million being allocated in interim supply to that ministry. How much of this will be available for fish and wildlife officers? Is it there now so that they can be put in place, in effect, for the summer season when their duties and responsibilities associated with monitoring and checking fish licences and appropriate catch limits will be there? Is that one of the reasons that we do have the additional dollars in Sustainable Resource Development?

The other question that comes up and a number of people have asked is: how are we making out on Dutch elm disease? Will there be additional dollars in this interim supply to support the fight on Dutch elm disease? Mr. Chairman, I've had a number of calls from individuals in the Medicine Hat area who are leading this debate across the province to contain Dutch elm disease. They're watching with interest to see whether or not these dollars are available for them. You know, when we're dealing with interim supply, there should be a signal sent that says that, yes, these are the kinds of things that are there to plan so that we can put in place the long-term programs that are necessary to implement new initiatives or change initiatives in the upcoming year. When you just have a block number for a ministry, you don't have the same kind of ability to plan.

The same goes for all of the different aspects that are there for the areas of wildlife, wildlife management. Are we going to be able to look at new initiatives, new programs, that have been requested by communities, by the fish and wildlife associations? That's important as they go through setting up their summer programs, and that's what's critical right now. We're getting into the summer season, summer planning component.

I guess the area that also has to be looked at is Transportation with $367 million. How much of it is going to be used for construction? How much of it's going to be used for road maintenance? Which areas are going to be targeted? The appropriate regional needs aren't reflected here in the sense of which highways will be given maintenance.

I've travelled the province an awful lot in the last year in the responsibilities that I had, and we'd look at a lot of areas where you see road maintenance going on and other places where the road seems to be really not as well looked after in the sense that you see roads that are really heavily used, starting to break up, yet there's no maintenance going on to the same level that you see in other areas.

Why is it that those roads are being maintained, resurfaced, redone in some ways when in other areas that isn't happening? Is this a reflection of negotiations with local governments, local priorities? We need to know that so we can judge whether or not this interim supply is appropriate and does reflect the kind of initiatives that will be undertaken during the construction and maintenance session.

The other thing is traffic safety. We've heard a lot of requests for additional traffic safety initiatives and how that's going to work, how that's going to offset our auto insurance increases. We need to put money into public traffic safety to help in many ways reduce the increases that are being reflected in our insurance. This is one of the initiatives that we see our neighbour to the west has done when they've had a component of their auto insurance that has the opportunity to spend on the public safety, the traffic safety initiatives, and get the feedback directly to the auto insurance system by having reduced premiums.

So you get a direct cost-benefit trade-off, but when you've got two different agencies dealing with cost benefits – you know, the cost is associated with your auto insurance – where do you go from there when they don't have the option to undertake traffic safety? We have to make that assumption and that decision in terms of the public expenditure on traffic safety, yet we don't get any of the benefits by having lower premiums reflected in that same decision-making process.

Yes, we are all taxpayers. Yes, we are all insurance payers. But there's no direct relationship in the decision-making process. We've got two independent decisions there when that kind of a decision should be a joint decision about if we put more dollars into traffic safety, then we save money in our auto insurance. Yet that's not reflected in this budget. So how do we make those judgments? How do we go out to Albertans and sell them appropriately on the benefits that are coming by having this interim supply?

I guess the thing as I conclude, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that as we look at the interim supply process, the very fact that we do this is a reflection of the government's inability to bring together a budget that can be voted on, can be implemented in time for the fiscal year. You know, why is it that we keep moving the budget back, keep moving the approval of business plans back?

I know that there were a number of health authorities and school boards that were well into the second half of the fiscal year before they had their budgets approved. Yet how do we expect them to make critical decisions about their expenditures when all we give them is broad outlines in an interim supply and say: go to it. When the final budget is still two months away, what is it that they can do in terms of their planning so that they can get their budget submitted for approval to the minister? They don't know the parameters under which they're working.

If we're going to have prudent fiscal management in the province, we've got to have timeliness associated with that. We have to be able to make sure that as the budgeting process is put in place, the signals are sent out to the agents that use the dollars that are allocated by those budgets so that they have time to plan subject to their fiscal year. School boards start basically in July with the next school year, yet we're not going to give them an opportunity to have their business plans approved until very late in their planning process, sometimes even on into the start of their new year.

So I think it's appropriate that as we debate interim supply, we do raise issues about priorities; we do raise issues about do we have appropriate planning capacity so that we can make sure our dollars are used prudently. There's a waste of public dollars if these agencies go ahead planning expecting some kind of an allocation.

I talked a few minutes ago about the government saying that there's going to be $500 million available for education and health. What if the education system assumes that some of that's coming to them and finds out that it's not the same as their expectation? They've wasted a lot of public dollars doing planning that in effect was misdirected because of misinformation or not full information, which we could be giving them in this interim supply process. We could be telling them if there are new initiatives that they can work with, if there are changes in priorities that they need to work with. That should all be reflected in this interim supply.

The argument then comes: does this pre-empt the budget? Well, no, it doesn't pre-empt the budget. It tells us that there are processes in place to start planning, and that's what's critical if we're going to be fiscally responsible and fiscally prudent in this province. We've got to have the signals out there so that proper budget planning can be undertaken so that we can have a reflection of the needs of the agencies that are going to be doing the expenditure planning on our behalf.

You know, Mr. Chairman, this probably wouldn't have been an argument that would have been relevant 10 or 15 years ago when most of that kind of planning was done under the auspices of the ministries. But each time we move to create new authorities, new agencies, new arm's-length managers for us, we have to be responsible and treat them fairly by giving them a sign of their budget in time for them to do planning, in time for them to make appropriate adjustments so that they can in effect guarantee the delivery of quality services or quality goods based on their relevant mandates.

Mr. Chairman, it's important that we work through these kinds of things on a continual basis because if we don't, we're going to in effect end up with inappropriate expenditures, misdirection by decision-makers at the different levels. If the process isn't going to work, what can we expect then except frustration, except these agencies saying one thing at the committee level, yet here in the Legislature we're debating and making decisions based on different assumptions?

With those comments I think I've used up most of my time that's available, so I'll take my seat and we'll let the debate go on. I may be back if discussion leads to a good give-and-take. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to have another opportunity to address the debate around the interim supply estimates through this Committee of the Whole section debate on Bill 24, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2004.

I've just been going through my file that I keep on sort of questions that I always mean to ask that aren't urgent enough, particularly, to get up in question period but are issues that I would like to see addressed. Part of the issue for me around interim supply is granting this money without a lot of discussion about how it's going to be used, just that it's a special warrant. So I do have some questions that I'm going to put on the record. If the ministers don't have the time to answer me now, then I invite them to please do it in writing. It does range across a couple of different ministries.

One of the questions that keeps coming up for me – not often, but a couple of times a year two or three different people bring it up – is the question around the cost of blood glucose monitors, test strips, and insulin paraphernalia for type 2 diabetics and the question about why type 1 diabetics are covered for these additional costs but type 2 are not. It can be a significant amount of money.

Now, if you're on AISH, for example, or I think even if you're receiving SFI, particularly the medical portion, you can receive some assistance with this, but I think there's a cap on it. If you're not low-income and sort of desperate and suffering, you're on your own. Yet there are a number of other areas where there are additional accommodations for a particular illness, and you can often find that those are covered, or they're covered through a program like Aids to Daily Living or something, but never these.

I'd like to sort of refresh and get a current answer from the minister on this. I think the last time I asked was several years ago. So the question for the Minister of Health and Wellness is: why are the blood glucose monitors, the test strips, and the other testing and monitoring products associated with type 2 diabetes not covered by Alberta Blue Cross when they are for persons with type 1?

For the Minister of Community Development, again, a couple of update questions here. The federal government and Quebec and, in fact, I think even in Manitoba and perhaps B.C. there's been serious consideration – and in Quebec I think they passed it – on enacting provincial status of the artist legislation. Now, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment did do some work on cultural workers and did start to identify that there are a number of gaps that our artists fall through as they try and move through life. So it identified them but didn't offer any solutions to the problems. Part of it is that we have to go at this in a holistic manner and look at all possible programs and areas, sectors that the ministries touch on to be able to form a co-ordinated response. That's what status of the artist legislation, in fact, covers.

So it's a large undertaking. It would take some time and a lot of consultation, but given that cultural workers are such a fast-growing sector of the economy – for example, they employ more than 900,000 people, at least 5.2 per cent of the Canadian labour force, more, in fact, than agriculture, forestry, mining, and oil combined. The average annual income of most professional artists is less than $20,000. I can vouch for that.

So this is a fast-growing sector. There's a large number of people involved in it. They contribute far wider than their own sector. I think if the government's legislative agenda is a little thin, which I think it is, there's something that they could really sink their teeth into and start to work on. So I'd like an answer back on that.

There's been some promotion recently around the Alberta motion picture industry. The minister with the pompoms, the cheerleader for economic development, has discovered the Alberta motion picture industry and is cheerleading for them. Excellent. Glad to see that. However, I don't know that we've ever gone back and really looked at the choices this government made in the early- and mid-90s, the effect that it had on the sector. That's when they shut down the AMPDC, the loan fund that they had in place.

After quite a bit of lobbying, I think in '99 or 2000, they were able to get a labour credit that was put in place, and the industry started to rebuild itself. It still has not achieved back the level of activity that it was at when the AMPDC was closed down, and I'm wondering if the minister responsible has ever really looked at the whole larger picture and what effect the choices made had on the industry and where we could best go next. One of the things the industry has said to me is around not only these labour credits but also a tax credit. So where is the minister on that exactly?

Right now the Alberta Foundation for the Arts will not collect nonpaper archives. We're a pretty creative bunch here in Alberta, and we've got some really cutting-edge artists, and not all of our work is produced neatly quantifiable on paper with ink or pencil or in the form of a painting. So for those that are doing work on the Internet or doing multidisciplinary work or where they've archived their work through a video or DVD, the AFA will not accept these archives. So we have no way of keeping track of this work.

Part of both the joy and the tragedy of live performing arts is that it's live; you've got to be there. If you're not there, you've lost the opportunity to join in the performance. We often do in the theatre take archival videos just to be able to preserve some recollection of what the live performance was like. We do have theatres that merge with others. They close down; people leave town. All kinds of things happen, and we have right now no central collection agency that will keep this work.

At this point I don't think the Provincial Archives of Alberta is accepting it either, so we're losing it. You know, it's in cardboard boxes in people's basements, and they leave town and it's gone. It's thrown out and we've lost it forever. So I'm looking to see whether we could get some processes in place to start keeping and accepting nonpaper archives.

Also around that area I think one of the most important things that the Minister of Community Development could be advocating for right now is to increase the minimum wage because artists subsidize their art for all of us. We get to benefit from cheaper art prices because the artists are subsidizing the art, but the way they're doing it in a lot of cases is working for minimum wage, and an increase in the minimum wage would be one of the most concrete ways to help the arts and cultural sector that I can think of right now.

I can raise the rest of these issues when we actually have a Community Development debate, but those were some that I thought I'd get the minister thinking about.

A while back in question period I raised a question with the Minister of Seniors about what the basis was for the amount of money that the Department of Seniors decided below which a senior would qualify for assistance and above which a senior would not qualify for assistance. I asked if it was tied to the LICO, the low-income cut-off. It's not; the numbers aren't the same.

Neither is it tied to the market-basket measure that is available, which is another measurement and one that the government is accepting in other areas. It's essentially for a market basket of food, the same sort of items, plus things like rent and telephone rental: how much does that cost? Once you establish those base costs for those items, you have an idea of how much it costs to live in a given centre. You know, as we expect, some things are more expensive in rural areas and some are less expensive. Same for living in the larger urban centres. But it does help to set the level of assistance that people require by examining what's in that basket of goods.

So I'm pressing the Minister of Seniors once again to see what the connection is between this or whether he would consider looking at the market-basket measure as a way of setting that rate for seniors. Right now it seems to be completely arbitrary but not connected to anything that we can discover. So either answer the question about how he's arriving at that figure or let's start to talk about connecting it to something that people can understand, because right now it's not connected to anything.

I've been working a lot with students. I have a number of postsecondary students that live in my constituency, and of course I've been really working hard on trying to encourage more youth voting – that is, between 18 and 30 – for those people to come out and vote.

As I spend more and more time with those particular groups of people, I get more information about what are really the barriers to their advancement. It's around a couple of things. Certainly, the university students are very clear. There needs to be an increase in the university base operating grants. I'm hoping that that's going to be considered or that that's included in this interim supply or in this budget that's coming. The planned 2 per cent increase does not meet the requirements of the University of Alberta, which is the postsecondary institution that I'm most connected to aside from Grant MacEwan College. The U of A is expecting another shortfall, which will have to be made up likely through tuition fees.

The students ask for a tuition freeze, and I certainly support that, but I would really far prefer to see a reduction in tuition fees. I'm willing to enter into the debate about having the first year or two of postsecondary education completely paid for anyone that's interested in engaging in it. I think that's where we need to be looking if we're going to be pursuing things like the four pillars that the government has right now. One of them is about learning and innovation, and I think that if we're going to pursue that kind of thing, we need to start looking at accessibility to postsecondary education institutions. So it's not just about university, it's not just about colleges, but we're also talking technical institutions and NorQuest and places like that.

Aside from the actual sort of dollar costs of the tuition, there's the subsistence costs of the rent and food and the other costs for the students attending postsecondary institutions. Their ability to get enough from loan programs is not keeping up with their costs, and that's another area that we need to be looking at. I am quite distressed when I hear a lot about students working 19 and 20 hours a week at a part-time job that really is part-time and still trying to carry a full load of three classes or more at university. I don't know how they're doing that, and I don't know that they're getting full value for money out of their university when so much time and attention has to go towards working. Not that students shouldn't work; that's part of your university experience. But, boy, 20 hours a week is a huge haul.

The students are also requesting that we eliminate the parental contribution requirements for the student loan program – and that came up in the Canada-wide study that was discussed earlier in question period done by heritage scholarships, I think it was – and to improve the remission system to benefit all students, not just those who qualify for high debt loads. So a couple of points are being raised there.

We've had the traditional leak from the government to the media

starting out with little dribs and drabs about what we can expect tomorrow. We've heard already about increased funding of policing costs to municipalities. Good. I quite despaired that I was going to have to keep talking about all of that for the next year, but that one looks like it may have been accomplished. I think mostly what I was seeking there was a fair and understandable funding formula. What we had was pretty schizophrenic, so I'm glad to hear that that's coming. One of the notes that I had in my file of budget questions to ask was around AUMA's call for the province to pay their fair share of policing costs, and it sounds like that's going to happen.

I have a question around Lacombe. Several small Alberta communities are facing the loss of their specialized transportation, like handi-vans or – what's the one in Edmonton called? – transportation services for people with disabilities. This has become quite costly for small communities to continue to fund. The demand, the volume increase, has happened, and also the actual costs of operating, you know, gas prices and other things, have become very expensive for these smaller communities, but the provincial and municipal support for activities like this has decreased.

Once again we're at a question of equality. Do we really mean it when we say that we want as many people as possible to participate in the life of the province? I think sometimes the government does in fact mean that, and at times like that I'm going to press them and say: well, what that really means in very concrete terms is support for things like handi-vans or specialized transportation for persons with disabilities.

One fellow that I have heard from was suggesting that if the government were considering reducing the aviation fuel tax in order to promote travel and tourism and the well-being of the Calgary and Edmonton international airports, would they consider reducing the taxes on gasoline and perhaps redirecting some of that toward some of these volunteer-based organizations? His point is that volunteers from about a hundred small agencies take the time and money out of their pockets to support Albertans with transportation needs related to illness, disability, or advanced age, but the provincial support for specialized transportation has not increased since 1994.

I agree. I think there are a number of institutions that the government has failed to keep up to speed, and it's resulted in a poor quality of life for Albertans. When we're in a province that's as wealthy and as blessed as we are, we should be able to bring everyone along with us. There should be no need for us to leave any Albertan behind, and I think that's what's happening here. So those were some of the concerns that were raised by Paul Siller around support, both provincially and municipally, for that sort of thing.

Some time ago, a couple years ago, I had talked a lot about funding for seniors' community centres because I felt that they were contributing to lower health costs eventually for seniors because we had increased mental health, and we had increased mobility from seniors that were out attending and participating in these seniors' centres. The Minister of Seniors did take me up on this, and he, in fact, I think, did a study on it. Then I think there was supposed to be money, but that was the year that the price of oil dropped, and the budget got cut, and that was the last anybody heard of it. It didn't reappear in the budget we're in now, and I'm wondering if it's going to reappear in this budget. I think there's a lot to be said for that kind of preventative medicine, if you want to look at it that way.

I also would like to check on where we're at with the wage disparity between the nongovernment and government sectors. I'm referring specifically to groups like the Council of Women's Shelters, the Alberta Association of Services for Children and Families, Hope Mission, the Alberta Association of Rehabilitation Centres, organizations like that, where the services that their staff are providing are very similar to services provided by government staff.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 24 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Having followed the debate in second reading on this bill, there were a number of questions raised by members in debate, and I just wanted to take the opportunity to respond a little bit to some of the issues that were raised. One of the issues that was raised by a number of speakers, at least two I think, was the whole question of the unique identifier number that's provided for in the bill.

The concept that's provided for is that each elector would have a unique identifier number that would be particular to the election process. In other words, it wouldn't be the social insurance number or some other number. It would be a unique identifier number. That concept was put forward by the Chief Electoral Officer as a way of assisting them with the management of information relative to electors so that they would have an easy way of moving information around, and that's about the best explanation I can give as to why it's necessary.

If you could put it into context, you may have, as I mentioned in the House the other day, a situation where there are two electors with exactly the same name. In fact, they might even live in exactly the same house. You need a way to distinguish between the two of them for the purposes of the records.

This unique identifier number is not another way to turn Albertans into numbers instead of people. It has none of those sinister connotations or contexts. It's not a precursor to an electronic voting program or any of those things that were suggested.

It is purely and simply – and I've had the opportunity to have this again confirmed with the Chief Electoral Officer because it was his recommendation that brought this forward – an administrative tool to be used by the Chief Electoral Officer to identify electors to make sure that they only show up on the electoral list in one spot and that when they move from one riding to another, their information can be tracked and taken with them to the other database and those sorts of things. So, essentially, it's a distinguishing number for the sole use of Elections Alberta to differentiate Albertans, particularly if they have the same name or perhaps even sometimes the same address, and that happens in Alberta. We're a large population. As I say, there's nothing in it at this stage. There's been no discussion with respect to electronic voting or changes in that way or using this electronic identifier for any broader purpose.

There were questions raised about the increase of the fee, the deposit, with respect to running for office. In the existing act the deposit was $200. The Chief Electoral Officer recommended that it be raised to $500. I did give an explanation of that, but I'll do it again quickly.

The concept that was being raised is that the Chief Electoral Officer wanted to have one more tool to encourage compliance with the Election Finances and Disclosure Act. So by raising the deposit to $500, which is still a rather modest sum of money for anyone who is seeking office, then half of that deposit, or $250, would be returned to the candidate on the same basis as the deposit was returned before. I believe that any candidate that wins 50 per cent of the winning candidate's votes has their deposit returned, so in this case it would be $250 returned and the other $250 returned when they filed their election finances disclosure as required by law. That was the purpose that was put forward by the Chief Electoral Officer in terms of why there needed to be an increased fee and what it was to be used for.

Edmonton-Gold Bar raised a question with respect to special ballots and whether a signature would no longer be required to get special ballots and how many special ballots are utilized. The changes that are being proposed here simply add to the ways that people can request special ballots. Right now you can request a special ballot by telephone or by fax, and in an electronic age it seems appropriate and prudent that you can request a ballot by e-mail. All the tests that the Chief Electoral Officer has in place with respect to ensuring that the ballots are going to the appropriate people would still be the case.

I know that in my constituency and I'm sure in many other constituencies when elections, for example, are called in March, as they often are in this province, you may have – for that matter, it wouldn't matter what month of the year the election would be – constituents in many corners of the world. They have the right to vote, but they may not in fact be back here.

I know that in my constituency sometimes people are located in Arizona. They haven't come back yet from living down there for a portion of the winter. In many other cases I know that we've had people who have accessed special ballots from Lebanon, from India, from various other parts of the world.

It's the democratic right to vote. We should try and make it as easy as possible for people to vote. That's the concept of adding the process to allow a request by e-mail. In a 28-day election I might say that when people are located all over the world, it's often difficult to have requests come in by courier and have the ballots delivered back out by courier and have the ballots come back in by courier within that 28-day period and get them back in time for the election. So going to the electronic process certainly will assist in that regard.

In answer to the question about how many, that's a difficult thing for anyone to predict. In the 2001 election there were some 11,100 special ballots issued. Who knows how many that would be in the future? But the important question is not how many ballots; the important question is: how do we make it as accessible as possible for Albertans to cast their ballots in an election?

There were some concerns raised about access to apartments and multifamily dwellings. Of course, one of the reasons for the amendments to the Election Act that are being proposed is to allow enumerators and to allow candidates greater access to multifamily dwellings or gated communities or other places where the front door is behind some other security barrier.

The specific question was asked as to why the fine wasn't going up, and I guess the only real answer to that is that nobody has really addressed their mind to the fine needing to be higher than a thousand dollars. A thousand dollars is a significant fine. The answer truly is that there was no significant push from anybody to increase the fine. The real push was to make sure that the right to have access was dealt with when all sorts of circumstances have changed and we find different types of communities where access isn't available.

That may be a subject of further discussion from people, but a thousand dollars, really, in the scheme of things is a pretty significant fine. So I would concur with the Chief Electoral Officer that it's not really something that there was any push to increase.

Publishing of expenses. Right now expenses are published in a newspaper usually some considerable time after an election at a time when they may or may not be of interest to very many people, but the change will allow them to be published on the web site. I think there are significant advantages to having them published on the web site. One of them is that it's not just a one-day wonder, but it's there for people. It's accessible by people over time. In order to access the publication in the newspaper, you have to buy the newspaper on the day that it's published, and if you want to have access to that information, I guess you'd have to tear out the sheet and keep it someplace.

If it's on the web, most people know how to access the web now. In this province we can advise that the majority of homes, the majority of people are on the web now, and it's very accessible that way. Of course, it's always accessible through the Chief Electoral Officer, through Elections Alberta, if anybody wants to get the information. But rather than put out a considerable sum of money to publish that in newspapers across the province, it's available on the web site. If anybody can't access it there, they can certainly get help to access it through their local library or by contacting the Chief Electoral Officer directly. It's a way of expanding the availability of the information rather than contracting it.

In terms of the increased donations to candidates and to constituency associations, Elections Alberta simply put it forward as something that hadn't been changed in nearly 25 years and postulated that it was something that we may want to look at. But I have to say to the House again that Elections Alberta and the Chief Electoral Officer did not make the recommendation to increase the contribution limits. They indicated that as we're looking at the act, that's something that we may wish to look at, and in fact members of the House had from time to time raised that issue with me specifically. So when we did look at it and saw that it hadn't been raised in 25 years, it's appropriate to raise it now. I again indicate that that's just for candidates and for constituency associations. We didn't raise the $15,000 limit for political parties.

That, I think, deals with most of the questions that were raised and, hopefully, answers concerns that people have about the Election Act.

I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar tabled in the House the other day a letter to the Privacy Commissioner with respect to the unique identifier number and asked for the Privacy Commissioner's comment. The Privacy Commissioner has responded and has copied myself and the Chief Electoral Officer with a response. If I may paraphrase the response, it essentially indicates, as we were aware, that the register of electors falls within 4(1)(d) of the freedom of information act, and therefore it's excluded from the application of the act.

He then goes on to deal with a number of other items, to provide comment, but one of the statements that he makes is that it is preferable that the Chief Electoral Officer assign a unique identifier number for identification and verification purposes rather than use identifiers that already exist for other purposes such as social insurance numbers or Alberta health care numbers.

I'm sure the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar may wish to table this letter as it's a response to the letter that was written by him, but I think it deals with the concerns that may have been raised about privacy issues or about somehow there being yet one more bureaucratic way to reduce Albertans to a number.

I would want to end by assuring the House that I'm very satisfied that that's not the intention of Elections Alberta and the Chief Electoral Officer. What they really need is a way to keep data about electors clear and identifiable and unique and to make the changes because Albertans are mobile people and do move around and to be able to track that information in an appropriate way so that when we have an election, Albertans are on the electors list, do have eligibility to vote, and have access to vote in the most appropriate ways and are encouraged in fact to vote.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think this might be the single most interesting and important piece of legislation that we do this spring sitting. I'm hoping that it doesn't pass too quickly, because I think it's important that we allow enough time for people in the community out there to catch on to what we're discussing and be able to get in on the debate. I know that both the Liberal opposition and the ND opposition have tried to contact some of those smaller political organizations out in the community and get feedback from them or establish a feedback loop.

The problem, of course, is it's a volunteer-based activity at that point. They are very small groups; they don't have paid staff. For them to take the time to be able to go and get the information and think about it and get a group of them together, that takes time. It's longer than a week, and legislation has been passing through here very quickly because at this point it's just members of the opposition that are commenting on it.

I'm hoping that we'll be able to keep this debate alive long enough to bring in that input from other people, to be able to hear back from some of those smaller political organizations who will be affected by the changes being considered in Bill 22.

The identifier number. I know there's an amendment coming on that, and there'll be a more thorough discussion on it a little further on.

One of the things that I find very interesting in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre is that I'm sort of bookended by seniors and by students. The students, the younger people, are really tuned into the use of the Internet and the use of computers. They are there. They understand it in a way that I never will because they grew up with it. There was a computer in their home, in all likelihood, before they could write. They just get it. They understand how to use that as a tool in a way that other people don't.

Frankly, some of the other people that are not particularly comfortable with that technology are seniors. The regular use of a home computer and the whole concept of the Internet for many of my constituents came into being after they'd retired. So their interest and willingness in taking on a whole new technology at that point was pretty low.

I have one of the most wired constituencies in the province. No surprise. It's downtown Edmonton, and people living in the apartments and condominiums that I have are pretty keen on using computers and on the Internet and even beyond that now where you get into wireless technology, fibre optics, that kind of thing. So I'm looking forward to that debate.

What I'd like to talk about right now – I'd like to put an amendment on the floor. I believe that I've sent copies of the amendment to the table, so they could be distributed at this point.

The Deputy Chair: Do you mind just holding on for a couple of minutes while the amendment is being circulated?

Ms Blakeman: Sure. Just signal.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1, and I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is moving this on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ms Blakeman: That's true. That's exactly true. The Member for Edmonton-Centre is moving this on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

This amendment is proposing to amend section 4 of the bill by adding in a long section. Section 4 is essentially setting out that the Chief Electoral Officer can provide guidance and supervision respecting conduct, enforce that election officers be fair and impartial, issue to election officers any information and guidance, and following each enumeration, general election, and election under the Senatorial Selection Act, by-election, or plebiscite, et cetera, prepare and distribute a report. So it's about sort of general information and control of elections.

What's being suggested here is that after clause (b) in section 4, which is adding in references to plebiscites or referendums, we have a section.

(4) On or before January 1, 2005, the Chief Electoral Officer shall prepare a report on electoral reform to be submitted to the Standing Committee that the idea there being that it would be comprised of one male and one female from each electoral division; in other words, with 83 currently in Alberta, a man and a woman from each of those 83 constituencies. They would form a citizens' assembly on electoral reform, the idea being that they would examine different electoral systems and provide recommendations on changes to Alberta's electoral system.

(a) provides recommendations regarding the implementation of a citizens' assembly on electoral reform,

When the report is provided to the standing committee, the standing committee would furnish copies of it to all Members of the Legislative Assembly and to the Clerk and make the report public. This is a really exciting idea and one that is very timely as well.

I was just reading an article in Maclean's from January 26, 2004, Power to the People. It's talking about a very similar process that's taking place in B.C. right now called the Citizens' Assembly on Electoral Reform. The B.C. government is committed to implementing whatever this citizens' reform comes up with, even if they don't particularly like it. So that's pretty brave of them.

They talk about it in terms like they're "a new social tool in democracy." B.C. is not the only one looking at this. According to this article, Ontario and Quebec, Yukon, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island are looking at it. All of them have or are starting or just finished either a citizens' initiative or some other consideration of electoral reform. In one case it was a retired justice. In Yukon they have a senior adviser on electoral reform.

So there's definitely a feeling from Canadians that they want to see some changes. The time is coming, and I think that a perfect way of doing it is to have the impetus come from the ground up. My feelings for the Reform Party are not warm, but I will certainly give them credit for having started out of grassroots. They spent a lot of time in town halls across Alberta just saying to people: what is it that you want? What is it that's important to you? I think that's what the basis of democracy is, and I'd like to see a similar process in place. So I'm grateful to my colleague for Edmonton-Gold Bar for having come up with the suggestion to incorporate this citizens' assembly into Bill 22.

I've spoken before in the Assembly about my concerns that we reach out and capture the younger voters, who are not engaging in democracy at this point. They're not voting, and neither are they learning to vote as they get older and get more interested in how government and government changes, policies, and programs affect their lives. We need to engage these folks. Frankly, when I retire, I really want the people that are running the world to be good legislators and good citizens and really up to speed on democracy. Those are the generations that are coming behind us. So where are we failing here? How are we not engaging those folks? I would hope that if we had a citizens' assembly, we would also be looking to have a fair number of them be younger voters that can talk to us about what engages them.

They're really interested in following and getting a lot of information, which is what web sites are really useful for, because you only have to put the information up once. You don't have to keep distributing it and printing it. The costs are very low, and once you have the information on the site, anybody can go and read it. It can stay up there for years, and you don't have to do anything to it. So it can be quite cost-effective that way.

They're also interested in things like web blogs. It took me a while to figure out that they just weren't slurring words together. Well, they are: it's a web log, and then it's talked about as a blog. It does things like follow a candidate who sort of puts up a diary almost, and people can follow along and read every day what people are doing and even have a conversation with them in sort of a chat room or an instant text-messaging way. So I think that the use of the computer and bringing some new technology into the system is part of what we need to look at with electoral reform, but most importantly I think that the first thing we've got to do is look at things like proportional representation and how we would move into implementing a system like that if that's the system that we're most comfortable with.

I know that there are others who are interested in debating this motion, and whenever I hear of government members who are interested, boy, do I ever want to encourage them to get up and speak to it. So I will urge all members to engage in this discussion. I think it's pretty exciting, and of course I'm urging them to support the amendment.

With those words, I will make way for others to join in the discussion. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I get started, I want to commend the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for making this very interesting, timely amendment to the legislation that's before the Assembly at this time. When this legislation was being debated, it struck me that we're debating legislation that has significant import in our democratic process, changing our electoral system, not changing it in a wholehearted way but in an evolutionary way, to improve what we do in our democracy here in Alberta around the edges.

In the time that we're doing that, there are areas in the world where people are literally dying to achieve what we take for granted. So perhaps because it's of such major importance around the world, it's something that we should have a closer look at and say: well, why is it that it's something that is so easy and seemingly so unimportant to us? We take it for granted, but it's so important to people around the world.

I think that Canadians are waking up to the fact that democracy evolves. It's not static; it evolves. Our democracy has evolved over 500 years, when first people in England sat around on the green lawn, and that became the genesis of the Westminster Parliament, of which our Legislature is a part. So it evolved over 500 years. Change isn't something that we should be afraid of. Change is something that we should accept, and change is in fact coming to the electoral process in Canada. Change will come to the electoral process in Alberta. It's inevitable, and it's inevitable because Alberta leads the country in so many different ways.

As the Member for Edmonton-Centre indicated in speaking to this motion on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, there are at present five full-fledged electoral reform commissions underway in Canada as we speak. By far the most ambitious of these electoral reform commissions underway is the constituent assembly in British Columbia. The gutsy move there is that the government of the province of British Columbia is obligated to take the recommendations without change to the people at the next general election in British Columbia. That will take place in mid-March of next year.

The results of the constituent assembly are scheduled to be tabled in the Legislature of British Columbia in mid-December of this year, and there is no limit to what those recommendations might be. The recommendations will come to the Assembly by way of a constituent assembly.

The constituent assembly was picked at random. Two persons representing each of British Columbia's constituencies came together, young and old, men and women, people of different ethnic and demographic backgrounds, some with little interest, some with no interest, some with great interest. They came together, and what happened is what usually happens in a situation like this. When you ask the best of people, you generally get it.

So this opportunity asked the best of the people that came together. It asked of them: "Look; when you come together to do this very important work, we expect you to work in the interests of British Columbians. What you do is going to have import for generations to come, so give it your best." They're supported by a professional staff and by experts drawn from around the world with different experiences in the political process.

Just as Canada and Alberta do not have a lock on everything that's good and wise in anything, including health care, we should look around the world to examine best practices, import those so that we can make what we already have which is good better. So should we also look around the world at other jurisdictions to see what works and what works better than what we have today.

One of the major concerns that all mature democracies have is citizen involvement, particularly citizen involvement of young people. They're tending to tune out the political process, and that's not healthy. It's not a very good measure of the health of our democracy. As a matter of fact, the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada has made the statement – and I'll have to paraphrase it – that if you measure the health of the democratic patient that is Canada by the participation rate, particularly of the young, then our democracy could use a lot of help, a lot of medicine. It's not particularly strong.

Therefore, I think that the intervention of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is very worthy, it's very timely, and it's a very, very important intervention because, in my opinion, the people of Alberta are not going to want to see our province and ourselves standing at the sidelines as the other provinces in Canada and the federal government consider democratic renewal.

I think that perhaps democratic renewal is a more descriptive term than democratic reform. It's really democratic renewal. You and I and those of us in this room and in other parliaments are the stewards of the parliamentary process in trust for generations to come.

This motion, in my opinion, is strong enough and worthy to stand on its own and should be a stand-alone motion, not attached to another bill but worthy of debate in its own right. I don't think there's anything more important than the capacity of the democratic parliamentary process to engage young people, people of a wide variety of demographic backgrounds and interests, in the political process. In our country and in our province I think it might be true that even at election time perhaps as many or as few as 3 per cent of Canadians are actively involved in a political organization. Considering the fact that politics touches every aspect of our lives, we need to engage more people in a meaningful way in the political process. I think that the amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar advanced today does just that.

Now, there are of course many, many tributaries on this river of electoral renewal. There are mechanics: electronic voting, permanent voters records. There are the considerations as to the perception of fairness in the electoral process: mixed proportional representation, run-off elections, first past the post. There are many people who feel that the current system gives us the best stability. There's citizen involvement, citizens' initiatives, referenda. Of course, that brings in other issues. [some applause] I hear a member across the way clapping at the notion of citizens' initiatives and referenda.

These are populist ideas that are of course two-edged swords. We need to ensure that what we have is judgment, not just opinion, because those of us in this room are charged with exercising judgment in the common good. How are individual rights and minority rights protected and considered? If we consider the impact of minority rights, where then does the majority get the imprimatur to govern?

What is the role of political leadership? Is political leadership doing an opinion poll, finding out what is the most popular thing to do, and then following that? Is that leadership? Is it a principled adherence to party platform? Do you dance with the gal that brung you?

How is it that members of this Assembly may from time to time vote in concert with a government motion even though they may have spoken against the government motion? Where does party discipline and party leadership strengthen a party or weaken it? These are all considerations that must be I think debated and debated honestly and openly and with candour from all sides.

I some time ago read an interesting book by William Safire. The title of the book – and I recommend it to anyone interested in this – is The First Dissident. In that book William Safire transposes today's political discourse into the Book of Job, the idea being: where does one get the presumption of the strength or the right to govern? The gist of it is: to thine own self be true; that the role of political leadership is that we should listen carefully to what we hear, to our constituents, and then from what we've heard aggregate interests in the common good and then articulate a vision from what we have heard that inspires us to be more together than we are as individuals.

That's, in my opinion, what the true role of political leadership is. It's not to find a small, narrow self-interest, divide and conquer. It's to aggregate interests in the common good and then articulate a vision that calls us as individuals and as citizens to something great, to greatness, that we should be more together than we are as individuals.

So how do we go about doing that if our society is based on individual rights from a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, if we have a common law base which has worked well for us because it allows for ambiguity, questions that need not necessarily be answered today but will resolve themselves in the fullness of time, which is essentially what the common law is? So in order to become a rights-based or a constitutional democracy now that we are giving strength to the Supreme Court, we become a rights-based society so that our individual rights – our individual rights – trump the collective rights and the good of the community.

Look at the tensions that that has brought to our country. These came in, just sort of evolved. It's been – what? – 30 years or so, and we're gradually working through those tensions. I think that in the first 10 years of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms there were something like 200 or 300 Charter challenges. Last year there might have been two or three. So a lot of these things sort of work themselves out in the fullness of time.

But the basic point is that it's not a sign of weakness to consider the electoral process or electoral renewal. It's a sign of strength. It's something that our parliament, our Assembly will sooner or later be charged with doing. In order to feel part of the whole, just as our province needs to feel part of the whole – and that's what leads to the alienation that we're constantly regurgitating – so must minorities in our province, whether they are linguistic or political minorities, feel part of the whole. Unless we find a way to engage citizens equitably, representing political strengths that may or may not be in concert with our own, we are also going to have to resolve the notion of equitable relationships within this Assembly representation.

I hate to do this, but I'm going to inflict a quote from our dear friend the late Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau. He said that every – and believe me; I see smiles to my left over there, to my far left – individual has the unfettered right to bring others to their point of view, but if they do not bring others to their point of view having had the unfettered opportunity to do so, then they have the obligation to join with the majority so that we aren't forever going back and reconsidering what has already gone past.

So a minority must have the unfettered right to bring others to their point of view, which is what this is all about. Then having been successful, they are now the majority. If they're not successful, they are the minority and have the obligation to join the majority. The majority then gets its imprimatur to govern because that minority feels heard, feels secure and comfortable within that circle.

That's how our democratic process works. A minority gets the opportunity to bring others to their point of view. If they're successful, they become the majority. If they're not successful, they join with the majority and go on to something else in the full knowledge that their rights are respected.

That's why we in Alberta have yet again another opportunity to lead our country. As a matter of fact, some members would know that tomorrow I'll be on my way to New Brunswick to represent Alberta at the New Brunswick electoral reform commission, in which I will be sharing with them some of my experiences in our Chamber, the way that our government involves backbench MLAs.

An Hon. Member: There are no backbench MLAs. We're all private members.

Mr. McClelland: Well, private members. I'm corrected. We're not backbench; we're private members involved in the development of policy.

An Hon. Member: Hold your head high.

Mr. McClelland: Hold my head high, I'm told.

We have a lot to be proud of in our province. We lead the country in so many ways. Any time anyone ever wonders about what our province has brought to our country and to the world for that matter, they need only think of the Famous Five. Remember that it was right here in this Chamber, right here in this city, right here in this province the very first woman ever to be elected to a parliamentary Assembly in the British Commonwealth. That was right here in Edmonton in 1912. So we have a tremendous amount to offer our country. One of the things that we can offer our country is an openness and a capacity for electoral renewal that will bring new generations to the table politically.

We should remember that democracy evolves; it's not static. We should be wary of change simply for the sake of change. Our democracy evolved over 500 years. Change, in my view, to something as sacred as our Westminster democracy should be evolutionary in nature, not revolutionary. We need time to adjust to whatever change we might accommodate, and, democratically speaking, we're fairly young. Not young as democracies go but young as civilizations go. We should take measured, careful steps on electoral reform and renewal, but we shouldn't be afraid to take the steps. Every long journey begins with the first step. Parliamentary renewal and reform is part of a long continuum. It's part of our heritage, a part that we should be proud of and we shouldn't fear.

Once again, I commend the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for bringing this very important issue to the table. I think that it is worthy of debate in its own right as its own stand-alone bill, and I look forward in the future to many debates on this very, very important issue.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate. I believe this amendment that was presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on my behalf will be called amendment A1. I recognize the eloquent remarks from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and certainly it is a speech which I'm going to review in Hansard, and I hope many others do as well.

What we are trying to do with this amendment – and I think it's a pressing issue. We can certainly talk in the future of having further democratic reforms or renewals. Renewal is much better than reforms.

When I looked at the original bill, Mr. Chairman, it came to me that this is an ideal time for a discussion on democracy in this province. There is a democratic deficit in this province. There's no doubt about that. You have some entrenched practices which certainly don't enhance democracy. We have, for instance, the standing policy committees, where opposition members are behind a rope, behind a red braided rope, and they can't participate. That is not in the interests of democracy. We were talking about British Commonwealth jurisdictions. I tell parliamentarians that this is the practice in this province; they're in disbelief.

We can look at other changes that this side of the Assembly has proposed, the changes to the Public Accounts Committee and its procedures which would all be enhancing democracy, not reducing in any way or means members of this Assembly's participation or the people who have elected them.

I said earlier this afternoon in a private member's statement that many jurisdictions are looking at democratic renewal in one form or another. This province certainly has had a very interesting history in regard to direct democracy. It is interesting to note that at one time, up until the middle of the last century, we had a process of not proportional representation, but some scholars do call it proportional representation. It was certainly a different process than the one we have now. We had recall.

Ms Blakeman: Oh, that's right. We did.

Mr. MacDonald: We did have recall, and the sitting member that was recalled was none other than – I believe it was Premier Aberhart. So recall was no longer fashionable. The farmers down around High River recalled the Premier, and it didn't go over too well.

In the past we've had various forms of democracy, and they have worked. We have changed into the system that we have now, so what I'm saying is that we could change again. We only have to look at our neighbours to the west and the citizens' assembly that they have implemented to discuss electoral reform.

Now, this citizens' committee has two citizens from each respective constituency. They're holding over 45 public hearings through the province in May and June, and all interested citizens are advised and welcome to come. The citizens' assembly was created, again, by the government of British Columbia with the support of the entire Assembly. It is an independent, nonpartisan assembly of citizens who will meet to examine the province's electoral system; that is, how our votes determine who gets elected to sit in the provincial Legislature.

The citizens' assembly, with one man and one woman from each of B.C.'s 79 provincial electoral districts plus two aboriginal members, will, as I said earlier, have a wide-ranging discussion through a series of public hearings. Members for this commission were picked by random draw from a pool that reflected the gender, age, and geographic makeup of British Columbia.

This initiative – I have to tip my hat to them – is certainly unique. I don't know of anywhere else in the world where such power has been handed to a group of citizens. I don't think we should be afraid of this process in this province. I don't think we should be afraid to have a committee like this struck, and I don't think we should be afraid of what they may decide. I think it would be good for the Assembly.

Now, this group in B.C. is going to study many different proposals. They may propose changes to the system, but any changes they propose will be put forward in a referendum question at the time of the next provincial election, which is going to be May 17, 2005.

Now, should we have fixed dates for elections in this province? Should we have fixed terms for the Premier? Should we have fixed terms for the Prime Minister? We have talked about this in this Assembly before, and I certainly have no problem with that. I could certainly live with that.

To pass, the referendum in British Columbia would have to be approved by 60 per cent of all voters and by a simple majority of voters in 60 per cent of the 79 electoral districts. If the voters endorse a new system, the government has indicated that it will be in place for the following provincial election in 2009. Now, that could only be a guideline for the proposed amendment A1 that we're looking at here.

Let's, Mr. Chairman, look back at the controversy that occurred over the boundary redistribution. Edmonton lost a seat in this for no justifiable reason. In fact, we should have held onto our seat and probably should have gotten another seat as well, but we didn't. What was given to the city in 1997 or 1996 in the last redistribution was taken away by this commission. How that commission came to that conclusion is beyond me. There was an interim minority report written by Ms Bauni Mackay.

When you have controversies like this, when you have the elimination of an inner-city seat in Edmonton, in this case Edmonton-Norwood, that is an indication to all of us that we need to look at alternatives. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, amendment A1, is such an alternative.

We could even go forward again, and if we wanted to have gender balance in this Assembly, we could have a man and a woman elected from each constituency. We could reduce the number of constituencies, but a man and a woman would be elected in each constituency. The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat is shaking his head, but perhaps we should have gender balance in this Assembly. Perhaps we should become the first parliament to have gender balance in the Legislature. Citizens would simply be eligible in each constituency to vote for a man and a woman on the ballot.

Now, the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar may have some concerns about this in regard to what happens with people with alternative lifestyles. Well, he can get up and he can debate the whole idea. That's his prerogative. Participate in the debate like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. We need more distinguished elegant voices like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford's in the Assembly.

With an Assembly that had gender balance, perhaps we would have different views on a number of issues: public education, public health care. I'm going to bet – and people can correct me – that a lot more mothers visit the classrooms of this province than fathers. Fathers are usually working away from the home. We have a high percentage of the workforce that works out of town. Mothers know firsthand classroom conditions because of the visits to the classrooms.

Women are also the primary caregivers in families to elderly family members. As a result of that, they visit hospitals and doctors perhaps more often than male members of the family, and they have a different understanding of how our public health care system does or does not work.

Those are just two examples. Perhaps with a simple amendment like that we would have gender balance in this Assembly, and perhaps we would have better laws, and as a result of that we'd have a better democracy. Now, this is one idea that perhaps could be debated across this province if we were to vote in favour of amendment A1.

I don't think, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that we can wait for another time. Now is the time to implement real democratic change in Alberta. The government may not see anything wrong with the system, but others do. When I travel, when I go to rural Alberta and I go to Calgary, democratic reform is one of the issues that citizens want discussed, and they express frustration over this first past the post system that we have.

Perhaps this commission – let's call it a commission – could look at having proportional representation. Proportional representation is certainly something that this member could adjust to. I think, in fact, we would strengthen democracy. The more different voices that are heard in this Assembly, the better off we would be. We could hear, for instance, the voices of the environmentalists through the Green Party. We could hear the voices of the Alberta Alliance and Social Credit. I think those voices would add to this Assembly and add to the political debate. So, in that case, I think the more the merrier, Mr. Chairman. All this could be discussed if we vote for this amendment.

I would urge all hon. members in the interest of democratic renewal in this province to please consider this amendment in a positive light. Vote for it, support it, and we, too, can improve our democracy.

There are too many good ideas to be discussed by one speaker, so I will cede the floor to an hon. colleague. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I did want to just get up and make a couple of comments, and I'll be brief so that my colleague from that side can also participate in this discussion.

I did want to say to start off with that I, sadly, won't be supporting this amendment, but I wanted to make some comments about it, and I wanted to start off by saying that every recommendation that's in this bill has come to us from the Chief Electoral Officer, who went out and did quite a lot of work to come up with things that he believes would make the election process more effective, more efficient, and more fair to people that not only work in the polls but people that need to go vote; for example, people that want to vote in an advance poll. The rules will be much more simplified now so that we can accommodate those people that are going to be away or may just know that they can't get there that day. There are a lot of really great things in this bill that I would hope that people would support.

Specifically to the amendment and the idea of yet another commission – and you know what? Maybe down the road at some point we should be looking at all of these things, but I do want to make some comments.

When you talk about recall, the first thing that comes to mind is the fact that Premier William Aberhart was the one that was in fact subject to a recall petition. In British Columbia, where they brought in this rule, the very first thing that everybody tried to do was go after Gordon Campbell. I'm not sure that the effect of this is actually that they've done something wrong or that they don't deserve to be MLAs any more as much as it is that it's an opportunity for everybody to play games with the system.

I really resent that because it's very difficult as an individual to give up a big chunk of your life to run for office and try and come here only to have somebody that didn't win an election against you in your own riding all of a sudden start playing games with the electoral process. I think there's a lot of risk in that, and there's a lot of downside, and we need to be very careful when we talk about that.

Another issue that was raised was gender balance, and I don't even know what that means. My God, we live in the 21st century in the most modern province in the entire world. Nobody can compete with us on anything, and to think that the only way that we can get women in here is to have some kind of gender balance is offensive to me as a woman. I ran against five men and won. I've had no problem doing that three times in a row, whether it was a nomination or an election, and if I run again and if I win again, it will be against other men, and I don't care. I don't care that it's against men.

I believe I have a message, and my message to my constituents is that I am going to come here and I am going to work myself practically to death to try and do everything that I can to meet their needs, to do the things that they've asked me to do. Whether it's to try and deal with mould in a school or to deal with an overpass at the north end of Airdrie or lights at Bearspaw, I do exactly what it is they ask me to do.

I don't need anybody out there making it easier for me to get here. I worked hard to get here. I want to believe that I deserve to be here and that somebody didn't hand me a gift and say: okay; you go because you're a woman. No. I want to go because I'm the right person for the job, because I work hard, and I have a right to be here. This is not a Third World nation. This is the most modern nation in the world, and we have so much to be proud of. [interjection] I'm just responding to you, hon. member, because you're the one that brought it up.

When you talk about term limits, let's be very clear. There are term limits. The limit to a term is when an election is called. Every single time there's an election called, which have been miraculously four years apart here in Alberta, the people then go to the polls and they decide if they want you back or not. The idea of having a term limit is to get rid of somebody that you can't get rid of because you're not good enough to beat me. That's the reality. So when you get a good candidate and he beats me, my limit is up. That's it. There's no need for there to be a law that says that Carol can only be there for four years because it would be much better for Airdrie-Rocky View if she wasn't there. The people of my riding will decide. You don't need some arbitrary, unilateral law that makes that decision.

Proportional representation, with all due respect, is for parties who can't mount a good campaign, that don't do a good job for four years raising funds to get enough money to run an election properly in this province or anywhere. [interjection] Oh, and the big unions aren't in your pocket, Mr. Mason.

Mr. Mason: They're really small.

Ms Haley: Really small little ones. Yeah. Well, nevertheless, in every other part of Canada the unions support the left-wing parties. They don't support us, and they never have. [interjection] You want to get up and give a speech? Can I give mine first? Would that be okay?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I just wish to caution on a couple of things. It would help if the debate goes through the chair, and secondly, I hope that you will respect the tradition that we have of not mentioning people by name.

Ms Haley: I will not do it again, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: You may proceed now, hon. member.

Ms Haley: Thank you. With regard to proportional representation generally speaking that is just something that is absolutely not necessary in Alberta. People here choose which party they want to support. They choose which party they want to belong to. They can buy a membership, they can make a campaign contribution, and they can run.

I ran against five or six parties; they are all out there. It is not my fault if the people didn't vote for them. I do not know why I have to feel bad that the people of Alberta supported my government and my party. That is how elections work. In the next election it might be vastly different, and that is okay too because that is democracy at its absolute best.

So, you know, Mr. Chairman, with all the greatest respect in the world to my colleagues across the way I will not support this amendment. I would strongly encourage my colleagues not to support this amendment. One day, when all calmer heads prevail, perhaps we can have an intelligent discussion on why there should be electoral reform or what path it should take if, indeed, it should take anything other than what we've got. Winston Churchill said it best when he said on watching parliamentary democracy: it may be the worst system in the world, but it is better than anything else that there is out there. I believe that.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to rise to speak to amendment A1, which has been put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I will be supporting this, not because I have agreed with every possibility that's been raised by that hon. member or others for the ultimate outcome of this but because I believe that it is a good process.

I don't think that there's any advantage in this discussion to personalize this in the sense of taking it as an attempt to drive out any particular member from this Assembly. Nor do I think it's valuable to politicize the discussion by talking about the party in power and its ability to raise more money than the other political parties. I don't think that's what this is about at all.

One of the advantages of the British parliamentary system, Mr. Chairman, is that it is not carved in stone in the sense of a rigid constitutional description of how the system is exactly supposed to work. Its greatest strength is that it is an evolutionary system that changes with the times. It's not based fundamentally on fixed and permanent rules but on traditions, and those traditions have been allowed to evolve. Where the system will break down and stop being a progressive democratic system is when we try to fetter it and to say that it's been this way for the last 20 years, the last 50 years, or the last 100 years and we don't want to see any further change to the system.

I think there are a number of very good ideas that can be brought forward. I agree, believe it or not, with the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View on some of her criticisms of some of the ideas that have been put forward as potential outcomes. I particularly think that recall has been abused.

The most recent example of that was in the situation in California, where for very political reasons related to the role of California in the American presidential elections, this was undertaken and extremely well financed by large right-wing organizations that have millions and millions of dollars to spend on this. It was them that organized the recall of the governor of California and his replacement with a movie actor of some renown but very little political experience. So I agree with that issue.

I'm not necessarily committed to term limits. I certainly think that ultimately it's the voters that should determine who represents them and not some arbitrary rule.

I also have some considerable problem with the idea of citizens' initiatives. We can see how citizens' initiatives have hamstrung California and prevented the government from either increasing taxes or cutting many of the services. It has reduced the ability of the government of California to effectively put in place political agendas, which is what politics is all about.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I would say that California has become the poster child for the failure of the three Rs that were so famous a number of years ago. If I can recall all of the Rs, I think they were recall, referendum, and – what's the other one? Well, it's initiatives, but I don't know if there's an R word for that.

California has, I think, shown people that were rushing to emulate some of the American political experience that it's not all that it's cracked up to be.

Let's take a look at some of the things that could come out of it. One of the most significant changes that I think is on the political horizon in Canada and partly because of what the B.C. government has done is the whole question of proportional representation. Believe it or not, there's a system called mixed member proportional representation that allows the seats in an Assembly or a parliament to be allocated according to the popular vote in the same proportion but also to include geographical districts or constituencies or ridings within the Assembly, so people are represented geographically but in the same proportion as the vote was as a whole.

This is something whose time has come. It's only a matter of time. I don't think it will be long before this is implemented someplace in Canada, and it may well be in British Columbia. It's a far more democratic system than we have now. You know, people that are in favour of it here in Alberta, because it has increased the representation of the governing party, have at the same time been very critical of it in the federal system because it's had the same effect with the federal Liberal government in Canada.

The point is, Mr. Chairman, that you can't just decide these issues depending on which particular party is advantaged by it in a particular jurisdiction at a particular time. You have to look at it in a broader sense, in a more objective sense, and I think that's what we need to do. I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is right that the place would be improved by a greater range of voices.

Another aspect that I would like to deal with is the aspect of fixed election times. I cannot for the life of me understand why we have a system in which the Premier or the Prime Minister, the leader of the governing party, gets in their sole discretion to determine the election date. That's not fair to the other political parties, and it's not fair to the public. The public has a right to know when the elections are going to be. That system has been in place in other countries, and it's in place right here in Alberta because, of course, we have fixed election days for municipal elections and always have had, and that works just fine.

The only reason for the system in which the Premier or the Prime Minister can call an election is to give an even greater advantage to the governing party than they already have. It's not sufficient that they just have their hands on all the levers of power and all the resources of the community, but then they get to pick an election at a time in which they have some specific advantage and their opponents have a disadvantage. That's just not the right way to do it, and there's no good argument to be made for that as a constitutional position. So unless the government actually falls on a question of confidence, I think there are lots of reasons to have fixed election dates.

There are any number of other things, I think, that could be developed or considered by a commission along the lines which are suggested in this amendment. I think that the experience of British Columbia is a very interesting one. It's not a question of election, and it's not a suggestion, as the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View suggested, that it's reverse sexism because it's not an election. Nobody is suggesting, I think, that the principle of one man, one woman would be applied to a Legislative Assembly because that would be taking away rights from the voters, but I do in fact think that in this case, where people are not elected, it makes sense and has considerable merit.

The last point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, has to do with election finance, because that was also raised by that hon. member, and there needs to be a lot of attention paid to this. Again, if we look at the United States example, we see the role that money has begun to play in politics, where it is absolutely the most dominant factor, and enormous sums are spent on elections. This, of course, empowers those people who have a great deal of money, and that in itself is a political decision.

We have the spectacle, I guess I would call it, of the Democratic Party in the United States going through the primary system where the criteria seems to be that people are knocked out as the primary season progresses by their inability to continue to raise funds. That means that you have these large financial contributors, mostly large corporations and the packs that are organized by special interests, basically betting – they're speculating financially – on which candidates are going to win. As the primaries and the caucuses progress, they shift their money to people that look like they have a greater potential to win, and they cease funding people who can't.

That's not the kind of system that I think produces any sort of democratic result. That is shifting the ability to select the presidential candidate from both parties in the United States into the hands of monied interests, and that is wrong. That is not in the interests of democracy. In fact, it's contrary to the very concept of democracy.

We have this situation in Canada as well to a much lesser extent, but clearly there is a need for some sort of reform of election financing in Alberta perhaps along the lines of that adopted at the federal level, where they have passed a law which prohibits donations from corporations and unions. They've followed the model set in Manitoba.

Now, Mr. Chairman, politics is about the interests of people. It's not about the interests of corporations, and it's not about the interests of unions. It should be about the interests of people. Whether they sit on a corporate board or are a shop steward in a plant, they have rights as citizens and they have obligations to participate in our democratic process as citizens, and I believe that has got to be reflected in how we finance and pay for our politics. So if the federal government can do it, if Manitoba can do it, if they can eliminate funding both by corporations and unions, then I think they are taking a major step at putting the power back in the hands of the people to direct our democratic system, and that's really what it should be all about. So I appreciate that.

I certainly appreciated the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I would just express a fear, however, that if it's defeated here, if the amendment to the bill is defeated, we may never see a separate, stand-alone motion come forward with any prospect of success. That is based, unfortunately, on my experience in this place.

I would urge all hon. members who want to see a further development and evolution of our parliamentary system to support this motion. If it were passed, it would unleash the evolutionary process, which I think is latent in our parliamentary system. I think that only a progressive evolution will really meet the needs of Alberta's citizens into the 21st century.

So I would commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for introducing this amendment, and I will fully support it, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and add a few comments. I encourage all members to vote against the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I have a few comments with regard to the arguments that have been spoken in favour of this amendment.

Firstly, with respect to fixed elections I think it's important that we as legislators understand a very simple matter of constitutional law. Under the British parliamentary system, we indeed do not elect our governments; we only elect our legislators. The government is chosen by the Lieutenant Governor or the Governor General. Typically, it's the leader of the party that holds the most seats in the Legislature or in Parliament, as the case may be, but as citizens in a British parliamentary system we do not directly elect our governments. We elect our legislators and our legislators only.

This is a fundamental difference between the British parliamentary system and the American republican system. In the United States of America, where there are fixed-term elections, it's the second Tuesday of every fourth November that an election is held. But they have the ability to directly cast a vote in favour of the executive member of their choice, whether it be a governor or whether it be the President. So the systems are different.

We have inherited 800-plus years of British parliamentary tradition where the prerogative for calling an election, with all due respect to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, does not rest with the Premier and does not rest with the Prime Minister. Ultimately, it rests with the Governor General or with the Lieutenant Governor, as the case may be.

Students of Canadian history will recall a situation in the mid-20th century when Lord Byng denied then Prime Minister Mackenzie King the ability to dissolve Parliament and call an election. Historians have referred to this incident as the King/Byng thing. It was an interesting anecdote in Canadian constitutional history. Prime Minister Mackenzie King, just having had an election and having won a minority government, lost a vote of confidence in the House and went to the Governor General and asked for Parliament to be dissolved and to go back to the electorate to seek a fresh mandate. Lord Byng – incidentally, his wife, Lady Byng, has an NHL trophy awarded after her, but I digress – declared that since a federal election had just been held, he was going to use his prerogative and the prerogative that rests in the Crown and not call an election.

He asked the Leader of the Opposition of that day, a man by the name of Arthur Meighen, to attempt to form a government. He did attempt to form a government, and similarly lost a vote of confidence in the House. He went to the Governor General. They did dissolve Parliament, called an election, and Mackenzie King was returned with an overwhelming majority.

The point of this story is that it created a bit of a constitutional crisis in Canadian history, and both legal scholars and political scholars have commented on it. It reinforces one simple fact: we do not elect our governments, we only elect our legislators, and it is the prerogative of the Crown or the Crown's representative to decide when an election is appropriate.

It is appropriate under certain terms or in certain situations that a Premier or a Prime Minister, as the case might be, should visit with the Lieutenant Governor or the Governor General and petition that the Legislature be dissolved. For example, the most common one is when a government loses a vote of confidence. An equally important one is when the government is about to embark on what is seen to be a digression from a certain policy, that might require a significant amount of public debate.

If a government feels that it's going to introduce legislation that might be controversial or might be deemed a marked departure from the former way of doing things, they may feel the need to seek a fresh mandate. Often a Premier or a Prime Minister will change through a legislative term, and often the new Premier or Prime Minister, as the case may be, may feel obliged to seek a mandate from the people before he or she introduces legislation that may be a departure from its predecessor.

I think we see that in Ottawa right now where there's a new Prime Minister, and I think quite legitimately that Prime Minister feels the need to seek a fresh mandate from the people. So he may this spring – and we've heard rumours of this – seek a fresh mandate, and we will have a parliamentary election or at least a House of Commons election well in advance of four years of the previous one, which was called in November of 2000.

So I think that fixed elections are a bad idea. There are situations when it is necessary to call an election, so I'm certainly in favour of leaving that prerogative with the Lieutenant Governor or the Governor General and the Executive Council, which provides him or her with advice.

With respect to term limits I similarly have some problems. I believe that fundamentally they're antidemocratic. If you're told as a member of the Assembly or as a member of the Executive Council that you can only serve two terms or three terms regardless of your capabilities, regardless of the job that you've done, and most importantly, regardless of how the people judge the job that you've done, you've created an inherently antidemocratic system, where the people might want candidate A or Premier A to continue into a third or fourth term but are prohibited by statute from returning that individual to their respective office. That is completely undemocratic.

We as legislators must be careful that we always attract the most capable and the most competent people to positions of higher office. If the population is comfortable that a certain individual has been placed in that office and if they wish to continue to be put in that office, certainly they shouldn't be prohibited by a statute of that Legislature from continuing to carry on. So I certainly do not agree with term limits on any member of the Legislature or any member of the Executive Council.

I just want to say, Mr. Chairman, a couple of comments about proportional representation. I think that we must always remain mindful as legislators that we have inherited 800-plus years of British parliamentary tradition. The first past the post system has certainly been inherited from the British House of Commons, and it is used with mixed success in virtually all Commonwealth countries and all provinces within those Commonwealth countries. I think it has served us well.

We've heard some suggestion that we'd be better off going to a proportional representation system or that we'd be better off going to a mixed system where some members were elected by proportional representation and some were elected by single plurality seats. I would submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that those experiments for the most part have failed other jurisdictions. Any members who have followed European politics, especially western European politics, will see nothing but complete instability within the Legislatures that have elected representatives to the Legislature by proportional representation systems.

I had the opportunity to tour Northern Ireland on a parliamentary mission approximately two years ago with the Speaker and about seven or eight other members of this Assembly. It was quite fascinating to see how proportional representation worked in Northern Ireland. I didn't make notes because I didn't know I was going to be speaking to this. The Irish Parliament elected at least eight or nine different parties to a Legislature that had about 50-some members. Of course, no party had anywhere close to a majority. So the executive was chosen from four parties within that Legislature; you had a coalition not of two but of four parties.

Well, this Legislature was so dysfunctional. It was hamstrung virtually from the beginning and in a matter of six or eight months passed the grand total of, I think, zero pieces of legislation, could not get a budget passed, and basically all it ever debated was whether or not Northern Ireland should stay in the United Kingdom or whether it should form its own independent state, which was not part of its constitutional mandate. They were supposed to run highways and roads and hospitals.

The point of this anecdote is that Stormont, the beautiful House in Belfast, was so dysfunctional that it was ultimately closed down by the secretary of state for Northern Ireland in London because it just could not operate. Northern Ireland went back to direct rule under Westminster, under the Parliament of London, because this Parliament was such a disaster.

Other states have tried it. We've seen proportional representation in Germany and in some of the other western European states, and I think their experience has been similar. Proportional representation leads to a multiplicity of parties, it leads to instability, and often the Legislature is hamstrung and cannot pass legislation. Governments fail with great regularity, and those that survive find that their ability to pass legislation is handcuffed. So I'm not a proponent of proportional representation.

Finally, with respect to recall and citizens' initiative, I do agree with the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I think California has shown that these very well-intended and philosophically admirable positions and experiments work better on paper than they do in practice. Certainly, special interest groups and those with a lot of money are able to dominate citizens' initiatives. Recall legislation? I cannot support it. Those of us who are elected to these Legislatures are occasionally called upon to make tough, difficult decisions, and if each one of those decisions individually is going to be subject to that kind of scrutiny by our electorate, we'll be scared to take on the tough choices because the stability of our position will be called into jeopardy.

I think the system, for the most part, works as it is. We're called on to make decisions. We're here. We're paid well to come and to read the material and to listen to the debate and to thereafter cast an intelligent vote either for or against a motion or for or against a piece of legislation.

I think it's most inappropriate that you elect a legislator, have him or her come here, listen to the debate, read the briefing materials, and then have each one of those individual decisions potentially subject to recall by a member of the public, who presumably is not as informed as the member because presumably the member is informed because that's what they're paid to do. I do not believe in a system of democracy where one group of individuals are paid and charged with making legislation and another one actually has the ultimate rule.

We have to be accountable, and we have to be judged, and that is why we go to the polls every four, every four and a half, every five years, and we have the electorate decide on how the government has performed and how the legislators have performed, not on single pieces of legislation or on single pieces of initiative but on the totality of that legislator's record or on the totality of that government's record.

So this system is tried and true. We inherited it from Great Britain some 800 years ago. It has quirks, it has problems, but I think for the most part it works.

For all of those reasons I will be voting against the amendment to Bill 22.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to speak to the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, and talk about some of the issues that I see as being significant. What I want to do is just kind of address the whole issue of whether or not this amendment to the bill is appropriate, fits in.

I think we need to look initially at a lot of the arguments that were made by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford in the sense of this is something that has a real appeal to it, that the scope of this amendment in itself shouldn't even be debated here in this Legislature in terms of what changes in our democratic system should be initiated, talked about. That's the kind of mandate that this amendment should give to this citizens' commission, and that way we can then allow for the true evolution of our democracy to be determined by the people of this province.

I sat and listened to a lot of the debate where the people would come up and talk about specific characteristics that may need change or may not need change and whether or not it's good or whether or not some particular aspect of our current democracy is not good.

This is the kind of thing that we shouldn't be doing here as part of the debate on this amendment. What we should be doing is: is it appropriate for us in the context of an election statutes amendment act to be asking for a citizens' group to be formed so that we can effectively go out and truly bring together the debate about specific characteristics of our democracy and whether or not they are good or bad or need to be changed?

This is why it's so important that we look at this in the context of: are we in a position to evolve our democracy? I agree with the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. You know, we shouldn't be calling it electoral reform. We shouldn't be calling it anything, because what we're trying to do is take a good system and make it even better. We're trying to make it evolve into something that suits the needs of our citizenry so that they feel enhanced by it, they feel that it is their democracy, and they feel that it is the kind of process that makes their decisions be reflected in the actions of the Legislature.

When we start talking about individual aspects of what should be changed and what should not be changed as part of the debate about supporting this amendment or not supporting this amendment, we, in effect, are pre-empting the prerogative that we're trying to assign to this committee. So I think that we need to look at it from the point of view of: do we want our democracy to be constantly evolving to meet the needs, meet the expectations of Albertans?

I really want to focus on the concept of expectations because we have to make sure that Albertans have the opportunity to say: this is the process we want to follow; this is the process that we would be excited about allowing to make our decisions. This is the kind of thing that would encourage them to go out and increase their participation, encourage them to in many ways accept the actions of their legislation. You know, so many times we hear people say: well, it didn't speak on my behalf.

I think this goes back to the comments that were made before, that in the end democracy means that everybody gets to express their opinion, but once the decision is made, democracy can only thrive, democracy can only move forward when the minority says: I had my say; I had a chance to have input; now we have to move on. That's what's so critical about a true reflection of evolution of our democracy.

Mr. Chairman, if we weren't in a position to try and make our democracy work more effectively for us, instill confidence in that democracy in a broad base of Albertans, why would we even have Bill 22 here? If we're going to say the current system absolutely works, we don't need changes, then why do we need the bill?

By bringing forward Bill 22, we are saying on behalf of Albertans: we think the electoral process can improve. So we have an election statutes amendment act to improve that system, to evolve that system into something that in effect reflects both modern communication mechanisms, modern technologies, the dynamics of our society now. Do we need an ID number that follows us so that if we do move from one part of the province to the other, we don't end up with the potential to vote twice?

You know, that's the kind of thing that this bill is talking about. It's talking about an evolution in our democracy. Yet what we're saying now with this amendment A1 is: yes, but Albertans should be the ones that are coming forward, being consulted, being brought into the position of making their – their – democracy work. What's so important is the buy-in of the citizenry, the buy-in by all of the people out there so that when they do go cast a ballot, they feel that it's their system, it's their approach, it's their process, it's their government when they're done. That's what's so important about the idea of this citizens' assembly that we've been talking about. It lets them bring forward the whole broad spectrum of the kind of issues they want to talk about.

We can sit here and make a list, and Albertans can take things off that list; they can add more things to it. But the most important thing is: let's not bog down in a definition of whether or not certain aspects of our democracy need to be improved, need to be changed, need to be redone right now.

Let's basically say: the important thing about this amendment is that it will give citizens in our province a chance to come forward and be part of a change, part of an evolution in our democracy, because nothing, Mr. Chairman, should be considered so immovable, so absolute, that it doesn't need to be reviewed, that it doesn't need to be dealt with in the context of expectations of our citizens and the opportunities for democracy to function. So that's one of the things that we have to make sure of, that we keep moving, that we make sure that citizens are brought into this.

By having two individuals from each constituency come together, we're really giving a grassroots contact to this process. We're giving a process that appears to be, and in fact would be, more independent than we could deal with here. In some of the discussions we've already heard that the first reaction that kind of reflected through the floor was: oh, protecting our own turf, protecting our own ideas, protecting our own position. If we have people outside this Legislature talk about the changes they want to be put in place in our democracy, then what we will have is in effect nobody saying that there's any kind of a self-interest, there's any kind of a self-preservation in it. That would reflect how to deal with this kind of change, this kind of an approach.

We have to make sure that this amendment gives Albertans that chance to be participatory.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, as per Standing Order 4(3) the Committee of the Whole now stands adjourned until 8 p.m., at which time it will reconvene.

[The committee adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 23, 2004 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2004/03/23
 [Mr. Tannas in the chair]

head: Government Bills and Orders
 Committee of the Whole

The Chair: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to some order.

Bill 22 Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Chair: On this bill we have at the present moment an amendment, amendment A1. This is an amendment that has been moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Dr. Nicol: I just wanted to conclude the comments that I was making at 5:30. In a sense, this amendment provides us with an opportunity to go much beyond the scope of revision in our election process that Bill 22 does. In effect, it puts down at the constituent level the power to come back to Albertans and say: "This is the new structure we'd like. This is how we'd like to see our democracy reinvigorated," whatever the appropriate term is.

We had some debate this afternoon about whether or not we should call it democratic renewal or democratic reform. I think the more important thing is that what we've got to do is talk about democratic enhancement, make people feel that it's really part of their process. I'd like to see us support this amendment so that Albertans can choose the aspects of their democratic process they want to discuss and they want to see changes on.

So vote for this amendment and give Albertans that chance to in effect start a dialogue. What they end up with is determined by the wishes and the input of Albertans rather than those of us saying: let's talk about recall or let's talk about proportional representation or let's talk about other things. Let's open the process up. Let's not put those kinds of parameters on it. Let's let Albertans decide through a true citizens' consultation. This amendment provides them with that opportunity, so I hope everybody agrees to support the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wish to say a few words with respect to this amendment that has been proposed. I think the proposer of the amendment, while having a very good idea to explore through a committee or a group of people to look at electoral reform, spent all his rational capital when he tried to explain what he envisioned this committee, if you will, or this standing committee would come up with. I think he's quite preemptive and presumptuous, in fact, in deciding what he thought would be the topics discussed by this committee.

My objection to this amendment is that it is a good place but out of time and out of context. Yes, we are dealing with a bill, Bill 22, that suggests electoral reform and amendments to the process which we already have in place. It sharpens, it redefines, and it clarifies, at the request, I might add, of our Chief Electoral Officer, a number of points that we do need to address to make a good system even better.

However, this amendment suggesting that there be the establishment of a standing committee is not appropriately placed, I feel, in this particular act. We have heard suggestions from a number of people. I've had the opportunity to travel on a committee around the province looking at strengthening Alberta's role in Confederation, and indeed we have heard some suggestions by a number of Albertans who would give this very direction or who would like to see this happen. However, I feel that there is a broader context in which we wish to speak to not only electoral reform but also how we represent ourselves, how we create policy, and how we, of course, as legislators are vested with the mandate to legislate for the people of Alberta by listening to them, by getting direction from them, and by truly representing their positions.

So I'm going to vote against this amendment simply because I think that it has merit, but it has merit in a broader context. When we deal with the issue, we'll have an opportunity to give more timely feedback to us and to Albertans, and we'll create a broader discussion that can ultimately be enacted upon should there be recommendations coming from that committee that would indeed adjust or change the way in which we do perform our elections within this province.

Having said that, I just wanted to say to the House and to the Assembly and also to have on record the fact that while I do believe this is an exercise that has great merit, I would look forward to it, but I do not feel that amending the current bill as we have before us today is either timely or appropriately placed in context. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm surprised to hear that the Member for St. Albert is against electoral reform and in particular is against electoral reform as has been put forward by B.C., which is exactly what this amendment has been modelled on.

I was in B.C. last year and was able to participate in the discussions there in the parliamentary conference on this particular issue as B.C. presented the reform that they were going forward with, which is exactly as outlined in this particular amendment. At that stage, they had done the study and the looking at how they wanted to move forward and were at the stage where they had developed the criteria for developing the citizens' assembly and were going out and searching for the people to participate in it.

Since that time, we have seen that B.C. has gotten outstanding reviews on their approach to electoral reform, and they also believe within the government, and even the opposition parties in B.C. are supporting the move, because they see that it is moving forward in an area that is of grave concern to most people and certainly to people in this province if what I've heard on the doors is any judge of what people are thinking.

I would ask the Member for St. Albert where but in a bill that talks about election statutes amendments and the kinds of changes that we need to move forward on now and in the coming years to talk about a citizens' assembly on electoral reform than here. This is in fact the most appropriate place. If we wait until we get all the feedback from that firewall committee and the government decides what they're going to do on it and how much more they're going to study, we're going to waste thousands and thousands and thousands more dollars and be no further ahead than we are right now. People out in the community are desperate for electoral reform. I certainly hear that, and this would definitely move it one step forward.

The member may not like what the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar or other members of this Assembly put forward as their suggestions in terms of how that would roll out, but those are merely suggestions, and as we all know, at the end of the day it's the government who decides the structure and the format and how the decisions will be made. I would hope that they would keep an open mind and think about all suggestions that were brought forward.

I am finding it surprising that members of the government are not supporting this amendment when we have heard for the past decade or more how supportive they are of political reform in general and how I have seen in their election campaigns that that has been a key component of what they promised to the people of this province. So here's a chance to step up to the plate and play, and I would expect that at least some members would be prepared to do that. I certainly am, and I'm certainly prepared to support what I think is a very strong and very good amendment.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to say a few words in support of amendment A1. I think the world of electoral systems is changing rapidly. If you watch our neighbours to the south, there have been all kinds of innovations in their electoral processes: voting by computer from home – they've been trying to use the Internet in places as a way of encouraging voters to take part in elections, trying to use technology that will make more rapid the results on election night and more accurate results. There are a variety of innovations of electoral schemes being tried elsewhere, and I think the intent of this amendment would be to have Alberta at least look at proposals and then to examine the merits of those proposals.

The outcome, Mr. Chairman, could well be nothing. The committee could meet. They could make their recommendations, and the Legislature, which will have the final say, could decide not to engage in any of the suggestions. So the outcomes I don't think are predetermined. That would be the work of the committee based on proposals that came before it. It's an experiment in democracy, in trying to reform the system that would give an opportunity for all Albertans, all interest groups to put forward their ideas, and hopefully the result would be an improved system or a system that accurately reflects the wishes of the electorate.

I think it's a good amendment, Mr. Chairman. It's nonpartisan in its intent, and the result would be a nonpartisan committee. Eventually the government with its majority would be the one that made the decisions. I think that there's little for the government in terms of risk and much for the province to gain in adopting amendment A1. I support it, and I hope colleagues in the House will do so too.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to spend a few moments talking about this amendment because I think that in substance this amendment is a very intriguing and very interesting approach. Given what we know about what's happening with democratic reform, democratic renewal, or discussion around concerns about how the democratic process in this country might be renewed so that more people would take an interest in governance and the government structures and processes, the concept might well be one that could be embraced in order to see what we might do with respect to the concept of democratic renewal and reform within this province. However, the bill that we have under discussion, Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, is in my view not the place for this amendment.

The Election Statutes Amendment Act is about the instructions for the Chief Electoral Officer with respect to the operations: the running of an election, the rules surrounding elections, what the guidelines for elections are, in fact the set of rules and regulations and the how-tos with respect to the operation of elections. That's what the Election Act is.

It's not an electoral reform act; it's not about democratic renewal. It's about the chapter and verse of appointing returning officers, appointing executive assistants to returning officers, appointing enumerators, having enumerators getting access to buildings, about candidates getting access to buildings, about how people become candidates, all of those things which are in essence what anybody who is interested in running for an election needs to know and what anybody who is in charge of running an election needs to know. That's what the Election Act is about, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment is about a different topic on the same subject. Obviously, it's about elections, but that's where the similarity between the amendment and the bill that we're debating ends. This is about an entirely different concept and an important concept. B.C. is going through, as we've heard, a process of looking at electoral reform and having a citizens' assembly. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford this afternoon gave a very interesting dissertation on what's happening across the country with respect to the process of examining the way we elect representatives in this country and how we might engage in electoral reform. In fact, we've been, I think, in quite vigorous discussion in this House on this very topic.

So in voting against this amendment, it's not to say that this isn't an important concept or isn't an important idea to carry forward but only to say that it doesn't belong in the Election Act. In fact, I think we would be well advised to consider and watch very carefully what's happening right across this country in five different jurisdictions now, that we know of, that are looking at reforms, and we should learn from them. Although we take great pride in being out front and running strong with respect to many initiatives, we don't always have to be, and when other people have taken the initiative, we ought to learn from them, and we ought to watch what they're doing and see what they are doing right and see what effect they're having.

I think that's a position that we're in right now, where we need to watch and learn. We need to be instructed by what's happening across this country, to participate in the discussion, as the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford is doing, on national committees, and to proceed carefully into the process of looking at how our democratic institutions can be renewed for the 21st century.

So while I applaud the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for bringing forward this proposed amendment on this very important topic, I would recommend that the House vote against the amendment and that we look forward to how we might participate in the discussion on democratic renewal, which is happening right across this country as we speak.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to briefly comment on amendment A1 to Bill 22 before the House.

It looks to me like the amendment, although it's different from what's in the bill, in no way runs counter to what that kind of bill is supposed to do. What we are trying to do is to change the election statutes of this province for obvious reasons. We want to update, of course, that which presently exists in the form of provincial statutes but to make some departures if necessary.

We are in the 21st century, and we shouldn't shy away from thinking of some new ways about how to not do minor tinkering to improve the existing arrangements but to seek some major improvements in the way we hold elections, in the way we call upon our citizens to express their will, and to present alternatives to them to seek different electoral systems and make choices between them. There's nothing wrong about offering the citizens of this province choices between different electoral systems, and what this amendment does is provide precisely those kinds of alternatives so that citizens themselves can be empowered to make informed choices.

I did pay careful attention to the arguments given by the Minister of Justice and Attorney General when he on the one hand said that the ideas contained in this amendment are interesting, that they seem worth our attention, yet argued that they don't belong in this bill. I don't see why or how one could argue that. If there are no formal, procedural problems with introducing this kind of amendment to the bill, then I think it's an appropriate time and opportunity to debate precisely this kind of important change in the bill so that it can provide Albertans with real choices. The fact that some other provinces, at least one province, have undertaken this kind of procedure doesn't mean that we have to wait until they get the results.

What this amendment is asking is that we consult with the citizens, provide citizens the ability to consult with each other and then offer their advice, their recommendations, their alternatives for further action. So I think the amendment is an important one. It deserves the support of every member in this Assembly, and I'm very happy to extend my own support.

When I spoke on this bill, Mr. Chairman, in second reading, I in fact raised the issue of proportional representation as one important alternative that we need to consider. What this amendment will do precisely is create an opportunity and a forum whereby citizens of this province will have an opportunity to look at proportional representation as an alternative to the first past the post kind of arrangement that we presently have in place.

The difficulty with this bill is that it doesn't really offer that kind of opportunity for citizens to make their choices, to at least study carefully those alternatives before making a final choice between either A or B, between the first past the post kind of electoral system, that we have had in this province for the last nearly hundred years – well, we did have, I think, up until the '50s some sort of proportional representation in this province. It's not something new in that sense, but it's a question of re-examining that possibility given that we know the flaws of the first past the post model of elections.

I think it is important. It is incumbent on us, indeed, to provide Albertans with an opportunity to examine carefully, to examine as part of a community forum different choices, and then make recommendations and move on from there to change the elections laws and statutes of this province. So I support this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I would like to move the following amendment: that Bill 22, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, be amended by striking out section 34. We have copies of the amendment for distribution.

The Chair: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, this amendment will be known as amendment A2.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A2 would have us strike out section 34 of Bill 22, which states: section 61(1)(e) is amended by striking out "$200" and substituting "$500." The effect of the amendment would be to leave the nomination fee at $200. The reasons for the amendment, I think, are clear. If the goal is to invite as wide a range of people as possible to take part in the elections and to offer themselves for public service, then any move that makes that more difficult, such as increasing the amount of money that they have to raise, I think is a move in the wrong direction.

I mentioned before, when we were debating this at second reading, Mr. Chairman, that one of the great things about elections in our province is that you can take part in them and be successful without raising huge sums of money. We have, I think, to this point a rather open system with respect to people being able to participate without spending an inordinate amount of time or in some cases what might be an impossible amount of time trying to raise dollars just to take part in the election. The amendments as proposed in Bill 22 I think would be a deterrent for some people and will make it just a little bit harder for everyone that's seeking to run for public office.

One of the things that I think we have created is a culture almost of trying to keep elections affordable, and section 34 moves us in the wrong direction. We would all agree that one of the greatest services that a citizen can provide is to offer himself or herself for public office. In most cases I think it's a mark of a citizen who has great concern for the public good and is willing to sacrifice time and in most cases family and in many cases their occupations to take part in public policy debates and decisions through elected bodies and in this case the Legislature of the province. So we're opposed to anything and any movement that would have the effect of chilling or in any way making individuals feel less likely to offer themselves because of a fee that has to be put up before they can be entered in nomination.

Now, I realize that a number of people indicated that a $300 raise is not that much in the scheme of things, but I think that if you look back at the costs of some of the campaigns that were run in the last two or three elections, you will find that the amounts spent by some candidates were very, very modest. They were campaigns where $500 would have made a difference.

It's for that reason that I urge members of the Assembly to support amendment A2. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to amendment A2, that proposes to strike section 34 of Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. Section 34 of this bill seeks to amend section 61(1)(e) by changing the amount of the election deposit for provincial elections from $200 to $500. I'm very pleased to support this amendment. As a matter of fact, my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands had this amendment ready to go forward in his own name.

The reasons for opposing section 34 of Bill 22 and, therefore, seeking to strike that section are as follows. One of the concerns that the New Democrat caucus has is the low level of participation of young people between 18 years and 24 who turned up to vote. This is the age group where no more than 25 per cent of electors or citizens decided to go to the polling booths to vote. We do not want to make changes in our existing statutes which govern election requirements that will further discourage particularly this young group of people.

Increasing the deposit from $200 to $500 is a 150 per cent increase in the deposit. Adding another $300 on top of the $200 that already exists as a deposit requirement may seem small to us in this Legislature or to people who are not in this Legislature but are well established and have good incomes, but there are lots of Albertans who are at a stage in life where they don't treat this kind of increase as slight, as something that is not substantial. I think that when they notice this kind of change, when they come to learn about this change, they will say: aha, you see; they don't understand our constraints, the constraints under which we live. I think that they would be discouraged from presenting themselves as candidates in the elections.

Certainly, even in political parties where there may be broader support and, therefore, financial resources for candidates to rely on, there is a problem. Those people who may very well want to run as independents, who don't have the assurance of support from a political party, would find it even harder.

Why would we want to make changes in the existing legislation that would in my view certainly discourage some citizens, particularly those who are of a younger age, those who already find elections either not a matter of interest to them and, therefore, don't turn up even to vote or those who may want to participate but may find that these financial requirements and considerations prevent them from presenting themselves and taking part as candidates in the democratic process, of which elections are a very important element and event?

So let's not make it either an established adult's game or a rich man's game. I think elections are for everyone. Democracy is for everyone, regardless of what our incomes are, regardless of our capacity to pay for various requirements of the Election Act to take part in elections.

I would therefore ask my colleagues in the House to vote for this amendment. If they did, the outcome of that kind of decision would be that we would keep a candidate's nomination deposit at $200 rather than seeing it increase by 150 per cent, jumping to $500 for this purpose. So, Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to give serious thought to supporting the amendment, the point of which is to keep a candidate's deposit at $200 and not let it go up to $500.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I understand the logic and the concept being put forward by the hon. members in moving and supporting this proposed amendment. I would point out, as I did at the beginning of the discussion in Committee of the Whole, that the rationale for section 34 that was put forward and was recommended by the Chief Electoral Officer was to expand the purpose for which the deposit was actually in place. The second purpose which is being added here is so that there is an inducement to candidates to comply with the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act by filing their financial statements after the election is done.

I would point out that the argument that section 34 actually increases the deposit and, therefore, could have the effect of denying people the right to run or is a 300 per cent increase is actually fallacious for these reasons. First of all, the deposit that a person might actually lose if they were not successful in obtaining 50 per cent of the winning votes in an election is being increased $50, not $300. By that I mean that the deposit is going from $200 to $500 under this amendment, but half of that is treated in the same manner as the original deposit under the old act. That is to say that half of that, or $250, is returned to the candidate if they meet the threshold rules in the same manner as the $200 deposit was returned under the old act. So the deposit which would be returned to the candidate if they achieved that threshold test is $250. It used to be $200. So if they don't achieve the threshold test, the additional cost to the candidate is $50.

The other $250: there's no risk, no risk whatever to a candidate. It's completely a hundred per cent refundable to the candidate as soon as they comply with the law and file their financial statement. So this should not be a barrier to any candidate running.

The recommendation from the Chief Electoral Officer is to increase the deposit and put in that second clause. It shouldn't be a barrier because it's only a $50 additional risk to a candidate. Quite frankly, any candidate getting into a contest and wanting to put forward their views will find many different ways, I'm sure, to do it, but at least some of them are going to cost more than the $50 increase in the deposit.

I think that the sentiments that are being expressed about making sure that everybody has the right to participate in the process are very noble, but the increase in the deposit, I would submit, is a valid increase and a valid amendment that the Chief Electoral Officer wants for good reasons to make the electoral process function more smoothly. So I would ask members of the House to reject this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to rise and attempt to improve this bill in some other respects as well. I have an amendment here. I should perhaps read it into the record and then send the original to the table and have it distributed.

The Chair: Send us about five copies including the original, please.

Dr. Pannu: Okay. Mr. Chairman, I'd like to move the following amendment on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands: that Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, be amended in section 8 by striking out clauses (c) and (d) and by striking out section 10. So there are two sections that this amendment proposes to either strike in full or in part.

Reasons in support of proposing this amendment, Mr. Chairman, are quite compelling. Section 8 in clauses (c) and (d) introduces a new kind of requirement, which says that the electoral officer may assign, in respect of each elector whose information is contained in the register, a unique and permanent identifier number consisting of numbers or letters, or a combination of numbers and letters, to be used to assist in distinguishing an elector from another elector or verifying the information about an elector.

So that's clause (c).

In clause (d), Mr. Chairman, Bill 22 reads as follows: in subsection (5) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (c) and repealing clause (f) and substituting the following.

- (f) the unique identifier number assigned under subsection (4.1), and
- (g) any other identification number assigned by other persons who provide information under this section to the Chief Electoral Officer to assist in distinguishing a person from another person or verifying the information about a person.

Now, these are the two clauses of section 8 that the amendment proposes to strike.

I'm going to turn to the reasons because they are compelling, I think, Mr. Chairman. In our judgment, in the judgment of the New Democrat caucus, this kind of assignment of an identifier number would increase the likelihood of a voter being identified not only for strictly election purposes as defined and as seen desirable by the Chief Electoral Officer, but that information could leak out, could in fact be stolen, or could become public for whatever reasons. If, as I argue, the chances of that happening would increase with the specific permanent identifier number being assigned to individual electors, I think it will discourage more and more people from participating in elections, from turning out on election day, going to the polling station to vote.

So it is this very serious concern that we have heard Albertans express to us with respect to this change that's being proposed by way of Bill 22 that causes us to come forward with this amendment, which would be amendment A3, I think.

The reasons for proposing that section 10 be struck out are identical, the same reasons, because section 10 returns again to the use of the permanent identifier number. I think the allocation of permanent identifier numbers increases the likelihood of the information that must remain confidential remaining confidential. So why increase the risk of violating both the important confidentiality and privacy of individual citizens and electors?

Secondly, why increase this risk if it's likely to mean that it's going to be perceived by our electors, who already have a variety of other reasons not to turn out and go and vote on election day, as yet another reason, which is in my view a very, very appropriate one from their point of view. If it's going to increase the likelihood of their being identified as people who have voted this way or that way, then why even bother participating in the election process?

So it's for those reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I think it would be wise on the part of this Assembly, it'll be appropriate for the members of this House to vote for this amendment. If this amendment is voted in, that will assure voters, citizens that in the judgment of this Assembly there's nothing more important – nothing more sacred, I was going to say – than our commitment to preserving their confidentiality and privacy as they participate in the provincial elections in this province.

So I would urge members to vote for the amendment. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've thought quite a bit about this particular amendment in terms of whether I should support it or not. On the one hand, I think that at some point in time we have to look at different ways of ensuring that the most number of people are allowed to vote in elections as possibly can, and specifically all of those who wish to vote, whether they are residing at their specific location on the voting day or not, whether they would normally be available during voting hours or not. We have to find some way to facilitate the changes that we've all seen in our own lives in terms of being busier and being more mobile and not always being resident in the area that we are normally assigned to as a main residence.

So, on the one hand, I see the need to move toward some sort of an identifier where we can do different types of voting in the future, perhaps computer voting, perhaps phone voting, whatever. That's a debate that we need to have.

On the other hand, having been elected three times and now having gone through four nominations, I know first-hand the kinds of difficulties that one can encounter with lists. The one thing I do know first-hand to be absolutely true is that if a list can be wrong, it will be wrong. Whether you're using information from a telephone book, as is one of the suggested criteria here in this bill, or, as another criteria, using any other information obtained or available to the Chief Electoral Officer, one of those being conducting a door-to-door enumeration, I know the inherent, built-in inaccuracies of those systems.

In Edmonton in any given constituency the turnover yearly because of housing prices has been around 25 per cent, so telephone books are between elections practically useless. If you use the federal lists, we've all seen at the federal elections how inaccurate those lists are and the long, long lineups of people who have some inaccurate information attached to their name on that particular list. I have helped to co-ordinate door-to-door enumerations in the past and have seen the errata sheets that fall out of those. The kinds of problems associated with getting accurate information at the door is also a huge problem.

So when we take a look at this bill and we understand the kinds of inaccuracies that are inherent in the existing databases that we have and we go to section 11, distribution of lists of electors, 18(1)(c) and then subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) on page 5, you'll see the number of potential inaccuracies that there are.

We've seen it. We've seen every time I've had to use a list that in transcribing, the residential address becomes wrong; the postal code becomes wrong, the mailing address. The surname can be typed in wrong. The given name and middle initials can be typed in wrong. The telephone number of the person can be typed in wrong. The gender of the person can be inaccurately entered. The year of birth can be inaccurately recorded. Imagine the kinds of people who could be disallowed from voting if they go with their identifier number and it doesn't add up to the information that's on the list. I just see too many problems.

Until we can get the issues ironed out of how to correctly identify people and record accurate information about them and then keep that information accurate given the kinds of mobility that people have these days, I'm not going to support any identifier mark. I asked this question the other night – I got some answers from the Minister of Justice on it, which were very helpful but not as complete, I don't think, as I need – in terms of future uses of this. Until we actually see that this government or any other government can actually protect the privacy of people, I'm not in favour of identifier markers being given to people for any purposes, including this one.

I would hope that my mind could be changed in the coming years, Mr. Chairman, because I think that likely this is the way we will be going in the future, but I'm not convinced at this stage that the information will be accurate enough. We haven't heard what an acceptable error margin is for these lists and how they expect to correct the problems that are definitely going to occur, not possibly occur but will definitely occur.

Until I have those answers and until I have more confidence in a system that can track people accurately and protect their privacy accurately, then I can't support this part of the bill, so I will in fact be supporting this particular amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was most disappointed to hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie because in listening to what she had to say, I thought that she was creating all of the arguments why she would be supporting the concept of the unique identifier number and not voting for the amendment, and then she ended up in a sprint of twisted logic reversing her logic and rationale to arrive at the wrong conclusion.

In fact, the concept of the unique identifier number, again I hasten to add, is not an invention of mine as sponsor of the bill or of the government as sponsor of the bill, keeping in mind that the Chief Electoral Officer is an officer of the Legislature and operates from the direction of the Legislature through its Legislative Offices Committee. The request came forward for the concept of including the unique identifier number precisely to deal with the issues that the hon. member was talking about, and that is to make sure that you can have a unique file on each individual for the purposes only of having accurate elections lists and not confusing people who may have the same name who perhaps even live at the same address or have the same name and live at different addresses.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was actually going through exactly the process that I thought would lead her to say that we ought not to support the amendment. That is to say that having gone through elections and having gone through nominations and knowing the processes that worked, although these lists wouldn't be available for nominations – I would hasten to add that these are for election lists. But having gone through the nomination process, she knows probably as well as anybody in this House how lists of electors are compiled and how they can be confusing when there's more than one person of the same name and certainly more than one person of the same name even at a certain address. It's very, very difficult to ascertain first of all whether the people on the list are eligible to vote and whether the right person is intending to vote and whether that person has voted.

What we ought to be doing, in my humble submission, is letting the Chief Electoral Officer have all the appropriate tools that he needs to make sure that the election lists are full, complete, that he can keep accurate information, that he can keep track of a very mobile population for the purposes of making sure that election lists are full, complete, and accurate and that he doesn't lose information that he should be keeping on a particular individual.

Now, this is a unique situation, Mr. Chairman, in that I don't think there are very many people in the House who believe that governments of any nature should keep files on citizens. To the extent possible citizens' information should be their own, and information should only be collected for appropriate purposes and only used for the purposes for which it's collected. I think we would all share that view in this House. I know that past members of the Liberal opposition, one that I met this weekend who is now the Privacy Commissioner of Saskatchewan, were strong advocates for the privacy of personal information. And in this House we passed the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. There's a strong adherence to the concept that we should not be collecting information that we don't need as a government and that when information is collected, it only should be used for the purposes for which it was collected and those sorts of things.

But the Chief Electoral Officer situation is different in that first of all he's not government; he's an officer of the Legislature. Secondly, it's his job to collect information about an individual to ascertain whether or not they are eligible electors and, having collected that information, to create an electors list and to make sure it's accurate and to make sure that all electors who are eligible to be on that list are on that list and to keep track of that information. As we have a growing population and as we have a mobile population, that's a more and more difficult job.

He has requested one simple tool to allow him to do that job. That simple tool is to be able to take an individual's file, however he keeps it, presumably electronically, and attach a unique identifier number which would be that person's number. He doesn't want to use their social insurance number. He doesn't want to use any other number. He wants to be able to create a file number which he can then use to track that individual and to keep that individual's information and move it to whatever polling district it ought to be in when that person moves, to identify which John Smith it is that's moving, those sorts of pieces of information.

There's nothing sinister about this. There's nothing big government or Big Brother about this. There's nothing in this which portends or suggests that anybody is going to a new system of voting. There's been no suggestion of new systems of voting. In fact, I indicated earlier in response to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie's comments on second reading that that was specifically not the situation. I again, at the beginning of the Committee of the Whole today, indicated that I had gone back and reconfirmed and had been advised that in fact there's no consideration at this time with Internet or on-line voting or any of those other things.

It's simply an administrative, an internal process to help ensure the accuracy of the list of registered voters, something which I think all Albertans have an inherent interest in being done properly, something the Chief Electoral Officer has said will help him in that task, a tool that we ought to allow him to have. So I'd ask members to vote against the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have two questions for the Minister of Justice on this amendment and the information that he just shared with us. One is that you haven't answered the question of how you expect to be able to protect the integrity of these numbers. Electronic information is not safe. We don't have the kinds of safeguards available, I don't believe, at this time to protect the personal information. So that's one question.

The second question that you haven't answered is: how are they going to correct the errors, and what percentage of errors do we anticipate there to be from these lists? They are not going to be foolproof, and we need to know for those people who have got some error attached to their identifier that there's a process where they can still vote and have that information corrected in a timely fashion.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, as I've indicated on at least two other occasions in debate on this bill, first of all, the unique identifier number has nothing to do with the elector's ability to vote. They're either on the voters list, or they're not on the voters list. If they're not on the voters list, they get to be put on the voters list in accordance with the provisions of the Election Act, which allows the person to become a voter. The fact that they have or don't have the unique identifier number, which allows the Chief Electoral Officer for his own purposes to determine where that file goes and to take information with that that's attached to that number to different places in his database, has nothing to do with the eligibility of a person to vote.

Now, if a person's information is incorrect in the Chief Electoral Officer's database with respect to the election records, again that has nothing to do with whether there's a number attached or not attached. If their information is incorrect, it needs to be corrected, and it's corrected in the same manner as it is now under the Election Act. Nothing changes. In other words, they can be enumerated. If they're already on the list because the Chief Electoral Officer has obtained their information from some other source, then they would be asked, when the enumerations happen, to verify the information, and those corrections can be made at that time. They can examine the election list.

The indication to me was that the unique identifier number wouldn't be a public number on the voters list. I'm not sure of that. But even if it is, it is just one more piece of information which is of no value or interest to anyone else other than the Chief Electoral Officer so that he can tag his file to the number, and when he gets an indication that John Smith has moved from Edmonton-Whitemud to Edmonton-Ellerslie, he can take that package of information over to the other place.

We're in an electronic age. We have new ways of moving data and keeping data and holding files. It used to be a filing cabinet with a file and a list. Now it's a computer. The fact that they use computers and the question of whether the computer is secure or nonsecure has nothing to do with whether there's a unique identifier number attached. It's either secure or nonsecure, and with or without this unique identifier number the same concerns that the hon. member raises will be there. So I'm not sure I understand the concern that's being raised with respect to a simple administrative tool that the Chief Electoral Officer has asked for, what the possible concern with that might be.

I'll leave it at that, Mr. Chairman. I can't explain it any more clearly. I'm not inventing this. It's a request that we've had, and as I'm told and as I've tried to put forward to the House, this unique identifier number will simply be there, attached to an elector when they're enumerated or when they're put on the list for the first time. When that elector moves or changes in some way, that identifier number will be the way that the Chief Electoral Officer moves them through the system. But the system will exist with or without the unique identifier number.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Chairman, I have a question on that explanation. So the individuals will have their unique identifier number so that if they move, they go in and they trigger their own identification with that unique identification number. That's when the Chief Electoral Officer grabs hold of this part of the data sent from Edmonton-Ellerslie, I think was the example you used, and moves it over to Edmonton-Mill Woods. Is that how you explained it? What if the individual does not know their unique identifier number? How do they go about clarifying that this name, et cetera, is to be removed from this section and put in that section? This is a whole process that I see really has a lot of potential but also needs a little bit of understanding as we go through this, because it's quite easy for people to move around and end up being on this continual voter list that we're trying to develop without ever being taken off in an old location.

I can give an example, Mr. Chairman. I register always in Lethbridge, yet when I came up here to my apartment, at the last election here was a little form underneath the door saying: please register. I was called three times asking why I hadn't registered, yet I was registered in Lethbridge. So, you know, what do we do with that kind of a situation? Would I have to put my unique number on here so that they could check and say: "Whoops. Sorry, Ken. You're already registered in Lethbridge"? That's the kind of, I guess, usefulness that we could see for this kind of number, but unless the individual who has the number is forthcoming, what value is it? If I don't put the number on it when I'm in Edmonton, they just have to assume that it's a different individual with the same name because that doesn't work.

It's quite possible to have the same name. I lived in an apartment building in the United States when I was in school, and I kept getting mail for a Ken Nicol in the next apartment building, at 214 instead of 216. I went over there one day, and yes, there was an individual there with exactly the same name, spelled exactly the same way. How do we differentiate those kinds of things?

So this is the kind of thing that if we're going to have those numbers, that helps, but also if we don't each take the responsibility to identify ourselves with that number when we do move an address, how do we keep the records clean? All we've done is created more confusion because there's an expectation of that clean record, but there's no mechanism to carry it through. So I would like to have an explanation on that if possible.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to be really frank and say that I don't have the slightest idea how the Chief Electoral Officer is going to implement the use of the unique identifier number. What I do know is that the Chief Electoral Officer is a well-respected, highly paid individual. I hope he's highly paid. I really don't know how much he's paid. I shouldn't say highly paid; I have no idea how much we pay him. But he's an officer of the Legislature, and we task him to run elections, and we task him to tell us what tools he needs to run elections, what structures he needs to run elections, and what things will make his job easier so that he can make sure we have fair and impartial elections in this province. One of the things he said that would make his life easier is if he had a unique identifier number that he could attach to electors' names so that he could determine one elector from another if they had the same names or if they moved from electoral district to electoral district.

I've got a job to do. I'm a legislator. I'm Minister of Justice and Attorney General, and I'm on a number of various committees, and we set policy. One of the things I don't do is interfere in the management of my department. We hire deputy ministers to do that. One of the things that I should not and cannot do is interfere in the operations of the Chief Electoral Officer. So when he comes and says: here are some things that we ought to do to make the Election Act work better and here are some details – it's one of the few acts that has this kind of detail, one of the few acts that specifies with such degree of codification exactly what happens, whether he can hire an executive assistant. There's good reason for that, I'm sure. One of those good reasons is that people ought to know with a great deal of clarity exactly what the election rules are.

I can't answer the question of what precisely a unique identifier number is. But because I can't answer that question precisely is not a good reason not to trust the Chief Electoral Officer when he says that it would be a very good tool for him to use in making sure that we have accurate election lists. So once again I would ask the people to take his advice and defeat the amendment because it's not a sinister object, it's not another way of turning Albertans into numbers, it's not another way of collecting personal information that the Chief Electoral Officer or government ought not to have; it's simply to be used by the Chief Electoral Officer as a way of keeping the election list straight.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I find the debate to the amendment that I moved very, very interesting. One learns more as one listens to every bit of statement that's made.

No one is suggesting that the Chief Electoral Officer's credentials are in question. We have before us a piece of legislation that's come to us as a piece of legislation. We have to make a judgment on it. Our Chief Electoral Officer has made a recommendation. It's our job when that recommendation takes the form of a piece of legislation to examine it carefully and ask questions that are pertinent in our view to the change that's being proposed.

The Minister of Justice has acknowledged himself that he doesn't exactly know the reasons and the various uses that the Chief Electoral Officer wants to put this information to or may choose to put this information to. So since he doesn't know, does he want us to use that as a good enough basis to vote for the proposed legislation?

We are asking serious questions about serious changes that are being proposed. I'm sure the Chief Electoral Officer would not have asked for this change unless he had very strong reasons. The minister has not been able to spell those reasons out for us. On the other hand, we have raised some important, pertinent, serious questions about what this particular section proposes to achieve and do.

If we don't have the reasons that are persuasive enough and the minister can't provide those reasons, then it's too bad. I have sympathy with him. We're not asking him to interfere in the Chief Electoral Officer's decisions; we're asking him to shepherd this legislation through this Assembly by offering clear, persuasive arguments. He has failed to do that, so I suggest to you, respectfully, Mr. Chairman, that the Assembly ignore the appeal and the basis on which the appeal has been made, that we trust someone else. I think we have to trust our own collective judgment in this House.

So I ask members to vote for the amendment. Thank you.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Chairman, I've got one more amendment here that I'd like to move on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands. With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands that Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, be amended by striking out section 90.

The Chair: You have moved amendment A4; have you?

Dr. Pannu: Yes.

The Chair: Okay. We'll just wait a moment until a few people get a copy of it.

Dr. Pannu: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Section 90 of Bill 22, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, increases the amount of contributions that can be made under the Election Act by individual persons, corporations, trade unions, employee organizations to registered parties and to candidates. The existing legislation puts those limits for contributions to constituency associations at $750 to any registered constituency association and $3,750 in the aggregate to the constituency associations of each registered party.

Section 90(1)(a)(ii) increases the limits from $750 to $1,000 and from $3,750 to $5,000 in the case of a registered constituency association and a registered constituency association of each registered party respectively. It also increases the ceiling from $1,500 to any registered candidate and $7,500 in the aggregate to the registered candidates of each registered party. These numbers are changed to $2,000 to any registered candidate and $10,000 in the aggregate to the registered candidates of each registered party.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that these increases would make the playing field even more uneven than it is presently. We have information provided by the Chief Electoral Officer's office over the previous elections which clearly indicates that the parties in this House do not receive the corporate or individual donations and contributions in amounts that in any way look similar, thereby making it a very uneven contest based on just the amount of money that's available.

Certainly, the Progressive Conservative Party is the prime beneficiary of the existing arrangements. The new arrangements that are being proposed by way of this bill in section 90 would increase that advantage very unfairly to the Progressive Conservative Party at the expense of the competitiveness of the elections process. After all, it's the funds that make the election machines go, and given our knowledge of how the contributions in this province work with respect to party in power and parties in opposition, I submit that the considerable increases in the ceilings with respect to both contributions to candidates and political parties for election purposes will simply make that situation much worse.

So for that reason, I am happy that we have brought this amendment before the House and, certainly, would like to ask other members to support this amendment so that the proposed change is struck out, thereby keeping the existing levels of contributions where they are now, thereby preventing further inequality in the monies received for election purposes by the political parties in this province as they enter the election period.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is another amendment that I'm definitely supporting. It's always struck me how easy it is for government members to raise money and how tough it is for opposition parties to do the same. Here we see in this particular Election Act the government moving forward to make their job even easier in terms of what the limits are for fundraising.

I would be much happier if we set a spending limit for elections that would allow more people to participate in the process rather than fewer. This truly does become an old white man's game at some stage because that's who traditionally has the most access to money. That's a process that needs to be stopped, not enhanced or promoted, and that's what we see through this act: limits just get higher.

I don't ever want to see us go to an American-style model, where you can't even start a nomination campaign if you don't have access to a hundred thousand dollars or more and then talk about election campaigns that are in the hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars. That doesn't allow people to be a part of the process.

It should be a duty for all of us who have been in this system to promote greater numbers of people to run regardless of the political background that they come from because that is where we will get the best government, and that is where we will get the most representative government: from a greater number of people participating in the process. When we see campaign donation limits being increased as they are in this particular act, we see people distancing themselves once again from politics and politicians. What does a person have in common with people who are going to be spending $2,000 or $10,000 or $1,000 or $5,000 or $15,000 on campaigns? Very little if anything at all.

This does nothing to help us move towards solving the problem of a new age group of completely disenfranchised voters, Mr. Chairman, and I'm talking about young people. When we take a look at those who are under the age of 30, what we see now is that huge numbers of them don't vote. In fact, seldom do more than 30 per cent of them vote. Why is that? They're disenfranchised for a number of reasons, and not the least of those is how they see these big-money campaigns rolling out. This particular act facilitates that. The amendment attempts to correct that by striking out section 90.

When we see the kinds of dollars that are being increased here, potentially you can spend about $5,000 more in any particular campaign through the various categories. Candidates, constituency associations, the party system itself: all of these things are being changed now. The limits change during the writ time, so people can give increased limits to a constituency or to an aggregate of a number of constituencies.

For the individuals the only thing that doesn't change is how much can be given to each registered party. I think people would be surprised to learn that the amount of money that companies can give to registered parties now is $15,000 a year. It's a huge amount of money, and it's enough to directly influence some parties and some candidates. That's exactly what we have to get away from.

I'm supporting the federal changes that have been made, which put caps on how much money companies and individuals can give to parties, to associations, and to individuals. The federal changes have completely reversed, flipped, how money can be spent. Now the limit is $1,000 for corporations not just to a candidate but during a whole election period.

So that's very interesting, Mr. Chairman, because under these changes not only can you give $2,000 to candidate A, but you can also give it to candidate B and C and D and E and F if that's where your pocketbook will stretch if you're a company or an individual. Under the federal rules that amount is capped at $1,000 total, so if you want to give it to all those candidates, you've got to split that $1,000 up between all of them. That means you have very little influence on decisions that that candidate, if successfully elected, will be making in the future. That's the way politics should be run. That is not the way this government is going in terms of how we see the increased limits happening here. I can't support that, Mr. Chairman. So I'm very happy to see this particular amendment come forward.

In fact, I think that just striking it out isn't enough. I would like to see an amendment come after this that reduces all of those limits. Let's see how that looks for more people being able to get involved in the process because many people now, particularly women, Mr. Chairman, are unable to run because they simply can't raise the money.

I'd like to speak for a moment about a club that we organized some years ago to address this particular situation. Fifteen years ago two people were very concerned in the Edmonton area about policy resolutions not being supported that directly impacted women. So those two people started a club here in Edmonton called the Edmonton women's policy association. That club was a subgroup of the Liberal Women's Commission. The Liberal Women's Commission is a commission for all women who are members at either the federal or the provincial level. You automatically become a member, if you want to be, when you buy a Liberal membership. Under that commission clubs can be formed for specific objectives.

This club was initially formed 15 years ago to bring forward policy resolutions at conventions that were particularly important to women. They dealt with all kinds of issues: lots on the social side, lots on the protection side, and a lot of them dealing with justice issues. That club formed 15 years ago, and I joined that club 14 years ago. As soon as I heard about it and saw the kind of work it was doing, I joined it.

What we found after going through a couple of conventions at both the federal and the provincial level is that you could get the resolution on the floor, you could get the resolution passed, but until you could get the politicians sitting at the table to act on it, it never had any effect at either the federal or the provincial level. Then what we realized was that not only do we have to develop good policy resolutions, but we have to elect women as politicians so that we have our voice at that table helping to make those decisions. So we went out and started to form SWAT teams that would go out and work for different candidates who supported our particular mandate. What we found was that primarily those were female candidates, and what we found then was that there weren't very many female candidates around.

So we started to develop some research into why that was. One of the primary reasons for that was that those women couldn't raise any money, Mr. Chairman. They just didn't have access to resources the same way that male candidates did. At that time, then, the club decided that, well, in order to get these great policy resolutions put forward that we're developing and in order to support the women candidates in ridings where they actually have a chance to win, we better start raising some money for them, because that's the final barrier for them to get there.

Twelve years ago we started having an annual brunch on International Women's Day, a very significant day for women across this country and an excellent time to get people together in a venue where we could promote issues that were important to women across this country and bring in keynote speakers that identified with the issues and would support them and promote them and also at the same time provide the fellowship of having women with like-minded ideas getting together and giving them a chance to get to know each other and talk and look for issues for them to support, to listen to the keynote speaker, and also be able to raise some funds. We've always kept the ticket prices reasonable so that more women than less could come, and we've always encouraged people who couldn't attend to donate their tickets so that those who couldn't afford to come could also be able to come.

Now, keynote speakers over the years, Mr. Chairman, have been very varied. They've been federal and provincial politicians, they've been male and female, and they've come forward and talked about a variety of issues that are very important to us, not the least of which are some of the barriers that women face in politics and how in many ways we've seen some changes over the past 15 years, but in many ways we also haven't.

It was my great privilege this past International Women's Day to be the keynote speaker, Mr. Chairman. That was a real honour because I've seen that club grow, and in fact it's grown and developed in parallel to my own political career. So it was a real honour for me to be this year's keynote speaker. What I did talk about was the women in politics who have been mentors and role models and some of the great things that we have learned about politics and running but some of the barriers that are still out there. So it was very nice to be able to get up and speak. We had about 350 women at that particular brunch. I think the biggest selling brunch that we have had was when Paul Martin came to speak. That was prior to him being Prime Minister, and at that brunch we sold about 750 tickets.

What happens with that money is that the club puts it into an investment plan, and we keep the money separated for federal and provincial candidates. When the elections are called, then we take that money out and divide it amongst those women in Edmonton and the Edmonton area that are running and deliver it to them the day the writ is dropped. That's a very significant day for us to deliver that money, Mr. Chairman, because, as we who have run in campaigns all know, most of your expenses in a campaign are up front. We know that we have to pay the rent, we have to install the telephones, we have to pay the deposits, we have to order a brochure, we've got to get those signs up there, and those are all upfront costs.

So it's very significant for members of the club to be able to walk into a woman's campaign office on day one and hand them a cheque. Traditionally for provincial politicians it's been around $800 because at the provincial level we have more women running than at the federal level. Traditionally at the federal level it's been about $2,000 per candidate because there are fewer running. That's a significant amount of money, Mr. Chairman, and it is very much appreciated by those women who are candidates and by those who are operating their campaign offices.

One of the ways that we've been able to promote and support women candidates over the years is through this club. It's now in its 15th year. It is the only fundraising event that is held annually on International Women's Day in the federal party, and it is widely recognized. The model is looked at by many different associations across the province, but none have been able to duplicate it to this stage.

I have to say that the core group of women that organize this club is about 15 people. They work very hard, and they work tirelessly. But when elections come, the club attracts many more people, 200 to 300 volunteers who form the SWAT teams and go out and telephone and door-knock and otherwise help people run their campaigns.

I have to say that I have had the good fortune of having executive members of that club run all of my campaigns, Mr. Chairman, whether they've been nominations or elections. We've had key people in that group come out and devote their time to my campaigns, and as a result I believe I've been successful because of their assistance. In fact, in this upcoming campaign my nomination chair is a past president of the club and my campaign chairman is a past president of the club, and they're all still actively involved.

We're now at the stage where we're mentoring young women to come in and take the reins of leadership and raise the bar for us in terms of the next level that we get involved in. So that's been an amazing process to be involved in.

Mr. Hancock: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader is rising on a point of order I can only guess.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On relevance. I've been listening intently on this women's policy club. I think I've heard about the executive for the last 15 years and the value of the policy club and all that sort of thing, but I haven't heard one iota about the amendment, which is about not raising the fundraising limits. I heard "fundraising" a couple of times, but that's about as close as she got.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the purported point of order.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, it's too bad that the minister only started listening halfway through, because certainly I did talk specifically to this amendment and to the changes it's making in fundraising and about how it's relevant for people who can't raise the money, which is the real problem with the changes in this act as it stands. If he would just have a little patience and let me finish, I would conclude by talking about those specifics as well.

The Chair: Well, as they say, coincidence and convergent thought. The chair has been wondering how this was relevant to A4, and I'm glad you've explained that to us right now. Truthfully, the earlier part certainly was dealing with the material of section 90. It's all very interesting about the club, but if you could sort of bring that back to the essence of amendment A4, that would be helpful, I think.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. While I would like to talk at greater length building my case about the club and why it is replacing some of the discriminatory practices that we would otherwise see attached to women candidates and their inability to raise funds, I will return directly to how the problem is perhaps not understood by government members, who want to oppose this amendment.

By raising the limits that any particular individual or company can spend on a campaign, we disenfranchise many people, and particularly we disenfranchise those people who otherwise have a hard time raising money. Those, as I said, Mr. Chairman, are primarily women or fringe candidates who don't have parties of recognition behind them. We have found in our party ways to try and mitigate those problems by the fundraising through the club and other kinds of sources, but it only hurts us even more and once again hurts us if we raise the limits for the fundraising in this particular instance.

So I once again say that I support this amendment. I do not like the part of the act as the changes are implied here. I urge all members of this Assembly, and particularly all members of this Assembly who support women moving forward in politics, to support the amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words about the amendment with respect to section 90. The increases are $500 for a candidate, $2500 for candidates, from $750 to $1,000 for a constituency association, and from $3,750 to $5,000 for constituency associations. The donations to parties remain the same as they were previously, at $15,000.

Campaign contributions have always been a source of controversy and concern. I think that it's fair to say that in our province there's been increasing concern over special interests and funding candidates at election time and the role that money plays in decision-making in the province. We propose, for instance, a lobbyist registration so that the kinds of inferences that are affecting politicians in the province are transparent and up front for everyone to see. Our caucus believes that changes to the act should have been brought forward. Our present policy would ask that individuals, corporations, and unions could donate more than $5,000 a year. That's the policy as it's outlined by our party at the present time.

So I think clearly the thrust is to reduce the amount of money that can be donated. At the same time, we have suggested that the amount of money for constituencies would not change. We've also indicated that the money for the donations to individual candidates would not change. So the amendment is more consistent with what we have proposed as a party, and the proposals in the bill move in a direction quite opposite from what we think is healthy for election financing in the province.

The same arguments, I think, may be used for this section as were used in trying to argue against the increase in the amount of money that people are required to put down for nominations. I think we are wise to promote and to try to foster a political culture where big money and big dollars don't become a major influence in campaigns and in the election of people to the Legislature. The danger of that, I think, is all too well apparent from campaigns south of the border and the amounts of money required to run for political office in some jurisdictions. Some positions in the States, people elected to decide public business, have turned those elected officials into full-time campaign money raisers, and it certainly has distorted the whole political process.

These numbers in section 90 are certainly not of the same magnitude as some of those south of the border, but they are moving in that direction when we start increasing the amounts, even as modest as some of these increases are. I think that it was wise to leave the donations to a political party at $15,000. It's the only sum that hasn't been changed in the act, but the others are creeping up, and it's that kind of creep that will eventually see us, I think, regretting that we didn't see fit to put the brakes on the increases when they came forward, as they have in Bill 22.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I would urge members of the Assembly to support the amendment and to ensure that campaign financing remains much as it is. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to conclude debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to just add a few comments in support of the amendment. When speaking on this bill at second reading, I drew the attention of the House to the direction in which the federal legislation has moved relative to the ability of parties and candidates to raise funds.

It's refreshing to note that all of the parties represented in the House of Commons agreed some time ago to reduce political party dependence on big money – big organizations, corporations, labour unions, and others – and felt that it will greatly serve the democratic process to make election campaigns undertaken by political parties independent of big corporate donations, labour union donations, and will free political parties from the need to depend on big money, whether it's coming from individuals or groups or corporations.

So we have now national legislation which enables elections run by registered political parties to be funded from public funds, thereby freeing all political parties from undue possible influence by powerful players, be they banks, be they corporations, be they labour unions or other groups. This, I think, is a very desirable kind of development at the federal level, and one would hope that we would move in a similar direction if we agree that independence of political parties from special interests and powerful entities or groups is important for the health of democracy in our province and in our country.

That's not what this bill tries to do. Particularly section 90 of this bill, Mr. Chairman, in fact entrenches further the ability of special interest groups, corporations, rich and wealthy individuals or other special interest groups to be able to fund the elections by selecting a party of their choice in a way which I think is detrimental to the health of the electoral process and certainly to the health of democratic processes in this province.

I would hope that we don't want to increase the influence of and don't increase the dependence on special powerful interests by making changes in the elections statutes which will further strengthen the ability of special interests and powerful groups to influence election outcomes or election campaigns because they have the ability through large amounts to fund campaigns to influence the election outcomes.

That's why this amendment is so important, and that's why section 90 of this bill is a matter of such grave concern not only to me, not only to members of the opposition parties in general but to citizens, and citizens are becoming very cynical about the fact that election campaigns can be bought and can be influenced in very consequential ways simply with the power of money that corporations or special interest groups can throw at election time in the direction of political parties of their choice, and we know which political party is their first choice in this province. That's very clear from the official records in this province. It's the party in power. The Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta is the greatest beneficiary of such big donations coming from a very small number of powerful special interests, sometimes big money, sometimes corporations, sometimes other organized groups.

So it is for that reason, Mr. Chairman, that the New Democrat caucus has been very happy to move this amendment which will strike section 90 so that we maintain whatever balance there is in the existing legislation. In fact, I urge all parties in this House to move towards taking steps similar to the ones that all parties in the House of Commons have agreed to take to reduce the dependence of political parties on these big donors and big donations and provide public assistance which is fair and appropriate for us to run our elections.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just briefly with respect to the amendment. The amendment, as we've heard, proposes to delete section 90 of Bill 22 and by doing so would then leave the act as it is. So with respect to contributions to registered constituency associations and registered candidates the limits would be as in the existing act.

Now, the existing act was passed, as far as I can recall, in 1980, and there's been no change to those limits since 1980. The changes that are being proposed here are relatively modest. They're a 33 per cent increase in the amounts, from $750 to $1,000 in one case and from $3,750 to $5,000 in another, relatively modest in amount given that it's been that since 1980, which by my calculation in math is about 24 years, so I don't think it's untoward to increase those limits.

I think it behooves us to point out that no increase has been made to the limit of $15,000 to each registered party. That's been kept the same, so I think the protests about how it affects those in government as opposed to those who are in opposition or otherwise are really a bit of a stretch. The bottom line is that every now and then you have to revisit and modernize legislation. You have to keep it current. You have to take a look at it, and in this case, where the limits were set some 24 years ago, it's not untoward to revisit those limits and put in a relatively small increase given the period of time over which this stretches.

I would suggest that there's nothing nefarious or untoward about section 90 as it's proposed in the act. In fact, it's quite reasonable. It doesn't move it to unrealistic limits. It doesn't go any further than simply making those changes.

Quite frankly, I think that there's another good reason not to adopt this amendment, and that, I believe, is that it's not quite so simple as simply to make that amendment. There also would have to be corollary amendments made with respect to the receipt side. In the member's haste to deal with this, unless he maybe has some other separate amendments that he intends to bring forward to deal with the other portions of it after this particular amendment has been passed, he's missed out the corollary amendments which would be necessary to make this amendment effective.

So in its current form, certainly, and also because of its substance I think the House should deny this amendment.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We've had a wonderful day of debate on elections. I think it's been enervating for all of us, and it probably behooves us to go home and reflect on the wonderful debates, so I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 24 and report progress on Bill 22.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports Bill 24. The committee also reports progress on Bill 22. At this time I would like to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:59 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

1:30 p.m.

Wednesday, March 24, 2004

Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Renew us with Your strength. Focus us in our deliberations. Challenge us in our service to the people of this great province. Amen.

Please be seated.

Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to other members of the Assembly two visitors seated in your gallery. The Hon. Scott Smith, MLA for Brandon West, is the Minister of Industry, Economic Development, and Mines for the province of Manitoba and is also charged with the administration of the Manitoba Liquor Control Act and the Manitoba Lotteries Corporation Act. Minister Smith is in Edmonton to attend the eighth annual Canadian Gaming Summit and Exhibition being held from March 22 to March 24. Alberta is proud to have had the opportunity to showcase our dynamic and well-regulated gaming environment to the hundreds of conference participants who are attending from all parts of Canada and from around the world. Attending with Minister Smith is his special assistant Greg Merner. I'd ask our visitors to now rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of students and their parents from Connections for Learning, which is a home-schooling group. Mr. Curtis Currie is the teacher with parents Mrs. Jannie Jamieson, Mrs. Carmen Martin, Mr. Brian Shaw, Mrs. Lorie Saito, Mrs. Susan O'Reilly, Mrs. Alma Carter, Mrs. Diana Nelson. I'd ask them and the students to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 97 very energetic and bright students from the Gibbons school. They are accompanied by their teachers, Mr. Don McIntyre, Mrs. Rhonda Hruschak, Mrs. Kristine Wilkinson, Ms Sheligne Connolly, and Mrs. Nikki Maurer; also, aides Mrs. Jamie Hamilton, Mrs. Charlotte McLean, Mrs. Lorie Chrétien, and Mrs. Kathy Larson. Accompanying them also are parents Mrs. Tricia Hurst, Mrs. Debra Becker, Mrs. Susanne Hedstrom, Ms Gail Badke, and Miss Teresa Tychy. They're seated in both the members' and public galleries. I'd ask them to please rise and receive this warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly five exceptional people from the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency. Geraldine Bidulock is the constituency treasurer. She is accompanied by her uncle Bob Prozni. Along with being family members, they have a very unique connection. Later today I'll be making a recognition on organ donation, and Geraldine and Bob are examples of a direct result of a successful transplant effort. Geraldine is among those brave and selfless people who have donated an organ for transplant, and her uncle Bob is, I know, the most grateful recipient of her gift. With them today are Jerry Bidulock, Robbie Prozni, and Reverend Adelina Pecchia. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask them to all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly somebody who probably doesn't need an introduction, and that is the reeve of Brazeau county, the county in which I live. He's also the vice-president of the AAMD and C. I'm going to ask Mr. Bart Guyon to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly an individual that keeps my days very busy in Calgary-Buffalo. As well, her interpersonal skills are second to none in dealing with constituents. I'd like to ask Kathy Holdaway to stand – she's in the members' gallery – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Snelgrove: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's an obvious sign that the condos in the area need spring cleaning as I can see that we're joined in the gallery today by the wife of the Calgary-Buffalo MLA. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mrs. Sherry Cenaiko. Would she rise and accept the warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and to all assembled a good friend and a long-time volunteer and a member of the executive of Calgary-Egmont, Mr. Bill Williams. Bill's involvement goes all the way back to when Dr. David Carter was sitting in your chair, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask Bill to stand and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very special guest seated in the members' gallery. As the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul has introduced the family members and an organ donor, this individual that I'd like to introduce, Mrs. Georgina Prozni, is the mother of the donor. The Prozni family, as you know, has been synonymous with the community of Willingdon and has been in that area for well over a century. I'd ask Georgina to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four staff members that operate the land-use operations of public lands. They manage over 170,000 active files.

Dr. Taylor: How much?

Mr. Cardinal: A hundred and seventy thousand active files. The members are Glenn Selland, John Begg, Margarete Hee, and Gerry Haekel. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the balance of the Assembly two wonderful people, Jennifer Diakiw and her grandson Matt. Matt is at the Legislature for the first time today. Jennifer had the thrill and privilege of working here years previous, and as a note of interest Matthew's grandfather was the architect of the Jubilee auditoria, built in 1955. I'd ask them both to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two Edmonton public school board trustees. They're sitting in the public gallery and will be joining us later on again in the House for the budget speech. They are Trustee Lynn Odynski, representing ward C, and Trustee Jean Woodrow, representing ward E. Both these trustees have been instrumental in the development of the Council of School Councils, a joint initiative between their respective wards whose aim it is to strengthen the relationships between school council members, trustees, and their representative MLAs. They will be joined by, I know, other council members and trustees later on during the budget speech. I would now request them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you for recognizing me, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce a few spouses and friends of some of our members who are here with us. They're a little shy to do it themselves. I'd like to recognize Mrs. Jan Marz, wife of our member from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, as well as Angeline Goudreau, wife of the MLA for Dunvegan. I think it's kind of special that his brother Paul is here as well to see him in action. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

Calgary Health Region

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, despite two more needless deaths in the Calgary health region this government continues to deny Albertans what is needed most: a fully independent public inquiry. Instead, the government hangs its hat on the Health Quality Council and the region announces that an out-of-province medical officer will help with its internal review. These are nothing more than band-aid solutions for what has become a gaping wound. To the Premier: given that nobody currently looking into this incident has the mandate to conduct a fully open and public investigation, will the Premier tell us why his government is so reluctant to order a fully independent public inquiry?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is not true. Quite simply that is not true. There are a number of investigations that can be taken and will be taken in many cases relative to this very, very unfortunate incident. Like the hon. member I'm saddened and disturbed by the news of these deaths, but there are a number of investigations underway that will bring answers to the families and to all Albertans, and they are unbiased, open, and transparent investigations.

First of all, the medical examiner's office investigation is underway and will likely refer the two cases to the Fatality Review Board. This board is entirely independent, is a judicial if not a quasi-judicial board that operates in an open and transparent way. If the Fatality Review Board recommends to the Justice minister that fatality inquiries be held into one or both cases, I suspect that the Justice minister would accept that recommendation and do what is appropriate. Fatality inquiries, if one is to be held or two are to be held, are open processes chaired by an independent judge.

Mr. Speaker, there are many courses to conduct a full, a complete, an open, an honest, and a transparent investigation and adjudication of these two unfortunate incidents.

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: how can the minister claim that the Health Quality Council's investigation is independent when its members include a former government MLA, a current government MLA, and a senior officer with the Calgary health region?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I want to again outline for the hon. member what the purpose of the review by the Health Quality Council is, and that is to look at this from the perspective of a system-wide basis. Now, there are other adjudications that may be in respect of the assessment or the finding of accountability of individuals within the system.

Again, I want the hon. member to understand and I want all Albertans to understand that there will be accountability for individuals involved in this, but just as important if not more important is to try and prevent this from happening in the future. That's the reason why the Health Quality Council is involved: to look at the best practices across Canada for the handling of materials that contain potassium. We think, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very, very important part because we want to learn from these particular circumstances and employ then the best practices for ensuring that it does not happen again.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there have been two near deaths and the lessons weren't learned, two deaths and the lessons weren't learned, and a number of other inquiries and investigations, will the Premier commit to calling a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act into the situation at the Calgary health region?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I've already answered that question. There are many processes available, many of which are being used. They are open processes, and they are transparent processes, and they are judicial processes. If you have at least three or four streams of investigation and adjudication, why would you add, at great expense, another stream? Just to satisfy the opposition? Just to satisfy . . . [interjections] No. The public will be satisfied. The public will be able to hear, will be able to participate if they have evidence to present to any of these tribunals.

In addition to the investigations that have been mentioned – and I notice that the leader, not the leader but the . . .

An Hon. Member: Wannabe.

Mr. Klein: . . . wannabe leader. The real leader is here today.

The Speaker: I think we'll move on.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

SuperNet

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The SuperNet's costs continue to rise for the taxpayers of Alberta. The minister tells us now that the $193 million has everyone hooked up to the door. My question is to the Premier. Why hasn't this government told Albertans that the $193 million will get the SuperNet to the doorsteps, but the libraries and municipal buildings will still have to pay more to get connected?

Mr. Klein: I am not sure what the hon. member means by "more to get connected." More than what? More is very subjective. More than what? More of less or less of more or more of more?

Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, as has been explained in the Assembly before, the Alberta SuperNet builds the highway over which traffic can move. That highway, as the member quite rightly points out, connects the schools, the libraries, the hospitals, and government buildings. Just like you have at home, the telephone company brings your telephone service to the door. You still have to pay money to access that network, and that's not uncommon. That has not been anything unusual. Through many budget discussions in this House on the Alberta SuperNet that's always been the case. It's been perfectly clear.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, back to the Premier: why does the $3,000 per year SuperNet connection not include basic Internet service?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. minister answer relative to the specifics related to hooking up to the SuperNet.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I'm not being clear on this point. Let's talk about the earlier discussion we had in the Assembly about municipalities and the $4,000 grant that was announced by the Minister of Municipal Affairs just a few days ago that lets the municipalities join the highway, which is something that they find beneficial. So digging the conduit or providing the wireless connection to the municipalities is the $4,000. The monthly charge to have access or access to the data like you would pay for your telephone line or your high-speed Internet service at your home is the monthly charge that is the responsibility in this case of the municipalities.

Ms Blakeman: And you still don't have Internet.

My final question back to the Premier: did the government understand that they were getting Alberta taxpayers into a project that costs them to build the highway, that costs them to hook up the entrance to the highway, and that costs them to get connected, to have a car to drive on the highway. You got us into all of that. Did you know that? I don't think so.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. minister outlined it adequately. We built the highway. If someone wants to connect to the highway, that's entirely up to them, but there is a cost for a connection to the highway.

Ms Blakeman: More.

Mr. Klein: I don't know what she talks about "more." More than what? There's never been a highway before. I'm confused as to: more than what? More than before they had the highway that they couldn't connect to? You know, go figure.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and the Minister of Economic Development would also love to supplement if you would permit them.

I, frankly, am at a loss for words at what to say. This provides us a lot more than just the Internet, Mr. Speaker. This is part of the confusion. The benefits of having a classroom in Rainbow Lake connected to the University of Alberta connected to La Crête connected to Drayton Valley are all possible now with the Alberta SuperNet. You can do video conferencing that is much more than simple access to the Internet. This brings us into the 21st century in a major way.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta businesses are hitting the highway and leaving the province because of electricity deregulation. Power bills for a glass fibre plant in Leduc have more than doubled to $1.5 million a year, and the plant has lost up to $400,000 in production due to constant power outages. With electricity deregulation costing the plant $2 million more each year, the owner is now looking to move out of the province to a place where power is affordable and reliable. My first question is to the Premier. What feeble excuses does the Premier now have for this $8 billion electricity boondoggle when we see so many businesses complaining about the cost of power and the reliability of supply?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm not receiving a lot of cards and letters on the reliability of supply. I'm receiving none on the reliability of supply because if we have one thing in this province, we do have the energy. We have the power.

Relative to these people that the hon. member alludes to in the context that hordes and hordes of people are leaving the province, well, hordes and hordes of people are coming to the province. All one needs to do is turn one's ear to the highways leading to the north, particularly the oil sands up north, where there's about $50 billion worth of new construction underway, and trucks are moving, and the railways are talking about building rail services up there. The highways are as busy as they possibly can be.

I haven't heard about anyone leaving the province. When you look at everything overall, including power rates and the stabilization of power rates, the secure supply of power, the low taxes, the Alberta advantage generally, Mr. Speaker, there are far more people coming to this province, notwithstanding this feeble Liberal opposition, than will ever, ever leave this province.

Mr. MacDonald: Given that no one will ever build an electric train to Fort McMurray because they know it will be too expensive for sure, again to the Premier: how many Alberta businesses and industries will be forced to flee from this province and relocate to other provinces like Manitoba or British Columbia, where electricity is much cheaper, before this government comes to their senses and unplugs electricity deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I have never in my life heard such nonsense. We are doing just fine, thank you. You know, because the Liberals like the old way of doing things and because they're so tuned in to socialistic systems, they can't accept something that is new, is innovative, is effective, and it works.

Relative to the situation today with respect to businesses either coming or going, I'll have the hon. Minister of Economic Development supplement.

Mr. Norris: I'm getting the signal to be short, Mr. Speaker. With such an abundance of good news it'll be tough. I have to say, being of Irish descent, that my mother always told me to consider the source. I'd say to the hon. member: you have to start telling the truth.

Here's the reality. Bankruptcies in Alberta were down by 28 per cent compared to the rest of the nation. The business migration was somewhere in the neighbourhood of 300 new businesses into the province of Alberta, clearly not what the hon. member says. In the first 11 months of the year 2003 the number of business bankruptcies in Alberta was at – and listen for it – an all-time low. Coincidentally, big surprise, the number of new business start-ups in Alberta was at – listen for it – an all-time high. Clearly, the member is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: since our electricity bills are at an all-time high in this province, why is this government continuing with such a destructive economic policy, which is the fostering of electricity deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, this is so typical of the Liberals. They sit there, and they listen with their duffs. I'm sure they do because they don't listen with their ears. The hon. minister just went through the list of why people are coming here in droves. Far, far more businesses are coming here to take advantage of the Alberta advantage than are leaving, for sure.

This hon. member should be proud to live in Alberta, where we have, thank God, an entrepreneurial spirit, a spirit of free enterprise, and where we have the courage to do things differently and do things in an efficient and an effective manner. That's why this province is prosperous today.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Tax Policy for Armed Forces Personnel

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is home to one of the largest contingents of military personnel in Canada, based at a number of locations including the Edmonton Garrison, the Cold Lake air base, and CFB Suffield. Often these men and women in uniform are asked to leave their families and serve in dangerous missions in world trouble spots. My question is to the Premier. Does the government plan to follow the lead of the federal government and exempt our men and women in uniform from paying provincial income tax on their military salaries during the months that they are serving overseas, and if not, why not?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's an interesting question and certainly one that I hadn't contemplated. I will take that under advisement and consult with the provincial Finance minister.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier at liberty to give us an estimate as to how long this might take?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll discuss it with the hon. minister as soon as I possibly can. Hopefully, an answer will be provided either this week or next week.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Should the government decide to exempt military personnel from paying provincial income tax while serving overseas, will this apply to the beginning of the 2004 taxation year so that it can match what is being done by the federal government?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the question is hypothetical because I don't have the answer to his first question. Once that question is answered, perhaps I'll be able to answer his third question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Opening of U.S. Border to Live Cattle

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents as well as the rest of our Alberta residents are still very concerned about when the U.S. border will open to Alberta beef. They were glad to hear the recent announcement that Canada would be accepting beef from U.S. states that are low-risk for bluetongue and anaplasmosis. They were even happier to hear about the Premier's and the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development's trip to Washington to present Alberta's case directly to the USDA. My first question is to the Premier. How successful was Alberta's trip to Washington?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess the success of the trip will be when the border opens. If – and I underline the word "if" – everything goes according to plan and we aren't hit with an unexpected case of BSE either in the United States or Canada, then the border will likely open at the end of June. That will be for young cattle, cattle under 30 months, live cattle. That would be a welcomed first step.

The meetings, I believe, went very well indeed. This time around it was necessary to be aggressive, because little did we ever imagine that a second case of BSE would surface in the United States or in Canada.

An Hon. Member: You should have known.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this hon. member sitting over there said, "You should have known." Would this hon. member ever know and tell me when the next case is going to occur? Can he tell me this now, today? If he can't tell me, then keep his trap shut.

Mr. Speaker, in Washington we heard nothing that would change our belief that the U.S., too, wants our borders to open soon. We heard that from the cattle industry. We heard it from the political side, and we heard it from the administration side. We presented our comment submission on the proposed U.S. role directly to the undersecretary of the United States Department of Agriculture. I have found and I'm sure the hon. minister found as well that face-to-face meetings are infinitely more valuable than speaking to someone over the phone or simply writing a letter.

Mr. Speaker, this trip was more than just presenting our comment submission. This trip was about positioning ourselves as a province and as a country, to explain and receive concurrence that our industries are fully integrated and that after things get back to normal, we need to work together as countries and as beef-producing areas to convince the international community of the quality and the safety of Canadian and American beef.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What was contained in Alberta's comment submission?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, first may I say that the Premier did an absolutely outstanding job of meeting with the cross-section of people in the U.S. that were important to hear our submission. Our submission talked about the highly integrated nature of the North American cattle and beef industry, certainly a relationship that benefits not only producers but processors and consumers on both sides of the border. That was recognized by all that we met with.

It was important to discuss again the measures that we have put in place and to hear from the U.S. people that we met with that they recognize that we have put in place very extensive measures to reduce the risk of BSE including our expanded surveillance, which they are also doing, including the removal of specified risk materials, which they are also doing, and, of course, talking about the ban that has been in place since 1997 on ruminant-to-ruminant feeding.

Mr. Speaker, it was important for us to reiterate to the U.S. that we support the USDA in using science as the basis for making the decision. We've been saying that since the beginning, and it was important that we reiterate that Canada is a minimal risk area and that the borders should open.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the same minister. How was the CFIA announcement on bluetongue and anaplasmosis received?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, this has been an issue that has been a point of contention, I would say, between the U.S. industry and the Canadian industry for some years. We were in the process of introducing a pilot project in 2003 that would have seen the first cattle move into the province in what is considered a vector season. Unfortunately, with the case of BSE that pilot project was halted.

I can tell you that in discussions with the National Cattlemen's Beef Association and with politicians in the U.S., the opening of our country to beef from 39 states in all seasons of the year was very well received. Certainly, it goes a long way to proving once again how integrated the Canadian and U.S. beef industry is.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Access to Information Application Fees

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the Legislative Assembly the hon. Minister of Government Services stated in question period not once but twice that Alberta has the lowest fee for access to information across Canada. My first question is to the Minister of Government Services. Given that application fees for access to information in Canada range from a low of $5 in New Brunswick to a high of $25 in Nova Scotia and at the federal level again to a low of $5 and our application fee in this province is $25, how can the minister say that we have the lowest fees across Canada for access to information?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, my comment yesterday was exactly correct. The initial fee is $25. Subsequent requests that go up to $150 are assessed by the department, and that assessment can go down to $25, so that just proves that my statement yesterday was true. Twenty five dollars after assessment is the fee, and that is the lowest in Canada.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I'm astonished that he doesn't understand his own legislation, Mr. Speaker.

Again to the minister: will he reduce the initial application fee in this province from $25 to what the federal government has, which is $5? Why don't you reduce those fees, which are really taxes?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, that would not be a very good move because the average cost to handle each FOIP request is over $45 in this province.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that access to information legislation is a means by which people get that information from sometimes reluctant government hands, why is this government taxing information that should be readily provided in the public interest not only to the Official Opposition but also to other Albertans?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, I'm quite surprised at the hon. member's third question, because this particular legislation has been reviewed twice and this hon. member sat on both of those committees. It would have been very appropriate if during that process this particular individual who sat on those committees had brought that forward at that time. The actual report, that was brought and placed in this House, where it was debated, actually provided the basis for amendments to the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. That's the process, and that's the way he should approach this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

2:10 Organized Crime and Gang Activity

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have recently met with distraught constituents who are concerned about organized crime, gangs, and drugs in our communities. Some constituents see suspicious activity and are afraid to let their children walk down certain neighbourhood streets by themselves. Some have heard that there is a dealer and pimp who has said to those who owe him drug money: bring me a 14 year old and I will cancel your debt. My questions are for the Solicitor General. What is the government doing to address the issues of organized crime and gangs in our communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to say that anyone with information about criminal activities in this province should be giving that information to the police.

As for the question of gangs and organized crime we know that gangs are a breeding ground for organized crime, and we know that organized crime is a problem crossing all boundaries, all communities, and a part of society. It's no longer a big-city problem.

This government is not standing idly by. First, we provide the Criminal Intelligence Service of Alberta with $2.4 million in annual funding. Secondly, we established the integrated response to organized crime unit, which is known as IROC, which is directed by senior RCMP members, members from Calgary and Edmonton. This is really a first in Canada, and I'm very, very proud of what they're doing. They're up and running. Police are targeting key players and crime bosses through the co-ordinated efforts of CISA and IROC in addition to the actions already taken by all the law enforcement agencies in the province.

Mrs. Jablonski: Again to the Solicitor General: can you tell me whether or not organized crime and gang activity is growing in this province?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, crime in general is going down in Alberta. It is down in Canada and in most other western industrialized countries. Crime stats, however, do show increases in organized crime activities partly due to our booming economy. So to answer her question, yes, gang and organized crime activity seems to be increasing. We understand how Albertans want to have safer communities, and law enforcement is a high priority. Without being specific, we're going to be dealing with the budget in a couple of hours, and we're going to have good news for the policing community in this province.

Mrs. Jablonski: Finally, to the same minister: what should people look for and what should they do if they suspect that there's a crystal meth lab or grow operation in their neighbourhood?

Mrs. Forsyth: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I encourage the member and any other person to be very, very careful if they suspect a home in their area is being used to make meth. If you suspect something, contact the police. Obviously, do not make contact with the residents of the home or go around investigating the home. It's important to call the police.

There are signs that people can look for if they're suspicious that there's a meth lab next to them, and that is an unusual or strong odour similar to fingernail polish or cat urine. Look at the garbage that's being disposed of; are there large quantities of cold medicine, antifreeze, drain cleaners, lantern fuel, coffee filters, batteries, duct tape, and large glass containers? Are the windows blacked out? Is there unusual traffic at night? All of these are signs that a meth operation could be next door. Again, contact your police.

Private/Public Partnerships for Hospital Construction

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, last week members of the government were unfamiliar with a report that was tabled in this Assembly on November 26, 2003, which was titled Why P3s Don't Work, and What Will. My question today is to the minister of health. Given that this report clearly states that "the P3 model for public hospitals is likely to lead to . . . a deterioration of the quality and extent of universal service," how can this minister condone using P3s for hospitals?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Please remember that we're not into a debate here.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there is a certain philosophical element to this, I would suggest. The reality is that when an individual goes into a facility seeking health care services, the operative questions that will be on the mind of such an individual are: does this place have the people and the equipment and the skills to diagnose me and treat me so I get better? Nobody is going to ask: "I wonder what the rate of return on this building is. I wonder if this is owned by the regional health authority. I wonder if this is a P3 project." That is far removed from what the concerns are of individuals who are ill and need access to the health care system.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we look at the recent report prepared by the Conference Board of Canada that examined OECD countries in the world. It assessed that Canada has the third highest cost system in the world but only gets middle-of-the-pack results, around 13th in the world, in terms of outcomes. We do have a good health care system. I don't want Albertans to think otherwise. But the reality is that there are other places that are getting better outcomes. Our responsibility as a government is to examine these systems from around the world, and if we're prepared to import physicians from other parts of the world, we should also be prepared to import the gold-medal standards of best practices, including innovative ways of looking at how our health care system is provided through P3s.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the report states that "it is reasonable to expect P3 hospitals to be at least 10% more costly than their public sector equivalents," why does the Premier believe that P3 hospitals won't cost Alberta taxpayers more?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again the hon. member does not understand or refuses to understand the whole concept and the process relative to P3s.

First of all, this government is not saying by any stretch of the imagination that P3s are the end-all and the be-all. We are saying that this is another tool that might be used to get needed infrastructure on stream, whether that infrastructure involves municipal buildings, schools, hospitals, roadways, or whatever else. If a P3 works and if it can be demonstrated through a very detailed adjudication process that the project will be a good project and it will save taxpayers' dollars, then we will consider it and likely go ahead with it. If it can be shown that the project is of no particular benefit to the taxpayer or to the government or to the people of this province, then it won't go ahead. We'll find another way of doing it.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong whatsoever in reviewing and looking at P3 proposals and putting them to work if they work. If they don't work, they won't happen.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: when will this government actually hear the concerns of Albertans, of prominent economists, of relevant organizations and other governments and reject the P3 model for essential public services such as health care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, P3 projects for essential public services and other public services will be rejected if they don't work. I have seen examples of P3 projects that work in the health care system.

[interjection] Well, I have seen a proposal that works. In my mind it works. Maybe in his mind it doesn't work, but in the minds of the people involved with the project – and I'm talking about one in the U.K. – it works.

Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs respond.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I should have ruled these questions out at the beginning. They just lead to debate. The purpose of question period is to deal with policy, so I apologize for the last five minutes or six minutes.

We're now moving on to the hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Rural Education

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Learning Commission's is an excellent report that ensures that the urban education system works, but while the report deals with the urban issue of class size, it does not address the rural issue of double and triple grading. In fact, nowhere in the report are unique rural education issues around transportation, program inequity, lack of specialized services, and the effects of declining enrolment addressed at all. My question is to the Minister of Learning. What plans does the minister have to address these unique problems faced by rural boards in delivering quality education in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has raised some very good points. The Learning Commission received a lot of accolades across the province and, indeed, right across the country for the work that it's done. One of the disappointments, though, that has been voiced to me is exactly what the hon. member has brought up, which is the rural school issue. There are not a lot of things in the Learning Commission about rural schools.

I will add, though, Mr. Speaker, that included in the funding formula which was actually suggested and recommended by the Learning Commission are a lot of specific things that deal with the exact issues that the hon. member asked. Small schools by necessity will now become a type of grant that will be given to those areas where they have small schools. The small schools are such that, realistically, because of their location you cannot close them down. You cannot close a school because there won't be another school for, you know, 30 or 40 miles. So that's certainly one of the areas.

Another thing and a very important thing, Mr. Speaker, that we will be doing, in subtle reference to another question that was asked today: the SuperNet will play a very important role. Indeed, the SuperNet has been funded in my department for the last two years and actually will continue to be funded for the next 20 or 30 years within my department. As a matter of fact, in the funding formula it has been recommended that these funds be enveloped.

So, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has an excellent question. Rural schools are something we continue to work on and continue to work for because those challenges faced by rural schools are considerably different than challenges faced in urban areas.

Rural Economy

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, this government has deliberately destabilized growth in rural Alberta during the Klein regime.

The Speaker: Please, please. It's against the rules to mention people's names.

Ms Carlson: I withdraw that, Mr. Speaker.

By centralizing control and removing local offices, rural communities have lost infrastructure, jobs, and new dollars into their communities. To the Premier: why did your government do this?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we didn't. You know, I don't know how often – perhaps the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East gets out into the country from time to time. I imagine he does because he understands it. I don't think that many of these other members get out into the country, but I do, and the majority of the government MLAs either live in the country or get out into the country. I'm talking about the rural areas of Alberta, real Alberta, from High Level to Warner, from Banff to Medicine Hat, from Oyen to Rocky Mountain House.

Mr. Speaker, we travel around, and when I travel around to communities in this province, I see a tremendous spirit: a spirit of confidence, a spirit of commitment, a can-do spirit. I see communities that are vibrant. I see people going to their work, their jobs, working in the fields, volunteering in their communities. I see the vibrancies and all the activities going on in the curling rinks and the hockey rinks and the community halls and the church basements. This province is very much alive and, indeed, is very much alive in the rural areas.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, my second question goes to the Minister of Economic Development. Given that this question comes from a constituent in central Alberta, can he tell us how removing local offices has helped economic development in rural Alberta?

Mr. Norris: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I guess that, much like the Minister of Gaming the other day, I'm very flattered that you asked a question. I thought that you forgot about me.

I'll answer the question in a number of different ways, Mr. Speaker. There was some rationalization done in the ministry of agriculture, which I think she's referring to – and the minister might want to comment – but to offset those, that were very rational economic decisions, our department along with the minister of agriculture and the members for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and Wainwright have coauthored a strategy for rural development called the economic blueprint for rural development. It talks about the things you're speaking to, about how to have a healthy rural Alberta, because this government does identify how important that is.

Other initiatives, Mr. Speaker, that the member should know about that are specific to rural Alberta are the SuperNet, which we had a lively discussion on earlier; our regional economic alliances, which identify grouping together regional economies and cities and towns into economic alliances to help promote them and stop the us versus them mentality; and, of course, our tourism initiative, that's been incredibly successful, to recognize that rather than coming into Calgary and Edmonton and moving on to British Columbia, we would like people to go east and maybe see the Lac La Biche Mission or maybe see the Ukrainian Cultural Centre or go see the Dinosaur Trail or any number of other opportunities that are all in rural Alberta. We've spent an awful lot of time developing those projects, so the member should just come to Public Accounts next week and find out.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: are we going to see some dollars dedicated in the form of the hotel tax to tourism initiatives that can be run by the associations themselves rather than the government?

Mr. Norris: Well, clearly, if I answer that question, Mr. Speaker,

I'll be killed. I just want to say yes, but as you're well aware, the budget comes out tomorrow . . .

Some Hon. Members: Today.

Mr. Norris: Oh, today. Clearly, I'm still in St. Patrick's Day mode, Mr. Speaker.

To answer the hon. member's question, as a department and government we have identified tourism as one of the most important industries that we have. It's our fourth largest, employs some 120,000 people, generates about $6 billion in sales, some $700 million or $800 million in revenue to this government. Every particular member in this House knows the importance of it. So I thank the hon. member for the question.

One of the ways that we're looking at getting some kind of sustained funding is the hotel tax. I don't have an answer for you, but I can tell you that the Member for Edmonton-Glenora, the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, the Member for West Yellowhead, the Member for Banff-Cochrane, both of the members from Calgary who are on the committee are supportive of it, and we will bring it forward, and because this government is so forward-thinking, I would suspect that the answer will be, hopefully, yes.

The Speaker: See what you've done, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Education Survey

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ministry of Learning is circulating a questionnaire to parents asking them how satisfied they are about the quality of education their children are receiving at schools. Many parents have called us to express their frustration and to deplore the fact that while the questionnaire does ask how satisfied they are with teachers, principals, and the school environment, nowhere are they asked how satisfied they are about the government's own policies which negatively impact schools and classrooms, issues such as class size, user fees, and fundraising. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Why are only local schools and teachers being evaluated, while parents are being denied the right to evaluate the provincial government's own role in the learning system?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This was a questionnaire that was put out not just to be a random questionnaire. This is a very important element of the accountability pillar of our new funding framework, and this questionnaire will provide the baseline for responses for now and into the future. This is a questionnaire that will be given to parents and teachers and students over the next 10 to 20 years. This will provide the baseline.

Included in the questionnaire are some of the questions that the hon. member has raised, but there are also questions that relate to class sizes, questions that are related to the government's role in general. Mr. Speaker, I must emphasize that the reason and rationale for this questionnaire was to be able to report back to the constituents from the school boards. We are indeed the ones who are putting it forward.

This is the first of its kind probably in North America. It certainly is the first of its kind in Canada. It's something that we may have some growing pains with – there's no doubt about that – but it will provide a very good baseline for information now and well into the future.

Dr. Pannu: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why is the minister holding school boards, local schools, teachers, and principals to a standard of accountability to which he is not prepared to hold himself?

Dr. Oberg: I find that question absolutely hilarious, Mr. Speaker. Each and every day that I come in here, I am held accountable for the actions of 980-some employees within my department. I am also held accountable for about 64, 65 schools boards that are around the province, and indeed I'm often held accountable for each and every one of the schoolteachers in this province. So that notion is absolutely hilarious, and it's something that, realistically, the hon. member should have known better.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. My second supplementary to the same minister: will the minister redesign the survey questionnaire to include questions about class size, user fees, and parent fundraising, or does the government wish to continue to avoid parents' scrutiny by failing to ask these questions?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the rationale behind the questionnaire, as I stated, was to improve the outcomes of learning by setting a baseline as to what was actually happening in the classroom. We are talking the classroom. That's where children learn. I think the hon. member has something that he's quite mistaken about. We are looking at what is actually happening physically in the classroom. We're using this questionnaire as a baseline. It is something that will be moved on well into the future and probably will provide us with information that is extremely valuable when it comes to assessing exactly what the school boards do.

Mr. Speaker, there have been several groups of parents, of teachers, of students who have been asked to fulfill this questionnaire, and the information will be made public. It will be made public by us. It will also be made public by the school boards. So this is a very, very important element of the accountability pillar of the new funding framework.

The Speaker: Hon. members, as an addendum to yesterday's question period I believe the hon. Minister of Transportation wants to supplement an answer to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry. It was in response to the question and answer there. So under our rules if the minister wishes to proceed, you, sir, will have an additional opportunity to ask a question and for a response as well.

The hon. minister.

Transportation Department Survey

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to a question asked yesterday by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry, I am pleased to table five copies of a letter that has been sent to a resident of Medicine Hat. That letter answers all of the questions raised by the hon. member plus additional information.*

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. Thank you for that, Mr. Minister.

One question: would the minister also table copies of the survey that was sent out to various people around the province?

Mr. Stelmach: I can provide a sample of the survey, but I can't provide the thousands of surveys that were sent to all Albertans. I can certainly table a copy of the survey that went out to Albertans. This survey is to gather client satisfaction. We include that information in our annual report, that goes out to all Albertans at the completion of the fiscal year.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of seven who will participate today.

Before calling on the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce a very interesting group today. They are called the Willow Creek home-school support group. They're from various different areas in my constituency as well as the constituencies of a couple of other MLAs. They're spread out quite far geographically. There are 35 home-school students ranging from I believe kindergarten to grade 12, there are 17 home-school support group parents, and their field trip leader, who sort of organized the trip today, is Mrs. Ute Stiller. So I would ask if this very distinguished group would please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two couples that drove all the way up here from the great heart of Alberta, central Alberta, to take part in the budget speech. First of all, I'd like to introduce Gary and Linda Yargeau, who are no strangers to politics. Gary is a town councillor with the town of Penhold, and Linda was a school trustee, I think, for about five terms before regionalization for the county of Red Deer and now still advocates for children working for Diamond Willow children's services.

Dennis and Sherry Cooper are also with them. Dennis is also a town councillor for the town of Penhold. Together they own Skyways Aviation at the Red Deer airport. Sherry is also a pilot instructor and, I understand, is one of the best pilots of their fleet. I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and to members of this Assembly a good friend and constituent, Louise Kidney, who is here visiting with us today. She's also been working for the past couple of years on an exciting project that's been talked about in question period, the SuperNet, and has done some excellent work. She could tell you some great things if we had the opportunity to tell you about SuperNet. If Louise would rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Organ Donor and Transplant Awareness

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in the Assembly today to bring awareness to an area of extreme importance to all of us: organ donor and transplantation programs. We are all aware that just yesterday our good friend and former colleague Mr. Peter Elzinga underwent surgery to donate a kidney for transplant. It comes as no surprise that this man who has served Albertans for so many years continues to give with this most personal and important gift to another human being.

Alberta is a leader in transplant surgery, but there is a chronic shortage of donor organs. It is imperative to honour those who have given life to others by educating ourselves about donation, making a decision about donation, and sharing that decision with our families. Transplants save lives, and I encourage all Albertans to consider making life-saving differences to someone in need. The gift of an organ is truly a gift of life, a gift that we all have the capacity to provide.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Families of the Miners of Hinton

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the families of the miners of Hinton and area. That's why I am elaborating on the Elk Valley Coal Partnership's important announcement to develop the Cheviot Creek mine south of the town of Hinton.

I'd like to bring to your attention the families that have worked for Cardinal River Coals for over 30 years. A majority of them enjoy the area and have had to leave the community to find employment. A lot of them would like to retire in the area and have left behind their wives, children, family, friends, and relatives while they seek employment elsewhere. As their husbands are usually away for two weeks and maybe back for two weeks, you can see the disruption in the family unit. As well, a number of these workers have been great supporters of local community groups, involved in such things as being hockey coaches and volunteer firefighters.

This is great news for the families of Hinton and surrounding areas and especially for those who have sought employment outside. I'd like to thank Elk Valley Coal Partnership for taking the initiative to finally proceed with the Cheviot mine.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Jaylene Norris

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to recognize one of Alberta's Great Kids, 15-year-old Jaylene Norris of Red Deer, who was presented with the Great Kids award on March 12, 2004, by the Premier, Colleen Klein, and the Minister of Children's Services. Jaylene has overcome many struggles and challenges in her young life, and with the encouragement and love of her foster family, her social worker, her teachers, and the Boys and Girls Club of Red Deer, Jaylene has transformed herself into a helpful, considerate, caring, and dedicated young lady.

Jaylene began to see life differently when she became a counsellor in training with the Youth and Volunteer Centre. Although Jaylene wondered what she could possibly have to offer other children, she ignored her insecurities and went to camp to help with seven to nine year olds. For the first time in Jaylene's life others depended on her for help and encouragement.

Jaylene is now a volunteer at the Red Deer handicapped riding association and the Red Deer Native Friendship Centre. She was one of 38 high school students across Canada recognized by the Foundation for the Advancement of Aboriginal Youth with a bursary for academic achievement, contributions to community, and leadership qualities.

Jaylene is a Great Kid who has demonstrated that everyone has much to offer. She's an inspiration. Congratulations to Jaylene for being the best that she can be, and congratulations as well to the Friske family in Red Deer for being a big part of her success.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

World Theatre Day

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This Saturday, March 27, is World Theatre Day. Created in 1961, World Theatre Day is particularly meaningful in Alberta, where our theatre community thrives. I'm especially proud to salute the thousands of Albertans who make their living in the theatre, and I'm very pleased to acknowledge the remarkable roles played by actors, technicians, volunteers, and, of course, audiences and the other artistic teams in more than 235 live theatre groups in Alberta.

Here in Edmonton we support more live theatre per capita than anywhere else in North America, and our very own Vern Thiessen is the winner of this year's Governor General's award for drama. Vern just happens to be a constituent of Edmonton-Centre. He wrote Canada's World Theatre Day message this year, and here's an excerpt: "As parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles, brothers and sisters, we have a personal duty to inspire respect for the playwright, actor, director, designer, and educator, and the risks they take."

This Saturday we honour these extraordinarily talented people who bring us such wonderful theatre. Thank you.

Edmonton Oilers

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, our Edmonton Oilers have proven once again that the Alberta spirit is alive and well in their hearts and in their fans, a spirit that Albertans are famous for, a spirit that won't ever let them give up. The same spirit drove the Oilers to win the last five games and gave them a chance at the western division of the Stanley Cup playoffs. The team has shown true grit in its skate towards the playoff run. Our hockey heroes will have to continue without error to stay ahead of the St. Louis Blues and the L.A. Kings. Both teams want the prize as much as Edmonton but lack our Alberta spirit.

As all of us long-time Oiler supporters know, Edmonton's home team will wage the battle to hang on to their precious playoff spot with fierce determination and skill. Northern Alberta will see tonight a spirited and exciting matchup as their Edmonton Oilers take on a classic rival from past playoffs, the Dallas Stars. I hope, Mr. Speaker, the Stars fade tonight.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bob Wasylyshen

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize the tremendous work and successful career of Edmonton's former police chief Bob Wasylyshen. On March 12 Bob retired from the Edmonton Police Service. Before becoming chief of police, Bob succeeded in many important positions, including field training officer, sergeant, staff sergeant, superintendent, and deputy chief of the investigative services bureau. Throughout his 32-year career Chief Wasylyshen spearheaded numerous reforms in police investigation including the use of DNA evidence in crime scenes and the introduction of photoenforcement technology in traffic operations.

Bob Wasylyshen was appointed chief of police by the Police Commission on September 22, 2000. Building community partnerships had always been one of his major overriding goals during his time in office. It's been said that Bob Wasylyshen exceeded expectations as chief of police because of his keen understanding of policing from street level up to the executive offices.

His retirement is well deserved, and his presence with the Edmonton Police Service will be missed. Building a reputation and ensuring the well-being of the Edmonton Police Service were the most important goals for Chief Wasylyshen. Regardless of who becomes the next chief of police, they will have large shoes to fill.

I wish my friend Bob Wasylyshen all the best in life after policing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

David Thompson and Capital Health Regions

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the co-operative work done by the David Thompson and Capital health regions in opening an expanded renal dialysis unit in the Wetaskiwin hospital and care centre. This facility provides seamless service to patients from not only the David Thompson and Capital health regions but surrounding health regions as well. In this expanded facility more patients will experience the benefits of dialysis closer to home.

Since its opening in 1987 this dialysis unit has done over 26,000 dialysis treatments on 220 patients. This specialized health care that is occurring outside urban centres is extremely important for the sustainability of our health care system and for the health of rural patients. The co-operation between David Thompson health and Capital health is seen through this facility as Capital health runs the program in David Thompson's facilities.

I would like to publicly thank the CEOs of the David Thompson and Capital health regions, John Vogelzang and Sheila Weatherill, as well as all board members, whose co-operation benefits the province of Alberta as a whole.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of Alberta Learning's parent survey 2004, which parents complain has failed to ask the most important questions on the state of education, such as the teachers' and kids' learning conditions, class sizes, fundraising, and overall funding.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table this afternoon on behalf of a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Benjamin Atkinson, his opinions on photoradar and what he would like to see us do to make it better.

Thank you.

Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mrs. Nelson, Minister of Finance: pursuant to the Alberta Capital Finance Authority Act, the Alberta Capital Finance Authority annual report.

Speaker's Ruling

Amendment to Motion for a Return 10

The Speaker: On Monday, March 22, there was a point of order raised by the Government House Leader. Essentially, the point of order was that since the Assembly had passed an amendment to Motion for a Return 10 and approved the amended Motion for a Return 10, then other motions for returns should come off the Order Paper although they had not been explicitly dealt with. The discussion of this point of order and related matters is found at pages 611 to 617 of Alberta Hansard for that day.

The Government House Leader's argument was that to consider the other motions for returns he cited in light of the decision on Motion for a Return 10 would mean that the Assembly was considering the same issue on repeated occasions and cited paragraph 558 of Beauchesne's, the sixth edition, as authority for that proposition.

On this point the chair finds that the amended Motion for a Return 10 that was approved differed from the wording of the other motions for returns that the Government House Leader indicated were similar. In the chair's view the amendment would have to be virtually identical to the wording of the other motions for returns for such a rule to be applied.

Therefore, the chair finds that the motions for returns referred to by the Government House Leader in his point of order that were not expressly dealt with by the Assembly – namely, 14, 15, 18, 61, 62, 70, 71, 72, 73, 103, 122, 123, and 146 – will remain on the Order Paper.

Private Members' Business

The Speaker: The chair is very much aware that Monday afternoons are private members' time. In dealing with written questions and motions for returns, it is the chair's view that the greatest leeway should be afforded private members, consistent with the rules and practices under which these items of business are conducted.

The chair is not oblivious to the fact that there is a certain angst about the time devoted to dealing with the many written questions and motions for returns that there are on the Order Paper. When there are difficulties or problems encountered like this, the chair's view is that the primary responsibility for resolving them should rest with the House leaders.

The chair is reluctant to get involved in a situation where unique approaches to the rules and practices are being proposed. It is your Assembly, hon. members, and it is to you that the responsibility falls for dealing with the business of the Assembly.

The chair would point out that based on the chair's research to date, Alberta has a unique way of dealing with written questions and motions for returns that was adopted in 1993 to accord private members and the Assembly a greater role in this item of business. In the chair's view addressing the issue of the Assembly's consideration of written questions and motions for returns brings in some of the basic principles of parliamentary law; namely, "to enable every member to express opinions within limits necessary to preserve decorum and prevent an unnecessary waste of time." Members may wish to acquaint themselves with paragraph 1 of Beauchesne's and page 210 of Marleau and Montpetit, where the basic principles governing the operation of parliament are discussed.

Now, hon. members, in order to adequately prepare us all for the Budget Address by the Minister of Finance this afternoon, the House is recessed until 3:30 this afternoon.

3:30

Orders of the Day

Transmittal of Estimates

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I have received certain messages from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order! Please rise in the gallery.

The Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Government Motions

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, before moving Government Motion 13, I now wish to table the 2004-2005 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2004-2005 government and lottery fund estimates. In addition, I am tabling the government's consolidated fiscal and business plans for Budget 2004, as required under sections 4 and 7 of the Government Accountability Act. Also provided for the information of the Legislative Assembly are business plans for each ministry, which must be made public under section 13 of the same act.

Budget Address

13. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, in just over nine months Alberta will begin to celebrate its 100th birthday, and what a remarkable hundred years it has been. Like most landmark birthdays, celebrating our province's centennial is an opportunity to look back at the amazing changes that have taken place since the early settlers ventured out west to break ground and build a new future. It's also an opportunity to look ahead and to envision Alberta's next century. As Premier Klein said, let's "make sure Albertans enter the province's second century with the same spirit of hope, determination and confidence as the Albertans of 1905 had when [our] first century began."

Before I get into the details of this year's budget, I want to take us back where this all began, and that's with Alberta's very first budget. Picture this: Edmonton, May 7, 1906. The hon. A.C. Rutherford, then called the Prime Minister of Alberta and also Provincial Treasurer, stood not in this building but a few blocks away at McKay Avenue school and delivered Alberta's first budget. Looking at that budget today, two things are striking: first, the simplicity and how small the numbers were and, second, the parallels between then and now.

Fiscal responsibility seems to have been bred in the bones of Albertans. Alberta's very first budget was balanced; in fact, they projected a surplus of $283,373.32. This year I'm proud to tell you that Alberta's budget is balanced for the 11th straight year.

Back in 1906, Mr. Speaker, when Alberta was brand new, one of the top priorities was infrastructure: building roads and bridges, building schools, digging ditches and water wells, and building the very first normal school for teachers. Investing in Alberta's infrastructure was critical at the beginning of Alberta's first century, and it is just as critical as we approach Alberta's second century. Look through that first budget and you'll see a line item outlining an investment of $140,000 for the construction of this beautiful building, Alberta's Legislature. Imagine what $140,000 would build today, and then imagine the foresight they had in designing this wonderful legacy.

Even in 1906 Alberta's leaders were looking at value-added agriculture and how to build a strong agricultural economy. Back then they invested $250,000 in creameries to launch the province's dairy industry. Today we're struggling to deal with the impact of BSE, to get the borders open, and to rebuild confidence in Alberta's food industry. Mr. Speaker, we will succeed.

Education was another big priority in that first budget, just as it is today. But back then they spent the whopping sum of $200,000 and had ambitious plans for 800 schools by the end of the year. Today $200,000 would pay for about two classrooms, and we have thousands of them across the province.

One striking difference is in health care. You'll see today that health care is taking up more and more and more and more of our provincial budget, and its costs are growing at a dramatic rate. Not so in 1906. The entire budget for what was then called hospitals, charities, and public health was $33,500, and it warranted only one line in the budget speech.

Taxes. There was no such thing as personal income taxes, but – and here it comes – Premier Rutherford served notice that it would be right and proper to tax lands outside school districts for school purposes, and because most of the other provinces received revenue from corporations like insurance companies, banks, loan companies, and telephone companies, he could see no reason why Alberta shouldn't as well. So corporate taxes were launched.

Much to my surprise, even then they were talking about Ottawa and guns. In this case the budget set aside $1,200 for the Provincial Rifle Association to go to competitions in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, it's fun to look back at the numbers and see how things have changed since our province's early days. But to me, the most important lesson in Alberta's first budget comes in this quote from Premier Rutherford. He said:

We have no pessimists in Alberta – a pessimist could not succeed. We are optimistic and always look on the brighter side of affairs, and so long as we keep progressing in the future as we have in the past, we will, without a doubt, become the great premier Province in British North America.

In 1906 there was no room for pessimists in Alberta, and there's no room for pessimists today.

Albertans are mavericks, people who look challenges square in the face and see hope: hope for better solutions, hope for a better future for ourselves, our families, and our province. That was true in 1906, and it's certainly true today. Mr. Speaker, optimism and hope for the future are what this year's budget is all about.

3:40

This is a budget for Albertans. It's the budget that Albertans have asked for through countless meetings, letters, e-mails, phone calls, and consultations. Albertans want their children and young people to have the best education we can provide, and they'll get that with this budget. They want their health system to be there when they need it, and this budget will help make that possible. They want strong and safe communities, a thriving economy with jobs for themselves, and a strong future for their children right here in Alberta. They want to make sure that their children get a safe and healthy start in life, that family violence becomes a thing of the past, and seniors and people who need help get the support they need. All those expectations are addressed in Budget 2004.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, this is a budget that would only be possible in a province like Alberta. We have choices that are simply out of the question in any other parts of the country. We are a prosperous province, a province blessed with an abundance of resources and driven by the hard work of determined Albertans. The obligation of a prosperous province is to invest wisely, not to squander resources but also not to refuse to spend money where there are pressing needs and the opportunity to build a better future. That's the goal of Budget 2004: to seize every opportunity and to put our province on route and on course for an unparalleled success in our second century.

Let me now turn to the big picture and the highlights of Budget 2004. With this budget we will spend a total of $22.6 billion. That's an increase of 6.1 per cent in operating spending for government programs and services. We expect the province's total revenues to be just under $23 billion. That's a 9 per cent decrease from the current year's budget, primarily because like most private-sector forecasters we are assuming that the price of oil and gas will return to more sustainable levels this year. As announced, the amount of resource revenues we can spend each year on programs will increase from $3.5 billion to $4 billion this year. That's an amount we are confident that we can sustain.

In 1906 Premier Rutherford served notice to corporations to get ready to pay taxes to support essential government programs. Today I'm serving notice that for the fourth straight year taxes for Alberta's businesses will go down. The general corporate tax rate will drop from 12 and a half per cent to 11 and a half per cent. That's one step closer to our target of 8 per cent. The small business rate will drop from 4 per cent to 3 per cent. Together these reductions amount to savings of $142 million this year for businesses, businesses that drive Alberta's economy and create lasting jobs for Albertans. We will also take steps to enhance Alberta's reputation as a business-friendly jurisdiction. Legislation dealing with income trusts and unlimited liability companies will be introduced this year.

Mr. Speaker, businesses are not the only ones to benefit from tax changes this year. Thanks to indexing of our 10 per cent single-rate personal tax, Albertans will save $150 million in personal income taxes this year alone. School property tax rates are going down by 2.3 per cent, saving Albertans and Alberta businesses about $20 million. Since 1993, Mr. Speaker, our government has dropped education property tax rates by over 27 per cent. So overall Albertans pay the lowest personal and business taxes in the country, and there's still no sales tax.

Mr. Speaker, our record on debt repayment is unparalleled. In the early 1990s our province was burdened by a crippling debt of $23 billion. My fondest wish would be to stand here today and say that by the end of this year Alberta's debt will be gone, but that would be speculation, and budgets are not about speculation.

By March 2005 our debt will have dropped to just under $3 billion, a drop of nearly 90 per cent. That puts us within striking distance of eliminating the debt, a truly remarkable achievement. I can tell you that if – and I say "if" – resource revenues are considerably higher than our forecast, my vote and the Premier's vote will be to seize the opportunity and hand Albertans, especially young Albertans like my son Troy, the best gift we could give, the gift of a debt-free province.

Mr. Speaker, I know that many people looking at today's budget will say that the forecasts are too low: how could we expect oil and gas prices and our resource revenues to drop when things are looking so good? Most industry observers expect energy prices to go down. The question is when and by how much. Because energy prices are always an unknown factor, our forecasts may be too low; they may be too high.

The reality is that with Alberta's new fiscal framework our budgets are no longer tied to the ups and downs of oil and gas prices. We don't need to watch the daily news wondering what impact the latest shock will have on our budget. We have protected Albertans against those shocks. Spending $4 billion from resource revenues is the limit. That's all we can or will spend in the budget.

The only difference that the price of oil and gas makes is at the end of the year, when we have some real choices to make. If oil and gas revenues are higher than we expect – and I truly hope that they are – we have two choices and only two choices: we can put more money on the debt, or we can invest more in assets including capital.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot underestimate the strength of this new fiscal framework. Not only does the sustainability fund protect us from ups and downs in resource revenues, but it also allows us to respond to emergencies when they occur. This past year alone the sustainability fund was there to provide assistance to farmers and ranchers, to cover the extraordinary costs of last year's forest fires, and to shelter Albertans from high natural gas prices. This new fiscal plan works. It works for Albertans today, and it will keep working for Albertans as we begin the next century.

Another concern some may have about today's budget is the level of spending. It's a lot of money, and for someone like me who keeps a careful eye on the bottom line, I have to admit that it gives me some pause for thought. But I am convinced of two things. First, we are investing wisely in things that matter most and will help build a better future, and second, to quote Premier Rutherford: there are no pessimists in Alberta. We are confident that Alberta's economy will continue to grow, creating jobs and prosperity for Albertans and for our province, and with the continuing strong growth we will be able to afford this level of spending now and in the years to come.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we're not going to leave Alberta's future prosperity to chance. Last week our government unveiled a comprehensive 20-year plan to build a strong future for our province. The plan is built on four key pillars: unleashing innovation, leading in learning, competing in the global marketplace, and making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. Budget 2004 is designed to address each of these pillars and to put Alberta on course to a bright and prosperous future.

Today I want to highlight four key areas that underpin our plans. First, on learning. Our strategic plan commits us to be leaders in learning, and action on that commitment begins today. With Budget 2004 program spending on basic and postsecondary education will increase by 5.7 per cent to $5.3 billion. In basic education an additional $216 million will be spent in 2004-2005. The vast majority of that funding will go directly to school boards to be spent in classrooms across the province.

A new funding framework will be implemented giving school boards the flexibility they need to meet local priorities and local needs. Our approach is not to tell school boards how to spend the money, but we are confident that with the increases provided today, they will take positive steps to address parents' number one concern, and that's class sizes.

The first priority should be making sure that children who are just starting school have the opportunity to learn and succeed in classes where they are not lost in the crowd. Our government has stated its commitment to implement other key recommendations from the Learning Commission report and further plans will unfold in the weeks and months ahead.

Mr. Speaker, the importance of education doesn't end when students graduate from high school. In a highly competitive global marketplace success depends on a qualified, highly-skilled, and productive workforce driven not just by hard work but by ideas, creativity, and innovation. With Budget 2004 we will provide an additional $85 million in ongoing funding to colleges, technical institutions, universities, and apprenticeship programs across the province.

On top of a base funding increase of 4 per cent, increased access funding will create up to 2,000 new spaces over the next four years in high-priority program areas. Funding for scholarships, bursaries, and grants will increase by over 10 per cent, and close to 28,000 students will benefit from scholarships in 2004-2005 alone. We will also invest $39 million to reduce students' debt load and reward them for successful completion of their programs.

Budget 2004 also begins our government's new investment in the future of Alberta's children. Through the Alberta centennial education savings plan our government will join with families across the province in investing in registered education savings plans for each and every child born or adopted in Alberta starting in January 2005.

Let me turn from education to the second big area in this year's budget, and that's health care. In Budget 2004 health will continue to take up the largest share of total government spending. This year alone spending by Health and Wellness will increase by 8.4 per cent, to a total of $8 billion.

Mr. Speaker, increasing costs in health are causing alarm bells not only here in Alberta but all across the country. Our Premier has led the charge, warning Albertans that the future sustainability of our health system is at risk if we continue to pour more and more money into the status quo. Premiers across the country unanimously have said that unless there are major changes, Canada's health care system as we know it will not survive the decade.

The health care spending path we are on today is simply not sustainable. In the last nine years spending on health has more than doubled. More than 50 cents of every additional operating dollar in this year's budget goes to health care. That can't continue. In the past three years our government has taken good steps to renew and sustain our health system, but our message to Albertans, to the federal government, and to all Canadians is: something has to give.

We're spending more and more and more money on health care, and I have no doubt that you will hear in the weeks and months ahead that it isn't enough. If an increase of 8.4 per cent is not enough in the province of Alberta, how can other provinces expect to sustain their health systems?

Mr. Speaker, this is a national issue that will be played out in every province across the land. Yesterday's federal budget provided some welcome cash but no long-term commitment to sustainable funding. Canadians deserve better.

We're not waiting for the federal government. Once again Alberta will take a strong leadership role, trying new ideas and implementing new solutions to keep our health system on a sustainable track. As Premier Klein has often said, we should put up road signs welcoming people to Alberta, saying: welcome to Alberta; be prepared to think differently.

Albertans can expect to hear more this year about new ways to renew and sustain the health care system. I encourage them to consider each of the ideas with an open mind and with a fresh willingness to embrace change because that's the only way we will preserve and protect Alberta's public health care system.

The third area I want to highlight is our capital plan. All forecasts point to continued strong growth in Alberta's economy. In fact, we expect Alberta's economy to grow by 3.6 per cent in 2004. That translates into close to 43,000 new jobs this year and the lowest unemployment rate in the country. It also means that more people are choosing Alberta as the place to invest and to build their futures.

All that is good news to an already prosperous province, but it also means increasing strain on Alberta's infrastructure. For that reason, our new capital plan will increase our investment in essential capital projects to $6.5 billion over the next three years, an increase of $900 million. Mr. Speaker, that level of capital investment is not matched anywhere in Canada.

With that investment we can assure Albertans, though, that new schools will be built and others will get the renovations that they need. New spaces will be added to universities, colleges, and technical institutes. Leading-edge health facilities, long-term care centres, and new health equipment will help give Albertans access to quality health services. Alberta's network of roads and highways will be expanded and improved, and money will be invested in important capital projects including parks, housing, water and wastewater treatment, centennial projects, and community facilities.

Mr. Speaker, the final area I want to highlight today is communities. I've heard it said that everything that's important happens close to home, in communities where people live, work, and raise their families. A key part of Alberta's new strategic plan is to make Alberta the best place to live, to work, and to visit, and that starts with safe, secure, and vibrant communities. In recent months we've heard about the fiscal challenges faced by Alberta's municipalities, and today we're introducing a package of initiatives to address some of those concerns.

The first is policing. Provincial support for policing programs will increase by 50 per cent this year to a total of $174 million. As a result of that increase, municipalities with populations under 5,000 will no longer pay for policing costs. That's a direct benefit to an additional 20 small communities across the province. Thirty-seven million dollars will be spent on new per capita policing grants for larger municipalities, and additional funds will be available to address other critical policing issues.

Important changes will also be made this year to ambulance services. Our government has received several reports indicating that ambulance services are health services and should be integrated with the health system. During this year we will begin the transition. We will consult with municipalities and health regions and develop plans for shifting responsibility for ground ambulance services, and by 2005-2006 funding to health regions for ambulance services will increase by $55 million. The good news for municipalities is that this will free up money they can spend to meet other pressing needs.

Work is also underway on a new rural development strategy. While our government works hard to reopen the borders and restore confidence in Alberta's food industry, the impact on many rural communities has been devastating. This year our government will build on the work done by two MLAs, the hon. Member for Wainwright and the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, to develop a comprehensive Alberta strategy for rural development.

On top of those initiatives, Mr. Speaker, municipalities will also receive $934 million over the next three years for transportation projects, supported through the municipal share of gas taxes and other provincial grants; increased funding for Alberta's centennial celebrations to support community, cultural, and historic facilities; additional capital funding for projects such as water and wastewater treatment projects; and interest-free loans to improve energy efficiency. Mr. Speaker, that package of initiatives may not solve all the challenges faced by municipalities, but it will go a long way to free up essential funds and relieve the burden on local taxpayers.

As usual, there is never enough time to highlight all of the many initiatives in our government's annual budget. I can tell you that additional funds are also included for expanding programs for children, implementing a comprehensive approach to preventing family violence, improving maintenance enforcement, supporting people with disabilities, and providing much-needed assistance to seniors and to people who need our support. I encourage all Albertans to review the budget and find out more about these important developments.

So, Mr. Speaker, let me close today by summarizing the highlights of Budget 2004. It's a budget for Albertans, a budget that reflects our hopes, our dreams, and our optimism for the future. It's a budget that will provide our children with the best education and the best opportunity to learn, succeed, and build their futures. It's a budget that invests heavily in our health care system but also positions us to explore innovative approaches and seize the opportunity to secure a sustainable future for health care. It's a budget that will see new schools, new buildings on postsecondary campuses, new health facilities, new roads and highways. It's a budget that keeps Alberta's taxes the lowest in Canada, and it's a budget that puts us firmly en route to a prosperous and successful second century.

Mr. Speaker, it's a deep honour and privilege to serve Albertans and to present the province's 99th budget. Budgets reflect the hard work of a team of people working countless hours behind the scenes. Today I'd like to extend a special thanks to one member of the team, Alex Fowlie. He's here today with his family. He has been instrumental in 17 straight budgets, and now he thinks he's going to retire. Treasury Board meetings will never be the same. I don't know that we'll let him go, but we ask everyone to thank Alex for 17 years.

Mr. Speaker, like Finance ministers before me I stand here today filled with hope about the future of our province and confident that our budget plans will help secure the kind of future we all want for ourselves, our family, and our province. As Premier Klein has often said, given a choice between the past and the future, Albertans will choose the future every time.

Albertans began our first century with their eyes on a better future. They were filled with hope, ready to take on tough challenges, and confident that they would succeed. That same confidence, that same spirit of optimism and determination, remains a hallmark of Alberta today. Premier Rutherford was right: there are no pessimists in Alberta, not then and not now. We have become the great province Premier Rutherford envisioned back in 1906. Now we are en route to Alberta's next century, and I have no doubt that it will be even better than the first.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the House adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:10 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 24, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/24

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 24 Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2004

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've spent a considerable amount of time talking about appropriation, interim supply, but now we have the budget before us and the opportunity to get into Committee of Supply on the real estimates.

I'm not sure that we need a whole lot further debate, so I move third reading of Bill 24.

Ms Carlson: Oh, Mr. Speaker, you know, I was going to talk for just a very, very short amount of time, but the Government House Leader goads me into a longer speech.

It's the absolute travesty of having to deal with appropriations when we have the budget before us. How foolish can that be for a government that can't organize its time? Here they need more money again because they can't bring financial budgets before us in a timely fashion. They've only had three months, Mr. Speaker. How long does it take, when they start preparing for these budgets way back in November? It's hard to imagine, hard to believe, but year after year we go through the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, I just throw up my hands in disgust, and I'm going to vote against them.

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a third time]

head: Government Motions

14. Mr. Hancock moved on behalf of Mrs. Nelson:

Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2004-05 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates, the 2004-05 government and lottery fund estimates, and fiscal and business plans, and all matters connected therewith be referred to the Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 14 carried]

Gun Registration

15. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that since the mandatory registration of all nonrestricted firearms is an unnecessary intrusion on the property rights and cultural heritage of Albertans, fails to discourage criminal activity involving firearms, and has wasted an enormous amount of money, the Legislative Assembly of Alberta recommends that the government of Alberta urge the government of Canada to introduce amendments to the Firearms Act of Canada and the Criminal Code of Canada to remove the requirement for the registration of all nonrestricted firearms.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is an issue about which many Albertans and, I'd suggest, many Canadians feel very, very strongly. I'd like to thank the members whose efforts led to the development of this resolution: the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmr, and the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Those three members since last fall have been tasked with the job of reviewing everything the government of Alberta has done with respect to opposition to the gun registry to find out, first of all, if we've done everything we can and, secondly, to offer new suggestions about how we might take this travesty off the table.

Put very simply, Mr. Speaker, the federal firearms regime does not work. It does not reduce crime, it does not enhance protection already in place for police, and it does not provide safer communities.

However, the mandatory registration of long guns has done some things that I'd also like to highlight today. Registration has cost the taxpayers of Canada nearly $1 billion, and there's no sign that the bleeding is going to stop. The results achieved are not even remotely proportionate to the resources allocated. Registration has further alienated western Canadians and particularly those Albertans for whom firearms remain an important part of their traditional heritage.

Finally and probably most importantly, firearms registration has unnecessarily made criminals of those Albertans and those Canadians whose only offence is the failure to comply with an unnecessary, ridiculously expensive, and ineffective system to regulate firearms in Canada. This government has not and would never encourage Albertans to break the law. However, based on principle, otherwise law-abiding Albertans have not registered their firearms and, therefore, could face prosecution.

As the members of this Assembly and all Albertans should know by now, the provincial government has opposed the registry since Bill C-68 was first introduced into the House of Commons of Canada in 1995. This legislation created both the Firearms Act and amended the Criminal Code. With the Criminal Code changes certain offences if committed using a firearm received harsher penalties. This is something we clearly supported. This is something which has a direct and real impact on community safety.

Further, changes resulted in firearm licences replacing the former firearms acquisition certificate system. While many people don't support the concept of licensing, at least it involves screening and training and the requirement of mandatory courses and ensures that those who possess firearms will know their responsibility and handle them safely.

As well as licensing, however, Bill C-68 required all firearms to be registered. Unlike the old registration regime which was limited to restricted firearms, primarily handguns and some military weapons, this change required all long guns to be registered. Costs for the registration regime immediately began to rise, and because of a series of delays and changes in the system and retooling the system, registration only came into effect at the beginning of 2003. So you can see just in the time frame between 1995 and 2003 how much time and effort it's taken the federal government to bring in a totally useless system.

Under the old firearms acquisition certificate system Alberta and other provinces administered the firearms legislation by virtue of an agreement with the federal government. Because of our opposition to the registration regime being established under the Firearms Act, this province withdrew from the administration of the firearms legislation. The Firearms Act as federal legislation allowed the federal government to continue the administration directly in the event that any province – and other provinces have followed our suit – refused to do so.

In addition to this, the province also proceeded to challenge the constitutionality of the Firearms Act both at the Alberta Court of Appeal and subsequently at the Supreme Court of Canada. Unfortunately, on June 15, 2000, the Supreme Court ruled that the Firearms Act and the amendments to the Criminal Code were valid and within the mandate of the Parliament under the Constitution as part of the federal government's authority to make criminal law.

It was at this time, Mr. Speaker, that the government of Alberta established its long-standing policy on prosecutions as it relates to firearms, a policy that remains in effect today. Under this policy Crown prosecutors will continue to vigorously prosecute firearms offences that adversely affect community safety, such as the use of firearms in the commission of another offence, possession of a firearm for a purpose dangerous to the public peace, or possession of a prohibited or restricted weapon.

Alberta Justice will not prosecute the noncriminal offences contained in the Firearms Act, such as not having a registration certificate for a firearm. We've taken the position that this is not appropriate legislation. It is federal legislation, and we can legitimately say to the federal government: if you want to enforce that legislation, if you want to use the public's resources to that effect, enforce it yourself.

Finally and most importantly for our discussion today, on the direction of the Attorney General Alberta prosecutors will not prosecute anyone for possessing an unregistered firearm whether under the Firearms Act or the Criminal Code if that is the only offence with which they are charged, and there's an important distinction here. The federal government, if they want to prosecute, if they want to enforce firearms legislation, can do it under the Firearms Act. Then we don't have to choose to prosecute.

In our view, as the Premier reiterated a few weeks back, this government has no quarrel with the concept of gun control. We've had gun control in this country since the early 1900s. We've controlled access to and use of handguns, automatic weapons, and those sorts of weapons, but it must be effective gun control. It must be gun control which reduces crime, and the federal registry system has nothing to do with gun control or safer communities. It's simply not in the public interest for the provincial government to pursue charges in cases where an individual's only offence is the failure to comply with this bloated and ineffective registration system.

Some people might suggest that the Supreme Court case was years ago and that Alberta should move on to other issues. Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not good enough. The costs continue to rise. The federal government has made little or no attempt to fix the problem. It's our position that the registry regime is beyond fixing. It's simply not possible to salvage this enormous waste of taxpayer dollars, and that's why today through this resolution I rise on behalf of Albertans to renew our call to abolish the firearms registry for nonrestricted weapons.

8:10

Albertans' views on this subject are very clear, and the government shares those views. Although the Supreme Court decision is in the past, through initiatives like this resolution our committee is exploring other ways to keep pressure on the federal government. For instance, the members of the committee and I met recently with the Member of Parliament and Minister of State Albina Guarnieri, who has been tasked with reviewing the registry on behalf of Prime Minister Martin. The members and I used that meeting to renew our call to abolish the registry.

I'd like to take this opportunity to thank these members for their work on this issue, their commitment to this issue, and for representing the many voices of their constituents and many other Albertans, which has been outstanding, to say the least.

Apart from the waste of money, Mr. Speaker, some people may not be convinced that the registry is completely ineffective. For instance, some might be of the mindset that although it's ridiculously expensive, every bit done to prevent gun crime is a step in the right direction. Although that is the line that has been sold by the federal government for many years now, Albertans aren't buying it. Let's be realistic. Criminals, those who do harm to others, those who commit armed robberies, those who illegally possess weapons because they're involved in the drug trade, have not, will not register their firearms.

The very fact that thousands of illegal guns are on the streets in Canada this very minute amply demonstrates that the registry does absolutely nothing to keep firearms out of the hands of those who use them for criminal purposes. In many cities it's simply far too easy for a criminal to illegally purchase a firearm, and that's why greater efforts are needed to stop the illegal gun trade in Canada and especially the illegal trafficking of weapons from the United States.

It makes me absolutely apoplectic when I think of the impact that a billion dollars could have had on the illegal gun trade, the effect that a billion dollars could have had on making our communities safer, and the effect that a billion dollars could have had on reducing crime. A billion dollars has been spent on registering law-abiding Canadians rather than being invested in promoting safer communities.

As my colleague the hon. Solicitor General and all members of this House will agree, we need to do everything we possibly can do to protect our police officers in their line of duty, the people who truly make our communities safe, and this is one area that the federal government has tried to point to when discussing the merits of the registry system. If only it were true. Mandatory registration does absolutely nothing to enhance the protection offered to police.

All persons who have firearms must be licensed under law. When police go to a call, the essential information they need is that a firearm may be present at the scene. Licensing already provides this information. All registration provides is which particular firearms may be present. Again, because of the nature of the registry system, because of the boondoggle that it has been, and because of the ineffective process that they've undertaken, the registry itself provides no satisfaction, no cover for a police officer. In fact, I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that no self-respecting police officer would rely on the registry, when approaching a house or approaching an individual, to tell them whether or not guns were present.

As Alberta's Justice minister for the past four and a half years I've dealt with this issue since the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada came down. We've seen the federal government's cost projections rise from year to year. We've spoken out at federal/provincial/territorial ministers of justice meetings asking for the registry to be scrapped. But in recent months the frustration of Albertans has boiled over and in some cases led to fingers pointing back at the provincial government and at this minister. Some have voiced their concerns that Alberta has changed their position, that it has or could prosecute individuals charged with registry offences. Much of this problem, Mr. Speaker, lies in how the federal government drafted the legislation with registration charges existing under the federal Firearms Act and the Criminal Code.

Some of us have suggested that because prosecutions under the Criminal Code are within provincial jurisdiction, we should or could deny a federal prosecutor the authority to proceed or that Alberta should or could intervene to stop any prosecutions that could take place. I'd like to remind you that we're not talking about numerous cases, with obviously only one case of significance coming forward so far.

Interfering in any criminal case because we continue to dislike or oppose federal legislation is simply not an option and would be highly inappropriate. For obvious reasons criminal prosecution decisions must not be made at a political level. The courts have strongly rejected instances when laws are applied to some and not others or ignored altogether because those in office choose to ignore them. Such actions would be contrary to our constitutional obligation to uphold Canadian law and contrary to the belief that most Albertans have in the equality of the law and the equality of individuals under the law.

To point a finger at Alberta is misguided when only the federal government can abolish the gun registry. Only the federal government can prevent licensed gun owners from being charged or prosecuted for possessing an unregistered gun. That's why the focus must remain on Ottawa. As we've done since day one, Alberta will lead the opposition to these laws and fight to have them abolished. That's what we're doing today with this resolution. This is but the next step in our government's efforts to have the firearms registry scrapped and those resources put to community safety rather than this crazy registry.

The Prime Minister has called for a review. The Minister of State is conducting the review. This Assembly should tell them in the strongest possible way that it should be an honest, effective review which does more than just review how the registry operates or is implemented but reviews the very rationale behind the registry and comes to an honest, direct conclusion: the registry should be scrapped.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure for me to rise in the Assembly this evening to offer my comments to the debate and discussion of the firearms resolution introduced by the hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution recognizes that the mandatory registration of all firearms interferes with the cultural heritage of Albertans and poses an unnecessary intrusion into property rights while failing to discourage criminal activity. Therefore, the resolution recommends that the Alberta government urge the federal government to introduce amendments to both the Firearms Act and the Criminal Code in an effort to remove the requirement that all firearms must be registered.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the resolution put forward by the Minister of Justice and believe it is an important initiative for all Albertans. This resolution is also consistent with the sentiment expressed by a number of citizens from across this province. As chair of the committee mandated to review the federal gun registry, I have thoroughly examined the issues surrounding Bill C-68 and the Firearms Act. Bill C-68 is the strictest gun control legislation in Canadian history as it requires all gun owners to be licensed and register their firearms.

There are many strong arguments from which to oppose the federal gun registry and support the resolution put forward today. Mr. Speaker, the federal gun registry makes the possession and ownership of a firearm a privilege rather than a right. The registry is an intrusion on the property rights of all Canadians. Registration under the Firearms Act modifies the ownership of firearms and shifts it from a right to a privilege because firearms are personal property.

The right to property is a fundamental right in Canadian history. The right to bear arms is an historical right of all Canadians and is affirmed by section 26 of the Charter, which states that "the guarantee in this Charter of certain rights and freedoms shall not be construed as denying the existence of any other rights or freedoms that exist in Canada."

Mr. Speaker, this resolution recognizes Alberta's historic use and possession of firearms. The gun registry threatens the important heritage of Canadians to own guns. The responsible and lawful use of firearms during settlement and currently by ranchers, farmers, hunters, and trappers is a significant part of Canada's multicultural heritage. Canadians have traditionally owned guns, and furthermore Canadians have used them responsibly. The use of firearms in activities such as hunting, trapping, recreational target shooting, and firearm collecting plays an important role in Alberta's cultural, social, and economic heritage.

The Firearms Act potentially violates the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms through various sections. However, it is section 27 of the Charter that expresses that "this Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians." The use of firearms has served to continue an integral component of our cultural heritage. Alberta residents should have the right to own, enjoy, and use firearms in a responsible manner. No law should infringe upon this heritage or the historical rights relating to the use of firearms.

Mr. Speaker, the gun registry has not served to control the criminal use of firearms in our communities. The Firearms Act has not saved lives as it promised. Essentially, registration introduced by the Firearms Act has criminalized a significant number of Canadians. The federal firearms legislation considers firearm owners as potential criminals. The possession of a firearm without a licence holds a Criminal Code offence. The gun registry regards law-abiding gun owners as more dangerous than violent criminals, who are prohibited from owning weapons.

The registry will not be effective in that criminals will not be compelled to register their guns. Therefore, police are only knowledgeable of where innocent gun owners live and not criminals. I then question how beneficial this registry will be in tracking criminals' weapons. Furthermore, there's no guarantee that the information reported on a registration is even accurate.

Mr. Speaker, we must continue to question the perceived benefits of this program. The Firearms Act is not supported by any hard evidence that it will serve as a public safety measure or Criminal Code initiative. Crime rates have not decreased since the inception of the federal government's registry. Furthermore, there is no credible evidence that supports that this program will deter violent crime.

The costs of the gun registry have also escalated out of control. It is apparent that this program has exceeded its original cost expectations. The expense of the gun registry has continued to climb from the projected estimate at the introduction of the program in 1995. The program's initial costs were projected at less than $2 million. However, in December of 2002 it was revealed that the program would cost at least $1 billion by 2005, and while the present calculations remain incomplete, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the program has experienced drastic cost overruns through a number of unforeseen expenditures.

The funds allocated to the gun registry could be better served in other areas. Our communities would be safer if the money from the billion dollar registry was focused on fighting known criminals. This money could be put towards an increased presence of RCMP officers to fight real crime. This financial support could be afforded to any program that would assist Canadians instead of an unwarranted intrusion on the property rights of responsible firearms owners that makes them criminals.

Mr. Speaker, there is an inherent problem with the federal gun registry in that it may not apply to all Canadians equally. The Firearms Act requires all Canadians, including aboriginal peoples, to obtain a licence and register their guns. However, we are now seeing problems come forward as aboriginal groups who are opposed to the registry have grounds to file lawsuits and seek exemptions from the federal program based on provisions outlined in their land claims agreements. In 2002 Nunavut Tunngavik Incorporated, a group overseeing the Nunavut land claims agreement, filed a lawsuit against the federal government. This lawsuit is based on the fact that the gun registry goes against an understanding that the Inuit are able to hunt, trap, and fish without being subject to licensing or fees. It is unclear how many cases may arise to challenge this program based on similar grounds.

Mr. Speaker, it is section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which mandates equality for all Canadians. Furthermore, the Criminal Code must apply to all citizens equally. Therefore, if the exemptions result through court rulings for specific aboriginal groups, then the gun registry would be extremely unfair in applying equally to all Canadians. For this reason, I believe that all Canadians should be exempt from the registry.

The federal Liberals themselves are unsure of the outcome of this program and are now backtracking their steps. The federal government is recognizing the flawed approach to the registry. The Liberals are attempting to make adjustments to the gun registry and have now launched a review of the firearms legislation. They are seeking feedback from Canadians across the country.

The government is searching for alternatives that would essentially reduce the costs while increasing the effectiveness of this initiative. I believe that the best solution would be to abandon this program and repeal the registry. Mr. Speaker, the federal government is already acknowledging some of the problems; however, reversing the course of action on this initiative would prove to be the best solution.

The Firearms Act is the strictest gun control legislation in Canadian history. It requires all gun owners to license and register their firearms. However, it is proven that the gun registry does not work, and no matter how much money is spent, it does not appear that it will have an impact on real criminals. Mr. Speaker, gun control programs need to be cost-effective and focused on reducing the criminal use of firearms. The federal gun registry has not proven to be an effective tool in discouraging criminal activity involving firearms. The registry has cost taxpayers an enormous amount of money and has not improved the public safety in our communities. Alberta needs the continuous leadership role in questioning the federal government and urging the elimination of the registry as the best solution to addressing the problems of this program.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the hon. minister for bringing forth the firearms resolution. This initiative has my full support, and I encourage all members of this Assembly to stand behind this initiative. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to have an opportunity to rise and speak to this particular motion. Since this idea of a registration process was first introduced in 1995, my colleague from Lethbridge-East and I were the designated spokespeople for our caucus on this particular issue. Certainly, at the many, many forums and different arenas that I was asked to speak at, I was very pleased to say that I have always supported gun control, but I have never supported the gun registry.

Now, many of my constituents don't like that stand, and I'm sure that many in the future won't like it either, but I have always said to them that I will represent their views and vote my conscience, and that's what I expect to do this time too.

I have a very good reason, I believe, for truly believing that the registration process is a flawed process, and my greatest concern about it is that it gives police a false sense of security about what lies behind the next door when they face it. I remember vividly 17 years ago when an estranged husband came after his wife and two children and the police were called. The estranged husband was also a policeman, so they were able to go to his locker at work and see that his service revolver was locked away. So they told the wife that there should be no worries, that he didn't have a revolver with him. She said: it isn't the one that's locked in the locker that you have to be worried about; it's the one that he has at home that has never been registered.

So the good news about that story is that there were no serious outcomes, but since that day when my children and I safely escaped from what was a very tough situation, I've always believed that we can never have any police officer out there dealing with a situation where there's a false sense of security or mothers and their children, or anyone else for that matter, being in fear for their lives. Particularly now that my son is grown up and is himself going to be a police officer, I do not ever want him to go into a situation where he doesn't believe that there could be a dangerous weapon around the corner or behind the door.

So I believe that a registry gives a false sense of security in some circumstances and will never support it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor, and then Red Deer-North.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also would like to begin by thanking the hon. Minister of Justice, the MLA for Edmonton-Whitemud, for bringing this motion forward and especially for giving me the opportunity to sit on the gun registry committee. It's been a very educating and enlightening experience.

I echo the comments of my colleagues when I say that we need to put an end to the gun registry as soon as possible. Any initiative put forward by this House to do just that is one that I will support.

I want to say at the outset that I do not resent the motivation for a safer society that initially underlined the gun registry. What I do resent, however, is that in the realization that the gun registry has not worked, the federal government has continued to pump money into it instead of admitting it for what it is: a white elephant.

Today's provincial budget, Mr. Speaker, adding $58 million to policing in Alberta: that will make safety communities. But wasting $1 billion on a useless registry – imagine, just imagine how many RCMP we could hire to fight real crime. This registry survives for political reasons, not for practical reasons.

Just think about the gun registry. First it was to be a $2 million – $2 million – registry. Next we found out that the federal government allowed the cost to soar to more than $1 billion. Now we hear that the cost could actually be closer to $2 billion. I am beside myself, Mr. Speaker. So are most taxpaying Albertans. The only thing we can say is: what a waste. Just think about it. All the money that I and all of my family and friends and all of their families and friends will ever pay in tax in their entire lives wasted, wasted on a useless registry. It doesn't make me very happy when I see how much money I pay to the federal government in tax, to think that it's all been wasted on one useless program.

Mr. Speaker, it's not just a waste in terms of dollars spent, but I think it's a waste because of the aims. The aims of the program are not met. I further contend that the gun registry program will never meet the aims sought by the creators of the program. What are those aims? Well, the aim, it seems, was to curb gun-related violence. That's a worthy goal.

The program was born out of a very real public anger and grief over the shootings at l'école Polytechnique, which took place in Montreal on December 6, 1989. On that day, Marc Lepine walked into l'école Polytechnique and deliberately aimed fire on 14 young engineering students, all of whom were women. The shooter was angry at the perception that the women were stealing his opportunities at a successful career, and he obviously held some deep-seated resentments towards women in general as well as deep mental problems, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the public was justifiably horrified. The incident laid bare that gun violence does exist and that when mixed with an offensive and intolerable political stand like the one Marc Lepine held, the ramifications can be horrific, fatal, absolutely unacceptable.

But what happened afterwards is a classic story of what happens when politicians attempt to provide a political solution to a very real problem. Instead of taking a clear-eyed look at the problems of December 6, 1989, the federal government targeted one aspect; that is, that Marc Lepine used firearms. They made a sweeping law that put all of the duck hunters and farmers and law-abiding gun owners into the same category as a monster like Marc Lepine. Yes, they were all firearms owners, as if that in itself is a bad thing.

As you can imagine, a lot of resentment has grown amongst gun owners, especially rural owners like the people of Drayton Valley-Calmr. Mr. Speaker, most people are not criminals. They don't have severe mental problems, and they don't have an eternal hate for women. Most people are not using their guns for anything other than practical purposes. Most are using their firearms legally, or at least they were before January 1, 2003. Nobody likes to be branded a criminal. Nobody likes to be treated as though their government doesn't trust them, and that's what the very existence of the firearms registry does.

These Albertans who want the registry to end do not want to see an end to all firearms safety measures. No. They've talked about safe storage requirements. They agree with proper licensing and safety tests prior to allowing somebody to purchase a weapon. Mr. Speaker, we've had these kinds of things in place for years when it comes to restricted and prohibited weapons such as handguns.

What most people don't agree with is that the government needs to know in which closet the gun is held in their farmhouse. They resent the fact that they became criminals on January 1, 2003, simply by doing nothing. That's right, Mr. Speaker. If they had long guns that they did not register by that date, then they became criminals.

I know this personally because I happen to be one of those people. I can remember very early in the new year there was a certain protest going on in the Legislature, and myself and another hon. member from this Assembly attended that public gathering. What happened, Mr. Speaker, was that I became very inspired to fight the registry. I decided that I was going to stand with this group of Albertans and try to send the message to the federal government that this was wrong and that we were not going to take it, that we were not going to put up with it. I went public to my own local newspapers, and I told them that I didn't agree with the registry, and that because most of my constituents didn't register, I wouldn't either.

Well, I'll tell you what, Mr. Speaker: I think it was about a week or two later that the local staff sergeant of the RCMP, who happens to be my next door neighbour, fully dressed in all of his uniform, came walking into my MLA office one Friday. He called me by name – I can't say it now – and he said: we have a problem. He said: if you don't register your firearms I have no choice but to charge you.

Now, had I known then what I know now, I would have said: and then what will you do with the other 10,000 of my constituents who we know have not registered their firearms?

Mr. Griffiths: Did you say that?

Rev. Abbott: I said that had I known that, I would have said that.

Instead, what I did, Mr. Speaker, is I did the right thing by my constituents so that I could be their voice in the Legislature, and I went and I registered my long guns. I registered them, and, really, what a silly, silly process.

If I explained to you some of the questions that were on that form in order to obtain the licence and to go through this whole registry hassle, you would be absolutely outraged at the invasion of privacy and at some of the questions that are asked. They want to know how many common-law partners or spouses you had in your entire history, people that you've lived with over a certain length of time. [interjections] The answer for me is one. They want to know about all of your mental history. They want to know things, Mr. Speaker, that nobody else could ever get away with asking other than these people with the gun registry power in their hands.

It's just an absolutely foolish process, but I went through it because I wanted to be able to be a voice of reason in the Legislature and to stand up for my constituents and to do the right thing. So here I am, Mr. Speaker. I'm on the gun registry committee. I'm hoping that we do more than just this resolution, that we find some ways to challenge this constitutionally, because that's what we need to do.

I want to share a little story, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good illustration of what happened on January 1, 2003. Imagine if you owned an automobile. Let's say you were licensed, you had that automobile registered, and you drove it around for, say, 20, 30 years, maybe even 40 years. I know one man that drove the same truck for 50 years. Let's say that you drove that automobile around for a certain length of time and then you decided: "I like that old automobile. That's become a real sentimental thing to me. In fact, it's become a collector's item in the eyes of many. I'm going to go park that on the back forty, and I'm going to save that and maybe give it to my grandchildren someday."

Well, Mr. Speaker, if you then became a certain age and allowed your licence to expire and you never bothered to renew your registration of that automobile and you had it sitting out on the back forty, no problem. You're allowed to do that; that's your property. The federal government can't say anything. They can't say: hey, you're now a criminal because you've got that automobile sitting out on the back forty that's not licensed or registered. No, they can't say that. But you know what? If that were a gun, they could say that.

That's right. The minute you let your licence and registration expire, if you don't hand that gun over to the federal authorities to be destroyed, then you have become a criminal. What kind of a law is that?

Mr. Snelgrove: Stupid.

Rev. Abbott: Well, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster said the word that I was thinking, Mr. Speaker. It's not a good law.

I'll tell you this, Mr. Speaker, in closing. One of the great things that the current prime minister said when he was coming into office was: we are going to put an end to western alienation; we are going to start to listen to the west; we're going to include the west; the west wants in; well, they're going to be in under my leadership, under my regime.

Well, you know what, Mr. Speaker? This is Paul Martin's chance to listen to the west and to begin to put an end to western alienation. In fact, I want to send a message along with the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the Member for Lethbridge-East. Take this message to Ottawa: "Can the registry of nonrestricted firearms. All it does is cause western alienation. Don't try to fix it; just delete it."

One of the best buttons we have on our computer is the delete button. I wish that the Prime Minister and the minister of state responsible would use the delete button and can the registry and get rid of it. I know that I am speaking on behalf of the majority of my constituents and, in fact, the majority of Albertans.

With that, I will take my seat. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, comments or questions?

Rev. Abbott: Uh-oh.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I heard that "uh-oh" over there, Drayton Valley-Calmar.

First of all, a comment, Mr. Speaker, and it's this. He nearly convinced me to change my vote. It's a good thing he stopped talking when he did.

And now my question: how does the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar ever in his wildest dreams think that he is a reasoned voice in this Legislature?

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, as the member opposite knows, I don't speak very often in this Assembly and I don't say very much. But the odd time that I do speak up, I hope that it is with reason and I hope that it is on behalf of my constituents.

I must say as a compliment to the hon. member opposite that when she was giving her speech this evening, I was thinking: why did the Liberals push her into the backbenches? She is such an intelligent, bright person that she should be up there in the front benches, like she was previously.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The next speaker is the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like first of all to thank the committee that worked so hard on bringing this resolution forward, and I'd also like to thank the Minister of Justice. I think he read my speech. And I'd like to thank the speakers that have spoken so far.

Like the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie I am in full support of gun control. However, I do not support the ineffective, inefficient, and costly firearms registry. If anyone here was able to see the documentary by Michael Moore called Bowling for Columbine, they'll realize that he struggled to understand why with over 7 million guns in Canada we only registered in the year that he made his documentary 165 deaths by gun while the United States during the same time period registered over 11,000 deaths by gun.

I think that the answer is in the Canadian people themselves. They are the type of people that are nonviolent, and people who legally own their guns and now possibly illegally own their guns don't use them to kill people. That's not the purpose of guns for Canadians.

So with the two issues I'd like to talk about gun control for a few minutes, and that is to say that prior to the firearms registry the gun control laws of this country were excellent. They were the best in the world, and I support those fully. They required that every firearm have a trigger lock. So you had to have a key to unlock your trigger to begin with. Every firearm needed to be locked in a cabinet. So you had to have the key to the cabinet to get into the cabinet to get the gun and then have the key to unlock the trigger. Also, you had to have the ammunition locked in a separate compartment in a separate room away from the firearms themselves.

I believe that those kinds of gun laws and the registration of handguns and semiautomatics and automatic weapons were also excellent laws in this country. No one in this country complained or argued about whether those guns laws were acceptable or not because they were, and we as Canadians accepted those gun laws.

However, the firearms registry is a separate topic, a separate issue. It's cost us billions of dollars, and as has been said in this House tonight, those billions of dollars could have been better spent on policing and crime control. We know that in Alberta alone we have 29 known gangs. I was very pleased to see today in the budget a 50 per cent increase in the policing budget. We need that here in Alberta because of the gangs that we have. We need that money to help us solve crimes here in Alberta more than we need to spend money on a firearms registry that does not work.

I think that the money could also be used for programs such as helping people in the areas of domestic violence and bullying. A lot of the deaths, especially the deaths that have happened in school, have happened because of bullying. If we had programs where we could help people deal with their anger and with their isolation, those are the programs that would make us better people, far better than a firearms registry makes us. In Red Deer we have something that's called the batterers' program. It's 75 per cent successful in changing a person who has been a batterer to being a better person.

Mr. Speaker, we have to remember that it's not guns that kill people; it's people who kill people. Criminals don't register their guns. Now, if I thought for one minute that the firearms registry could actually protect women and children, I would consider supporting it, but as has been said in this House this evening, there is nothing to prove that it has been efficient in any way. It hasn't stopped women and children from being killed. Other than making good citizens criminals, this registry has not achieved what it set out to do.

The other issue that was mentioned tonight that I think is really important is for police officers to know ahead of time, when they're going to the site of, say, a domestic violence complaint, whether or not there are guns in that home. I think that licensing the person, which was part of our gun control prior to the firearms registry, is very effective and far more effective and less costly and more efficient than a firearms registry. So I agree with the licensing of the gun owners that was in place before.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that if we really want to do something about crime, if we really want to protect the people of Canada, then I think we should have stronger penalties for the illegal use of weapons, firearms being one of them. Perhaps our justice system needs an overhaul. Perhaps the corrections system, the Canadian correctional system, needs an overhaul. Maybe those are some of the things that we should be looking at rather than a firearms registry.

To echo what my hon. colleagues have said this evening, I think the smartest, most logical, and best solution to the cost of the firearms registry is to eliminate it completely, and that's what I would support. I want to thank this House for supporting Motion 15.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to this motion on the gun registry. I've listened to a number of the speakers, and I kind of wonder what I think at some times. When I went through this whole process starting almost 10 years ago, trying to discuss the relevance of gun control, the relevance of the components of gun control, you had to put into position a series of weights about what is relevant. You know, when you start talking about gun control, there are all kinds of different aspects of it that have to be considered.

Now, we've heard discussions about a lot of it tonight, about whether or not we should be in effect prohibiting the absolute ownership of particular styles or particular kinds of guns. That, in effect, is in itself a degree of a registry where you say: we don't care; you can't have that one. So, you know, gun limitations.

I think most Canadians, most Albertans that I've talked to do support the idea that we don't really need weapons of war in our kitchen cabinets. With the assault weapons, these kinds of things, if you need to use them, if you want to experience them, the place to do that is at a gun club or at a facility. That, I think, has been pretty well accepted by a lot of Albertans that I've talked to.

Then you get into the idea of what constitutes the rationale behind dealing with gun control. Well, it's to reduce the threat or the possibility – possibility is better than threat – of death by accident or on purpose; you know, deliberate homicide. We have to look at those kinds of things, and here we see the idea that we want to in effect create a deterrent, so stiff penalties. I think every Albertan, every Canadian supports the idea that we have to have a deterrent for individuals who use guns in the commission of a crime, any kind of a crime, because no matter what you think, there is always the option and the possibility of an accident and, in effect, the crime going further than you thought, and we end up with a death or an injury. In that context, we have to look at it from the point of view of what constitutes reasonable aspects of gun control.

As I was going through the debate when we started all this in the early '90s, I began to think about what is reasonable and effective. I've lived in a number of other places in North America and around the world where they've had gun control, where they've had gun registration, where they've had stiff gun penalty laws. I guess that when I decided how I was going to approach gun control, I went out and I supported the whole idea that we have to make sure that we don't create an opportunity for automatic weapons that are war weapons to be commonly available in the community. That I didn't accept. I accepted very strongly that one of the best ways to deal with the reduction of crime, injury resulting from the use of a weapon, a gun, in crime was to in effect create a deterrent through stiffer penalties.

When we started talking about the federal proposal for a gun registration, I began to ask myself: well, is this cost-effective? I looked at all of the jurisdictions that I could find evidence from that had gun registries, gun ownership lists, whatever you want to call it, because they all call it a little bit different, and you couldn't see a real relationship between the identification of individuals who owned guns, the number of guns they owned, the kinds of guns they owned and any effective crime control.

So I questioned: how do we get a cost-effective system here that works? Under all of the investigation that I did, it became very clear to me that if we're going to put dollars into a program that relates to the reduction in the possibility of injury or crime with a gun, the best thing to do was the first two components because there's no evidence that registries really do provide us with a cost-effective mechanism under the larger umbrella of gun control.

Mr. Snelgrove: Just say it clearly, Ken. Spit it out clearly.

Dr. Nicol: I'm going to get there. The member over there says: spit it out; say it clearly. I've got to put the rationale in. I want to explain to the House how I came to this.

I listened to some of the members tonight talk about: well, it's part of our culture; it's part of our heritage. Mr. Speaker, I've lived in enough different areas of the world, and I've lived almost 60 years in Alberta. I've seen our culture, I've seen our heritage, and I've seen our expectations as a society change. So I'm not going to say: because we did, we must. That to me is not enough of an explanation for why we shouldn't have a gun registry.

What's more important is: is this good public policy? Through the rational approach that I've described to you, I cannot through any means that I've been able to determine justify dollars in a gun registry, because it's not an effective mechanism to do what we want: reduce the use of guns in criminal activity.

So I don't think that we should be having a registry. I think that the federal government, as it goes through this review, should start to talk about what is a cost-effective use of our public dollars, and they'll all come to the same conclusion, that this is not a good use of public dollars because it doesn't lead to an effective reduction in the use of guns in the commission of crimes. That's what our objective is.

Let's do as the members across here have said. Let's put more money into policing. Let's put more money into the other deterrent programs. That's the way we'll be able to reduce the use of guns either willingly or unwillingly in the commission of a crime.

The registry hasn't proven to be effective, and I don't think we should have one in Canada. I'm going to support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that I'm in favour of gun control, but I'm opposed to the registration of long guns. I believe that our public prosecutions of the use of firearms in the commission of a crime too often is waived. In talking with police officers when the debate was more fully and more broadly based in our land, they often said that.

I just want to give you an example of that, because people came out on both sides of the issue. A certain lady – and we don't want to identify her, but we'll call her Mrs. J. Mrs. J. went to the United States and bought two different handguns of different calibre and bought the appropriate ammunition for both of them and brought them back to our province without declaring them.

Now, we've had the registration – and I support it – of handguns for about 80 years. I think that's a good thing. There's no one in this country that needs, it seems to me anyway, an Uzi or a Bren gun or, for that matter, an AK47 that works. They don't need that. So those are restricted weapons along with Bazookas and so on, and they ought to be very much restricted to perhaps military museums or have them decommissioned so they can't be readily put in.

Anyway, back to Mrs. J. She was estranged from her husband, invited him over to her home, and as he was leaving, proceeded to put six shots into his back. He didn't die. Now, there were people that said, "Well, he deserved it," or "He didn't," that kind of thing. There was here the commission of a crime with a weapon. If any of us go out and take our gun, if we have one, and shoot it off within the urban limits, you can be charged with discharging a firearm in an urban area. She was charged, and they waived that. They waived the smuggling. They waived having two weapons, waived having the ammunition and all of the rest of it and shooting within the limits of a city. As the case would be, she was declared unfit to stand trial and so on.

All that I'm trying to get at is that you can have these wonderful rules for registration, and we do, but so often when it comes right down to it, that gets plea bargained away. It's frustrating for police, and it's frustrating for a whole lot of other people. So it seems to me that one of the problems is not the registration but how we handle that whole issue.

Unlike the hon. member who spoke about having guns, I got my first gun, a beautiful gun, when I was 12 years old. I still have it, a Browning over-and-under skeet gun; it matched my father's gun. So you can see that that was over 50 years ago, and I still have it. In our home when I was growing up, the guns and ammunition were always locked. I never had the key. Even when I was 18 years old, I didn't have the key. All the guns that I have have been locked up and still are. They're registered. I thought that if I'm an MLA and I'm helping to make laws and voting on laws, I cannot break it even though I disagree with it. So like a Boy Scout I did get mine registered. I'm not sure what I can do with that registration.

I support this resolution. I feel that it hopefully will be an instrument of impressing the hon. members in Ottawa that maybe registration of long guns is not a good thing. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to enter into this debate, and I'll try not to repeat too much of what has already been said, but I'll see if I can bring some new arguments to the table.

I, too, would like to speak in favour of this resolution and thank the minister for bringing it forward. I hope that it will be listened to by the federal government a little better than what most of our advice has been listened to by them in the past.

I've watched the evolution or attempts of gun control by previous federal governments of both stripes over the past number of years in an attempt to control violence regarding firearms or to basically register guns for whatever reasons they may have to register them. A lot of people I talk to don't necessarily trust the federal government, that they have only those interests of preventing crime or serious violence by firearms at heart when they're making this legislation.

I believe the federal government has failed to show Canadians where registration of firearms has worked in reducing crime or violence. That's been asked of every government that's tried to put this in, and really there's no place that it's worked. I don't know who to quote, but I understand that one of the papers quoted someone in the government about a year ago, after the registration was brought in: how many guns were registered? The answer was: well, we don't know how many are out there, but 75 per cent of them are registered. That didn't do a lot to help Canadians trust such a government that makes statements like that to bring in something that's good for them.

A question I have is: why are Albertans so opposed to this registration of long guns when they don't seem to be opposed to registration of handguns? I mean, you can have a handgun with a long barrel, that they refer to as a Buntline Special, in a .45 calibre single action or a 24-inch pistol-grip shotgun. What makes one more dangerous than the other because of an inch, maybe, in length? So why are Albertans so opposed to registration of long guns? In talking to Albertans I think it's because it's the registration of all guns when you include long guns.

In recent history, in the lifetime of a lot of people in here, other countries have tried this, and we say: oh, that could never happen in Canada. Other countries since World War II in Germany have said that it could never happen in their countries either. What happened there after registration was brought in in Germany? As everybody knows, all guns were registered and subsequently all guns were confiscated, making a disarmed population. Some countries have often thought a deterrent to bring such a registration in place was some measure of protection against a tyrannical government trying to disarm the population. If you didn't have registration, that couldn't happen. I think this is what concerns a lot of Albertans, especially the ones that I've talked to. This is not ancient history; this is recent history.

The other thing is that in the last number of years since this whole thing has been brought into place, I've seen an overreaction by enforcement officers in dealing with anything regarding guns. I'll just give you a couple of examples.

Where a hotel was being built in Three Hills, there was an excavation on part of the property and the Richardson's ground squirrels, or gophers, came in, and they were making quite a mess and eating the grass up and digging holes. So the owners . . . [interjection] What's that?

Mr. Mason: Didn't you try reasoning with them first?

Mr. Marz: Yeah, right. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands would think that you would reason with gophers and ground squirrels. That doesn't surprise me. Perhaps he would be adept at that, but most people wouldn't be.

Anyway, the owners of the hotel, which was right on the edge of town, asked one of their friends to come in and see what he could do. They didn't want to spread poison in the area because of public access, and they didn't want a .22 because the range was too far. He said that he had a BB gun, so he took the BB gun out there and was plinking gophers with the BB gun to try to rid them of this. Before you know it, a peace officer had him at gunpoint to drop the gun and step away from it as if he was in the commission of some type of violent crime, you know, conducting himself like a SWAT team.

Another instance is people I know had their homes broken into and guns were stolen. The first thing they were concerned about was: must be unsafe storage. There's a bigger concern about the victim being treated like a criminal than worrying about how to get to the criminal that stole the property.

On a more personal note my own son, who was 17 years old, and his friend, who just turned 18, phoned me on my cellphone as they wanted to go shooting gophers. I said: well, I'll be home shortly. But being young guys like that, they took it upon themselves to go into the locked gun cabinet, where my guns are safely stored, and took out a couple of .22s. They're both trained in gun safety and were looking forward to taking their test to get their FAC, or firearms acquisition certificate, at the time. So they went to my neighbour's place and asked if they could shoot in that pasture, which they were always allowed to do, but they always asked permission each time just to make sure that they knew who was on their property if anybody heard gunshots.

As they were getting out of the vehicle on a highway pullout to cross the fence, an officer and a ride-along officer with him, not a real officer – some people refer to them as wannabes – pulled them over. These officers knew these boys from the time they were born, but they treated them like criminals. They told them to put the guns down, step away from them, spread their legs, and put their hands up against the vehicle. They suggested a whole bunch of charges, including driving with a loaded weapon, shooting from a public roadway, which they hadn't. They weren't loaded. They still had the bullets out.

They did everything they could to frighten these boys to a ridiculous degree, and they ended up charging both of them with having a gun without a firearms acquisition certificate. That's the only thing they could actually charge them with because, in fact, they didn't. If I would have been with them, which I was shortly after that, because I got home, they would have been with me and my firearms acquisition certificate would have been okay. Most officers of the day probably would have said: you know, when your dad gets home, we're going to have a chat, and I'll take these home for you. But, no, it had to be to the letter of the law.

The 18-year-old boy was charged in adult court, and he received a three-year suspended sentence, which meant he couldn't travel out of the country for that time, and he had to apply to get these charges stayed after that. My son, because it was days before his 18th birthday, was charged in juvenile court and the charges were stayed.

To this day my son doesn't have a firearms acquisition certificate or the new licence. He doesn't own a gun. He just doesn't want anything to do with it. His perception of the RCMP isn't as healthy as it should be because he thinks they were overreactive in the way he was treated at the time. I was so concerned about how distraught those two boys were at that particular time that I wasn't sure if they would even commit suicide. That's the degree of fear that was struck into those lads at the time, and this is all over this gun control.

I think it is absolutely wrong that we should be putting these laws into place that have this effect on enforcement officers that think it gives them a licence to go out and terrorize law-abiding people, people who have a law-abiding attitude, not a criminal attitude but a law-abiding attitude, because they're easy prey for the police instead of getting out there and going after the criminal attitude. Maybe that's where the billion dollars should be spent, on training enforcement officers so that they can go after the criminal attitude instead of the law-abiding attitude.

So I think this whole thing of just going after the long guns basically closes the circle where every gun a citizenry has is going to be registered and susceptible to the whim of the government that can disarm the public whenever they want. I can't support the law, although as my colleague that's now in the Speaker's chair said, we're bound by the law as long as it is the law.

Another thing this has done is it has caused neighbours and friends to be suspicious of one another. I suspect, as I quoted before, we don't know how many guns there are, but 75 per cent are registered. That tells me that nobody really knows how many guns there are, and nobody really knows how many are registered. By a lot of estimates some people think that only half of them are registered. So where are the other ones? Well, you know, if I go and visit a constituent and I see a .22 sitting in the corner of a machine shed, that makes me basically an accessory to a crime, and if I say nothing, am I breaking the law? Yes, I am because I have knowledge that it's not safely stored. That's against the law.

Am I to report every time I see something like this? How many of you have seen that? If you go to your neighbour's and he wants to show you something down in the basement and you see some guns hanging on a rack that aren't safely stored because they're not locked in a cabinet, you've just witnessed a crime according to the gun legislation. Are you supposed to report your neighbour for that? So it's making criminals out of a lot of people in different ways.

Mr. McFarland: That makes it hard to get a vote.

Mr. Marz: It does make it hard to get a vote, yeah. There are people out there that chose not to register, and they're not saying anything.

I've been a member of the Trochu Rifle & Pistol club for probably about 40 years. I don't get up there very often, usually about once or twice a year, but I keep my membership up. It's a great sport, although my gun control needing a steady hand isn't as steady as it used to be or my eyes can't line up the sights as good as they used to, so my winnings aren't as good as they used to be. But I still enjoy the camaraderie and the discussions and looking at different people's firearms and enjoy watching young people take up the sport and learn it, and a lot of young people are taking it up and learning this.

I'm absolutely in favour of a system that tests me so that I can show society that they can be comfortable knowing that I am a person who can safely own, operate, and possess a firearm. I can show that, and I'm comfortable with that.

I think I owe it to society if I'm going to own firearms, whether they're four inches long or four feet long, to know how to handle them safely and properly, how to store them safely, and how to use them in a proper and safe manner that's not going to be a danger to the public. I have taken every test that has been the law to take, and I've passed it. So has my wife; she even beat me on the one test by 1 per cent. I think that it's fair and reasonable to test the person to make sure that the person is responsible and safe to own a firearm.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Marz: You'll have your turn.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, so I'll sit down, unless I can have unanimous consent to continue. I'd be happy to.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: You don't have unanimous consent.

The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today, but I feel somewhat strange because to some extent I feel I should begin my speech by saying: I'm an Albertan, and I defied the registry. I feel like I'm at an AA meeting because there are so many Albertans around that have defied the registry.

There are only two people in this province that openly defied the registry and continue to do so. One of them is a decorated war veteran. He served in several peacekeeping missions for this province all around the globe, and he served as a Sergeant-at-Arms of this Legislature for several years. He also served as security for one of our Premiers for several years, Mr. Speaker. I also have to add that that individual, Mr. Oscar Lacombe, was at a rally last night in St. Paul to inquire of people what they thought about his defiance of the firearms registry. In St. Paul 400 people showed up. Four hundred people showed up in St. Paul to shake his hand. Over 300 waited in a line-up to shake his hand; 80 of them were youths. There were aboriginals, there were seniors, there were people of all stripes, there were children there to thank him for defying the registry.

I'm also an individual who defied the registry, for better or for worse, Mr. Speaker. I've had people who suggested that I shouldn't. I've had people from one end of this country to the other who have phoned to thank me for doing that. Whether or not that's good, I don't claim to be any sort of great leader, but I took my inspiration from Gandhi, who said two things: one, that every single individual, every single citizen, has not only the right but the duty to protest a law that they consider to be bad, but they can never once expect to be exempt from the consequences that they'll experience from defying that law until such time as that law is changed. The second thing he said was to do it peacefully, not by demonstrations, not by violence, but to just say: I will not comply.

Mr. Speaker, I defied the registry because $1 billion was used when $2 million was the promise that it would cost. One billion dollars was used to create the registry – $1 billion. Just to put that into perspective, if you spent $1 million per day, it would take you almost three years to spend $1 billion. We're not talking about a difference between $1 million and $10 million. We're talking about $1 million and $1 billion. If you spent $1,000 a day, it would take you 3,000 years to spend $1 billion. Those numbers are almost incomprehensible to the average Albertan.

Not only did I defy it for those reasons, Mr. Speaker, but in February or March of 2003 when the RCMP announced that they're aware of almost 1,000 people in this province that are producing child pornography and exchanging it over the Internet, they also announced at the same time that they do not have the manpower and resources to go after those 1,000 people, who I think anybody in this country would say are real criminals. One billion dollars would have paid for 2,500 police officers for four years that could have spent all of their time ending child pornography production in this country. It could have put at least two MRI machines, not counting operating fees, which could have lasted for a year or two years – two MRI machines – in each federal constituency in this country. That's what $1 billion could have done.

I've heard the argument made a hundred times before that if it saves one child's life or one woman's life from somebody who's wild and crazy with a gun, the $1 billion spent on the registry is worth it, Mr. Speaker. But think of the children's lives it could have saved: $1 billion dollars to end child pornography. Think of the lives it could have saved to put two MRI machines in every federal riding in this country. That's worth $1 billion.

It's just wrong. The issue should have dealt with real crime, Mr. Speaker. It should have dealt with real problems. The issue, when it was debated, when it was discussed, deceived Albertans into thinking that this was a crime bill, that this would have dealt with crime.

I am supportive of this motion. I've been supportive of this motion since I first heard about it, since it was introduced in this Legislature, and I've supported every single argument I've heard in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, but I think that this motion does lack one thing. It doesn't address licensing. There is no law in this country yet that forces any Canadian to have a licence to own property. I've heard people discuss how we have to have a licence to drive a vehicle, and we do have to have a licence to drive a vehicle, but we don't have to have a licence to own a vehicle. We have that vehicle. We can have any property that we want, but we have to have a licence to know how to use it.

I think that the licensing should have been addressed in this motion. It should have addressed having a licence to use a firearm, perhaps to some extent to own one, but the licensing strictly deals with whether or not you get to own a firearm. That's whether or not you get to own property. Whether people realize it or not, the removal of that licence suddenly removes from citizens the right to own that property because they have to have a licence to have the right to own it. Mr. Speaker, I think that's wrong. I think we need to address that more. I think that it needs to be considered more.

I still support this motion, Mr. Speaker, because as Confucius said, the journey of a thousand miles begins with the first step, and I think this is the first step to progress. So I encourage all members to support this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, that last intervention, by the hon. Member for Wainwright, has caused me to rise to my feet and propose some changes to this motion. You know, the concept that someone would quote Mahatma Gandhi in favour of the right to own guns just absolutely is ludicrous, and the suggestion that the spirit of Mahatma Gandhi would be appealed to in this manner I think would make him turn over in his grave.

Mr. Speaker, there are some things about this motion that I believe are true. [interjections] I know you're enthusiastic. I said "some." You have to wait for it. The suggestion that the billion dollar expenditure was a waste of money is something I absolutely agree with. There's no doubt about it that a billion dollars is an enormous amount of money, far more than really should have been the case. It's an example of wasteful government spending. It's an example of mismanagement of public funds.

It's also an example of how people can drive up the costs of a program by a deliberate campaign to thwart the original intentions, and that is also true in this case. There was plenty of coverage over the past few years of organized groups deliberately trying to drive up the costs of this registry by flat out refusal to co-operate with it and attempts to thwart it, but that doesn't excuse the tremendous waste of money that has taken place on this registry. I tend to agree with those members that say that the money might have been better allocated at reducing violence in other ways. I think that's probably a fair statement.

I cannot resist, Mr. Speaker, drawing a comparison to the waste of money we've seen by this government in other areas. That makes this billion dollars pale in comparison. I wish that members that focus on the waste of the federal government and that Albertans and Canadians who focus so much on the waste of the federal government would also hold this provincial government to the same standard, because they often don't. If you look at the costs, for example, of electricity deregulation, you'll find that they are many times greater than the cost of this gun registry, and I believe that a good estimate right now is somewhere between $6 billion to $8 billion. Don't forget that before the last election . . .

Mr. Smith: A point of order. Under Beauchesne 333 I wonder if the member would entertain a question.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you just have to say yes or no.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, you are allowed to ask questions at the end under this; are you not?

The Deputy Speaker: Yes, you are.

Mr. Mason: Then I would be happy to entertain questions from the hon. minister or other members at that time.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

Mr. Mason: I wanted to indicate that just in the rebates alone for natural gas and electricity in the run-up to the last provincial election, it totalled according to the government's own figures $4.2 billion. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling
Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, just a reminder. We have one person speaking at a time, and the only member that has been recognized is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. One of the other members who is wishing to speak again must be reminded that they just had the one shot at it and you've had it. To the other member who seemed to be engaged in it, wait your turn.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just to anticipate some objections to that line of argument, I will indicate that about half of that went into various rebate programs for electricity. Yes, Albertans got the money, but it went right back to the power companies. The reason that the government brought in this series of programs was because of the outrageous jump in electricity prices which happened, unfortunately for the government, right before the election. So, yes, it went through the chequing accounts of Albertans, but it didn't stay there long. Had the government not meddled in the sensible electricity system we had, these would have been unnecessary.

Since that time, higher electricity prices have cumulatively cost Albertans and Alberta businesses billions of additional dollars, Mr. Speaker. For those members that are outraged by the billion dollar boondoggle of the federal government on the gun registry, I wish that they would turn their compassion for the taxpayer and the wallets of voters onto this government and hold it to the same standard that the federal government has been held to. None of this excuses the federal government at all for the boondoggle that this gun registry has become. It's outrageous, and I don't mean to minimize that or to suggest in any way that we should not be outraged by these costs.

Another question, that I'm less clear on, Mr. Speaker, is the question of whether or not this program has been in any way effective in reducing crime. I think that properly thought out, a registry might have been part of a good series of programs to control crime and the growth of firearms. But I also tend to agree with those who say that guns that are used primarily for hunting or for sport – that is, the long guns – are less of a problem than the flood of cheap handguns into this country from the United States. That is a very serious problem, that is ongoing now, and we have now in this country more handguns per capita than just about any country in the world except the United States.

Those members who support this nice, open border with the United States ought to consider what exactly we are getting for our money when it comes to this open arrangement with the United States. There are now millions of illegal handguns in this country, Mr. Speaker, and I do believe that the federal government and this government have a responsibility to do whatever they can to stem that flow.

I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that with the growth of gangs across this country, especially in major urban areas, these guns will soon be put to use. There's going to be a ripple effect from that, and more and more people will make use of the guns. It's not that the guns aren't here in Canada; it's that we tend not to use them. We've seen recently in the city of Toronto a significant jump in gun-related deaths, and much of that has to do with gang activity and organized crime. That is coming here as well. I think, quite frankly, that working to eliminate gangs and organized crime is a key element in any responsible government's crime-related strategy.

Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of points with this resolution that I do not agree with, and those are in the suggestion that it "is an unnecessary intrusion [into] the property rights and cultural heritage of Albertans." I don't know what some members think our cultural heritage is comprised of, but the right to have guns or to have guns that are in some way unlicensed, unregistered and so on has never been, in my view, part of our fundamental property rights or of our cultural heritage. It's certainly true that in rural areas guns form an important part of the economic activity, but to suggest that it's part of our cultural heritage is, in my view, a misrepresentation of the rich cultural heritage of western Canada and of Alberta. As a result, Mr. Speaker, I would like to propose an amendment to the resolution. I'll ask that it be distributed.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, would you move it, and then we'll wait a few minutes.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move that Government Motion 15 be amended by striking out "is an unnecessary intrusion on the property rights and cultural heritage of Albertans."

The Deputy Speaker: Edmonton-Highlands, you may commence.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, as I indicated, I think that there are certain problems with the gun registry as it has evolved, but I don't believe that intrusion into property rights and the cultural heritage of Albertans is among them.

Certainly, New Democrats are very supportive of the efforts to reduce the number of firearms in society. I think that we need to give priority to the reduction of illegal handguns, which are flooding into the country from the United States, but we recognize that there are certain legitimate uses for firearms: protection of people, for example, who may be out in wild areas on seismic lines or something like that, or for hunting purposes, for shooting purposes in clubs, and so on. They certainly have important uses on the farm and so on. Those things need to be recognized and taken into account, and we don't support turning those people into criminals.

This language in the resolution, elevating guns into some sort of cultural icon or to suggest that property rights cannot be circumscribed in some way by the government in the interest of the public good, just doesn't stand up. It's not consistent, and it adds very little to the resolution. So we would propose that this section be struck from the resolution before we vote on it.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: On amendment A1, the hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Just a very brief comment with respect to this very essential section of the resolution. It speaks to very many people in Alberta and I think advisedly so, so I would encourage that we reject the amendment.

I'd like just to put on the record and quote some comments that were written in a judgment that was issued in the Provincial Court not too long ago with respect to a licensing application. The front page of the newspapers in our area and perhaps others took one portion of that judgment and blew it up, and it became quite a controversial statement for a day or two.

When I was asked to comment on it, I indicated that, first of all, I wouldn't comment on any of the merits of the case because it was still before the courts, and I won't tonight. But I also said that I couldn't comment in detail, although the language was flowery with respect to that particular section, and that I would hope that people wouldn't take it as a call to have to go out and buy guns to protect themselves. I wanted to read the judgment before I made any further comment.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have read the judgment, and I'd like to quote a couple of parts from the judgment because it's a very well-reasoned judgment. Again, I'm not commenting on the issue, which was a licensing issue with respect to a particular individual. The judgment says:

It merits judicial notice that the widespread ownership of firearms by ordinary Canadians for subsistence and sport hunting is a long-standing and economically important part of Canada's history and culture.

It also says:

First, one prominent if not fundamental characteristic of a free and democratic society – which s.1 the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms seemingly implies Canada to be – is that citizens of such society generally are “at liberty” or “free” to possess and acquire property without first having to obtain permission from a governmental bureaucrat or the judiciary. In a free and democratic society any exception or deviation from the general rule deserves close scrutiny even though mandated by law.

It goes on in other matters that deal more with the licensing aspect. But it says:

Casual or ambitious administration of the law's exceptions to the general rule could endanger substantially that prominent, socially important, and historically ingrained characteristic of Canadian society.

Mr. Speaker, it is something that may not be historically or culturally important to every single Canadian or every single Albertan, but I think it's well shown in the controversy that this particular registry has raised across this country over the years since it was brought in in 1995 that it is historically significant and culturally important to a great many Albertans, and for that reason we should leave the clause in.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Speaker: Now, if I remember correctly, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands had finished his speech.

Mr. Mason: Well, all except for questions, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: That's what I was getting to. Thank you.

We did have a certain member – it seems to me it was the Minister of Energy – who was interested in asking a question or making a comment. Are you going to waive that?

Mr. Smith: Yes, I will.

The Deputy Speaker: Yes, you will waive. Okay.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments and then a question to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. It wasn't too long ago in this House where we heard about the unfortunate incident where an RCMP officer was shot by a person that I think perhaps all of us would agree should not have had a gun. We also had a case not long ago in Sundre where an estranged husband with a sawed-off shotgun murdered his ex-wife and her boyfriend. We also know that most women who are killed by their estranged spouses or partners are killed with guns.

We certainly all agree with the comments made by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East that society changes, and one of the things that has changed in our society is the way we deal with people with mental health issues. In Alberta we have many, many more people on the streets now because of the changes in our mental health policies. We also have a situation in the province and in the country where there is an increasing use of handguns in crimes that are being committed.

So my question to the hon. member would be: what sort of impact do you think the changes in our mental health policies in this province have contributed to the unsafe use of firearms in the province?

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. I think the hon. member raises a good point, and that is that if you're going to address the question of gun violence in society, you need to approach it from many angles at once. If I can allow myself this terrible pun, there's no silver bullet to solve this problem.

With respect to mental health issues, that's very important. You know, I remember that a couple of years ago a young mentally ill man was shot but not killed by police in Coronation park in Edmonton after he shot a police dog. I remember the outpouring of sympathy for the police dog, you know, and almost nothing about this poor young man with a tortured soul, and I just think that this reflects very badly on the attitudes that we have in our society towards mentally ill people.

I think that the government has deinstitutionalized lots of people for very good reasons and then failed to provide the necessary supports to make sure that they're able to function. I think this has also contributed not just to these instances but also to the growth of homelessness in our communities.

So I believe that if you're going to get at gun violence, you need to have a very comprehensive approach to the whole question. Gun control is a key element of that, but it has to be intelligent gun control.

The Deputy Speaker: The next speaker is the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two points to my argument today, and one of them has to do with the registration itself. I'd like to enter some statistics that are not very good. The system has a 71 per cent error rate in licensing owners and a 91 per cent error rate in registering individual guns. The government admits that it has registered 718,414 guns without a serial number. A gun's federal registration certificate does not include or contain the name of the owner, the model, calibre, or the magazine capacity. There are known to be at least 222,911 unexplained duplications. The government spent $29 million on advertising the gun registry, including $4.5 million to Groupaction, which is now under investigation. Pistols have been federally registered since 1934, yet there is no case on record of a handgun being used in a crime by its registered owner. What's reasonable to suggest, Mr. Speaker, is that this has made criminals out of 1 million Canadians, unfortunately.

My argument goes a little bit deeper than the gun itself. My argument is with the bill. Mr. Speaker, this is a copy of the bill, page 1 of 59. The intent of the bill I believe, in all fairness to the government, was to protect Canadians. That would have been accomplished by a one-page bill that said: if you commit a crime and you use a firearm in Canada, you will go to jail for a minimum amount of time, no exceptions. I would think that all of the hon. colleagues here would agree. That should have been able to fit on one page, but we have 59 pages.

Some parts of the bill I find extremely troublesome. I don't believe the average Canadian understands what we're giving up when we allow this kind of legislation. I would like to just touch very briefly on some of the points. We'll start with the investigation. I want to read section 55.(2).

Without restricting the scope of the inquiries that may be made with respect to an application for a licence, a chief firearms officer may conduct an investigation of the applicant, which may consist of interviews with neighbours, community workers, social workers, individuals who work or live with the applicant, spouse or common-law partner, former spouse or former common-law partner, dependants or whomever in the opinion of the chief firearms officer may provide information pertaining to whether the applicant is eligible under section 5 to hold a licence.

I wonder how many of us would get a driver's licence if they had to ask our neighbours and anybody we ever knew. Section 5, for your information, Mr. Speaker, pretty well defines everybody. So if you want to get a licence, they have the right to talk to virtually anybody you have ever met, and I don't believe Canadians want that for this type of registration. This is a little bit scary.

I want to go a little further, to the burden of proof. I believe that it is absolutely fundamental in this society, in any just society, that you are innocent until you are proven guilty. That should be one of the cornerstones, and I believe most hon. members here would agree with that. But let's read this one, burden of proof, section (3) under 75. We're already on page 27.

At the hearing of the reference, the burden of proof is on the applicant or holder to satisfy the provincial court judge that the refusal to issue or revocation of the licence, registration certificate or authorization, the decision or the refusal to approve or revocation of the approval was not justified.

You are guilty if they say you're guilty, and it is up to you to prove to them that you're not. Whether it's a gun or whether it's your own grain or whether it's anything else that you deal with, that is simply not fair in my opinion, Mr. Speaker.

Now, let's talk about the failure to register. We've heard several hon. members talk about the connection between a car, between a gun, whatever. They're all good arguments, but let's talk about what happens when you don't register. Whoa. [interjection] That's what happens.

112.(1) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), every person commits an offence who, not having previously committed an offence under this subsection or subsection 91(1) or 92(1) of the Criminal Code, possesses a firearm that is neither a prohibited firearm nor a restricted firearm without being the holder of a registration certificate for the firearm.

Basically, if you've got a gun, you're a criminal.

You know what? I have a 16-year-old son who was told by his grandfather, who was diagnosed with liver cancer, that he wasn't going to live very long and would like to give him his shotgun. Now, that might not seem like much to most people. As a young child I grew up hunting continually. His grandfather still hunts to this day. Thank God for a heck of a health care system. He's still here, costing us more and more every day. But when he thought he was going, he wanted to give a very prized possession of his to his grandson.

Well, I don't have all the certificates you need to have a gun. Just a little bit too lazy, I guess, or for whatever reason. He couldn't accept that gun because I didn't have the right documentation in my household, him being a minor, for his grandfather to give him that gun. No. If his grandfather had died without my getting the proper documentation or my son getting to be 18, that gun was gone. Or if we had it in the house, we were criminals. Yes, that's the way it is, hon. members.

To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, I will never be accused of being the voice of reason, so we don't need a question unless you want to.

But the fact is that the government should have never said: we know what's best. [interjection] I'll be very quick. Let's talk about what the average Albertan or the average Canadian expects from the police or from people investigating them.

103. The owner or person in charge of a place that is inspected by an inspector under section 102 and every person found in the place shall

- (a) give the inspector all reasonable assistance to enable him or her to carry out the inspection and exercise any power conferred by section 102; and
- (b) provide the inspector with any information relevant to the enforcement of this Act or the regulations that he or she may reasonably require.

That is a novel idea. "Mr. Drug Dealer, will you tell us where your drugs are hidden?" "I don't have to." "Mr. Gun Owner, will you tell us where your guns are?" "I don't have to." Yes, you do, under this legislation.

I will end, Mr. Speaker, by saying that people expect us to do the right thing. They expect that in the position we are in, we will see through a lot of the complications of a system that sometimes seems to be run by people out of touch. I have to bring you back to an article in the Calgary Herald. We are expecting people to have to live under these rules of allowing them into whatever part of our house, and here's what the principal of a Calgary high school says: we would need just cause to use the canine services in the belief that a student had an illegal substance in their possession or in their locker. That is a tragedy, that we need to have just cause.

I don't know that that is the legal situation, but if the perception in the public is that we need to have just cause to put police dogs in the schools to find out that our students are using drugs and yet we're obligated to open our houses and buildings to people to come and inspect for guns, that's just wrong. It's not what the average Albertan and certainly the average Canadian wants. I would hope that we send a very strong message from here that says: "We all care about safety, and we all care about having lives that are free. We can move, and we can be safe to go to the store. But we're also free. We're also allowed to own things, to have things we've rightly acquired. And if we don't break the law, don't come looking for us."

Mr. Speaker, this is just a message to the federal government to say: "You made a little mistake here. Could you please fix it? Could you please give back gun owners their decency and their respect and get out of our lives, where we don't need it? Put criminals in jail, and put us back on the road to doing what we do best, which is work and raise our families."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a lively debate, and I want to join in here with a very short debate. I just want to say categorically that I'm against violence and killings, and I do not tolerate criminal and illegal activities. I am for tough, deterrent penalties. I'm for weapons control, being guns or otherwise. However, I'm against the current gun registry program, and I will tell you why in simple terms.

If the purpose of the current registry is to prevent death by gunshot, it is definitely not effective. If the purpose of the current registry is to prevent the criminal element from obtaining weapons, it is again not effective at all. On top of this ineffectiveness, the current gun registry program is costly. It's already wasted millions of hard-earned taxpayers' dollars, and if we do not stop it now, it will cost billions of taxpayers' dollars, which can be used for better, more high priority programs.

Mr. Speaker, I learned a lot of wisdom from my late father. He was an educator and historical scholar. I remember that he told us as children that prevention is always the best solution. Our family residence was on a beautiful riverbank, and once he told us that the best way to remove things floating down the river is to go upstream and stop people from throwing them in. So I recommend that the hundreds of millions of taxpayers' dollars in the current gun registry be redeployed to prevention activities.

Mr. Speaker, it is also well understood that weapons do not kill, but people do. So the best way to prevent murder and criminal killing is to spend resources in education, in employment creation, in conflict mediation. Another way to deter potential criminals is by having a tough legal system. Let's improve our penalty system to make it a more effective deterrent. In these two ways I don't think it will cost billions and may even save billions.

To conclude, I support this motion in debate, and I recommend that all members vote for it. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that everyone is getting rather tired and would like us to be short, and I will. But I want to be on record as representing our constituents, none of whom ever called in 12 years and asked for any type of legislation to do with registration, gun control, or anything that smells or breathes like this legislation that has been discussed tonight.

I do support the motion that the Government House Leader has brought forward. I do want to thank my colleagues for Cardston-Taber-Warner, Drayton Valley-Calmar, Vermilion-Lloydminster, Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, and especially Wainwright. They truly represent what the ordinary people in Little Bow actually say all the time, and I do want to honestly thank them.

There was a comment and a subsequent amendment made that dealt with culture and property rights. Just as an observation from somebody who doesn't stand up and speak an awful lot on a lot of government bills, sometimes it seems to me that people throw forward amendments to motions simply because they just don't want to say yes or no. They want to be politically correct, or they want to be a wordsmith and make it sound different.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: You have a citation?

Point of Order

Reflections on a Decision of the Assembly

Mr. Mason: Basically, Mr. Speaker, I don't know the section, but I do know the rule, and that is that once the House has made a decision, you're not allowed to reflect on it. The hon. member had an opportunity to speak to the amendment and chose not to. He missed his chance.

The Deputy Speaker: Little Bow on the purported point of order.

Mr. McFarland: I'll hit him on another one.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, it is a perfect point of order in the sense that if you're going to reflect on it, it seems to me more in the breach than in the keeping.

Anyway, hon. Member for Little Bow, would you continue.

Debate Continued

Mr. McFarland: The point that I was trying to make is that there were a couple of comments that took away from the actual motion we're discussing. One was on power deregulation, which I don't quite connect. But in hindsight I would like Albertans to remember that there's no way you should compare power deregulation to a fiasco. The way that my colleague from Wainwright brought the argument forward, I would remind Albertans that this was the government that took a $23 billion debt and reduced it to a bit below $3 billion, and that's a lot of MRIs.

Finally, on the mental health issue, I do have a lot of empathy for people who suffer from illness, but let's not forget to put ourselves in the shoes of the police officers and the RCMP officers out on the street who have to deal with people that have a problem. I'm sure that they've got loved ones at home that would rather they be using their gun as a precautionary measure than be a victim, as three of us who were involved with the mental health review a number of years ago found out, Mr. Speaker.

When we've taken over half of our hospital beds in mental health institutions and put them into communities, what more could you have expected? It wasn't because the government wanted to put the people in the communities. It was the people themselves who felt so inclined to have people that have a mental disability put into communities.

The point that I'm trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that clearly the committee that looked at that issue a number of years ago identified that those people coming out into our communities needed anywhere from three to five core support services, and they are not being provided. That's a different issue altogether.

I do support this. I just wanted once again to thank the colleagues who brought all the good arguments forward. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and comment on Government Motion 15. This is when it's fun being an Alberta Liberal, because I get to disagree with my colleagues. We get to have a good debate on things, and we all have a free vote.

I believe in gun control. I believe in the gun registry. I don't believe in waste, I don't believe in poor management, and I don't believe in poor planning. Let me be clear about that. I think that the federal government may well have screwed up this gun registry, but I still believe in a gun registry, and I will continue to support it and support the idea of it.

On the idea that's captured in this motion that somehow guns are a part of cultural heritage, I'll challenge that and say that I'm an Albertan and it doesn't speak to my cultural heritage. If we want to speak about my cultural heritage, if we want to go far enough back and talk about weapons, then I'm talking about a broadsword, and I'm out there in the hills wearing a kilt. Really, what my cultural heritage is as an Albertan would be a plow or a spud wrench or a rig chain, but a gun is not part of my cultural heritage. I want a gun registry, I want gun control, and I want it to work.

Ms Calahasen: Actually, mine is bows and arrows.

Ms Blakeman: That's fine, Madam Minister. You're welcome to get up and speak to this if you'd like to.

There's been quite a bit of discussion that I've heard this evening as I've listened to the speakers about who are the real criminals and that it's not right that certain people are called criminals because of this legislation. I have less difficulty with that. People who break the law are criminals. If a law was passed that says that you're not to do something and you do it and you break that law, then you're a criminal. So I have less conflict than some of my hon. colleagues in this Assembly about who is a criminal.

I think there are crimes committed by average people using guns who prior to committing that crime definitely would not have considered themselves a criminal or have said that they had any criminal intent. They definitely didn't see themselves as a criminal. They still took a gun and used it on someone. That made them a criminal.

On behalf of the women that are killed by their intimate partners, on behalf of others who believe in gun control – and there are Albertans who believe in gun control; there are Albertans who believe in a gun registry – I will not be supporting this government motion.

I wondered, when I first saw this government motion, whether it wasn't mischief-making on behalf of the government because there's been some talk about: well, all the money that's been wasted on this registry – and I think to a certain extent there has been money wasted on this registry – could've been spent on all of these other things. Really. Yes. And would the members in here have supported spending that money on other things: on mental health support, on domestic violence, on sexual assault programs?

Let's reach even further back if we want to talk about people who find themselves in a position where they're using a gun and they don't seem to have the education or the upbringing to help them make those choices that they wouldn't use a gun in a situation. Let's reach further back. Would there have been support for things like Head Start programs, for things like Success by Six programs, for early childhood education, for full-day kindergarten? Would that support have been from this Assembly? Let's reach even further back. Let's truly eradicate child poverty and any of the other things that we can trace to people who make poor life choices. But I don't think that we would have had that support. I don't think that those choices would have been made instead. I don't think that money would have been directed to these programs.

I've heard people say that the cost was terrible. Well, if that was true, then why did this provincial government make choices that increased the cost of this program nationally? That's a direct result of the choices that this government made, and that increased the cost of this program. So when people get up and go on and on about the cost of this program federally, Alberta made choices that contributed to that cost, deliberately so. And who is taking responsibility for that in this Assembly tonight? No one I've heard so far.

There's been some discussion about long guns and handguns. You know what, Mr. Speaker? I don't care. I really don't care. I don't want to see guns used in the commission of crimes. I don't want to see long guns, short guns, medium-range guns, or torpedoes. I don't care, and I don't think the length of the gun barrel is a distinguishing enough feature to somehow justify not registering the gun. Sorry. Doesn't count with me.

There's also been quite a bit of discussion here that somehow this gun registry program is going to stop people using guns for things they like to use those guns for, that they wouldn't be able to go out and participate in their local gun club, that they wouldn't be able to go out and shoot varmints in the backyard, that they wouldn't be able to go and shoot wildlife. That's absolutely ridiculous. Nothing in this legislation restricts that. It says that you need a firearms acquisition certificate and you're to register your gun. It doesn't say that you can't join a gun club. It doesn't say that you can't go out with a registered gun, with your firearms acquisition certificate in your back pocket, and shoot varmints in your backyard. Nothing stops you from doing those things, so a number of the arguments I've heard here tonight simply don't hold water.

I will go back to where I started. I believe in gun control. I believe in gun registration. I will not support this Motion 15 brought forward by the government. I suspect I'm the only person in here tonight that's probably going to vote against this, but I'm okay with that. I will stand here in support of those Albertans who do believe in gun control and do believe in gun registration, and I'm proud to do that, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yeah, I'd like to ask a question of the hon. member. Given that more people are killed by big knives than are by guns on an annual basis, should we also have a big knife registry? And given that people are killed by ropes and strings through strangulation, should we have a rope and string registry? Given that people are sometime suffocated by pillows, should we have a pillow registry? Given that some people are killed by poison, should we have a poison registry? Where does it end?

Ms Blakeman: I took this debate seriously. I wish you would give it the same respect.

The Deputy Speaker: Do you have another question, Drayton Valley-Calmar?

10:10

Rev. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, this is a serious question. This is the exact thing that Albertans are asking. They're saying: where does it end? Are we going to have to register the family dog because people have been killed by dogs in the past? Let's be realistic. The registry doesn't work.

Ms Blakeman: You have a licence for your dog.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice to close debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the passion that's been exhibited in this Legislature this evening with respect to this issue indicates exactly how important it is to Albertans. It's not that there's any Albertan who believes that guns should be used in a criminal manner or that guns should be used for criminal purposes. It's not that Albertans believe that guns shouldn't be treated with respect and treated in a safe and careful manner. It's not that Albertans don't believe that the law should be followed.

I think we've heard from many Albertans and their representatives here tonight that Albertans do believe that gun control should be done properly, that it should be done with a purpose in mind, which is to create safe communities, to make Canada a safer place. Therefore, it should be done carefully and aimed at where it can do the most good, and that is by strengthening the criminal law to make the use of a gun in a criminal matter a strongly punished offence so that people know and understand that we don't put up with the use of guns in an improper way.

But there's also a need to respect the property rights of individuals, to respect the cultural heritage, and while it may not be the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre's cultural heritage – and I can say that it's not my cultural heritage. My ancestors, my father and grandfather, other than participating in a world war were not people who used guns for their livelihood or for their cultural heritage. But the fact that it's not my cultural heritage doesn't mean that it's not an important part of the cultural heritage of the province and of many people of the province.

The fact that I don't own a gun doesn't mean that owning a gun isn't important to someone else. By basically having been a person who moved to the city, although I grew up in a rural area and did hunt when I was younger, and don't have a gun now, it doesn't mean that there aren't many people who do still want to have guns either for subsistence or for sport or for some other rationale as has been explained in this House, even the rationale that that gun might be an important family heirloom to them, having been passed down from a grandfather or from someone else.

In my own family I'm aware of a situation where, for example, an individual was a chief of police and had a gun that was important to him in terms of his role as the chief of police and passed that down through the family. It's probably not registered, and it's probably not capable of being registered, but it is a family heirloom.

The fact of the matter is that it doesn't impact each of us in the same way, Mr. Speaker; it doesn't mean that it's not important to some people, many people in this country. We ought to urge, and I would hope unanimously, the federal government to revisit the concept of the registry, to take it out of the Criminal Code, to take all registering and licensing out of the Criminal Code, to leave in the Criminal Code those things which are criminal, which is using guns in an inappropriate manner for criminal purposes.

Take the control of guns and the licensing, put that in the Firearms Act, and take the registry and delete, as this motion refers to, the concept of the registry of nonrestricted weapons because that does not serve a purpose. That's what's wasting money. That's what's offending Albertans and Canadians. That money could be used to help create safety in our communities, to help deal with some of the issues that ought to be dealt with and that we ought to be applying our laws usefully to do.

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 15 carried]

[Government Motion 15 carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:27 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 25, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/25

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Heavenly Father, as we conclude this week's deliberations and return to our constituencies, we pray that we will be renewed and strengthened in our commitments to better serve our constituency and all Albertans. Amen.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Fabiana Leite. Fabiana is here from São Paulo, Brazil, on a Rotary International youth exchange program. She arrived in Edmonton in August 2003 and will be here until August 2004. She's attending Ross Sheppard composite high school in Edmonton, taking a full load of subjects in grades 10 and 11.

Fabiana is being hosted by the Rotary Club of Edmonton River-view and staying with four Rotary host families while in Alberta. I'm told that she's having lots of fun taking part in many Canadian/Alberta cultural and sporting activities during her visit thus far, and members will note that she's collected a lot of badges along the way.

Fabiana is accompanied by Mr. Chris Gowers, one of her host Rotary families. Chris, I might also point out to the House, is a mediator in addition to his own business at which he earns a living. He's in essence a voluntary mediator with our provincial court mediation program. Our mediators do get a modest honorarium, but it doesn't go anywhere near paying for their time, so I call them volunteers. I'd just acknowledge Chris's contribution in that manner.

Fabiana and Chris are standing in the members' gallery, and I'd ask the House to give them the traditional warm welcome.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it's my pleasure to introduce the Timberlea public school from Fort McMurray. In Fort McMurray our city slogan is We Have the Energy, and clearly these students and teachers and parents and the bus driver represent that energy. It's my pleasure to introduce the teachers who are part of the group of 55 that are here today from Timberlea: Gloria Fountain, Tracy Horvath, principal Anthony Warren, as well as Denise Roland and Zeta Norris, along with many parents that are here helping with the trip today and also the bus driver, Marc Pichette. I would like to ask everyone from Timberlea school to rise, the whole delegation, and please extend to them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a number of special guests today from the Deputy Minister of Human Resources and Employment's office, and I believe them to be perhaps in the public gallery. I'd like to read their names, and then at the end if they would all rise, we could provide them with the proper welcome. We have Mr. Barkat Rajwani, Ms Veronica Pysmeny, Todd Zyla, Mrs. Marge Segin, Mrs. Rena Sawatski, Miss Ashley Dawson, Mr. Josh Chatterley, John Bozocca, Mrs. Sharon Wilde, Cynthia Quintal, Christina Dentzien, Gordon Okamura, Janice L'Hirondelle, Bryon Hoy, Susan Sava, Jessica Yan, and Lana-Rae Shade. I hope I've pronounced all of those names correctly. If they would rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly a constituent, Mr. Dave Schwartz. He is here to observe question period. Dave is a former announcer with Mix 96, where his radio name was Dave Shannon. He is the voice-over for the Premier's dinners and also does some live announcing, as he will be doing tonight. Dave is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd like to ask him to please stand and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Students from Sierra Leone, the Sudan, and Uganda have chosen Edmonton as their new home, and more particularly they've chosen St. Joe's Catholic school as their school. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of students, and I'm going to name them all. I'd ask them to rise as their names are called: Forty Two Chuang, Alor Arop Deng, Kvol Arop Deng, Solomon Ochen, Bondi Koroma, Yeama Koroma, and Nyogoa Tut. They're accompanied today by their instructors and teachers, Miss Geraldine Dawson and Miss Lorie Taylor. They're all standing in the public gallery. Please welcome them to the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to acknowledge to you and through you 87 guests who are not present in this Assembly right now. They're from Bon Accord school. They're taking advantage of our excellent learning centre that we have here, the School at the Legislature, and also the mock parliament. I thought it would be proper to acknowledge them as being present here today and to have them receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Care Premiums

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the Minister of Finance stated on the radio that she does not find it, quote, offensive, end quote, to pay the health care premium tax. To the minister of Finance: given that half her health care premium taxes and half those of all MLAs are paid for by the Legislative Assembly, will she admit that MLAs who support the government's policy on health care premiums are following a double standard?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the question that I was asked this morning was: was I prepared to get rid of health care premiums and send out the bill to Albertans? The response I gave back was that the health care system costs $8 billion in this year's budget. [interjections] I would ask the hon. members opposite to listen to the answer. The cost is $8 billion, and it doesn't matter how you shake the cat. The people of Alberta, the taxpayers, have to pay for the cost of the health care system. So whether I take it out of your right pocket or your left pocket, it's still $8 billion.

Now, I can say that I'll get rid of the little slip of paper that says: here's the invoice for the health care premium. I can hide it in the taxation model like other provinces do. I can play the political game with you, or I can be up front and honest with you and say: the tax is there, and it's coming through to pay for this system, and it's $8 billion. That's the full cost of the health system, so it doesn't really matter how it's there, how it's delivered. I prefer to see the invoice go out because, quite frankly, my concern over the years is that I get the feeling that some people in Canada believe that the health system is free. It's not. It's $8 billion this year.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that health care premiums comprise only a tiny portion of her $120,000-plus salary but a substantial portion of the salaries of ordinary workers, will she admit that these are a regressive and unfair tax?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, we're very fortunate in Canada to have a public health care system, and I, like every person in this province and in this country, have to have that system in place, and we all have friends and families that require that system. Our objective through this whole process – and I'm not going to play this little game with the member opposite – is: how do we renew and sustain the health system so that it's there for the long term for when we need to access that system? That's the fundamental key. The cost of this system this year was a little alarming because what happened this year was that for every additional dollar of increase in spending in this budget, 50 cents of that went to the health care system. That's not sustainable. That has to change.

The Deputy Speaker: To supplement, Minister, very briefly.

Mr. Mar: Briefly, sir. I only wish to supplement by saying this. As the Minister of Finance has already indicated, the cost of the health care system will be in the magnitude of $8 billion. The amount that will be coming from premiums is roughly in the magnitude of $1 billion. But I have said in this House and in other venues, Mr. Speaker – and I want Albertans to know – that if you add up what we get for health care premiums plus all of the personal income taxes in this province plus all of the transfers that we get from the federal government, it still doesn't add up to $8 billion. So this is an enormous system that we pay for. It's a good system. But to suggest that you can do away with a billion dollars is simply not possible. If the hon. member wishes to propose on the floor of this Legislature or anywhere else a sales tax, then let him do so.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Minister of Finance: why has the minister chosen to hide a billion dollars from Albertans by lowballing natural gas revenues instead of giving Albertans a tax break by eliminating the regressive health care premium tax?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I'm beginning to think that the hon. member opposite is running out of things to complain about. We live in a very successful province economically. Quite frankly, if he would review the fiscal structure that we operate under, he would be well aware of the fact that under our fiscal framework we have set some limits on how much of the resource revenues we can actually spend on programs that we deliver to Albertans, and that number would be $4 billion.

The issue as to where the forecast is of the price of crude oil or the price of natural gas only really becomes an issue at the end of the year. I no longer have to get up every day and worry that the Minister of Energy is going to come and tell me that there's a high or a low in the oil and gas prices because we've put in place protection against those highs and lows with our new fiscal structure.

So insofar as the oil and gas price forecast, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the House to please entertain an answer from the Minister of Energy on those forecasts because I believe it's very important.

The Deputy Speaker: I think we'll forgo that, as illustrative as it may be. There are other people who can ask the question, and we've already taken a considerable amount of time with this particular series.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Seniors' Benefits

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's budget was a big letdown for seniors, who have seen their programs cut or reduced over the years and their living costs go nowhere but up. One seniors' group, SALT, is "profoundly disappointed by what is and is not contained in the 2004 Alberta Budget." My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Why in its budget did this government forget about seniors?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I take great exception to that. We clearly did not forget about seniors. They're very, very important people in our province. I personally find it totally insulting that the hon. member would think that. We had an increase in our support for seniors.

I'm going to ask the Minister of Seniors to explain the details of that.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think we should be very clear on this. The budget for seniors this year, I find, is very generous. It may not meet what a lot of folks would like it to meet. I'm the advocate for seniors, and I would advocate for more in the budget if I could, but as has been pointed out, we want to be sustainable. We want to meet the needs of our seniors. We have made remarkable progress in the area of housing, in the area of lodge grants for individual seniors, in the area of long-term care, and for the seniors on our programs. We've got a full $10 million going into this year's budget that will sustain our seniors' benefits program, the cash payouts.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to also point out that our thresholds for premium payments are very generous in that individual seniors who earn less than $27,000 pay no premium. Couples who are under $44,000 pay no premium. Would I like to lift those thresholds? The answer is yes. But it has to be done in a fashion that can be sustained, that is supported, and that we can go on in the future and target the right people.*

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Deputy Speaker: Just a reminder, hon. members of both sides, that if you want to ask a question and get an answer from a minister or a minister wants to give an answer to a question that's coming from there, please leave it to the allotted person. We had two or three questions going on at the same time as the hon. Minister of Seniors was attempting to answer his. That's understood in here.

Second question, first supplemental, Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Finance: why didn't this budget restore any of the benefits programs seniors have lost, such as the universal optical and dental program?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, this budget saw a $21 million increase in support for seniors, and I think that, quite frankly, from what I understand, seniors across Canada find Alberta one of the best places to retire because of the benefit programs that are here in this province.

Again, I'll ask the Minister of Seniors to respond to the specifics of the question, but there has been a substantial increase in support for seniors in this budget.

The Deputy Speaker: Briefly, hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes. Speaking specifically to the question of dental and eyeglasses, I might like to point out that anyone on our seniors' benefits program has the ability to recover up to 100 per cent of the costs without the severe limitations of the previous program. The program is not universal, I'll grant you that. However, I have to point out that seniors in this province are the best off of any other province in the country, bar none, including, if you will, the United States.

So let's be fair about this, Mr. Speaker. Would we like to do more for our seniors? Definitely. Are they important? Definitely. Are we going to continue to advocate to improve their programs? Definitely. But let's keep it in perspective. We are doing an awful lot of good for these people.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental, Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again back to the Minister of Finance: given that a budget is supposed to be a plan for how this government will be spending Albertans' money, why is there no plan for the $10 million of the Seniors budget and how it's going to be spent?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, the plan that was laid out clearly yesterday in the budget not only includes the three-year business plans but also includes a 20-year strategic planning process for our government and for the province. The plans are in fact there.

Now, in the specifics as to the Seniors budget, as the hon. member knows, the benefits program renews July 1. While there's enhancement to go forward for seniors, that will be announced as time presses on closer to the date of July 1 for renewal of the seniors' benefits plan.

The Minister of Seniors may want to supplement that answer.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Student Loan Program

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government sent a strong message yesterday through its budget by demonstrating that while debt is not acceptable for the province, it's encouraged for postsecondary students. While the government balances its books, Alberta students will be forced to borrow almost $100 million in student loans for the next year. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Why does the government push so hard to become debt free while forcing students deep into debt for their postsecondary schooling?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Included in this budget was a $300 per year increase in the maximum amount of a student loan. Just for the member's information Alberta is the only province in Canada that has actually increased the student loan limit since 1994. In all other provinces it is tied to the federal government in a 60-40 ratio, which has not changed.

The hon. members are talking about more debt, but again they forget what I've said for the last four years when I've tabled four budgets. The maximum amount that they will have to pay back on an $11,600 loan is $5,000 per year.

Mr. Speaker, included in the $97 million that will be given out in student loans is $39 million of loan remissions that will go to our students this year. We have also increased scholarships and bursaries by $6.2 million; 28,000 students will get scholarships and bursaries this year alone.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental, hon. leader.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that remission currently benefits only students who accumulate more than $5,000 a year in student loan debt, when will this government allow remission for a portion of the student loans of all students?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that that's an absolutely wonderful question for the federal government, which does not have any remission loan program.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister: given that not all parents give financial support to their children for further education, when will this government eliminate parental contribution requirements for the student loan program?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, each and every student has the ability to appeal their student loans. Indeed, each and every year we get students who say that their parents will absolutely refuse to put any money in regardless of the amount of money that the parents make. We look very carefully at each and every one of these appeals, and the majority of appeals, if they are true, will go through, and the students will receive the student loan.

Mr. Speaker, I really must say that the Alberta student loan program is by far the best in Canada. We provide 55 per cent of the student loan dollars. Every place else in Canada it's 40 per cent with the federal government at 60 per cent. Alberta provides 55 per cent, and the federal government provides 45 per cent.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Provincial Tax Policy

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budgets are about priorities, and yesterday's provincial budget speaks volumes about the priorities of this government. Frankly, other than some election-cycle goodies for municipalities, health authorities, and school boards, there's little or nothing in the budget for middle-class families, seniors, and working Albertans. Meanwhile, the corporate elite, the already well off, and the horse racing set scored big. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Why is the government for the third year in a row hitting up homeowners and small businesses with $77 million in school property tax hikes while cutting taxes for large, profitable corporations by $142 million?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member opposite had listened to the budget, he would have recognized that there was not only a corporate tax reduction of 1 per cent, there was also a small business reduction of 1 per cent that came forward, and personal income tax rates that are indexed were protected so that $150 million would be saved from personal income taxes by all Albertans in one year alone. In addition to that, the school property tax rate was reduced by 2.3 per cent.

I'll ask the Minister of Municipal affairs to respond on that as well as the Minister of Learning.

The Deputy Speaker: Before we go from one to the other, it might be instructive, hon. member, if you are asking a question of a minister, that your seatmate doesn't answer all of the questions. One minister is going to reply – the Minister of Municipal Affairs – and then we'll go to your second question.

Mr. Boutilier: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that enlightenment. I would like to say simply this: the pie is growing. When people come to this province of Alberta, they don't bring the roads, they don't bring their schools, they don't bring their hospitals. It's a wonderful problem to have in Alberta simply because the Alberta advantage is alive and well. I think everyone in this House, including the opposition, agrees with that. Don't they?

I would ask the Minister of Learning to supplement. The Learning Commission recommendations, the work that we're doing in growing the pie in partnership with all of these stakeholders, separates us from every other province in Canada to the point that every other province in Canada is looking at Alberta's tail lights.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader. First supplemental.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So it's clear that the government doesn't apologize for increasing taxes on homeowners.

How can the Finance minister's nose fail to grow when by focusing solely on the mill rate, she is trying to fool Albertans into thinking their school property taxes are being cut when the province's property tax take is in fact going up by 5.7 per cent?

The Deputy Speaker: Before I call on the hon. minister, just remember that the question is supposed to be without a preamble and must not be argumentative. Long noses and all the other things are something that really is not part of a legitimate question.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, this can't be that hard to comprehend. Number one, we have reduced the school property tax rate by 2.3 per cent. We've had a migration to this province that is unprecedented, last year, the year before, and expect that we're going to have it again this year. So there will be more people coming into the province to pay the reduced school property tax rate that I've lowered by 2.3 per cent. So when you have more people coming here and paying into the system, then you collect more money. The base grows. That can't be so hard. The pie, as the Municipal Affairs minister said, gets bigger, but the rate went down.

Maybe the Minister of Learning would like to respond.

The Deputy Speaker: Very briefly, Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker. I have been in this Legislature as Minister of Learning for very close to five years.

An Hon. Member: How long?

Dr. Oberg: Very close to five years.

Mr. Speaker, over those five years I've heard time and time and time again from the New Democrat opposition about putting more money into Learning, about raising taxes: go ahead and raise taxes; put it into Learning; that's where the money goes. Well, what has happened here today is that we have received $77 million more tax money because there are more people moving into Alberta. The market assessment has gone up. I can't believe what I'm hearing. The New Democrats are now saying that they don't want that money to go into Learning.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the Finance minister defying the will of the Tory backbenchers through a sneaky 5.7 per cent increase in school property taxes when a motion was passed two weeks ago in this House, with the support of both sides of the House, urging the government in fact to phase out school property taxes?

2:00

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, to sustain the system, quite clearly there has to be revenue that goes into the system. The vehicle we have today is to put an assessment for the school tax on the property. This budget said: let's not just keep it whole; let's reduce the school tax rate by 2.3 per cent. As the Minister of Learning explained, because there are more people coming to the province and living in the province, they are also contributing to the school property tax assessment on an annual basis. So when you have more people paying, more money is collected. Surely the hon. member opposite can grasp this.

The Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just think it's important to recognize that we did actually decrease the mill rate for education property taxes. We are looking to see that that tax load is then evenly distributed across the province. To compare it to the corporate income tax reduction is unfair because they don't tell the good story about what happens. When you reduce the taxes to the business community, they actually have a chance to retain more money in their own businesses to create more jobs and more opportunities for Albertans. We see that all the time. More companies are coming here because of those policies, and it helps pay for education.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

Ms DeLong: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2004 budget for Alberta Human Resources and Employment identified a $20 million increase for the assured income for the severely handicapped, or AISH, program over last year. The maximum financial benefit a person may receive through AISH is $850 per month. My question today is for the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Within the city of Calgary alone there are more than 8,000 people receiving AISH, 450 of which reside in my constituency. Will they be getting an increase in their monthly cheque?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, I want to just briefly talk about the AISH program. In the budget we'll now be providing $394 million in AISH payments and benefits for approximately 32,000 severely disabled Albertans. Yes, the member is quite right; we have a $20 million increase, actually about a 5 per cent increase in our budget. But I want to inform the member that asked the question and inform all members of the House and all Albertans as well that these clients will not see an increase in the income level of $850 per month.

Ms DeLong: Well, if the AISH program is receiving an extra $20 million for this year, where is the money going?

Mr. Dunford: The $20 million that we've provided for the AISH program is really going to two particular areas. One, of course, is extremely important, and that is for the medications. The health benefit plan that we have for AISH clients, while not figured into the $850 monthly income, is a tremendous benefit. Of course, part of the medical card that we provide to them provides for their medications. It's very, very important that we stay up to date with those medications. But as others in the House have indicated, we are seeing substantial growth in the cost, then, of prescription drugs here in this province.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental.

Ms DeLong: Yes, Mr. Speaker. You said that the high cost of health benefits is what's consuming the greater portion of your budget increase. What do you plan to do to ensure that AISH recipients get the monthly income that they need to cover their food and shelter?

Mr. Dunford: There's a discrepancy in the AISH program that has to be looked at. I want to advise the member and again all members of the House that we will be putting together a formal review of the AISH program, and we expect that to be up and running in September of this year.

The fundamental issue that we have to deal with in AISH, though, is this huge inequity between what people can and cannot have in terms of assets and still be eligible for AISH income. What we're finding is a growth in the actual numbers of AISH clients that we have. It's disproportionate to the demographics that are happening here in Alberta. So these and other matters surrounding the AISH program are going to have to be looked at. Obviously, one of the issues that would have to be dealt with at that time, as well, of course, will be the monthly income.

Again, to answer you, Mr. Speaker, and all Albertans, there is no increase in the AISH income support program at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Support for Low-income Albertans

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to show disrespect and neglect for the poor and the unfortunate. After saddling Albertans yesterday with more health care taxes, recreational user fees, and education costs, this government continues to subsidize the horse racing industry while here in Edmonton 1 in 5 children lives in poverty. Now, with the latest $45 million injection, the horse racing industry has over the past four years tucked $130 million into their silks. My first question is to the Minister of Seniors. Given that this government cares more about horses than they do about the homeless, why did this minister allow support for homeless people to go down by almost $1 million in the budget while the horse racing industry sees an amount of $45 million set aside for their use?

Mr. Woloshyn: Well, I don't quite follow where the member is going, but I will say this much. In Edmonton and in Calgary we provided sufficient spaces for the homeless so that nobody was left out in the cold. We will continue to meet our obligations and to work with the operators to ensure that the unfortunate people of this province are looked after, whether they be homeless, whether they be seniors or anyone else. That, Mr. Speaker, is about all I can say to that mundane question.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think that certainly we've got to set the record straight on this, at least the preamble of this. This has become a common occurrence in this Legislature, unfortunately, but in talking to some people who listen to question period, they're not fooling anyone because, fortunately, most people who watch this comprehend these programs better than the people opposite either can or want to.

Mr. Speaker, $45 million is not being handed to the horse racing industry, an industry which, I might say, employs 7,000 people, many of them just up here in the Member for Edmonton-Highland's area. Seven thousand people employed. The $45 million can be earned – earned – by the horse racing industry through a racing entertainment centre where there was a commitment to a number of slot machines that would be available, and those proceeds could go partially to the industry. I would remind the hon. members that 33 and a third per cent of that money also comes into this government's revenues to provide programs for all citizens.

Mr. Speaker, to say that this government gives, explains exactly what this group knows about business. This is not an entitlement. These people earn this money, or they don't get it. You wouldn't understand that. You wouldn't get it.

Mr. MacDonald: This side of the House cares about hungry children.

Now to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: where's the increase for people relying on AISH and SFI? Their supports haven't gone up. Inflation has gone up. While the horse racing industry has seen $45 million set aside for it, where's the money for the homeless?

Mr. Dunford: Well, that was quite a barrage. Maybe we could take one question at a time over the next week.

Certainly, I've answered in the House today about AISH, and I think our little press conference that we'll have next Monday would be open, and I'd expect to see him there when we talk about what will happen in terms of support for welfare folks.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Final supplemental, Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: why, when over 16,000 families in Edmonton earn less than $15,000 annually, does this government see fit to set aside $45 million for the horse racing industry and nothing at this date for those families?

Mr. Dunford: I quite liked the answer of the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. If the hon. member were to think this thing through, he would understand that that particular industry and the number of jobs that the minister was talking about explains to some extent the kinds of situations that are provided to our clients.

One of the things that will be noticed over time, of course, is that in our budget we are focused and concentrating on skills development training, and through that we'll move these people up in the income levels.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming has indicated that he'd like to supplement.

Mr. Stevens: Supplement briefly, Mr. Speaker. I think that the members opposite, particularly those in the Liberal opposition, ought to spend more time talking to people in their community and people throughout this country with respect to the support that this government provides to Horse Racing Alberta. In particular, I think the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie ought to pay attention.

Dr. David Reid is the chairman of Horse Racing Alberta, and the office of the Prime Minister of Canada wrote a letter to Dr. Reid commenting on an article in TROT Magazine showcasing Horse Racing Alberta and its chairman, Dr. Reid, and talking about challenges, including the introduction of slots at the racing entertainment centre and the racing industry renewal initiative.

In that letter from the office of the Prime Minister of Canada the following things were said.

I am delighted that someone with your capabilities has stepped forward to take a leadership role.

... when horse racing in the Province of Alberta seemed to be suffering flu like systems, someone asked "is there a doctor in the house", and who should step forward but Dr. David Reid. Bravo ...

Thank you for your commitment to a wonderful sport.

Mr. Speaker, for the gratification of the members opposite I will obviously table this letter at the appropriate time.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

School Library Programs

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few years ago there were 550 teacher/librarians in our schools in Alberta. Today there are 100 or perhaps fewer. School library programs properly equipped and staffed can account for improvements of 2 to 9 per cent in student achievement, a result we all appreciate. The Learning Commission recommended that adequate library/resource room teachers be available. My first question to the Minister of Learning: as the government has accepted the Learning Commission's recommendation to increase the number of teacher/librarians, what plans are in place to achieve this?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, librarians of any sort are very important. Libraries are a very important part of our Alberta society, and it's an important part that everyone in this Assembly and certainly most people in Alberta truly value.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the teacher/librarian, as the hon. member has noted, the Learning Commission recommended that there be an increase in teacher/librarians. The Learning Commission also recommended the funding formula, which gives flexibility to school boards.

When you take these two together, what it means is that the dollars should be put in so that the school boards have the flexibility to hire teacher/librarians if that's their priority, and that's exactly what will happen. The school boards will be the ones who put the money to the teachers, to the teacher/librarians, to their priorities about what they see as being important within their education system.

They have asked me for this as Minister of Learning. They have consulted with me on the funding formula, and indeed, Mr. Speaker, the funding formula was just announced today. I hope that some of these dollars will go to teacher/librarians, but I also hope that the dollars are spent in the absolutely best fashion possible for the students of Alberta.

Mr. Maskell: My final question to the same minister: will postsecondary institutions have the necessary resources and support to train teacher/librarians in adequate numbers?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, postsecondary institutions in this budget saw an increase of 4 per cent. This was twice the increase that they were expecting. They also saw an increase of $24 million for access projects. When it comes specifically to the departments of education, we put out roughly 3,000 teachers a year, and certainly teacher/librarians are an element of that.

Mr. Speaker, the money is there. If the departments of education feel that this is a priority, then that is the direction that they will go. I know that libraries are such a crucial part of the education system that they certainly will be moving in that direction.

User Fees in Provincial Parks

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's budget the government announced a new list of user fees for provincial parks. To the Minister of Community Development: why is this ministry choosing to further cripple school budgets by charging for educational programs in provincial parks?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, nobody is crippling any school budgets through these new fees and/or increased fee ranges that we're having to introduce in our provincial parks. They will be treated just like any other field trips are, where if I as a parent wish to have my child go on a field trip, I put in the dollar or $2 or whatever it is to help make that happen.

Let me just say that the surveys that we did throughout our provincial parks system over the last couple of years firmly indicated that the vast majority of individuals who responded to those surveys said: we don't mind if you're going to put in some new fees or increase some of our existing fees provided that the revenue you earn from those fees goes right back into those same programs. That's precisely what we're going to do.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why is a province with such a huge surplus charging skiers a nickel-and-dime fee for trail grooming, which is a relatively inexpensive service?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, having well-groomed ski trails throughout the parks areas where they are allowed is a very good thing, and in order to keep up with the pace of demand and the high-quality conditions that people are expecting, we had to review how to keep that particular side of our operation as sustainable as possible.

We are adding some additional monies of our own, but as I indicated in the previous answer, in order to get to the place where we want to be, we want the general public involved with us in this, and they have not objected because they know that those particular small increases, which might range anywhere from $2 to $5 only, are by and large quite affordable. Most people who are out cross-country skiing don't mind paying that little increase in the fee as long as they see the benefit that'll come from those revenues going to improve the trails that they are so pleased to enjoy.

Ms Carlson: To the same minister: why is this government spending millions on health and fitness initiatives such as the Healthy U program while implementing user fees that may prevent individuals, families, and schools from enjoying our provincial parks? This is a double standard.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, no, there's no double standard here whatsoever. I mean, none of these services come for free, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's important that we have a system that applies to everybody. It is not just Albertans who use these trails and these interpretive centres and these park facilities. We have a lot of others who come visiting our province from other parts of Canada, from other parts of the world, and they are absolutely delighted with the high-quality groomed trails and/or interpretive centres or whatever have you that they experienced in this province.

This is simply one way of helping us to continue providing that service, and as I indicated earlier, it has been arrived at after studying very carefully a lot of the surveys that were responded to.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Electronic Health Records

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Health and Wellness talked about the benefits of an electronic health record, specifically how this system will help to increase patient safety and reduce duplication. It remains unclear to me how we are reducing duplication with electronic health record development activities underway at the provincial level and at the health region level. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister assure Albertans that we are in fact building one province-wide system and not nine incompatible or fragmented systems?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, in short, I can say that the answer is yes. There are efforts that are taken at two different levels, but those efforts are being complemented by one another. They are not fragmented. Regional health authorities are developing electronic health records at the local level, but provincially we are also working to link all regional health authorities together plus pharmacies plus physicians throughout the province.

Because the Department of Health and Wellness has been working with stakeholders from the very outset, we have got a collaborative approach that is ensuring that we meet common objectives and common technology standards, which, of course, is critical to ensure that these systems work together with one another.

Mr. Speaker, in short, we are linking systems to make sure that health care providers do have the patient information that they need at the point of care to make the best care decisions for individuals.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental, Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. With each region building and linking their own health information systems, how does this government plan to efficiently and effectively link all the systems together and how long will this take?

Mr. Mar: I wish to say at the outset in answering this question, Mr. Speaker, that governments all over the world are recommending electronic health records to improve patient safety. System users that are already involved in the system have told me about the impact that this has had on the quality of care for their patients. Doctors have been able to avoid invasive procedures. They have avoided duplicate lab tests. They've avoided harmful drug interactions.

We are deploying it province-wide right now, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report that 4,000 health providers are already linked in to the system. By the summer of 2005 I expect that all regional health authorities, 830 pharmacies, and about 40 per cent of practising physicians in the province will be using the Alberta EHR.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is moving. We're expressing good progress. By the summer of 2005 we'll be able to report even better progress.

Mr. Cenaiko: My final question is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What is his ministry doing to ensure that all government departments will be systems compatible?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I think the first point that needs to be made is that whether you're in a corporate environment or a government environment, like we are in, information technology is a tool, a tool for business transformation, and that is the objective of and that is what's happening with the electronic health record. It is an application that transforms the way we deliver health care in this province.

The Ministry of Innovation and Science through a government of Alberta enterprise architecture strives to make sure that we are operating from the same platform, using common systems, common technology, to make sure that we can deliver those business transformation applications effectively and efficiently. To that end, we've also recently assigned a corporate chief information officer at a deputy minister level to ensure that all government departments are aligned with those objectives, and Alberta Health and Wellness is a major contributor and participant in striving toward reaching those objectives.

Ms Carlson: Speech.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, this is a very important question, member.

We are trying to encourage the regional health authorities to work in the same direction because this is an important tool for the delivery of health care.

Private/Public Partnership Projects

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, in yesterday's plan for the 2004-2005 budget the government announced that approximately $700 million will go towards two identified P3 projects over the next three years: the Calgary court centre and the Edmonton southeast ring road. To the Minister of Infrastructure: does the amount of $700 million include the annual lease payments and the principal and interest costs of these projects for the duration of the agreements?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I think it's really important to understand that, in fact, the accounting of the P3s – what the member is referring to is not a cash payment. In fact, both the ring road and the courthouse would actually be – part of it is in this three-year plan, but part of it is out beyond the three-year plan as well.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental, Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what does this ministry anticipate the annual lease payments and principal and interest costs will be for each of these projects per year?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, of course, the ring road is not in this department, but the P3 proposal for the courthouse is. You've heard many times in the House this member trying to talk down the P3 process. Even as late as yesterday I remember that he was asking a question and suggesting that other governments were not supporting the P3. It's really quite interesting because the last time I looked, it was a Liberal government in B.C., and they're proposing P3s. They've got a hospital on the go. The last time I looked, it was a Liberal government in Ontario. They were talking about two P3 hospitals. In fact, the federal government is setting up a secretariat to look at P3s.

Yesterday the member also commented about the quality within the hospital, so I would really be very anxious that the Minister of Health and Wellness supplement my answer.

Mr. Bonner: Well, Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has not answered either of the first two questions, could he please tell us which other P3 projects besides the southeast Calgary hospital the government is considering whose funding will come from the remaining $525 million?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to part of his preamble in as much as I never answered the first question. I told the member if he was listening that, in fact, the total budgeting for those two P3 projects goes beyond the three-year business plan. As far as the lease payments are concerned, you'll have to talk to the Minister of Transportation on that one. You will know the lease payments as far as the courthouse is concerned once we sign the final agreement. That has not been completed yet. It still has some processes to go through, so we don't know exactly what it's going to be.

On the quality of health provided in hospitals, I would urge the Minister of Health and Wellness to supplement.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think the actually more interesting question should be asked of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, who this morning was asking rhetorically on the radio why we don't have a Harvard university type facility here in Alberta or a Johns Hopkins medical centre. So it seems to me that it's actually the hon. member's seatmate who was actually proposing ideas that are far, far more dramatic. The last time that I checked, those were entirely private facilities.

The Deputy Speaker: In the next 30 seconds I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, then Edmonton-Mill Woods, then Calgary-Currie, and then Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Would the Assembly agree to a brief reversion to Introduction of Guests?

head: 2:30      Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly 35 high school students from Ross Sheppard high school, located within the Edmonton-Calder constituency. They've been attentively viewing question period, and we'll be meeting for a photograph shortly. I'd ask them to rise along with their teachers and leaders Rick Magee, James Kosowan, Curt Cummings, and Erin Quinn. They're in the public gallery, and I'd ask all members to welcome them to the Assembly.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer College Kings Volleyball Team

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Red Deer College Kings volleyball team has played hard enough and smart enough to win the Canadian national championship five years in a row. It was the Kings' seventh national crown in the last 10 years. This is a dynasty that sets the pace and that every competitive men's volleyball team is aiming to beat.

The Red Deer College Kings have been crowned national champions five consecutive years. This is the second longest winning streak in CCAA history, one behind the Limoilou Titans from Quebec City, who started their string in 1984. The Red Deer College Kings will make a run at tying Limoilou College next year, when the pressure to win will be even greater.

The number one coach in Canada is Keith Hansen, who has been the RDC head coach for the past six years. He is a former assistant coach with Canadian junior and senior national teams. A great team can only be as great as its coach, and we are honoured and proud to have Keith Hansen as the driver behind this team.

This year's secret to being a championship team is summed up by Adam Roth, a second-year member who accepted the Mazda 2004 Canadian colleges men's volleyball championship trophy and banner. Adam, who is expected to return next year, said: the thing is with this team, everyone can step in and do the job; we have tremendous depth; that's what makes us that much better.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to join me in congratulating Matt Harris, Aaron Yasinski, Blake Henwood, Scott Weninger, Mark Dodds, Pav Kucharski, Marc Dickner, Troy Jaggard, Adam Roth, Matt Anderson, Craig Marshall, Mac Kucharski, Dallas Soonias; their head coach, Keith Hansen; their assistant coaches, Trevor Pikkert and Kevin Tennant; and their athletic therapists, Heather Fletcher and Terri Smyth. Congratulations.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's actions speak louder than its words. The government says that it wants Albertans to stay in school and pursue a postsecondary education, but that's not what the 2004-2005 budget tells Alberta students, who have high hopes for some relief from escalating tuition costs. The government spoke volumes to postsecondary students about how it is unacceptable for a province to be in debt while encouraging students to start their careers with a mountain of debt to pay off.

There was so much more this government could have done to help students aside from just letting them borrow more money and more money for their education. This government needs to develop and to adhere to a plan for long-term, adequate, and sustainable funding for postsecondary education. It needs a plan that will ensure that Albertans have access to an affordable, high-quality education.

The University of Alberta Students' Union has some ideas on how this could be accomplished. They would start with a commitment from the government to freeze tuition and fund the difference in revenue to postsecondary institutions. The students also want the government to increase base operating grants to universities to a degree that would make a difference to institutions like the U of A, which is facing a $28.7 million shortfall this year.

There are also improvements to be made to the student loans program. I often hear from students whose parents do not contribute financially to their education and who are ineligible for loans due to the parental contribution requirement. In the interest of fairness the parental contribution should be removed. The government could also help students relying on loans for an education by remitting debt over $5,000 or 25 per cent of any student loan, whichever is most beneficial to the student. This would be a vast improvement to the current program, that only remits a portion of annual debt over $5,000.

There are many ways in which this government could be helping Alberta's present and future postsecondary students. They would most benefit from a long-term plan, a plan aimed at ensuring that our universities, colleges, and technical schools are affordable, accessible, and focus on the best interests of the students.

Telework

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Industrial Revolution changed our world two centuries ago. Among other things, massive numbers of people in rural areas moved to cities to obtain higher paying city jobs, and rural life was completely altered as a result. Now a new revolution is taking place, creating an enormous economic opportunity to reinvigorate rural areas again, providing city jobs and paycheques to people living and enjoying a country lifestyle. That is not all. It's also the greatest opportunity to enable disabled people to earn a good living with dignity. In fact, this new revolution has a plethora of other benefits for everyone in society today.

It's called teleworking, working from home on your computer, and it is rapidly sweeping the employment world. Because we have the SuperNet, Alberta is uniquely positioned to lead the way in Canada, which is good because Canada is actually falling way behind. According to Bob Fortier, one of Canada's foremost telework pioneers, Canada has finally reached an estimated 1 million teleworkers nationally today, but compare that to the U.S., now at 28 million, up 17 per cent just in the last year alone.

Obviously, teleworking is going to be having major impacts on employee recruitment and retention, even here in Alberta, very quickly if we aren't offering similar opportunities. People don't even have to move any more. The great Canadian brain drain is rapidly becoming virtual.

We do have some success stories. In Calgary we have people working full-time at jobs in Toronto out of their house in Calgary. We have eCampus Alberta and teachers with virtual classrooms with dozens of students right across the country. We have real estate agents who don't go into offices any more, thus avoiding two-hour commutes each day, reducing traffic, saving office rent. We even have doctors diagnosing people on the far side of the planet. Maritimers are leading in distributed call centres, farmwives working out of their own homes answering calls for utility companies around the world.

The opportunities are endless, the benefits profound, but Canada is falling behind. The web site of the Canadian Telework Association and InnoVisions Canada is www.ivc.ca, and it will tell us a lot about what we need to do in Canada and Alberta today. I urge all employers to take a look at it; your business might depend on it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Alberta's Boreal Forest

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Canada contains over a third of the world's boreal forest, one of the three largest frontier forests remaining on the planet. Overall it spans 12,000 kilometres, nearly 11 per cent of our planet's total surface. This makes it the biggest terrestrial ecosystem on Earth and our most prominent symbol of wilderness here in Canada. In Alberta, however, this significance has yet to be fully recognized.

A scientific report released in 2003 entitled State of Denial contains a chapter dedicated to the boreal and targets Alberta as a province where rapid drilling for oil and natural gas along with logging are inflicting major damage to Alberta's boreal forest. With industrial activity at all-time highs, Alberta now finds itself at a defining moment in its forest management. As aptly put by Richard Schneider in his book Alternative Futures: Alberta's Boreal Forest at the Crossroads, "Given that most of the northern forest in Alberta is publicly owned, the desired future forest is defined by the values held by the citizens of Alberta."

These values are reflected in the Alberta forest conservation strategy, which has as its goal the maintenance and enhancement of our forest ecosystems so that present and future generations can enjoy and benefit from them. Most importantly, this strategy envisions an Alberta with vast pristine forests whose ecosystems thrive thanks to the help and participation of all Albertans.

But something has gone wrong. At present clear-cuts combine with oil and gas activity to create unprecedented scars on the landscape. Our most diverse and productive forest ecosystems are undergoing widespread development resulting in fragmentation by roads, access routes, and excessive logging. This cumulative damage is leading to the destruction of much of the boreal here in Alberta.

Given the state of Alberta's forests and in particular the boreal, the government must start to apply its knowledge to a forest management strategy that reflects sustainability and respect for natural places. Although the boreal forest presents a seemingly endless expanse, it does in fact have limits, and they are now being reached.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Presenting Petitions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition signed by 157 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "return to a regulated electricity system, reduce power bills and develop a program to assist Albertans in improving energy efficiency."

Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 28, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, and 45.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 90, 93, 94, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 106, 107, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 159, 160, 162, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, and 180.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, I won't ask you to repeat them because you spoke too fast for me to write them all down, but maybe when we get another long list of numbers like that, it would be helpful to say: from 44 to 79 and then 81 to whatever. Anyway, well done.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table with the Assembly the required number of copies of Alberta Transportation's three-year construction and rehabilitation program. This is to be completed or undertaken between 2004-05 and 2006-07. This is for all provincial highways including the north/south trade corridor and the Edmonton and Calgary ring roads. We're also including the required number of copies of the provincial water management projects for the same years.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table the appropriate number of copies of the 2002 vital statistics annual review. This review summarizes all births, marriages, deaths, and stillbirths that occurred in Alberta during 2002.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of the Persons with Developmental Disabilities annual report for 2002-2003 as assembled by our PDD Provincial Board in Alberta. Individuals and families and agencies involved in the important work of PDD are obviously very important, and I would draw all members' attention to the important material in these tablings.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter which I referred to in a response to a question during question period. It's a letter from the office of the Prime Minister of Canada to Dr. David Reid, chairman, Horse Racing Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the requisite number of copies of the Northern Alberta Development Council annual report for the year 2002-2003. This is a masterpiece of a document. I'm sure everyone will want to go out and get a copy of it. It is excellent reading.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a document which is really the news release issued by the Health Sciences Association of Alberta on March 24, 2004, in which the association draws attention to the fact that both this provincial government and the federal government have been guilty of not funding health care either on a predictable basis or on a stable basis.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate number of copies of a release from the Alberta Federation of Labour. The release, entitled Budget Again Comes up Empty for Average Albertans, expresses the view of the Alberta Federation of Labour with respect to yesterday's provincial budget.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of the document that I quoted from during question period, and that is a document released by the Seniors' Action and Liaison Team in which they are deploring "the repeated efforts by the Alberta Government to claim health care is not sustainable" and expressing their disappointment on what's not contained in the budget, especially around items for seniors.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the auto insurance freeze hasn't worked for at least one constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, I would like to table a letter dated March 23, 2004, that I received from the hon. Minister of Finance in regard to the insurance policies and the temporary measure of the auto freeze until Bill 53 comes into style.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a very interesting article pointing out the many benefits of electricity deregulation. It highlights the fact that governments that privatize electricity generators provide their citizens with cheaper dependable power and asks why Ontario is headed into the darkness.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the Office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Gaming, pursuant to the Government Accountability Act: the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission business plan 2004-2007.

head: Projected Government Business

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 7(5) I would ask the Government House Leader to please share the projected government business for the week of March 29 to April 1.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, March 29, under Government Bills and Orders at 9 p.m. in Committee of Supply presumably the first item would be the Legislative Assembly estimates and then subsequently the estimates for International and Intergovernmental Relations, day 1 of 24. Time permitting, second reading on Bill 25, School Amendment Act, 2004; Bill 26, Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004; and Committee of the Whole on Bill 22, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

On Tuesday, March 30, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply pursuant to the calendar tabled, day 2 of 24, designated for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development and, time available, second reading on bills 25 and 26 and Committee of the Whole on Bill 22. Tuesday, March 30, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders for Committee of Supply, day 3 of 24, the Department of Community Development. Now, that is a deviation from the tabled agreed calendar which I understand has been worked out by the departments involved and the opposition and is acceptable to them. I don't have personal knowledge of that, so in the event that that's not the case, then it would revert to the one that's on the calendar, which is the Department of Revenue. We'll have to ascertain that. Thereafter second reading on bills 25 and 26 and Committee of the Whole on Bill 22, if time permits.

On Wednesday, March 31, under Government Bills and Orders in the afternoon, Committee of Supply, day 4 of 24, designated for the Department of Government Services. Time remaining or available, we might proceed with second reading of Bill 25 or Bill 26, if it has not previously been done, and Committee of the Whole on Bill 22. Wednesday, March 31, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders under Committee of Supply, day 5 of 24, the Department of Economic Development and, as indicated earlier, bills 25, 26, and 22, time permitting.

Thursday, April 1, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for Committee of Supply, day 6 of 24, designated for the Department of Environment and, as indicated, second readings on bills 25, 26, and committee on Bill 22, should time permit. At that time it would be anticipated that we would adjourn pursuant to Government Motion 6, agreed to February 18, until Monday, April 19.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

13. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

[Adjourned debate March 24: Dr. Massey]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to make some comments about the budget.

I was interested, Mr. Speaker, that the Provincial Treasurer would draw upon Premier Rutherford for a model for her speech. She couldn't have chosen a much better model. Rutherford was a good Premier – a great Premier. He had great vision. He did a great deal with respect to infrastructure. He had ideas about education, and he even made himself the Provincial Treasurer and the education minister in his first cabinet. He was responsible for the University of Alberta being established in this city.

Rutherford was a great Premier with great vision, and he was a Liberal. I can imagine the anguish in the Public Affairs Bureau as they wrote the speech and tried to turn Rutherford into something other than a Liberal. But a Liberal he was, and a Liberal he stays.

I think Rutherford must be resting a little uncomfortably in his grave today having had a Conservative Provincial Treasurer heap the praise on him that she did yesterday. I couldn't help but note the references in her speech to his vision and his determination that this province would have a good, sound infrastructure system.

If we look at the business plan, Mr. Speaker, of the Department of Transportation, I'm not quite sure that Rutherford would have been happy with a business plan or any kind of a plan that would see the roads in this province deteriorate or would have been happy with predictions that they should deteriorate. If you look at the 2003-2006 projections from the Transportation department, Albertans can look forward to fewer miles or kilometres of highway that are in good condition. The 2001-2002 results indicated 64.2 per cent were in good condition. That department predicts that by 2005-2006 the target will be 61 per cent.

So we're to have fewer miles of highway that are in good condition. The miles of highway that are in poor condition are 11 per cent today, and Albertans can look forward down the road to highways where 16.5 per cent are in poor condition. That wasn't Rutherford's vision.

If you look at some of the other measures, then, with respect to the infrastructure and look at the postsecondary institutions, the percentage in good condition today is 47 per cent. What's the projection? Only 45 per cent will be in good condition in 2005-2006. With respect to government-owned and -operated facilities over 1000 square metres, the percentage in good condition today is 57 per cent; the projection for the future is 53 per cent. The percentage in fair condition today is 40 per cent; projected for 2005-2006 is 44 per cent.

While the budget talked about infrastructure and the money that was going to be put into infrastructure, the plain fact of the matter is that Albertans are going to be driving on highways that are in poorer condition than they are today, and that is directly a result of the planning of this government.

The infrastructure was bad enough, Mr. Speaker, but I think what really struck me was the notion and the comment in the delivery that there was no room for pessimism in 1906 in Alberta and there's no room for pessimism today. I wondered, Mr. Speaker, how the people who are living on SFI and the people who are living on AISH allowances reacted to that. My question would be: why would they be optimistic? What relief do they see from trying to live on $850 a month or a little more than a thousand dollars a month?

Mr. Speaker, if you look through the report that was delivered to us last week about our incomes in this Legislature and our expenses and then compare that to what we're asking fellow Albertans to live on, it's almost obscene.

An Hon. Member: Aren't you double-dipping?

Dr. Massey: Double-dipping, he says. You may want to look at your own benches: the minister of intergovernmental affairs, the other minister at the end of the bench there, a couple of other people in your caucus.

Dr. Taylor: Don, I don't even have an academic pension like you do.

Dr. Massey: That was because you weren't any good.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Finance had the floor yesterday, and she was given the courtesy to deliver her budget without interruption. I hope that we can accord the same courtesy to the Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that we sit here and we enjoy very, very comfortable salaries, and there are people in our constituency offices every day struggling to pay power bills, struggling to put food on the table, struggling to try to make a living and try to raise their families. Most of them, through no fault of their own, have fallen on really very difficult times. The fact that our compassion is so limited has to be very, very disturbing. There have been pleas. There have been committees struck. There's been a lot of talk, but there's been little action with respect to those individuals.

If you look at the rates, they've barely changed since 1993. A single parent with two children under 11 gets a little over a thousand dollars a month and a severely handicapped a little over $800. Mr. Speaker, those are disgraceful in a province as rich as this one is.

People on income support programs, Mr. Speaker, have 40 per cent less purchasing power than they had in 1993. Think of that. Think of your own budget having a drop of 43 per cent and the impact that that would have on your lifestyle. Income support rates were reduced almost 20 per cent in 1993, and inflation over the last number of years has further reduced the value by 20 per cent.

A key recommendation in the low-income review was that rates should be increased. The current benefits just do not meet the needs of those Albertans who have to rely upon them. Even the Mazankowski committee on health care recommended that the government ensure that the appropriate financial assistance is available to support children in poverty and low-income homes. We have to remember that it is really the children who end up suffering from these low rates, children who have no part in the decision-making, children who have by accident of birth found themselves in poverty. They are the people that we're ignoring.

The Minister of Human Resources and Employment accepted the principal recommendations of the low-income review committee to increase rates but so far has cited budget restraints for that not happening. I think that if you look at the polls, there is overwhelming support for making sure that we look after children who are living in poverty, and government action to that end I think has wide support. So the support for people on SFI and AISH was a jarring note in yesterday's budget, Mr. Speaker.

But there were other concerns. The postsecondary learning system has been drifting for the last 10 years. From the dramatic cuts that that system took, a 20 per cent cut in 1994, the institutions have never really recovered. If you look at that trend, 20 years ago a dollar that a student put into the postsecondary system was matched by $10 in government support. Today for every dollar that a student puts into the system, it's matched by $2.34. Mr. Speaker, I think that that speaks volumes about the kind of support, the withdrawal of support, that students and institutions in our province have suffered.

The students have made overtures to the government. They've put forward suggestions. They've told us about the kinds of difficulties they have in terms of having to complete programs over a longer period of time because of taking on part-time positions.

I hear often from the Minister of Learning about the loans that they have and how the remission programs make sure that they won't graduate with more than $20,000 of debt. That's just not true, Mr. Speaker. The debt that the minister talks about is the public debt, the debt in the loans program. It says nothing about the private debt that many of those students are carrying – debt to family, to banks, credit card debt – in an effort to try to get what we encourage them to get, the best possible education, knowing full well that certainly they'll benefit. But the real benefactors are every individual in this province when we have better engineers, when we have better medical personnel, and when we have those professions filled with the most competent people that we can possibly produce.

So students and the institutions find themselves in difficulty. For the institutions there's not much choice. The funding from the province is inadequate, and the alternative for them is to raise tuition – it's the only other source – and go to private enterprise to try to get the funds they need.

I worry about them going to private enterprise, Mr. Speaker. Private enterprise doesn't invest in university and college and postsecondary research without some notion of payoff. I worry about the public research agenda when institutions are forced through the lack of funding to rely more and more and to curry favour more and more with private industry so that they can offer the courses and programs and conduct the kind of research that we expect of them.

Students have tried several times, I know, to work with the government to come up with some better solutions, but they were disappointed yesterday in the budget, Mr. Speaker. They believe that the government could have taken some actions. They believe, for instance, that they could have funded a tuition freeze. Tuition has tripled for students in the past decade, a rate that's far in excess of inflation. It's affecting participation rates, and it's also affecting who and how many students get into programs.

I talked to one of the executive members of one of the student groups, who indicated that she had made her decisions about postsecondary education partly, and for a good part, on trying to get a cheap program and a short program. She wanted a program that she could get into and get out of as fast as possible and that would cost her as little as possible. I'm appalled, Mr. Speaker, that we would have young people in our province using that kind of criteria to select a profession that they're probably going to be part of for the rest of their life. It's the wrong criteria. It's the last thing we should be asking students to do.

They suggested that we eliminate the parental contribution requirement for student loans. Not all students receive support from their parents while attending university, and there are various reasons for that. Some parents obviously can't afford to help. If you look at the recent study by the millennium scholarship fund, it showed that in fact Alberta families who earn over $100,000 contribute less to the education of their offspring than do families who earn less than $55,000.

A number of students have made the point that they have little connection to their families, that once they were 18, they were considered on their own, and they live an independent life. Yet when they go and apply for a student loan, the criteria that affects them is one that demands some parental contribution. It's a roadblock in the way of accessible education for some young people in this province.

An increase was one of the other suggestions, of course, and this, I think, affects mainly Alberta students who have to move into one of the urban centres for their postsecondary programs. It's the whole business of the cost of daily living. At just over $700 a month for a student living away from home, the loans program just doesn't offer enough money for a student to study in this city or in Calgary.

I think that one of the things they ask – and if they're going to be borrowing the money, it should be honoured – is that at least the costs should reflect the cost of living. If we're asking a student from the north to come down to the city and to survive on the proceeds of student loans, we could at least expect that these loans would be issued with and would reflect some of the costs that those students are going to face when they get here.

They also would like the remission program to benefit all students and not just those who qualify for high debt loads, and that seems like a reasonable request, Mr. Speaker. The program would better serve Alberta students by allowing for those who have less than $5,000 a year in debt to have a portion of that debt remitted. It would only seem fair that we treat all of those postsecondary students equally. The suggestion from the students at the U of A was that the debt remission over $5,000 or 25 per cent of the loan, whichever is the greatest benefit to the student, might be a reasonable proposal.

They've also made a plea, because they get deeply involved in university and college and technical institute budgets, for the increase in base funding for the institutions. The U of A is facing a $28.7 million shortfall this year alone. If you look at the astronomical rise in the energy costs that those institutions are facing, you can understand why students are so concerned that the base funding be looked at and revised. So students are left out of this budget, Mr. Speaker, and I think that they feel a little resentful that that has been the case.

The Learning budget is an interesting set of proposals. The minister today, following on the heels of the budget, announced a new funding formula, and I guess that what goes around comes around. The formula isn't really very new. In the early '90s before the . . .

Mrs. O'Neill: I can't believe it.

Dr. Massey: Well, you better believe it. Just listen.

Mrs. O'Neill: Don, you weren't around in the early '90s.

Dr. Massey: Where do you think I was?

In the early '90s the government put restraints, started enveloping the funds to school boards, and I remember sitting in this House, Mr. Speaker, while the government talked about how school boards were not spending the money properly and that there was a need for enveloping. So administration was enveloped.

Mr. MacDonald: Was the Minister of Energy in the Deep Six then?

Dr. Massey: Well, I think he might have been.

The programming component was enveloped, and that was done because these boards couldn't be trusted to spend the money properly. Well, the enveloping is gone, and now we're back to saying that school boards can spend as they see fit. Mr. Speaker, I agree with that. I think that's a good move. But as good as a funding formula is, it's no good at all if there aren't proper funds to put in place.

Mrs. O'Neill: It's a spending formula, not a funding formula.

Dr. Massey: I'm going to get to it. Don't get excited, St. Albert.

One of the things that the Learning Commission didn't address and what the funding formula still doesn't address is the base funding. The base funding still increases, as it has historically, by a certain percentage every year: 2 per cent, 3 per cent. There's some determination made of how much the Learning minister can put forward and how much is deemed an appropriate increase. It's an archaic system, Mr. Speaker, and it has been abandoned in other jurisdictions and very, very quickly.

Mr. Speaker, when we went back to the mid-90s, what the government did because of the inequities was take taxing authority away from school boards to bring all the money to the central government and then redistribute it on a per pupil basis. That, I think, was a move that most people applauded because of the inequities. We had jurisdictions like the county of Strathcona with a huge tax base spending way more per pupil on the students there than was the board, say, in the Peace River country, where there were fewer resources. We had huge inequities across the province, and students got funded, again, by accident of geography and not because of any rational relationship to the program costs.

The government saw that problem. Frankly, the trustee associations of the day – and I was part of those – have only themselves to blame for that, because there was a problem that had been around for . . . [interjection] Did you want to speak? I'll sit down. The Member for St. Albert wants to get up.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, I really do not like to interject at a time when the hon. Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is responding to this very important subject. As I indicated before, the Minister of Finance had the floor yesterday, and all courtesies were accorded to her so that she could deliver her address without interruption. I hope the same courtesies can be extended to the leader as well. Please do that.

The hon. Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So, as I was saying, part of the problem was that the trustees of the day didn't address it. It was a $30 million problem at the time, and it wasn't addressed.

Other systems elsewhere are not, looking at a shift in financing, thinking about the number of dollars being put into the system but the number of dollars needed to ensure some specific outcomes. Adequacy funding is being heralded, I think particularly in the States, but Ontario has made some recommendations with respect to moving to an adequacy funding formula. Adequacy, as I indicated before, was really predicated on the resources that the government had. So we had a 12 per cent cut in 1994 and then a 5.7 per cent increase this year.

Adequacy would turn things around. What adequacy does is look at schools and ask: what do you want to achieve? A number of jurisdictions have had to define that. The state of Wyoming decided that for their system students must leave high school with entry to some sort of a postsecondary program, qualified to enter some kind of a program. They have to be able to get into a vocational program. They have to be able to get into a postsecondary program of some kind. They have to be eligible to get into a continuing education program. So that, for them, is adequacy.

The state of Oregon has used as their definition of adequacy a series of reading tests at the high school level that all students must achieve. States like Maryland have 28 objectives that they have indicated need to be met before students graduate. They start from that objective, and then they work backwards and say: "Now, what is it going to cost us? What do we need to do to reach those objectives?"

They have a number of ways of trying to determine that. They use an expert committee, and in some cases, Mr. Speaker, other jurisdictions have used statisticians to try to come up with a number. Other jurisdictions look at some of the most successful school districts in the country and say: how much did it cost them to get the kinds of results that they've obtained for their students? So a variety of ways of trying to determine what is adequate, and it means a major change in how schools and school systems operate. It's predicated much more on diagnosing and tracking of individual students. It means that schools have to change their organization, but it does provide schools with resources.

I looked at the Oregon model, Mr. Speaker. The requirements for teacher librarians, the requirements for counsellors, the requirements for summer school and for tutoring programs to make sure that youngsters meet the objectives have resulted in a great deal of increased funding. Again, I look at what we have and at the subsequent announcement today by the minister, and I'm left with the feeling that we can do better.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

There are a number of other pieces of the budget, Mr. Speaker. I was waiting, as I think all parents were, to hear about the Learning Commission. We've had in this gallery every afternoon and every evening, I believe, since this session began, parents from Education Watch. I spoke to them yesterday after the budget. They were disappointed. The parents were disappointed because they had expected that there would be an itemization of the Learning Commission. They were looking for the dollars that were going to be attached to class size reduction. They were looking for the dollars that were going to be attached to kindergarten for children at risk. They were looking for . . . [interjection]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I'll put the hon. Minister of Environment down on my list.

Sorry, hon. leader.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. They were looking for the dollars that were going to be attached to the implementation of the First Nations, Métis, and Inuit policy framework. They were looking for the dollars that were going to be attached to the access to technology in schools. Since the Learning Commission made its report, they have been waiting and watching for the budget that came down yesterday. They were expecting that they would be able to see the dollars that were going to be dedicated to the recommendations of the Learning Commission outline so that they could track them. As I said, Mr. Speaker, they were disappointed because that didn't happen.

One of the fears, of course, is that somehow or other their expectations are not going to be met. We won't know probably until September whether the money in the budget, given inflation and other factors, will see the restoration of the thousand teachers that were set free last year as a result of the government not funding the arbitrated teachers' settlement. I doubt very much if the money is there to do that and to make any huge inroads with respect to classroom size, particularly at the K to 3 level. [interjection] I hear someone say: well, then it'll be the school boards' fault. That's exactly what I said at the press conference this morning the new funding formula was going to result in, that the government members would now be saying that it's the school boards' fault. So it doesn't take long, Mr. Speaker.

Parents expected some definition and some dollars attached to it so that they could see the differences in their classrooms. There are a number of trustees resting a little uneasily today, Mr. Speaker, because the expectations are being raised so high that delivering to those expectations in September is going to be very, very difficult if not impossible for many of them. So the Learning part of the budget that addressed the Learning Commission concerns I think is a disappointment.

There are other sections. The health care tax I think has been spoken about enough. It's a tax that remains in place, an unnecessary tax.

There's the Gaming part of the budget. Mr. Speaker, I know that it makes many government members uncomfortable, but the money that's spent on the horse racing industry is up 22 per cent, from $37 million last year to $45 million this year. To Albertans it is one thing that the general public has great difficulty with. Here is a government that indicated that they were out of the business of being in business, and they're right back at it, picking winners over losers with respect to industries and business in this province. If you look at it, over the last number of years there's been $133 million piled into the horse racing business. When you put that number against the failure of the government to increase the very, very meagre allowances for SFI and AISH recipients, there's something wrong with our priorities.

The gambling revenues now, Mr. Speaker, are almost double the royalties of crude oil, synthetic crude, and bitumen and coal combined. There's been a dramatic shift in our province in terms of the attitude toward gambling and our dependence on it, and I don't think it's a move for the better.

The Solicitor General's budget finally, after years and years of pleading, has put some money into the police forces of the province. I think that that's long, long overdue. It's something that the municipalities have been asking for and also for a new funding formula for municipal policing. What the Solicitor General, of course, didn't do was help out Alberta's corrections system. They certainly didn't get much of a raise.

We're still waiting from the Solicitor General for the policing Alberta MLA review, the corrections review, and the victims of crime fund review. We've been waiting some time for these reports, and it's difficult to make some judgments about the budget, Mr. Speaker, without those reports before us so that we can judge how adequate the funding that's being proposed is.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the standing policy committees got a raise of $15,000 over last year, and the money going to these committees is now $627,000. That's a lot of money for those committees, that are government committees, and if you look through the payments to MLAs, one suspects that they're used for reasons other than making public policy.

The Public Affairs Bureau, Mr. Speaker, again, up to $14.7 million. That's a lot of public relations. That's a raise from $13.8 million last year.

Ms Haley: Point of order.

The Deputy Speaker: Point of order. Do you have a citation, hon. member?

3:30

Point of Order
False Allegations

Ms Haley: Yes. Beauchesne 380 under allegations. I want to put on the record here that there's an allegation being made that these SPCs, the standing policy committees, which are advisory bodies to ministers, are doing something untoward or unprofessional. You know, the reality is that the vast majority of the money that the member is citing is about staff. It's not for anything untoward. These are policy directions for ministers and their portfolios, and each one of these SPCs deals with two or three or four portfolios. So I just think that it's important not to make unfounded allegations in here.

The Deputy Speaker: On the purported point of order, first of all, I need to ask the hon. member for the citation again. I'm sorry; I didn't hear it.

Ms Haley: It was just a handwritten note: allegations under Beauchesne 380. But if I'm wrong, I apologize. I'll look for the proper citation. But that's what I'm talking about.

The Deputy Speaker: Okay.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Well, it's not Beauchesne 380. I'm not sure what the concern that's being raised here is. Is the concern that we were inaccurate in the amount of money that we've said now goes to the committees? Is there an inaccuracy? I don't think so. It's $627,000. Those are directly from the budget books. That does represent a $15,000 increase from those same committees last year. That's not inaccurate.

The Deputy Speaker: I think, hon. member, we're getting into the debate. It would seem to me that, one, the citation isn't found by the chair. It seemed to me that it was a clarification as opposed to a point of order.

Ms Haley: Mr. Speaker, I apologize. Standing Order 23(h), (i), (j) will work good. Twenty-three is a good one; I like 23(h). Okay? Allegations. You know, I just want them to realize that when they say things and they put them on the record, they should be accurate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, 23(h) is making "allegations against another member," and she hasn't laid out what she believes the allegations to be or who the member is specifically that this was done to, so there is no point of order here, Mr. Speaker. There's not much I can respond to.

The Deputy Speaker: The chair would agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre that (h) "makes allegations against another member," where it's clearly identified. But the member, if I heard her correctly, the second time round said (h), (i), and (j), so that's three. The second one is "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." I take it that she was feeling – this is an interpretation – that there was some allegation there.

Anyway, it would seem to me that it's not a point of order but a point of clarification. So we'd ask the hon. interim leader to continue.

Dr. Massey: If I've offended the member opposite, I apologize and withdraw the remarks.

I was talking, Mr. Speaker, about the Public Affairs Bureau and how we can possibly be spending $14.7 million on public affairs programs. That is really, really a lot of taxpayers' dollars, and you have to wonder what kind of value we're getting for it.

A number of other issues, Mr. Speaker, that I think we can talk about. The Justice budget was a disappointment. The courts in our province still aren't going to get the raise that they definitely and desperately need.

I had one other, but I don't seem to have it on my desk right now, Mr. Speaker. So with those comments I'll conclude.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and respond to the budget speech delivered by the Minister of Finance yesterday afternoon. I thank her for her work and for her speech.

Mr. Speaker, in the 15 minutes that are available to me, I'll try to cover some important points. It's difficult, clearly, to be comprehensive in my remarks. That being said, after four years of playing Scrooge, the Tory government is trying to play Santa Claus with the voters as the next provincial election nears.

Budgets are about priorities, and yesterday's budget speaks volumes about the priorities of this government. At the top of this list of priorities is getting re-elected. In other words, this budget is about conserving Conservatives, Mr. Speaker. That is why spending, at least in a few areas, was ramped up as we approach the next election, only to have the taps turned off after the election, as has happened not once but several times over the last 10 to 15 years. Sadly, this election cycle spending is as predictable as leap year. In this province Santa Claus comes down our chimneys only once every four years, but even then he only comes down some of our chimneys. This province is in the enviable position of being able to provide stable, predictable funding to important programs every year and not only in a pre-election year.

As is the case every year, the bottom line in Budget 2004 can't be taken seriously. Every year the Tory government estimates modest surpluses of only a few hundred million dollars in its budget. But, Mr. Speaker, when the actual surplus is reported 15 months later, it ends up being several billion dollars, and that's the case year after year after year for many years now. Budget 2004 is no exception to this well-worn pattern. This year's budget shows a paper surplus of only $300 million in the fiscal year 2004-2005. Anyone who believes that this will be actual surplus when the books are closed next year must also still believe in the tooth fairy or Santa Claus for that matter.

Total government revenues in the coming year are once again seriously underestimated. There's $2.3 billion less revenue estimated for next year than forecast revenues for this year. Oil and gas revenues in the next fiscal year are estimated to be $2.7 billion below what they are forecast to be this fiscal year.

Since under the government's fiscal framework only $4 billion of oil and gas revenues is transferred to program spending and given that oil and gas revenues this year will be around $7.5 billion, well, I think it's pretty obvious that the government's game plan is to cynically continue using debt elimination as a means to achieve two political goals, Mr. Speaker: (a) to dampen expectations of Alberta seniors, middle-class families, and postsecondary students and (b) to use this as good news of a debt-free Alberta a few months or weeks before going into the next election. It just occurs to me that there's a third objective here; that is, to paint this as some sort of legacy for the Premier as he prepares to leave office. Now, I guess it wouldn't be so bad for the Premier to have a legacy except that the question has to be asked: at whose expense?

While there are a few good things in this budget, on the whole it's a huge disappointment. Working Albertans and middle-class families deserve a better deal than they are getting in this budget, Mr.

Speaker. Just look at how one sided the revenue and taxation measures contained in this budget are.

The government will keep lightening the pocketbooks of typical Alberta families by $1,056 per year in the form of health care premium taxes. It doesn't matter whether you make $35,000 a year or $350,000 a year; you pay the same $1,056. This is a real flat tax, Mr. Speaker, if one wants to understand what a flat tax is. This is a most regressive and unfair tax imposed on hard-working and middle-class Alberta families and Albertans. It's a bad tax. Even the Alberta Taxpayers Federation is urging that this regressive, unfair, lump-sum health care premium tax be scrapped. However, it wasn't. Whether you are a senior on a fixed income or an average working family trying to make ends meet, you just have to keep on paying.

Meanwhile corporate taxes continue to be cut. On April 1 this year the general corporate tax rate is being reduced from 12.5 per cent to 11.5 per cent, permanently reducing government revenues by $142 million over the period of the next 12 months. Alberta already had the lowest corporate taxes of any province. This is an unnecessary giveaway, pure and simple. It's shameful that this government keeps taxing seniors for health care premiums so that it can pay for another tax cut to corporations.

Despite very misleading government spin to the contrary, in reality provincial revenues from school property taxes will go up 5.7 per cent in year 2004-2005. Homeowners and businesses will be paying $77 million more, not less, in school property taxes starting this spring. Mr. Speaker, this is the third straight year that the Finance minister and this government have broken their 2001 promise to freeze total revenues from property taxes at the $1.2 billion level. The continuing rise in education taxes also stands in contradiction to the motion sponsored by the Member for Wainwright which just passed in this Assembly two weeks ago. Albertans, especially seniors on fixed incomes who still live in their own homes, will be outraged by the government's duplicity on the matter of school property taxes.

Surprisingly for a pre-election budget, 25 new user fees for such things as outdoor recreation, parks programs, and the maintenance enforcement program are also a feature of this year's budget. Eleven other fees for parks activities and insurance services are being significantly increased, while the new fees and fee hikes for things like cross-country skiing in Kananaskis Country and provincial park programs mostly hit average Albertans.

The insurance levies are puzzling given this government's own concern about the affordability of coverage. These new levies threaten to make insurance even less affordable for drivers, homeowners, and small businesses. Talk about shooting yourself in the foot, Mr. Speaker.

While there is mention made that some royalty giveaway programs may be reviewed, there are no specific changes announced in this budget. For years, Mr. Speaker, our Auditor General has raised the alarm about the fact that many of the government's royalty giveaway programs, including the Alberta royalty tax credit, do not have objectives that allow Albertans to assess whether they represent value for money. So instead of action to address these failings, we simply get more delays in addressing the $400 million-plus in royalty giveaways. This is a huge amount of money that could be freed up to freeze and reduce tuition fees or eliminate health care premiums.

Moving to the spending side of Budget 2004, I'll begin by acknowledging a few positives. Certainly, one of those is the restoration of municipal policing grants for large centres and the commitment to pick up all of the policing costs for municipalities with populations below 5,000 people. Mr. Speaker, $58 million is being added in total for provincial policing support, and this is badly needed. Yet, at the same time, the government is taking back much of the increase in policing grants by reducing unconditional municipal grants. The city of Edmonton, as an example, estimates that over one-half of the increase in policing grants is being offset by reductions in municipal unconditional grants. Thirteen million dollars has been set aside for transferring governance and funding for ambulance services in 2004-2005, increasing to $55 million in the next year. While there is some concern about the governance changes for ambulance services, especially its impact on those municipalities with integrated emergency services including fire, paramedics, and ambulance services, certainly everyone welcomes the increased funding support in this area.

Budget 2004 is giving Albertans a first glimpse at the huge cost of the so-called public/private partnerships, or P3 projects. The total cost, the full cost, of the Calgary courthouse and Edmonton south-east ring road projects is $703 million, a huge sum of money, Mr. Speaker. However, there is no evidence whatsoever that P3s can be built for less money. All of the available evidence suggests that they will cost more.

The government P3 strategy is completely lacking in transparency. The government has hand-picked a P3 review committee dominated by developers, real estate lawyers, and a few other Tory-friendly folks. Mr. Speaker, here we are on the verge of signing an agreement with a P3 developer for a new Calgary courthouse, and Albertans are left completely in the dark as to whether it would have been less costly to have built the same project using conventional public financing.

This lack of transparency is simply unacceptable, Mr. Speaker. The whole P3 exercise threatens to become to the Klein government what NovAtel and MagCan were for the previous Getty government.

Moving to education, Mr. Speaker, support for K to 12 will go up 5.8 per cent, including implementation of a new funding framework, which is long overdue. While the Learning minister talks a good game about being committed to implementing these recommendations, quite frankly there's not enough detail provided to determine whether these increases will be sufficient to implement the class size recommendation of the Learning Commission.

A lot of groups representing parents with children in schools think that the funding falls short. I will certainly be returning to this when we deal with the Learning estimates in the Committee of Supply.

In the postsecondary area operating grants for postsecondary institutions go up 4 per cent next year. At first blush this doesn't look bad, but when you really break down the numbers, this won't even be enough to cover enrolment increases and inflation, so as a consequence tuitions will continue their inexorable rise by going up yet another 6 to 10 per cent next year and beyond.

Moving to health spending, yesterday the Finance minister made much of the fact that the planned 8 per cent increase isn't sustainable and that increases will have to be much smaller in future years. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to health care, Albertans are being set up. There will be increases in health care spending before the election only to bring the hammer down in the form of user fees and delisting after the election.

With all of the disadvantages of loss of income that come along with illness, the last thing these Albertans need is more out-of-pocket charges, but unfortunately that's exactly what sick, injured, and elderly Albertans will get if this government gets its way on its so-called health care reform. User fees, delisting, and two-tier health care will be brought in for ideological reasons, Mr. Speaker, and without one iota of evidence that they will do anything to make the health care system more sustainable. In fact, if you look south of the border, while the government's share of the health care dollar may go down, total health spending will escalate as never before.

Now, I want to move to those Albertans who got lumps of coal instead of gifts from the Santa Claus in the Tory government budget. There are lumps of coal in this year's budget for Alberta's senior citizens. In the past decade according to figures from the Alberta Council on Aging Alberta seniors have on a net basis lost some $650 million in government benefits. In recent years they have lost universal eye and dental benefits, have seen the copayments on their drug coverage go up, got hammered with 50 per cent increases in long-term care fees, and, finally, like everyone else, got smacked with a 30 per cent hike in health care premiums.

Seniors who were hoping for a tiny bit of good news in this pre-election budget went away empty-handed, Mr. Speaker. Not enough on health care premiums when scrapping them for seniors would only cost $90 million. Obviously, not a high enough priority when there are corporations to feed with $102 million in corporate tax cuts.

The news in this budget is even worse for the disabled and those on welfare. Once again, there are no increases in monthly benefit levels for those on AISH or social assistance. With only one small increase since rates were cut in 1993, this budget means that these low-income Albertans and their children will keep falling ever deeper into poverty.

Meanwhile, while there is nothing for poor and disabled Albertans, the annual subsidy to the horse racing industry is going up 22 per cent, from $37 million to $45 million per year. Keeping race horses well fed is obviously a higher priority for this government than keeping children well fed. I wish this government would put people before ponies, but it's not to be.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions?

There being no further speakers, the hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if we might now just adjourn debate on this particular item this afternoon.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until next Monday, March 29, at 1:30 in the afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 3:52 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 29, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/29

head:

Prayers

The Speaker: Hon. members, at the conclusion of the prayer would you please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Now, would you please join in in the singing of our national anthem in the language of your choice. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head:

Introduction of Guests

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am actually thrilled today to rise and introduce a former neighbour and her accompanying guests. Anne Eastham is a well-known community advocate, a Guide leader, and a stalwart in our community. She and her husband, David, have made it a privilege and a lifetime to do community service. Today they are here with James Eastham – and in a moment I'll tell you why they are here – and Deven Doucette. A page in this Assembly, a beautiful young girl that's grown up to be a wonderful young lady, Beverly Eastham, is the object of their attention this afternoon. So on behalf of this Assembly, on behalf of Beverly I'd like to welcome her mother, her brother, and a friend. Please join me in that welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly an honour for me today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very special people in my life. Seated in the members' gallery is my lovely and devoted wife, Linda, whom I welcome today. With her is our daughter Mrs. Candice Bullock, who is visiting with us today. Her mother and I are very proud and happy to have Candice with us today. I would invite them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to introduce to you and through you to Members of this Legislative Assembly 53 visitors from Tofield high school. The sheer number of them visiting today has put them in both galleries, both in the public and members' galleries. They are accompanied by a group leader, no stranger to this Assembly, who has brought many, many students to this Assembly for a visit, Mr. Fred Yachimec. Another teacher is Rick Bobier, and parent helpers are Sandra Borton and Lynn Sharpe. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a frequent guest of this Assembly. He is a former constituent, former board member, and, I hope, a continuing supporter. I'd like to ask Gary Horan to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you three members of the staff in my department who are involved in the communication of all the great news that our department has to offer. I would ask Cheryl Robb and Sheri Segin and Chris Bourdeau from communications of Community Development to please stand and take a very well-deserved bow and receive the thanks of all members here for the work you do.

Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I neglected Jennifer Mikula. If she would stand as well. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. the Premier, did you have an introduction?

Mr. Klein: No. He just did them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a group of people who've worked very hard over the last five weeks. They're here in the public gallery today to honour the Member for Edmonton-Riverview as he takes his place as the new leader for the Alberta Liberals and the Official Opposition. I'd like to ask them to rise as I call their names, please: Jeanette Boman, who would also be known as the partner of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, his son Spencer Taft, Darryl Youzefowich, Kristin Murray, Dan Carroll, Barb Krahn, Shannon Sampert, Marie Carlson, Kieran Leblanc, Rick Miller, David Coumoyer, Kim Miller, Kevin McLuckie, Shannon Leblanc, and the rest of the Taft team. They've risen. If we can please give them the appropriate welcome for joining us in the gallery.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm truly delighted today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House some of Edmonton's most vibrant, witty, and charming activists, known as the Raging Grannies. They bring style and humour to political struggles facing Albertans, Canadians, and the world. As I read their names I would ask them to please rise and remain standing until I ask the House to give them a warm welcome. They are seated in the public gallery: Betty Mardiros, Kathryn Sinclair, Marg Stephen, Annette Hik, Elvira Leibovitz, Virginia Daniel, Louise Swift, Linnie Chamberlin, and Gretchen Brundin. I'd now ask the House to give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two St. Albert constituents who I see are in the public gallery, Ken and Sandy Kordyback. They are both teachers in St. Albert. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the House two constituents of mine who are seated in your gallery. Dave and Cheryl Andrews are the proud parents of the Speaker's page in the Legislature, Greg Andrews. I would ask that they rise and please accept the warm welcome of this House today.

The Speaker: Hon. members, earlier today I received a letter from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, a letter informing of his resignation of his position as the Interim Leader of the Official Opposition. In his letter he requested that the newly elected leader of the Liberal Party of Alberta, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, be recognized as the Leader of the Official Opposition. I will therefore recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview as the Leader of the Official Opposition of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta and now call on him for his first introduction.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, most of the guests that came today who I was going to introduce have already been introduced. But there are a couple who I would like to single out in particular, and those are Beth Kordyback and Alison Willard.* Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

Oral Question Period

Rail Link to Fort McMurray

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, NovAtel, Swan Hills, Gainers, the Magnesium Company of Canada: this government has a history of pouring millions of taxpayers' dollars into projects that become financial flops. Now Albertans are wondering if the Premier's latest project, the railroad to Fort McMurray, will be another money pit for the taxpayer, kind of like Homer Simpson's Springfield monorail. My questions are to the Premier. Alberta taxpayers want to know: if this is an economically viable project, why isn't the private sector paying 100 per cent of the bill?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, before answering that question, I would like to congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview for his decisive victory in this weekend's Liberal leadership vote. In our democratic society there is perhaps no greater honour for elected members than to be chosen as leader of the parties they serve, and I know the hon. member will lead his party with skill and passion and distinction. So on behalf of my colleagues in government it is my pleasure to welcome you, hon. member, to the position of Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and to wish you well in your endeavours.

In response to the question, Mr. Speaker, there was an announcement today in Fort McMurray, as I understand it. Basically, our involvement at this point is to participate in a feasibility study to determine if in fact such a rail line is warranted. Beyond that, if it is warranted and the decision is made, then a functional study will have to be undertaken, and of course there will have to be consideration as to the participation, if any, of the government. So this project has a long way to go yet.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why are the taxpayers footing the bill for a private-sector feasibility study? Aren't you just getting back into the business of being in business, Mr. Premier?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this is in accordance with our policy, and that policy, as the hon. member points out, is absolutely right. The Financial Administration Act prohibits this government from becoming involved in the business of being in business. However, it is the policy of this government to participate in projects whereby infrastructure can be provided to accommodate major resource developments, in this case the oil sands.

Mr. Speaker, this speaks to the whole issue of not only rail transportation but the government's obligation down the road to do something with the vehicular transportation corridors, i.e. highway 63 and highway 881. This is truly a public/private partnership. Down the road there may be an opportunity for the government to become involved, and it might not be cash. It might be right-of-way, or it might be other ways to participate with the private-sector partners, those being the oil companies operating in the north – Syncrude, Suncor, Shell, CNRL, and others – and, of course, the railway company.

So, Mr. Speaker, this project has a long way to go. That's why we are participating now in the feasibility study to see if it makes sense.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Well, if the Alberta government does contribute taxpayer dollars to the feasibility study, how will the Premier ensure that those funds do not flow right back to his former chief of staff, who is the head lobbyist for this project?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, my chief of staff is not the head lobbyist for this particular endeavour. I think that on the surface the project has some merit, but that remains to be seen, and the feasibility study will determine that.

Relative to the flow back of money that is impossible. There will be a committee of ministers to act as the point people for the government's involvement. That committee is being headed by the hon. Minister of Economic Development and tourism. It involves the Minister of Municipal Affairs, one of the MLAs for the constituency; the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, the other MLA who's involved in the constituency; the Minister of Transportation, of course; and the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. So, Mr. Speaker, there are five ministers involved in overseeing and making sure that any government dollars are spent appropriately and in the right places and for the right reasons.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's launch of health care reform is sounding more and more like its launch of electricity deregulation. It's working hard to create artificial crises instead of addressing legitimate needs and making a host of promises that will never come true. Just like the government threw the electricity system into turmoil through its fumbled management, the government is throwing the health care system into needless turmoil too. To the Premier: will deregulated health care offer the same poor service and higher cost that deregulated electricity has brought to Albertans?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we are saying is indeed what all Premiers and ministers of health are saying across the country, including the federal government, Liberals, Conservatives, and NDs alike. That is that the health care system as we know it today, the status quo, is simply not acceptable, and it needs reform as well as more dollars. But more dollars, as I've said before, represents one small piece of the puzzle. It needs substantial reform.

We have a program laid out relative to the steps we propose to take to bring about reform, and with respect to those specifics I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, this provincial government is quite interested in learning from other jurisdictions throughout the world what works in their health care systems. We live in a multicultural nation. We live in a multicultural province. We benefit from the fact that people come from all over the world to live in this province, to live in this country. If we take advantage of health care professionals that we recruit from around the world, we should also be prepared to entertain the ideas that they bring with them from the health care systems in places like France or Sweden, Italy or New Zealand.

So, again, Mr. Speaker, our plan is to first lay out for Albertans to see what our current system is like in terms of its sustainability. I think that the Premier and others across Canada have come to the conclusion that it's not sustainable. Then we need to import ideas from around the world and ask: what will make sense here in this province? What can help make our system sustainable?

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Premier: how does the Premier explain that his government is now spending more per capita on health care than 10 years ago, yet we have fewer hospital beds, we employ fewer RNs, and we have longer waiting lists? Where is the mismanagement?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition says is not entirely true. More procedures than ever are now being accommodated. We have more MRIs, more joint surgeries, more heart surgeries, more treatments for a variety of ailments and injuries than we ever had before. But the simple fact is that health care costs are due to a number of factors arising in every jurisdiction in the country, to the point where some Atlantic provinces now are seeing 50 per cent of their total provincial budgets consumed by health care spending.

Mr. Speaker, I said previously that the health care system as we know it today is simply not sustainable and changes need to be made. There is nothing wrong with looking at the best practices and taking the best out of various countries and other jurisdictions that rank higher than Canada in the delivery of health care services. What is wrong with that?

You know, this province has always had the courage to do things differently, and we've always had the courage to admit that maybe other jurisdictions do things better and to look at what those jurisdictions are doing and to do the same thing here. Mr. Speaker, we want to do what is best for the taxpayers, what is best for the patients, and we want to do it at a price people can afford.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Romanow commission in fact did look at jurisdictions across Europe, many of the ones that have been listed by the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness, why don't they just accept the recommendations of the Romanow report?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there were no recommendations relative to best practices used in other jurisdictions, no recommendations as to how those best practices could be implemented. The key to the Romanow report was to close the so-called gap between federal government spending on health care, which averages about 16 per cent, I believe, of total health care costs, to 25 per cent. That is the key to the Romanow recommendations, and when the Premiers and the health ministers meet, they talk about closing the Romanow gap. There's very little, if any, discussion whatsoever on any other components or aspects of his report.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Police Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, on Friday the Solicitor General released a response to the Policing Alberta MLA review, a report which has cost tens of thousands of dollars and truly failed to deliver for many Albertans the answers to the concerns they had. My questions are to the Solicitor General. After two years of waiting, why did the Solicitor General fail to one way or another address the issue of photoradar on Alberta's highways?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the hon. member. I think this government has done a fine job in addressing what was important to Albertans, and that's $58 million of new funding to help municipalities in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Solicitor General: given that the police feel that they can't clear their names and Albertans don't see resolution in cases of police wrongdoing, why didn't the Solicitor General take concrete action on the civilian oversight and police-investigating-police issue?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'd like to say that I take exception to that remark and that I think the police in this province do a very good job. Secondly, when she talks about citizens' oversight – and I've read some of her comments in the Journal – I don't think she really understands what citizens' oversight is about.

We are currently looking at all of the models available to us, Mr. Speaker, and there are two issues that I think have to be clearly identified. The first one is general complaints in regard to the police. There is a process in place that works very well for the citizens in this province. If they have a complaint against a police officer, they have the ability to have a complaint, and the chief of police at that particular time deals with that complaint. If they do not like what the chief of police comes back with, they have the ability to go to the Law Enforcement Review Board, which is an independent body from government, to deal with that complaint. The Law Enforcement Review Board does a fantastic job for the citizens of this province.

One of the things that the hon. member is bringing forward is: how do we investigate serious complaints involved with the police? That could be an accident that has happened. It could go with criminal charges. One of the things that we're looking at at this particular time is that if an incident like that happens, it goes directly to my director of law enforcement. He then has the ability to call an outside police force and let them investigate, or if they need a special investigation team, then we will do that.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Solicitor General: since it took two years for the Solicitor General to deliver the government's response to this report, how long do Albertans have to wait for the corrections review and the victims of crime consultation report?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked this question before. I had told her to please be patient because those reviews have financial implications to her. The police report was released on Friday, and she can stay tuned for the other two.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Insurance Costs

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Small businesses told this government last September that rising cost for business and auto insurance is their number one concern. A survey done by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which I will table at the appropriate time, shows that over half of their Alberta members experienced insurance rate hikes of at least 20 per cent last year. Meanwhile, the Insurance Bureau of Canada has reported that insurance industry profits were up 673 per cent in 2003. My question is to the Premier. Why has the government done nothing to address the number one concern of small business, namely skyrocketing insurance costs? Doesn't this government care about small business?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I really take exception to the last part of his comment. Of course we care about small business. That's why we lowered taxes for small business.

If the truth be known, the whole government initiative relative to insurances was launched because of the concerns of small business, particularly those who use vehicles, plumbing outfits and welding outfits, and those involved in apprenticeship programs. Basically there were a number of complaints to this government that these small businesses couldn't hire people between the ages of 16 and 25 because their insurance rates would go sky high. So we took action. We took very definitive and very positive action to make it illegal for insurance companies to penalize good male drivers between the ages of 16 and 25, whereas under the old rules those people were penalized simply because they were between the ages of 16 and 25 and because they were male. There was no reward for being a good driver. Now there is. That to me is positive and definitive action.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the Premier's evasive reply and his failure to address the real insurance issue, not auto insurance, why has the government failed to act on the CFIB's call for an independent review of the insurance industry as a whole and the government's failure to regulate it?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we weren't getting complaints vis-à-vis other forms of insurance; i.e., home insurance, building insurance, life insurance. The bulk of the complaints were over automobile insurance, PL/PD.

Relative to other insurance I'll have the minister respond. I don't know whether it would be the hon. Minister of Finance or the Minister of Government Services or both.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly, hon. members opposite know, as do Albertans, that we have been focusing on the issue that was brought to us by a number of our small businesses and a number of young people who were involved in apprenticeship programs or training programs where the price of automobile insurance was prohibitive and was keeping young people from entering some of the trades. This was a real concern in a province that's growing as rapidly as Alberta is growing and desperately needs young people entering trades, that they were not able to be hired because of the price of automobile insurance.

This led us into a very long, protracted review of automobile insurance in this province. As you know, we appointed the Member for Medicine Hat to head up an implementation team to bring forward recommendations that would provide Albertans with accessible, affordable, and comparably priced insurance so that they would not be precluded from entering some of the programs that were there. This has been a long process, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that we are on target and on track to being operational, finally, with the co-operation of the industry that works within this province to have a new structure to present to Albertans this summer.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that no one over there has apparently read the CFIB report, will the Premier support the New Democrats' call for an all-party Legislature committee to review skyrocketing insurance rates for small business and the nonprofit sector, and if not, why not?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct; I haven't read the report. This is a national federation, as I understand it, and what the hon. member is talking about is obviously not exclusive to Alberta or peculiar to Alberta but is a problem across Canada. I would suggest that he contact the appropriate federal authorities through, perhaps, Mr. Layton, who heads his national party, to see if something can be done on the national scene.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Education Property Tax Rate

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In last week's budget this government announced that the mill rate for education property taxes was going down. However, discussions with stakeholders have reported the opposite to be true. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister please explain this inconsistency?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the budget that I tabled here last week, we did clearly indicate that the property tax rate would in fact go down by 2.3 per cent insofar as the school property tax rate within the province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I can say that the hon. member may be confusing the issue of the additional dollars that would be collected overall in the province because, quite frankly, we have more people living in the province today, this year than we did a year ago. We have a huge migration of people that come to this province on an annual basis, and as such there is more money that is in fact collected. We've said many times that people come to Alberta, but they don't bring their roads and their schools and their hospitals with them, so they participate in the taxation base in the province of Alberta willingly because this is a place of choice.

So we did lower the burden by reducing it 2.3 per cent, but there are more people who are paying the school property assessment.

Mr. Vandermeer: Can the minister please explain why in 2001 the government promised Albertans that we would cap revenue from education property taxes at $1.2 billion and now with the recent budget we've moved away from this policy again?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, three years ago when we introduced a budget, we recognized that the migration to this province was large – there was construction going on – and as such the impact and the stress on our education system had to be addressed. Clearly, the direction was in fact to capture the growth, freeze the mill rates or reduce them and capture the growth of the province from the migration here, and that's what we've done. But that's not new. This is three years old.

Mr. Vandermeer: In light of all this, why does this government expect municipalities, who are already hard-pressed for adequate funding, to collect provincial education property taxes and send it in?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the vehicle that we have today to collect dollars for support of education has been through the local property assessment. Now, I know that there have been talks of other mechanisms, but this is the vehicle that we have in place today.

Now, I can tell you – and the Minister of Municipal Affairs may want to supplement my answer – that municipalities had an awful lot of initiatives in a package that went forward to help them address some of the pressure points that they were facing this current year. I think they received a tremendous benefit from this year's budget package, and I would ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs to respond to some of the initiatives in that package.

The Speaker: I think we're going to move on. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Support for Low-income Albertans

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to look after the interests of millionaires and forgets about the interests of the poor and the unfortunate of this province. The horse racing industry and government spin doctors receive an increase any time they seem to ask for it, it appears, but again the poor and unfortunate do not. My first question is to the Premier. Given that the Premier spends on occasion more in a restaurant for one meal than some welfare recipients get in a month, when will this government increase the benefit package for welfare recipients and also those who are on AISH?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the preamble is very offensive, provocative, untrue. As a matter of fact, for lunch today I had one of those microwaveable things. From time to time I do take people out for lunch but don't spend that much on myself at lunch.

An Hon. Member: What about the orange juice?

Mr. Klein: The orange juice was $2.70 a glass, which is not unreasonable. It's only unreasonable for the Liberals, who I'm sure at their convention this weekend were spending a lot more per glass of orange juice than $2.70. I'm addressing the preamble because the preamble was, as I said, unnecessary, provocative, and offensive, Mr. Speaker.

The money that the hon. member alludes to relative to horse racing, the $45 million, is not a taxpayer handout to the horse racing industry. These are funds raised from slot machines at racing entertainment centres located at horse racing tracks. The $45 million is what we estimate the industry will receive this year. It is not a subsidy. It is the proceeds that the industry will earn by opening and operating a racing entertainment centre.

I will add that this money helps support the horse racing industry, which employs, I understand, about 7,000 or 8,000 people, many Albertans, many of whom, relative to racing in Edmonton, reside in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands and other constituencies around the racetrack.

Mr. Speaker, approximately one-third of the revenue from these racing entertainment centres goes into the Alberta lottery fund, so it comes to government, and it supports other programs such as community-based programs, health programs, education programs.

So this is not, as the hon. member suggests, a $45 million handout by the government. This is something that was negotiated with the horse racing industry and does a tremendous amount of good relative to employment and a tremendous amount of good relative to facilitating various community endeavors.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to remind you all that as I look at the agenda for the next two months, this being March, going into April and then into May, I see something like 29 to 30 days being devoted to the debate of the budget. This is the question period.

The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: can the hon. Premier live on $855 a month? That is the maximum amount that one of the 8,000 people in Calgary living on AISH gets. Can you live on that amount?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's not a matter of whether I live on it or not. I do not apply, nor am I a beneficiary of the program called assured income for the severely handicapped. I am not a recipient of that particular program, which, by the way, is unique in Canada.

Relative to the program itself and the funding for that program I'll have the hon. minister responsible for that program respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The AISH program, that has been in this province now for probably 20 years, has evolved over time. There have been changes to the benefit level. More importantly, what the hon. member asking the question seems to refuse to acknowledge both today and in previous questions regarding this particular matter – he wants to ignore the flexibility that we've put in the AISH system. There are people on AISH that every once in a while will incur an emergency situation. When that happens, we have the flexibility inside that program to move that person temporarily off AISH onto some other type of program and deal with the matter and then, of course, have them back on AISH.

People in this province like AISH because, just as the Premier mentioned, it's assured income for the severely handicapped, and it's meant to provide, then, for the kinds of things that they face and that they have to endure. Mr. Speaker, families help out as well. You ought to be clear on this.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier. Given that since 1997 this government has increased spending by over 50 per cent, why have AISH and SFI recipients not received even an increase that will match the increase in the cost of living? Why are you neglecting the poor of this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can allude generally to the philosophy and the policy of this government. That policy is to provide help wherever necessary to people who are on SFI or, indeed, on AISH. We help them obtain employment. We put in skills upgrading programs, job retraining programs. The hon. minister had the opportunity to announce today a program that addresses specifically those on SFI, and I'll have him elaborate on that program.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We did in fact announce Alberta Works earlier today. In that system what we are doing is bringing a more individualized approach. We are going to work with all of the people that come forward looking for our assistance. We're going to deal with them on a more individualized basis, and we're going to deal to a great extent in terms of need.

Now, no one would deny that there's some income that's going to be required and there are going to have to be shelter allowances. We know all that. But if anyone fixates on the actual income itself, I believe that they're in danger of asking us as a government to basically keep these people inside a welfare wall.

What we in Human Resources and Employment have said is that we're going to bring forward benefits, benefits that are in kind in many cases, things that support the person as they try to move, then, from dependence on government to independence, as most Albertans want. They want to be self-reliant. We're trying to help with that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Funding for Policing

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In last week's budget, which was tabled in this Assembly, the Solicitor General or her department was identified as allocating significant new funding to municipalities for policing costs. My understanding is that the amount quoted was $16 per capita. However, there seems to be some confusion as to how that money is to be allocated. So my question is to the Solicitor General. Is the $16 all new money for policing for each municipality?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated earlier, the government under Budget 2004 includes $58 million in extra funding to bolster the police services in Alberta. I have to say that it's a 50 per cent increase and brings our total funding for policing to $174 million for 2004-2005. This increase includes reallocating the 16 and a half million dollars from the unconditional municipal grant program to policing programs. Municipalities required to pay for policing will get, as indicated, a $16 per capita grant for policing, which does not include previous funding but is now directed to policing. For example, hon. Member for St. Albert, the old unconditional grant that you had previously received was approximately $287,000. Now provincial money for policing in St. Albert is about $849,000, or an increase of about 195 per cent.

Mrs. O'Neill: My first supplemental is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. In the previous allocation of unconditional grants to municipalities are you aware that each municipality allocated the full amount to policing, or are they variable around the province?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the $16.5 million that has been distributed to Alberta municipalities, both urban and rural, in the past was going to the municipalities as unconditional grants. Wherever municipalities chose to use it was their own decision. I can say that a large majority of those municipalities used them specifically for policing. So, ultimately, at the end of the day, in meeting with both the rural association and the urban association, which is the AUMA and the AAMD and C, it was considered that a chunk of money, that the Solicitor General has talked about, would go directly into policing based on a top priority that was identified by their citizens in the individual municipalities.

Mrs. O'Neill: My second supplemental is back to the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. With respect to more funding for policing will some of it go to crime prevention measures within respective communities, or will they be province-wide programs?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. Crime prevention and restorative justice are also vital as we keep our communities safe, so in the budget we've announced another extra $1 million for crime prevention and restorative justice, which will help, we believe, keep the communities safe, and they can apply for a grant.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, we are also continuing funding for our IROC, which is the integrated response to organized crime, which is an additional $5 million so that they can deal with organized crime, which is affecting communities all over the province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is again to the hon. Premier. Given that 1 in 5 children in the city of Edmonton grow up in poverty, when will this government cut its excessive travel and communications budget, take the $50 million in savings and reinvest it in those children?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, our Minister of Children's Services is here. I don't know if that figure, 1 in 5, is in fact true. Edmonton is approximately 1 million people, give or take. What he's saying is that 200,000 children are living in poverty. That is absolutely astounding. That is unbelievable. I think that the hon. member doth exaggerate a lot, a tremendous amount. That is unbelievable in this day and age in this city in particular. I travel this city. I have never seen 200,000 impoverished kids. Never. Never. Never.

That reminds me of a statement that was made by, well, an interim leader. I think there were about nine leaders of the Liberal Party across the way including the one we have right now. One of the Liberal leaders made this outrageous statement, and she was a respected . . . [interjection] No, no. She was well respected, but she talked about all of these people like every one was living in a dumpster. This hon. member is making the same kind of statement, a grossly, severely, inaccurately exaggerated statement.

Relative to the real situation I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, quite specifically for children in need we have a child need program, but this is the government that five years ago spent $467 million. In this budget that was just announced, five years later, this government spent on children's services $740 million, higher than anyplace in the country.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that 8,000 Calgarians receiving AISH have seen no substantial increase to match inflation in that city, why does this government continue to support the horse racing industry and leave those recipients on AISH wondering where their next meal is going to come from or how they're going to pay their rent?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I've already set the record straight relative to the horse racing industry and the 7,000 or 8,000 people that that industry employs – many of those people wouldn't otherwise be employed – and how they have to earn the money they get and how it is not a government handout.

Relative to the situation with respect to AISH the hon. minister responded, but I'll have him respond again if he so desires.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you. Perhaps for the benefit of the hon. member and other members, Mr. Speaker, they need to be advised that we will be organizing and carrying out a formal review of AISH come this fall.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that this government wants recipients of AISH and SFI to be more self-reliant, why does that not apply to the horse racing industry? Why is that industry not self-reliant? Why does it need $45 million?

The Speaker: Well, actually, there are three questions there.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's revenue generated by the horse racing industry. All we have done as a government is allowed through legislation or regulation the vehicle for them to raise revenues. So the hon. member is comparing apples and oranges and pears and grapefruits and grapes and everything else he can, but that is so typical of the way they operate. It is a philosophy of creating confusion or, better said, a philosophy of not knowing what they're talking about and thereby creating confusion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As indicated earlier, there is much interest and discussion throughout the province about the proposed northern rail link to Fort McMurray and the oil sands. In the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency this project has also instigated conversation and questions. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. How will this proposed rail link affect our current highway system and the current project scheduled for highway 881?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Thursday last the government of Alberta tabled its three-year construction and preservation plan for the Ministry of Transportation. Included in that plan are I believe seven projects on highway 881, six projects on highway 63 north of Fort McMurray, three projects on highway 813, and numerous other very badly needed highway projects in that part of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the Minister of Energy. Why are we considering this rail link proposal at this stage of the oil sands development?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a good question because the oil sands are actually going to be the new royalty base for this province. If you look at the mining projects, the magnitude of the mining projects that are going on up there, we need to provide safe, reliable, dependable transportation that moves fabricated product, vessels, and items of such size and magnitude that cannot be normally moved through normal highway transport means by rail. This in fact could increase productivity and lessen the Crown's exposure to cost overruns. If you think that by 2017 some 3 million barrels per day may be produced up there, the benefit to Albertans at roughly today's oil prices would be in the neighbourhood of a billion dollars a month.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the Minister of Economic Development. What economic development could we expect from a project of this magnitude if it was to go ahead?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you're aware, we returned from Fort McMurray this morning, where the project was reviewed and announced that the government will partake in it.

I wanted to correct an erroneous statement made by the opposition before I answer the hon. member's question. This study is in no way committing the government to anything other than looking at the 30-year horizon of transportation challenges that are facing that area in highway 881, highway 63, and the rail links. To make some loose association to MagCan, NovAtel, and things of that nature is just preposterous. This is a great opportunity for Albertans to sort of tackle the problem that's coming out of that massive economic spinoff that's going to come there.

The bottom line of all this, Mr. Speaker, is that we anticipate about $55 billion worth of projects to be going ahead now or in the future. The economic spinoff that is generally accepted is about 20 per cent of that, so for that northeast region you could be looking at about $11 billion worth of potential economic spinoff. As a prudent government we have to do everything in our power to make sure that that investment is not only maximized but takes place and doesn't go to Venezuela or somewhere else.

Edmonton Ring Road

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, on its own web site this government states that the southeast leg of the Edmonton ring road would cost $225 million under the public model. To the Minister of Transportation: what is the estimated cost of the southeast ring road extension as a P3 project?

Mr. Stelmach: The cost of the project will be better determined once we proceed to the next stage of the request for proposals. As I mentioned earlier, there were six companies that had answered the request for qualifications. We boiled that down to three, and the next stage will be proceeding soon.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: what are the estimated annual lease payments and the principal and interest costs of this project expected to be?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I believe that what the hon. member is trying to get at – and once again the opposition is opposing all kinds of public/private partnerships, whether they make good economic sense or not. I'd mentioned in this House that when we get to that particular point, when we have looked at the project and the kinds of proposals that come in – I've also said in this House before that we also have some cost comparison models, public cost comparison models, we can use. We have projects in Calgary of equal size and also the southwest leg of the Anthony Henday, which has quite similar construction interchanges and bridges and some of those other issues that we have to deal with on that particular leg. So those two will be good cost comparisons to see if we're getting a good investment on behalf of the taxpayers here in the province.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how can this minister allocate hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars to a P3 project without knowing the cost?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, when we put out a highway to tender, we don't run out there and say, "Well, you know, this highway from Edmonton to Calgary is going to be $200 million, and the closest company to come to $200 million gets the contract." We don't do business that way. We actually put it out for a request for proposal, and we get the best deal, the best value for the dollar. We won't know that until such time as this portion, the next stage of the request for proposals, comes forward. Then those particular companies will tell us how much they're going to pay, what will be the annual lease payments.

But over and above, Mr. Speaker, now is the time for innovation, when companies come forward and rather than using maybe straight steel on some of the interchanges, maybe a mixture of steel and concrete in terms of getting another better value because right now, you know, steel has increased by at least 30 per cent. Those are some of the cost drivers we're dealing with recently. So I believe that at the end of this period, in about six months, we'll have some good news for the hon. member and all Albertans.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, on Thursday last an exchange of questions between the Minister of Seniors and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre occurred. I believe today that the Minister of Seniors would like to supplement an answer, which would allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to ask an additional question.

Seniors' Benefits

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You're right; on Thursday I did indicate some figures, and I'd like to clarify my answers.

A single senior whose income is up to $23,440 and a senior couple with an income of up to $37,880 receive a full premium exemption. Single seniors with incomes between $23,441 and $26,960 and a senior couple between $37,881 and $44,920 receive a partial premium exemption. The total result, Mr. Speaker, is that approximately 58 per cent of seniors receive either a full or partial exemption.*

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Blakeman: Well, I continue on my earlier question, which is: what is the minister doing to work with his colleagues to eliminate all health care premiums for all seniors?

Mr. Woloshyn: Well, Mr. Speaker, my position on that issue is on the record. I will continue to work with my colleagues to ensure that we can get whatever programs we can to enhance seniors' programs in this province.

Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Alberta Scene

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize Alberta's artists, our arts organizations, and supporters of the arts, all of whom contribute so much to the vibrancy of our great province. In this regard it was my great pleasure recently to join our Minister of Community Development at the Citadel Theatre for the announcement of Alberta Scene. Hosted by the National Arts Centre in Ottawa, Alberta Scene will showcase over 600 of our province's artists and arts organizations at 94 events in 19 venues over 13 days during April and May 2005. Artists from all disciplines across Alberta are invited to submit an application to attend, which can be downloaded from www.albertascene.ca.

Alberta Scene will attract even more national and international opportunities for our artists during Alberta's centennial year, and in the fall of 2005 the National Arts Centre orchestra will tour several Alberta communities thanks to EPCOR.

Promoting our province through the arts is a great way to salute and thank the dynamic art sector of Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Lesla Stringer

Mr. Lord: Well, Mr. Speaker, Calgary-Currie is certainly the constituency of champions. Recently I introduced my musician friend Lee Mayes here, and you may know Malcolm Mayes, the Edmonton Journal's outstanding political cartoonist. Well, my constituent is their cousin. You may have heard of Reuben Mayes, the Saskatchewan phenomenon, arguably the best football player to ever come out of Canada, and my constituent is Reuben's little sister. Pierre Lueders, world champion bobsledder, brother-in-law of our minister of economic affairs, is this lady's coach.

She's Lesla Stringer, a proud mother of three. She is also second runner-up for the Mrs. Calgary contest and a Nike and P & G model. But never mind her good looks and public speaking abilities; what she's really famous for is her athletic abilities. A Canadian national track and field champion, winner of numerous honours, she now has her sights set on winning gold for Canada in the 2006 Olympics as one of our top national women's bobsled team athletes.

So far she has three American Cup second place finishes, she finished fourth overall in the World Cup, and she broke two international start time records, thus helping qualify the first-ever Canadian women's bobsled team that got into the Olympics.

Way to go, Lesla. Calgary-Currie and all of Canada are proud of you.

Raging Grannies

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier confirmed that he has dire plans for health care in Alberta, plans that will usher in a two-tiered health care system. Well, I'm proud to stand and recognize the Raging Grannies, who fight against health care privatization using good humour, wit, and dedication. The Edmonton chapter of the Raging Grannies has a dozen or so members who can be seen in their trademark eye-catching hats and granny clothing singing their own brand of politically conscious satire.

The Premier told the federal Tory convention that the Grannies like to protest and would attack his plan for a two-tiered health care system. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Premier was right on this one. But far from being mere placard-waving protesters, I know them to be true crowd-pleasers and favourites among Edmontonians, the vast majority of whom support a public health care system.

Mr. Speaker, it's truly an honour to recognize the Raging Grannies and to thank them for their unwavering defence of public health care and their campaign for the implementation of the Romanow recommendations in order to further strengthen and transform our health care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Taryn Penrice

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great honour to rise in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to recognize one of Alberta's Great Kids, 18-year-old Taryn Penrice of Red Deer. Taryn was just 13 years old when she was diagnosed with T-cell leukemia and admitted to the Children's hospital in Calgary in critical condition to begin two years of intensive cancer treatment. Although doctors feared for Taryn's life, she was able to make it through and managed to inspire all those around her.

Taryn decided during her battle with cancer that she wanted to help others. In May 2003 she organized a head-shaving fundraiser at her high school, Hunting Hills, that raised over $14,000. Her greatest fundraising accomplishment to date was a golf tournament called Golf a Kid to Cure, which she organized with two of her friends and raised $76,000 for cancer. Taryn hopes to organize an annual Golf a Kid to Cure tournament, and this year she hopes to raise $100,000.

Thanks to her loving, supportive family, her strength, and her dedication to others Taryn has already made a big difference in this world and was recognized on March 12, 2004, by the Premier, Colleen Klein, and the Minister of Children's Services for her achievements.

I would ask all members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating Taryn for her personal victory over cancer and for all the great work that she does for others. She's truly one of Alberta's Great Kids.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Lamont High School Boys Curling Team

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Transportation, the MLA for Vegreville-Viking, I wish to recognize and congratulate the Lamont high school boys team on winning the provincial gold medal in curling. The gold-medal team consists of skip Nick Koroluk; third Jason Starko, who is the minister's grand-nephew; second Colin Sheptycki; and lead Chris Cholak; coaches Rick Koroluk and Joanne Martz; and teacher/adviser Irene Hackett.

Mr. Speaker, this team won their league in Lamont, the zone finals in Lac La Biche, and the provincial championship, which was held in Drayton Valley, Alberta. I hear that in typical curling fashion this game was a nail-biter all the way. I would ask all the colleagues to join the minister and I in congratulating the Lamont high school boys team.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary's International Avenue

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise and speak about a group of people who have brought an innovative approach in urban community planning. I want to recognize the key players in this process: graduate student Gian-Carlo Carra and Professor Robert Kirby of the U of C, Alison Karim-McSwiney and the staff of the International Avenue Business Revitalization Zone, and the FGL Society, the city planning staff, and the caring community leaders, residents, and business owners in this area.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this area is well known in Calgary as International Avenue, a stretch of 17th Avenue in the southeast of Calgary from Deerfoot Trail to the eastern city border. This International Avenue is about 35 blocks in length with over 400 businesses. The avenue is an authentic mix of businesses of almost all cultural heritages. It's a mosaic of the world in the city of Calgary.

Last week the group launched a charrette. Charrette is a French word for small cart. The idea is to bring all stakeholders together and collect their ideas and have sessions on problem solving and vision design. The charrette process will bring greatness to our corner of the city.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Lee Ridge School

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I recognize the outstanding work being done by the principal and staff of Lee Ridge school in Edmonton-Mill Woods. This school will do almost anything to bring students and books together. Their recent readathon is a case in point.

Organizer Allison Winchester brokered a contract with the following terms: if the students read over 3,000 hours, Principal Caroline Missal would (a) dye her hair green, (b) eat something blecky, and (c) kiss a donkey. Well, Principal Missal needs a new business adviser, for last week the students met the contract. In total they read over 4,140 hours. True to the terms of the agreement, last Wednesday the principal sat on the gym stage and had her hair dyed green; then, as she tried to avoid her fate, something blecky, a haggis, was piped into the gym and she was force-fed three helpings; and finally, Andy the donkey was led onto the stage, and she planted three big smackers on his nose, all of this royally presided over by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the province, Lois Hole.

Congratulations, Lee Ridge. Your students gain not only the reading but an appreciation of what dedicated, professional teachers are willing to do on their behalf.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table today five copies of a letter written to myself from the Minister of Learning signed by the Minister of Learning, the Minister of Alberta Seniors, the leader of the New Democrat opposition, and the MLA for Edmonton-Mill Woods, being the Liberal critic with respect to Learning and, I gather, Seniors. The gist of the letter is that they have switched positions on the Committee of Supply. It was agreed to by the opposition and agreed that we should table it today just so that the House is aware of the agreement to switch the time so that Alberta Learning would appear on the afternoon of April 22 and Alberta Seniors would appear before the Legislature on the afternoon of May 6, rather than as was designated in the memo tabled previously.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands I'd like to table a document. It's a letter from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business dated September 5, 2003, warning the Finance minister of the increasing cost of and difficulty of access to commercial insurance for small- and medium-sized business.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Others?

Hon. members, I'm tabling today the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods advising of his resignation as Interim Leader of the Official Opposition and also advising that the Alberta Liberal Party had selected the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview as its new leader.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 25, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 28, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, and 45.

[Motion carried]

Property Theft in Agriculture, Food and Rural Development Department

Q28. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to accept this. It's a reasonable request. I hope the government is going to accept it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise to move an amendment to the motion in the interest of dealing with a number of questions on the Order Paper dealing with the same matter but with respect to different departments. The amendment would read that Written Question 28 be amended by adding "and the departments referred to in written questions 29, 30, 34, 46, 60 to 65 inclusive, 72, 73, 80, and 81," after "Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development."

The amended question would then read as follows:

What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and the departments referred to in written questions 29, 30, 34, 46, 60 to 65 inclusive, 72, 73, 80, and 81 for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

I understand that the amendment has been appropriately circulated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you. I will note that the Official Opposition was in receipt of this amendment, faxed over at 10:49 a.m. today, and it is signed off by Parliamentary Counsel on the 25th of March, the last sitting day prior to the amendment being proposed in the House. So those two tests have been met, Mr. Speaker.

I also note and I will happily note that this is a good way to start off this afternoon. My commendation to the House leader for the government. What we have here is exactly the situation, I think, that the Speaker was guiding us toward last week, in that we have an identical question that has merely been enlarged to refer to other departments that are referred to in other written questions. So from the point of view of the opposition, who was seeking that information, assuming that the government is going to provide us with that information, at this point we are willing to accept the amendment.

Essentially, what it's doing is then: "What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and . . ." and then the departments referred to in the written questions that are listed as part of the amendment include Economic Development, Transportation, Municipal Affairs, Infrastructure, Solicitor General, Seniors, Justice and the Attorney General, Gaming, Community Development, Children's Services, Innovation and Science, Learning, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, and Health and Wellness. Those are the departments that actually correspond to the written question numbers that are contained in this amendment.

This is exactly the kind of leadership we were looking for the government to take. We are more than happy to support this amendment, and we look forward to receiving the information that would flow from the acceptance of this amendment and, indeed, of the question.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

2:50

The Speaker: Now, on the motion as amended, do you wish to close the debate, hon. member?

Ms Blakeman: No. I'm happy to support it with the amendment as it is.

[Written Question 28 as amended carried]

The Speaker: Now, what this means, hon. members, is that you should take your pencils out and cross out Written Question 28, having been dealt with, Written Question 29, having been dealt with, written questions 30, 34, 46, 60 to 65 inclusive, and 72, 73 and 80, 81.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped and Supports for Independence

Q31. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

How many of the 30,271 assured income for the severely handicapped and 28,278 supports for independence cases recorded in the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment 2002-2003 annual report included children?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is vital information. There have been comments made earlier, as late as question period today but earlier on, in regard to the number of children who are unfortunately living in poverty or in poverty-related conditions in this province.

Certainly, one only had to go to the mac and cheese luncheon last week, that so many of the hon. members from the government side attended, found the time out of their busy schedules to attend. It was at that event where the Inner City Agencies Foundation gave to each and every person who was at the mac and cheese dinner a fact sheet. The fact sheet started with the simple headline Poverty Hurts and then went on to point out that 1 in 5 children in Edmonton live in poverty and that over 16,000 Edmonton families earn less than $15,000 annually.

Now, this written question would go a long, long way to answering some of those questions. We can't fault the children. We've got to support and encourage the children. If we know just exactly who is most likely to be affected by low benefit rates for families who are living on AISH or for those who are living on supports for independence, or welfare – there's the perception that a lot of these individuals can work, but that is known not to be true. Many of the AISH recipients for one reason or another, through no fault of their own have a disability and cannot work. People who can work are usually working.

The same applies to supports for independence, or welfare. You look at the drop in caseloads over 10 years. It's gone down from over 90,000 to, in this case, for welfare rates, 28,278. To find out how many of these files or cases would include children is important in light of the hon. Premier's reaction to my question earlier in question period.

We have to improve. We have to improve the benefit packages for those cases if for no other reason than for the children. No child should be left without in this province. Other jurisdictions are talking about no child being left behind. There's certainly been a corporate campaign to increase public awareness of children and issues surrounding them and the circumstances of poverty. But I would remind all members of this House when we're discussing Written Question 31 that SFI is the income source of last resort for Albertans, and it is sort of the finest mesh in the social welfare net. We cannot forget the children, Mr. Speaker.

So, in conclusion, let's look at a couple receiving SFI, and if they get $772 a month and they have one child, how much does that leave? If there was one adult and one child and they were to receive 820 bucks, let's say, plus medical benefits, there's not going to be much money left at the end of the month.

We need to know how many children are currently living, shall I say, within those individual files? We have to improve their circumstances. It is inconceivable that in a province as wealthy as this, where we have increased budgets in other manners with no regard it seems, we're willing to allow these people to grow up frustrated and marginalized.

I certainly hope that I will receive the information that I am seeking under Written Question 31. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the Minister of Human Resources and Employment I'd like to say that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 31.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. To conclude debate, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Seniors and thank the Department of Human Resources and Employment. I look forward to receiving the information.

Correctional Facilities

Q35. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted.

Which correctional facilities is the Solicitor General planning to close, and what is the timetable for the closures?

Ms Blakeman: The Solicitor General had mused at one time about closing certain correctional facilities in the province because they were underutilized. I am seeking information of a more detailed nature, then, of what plans the Solicitor General has around closing correctional facilities, which correctional facilities she is planning to close, and what would be the timetable that would be expected to be put in place for the closures if in fact there are any.

So that's the information I'm seeking through this written question. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that Written Question 35 be rejected. The answer to the question is the subject of the recommendations contained within the government MLA review of corrections report. As I previously indicated, the government has been taking the time to carefully review the report and will release it when these considerations are completed. I'm confident that this release will occur in the very near future.

3:00

Ms Blakeman: How tantalizing. Well, you know, this underlines the difficulty that the opposition has in seeking information. We keep being dangled little tidbits of "stay tuned" and "soon" and "stay with us." It's really very difficult to . . . [interjection] I'm sorry; I'll correct myself: "stay with us" and other rather cliched phrases.

The Solicitor General has raised it herself. We are still waiting for a corrections review that is now, I think, some two years out and no additional information. We don't know whether any information that we seek is contained in that particular report or not, Mr. Speaker, but for every question she gets from me around corrections, it's: wait for the review. Well, the review could come out and we still won't have the information on that particular question.

I guess I've been told that we'll have to wait for it; all Albertans will have to wait for it. Frankly, I think that is a shame, and it's problematic when we try to hold the government to account. There's a lot of hiding behind these reports, and I hope that the Solicitor General will be able to table them as soon as possible.

Thank you very much. I regret that they won't support it.

[Written Question 35 lost]

Seniors Shelter Intake Survey

Q36. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry and Department of Seniors on the development and implementation of the Alberta Seniors shelter intake survey form between April 1, 2002, and February 17, 2004?

Ms Blakeman: Now, we're interested in how much money was spent developing this survey, that I think is not still in use. So what sort of resources were put toward it? I'm interested in receiving that information. I hope the Minister of Seniors is able to co-operate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the government we will accept Written Question 36.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

Fraud Charges against Government Employees

Q37. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total number of government employees who have been charged with fraud against the Alberta government between January 1, 1993, and February 17, 2004, inclusive?

Ms Blakeman: Oh, now, that's interesting, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure if I can say this person's name. It's in public documents, but this is . . . [interjection] All right. This is coming out of a case of an individual who I believe was a deputy minister.

Mr. MacDonald: A high-ranking official.

Ms Blakeman: A high-ranking official, a deputy minister in the government, who was charged with fraud, and the question that follows from that is: how many others have been charged with fraud during this government's tenure under this Premier?

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I have to reject this particular question. The scope of the question, from January 1, 1993, to February 17, 2004, goes far beyond what might be appropriately found within records without doing a great amount of research.

The hon. member has referred to a deputy minister. I wish to make it clear in the House that I'm not aware of any deputy ministers that have been charged with fraud. With the appropriate audit processes that we have in place to hold accountability, there have been instances where senior officials have been accused of fraudulent activity in those circumstances. There's only been, I think, one or maybe two in my recent memory.

The question goes back to January 1, 1993, and in order to obtain this information, we'd have to go back and manually check every file that's been closed since 1993 from each of the Crown prosecutors' offices across Alberta because it talks, again, about any government employee. So in order to answer this question accurately, we would have to check every closed file in Crown prosecutors' offices since 1993. There is no formal or automated system in place to access specific Crown files, and given the timeline of the question, many of these files will already have been sent to the Provincial Archives for storage.

Mr. Speaker, the breadth of this question is such that even bringing in an amendment to bring down the scope, as we sometimes often do, to make the question answerable, in this case I couldn't find any way to actually bring the scope into the realm of answerability within any reasonable sense of time frame or numbers. It's with regret.

I think it's important for people to understand, however, that in every case where fraud is committed or where there's an alleged fraud committed, charges are laid and those individuals prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm disappointed to hear the response and the rejection of the request for information. Truly I believe that the breadth of the question is what requires it to be put forward as a written question or if it were a document then as a motion for a return. This is exactly the venue that we should be able to use to get detailed answers from government on exactly this kind of issue.

I think I'm also more than a little alarmed that the government doesn't seem to keep track and learn the lessons from any employees that they have who in fact have been charged with fraud against themselves. I find it a little chilling that the government doesn't seem to be able to do that. So I'm disappointed that we cannot gather this information today.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Written Questions

The Speaker: Hon. members, I make little notations to some of these questions. These written questions have to come through a process, but before they get on the Order Paper, they also require my signature. Quite frankly, I should not have signed on that one, and I'm going to make a comment after the House has already made a decision.

The question is: "What is the total number of government employees who have been charged with fraud?" It's a mere fact in our society, one of the principal rules of law, that we're not guilty until we're found guilty. People are charged. It doesn't mean that they are guilty of anything, and their good name comes into disrepute and into question when the charges are sometimes put out. We all know by reading the decisions of judges that charges are thrown out or people are found not guilty for dozens and dozens and dozens of reasons. Just simply because somebody has been charged should really mean nothing, if I understand the rule of law in our society, and it's only when you're found guilty that in fact there is a public record for that.

I'll take the responsibility for all the people who see these before I do, but I should not have signed off on that particular question.

Gas Bill Complaints

Q38. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

How many complaints did the government call centre receive from Albertans regarding high natural gas bills between January 1, 2000, and February 17, 2004?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, certainly, within that period of time many Albertans expressed concern and displeasure over the high cost of natural gas for domestic purposes and in regard to this government's natural gas policies for domestic and commercial purposes throughout the province. There's no doubt that there would have been a significant number of complaints to the government call centre.

We've had many reactions to the high price of natural gas for domestic consumption from this government and from the Minister of Energy. In fact, it's probably a little over a year ago that the hon. Minister of Energy glibly assured Albertans: well, you can turn down the thermostat and put on a sweater if you're that concerned.

Between January 1, 2000, and February 17, 2004, surely there must have been a very accurate record kept as to how many calls were coming in and what parts of the province they were coming from. I for one would like to have a look at this information for my own interest. When we consider how much money we've spent on natural gas rebates over the years and how much more we may spend in the future with the election rolling around, who is to say how much of a natural gas rebate will be offered? Certainly, the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East and others in this Assembly worked very hard last winter to convince the government to not renege on the promise of natural gas rebates whenever prices went up. Prices went up, and they're still up a lot higher than that budget estimate that was tabled here last week.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is information that I and other Albertans would find noteworthy and of a great deal of public interest, and I urge the government to provide the information. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is prepared to accept Written Question 38 with some amendments. Those amendments have been provided to our opposition colleague here by 11 o'clock as per the proper procedures. I know that the amendments have been circulated to the rest of the members, and I'll gladly read for the record what the amendments would be. We're suggesting to amend this motion by striking out the word "government" and substituting "Utilities Consumer Advocate" in that place and then by striking out "January 1, 2000," and substituting "November 23, 2003."

Mr. Speaker, the Utilities Consumer Advocate was put in place in the latter part of October, and the office became up and running in November of 2003. The Utilities Consumer Advocate is responsible for taking these calls, and we can provide the kind of feedback that the member opposite is looking for in a very accurate way through the calls that have come in to the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

So we would accept this by amending it to have the Utilities Consumer Advocate's calls from November 23 available in written form. The amended written question would now read as follows:

How many complaints did the Utilities Consumer Advocate call centre receive from Albertans regarding high natural gas bills between November 23, 2003, and February 17, 2004?

I now move that motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: On the amendment, yes, Mr. Speaker. Well, this certainly is interesting. This amendment certainly reduces considerably the impact and the scope of the question. The time frame has changed, but the information that the hon. minister with this amended motion is willing to provide, in my view, is already public knowledge.

There were two articles, as a matter of fact, one in a Calgary paper and one in an Edmonton paper. The Edmonton paper I believe stated – and it was an earlier article – that there were 700 complaints. There was an updated article that indicated that there were 800 complaints to the Utilities Consumer Advocate since the advocate opened for business.

Now, this doesn't tell us anything about the number of complaints that citizens lodged with their government previous to the Utilities Consumer Advocate. By denying us this information in providing this amendment, we will never know how many complaints it took to force the government to change its mind and do the right thing and share the natural resource wealth of this province with the citizens who own it by providing them with credits on their natural gas bills.

So, certainly, we know already the number of complaints the Utilities Consumer Advocate has received. To the minister's credit we don't have the breakdown as to how many of them are related to natural gas and how many of them are related to electricity. One would only assume that 80 per cent of these are based on electricity complaints and 20 per cent are based on natural gas complaints because that's the method that's been used to fund this office through industry: 80 per cent of the costs are coming from the electricity side and 20 per cent are coming from the natural gas side.

Now, I also see in the budget – and I realize that we're not discussing the budget here today, Mr. Speaker – that there's a considerable increase of almost $2 million in the budget of this Utilities Consumer Advocate for the current fiscal year. Obviously, there is anticipation that there will be an increased number of calls.

This amendment doesn't do anything to respond and document the complaints that were received leading up to and during the election of 2001 and the subsequent years leading up to the creation of this Utilities Consumer Advocate. I am, Mr. Speaker, disappointed that not all the information would be provided, just the information that is almost up to date as a result of the due diligence of the press in regard to the activities surrounding the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I'd like to speak to the amendment. The effect of the amendment if the House accepted it would be to radically cut down the period for which the minister is willing to report to the House. As a matter of fact, cut it down to a little over two and a half months. That, in my view, would be not very helpful.

Albertans have been complaining to the government and to opposition parties about the skyrocketing natural gas prices and how they've affected their pocketbooks over the last nearly three and a half, four years. So I think it's important for the minister to make a distinction between the complaints that have been received by the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office since that office came into being and became operational – that's quite legitimate, but then there's a period before that, prior to November 23, 2003, from January 1, 2000. For those two and a half years or so, a little more than two and a half years, I think, almost three years, the government must have the information, information that Albertans would like to have, information that this House certainly would like to see disclosed and made transparent.

So I'm speaking, Mr. Speaker, against this amendment because, in my view, it will not oblige the government to disclose information for that very important period of nearly three years from January 1, 2000, to November 23, 2003. To accept this amendment really would be tantamount to defeating the real purpose of the original question, so I would certainly be opposed to this amendment, and I would hope that the House would reject this as well.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

3:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say at this time that the amended Written Question 38 will provide us a benchmark for the future on the activities of the Utilities Consumer Advocate. If we know how many complaints have been received there in regard to natural gas bills, we can check to make sure that the 20-80 split on the industry cost sharing of this office is accurate. For that reason there will be some advantage to having this information with Written Question 38 as amended.

Thank you.

[Written Question 38 as amended carried]

Deregulation and Electricity Bill Complaints

Q39. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

How many complaints did the government call centre receive from Albertans regarding deregulation or high electricity bills between January 1, 2000, and February 17, 2004?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is a government that keeps a keen eye to the polling numbers or, some would say these days, a keen ear to the rail line to see which locomotive is coming down the track and at what speed and pulling what. Certainly, there has not been such a public policy failure in the entire country, whether it be a provincial or a federal government, that would match this electricity deregulation boondoggle that this province has for whatever reason decided to implement.

I would love to have seen a cost-benefit analysis on electricity deregulation. I have certainly searched for one from this government. It has not been provided. So the barometer of success or failure of a public policy is the citizens' response, and in this case it would be the citizens' outrage over the high cost of electricity, not only the cost of electricity but the billing process surrounding the distribution and transmission of electricity.

Between this period, January 1, 2000, to February 17, 2004, we have gone in this province – for instance, everyone is always asking me to table my own power bill. Well, I'm going to talk about my own power bill this afternoon. Before deregulation it had two line items on it, one for energy costs and one for distribution. Now I have many, many, many more line items on my bill. I hear from rural Albertans, and they tell me that I'm lucky because they have in some cases, Mr. Speaker, if you can imagine this, more than 10 line items on their bills.

So there would be no doubt that there would be significant consumer frustration expressed through the government call centre to the respective offices, whether it's the Premier's office or whether it's the office of the Minister of Energy or the office of the hon. Minister of Government Services. There's no doubt that there have been significant calls.

Now, there's also no doubt that those calls of frustration fell on deaf ears because this government does not seem to be in any hurry to unplug electricity deregulation. In fact, documents that I have received indicate that they seem to be anxious to go full steam ahead with this. It puzzles me why. There's been no benefit to this, and prices haven't gone down. I'm sure calls to the call centre haven't gone down either. I would say, depending on the local billing cycle, that there would be calls throughout the month.

Now, to analyze the failure of electricity deregulation, it would be very interesting to see how many calls have come from rural Alberta, how many calls have come from urban Alberta, how many calls come from, for instance, Stony Plain, how many calls come from Medicine Hat. No, we'd have to leave Medicine Hat out of this argument, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Taylor: None from Medicine Hat.

Mr. MacDonald: None from Medicine Hat because Medicine Hat citizens had the common sense to stay out of this. They had their own utilities there. They seemed quite wise, and I'm sure that if we were to compare the prices of utilities in Medicine Hat to those in Edmonton, Calgary, Grande Prairie, Stony Plain, well, we would be wishing that we had followed the lead of the citizens of Medicine Hat and had stayed clear of electricity deregulation.

You know, Rudyard Kipling would be very, very proud of the present-day citizens of Medicine Hat. It was one of his favourite places, as we all know, Mr. Speaker.

In regard to Written Question 39 I certainly hope that the government will provide all the information that I have asked for, and the citizens themselves can have a look and see where all the complaints about electricity deregulation were coming from prior to the 2001 election up until February 17, 2004.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're prepared to accept Written Question 39, again with amendments. The amendments have been provided to the member opposite, the original mover, and also the amendments have been circulated.

For the record I would like to read what those amendments would be. The amendment would read such: striking out the word "government" and substituting "Utilities Consumer Advocate" and, secondly, by striking out "January 1, 2000," and substituting "November 23, 2003."

The reason for these amendments would be because the Utilities Consumer Advocate had set up shop and was prepared to take these calls, and we have a good, accurate record of these calls. We will provide them in writing to the member opposite.

So the amended written question would read as follows, Mr. Speaker.

How many complaints did the Utilities Consumer Advocate call centre receive from Albertans regarding deregulation or high electricity bills between November 23, 2003, and February 17, 2004?

I move that amendment.

The Speaker: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, this amendment is quite similar to the amendment for Written Question 38. We are really restricting and limiting the information that will be provided. What little information a person does get from this government is always considered a bonus, certainly. But, again, the fact that the Utilities Consumer Advocate has just set up shop, the fact that 80 per cent of the budget is coming from the electricity sector – there might be some interesting information in this amended question, but I'm disappointed that we can't get all the information going back to 2000. Certainly, there were significant price spikes in electricity costs. In fact, it got so high at one point that we had to cap it at 11 cents and wait until after the election and recover the rest of that money over a two-year period.

Now, surely we can be provided with more information than just from the Utilities Consumer Advocate. Albertans, I think, deserve to know. If we're going to be this open and transparent and accountable government, well, let's start. Let's not start by amending this written question and just providing any information from the Utilities Consumer Advocate's office starting the third week in November.

With that being said, I guess, Mr. Speaker, a little bit of information is better than none, but I must express my disappointment in light of the fact that this is an $8 billion price tag and growing for this electricity deregulation scheme. This amendment is limiting. I guess under the circumstances I can understand why the government would be reluctant to release the volume of calls that it has received, where they're from in the province, and what specific discontent was expressed by the electricity consumer in regard to electricity deregulation. [interjection] Well, that's what I was hoping to get.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I cede the floor to another hon. colleague. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the amendment proposed by the Minister of Government Services to Written Question 39. This amendment is identical to the amendment proposed by the same minister to Written Question 38, and for similar reasons I find it very unhelpful to getting the information that Albertans want to have with respect to, in this case, whether or not they have found deregulation of electricity to be extremely detrimental to their family budgets, to their businesses. One measure of that would of course be to look at the number of complaints, the frequency of complaints since the time that deregulation has been actively implemented with respect to electricity in this province.

Mr. Speaker, the New Democrat opposition has presented petitions from thousands upon thousands upon thousands of Albertans who have called on this government to scrap deregulation of electricity and return to regulated electricity provision in this province. They signed those petitions because they rely on their common sense and experience over the many decades in this province when electricity was produced and transmitted and sold and used under a regulated system. Whether they were families, whether they were small businesses or large businesses, everyone enormously benefited from the production and provision of electricity under a regulated system.

That system has alas been destroyed by deregulation, and Albertans have, I think, a legitimate right to know whether or not their complaints are being recorded, are available to them as an historical record so that they can hear their own voices, sort of, reflected back to them.

Mr. Speaker, I think the city of Medicine Hat represents a shining example of how a smart community can use common ownership of a resource, in this case natural gas, to produce electricity and supply that electricity to the residents of Medicine Hat at a most reasonable rate – the same is true with natural gas – and sell the rest at market rates, from which then the residents of Medicine Hat benefit. So Medicine Hat presents, I think, an ideal model for the rest of Alberta to adopt to see what arrangements work best to both take advantage of market rates for a commonly owned resource and at the same time protect from market rates and market fluctuations the owners of that resource themselves.

The hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, I think, since he holds an important portfolio in the cabinet – the ministry of environmental protection is under his charge – should be selling this Medicine Hat model to the rest of his cabinet colleagues and to this House so that we can return to a decent model that protects us from exorbitant market rates and from the unpredictability, instability, and fluctuations that markets are characterized by under normal circumstances. But he is not willing to use the experience of his own constituents, who have benefited greatly from this common ownership, to make sure that Albertans in general, who are the owners of natural gas and still are to some extent of electricity production, would benefit in the same way.

This amendment, therefore, Mr. Speaker, is really counterproductive because it would allow the government not to disclose very important information that Albertans would like to have, the very Albertans who are paying sky-high electricity bills and natural gas bills to keep their houses heated and to keep their businesses going. If this information is not disclosed, they will not know how many others like them have complained to this government and how this government has ignored their complaints and refused to listen to their concerns and to the advice to this government.

So for that reason, Mr. Speaker, I personally am opposed to this amendment, and I ask my colleagues in the House to express their opposition to it as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This time I will be quite brief. Certainly, the information that is provided as a result of this amended Written Question 39 will help this member determine exactly what is going on with the Utilities Consumer Advocate as far as the percentage of complaints which originate with electricity and which originate with natural gas and see if there will be any changes in this industry-funded consumer office. I don't know how it can be useful and serve a purpose representing consumers when it's being funded by industry, but we will get that information, and we will analyze it.

Thank you.

[Written Question 39 as amended carried]

The Speaker: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: 3:40      Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate this. I have a gentleman to introduce here today. His name is Doug McBain. He's the president of the Western Barley Growers. He's here in the House today and was hoping to have a chance to see some discussion on private members' bills as there is a bill that affects him and his constituents and all of rural Alberta in a major way. I'm hoping that sometime in the near future we'll get to the bill that he's looking for, but we won't necessarily have that chance today, which is unfortunate. However, I would ask him to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, an introduction?

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce a constituent of mine. Diane Oxenford is here today to watch the proceedings. She's in the public gallery. Diane is one of those golden volunteers who's out for everything, works very hard, is very committed. She's been active on the Rosedale power plant project, so the Minister of Community Development would be well acquainted with her. She's always full of very positive suggestions on how to move things forward. I would ask Diane to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

Private Surgical Facilities

Q40. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that the following question be accepted.
What calculations have been used by the Department of Health and Wellness as required under section 8(3)(d)(v) of the Health Care Protection Act to evaluate the cost-effectiveness of contracts for services with private surgical facilities for each contract approved under the Health Care Protection Act?

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, this question is being moved to in effect get some parameters that the government uses when it starts to evaluate contract-out options in the health care system. When we went through the whole debate on Bill 11, on the two-tiered health care system, there was a commitment by the government that this kind of evaluation would be made; it's part of the bill. We wanted to see what they were going through in terms of the cost comparisons and the cost-effectiveness of these contracts.

It's past now to where there are a number of these contracts in place, so we're asking the government to release for public scrutiny the parameters and the relative data so that the public can evaluate how well the government looked after their tax dollars and made sure that good value-for-dollar was being received. So we would ask the government to provide us with that information.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness I would respond and indicate that the government is rejecting Written Question 40.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to close the debate.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's really a disappointment because during the whole debate on the bill the discussion was that this kind of evaluation would be done in the open, that the information that was used and the parameters that were set for the government to evaluate contract-out options would be dealt with in a public way. You know, if the government is going to make those kinds of commitments to Albertans during the debate on a piece of legislation, I think it's imperative that they do carry through with that after the fact, when they've actually utilized a component within the Health Care Protection Act, and that we do have the option to find and review the kind of decision-making that they go through on behalf of Albertans.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think it's imperative that everybody in this Legislature vote to accept this even though the minister wants it rejected. We need to vote and accept it so that Albertans can get this information for scrutiny of the effectiveness of the government in spending their dollars.

Thank you.

[Written Question 40 lost]

Intergovernmental Agreements

Q41. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

What progress has the government made in implementing the Auditor General's recommendation that the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations adhere to the laws of Alberta by enhancing its intergovernmental agreements systems to comply with section 11 and schedule 6 of the Government Organization Act?

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, this is another one of the issues that we wanted to in effect see where the government is at when they tell us that they're going to accept a recommendation. It's imperative that Albertans get information that allows them to evaluate and become aware of the position the government is in in implementing the recommendations being made by the Auditor General because, obviously, when the Auditor General makes these recommendations, it's an indication that there's a sense that the government's procedure can be improved. So on behalf of Albertans we're asking the government to tell us where they're at in implementing these recommendations of the Auditor General.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that the government will accept this particular question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to close the debate.

Dr. Nicol: I'd just like to thank the minister. That's great that Albertans will find out how far along they're getting on this process.

Government Accounting Practices

Q42. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

What stage of the process is the government at in implementing the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report to change government accounting practices in order to improve accountability for the government's spending of taxpayers' dollars?

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, this is again another one of the arguments that we need to have public disclosure in terms of where they're at in the implementation process when they've already said that they will be accepting a recommendation. We need to make sure that Albertans are aware of the status of that implementation and what progress is being made to allow both Albertans and the Auditor General to feel confident that our dollars are being wisely spent. So I would encourage all members of the Legislature to accept Written Question 42.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the government to indicate that we're prepared to accept Written Question 42. As the hon. member opposite indicated, the government had indicated acceptance in principle of the Auditor General's recommendation that the government's corporate accounting policies continue to be reviewed on an ongoing basis in consultation with the ministries and the office of the Auditor General. That was communicated to the chair of the Public Accounts Committee on December 15, 2003, I'm given to understand, by the hon. Minister of Finance, and progress has been made in this area. But we would be more than happy to respond by accepting the written question and respond more formally in due course.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to close the debate.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and all Albertans I thank the government for agreeing to provide us with that information. Thank you.

3:50 Health Care Premiums

Q43. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. Of the monies the government receives annually from health care premiums, what amount was remitted by employers for the fiscal year 2002-03 and from April 1, 2003, to February 20, 2004, and of that amount how much was paid by employers on behalf of employees?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, the health care premiums in this province certainly are seen as a heavy burden both by middle-class families that pay out of their own pocket and also by employers who choose to pay either all or part of the health care premiums on behalf of their employees. There has been a considerable debate in this province that has been going on for some time on whether or not the health care premiums should be scrapped altogether, thereby removing this tax burden on Albertans whether they're employers or families or individuals who pay that premium. That premium, Mr. Speaker, is quite high: $1,056 for a family of two or more and half of that amount for Albertans who are single.

As far as businesses in this province and employers are concerned, this health care premium tax really is a payroll tax. It adds to the cost of doing business in this province and makes this province, in relative terms, uncompetitive with most other provincial jurisdictions or territorial jurisdictions in this country. So it is important to pay attention to the magnitude of the cost of health care premium payments by employers on behalf of their employees to see how much this burden is.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's worth noting that the difference between a corporate tax and a payroll tax is as follows: payroll tax is not a tax that is imposed or implemented or required to be paid on net revenue or on profits. It is preprofit, adds to the costs of running a business in the province, whereas the corporate tax is always assessed on the net revenue or the net profits of a business or a corporation. So in the judgment of the New Democrat opposition this payroll tax that employers pay reduces their competitiveness. It adds to the costs of doing business in the province and needs, therefore, to be scrapped.

The request for information that's made by way of this question, therefore, is intended to disclose the magnitude of the burden that employers carry because this payroll tax, in the form of a health care premium tax, is a part of the continuing policy of the government that most Albertans would like to see, in fact, discontinued and scrapped.

So, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the government will accept this request, and I look forward to the response from the House leader and the ministry.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is prepared to accept Written Question 43 with amendments. These amendments have been circulated with our opposition colleague prior to 11 a.m. today.

I would like to move that Written Question 43 be amended by striking out "February 20, 2004," and substituting "February 29, 2004," and striking out "and of that amount how much was paid by employers on behalf of employees." So the amended written question will read as follows.

Of the monies the government receives annually from health care premiums, what amount was remitted by employers for the fiscal year 2002-2003 and from April 1, 2003, to February 29, 2004? So I'd respectfully submit that and hope that the hon. member opposite would be prepared to accept that as an amended question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report that we received the proposed amendment this morning in compliance with the requirements of the Standing Orders. I'm also pleased to note that I find the amendment quite acceptable. In fact, the amendment changes the date from February 20 to February 29, which I think is extremely helpful. As well, I think the second part of the amendment simply clarifies the language of the written question.

So I'm pleased to accept both parts of this amendment and thank the Minister of Children's Services, who had presented this amendment on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness. I'll sit down, Mr. Speaker, with declaring my acceptance of the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move the acceptance of the amended Written Question 43.

Health Care Premium Arrears

Q44. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. For the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03 and from April 1, 2003, to February 20, 2004, what was the total amount paid to collections agencies for collecting arrears on health care premiums broken down by agency?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, again, the intent of the request that is contained in this question is to seek and make public information that's deemed important both by the New Democrat opposition and in the judgment of the New Democrat opposition by most Albertans when they are invited or asked to assess the value of the ongoing policy of this government with respect to the imposition of a health care premiums tax on Albertans, who either pay it out of their own pockets or have someone pay a portion of it or all of it on their behalf, be it this government, be it their employers, or whoever else.

Mr. Speaker, there are lots of Albertans who find it simply impossible to pay these very, very heavy health care premium taxes and in fact find themselves running into default because they fail to be able to pay these premiums on time because they really find it hard on their budgets and on their pocketbooks.

So it's important, I think, for us as a House to be able to assess the variety of costs for implementing this very unpopular and unhelpful taxation policy that the government of Alberta insists on continuing with. Hence the rationale for this question, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness that he has an amendment that he wishes me to bring forward at this time. I'd like to move the amendment which would read as follows: "For the fiscal years 2001-2002, 2002-2003, and from April 1, 2003, to February 29, 2004, what was the total amount paid to collections agencies for collecting arrears on health care premiums broken down by agency?" I would move that particular amendment at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I rise to accept the proposed amendment to the language of Written Question 44. I want to thank the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Deputy Government House Leader for proposing that amendment on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment simply changes one date in Written Question 44; that is, it changes the date from February 20 to February 29, 2004. I think it's an eminently reasonable amendment, and I gladly accept it and thank the minister for his co-operation.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Now on the motion as amended. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Written Question 44 as amended be accepted and supported by my colleagues in this House. I'm pleased that the amended question is an improvement. I want to note that it's an improvement over the text of the question as noted in the Order Paper.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 44 as amended carried]

Health Care Premium Arrears

Q45. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted.
For the fiscal year 2002-03 and from April 1, 2003, to February 20, 2004, how many health care premium accounts were in arrears by one day or more, by three months or more, and by one year or more, and what is the total amount of those arrears in each of these fiscal years?

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, again, the intent of the question is clear, transparent. It's simply an attempt to get information on record which will help us assess the costs of health care premiums policy implementation, the difficulties that arise for ordinary Albertans, middle-class Albertans, when they try to meet the requirements of paying these premiums, which are exorbitant: $1,056 for a two-member family or more and half of that amount for individuals. Certainly, it is a burden on all kinds of businesses in this province, which makes running their businesses more expensive than would be the case if the health care premium tax were scrapped.

So, Mr. Speaker, this information with respect to arrears in these different periods in each fiscal year would help us evaluate the real costs and the burdensomeness of this unnecessary tax on Albertans, whether those Albertans are businesspersons, businesses, families, or individuals.

I move the acceptance of this question, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with respect to Written Question 45 on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to table an amendment to that particular written question, and the amended written question would read as follows:

For the fiscal year 2002-2003 and from April 1, 2003, to February 29, 2004, how many health care premium accounts were in arrears by one day or more, by three months or more, and by one year or more, and what is the total amount of those arrears in each of these fiscal years?

Mr. Speaker, that having been said, I would move that particular amendment at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Deputy Government House Leader for moving this amendment on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. I'm pleased to note that the minister has accepted the spirit and letter of the question and simply makes the one and only change in the question as originally asked, and that is to change the date from February 20, 2004, to February 29, 2004.

I think that it certainly is most acceptable to me to see this date changed as proposed by this amendment. So I would ask everyone, of course, to support this and get on our way to the next question. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close debate on the motion as amended.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move the acceptance of Written Question 45 as amended by the amendment on which the House has just voted unanimously.

Thank you.

[Written Question 45 as amended carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 25, I would move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 14 to 19 inclusive, 23 to 31 inclusive, 34 to 42 inclusive, 44 to 87 inclusive, 90, 93, 94, 96 to 103 inclusive, 106, 107, 122 to 146 inclusive, 159, 160, 162, and 164 to 180 inclusive.

[Motion carried]

Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations IT Costs

M14. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be prepared to accept the motion for a return on behalf of government in the event that an amendment is approved by the House. I move that Motion for a Return 14 be amended by (a) striking out "Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations" and substituting "government of Alberta;" (b) striking out "broken down by company and total dollar amount for each" and substituting "and a listing of vendors providing these services;" and (c) adding at the end thereof "motions for returns currently appearing on the Order Paper as MR15, MR18, MR56, MR60, MR61, MR62, MR70, MR71, MR72, MR73, MR103, MR122, MR123, MR146, MR204, and MR205 be struck from the Order Paper as having been dealt with." A copy of this motion has been provided to the opposition.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hancock: A copy of this motion was provided to Parliamentary Counsel for approval on Thursday, as is required by Standing Order, but was not approved by Parliamentary Counsel pursuant to the Standing Order. I propose that the matter of it being in order be dealt with by the House. I'd be prepared to speak to it now or cede to the hon. member for the point of order.

The Speaker: Well, we're going to deal with the point of order first.

Point of Order

Amendment to Motion for a Return 14

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, I regret that this amendment to amend Motion for a Return 14 is out of order. I'll direct your attention to Standing Order 34(2.1), in which it notes that "amendments to written questions and motions for returns must (a) be approved by Parliamentary Counsel on the sitting day preceding the day the amendment is moved." I have a copy of what was both circulated here in the House and was sent to the Official Opposition this morning, and it does not contain the approval stamp of Parliamentary Counsel.

I note in Beauchesne 579(2) that "an amendment may not raise a new question which can only be considered as a distinct motion after proper notice." In effect, what is being proposed by the Government House Leader here is a new question in that it is substantially changing the intent and the information requested by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

She had requested that the information be broken down. So we're looking for the total dollar amount spent on contracts for information technology services, and what we're going to get here is a listing of vendors. That is a very different response, a different set of information than what was being requested. It was requested in the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie's motion that it be broken down by company and by the total dollar amount that each got and for the fiscal year.

So what we have before us, the amendment that's being proposed, is out of order on two points. One, it has not been signed off by Parliamentary Counsel and therefore cannot be considered here, and two, given its very content, it's asking us to consider a different question than what was asked for by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

I'll note that in Marleau and Montpetit, page 655, an amendment is out of order "if it is inconsistent with a decision that the committee has made regarding a former amendment." Looking at the Speaker's ruling on the amendment to Motion for a Return 10 – and that's now appearing on page 681 of Hansard for March 24, 2004 – the Speaker wisely says that "the amended Motion for a Return 10 that was approved differed from the wording of the other motions for returns that the Government House Leader indicated were similar." I would argue that that is the same case that is being brought forward here.

That Motion for a Return 10 also asked that a number of other motions for returns be struck from the order paper as having been dealt with, and I would argue, Mr. Speaker, that the original intent has not been carried forward into the amendment brought forward by the Government House Leader, and therefore those additional motions for returns that are added in should not be struck as they have not in fact been dealt with and, in providing this information, they wouldn't be dealt with.

I understand what the Government House Leader is trying to do, and I wish I could support him in doing that, but the Official Opposition is well within our rights to ask for the information. As a matter of fact, the government has directed us numerous times to ask for the information through motions for returns and written questions. We've followed their request and brought the request for information through, and we would expect to get the information that we requested.

Having the government amend the original intent to a point where it's no longer what the Official Opposition has asked for – I can't support what the Government House Leader is trying to do. I regret that. I would have been more than willing to work with the government in grouping together motions for returns or written questions if the government had been willing to bring forward the information that we were requesting. In fact, we've already done that today, and I have acknowledged it when it has happened. I'm more than willing to do that.

Rev. Abbott: All you're interested in doing is wasting the time of the House.

Ms Blakeman: There is some heckling happening here from Drayton Valley-Calmar. I'm sure he can join in on the point of order.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, based on Standing Order 34 with the lack of parliamentary approval, on Beauchesne 579(2) with the amendment raising a new question, on Marleau and Montpetit noticing that it is out of order if it's inconsistent with the decision that the committee has already made, setting a standard which in fact the Speaker gave us the ruling on, I would argue that the Government House Leader's amendment is out of order.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, first of all, there is no amendment on the floor. We have a point of order.

The Government House Leader on this point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of points that need to be addressed with respect to the question of whether the amendment can be ruled in order and put on the floor, and I'll start with the last part first, with respect to the argument put by the hon. member opposite that somehow by amending the motion we are changing the scope of the motion.

I would suggest to you that in her own argument she's negative to her argument, because she's indicated that in fact we passed a motion last Monday which made a very similar amendment in terms of the A and B sections of the amendment. The House passed that amendment and passed the motion as amended. Therefore, those portions of the amendment are not out of order.

The same amendment was done to Motion for a Return 10 last week and, in fact, is similar to many types of amendments that are brought before the House from time to time with respect to motions for returns in accordance with, I would suggest, Beauchesne's 567, that says that "the object of an amendment may be either to modify a question in such a way as to increase its acceptability," which is what we've been doing all afternoon by changing dates and things like that and which we did last Monday on Motion for a Return 10 by changing the motion so that it's all government departments and then broken down by company and dollar amounts and a listing of vendors providing those services. We dealt with that at some length last Monday and then passed the motion.

The question that came up as a result of it last Monday was whether by passing that motion as amended it was applicable to all the other motions. Now, that – I'd have to correct the hon. member opposite – was not included in the motion. In fact, it was a point of order that I raised after the motion was passed to ask that it be made applicable to the other motions and that the other motions be struck from the Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker, you quite rightly reserved on that and then came back and advised the House that the motion as passed was not the same as the motions that were still on the Order Paper, and therefore you weren't prepared to strike the other motions on the Order Paper as being redundant. Because the motion passed was amended and the motions that were still on the Order Paper had not been amended, you said: well, it isn't on all fours, and therefore you can't just take them off the Order Paper.

Now, I would direct your attention to what was discussed. In fact, in the March 22 Hansard at page 613 you indicated:

During the debate something else was added to this discussion, and it had to do with the number of other written questions or motions for returns that this was to apply to. That's not part of the motion. It's not part of the amendment. I have no idea how the chair is supposed to determine subjectively to which one of these other motions for returns this particular amendment is to apply. That would be a very unfair situation.

So, Mr. Speaker, the response to that is to make it a part of the motion, bring forward exactly to what other motions it is to apply, and make it a direction of the House in passing the motion that it is to apply to those other motions.

Now, is it appropriate to have one motion apply to other motions? Well, earlier today on one of the written questions there was an amendment put forward to have that written question apply to – and that was Written Question 28 – "the departments referred to in written questions 29, 30, 34, 46, 60 to 65 inclusive," et cetera. So, obviously, it's in order to have a written motion apply to other motions on the Order Paper. It's been done. In fact, it was done earlier today, and that was approved by Parliamentary Counsel.

So we have a situation where the first part of the amendment is clearly in order. We have a situation where the second part of the amendment is clearly in order. It's very difficult to understand how the two parts of the amendment put together are not in order.

Then we come to the question of Standing Order 34(2.1). Standing Order 34(2.1) clearly states, "Amendments to written questions and motions for returns must (a) be approved by Parliamentary Counsel on the sitting day preceding the day the amendment is moved." That's the Standing Order. That's the hurdle I have to get over here because clearly Parliamentary Counsel did not approve this amendment on that date.

Now, the question, Mr. Speaker, is: what is Parliamentary Counsel's role as provided for in the Standing Order? Clearly, the question for Parliamentary Counsel is not whether or not the motion itself is in order or out of order on a substantive basis but, rather, whether it's in an appropriate form to come to the House. Otherwise, Parliamentary Counsel would be usurping the authority of this House in determining what business it can discuss and what is substantive. Clearly, Parliamentary Counsel cannot be in a position where it makes substantive decisions with respect to business that can come before the House. Clearly, it can make decisions with respect to whether it's an appropriate form for the House, and in support of that proposition I would quote again your rulings and discussion before the House.

Mr. Speaker, on March 24 in Hansard at page 681: "When there are difficulties or problems encountered like this, the chair's view is that the primary responsibility for resolving them should rest with the House leaders." I skip a sentence, and then it goes on to say, "It is your Assembly, hon. members, and it is to you that the responsibility falls for dealing with the business of the Assembly." The business of the Assembly deals with how we deal with these written questions and motions for returns. They're an opportunity for private members to put questions on the floor and to request return of documents. Clearly, it's in order for those questions to be on the floor.

But now we have this unique situation where we have on the Order Paper 88 written questions and 210 motions for returns. Even though with the most recent changes of the rules we've expanded the time that's available to private members for private members' business by moving private members' motions to the evening on Mondays and having the hour for private members' motions there, freeing up the afternoon to deal with written questions, motions for returns, and private members' bills, clearly by putting this number of questions on the Order Paper, we will never get to private members' bills unless we find some method of aggregating the business.

Now, it would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is entirely inappropriate to say that the only way that business can be aggregated, that questions can be aggregated is if they're to be accepted or rejected on the face of them, so that the only way you could deal with more than one question would be to accept or reject without amendment. That would seem to be an inappropriate way to deal with this matter because that leaves, then, the only way of dealing with questions, if you're not prepared to accept or reject on the face of them, as dealing with them individually, one by one, and making the amendments.

Then, Mr. Speaker, you're going on to make the same amendment to similar motions which differ only with respect to which department they apply to or which member they apply to. So you're making the same amendment that you would make to all of them, but you'd have to make them individually because the ruling would say that you couldn't aggregate those questions.

The simple answer here, a very straightforward answer, is that there's an amendment that's being proposed. It ought to have been approved by Parliamentary Counsel, not in terms of substance, because it's always for the Speaker on the floor of the House or members on the floor in raising a point of order to argue whether a motion or a bill or anything else is in order or out of order. It is always available on the floor of the House to do that. But I would suggest that it's not in order for Parliamentary Counsel to make that determination. Parliamentary Counsel's role is to determine form, whether it's an appropriate form to come before the House.

So I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that 34(2.1)(a) must be read in that context. If you read it in any other way, it gives Parliamentary Counsel a role which cannot be afforded Parliamentary Counsel but is the order of the Speaker in the House and the members of the House on the floor of the House. I would argue that Parliamentary Counsel should be determined to have approved this because it is in an appropriate form, that it is in order for the House to deal with the motion.

Then the question is: is the motion itself in order? That question has been answered. Written Question 10 last week made the first part of the amendment. Written Question 28 today made the second part of the amendment. If the first is in order and the second is in order, then the whole thing is in order. So substantively it must be in order, and therefore it's open to the House to deal with that question today.

I would submit, Mr. Speaker, then, that we should allow the amendment to proceed and deal with these written questions and motions for returns in a timely way so that the House can deal with the questions that have been put before it, deal with them in a straightforward manner, and then also allow time for private members to deal with private members' bills.

[Ms Blakeman rose]

The Speaker: Hon. member, it was your point of order. You've already participated.

Does anybody else want to participate on this point of order? Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, I saw you move on the point of order.

Rev. Abbott: Yeah, Mr. Speaker. I was going to make some comments, but the hon. Government House Leader said it all. Thank you.

The Speaker: Others on this point of order?

Hon. members, I can understand. I used the word "angst" the other day with respect to the number of questions that might be on the Order Paper. But Monday is private members' day, and it is within the rights of the members to participate by way of written questions and motions for returns.

There were several points raised here this afternoon, and brief comments will be made with respect to these several points. First of all, there were statements made in the House the other day by myself with respect to this particular matter. Actually, considerable progress has been made today with respect to a certain number of these written questions and motions for returns.

The Standing Orders are the rules of this Assembly. The Standing Orders are written by the members of this particular Assembly. If we have a Standing Order, regardless of whether or not the chair likes the Standing Order, the Standing Order has been written by the members after consultation among the members after due diligence by the three House leaders with respect to it. Sometimes they don't even have to consult and sometimes they do not consult with the chair.

So let's take a look at Standing Order 34(2.1), written by the members of the House. It says, "Amendments to written questions and motions for returns must" – not may be, could be, should be but must – "(a) be approved by Parliamentary Counsel on the sitting day preceding the day the amendment is moved" and so on. Now, I look at that. The word "must" says to me that it has to be done. It means that you can't really be subjective about this.

Now, there's one way we could get around this: by asking for unanimous consent to give it the interpretation the Government House Leader has. I dare say and suspect that that probably wouldn't get unanimous consent, but I can do that. Any time we have unanimous consent, we can put away all of this so that we don't have to deal with it. But I suspect that we're not going to get that, so it's kind of hard to deal with an amendment from that perspective.

Secondly, I do believe that I heard the Government House Leader refer to Beauchesne 567, but I also heard the Opposition House Leader refer to Beauchesne 579(2): "An amendment may not raise a new question which can only be considered as a distinct motion after proper notice."

Now, the other day when I stood here, I suggested that, well, there's a way of grouping these things. Number one is that there could be harmony among the three House leaders. They can get together and they can work this out, and that's always the preferred route – always the preferred route – and there seemed to be some approach with respect to that today. The second way, basically, could be by following the procedures that were followed today with respect to the groupings where there are no substantial differences from the original motion to the new amendment, where they're not substantial; that's very important. If you take a group of them and you put them all together and there's no substantial change, what you're doing is just bunching them, and we all agreed that that would be a fine way to go.

This particular amendment, proposed amendment to Motion for a Return 14, which did not meet the test under Standing Order 34(2.1), in essence would not meet the substantive amendment test either. So there are actually several ways of dealing with this if one wants to. One could have a distinct motion. Notice could be given, say, tomorrow or Wednesday, and a motion could be dealt with on a Thursday afternoon to basically group 100 or 125 or 50 of them and say either yes or no to them. That's another way of dealing with it. Can't do it on the following Monday because that's private members' day, so it would have to be done in another way.

So I'm afraid that the point of order has to be upheld. In essence, we cannot proceed with this proposed amendment to Motion for a Return 14. Motion for a Return 14 retains its place on the Order Paper as it currently is. We can leave it there now and make good use of the remaining time this afternoon to deal with some of these other motions for returns which have met the test and could see some further progress this afternoon with respect to what we have. Hopefully, in the ensuing days and the ensuing weeks – perhaps the three House leaders would be able to meet during the Easter break, say four, five, six days. They could spend time on solving this problem and dealing with the House itself pending further review.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Explanation of Speaker's Rulings

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under the provisions of 13(2) asking for you to "explain the reasons for any decision," because I'd like to have you explain to the House in greater scope what you, then, believe the authority of Parliamentary Counsel is with respect to taking substantive decisions away from the House rather than process oriented. You've indicated that 34(2.1) has to be read on the face of it, but is it your understanding that Parliamentary Counsel can make adjudicative decisions with respect to substantive measures and, therefore, take them away from the House? Or is it your understanding of Parliamentary Counsel's role to simply deal with respect to the form of matters coming before the House?

The second question I'd like to understand your rationale on is your ruling with respect to the substantive nature of the motion, because we have dealt in this House, as I mentioned in my argument, with Motion for a Return 10, which did exactly those substantive, if that's what they are, amendments to the motion. We have done that on a regular basis throughout.

We've also dealt earlier today with the question of bringing other motions into the motion, having the House say that by dealing with this motion, we've dealt with those motions. Now, your ruling would purport to say that you can only do that, presumably because we did it today, if you don't amend the motion. However, taking that subsection (c) by itself, I would suggest, belies what you've said. So I'd like to understand better your rationale for saying that that's more substantive than the motion which apparently was in order earlier today.

The Speaker: The chair is not going to get into debate in this Assembly with anyone. The chair will explain and will explain again, and the Government House Leader will listen attentively, please.

The Standing Orders are written by the members of the House. The tradition with respect to Standing Orders and the constitution of the House is essentially that, if at least it's a caring group of people, the three House leaders – that's why we have House leaders in here – will get together, will put ideas on the table, will work towards a resolution of what the constitution or the rules for governance of the House should be.

They are written by the members of the House. Sometimes the chair, the Speaker, may be aware of them. Sometimes the Speaker may not be aware of them. Sometimes the Speaker may be consulted as to whether or not a provision under Standing Orders is an intelligent one, an appropriate one, a functioning one, a desirable one. Sometimes the Speaker might even suggest to the drafters of these Standing Orders that that's really quite inappropriate, that it's not the best direction to go, but it still rests with the House if the House wants to proceed.

Generally – generally – when major changes are made to Standing Orders, governments can use their majority to basically bring about what it is that they want, and sometimes the minority can use its position to veto if in fact you're dealing with respect to questions that require unanimous consent.

But in the case of 34(2.1), "Amendments to written questions and motions for returns must," it says "must," not may be, could be, should be. Now, if the hon. Government House Leader wants me to determine and define what the word "must" is, I will ask for one of the pages to get me a thesaurus. I think that "must" has the connotation that means it's mandatory, that it's not subjective. It doesn't apply in this situation when it works to one's advantage, but it applies in a different situation when it works to someone else's disadvantage.

I repeat again because I don't want any misunderstanding on this at all: "Amendments to written questions and motions for returns must be approved by Parliamentary Counsel on the sitting day preceding the day the amendment is moved." There's no suggestion in here that there has to be a subjective interpretation by anyone with respect to what that means. I dare say that I would suggest that on the basis of the discussion that we just had here a few minutes ago, there seems to be a subjective view of what it means.

I did not write these Standing Orders. They're your Standing Orders. If there's a requirement in the Standing Orders to have a group of three or four members, then, be the interpreters of the constitution, of what these words mean – and perhaps a thesaurus or other dictionary might be found that provides what the word "must" would mean to somebody's satisfaction – then that is an option.

But the fact of the matter is that this is what it says. I can't define that any further than what I've already done on two or three occasions in the last little while. It's not the intent of this chair to basically define the word "must." It's very clear as to what the word "must" would be. As far as anything else, it's been repeated on at least two occasions with respect to that: there is the point of order. This amendment will not be proceeded with under the Standing Orders that we have in this Assembly at this time.

If the hon. members want to get together and change the Standing Orders, that's another subject, but these are our Standing Orders now. Beauchesne is very clear to me on what it says, and I repeat: 579(2). I've always provided another alternative as to how this might be dealt with. There's no further explanation that I can provide with respect to this.

If the hon. Government House Leader or any other member wants to have a private discussion with me in my office, I'd be very happy to have it, but we can't waste any more time in the House. This is private members' day. This is not a debate for lawyers to have a nice court appearance debate.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, with respect, again rising under section 13(2) asking for an explanation. You've read to us Standing Order 34(2.1), and you've emphasized the word "must," but you have not dealt with the word "approved." Nor have you dealt with the way that that Standing Order can be read, which says that "motions for returns must . . . be approved."

So you could read the Standing Order exactly as it's written to say that Parliamentary Counsel must approve an amendment when it's brought to him. Now, clearly that doesn't make sense. The reason for the Parliamentary Counsel to have a role in the process is to make sure that everything is in appropriate form. So what I was asking – and I don't believe this is a lawyer's debate, and I do believe this is important for this House to have discussion on – is the question of what the role of Parliamentary Counsel is in approving an amendment that is brought to him.

Now, I would submit to you that the role of Parliamentary Counsel is approval as to form. But if you wish to say that the Standing Orders prevail and have to be read as they're written, then I would suggest that you have to read it to say that motions for returns must be approved by Parliamentary Counsel; he has no discretion not to approve them. That hardly makes sense, Mr. Speaker.

So, clearly, the role of Parliamentary Counsel must be defined, and that was the interpretation I was asking you for: what's Parliamentary Counsel's role in approving an amendment before it comes before the House? We have many amendments that are brought before the House. They're always initialled by Parliamentary Counsel before introduction. We've argued on occasion as to whether or not they're in order after the Parliamentary Counsel has initialled them. Clearly, the Parliamentary Counsel's function is one as to approval as to form, and that's what we need interpretation on, because if his role is more substantive than that, then you're absolutely right: the Standing Orders need to be amended.

The Speaker: Well, we're having a debate, hon. Government House

Leader, and the hon. Government House Leader should refer to Standing Order 104.

Parliamentary Counsel

- (a) are responsible for the correctness of Bills and of amendments to Bills.

Emphasis on the word “correctness.”

- (b) shall be present, whenever required, at the Table, when any Bill is being considered in Committee of the Whole;
- (c) in the absence of the Clerk and the Clerk Assistant, shall substitute for the Clerk and exercise the authority and discharge the responsibilities normally vested in the Clerk;
- (d) shall act as counsel to the Assembly and members, to committees of the Assembly, to officers of the Assembly and to officers of the Legislature, as required;
- (e) shall assist members in drafting private members’ public Bills when requested;
- (f) shall act as examiner of private Bills in the fulfillment of counsel’s duties under Standing Orders 90 and 99;
- (g) shall transmit to the Clerk of the Assembly for delivery to all members, prior to the commencement of each session of the Legislature, a list of the reports or other periodic statements which it is the duty of any officer or department of the Government or any corporate body to make to the Assembly,
  - (i) referring to the resolution or Act wherein each is ordered,
  - (ii) placing under the name of each officer, department, or corporate body a list of reports or returns required, and
  - (iii) stating the time by which the report or periodic statement is to be tabled; and
- (h) shall prepare, for printing as statutes, the official copies of the Bills enacted by the Legislature; and
- (i) shall transmit to the Clerk for delivery to the Secretary of State, certified, sealed copies of the Bills enacted by the Legislature; subject to such orders as counsel may receive from the Speaker or the Clerk and to respond to the duties of the Parliamentary Counsel and always dealing with the traditions and the customs and the heritage of parliaments as we have in terms of how we deal with them in other matters.

Now, if the argument is with the table officers and the Standing Orders, then this Assembly should basically change the Standing Orders, if that’s the argument, and the Assembly always has the choice and the chance to change the Standing Orders. If the argument here is an interpretation asked for of the chair, the Speaker, because the Speaker upholds the Standing Orders, and if the debate now is a question of confidence in the chair, then the Assembly also has a major responsibility to deal with this by notice of a substantive motion in the chair.

The Standing Orders are very, very clear. They’re written by the Assembly. The chair has written and dealt with the Standing Orders on one or two occasions. The chair has pointed out on the basis of the other materials that we have in here that if there’s going to be a major change, a substantive change in the scope of the question – and if you look at the amendment to Motion for a Return 14, it strikes out “Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations” and substitutes “government of Alberta” – no problem with that – and in (c) adds the following. No problem with that. The substantive change comes in striking out “broken down by company and total dollar amount for each” and substituting “and a listing of vendors providing these services.” There’s a dramatic difference of intent.

This is private members’ day. If an hon. member wants to stand up and move a motion, that member has the right to stand up in this Assembly to move the motion. It is not the government’s afternoon; it’s a private members’ afternoon.

Now, if the motions are the same, if there would have been no change in what was requested in the motion and it would have simply applied to all departments, no problem. If it would have been outlined what they were, no problem. But if there’s going to be a substantive difference, what in essence is happening here is denigrating the role of a private member.

There’s an assumption here that one question having been dealt with would then be dealt with in the same way for all others. These are different questions sometimes from different members to different departments. What their intent is I do not know. I can’t get in anybody’s mind.

All I can ask for is the greatest degree of sense that goes along with this as private members’ day, recognizing that we look at the best utilization of time in this Assembly, recognizing that this is a democracy, recognizing that the majority will always win, understanding that there still is a role for private members.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the basis of your ruling I’m pleased to reject Written Question 14 on behalf of the government.

Ms Blakeman: I’m sorry to hear that, and I regret that the government is refusing to provide the information that we’re looking for, which is fairly simply information just on the contracts for information technology broken down by company and total dollar amounts. I’m sorry that they’re rejecting the request for information.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Department of Sustainable Resource Development IT Costs

M15. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the discussion that we’ve just had relative to Motion for a Return 14, I would note in looking at Motion for a Return 15 that it is almost exactly identical to Motion for a Return 14. The difference between Motion for a Return 15 and Motion for a Return 14 is that Motion for a Return 15 talks about the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development and Motion for a Return 14 talks about the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations. In all other respects it would appear that those motions are identical.

Now, I would refer the House to Motion for a Return 10, which was dealt with last Monday. I don’t have it exactly in front of me, but I think it was dealt with by way of an amendment, which deleted the title – in this case it would be Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development and substituting “government of Alberta” – and deleted a section of it: do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the ministry on contracts for information broken down by company and total dollar amount. So it deleted “broken down by company and dollar amount” and substituted “and a listing of vendors providing these services.” That amendment was passed, as I recall it, on MR 10, and then the amended motion was passed by the House.

It's unfortunate that we passed a motion which is presumably out of order as per your ruling this afternoon, but in any event that's what was done. So we have that amendment and we have MR 10 passed, which provides for the government of Alberta to provide for a return showing the contracts for the government of Alberta broken down by company and dollar amount. Hence, Motion for a Return 15 is redundant, and therefore I would say that it should be rejected on behalf of the government.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Well, I'm afraid I disagree with the Minister of Justice and the Government House Leader. I find that there is a substantial difference between the ministries of Sustainable Resource Development and International and Intergovernmental Relations. I would argue that that is the key to what makes these motions different.

There's going to be a campaign now, I think, from government to try and make it look like we are somehow remiss or at fault for trying to get information from the government, and I think that we're well within our rights to ask for this information. We would like to get it. I don't see that it's that difficult for the government to provide it for us. It's not being provided, and I can't speculate on why the government refuses to provide it, but it's obviously refusing to provide some fairly simple information here.

The minister keeps going back to Motion for a Return 10 and that somehow in the passing of that, all other motions should follow the same example. Again, I look at the division records, and it's quite clear that the government members have a majority and were able to use that majority to force the passage of Motion for a Return 10. That does not mean that that was the information that the Official Opposition was looking for. It does not mean that it then becomes an example to be used in all other instances where the Official Opposition is seeking information and the government does not give it to us and wants to amend and make it more vague. So I would refute the constant reference that the Government House Leader makes to Motion for a Return 10 that it is somehow an example of what should happen here.

As I've said before, Mr. Speaker, I'm more than happy to work with the Government House Leader and the third party House leader where we are able to successfully negotiate that we will get the information we are seeking. I did already use the example that happened earlier today where the motion was exactly the same except that it was allowing the inclusion of other named ministries. But to have a motion that now comes in two parts, one amending the intent or the information being sought and the second asking that additional motions be struck because they are included in it, is simply not acceptable, and the Speaker has already ruled on that.

You know, the government has all the power here. We're merely the opposition doing our best to seek information. The government repeatedly put us towards asking these questions in this venue and has refused to provide us the information in other venues. So what we've come down to is once again the government using its overwhelming majority to try and bash the Official Opposition on the head. I regret that such simple information as a dollar amount spent on technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for the 2002-2003 fiscal year is beyond the government's ability to provide, and I do once again plead for common sense, some cool heads, and support for the motion as presented. Thank you.

Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development IT Contracts

M16. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the current information technology services contract tendering policy and process for the Ministry and Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move an amendment to Motion 16 such that the amendment would strike out "the Ministry and Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development" and substitute "all ministries and departments in the government of Alberta referred to in motions for returns 17, 50, 51, 54, 63, 74, 76, 77, 106, 107, 124, 125, 126, 127, 144, 145, and 206." The motion as amended would then read:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the current information technology services contract tendering policy and process for all ministries and departments in the government of Alberta referred to in motions for returns 17, 50, 51, 54, 63, 74, 76, 77, 106, 107, 124, 125, 126, 127, 144, 145, and 206.

Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the amendment, I would point out to the House that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the previous motion has complained about the lack of information that the government is prepared to provide. In fact, by substituting the amendment here, which deals with all ministries and departments of the government, we're expanding the information that's going to be provided because it will be done for all departments of government rather than being done on an individual basis as and when a particular critic might put their three or four motions on the table.

In fact, what's happened in this House under our Order Paper is that if you look at it, there are groupings of written questions and motions for returns, so it would appear – and I don't intend to make any allegation against any member, but I just surmised from looking at it that each opposition critic has decided to come forward with virtually the same question with respect to each of their departments, and one or two haven't done it. So we have written questions that are identical for all intents and purposes with respect to most but all not all departments of government.

Well, I think we can correct that oversight, Mr. Speaker, by having it deal with all departments of government. Rather than dealing with it on an individual one-by-one basis, we can approve an amendment which aggregates them all into the same motion and deals with them all at one time, thus saving some essential time in this House so that we can deal with other private members' business.

Now, I don't deny for a moment that private members have the right to put questions on the Order Paper, but when questions are put on the Order Paper where they deal with each individual department and deal with exactly the same return for each department, then it seems to me that it makes sense to aggregate them together and to deal with them all at once.

You've ruled earlier, Mr. Speaker, that one can't make a substantive amendment to a motion. On the previous motion the member was saying that we weren't providing all of the information. Well, in fact, the reality is that the amended Motion for a Return 10, just to use as an example when speaking to this amendment, actually does expand the information which is available to the opposition.

Now, it doesn't necessarily put it in a form that's easy for them to read. I grant that. What it does is provide the same information for all departments of government. What it does is show the dollar amount on contracts and a listing of vendors for the services. This is relevant because now they're asking for the policies relating to the contracts.

So what they will get under Motion for a Return 10 is a return on all departments of government with the dollar value of contracts and a listing of the vendors, and of course they can find out how much each vendor gets by looking at what we colloquially call the blue book or the listing that's published every year with respect to how much is paid to any individual or corporation in the province of Alberta. That's all a matter of public record.

Now, one of the problems with motions for returns is that it's not so simple as to say: why not give us this information? We have civil servants in this province who are doing yeoman's service on behalf of Albertans providing the services that they've been hired to provide, and we want to keep them doing that. We do not believe it's appropriate or useful to sideline those people who are out there making sure the courts are open every day, making sure the cheques are delivered on time, making sure that the program delivery happens. To take them off those tasks to squirrel through files or through information to prepare a report so that we can table it and give it to the opposition when that information is readily available to the opposition in documents that are already published does not make sense.

So to aggregate the questions as one, to say that we'll respond on behalf of all departments to save them the time of cluttering the Order Paper with the individual departments and to amend the motion in a way, not in this motion but in others, to aggregate the information, to put it in a more answerable form is an entirely appropriate way to go. It results, Mr. Speaker, in the opposition getting more information, not less, and points them in a manner in which they can use that information.

They can get the additional information they need from already published material without the downside of using up civil service time. These people are being paid to do useful jobs on behalf of the people of Alberta, to serve Albertans, and instead they want to sidetrack them to find answers to 210 motions for returns and then complain when we try and put them together so that you can get a comprehensive report that's got more information than was requested, not necessarily in the same form, because sometimes in order to get the information, it's necessary to change the question to get it into a more answerable form, and that's what we've purported to do.

I would ask the House to support this amendment so that we can take a number of those questions – in fact, 17 plus the one we're debating, so 18 – off the Order Paper and save us the problem of dealing with another four or five when they get around to putting those ones on the Order Paper, Mr. Speaker. So I'd ask the House to accept this amendment.

Ms Blakeman: I'm very happy to support this amendment. It cannot have gone by the notice of the Government House Leader, who is a learned man and particularly learned in exactly the sort of issues we're dealing with here, which is the specificity of language and administrative law, that the argument that he and I are having today, ably watched over by the Speaker, is about whether or not the changes substantially change the motion. Right here I'm more than willing to accept this because the information that the opposition is seeking is exactly the same and it is adding in the rest of those departments.

Now, why did we do this one by one and name every department? Because we wanted the information from every department. If the government is willing to give us the exact the information that we asked for for every department, we don't have a problem, and I've been very clear about that.

The wording is exactly the same between the two. We've got: "Current information technology services." Looking at the amended motion: "Current information technology services." "Contract tendering policy and process." "Contract tendering policy and process" for all ministries or for the ministry. We are very happy to accept this when you are going to give us the information we are seeking. Therefore, I am very happy to support this.

The opposition has no interest in being intransigent on this one. We have interest in getting information – and that is why we are here – when the information that is being offered and the information that is being sought are the same. But when the Government House Leader tries to extrapolate this further on and make some other motion in which Parliamentary Counsel will recognize that it is not the same, the Speaker recognizes that it's not the same, then we are not in agreement any longer.

I'm more than willing to support this motion. It gives us the information we're seeking. It gives it for all of the ministries that we're seeking it for, which includes the office of the Premier, Economic Development, Environment, Government Services, Energy, Seniors, Justice and Attorney General, Community Development, Innovation and Science, Learning, Solicitor General, Gaming, Public Affairs, Transportation, Infrastructure, Municipal Affairs, and Children's Services.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Now we'll close the debate. The motion is amended then.

Mr. Hancock: Could we not continue debate on the motion itself?

The Speaker: Well, we can. I haven't recognized . . .

Mr. Hancock: I've already spoken.

The Speaker: You've already spoken on it. So who else wants to debate?

Mr. Hancock: I just assumed that others might wish to.

The Speaker: Anybody else?

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you for the information.

[Motion for a Return 16 as amended carried]

The Speaker: This motion having been done now takes off the Order Paper the following aggregated motions as well: 17, 50, 51, 54, 63, 74, 76, 77, 106, 107, 124, 125, 126, 127, 144, 145, and 206. They're not to return; they're gone. It can be done.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would request unanimous consent of the House to leave this order of business and move to private members' bills.

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 203
Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes
Amendment Act, 2004

[Adjourned debate March 1: Mr. Lord]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to join the debate on second reading of Bill 203, the Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, sponsored by the Member for Calgary-West. This bill seems to propose reasonable amendments to the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act.

I do not think that the bill will be a cause for concern by the Alberta government. No one is going to get rich from the CPP credits. However, these credits will become very important for people living on fixed incomes in their retirement years. I agree with other speakers who believe that Bill 203 addresses an issue that should receive more attention. The notion of opting out of the CPP credit-splitting program was granted to the provinces by the federal government almost 18 years ago.

Rev. Abbott: Eighteen?

Mr. Cao: Yes, 18 years ago.

Alberta would not be the first province to take advantage of this option. This isn't groundbreaking legislation, but it is a sensible amendment.

For most people planning for retirement or living with financial independence in their later years is a distant concern. Retirement, pensions, and RRSPs are a minor consideration for most Canadians. In their initial form CPP credits may not be as valuable as other property; however, some people qualify for coverage from the CPP. The real value of CPP credits shows their monetary value in the form of a regular cheque sent by the federal government.

Bill 203 will hopefully motivate divorced couples to reconsider the importance of their public pension regardless of its size. This bill clears the way for divorced and separated couples to equally split or otherwise divide their Canada pension plan credits gained during their marriage.

As we heard through our debate last Monday, people place varying degrees of importance on CPP credits. Some believe that credits should be on the bargaining table as an asset when proceeding with a divorce or separation settlement. Others feel that CPP credits do not offer a great deal of wealth compared to other savings and are therefore easily discarded. I think that the attitude towards CPP credits will change over time. As a person comes closer to retirement age, they will look for opportunities to gain as much equity as possible in an effort to secure more financial independence.

CPP credits may not be as highly regarded by people in their late 30s or early 40s. Some people in their peak income-earning years do not believe that CPP credits are worth a great deal and can be easily traded for some other property gained during marriage. This attitude changes when people seriously consider their financial options as they approach retirement. The seemingly insignificant CPP credits can be a valuable and stable source of income to offset regular expenses such as utility bills.

Right now without Bill 203 a person can attempt to reclaim at any future date the CPP credits that were agreed to be the rightful property of their former spouse in the spousal agreement. Legally there is little recourse for people who lose this portion of their credits even though the signed waiver is a standard legal agreement.

The federal legislation states that in order for the provinces to opt out of the program and agree not to split their CPP benefits, they must pass provincial legislation allowing for this agreement. Bill 203 will take this loophole away from people who attempt to reclaim a part of their portion that they willingly gave to their former spouse during a divorce.

This bill goes further. Assuming former spouses find out about this legal grey area, there is an important provision that makes the CPP credit-splitting agreement binding to June 4 of 1986. As we've heard from the Member for Calgary-West, this date was not chosen randomly. Amendments to the Canada Pension Plan Act to allow provinces to opt out of credit splitting were introduced on June 4, 1986. Section 55.2(3) states that a spousal agreement entered into on or after June 4, 1986, contains a provision that indicates the intention of the spouses or former spouses that there be no division of unadjusted pensionable earnings.

A few speakers here in second reading, some in Canada's legal community, have argued that CPP credits are part of the federal social program and should not be negotiable. I would agree that there is a significant social theme to the Canada pension plan. However, we must remember that a divorce is based mostly on division of property. The negotiating that goes along with the divorce fuels angry feelings and ill will exchanged between the two parties.

Private and provincial pension plans can be split or otherwise distributed in a divorce. From a financial perspective the only difference between the Canada pension plan and other pensions is the source of funds. During a divorce property is seen by some couples as much more than simple material items. It is seen as an entitlement. As a result, everything gained during a divorce is negotiable, and this includes CPP credits. At the time of a divorce CPP credits may seem useless to some Albertans, but over time and in the event of retirement or disability these credits become a stable source of income.

Mr. Speaker, imagine if a former spouse were able to claim other property attained during the marriage, such as a vehicle or house. I can assure you that the debate would be short and action from the government to remedy the situation would be swift. However, one of the differences between CPP credits and other property is that credits do not provide an immediate financial gain. The importance placed upon CPP credits will vary with every divorce. Bill 203 simply ensures that couples divorced since June 1986 adhere to their signed agreement and no future entitlement can be claimed. The bill also ensures that couples going through a divorce in the future will have the choice to choose how the CPP credits are divided.

Mr. Speaker, according to Statistics Canada there were 8,176 divorces in Alberta in the year 2000. This is a significant number of people who may not be aware of the provision surrounding the splitting of CPP benefits. Bill 203 could serve to bring a heightened understanding of this issue.

Some may argue that this bill overestimates the importance of CPP credits. The amount of time and money Canadians dedicate to retirement should be enough for this Assembly to move forward and pass Bill 203. According to the national survey only 1 in 3 Canadians have adequately planned for retirement. Another way of looking at this is that over 65 per cent of Canadians will not have financial independence when they reach their retirement age.

Passing Bill 203 will help people realize that the CPP credit-splitting program is available to divorced couples. Albertans should be encouraged to take some responsibility to plan for their retirement. CPP credits will not be enough to provide full financial security after retirement.

Hopefully, Bill 203 will send a message to Albertans that pension credits do have value and that retirement options should be taken more seriously. Not proceeding with Bill 203 would mean that this government will continue to allow the opportunity by some to claim CPP credits that are not rightfully theirs. This bill fills a significant legislative gap that will become very important as Canada's aging population reaches retirement.

Mr. Speaker, the other part of Bill 203 that I would like to refer to is the protection clause. Bill 203 also protects former spouses from people who may see an opportunity to nullify the agreement to share CPP pensions. For this I want to support the bill.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Calgary-West, by recognizing you, this would end the debate. I've noticed that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford still wishes to participate. Sorry. Debate continues until all members have had a chance within the time frame.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll be brief just so that the hon. member opposite has plenty of occasion to get her words on the record before time expires.

As all members know and understand, when a marriage does break down, it is the mandatory policy of the federal government for the partners to equally split the Canada pension plan credits accrued during the marriage. This policy was brought forward in 1987 to recognize that both spouses, regardless of whether they worked outside or inside the home, are guaranteed some form of pension on retirement.

The policy was designed to be automatic. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that it is not automatic, and at any time after the dissolution of the marriage either partner is able to apply for a share of the pension plan benefits. This bill seeks to put some certainty to that, and for that reason I endorse it wholeheartedly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 203, Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. This bill, sponsored by the hon. Member for Calgary-West, has far-reaching implications for men and women who break a matrimonial relationship and then seek to carve out their own futures.

We have widely consulted with groups likely to be affected by this bill and the amendment that it seeks to make to Canada pension plan credits statutes as they exist now. We've been receiving some expressions of concern which are extremely serious if this bill were to become law.

Currently in the case of a relationship breakdown either spouse can apply for division of CPP credits accumulated during that relationship. If such a request is made by either partner, the credits are totalled and divided equally between the spouses. There are no mechanisms for appealing or disputing whether the credits should be split. If a request is made, the split is automatic. It is not affected by whether a divorce settlement has stipulated that the credits not be split. So the bill amends the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act to eliminate the automatic splitting and to encourage or force ex-spouses to make an intentional decision about whether CPP credits will be split as part of the settlement.

Mr. Speaker, we need to keep in mind the fact that marital relationships, particularly those that break down and lead to dissolution of the relationship, a split in the relationship, are often bitterly contested relationships. They are attended by bitter disputes, contestations, arguments before those relationships reach a breaking point.

Now, there are certain assumptions in the bill. The bill talks about providing choice to spouses who may have walked away from their relationship, and the choice is seen as a good thing, no doubt. Choice also appeals to the question of equality. It provides sort of equal opportunities for former spouses to choose between either splitting the CPP credits or not. On the face of it it sounds very nice, sounds very reasonable, Mr. Speaker.

When you look at it from the point of view of spouses who as a rule in a marital relationship are in a position of inequality, in a position of not being able to act as if they were equal partners – and this situation of unequal partnership is a result of not just one particular law but long-held traditions and histories of spousal relationships – then I think that one needs to acknowledge that merely seeking formal equality is not enough. Conditions, a substantive side of the equation, need to be taken into account.

I think I needn't remind the House that it's only in recent years, perhaps less than 20 years ago, closer to 15 years ago, in 1986, '87 I think, that the legislation was changed, issuing an entitlement to a fairer split in the course of marriage. That was, Mr. Speaker, the mid-80s, the late '80s. It was the era when 50-50 property split came about. Before '87 women would be missing out on access to public pension plans and a fair split in the matrimonial property that was created during the period of marriage. There used to be a three-year limit to apply, and the government removed that ultimately. So no matrimonial legislation could take that federally entrenched right away from the spouse who sought this split, in most cases the women in the relationships. This current legislation before us, Bill 203, would allow people to contract out of this requirement.

The problem is, Mr. Speaker, that those rights, when opened back to negotiation, are often given away for nothing in a relationship when it is a relationship of unequal power, unequal means, and unequal standing. There is very little consideration given in this bill to that kind of situation. In a marriage where one spouse is at a disadvantage by not being able to get that split, I think that's a situation that, in my view, is not appropriately addressed in this bill. It's especially, I think, important for older women.

It's very difficult to quantify the worth of these legislated rights to equal split in CPP credits, Mr. Speaker. People often in desperation are not able to assess what they may be giving up. The current law, as it presently exists, in a sense guarantees that there is no way that the CPP split can become a bargaining chip, but if this legislation is passed, this is precisely what would happen. Spouses in that kind of conflict relationship, particularly mothers and women, would sometimes find that they're desperate about getting some sort of a settlement, especially when children are involved, and under those conditions a woman could feel enormous pressure to give up a CPP split in return for a speedier settlement. Currently some women give joint custody just to get the divorce settled.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's those kinds of concerns that have been brought to our attention by people that we have been consulting on this bill, and we have consulted quite broadly with respect to this bill. The bill is sort of typical of minds that make assumptions that we are all treated equally and we are in fact all living under conditions of not only formal equality that the law might entitle us to but actual material conditions. That is not the case, unfortunately. I have in my hand a document which is . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, your time has now elapsed.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I thought the bell had expired debate.

I appreciate an opportunity to also get on the record regarding Bill 203, the Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act. Certainly, we are considering amending the Domestic Relations Act and the Family Law Act so that spouses or common-law partners may enter into a written agreement that notwithstanding the Canada pension plan there will be no division between them of unadjusted pensionable earnings. Now, the amendments of Bill 203 certainly deal with the division of assets after a divorce or a separation, as was mentioned, but Bill 203 has the potential to negatively discriminate against the lower income earner in the relationship, which is more often than not the female.

Now, I would urge all hon. members to be careful when debating Bill 203. When we have a bill that seeks to govern the division of unadjusted pensionable earnings and the entitlement to the subsequent pension and thus will have an impact on spouses and common-law partners after a divorce or a separation, the inevitable consequence of a written agreement made under Bill 203 is that the spouse or partner with the larger pension will benefit over the spouse or partner with the smaller pension. More often than not, Mr. Speaker, this will penalize the female in the relationship, especially, as I said earlier, older women who are homemakers and did not earn a pension.

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Assembly stands adjourned till 8 o'clock.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 29, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/29

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Please be seated.

With the members' consent may we revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and an honour this evening to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly members of the 1st St. Albert Scouts. They are seated in the public gallery here this evening. They are accompanied by their two leaders, Stephen Maunder and Larry Snidal. I'd like to indicate that Stephen works with Alberta Environment, for which we are very honoured and pleased. I'd ask the Scouts to rise as I call their names, and I'd ask both Scout leaders to stay standing while I make these introductions, please. The Scouts' names are John Delorme, Jordan Snidal, Justin Maunder, Zac Keith, Shaun Boddez, and Ryan Johnson. I had the honour this evening of speaking with these fine young gentlemen, and they are very intelligent and very well versed on what is before us in debate here on the floor. I'd ask everyone to give them a very warm welcome.

Health Care Premiums

505. Dr. Taft moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to eliminate health care premiums.

[Debate adjourned March 22: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to respond to the motion put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. This motion calls upon the government to remove health care premiums for all Albertans, thereby on the one hand eliminating premiums for Albertans but on the other hand seeking a new source of revenue to sustain Alberta's health care system.

I agree that the issue of eliminating premiums has come up from time to time, in fact many times. I know that many Albertans do believe that they ought not to pay health care premiums. It is important to note at this time that approximately 60 per cent of Alberta seniors pay either no health care premiums or only partial premiums. Health care is important to Albertans and, indeed, to all Canadians, but if health care premiums were to be removed, we would need to take steps to make up for the shortfall in health funding caused by the abolition of health care premiums.

My position, Mr. Speaker, is that we would have to take these steps within an overall framework of health reform, not make a decision in isolation. It isn't simply that we're living in a system that costs a lot of money. What we're doing in government is administering a system that Albertans care for that costs exponentially more money each and every year. So we're not just fighting to keep an even amount of money. Every year we need to fight to get more money into the health care system, an 8 to 10 per cent increase per year. Common logic suggests that this continual increase in cost needs to stop.

We in Alberta are fortunate to have several sources of revenue from which to draw, thereby helping to ensure that health care funding only comprises roughly 35 per cent of our provincial budget. In other provinces we're looking at closer to 45 to 50 per cent of the budgets being spent on the costs associated with health services. Given the rise in cost, it is conceivable that Alberta's health care costs will continue to creep up to those percentages if we do not take steps to limit the growth.

So while health care is the priority, it also presents onerous costs, which means that for the sake of argument if we are going to take away a source of funding, then we need to ensure that we have a plan to either reduce health care services or a plan to make up those lost dollars. Then we'd have to get the money from somewhere, and where would we get it from? The federal government? Well, no one on this side is holding his or her breath for that to happen despite the promises being made by the Prime Minister.

When the Prime Minister was Finance minister of Canada, he was responsible for gutting health care funding to the provinces. It's pretty clear that when it comes to health care, he's a major part of the problem. What we've been left with is a system in which the federal government kicks in only 16 per cent of health care funding in all provinces. My hon. friends across the way will agree that this is far short of the 50 per cent the feds are supposed to provide under the Canada Health Act.

So what have we got? We've got provinces straining to meet their health care commitments alongside all of the other commitments they need to meet: schools, roads, children's programs, housing for low-income seniors and the working poor, and so on. We have the federal government not meeting their commitments, and then expecting us to get excited when they say that they'll kick in an extra $2 billion to be divided amongst all the provinces. The offer falls well short, but of course we'll take it because it's owed. Let's be honest: the extra federal contribution amounts to enough money to pay for nine days of health care delivery in Alberta.

It doesn't make sense that the feds are only kicking in this much, especially considering that they've had record surpluses for the past five years. What have they done with that money? Not paid down their debt. The situation created is appalling, Mr. Speaker. The federal government is swimming in a pool of excess dollars while health care systems across the country are struggling to stay afloat. These excess dollars should be used to fill provincial health care pools, but you'd have to be out in the deep end to believe that this situation is going to be changed by the current Prime Minister. So with all due respect to the opposition across the way we're not holding our breath over here.

So if it's not coming from the federal government, then where is the money coming from? We hear that it would come perhaps from taxes or oil revenues, but this won't work either. Albertans have told us that they do not want their taxes raised. Albertans have told us that they support our broad-based, low single-rate tax plan, so for us to turn around and increase taxes would in short be against the wishes of Albertans. Oil revenues aren't the answer either. We've already embarked upon a plan to sustain our budgets by taking oil revenues and depositing them for the future, and eliminating health care premiums for the simple sake of replacing them with money from oil reserves is not the answer. These approaches don't break the fundamental problem, which is that many people think that health care is free or that it should be.

An Hon. Member: It's not?

Ms Kryczka: No. Further, it doesn't fit with the principles of running a sustainable government for today and for many years down the road. So these aren't real solutions, and those who want to replace health care premiums therefore have to look elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, it might be instructive for the Liberals to look at the Mazankowski report if they're looking for substitutions to health care premiums. The Mazankowski report raises several options that we could look at that may have the ability to replace health care premiums. These include options such as user fees, making health care services taxable benefits, introducing a dedicated health tax, supplementary insurance, privately funded and privately delivered health services, medical savings accounts, and variable premiums. Many of these are rejected outright for a variety of reasons. Some contravene the Canada Health Act, some are discriminatory, and others go against the fundamental pillar of health care in our country, which is that people who are truly sick deserve first-rate care and should not be denied access to our system due to an inability to pay.

Others such as medical savings accounts are not rejected. Medical savings accounts, or MSAs, are built upon the premise that individuals are allocated a set amount of health care dollars per year. Depending upon the design of an MSA an individual could carry unspent money over from year to year, thereby giving them a fairly accurate picture of the price of their use of the health care system. As well, government would be there to pick up the cost of those health procedures that come with heavier price tags. However, given the discussion of MSAs it is important to note that the money has to go into the MSAs from somewhere and thus leaves us back at the same question I started with: where is the money going to come from?

One of the things that we need to understand about replacing health care premiums is that it ought to be discussed only within a responsible plan for comprehensive health reform. The Liberals have raised this as a one-off issue, and doing so plays irresponsibly with a lot of the emotions of Albertans who do not like to pay health care premiums. Health care premiums can be a lightning rod for some people, so it's easy to score political points by saying that they should be eliminated, but we have to remember that the premiums fit within a larger scheme of health care considerations.

When we discuss health care premiums or raise the subject of the elimination of premiums, we should consider the bigger picture. We should responsibly present the options and some of the concerns that are raised by the options. We should lay out the challenges that are posed by the growth of health care funding. We should lay out the challenges posed by the increasing costs of health care. This motion does not do any of this, and this is why I'd like my colleagues to vote against Motion 505.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, we have a request for reversion to Introduction of Guests. Are you agreed?

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to introduce two employees of the county of St. Paul who are here these next three days for their spring convention. I'd like to first of all introduce the chief executive officer, Kim Heyman, if I could ask her to stand, please, and also the chief superintendent of public works, Mr. Leo DeMoissac. If I could ask the Assembly to please give them the traditional warm welcome.

Health Care Premiums

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] The single clap is too kind. I would just like to say to all members that you only have to endure me for one more week and the Member for Lethbridge-East one more day.

Mr. Speaker, just before I start, I really have to congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Manning and his wife and three older children on the arrival of their brand spanking new baby boy. Congratulations. I know that that was a long-awaited date, and we hope everybody is doing well at home. Nine pounds, three ounces. That's a good size.

Mr. Speaker, on this motion. We have before us an excellent Motion 505, elimination of health care premiums. It's long been the situation for the Official Opposition to have supported the elimination of health care premiums in this province. We are one of only two Canadian provinces that still charge these premiums, and it truly is a regressive tax. Anyone who has ever studied economic modelling or the impact of regressive taxes on lower middle-income families or those on fixed incomes knows that it is one of the worst and most diabolical ways that a government can raise taxes.

Mr. Mason: Well, that lets these guys out.

Ms Carlson: No, that does not let these guys out, hon. member. Well, they haven't studied it, but diabolical in terms of regressive taxes they are.

We've seen, Mr. Speaker, that recently the burden has become even greater. Even though there were many musings from this government back in 2001, I believe it was, that they also were thinking of eliminating health care premiums, what did we see them actually contribute to doing? That was increasing those premiums by 30 per cent as soon as they had won an election, which is what often happens. In 2001, prior to that election, they talked about eliminating them, but within a month after the election up the premiums go by more than 30 per cent. This was an increase that attacked all families, those on fixed incomes, seniors particularly, who in previous administrations had been exempt from paying these premiums.

Once again we heard last fall that there was a possibility that at least premiums might be eliminated for either low-income seniors or those on fixed incomes. We all awaited the announcement in this year's budget, but it didn't happen, Mr. Speaker. That's really too bad because it means that this government isn't listening to those people who are hardest hit by regressive taxes, and they choose instead to take other options.

I disagree with the former speaker's comments about having some other way to pay for these taxes. First of all, there's a fair amount of administration involved in administering this premium, a fair number of dollars that are written off each year from people whom they can't collect from. When you net that out, the net impact on the tax base is negligible, particularly when you see what impact keeping those dollars in the hands of low-income people every month means in terms of the economic spinoff. They come immediately right back into the economy. It isn't like they're hoarded away somewhere and taken out of the cash flow of the province. So there are other real economic spinoffs to keeping those dollars in circulation.

We really believe that it is time to eliminate health care premiums. We have just seen a very lowball budget come into this Assembly where oil and gas revenues are underestimated by a minimum of a billion dollars.

An Hon. Member: That's easy for you to say.

Ms Carlson: It is easy for me to say. I stand here and say right now that just before election time we're going to see all kinds of election goodies and giveaways again, and the government is going to say: oh, you know, we do have a huge surplus here.

What I'd like this government to do is to actually project their revenues based on reasonable economic models, which is not what happened. They completely lowballed this budget. They're coming in with a huge surplus already and at what cost? At a cost to those people in this province who can't afford to carry the weight for these guys while they stock away a lot of dollars to give away at election time. It's the wrong way for them to be running the government.

It's time for them to put some money in the pockets of people who need it. Those would be people on fixed incomes, low-income people, seniors. The dividends to all of you at election time are huge from that because who's going to be voting with their pocketbook this time? It's going to be seniors, and you're going to feel the impact of that. So there will come a day when you rue the day that you didn't do some simple, forward-looking steps like eliminating health care premiums.

I urge everybody to think about this this evening and perhaps change your minds and vote for the people of this province. Support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to add my comments to those of the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. However, they'll be quite different on Motion 505. That's a motion to eliminate health care premiums. I wish to quote from Premier Tommy Douglas' speech which ended the great medicare debate in the province of Saskatchewan in the Legislature in October of 1961. I can't do the accent.

We propose that the family tax, which we admit is a regressive tax, since there is a flat rate on every family, and therefore bears no relationship to ability to pay, should be kept as small as possible. We propose that the balance of the cost – probably two-thirds of the cost – ought to be raised by factors which have a measure of ability to pay.

So he's talking about that this family tax or premium that should be about 33 and a third per cent. Then he summed up his speech.

Every person in the province who is self-supporting and able to pay a relatively small per capita tax, will be eligible for care and those who are not self-supporting will be covered by other programs.

I want to say that I think there is a value in having every family and every individual make some individual contribution. I think it has psychological value. I think it keeps the public aware of the cost and gives the people a sense of personal responsibility. I would say to the members of this House that even if we could finance the plan without a per capita tax, I personally would strongly advise against it. I would like to see the per capita tax so low that it is merely a nominal tax, but I think there is a psychological value in people paying something for their [health] cards. It is something which they have bought; it entitles them to certain services. We should have the constant realization that if those services are abused and costs get out of hand, then of course the cost of the medical care is bound to go up.

Alberta members do realize that Alberta's health care premium covers roughly only 13 per cent of our health care budget, which is well below Tommy Douglas' suggested per capita of 33 and a third. Progressive taxes that people are lauding cover 87 per cent of the health care budget. When hon. members consider what the average Albertan pays to own a motor vehicle, operate it, license it, and insure it, our health care premiums are really quite reasonable and certainly manifest the spirit enunciated by the father of medicare in Canada. I agree with Tommy Douglas. Let us keep the health care premium in Alberta.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to the motion before us this evening dealing with the elimination of health care premiums. I would like to respond to the previous speaker.

At the time that Tommy Douglas made those statements, the costs of the health care system were substantially less than they are today. We've heard the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness go on and on and on about the rapidly escalating costs of the health care system. When Tommy Douglas spoke those words, the health care system was far simpler and less expensive than it is today. When he talked about a nominal cost to remind people that the health care system does actually have to be paid for and is not free, something I entirely agree with, he was not talking about the magnitude of health care premiums that are paid by the people of this province today in a much more expensive health care system with much larger budgets.

Certainly, I doubt very much that Tommy Douglas would consider the kind of health care premiums we pay today, over a thousand dollars in the case of most families, to be nominal. If the hon. member did quote Mr. Douglas correctly, he did use the words "nominal" and "as small as possible," and I would ask members of this House if they believe that these fees are as small as possible. They raise nearly a billion dollars for the provincial Treasury, which is my next point, Mr. Speaker. These monies are not put into the health care system. They are a tax that flows directly into the general revenues of the province.

Now, what could we do that would be less onerous to remind people that the health care system is expensive and does have a cost? One thing that I recall, Mr. Speaker, was a printout of the medical services used and the costs that were charged the health care system that was sent on an annual basis, so every family knew exactly what had been charged to the system on their behalf, what procedures, and how much they cost. That, in my view, would go far, far further in drawing to people's attention the actual cost.

It has the added benefit of being a check against delivery. In other words, if the health care system has been charged for services or procedures that were not actually delivered – and that is a possibility – then there is an opportunity through that system for the prevention of fraud. So if we are sincere about trying to remind people of the cost of the health care system, that would go far further than the practice of this government to charge very high health care premiums.

Now, it's interesting that there was a 30 per cent increase because if you read the Mazankowski report, it proposed that there be far greater increases in health care premiums than just a mere 30 per cent increase. I also recall the Minister of Health and Wellness talking about how the government was going to adopt and embrace all of the health care recommendations contained in the Mazankowski report. That suddenly stopped, Mr. Speaker, and, fortunately, other proposals such as delisting of services and further privatization seem to have been stalled. Now it would appear that the Premier has got a new fire in his belly for so-called health care reform.

But I note that the Graydon report, if I can call it that, Mr. Speaker, without breaking the rules, has not been released by the government. Here we have another one of these secret all-Tory backbench committees that consults with no one, talks to nobody that we're aware of, and makes a report that we never see. Apparently, it is so unpopular, according to the Minister of Health and Wellness, that the government doesn't want to release it. Now, under some pressure, the government has indicated that it will eventually release it but only when it's all been wrapped in a public relations campaign manufactured by the best spin doctors that the government has from its propaganda bureau, the Public Affairs Bureau.

So the question is: where is the government going with health care premiums? The Premier has also hinted from time to time that there may in fact be an elimination of health care premiums for seniors. In fact, he's promised that. We're expecting that as the government progresses and we get a little closer to the election, this will be announced by the government. It's not contained, as it ought to be, in this budget because all of the goodies in the budget aren't actually in the budget. They're going to be rolled out one after another so that the government can maximize the propaganda benefit thereof.

I would say this: if the government is at last going to keep one of its promises and eliminate health care premiums for seniors, then congratulations to the government. Certainly, the opposition, and the New Democrat opposition in particular along with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, who is an honourable member of the opposition, in my view, on this issue, has pushed the government very hard into a corner, where it's finally had to do what it promises. If that happens, then some congratulations are due to the government, and many more congratulations are due to groups like the Official Opposition and the New Democrat opposition, the Edmonton-Manning opposition, and the Raging Grannies and the Friends of Medicare.

I just want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that that doesn't go far enough. You know, it's fine to dangle out an election goody like eliminating health premiums for seniors, but we need to go further. We need to recognize this as an expensive, regressive tax that the government could do without. If it were interested in real tax breaks for real families, then this would be the place to start.

So I know that the government will vote down this motion as they voted down my own, but they will not escape legitimate criticism notwithstanding repeated attempts to misrepresent Tommy Douglas that have taken place in this Assembly. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, it's the only quote of Tommy Douglas that I think the Premier knows. At some point in the history somebody has told him that he said that health care premiums were a good idea. It's taken completely out of context and not in any sort of historical relationship to the present time.

The government has a responsibility, in my view, Mr. Speaker, not just to eliminate health care premiums for seniors, which is a good thing in itself and is due primarily to the efforts of the opposition and those who support medicare in this province, but to go further and eliminate this tax, this weighty burden on the shoulders of working and middle-class families in this province, and put a billion dollars or about $900 million dollars back into the Alberta economy instead of giving tax breaks to big corporations who take the money back to Texas or to the United States. The savings that they realize on the corporate tax break that this government is so fond of don't necessarily even benefit this province economically.

I can guarantee you that if you cut the taxes, which is the flat regressive tax called health care premiums, that money will go directly into the Alberta economy, will be spent by families and will have a tremendously beneficial effect on our small businesses that sustain our communities, Mr. Speaker.

So I would urge the government to support this motion. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good evening. It's certainly my pleasure to rise this evening and speak on Motion 505, sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. When I look at Motion 505, I see an idea that has some merit. I believe that the elimination of health care premiums is something that this government needs to look at from time to time even if it's twice in one session.

Mr. Speaker, I recently had a look at the Official Opposition's web site. I wanted to see what alternatives they proposed for health care funding, because if we are going to look at reforming the way we fund health care and remove approximately $1 billion in funding, we had better have a plan to ensure that the system doesn't collapse around us.

All Motion 505 tells me is that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview wants to eliminate health care premiums. The wording doesn't say anything about a reasonable alternative to take into consideration or why he wanted to do this. So I ventured onto their web site to see what their policy alternatives were. I encourage all members to do the same as it has an interesting solution.

Mr. Speaker, what the Official Opposition proposes through policy alternatives on their web site is that premiums would be eliminated because they feel that this would lead to a tax cut for everyone. I find it important that we talk about this and clarify the confusion that the hon. members opposite have on how funding a public program works.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition feels that there isn't anything healthy about health care premiums and that by combining them with a flat tax, they provide Alberta working poor with the highest tax rates. The Official Opposition closes by saying that health care premiums are "an unfair and an unnecessary tax." I think it is time that the Official Opposition asked themselves where they would find a magic money tree that would compensate for the almost $1 billion loss in health care funding that would result by not including health care premiums in the health budget without further taxing Albertans.

As I said earlier, the elimination of health care premiums is an issue that the government needs to take a look at from time to time, but also I think a working plan that has been thought through is necessary. From what I've heard in the House and read on their web site, the Official Opposition has not thought this through, nor do they have a reasonable plan. They don't.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has been collecting health care premiums since 1969. As of 2001 there are over 3 million individuals registered with Alberta Health and Wellness. I can assure the members that the number has risen significantly in that time as Alberta's population continues to rise at a rapid rate. To ensure that all Albertans are able to participate in a provincial health care system, the government provides premium exemptions to those Albertans that are unable to afford the cost of premiums for a number of reasons. In 2003 164,000, or 51 per cent, of Alberta's seniors did not pay health care insurance premiums.

Some Hon. Members: How many?

Mr. Broda: One hundred and sixty-four thousand, 51 per cent.

An Hon. Member: One hundred and sixty-four thousand?

Mr. Broda: That's right.

Twenty thousand, or 6 per cent, of Alberta's seniors paid partial premiums. The province of Alberta ensures that all of Alberta's seniors that cannot pay health care premiums are exempted or supported through current government programs. This is done to ensure that all of Alberta's seniors have the opportunity to participate in Alberta's health care system.

Dr. Taylor: Now, that's good government.

Mr. Broda: You bet it is.

On the Official Opposition web site they refer to the working poor as their reason to eliminate health care premiums, so I find it necessary to look at the programs the government has in place for those individuals. Mr. Speaker, as I said, low-income Albertans also qualify for health care premium subsidies. A single-earner family that has an annual income of less than $15,970 qualifies for Alberta health care premium subsidies, and should that family have an annual income of less than $12,000, they are fully subsidized. Similarly, a family with no children that makes less than $28,240 a year qualifies for subsidies, and a family with no children who makes less than $21,200 a year qualifies for full subsidy. Finally, a family with children who makes less than $34,250 as an annual income qualifies for subsidies, and should that same family have an annual income of less than $27,210, it would qualify for full subsidy for their health care premiums.

Mr. Speaker, these numbers and examples contradict the opposition's claim that health care premiums unfairly hinder Alberta's poor working families. Not only do they get subsidies for their health care, but they also don't pay any provincial taxes. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government is working to ensure that Alberta's working poor are assured of participation in a health care premium system through their extensive subsidy program.

One other point I would like to make before I continue my argument is that health care premiums are put in place to ensure that the system user realizes that there is a cost to the system. More and more people are moving to this province, Mr. Speaker. It is up to the government to ensure that these resources are available to all residents, which brings me to my next point.

The Official Opposition on their web site also discussed stable funding as a part of their proposed health care policy. My question to them is: how would you go about providing stable funding for a health care system under financial stress that has just been relieved of a billion dollars of funding through what is proposed in Motion 505?

Mr. Speaker, I could go on and on and on, but I know that there are other speakers that want to participate in this. I also look forward to future debates on the elimination of the health care premiums when the time is more appropriate and when a proper plan is in place to address these issues in a broader context.

I encourage all members to vote against Motion 505. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, I wonder if we might have consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll call on the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, following that the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, and then the hon. Minister of Environment.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to join debate on Motion 505 that was brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. The sponsor has dedicated a great deal of time in this Assembly on various health issues.

Dr. Taylor: But he doesn't know what he's talking about.

Mr. Danyluk: Sometimes he doesn't, but I'm sure the member has the best intentions. I would say that most of the time he misses the big picture.

On the issue of eliminating health care premiums, he refuses to acknowledge the expansion of public health care and the pressure on all governments to find adequate funding. In the past the sponsor has referred to health care premiums as a regressive tax. I think he has considered a more responsible approach to funding health care. He should see that premiums are an acceptable alternative until reforms are implemented and the cost of health care is stabilized.

A straightforward action like Motion 505 seems like a reasonable request at first glance. One of the dangers with simple requests is that they overlook complex and important details. Eliminating premiums would save individual Albertans money, yet it would come with a substantial cost to the health care system. Health care funding in every province is currently unsustainable. According to a report released by the Conference Board of Canada, there isn't a single jurisdiction in Canada that is successfully managing the incredible funding pressure for health care delivery.

Dr. Taylor: Not even Alberta.

Mr. Danyluk: Not even Alberta.

There may be a day when the Alberta government eliminates health care premiums. However, this change in policy would only occur with other reforms. The motion simply calls for the elimination of premiums. It does not provide any realistic suggestion for recovering $900 million lost from eliminating premiums.

The sponsor has talked about ways he would offset the funding lost by eliminating premiums. Let's look at a couple of these ideas. First of all, he has suggested to this Assembly that $900 million could be offset through Alberta's budget surpluses. I appreciate the optimism that the member has in the fiscal stewardship of the Alberta government. Years of fiscal discipline, careful planning, and thoughtful legislation have helped Alberta balance its books, pay off its deficit, and pay down its debt nine years – nine years – ahead of the debt-repayment schedule.

I would caution this member against relying on surpluses, especially that exceed $900 million every fiscal year. Right now Alberta's oil and gas sector is doing very well. However, Albertans know all too well that what goes up comes down. The prices of oil and natural gas could come down with little notice, and the government surplus may shrink as a result.

Mr. Speaker, I would also remind the member that a large portion of the surpluses are directed to the capital account to pay for dozens of buildings and road construction projects. Albertans will continue to receive world-class public health care particularly funded by premiums. Under the government's current fiscal structure Albertans also enjoy new and improved roads and infrastructure, and we have members in the gallery that will attest to that. I would hope that the member across the way recognizes the importance of stable infrastructure and transportation funding to meet the needs of the growing population and the expanding economy. Taking $900 million away from the capital account would postpone or may cancel many of these projects. Relying on annual surpluses exceeding $900 million may be a little too optimistic.

Another one of the sponsor's ideas is to undo Alberta's single-rate tax system, which was phased in between 1999 and 2001. To me this particular idea raises a red flag, especially if the sponsor truly cares for the well-being of low-income Albertans as much as the Alberta government does. Eliminating a single rate would increase taxes for many Albertans. This shift in the tax policy would have a ripple effect on the Alberta economy and the well-being of the poor. A single-rate tax system balances fairness and competitiveness. According to the Alberta 2003 budget the top 15 per cent of income earners paid 66 per cent of the total income tax collected.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: I regret that the time allocated for this item of business has now elapsed.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 505 lost]

Tourism Levy

506. Mr. Strang moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take measures to establish a tourism levy to be dedicated to the province's tourism marketing framework to promote the tourism industry in Alberta.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today and open debate this evening on Motion 506, establishment of a provincial tourism levy. I think this motion is extremely important because of the implications to this province as a whole.

Tourism is a very important industry to Alberta. This province has different sceneries and opportunities for industry to grow. Whether it is our national or provincial parks or heritage sites or something as simple as the many campsites around Alberta, there are plenty of interesting areas for tourism to expand.

I represent a constituency whose economy depends greatly on tourism. In fact, I don't think there is an industry that affects the likes of Edson, Hinton, or Jasper as much as tourism. Tourism is an industry that is saving communities in my constituency.

One only has to look at Grande Cache to see how important the tourism industry is. Years ago Grande Cache's economy was dependent on coal mines, which have kept this town alive and thriving. These mines are now closed. Grande Cache was in serious trouble as jobs began to disappear and the town began to fight for its survival. As the town looks for different economic opportunities and diversification, tourism becomes the most obvious choice because of Grande Cache's fantastic location just outside the national park. This allows Grande Cache to come up with a vital tourism business strategy that helps attract visitors to a place with wonderful history and scenery.

As strategies were developed and the industry began to grow in this area, it has become evident that this government does not invest a lot of money to market this province. I realize that we do have a lot of different priorities in this province – health, education, and infrastructure – but what is not fully comprehended is the amount of revenue that can be returned to this province from tourism outside of Alberta. Motion 506 urges this government to consider creating a dedicated revenue source that would be applied directly to the tourism industry. Funding could be used to market Alberta or enhance the product that we already have developed in this province.

Mr. Speaker, we do not spend a great deal of money marketing ourselves to the rest of the country or the world. If you look at the figures for total tourism spending since 2000-2001, we spent over $18 million in 2000-2001, over $19 million for 2001-2002, about $23 million for 2002-2003, and about $22 million for 2003-2004. Last week the new budget was brought down with a lot of optimism, and this included the tourism industry. Approximately $24 million will be spent in total on tourism. However, only $18 million will be spent on tourism marketing.

Now, I know that some members may hear these figures and think that this is a lot of money to be spending on marketing our province, but we have to put this in perspective. I believe that the Fairmont hotel chain, which has about five resorts in Alberta, spends more money marketing their five resorts than we do marketing our entire province. I think this is a shame and a missed opportunity for this government. This province has so much to offer visitors outside of our normal tourism destinations. It seems everybody knows about West Edmonton Mall or the Calgary Stampede or Banff, Jasper, or Waterton Lakes national parks, but there are other areas that are just as beautiful and interesting that we need to promote to travellers of Canada and the world.

With all the different opportunities in the province for tourism development I think it's time for this government to dedicate increased resources to promote this province. As I alluded to earlier, we put about $20 million into tourism marketing and services in 2003-04, and the return on the investment is quite substantial. The tourism industry is estimated to bring in approximately $15 billion and supports well over 120,000 jobs. It would only seem logical that if this province would invest a bit more money in this industry, we could see the revenues increase dramatically.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 506 asks for the government to establish a tourism levy that could be dedicated directly to the tourism industry. This is a venture that has been tested in other jurisdictions. In fact, B.C. has a similar levy and will argue that their tourism industry is very prosperous because of it. We in Alberta have a hotel tax, which is paid by every customer who stays a night in a hotel room. The tax is 5 per cent, and this money goes directly into the general revenue fund, which in turn goes to fund our priority areas. The problem I have with the hotel tax is that its main goal has been accomplished, and now it is time for us to reconstruct it.

The hotel tax was established in 1987 as part of a plan to have extra revenue brought in to help eliminate the deficit, a problem the province had back in the late '80s and early '90s. Of course, with the current Premier looking over the elimination of those deficits, the hotel tax has officially taken care of what it was supposed to. So now we have a tax that could be a great candidate for a revision so that we can dedicate it especially to the tourism industry. The hotel tax brings in about $50 million, and even if a portion of that were dedicated to the industry, I think we could see returns far greater than what the tax can bring in.

I know that many here do not agree with dedicated revenue to certain programs because it opens the door to other levies and premiums that would be suspiciously designed for certain areas, but of course we already have such an item that is revenue dedicated to a program; that is, our health care premiums. The premium revenues generated are tied to health care and cover only a minute portion of our health care spending, but the presence of a dedicated revenue source is here. Revamping the hotel tax is supported by not only a lot of people in government but the industry as well.

I believe that in late 2002 when shareholders in the tourism industry came to the government through the Standing Policy Committee on Economic Development and Finance, they recommended that the hotel tax be replaced with a tourism marketing levy, which would be specifically dedicated to marketing this province. It is extremely important that we look at the benefits of a move like this. As I said earlier, if such a move were made, the general revenue fund would be out approximately $58 million, but we would have to look at how much money it would bring back into Alberta through the tourism industry if we invest that money into this thriving industry.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should seriously consider revamping our hotel tax into a tourism levy so that we will have a dedicated and somewhat stable resource fund. I mean, one could argue that as tourism investment continues to increase, the money dedicated to tourism will also increase, providing more opportunities for investment, jobs, promotion of our beautiful province.

We have to look at making decisions on this idea sooner rather than later for the sole purpose that we have an extremely large event coming to this province that we need to capitalize on. Next year is our big 100th anniversary, and I ask: how are we marketing this event as to tourism around Canada and the world? Would we be better able to market this extremely important event if we had more dedicated revenue for this industry? How many advertising campaigns are we going to get to get visitors into this province for our centennial?

I think this is a remarkable opportunity that we should not let slip by. If we do not do more to ensure that this year is our most successful tourism year, I think we have done Albertans a great disservice. They are expecting a great event, a huge event. I am worried that we are not doing all that we can do to ensure that 2005 brings us a lot of prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 506 is one which limits what the government can do. Revamping the hotel tax . . . [Mr. Strang's speaking time expired]

Thank you. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Unanimous consent has been asked for for the hon. member to complete his speech.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections] You guys wouldn't give me unanimous consent. I'm not prepared to give any of you unanimous consent. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, there is a problem: too much talking when there's only one member that's been officially recognized.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Motion 506, to establish a tourism levy. I'm glad that the sponsor of the motion finally got around in his comments to describe where this money was going to come from, because when you first read the motion, the language is somewhat unclear in terms of whether the motion calls for a new tourism levy on top of the hotel room tax.

If that had been the case, we wouldn't have been able to support it, because irrespective of what this government says, we are not tax-and-spend Liberals. We are very fiscally responsible, and we would not support another new tax on an industry that would potentially price that industry out of the market in terms of competing provinces and other jurisdictions. It would definitely, we believe, go a long way in terms of removing our competitive advantage. But as the member described it, the hotel room tax would be a dedicated levy, and that's where the money for the tourism marketing would come from, and we're fully in support of that and have been for a long, long time.

In fact, we believe that the way to operate this would be to put a delegated authority in place so that you have it – well, I would like to say at arm's length from this government. It never has been so far. But at least that's a little further away in terms of controlling the money and being able to have the industry decide where that money is best spent. I think that that would be a very effective way.

Just take a look at other DAOs like the tire recycling board, where that dedicated tire tax went. Then they decide how to invest in supporting the industry and other options that they have available to them like helping to support environmental concerns and so on.

When we speak to people around the province who are involved in the tourism industry, whether it's in an organized fashion or whether it's individual proprietors or chains, they definitely believe that they could better administer that money than the government can, and I tend to agree with those folks. I think that they should have some control over the money that's coming directly out of their pockets, and to do that would be, I think, very supportable. Certainly, we've heard many concerns every single year since I've been in here about the amount of money that gets taken off in the room tax and how much actually goes back.

As the sponsor of the bill said, this was a levy that was started in 1987 by the Getty government. At that time, they said that it would help to eliminate the large deficits that were occurring in the government of the day. It's interesting how a Conservative government doesn't do any better job than anybody else in terms of, once the monies are no longer in a deficit situation, eliminating those taxes. We haven't seen an elimination of them over the past six years, and during that time period they collected nearly $570 million in hotel room taxes. Now, not very much of that goes back to the industry. Fifty-six million dollars was collected last year; $18 million went back to tourism. Not very equitable if you ask me.

So I would certainly support putting those dollars in the hands of that industry because the money does recirculate, and certainly we do need, I believe, to spend more focus and more time on promoting Alberta tourism. Time after time we see tourists going to Banff and Jasper and not coming out of that mountain corridor. The tourists go back into B.C. or they go stateside or they go back to their country of origin, but we don't see them really spilling over into the main parts of Alberta and really enjoying the great beauty and the great treasures that we have to share with people from around the globe in our particular province.

I would certainly hope that we will see some changes here quickly. In fact, I thought we had a commitment from the Minister of Economic Development last year during Committee of Supply, when he stated that the government had an approved program for dedicating the hotel room tax to tourism marketing, but it was postponed by Treasury Board, and isn't that just too bad?

The Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has concluded.

International and Intergovernmental Relations

The Chair: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Jonson: Good evening, Mr. Chairman. This evening I'm pleased to present the estimates for the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations, the 2004-2005 business plan. First of all, I would like to introduce some people from IIR who are with us this evening. I think everyone is present, so I would like to introduce them and have them stand: Gerry Bourdeau, Deputy Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations; Garry Pocock, assistant deputy minister, Canadian intergovernmental relations; Wayne Clifford, assistant deputy minister, international relations section; James Doherty, international trade counsel, trade policy section; Lori Sajjad, director of corporate services; Kathryn Wiegers, communications director; and Douglas Mills, my executive assistant.

Mr. Chairman, it is worth noting that I just introduced 10 per cent of the staff of the ministry. We may be small in numbers, but we do, I think, very significant work. Examples include our key role in the establishment of the Council of the Federation, strengthening Alberta's international relations, representing Alberta in the softwood lumber dispute and trade agreement negotiations, and working with agriculture on the BSE situation.

We take the lead in trade negotiations and national communications in discussions at the Council of the Federation and first ministers' meetings. The ministry also leads in the development of government-wide strategies and policies for Alberta's relations with international governments, organizations such as the World Trade Organization, and federal, provincial, and territorial governments.

In terms of business plan goals the ministry's business plan has three goals. The first focuses on our relations within Canada by "promoting the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta as an equal partner in a [strong], united Canada." The ministry's second goal focuses on "promoting the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta [through] strengthened international relations." Related to this, the ministry's third goal is to promote "the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta from greater trade and investment liberalization, domestically and internationally."

IIR's goals support two of the government of Alberta's business plan goals. These are: "Alberta will have a prosperous economy," and "Alberta will have a financially stable, open and accountable government and a strong intergovernmental position in Canada."

Mr. Chairman, the ministry is divided into three sections that reflect our goals: Canadian intergovernmental relations, international relations, and trade policy. I will now take a few minutes to discuss key initiatives in the year ahead for each of these sections.

The Canadian intergovernmental relations section works with other government ministries, with other provinces, and with the federal government to promote and protect Alberta's interests as an equal partner in Confederation. We will advance through the Council of the Federation and other government bodies Alberta's position on Senate reform, health care sustainability, and the need to address the fiscal imbalance.

In the coming year we will continue to pursue three initiatives identified by the Premier to improve federal/provincial relations. These are regularly scheduled first ministers' meetings, a guaranteed provincial role in international agreements in areas of provincial responsibility, and Senators appointed from a list of provincial nominees. Also in this particular area, Mr. Chairman, later this year we will be receiving a report from the MLA committee dealing with Alberta's future place in Confederation, chaired by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Canadian intergovernmental relations will also continue to support the Ministerial Task Force on Security and the cross-government climate change committee. As always, this section will provide strategic support to the Premier with the Council of the Federation, first ministers' meetings, and other federal/provincial meetings.

Mr. Chairman, the international relations section works with other Alberta government departments to strategically advance our province's international interests. A key area is building on and strengthening Alberta's relationship with our largest and most important trading partner, the United States. A major initiative is the opening of an Alberta office in Washington, D.C. I will discuss this initiative in a moment when detailing my ministry's budget for the upcoming year.

Our international relations section will also continue to emphasize Alberta's membership in organizations such as the U.S. Council of State Governments-West, the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, and the Western Governors' Association. We will work with our state counterparts and bilateral councils Alberta has established with Montana, Idaho, and Alaska. We will increase Alberta's profile in key international markets by developing intergovernmental relations and enhance Alberta's nine twinning relationships, including celebrations marking the 30th anniversary of Alberta's twinning with Gangwon, Korea. We will also establish new twinning relationships in Ukraine. The section will support international governance office projects in developing countries including Ukraine, South Africa, and China.

Mr. Chairman, the trade policy section also works with a variety of Alberta ministries and other Canadian governments. As co-lead with New Brunswick on a special Council of the Federation ministers' committee Alberta will seek support for a proposal to ensure that provinces and territories have a guaranteed place at the table when the federal government negotiates international agreements affecting provincial constitutional responsibilities.

Our trade policy section along with our intergovernmental relations section have key roles in this initiative. The trade policy section will also advance trade opportunities for Albertans by working, again, through the Council of the Federation to remove internal trade barriers to ensure the free flow of goods, services, capital, and labour within Canada. Our trade experts will protect Alberta's priorities, interests while working with other provinces and the federal government to reach long-term, durable solutions to disputes with the United States on softwood lumber, wheat, hogs, and during the World Trade Organization negotiations, especially as those apply to agriculture, trade remedies, and services.

Mr. Chairman, I will now move on to the ministry's budget and staffing levels. We are a small ministry in terms of budget and staff. The 2004-2005 budget has grown by $2 million to approximately $8.5 million. There are a total of 58 staff in my ministry, an increase of five from last year. These new positions will be allocated between the new Alberta office in Washington, D.C., and our increased commitment to the Council of the Federation. The first significant budget increase in several years allows us to open the Alberta office in Washington, D.C., participate fully in the Council of the Federation initiatives, and meet the 3.5 per cent government-wide salary increase for staff.

Mr. Chairman, there are fiscal realities that come with establishing a presence in Washington, D.C., and providing leadership in federal/provincial relations. An additional $1 million is allocated to establish the Washington office. The government of Alberta has recognized this as a priority. The United States is by far Alberta's most important economic partner, and Washington is a place where important decisions are made respecting our economic interests. The new office will advance Alberta's economic and policy interests in key areas such as energy, agriculture, and trade disputes and help expand Alberta's contacts with key U.S. decision-makers and policy-makers.

In the year ahead an additional $900,000 is allocated for costs resulting from the significant increase in intergovernmental activities in Canada. Mr. Chairman, with the creation of the Council of the Federation, the provinces and territories are acquiring their own institution, and we're taking an important step to the future of Canada. Furthermore, each province is assessed a fee based on 10 cents per person, as I understand it, that is to be contributed to fund operations of the council. Yes, this is an overall new cost.

In past years the Premiers met once a year as a group. However, since January of 2003 they have met six times. Through the Council of the Federation and its secretariats the Premiers have developed an ambitious plan to work together on health care, literacy, the environment, and disaster relief. All of this has placed considerable new demands on the time and resources of my ministry.

Another example of this increase in intergovernmental activities is the twice-yearly joint cabinet meetings between Alberta and British Columbia. The Alberta/B.C. co-operation arrangement will result in savings for taxpayers as we find efficiencies in transportation, education, children's services, and other areas. However, it has also placed more demands on the ministry as agreements have to be prepared and support provided for the Premier and our cabinet colleagues at these meetings. Over the next few weeks and months there will be meetings of health ministers, finance ministers, and others, all of which will require support from our ministry.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to present a very brief outline of how we measure the ministry's performance and track our progress in meeting our goals as effectively and efficiently as possible. Our outcomes are difficult to quantify because they often are long term and depend on external factors. To help us measure how well we are doing and identify areas for improvement on key initiatives such as major conferences, trade negotiations, or international missions, we seek input through client surveys and polling results. We use these measures to provide a detailed record of our achievements and activities in our annual report and other documents.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to indicate that our new business plan and budget sets out how we will meet the priorities of this province in the year ahead. I would be happy to answer any questions or hear comments from my legislative colleagues. In advance I will commit to answering in writing any questions I cannot respond to this evening.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments from the minister. As in past years I'll just ask a few questions and then ask the minister to respond to them. When he does, then I'll get up and ask some more questions in another area.

I'd just like to go back to, first of all, your last comments about the increase in funding for the Canadian intergovernmental relations. It's an increase of 60 per cent. I understand what you just said, that part of the explanation for that increased funding is the 10-cent levy, but we would like a further breakdown on where the costs are being allocated for the rest of the money now. I fully appreciate all of the additional meetings that are coming up in the next year and your expectation in terms of the travel and the staff to support that, but I would like a more detailed breakdown on the money. How much do you expect to spend on additional staff and travel with the B.C. meetings, how much with other provinces, and how much with the feds? Can you give me any idea of what that breakdown looks like now?

Mr. Jonson: I can give just a general comment. As the member, Mr. Chairman, has indicated, we will certainly provide a detailed response as well.

With respect to the two major components in the increase in funding for our ministry, first of all, we are anticipating that the Washington office will be an office with at least two personnel being present. Of course, we will have to lease space, and we hoped it would be in Washington. We, quite frankly, have made some I think well-received overtures to locating it in the Canadian embassy. Those things, however, do not come cheap. The Canadian government is not going to provide it to us free of charge, and that will be a major component, along with of course our share of, I would expect, access to communication supports and so forth.

In the case of the Council of the Federation there will be an overall staff that will need to be hired to operate that on a national basis. We will have to pay our share there. I'm not up to date in terms of what the implications are as far as accommodation. They are in both cases very significant initiatives which, yes, are going to cost money, and in both cases it is money directed at developing an effective office which can carry the message, in the one case to the federal authorities and the federal politicians and in the other to our major trading partner.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thanks for those answers. Just a little follow-up on the Washington office. Do you know who's going to staff it yet and how soon you expect those two people to be in place? [interjection] Yes, we're hoping it's not an existing Conservative member who's going to be staffing it.

My next set of questions is on the international trips by the various MLAs. We've seen in this past year many members of the government and cabinet ministers taking trips abroad to promote Alberta or attend special events. Some of them, I believe, were organized and/or sponsored and co-ordinated through your department. So my first question is in terms of rating how successful those trips were in terms of what was achieved. Do you do that? Is that public information? If you don't do it, then what kind of performance measure do you use to see whether or not you got good value for your money, even if it's a long-term kind of measure that you're looking at?

Also, I'd like to know the kind of co-ordination that you have between the Public Affairs Bureau and other departments in setting the trips up. Who decides who goes where and which person it is that's actually going? Can you give us a list of MLAs and cabinet ministers who went abroad last year and then the costs of those trips abroad that would include symposiums or conferences? I think that's it on trips abroad.

Mr. Jonson: First of all, with respect to international trips I think we have been quite diligent in providing an initial announcement or release as to the trip occurring and then following up with a news release report on, at least in general terms, what the nature of the discussions was and what the results or, we hope in many cases, the accomplishments are of those particular missions.

With respect to MLA participation the basis of selection is usually a connection with a relevant standing policy committee. We do have you might say an assigned group or team – I wouldn't call it a formal committee – that takes part, for instance, in the annual meetings with Montana. As you know, we also have another group which was assigned to being responsible for relations with the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, or PNWER, and of course they do go to their annual conference, which alternates among the various members.

If you were looking for specific funding and so forth, I would have to get back to you in terms of a written reply.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just would like to comment that I see other members standing to ask questions. I believe it's the agreement between House leaders that opposition has the first hour of budget debate in every budget estimate, so you have to wait till past 10 o'clock before it's your turn or until we're done.

Mr. Chairman, my next question to the minister is with regard to what his ministry may be doing to calm concerns in Alberta about separation. Are you doing anything to deal with that? We often hear talks about Alberta wanting to separate and discussions happening about that. The odd poll comes out. I believe it came up again in the firewall committee discussions. What does your department do to deal with that situation? Are you taking any steps to address the issue for or against support for this issue in Alberta?

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Jonson: Yes, Mr. Chairman. First of all, we have certainly been supportive and will take credit for providing the support services, but I think we should recognize that our Premier along with the other Premiers in Canada has made a special effort through the creation of the Council of the Federation and through, I think in all cases, going to the table with federal politicians but particularly the Prime Minister himself with the viewpoint to establish more positive, more effective relations between the federal government and the provinces and territories. That has been going on. It's been well reported upon.

There has been some progress, Mr. Chairman. It would appear that at least two of the initiatives that Premier Klein had mentioned some time ago as doable goals have been responded to favourably: the idea of regular first ministers' meetings, and also the whole concept of the provinces having a place, a seat, so to speak, at the table when trade talks and trade negotiations are going on. So there's certainly been an initiative there.

As well, the committee that I referred to in my opening remarks, chaired by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, has travelled extensively across the province, held public hearings, has now sent out an invitation for additional written comment, or I guess that they have something called e-mails these days, too, that might be used. They will eventually analyze the information that has come to them. They've had quite a variety of recommendations and a great deal of input, and much of that deals with what you might refer to as western alienation and some of these particular issues.

So, Mr. Chairman, there has been a considerable amount of activity in that particular area.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask: with respect to the increases in the Canadian intergovernmental relations budget, which is about a 60 per cent increase, to what degree are these costs associated with the newly-established Council of the Federation? And how will the council differ from the previous formations that have existed on a more informal basis to deal with relationships between the provinces and their relationship with the federal government?

I would also like to know whether or not there are expenditures in this budget for the senatorial elections that the government has alluded to and whether or not they'll be held this fall during the municipal elections. We'd like to know how much money taxpayers should look forward to spending on that.

We'd also like to know about costs related to the so-called firewall committee, otherwise known as strengthening Alberta's role in Confederation. We'd like to know when that's going to be completed, and what is the projected cost of all of its activities?

I would like the minister, if he would, to also please perhaps take this opportunity to explain the government's reasons for refusing to participate in the national health council.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Jonson: First of all – not necessarily in the order of the questions, but I'll get the answers to you – on the committee on Alberta's role in Confederation, the costs will likely be in the neighbourhood, Mr. Chairman, of $280,000, and that is inclusive of travel and all the other expenses associated with that committee's actual activities.

With respect to the question on senatorial elections or selections, there has not been a decision on that at present. Certainly, it is something that is on the agenda for consideration, but there has been no hard-and-fast decision made about when or if such an event might occur and also what funding might be involved.

In terms of the Council of the Federation, it is a major budget item. I've already alluded to the manner in which the decision is made for the sharing of the cost among the provinces. I would like to elaborate a bit further on the Council of the Federation. The situation that we've had up to this point in time, or at least up until about three or four months ago, is a situation, Mr. Chairman, where certainly there are meetings between provincial and territorial representatives and the Premiers, but it is not as effective either from a federal point of view, I think, or from a provincial and territorial point of view as it could be.

The one thing that was missing is that there was not one support group in Ottawa that was available to the provinces and the territories to develop papers, to make arrangements, to make contacts, and to basically provide a base for the provinces and territories to work from. What is being done here is that these separate, somewhat fragmented presences that the provinces have had in Ottawa are being amalgamated into what's called the Council of the Federation. The Council of the Federation is the Premiers and the territorial leaders, but this secretariat is the working civil service arm that is being created. Yes, it is somewhat expanded over the numbers of people that were involved before and it will cost money, but it will also, I think, lead to much more productive, well-positioned agendas for the provinces and the territories.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There was quite a bit of noise in the Assembly, so I couldn't hear one of the answers that the minister gave.

Mr. Norris: You weren't listening anyway.

Ms Carlson: No, I was. You were talking, hon. minister, and that's why I couldn't hear.

I'm not sure if the minister for this department stated that he would give a breakdown of the $250,000 in costs for the firewall committee, but if he didn't say that, I would ask him to do that.

Also, we're interested in knowing how many people attended each of the 12 meetings and any information he can give us on those and when we could expect to see . . . [interjection] No, I won't ask that question, I don't think, Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

My final two questions on this are: what does the minister plan to do with the report, and will the report be made public? Sometimes we see these reports just gather dust, and I'm hoping that won't be the case here.

Now I'd like to move on to talk a little bit about the Kyoto protocol. What steps does your ministry plan to take to address the Kyoto issue in the coming year? What is your department doing to help Alberta meet its targets? Are there any strategies that you're working on in terms of helping the industry? Have you done any economic impact assessments relative to the Kyoto protocol, and if so, could you make those public to us? The last question on this one is: will you provide copies of the documents that you've got that support Alberta's position relative to the Kyoto protocol?

Thank you.

Mr. Jonson: With respect to, first of all, the report of the committee on Alberta's place in Confederation . . .

An Hon. Member: You can say firewall.

Mr. Jonson: The firewall is not our creation, but certainly people in that particular category were welcome to make their presentations and be heard, as were people from many other different political spectrums.

With respect to Kyoto, Mr. Chairman, the activity with respect to follow-up on environmental protection is with the Department of Environment. I think documents and reports and the overall strategy of the Department of Environment are well known, and the emphasis, of course, that Alberta is placing on a practical, scientifically based way to bring down emissions over a reasonable period of time with a reasonable target is going on.

It is interesting to note that to this point in time, although certainly Canada is a signatory to the Kyoto accord, the activity that we see at least recently with the federal government is much along the same lines as what we have been giving priority to here in Alberta, and that is advancing environmental protection, particularly as it applies to the atmosphere, through developing better technology and developing policies and standards and targets which are practical and doable without crippling industry that's involved in this province. That is what we are moving ahead with, and that is the overall stance of the government in that particular regard.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now I'd like to talk about the Premier's musings a couple of weeks ago about how great he thought the idea would be of supplying the U.S. with missile storage in Alberta. Did that come out of your department? Are you doing any work on it? Is there any possibility that you might go forward with what I think is a very lame-brained idea?

Mr. Jonson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I'm not responding to the Premier's remarks in particular, but the fact of the matter is that Canada has for a long period of time been a member of NORAD, and we as a government recognize that there is that long-term established connection for North American Air Defence. Beyond that, to my knowledge no particular additional policy or change of viewpoint is being taken by the provincial government. It is a matter for the federal government to deal with, and we recognize that we are part of NORAD and we are part of Canada.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That leads me to a couple of questions on counterterrorism. Certainly, if there were any possibility that Alberta would become a missile storage site, then we would, I would think, have to be increasingly concerned about what was happening regarding Alberta's counterterrorism crisis management plan. Can you give us an update on what individuals and groups you've been consulting with? Under what circumstances would Alberta's border with the U.S. be closed according to Alberta's counterterrorism crisis management plan?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Chairman, we do have an overall security/antiterrorism prevention or mitigation or defence plan in Alberta. A great deal of good work has gone into it, to the credit of Municipal Affairs and the Solicitor General's department, to name two of the key participants. We do have a communications centre up and running. We do meet fairly regularly to in a general sense get a feeling for the status of security in the province, and I think that the work that has been done in Alberta is in fact very highly regarded as being that which has underpinning it a very good plan.

However, Mr. Chairman, this is an issue of security, and I'm not going to endeavour to provide details, which I don't have in any case, in terms of how we do things, but there are protocols in place as to the assessment of threat or of danger if that happens. We have people monitoring the situation as it might apply to Alberta and exchanging information on a 24-hour basis, and I will stop at that with my description.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and Mr. Minister for those answers. My next questions are around the export of water. The minister knows that I have always been against any potential for Alberta to ever export any of its water, but can you tell me if you are now in consultations with anybody on this, be that interprovincial, federal/provincial, or other countries? Have you got any update on the issue of water exports or any policy options that you're taking a look at considering or developing?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Chairman, the only activity that I'm aware of is one that has gone on for quite some time. The Minister of Environment may in his estimates comment on it when those come up. That involves the St. Mary River, which is really a unique situation. The river starts, as I recall, in Alberta, goes into Montana, comes back out, and there's some difficulty, some matters to be worked out there. Other than that, no, I do not know of any such plans.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Next I'd like to talk a little bit about a couple of issues in the business plans. When you talk about providing policy analysis for the other departments here, I'm interested in what you're doing on health care. Can you tell us whether you're providing any specific policy analysis or strategy with regard to where this government is going now and in the future on health care?

Mr. Jonson: With respect to health care this resides in large measure, of course, with the Department of Health and Wellness. However, in terms of the overall health issue we have provided advice. There are a number of different items connected with this. One is that we do have, working with native affairs, advice to give with respect to the legalities and so forth in providing health care to aboriginal populations.

Secondly, in terms of interpretation of the Canada Health Act, something that this department is well aware of and has been through on other occasions, this is another area where through our legal sources and our own staff we can provide advice in terms of the overall framework that you have to work within if you are going to work within the Canada Health Act. We've also provided comment and analysis on the various reports, of which I think there are about five at least out there. Not the least, of course, are the Mazankowski report and the Romanow report. So we are not the lead department there. We've not tried to be. We're a support department, and there are areas in this whole very important area where I think we can provide some valuable support.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if the minister could enlighten the committee on the status of the softwood lumber negotiations between the government of Canada and the government of the United States and on what the status of the side negotiations may be or the participation of Alberta within the Canadian negotiations and on whether or not the government of Alberta is considering or has participated in the types of agreements that were reached by the government of British Columbia in its negotiations through the Canadian government with the United States and the type of agreement that was reached there, which may well see the loss of jobs in British Columbia and the closure of sawmills and other impacts. My understanding is that the British Columbia government agreed to that and that was concluded on their behalf. I would like the minister to please bring us up to date with respect to the status of Alberta's progress in these negotiations.

Mr. Jonson: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the hon. member was wanting comment on the overall softwood lumber situation or the status of the dispute. There have been discussions by conference call and so forth among the relevant ministers across Canada and at least on one occasion directly with the federal minister responsible. There is I think almost constant work being done between the negotiators of the two sides to try and come to some resolution of this issue.

However, at this particular point in time there was a proposal of sort of a framework that was presented. It was one which not just in Alberta we felt that the industry could not agree to, as did all the other provinces across Canada that are directly involved. So the industry's position at that point in time was that we should still be waiting, looking for some flexibility, a more positive approach by the Americans.

Also, we have been winning and making progress through the legal route, through NAFTA and through the North American free trade agreement repeal provisions. It is the hope of at least a certain sector of the softwood lumber industry that if we get further appeals that are in our favour from those two international organizations, this will help our cause in terms of convincing the Americans to open the border.

In the meantime there will I'm sure be additional discussions among the provinces in Canada, and we will be looking at having further discussions about what are called exit routes; that is, what specific requirements do you have to meet in order to get access to the American market and to have the deposits returned and the countervail duties dropped and so forth? There's the direct negotiation, which is kind of dormant right now, but there's still background work going on, and there's also the waiting that's going on for the decisions from the international tribunals.

I think that would be the comment there.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm hoping the minister can update us on the work that he's doing with the U.S. on the BSE issue to get the borders open. Can you give us an update on it?

Mr. Jonson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I'll respond to the question, certainly, but I would like to emphasize two points at the beginning, and that is that the overall BSE issue is one where we have been fortunate to have a very strong and effective Premier that has I think credibility with the American government. Of course, the Hon. Shirley McClellan has taken on a huge load here in pushing for the resolution of this particular and very, very, very serious issue. Being an MLA, one of the . . .

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Chair: You have a citation, hon. member?

Point of Order
Decorum

Mr. Mason: No. The minister is quite soft spoken and is giving us useful information, but we cannot hear because of the disturbance in the House.

The Chair: The chair would also observe, hon. minister, that when you read with paper there, you can't hear. So that might be part of the thing as well as the ambient noise that seems to be from some lively discussions which could be adjourned to the outer lounge.

Debate Continued

Mr. Jonson: I think there are three points, though, that can be mentioned with respect to the BSE situation. First of all, the American government has realized within the last number of months that the BSE situation is affecting their overall cattle market. I think there was the initial assumption that it would only be something that would involve Canada and the United States, and now the American government seems to be putting a considerable amount of attention on the fact that borders are being closed to them. So they're beginning to look at it as an overall North American issue. When I was down to Washington about two weeks before the minister and the Premier went, I found that there was a new viewpoint or, if I can go so far as to say, an attitude in terms of the American political establishment looking at this as an overall North American problem that had to be sorted out, and that's helpful from our particular point of view.

The second thing is that there is a committee established to review the overall situation as far as the BSE situation is concerned, and they are emphasizing the science. They are taking submissions, they are looking at the science, and they indicate that they will make their decision about the feasibility of opening the borders on the basis of good science and the protection of the public.

So those two themes are there that weren't there before. Also, of course, I think the visit of the Premier helped to raise reason for hope. The date of June or July has been mentioned as a possible point in time when there might be the opening of the border if the recommendations of this very important committee are favourable to doing that.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My last set of questions is around the province's plan for joining the Regional Transmission Organization. Can we hear what your participation is as a department on that and a timeline in terms of when you may be planning to join it and any information about the Regional Transmission Organization conferences that your department's had a hand in planning or paying for? Also, tied into that, are there any plans to export electricity in the Pacific economic northwest region? If so, what kinds of meetings and discussions are you having about that? Is there a timeline?

That concludes my set of questions, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the minister for the detail of his answers this evening and look forward to more specific detail on some of our more specific questions. Thank you.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Chairman, we have not been as a department involved in the grid negotiations. This is being handled through the Department of Energy. If called upon, we will certainly be providing support, but we're not deeply involved in that, possibly because we've had quite a few other files on our desk lately.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to follow up on my question with respect to softwood lumber. I would like to request the minister if possible to respond in writing in more detail with respect to the position that Alberta has adopted and the present status of the negotiations or, alternatively, where Albertans might be able to locate information that would lay out in some detail the position of the government of Alberta and his department with respect to this issue.

Mr. Jonson: I would certainly undertake to do that.

I would like to respond to one other comment. If you know something that I don't, I would be really interested. I think the hon. member mentioned that there was an agreement between British Columbia and the United States. That would be news. I know that because of the great priority because of the nature of their industry being so important in British Columbia, they have been making tremendous efforts to try and come to an accommodation. Of course, their forestry situation is somewhat different from ours. But, as far as we know, there has been no agreement between British Columbia and the United States.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you. I have just a quick comment, more of a long-range view. In that the relationship within Canada is so important to Alberta and Alberta has such an important leadership role in the country, I'm wondering if the minister could put on the long-range horizon the notion of re-establishing an office in Ottawa particularly to encourage and to work with Alberta-friendly people in the public service and in nongovernmental organizations and especially in the media to advance Alberta's interests and to advance the Alberta perspective within that very important milieu.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Chairman, this is an item which, I think, should be dealt with appropriately in the context of what I think and government feels is a very promising beginning to the Council of the Federation as a structure for the provinces and territories to get together, to develop common cause as much as possible, so that they can have a stronger voice with the federal government. It's also designed, we hope, to be a vehicle which will lead to more civil contact and more constructive discussion than has been the case in the past few years. As we start down this road, I would have to say from a personal standpoint that it seems that there is a new atmosphere. We'll see how it goes.

So I think our emphasis will be on the Council of the Federation, working through that avenue. There will of course always be issues that are specific to Alberta or ones that we may have some great concern with in terms of how they're evolving relative to the rest of Canada, but that's the way we're working right now.

The Chair: Hon. members, the only ones that are recognized for speaking purposes are those that are standing in their places. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: One of the questions that I get often back in Whitecourt when I go home on the weekends is from the group that's out promoting the relationship between Hokkaido and Alberta. As you know, the province kick-started this some 10 or 12 years ago, and the municipalities seem to be taking a lead role in this. They keep after me: when is the government going to assist more directly with the municipalities in the twinning arrangement? I promised again that I would ask the minister this during this time and hear the response.

Mr. Jonson: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I would like to advise the hon. member, although I think he may have known this, that we did provide some additional funding this past fiscal year for their town's conference above what had been previously provided for. We do feel that this is a valuable activity, and we hope to keep the program going. What our future support plans will be I can't comment on specifically.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: No major question, Mr. Chairman, but I did want to make a comment. I'll be very brief, for the hon. members. [interjections] Well, I know everyone wants to go home, but I think the hon. minister should know, as should all members, that the work that our two departments do in the international offices is greatly appreciated by our department. I see the minister's staff up there. They're involved in all aspects of international missions, and I think it behooves all of us to show our gratitude to the minister and his team for the great job they do for Alberta.

Thank you.

The Chair: After considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$8,524,000
--	-------------

The Chair: Shall the vote for this department be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Shall the vote for the offices of the Legislative Assembly be reported?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Legislative Assembly and the estimates of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following departments.

The main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for support to the Legislative Assembly, operating expense, $38,664,000; office of the Auditor General, operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $17,646,000; office of the Ombudsman, operating expense, $2,130,000; office of the Chief Electoral Officer, operating expense, $13,735,000; office of the Ethics Commissioner, operating expense, $447,000; office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, operating expense, $4,072,000.

The main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for International and Intergovernmental Relations: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $8,524,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, I think we should go home. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:05 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 30, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/30

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Deputy Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Heavenly Father, guide our thoughts, words, and deeds to be worthy of the trust our constituents have placed in us to better serve Thee through service to our province of Alberta and its people. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that protocol sometimes is to have another member introduce a member of our direct families, but in this case I'm going to do it myself. In the members' gallery this afternoon is my beautiful wife, Gwen Green. I would like her to rise, and I'd like the Assembly to show her a nice warm welcome, a northern greeting.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce a guest in the members' gallery, a gentleman who has been working in this province for many, many years in the health industry, somebody I got to know through our association with the health authority west of Edmonton. I'd like Larry Smook to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great privilege today to rise and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly two very fine ladies from the Vermilion-Lloydminster constituency. Ms Barb Gulka is here today with her friend Ms Linda Beck. They're not only here to observe the proceedings, but they're here to thank the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for his excellent work on Bill 201. I would ask them to wave, and we'll give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. First question.

Rail Link to Fort McMurray

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A new company named the Athabasca Oil Sands Transportation Corp. could soon be overseeing a railroad project worth $1.8 billion, but as far as we can tell, none of the leaders of this corporation have experience running railroads, so frankly the Liberal opposition is concerned that it's the Alberta taxpayer who could get railroaded here. My questions are to the Premier. What can the Premier tell us about this company, which was only registered last Tuesday and has already received 1 and a quarter million dollars in Alberta taxpayer funding?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, they haven't received one cent. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition should learn to tell the truth. That's the first thing he needs to do. He is not telling the truth when he says that we have given them $1.25 million. That is not the truth. When someone does not tell the truth, he tells a lie, and I get frustrated.

The Deputy Speaker: I think that on the issue that you raise, if somebody is not telling the truth, that's one thing, but our rules definitely do move to the point where if you call it a lie, that is unparliamentary. The facts may be at variance with those stated.

Mr. Klein: My apologies, but I don't know any other word for an untruth.

Mr. Speaker, Athabasca Oil Sands Transportation Corp. is a newly formed Alberta company, as I understand it. The primary contacts are Jim Gray and Paul Giannelia, and Mr. Giannelia, of course, was the engineer responsible for Strait Crossing, the phenomenal bridge that links New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. The contributors would be – would be, if all things work out – the Alberta government and the oil sands, and the feasibility study would be conducted by this group.

There needs to be a group to facilitate and co-ordinate all of the activities associated with not only the rail line but transportation systems generally into the north. Those transportation systems include the existing rail line, which is the old NAR; highway 881, which comes down from Anzac to Lac La Biche; and highway 63, which is the main highway now serving Fort McMurray from Edmonton via a network of other highways. It involves east/west links as well and how those links could be upgraded. It involves perhaps the extension of the road to the Saskatchewan/Alberta border to 881, more commonly known as the La Loche road.

Mr. Speaker, I can understand that the Liberals don't know about any of these things because they have never been in that area, presumably. The simple fact is that there are very serious transportation problems related to almost a hundred billion dollars of development now or potential development in the oil sands, which has a huge impact on the economy of this province.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental. The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier promise Albertans today, here and now, that if we commit to any funding in this project, Alberta taxpayers will never be on the hook for bailing out a financial flop relating to this railroad? Will he make that promise now?

Mr. Klein: Absolutely. I'll make that promise today because, Mr. Speaker, that's what the feasibility is all about. I don't mind making that promise at all. As I said to the media yesterday, this is not a decision that will be made on somebody's back porch. This is a decision that will be made based on sound engineering, sound financial facts, sound safety and human factors, and sound economic facts. So all of these things will have to be taken into consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I heard from across the way that this is the Muskeg Line. The existing line, the old NAR, is the Muskeg Line. But I would remind the hon. member that this government and the people of this province have spent literally hundreds of millions of dollars already to build roads over muskeg. Highway 881 is a road that travels through a tremendous amount of muskeg. Highway 63, the main highway, is another example of a road being built on muskeg. You can't build anything – but this hon. member doesn't know because he very, very seldom goes to Fort McMurray. Certainly, he's not invited up there. Maybe he will be now that they have a Liberal candidate up there.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental on this question. The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this company is already on record as backing this railroad, isn't it a conflict of interest for us to be paying for them to study their own project? Shouldn't we be going to a third party instead?

Thank you.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, this was their initiative, and quite frankly it's an initiative that I thought was long overdue by the private sector. But in that there are so many considerations that affect the province – that is, road upgradings and so on and how we treat those road upgradings – I thought it would be worth while to participate in the feasibility study, because there are numerous factors that impact the province and the public good relative to this.

Mr. Speaker, there are also some benefits on the economic side, without getting into whether we're going to support or not support the project, and I'll have the hon. minister speak to that.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, you know, I noticed yesterday that in an attempt to drag what I think is a marvellous project down, the Leader of the Opposition made references to The Simpsons, and while he may look like Monty Burns, he seems to be thinking like Moe Szyslak, the bartender, on this one.

However, the reality of the fact, Mr. Speaker, is that the government of Alberta has a responsibility to be involved in this. We have made no commitment whatsoever. No money has changed hands whatsoever, and there is no long-term commitment other than the study, and the study speaks to the economics, which are remarkable.

So if you want to allow them to go and drag the project down . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Second main question. The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Infrastructure Funding

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again this government has let down the people of Edmonton. Today we learned that the Edmonton area would only receive one-fifth of the acute care hospital beds it needs and would not be receiving any new schools. Not one. In comparison, an Alberta Liberal government would give this city the schools and hospitals it needs. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Why is the Edmonton area only receiving funds to add an average of 56 acute care beds a year for the next three years when there is an immediate need for 800 new beds?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, this morning we announced that there would be some 170 beds added to five facilities in the city of Edmonton. We have asked all the regional health authorities to give us a 10-year capital plan. In that plan the Capital health region asked for 800 beds for acute care. That's over 10 years, and this morning we announced 170 that are going to start this year.

As far as the school situation is concerned, all of the schools go through a very, very long process to get assessed. All of the schools in the province. We are currently announcing the top list. The school boards will be coming back with their new capital plans. We expect to have those in June. We will then assess all of those plans, and we'll prioritize them. Then we'll look at how much money we've got, and we will come down with the list on that prioritization. Mr. Speaker, it's a very pure system, and we will be sticking with it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister then saying that Edmonton schools are a lower priority than Calgary schools?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, there's a long process that this goes through. It's all to do with the condition of the schools, the utilization of the schools, the location of the schools, and the list goes on and on. The fact is that the utilization in the city of Edmonton is slightly lower.

I know what he's trying to do. He's trying to make it look like Calgary has gotten much more than Edmonton. We have to look at the region of Edmonton. If you take and transplant the footprint of Calgary on the footprint of Edmonton, you're going to then include Leduc, Fort Saskatchewan, Sherwood Park, St. Albert, Stony Plain, and the list goes on. So what the member is doing is comparing apples to oranges, and we don't do that.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental, hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, why is this government fundamentally refusing to provide the funds to address the infrastructure debt that has developed in the last 10 years? Why aren't we on top of that debt?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this government, since we implemented this 10-year plan, has allocated and committed to some $6.5 billion. That's a lot of money. If we want to move it over to the schools, for example, since the year 2000-2001 we have committed and/or spent $1.8 billion. If you move it over to the health side, over that same time frame we've spent $1.9 billion. That is a lot of money in anybody's books.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Corrections Review Report

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After two years the Solicitor General finally saw fit to release the corrections review. It is long on cost savings but, I would argue, short on enhancements for public safety. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Given that the jury is still out on whether electronic bracelets or GPS tracking systems work, why did the Solicitor General choose to make Alberta the guinea pig for this experiment?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I first of all have to commend the committee that worked very, very hard on this particular issue, and that's the MLA for Red Deer-North, the MLA for Edmonton-Castle Downs, and the MLA for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. I think one thing that's important is the fact that this government, the Alberta government under the leadership of our Premier, has looked at the correctional landscape in this province and how it's changing. I would encourage her, if she could, to please write her federal counterparts and maybe ask them to look at their correctional facilities and how they're dealing with it.

But, Mr. Speaker, on the electronic monitoring question one of the things that we have had to face recently is a 40 per cent increase in conditional sentences that are being served in this province from a decision in 2000 called the Proulx decision that the federal government has made, a decision in retrospect to determine why we should keep people in a facility versus not in serving in the community. We believe that to protect the people in this province – and public safety is our number one priority – electronic monitoring is a good idea to monitor the offenders who are serving conditional sentencing in this province.

Ms Blakeman: Totally unproven.

My next question, also to the Solicitor General: how is public safety enhanced by having a category of offenders, which includes people convicted of assault, be allowed to report less to probation officers?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is talking about one of the recommendations in the report about supervision standards. I have to say that the supervision standards pilot project that we launched two years ago has been highly, highly successful and is supported by the probation officers in this province, who believe that this should be expanded across this province.

Now, when you talk about supervision standards, it's very important to say that this does not include sexual offenders, it does not include young offenders, it does not include offenders who are serving conditional sentencing, and it does not include high-risk or high-profile offenders. What this does include is an offender who is charged with theft, for example. Under their supervision standards reporting could be done every two weeks instead of one, which allows the probation officers in this province to deal with the high-risk offenders.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental, Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Solicitor General: given that youth will now serve their time in centres far from home, thereby weakening the support systems that will keep them from reoffending, why has the Solicitor General made it more difficult for these youths?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. We have a province that extends from north to south. We have young offenders who are sentenced to our correctional facilities, whether it's Edmonton, Calgary, Lethbridge, Medicine Hat, or Red Deer. We have offenders that could be from Peace River. They could be from all over. They go to the facility that's closest to them. So, you know, by looking at closing Medicine Hat, where the utilization rate is very low, and the Lethbridge and Red Deer units of the young offender centres, we're letting our young offenders go to the facilities. The way she speaks, she'd want a young offender centre in every area in the province.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Prescription Drugs

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Drugs have been the fastest-growing component of Canadian health care during the last 25 years . . . The public sector dominates most Canadian health care provision . . . In the area of pharmaceuticals, however, private sector funding has always dominated.

These are not my words but direct quotes from page 33 of the $100,000 report that the Minister of Health and Wellness commissioned from the Conference Board of Canada and tabled in this Assembly two weeks ago. My question is to the Premier. Given that the area of health care with the most out-of-control costs is the one dominated by the private sector, how can allowing more private involvement in our public health care system do anything other than drive up costs and make the health system less sustainable?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again you're comparing apples and oranges and grapes and pears and turnips and potatoes and everything else. You can't equate and compare the involvement of private pharmaceutical companies with the whole issue of privately delivered health care.

I'll give you an example. The example would be ophthalmology services. Certainly, an ophthalmologist operating out of a private clinic and doing cataract surgeries, for instance, can reduce his overhead and do things, according to an ophthalmologist I talked to, in a much more efficient manner. One of the ways is that he doesn't have to hire union staff – I know that would be offensive to the NDs – so that people working in his office can do all sorts of duties outside of medical duties if they're required to do those duties, administrative duties and so on.

Another example of the public system, the sole public system, is in the area of purchasing. In hospitals there is not the freedom to purchase. Everything is done through a purchasing agent, as I understand it.

I'll give you a case that is anecdotal, but it happens to be true, a true anecdote. I had the opportunity recently of visiting CUPS, the Calgary Urban Project Society. CUPS ministers to those on the street with drug problems – I'm talking about illicit drug problems – and they were wondering about the possibility of purchasing methadone, which is used as a treatment for heroine addiction, through the Calgary regional health authority. I contacted the Calgary regional health authority, and they told me that because of their purchasing policies and the way that they have to purchase, it would probably be cheaper for CUPS to go to Shoppers Drug Mart to get the methadone.

The other instance I was going to allude to goes back to the ophthalmology . . .

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: My first supplementary to the Premier: given that the Ministry of Health and Wellness's budget for pharmaceuticals has gone up a whopping 28 per cent from last year to this year, why has the government failed to implement innovations like reference-based pricing and increased use of generic drugs that provinces like B.C. have successfully used to constrain drug costs since 1996?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, we do have a generic drug policy. That policy is the least-expensive alternative.

One of the problems that we encounter – and I don't know how the hon. leader of the third party would address this, and it doesn't matter whether you're a Liberal or a Conservative or a member of the New Democrats – is that if you have cancer and there is a drug on the market that might be better or slightly better than the least-cost generic drug, the patients are going to demand this drug if it alleviates pain, in their minds or if it actually does, or if it prolongs life, even if that prolonging of life might be only for three or four months. They are going to ask for that demonstrably more expensive drug. It's one of those moral problems that health regions under ND administrations, under Liberal administrations, under Conservative administrations have to deal with, and it's one of the things that we'll have to deal with as we work through reforms.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental, Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a solution to this moral dilemma the Premier is talking about.

Let me ask him this: if this government is serious about making the health system sustainable, as opposed to lining the pockets of private health insurance companies, why has it failed to adopt the best practices of countries like Sweden, which funds 100 per cent of drug costs from public sources at a lower overall cost than is the case in this province?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting – well, strange, perhaps – that one day we would be talking about looking at best practices in countries like Sweden and be criticized by the NDs and the next day the NDs are suggesting that we look at the best practices in countries like Sweden. That's precisely what we are going to do.

I want this hon. member to stand up now and promise today that if we implement the best practices adopted by Sweden, he will never in this Legislative Assembly or anywhere else criticize the government for it.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

SuperNet Delivery to Schools

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I received notice from several of the school boards in my constituency about the pending connection to the SuperNet. These boards, indeed all the boards in my area, are very excited about the potential for the provision of some superb learning opportunities. Some of the boards, however, have been advised that in some cases there may be two types of connection: a wireless and a fibre optic. In fact, in one district out of the 15 schools all within a city 10 would be wireless and five would be fibre optic. My questions are all to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Could the minister assure this House and the education community that even with these two types of delivery services the level of service under SuperNet will not be compromised?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta SuperNet is the infrastructure that is being put in place for high-speed broadband network services. That infrastructure will consist of both fibre optic and wireless components. Bell as the major contractor is obligated to provide service levels, in this case to schools. As part of our role Alberta Innovation and Science's job is to ensure that, whether they are a fibre optical network or a wireless solution, in fact those service levels are met and are reliable and deliver the kind of capacity that we have promised.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the demand for capacity will probably grow at each school site, who will pay for the upgrades and maintenance of these wireless and fibre optic deliveries?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, in the industry the term that's often referred to is scalability, and that means the ability to take services and actually scale them upward as the demand for broadband increases. We've seen over the last number of years the insatiable demand that users have had on broadband services. So as schools require additional bandwidth, these upgrades will be provided to them as part of Bell's obligation in the contract.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That definitely is good news.

Given that there appears to be some confusion out there on servicing and costs, is the Department of Innovation and Science working closely with Alberta Learning to make sure that there is clarification on these issues?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear that Alberta Innovation and Science is communicating on a regular basis with Learning, with Health, with Community Development as we start to deliver and build the Alberta SuperNet. In addition, we are also prepared to meet with representatives of school boards and hospitals or libraries to make sure that we understand their concerns, and we can also let them know how we are delivering on the service that we have promised.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

SuperNet Service Costs

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The $193 million that the government gave Bell to build the SuperNet will be a drop in the bucket compared to the fees over the next 10 years that taxpayers are going to pay Axia, the SuperNet service provider. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Given that the yearly cost of each connection is $3,000 and at least six ministries are paying for its services, what will the SuperNet cost taxpayers over the next 10 years?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, as I just referred to in my previous answer, the Alberta SuperNet is an infrastructure project that builds a network that provides high-speed broadband services. Over that service provision you can run applications such as the Internet, but the Internet is only one part of a service delivery. You could run an application like RACOL, which we demonstrated, from Rainbow Lake through La Crête to the University of Alberta to actually have teaching sessions using, again, Alberta's technology through the Smart board whereby you could instruct students in all of these centres at the same time. Schools and libraries and municipalities and everybody else have to pay a fee to access broadband capacity.

Let me use an illustration, if I could, Mr. Speaker. Currently you have a normal Internet high-speed service at your home, which I would compare to, say, a garden hose. The Alberta SuperNet, as it gets to schools and libraries, actually provides in a picture kind of way a fire hose so that you can send a lot more data and digital services and expanded applications over that kind of network that are not currently available.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental, Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Completely evasive.

Given the constant obsolescence in this technology, why did the government lock us into a 10-year service provision contract with Axia?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, going back to the first question that was received about the $3,000, I must admit that I'm confused about where the $3,000 comes from, because there are different levels of service depending on the connection that you choose. So there's an option to have a 256K service. You could have a two megabit service. You could have a five megabit service. You could have a 20 megabit service. You could potentially even at some point have a 100 megabit service. There are different costs that you pay to subscribe to that kind of broadband.

At some point soon we're going to be looking at the Minister of Learning's budget – and he may wish to supplement; I don't know – which talks about the connection speed that he is guaranteeing and providing so that every school, a thousand more schools, that currently do not have high-speed broadband in our province will be able to have access to it.

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. member, this is getting to be a long question, and we're still only on the second part of a three-part question. Can you do it in 30 seconds? The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My department has budgeted $10 million a year for SuperNet costs. We anticipate that this is what it will be. I will add that we're looking at the cities of Edmonton and Calgary probably decreasing their Internet costs by close to 50 per cent with SuperNet.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.
Final supplemental, Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that the government has already provided $1.2 million to municipalities for hookup, how much more is the government going to have to give municipalities to help pay Axia's service fees?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the question, first of all, is about infrastructure, but more importantly, the cost is not a cost. You know what it is? It's an investment in rural Alberta and urban development, that you don't support. [interjections]

The Deputy Speaker: Hopefully, all of these extra people who are helping ask the question and, worse yet, are trying to answer the question will go to one minister and one member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Alberta Works Program

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2001 the Minister of Human Resources and Employment put in place a committee consisting of the members for Calgary-Bow, Calgary-East, Cardston-Taber-Warner, Edmonton-Norwood, and myself to investigate our provision of low-income benefits to needy Albertans. Following this review and subsequent report the minister has announced a new program known as Alberta Works. Can the minister explain to members of this Assembly and all Albertans what this new program means for low-income Albertans whom we are trying to help?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you very much, and perhaps it's a great opportunity to once again thank the committee that looked into Alberta Works. Alberta Works, that we announced yesterday, has some main goals. We want to move people from assistance to independence through the workforce. For those people that are currently already working, we want to do whatever we can to have them maintain positions within the workforce, and of course for those who are unable to work, we want to be able to supply their basic needs for them. So this is what we've been doing.

The main focus now of the Human Resources and Employment budget will be on skills training. I want to assure all members here in the House that we will be very aggressive in moving people from a sense of reliance on the government to one of self-reliance.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: will Alberta Works clients see an increase to their benefits as compared to the old program?

Mr. Dunford: Probably not if they're just looking for cash in their pockets or, of course, into their bank accounts. What we are doing is in terms of some benefits in kind. Basically, what we are able to do, then, is increase the financial support of our client base, and we've added some new features. Certainly, some of our folks find themselves in situations of abuse, and we need to get them out of those situations. So we're able to provide some additional funding in those particular areas.

I think that every member in this House is concerned about single moms and their situation with how it relates to them moving into the workforce and how it relates then to child care. So we're kind of opening up some new avenues in that area, rewarding families, particularly grandparents now, to be involved with those children to make it easier on the whole family.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: from a qualitative perspective will our clients receive a different or better type of service?

Mr. Dunford: Well, it's certainly going to be different. We've been working on this for the last three or four months at quite a pace with our front-line workers. Again, we want to increase their skills at assessment as people come forward seeking support.

Basically, what we're doing, Mr. Speaker, is moving from a system of labelling people and then providing entitlements to a more individualized case management approach. Then through the assessment, of course, we can look at a menu based on what their individual needs actually are. So I think that we'll see more attention given to the individual person, the individual Albertan, seeking assistance. Our main goal is to move them from assistance to being taxpaying Albertans.

2:10 Private/Public Partnerships

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, we continue to receive many letters and inquiries from Albertans on P3s. They are concerned that this government can't estimate the cost of a P3 project, even though they have committed hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars to these projects. Albertans are outraged that this government would rather hide the infrastructure debt than be accountable for the public money they spend. To the Premier: why should Alberta taxpayers believe that P3s save them money when the Minister of Transportation and the Minister of Infrastructure refuse to give an estimate of how much a P3 project should cost?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is not true. There is one P3 project that has gone through the process, and the costs are public. P3s are not new at all. Maybe the name is new, the application of P3s. Is this hon. members suggesting that we should abandon the P3s that have existed for years and years and years in this province? Those are nursing homes. You know, for years nursing homes have been contracted by government to government or now to regional health authorities. They're all run by private operators but are subsidized by the government. There are examples of P3 proposals or projects that have existed and worked in this province for years.

Now, relative to new P3 projects there is a process in place, and it involves a detailed adjudication as to the worthiness of the project. If it fails to meet the many tests involved, then it simply will not proceed, and we will proceed with the project on a conventional basis if indeed we have the money. If we don't have the money, then the project won't proceed. But if it meets all the tests and if it is a good project, then we will proceed with a P3.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental, Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: when will Alberta taxpayers see the proof that the southeast ring road extension or the Calgary court centre are more cost-effective?

Mr. Klein: I don't know about the south ring road, Mr. Speaker, but it will have to meet the test, and the process is a very transparent process, at least the outcome. If people, including members of the opposition, have a problem with the outcome and can provide demonstrable evidence that the project will not save taxpayers' dollars or the project will be inefficient or the project will not be properly managed, if they can present evidence relative to these issues or other issues, then we'll take that evidence into consideration.

Mr. Bonner: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given that many of the taxpayers that contact us believe that P3s are nothing more than private profiteering at public expense, what mechanisms are being put into place now so that P3s will not force taxpayers into costly agreements for generations to come?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to see copies, if the hon. member would be so kind as to submit copies since we don't have the privilege of FOIPing them like they do of us.

Mrs. McClellan: What? We can't do that?

Mr. Klein: Can we do that? If we can, fine. I'll FOIP them then. I mean, they FOIP us and then complain about the price they have to pay. So I would like to see this huge outpouring, this huge basketful, wheelbarrow full of letters that he talks about and this sense of outrage by Albertans. I would like to see that. I doubt it very much. So will the hon. member give me a commitment either after this question period or now that he will send me the letters?

Now, to answer his question, there are numerous steps that proponents have to go through to be approved for a P3 project, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure explain.

The Deputy Speaker: Very briefly, hon. minister. We're already into this for six, seven minutes.

Mr. Lund: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that this does take a bit of time, and we've done it many times in the House, so I'm not sure what is the best way to educate the hon. member.

The fact is, as the Premier has said, there are a number of steps including an outside panel that will look at these that are put forward, and they have to approve the project as being one that's good for Albertans, that it's efficient, that it's timely, and a number of other components. So in due course they will see.

The member continually brings this issue up. Just as an example, with one regional health authority that I'm aware of, we had allocated them so many dollars to get 150 long-term care beds. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that they came in in excess of 170 and had $7 million left over that they could put into some other facility.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Court System

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know of a constituent that had to defend himself in a frivolous civil lawsuit and was literally bankrupted by the legal costs he had to incur. This isn't the first time I have heard such stories. I realize it would be inappropriate to discuss a specific case in this House, so I have a general question for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister tell me what his department is doing to control the high cost of civil lawsuits so that the justice system is not one that financially punishes innocent people?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back in 1999, prior to my taking over the portfolio, there was a summit on justice, and that actually was one of the critical concerns that was identified by the summit on justice and therefore has been at the base of our business plan and operations since that time. It's a critical problem for Albertans. We have a great system in terms of a strong adversarial process with a strong tradition, but one of the problems is that it's becoming too expensive for the ordinary person to deal with.

So there have been a number of things that we've been trying to do to provide Albertans with alternatives both inside and outside the courtroom. We've expanded the use of mediation, other programs. The courts have also weighed in on this topic, knowing that they have to be responsive to Albertans' needs and to accessibility, so they've started judicial dispute resolution processes to try and encourage Albertans to solve disputes more actively and without the need for a trial. The long and short of it is that we have to find new and better ways to help Albertans solve their own problems: provide them with the tools, help them develop the tools to deal with their own problems without going to court, and to only use going to court as a last resort.

The court system is expensive. It is a difficult adversarial process. It needs to be there when points of law have to be resolved, but it should be a last resort. So we should be trying to ensure that Albertans have access to the tools to solve their disputes without going to court.

Now, having said that, Mr. Speaker, about 97 per cent of civil cases that are launched are resolved without going to court, so there's a lot of success in that area, but the big problem is where there's an economic imbalance between the parties. So we have to put in and we are working on putting in mechanisms which allow a party to a dispute to force an issue to go to mediation to see if that's a possible way of resolving it, and there are other methods that we're bringing forward to try and make the system more affordable.

Mr. Vandermeer: My second and only supplemental is to the same minister. Given that the status quo is simply not acceptable for people like my constituents, can the minister tell us if there are ways the system can be changed to take into account the needs of Albertans who feel unfairly punished by a complex and costly justice system?

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of things that we've done already. For example, as the member will know, the small claims limit, or the Provincial Court civil claims limit, has been moved from $7,500 to $25,000, and discussion is happening as we speak with the Provincial Court about potentially moving that to $50,000.

As members will know, people can appear in Provincial Court without representation by lawyers. They can put their cases, and as long as the cases are not complex cases requiring advocacy with respect to law, there's no good reason why parties should not be able to do that. So we're working on that process.

As the member may know already, as well, the civil mediation project in Provincial Court has been successful in helping people to resolve about 60 per cent of the cases that go before Provincial Court. On the family side, for example, there's a collaborative law process that's been engaged in by members of the bar themselves in which the lawyers contract with their clients not to go to court but to resolve matters through mediation, interest-based mediation. There are pilot projects in Edmonton and Calgary with dispute resolution officers who are members of the family bar who volunteer their time to assist mediating claims between parties so that they don't have to go to court. On the criminal side we have an early dispute resolution protocol that's come in so that we can have things resolved early if there's going to be a guilty plea in any event.

So there are a number of things we've done, and we're continuing to talk about reorganizing the courts on a single trial court basis so that we can be more effective in terms of using the expensive court resources in the most effective way. But again, Mr. Speaker, the key issue here is encouraging Albertans to solve their own disputes by arming them with the tools they need to do effective mediation.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Has the superintendent of insurance alerted the minister of any auto insurance companies that provide auto insurance to the public that have withdrawn from the Alberta market?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I'd have to take that question under notice.

The Deputy Speaker: First supplemental, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what extra costs would consumers have to pay if an auto insurance company that provides auto insurance withdrew from the Alberta market? How much would that cost consumers?

Mrs. Nelson: I don't believe, Mr. Speaker, that it would have an effect on consumers.

The Deputy Speaker: Final supplemental.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how many auto insurance companies have temporarily discontinued writing new business in Alberta since January 1, 2004, if any?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, under our new structure we've had tremendous co-operation from this industry to come on board to put this new structure in place. I believe they have carried on with their existing clientele very well, and they've honoured the freeze. They're looking forward to the new structure that the Member for Medicine Hat is going to be bringing forward this summer through the implementation team. They have worked very well with us on this structure. So I'm pleased to say that their response is good, and I am not aware of anything otherwise.

Members' Statements

The Deputy Speaker: Hon members, in 30 seconds I'll be asking the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, the hon. Member for Calgary-West, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs for their statements.

Tartan Day

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tartan Day is a special day for Scots and all those who would like to be Scots to celebrate all things Scottish by wearing the tartan and honouring the numerous and significant contributions to society made by Scots. In particular, Tartan Day commemorates the anniversary of the declaration of Arbroath, or the Scottish declaration of independence, which is considered the Scottish equivalent of the Magna Carta and is one of the earliest expressions of the rights of people to a peaceful and productive life free of oppression.

It was on April 6, 1320, at Arbroath, Scotland, when Scottish nobles declared their defiance of the English king and their commitment to the independence of Scotland. I have circulated a copy of the declaration to each member along with a swatch of the clan Douglas tartan ribbon, a tartan similar to my own clan Graham tartan. Officially, Tartan Day is April 6, but we are recognizing it today because of the Legislature's spring break next week.

Mr. Speaker, that Scots have had a major impact on the development of society is captured in the recent New York Times bestseller entitled How the Scots Invented the Modern World by Arthur Herman. He describes how the Scots have made crucial contributions to science, philosophy, literature, education, medicine, commerce, and politics which have shaped the modern western world. This is no less so in our own country and province, where the Scots have played a major role in the founding and development of our society. Of note, those of Scottish descent represent the largest immigrant group in Alberta, numbering some 650,000 people, or 1 out of every 5 Albertans.

Back now to tartans, which are synonymous with Scotland and Scottish clans. They are very popular symbols throughout the world, and new tartans are being continually created by families, organizations, and regions to identify themselves. Today many members are wearing tartan, including my Calgary colleagues and I, who are wearing the new Calgary tartan, unveiled last year as an official symbol of the city of Calgary, provided to us courtesy of the St. Andrew-Caledonian Society of Calgary.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say: let everyone wear their tartan with pride.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Wilbur Griffith

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Wilbur Griffith, one of Calgary's shrewdest, most generous, and most humorous entrepreneurs, passed away March 20, 2004, at the age of 101. Wilbur is best known for his donation in 2000 of 92 hectares of Elbow river parkland to the city of Calgary. Griffith Woods, as it is named, is about four times the area of P.E.I. To his friends Griff will always be remembered as the guy who played four holes of golf on his 100th birthday, and at age 97 Griff was tickled to be named the CFCN athlete of the week.

During my 1996 nomination campaign I came to know the graciousness of Wilbur and Betty in their beautiful home and was honoured by his support over the years. In 2003 he joined other Calgary-West constituents to receive a Queen's jubilee award. Even last month, during a brief visit in the Rockyview hospital, I was reminded of his great intelligence and dignified manner.

Wilbur Griffith, beloved father, grandfather, and friend, was born in 1902 in Enid, Oklahoma. After earning a business administration degree at Drake University, Wilbur joined the Gulf Oil company, where over 20 years he gained necessary experience to become a very successful independent oil lease broker. Wilbur moved to Calgary in 1955, where he and his late wife, Betty, built their home and raised their family in Springbank. He founded Canadian Export Gas & Oil Ltd. and was contracted to supply the gas for Trans-Canada PipeLines. After 1965 Wilbur continued his entrepreneurial endeavours, including wheat farming, cattle ranching, and land development.

In 1977 Wilbur constructed the Pinebrook Golf and Country Club, which ignited his passion for the game. Wilbur also enjoyed hunting, giving golf lessons, and travelling. His quick sense of humour, charm, and optimistic zest for life will be sadly missed and lovingly remembered.

Wilbur is survived by his children, Sally Rondio, Julie Warthe and her husband, Rick, and Bill Griffith, and by his grandchildren, Justin, Tessa, Kai, and Nico. Wilbur has surely been reunited with his Betty in that better place.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Health Care System

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and members of the government caucus frequently misrepresent and distort the vision of medicare's founder, the late Tommy Douglas. The Premier has proclaimed that Tommy Douglas's vision of health care was a very minimalist one, a health care that would only protect people from losing their homes and livelihood because of grave illness. In other cases the Premier has invoked Douglas's name to justify the unjustifiable; i.e., the introduction of user fees, deductibles, and out-of-pocket expenditures for Albertans.

Let me say categorically that Tommy Douglas would never have supported this government's cold-hearted plans to burden hard-working and middle-class families and abandon the sick and the injured. Such distortions do a tremendous disservice to a truly great Canadian.

The Premier refuses to take seriously the counsel of men such as Tommy Douglas and Roy Romanow, both of whom served as Premiers of a province without the resources enjoyed by Alberta and who, therefore, know something about the difficulty of balancing provincial budgets. Romanow, like Douglas before him, understands that preserving health care in Canada demands that we strengthen the public system, not starve it, not dismantle it.

This government is so ideologically bent on padding the pockets of private health providers and insurers that they refuse to even consider the true vision of Tommy Douglas for a health care system, which is "a comprehensive health insurance program which will cover all health services – not just hospital and medical care – but eventually dental care, optometric care, drugs and all the other health services which people require."

Mr. Speaker, Tommy Douglas never envisioned a health system characterized by health premiums and profiteering. His vision was one of compassion, equality, and comprehensiveness, and that is a vision shared by a vast majority of Albertans.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Private Members' Business

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One Monday ago, the 22nd of this month, the Speaker made several comments on procedure. As you know – and I'm quoting – "Monday afternoon in our Routine is private members' business, very, very important in terms of the history of this Assembly and everything else that we deal with."

The Speaker further commented that what the "opposition might do is to make sure that there's never ever any time on the agenda for those bills to come to the agenda," not suggesting for a moment that that may be the case. The Speaker further elaborated.

The way it's going right now is that I sit back and I look here, and my subjective view is that the only private . . . bills that will ever reach the floor this session would be government private members' bills, but with all the written questions and motions for returns, if we spend as much time as we did today on five of them, none of those [bills ever will].

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal opposition, however, contrary to what the Speaker has observed, notes on their web page that "government MLAs are holding up their own bills that would enhance workplace safety for firefighters and other emergency workers by dodging questions on government expenses," further saying, "The government doesn't seem as interested in debating these issues as we do."

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to all members of this Assembly that many of the private members' bills before this Assembly at this time are of imperative importance. Some of the bills will preserve and enhance the safety of our front-line workers like firefighters, police officers, paramedics, prison guards, and others. Not passing these bills is detrimental not only to their health but to their lives. Hence, I would suggest that all members of this Assembly, particularly the members of the opposition, bring back the order of private members' bills on the agenda of this Assembly so that we can in a democratic manner debate these bills on their merits and either pass them or fail them on their merits alone.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The only comment I would make is that written questions and motions for returns are also private members' business.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Standing Committee on Private Bills has had certain bills under consideration and wishes to report as follows. The committee recommends that the following private bill proceed: Bill Pr. 2, Sisters of Charity of St. Louis of Medicine Hat Statutes Repeal Act.

The committee also recommends that the following private bills proceed with amendments: Bill Pr. 1, St. Mary's College Amendment Act, 2004, and Bill Pr. 3, Living Faith Bible College Act. As part of this report, Mr. Speaker, I will be tabling five copies of the amendments proposed for these bills.

Mr. Speaker, I do request the concurrence of the Assembly in this recommendation.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Norris: Stand up, Brian.

Mr. Mason: Save it for question period, hon. minister.

I'm presenting a petition signed by 47 individuals petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "implement a public, not-for-profit automobile insurance system."

Some Hon. Members: Forty-seven?

Mr. Mason: Forty-seven today, just today.

head: Notices of Motions

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has a notice of motion.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I'd like to advise the Assembly that at the appropriate time the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and leader of the New Democrat opposition will move:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly deplores the federal government's failure to deliver the new funding commitments necessary to adequately support health care in Alberta and the other provinces in its 2004-2005 budget and, further, that the Legislative Assembly urge the federal government to immediately correct this deficiency.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table a letter on behalf of the Premier. Much has been said in the last days about the horse racing industry, and of course much of that information was incorrect, incomplete, and some of it totally erroneous. The Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, in order to assist some of the members of this House to understand the importance of this industry, where 70,000 people work, to understand the split of the funds that they earn from slot machines, has written to the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition and invited him to tour Northlands Park – it's the one that's closest to us – and perhaps talk to some of the people who work in that industry and certainly better understand it. The type of information that's being given out here is a total disservice to the industry. On behalf of the Premier I would table this letter.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a tabling, as well, with a considerably shorter preamble. It is a pleasure for me to table a letter from a constituent of mine who feels very strongly about certain recommendations contained in the final report of the Learning Commission.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: I clearly thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. I'd like to table the required number of copies of the annual report of the Alberta Economic Development Authority. As you know, this is a requirement of our House. I would like to offer a very significant thank you to Mr. Art Smith, the cofounder of this with our Premier, and Mr. Ron Triffo for another fantastic year of work. I have the appropriate number of copies and I'm tabling them now.

head: 2:40 Motions under Standing Order 40

Federal Health Care Funding

Dr. Pannu:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly deplores the federal government's failure to deliver the new funding commitments necessary to adequately support health care in Alberta and the other provinces in its 2004-2005 budget and, further, that the Legislative Assembly urge the federal government to immediately correct this deficiency.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I'll speak to the matter of the urgency of this motion. The motion relates to health funding, which, of course, is an ongoing discussion that needs to be undertaken by all Albertans and Canadians, but this specific motion raises a matter of particular urgency and must be dealt with in a timely and pressing manner.

Mr. Speaker, the government introduced its budget for 2004-2005 last week, and this afternoon we will continue to give close examination to that budget. Last week the federal government also released its budget. In the days since, there have been hints about further federal funding for health care, yet no solid commitments have been made.

Mr. Speaker, our health care system remains in a precarious position. On the one hand, the Premier continues to threaten further privatization and delisting of services. On the other hand, the federal government presented its budget last week, and this budget was extremely disappointing because the federal government failed to indicate any commitment or timeline on the part of the federal government to meet the objective of providing funding for 25 per cent of the expenditures on insured services. Although it appears that the $2 billion guaranteed by the Prime Minister will likely be paid to the provinces sometime this year, these dollars will only represent a one-time injection rather than an ongoing base payment.

Mr. Speaker, it's urgent that the federal government be brought under immediate pressure to provide the stable, predictable, and long-term funding recommended by the Romanow commission. This motion is intended to bring such pressure to bear on the federal government, and I hope that all members of this House will give their unanimous consent to debate this motion this afternoon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Unanimous consent denied]

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Sustainable Resource Development

The Deputy Chair: As per Standing Order 58(3) the first hour will be dedicated to the minister and the opposition members, and thereafter any other member is able to participate.

The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and good afternoon. I'm pleased to be here today to talk to you about Sustainable Resource Development's 2004-2005 budget.

But first of all I'd like to take the opportunity to introduce the staff from our ministry who are sitting in the members' gallery. They will be taking notes, and some of the questions that I don't answer here today will be answered in writing shortly after. I have Stew Churlish, the assistant deputy minister for strategic corporate services; Ray Duffy, director of the finance branch; Donna Babchishin, director of communications; and Daphne Cheel, executive director of policy and planning. Of course, also we have Dave England, who is my acting executive assistant at this time.

I would like to take this opportunity to commend the dedication and professionalism that the ministry staff exhibits daily as they carry out their tasks. Our field staff are well known, respected, and appreciated in communities throughout Alberta. They do an outstanding job of managing our public lands and renewable resources and protecting our forests from wildfire and forest pests.

Our job in this department is to ensure that Alberta's natural resources are sustainable and available for future generations, to ensure that Albertans both now and in the future benefit from the development of their renewable resources and the public lands. To achieve that goal, the ministry has to maintain a balance between activity and conservation, and that's challenging. It has to consider economic, social, and environment values that all Albertans cherish. These three values are the very core of Sustainable Resource Development in this province.

The ministry has four core businesses: wildfire management, natural resource and public land management, Natural Resources Conservation Board, and surface rights and land compensation management. The ministry continues to be challenged by increased public awareness and expectations about the decisions that are made, competing demands on our landscape, and the need to reduce the footprint on this land base. The population and economic growth in Alberta are also significant factors affecting the services and the resources that the ministry oversees and manages. The ministry fully understands that the province's natural resources contribute to the high quality of life that Albertans enjoy.

A key business of the ministry is the sustainable management of our fish and wildlife resources. Grizzly bear conservation is a high priority area for the ministry, and a management plan is being developed for this species. Grizzly bear populations are very difficult to estimate. They spend the winter months hidden from view hibernating, and during the rest of the year they freely roam within a large area. It can be hundreds of square kilometres in size.

Alberta is internationally recognized for being a leader in grizzly bear research. SRD will continue the support of grizzly bear research so that we have the knowledge and planning tools to ensure long-term conservation of the grizzly bear in Alberta. This year we are conducting a DNA population census that will provide more accurate information on grizzly bear numbers. We will also continue with our support of grizzly bear research throughout the foothills model forest.

Alberta continues to make significant progress to support Alberta's endangered species legislation. This year SRD will support 14 recovery teams and over 16 stewardship research monitoring and sampling projects. A recovery plan is also being developed for caribou.

In order to improve our ability to manage all of our fishing resources, we continue towards reducing the number of commercial fishing licences in Alberta. Close to 275 fishing operators, accounting for more than 13,000 100-yard nets, have applied to participate in the buyback program which we call fisheries compensation. We will begin the process this year as dollars become available.

The interest in recreational fishing and hunting continues to grow. Last year over 221,000 sport-fishing licences were sold, an increase of about 4,000 over 2002. There were over 620,000 active wildlife identification number cardholders, an increase of over 50,000. Close to 97,000 hunters purchased more than 251,000 different hunting licences.

While the increased interest in recreational fishing and hunting is very positive, it does put increasing pressure on our natural resources. It is more important than ever to ensure that we have the proper system in place to deal with these increases. That means that our staff and ministry need to have the financial and manpower resources to carry out their responsibilities. We have set aside funds to develop partnership programs.

To generate revenue, the Alberta Professional Outfitters Society is collecting a levy that can go into the direct revenue fund for wildlife management. Alberta's 365 big-game outfitters are paying the fees for their wildlife allocation over five years. The $1 million that will be collected will assist wildlife programs such as wildlife inventories and aerial surveys to manage species like moose, deer, elk, and antelope.

Our fish and wildlife officers continue to do an outstanding job. Over the past year they have worked with other staff on new priority areas, such as the West Nile virus monitoring program, walleye monitoring, and obtaining samples of elk and deer for chronic wasting disease surveys. The $16.8 million budget for enforcement field services is a slight increase that will be used over 150 wildlife officers. About 130 of these are working in the field. Patrolling will continue to be required although they will be focused during angling and hunting seasons.

We have a challenge when our animals become urbanized also and become too familiar with human populations. We have deer, elk, moose, and coyotes coming into populated areas. This is not healthy for wild animals. Last year there were more than 16,000 accidents between vehicles and wildlife such as elk, moose, and deer and also resulting, unfortunately, in five fatalities. We are looking at a number of options, particularly continued education as well as additional changes to our fall hunt to address these issues.

There continues to be an increasing demand on our public lands and resources. We have seen an increase in the number of land dispositions provided through the public land and forest division. This department manages more than 187,000 land dispositions that are issued for agricultural, commercial, and industrial purposes. Last year dispositions increased about 6 per cent. This reflects the volume of work that the ministry staff are carrying out on a daily basis.

Over the next year SRD will continue to develop and implement policy guidelines and practices that will minimize the footprint on Crown land. We are working with the public stakeholders on a number of access management plans, such as the Ghost-Waiparous, which is over 1,500 square kilometres, and the Bighorn backcountry, which is over 5,000 square kilometres. These plans are being developed in consultation with stakeholder groups.

We are achieving a balance to protect the environment and provide recreation opportunities for the public. We are in the first full year of new rules for recreation and exploration access on agricultural leases on public land. The Agricultural Disposition Statutes Amendment Act has been very successful in resolving access issues between leaseholders and the recreation users. By December of last year nearly 90 per cent of the leaseholders had submitted contact information.

Supporting the agricultural community is also a big part of this department by ensuring that we have well-managed public rangelands.

Forestry continues to be an important part of our Alberta economy. It is an industry that generates an annual revenue of around $8 billion, provides jobs for over 54,000 Albertans, and is a key industry in the overall economic diversification plan of our province. In fact, about 45 communities in Alberta depend on forestry as their major source of income and also job creation.

I am especially proud of the working relationship that we have developed with industry. Despite the challenges, industry continues to show their commitment to innovation and the future of our forests. They continue to introduce new technology and leading-edge practices while placing a high value on concerns for the environment and wildlife.

Just last week the Alberta Forest Products Association announced that the value of forest products produced by their member companies increased productivity by 16 per cent. Alberta industries have increased their exports to the U.S. by 30 per cent from approximately 1.1 billion board feet to about 1.5 billion board feet. This is because Alberta has some of the most modern and efficient mills in North America. Our forest practices are also amongst the best, and we have done a good job of creating the environment for industry to create jobs and create wealth in Alberta.

It is important to remember that a healthy forest industry is crucial to the well-being of our economy and our environment. It is no secret that the Alberta forest sector continues to face some very real challenges such as the impact of the softwood lumber trade dispute. A priority for SRD is to continue to work closely with the industry and, of course, the people that are involved in the softwood lumber trade negotiations. Together we are looking at options to resolve this dispute on a long-term basis.

As you know, last year we had another very busy fire season. Over 1,100 wildfires burned nearly 55,000 hectares of forested land. Many factors affect the cost associated with protecting Alberta forests, such as weather conditions, fire hazard levels, and moisture levels. To be as effective and prudent as possible, we start with a base budget to ensure that we have adequate resources throughout the year. Our priority goals are to protect human lives and communities.

Being prepared will save taxpayers money in the long run by reducing the number of costly escaped fires. When large wildfires occur and when numbers get high, the cost of additional staff and resources is covered through supplementary estimates. Last fall it was determined that disaster assistance was required, and additional funds were made available through a sustainability fund. In 2002-2003 the department was able to collect on a wildfire insurance policy that was in place. After carefully reviewing the increased premiums for this year, it was not in our best interest to renew the policy for this fire season. Despite the severe fire season in parts of the province I am proud to inform you that we did not lose one single building to wildfires, and we were able to reduce large fires from 4 per cent to 2 per cent.

This past summer was also significant with the devastating impact that wildfires had on families and communities in B.C. A recent independent report on the B.C. wildfires urged government to reduce the risk of large wildfires. Their recommendations are consistent with those contained in past reviews of Alberta's protection practices. We have been doing much of this work already. Alberta is continuing to strengthen the FireSmart community prevention program and will take more resources in that area this coming year.

I would also like to address the fine work that is being done by the Natural Resources Conservation Board. The Natural Resources Conservation Board has two roles: the traditional role, to review projects that could affect the province's natural resources, and their new role as a regulator of confined feeding operations in Alberta. Ever since the NRCB assumed responsibility for regulating confined feeding operations, their workload has increased dramatically. The additional $1.1 million increase in their budget will ensure that they have the necessary resources to manage the confined feeding operations.

Last year the NRCB received 1,083 complaints, and so far they have resolved 876 of these. Inspectors from NRCB issued 19 enforcement orders. They received 148 applications for confined feeding operations or manure storage facilities. In the case of confined feeding operations the NRCB is involved in these stages and, of course, still takes directions from Environment on whether large projects require environmental impact assessment studies.

In its traditional role outside of confined feeding operations the NRCB kicks in once Alberta Environment determines the need for an environmental impact assessment study. The environmental impact assessment contains information on the anticipated social, economic, environmental effects of the project and what steps are being taken to reduce any adverse effects. As you can see, they continue to be extremely busy.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, the 20 minutes allocated to you have now lapsed.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to have an opportunity to talk about the estimates of Sustainable Resource Development this afternoon, and I look forward to the minister having a chance to finish his comments in a few minutes. I'd also like to thank all of the staff that are here. You guys do a great job, and I know that you try and keep him on track. It doesn't always work, but I know that you try your best.

That's one of the first things that I want to talk about this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, an issue that his department tried to keep him on track for and he didn't follow suit, and that's about grizzly bears. In spite of evidence that there are dangerously low populations in Alberta and in spite of the recommendations from the government's Endangered Species Conservation Committee that grizzly bears be classified as threatened and in spite of thousands upon thousands of protests from concerned citizens, the government decided to go ahead with this spring's grizzly bear hunt, which meant that they also ignored the recommendation of their own grizzly bear recovery team that the hunt be suspended this year.

In response to that, I sent out a letter to a number of Albertans criticizing the government for that decision, and I got back some very interesting comments, Mr. Chairman, some for and some against. Cliff Wallis of the Alberta Wilderness Association and Sonja Mihelcic of the Sierra Club of Canada, prairie chapter, and Peter Duck certainly supported what I was saying, but some people certainly didn't.

Tom Foss, who is the regulations chairman of the Alberta

Bowhunters Association, had some interesting things to say, including that he spends some 20 days in K Country every year and sees between six and eight bears there a year. He says:

There is a huntable population of bears there. Whether a hunter harvests the bear, a car runs them over or they are removed by Fish and Wildlife, or killed by another bear, killed as they are held in a trap or snare, there will always be bear mortality. Unfortunately we are never going to have the numbers of bears that lived here over 100 years ago but we do enjoy a [healthy] population [now]. In our opinion there are many areas in the province that can support a hunt.

I guess that's the minister's opinion too.

T.J. Schwanky of Cochrane was also concerned with what I said. He said that while he's typically been a big supporter of mine and my position on environmental issues, he thinks that I'm "way off base on the grizzly hunt." He says that "hunters pose no threat to these great bears and, in fact, are quite likely their best ally. The real threat to grizzlies is habitat loss and human use in the backcountry."

Also, Ryk Visscher, who is the past president of APOS, stated that as one of my constituents and one of my biggest past supporters and as a biologist and an outdoorsman himself he's extremely disappointed in my position. He talks about in the past my being reasonable and objective and that he shares a passion for the great outdoors and wildlife populations, which I do, and he believes that I'm ignoring the science that already exist on the population.

In response to that, we have Jeff Gailus from Canmore talking about the need for "the persistence of a stable population of grizzly bears in Alberta" so that everyone – photographers, hunters, the general population – and other bears can enjoy the bears forever.

But the latest (and very substantial) research on grizzly bears, both inside and outside Alberta, indicates that the population in Alberta is too small, the reproductive rate too low, the habitat too degraded and, most importantly, the human-caused mortality rate way too high (2 or 3 times sustainable levels) to ensure a future for Alberta's grizzly bears.

He then goes on to support that argument.

So my questions for the minister are with regard to this issue and his position in terms of the budget estimates for next year and how they're going to spend the money. One, what does he have to substantiate or does he believe he's going to have to substantiate that the grizzly bear population in Alberta is in serious danger and he still refuses to elevate the status of the grizzly to a threatened status? Do you expect that you're going to be revisiting this issue and potentially suspending the grizzly bear hunt? There is an estimate, Mr. Chairman, that there are only 250 to 350 mature breeding individuals on provincial land, whereas the recommended minimum number to maintain stable, healthy populations is a thousand bears. So if you could answer that question, I'd appreciate it.

3:10

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Those are definitely good questions. It is definitely a priority of our government to ensure that we do our job in maintaining the balance between, you know, the development of our resources out there and environmental protection and, of course, the protection of our wildlife resources also.

As you can see, my budget did not increase, but it did not decrease in any area. We will continue with our budget and the programs that we have in place, and the member I know is quite familiar with some of the programs that are in place. We will continue monitoring very closely.

The challenge we have out there is in relation to when you're monitoring, being able to count the number of animals that are out there. Most grizzly bears will hibernate. The easiest time to see them because of their colour would be in the snow, and of course they hibernate in the winter, so they're not out there. The other time that you could try to find grizzly bears to count would be maybe in early fall or in the summer. Their hearing is really good. You know, if a helicopter were to fly in any area within 10 miles of the animals, they would probably move and hide under the trees and shrubs and stuff. So it's a tough area. We estimate that there are over 500 grizzly bears, and some have indicated that there are more than that. So it's a real challenge.

What we've done this year is actually reduce the hunt by about 30 per cent. We still allowed about 130 licences a couple of years back, and with the 130 licences the average take of animals was about 12. We've reduced that by 30 per cent. There are now 73 licences, and I would estimate, based on historic information, that the maximum that would be taken out would be somewhere around eight or nine. So it is a challenge.

I mentioned in my opening speech that we have a challenge in relation to animals becoming urbanized, and that includes grizzly bears but a lot more black bears. In order to keep animals wild and away from growth centres like Edmonton and towns and hamlets and communities throughout the province – I believe it is healthy not only for humans but also for the animals to remain wild, and I believe that the way you do that is to continue some form of a managed hunt. Now, at what level do you maintain it to try and keep animals away from growth centres and towns so that they don't endanger lives? If you do run into a grizzly bear, either the grizzly bear is dead or you are. It doesn't walk away. In fact, it'll hunt you down. So it is a challenge, and we'll continue monitoring that closely.

In B.C., next door to us, they allow 200 licences, although their grizzly bear population is around 1,400, 1,500, 1,600 – I'm not sure – in that area. They allow a bigger hunt. You know, animals will move between borders, so again it creates additional challenges.

So whatever I don't answer here, we'll do in writing on that specific item, you can be assured. I commend you for continuing to put pressure on our government and the people that are involved in the hunt of grizzly bear. That will need better monitoring, no doubt, and better management. That's our goal: to achieve that balance.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My next set of questions is around declining woodland caribou populations. In March we asked the question about them, and basically the minister responded that things are fine and that the government's doing a good job at maintaining healthy wildlife populations. Meanwhile, in the Edmonton Boreal Market News, volume 2, issue 4, there was an article that talked about harvesting being postponed for the sake of caribou, where Weyerhaeuser will postpone harvesting on 82,000 hectares in Alberta in order to aid protection efforts for the mountain woodland caribou. So my question is: why is it that a large forestry company like Weyerhaeuser can recognize that no further harvesting should take place until a caribou recovery plan is put in place, but we're not seeing any leadership from your department on that?

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much. That's another very important question. Actually, the press release came out today.

This is a normal process for the corporate sector. We have in the past always worked with the industry out there, not only forestry but also the oil and gas industry. Al-Pac, for example, in my constituency has, you know, a study that has been going on within their FMA for a long period of time now on woodland caribou, monitoring and tagging and following the paths where the animals move. In fact, they've also developed, similar to Weyerhaeuser, a recovery plan and plan all their forest harvesting activities based on the free movement of these particular animals.

Now, when it comes to woodland caribou, one of the challenges we have, of course, is again the management of the population growth. Woodland caribou in Alberta is not a food source for First Nations. It is a food source for wolves, mainly. Therefore, the wolf population is growing. They have more impact on the caribou population than the economic activity that takes place out there.

There's no one else hunting the animals. Maybe one a year is taken out, I understand, by the First Nations. In the extreme northwest of Alberta I believe a few more are taken out, but in the north-central, northeast, all the way to Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories border there are very, very few animals ever taken out for a food source.

Therefore, the main predator is the wolf population. Wolves are very, very tough animals to count to start with, to manage the population. They're very, very smart animals. In fact, my dad trapped all his life. He's turning 92 years old soon. He's trapped since he was 12 years old, and he only saw wolves twice in his lifetime. Now, he's a guy that spends all his time in the bush. So we are dealing with smart animals that are after these other animals. When you go to some of the oil and gas plants that operate in the areas where the caribou are, sometimes you will find that the caribou will hang around the developed areas for protection from the wolves because wolves don't come near the developed areas.

So it's a real challenge, then, to try and keep that balance going. You know, we'll keep monitoring. We'll encourage industries to keep doing what they're doing, like Weyerhaeuser – I commend them for that – Al-Pac, and no doubt other companies that are doing caribou management are to be commended.

In 2005, I believe, two forest management agreements out of 20 or 21 will be renewed. Some of the things we'll look at as we move forward are what this company is doing in relation to minimizing the footprint we leave out there as we harvest the resources, working in co-operation with the oil and gas industry in relation to use of the land base, the road network developed, and, of course, you know, the amount of dollars they spend on management of the caribou. So there are options. Eventually, all the FMAs will be renewed. As we move forward, we can incorporate some of the changes that are necessary to put in long-range plans for those companies that may not be planning our plans.

Thanks.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My next set of questions is on Dutch elm disease. We've seen this disease kill millions of elm trees throughout North America, Europe, and Asia in the last few years. Alberta is one of the few areas in the world where elm trees are widely grown and the disease has not yet been widespread.

In the past a province-wide monitor ensured that we would be able to identify and monitor early signs of Dutch elm disease in order to prevent its spread here. Last year, however, that position was cut, and I believe that it hasn't been reinstated this year. So my questions are: given that the elms in Alberta's rural areas alone are valued by this government at $634 million, does the ministry not see a value in keeping that position to monitor the disease, and will you be contributing any funding towards the monitoring of this disease in rural areas?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Chairman, on this particular issue I'll get my department to answer in writing to you.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, I'd like to add to that question then: if you could give us some detail on what plan you have to stop the spread of the disease or to eliminate it once it is seen to be spreading in Alberta.

My next question, then, is going to be on forest management, including FSC certification. A study on the boreal forest entitled State of Denial, funded by an Alberta timber company, is demonstrating how the combined impacts of human activity are devastating Alberta boreal forests. FSC certification would help to protect these important areas while allowing our forestry companies to become more competitive. So the question is: when is the government going to establish more protected areas so that it can implement the forest certification standards? Can you tell us what you're planning on forest management for the 2004 plan? Do we see a review of the Forests Act any time soon?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll start off with the certification process. That is another challenge. I'm sure the member is talking about the international certification.

It is a challenge, and it's something that we have to monitor very closely. Some of the larger companies already have those processes in place. It is an area where it makes it quite complicated for some of the smaller companies in particular because the international certification has nothing to do with the quality of wood that is manufactured or the amount of wood that is taken out of a tree. The certification is based on how you harvest your resources, and that's not bad. That's not bad. Some of the large companies, I believe, won't have too much of a problem in getting international certification. The companies that will be faced with a challenge are the smaller operators.

We have over 125 small sawmill operators and loggers in Alberta, companies that produce less than 5 million board feet per year. So far we've managed to exempt those in our softwood lumber negotiations. That is why there are about 50 communities that depend on forestry as their major source of income and also job creation. In those particular cases most of those companies will not be able to get international certification. We may have to look at it as a province in developing a certification plan to certify those smaller companies that can't afford to do the certification, because it would close the industry down.

In relation to the actual planning of how we harvest our resources in the forest management agreements, number one, when a company takes a forest management agreement, they buy it for 20 years, normally, 20-year agreements. Of course, when you do that, you have a 20-year plan to start with as to how you're going to harvest your resources and how you're going to expand your company and diversify and value-add and continue your plan to make, you know, the revenue that's required as a private company.

Then there is another plan, a five-year plan of how you're going to develop the resources. Then there's an annual operating plan. Again, most FMA holders and quota holders have to have a public meeting and invite the public to participate in how your harvest plan is going to be done for that year. Once that process is completed, it has to be approved by the minister, so the minister ends up seeing most of the plans in Alberta.

I believe there are one or two FMAs out there that don't have that condition in them and that may not be following the rules that closely. As we review these FMAs, we will make sure that the consultation part is included in them, so that will deal with that specific issue you mentioned.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to join the debate on examining the 2004-2005 estimates for the Sustainable Resource Development department.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make some general observations first about the widespread concern across this province that this department's ability to enforce its own laws and to enforce compliance with respect to its obligations to protect renewable resources has been on the decline since the get-go.

In 2001 this department was established, of course, to provide protection for and to enhance the sustainability of Alberta's renewable resources. On the watch of this minister Albertans are saying that the capacity of the department starting in 2001 has simply gone down. So I really want to get a clear message across the way to the minister that people in Alberta are very concerned about the growing incapacity of his department to do what it is there to do. The fact that it is there is that it has certain responsibilities. The message that I'm getting from the press, from the media, from various organizations, concerned Albertans is that the department is simply not doing its job, and I think the buck stops at the minister's desk on this, and he has to, I think, explain this.

3:30

I just want to read, Mr. Chairman, from a letter that the minister received from Steve Carlson, president of the Alberta Game Warden Association. This letter is dated October 22, 2003, and I just want to read here and there from this letter. I'm sure the minister has the letter available to him, and I hope that he'll pay attention to it. Mr. Carlson draws the minister's attention to the growing difficulties that his staff responsible for the sustainability of resources and for protection of wildlife and fish populations is having because of the budgetary cutbacks that they have had to live with.

Mr. Carlson says that the Officers in the province have a very difficult job. As the primary front line contact for the department they are left with the challenge of being everything to every one. They are expected to provide detailed biological information on complex ecosystems, they facilitate volatile public meetings, they provide talks to school groups, respond to incidents involving dangerous wildlife, they apprehend serious resource violators, and they provide logistical support to other government departments such as those dealing with health crisis. The nature of their responsibilities dictates that they are a very mobile and responsive agency actually present on the landscape, with representation in communities throughout Alberta. This fact carries with it the reality that equipment needs and operating costs are greater than other functional positions within the Department. It appears this fact has not been recognized with the present allocation of operating funds within the Department.

The next paragraph is particularly disturbing in what it has to say.

It has been widely reported in the media that the Fish and Wildlife Division is suffering a severe shortfall on the money it requires to effectively deliver its programs.

Then the writer observes:

At this same time, operating budgets for the Fish and Wildlife enforcement districts across the province have been slashed anywhere from 20 - 50% compared with last years allotments.

So it compares with, I think, 2002's allotments.

What this equates to is that some districts were allocated a total budget of $8,300.00 to cover the costs of telephones (office and cellular), equipment purchase/repair/maintenance, fuel purchases, office supplies, travel and subsistence, [information technology] repairs or upgrades, office equipment rentals, etc. This then begs the question . . .

And I'm going to ask the minister to address this.

. . . where have the dollars (the $700,000.00 budget increase, the $800,000.00 reduction experienced by wildlife and fisheries management, and the money from the 20-50% district budget cuts) been allocated?

Where has it been transferred to? Why is it not available to the fish and wildlife branch of the department? What has the minister done in this year's budget to address this clear concern that his own staff has with respect to the inability of the department to provide those services?

Another quote.

It is reported that the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development was created in March 2001 to provide greater direction and focus on the sustainability of Alberta's renewable resources. The Deputy Minister for the department has indicated that nothing has changed in terms of the department's expectations that compliance with legislative requirements is a necessity.

I'm asking the minister: is he satisfied that this legal requirement on his department to have sort of compliance with legislative requirements as a necessity – does he have the resources to meet that obligation?

Published documents have acknowledged the importance of having a credible and effective enforcement program, which can be called into action when education and prevention are not sufficient.

I just heard the minister in his introductory remarks say that he focuses on education and prevention, but his own staff is saying that education and prevention are not sufficient to achieve compliance with the legislation.

In response to the limited budget dollars allocated, managers within Fish and Wildlife were forced to provide direction to Officers that preventative patrols would be discontinued, and officers were not to work evening and weekend shifts to avoid the additional expense of $1.75/hr for shift differential and weekend premium. Of course it is during these evening and weekend periods when officers notice increased unlawful harvest of our resources. This also has meant that repairs and maintenance to equipment vital to their ability to monitor resource harvest and status (such as our highly sought after fishery resources) just do not happen.

Now, I don't think anyone can communicate to the minister in clearer language the sense of crisis that is experienced by the people on the front line in his own department.

A snapshot of the results this direction has had indicates that enforcement actions for the month of July has decreased by over 50% when compared to the same time period during the previous two years.

Grizzly management plans . . .

To which the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has spoken already.

. . . call for increased enforcement; meanwhile proactive deterrent patrols are at an all time low. Efforts of protecting the bull trout (one of the province's official symbols, sporting a zero catch limit), has all but been eliminated leaving these protected fish populations vulnerable to unregulated and uncontrolled harvest.

I hope the minister is listening. These are not my words. It's coming from his own staff.

Monitoring of commercial fisheries has in some cases been limited only to examining records blindly trusting that they have been completed truthfully and accurately, and that nets have not been set in locations closed as sanctuaries for the fish or where recreational fish such as walleye accumulate thereby being susceptible to over-harvest.

The question is asked by Mr. Carlson himself.

Do you view the delivery of compliance assurance activities with its present restrictions as being credible and effective?

Minister, I'm asking the same question: is your new budget addressing this question, and if so, in what way? Are the resources there for you to be able to live up to that compliance assurance that your department is supposed to certainly respect and implement?

Mr. Chairman, talking about fish in particular – and I have had on this matter some discussions both in public and in this House with this minister. You know, there are members in this House and the Premier who can go to these rather fancy lodges outside of this province to do their fishing. Most Albertans rely on the sustainability of the fish stocks in the province for them to be able to enjoy the natural wealth that's available to us by way of these renewable resources.

If the minister fails in his obligations to protect those resources simply because he can't win more dollars, more resources when he's sitting around the cabinet table, then people have the right to ask the question: why is this happening? So I hope the minister will answer that question.

I'm asking the minister to address this question concretely and nonrhetorically if possible. I'm trying to be as factual as one possibly can be on this. These are very serious questions, Mr. Minister, on your watch, and the capacity of the department to do these things has gone down, not up. Why? Why are you putting in danger the future of these resources for our present generation and for the coming generations? If you don't do the job that your department is supposed to be doing – and that's why the department was established in the first place – we won't have these resources either for our enjoyment or for increasing the attractiveness of the province to tourists.

The tourist industry is an important industry in this province. This government is committed to expanding that industry, but if we deplete our fish resources, if we allow our very unique species to be put in danger and disappear, then what happens? Your failure here is working at cross-purposes to the very goals that the department in terms of economic development, social development sets up for itself.

Here are some questions for you, Minister, to address.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the member for all the questions because they are good questions. I know that he's as sincere as any other Albertan in ensuring that we protect the limited, valuable resources that we have in Alberta.

The member used the words crisis in wildlife management in Alberta. There is no crisis. To start with – and the member may disagree with me – I feel that 99.9 per cent of Albertans are very honest. They would not purposely break any laws. Therefore, the plan we have in place is to deal with those few people that possibly break the law and to try to target our activities based on that. Why hit the 99.9 per cent of Albertans who never break the law, have a whole pile of staff out there checking everybody inside and out, when you know for a fact – and the officers themselves know – that Albertans are generally honest? They do not break the law on purpose.

You know, we have a $40 million budget. We have over 1,900 staff total because staff do work together in a number of areas, even sometimes in different departments to support other departments. We have over a hundred fish and wildlife officers out there, and we need to make sure that we have efficiencies wherever possible when we operate the department.

I spent 19 years in government myself, right from a wage position to a management position, in fact working as a consultant to an assistant deputy minister. I tend to think that I know how the departments operate inside and out. I know that from my involvement previously there are some deficiencies. Staff are generally good, but there are some efficiencies that we need to improve.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Let me reiterate here in Mr. Carlson's own words his very serious concern. The minister may not want to call it a crisis. Let me just read to the minister. I think he may have forgotten the contents of the letter and the tone of the letter. In the second last paragraph there, the important paragraph there, this is what Mr. Carlson says, Minister.

Although compliance enforcement is only a portion of what we do, it is no less important than the other facets of our job. We recognize that we always have to strive for ways to improve efficiency and focus our efforts on mission critical activities. However we do feel an obligation to do all that we can to ensure the sustainability of Alberta's natural resources, and the viability of those industries that are geared to capitalize on Alberta's natural wealth. It is for this reason that I respectfully submit that the Fish and Wildlife Division desperately requires . . .

Desperately requires. Is that a tone of crisis or not, Minister?

. . . additional funds to be allocated to their operating budgets.

Without measured controls on development and compliance with management goals and objectives, these finite resources may be over exploited and doomed to long periods of recovery and inaccessibility to Albertans and industry alike.

I'd like the minister to respond to it and specifically address the question: by how much has he increased the budget for the fish and wildlife division, which is desperately short of resources to do the job that it is required and expected to do?

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the one hour allocated between the minister and the members of the opposition has now elapsed. The chair will recognize any other member that may wish to participate in the debate.

Hon. minister, you may proceed with your remarks, but I'll recognize if there are any other government members.

Mr. Cardinal: Okay. Thank you very much. The other area that the member mentioned earlier, of course, is in relation to the commercial fisheries issue. Starting April 1, which is coming very shortly, we will commence the compensation program as part of our overall fishing management strategy in Alberta. We will commence the buyout program.

Right now we have over 800 commercial fishermen in Alberta. They fish approximately 34,000 100-yard nets. Our plan is to reduce that down to 200 and about 18,000 100-yard nets. We will have viable commercial fishing operations and the ability for us to be able to manage better and monitor better and ensure that the program works well.

The other thing we do, of course, is run some pilot projects. Calling Lake was one example. I think most people are familiar with that. It is working well, where part of the lake is closed completely from all activity. One part is open, where you can keep one walleye of any size. That's being monitored. The report is supposed to come out very shortly.

The other thing we're doing is that starting April 1, we will initiate the barbless hooks, where people will have to use a barbless hook now to fish in any lake or river or stream. I believe, again, that that will help in restoring some of the fisheries we have in Alberta because if you do catch, say, a larger walleye or pike with a barbed hook, right now in a lot of cases when you take the hook off, you destroy the fish pretty well. If it's a catch-and-release program, you have no choice but to release the fish into the water to prevent you from getting a fine. So we are doing a lot of new, innovative ways of managing the fewer resources we have.

Our budget is consistent from previous years, so all we're doing is trying to operate efficiently within that budget, and we will. Like I say, I'm quite familiar with how departments operate and where there are maybe some weaknesses. We will continue to do that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a question of the minister which the minister may or may not be able to respond to at the moment. It's really to satisfy a curiosity that I've had for some time. The curiosity has to do with confined feeding operations or livestock operations in general near a watershed, in particular confined feeding operations. As I understand it at the moment, if I were to build a house for a single family and it were to be outside of the normal sewage area and it was next to a watershed, I would have to have the effluent hauled away. In some areas it's not even permissible to have a septic field, depending upon where it is on the watershed. Why is it not permissible to have a single-family residence with human waste going into the watershed but it is permissible to have a large confined feeding operation that would have effluent going into a watershed?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Chairman, again, because it's a pretty detailed question and it's very, very sensitive, I'll get the department to answer that particular one in writing.

In relation to the whole process of confined feeding operations, of course in the past, you know, as a former municipal councillor I was involved in some of this where applications would come into the municipality development officer for review and possible approval for any type of development, including residential, including larger commercial and industrial operations.

Of course, then in addition to that, there were the regional planning commissions, which in some cases, not in all cases, were involved in approving some of these developments. Because the municipal planning commissions were eliminated a number of years ago to reduce expenditures in Alberta, it was critical that some form of an organization be developed to deal with the intensive growth of the animal industry, and of course the NRCB two years ago was given that added role and works very closely with the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

But specific to the question I will get the staff to write.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have two sets of questions left, and then I'm done for this afternoon.

The first is on staffing within the department. I've asked this question many times over the years in the House, and it's still, I believe, an issue, that fish and wildlife officers can't really be expected to protect our resources if they aren't adequately funded.

We see that other people are picking up on this issue. Back in the fall there was a letter printed in the Alberta Game Warden magazine from a retired fish and wildlife officer asking for more support for fish and wildlife resources. He talked specifically about:

There must be political will and some priority placed on Fish and Wildlife resource research and protection. A good start would be to take back the fish and wildlife licence money ($7 million) that is given to the Alberta Conservation Association, which in many cases duplicates the work and fragments management programs.

He really believes that the money has better use within the government department because the devoted staff there will bring forward good management plans and work within budget constraints.

That concern was picked up in the Edmonton Journal with regard to Fish and Wildlife losing to poachers. Officers feel demoralized and worthless because of budget cuts.

I for many years have advocated that there be more positions in this department rather than fewer. It's one of the few places where I think we just don't spend enough money. So I would like the minister's comments on that.

I'll just wrap up my last set of questions too, and that is in terms of the Alberta Conservation Association. We're getting increased concern from member groups in that association and groups that have decided that they will not or will no longer be member groups that the ACA, which has DAO status, is not spending the money wisely. The issues that they would particularly want addressed are five, and I will talk about them.

The first one is that the "priority or focused spending of hunter and angler monies . . . has not been achieved." They believe that necessary fish and wildlife surveys are not being conducted "that will better manage our resources and provide increased opportunities." They believe that they are unable to direct the monies for on-ground fish and wildlife habitat protection, development and enhancement. Current spending includes a large manpower base, administration, spending on lower priority species, indirect benefits to hunters and anglers and generally lower priorities to hunters and anglers.

The second point. "The government is unable to deliver many of these necessary programs and although the Minister has tried to obtain increased budgets, it does not appear likely" that it's going to happen in the near future. "The concern for funding fish and wildlife management and enforcement has been expressed by government biologists and enforcement officers, and fish and game members, and the media."

Number three: "Without redirected funding and existing limited government budgets, the precautionary approach to fish management . . . will prevail." Then there may be "few changes to very restrictive catch and size limits. Such restrictions may in part be a cause for reduced angler interest in Alberta."

Point four.

The current organization of fish and wildlife management in Alberta appears to be confusing and attempting to determine who (the government or the ACA or the hunters/anglers) is responsible and accountable for information, for management priorities, and for spending priorities is a challenge.

Lastly, efforts to change the direction of the Alberta Conservation Association [have] included considerable correspondence, the submission of resolutions to the ACA Annual General Meeting . . . , input into various government reviews of the ACA, and the 2002 Memorandum of Understanding between government and the ACA.

Yet little of the input has been accepted. In fact, former members have as a result withdrawn from participation in ACA.

So if the minister could address those concerns for me in terms of staffing, their relationship with the ACA, and why you don't just take back this organization, which doesn't seem to be meeting its mandate, and have those dollars available within your department.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much. Of course, in the past year we have restructured the Alberta Conservation Association some, and we are monitoring it very closely and work with them very closely to see if there should be changes. At this time we are not anticipating any major changes immediately, but you know that if any program does not work in an organization like Sustainable Resource Development, of course the program won't be around. But we will monitor it.

Those are good questions. I'll have my staff answer most of them. But for the benefit of Albertans I think people need to know that the department does spend more than $200 million already. We have around 1,900 staff. A lot of the questions today were related to the fish and wildlife issue or cuts in the budget, but there are no cuts in the budget. We still expend $40 million. We have over a hundred fish and wildlife officers, and we do share movement of support staff and administrative staff in particular.

We can do some efficiencies yet within the department. You know, I think it's the right direction to go. I'll give you one example. At one time, as a member of the government working in the civil service, if a meeting was held in Edmonton and you're situated, say, at Lac La Biche, Slave Lake, or a place like that, which is about a 2 and a half hour drive, if the meeting started at 8:30 or 8:15 in the morning, you had to come in the night before, leave mid-afternoon, leave your work, come to Edmonton, stay overnight so you can attend a meeting at 8:15.

I often wondered why the meetings were not held, say, an hour and a half later. So you do not stay overnight. You can continue working on your job out there during that day, come the next morning, do your meeting, and go back the same day. It would save dollars for the taxpayer, and it saves time for the officers or government employees that travel, not only fish and wildlife officers but other government employees.

How we operate sometimes we need to review very closely. For an example, last Father's Day there was a checkstop just south of Calling Lake. I got stopped in that. I don't mind. I'm like any other Albertans. I didn't break any laws, so I didn't get fined. But there were a number of vehicles. I thought it excessive the number of people involved in the checkstop because you're in there, you set up your checkstop, and because of the communication system we have these days with the cellphones, within an hour or so everybody in the country knows that you're sitting there. I said: well, why don't we have fewer people in there, less time in that one particular setting, and go move to another location to be more efficient? We have some efficiencies that we need to work on.

The other one is in relation to some of the charges we lay at times. What process do you do when those charges hit the courts? Do you go sit in there day after day after day till the case is heard? Well, I'm reviewing that right now to see if we can make some improvements in that particular area.

So we are monitoring very closely to try and do the job yet be cost-effective and save money wherever we can but, at the same time, do the job that needs to be done. Again I stress the fact that we don't have Albertans running around out there breaking the law; 99.9 per cent of Albertans that are out there using our wildlife resources are honest, hard-working Albertans. We need to design our enforcement programs based on that, and we need to ensure that we treat those hard-working Albertans with respect when we do a checkstop, because they won't put up with anything other than that.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to ask just a couple of questions that come up significantly in the rural part of southern Alberta, and this deals with the NRCB and its application to the intensive livestock operations. The public is looking for some direction as to: when are the officers who are out there doing the evaluations, doing the checkups going to be more open to the community in terms of their investigations: what they're doing, what they're looking at, how they're finding out things?

Then I guess the second question to the minister is in terms of enforcement and compliance. There have been a number, a small number, Mr. Minister, of cases brought where the public sees what appears to be a violation not being acted on. What do you have in the works to increase transparency so that the confidence can be brought to bear for individuals who see those violations that I was talking about and then will see some action in terms of compliance or cleanup action, whatever, resulting after a complaint is made? People don't see a real relationship between their complaint and some action.

The third question on that same area would be: at what time in the future do you see the NRCB looking at the issue of cumulative effect, you know, one big operation versus a whole bunch of small ones in the same community area? The issue of cumulative effect doesn't seem to be resonating in the community. They don't see any action. They see it as a heavy concentration of intensive livestock. If it's one big operation, the NRCB seems to act, but if it's a bunch of smaller ones with the same total number, the NRCB doesn't seem to act. There's a concern out there in the community.

So I just raise, basically, those three questions that the community would like to have some feedback on. Thank you.

Mr. Cardinal: The NRCB, of course, has done a good job. We had to get additional dollars throughout the year for staff, and then this year's budget has increased by $1.4 million to try and deal with some of the complaints that we have. Like I said in my opening speech, last year we had over 1,083 complaints, and we resolved close to 900 of those. So I think the staff are doing quite well. No doubt, we can always do a better job, and of course we'll strive for the best.

It is a challenging area, but again it is a necessary process to have in place because we don't have the regional planning commissions any more. We have Environment with their environmental impact assessment studies, et cetera, to work with. Because we don't have the regional planning commissions, we have individual municipalities, of course, that approve some of the smaller projects. Therefore, I think that the NRCB will have to be monitored very closely to ensure that we are doing the job that people want out there. That is why we're out there. It's for the people that we're dealing with. Also, any individual that is in disagreement with the NRCB always has the opportunity to call the minister to ensure that we are dealing with the issues effectively.

Dr. Nicol: Just a friendly suggestion to the minister then. In your business plan where you talk about the mandate of the NRCB, change the order of your priorities. Where you talk about the "economic, social and environmental" interests of the community, turn them around so that people get the sense that the environment and social issues play more than the economics. Economic Development, Agriculture, or Energy can deal with that part of it. They want you acting on behalf of the community. So just a friendly suggestion.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Chairman, that is a very good comment. I know that my staff is here taking notes, and we will definitely have a look at that. It's good.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a fairly simple question for the minister. Minister, I understand that the department had last year around a hundred fish and wildlife officers. What's the projected number of fish and wildlife officers for the year that we're discussing the budget for? What provisions are made in the budget to enhance their capacity for enforcement, which is what they've been asking for? Enforcement is a problem, they say, and they're unable to secure compliance with the laws of the province because of the lack of resources. So the number of officers and the resource enhancement for them so they can do their job.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Chairman, like I mentioned earlier, we do have, you know, around a $40 million budget. That budget has not decreased. In fact, there have been some minor increases in the budget. In relation to hiring new staff or more staff, if any vacancies occur, we will be filling those positions, but at this time I don't see us going out to hire a whole pile of officers. Again, I want to make sure that we do our job, that the staff have the capacity to do the job they need to do.

Keep in mind that 99.9 per cent of Albertans out there are honest. They're not lawbreakers. So you don't design a program like you're dealing with a bunch of people that are out there breaking the law. You design a program to work with the people to ensure that they respect the resources that are there. You can be assured that most Albertans do respect our wildlife resources and, again, would not break the law. Therefore, we need to ensure that when we're dealing with Albertans, we deal with them with respect. They expect that, and they deserve that. We can't be treating them like they all break the law. They don't. Very few do.

So we've got some work to do within our own department to make sure that, you know, the attitudes towards the people that we're dealing with are right. The best way to have abundant resources in the province is to work co-operatively with the public. That's the way to do it, not by enforcement. Only for the few that break the law, and there are very few that do.

Dr. Pannu: During the session last fall the minister brought before this House the Wildlife Amendment Act. The purpose of it was to greatly enhance the fines that lawbreakers would have to face, that would be imposed on those who break the law. Now, the very fact that the minister brought forward that piece of legislation to increase deterrents would suggest that there's a problem with compliance with the law. Otherwise, why would he have wasted the time of the House bringing a piece of legislation that for no good reason at all increases enormously the fines for violation of the laws that he's supposed to implement and seek compliance with?

Secondly, the Alberta Game Warden Association letter would suggest that the problem with enforcement – and I repeat this; I'm not somehow dreaming these things up. I'm basing my questions on what's been expressly stated by people at the front lines, people who are doing the enforcement for the minister and for us Albertans who want to be assured that compliance with those rules is happening. Whether it's 10 people or 50 people or 70 people, the damage is being done is what the Alberta Game Warden Association is saying. They want to prevent this damage from happening. The only way they can do it is not by hearing the minister repeat again and again that 99.9 per cent of Albertans are not lawbreakers. No one is accusing Albertans of lawbreaking.

The people who do in fact look after the question of whether the law is broken are the people who are speaking through this letter, and they are saying that there's a problem. They cannot enforce the law, and compliance is not being achieved. So what is the minister to say about that? The minister does not address the question that has been asked by either of these letters that I've tried to put before the minister this afternoon.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Chairman, no doubt, I get the same letters. If I don't, he should pass them on to me now. If they don't come to me but come to you, maybe you could pass them on, and I'll answer them in writing.

The overall issue of wildlife management and the amendment to the Wildlife Act in relation to fines for poachers again is another measure, another tool to discourage voluntarily Albertans or any other people from breaking the law. There are not too many of them, but if you discourage one by implementing a law like that, I think that's a lot. We're not saying that there are going to be a whole pile of people all of a sudden caught that are poachers because I don't think there are that many people out there purposely breaking the law by poaching.

In relation to the other questions I'll get my department to answer in writing.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to participate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: We do have time. I was looking, Minister, at page 401 of the business plan of your department. There are some interesting strategies outlined there, the bullets, that I want to draw your attention to. It's "the values Albertans receive from wild species are sustained and enhanced for future generations." What it means, your department says, is that Alberta's wild species are managed and used in a manner that maximizes the environmental, social, and economic benefits that Albertans receive from these resources while ensuring they are sustained for future generations.

Now, there's a strategy there: "Mitigate and reduce negative interactions between wildlife and humans." The two examples are related to fishing and poaching.

You know, I was reading something this afternoon which says: open season with no patrols. The next headline reads: it's a poacher's paradise out there. It's not something that the New Democrat opposition has invented. I'm simply drawing your attention to the stories in the media, people speaking out, people with concerns. You have committed the department to mitigation and reduction of negative interaction between wildlife and humans. What specific measures in this year's budget are included to address that particular strategy? That's one.

I may as well, while I have the floor, draw your attention to a few of the other strategies that are indicated here.

Ensure high levels of compliance with fish and wildlife legislation by delivering appropriate education, prevention and enforcement programs; monitoring the use of fish and wildlife resources and ensuring timely and effective responses to non-compliance.

Now, again, this is your department's own strategy and committing the department to ensuring high levels of compliance, say, with enforcement programs, to use enforcement programs for that. Specifically, what new funds, as compared with last year, are allocated in this budget to enhance enforcement, Mr. Minister?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In relation to the articles, poacher's paradise, et cetera, you know, I've seen those articles also. I don't get a whole lot of phone calls from Albertans in relation to poachers on highways, but I do get a lot of phone calls from people running into deer and moose and other animals, road kill, on the highway. It's a challenge because animals are getting urbanized.

We have a major challenge out there. We have deer moving into towns and cities, moose moving into towns and cities, elk moving into towns and cities, black bear moving into towns and cities; also, coyotes and foxes and cougars, in some cases. It's a challenge because they're all of a sudden in town. Thirty years ago or 40 years ago you didn't see that. Thirty or 40 years ago you would have never seen a deer in northern Alberta. Today it's common to drive between Athabasca and Calling Lake, for an example, and see 30 or 40 deer along the highway.

So we've got that challenge that faces us. In fact, you know, I don't have too many people phoning saying that there are a lot of poachers out there. I still believe that most Albertans are very, very honest, and I'm sure you'll agree with that too. But we have to deal with the issue of the urbanization of animals.

We have to have some form of a balanced hunt to ensure that they remain wild. For the health of animals it is better for them to remain wild than move into towns because it creates a major problem for everybody. What we will be doing this coming fall is extending a lot of our hunting season: different forms to increase some of the hunting, the length of hunting, type of animal, et cetera, to try and reduce areas where there is a problem, to target the populations.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I'll sit down again, and I'll get my staff to do it in writing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the minister for being patient and dealing with my questions with the seriousness I hope that they deserve.

The minister just made a reference to extending the hunting season to deal with what he called the urbanization of wild animals. I have a slightly different question. It's related to hunting. Grizzlies in this province, the Alberta wildlife association is saying, are an endangered species. There are far fewer now than there were some years ago and, certainly, far fewer than there were several hundred years ago. They're on the endangered species list. Will the minister in fact ban grizzly hunting in the province rather than extending the season for hunting grizzlies as well as some other species that he thinks are getting into urban areas?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Chairman, at this time we have no plans to completely shut the hunting down, but we have plans to put in better monitoring programs, better management programs to ensure that the population remains reasonably healthy.

As I indicated earlier, it's a hard animal to manage; it's a hard animal to monitor. In fact, because grizzly bears hibernate – and the wintertime would be the time you'd be able to see them better. So they're not out. They come out in the summertime, the spring, when the leaves are out. They can hear so well that if you get a helicopter 10 miles away that wants to count the animals, you'd never find them. Therefore, it's a tough one. We estimate anywhere around 500 population now in Alberta and maybe more in some areas.

We've reduced the hunt by over 30 per cent. In fact, two years ago we issued 130 licences. This year we are only issuing 73. When we released 130 licences, the number taken out was around 12 a year. We not only reduced the numbers; we also moved the hunting from southern Alberta, where there's a lot more pressure along the eastern slopes, to north of Grande Prairie and that region, where farmers are having some difficulties with grizzly bear and black bear. We are, you know, continuing to manage the hunt.

That's one animal you want to keep wild because, like I say, if you do run into a grizzly bear – it doesn't matter where, downtown or in the bush – either the grizzly bear is dead or you're dead. There are no ifs or buts. That's the nature of the animal, unfortunately. It is hard to manage.

So at this time I can't commit to closing down that season completely for those reasons also.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is to the minister again, from his strategies for the section on wildlife protection on page 401. What caught my eye is an interesting statement: "Promote healthy fish and wildlife populations by working with stakeholders to mitigate, detect and manage threats from disease and invasive alien species." What's that reference to, Mr. Minister? Invasive alien species. Which members of the wildlife are threatened by the invasive presence of what alien species?

Mr. Cardinal: I'm not sure exactly where that question fits in, Mr. Chairman, but, again, I will get my department to put it in writing.

There are – and I gave an example earlier – wildlife challenges. Just for an example, the one I used was the caribou population, which is threatened. Now, the threat is not from development. It's not from First Nations because it's not our food source, except in northwestern Alberta, I believe, Meander River, that area. There some of the First Nations may use caribou as a food source.

But the biggest threat for the caribou is the wolf population. Therefore, you know, that is the big threat. So how do you manage the caribou then? Do you reduce the population of the wolves? Those are some of the challenges we're faced with. Trappers do not normally hunt the wolf, so the wolf population has grown. They threaten the deer population. They threaten the moose population. So it's a tough balancing act. Some of those species like the wolves you hardly ever see in your lifetime. There are probably thousands out there. They're dangerous to other animals, even calves when they're born. They're dangerous to calves.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My next question to the minister is about the commercial fisheries buyout program that's mentioned as one of the strategies here. We're on page 401. Since we're dealing with the budget, what kind of budget commitments or allocations are included in your budget, Minister, with respect to these commercial fishing buyouts?

Mr. Cardinal: The commercial fisheries buyout is part of our strategy to manage the fisheries resources we have in Alberta both for sport fishing and for domestic and commercial and First Nations use. The plan that's in place and which will be implemented this April – and I'll get it out of the budgets later – was developed back in 1991. In fact, I chaired the committee when I was an MLA for Athabasca-Lac La Biche to work along with the Alberta Commercial Fishermen's Association and government to develop and design the fisheries buyout policy. The policy that's in place now only had minor amendments, so it's still a similar policy involving the commercial fisheries.

A number of years ago there were over 800 commercial fishermen in Alberta with access to 34,000 100-yard nets, and a lot of the fishermen were not doing it as a full-time business. Some were. Because there are so many active commercial fishermen, even for some of the small ones in a lot of cases, it was not economically viable for the people that wanted to concentrate on it because there were so many people after the same resource. The plan is to reduce it to about 200 licences and about 18,000 100-yard nets. That is our target, and that plan would take place over probably three to four years. We've started this year with around $2 million. There are over 230-some applications already, and I believe it's around 13,000 or 14,000 100-yard nets.

So that is the first phase of probably a three-year program, and it's going to be challenging. We need all your help to do that. We do have a hardship committee in place which will involve the commercial fishermen and some departmental people and some public to sit on this committee. If a person feels that they are not being fairly treated in the buyout process, then we will deal with that. We probably will spend close to $2 million this fiscal year on that particular program.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister is committed to striking a balance, I guess, between environmental, social, economic values that Albertans derive from his department's activities. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has asked him to perhaps rearrange the priorities there, focus on conservation, environmental sustainability and leave the other two to other ministries. I have this question: given that just recently legislation was passed in this House that loosens requirements for watershed management in forestry reserves – and here I'm referring to Bill 13, the Forest Reserves Amendment Act, related to which numerous environmentalists have expressed deep concern and alarm pointing out that this change would also impact water supplies fed by rivers passing through these reserves, and it's your legislation, I guess – does it make your job easier to seek to strike this balance that you're committing yourself to on a piece of paper, or does it make it harder, as a matter of fact? Which is what I think most Albertans who expressed their concerns on this particular bill would conclude.

4:30

Mr. Cardinal: I'll get the department to answer some of that in writing.

You know, you do have a good point. It continues to be a real challenge out there to maintain the balance between resource development, the environment, and protecting the wildlife resources at the same time.

Because of our economic growth there is a lot of pressure out there on wildlife resources. There is a lot of pressure. We manage over a hundred million acres of public land. There is a lot of pressure out there from all-terrain vehicle users. So we'll continue with these challenges, and I don't think they're about to change as long as our economy continues to grow as strong as it has. People have the dollars to spend, and we should encourage that, not discourage it, but in a planned way, so that is why the Ghost-Waiparous, the 1,500 square kilometres of area for which we are trying to develop an access management plan.

At one time people would drive up and down these streams and lake beds and stuff with all-terrain vehicles, and they still do in some cases. I've flown over; I've seen people drive up and down the streams. That should not be allowed, and the management plan will definitely deal with that.

The other one is the Bighorn backcountry, which is larger yet, 5,000 square kilometres, for which we've developed an access management plan in a similar way. But once you finish those plans, that's not the end of the process. The actual work starts after that.

There's going to be a monitoring committee that will continue overseeing these plans, ensuring that they're developed and a trail system put in properly and enforcement put in properly.

So it is a challenge overall to manage our resources that we have out there, but in relation specifically to the question you have, the department will answer you in writing.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Along the same lines as my previous question to the minister, another bill that I think would undermine the ability of the minister to strike this balance is Bill 2, the Black Creek Heritage Rangeland Trails Act. You referred to, you know, proper trails and their monitoring and enforcement.

The Alberta Wilderness Association certainly expressed a great deal of concern about how, in fact, this bill will undermine rather than enhance their capacity to meet the mandate of your department. This is again a legislative initiative that came from your department. While you certainly are quite, I think, credible in terms of outlining the goals, the actual instruments that the department is developing concomitantly with the development of these goals would seem to contradict and suggest that the capacity to accomplish those goals is reduced rather than enhanced by the legislation.

I wonder if you have any comments on that.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Chairman, I'll get the staff to answer that in writing.

The Deputy Chair: Any further questions?

Hon. members, after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Sustainable Resource Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$198,541,000
Capital Investment	$3,200,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I move that we rise and report the estimates of this ministry.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Sustainable Resource Development: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases	$198,541,000
capital investment	$3,200,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Private Bills
Second Reading

Bill Pr. 1

St. Mary's College Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, St. Mary's College Amendment Act, 2004.

The purpose of this bill is to make the necessary amendments to the incorporating act to enable St. Mary's College to grant three-year and four-year bachelor of arts degrees and to use the descriptive word "university" in the name as recommended by the Private Colleges Accreditation Board and as supported by the Minister of Learning.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw to close debate.

Mrs. Ady: Close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 2

Sisters of Charity of St. Louis of Medicine Hat Statutes Repeal Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry I move second reading of Bill Pr. 2, the Sisters of Charity of St. Louis of Medicine Hat Statutes Repeal Act.

Mr. Speaker, the Sisters of Charity of St. Louis of Calgary and Medicine Hat wish to centralize their administrative units in the Calgary office and thus eliminate the need for a separate act to deal with their operations and their tax exemption in Medicine Hat.

4:40

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to close debate.

Dr. Nicol: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 2 read a second time]

Bill Pr. 3

Living Faith Bible College Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill Pr. 3, Living Faith Bible College Act.

This bill will incorporate a private Bible college that will be located near Caroline, Alberta. There's currently a Living Faith Bible College operating there, which has been operated since 1971 by the Living Faith Evangelistic Association. Bill Pr. 3 will create an entity that's distinct from the Living Faith Evangelistic Association, and it will provide for the possibility of moving towards accreditation as well as allowing students to be eligible for access to Canada student loans.

I urge everyone in the Assembly to support this bill. It has been recommended by the Standing Committee on Private Bills.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to close debate.

Mr. Marz: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 3 read a second time]

Private Bills
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill Pr. 1

St. Mary's College Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill Pr. 1 be amended as follows. I believe the amendment has been circulated. Section 4(b) is amended in the proposed section 5 by striking out clause (h) and substituting the following:

- (h) to change the name of the College incorporated by this Act, without further amendment to this Act, provided that
  - (i) if required by the Post-Secondary Learning Act, the College obtains the approval of the Minister of Learning, and
  - (ii) no later than 15 days before the name change is to take effect, the College publishes a notice of the intended name change in The Alberta Gazette.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, just hold for a minute, please.

Mrs. Ady: Can I call the question?

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 1 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill Pr. 2

Sisters of Charity of St. Louis of Medicine Hat Statutes Repeal Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Just to tell the House on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry that this bill has been approved by the Private Bills Committee and that there will be no amendments. We should pass it through.

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 2 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill Pr. 3
Living Faith Bible College Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that Bill Pr. 3 be amended as follows: section 3(a) is amended by striking out “in such fields as the Board may from time to time determine” and substituting “in the fields outlined in section 5(1)(a).” This accurately determines the types of degree programs that can be offered by this institution. I would encourage everyone to approve this amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps, with the assistance of the Clerk, I’m just noticing that the amendment refers to 5(1)(a), and in fact in the bill, if I’m looking at it correctly, there is no 5(1), and so it would be just 5(a). Maybe the mover would accept that change to the amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. I guess that I would be willing to accept that as a clarification. The chair makes note of the correction that the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General is suggesting.

Hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, did you want to add anything to this particular point?

Mr. Marz: Just, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member is correct in pointing that out, and I would accept that as a friendly amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The Assembly will disregard the reference to that (1). So it will read as 5(a).

Anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

4:50

[The clauses of Bill Pr. 3 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d move that the committee rise and report bills Pr. 1, Pr. 2, and Pr. 3.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports Bill Pr. 2. The committee reports the following with some amendments: bills Pr. 1 and Pr. 3. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d move that we adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:53 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 30, 2004 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2004/03/30
 head: Committee of Supply
 [Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05
Community Development

The Chair: Are there any comments or other to be offered with respect to these estimates? The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Yes, indeed, there are many comments to make, and I'll do my best to get them all done within the brief time allotted.

Before I begin, however, I'd sure like members here to help me welcome and thank some of the staff who are here in support of Community Development initiatives. Beginning with Deputy Minister Bill Byrne; our assistant deputy ministers, Rai Batra, John Kristensen, Mark Rasmussen, Hugh Tadman, and missing in action tonight due to illness, David Steeves; Terry Keyko, our executive director from the Alberta centennial office; Pam Arnston, who works in the budget area; and from the PDD sector, Jim Menzies and Garry Donald. Would you all please rise. Please welcome these hard-working staff members.

Mr. Chairman, it's a pleasure to be here to present the three-year business plan and the budget estimates for 2004-2005 for the Ministry of Community Development. Since I will be delivering some of it in French, I have provided translations to your table and would ask that these translations now be distributed to all members. For purposes of official tabling, here are five copies for the pages.

Mr. Chairman, the mandate of Community Development is very diverse, and it would take a great deal of time, indeed, to cover all the exciting work that we do in support of pillar 4 of Today's Advantage, Tomorrow's Promise: Alberta's Vision for the Future, which is making Alberta the best place to live, work, and visit. The full picture of my ministry's three-year business plan is found on pages 135 through 147 of Budget 2004. Here, then, are just some of the budget highlights.

To begin with, our operating budget for 2004-05 will be $691 million. This reflects an increase of 7.8 per cent, or about $50 million, from the '03-04 forecast. The '04-05 budget also includes an increase of $25 million, or 5.7 per cent, for PDD, our persons with developmental disabilities program, which means our budget for PDD will rise from $443 million to $468 million. This $25 million increase will help us to accommodate the growth in the number of PDD recipients and other cost-related increases.

Furthermore, an increase of $5 million to our capital investment budget is seen, which brings the total to $7.3 million for '04-05 in that area. This $5 million increase for this year is part of the additional $21 million over three years and is primarily for upgrading water and sewage treatment systems in Alberta's provincial parks.

We have a one-time allocation, an increase if you like, of $800,000 for public libraries, which will be used primarily toward the purchase of computer hardware and software to connect libraries to the SuperNet.

There is a $1 million increase for our Alberta film development program, which will bring the total funding up to $11 million annually for Alberta's creative film and video community.

I would also like to add that our plan includes an additional $30 million over two fiscal years, '04 through '06, for Alberta's 2005 centennial. These funds are over and above the $12.5 million budgeted for '04-05 in Alberta Infrastructure for the centennial legacy grant program, which reflects funds previously committed to community projects. I will announce more details on centennial related funding very soon.

So here are some of the details of the budget. I'll begin with PDD. A breakdown of the funding for the PDD Provincial Board and for the six regional boards can be found on pages 90 to 96 of the 2004-05 government and lottery fund estimates book. Our PDD system helps develop and maintain and ensures the delivery of quality programs and services for about 8,700 adult Albertans who live with a developmental disability. We try to ensure that PDD recipients have the opportunity to participate in the social, economic, cultural, and community life of our province to the largest extent possible, and I believe and I am proud that we are succeeding in that objective.

With respect to disability issues in general members will recall that in this year's throne speech we announced that an office for disability issues has been created for government and other service providers to take a more inclusive and collaborative approach to disability issues, needs, and services. The office for disability issues will also assist government in responding to the recommendations contained in the Alberta disability strategy, which was authored by the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. We need better co-ordination of disability-related matters, and the office for disability issues will have that as one of its main objectives. We have the budget to establish this new office, so no additional financial implications are involved.

Turning to the area of parks, as announced by our Premier last month, an additional $21 million will go towards ensuring that Albertans have access to safe, quality recreation opportunities and facilities in Alberta's parks and protected areas. Of this $21 million in new funding $16 million over three years will go toward necessary repairs and upgrades to drinking water and sewer systems at several provincial parks. A safe drinking water supply is particularly important to our parks, and this new funding will bring water systems and water wells up to current provincial standards. This, by the way, is also in a general way part of our government's Alberta water for life strategy.

The remaining $5 million will be allocated over three years to address other safety hazards such as repairs to boat and marina docks and boardwalks. Our parks staff have developed an implementation plan, and we will begin repairs and upgrades at at least 26 sites in '04-05. We will also address the condition of our facilities, including items such as new picnic tables, repainting buildings, refurbishing, and improving whatever we can wherever we can to enhance the visitor experience in our Alberta parks.

Beginning in the 2004-05 year, some new fees will be implemented to partially offset the ever-increasing costs of providing educational programs, groomed cross-country ski trails, and bus and auto tours in provincial parks and protected areas. But I want to stress, Mr. Chair, that all the revenues collected through this new fee structure will go directly back into those same program areas and associated facilities.

Secondly, these fees are being implemented based on feedback from our stakeholders and visitors to our parks, who indicated a willingness to pay a cost recovery fee provided that those same fees got redirected back towards the cost of providing those particular programs. These fees, then, are compatible and comparable with public-sector and nonprofit organizations who offer similar services.

With respect to our interpretive and environmental education programs, including bus and auto tours, these programs enhance visitor experiences and help everyone to better understand and appreciate our natural environment. Guided interpretive services are offered at 11 flagship parks across the province. Revenues from the user fees will help to ensure that these important programs remain available and will enable us to meet the requests for increased services such as community outreach or science camps particularly in rural communities. Many services provided in our parks such as amphitheatre and children's programs and so on will continue to be offered free of charge.

Regarding fees for specifically groomed cross-country ski trails in Kananaskis Country, such fees will only be applicable on groomed trails in the Evan-Thomas provincial recreation area and Peter Lougheed and Spray Valley provincial parks. Visitors will continue to ski for free in all other areas of Kananaskis country, including groomed trails in Sheep River provincial park and West Bragg Creek provincial recreation area. We will continue to have free day-use access to provincial parks and protected areas, including access to hiking trails, picnic areas, beaches, boat launches, and playgrounds.

I would now like to turn to libraries. The $800,000 in new funding in '04-05 will be allocated to public libraries towards SuperNet access, as I indicated. Over the next three years Alberta's 309 public library service points will be connected to the SuperNet, giving Albertans throughout the province access to a wide range of information, programs, and services online, including improved access to learning opportunities, government information, health information, research materials, and so on.

The total cost of connecting all of Alberta's libraries to the SuperNet is $1.3 million, of which we provided $500,000 earlier for the research, readiness work, and equipment installation. Our next step, quite clearly, is going to be to assist libraries with ongoing monthly connection charges, and I'm working on that now.

Turning to our Alberta film development program, I'm proud to report some very impressive numbers for the '03-04 year. For example, our support for this growing sector, $10.3 million, resulted in $83.8 million worth of film productions by Albertans in Alberta. This program produced 3,648 employment opportunities for Albertans, and the film productions used 407 Albertans in key creative positions, such as directors, writers, composers, and so on.

I would now like to address the Alberta 2005 centennial. Our Alberta centennial 2005 program is guided by the following principles. The primary focus is on people and legacies. Provincially funded centennial activities address both community and government priorities and goals. Overall costs reflect the importance of our centennial while simultaneously recognizing the government's policy of fiscal responsibility. Program costs are shared among participants, beneficiaries, and other levels of government. We seek a balance of funding between local and provincial activities. Finally, municipalities, organizations, and communities are encouraged to plan and implement their own activities. Our centennial funding announcements are very consistent with those principles.

Mr. Chairman, from a provincial government perspective we opened a brand new, state-of-the-art Provincial Archives here in Edmonton, and we are now working on the renewal of our Provincial Museum and also on the complete rejuvenation of our two Jubilee auditoria, which will begin this year. Planning for our provincial park interpretive centres is also now underway.

Through phase 1 of our centennial legacy grant program we distributed approximately $56 million to 24 community-based projects across the province. Through phase 2 I also announced that 35 community-based projects were awarded $25 million. Now, in the budget before us tonight we have an additional $30 million allocated over two fiscal years for our centennial. This will include $26 million for community organizations and municipalities to share and $4 million for recognition, awareness, and celebratory activities regarding our centennial year including, for example, our Alberta official song, an anticipated royal visit, and numerous other plans. Please note that funding for provincial government capital projects for the centennial is found in the budget of Alberta Infrastructure.

Now I would like to review the funding we received, with thanks, from the Alberta lottery fund. Community Development's '04-05 budget includes a $13.7 million increase in funding, which can be found on page 172 of the estimates. Total funding for the ministry from the Alberta lottery fund will be $85.8 million this fiscal year. Lottery funding supports provincial, regional, and community-based organizations and individuals through five lottery funded agencies.

First, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts will receive an increase of $1 million, for a total budget commitment of $30 million from the Alberta lottery fund for '04-05, plus a further $600,000 from other revenue sources. The $1 million increase will of course go the Alberta film development program's budget, which I mentioned a bit earlier.

Secondly, $17.7 million will go to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation in '04-05, which is the same amount as last year. Additional revenues for this foundation are $2.4 million, for a total budget in '04-05 of $20.1 million. Additional revenues include an increase of $500,000 related to anticipated funding from Sport Canada for the sport participation initiative under provincial programs.

Thirdly, the Wild Rose Foundation will receive $7.8 million, which is the same amount as last year, from the Alberta lottery fund. That along with about $700,000 of other revenue brings the WRF Foundation total budget to $8.5 million. This foundation, as we all know, exists to promote and assist volunteerism and to strengthen the relationship among the voluntary sector leaders and government.

Fourthly, the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation will again receive $6.9 million this coming year from the Alberta lottery fund. Together with $200,000 of additional revenue the total budget for this foundation in '04-05 will be $7.1 million. This foundation supports community-based heritage initiatives, including historical building restoration, research and publications, educational projects, historical markers, and area conservation through the main street program.

Fifthly, $1.3 million of Alberta lottery funds will go to the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund. This fund receives $200,000 in other funding, for a total budget of $1.5 million. Project funding is provided to organizations that foster equality and promote fairness and access to help Albertans participate in the social, cultural, and economic life of our province. One example of an educational initiative undertaken last year is the Help Make a Difference campaign, which was developed and broadcast as a series of ads on Global Television. It specifically encouraged Albertans to take action to help build a fair and respectful society.

By the way, while I'm on the topic of human rights, I should also point out, Mr. Chairman, that the total operating expense for the human rights and citizenship branch in '04-05 not including the multiculturalism education fund will be $3.8 million. This is an increase of $364,000 over the forecasted expenditures from '03-04. These additional dollars will fund three additional human rights officer positions as well as increases in salaries. That means that we will be able I hope to more swiftly address human rights issues and complaints as well as see a reduction in the number of backlogged cases as a result of this increased funding.

The human rights and citizenship branch is also responsible for women's issues; however, it should be noted that specific programs, shelters, services, and legislation of particular benefit to women are found in a number of other provincial departments. Nonetheless, as the minister responsible I do attend the FPT meetings of ministers responsible for the status of women, and I was very pleased to host that group at its annual meeting last fall in Edmonton. One of the important results of that meeting was the release of Workplaces That Work, a report that discusses women's roles in meeting Canada's critical shortage of skilled workers and shows how both employees and employers can benefit from open and inclusive workplaces.

Before I conclude this section, I also want to mention that Community Development receives and distributes Alberta lottery funding for specific, one-time projects. For example, $1.3 million in '04-05 will go toward hosting the 2005 World Masters Games in Edmonton. This is a spectacular centennial year event, drawing upwards of 20,000 athletes aged 25 to 100 from Canada and throughout the world. As well, $500,000 will be provided to Strathcona county in 2004-05 for the operation of the 2007 Western Canada Summer Games in Strathcona county. One other example, quickly, Mr. Chair, is the city of Edmonton's centennial project for 2004, which is scheduled to receive $1 million in 2004-05 as part of a three-year $4.2 million commitment from our government.

Le Secrétariat Francophone recevra $250,000 en projets spéciaux du ministère du Patrimoine Canadien du gouvernement fédéral pour appuyer deux projets de centre communautaire dans la communauté francophone. Un projet de $125,000 est pour aider la Cité Francophone d'Edmonton dans la préparation des plans pour le développement de sa phase 2. L'autre projet, aussi de $125,000, est pour l'établissement d'un centre communautaire à Falher pour servir les besoins de la communauté francophone de la région de la Rivière-la-Paix. Comme contrepartie à ces contributions fédérales les deux projets cherchent à obtenir des contributions équivalentes de notre CFEP.

[Translation] The Francophone Secretariat will receive $250,000 for special projects from the federal government's Canadian Heritage ministry to support two community centre projects in the francophone community. A $125,000 project is intended to assist La Cité Francophone d'Edmonton, Edmonton Francophone Community Centre, with the planning of its phase 2. A second project for $125,000 is intended to assist with the establishment of a community centre in Falher to serve the needs of the francophone community of the Peace River region. To match these federal contributions, both projects are applying for contributions from CFEP, community facility enhancement program. [As submitted]

Mr. Chairman, I had some comments with respect to key changes to our business plan which time will not permit me to go into in any detail. Suffice it to say that our new vision statement is now this: "A superior quality of life reflecting fair, inclusive, and active communities engaged in valuing Alberta's cultural, historical, and natural heritage."

Finally, Mr. Chair, may I just quickly add that this revised format and content of the business plan came about as the result of a lot of hard work of the people in the gallery and individuals with whom they work. Regarding our performance measures, I should add now in conclusion that we have 15 performance measures, all of which are set to gauge our results.

Finally, in closing, I hope that everyone will agree that we have a very solid and concise business plan and budget estimates before us, and it's one of which I, frankly, feel very, very proud.

This concludes my formal remarks, and I'd be pleased to entertain any questions. I'll answer as many of them as time will allow, and others I will respond to in writing as soon as possible. I would please ask members to provide a page number first if possible and then the line number or element number before asking their question.

On that, Mr. Chairman, I will just remind everyone that the most exciting musical event in our province's history and one which we feel so proud to be the first western Canadian prairie province to host are the Junos, and those are coming up on the weekend, April 2, 3, and 4, but they really all started yesterday. There's a great buzz in the arts community, and I think that as a result of that we will see just extremely clearly how much value our citizens in this province place on the arts and how that is matched by the enthusiasm of our government as well.

We have many areas to address, and I'll sit now and take questions from members who may have them for me. Please give us a page number to start.

Thank you.

8:20

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. That was a pretty good overview from the minister. He's actually answered some of the questions that I had written. Thank you very much. I will join him in noting the hard work of his staff who have joined us in the gallery.

I'm looking at page 21 of the fiscal plan, but it appears in several other places, which is the breakdown of the centennial legacy money. Now, I wrote as fast as I could. I'm trying to read this properly, so I'll have the minister explain the whole thing for the record. At the bottom of page 21 it's got:

providing $225 million for centennial projects, primarily to construct and upgrade community, historic and cultural facilities.

$109 million has been provided over the last four years to start planning and construction. The remaining $116 million will be allocated primarily in 2004-05 and 2005-06.

Then it talks about "a total of $113 million to assist municipalities and not-for-profit groups." Am I correct then, Mr. Minister, that the Provincial Archives, the Provincial Museum, the Jubilee auditoria, and the park interpretive centres are all coming out of the $225 million for centennial projects? Does that $225 million also include the 24 community projects in phase 1 that you mentioned in your opening remarks and the 35 community projects in phase 2?

Then you've got $30 million over two fiscal years, $26 million to community organizations to share and $4 million for recognitions. Does this $30 million over two years fit into the $113 million total that is listed as being "to assist municipalities and not-for-profit groups"?

It gets a little confusing, Minister, when you're giving us figures that are for this year, and then you're talking about $30 million over two years, and then there's $109 million that's already been spent, and $225 million. The figures just flow, but I'm trying to allocate them to the proper years and the proper projects.

While I'm at it, I believe I have the original list of the 24 community projects. Could I please get the list of the 35 projects in phase 2 and the projects that are being paid for out of any additional funds that are coming there?

Part of my concern, Mr. Minister, is that I've heard a number of announcements that have been made, and it strikes me that what I would have considered projects that are regular infrastructure, regularly scheduled or planned upgrades, and regular maintenance are in fact being paid for as a centennial project and called a centennial project. That's what I was hearing because I was hearing the minister talk about these centennial projects and the legacy projects so often, and it seemed that every project that came up was being included under that.

So I just want to get a very clear idea of exactly what is being considered a centennial project and whether we're, you know, regravelling a road somewhere and calling that a centennial project. That's what it was starting to sound like. I'm sure that's not the case, but I'd like to have the list, please. I know you try to do it, but let me get you on the record on that one.

Okay. Now, going to the government and lottery fund estimates, I just have a series of questions that have come up as I've gone through. Starting on page 74, it appears that the library operating grants – that would be vote 2.2.2 – have gone down from $19,542,000 to $18,734,000. Could you tell me whether that's true, what I'm seeing, because that's sure what it looks like on the books. In the comparable 2003-2004 forecast it shows as $19.5 million; under '04-05 it shows as $18.7 million. If money has been moved around or things are being paid for from another area, could we please get an explanation of that.

The other one that's going to come up – I'm going to get asked this, so I might as well get it on the record with the minister – is an increase from $5.8 million last year to $7 million this year, vote 2.2.4, Alberta NHL teams initiative. Now, this is the flow-through money from that lottery ticket on the NHL teams, one for the Flames and one for the Oilers, $5 tickets, and they were increased to $10 tickets. Could I get an update on that program from the minister, please. What is the current price of the ticket?

An Hon. Member: What page is that?

Ms Blakeman: That's page 74. Just an update on what's happening with that NHL teams initiative for the Flames and the Oilers. It is looking to go up by $1.2 million or so. I'm assuming that that's just expected better profit from the game, but could I get it on the record, please? Also, an update on the ticket prices and any other changes in that program.

I had my original question here under vote 2.2.5, assistance to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, going from $29.034 million to $30.034 million. That's a million dollars. I was asking if that was all going to the film fund, and the minister said that three times, so I don't have to get him on the record again on that one.

A small increase, about $400,000, on human rights and citizenship on page 75. Could the minister expand, please. I'm looking for some statistics on the activity in the human rights and citizenship area with the board. What was the number of new cases that were accepted? Of course, not all cases that come to the Human Rights Commission are accepted. So what was the number of new cases that were opened last year? What's the expected number of cases that are going to be opened in this year of '04-05? How many of those were satisfactorily closed? How many of them are still pending? How many have gone forward to the Human Rights Commission, to the board, for a decision?

There has at different points been a backlog in this area. The minister referred to it. I'm just wondering if he can expand on that, please. What is the current backlog? How long are things backed up? If he can just give us some additional information on that.

Program 5 on page 77, the cultural facilities and historical resources. Could the minister just put on the record the explanation of the credit or recovery amounts that appear in that column under several areas. I'm pretty sure that this will be the friends-of groups. Page 77, vote 5.1.2, Provincial Museum of Alberta is showing a $290,000 credit or recovery; last year it showed $100,000 in the same column. The historic sites and cultural facilities is showing $405,000; last year it showed $1,378,000. Provincial Archives of Alberta: $305,000 this year; last year $25,000. Heritage resource management: this year $739,000; last year $755,000. If I could just get an explanation for what that money is. Those are the specifics.

8:30

Now, under more general questions, on page 139 of the business plan: "connecting Alberta libraries to the SuperNet." Obviously, I've been talking about that recently. What is in this budget for the hookup charges to get hooked up to the Alberta SuperNet that the ministry is paying on behalf of the libraries to actually get hooked up to the Internet? Then what is the ministry expecting to do over the course of this three-year business plan? How much money is it going to cost to have them pay the ongoing service fee?

There are always two fees involved here. Well, three actually. There's the laying of the actual cable, which has happened and has been paid for under the $200 million. Then there's the hookup to actually get them physically connected to the SuperNet, and then there's the ongoing service fee, the one that's being paid to Axia. So what is the ministry setting aside to pay on behalf of the libraries? Is there any other group or municipality or provincial building category, like museums, for example, or arenas, where the ministry is anticipating having to cover those costs, the hookup and the ongoing monthly service cost, and how much?

I'm going to go back to the centennial legacy project, which was originally talked about in the fiscal plan on page 21 and shows up a number of times, even under core business 3, the fourth goal, under strategy 4.2, around co-ordinating Alberta's 2005 centennial project. What is the ministry anticipating to happen with the $26 million that he said is being set aside to encourage the communities to get involved? I think it's saying:

In partnership with other ministries, foundations, communities, non-profit organizations, municipalities and the federal government to provide opportunities for Albertans to participate in the celebrations and leave a legacy for future generations.

I know that in the 75th anniversary the government set aside $75 million and that each community was assisted with a project to write a local history book. I'm wondering if there is some particular project that the government is going to launch and say: "Okay; everyone, please build a walking trail," which was once talked about using the Trans Canada Trail, and that might have become a centennial sort of birthday present that everyone participated in. Is the ministry following a particular theme or a particular idea that it's pitching to the communities, or is it just sort of a free-for-all, everybody do whatever the heck they want?

Is there some sort of pot of money that these communities can apply to? If there is going to be a grant program or matching money program, when will that be in place? I mean, we are – what? – at three full months, so we've got eight months until we're starting into that birthday year. That's not a lot of time for communities and voluntary-based organizations to start to organize themselves for that sort of thing. So I'm looking for what support services the ministry is going to offer.

A grant program. How is that going to be set up, or how could people plug into it? Will there be restrictions to the grant project? Will this $26 million only be used for activities but not for bricks and mortar? Just a lot more detail around this. I'm quite concerned that we're only eight months out and there's virtually no information about what the government expects communities to do or is encouraging communities to do or how much they're on their own. I keep getting calls, and I send them on to the minister's office, but we're getting a little close here.

When I look at the $1 million increase for the AFA – and that, of course, appears in a number of different places. I think it's under the votes under community services. Yes, that's right because that's where the million bucks was: assistance to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. That's where that increase was, particularly vote 2.2.5 on page 74.

I always do a stakeholder loop before we have this debate and send an e-mail out to everybody I've got on my list and say: "Okay. I'm doing this debate. Do you want me to raise any issues or raise any questions?" Certainly, the film people that I heard back from over and over again said: "I couldn't have made my film without the support that was available through this fund. We're really grateful for it. We just need more."

One of the issues that was raised that surprised me is that the film development fund is already spoken for, maxed out, allocated through 2006. So even though you've put a million more dollars into it for this budget year, people are still in a lineup. They're queued for money that would be coming free in I think '06-07 at this point. So is the minister anticipating any additional funds? Has he lobbied his colleagues or the Minister of Finance to be in line to get another amount of money?

I will come later to the specifics that were suggested as to what was really needed by the people in film. One woman went into a great deal of detail about exactly how much money was needed, and it was a lot, and I'll come to that later in my notes. I'm just wondering if the minister can comment, then, about having had the program maxed out at this point and already allocated for this year and, it sounds like, for next year.

Their concern was that unless there was some serious infusion such as $10 million a year, producers would be leaving the province, taking experience and jobs with them. They're saying to add $10 million per year and also requesting that the current Alberta film development fund be increased to $15 million to $20 million per year to accommodate purely Canadian/Alberta production and ensure that this continues for at least a 10 year period, whereupon it can be reviewed to see its long term effects. This will allow the Alberta producer to know that, since it takes anywhere from two to five years minimum to develop a drama program/film, there will be a potential to actually finance it at the end of the development day.

Yes, a very good point.

You work so far out in film trying to put together all your amounts of money and your talent and your locations and everything else. To have a film fund that, you know, sort of rolls over on a three-year basis or, in the case of what's being said here, is already subscribed through this fiscal year and into the next fiscal year – I mean, how do they start planning? Will there still be money left for them by the time they get there?

Of course, they're leveraging money. Part of what this particular group was doing was trying to leverage foreign market money, and their point is that the foreign market will not ante up any financing or presales until they can prove that they've got the money in the bank, so to speak, in Alberta. Well, if we're already subscribed into 2006, they're not going to be able to leverage money from foreign investors. So it becomes a circular problem.

I'll leave those on the record for the minister to respond to and return with more issues.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As always, the critic from the opposition party has provided a very large number of questions, and all of them are very good questions. I just don't think I'll be able to address them all in 20 minutes, but I would like to address some and then provide greater detail in writing. For example, to provide a complete and detailed breakdown of all the centennial legacies monies committed and/or already paid out to date would in itself take close to 20 minutes because we have so many excellent projects, not only in Community Development, but we also have quite a few that are looked after by Infrastructure.

Nonetheless, I would just like to say that in a general sense we have in the current budget $30 million, which I alluded to earlier. Now, $26 million of that will go out in the form of grants, and I will be announcing that very shortly. We're just finishing off a new grant application form, and I will talk more about that soon. I can't give you an exact date, but it will be coming fairly soon. People are expecting it. We have about 1,200 or so groups, individuals, what have you on an interest list. They wouldn't all be eligible necessarily, but still this has been a growing momentum for us ever since Mrs. Klein and Mr. Donahue out of Calgary undertook the Klein/Donahue report in 1995. We had over 20,000 persons respond to that particular thing. We've done two phases, as the member knows, and we'll now look at another phase because that's what those monies are budgeted for.

The $4 million in addition to that, which will be for centennial celebratory events, will include some staffing costs, the new office that we have set up, and a number of other related costs pertaining to some specific projects that we'll be undertaking. As you know, there are history books planned. There are other projects we're considering. There's an encyclopedia, an atlas, a commemorative stamp, commemorative coins, a royal visit, and the list just goes on and on and on. It's all very good stuff, and as we put more details onto the plans, we'll be rolling them out during the next couple of months. So there will be quite a bit more coming out in that regard.

Now, specifically you had wanted a list of all the phase 2 successful awards. Those were put out in a press release in April of last year, but I'd be happy to provide it again. And so was phase 1 put out by my predecessor in September of 2000, but we will put it out to you again, hon. member.

Then you asked the question: are these regular upgrades or maintenance-type projects which the government owns, or is everything now being done called centennial? Well, ongoing upgrades and maintenance and so on are a regular part of every different ministry's budget plan, as you will know. But there are some flagship items that we didn't necessarily have to do but we chose to do because there was a need for us to do them and because they are sort of connected to the history of the province or they're an icon of the province or they were given as a gift to the province, as in the case of the Jubilee auditoria at a 50th anniversary. We included those few projects as part of our centennial package.

There are others, of course, but when we talk about the Provincial Museum, that came about I think as a result of Canada's centennial in 1967. So we're looking at that as a major flagship for Alberta's centennial as well. Similarly with the Jubilee auditoria. The auditoria are in need of some refurbishing and fix-ups, but what we're doing is changing them from just regular maintenance upgrades to, again, state-of-the-art, first-class, best anywhere type of performance venues as afforded by the dollars available. I will give you more specific details on all the related questions that you had. That won't be a problem at all.

Now, with respect to the library estimates on page 74 or somewhere thereabouts, you asked the question: it appears that library funding has gone down. You're correct that there is an appearance of that, but that's not actually the case. The base funding remains the same as it was last year.

The difference is that last year, you may recall, we injected an additional – I don't recall the exact amount – $1.3 million, $1.6 million in one-time funding to assist with maintenance and related operational costs due to increases they were experiencing. That was a one-time deal. Libraries all understood it. It's just that we can't repeat it this year. That was helpful at the time.

The other thing is the libraries and the connection to the SuperNet, which you mentioned. You wanted to know what is in this year's budget for actual hook-up costs. It's $800,000. That's what is there. In my opening comments I had mentioned that we had made a commitment of $1.3 million. About a year and a half ago we had committed the first $500,000, and we did a lot of research and site placement work and so on for $500,000, which helped the libraries know exactly what was needed and in what amounts and where and how the process would work and so on and so on. Now we're finishing off that project with the hook-up costs.

Please remember that we have over 200 library boards in the province, and they service about 310 or so individual library service points. With that in mind, we're going to do the best we can to ensure that they all have the hook-up costs through the $800,000, which again will be a one-time injection.

Your other question was to do with: are we going to assist museums, arenas, and whatever else in the same way? I wish we had the money to do that. The unfortunate thing is that we don't, but we are hearing from those communities, so I will undertake to have a look at what may or may not be possible. I'll just ask my staff to make sure that they make a note of that for me so that we don't overlook it.

The other questions that you had were with respect to the NHL initiative. Let me just point out that under program 2 in the community services area, item 2.2.4, Alberta NHL teams initiative, this is basically for support to the Edmonton Oilers and the Calgary Flames hockey clubs. It's based on NHL players' tax revenues that will be collected each year, and we will simply be turning them back over to them, hon. member, to assist them to remain competitive.

We're small markets, as I think all members here would know, and until the league and the players actually sit down and finish their negotiations – I don't have it in my notes, but I think it'll be done during this next year – we won't be flowing any of those monies out because we're not collecting any in. So it's always a juggling, but we have to provide for it just in case it happens.

The collective bargaining agreements that they're experiencing right now should come to some conclusion in the '04-05 year. At least we're hoping that they do. Then we'll begin to receive that money, and then we'll flow it back out. It will come in through the Department of Revenue, and it will come over here, and we'll transfer it back out through our grant-making capability.

With respect to film development, that's been answered, so I'll just move along, except to come back to what you ended your comments with about the film program. It is indeed an incredibly active, vibrant, and contributing sector of our artistic and economic picture.

In many ways that Alberta film development program is, well, to be blunt, a victim of its own success. As I indicated, the $10.3 million or so that we provided last year parleyed itself into well over $80 million worth of film production. That doesn't include other films, offshore films, that have been attracted to our province, which we don't fund in any way, shape, or form, but they are attracted to our province because of the excellent crews that are now stabilized and living and remaining here. So there is another spinoff effect, if you will, over and above the $80 million worth of production, all of which contributes a great deal.

We are happy to have increased the fund last year from $5 million to $10 million in base funding and this year to $11 million. I think the indications are quite clear that if we truly want to grow this into the potential that it has to become a billion-dollar industry, then we will need to look at some point at increasing the funding beyond the $11 million. I just don't have the money right this minute to do that. But, yes, I am lobbying whoever I need to and trying to gain the support that we need to help bolster that particular industry further.

It is a very long-range planning industry, particularly the larger films, generally at least two to three years out, and it's always a challenge to try and keep up with it because, as the member may know, we don't actually pay out the monies from the film development program until all the other funding is in place and until they've actually got their licensing agreements and so on in place. That doesn't always happen perfectly on or before March 31, and that's just an anomaly of the industry, as you well know. So sometimes we see a lapsed funding situation occur, and that will cause some of the numbers to fluctuate. Nonetheless, I appreciate the feedback that you've received from stakeholders. So have I, and so have I met with them just recently.

Now, the other issue that you mentioned was with respect to human rights. I would just say quickly here on the issue of human rights – I think you wanted some statistics, if memory serves. I can tell you that the human rights stats are as follows. In terms of complaint files that were actually opened in 2002-2003, that number was 835. Up to and including a few days ago, in other words for '03-04, we were at 848. So we opened a few files more than the previous year.

In terms of complaint files that were opened and thereafter we were able to close off, in 2002-2003 that number was 772. As of a few days ago, for 2003-2004 we had already closed off 729. So it's not a huge increase, but still it's an increase in the number of complaints that the commission is opening.

The rising number of complaints can be caused by a combination of many and overlapping factors. There is, for example, a growing refusal by groups who are protected by human rights legislation, particularly people with mental disabilities and physical disabilities, to accept anything less than full participation in the workplace or in the school system or in postsecondary or in other areas of life, and that is fair and fine, and I agree and I support their desire for full inclusion. But as we create more awareness around the issues and as we ourselves get educated more about it and we in turn educate others, we do see more and more attention being paid.

For example, the ads that are on Global Television, which I referred to, the Help Make a Difference campaign, are a wonderful way for people to see themselves, and it's a great way to also increase our awareness of the cultural diversity and the issues related to disabilities which we're working on now. It'll be a separate piece at some point, I hope. But, still, what it does is it generates a lot more awareness, and that in turn generates a lot more complaints.

I think it's also fair to say that our cultural diversity is growing. It's much greater than it ever has been, particularly in the last five years. So in light of that and in light of our efforts around issues pertaining to racism, for example, and our desire to help cure society of racial discrimination and other forms of racial prejudice and what have you, we're doing a great deal more now than we ever have in terms of our awareness. For example, the Human Rights Commission is now working with the chambers of commerce across the province, increasing the focus on human rights in all parts of the province, and that's a very good thing.

The final thing on this point I think is simply to say that the vast majority of files that have been closed and dealt with through the complaint resolution process have yielded fairly good results, and we have a fairly high satisfaction rate in that respect. That isn't to say that everyone is happy, but when you talk about settling things through conciliation or settling them through investigation or some other form, we're batting quite high in that respect.

I think the other issue that the hon. member mentioned was to do with the centennial: is there a particular theme? I outlined what the major principles are in my opening comments, and perhaps if you just review those, you'll see what the theme is. To put it sort of more succinctly, though, our intention, our hope is to ensure that every community in the province – every city, every town, every village, every hamlet, everybody – is activated to do something that celebrates not only the province's 100th anniversary but also, perhaps, the role that that particular community played.

There are many communities who are also turning 100 in the centennial year, and some already have. For example, Edmonton is turning 100 this year. So we've accomplished some of those objectives already. There will be other opportunities for individuals to participate.

I think I should make it clear that the funds that we're talking about in the '04-05 budget, specifically the $26 million that I referenced earlier, are anticipated to go to vertical infrastructure type projects. We have already funded a large number of community centres, community halls, recreation complexes, aquatic centres, hockey arenas, curling rinks, and the list goes on and on and on. We will hopefully be able to continue doing that in lead-up to the magic date of September 1, 2005.

With respect to the specifics about restrictions and so on, in the previous grant application phase, which was phase 2, announced with a deadline of March 1, 2001, we had very specific criteria. Those particular criteria can be viewed, I suppose, as restrictions. Let me say that in a general sense with any new monies that we're able to roll out into the community, in my view at least, at this point in time, priority should be given to those areas of the province who have not yet received, for whatever reason, centennial legacy grants, and there are a few areas like that. It might be because they didn't apply, or it might be because the projects that they had in mind were smaller projects and they could be handled through the community facility enhancement program or the community initiatives program. So there are a variety of reasons why a few parts of the province may not have received any centennial money so far, but quite certainly, wherever possible, they probably received some other form of provincial grant funding.

I think my time is just about up, so I'll take my spot and look forward to someone else who may have some additional comments to make.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks. One question that the minister missed was around the SuperNet. I did understand the first time that he said that the department had put $1.3 million in, that they'd already invested $500,000, that there was $800,000 there to hook up the libraries, which at 310 libraries is going to be around $2,200 apiece to hook up.

The question that was not answered – and I'll leave it with the minister if he needs to do the research on it – is: what is the ministry also lining up to pay or budgeting to pay for the monthly service cost, the provision of service that goes to Axia? In this case that's the third party that's providing it.

I mean, if you're looking for an analogy – and this is not an exact analogy – if you get high-speed cable in your home or in your business, you pay the initial hook-up fee, which is what the $800,000 is covering here, and then you pay a monthly fee to Shaw or Telus or Rogers or whoever else is doing it. So my question to the minister was: is he budgeting to pay that monthly service fee or the fee for the service provision that goes to Axia for the libraries or for any other group that would fall under his ministry? That included looking at the three-year rollout that these budgets are now giving us. So if it's not in this year's budget, is it coming in the next year's budget? He specifically was addressing the libraries. I know that there are other ministries that are covering other parts of it; the Learning minister covering schools, the Minister of Municipal Affairs covering municipalities, et cetera. A couple of the stakeholders wrote and pointed out that the provincial funding is one-third or less than the funding received from either the municipalities or through the federal funding and that the province's share of the contribution continues to be significantly less than the other two.

9:00

Further on the Alberta centennial I'm wondering if there's a particular piece that's being offered to Alberta's arts groups and festivals participating. Would there be money set aside for them as well as being set aside for the various municipalities? Or are they expected to come up with something out of their funding that they're already getting to do something for the centennial? The minister says that he'll be making announcements in the future. Could I get an idea of whether that's two weeks or two months so that we'll all understand what it is that's being expected of people and who's going to pay for it?

Another issue that's out there, other comments particularly from the visual arts sector this year – again, very grateful for the funding that they do get but always pointing out that it is hardly enough to cover everything they're contributing and everything that they contribute overall: education of children and other programs that they offer. I understand that the institutional galleries have been cut off or that their grants have been eliminated, and I had a number of visual art galleries contact me and say, "Well, is that $100,000 going to stay in the visual art gallery pot, or will it be reallocated into a different sector?" They're most concerned about this.

So this was the public gallery operations. Institutional galleries are no longer receiving funding, so that's all the ones that are attached to educational institutions like the Walter Phillips Gallery in Banff, or the FAB Gallery here in Edmonton, and a number of other ones. These five galleries were getting about a $100,000, and there's a great deal of interest in whether that $100,000 is going to stay in the public gallery operations pot and be redistributed amongst organizations like SNAP and Stride and the TRUCK Gallery in Calgary, Latitude 53 here in Edmonton. Is that $100,000 going to stay in the pot for those galleries, or is it going somewhere else?

There's also a concern around the galleries this year – and I heard it from more than one – that the AFA policy is stating that galleries can apply for up to 30 per cent of their annual community support, yet none of them get that. They're all pro-rated back, and they're all getting something in the 8 to 12 per cent range. So why are they being told that they can apply for up to 30 per cent of their annual community support if nobody ever gets that? They're in the range of sort of 45 per cent of that. Yeah, that's right; 13.7 per cent of their annual community support. They're wondering why AFA seems unable to meet that 30 per cent of support for public galleries and artist-run centres.

There's also a concern that has been raised about the situation that has shaken down as a result of one grant per organization. I don't think that the government understood what was going to flow from that. I know that some members felt that there was double-dipping. At the time I argued that, no, there wasn't. They were receiving grants for different things that they were doing. They certainly weren't receiving more than one grant to do the same thing.

You know, those grants were originally invented so that they could augment and allow the groups to expand or take on additional projects. Now that all the rest of those grants have been pulled away from them, they can't continue to exist with that. They're having to continue to cut back and cut back what they're doing. So would the minister be looking at augmenting that one grant per organization?

Further, is there any point where he envisions adding the CFEP and CIP grants as part of that one grant per organization? In other words, if you've got a CFEP grant, you're done. You don't get an operating grant; you don't get anything else. I want to know where the minister is on the record with that one grant policy and whether he can see it becoming more restrictive than it currently is.

Here's another one from another gallery. The last one talked about a range of – they were actually getting 13.7, but they were eligible for 30 per cent. This one's getting between 8 and 12 per cent, and again they're eligible for 30. This gallery is pointing out that in Britain there's just been a new program started to assist arts organizations to buy their own spaces. It was using the lottery program to help them do that. It's been very successful, and the groups were able to use the money from high rents and things and plow it back into their programming. Does the minister anticipate that kind of a program happening in Alberta?

Concern from an individual artist who, again, is very grateful for the money that they were able to receive. She points out that she was able to receive funding over two grant periods, so sort of an initial exploration or development grant and then a second for actual creation and production. She's hearing that that may be curtailed, that ability to line up the grants in sort of a part A and a part B. Could I get something on the record from the minister on that one? She points out that it would have been impossible for her to do the project if, in fact, that kind of a rule is going to come into play, and I would tend to agree. She notes that the province is one of the few resources that the individual independent artist has to turn to for funding. Canada Council does fund artists but not at the smaller level that the province does.

I just want to go back to libraries briefly. My understanding is that libraries are currently at a per capita grant of $4.26. Libraries are advocating to see this doubled to $8.52 to allow them sustainability in funding. Is that being worked into the minister's budget in this three-year business cycle? Or when could the minister see it attaining that level?

Finally, another concern raised about the loss of the community lottery boards, because it was able to allocate larger amounts of money to groups without the requirement for the matching funds. It was local decision-making. That's not under this minister's control, but there are certainly a number of agencies that receive operating funds that fall under him that are feeling the pinch because of that.

9:10

One more thing still on the arts and human rights side of Community Development, and that's around the creative class. Sexual orientation is still not written in although it is read into Alberta's human rights legislation. When can we expect to see the legislation amended to actually write in the inclusion of sexual orientation as a prohibited grounds of discrimination?

That ties into a larger discussion around a concept about the creative class written by Richard Florida, The Rise of the Creative Class. The point that he makes in there is that you need a large and vibrant gay community and also a large and vibrant arts community to start to build and fuel that creative class that charges that change and rejuvenation in our cities. There's a plea that Alberta Community Development recognize the economic benefit that the arts provide to the community, not only the direct economic impact and ensuing multipliers but the secondary economic benefits of attracting smart and talented people to our province, leading to long-term, ingrained support of our cultural institutions.

Questions around parks and protected areas, which appear as core business 5 on page 143, and specific numbers under program 6 on page 78. So either or both of those is what I'm referring to. Protection of the Chinchaga is an issue. The government recently announced that it would not allocate the forestry management unit P-8 to new forestry companies. This offers an opportunity for increased protection in the Chinchaga area, which would protect important habitat for species of concern but also contribute to economic diversification in northwest Alberta.

My questions. Given the ecological and economic importance of the Chinchaga, when will this ministry engage in a land use conservation planning process with the conservation groups to enlarge the Chinchaga site to include significant old-growth forests and more caribou habitat? Second question: when will the government follow the recommendations from its own reports and put in place a meaningful and comprehensive strategy for the management of old-growth stands to ensure the long-term maintenance of forest biodiversity? Third question: will this ministry place a moratorium on further development in the Chinchaga until permanent legal protection for the area is established and transition funding is provided for affected communities?

Again on these same issues, vote 6 appearing on page 78 of the estimates book or under goal 5, the Castle wilderness protection. Albertans continue to ask for protection of the Castle wilderness. It's one of the most diverse ecosystems in Alberta, but it continues to be degraded by industrial and recreational use. Three questions: why does the ministry continue to put business interests before the natural habitats? It's part of a discussion that springs out of the bill that we had earlier this spring. Second question: will the ministry provide protection to this area before its value is destroyed further? And third, when will the ministry provide protection for the 1,000 square kilometres needed for the critical wildlife habitat in the Castle wilderness area?

A couple of questions about avalanche funding. This winter saw an unprecedented number of Albertans killed in avalanches while skiing both here in Alberta and in B.C. Both the B.C. and the federal governments are contributing $125,000 a year, guaranteed for the next three years, for a national avalanche centre. Given that Albertans represent almost 60 per cent of the avalanche fatalities for the '02-03 season, why has the government not matched the $125,000 contribution to the Canadian Avalanche Association? Given that it's been four years since this government has contributed anything to the Canadian Avalanche Association, when is the government going to resume contributing to a national avalanche centre?

Some questions on PDD. Overall, the survey that was done in 2003 on PDD services by the Vocational and Rehab Research Institute shows fairly high levels of satisfaction with the service provided but does have some areas of concern. One of them is the overall satisfaction of the families and guardians. That dropped from 90.2 per cent in 2001 to 88 per cent in 2003. So there are two things happening here. One is the drop in the satisfaction, and two, it's below the PDD Provincial Board's target of 90 per cent. Can the minister explain the drop in satisfaction amongst the families and guardians? Do you know if it's connected to budget? Is it a concern around management issues? Or is there some other reason for the decline in the satisfaction rate?

The survey does indicate that some people were concerned that there was not enough funding to participate in available programs. Is the minister planning on addressing this issue? He did indicate that there were 25 million new dollars going into PDD this year. Does he think that's enough to change this satisfaction rating?

In this survey a number of the questions are asking about internal operations of service providers, but PDD doesn't have very much control over the internal workings of service providers, so I'm wondering why these questions are being asked about a service provider if PDD has little control over it.

Another concern raised in the survey is that fewer respondents know what to do if they're not satisfied with the service provided. What is the minister doing to address that?

The Acting Chair: The Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair, and thank you to the hon. member for the questions. I just couldn't write fast enough, but I'm sure the good folks in Hansard will have picked them up, and whatever I can't get to in the 20 minutes or whatever that's allowed here, we'll try and get to in writing.

The hon. member asked further about the SuperNet. I'm glad that we were clear and we both understand what I had referred to earlier. The issue about hookups I think has been sort of satisfied.

One of the things I should point out, however, is that in terms of the library boards that we have, which is over 200, and in terms of the library service points, I think we would all recognize that one library board such as Edmonton, for example, can have several library points. So we have to just work out some of the logistics of not so much what the one-time hookup fees would cost and how they would be applied and so on, but the monthly service charge issue that is being raised is one that we are looking into further. I did indicate in my opening remarks that our next step is in fact to try and see if we can assist the libraries with ongoing monthly connection charges, and I am working on that now. You may have missed it in my opening comments; nonetheless, I did refer to that.

Then there was another point that I'm sorry I didn't hear at all. I was looking for some other notes, so I'll have to read that. The next point I jotted down was something to do with the Alberta centennial. So I apologize for missing the second point that the hon. member raised, but I'll read it and respond to her.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The question was: will there be specific dollars allocated for arts groups? I should probably indicate that we have already announced $500,000 in funding for arts groups, and it's in relation to one of our flagship centennial projects called Alberta Scene. We announced that about a week ago, two weeks ago – I can't recall – just sometime recently. We'll be providing that $500,000 specifically to assist over 600 Alberta artists and arts organizations to travel from our province to Ottawa, where they will be showcased over 13 days at 19 venues in 94 events.

It's a huge, huge centennial showpiece for us that will really kick off the new budget year, for one thing, because it occurs in April and in May, and at the same time it'll also showcase our province through the arts to a national audience and also to an international audience. We do have information from Atlantic Scene that occurred a year or two back, which was very similar to what Alberta Scene will be all about, that indicated that the artists who went – and they represented every discipline of the arts – were talked to by international producers and promoters, international record labels and recording engineers, and so on and so on, and a number of deals were struck. We already have the same interest happening and building around Alberta Scene, and it will include, you know, the performing arts, be it music or dance or drama or some other form. It will include the visual arts, it will include the culinary arts, and the list goes on and on. So that will be a very large centennial project dedicated specifically to the arts, and it's really very significant, and we're very pleased with that.

I should just briefly mention that there's sort of a bit of a reciprocal thing happening also. In the fall of 2005 for the first time, at least in my knowledge, perhaps the first time ever in the province's history, we will be hosting the National Arts symphony orchestra in Alberta, thanks to special arrangements and funding provided directly to that organization by EPCOR. So I think that's a pretty good focus on the arts as well because it will enliven our communities and there will be other artists involved peripherally or directly. We'll see. The arts have really come alive in the last few years, and we're very pleased about that.

The other point was specifically to municipalities, I think, in relation to the centennial. I think that if you check my previous answer, you'll see what I said there, so I won't repeat it for the saving of time.

Turning to arts funding in general, I know that there are concerns and there have been concerns about the level of arts funding, and I think the hon. member knows what my passion is. I made a living in the arts for many, many years, and I'm very proud of that. But the fact is that the arts always have required some form of additional government support and they always will require some support if we are to have them flourish and grow and develop at the rate that we would like them to.

So last year, as members here would know, was the first year we saw an increase to the arts budget in something like 14 years. But, in fairness, when the cuts happened to virtually every living and breathing program in '93 and '94 and perhaps a little bit into '95, the arts were not cut – it was kind of an anomaly – so we didn't have to regain perhaps what areas like health care and education had lost through the cuts of the day. Since that time, of course, everybody has increased and gone way beyond, almost into the stratosphere of funding in some of these areas, and I'm not bragging or complaining. I'm just saying that that's a fact, and I was happy that finally the arts did get an increase. But now I think we have the challenge of looking at the fact that every area in every part of the economy in every part of the society that we live in are all experiencing cost increases. So we have to do what we can with what we've got, but I do continue to raise the issue and will continue to raise it, as the hon. member has as well.

Now, specific to institutional galleries I don't have all of the answers here and I couldn't quite get all of the questions jotted down, but I think you were referring specifically to those that are attached to educational institutions. I'll have to check and see what our role in that is because I'm just not really sure right here, right now, beyond the funding. I know that we work with the Department of Learning when an educational institution is involved, and to my knowledge institutional galleries were likely rolled into postsecondary funding where that was possible to do so. I think they might continue to see funding being received if the institution where they are housed makes the application for them. That is certainly the case, for example, with Grant MacEwan College. I know they contacted me for some financial assistance for some touring projects, and because they're attached to an educational institution and because we provide monies through another ministry's budget for those institutions, I had to, you know, seek advice for that particular issue from the ministry who funds it. In general, I'll just say that this was all part of the one grant per institution policy, as I recall, and in most cases it's working well, I'm told.

Now, the AFA, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, was dealing with about six or seven different facilities or departments per institution, and it just got a little bit too large, perhaps. Maybe there was some confusion as well because there always is the possibility of some overlap, some duplication that might be going on. So it was felt that it's better to have sort of a one-window approach, but I'll have to look up more detail for the hon. member as I try to answer that question more fully.

The issue about the 30 per cent. I think you were referring to a different group – were you? – than public galleries. I just don't recall. I would say that if you were talking about galleries, I don't believe there are any reductions contemplated to the galleries at the institutions that you were asking about, but if you're talking about the 30 per cent of eligible expenses for other projects in AFA and the fact that we can't always provide 100 per cent of what they're eligible for, that would be correct. There has had to be some pro-rating, and that is tied directly to the lack of funds available for disbursing. I'm sorry that's the case, but I guess we could do the other thing. We could say: okay; those of you who are eligible for 100 per cent, we'll give you 100 per cent of the 30 per cent that you're eligible for. But that would mean some groups would get nothing, obviously. So the AFA's thought was to pro-rate and ensure that everybody who was eligible got as much as possibly could be given. So that's what they've done, and for the time being, at least, I've agreed with it.

The other point about one grant per organization. I have to confess that I, too, have some problems with that, but again it's tied to the shortage of funds. In a way we have sort of a very good bad problem to deal with because the arts have come so alive, more so than ever before, in the last few years in particular, and we now have arts organizations and artists undertaking far more projects than they ever have before. I can tell from the letters and the phone calls and the grant applications that come in, and that's been a trend that's been developing, hon. member, for quite some time now. So when the AFA brought in that particular policy, it was purely as a matter of survival and a matter of trying to ensure that the largest amount of dollars possible were spread out amongst as many recipients as possible and spread out across the province to the largest extent possible.

You made a comment about the initial reason why these foundations were set up in the first place. As I recall, the first one was the Alberta performing arts foundation or something close to that title, and it was about 1976, '77. My recollection of that era is that those foundations were set up for a few very specific reasons. First of all, the most obvious was to distribute funds that would be forthcoming from the new lotteries program that had just started up.

But, equally important, when the criteria were being designed for those programs, they were being designed so as to allow a foundation that was arm's length from government the ability to fund things that the government at the time could not fund and/or to fill voids in government program funding. Those were two of the main reasons those were set up, because I remember inputting into that particular issue. In other cases they were established to augment what the government may have already been funding, and all of that was accomplished.

Now, of course, there's a much closer working relationship because of all the partnering that occurs, and that's a good thing. We have far more money to work with, and in the end the government is accountable for it. In this case specifically, I am. So I do share the sensitivity of the history. We've moved far and beyond where we started. It's all good, and it's all working quite well. We just don't have quite as much money as we'd like to be able to lift at this time that rule of one grant only per organization.

Now, the second question there was the issue of: does this restriction apply also to the CFEP program or the CIP program? I think the hon. member was asking in terms of those possibly becoming more restrictive. The answer is no, and I need to explain that a bit. CFEP and CIP, as we all know, are two completely separate programs. They're in Gaming, and they're not ours, but CFEP and CIP do fund a lot of arts programs.

The reason I want to flag that for all members is that so often we get accused of having the lowest per capita funding in the arts and all that kind of thing. If you take just the envelope that is labelled arts, that might be true, but if you take and roll in all the other monies that come from CFEP programming, from CIP programming, from the centennial programming and probably some others that I'm leaving out, we fare extremely well compared to all other provinces. I would challenge anyone to disagree with that and provide me information to the contrary. We never get credit for the tens of millions of dollars that flow out to arts organizations and ag society grants who host artistic endeavours in their particular communities. There are so many more monies that go out there.

But that's not the main reason why I flag this question. I just wanted to say that there are occasions when we look at what other government departments are providing by way of funding to a specific project as we are evaluating and reviewing whether or not that particular project should receive funding from a Community Development program. Where an applicant is using money from one government department to match government monies that would come from Community Development, we wouldn't allow that. But they are certainly welcome as an organization to apply to CFEP or to CIP over, above, and beyond what they would be eligible for in a Community Development project. They are completely separate programs.

Then there was another point the hon. member raised, and I'm sorry I couldn't write fast enough to jot it down. She did ask about exploration grants or creative grants or something in that vein. I think the question was: is the AFA planning to curtail it? The answer is: not to my knowledge. Now, I don't know if somebody has any information that they can shed on that. I don't know if there's a plan like that in mind. I would be surprised if there is, but I'll find out and respond in writing.

Because there's not much time left, I'll just cut quickly to a couple of the other areas that were mentioned. One that we haven't talked about yet is the parks area, and I think the hon. member referenced some issues with respect to the Chinchaga. This is of course one of the largest and most recently protected areas that we have in the province. Issues that surround that area that the member specifically referenced are outside the Chinchaga park area, so I'll have to talk with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. I'm not sure if you mentioned the P-8 management plan or something like that. I'll undertake to get you the answer from Sustainable Resource Development if that's where in fact the question should have gone in the first place.

We have no plans, however, at this point to enlarge the Chinchaga area. It was one of the flagship dedications and designations under the special places program, and as all members here would know, the special places program concluded very successfully on July 24 of 2001. So it remains to be seen whether there would be additional initiatives or further opportunities to do some other designations. None of that is being contemplated at this time.

There are a lot of management plans that are underway, probably a couple of dozen that are at one stage or another. Some of them will be completed this year, I hope, and some of them will be completed very shortly thereafter. There are very great complexities with all of these management plans, as you obviously are aware.

That leads me into the Castle wilderness. Now, I don't have any huge amount of notes with me tonight on the Castle wilderness, hon. member, but I am aware that some individuals want that area protected. It is indeed a very large area. It's sort of technically referred to as the Castle forest land-use zone, and it's actually administered by Sustainable Resource Development. Again, I will undertake to try and get you an answer to that. I know it's a sensitive area, but it's not one that we're responsible for. We did establish the Castle wetland ecological reserve under the special places program, so we're involved in that general area, but the specific point that the hon. member is asking is really better directed to Sustainable Resource Development.

Now, in the couple of minutes I have left, I'll just go quickly to PDD because we haven't touched on that, and if there's time, I'll come back to avalanche funding and the economic benefits of the arts. On the PDD survey that the hon. member mentioned and the satisfaction rate dropping, I can share this with the House, Mr. Chair. We do a lot in the PDD area, and obviously we need to do more.

I'm sorry. I hear that the bell has gone, so I'll have to answer that another time.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of clarifications. When I asked about whether there was centennial money specific to the arts, he quoted me the $500,000 that's been set aside for the Alberta Scene and noted that there were 600 groups that were expected to travel to Ottawa for that. Quick math: with $500,000 for 600 groups or artists there's less than $1,000 each. That barely would pay the high-season airplane fare to get there. So is that $500,000 the extent of the centennial projects allocation for the arts?

The $100,000 for the institutional galleries was cut this year. The question that I'm asking and that the other artist-run galleries are asking is: what's happening to that money? Has it been allocated out of the visual arts sector? If it was a grant program that was going to those galleries, it's no longer going to those galleries. Where's the money? Is it staying in there to be reallocated to other visual arts entities, or is it being moved to a different sector under the government, or has it been cut entirely to somewhere else? It was there. Now it's not. Where's the money?

Finally, the issue of the one grant had fairly serious repercussions across the province, and I'll give you a simple example. In Fort Macleod in southern Alberta, in the Livingstone-Macleod constituency, they had a very active theatre. They had a season from September to May of touring artists that came in, and they were able to get community series grants to help offset the costs of paying for those artists to come in as part of a touring house. Over the summer they had an operating grant for their theatre. When they were told that they could only get one grant, the municipality, which was in charge of the theatre and owned it, had to make the choice: community series or summer operating. They had to make the choice. They couldn't get both grants, so they dropped their summer program.

Now, that summer program hired a lot of local people. It was developing a skill level with young artists because they ran a young company. They were starting to specialize in producing their own stories from that local area, and they had tremendous support from the local community. So that's what I mean when you talk about going down to the one grant. There was a huge ripple effect from that, simply beyond what the minister was referring to.

Since the minister has a much larger research budget than I do, perhaps he could back up his claim that if you add in the money that arts groups get from CFEP or CIP or the centennial grants, that would bring them to one of the best funded in Canada. I'll let him do the research on that and let me know.

Okay. Continuing on with questions on PDD, again this is continuing with the Alberta persons with developmental disabilities 2003 consumer and family/guardian satisfaction survey, which I gather is a government-initiated survey that was in fact done by the Vocational and Rehabilitation Research Institute. The survey found that on most indicators the Calgary region rated lowest: lowest in overall satisfaction among consumers, lowest in family/guardian satisfaction, lowest in satisfaction getting services, lowest in satisfaction with planning and reviewing services, lowest with service provider staff, with PDD staff, and with satisfaction with boards. Can the minister explain the poor rating for services in Calgary, and what has the minister done to rectify this situation? Has the minister identified problems with the board or board governance specifically in Calgary? Has the minister considered an independent review of the Calgary PDD board to explain these survey results?

I'm going to skip to community capacity initiatives: approximately $3 million to $4 million province-wide with Edmonton and Calgary both receiving approximately a million each in additional monies. The money is going out on a regional basis and to specific initiatives. Can the minister tell us how this money provided through the community capacity initiatives will be handled at the regional level? How will the minister ensure that there is accountability and that this money goes to support individuals who need it most? Will there be any review process or internal audits performed to ensure that money is being appropriately spent? What checks and balances exist in the system?

The Michener Centre. In 2002 the governance of Michener's services was transferred from the Michener facility board to the PDD Central Alberta Community Board, and the Michener board was wound down. Can the minister update us on what difference this transition has made on the residents of Michener Centre? Can the minister tell me whether there are any plans to close the facility?

The Protection for Persons in Care Act review. This review was begun in 2002 with the Legislative Review Committee. It submitted its report to the minister. Comments and recommendations were invited in the fall of 2003, and these are now being reviewed, analyzed, and summarized. Can the minister tell us whether there is any legislation or amendments coming forward during the current legislative session or expected in the fall session around changes to the Protection for Persons in Care Act?

Has the minister considered increasing the role that police and the justice system play in reviewing allegations of abuse? For example, as it stands now, cases are not reported to the police as a first line of defence where that would be commonplace in other jurisdictions like Massachusetts.

The question on DATS. I'm wondering if the minister can clarify for me. DATS clients are having to reapply for DATS. Now, is that funding flowing? I thought that was municipal funding, but it's turning up in my notes that there's some sort of government involvement here. Perhaps the minister could clarify that. So DATS clients are being asked to reapply. "It will take up to three years to re-certify all DATS clients. Once re-certified, changes to their eligibility will be made effective immediately": this is coming out of a newsletter specific to DATS clients.

An Hon. Member: Most of them are PDD.

Ms Blakeman: Most of the users of the DATS system are PDD. That's the connection. Okay.

So my question around DATS then is: what support is available to those individuals who would be PDD clients who are currently using DATS who are deemed not to need it any longer? Is the ministry considering any additional support for them? Or is that it; they're on their own?

How does this decision fit in with the results of the PDD consumer and family/guardian satisfaction survey that found that comments provided around transportation were almost entirely negative? There's certainly an issue there around transportation for PDD clients. It doesn't seem to be a good situation. What is the ministry doing in this budget year to address those issues?

I have just enough time to turn it back over to the minister one more time. Thank you very much for the opportunity to question the minister during the estimates on Community Development for the 2004-2005 budget year.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First, I would like to lend support to the minister and his department for the initiative of putting money into the infrastructure of parks, also supporting the water for life strategy.

I feel that the wellness part of the Ministry of Health and Wellness is absolutely essential because it is one opportunity we may have at being proactive and to help support activity and good health, therefore reducing health costs. Mr. Chairman, I would like to further see Community Development help promote activity and wellness. Could we support putting money into the budget to enhance activity?

Mr. Chairman, I want to stress the equity of access. I want to particularly talk about trail use. Trails should be encouraged to be used and not charged for. I realize that when the minister made statements about the charging for trails, groomed trails are the only ones that are going to be charged for. I would not like to see limitations of usage due to affordability. That's one of the points that I would like to bring forward. I would not like to see a trend start in charging for usage. I suppose that the question that I do have for the minister is: does he feel that the cost of administration to collect these fees is going to offset the revenues?

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chair. Given that there was one new speaker here, let me address his questions first. The issue of the water strategy that we have, which is primarily led by the Department of Environment and one which I commented on in my opening statements, is indeed one we are very pleased to be affiliated with, so to speak, through our parks and protected areas systems. We know how important it is to have good clean water in these parks for the obvious health reasons but also for the impact that it has on wildlife who come into contact with that water and, secondly, also as a tourism draw for our province.

We're very pleased to be allocating $21 million over three years. It's the first significant increase to the parks and protected areas in several years. Ten? Twenty? Whatever it is, I know the staff are pretty happy about it, and so am I. When the Premier announced it on his televised address in February, we were all very excited by it.

The issue of promoting activities that lead to better health and wellness habits and what have you is something that we are also very pleased to be a part of. We have a lot that we're doing in this area already. Other programs that we're doing cross-ministry with Health are also part of the equation. We have the Healthy U campaign, Ever Active, and two or three others that just escape me in terms of their real titles. Most of those are focused at youth in our province and trying to instill good habits that if properly ingrained at a younger age will hopefully stay with people for the rest of their lives and lead to exactly what the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul is alluding to.

We also have a lot of programs that occur specifically in the schools themselves to ensure that that focus is there. Typically, we like to involve some of our professional athletes when we launch those programs because it tends to encourage and enthuse and motivate young kids to become involved.

We know that there are severe problems of obesity and inactivity. I have to say that at the national level, at the federal/provincial/territorial level I'm very pleased that we are able to address that through our sport plans. One objective that we just met last year was increasing physical activity amongst Canadians by 10 per cent. We've set a similar objective for the current year, and I think we're on track to do that. In fact, Alberta is reasonably far out in front on most of those issues, and we're very proud of that.

The final point on that issue is with respect to our own Alberta sport plan. This was an initiative put together by the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks & Wildlife Foundation in conjunction with numerous partners. It's a very good document, and it provides a lot of strategies, some of which flow out of what the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul was alluding to and others of which address capacity building and infrastructure and funding needed in other areas where we're not providing funding at all right now. I know that the hon. Member for Little Bow has contributed a great deal to that particular foundation. We chat frequently about what needs to be done, and I'm grateful for that. I just want to say thank you to him for his advice and leadership in that regard.

The Alberta sport plan, to conclude, Mr. Chairman, is one that we are considering right now. There's sort of a good and a bad to it. It's got a lot of great ideas, so many, in fact, that the price tag associated with them is far beyond our capacity at this time, but I am looking at which parts of it we might be able to have an impact on. In any event, I will be responding formally on behalf of government as soon as we are able to.

The other quick point the hon. member raised was with regard to user fees, and I share his comment that we don't want to see a user-fee trend starting to develop in every sector because that would perhaps lead to some complications. I want to say that in terms of the user fees that we've introduced and/or augmented in the parks area, and specifically in Kananaskis with respect to groomed cross-country trails, the amount of money that we will receive in return from the revenues of those fees will indeed help us to provide ongoing first-class maintenance and upkeep of those trails. Every cent that comes in from those revenue fees will go back toward the improvements for those programs or at least maintaining them to the best of our abilities.

Now, the groomed trails that we have in the area of Kananaskis Country, as I recall, cost us approximately $400,000 a year to maintain. Under a previous scenario we had the benefit of having the minimum security camp residents help us as volunteers in the basic maintenance and upkeep and grooming of the trails, but when that minimum security camp was closed a couple years back, it put a lot of pressure on us, and we suddenly had to come up with $400,000. We came up with $300,000, and the other hundred thousand we're hoping to raise through these, I think, relatively small user fees for some areas.

As I indicated in my opening comments, hon. member, a large number of other trails and other services in our parks will remain free of charge. But the specific groomed cross-country ski trails that we're referring to in Kananaskis Country, Mr. Chair, will attract probably 60,000 or more ski visits, and therefore we've brought in an idea called a seasonal pass, which will make it quite affordable for seniors, for example, who are frequent users and frequently write to us. Again, the response to the surveys that we received from Albertans and from visitors to our province was well past the 50 per cent mark, that individuals wouldn't mind sharing some of the burden of the cost through a user fee provided that those monies went right back into the programs, and that's precisely what we're going to do.

Now, very quickly – I see that the clock tells me I have one minute left – I just want to get back to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. She indicated that I was having trouble hearing her. It wasn't that I was having trouble hearing her, Mr. Chair; just that I couldn't write fast enough to keep up with her. She was throwing questions at me a mile a minute, and I did the best I could, but I'll have to review Hansard and get back to her with some of the specifics.

The first comment she made regarding Alberta Scene I've already covered. I just want to clarify for the record that we're talking about 600 artists, not 600 arts groups. For example, if the Edmonton Symphony or the Calgary Philharmonic were to go, that in itself would be anywhere from probably 56 to 70 players, not including technical people, and in fact we will have some of those larger groups going. Anyone who is interested in applying should look up www.albertascene.ca – I think I got it right – and there'll be a lot more information on the Internet.

The PDD survey. I guess the time has elapsed. I'll have to get back to you, hon. member, in writing on that as I will try and find out some information for you for the dance program. To my knowledge that may be part of an unconditional grant received from Municipal Affairs. But whoever it is that has the answers to your question, I'll do my best to try and get them for you as I will also on the PPIC Act review.

10:00

With that, I guess it's past the magic hour of 10 o'clock, so I will take my seat and just undertake to provide whatever I can in writing. I hear the bells going. So thank you, everyone, for your support and for participating in this discussion about one of the most important ministries in all of government, Alberta Community Development. Thank you.

The Chair: Pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, and after considering the business plan and the proposed estimates for the Department of Community Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, I must now put the question.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$676,942,000
Capital Investment	$6,562,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I'm happy to move that we rise and report the estimates of Community Development.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Community Development: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $676,942,000; capital investment, $6,562,000.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:04 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 31, 2004 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 2004/03/31
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask for Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce today the Hon. Shirley Gbujama, Minister of Social Welfare, Gender and Children's Affairs for the Republic of Sierra Leone. The minister is in our province on her first visit to Alberta with her assistant, Alhaji Bangura. They are seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker.

Minister Gbujama is here attending an international conference on children and war being held at the University of Alberta. Sierra Leone has faced significant challenges in the past; however, the country has taken important steps to overcome these challenges and is building a brighter future for its citizens.

Albertans have supported these efforts. For example, funds for the project to enhance the quality of life for children in Sierra Leone were provided in 2000-2001 by the Canmore Rotary Club and the province of Alberta in conjunction with the Wild Rose Foundation. We are hopeful that Alberta can continue exploring areas where it may be possible to enhance the relationship between Alberta and Sierra Leone in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with enormous pleasure that I rise today to formally introduce to you several outstanding individuals seated in your gallery who are responsible for and/or directly connected with the Junos in Edmonton. I would ask each of them to please rise and to remain standing as I present each of them to you. Ms Melanie Berry, president of the Canadian Academy of Recording Arts and Science, otherwise known as CARAS, from Toronto, with direct responsibility for the Junos; Ms Maureen McTague, director, events and promotions, Holmes Creative Communications, also from Toronto, directly responsible for the Junos; Dr. Bob Westbury, chair and volunteer number one in our province, looking after our local Juno organizing committee and over 1,000 volunteers; Ms Karen Topilko, executive assistant to Dr. Westbury, who helps him out a great deal; Dr. Jeffrey Anderson, executive director, recently appointed to the Alberta Foundation for the Arts and now recently our executive director in charge of the arts.

Mr. Speaker, the Junos in Edmonton are our single largest annual musical showcase of Canadian talent, and I'm extremely proud that CARAS chose Alberta as being the first Canadian prairie province ever to host the Junos. Please join me and our Premier to thank and welcome these outstanding individuals for making the Junos a reality in Edmonton.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the mother and brother of one of our pages, Whitney Haynes. Whitney's mother, Brenda Haynes, is employed by Alberta Justice, and brother Landon is a grade 7 honours student at St. Nicholas school. Ms Haynes and Landon are seated in your gallery, and I would at this time like to invite them to please stand and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four members of my finance branch. These members played a very important role in the development of the budget which I presented in the House yesterday. The members are Gerry Steckler, Karen Yan, Bill Waymen, and Jean Stricklin. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a visitor of mine who's in the Legislature for the first time, and he's keenly interested and excited to be here. I'd like to ask Mr. Kenny McElroy to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly some very good friends of mine. They are members of the council of the Northern Sunrise county who are down in Edmonton for the AAMD and C spring conference and came to see how the Assembly operates, suggesting maybe that they would like some lessons on how to operate a raucous council meeting. My guests are Reeve Carolyn Kalebaba and her husband, Mike; Deputy Reeve Gary Lindstrom and his wife, Trudy; CAO Bob Miles; Evans Lavio, councillor; Julie Gour, councillor; and Ed Dziengielewski, councillor, and his wife, Nancy. I see they're standing. I would ask the members to give them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This being spring break I have the great pleasure and honour of having my whole family here with me today. I'd like to ask them to stand as I introduce them. First of all, my beautiful wife, Linnette, who, although she looks half my age, really is older than me; my oldest son, Taylor; my daughter, Jenna-Leigh; and my littlest son, Lucas. I'd ask the Assembly to welcome them, please.

The Speaker: The hon. member should know that the Assembly cannot protect a member from himself.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you some constituents of mine that are visiting the Legislature while enjoying their spring break. I hope that they have all arrived, and I hope that I pronounce their names properly. The first one is Mr. Stephen Changarathil, along with his wife, Mrs. Sally Changarathil, and their son Mr. Thomas Changarathil; also Mr. Cel Robato, along with his son Joseph. I'd ask that they all rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce two special young ladies from Blessed Kateri school who are also on spring break but have come here to see the workings of our Legislature. I would ask Ashlynn Gentles to rise, as well as Adriana, please. Would you stand up? They are accompanied by their father, Leeroy Gentles, who's a social worker with Children's Services, and one of my secretaries, Lisa Gentles, who works in my office. Would you please welcome them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm thrilled to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a dynamic duo of grandfather and granddaughter. Reg Basken is a retired president of the Communications, Energy and Paperworkers Union of Canada, former chair of the Edmonton United Way campaign, current board member of the Edmonton Community Foundation, and last but not least, president of the Alberta New Democrats. His granddaughter is Jessica Basken. She is graduating from Holy Trinity Catholic high school this May at age 17 and as soon as she turns 18 will be enrolling in postsecondary courses with the goal of becoming a social worker. Both granddaughter and grandfather are sitting in the public gallery. I will now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

School Construction in Edmonton

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The children and families of Edmonton desperately need new schools. The Edmonton public school district alone needs eight new schools by next year and has received funding for none. Even when a new school is announced, as was the case with Victoria school of the performing arts, the cockamamie process of the Department of Infrastructure leaves it in turmoil for years. To the Premier: given Edmonton's booming growth and the government's huge surpluses, how does he explain to the thousands of children in Edmonton who need schools that they don't deserve one?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that since the year 2000 we have spent $1.1 billion on capital projects relative to schools. I'm going to talk about the capital region, as most people do when they talk about Edmonton.

We'll start with the A's: Ardrossan, Holy Redeemer Catholic school, two portables, $255,000; Beaumont, l'école Coloniale Estates school, addition of a CTS instructional area, $1.7 million; Beaumont, l'école secondaire Beaumont composite high school, addition of six classrooms, one ancillary room, library resource centre, $1.5 million; Beaumont, l'école secondaire Beaumont composite high school, moved portable from l'école Coloniale Estates to l'école Beaumont, transfer payment here from east elementary – I don't know what all that's about; it's $21,000 anyway – Calmar, New Humble Centre school, $26,000; Calmar elementary school, new K to 12 school, $5.3 million; Devon, Robina Baker elementary school, lease support for Devon primary school, $32,000; Devon core school, new Devon K to 9 Catholic school, $4.3 million; Devon, John Maland high school, student health initiative . . .

The Speaker: I think, hon. Premier, that if we're only to the D's, this could be quite an answer.

The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier proves our point.

Given the delays and broken promises concerning the Victoria school, how can the public trust this government's announcements that schools will actually be built as announced?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll skip the D's and move right to the E's: Edmonton, Aurora charter school, lease support for Misericordia nurses school and residence to August, $166,000; Edmonton, l'école Maurice-Lavallee, one freestanding portable, $57,000; Edmonton, l'école Notre Dame, lease support for temporary accommodation of McQueen school, $19,000; Edmonton, l'école Notre Dame modernization, $3 million; Edmonton, l'école Notre Dame, addition of four entrance vestibules, library, mezzanine, mechanical fan room, et cetera, $173,000; Edmonton, l'école Père-Lacombe, addition of entrance vestibule, library, mezzanine, new mechanical fan room, $327,000; Edmonton, l'école Père-Lacombe, modernization facility, transferred funding advancement of $396,000 from deleted l'école publique Gabrielle-Roy project; Edmonton l'école Père-Lacombe, one free-standing portable, purchase and set-up; Edmonton l'école St. Jean D'Arc, addition of new classrooms, new gym, gym support areas and student gathering area, $3.5 million.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Infrastructure: has this government ever considered the possibility that forcing children to travel long distances to attend overcrowded schools in distant areas of the city is contributing to the astonishing 35 per cent high school dropout rate in Edmonton?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member only heard part of the great story of building schools in Edmonton. Since the year 2000 there have been 180 projects in schools in the area of Edmonton – 180 projects – and the fact is that there was $52 million given to the public system last year, and the 180 projects don't even include the schools that will be dealt with in that $52 million.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Security of Sour Gas Wells

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the FBI issued a warning to Canada after receiving a terrorist threat against its oil and gas companies. Albertans are particularly vulnerable in this case because much of the gas production is of deadly sour gas. This is especially alarming given that many sour gas wells are protected by little more than a shed and a chain-link fence. To the Premier: given that just two years ago a man broke into a sour gas well near Caroline and committed suicide by causing a high-pressure release using merely pliers and a socket wrench, what's preventing a terrorist from approaching a sour gas well and causing a catastrophic event?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I really can't answer that question because I don't know what would prevent a terrorist. But I can tell you that our Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations has been working with industry on a security plan. I'll have him supplement, and perhaps the Minister of Energy may have something to add.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta has put a considerable emphasis on improving security measures in this province. We have established a crisis centre, a communications centre that's state of the art. We have developed through the Department of Municipal Affairs and the Department of the Solicitor General various networks in terms of being able to gather information and to be up to date on any terrorist threat that occurs across this province.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the model that has been developed here in Alberta under the leadership of our overall security committee, which was established two years ago, has been commended and referred to as an example that might be copied by such governments as the federal government with respect to dealing with some of the issues that they're currently facing.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Given that there's a proposal to drill six sour gas wells on the southeast city limits of Calgary, what reassurances can the Premier give Calgaryans that they are not at risk from terrorist attacks on these wells?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. minister pointed out, steps are being taken to secure the oil and gas industry generally against terrorist attacks, and I would imagine that the gas wells or the proposal to which the hon. leader alludes falls under that protection.

But I'll have the hon. minister respond, maybe the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, you know, Alberta leads the way in a security infrastructure that defends against terrorism attacks against this very, very critical and important asset to Alberta. For the member to bring it up and expose that in a public domain only takes away from that security, so I'm a little shocked at that.

Then we watch his segue into something completely different, and that's the drilling of safe sour gas wells next to a large urban population. Mr. Speaker, that hearing has been deferred. The proponents in the hearing are consulting with the community. They are under a proposal to remove that gas faster, not slower but faster, using world-proven safe technology in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Back to the Premier: has this government calculated the terrorist risks associated with allowing gas facilities in and around major cities?

Mr. Klein: You know, Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting question. As the hon. minister pointed out, the matter of gas wells in the vicinity of Calgary is now under review by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. If the hon. member has concerns or specific comments or recommendations to make relative to how these fields can be made more secure, especially secure from terrorist attacks, then I would suggest that he present some evidence.

But the evidence that we would present, if we were to present any evidence, would be that we already have very significant steps in place to safeguard the industry generally – and this project would be included – from terrorist attacks.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Amber Alert Program

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government's Amber Alert has failed. Yesterday when an abduction occurred on the Saddle Lake reserve, it took hours for the Amber Alert system to kick in. While the child was found, the abductor got away. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Given that timeliness is so crucial, where did the system break down?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, the system did not break down. This Amber Alert worked, and it has worked twice in this province. The unfortunate thing about this particular member is that she doesn't know the details of what occurred from the time the child was abducted until the time the Amber Alert was ignited. But I can tell you that the RCMP in this province did an unbelievable job, and it worked well.

Ms Blakeman: Can the minister tell us if all media outlets received the Amber Alert, and if not, why not?

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, Mr. Speaker, all media outlets got the Amber Alert.

I will let the hon. minister elaborate.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, under my portfolio the emergency warning system is one that we work in concert with all media across Alberta. I might add that all media across Alberta have done a very good job in terms of the success last night. When the girl was first in fact abducted, at 9:01 the actual Amber Alert went off.

I also want to compliment the RCMP because not only were there members that were on duty, members came in that were off duty. The entire community came together to help in the recovery of this girl. The system worked, and it worked very well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Finally, back to the Solicitor General: given that the media is now very skeptical about this, what is the minister doing to restore credibility?

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, the media in this province in igniting the Amber Alert did an unbelievable, fabulous job. I happened to be watching American Idol, and it came across the TV station.

We are very proud of what the police in this province have done. We are very proud of how the media conducted themselves in this province. We are very proud of this province being the first province in Canada to look at the Amber Alert, and I may add that we have had nine other provinces that have followed us and our Amber Alert.

Mr. Speaker, I think the one thing we have to keep in mind is that the system worked, the police did a good job – I'm very proud of the police in this province – and, more importantly, the child is safe.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

School Construction in Edmonton (continued)

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again the Edmonton Tory caucus has failed to do their job, and the government has ignored the growing list of schools that need to be built in this city. Wellington school, Castle Downs high school, and High Park school: these are just some of the priorities set by the Edmonton public school board that have been ignored by this government. The needs of Edmonton children are going begging because of the ineffectiveness of the Edmonton government caucus and the disregard of this government. My questions are to the Premier. Given that Edmontonians were promised that if they voted for the Tories their concerns would be met, why has the government again neglected to meet the infrastructure needs of the Edmonton public school system?

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, I think you were at Edmonton and starting with P's.

Mr. Klein: Yes, I was. I'll finish off because the next one on the list, Mr. Speaker, is a brand new school. It's the George P. Nicholson school. That's a new elementary school in Twin Brooks. Capital health also provided $465,000, and the YMCA provided $464,000. The total cost of that school was $6.5 million. Then I could go to the Suzuki charter school, two upgradings there valued at about $60,000. Various locations throughout the city of Edmonton, various renovations of a minor nature, but they add up to about $500,000.

Then we go to Archbishop Joseph MacNeil school – that's a new school, $6.7 million – and the Archbishop Oscar Romero school, a new school at $12.5 million. Mr. Speaker, then we go to Father Michael Troy, a new junior high school at $6.7 million; Jackson Heights elementary, a new school at $5.8 million. The list goes on and on and on.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, that's not good news for Albertans who hear that their Premier lives in the past.

Given that this government gave extra money last year to the Calgary school board, froze insurance rates that were unfair to Edmonton, and stood by as Edmonton lost a seat in this Assembly, can the Premier tell the House why he has again betrayed the capital city?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the list is so extensive, but I'll go from that list to what we've done for secondary and postsecondary school projects. In the year 2000 $6 million, in the year 2001-2002 $21 million for the University of Alberta. There's $6 million for NAIT. Athabasca University facility expansion here in the city of Edmonton, $3 million. University of Alberta health research innovation centre – this hon. member should pay attention because he worked at the university and that's where most of the money went and he represents that area – the University of Alberta natural resources engineering facility, $25 million; the University of Alberta power plant expansion, $27.5 million. The Minister of Infrastructure will be announcing more money for NAIT in the very near future. I don't know what this person is talking about, especially when he represents the constituency to which most of the money has gone.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: why is the Premier denying young Edmontonians, children six, seven, eight, nine, 10 years old, the right to have their own schools to which to go?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, I could continue with the list. The list is absolutely endless.

We predicate our capital funding on where the need is greatest and on a priority basis. I just pointed out where in this member's constituency millions and millions of dollars have gone, and he is not appreciative. Would he rather we call that money back? It all went to educational institutions, namely the University of Alberta, where this hon. member taught, and here he is begrudging them that money.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Confined Feeding Operations

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the annual Association of Municipal Districts and Counties conference in Edmonton this week concerns have been expressed about whether municipalities will continue to have an influence over confined feeding operations under Bill 17. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Could the minister explain to the Assembly what role the municipalities will have under the proposed amendments to the Agricultural Operation Practices Act?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the House would recall that when we introduced the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, we stated at the time that after a year of operation we would have a review of the act, because it was a new way of dealing with confined feeding operations, to make sure that there were no gaps in the system. That review was very ably led by the Member for Leduc, and the amendments that were brought forward in this session and, in fact, passed in this session were done to bring clarity to the act. This gives a clear understanding of the responsibilities of the confined feeding operator, the municipality, the public, and the NRCB.

Mr. Speaker, one of the fundamentals of the Agricultural Operation Practices Act continues to be that neighbours are protected; their well-being is considered. It continues to encourage municipalities to identify where these operations could or could not be built, and municipalities continue to play a very important role in the siting and operation of these facilities.

Mr. Marz: To the same minister: can the minister explain why these amendments were made and what they hope to achieve?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again, the NRCB I think has proven over the last few years that it very capably carries out what is held in that act. We did make some improvements to the act. Primarily, they were in technical areas to ensure that when the NRCB enforced the act and carried out their responsibilities under the act, those technical issues were not a difficulty for them. Responsibility and authority in a number of areas were clarified in that, respecting municipal development permits, for one, and health authority permits, for another.

Mr. Speaker, you can't have patchwork rules across the province. You have to have consistency to protect the municipality, the investment of the operator, and, of course, to protect our air, soil, and water, which was the primary focus of this act at the outset.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that concerns were expressed this morning and last night about not knowing what was coming in this bill, were municipalities and other stakeholders consulted regarding these amendments to Bill 17?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, very definitely they were. In fact, in May of 2003 there was a discussion paper and a questionnaire sent to every municipality, and 23 municipalities wrote back with recommendations. There were consultations with the board of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, and we received many thoughtful comments about the process from people in municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to continue that, because it was expressed at the mayors and reeves meeting two days ago, this meeting in conjunction with the AAMD and C annual meeting – the Member for Leduc and two senior staff from my department went over to their convention and, I understand, met with 50 representatives from councils, had a very good discussion, and I think were able to clear up a number of misunderstandings.

Again, our commitment is to work with our partners to make this work. The municipalities want it to work, the operators want it to work, and this government wants it to work.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Rural Gas Co-ops and Electrification Associations

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government continues to scheme to destroy rural electrification systems and natural gas co-ops. Instead of protecting rural electrification associations and natural gas co-ops, which have provided rural areas with quality utilities at affordable prices for decades, this government is doing its best to dismantle them. In a recently sent letter, which I will table at the appropriate time, Alberta's executive director for electricity states that by 2010 all consumers will be able to choose their electricity supplier. This would also include members of REAs. My first question is to the Premier. Why does this government pretend to respect the autonomy of rural Alberta when it plans to break up valued community services like REAs and natural gas co-ops?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that statement is untrue. For the truth I will call on the hon. minister.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Premier, and thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, one of the problems with this member is that his preamble is always so exaggerated that it extends the answer that you must give in order to deliver factual information.

In fact, the REAs do a good job, a great job, of delivering electricity in this province. Out of some record 9,260 megawatts that the maximum load drew this year, the REAs continued to deliver somewhere in the neighbourhood of 57 to 65 megawatts dependably to their members. There are certain REAs that have chosen ways to market their product, and others are looking at different and unique ways to market their product. Some have embraced the deregulation more wholeheartedly than others. What we do know is that there is ample electricity and there is ample natural gas for those associations to continue to deliver their product to their members at reasonable prices.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what we also know is that the competitive generation model has brought more investment into rural Alberta, consistent with the rural development initiative put forward by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and the Member for Wainwright, than ever before. In fact, wind power in this Conservative votin', gun totin', pickup drivin' province today delivers more green power into this grid than any other jurisdiction in Canada.

So, in fact, competitive market generation supports rural Alberta. It's not like you. It does not drag it down.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties has urged the government to unplug energy deregulation, is dismantling rural Alberta's electricity and natural gas co-ops this government's policy of revenge against rural Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there was no policy of revenge against rural Alberta. As a matter of fact, I ran into, oh, I think it must have been 12 or 13 of our ministers at the convention of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties this morning. I spoke to them. I didn't hear any comments whatsoever about rural electrification or gas co-ops. I don't know how many were at that convention. I would guess a thousand or more people who represent municipal districts and counties throughout this province. I understand from the ministers that I spoke with that they were very, very pleased, indeed, with the actions of this government and the direction that this government is going in overall. The comments that I heard from delegates to the convention were very positive, indeed.

But I did talk about dome syndrome, dome disease, which they have. They have it very, very seriously, and they should go someplace and get treated for it, because the real situation is out there at the AAMD and C conference where the leaders of the municipalities are, and I believe what they say. I listen to what they say, not what these people say, who are severely afflicted with dome disease.

Mr. MacDonald: That's shocking.

Again to the Premier: why is this government continuing with a $3 million propaganda campaign aimed at convincing rural Albertans to abandon their REAs and their gas co-ops for a fictitious competitive market?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again that is a very misleading, to say the least, statement and preamble. Relative to rural electrification associations and gas co-ops I'll have the hon. Minister of Energy respond, because he's in charge of policy, relative to the way they operate just to enlighten the hon. member because I know that he doesn't get out to the rural areas unless he takes it upon himself to go out. He's never invited. I know that for sure.

I will have the hon. Minister of Energy respond, then the hon. Deputy Premier, who is responsible for the day-to-day operations of these agencies.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an important question, and again the answer has to be somewhat extended because of the falseness of the preamble. Let me start out by saying that I went to a college called Notre Dame College at Wilcox. At that time a very charismatic individual by the name of Monsignor Athol Murray said to me that there are two kinds of people: those people on the building crew, those people on the wrecking crew. I think we know what side this government is on.

Mr. Speaker, this individual, this group every time talk about how bad things are in rural Alberta, how bad things are in Edmonton, how bad things are in Calgary, depending on the point of the moment. In reality, because of the great gift of the resources that we have, a gifted leader, and the fact that we have competitive market generation, this is the largest and fastest growing economic jurisdiction in North America, and in spite of their efforts it will remain so.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Education Property Tax Rate

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Based on the education tax rate that was announced in the budget last week, the municipality of Jasper says that residents are facing an education tax increase. Can the Minister of Municipal Affairs explain why even with a cut in the provincial education tax these constituents are seeing an increase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government did cut the school property tax rate, as was announced in the budget last week, by 2.3 per cent, and I think that was welcome news by all citizens. However, because there are new homes and the value of people's homes has gone up, more education property tax will be collected in terms of supporting the basic learning system. But because there are more citizens coming to Alberta, because there are new businesses coming to Alberta, it's living proof that the Alberta advantage is alive and well and also that the pie is growing in terms of the challenges we face. In fact, for Jasper, a beautiful place to live and work, I would like to say that we have implemented a capping system in order to assist the residents in the Jasper area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. The municipality of Jasper sits within the national park. As such, it's facing a severe market restriction. What measures has the government taken to ensure that residents within national parks are not faced with a significant tax increase?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will continue to apply the capping formula, which is so important, because we want to be assured that every Albertan doesn't face a jolt. We don't like surprises and we don't like jolts when it comes to property taxes in high-growth areas such as the beautiful area in Jasper.

Now, I would like to also say that based on a four-year average, the residential assessment, the increase is minimized to about 4.2 per cent, and this will further offset because there has been new development in the Jasper area. But because Jasper is a beautiful place to live, people are moving there. I do know that the Minister of Learning has in his purview a special education rate which, if he wishes, he could apply to the particular municipality that the hon. member is talking about.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. The town of Banff receives the benefit of a special tax rate. Would the minister be prepared to support the same special tax rate for all mountain communities, even Jasper?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has done a wonderful job in representing his constituents and came to me in the last couple of days and asked me this exact question. He won me over. Because of the federal restriction on development, because of the federal restrictions on residency, he did convince me. Under the School Act I do have the authority to make special tax rates, and we will be doing that in Jasper.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Correctional Services

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report on corrections issued yesterday recommended that Alberta continue to monitor the privately run prison in Ontario set up by that province's former Tory government. The report stated that "the Government of Ontario is to be commended for embarking upon this innovative initiative." The report also recommended that five protective vests be issued to each adult corrections facility. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Given that a seven-year comparison between public and private corrections facilities in California has shown that escape rates are 21 times higher, why is the Solicitor General keeping this issue alive by continuing to monitor it?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's always nice to keep an eye on what's happening across this country, and, you know, I think that's what's nice about Alberta. We look at what's successful, what isn't successful. We continue to watch and learn from what other people are doing across this country.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Like electricity, I guess.

Given the inmate deaths and riots at Penetanguishene, why is the Solicitor General holding this up as a model for Alberta?

Mrs. Forsyth: Again, Mr. Speaker, it's important to watch what's happening across this country, and it's important to watch what's happening in the United States. No one has said that we're moving ahead to privatize our prisons. I think what the hon. members for Red Deer-North and Edmonton-Castle Downs and Lac La Biche-St. Paul said is: don't close the door on the issue; just continue to monitor it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Solicitor General: given that only five protective vests will be given to each adult correctional facility in Alberta, does the Solicitor General expect corrections officers under attack to stand in line and wait their turn for a vest?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, we got them their five protective vests. What the member is not seeing is that also protective vests are available for the emergency response team. I wish she would get her facts straight.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Police Services

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The budget announced last week contained significant funding increases for policing, but it also noted that only municipalities that pay for policing will receive provincial fine revenue. I know that some smaller municipalities have come to depend on this revenue to balance their books, so my questions today are for the Solicitor General. Can the minister clarify this issue of who will receive the fine revenue and who will not?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member asks a very good question. In the recent budget we introduced $58 million in new funding for policing, 16 and a half million dollars of which was transferred from the Minister of Municipal Affairs, which was greatly appreciated, from unconditional to a conditional grant. We also introduced a per capita grant formula of $16. The other thing that I think is important is that we provided funding for 20 towns with a population of 5,000 and under.

One of the things that was discussed when we were looking at a police funding model with the AUMA and the AAMD and C, when we were talking about how to introduce some type of funding, was the fact that the fine revenue of communities that do not pay for their policing should come back to the province, and that will then go back into policing. It's one of the things that we're looking at; it's one of the things we're considering. Right now, though, Mr. Speaker, it's status quo.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister mentioned special constables. Given that just this morning the AAMD and C passed a resolution urging the government to enhance the powers of special constables to give them a larger role in policing, can the minister tell the House if that is being considered?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member that has asked the question is the same member that brought a motion forward that passed in this House in regard to special constables. We do employ special constables across this province, and the special constables that work in this province do a wonderful job. At this time we're not looking at enhancing their powers, but we sure are looking at making sure that all the municipalities will be receiving a standards manual that will let everyone know the responsibility of the special constables in this province. I think it's clear to understand – and I've said this in the Legislature before – that the special constables are a complement, but they are not police officers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

High School Completion Rate

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to Alberta Learning's own numbers, the three-year high school completion rate has remained at 65 per cent from the 1999-2000 school year to the present. More incredibly, Alberta Learning considers this an appropriate target to be met. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. What has the minister done to ensure that the other 35 per cent of Alberta high school students stay in school and graduate within three years?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, one of the very important elements of the learning system, obviously, is graduating from high school. This has been one of the issues that we have looked at extensively, and we have numerous programs that are aimed at keeping kids in school.

One of the anomalies is the three-year versus five-year graduation rate. Yes, the three-year rate is around 65 per cent, which is low. The five-year rate is significantly higher at very close to 74, 75 per cent. We really feel that the five-year rate is more accurate because there are students who take four years in high school, some who take five years in high school. The other situation is that when you actually extend it out to 10 years, I believe – and I stand to be corrected on this – we're up around 90, 91 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, 100 per cent is the number of students that should be graduating from high school. I do not necessarily say three years. It would be nice to be three years. Five years is probably realistic, and that's what we're setting our sights towards. The Learning Commission themselves said 90 per cent.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister: what are those specific changes that have been made to try to encourage students to complete the program within three years?

Dr. Oberg: I can give you some, Mr. Speaker. One of the issues when it comes to high school graduation is in our aboriginal communities. We have launched our First Nations, Métis, and Inuit education policy, which has had very good success. We have some jurisdictions now in Northland school division where you're actually seeing students graduate, which is a first in some of these particular areas.

We have also done other significant things such as the RAP program, which encourages students to take an apprenticeship program in school. We have the aboriginal apprenticeship program, which starts apprenticeship as low as grade 8. All of these things plus many, many more are aimed at getting the students, allowing the students to graduate. We have put a lot of effort and time into putting our education system on computers so that there are different ways for the students to learn.

So, Mr. Speaker, the quick answer to this question is that almost everything we do in Alberta Learning is aimed at getting students to graduate.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why has the ministry set the bar so low with respect to graduation?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, each and every year I have a very heated discussion with my department about that exact issue. For once I will agree entirely with the hon. member that the bar should be set at a hundred per cent, recognizing that that's what we should always aim for.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

Rail Link to Fort McMurray

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's hobby railroad to Fort McMurray isn't even mentioned in the government's 20-year plan or the three-year infrastructure plan released with last week's budget. It's a new record. This time the government took less than two weeks to break its 20-year plan and even less time to blow its three-year infrastructure plan, not to mention the budget, all so that the Premier can play engineer. Without so much as a news release the government is committed to spending $1.25 million on a feasibility study on this railroad. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Would the minister stand up and tell the House why such a big project is not even mentioned in the government's 20-year plan or the three-year infrastructure plan?

Mr. Norris: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, if you stick around long enough, you'll hear intelligence from any source, so thank you for that.

The answer to the question that the hon. member has posed is a very simple one. The 20-year strategic plan as well as the value-added plan are very wide-reaching umbrella policies, Mr. Speaker, and they allow us as a forward-thinking government to always insert new ideas when they become available, because when you're planning a 20-year cycle, you don't always have all the opportunities in front of you. Clearly, this opportunity has come in front of us, and as a forward-thinking government it fits in not only under the 20-year strategic plan, not only under the economic development plan, not only under the hon. minister of agriculture's rural development plan but also the value-added strategy. So we would be remiss in our duty as a government if we didn't look at this opportunity. I would suggest to the hon. member that it fits into all those plans very, very well.

Mr. Mason: It's just not in them, Mr. Speaker.

This next question is to the Minister of Finance. Can she tell the House why the $1.25 million for the feasibility study is not included in this budget, which she just presented recently?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. Minister of Economic Development's estimates are up for debate, and those are questions that should be asked at that time. This is contained within his budget.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that nonanswer.

Mr. Speaker, can the Deputy Premier shed any light on who is investing in the Athabasca Oil Sands Transportation company and what their connections to the Conservative Party might be?

The Speaker: There are two questions there.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, neither one of them very good to come to the government.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier has made it very clear in this House that this is an opportunity perhaps. It may be – it may be – the best way to move goods and services to the Fort McMurray area, home of the greatest investment opportunities in this province. It may be an opportunity to move goods and services from that very rich economic region. It may be. But it's actually the private investors' business as to whether they are going to invest, and I would ask the hon. member to draw on his wide net of acquaintances and friends in that area and ask them that question. That is more appropriately directed at them.

2:30

At this point, Mr. Speaker, as has been very clearly laid out in this House, the government is involved to this extent: a portion of a feasibility study to see whether, in fact, this would be a good investment for the purposes of moving goods and services to and from the richest economic region in this province.

The Speaker: Hon. minister, with all respect I want to give another member an opportunity this afternoon.

The hon. Member for Redwater.

Avian Influenza

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you might know, I have quite a number of poultry producers in my area, and many of my constituents are getting somewhat nervous about the avian influenza affecting poultry flocks in British Columbia. They are worried about this virus spreading to Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Could the minister explain what policies are in place to protect our poultry industry?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, avian flu has been detected and identified by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency in a number of flocks in British Columbia in the Fraser Valley region, and the CFIA has moved very swiftly to isolate those flocks, remove the birds, and do the cleanup.

Mr. Speaker, probably the most important part of avoiding this is awareness, knowledge, and good biosecurity measures. The Alberta chicken producers, or feather industry, have very, very good biosecurity measures. Just to give an example of what that might be, a farmyard would quite likely be divided into zones, and there would be criteria as to where people can go when they come to that operation, where they cannot go, which is probably more important, the proper clothing that must be worn and removed when going in and out of a barn. Many things like that are a part of the biosecurity.

Mr. Speaker, our chief veterinarian in the province of Alberta, immediately upon hearing of the avian flu in Asia, met with our industry to ensure that our biosecurity measures in this province were as high as they could be and that they would be adhered to.

Mr. Broda: My first supplemental, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that some countries have now closed their borders to Canadian chickens, what is the potential economic impact on Alberta poultry producers?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate that it appears that some nations may not be basing their decisions on science. However, I would inform the hon. member and all members of the House that Alberta actually exports only about 5 per cent of the chicken produced here, a little over $2 million in trade. All trade is important, but I'm pleased that most of this wonderful product that's grown here is used domestically.

We don't want to lose any export markets. We want to continue to have all of these decisions based on sound science, and we'll continue to lobby for that.

Mr. Broda: My final question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Are Albertans at risk of contracting avian flu?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, at this time avian flu poses no health risk to Albertans. The province does participate in a strong world-wide surveillance program for influenza including avian flu. There has been heightened surveillance in this province because of the recently confirmed case in a poultry farm worker from British Columbia.

I can explain, however, Mr. Speaker, that there's no evidence of human to human transmission of this disease. It appears that all confirmed human cases have developed after direct contact with infected poultry.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we are heightened in our surveillance of this, but at this time there appears to be no threat to human health in this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a few seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate in Recognitions today, but prior to that might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two guests that are seated in the members' gallery, Reeve Ray Prins and his lovely wife, Pauline. Ray, of course, is here for the AAMD and C convention. Reeve Prins provides exceptionally good governance to the ratepayers of Lacombe county. I would ask that Ray and Pauline stand and please receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, one of the groups I always enjoy visiting with in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre is the Lions Village Railtown, and this afternoon I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly six of the seniors from that residence along with their leader. Seated in the public gallery, we have Jean Leask and Mel Leask, Norah Warr, Louise Claire, Pat Bettcher, Mary Wolhand, and they're accompanied today by Michelle Kraeling. This group has a very lively current-issue debate during the morning coffee meetings that they hold every week, and it's a great honour for me to join them occasionally. They've all risen. Please welcome them.

Picture Butte Sugar Kings

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 20, 2004, the Picture Butte Sugar Kings won the provincial 2A basketball championship in Lethbridge, defeating Immanuel Christian Eagles. This is the fourth consecutive provincial high school final that the Picture Butte Sugar Kings have participated in, winning three silver medals and this year the gold.

I'm pleased, Mr. Speaker, to recognize head coach Kevin Reiter, assisted by his coaches Arnie Bergen Henengouwen and Mr. Ted Johnson, and of course the Sugar King team members: A.J. Bergen Henengouwen, Mike Caruso, Richard Doerksen, Eli Fowler, Marc Leclair, Rory McLeod, David Murray, Tyler Russell, Cody Schooten, and Shawn Vander Heyden. Coach Reiter has been coaching junior and senior high school basketball for 21 years and is very dedicated to the sport and to all his athletes.

I wish to extend congratulations to the 2A provincial boys basketball champions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Advanced Coronary Treatment Foundation High School CPR Program

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in the Assembly to recognize an important program introduced in my constituency. The Advanced Coronary Treatment Foundation high school CPR program has made a positive impact in Alberta communities. In the St. Paul education regional division over 300 students from 10 high schools will be trained in CPR. This program has been implemented in the communities of Ashmont, Mallaig, Two Hills, St. Paul, Mymam, Heinsburg, and Elk Point.

Students are taught the early warning signs of heart attacks and strokes as well as how to react to these indicators. Practical skills such as basic CPR and the Heimlich manoeuvre are taught through the training.

The ACT Foundation is a national nonprofit association that helps high schools across Canada to implement a core curriculum CPR program for youth. The foundation operates in partnership with health professionals, service clubs, government, and the community to establish this critical program. I would like to commend the ACT Foundation and its partners.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Trinity Lodge Retirement Residence

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Saturday, March 27, I was invited to attend as chair of the Seniors Advisory Council the grand reopening of the Trinity Lodge retirement residence, home to 185 seniors and located in the Premier's constituency of Calgary-Elbow. Trinity has just completed a major renovation, and the residents and the community are very proud of the results.

What a wonderful event it was. The festivities included a kids' corner, live jazz and vocal bands in the dining room, a ribbon cutting, dancing, a ladies vocal group in the card lounge, guided tours, refreshments, and, very importantly, meeting the residents.

The Premier was of course the most honoured guest, with Alderman Barry Erskine, ward 11, and me. As the Premier noted, Trinity Lodge has provided quality, independent housing for seniors since 1975, and it just keeps reinventing itself to better meet the needs of today's seniors.

Congratulations, Trinity Lodge, on your beautiful new home, truly a warm, friendly place.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Rotary Club of Edmonton

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me today to rise and recognize the Rotary Club of Edmonton on its dedication and commitment to the betterment of the city and our communities. Further, I would like to acknowledge the hard work of two individuals, Harry Buddle and Daryl Wilson, of the downtown club.

Yesterday morning they organized a very successful breakfast fundraiser that generated more than $30,000 to support two Rotary centennial projects: the Bissell Centre, which provides an invaluable range of services to low-income Edmontonians, and the Lurana Shelter, which is a temporary sanctuary for abused women and families. The breakfast fundraiser was attended by 500 distinguished business and community leaders from the Edmonton area. In the audience were four government ministers, including the hon. Justice minister, the Economic Development minister, Community Development, and Transportation, as well as 18 of my colleagues from the Legislature.

Over the years the Rotary Club of Edmonton has supported and funded a number of projects in our city and province and worldwide. Edmonton Rotarians are part of a global family of community and business leaders who are committed to making the world a better place for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Emergency Responders

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize the police officers, firefighters, paramedics, nurses, doctors, and correctional officers who are exposed to bodily fluids and blood in the course of their duties. The men and women working in these professions place their health and well-being on the line to protect and save our lives.

Unfortunately, a growing number of at-risk suspects demonstrate irresponsible behaviour by infecting others with little or no regard for the horrible emotional and physical harm inflicted on the victims and their families or their friends. Based on conversations and correspondence with police services, firefighters, and union locals across Alberta, an increasing number of professionals are being bitten, scratched, and spat upon by people who use that as a threat or a potentially fatal weapon aiming at disease.

Mr. Speaker, for thousands of Albertans who work in professions where it is their duty to stand in harm's way, forcing a blood sample from people who infect emergency workers is a necessary step to improve the well-being of people who work in increasingly dangerous conditions. It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that it is imperative to continue the process of discussion on Bill 204.

Thank you.

Edmonton's Food Bank

Mr. MacDonald: I rise today to congratulate Edmonton's Food Bank on its new home, where I know staff and volunteers will continue to help even more people who have fallen on hard times.

The Food Bank's mission is to be stewards in the collection of surplus and donated food for effective and free distribution to people in need. Thanks to the generosity of Edmontonians the Food Bank has been successful in its mission and fed almost 154,000 hungry people last year.

But the Food Bank can never rest and always needs to collect and distribute more donations. Edmonton's Food Bank participates in 300 special events during the Christmas season alone, and its mascot, Fill-up, has become a familiar sight all over the city.

Donations to the Food Bank are accepted at local grocery stores and fire halls throughout the year and now at the Food Bank's new location at 11508 - 120th Street. We should all make a donation of money or a nonperishable food item in honour of its grand opening.

I wish the Food Bank well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Seniors United Now

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning I attended the annual general meeting of Seniors United Now, or SUN. SUN believes that it is only by banding together that the government will pay attention to the concerns of Alberta's seniors. The group believes that seniors can only persuade the government to restore benefits taken from them over the last 11 years by demonstrating that a large number of Alberta's seniors are prepared to vote for the party that will restore their benefits.

I invited the 400 or so seniors at this morning's AGM to join other seniors and sit in the Legislature gallery during the May 6 Seniors ministry budget debate, showing this government that seniors are not satisfied with what they received in the 2004-2005 budget. The government can't claim that it hasn't heard about seniors suffering as a result of its decisions, and still it hasn't restored benefits, but there wasn't any relief for seniors in the budget released this week.

The SUN group remains determined, and its fact sheet states and I quote: the general opinion is that the real surplus is even greater than was announced on March 24. Once again, the government, like any other bully, keeps hitting those who do not fight back. Keep on going, SUN.

Thanks very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, one additional recognition today, but a little test to go with it. If you take the number 11 and you multiply it by an even number, you will determine the year in which on this day the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, the Minister of Infrastructure, was born. So happy birthday to him.

Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition signed by 866 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "support Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act, which will provide more security and peace of mind for people working in occupations who have a higher risk of exchanging bodily fluids with a potential carrier of a blood borne disease."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present this petition on behalf of my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Highlands. The petition is signed by 121 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta

1. To immediately withdraw the draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and revise it so as to disallow any further commercial or residential development of the Kananaskis Valley;
2. To redesignate the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and adjacent unprotected public lands as a Provincial Park, with those parts currently undeveloped designated as Wildland Provincial Park;
3. To maintain Kananaskis Country in a natural state that provides high quality wildlife habitat and nature-based recreational opportunities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Bill 27
Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 27, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2004.

As part of Alberta's business tax reduction strategy this bill amends the existing act to reduce both the general corporate rate and the small business rate by 1 per cent each: the general rate from 12 and a half per cent to 11 and a half per cent and the small business rate from 4 per cent to 3 per cent. With these changes the Alberta corporate income tax will be the second lowest among the provinces. The small business rate will be the lowest in Canada, tied with New Brunswick. The proposed amendments also reflect the federal resource taxation legislation administrative changes.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, March 23, under Introduction of Bills Bill 25 and Bill 26 were introduced in the Legislature for first reading. The bills as introduced were tabled as being sponsored by the Minister of Learning. In fact, Bill 25 was supposed to have been tabled as having been sponsored by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor and Bill 26, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

I understand that the Minister of Learning has contacted members of the opposition and achieved agreement that we could ask for unanimous consent to have the sponsorship of the bills corrected for the record of the House. So I'd ask that you ask the House for unanimous consent to do so.

The Speaker: I started attending this Assembly in 1974, and never have I ever heard of such a request coming forward. But under unanimous consent the Assembly can do just about anything.

I would take it, then, that there is also a requirement that the bills be reprinted with the new names, as well. Who would bear the cost for that, hon. Government House Leader?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker, they're small bills, and the cost is not excessive.

The Speaker: So in addition to changing the names to these two hon. members, there's a request that the bills be reprinted and not be reintroduced?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Well, there is, then, a request that two bills, namely Bill 25 and Bill 26, be reprinted, Bill 25 with the name of the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor placed on it and Bill 26 with the name of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark placed on it. Unanimous consent is being requested.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The bill in question, Bill 26, would also be moved onto the government Order Paper; is this correct? It being now under the name of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the request would be that Bill 26 be moved onto the government Order Paper?

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was anticipating asking exactly that, that it then be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: 2:50 Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to table the requisite number of copies of a resolution passed this morning by the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties asking to enhance and increase the duties of special constables.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table my answer to Written Question 8, as asked by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to table a statement regarding Youth Science Month in Canada and with it my congratulations to approximately 500,000 students in Alberta and across Canada who are participating in local and regional science and technology fairs this month. I had the opportunity to participate in the central Alberta regional fair as a judge this past weekend, and I was impressed by their depth of knowledge and their commitment to their projects. I ask all members to join me in congratulating these bright young minds.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is a letter that I received on March 23, 2004, from the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner in regard to Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

The second tabling I have is a series of documents indicating that the price of steel in this country is going down, not up as previously reported on two occasions in this Assembly.

The third document I have is one from February 27, 2004. It's from Alberta Energy, electricity division. The original is signed by the executive director, Kellan Fluckiger, and it is in regard to a question I asked earlier in the Assembly about open competition by 2010 for electricity suppliers and customers.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table two documents today. The first is a news release issued by the Edmonton public school board on March 30, 2004 – that is, yesterday – expressing the board's disappointment and frustration at receiving no new funding for infrastructure.

The second document is the capital plan highlights issued by the Edmonton public school board for a three-year period beginning in 2003-2004. This document outlines the urgent need for the construction of new schools and the modernization of existing facilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tablings to the Clerk

The Clerk: I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar, Minister of Health and Wellness: Alberta Cancer Board annual report 2002-2003; Alberta Cancer Board financial statements 2002-2003; and pursuant to the Health Facilities Review Committee Act, the Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee annual report 2002-2003.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Government Services

The Chair: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this?

Mr. Coutts: Well, before we ask for the question, I'd like to make a few comments, Mr. Chairman. I wish you all a great afternoon and thank you for the opportunity to speak to Government Services estimates for 2004-2005.

With me today and seated in the members' gallery – and I'm going to ask them to wave as I introduce them – are the people that I had the pleasure and the honour of working with to put these estimates together as well as our business plan. They work diligently on behalf of Albertans and the government of the province of Alberta and work very, very hard to provide the services that we do within the department.

They are Fay Orr, deputy minister of the department; Roger Jackson, former deputy minister and Alberta's first Utilities Consumer Advocate. We have with us also Dave Rehill, deputy minister and CEO of Alberta Corporate Service Centre, and with Mr. Rehill today we have Les Speakman, the executive director of the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. Laurie Beveridge is our assistant deputy minister of consumer services and land titles. As well, we have Wilma Haas, who's the managing director of Service Alberta and Alberta Registries. Sue Bohachuk is sitting right beside her, and Sue is our senior financial officer. Then we have a newcomer to our department, my communications director, Ryan Cromb, who has just joined us. We welcome them all here today.

Today, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to provide a brief overview of our business and our financial plan, which is based on our continued commitment to service excellence and support of our two major core businesses. First, we provide Albertans with a full range of licensing, registry, and consumer protection services. Our second mandate is to lead service improvement initiatives on behalf of the government of Alberta.

In support of these two core businesses we have prioritized our programs and services to focus our resources on six major goals. Our first goal and highest priority is "efficient licensing and registration services." We measure our success by ensuring that clients are satisfied with the accessibility, accuracy, and security of our services. We also strive to keep our fees affordable and are confident that all our services remain competitively priced compared to other jurisdictions.

Ongoing growth in the Alberta economy means that our registry system now supports over 35 million transactions per year. For land title registrations, in particular, there has been a 25 per cent increase over the past three years in the number of transactions. In spite of the extra efforts of staff and significant overtime, the growing demand for services in this area resulted in fairly lengthy turnaround times this last summer. Extra funding has been included in our budget to hire 16 land titles examiners and fund the interim overtime costs until the new staff can be fully trained. It also addresses increases in our postage, printing, and imaging costs that result from these higher transaction volumes.

We anticipate that further improvements in our service delivery for land titles and our other registries will occur as we progress with our registries renewal initiative. Our registry system infrastructure will also play an important role in Alberta's automobile insurance reform. Enhanced security and identity protection remains a top priority, and we have several initiatives planned, such as rolling out within the next several months the use of facial recognition on our driver's licence to prevent and detect fraud. In total our registry and licensing services account for $63.3 million worth of our resources but generate revenue in excess of $325 million.

Our second goal is "informed consumers and businesses, and a high standard of marketplace conduct." A major initiative related to this goal is the Residential Tenancies Act. This legislation provided a framework for nearly 1 million Albertans who rent their accommodation. We have amended it to ensure that it remains relevant to today's environment and continue to consult with the Alberta residential tenancies advisory committee on related regulations. We are also looking at establishing a voluntary alternative dispute resolution process to resolve tenancy issues.

One of the cornerstones of our consumer legislation is the Fair Trading Act. We plan to introduce updates in the fall of 2004 to ensure that it keeps pace with changes in Alberta's marketplace. On other fronts we will continue with our award-winning national and international consumer protection initiatives and will focus on the most serious marketplace violations.

Another key protection initiative is preventing vehicle theft, and through our co-ordination of the Alberta vehicle theft working committee we've developed comprehensive recommendations for dealing with this issue. We allocate about $9.3 million of our resources to protecting and educating consumers, and we measure our success based on client satisfaction.

Under goal 3 consumer protection is further enhanced through the establishment of Alberta's first Utilities Consumer Advocate. This new program will protect the interests of Alberta's 1 million residential, farm, and small commercial consumers in the province in our restructured retail utilities marketplace. The advocate will undertake a number of activities, such as, firstly, acting as a central point of contact to provide Albertans with information and assistance; secondly, ensuring utility companies address consumer questions and concerns in a timely and fair manner; thirdly and probably as important as anything is representing Albertans' interests at the Energy and Utilities Board hearings and other regulatory proceedings.

The advocate will also provide advice on industry and government policies and practices as appropriate. This program is fully funded by electricity and natural gas consumers through the electricity Balancing Pool and natural gas distributors respectively at an estimated cost of $4.4 million per year. If any of these funds are not required for this program, they will be returned.

Our fourth goal relates to the Service Alberta initiative, where we are striving to increase Albertans' awareness and satisfaction with access to all government of Alberta services through the Internet, through telephone, mail, fax, and over-the-counter service. Progress is continuing on an incremental basis and is dependent upon other ministries' contributions.

As of early February only 53 per cent of Albertans were aware of the toll-free number and the web site, so a key focus will be promoting awareness of Service Alberta and how it can help them. We will also continue to enhance the web site, promote integration of the Alberta government contact centres, and monitor satisfaction with over-the-counter services. The Service Alberta initiative amounts to approximately $1 million worth of our resources.

Our fifth goal is to provide "effective management of, and access to information, and protection of privacy." A key initiative will be to support the implementation and harmonization of new privacy legislation for the private sector. While Alberta's act is already harmonized with B.C.'s legislation, we are now working towards greater alignment and co-operation with other provinces and territories.

Another key responsibility is to promote effective ways of managing the government's information and records. This program not only provides advice on standards and best practices but also offers training and encourages co-ordination between ministries and the Alberta Corporate Service Centre and the Provincial Archives. Nearly $2.7 million of our resources are allocated to these services.

Another major program under goal 6 of our ministry is the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. It reflects this government's commitment to promoting efficiencies and continuous improvements. ACSC has spent the last three years consolidating operations, aligning activities and resources, and defining service delivery costs to prepare for major directional changes. Recently a new governance structure was implemented to strengthen ACSC's accountability and to support new directions in service delivery. Next steps include optimizing service delivery through pursuing best practices that position us to further streamline processes.

As well, we are developing a revised approach to costing and pricing services that reflects innovative practices used in other world-class shared-service organizations. Client satisfaction with this revised pricing and cost model will be a primary indicator for measuring ACSC's overall success this year. The centre operates mainly on a dedicated-revenue basis with $142 million of the overall $154 million budget recovered through service agreements with other ministries and agencies. The remaining expenditures are for central services such as supply management, telecommunications, and records management.

In closing, our ministry has a major impact on the lives of Albertans, and we take pride in delivering high-quality services in the most effective way possible.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank you very much for this opportunity to present our priorities, and I look forward to addressing any questions that any of the members opposite may have. If we should happen to miss any, we will go through Hansard and make sure that answers are received to those inquiries in writing.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate on the estimates of Government Services this afternoon. Certainly, one looks at that budget, and you could sum it up like one of those old Clint Eastwood movies, The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly. Certainly, there is work to be done in this department, but there are some good things being accomplished there. That's for certain.

One of those that I would like to note at this time is the work that the department has done in the recent past, going back to last summer, on some of these shady renovators that are going around the province. The department has put out some very informative information that consumers, householders can use to protect their money and, in some cases, their property from unsavoury and unqualified tradespeople acting as qualified home renovators. We know – one only has to look at the ads that are on television from various Canadian and multinational hardware chains – that this is a huge market.

I think and the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar also think that the Ministry of Government Services has done some very good things. I would like to see more information made available to consumers by the department in regard to this matter. Consumers appreciate it, and they appreciate the hard work of the department on this issue. But that information should be available to all consumers, and it should be made available also to the home renovation industry. I don't know if they have a trade association or not, but maybe they should. I don't want to be accused by members from the opposite side of encouraging them to overregulate, but I don't think there's much of a chance of that happening.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder what the plans are to make the web site of the department more consumer friendly. I'm wondering if at some time the minister has the view that consumers would look to his department not only for leadership but for information, information that would be readily available at their fingertips. Consumers are sort of the Rodney Dangerfield of Albertans; they don't get any respect.

One only has to look at our government web site and look at the previous – and this was when the Conservatives were in power in Ontario. I don't think they were defeated because of lack of attention to consumer-related issues. Maybe they were. But, certainly, you look at the government web sites from various respective departments in Ontario, and you will see where there is an emphasis put on consumer information and consumer protection. I would like to see the same sort of right-wing zeal focused on increasing consumer information and protection in this province. Maybe this is the ministry and the Minister of Government Services that could do it.

It would be a one-stop shop for consumers looking for information on insurance. Unfortunately, it looks from today that by 2010 we're going to have choice in electricity and I can only assume in natural gas as well whether we like it or not; what's good for the government is going to be good for the consumers in this case.

This document that we talked about in question period – certainly it looks like there's an anticipation of trouble, Mr. Chairman, by the government. We've seen this consumer czar, this Utilities Consumer Advocate. Well, the budget is going from $2.6 million when it started to – I believe we're up to $4 million and a bit. Yes, $4.3 million for this year. Then even after we get all the furniture and everything paid for in the office and the moving in and location expenses, it's going to go up in two years to $4.8 million.

So I can only assume that the hon. Minister of Government Services already knows something that the Minister of Energy does not or is unwilling to recognize, and that's the fact that there's going to be more trouble, lots more trouble with energy deregulation for natural gas and electricity. I can only assume that by looking at the increases in the budget.

From the time this office started till it's two years old, it's going to need an additional $2 million. What's that $2 million going to be used for? How many full-time employees are going to be in that department? How is the office being set up? Everything from furniture to electronic equipment: who's paying for that? Where's it coming from, and what's it going to cost?

Now, while we're on the subject of the utilities czar, it is amazing that this office would come into existence through a ministerial order that was one of the hardest pieces of detective work this hon. member ever attempted in his time in this Assembly, Mr. Chairman. I was asked even by reporters for this ministerial order, and I had to admit at first that I hadn't even heard of it. Then I heard that at a standing policy committee this issue was discussed, and I was lucky to get that information because I wasn't invited to that standing policy committee. I, unfortunately, wasn't invited, but hopefully in the future a guy may be invited. But I did get wind of this, and I did research through the EUB, and I was in my view lucky to have discovered the rules surrounding this Utilities Consumer Advocate.

No one is saying that the Utilities Consumer Advocate shouldn't exist. In fact, if you look at various government departments and you look at political parties in this province – the Progressive Conservative Party had a notion at one of their policy conventions that we have a Utilities Consumer Advocate. Certainly, we brought the issue up as Official Opposition. The Navigant report talked about this.

Various other studies done on electricity talked about having consumer education. Not propaganda but education. If you're going to force them to make this choice, well, make sure that consumers have the information.

Now, I don't know where the hon. minister in his opening remarks if I heard him correctly – there's a lot of buzz in here, and I may not have heard him correctly. According to public documents that are available from the EUB, and I'm quoting here, Mr. Chairman: the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate will promote understanding of the restructured electricity and gas markets and ensure that Albertans' concerns are heard and effectively addressed; the advocate's office will listen to and analyze consumers' concerns in order to provide advice and guidance to stakeholders, including government, the Energy and Utilities Board and other regulatory agencies, and utility companies of utility consumer protection policies and practices.

I don't see "enforce" in here. I don't know how consumers are going to be protected. How are they going to be protected if we're just going to promote understanding and we're going to listen to and analyze consumers' concerns? We're going to listen and analyze and promote. It feels good; it sounds good. But, I mean, where are the teeth? Certainly, hon. members on this side of the Assembly would like an answer to that.

I hope the Government Services minister and the department are not burdened or saddled with an outfit that is going to turn out to be quite ineffective. They're not ineffective at getting the budget and this whole idea of having money being paid. Now, where's this ministerial order? Right here. ATCO Gas north and ATCO Gas south and AltaGas Utilities have to come up with half a million dollars to pay the costs of the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, and next year I suppose they're going to have to come up with a bit more to pay for the increase in the utilities office.

Mr. Chairman, that gets me to my next question in regard to this. What does the department anticipate the problems will be? Will they be all on the electricity side, or will they all be on the natural gas side? When we understand that 20 per cent of the budget is coming from the gas side and 80 per cent is coming from the Balancing Pool, the electricity side, it is unusual. I would assume, I think quite correctly, that the minister knows that 20 per cent of the problems are with natural gas; 80 per cent are with electricity. With the expansion of the budget is that going to continue, or will there be more electricity concerns and less natural gas concerns?

Now, in the performance measures here, item 3, we're talking about "effective advocacy of Albertans' interests in the restructured utilities market." This has got to be one of the toughest jobs that one could give an hon. minister. This hon. minister has been doing his very best in this department with the privatization of the registries and with our licensing issues. There's no doubt that he's been working hard. But, Mr. Chairman, I can't understand why they would saddle this department with this and why it wouldn't be tied directly to the Minister of Energy. You know, that department seems to be stubbornly resisting all attempts and all campaigns to unplug electricity deregulation and look at energy deregulation and how it has affected the consumers of this province.

We're looking here at goal 3, and this is a performance measure. It's new. "Percentage of customers 'satisfied overall' with services." Well, we're looking at a target of 60 per cent, and in two years if we spend additional money, it's going to go up to 80 per cent. So I hope that we're not being told that money is going to buy happiness here. I don't think that's going to happen.

Now, again, this is another performance measure, a new one: "Percentage of Albertans aware of the role/services provided by the Utilities Consumer Advocate." Fifty per cent, half of us, are going to be aware of this. I see a lot of information in my bill these days, and I wonder what could be provided in that bill to help the minister achieve his target of 90 per cent of citizens being aware of the role or service provided by the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

Is there another flyer going to go out? I don't know what we could put on that. I wouldn't want the department to come up with a marketing ad with sort of a watchdog there with a blindfold on or a big dog with his paws over his ears lying down pretending not to hear, not to pay attention. I wouldn't want that to be the logo of the department.

Now, the third performance measure here, Mr. Chairman: "Percentage of interveners expressing satisfaction with the cooperative protocol utilized by the Utilities Consumer Advocate." Co-operative protocol. This gets back to my earlier questions as to how all this will work. In the interests of the consumers we're going to have this co-operative protocol.

This is like voluntary compliance. Certainly, under the determined leadership of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment we've forgotten about voluntary compliance as far as workplace safety goes. We recognize that it doesn't work. The minister has taken a suggestion from this side of the House and has decided to vigorously enforce the law and take allegations through the court systems if necessary. I would commend him for that, and I would commend him for admitting that voluntary compliance doesn't work. That's the co-operative protocol. It's just another fancy way of saying "voluntary compliance."

I can't see how we're going to go with this from a satisfaction rate of 60 per cent this year to 80 per cent. I don't understand how this is going to work. I have a lot of confidence in the minister and a lot of confidence in the staff, but on this issue I have grave reservations.

I don't think this is what the Navigant report had in mind when they suggested a Utilities Consumer Advocate or the form of a Utilities Consumer Advocate. I know the Conservative Party didn't. The Progressive Conservative Party, I should say. There are a lot of Conservative parties around these days, so I'd better make that correction.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to ask the minister while we're talking about consumers – I think the Ministry of Government Services would be an ideal location for a whistle-blowers' office. Maybe we could connect it to the Ombudsman. Now, I may be stepping out of line here and assuming that this government is going to pass whistle-blower legislation and have good, strong whistle-blower legislation so that we can protect the taxpayers from any and all forms of abuse as may occur.

Now, on this web site that the ministry could develop for consumers, if consumers saw something that they didn't feel was right with their government, if they saw something at a registry office, for instance, well, the web site could inform them of how they could contact the Ombudsman and have an impartial office check out the indiscretions or the allegations and see what's going on. Perhaps I'm getting ahead of myself, but certainly we would on this side of the House like to see that implemented by this department.

When we look at this department, the issue of identity theft comes up time and time again. Over the weekend I was reading . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] Oh, I'll have to cede the floor to another colleague, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. If the House would allow me to just respond to a few of the questions that have been brought forward by the hon. member opposite, just to kind of pick up where he left off in terms of what's in the future for consumer protection and how we get the information out to people. He kind of started off that way and ended up that way. We in the department have the same vision. We see a one-stop shop for information for Albertans to access, and it's called Service Alberta. We've expanded on that program over the last three years to the point now that Albertans are starting to use it. However, we could see some more use of that with a little bit more awareness out there.

Our Service Alberta goal is to make it easier and more accessible for Albertans to not only see government of Alberta programs but also to just get plain, good, solid information about what their rights are, information about where to go to get specifics on definite programs, et cetera.

3:30

Our Service Alberta web site is being expanded almost weekly to include whatever provisions Albertans would like to see on it and whatever we can accommodate. That web site is accessible at servicealberta@www.gov.ab.ca, and we encourage Albertans to go in there and provide us also with some feedback as to how we can improve it to make sure that their service needs are wanted and needed, and if it makes sense, we include it.

As a matter of fact, we have taken Service Alberta over the last six months – we had a number of access points in it, and we found out that we didn't need them all. We can consolidate, and we can bundle, and we can get information to people faster by doing that and provide them with just as much information, as a matter of fact more information. We see that as a work in progress, and we will continue to do that.

The hon. member is absolutely correct – and I appreciate his comments – in terms of some of the tradespeople that are out there doing some shoddy work and ripping people off. These are unscrupulous people. We recognize that in the department of consumer protection, and we work very, very closely – it is unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, that seniors seem to be the most vulnerable here, with the many tipsheets we put out or mail out. We look to the Department of Seniors to help us get some of that information out to seniors, and we're thankful for their participation. It's a cross-ministry initiative that we think is working pretty well, but there are always some that get through the cracks in trying to provide people with the information so that they're not taken advantage of.

The first thing that people need to know is that the first thing they should be asking for is a licence from these fellows that come to their door and make promises. The other thing that they should look for is a contract to make sure that those promises are kept for any building that they want to do or any fixing up of someone's home. Also, in those contracts people should be looking for things like cancellation provisions in case the contractor does not do the job that they say they were going to do so that a person can get out of a contract.

But, more importantly, I think the biggest thing today is that we don't like to see seniors cheated out of any of their money, and down payments are one of those things that an unscrupulous entrepreneur would demand without doing any work and before actually taking on and doing the job. Nobody should give out any cash before any work is done.

Those are some of the things that we put in the tipsheets.

The hon. member asked about the opportunity for using the Internet for those tipsheets. All of that information is on the Internet, and we encourage people to access that information to help them so that they can save their money and be secure in whatever endeavours they want to do to get people to fix up their homes and make it a little bit easier for them to have a nice lifestyle.

The next area that the hon. member brought forward was the consumer advocate, focusing again mostly on consumers and protecting people. The member through some of his questions asked why it was set up and why Government Services is taking on the role. Well, we see the Department of Energy responsible for the restructuring of electricity, and we see ourselves on the consumer protection side responsible for the advocate's role.

It was deemed appropriate that our ministry would be the place where the advocate would be housed given the fact that we have so many functions in terms of protecting Alberta consumers through our Fair Trading Act, which protects consumers on the marketing of electricity and that type of thing. It sets down those provisions and those best practices. It sets down cancellation rights. When marketers come to your door and want to sell you a product of electricity or natural gas, they have to present a contract and they have to identify themselves, some of those same principles that I talked about earlier in terms of house builders and that type of thing and renovators coming to sell their wares.

Those are just very, very basic things that people should be aware of, and we provide that kind of information to people through the Fair Trading Act regulations. That's a protection that we offer in the department, and now we continue to offer that same kind of protection with the advocate role, and it seems like it's a real good fit for our department.

How was it set up? Well, the consumer advocate's office was set up and was established as part of Government Services, as I said, in October of 2003 by order in council, and that order in council came through under the authority of section 4 of the Government Organization Act and section 18 of the Public Service Act. And, yes, it operates on dedicated revenue, and that dedicated revenue comes from consumers. It's put onto the rate base, and the funding is received through that rate base by electricity and natural gas providers through to us.

The hon. member mentioned something about the 80-20 split between electricity and natural gas. It was deemed at the beginning that most of the complaints seemed to be on the electricity side, and that would be about 80 per cent of the work. The other 20 per cent would be on the natural gas side, recognizing that there were some high natural gas prices. So we made the 80-20 split. Accordingly, the electricity Balancing Pool pays for 80 per cent of the office being set up, and the further 20 per cent comes from the three provincial natural gas distributors.

The hon. member asked about how many dollars in FTEs, et cetera, et cetera, made up the $4.3 million that we're receiving for 12 months of operation. This year 31 per cent will go to manpower, and that will be 16 FTEs to look at all the programs and the communications and the strategies that are being put together by the advocate's office. The other 69 per cent will go to supplies and services, and we talked about offices and desks and computers and that type of thing. The advocate's office is now up and running with those kinds of dollars.

Now, the question came up as to why we need an extra 2 point some million dollars to operate this year. Well, the hon. member will recall that the office got set up in October of 2003, and it spills over until – well, actually today is the last day of that fiscal year, so it was about five and a half months. So the $2.6 million that we got from the Balancing Pool to operate and get the operation set up was for that five and a half to six months. Now we are requesting in these estimates $4.3 million for 12 months of operation. So that's very, very easy to explain.

I'd just like to go back and talk a little bit about what the advocate sees himself doing. The advocate is basically looking at providing information for the residents of Alberta, for small businesses and farms that were hit with high prices and providing that kind of information on the restructuring of electricity, letting the folks know what was deregulated and what is still regulated.

Also, the advocate takes a look at how they can best facilitate with the service providers discrepancies in bills or if their bills are in arrears and how they can get the customer service departments of those companies to work with the customer to solve some of those problems. They've been very successful in being a facilitator in that area. As a matter of fact, much of their time is taken in doing that.

As well, they work with Service Alberta in the call centre. We get calls in from both Service Alberta and the UCA office, and most of those concerns come through that office and through that Service Alberta in terms of concerns on the electricity side. Yeah, about 56 per cent of the concerns are electricity, and 36 per cent are gas related. Because he's called the consumer advocate, we get about 4 per cent of complaints coming into the advocate's office on issues not directly related to utilities, but they handle those and redirect those to the proper places.

Just to go back to the communications plan for consumer awareness and the advocate's office, we're putting together a number of strategies to be considered, rural and urban and residential and farm and commercial, and taking into account regional differences and dealing with all of those differences and making sure that people understand the restructuring and how it's presented. We've developed a web site, and it's been completed. That's ongoing work. That's part of what the 16-member staff has been doing. As a matter of fact, the launch for that will be tomorrow, April 1, and we'll be sending out a news release, so everyone can look forward to that.

The advocate's office on an ongoing basis works with the media, and particularly they also go out and do some key messages with chambers of commerce, Rotary clubs, and that type of thing, letting the rest of Alberta know exactly what the utilities advocate is doing. So they have a number of speaking engagements as well.

Now, the third and final thing that the advocate is doing is taking part in regulatory proceedings and representing consumers mostly on two fronts, not only officially in front of the EUB on behalf of residents, farms, and small businesses but more importantly taking all the consumer groups that do make representation in front of the EUB and actually pulling them all together so that there's a unified voice to see if we can get sort of a better bang for the dollar that is charged back to the rate base for advocacy on behalf of consumers. That is a huge, huge responsibility, and it's a very expensive process. Lawyers are involved, the legal businesses, and technically it takes a lot of work and a lot of equipment.

I just got a note here from my advocate who's saying: we didn't use any of those dollars for furniture. So let me put that on the record. We didn't use any of those dollars for furniture. Thank you to my deputy for that. We've got to set the record straight here.

You know, when you take a look at a couple of million dollars for legal services to make those representations, we feel that it's dollars well spent on behalf of Albertans.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

So that's a breakdown, basically, of some of the things that the hon. member had brought forward, particularly on the consumer advocate.

That's all I have to respond to his questions at this particular time. I look forward to more, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I thank the minister very much for being so open and candid with his answers and, as well, his staff who are here to assist today and to listen to our questions.

Certainly, the Ministry of Government Services is one of those ministries that touches the lives of every Albertan in one way or another and on a very direct basis. It is one of those ministries that is constantly changing with the times and must change with the times as we continue to move forward with technology and as we continue to move forward as a more corporate society.

When I'm dealing in my critic area of Transportation in particular, I get questions from people involved in driver education and the examination of new drivers, and they certainly have many concerns when it comes to the information that is required. They also have many concerns when we look at the changes that have occurred in the issuing of drivers' licences.

Now, in the province we went to graduated drivers' licences, and one of the areas that they were most concerned with here is the fact that there was a deadline where people had an opportunity to obtain their driver's licence before they had to go in and get into the graduated licence program. The question they were asking me was at that time when there was a deadline. There were apparently some examination agencies out there that were taking a great number of these people trying to get their drivers' licences under the deadline, and as a result some of these agencies or examination centres were charging an increased rate. So they took advantage of those people trying to get in under the wire.

Would the minister's department have first of all any documentation, any data which would show if there in fact was an increase in the number of people that got licences just prior to the graduated drivers' licences program coming in? Would the ministry also have any data as to what fees were charged for those licences; for example, in the last few weeks before the deadline?

As well, in the area of vehicles my constituency office is also getting requests wanting to know about altered vehicles. These are vehicles that are registered as normal vehicles, but they've been altered, whether they've been raised, whether they have large tires, even those vehicles that have been equipped with nitrous oxide in order to accelerate to great speeds very rapidly and for short durations of time. So their concern was that if people alter their vehicle and their insurance is no longer valid, then what sort of protection does the average motorist on the street have when they are involved in accidents with these types of vehicles? If the minister could please provide any information. Are there any additional or increased registration costs for these vehicles that have been altered, whether that is with the large tires, whether it is being equipped with nitrous oxide or whatever?

As well, I was listening quite intently to the questions that were posed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on this whole issue of whistle-blower protection. I think that it is certainly an area where many people would get involved if in fact they were not subject to having to give their names and their personal information.

Speaking of personal information, as we continue to have databases established with a great deal of personal information, we know that the Federal Trade Commission says that 10 million people were stung by identity thieves in the last year at a cost of $48 billion. Certainly, with the data banks that the ministry has, what type of systems are in place to maintain the confidentiality of information that they have in their systems? What sort of assistance do they give the victims of identity theft?

Particularly when we look at the amount of information that is available – and experts say that it has never been so simple to become someone else – databases have become too numerous and too vulnerable. It seems to me that this is a never-ending process whereby for every safeguard that the ministry can put in, somebody will be trying to leap ahead. It seems like we're into a situation where we're playing tag but we're always it, because for every step that the ministry would take . . . [interjection] Yes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar says that it's a little bit like being in opposition.

I do have a few other questions, and these are in regard to the Auditor General's report. One of the concerns and recommendations of the Auditor General was that "the Department of Government Services make provision for appropriate recovery facilities and equipment to resume business operations if a service disruption occurs." I think it became extremely evident again to all of us after 9-11 just how our information systems can be disrupted, whether it be by that type of tragic event or for whatever other reasons that registry systems break down.

I think that one of the concerns, as well, that the Auditor General has is that the ministry had "contracted out the operation and maintenance of these systems to a private sector service provider." If the minister could please indicate how the department has addressed this recommendation by the Auditor General and what steps they have taken particularly when the service has been contracted out to the private sector. What sort of controls does the ministry have in regard to dealing with those providers from the private sector?

Another recommendation, recommendation 19, that the Auditor General had was: "We recommend that the Department of Government Services complete and approve a project management plan for the Registry Renewal Initiative." The Auditor General goes on to say: "Registry renewal initiative to renew 20-year-old systems. Estimated cost: $100 million." The findings were that the department "should improve the management controls" for the registry renewal initiative. They also found that the project management plan for the registry renewal initiative was "incomplete and not approved." Some of the areas that they were concerned with were certainly in the risk management plan that was not complete. So if the minister could please indicate as well how they are addressing recommendation 19 by the Auditor General.

As well, the Auditor General had recommendation 20. This particular performance measure gave them concern because it is a recommendation that was made earlier, in 2002, and this recommendation apparently was not addressed to the satisfaction of the Auditor General. So what the Auditor General recommended at this particular point was that "the Alberta Corporate Service Centre clearly define its performance measures and improve its processes to track and report results."

The criteria that they wanted the department to follow was, number one, that "performance measures and targets should be clearly defined and linked to the core businesses and goals of an organization." The second point under criteria was that "adequate control systems should exist to ensure that performance information is accurate and verifiable" and, thirdly, that "performance results should be reported in relation to the business plan."

Their findings were quite interesting in that the Auditor General goes on to say that "the Centre has not made satisfactory progress in improving its performance measurement systems." So if the minister could please indicate what they have done to address this recommendation that has not been followed on two separate occasions now.

As well, under this same recommendation they go on to say that the methodology for the cost savings measure was not clearly defined and used in the determination of results. The Centre prepared a discussion paper that set out the definition of cost savings, and how to measure them. However, this document was not finalized, approved or communicated to the staff responsible for collecting the information. Thus, performance results initially provided to us did not always meet the definition of "cost savings" as outlined in the discussion paper. In addition, supporting documentation was not available for all savings.

If the minister could please indicate how they have changed their reporting process in order to clearly define cost savings.

So with those questions, Mr. Chairman, I'll cede the floor to the minister and, hopefully, have another opportunity to get involved again. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: I would like to remind members that the first hour is for the opposition and the minister to have discussion or debate. So after the minister responds to the questions, any member will have the opportunity to ask questions.

Go ahead, hon. Minister of Government Services.

4:00

Mr. Coumts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member brought forward some concerns regarding the delivery and the education on the driver's licence and the graduated driver's licence and driver examiners and things like that in his first questions.

One thing about Government Services is that we provide the service to the people of Alberta based on legislation that is in the Department of Transportation's purview. We provide that service under a memorandum of understanding between the two departments. In this particular case your questions would probably be better served by Transportation because they make the policies and they make the determination of all those types of dates, and they have the stats on the graduated licences and that type of thing. I only have the stats on the number of licences that have actually been given out. I will refer it to the Department of Transportation, and we'll work on that. We'll certainly try to provide that in writing to you.

That also goes for the altered vehicles that you were mentioning: different engines and different tires and different chassis and those kinds of things and the fuels that go into them, et cetera, et cetera. That is also under Transportation. So we'll refer that to Transportation, as well, and between us we'll certainly provide you with the information that you need.

In terms of identity theft and that type of thing and questions around our driver's licence, you know, we went to a centralized facility to make sure that we had the most secure system, the most tamper-proof card, et cetera, et cetera, so that identity theft could be controlled in Alberta. Our driver's licence program has been very successful in that regard.

However, we do have a number of people that have called our department with inquiries in terms of, you know: how come I have an interim driver's licence with no picture on it? They want to gain access to an airline or that type of thing and they don't have identification. We've had to field those kinds of concerns coming to Government Services and reassure people that once they do get their driver's licence, it will be the most secure document in North America. The inconvenience that they have for the five or six days that the card is being produced in a central location and being mailed back to them – we've reassured them that that's generally done in five business days, and most folks are pretty agreeable to that.

We had some problems with the central system with the power outage down in Toronto and Ottawa last fall, and there was a backlog. The contract that we have with the provider makes sure that we try to keep within that 14-day period that we originally discussed and wanted used as a target. Canadian Bank Note really did a good job in churning out the backlog and getting it done. We never were much beyond 14 days. We had one week there when we were 15, 16 days, and one or two people phoned us with an 18-day turnaround. But that's since all been fixed. It's very, very consistent. We have a five-day turnaround now. Albertans can be reassured that their driver's licence, which sometimes is used by other businesses as a source of identification, is a valid document.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

You talked about identity theft. Yes, identity theft is a real concern. We in the department don't get involved, again, on the service side. We're more with helping people go through a process of clearing, say, their debt or their credit information. If somebody else has assumed their identity and cleaned out their bank account, that type of thing, and ruined their credit rating, we help them with a national identity kit that takes them through a step-by-step program to let all banking institutions and retail shops and credit card companies know that their identity was assumed by someone else and someone else is responsible for those debts, et cetera. We take them through that and provide them with the information.

Alberta has been a leader, as a matter of fact, in dealing with a national identity theft kit so that people can restore their credit rating but, more importantly, get their lives back together again. We've taken a lead in that, and it's difficult. I think that part of our awareness program is to let people know to safeguard their personal information, safeguard their credit cards, not leave bank statements around, that type of thing. It's one thing that all of us have to be aware of.

You talked about the database and the safeguards around the database. Part of our renewal for our registries makes sure that those safeguards are put in place so that people can't access and nobody can link into our database. Only those that are under contract or have authorization to do so can gain access to only certain things.

Our registry renewal initiative is progressing, and, yes, the Auditor General's concern about a plan has been addressed. Actually, we did have a plan in place for various components of this initiative. We put a business case forward, which we thought was the proper thing to do, and it related to plans that were set forward based on guidelines and sound principles and templates that were applicable at the time. However, after the Auditor General's recommendations came forward to us, we've taken that to heart, and we've complied with the Auditor General's wishes. We've expanded and integrated the components into one overall plan, which we think will have some benefits for Albertans.

The progress that we've made on that registry renewal initiative – basically, we've acquired the computer infrastructure including the data storage system that will provide that security that the hon. member was looking for. We have the system development tools and methodology. As well, we have the networks and associated support from the computer services that will provide the kind of certainty that the member is asking for. Of course, that's something that Albertans are asking for as well. They want to know that that security is there with our system. So that plan has been put into a comprehensive package, and we will continue to work on that with the Auditor General.

The next item that the hon. member brought forward was business interruptions and the controls that would be put into a disaster recovery plan. We've compiled and validated a total inventory of our systems through a recent business resumption planning exercise that we went through. We're currently comparing the cost of recovery services to the risk and the impact of those services that are not available in what we think is a reasonable time frame. We're working with Innovation and Science to improve on that as well as to determine the impact of that ICT initiative. So we're definitely continuing to work on that. It's a very, very important component of making sure that that disaster plan is appropriate and facilitates Albertans' information.

Pretty well your last question to me was about ACSC. This is an area that the Auditor General also had some comments on, that we have taken to heart. We worked very, very closely with the Auditor General's office as well as the deputy minister for ACSC.

Basically, in ACSC our whole function is to look at how we can re-engineer recruitment functions across government and make them more effective. We look at pricing models and tracking systems and transactions that we can consolidate and put together so that we can find some cost savings. We found that going back and trying to define what the benchmarks were in the various departments for administrative costs was an exercise that in itself was costly.

So we're still concentrating on savings in ACSC, but our targets are focused more on changing our processes and making them more efficient and more cost-effective, and we think that in that we can generate the savings. As a matter of fact, as of this year we can pretty well track that we've made savings in the area of around $25 million in ACSC. Yes, it's been slow to implement and it's been difficult, but we think that by focusing more on processes, we can come up with those savings that we need. So that's something that will continue to progress.

We've looked at ACSC in a number of ways trying to find how we can best make those savings. We've had some situations where we've outsourced some of the functions, and it's worked very, very well. Some components of the information technology services have done that, and they proved to be very, very beneficial in saving some of the dollars. We'll work on partnerships for the future in trying to make sure that we comply with those recommendations that have come to us through the Auditor General.

I think that pretty well covers all of the members. So I thank you very much for that.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and join debate on the estimates for the Department of Government Services. I want to start by commending the minister for his thoroughness. He seems to pay attention to detail as well as to the big picture. Also, I'm impressed by his detailed knowledge of programs, policies in his department. That's quite refreshing to hear. I think that not only should the minister be complimented on this but, clearly, his staff who help him stay up on this. I think this is something that we should acknowledge.

Having said that, I have a few questions. I want to start with one which is sort of a very simple question. At my constituency office I ran into a riddle that we couldn't solve even after calling your department, I suppose, and others. I have met with residents of some seniors' accommodations over the last several months, and they have had some complaints about the manner in which these places are being managed, the way some charges are being either introduced or increased without any consultation. So we tried to find out where to go. I've been under pressure to find some way in which they can take their complaints.

Mr. Coutts: Are these condominiums?

Dr. Pannu: These are not condominiums. These are publicly funded, I guess, at least partly publicly funded, lodges or accommodations for seniors. My constituency assistant was quite frustrated and sought my help. Unfortunately, I had to change my constituency assistant. There's a new person.

This program that the minister referred to as the tips program, would that be information that constituency offices should have, and would there be something in these pieces of information that would help? And do constituency offices on a regular basis receive this information? That's the other question that I have because I have a suspicion that my constituency assistant didn't have that information handy. So I just draw your attention to it, and I will certainly advise him to get in touch with, perhaps, your department to get some more direction on what to do with these complaints that we have been receiving on a regular basis for some time.

I want to turn, Mr. Chairman, to some questions to the minister on this new office that's just five months old now, the utilities advocate's office. The incumbent is present today, so I thought I should ask some of these questions.

Generally speaking, with respect to the terms of reference of this office, scope of responsibilities and powers is something that remains somewhat unpacked at this moment. I don't have a clear understanding exactly as to the responsibilities and the powers of the utilities advocate. For example, what kind of actions can the office recommend or take? Does it have some enforcement powers? If it decides to make some recommendations for action, where does that office refer, you know, those complaints or those recommendations for action? Good enough to listen and analyze complaints, but then some remedial action has to be taken. Does this office have powers to either enforce remedies or to recommend remedies, and if so, with respect to utilities where are those remedies to be sought and implemented?

The utilities advocate's office, Mr. Chairman, is an interesting office. It certainly is the result of deregulation of electricity, primarily, and the widespread dissatisfaction and unhappiness with it on the part of Albertans who consume electricity, although I do acknowledge that it's not just electricity. It's also natural gas, you know, as part of the utilities. But on those counts there have been complaints.

In a sense this response to the public dissatisfaction with deregulation has meant additional expense, of course, to consumers, because as I understand, this office will be funded through drawing money from the power Balancing Pool and from natural gas providers. Those costs are then transferred downwards to the consumers, I'm sure. They're not something that's not passed on. Not only are consumers paying more; they are paying some additional amount now to have the ability to go to an advocate and having to pay for it, albeit indirectly, through the passing down of the costs of this through the utilities which provide electricity or power.

The real problem, of course, that Albertans continue to insist that this government address is the question of high energy costs. It's just been brought to my attention today, as a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman – and the minister would be interested in making note of it – that as a response to these high power and heating bills, Albertans both in the cities and some smaller communities are continuing to express their displeasure and disapproval of the route that the government has taken by way of deregulation of these utilities.

There will be a town hall meeting, for example, in the village of Innisfree that will take place on April 13, next month, in two weeks' time. It's at 7:30 at the Innisfree Recreation Centre. I think this meeting is prompted, as a matter of fact, by a large number of petitions that the residents of Innisfree and the area have signed and have presented to their MLA. This meeting is in response, I guess, to that pressure from consumers in the Innisfree area who are not so much concerned about what the utilities advocate can do for them; they are concerned about whether or not the deregulation itself can be reversed. So they have demanded a meeting. This meeting will be on April 13.

Without intending or meaning any disrespect for the office or for the incumbent of this recently established office, I just want to suggest to you, Minister, that that office really is a band-aid to the real problem. The real problem is the one that people are organizing to express in places like Innisfree and other places by way of town hall meetings. They want some accounting for why it is that they have to deal with, they have to live with this so-called inevitable, irreversible decision that clearly is seen as wrong-headed and wrong and needing a reversal on the part of this government, but that's not happening.

Having said that, there's a new office. The money, I guess, for this is about 4 point some million dollars, Minister, this year? For the five months, I guess, the allocation was $2.3 million. I just wonder if this estimate is either too much or too little given the fact that the minister doesn't really have a clear road map yet based on past experience.

I also understand that the utilities advocate has established an advisory council with 10 members on it, and I hear that either the minister or the advocate had to hire a consultant to find these 10 members. I wonder what the costs are of these consulting services. Does the budget as presented here for that office provide for the remuneration that may have to be paid to these advisory council members, who may have a fair bit of work on their hands given the volume of complaints that this office has already received over the last three, four months since its opening in November? So would the minister be able to give us some estimate of the amount of money that's allocated for the work of this advisory council?

Is the advisory council a permanent feature of this office, or is it a transition kind of mechanism that will disappear next year once the office starts functioning? It's not clear from any of the information that I've been able to put my hands on on this matter, Mr. Minister and Mr. Chairman.

A couple of other questions. On the registry renewal services I'm just curious. Are these vehicle registries, or are there whole other classes of registries that are covered under this heading? I would like to know.

The expenditures certainly are up by close to a million-plus dollars. Would the minister have some explanation for that? We're talking about renewals. Is it because the registry rates have gone up? If so, by how much? By what percentage for each type of registry? Because I don't know whether we're talking about vehicle registries or some other kind of registries as well. So that's a question that springs to mind looking at program 5 in the budget documents.

Similarly for the minister, we have the land titles item also go up by close to a million dollars, which is about a 10 to 12 per cent increase over last year. Again, my questions are about: why this increase? How do we account for these cost increases? If the minister would provide some fairly focused information on that.

We also have registry services under program 3, and there is again some increase. Again, I'm not sure what these registry services entail. What kind of range of registries and services are we talking about here?

One other question and then I'll sit down so the minister has some time and other hon. members are able to ask questions. It has to do with the Residential Tenancies Act, that has been amended in this session earlier on, and the alternative dispute resolution mechanism that will kick in, I think, as soon as this new legislation comes into effect.

My questions are on: who is going to do this kind of mediation if mediation is required? Does the minister have in mind a number of mediators? I understand that these mediators might be travelling around the province, depending upon where the complaints are, where the disputes arise. Are these full-time positions, or are these going to be contracted out to mediators? Who is going to screen or hire them? That sort of thing. It's all new and raises questions about its implementation and the costs involved with respect to that. Which line item here in the budget will have the monies that may be needed for that purpose?

We have heard, I think, from the Edmonton Apartment Association. There is a reduction, I guess, in the budget for Alberta Registries. Is the budget being lowered? Does it have anything to do with the alternative dispute mechanism being introduced under the Residential Tenancies Act? We have heard from the Edmonton Apartment Association that Service Alberta was getting many complaints of this nature when Calgary and Red Deer did their landlord and tenant boards. I'm not absolutely clear about it. You may have more information on it and may be able to shed some light on this.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and have the minister perhaps address some of the questions that I've raised. Thank you.

4:30

The Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to start right off the top, and I want to thank you very much for the compliment to our staff. The leadership that we have in executive council in our department has many, many years of service and serving Albertans. They know what their job is, and they go out and they do it very, very well. They also give great direction to the folks within our department that provide all of these services, and we're very, very fortunate to have the kinds of people in our department with the experience.

As a matter of fact, just within the last two weeks we had some staff meetings and recognitions, and it's amazing the numbers of people that we have in our department with 25, 30, and 35 years of service not only in various departments of government but, more importantly, in service to Albertans.

Mr. Magnus: You're no spring chicken yourself.

Mr. Coutts: I'm no spring chicken myself, but I don't have that much service.

Just to let you know what kind of experience we have, we have a person in land titles in Calgary that has had 42 years of service in land titles, and that kind of experience you just can't duplicate and you can't buy anywhere. That individual is just a very dedicated person and does the best that she possibly can for Albertans. Then we have another person in Edmonton who has 40 years of experience in land titles and duplicating the same kind of service here in Edmonton that the southern Albertans are getting with that kind of experience.

So thank you very, very much for the compliment. I know that those members will be reading Hansard, and they will appreciate your comments very, very much.

You talked about riddles. We're not good at riddles, but in Government Services we're great at solving problems and trying to solve problems. We're responsible for the Residential Tenancies Act. We do not have responsibility for seniors' housing. That goes under the Department of Seniors. What I would suggest: I'll certainly refer your questions about seniors' tenancy in seniors' affordable housing to the Department of Seniors, and we'll make sure that you get that information.

I think it's very important that you brought forward a concern about constituency offices and constituency administrators being able to access these tipsheets, being able to access the information so that they can pass it along to Albertans, to people that come into their offices. The folks that come into their offices looking for help should be able to receive those tipsheets just as effectively, and if you have your constituency administrative person phone us, we'll make sure that they can get all the kinds of tipsheets that they want and that they need. We think that that's a good service and an effective service for a constituency office to be providing for their constituents.

You had a number of comments about the utility advocate and certainly the powers of the advocate. I'd like to mention just one thing. During your questions you talked about the deregulation of electricity. We don't deal with the actual deregulation of electricity. That is with the Department of Energy. But we do deal with how the consumers are affected by billing errors, et cetera, and with advocacy on behalf of consumers, small businesses, and farms. In that light, the consumer advocate office has assisted over 800 people in the last five and a half months in that job of dealing with the utility companies.

In terms of powers the Utilities Consumer Advocate meets with utility companies. It makes sure that utility companies understand, and the utility companies have come to the table in a spirit of co-operation to try and solve the problems that come forward to the utility advocate. We feel that it's a very valuable service on behalf of consumers out there to have that portal or that one-window approach to deal with the utility companies. I've got to thank the utility companies for also coming to the table in the spirit of co-operation to successfully get some of those irritants out of their way on their customer service side.

One of the things the advocate has also done is they've joined up with Credit Counselling Services of Alberta to encourage the utility companies – and this is part of his role, again, working with the utility companies – to make arrangement for arrears that have appeared on utility bills and where people have difficulty paying that. So for people that find themselves in financial difficulty, there's an orderly payment of debt program that is put out by Credit Counselling Services of Alberta. The utility advocate has successfully got the utility companies and that program together to help Albertans pay down their debt. It's a great opportunity for people that are having difficulty.

The advocate has also been involved in various hearings before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and that's done to ensure that the interests of consumers are best protected. That's an ongoing commitment, that's an ongoing responsibility of the advocate's job, and that takes a tremendous amount of dollars to do. It's an expensive process to go through with lawyers to make sure that you can have the proper case put forward on behalf of Albertans in terms of consumer protection.

The costs for this, again, come out of the rate base of the province, and it's through section 148 of the Electric Utilities Act that the $4.3 million is made available through the Balancing Pool. Eighty per cent of that comes out of the Balancing Pool on electricity; 20 per cent comes from the three partners on the natural gas side. We picked the 80-20 split because that fairly represents what we think historically are the energy concerns from consumers. You know, if we find that that shifts, where consumers are having emphasis on gas problems rather than on electricity problems, then of course that ratio can be looked at. So that gives you the scope of what the utility advocate is supposed to be doing and is doing on behalf of consumers.

The advisory council that is being put in place for the Utilities Consumer Advocate. Yes, we soon identified that there needed to be a mechanism for ordinary, everyday Albertans – people that were on farms, people that had small businesses, and people that were just ordinary, main street Albertans, residents – to be part of the process, part of bringing consumer concerns forward to the advocate in addition to MLAs, in addition to utility companies as well.

So we embarked upon a process of how to set up the advisory council. It cost us an independent consultant, about $60,000, to go out and get these folks. What I was looking for were ordinary, everyday Albertans: people with common sense, people that were looked upon in their community as the silent type, the quiet type but who understood what their community needed and understood what people were experiencing in their communities, people that were not necessarily – and I'm going to say this – politically connected. These are ordinary folks. So the consultant went out there. We wanted a fair balance across the province right from the southeast to the northwest and from the southwest to the northeast.

We got 10 people that we interviewed through a process where he identified them and narrowed them down, and we interviewed them and put them on this advisory board. We see that council as being an important means of obtaining public input and promoting discussion on the various issues around consumers, what their views are and how they perceive utility companies, and to help the advocate get that common, ordinary input into his office.

It's interesting. We've got three farmers that are on the council: one from Grassy Lake, one from Boyle, and one from Brooks, Alberta. So there's good representation there from the farm community from across the province. From residents we've got somebody from Bluesky, Alberta. We've got one person from Calgary and one person from Claresholm. We've got big city and small towns involved in this, so we've got a nice balance here.

We talk about small businesses. We have an individual from Edmonton who has not only a small business but is also a full-time mom and runs her family home, so we get their kind of input. As well, the same thing from an individual in Fort McMurray who's a small businessperson. Then Grande Prairie and Red Deer are also represented.

So, you see, we have rural, we have small cities, and we have representation from big cities, and it covers from farms right up to residential and small businesses.

Their role is to meet every so often, about every other month, and provide the advocate with the information that he needs to help develop and get feedback from Main Street, Alberta. We think that that's a real good way, without any politics involved. They get paid their expenses only; they don't get paid an honorarium. So we think it's a very, very nice fit for the advocate's office.

You talked about registry renewal and what it involves. Well, the first part of that registry renewal was that our personal property registry and our land titles needed to be updated. That was the first year of a seven-year program. So personal property and land titles were the first ones that needed the most attention. We didn't see any increase in the fees this year, and we certainly don't see any increase next year in those two areas.

You asked: what do registries really encompass? Well, yes, it encompasses registration of your automobile as well as the driver's licence, and it also encompasses vital statistics and information that we have on marriages and births and deaths and all of that type of thing. Those systems have to be upgraded to stay in time with the trends of the day plus the additional pressures that we're having. The economy is growing so fast. People are buying more property. People are buying more cars. There are more people driving because they have to get to their place of work.

So what we're finding is that we need to have the system that will accommodate that growth but at the same time still protect people's personal information. That's going to happen over the seven years. Yes, it's difficult because there's new technology coming on stream all the time. To try and keep it within the original plan and not succumb to the new technology and the new things that are coming out, because they're a little bit more expensive each time you try to upgrade, and to stay with the original plan but still provide the kind of service that Albertans need and require is a real challenge for us.

You talked about land titles. This year because of the economy we did more transactions historically than we've ever done in the history of this province. We did over a million transactions in land titles. In other words, either mortgages had been renewed and needed identification of the validity of the property or actual exchanges of land. We did over a million transactions, and that's a 25 per cent increase over the last year.

Now, in order to get those transactions done in a timely manner, because Albertans have been used to about a three-day or a four-day turnaround, sometimes even a two-day turnaround – this summer we ended up with about an 18-day turnaround on one or two days, and the average was about a 14-day turnaround – we went to Treasury Board and worked very, very hard to get some extra money for overtime so that we could get those turnaround times down to an acceptable time period for the mortgage companies and for lawyers' offices, et cetera.

That overtime was put in by the excellent staff that we have in land titles. These folks worked their holiday time. They worked weekends. They worked evenings and afternoons when they were normally to be off. They took time away from their personal family time. They took time away from school programs and school concerts. They took time away from soccer practices when they could have been and should have been with their families. They traded time with other staff members to make sure that these transactions got done in a timely manner.

My hat goes off to those folks, the dedication that we have in our land titles to bring that time period down from 18 days to an acceptable seven or eight days. As a result of that overtime and a result of their dedication, we're now down to a three-day turnaround in Calgary and a two-day turnaround in Edmonton here. That's what the industry wants; that's what the industry expects.

So in order to keep that up, we're hiring another 16 people. They're being hired now, and they're being trained now. It takes about six months to train a person in land titles. They have to know the legislation. So the extra dollars that you were talking about, the extra million dollars, is going to go to those 16 FTEs so that we don't have that same kind of problem in the future.

Now, it's going to take me six months to train those folks, and that six-month period is going to extend into the summer. If we have a hot economy and things keep going the way they're going and land sales keep going the way they did last summer, we may creep up to another 10, 12 days this summer. I hope we don't, but our staff is committed to doing the overtime until the 16 members get on stream so that we can keep it down to a two-day or three-day turnaround.

In order to let the real estate industry know and the mortgage brokers know what the turnaround times are, on our web site we have the turnaround times for land titles. We hope that every day when these folks go to work, they take a look at that so that they can control their turnaround times. We're sure that with these 16 FTEs, in the future we can maintain that throughout the year.

The alternative dispute resolutions. We have created a director for residential tenancies and that role calls for the director to be someone that is from within the department, so we won't be hiring anyone new. The alternative dispute resolution that we have in mind is something that is voluntary. It's something that people can ask for, and the director would facilitate that. The whole idea is to make the process cheaper and faster for disputes that landlords and tenants might have and also something less intimidating than what the court would bring forward. So we see the alternative dispute mechanism as being a real benefit to Albertans.

Thank you.

4:50

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly, I would appreciate a lot more time to debate or discuss the budget for Government Services. I'm not convinced, to start with, that our new driver's licence is going to be adequate. We can look at changing the printing and the photograph, the gradual diminishing type containing the driver's name and birth date, the 2-D bar code at the back, the laser marking, and the microprinting. You know, the state-of-the-art security features are certainly a good idea, but we've got to make sure that there's security in the registry offices. Whether there is or whether there isn't, we could debate that at length, but I certainly hope that I don't wake up some morning to read in a paper that there was yet another security breach at one of our privatized registry offices.

Earlier the minister informed the House in regard to a question about the Utilities Consumer Advocate and the furniture. Well, if the department is not paying for it, who is paying for the office furniture and the fixtures, and what are the terms of the lease for the Utilities Consumer Advocate? If the minister could answer that, I would be grateful.

Now, when we're looking at this budget and we're looking at this department, there is an awful increase in the number of service contracts and the total dollars. Going back to 2001, there was $39 million in service contracts. In 2003 there was $135 million. That's a $96 million increase. What is it in this budget, and why are we going to all these service contracts? Who are they with? Are they tendered, or are they deals that a guy just gets? What's going on that we need to have all these service contracts? Certainly, the Auditor General has stated that there are some indiscretions to speak of in this department.

One of the recommendations is discussed on page 143 of the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta for 2002-2003. There's "unsatisfactory progress," and this is in regard to the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. I believe that this was something that was started – and I could stand corrected – by Dr. West earlier. This was one of the experiments from Dr. West, this Alberta Corporate Service Centre.

The Auditor General states here that "the Centre has not made satisfactory progress in improving its performance measurement systems," that cost savings were not defined.

The methodology for the cost savings measure was not clearly defined and used in the determination of results. The Centre prepared a discussion paper that set out the definition of cost savings, and how to measure them. However, this document was not finalized, approved or communicated to the staff responsible for collecting the information. Thus, performance results initially provided to us did not always meet the definition of "cost savings" as outlined in the discussion paper. In addition, supporting documentation was not available for all savings.

Mr. Dunn goes on to say here that the Centre did not have a central review process to ensure that performance information included in the draft 2002-2003 ministry annual report was consistent with the performance measure methodology and adequately supported.

So there are some reservations here. I'm sure that I'm going to be told that some of these service contracts are for the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, but what gives here? Why are we increasing the number of service contracts in this department? How are they being let and to whom? Now, I think we've got to be very, very careful with this. Money doesn't grow on trees.

Also, in regard to the SuperNet, the supersized SuperNet, how much has Government Services paid for its building to be hooked up to the SuperNet? Again, how much is Government Services going to pay to the SuperNet service provider, Axia, to maintain that connection? That may not sound like a lot of money in a $238 million budget, but it's significant.

Can the minister also tell us what the cost is of changing to the new, more secure driver's licensing system that we talked about and give a guarantee here this afternoon to all hon. members of the House that Albertans are safe from identity theft, particularly with the use of temporary licences?

Can we also get an answer in regard to implementing and sustaining the new Personal Information Protection Act? What is the expected cost of implementing and sustaining that act?

Mr. Chairman, what caused equipment and inventory purchases for registries renewal to be about $750,000 more than the 2003-04 forecast? Again, the operating expense for registries renewal, looking at this, is going to rise by more than a million dollars. Is this increase on target for completing the registry renewal initiative over eight years? The Auditor General again had some comments on this matter on page 140. The Auditor General found that the registry renewal initiative project management plan was not complete and not approved, and to date, as we speak, I'm not aware that it has been rectified.

To the minister: what caused legal services expenses to increase from $82,000 to $133,000 last year, and why is $88,000 more needed in the communications budget?

The Chair: I regret that we have to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Your time is up.

Pursuant to Standing Order 58(4), which provides for not less than two hours of consideration for a department's proposed estimates, and after considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Government Services for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, I must now put the question.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$238,685,000

The Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the Committee of Supply rise and report the estimates of the Department of Government Services and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

5:00

Ms Graham: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Government Services: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $238,685,000.

That is the report.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

Economic Development

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, as per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member is able to participate in the debate.

The hon. Minister for Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and a very pleasant good evening to everybody. We are here to look over the business plan for 2004-2005.

Before I do that, I'd like to introduce some folks who have joined us in the gallery. Starting at stage left, I guess, is Mark Erdman, the communications director. [some applause] You can hold your applause; I know I would. Next to him is Anthony Lemphers, our financial executive; Rick Sloan, the ADM of the department; Derek Coke-Kerr, the managing director of Travel Alberta; and our newly minted ADM for tourism specific, Bob Scott. There he is. This is our team of Alberta Economic Development, so clearly we're doomed.

What I thought I'd do, Mr. Chairman, to open the discussion about this is talk about what our plans are and what our goals are, and hopefully it'll be of interest to somebody. If not, I'll just keep going.

Mr. Chairman, our role here as we see it as Economic Development is twofold, to grow and diversify. We do that in a number of different ways. By grow we mean our four existing industries, which of course are oil and gas, forestry, tourism, agriculture. [interjection] I was getting to that.

An Hon. Member: Entertainment.

Mr. Norris: Entertainment.

Those are our four big ones. We recognize that in Alberta we've been very blessed; they give us an incredible foundation from which to build. So one of our department's goals is strategic information and development. We don't take that very lightly. In fact, we take it very seriously because as we grow those four big industries, it allows us time to look at other ones.

The other part of our plan is to diversify the economy. We do that in a number of ways but primarily working with industry to look at new opportunities such as environmental services, aerospace, communications, telecommunications, bioproducts, et cetera. Like any other business, Mr. Chairman, we do this with a number of strategies. They're all outlined in our business plan, but I thought I'd touch on three of the more important strategies tonight.

Our first one is our international office program. Alberta is a very remarkable exporting province, Mr. Chairman, and to deal with those pressures, we have decided to have an international office program. Now, that program has been in place for some time, and in the last year we opened a couple of new offices, specifically in Mexico City and London, England. The response to that from businesses has been great. They have told us that they do not need us to do their work for them but would like a business-to-business presence from one government to the other. So that's how we responded to it.

The final piece of our international offices, Mr. Chairman, will be an office in Washington, D.C. [some applause] Thank you for that. We're very happy about the international office in Washington for a number of reasons. Primarily, Alberta has been affected by some global occurrences which we have felt have not been dealt with on a level that we would have liked by our federal counterparts. As a result, in agriculture, specifically with the BSE crisis, where some 70 per cent of the cattle industry in Canada operates out of Alberta, we felt it important to have a voice there.

Also, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of major projects related to oil and gas that are coming through; two pipelines, to be specific. We felt it would be important for the Alberta government to have a presence in Washington with the decision-makers to talk about how remarkable the opportunity is not only for Alberta but for the people of Alberta and the companies who are capable of doing this job.

So that office, hopefully in conjunction with the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, will be open within six months, and that should close out our international office program. That will bring our number to 10: four in China, one in Japan, one in Seoul, Korea, and again Mexico City, London, England, and Munich, Germany.

Another strategy we've been working on very hard, Mr. Chairman, is our rural development strategy, which is alluded to in this document but which has now been released by the Minister of Agriculture, Food, and Rural Development. Our department has worked very hard on that as we understand the importance of it, but I will leave that to the minister when she discusses it.

A third strategy we've been working on, Mr. Chairman, that will be released very closely – and it's referenced in this document – is our value-added strategy. The value-added strategy calls for Alberta companies and industries to work with the Alberta government to understand what the barriers are to bringing products up to their highest level and to developing to that level. It does not call for us to get into the business of business in any way, shape, or form, but it does call for us to identify that as a commodity-based economy as the price of commodities goes up and down, so does the economy. We want to get away from that and level it off with manufactured and value-added. So that's the strategy we're working on in that regard.

The final strategy I'd like to touch on, Mr. Chairman, is our tourism strategy. I don't think, quite honestly, we could have any more important strategy than that one. As you know, tourism is the fourth largest industry in Alberta, employing some 120,000 people, generating about $5 billion in gross revenue, some $700 million in taxes. What we've found is that we have an opportunity to grow this industry, that is not being dealt with appropriately.

So the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora along with the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and some other hon. members who are not with us here tonight formed a committee to deal with that, and they've been working very hard to get tourism the recognition and the growth it needs. To the credit of our very highly astute Finance minister, she has concurred with our findings and has kindly given us more funding, for which we say a very, very big thank you. We believe that money will help grow this industry and will continue to diversify our economy.

Mr. Chairman, the underlying theory of our business plan rests with allowing the Alberta government more ways to find revenue. We have all found ways to spend. We talk almost ad nauseam about the big spending that departments have done in response to the people of Alberta's requirements, but we don't believe in our department that we focus enough on the revenue generation side. So our business plan and our three core goals all deal with more revenue generation to help ease the burden on the future growth of the province.

So that's really what we do and why we do it, Mr. Chairman. The one kind of highlight that we have, as I mentioned before, is a new ADM in tourism – that gives us three ADMs – which is not to grow the department but to recognize that tourism has very specific needs and requirements, and we're very pleased that that happened.

I'll close now, Mr. Chairman, and open the floor to any discussion and any comments that hon. members opposite might have.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to thank all the staff that are here tonight. I think that you do a pretty give job given the minister that you have to work with. So it's nice to see you all here.

This is a ministry that has often been called the ministry of cookies and pork. We see a lot going out but not too many tangible results coming in. That's the focus that I'd like to talk about for the first little bit in these budget debates. That's the real benchmarking.

I heard a lot of comments from the minister about . . .

Mrs. McClellan: Go door-knocking, Debby.

Ms Carlson: I was door-knocking. If you'd like to come with me, I've got a great corner where you would fit right in. That would be good. I'd like to have the minister of agriculture out there.

What we really need to see in some of these areas is more than saying that we're going to work on value-added and that the response has been great. We need to see some tangible benchmarks in this department, particularly because I think it's an important department. I think that if you don't benchmark it properly, in the lean years in government it's one of the first ones to go. We've seen that a couple of times over the past 11 years that I've been here.

What I want the minister to be able to tell me – and we'll start with the value-added stuff first. We've been hearing a lot about what you're doing in a broad sense, but I want to know what that really means, and I want to know when we're going to see some tangible results that we can benchmark. Give us an example of a company that you're working with and what you expect the outcomes to be.

Mr. Chairman, as is my usual process here, I will ask a set of questions around an issue, get the minister to respond, and then ask more. And you weren't paying any attention.

Mr. Norris: I was. I was very enthralled by the criticism, and then I turned off when you said that you want us to do more, because I thought you were supporting what we were doing. I just thought we were going down the same road together.

Ms Carlson: No. It's the government that has the one-way railroad, Mr. Chairman. Those are not my . . .

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. member and hon. minister, if there are responses that you may want to provide in writing that you could supply after reading the Hansard, that is also allowed. Okay?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I actually have questions that I was hoping to get some answers to, and I think the minister knows the answers to them.

So I'll just go back to the last little piece of this one, now that we have his undivided attention. It was on the value-added strategy. You talked a little bit about that in a kind of global sense, but I want some specifics. How are you going to benchmark the results? Can you give us an example of a business that you're working with and what the expected outcomes are and at what point you say that it's a success and at what point you withdraw whatever support you're providing so that they're on their own out there?

Mr. Norris: Let me start by apologizing, Mr. Chairman. I didn't know there was a question in the previous go-round. So you have all of my attention now, hon. member, for however long you're going to be here.

The value-added strategy that we referenced will look at working with industry, and I want to be very, very clear about this. It is not in any way, shape, or form about the Alberta government suggesting that we need to be in a particular business. It's identifying which commodities are being produced now. An example of that is in primary forest manufacturing, and the hon. minister of sustainable resources and I have talked at great length about this. We let out large blocks of forest and timber to be harvested, and there are certain expectations about that. After that, there is secondary manufacturing that takes place in places like Airdrie and Cochrane in the province of Alberta. Those are secondary manufacturers who are value adding to the existing product.

Mr. Cardinal: Petrochemical plants.

Mr. Norris: Thank you.

For the specific example that I'm using, what we are trying to do is say to the industry primary and secondary producers, "How can you talk better together; how can you do this all in Alberta?" recognizing that we have no desire to use a legislative hammer, nor would we. But we believe that there is enough primary production going on in the province in every industry that there has to be some coalition with government and industry to make this work.

The way we measure it, quite frankly, is when we see less commodities in a raw form going out and more manufactured goods. Petrochemicals are one of those, but I want to focus for a minute on agriculture because agriculture has been a remarkable success story in the question you're talking about. The hon. minister may want to correct me, but about five years ago the ratio of primary production to secondary in agriculture was about 70-30, 70 in primary, 30 in secondary manufacturing. It's now, if I'm not mistaken, about 60-40, whereby 60 per cent is primary and 40 is value added; things like wheat for strawboard – the hon. Member for Strathmore-Brooks has a family member involved in that practice – looking at using grains for bioproducts, things of that nature. So our success will not be measured in how many people we tell what to do but in co-ordinating the efforts of the people who are already doing it.

The value-added strategy also has teeth to it. Again in the agriculture department, in the value-added centre in Leduc – I don't know if hon. members have had a chance to visit it, but I would encourage them to do so – remarkable things take place. The goal is to monitor and take products from the raw form into the converted form, and I might add that through that program we've had a number of international award winners. One was a pea butter that understood the need for a nonallergenic peanut butter. They've now become a world-class pea butter. We have a samosa manufacturer who through the help of the agriculture department and the value-added centre has had a huge success. So there are success stories all throughout the province. We would like to measure more specifically to say: less commodity, more secondary manufacturing.

Ms Carlson: So just to get some more detail on that, do you facilitate meetings? Do you provide research and development support? If so, what percentage would the company put up in terms of what your centre puts up? How involved in the product development and marketing do you get?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm really thankful for the questions. I gather from the direction of them that the opposition party is very supportive of a value-added strategy.

I guess I have to back it up a bit. What we speak about in this particular document is that our strategy has only been through the government process and is now being released to the public. So to date the intervention or the involvement that you've been talking about would have been consultation with industry to see how to set the strategy up.

The strategy will be released publicly April 12, and at that point we'll have an opportunity to start liaising with our industry partners to understand if the document is fitting their needs. Again I would have to qualify that it is not an interventionist document but a way of looking to work together.

The perceived plan after that would be, yes, to facilitate roundtables with primary producers and secondary manufacturers. We don't have money to invest in businesses in any way, shape, or form. The value-added commodities would be done through the value-added centre in Leduc, which has a budget. I can't speak to it because it falls under the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, but we do work very closely with them in that regard.

Where major industries are concerned, generally where we show support and have done so is in the form of reports and feasibility studies that are generally partnered with industry 50-50. A classic example of that was one we just released about the opportunities in situ, talking about bitumen being converted into getting natural gas to help keep our petrochemical complex going. That is about the extent of the involvement we would have for dollars and cents.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce an individual from Two Hills. We were at a meeting with the weekly newspapers this evening and had the pleasure of talking with weekly newspaper owners. On behalf of our colleague and neighbour the Member for Vegreville-Viking I would be very pleased to introduce Sonny Rajoo, who is the owner and publisher of the Two Hills Chronicle. If I could ask Sonny to please stand and ask this Assembly to give him our traditional warm welcome.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I also thank the House for the opportunity to introduce a constituent, an owner of the Valley Times, one of our weekly newspapers in our community. Rural members depend a great deal on those newspapers, and I am delighted that Isabell Fooks has joined us in the gallery tonight. She is also attending the Alberta Weekly Newspapers Association convention and had the opportunity tonight to meet with a number of our colleagues. Isabell, would you please rise and receive the very warm welcome of our House.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to resume with my remarks. I definitely am very much a supporter of value added. It's in fact the reason I became a Liberal instead of a Conservative. I didn't think that Peter Lougheed was doing all that great a job. [interjections] He wasn't. He wasn't. We had primary industry in this province and not much else.

Mr. Mar: I know Peter Lougheed, and you're no Peter Lougheed.

Ms Carlson: Well, I never would aspire to be so, Mr. Minister of Health and Wellness. I'm just saying that I didn't like those strategies in the '70s.

Mr. Mar: Then you set your sights too low, I'm afraid.

Ms Carlson: Well, perhaps you would like to enter into this debate, Minister of Health and Wellness, in the fashion in which you're supposed to, which would be to rise to your feet.

Mr. Mason: I know Dan Quayle, and he's no Dan Quayle.

Ms Carlson: I think that's true too. I believe that he is no Dan Quayle.

8:20

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, according to our Standing Orders the first hour is allocated between the minister, which happens to be the Minister of Economic Development, and members of the opposition. Any other member who wishes to participate will be able to do so once that first hour elapses. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has the floor.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I was saying, I very much support value-added industry and support in some fashion from government, not intervention, seldom funding in terms of a nest egg of money to attract businesses here, but certainly providing a framework for which they can grow both from a research and development perspective and a marketing perspective. So I would definitely support any and all initiatives that regard.

I want to talk now a little bit about attracting investment to Alberta, which the minister talked about and is on page 159 of the business plan. You talk about marketing Alberta as a "preferred location for new and expanded investment" and "increase the number of skilled workers" and "market Alberta as a destination for economic immigrants."

I like the idea of the new and expanded investment. I'm not even opposed to the kind of intervention we saw some 10 years ago with AI-Pac, where a lump sum of money was put up. At the time we did criticize that move, but we have seen over the decade that those dollars have been returned tenfold or better into the province. So that turned out to be a very wise decision.

However, some of the other decisions that were made at that same time weren't as wise. [interjection] I have to say that it's so. It was if you take a look at MagCan or NovAtel or any of those. At any rate, I just hope that you have a transparent method of evaluating those that is also open to the public so that you aren't intervening or picking winners or losers but you're providing a framework to attract investment, and that I support.

I'm very interested to get more information about how you expect to attract an increased number of skilled workers. Certainly, in the discussions I've had with labour and the kinds of issues they have just within the Canadian market, it seems to me that one of the biggest stumbling blocks they have is the recognition of skills as being transferrable between provinces. So I would hope that that would be a part of this initiative that you're working on here. If it isn't, could you tell me why not and if you plan to work with other ministries to see that Alberta will recognize any skilled worker transferring in from any part of this country?

Mr. Norris: Well, I think that before I answer the hon. member's question, there's something that has to be clarified here, Mr. Chairman, for all members of the House. This value-added strategy speaks nothing about investing in businesses or picking winners and losers, and while I appreciate the support that the hon. member has for a value-added strategy, it's clearly not a panacea for economic growth. It's one of many tools that we use.

When the references to MagCan, NovAtel, Gainers, and others come, then I would also have to use that opportunity to say that 11 years ago this province was a remarkably different place. There were $4 billion a year structural deficits, there was a $25 billion accumulated debt, and only because of the courage of this government was that turned around. Now we find ourselves in a position of being accused by the opposition of not doing enough in the value-added sector.

I want to make it very clear that as the Minister of Economic Development and a member of this government never ever will money go into private businesses to grow them. I had my own business for some 11 years before I got into politics. I never asked the government for anything, nor do I expect did any of my colleagues. So if the member opposite or the other member for the NDS believes this is going to somehow get us to find money for businesses, I have to clarify that you're not there.

Where we want to deal with labour and labour issues is a very important point. Labour has become a big problem in Alberta for a specific reason. In the last 10 years we've led the country in growth at an average of 3 and a half to 4 per cent a year. Our unemployment rate sits – and I know the hon. minister of labour and human resources is here tonight – at about 4 and a half to 5 and a half per cent, which any economist knows is virtually zero unemployment, because of seasonably adjusted averages and those who choose not to work through retirement. You end up, then, with a position of these massive projects going ahead both in roadwork and oil sands and others and having a shortage of labour. So in order to address that, we have a program within our department that's shared by the Minister of Learning called the PNP program.

In specific, to answer your question about how we're addressing it, the PNP program allows Alberta businesses who cannot find adequate labour for what their job requirements are to go out to places in the world and find those. Now, that may be because of a skill set that doesn't exist in Alberta, or it may be because it's just an industry that's so white hot there are no employees there.

That program essentially speeds up immigration by allowing the businessperson to go over and identify somebody, give them a job, bring back the file to our department, which is sent to the federal government for a health check and a criminal check, which we fully support, and then the file is brought back to the department to be expedited. So it speeds up the process from two years to three months. The first year of that program was 400 test cases, oversubscribed. The second year was 400. We've renewed it again. So that's one way to address it.

The other way is that there has been a significant amount of money put into postsecondary education in the last four years for new spots, I think some 2,200 spots at NAIT and SAIT and some 4,200 – the Minister of Learning may correct me – at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary to deal with that.

The simple fact of the matter is that our economy is growing so much faster than our workforce that no matter what we do as a government – I know hon. members opposite would love us to do more – it's not going to catch up. So immigration is an answer to that puzzle. You're absolutely correct, hon. member.

Where we do run into problems is having people qualify with their particular trade or profession. That's a problem, and we are dealing with that. There's a multidisciplinary ministry including Learning, labour, ourselves, and one other that I can't recall to look at that specific question, but we have heard from Alberta businesses overwhelmingly that people who come here who claim to have skill sets had better be able to qualify to the very minimum Alberta levels. If they can't, that's not the fault of the government; it's the fault of the people who are training them in other countries. I know that you have cab drivers who say: I'm an engineer from a specific country; I can't get a job. Don't believe everything you hear, hon. member, because we make every effort to allow them to get their training certificates upgraded or pass to what level they need to be.

I don't know if there's a suggestion being made that we should just take things at face value, because I wouldn't do that, but I do agree with the hon. member that if there are hurdles that we are doing as a government, we have to eliminate them because immigration is the solution to our problem.

The other piece of the equation that I wanted to touch on is that federal immigration tells us that a good majority of new immigrants go to Vancouver, Toronto, or Montreal, and therein lies the heart of the problem. We have to figure out as a government how to get them and entice them here. I know that the rural development strategy of the hon. Member for Wainwright and the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake talks about that as well. It's a huge opportunity for rural Alberta as well as the province of Alberta.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thanks for those answers, but I want to go back to this skilled worker issue within Canada. I'm hoping that your committee is taking a look at the transferability of skills. I'm talking about tradespeople, you know, electricians, mechanics, carpenters: those kinds of areas. Right now we're hearing that one of the biggest roadblocks to get skilled workers from other parts of Canada into Alberta is that there isn't a proper recognition of their trades here. So is that committee looking at that specifically, and if it is, how soon can we expect some of these barriers to come down so that we're essentially a borderless country?

Mr. Norris: Well, I appreciate the thrust of the question. No, the committee is not specifically looking at that, but I will get further information for you about that.

More important, though, is that while we recognize immigration, we want to be able to have an economy that provides jobs for Albertans and allows them to get trained here and stay here as part of the solution to the problem. As a result, I know that the hon. Minister of Learning has worked very, very hard on increasing spaces to say: if you want to choose a trade in Alberta, that's a very noble thing to do, and you should do it here. I don't have the exact figures – we can get them to you – but I know from talking to him previously about this, because we share the labour file, that it's of utmost importance and that we have recognized that it's a twofold attack. Skilled labourers trained here need to stay here – it's a great economy that will keep them here – and immigration barriers have to be lowered.

I'm going to have to do some research, hon. member, as to how much is federal and how much is provincial.

8:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. I appreciate the level of detail in the answer.

Just one more on this particular issue. Do you recognize as a ministry that it is a problem in terms of recognition of transferability of trade skills interprovincially? Will you see that as something that you will at least look at in the next year?

Mr. Norris: The program that you're referring to falls within the Ministry of Learning, but I'm going to touch on it from a position of economic development. Yes, it is a problem. It is a problem when somebody in Saskatchewan has a harder time coming into Alberta and getting recognition than somebody coming from Uganda, for sake of example. That's something that we have to work on. After the next federal election, which I know the hon. member is very, very interested in, I'm hoping that we can get together with the federal government and look at removing interprovincial barriers as well as transborder barriers. You're exactly right about that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That was the answer I was looking for.

Now I'd like to talk a little bit about the focus that the ministry has on film production and investment. As a result of the most recent trip to Los Angeles and the one previously to promote Alberta as a film destination, do you have any hard facts on how many new films would be slated for Alberta or the impact that those visits had? Also, how do you believe that the newly created Alberta Film Commission Advisory Council has boosted the film and television sector?

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There were a number of questions there, so I'll attempt to answer them. If I don't get them all, I hope you'll indulge me.

At the outset, film production has been a real focus of this particular government, starting back with the now agriculture minister, who was then Community Development minister, following up now to myself and the hon. Community Development minister, who shares this file. We have identified the film industry as a real value-added winner in a number of different ways – knowledge-based, ties into tourism, showcases the province in a number of ways that other industries can't – and, as a result, have worked very hard on this.

I have taken three film-related missions, two to Los Angeles and one to England. The ones to Los Angeles bore fruit in the form of three productions, two of them in the Calgary area and one in the Edmonton area. So the tangible of those I can get in a written form. There were three that came out of it.

One of them, as a matter of fact, which is a real personal highlight of the trip for me, said that they wanted to shoot the Little House on the Prairie remake, a six-hour made-for-television movie, thought Alberta might be appropriate, but didn't know if there were any big rolling valleys because they thought it was mountains and Drumheller. I asked if they had been in the Camrose area or if they'd been in the Oyen area or that eastern central part of Alberta. They hadn't scouted there. They did, and they found out that it was exactly what they were looking for, combined with the western towns that are already set up naturally. So we've had some really big successes there, and we will continue to work on that.

I don't recall what the next part of your question was.

Ms Carlson: It was about the Alberta Film Commission Advisory Council, what it's done for the local industry in television and film.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think you're referring to the advisory board that was set up about a month ago.

I have to preface this. Most, if not all, industries that we deal with, especially through our department, have an advisory board. There is an agriculture advisory board, an oil and gas advisory board, a forestry advisory board, et cetera. What those are set up for, quite frankly, is to liaise with industry and find out what their needs are and bring them back to government. The film industry did not have one of those, so we took it upon ourselves to get one. The film commission is housed in my department. The film fund development program is housed in Community Development.

The film commission commissioner, who was hired about a year and a half ago, came to us and said, "We have an awful lot of interest in this particular industry. The liaison to government doesn't seem to be getting through. Can we have a commission?" We said: yes, of course we can.

It was established some two months ago, I believe, give or take. It's made up of, I think, 21 industry players – I can get the exact number – and some department people. I know that the ADM who's sitting here tonight is a co-chair of that commission. They have only had two meetings that I know of to date.

So I think the answer to your question would be that they have outlined what their goals are, we have outlined what our goals are, and now we're going to move forward together. So tangibles I can't answer with any knowledge, but I do know that we're very hopeful that it brings the same skills and expertise as other committees that we have.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to thank the minister for his answers and comments so far.

I have some questions specifically with respect to the rail line to Fort McMurray that has been discussed in the last week or so. Today I asked the Minister of Finance during question period why the $1.25 million contribution of the government to the feasibility study did not appear in the government's estimates, and she referred me to the hon. Minister of Economic Development. So I think that now is a good time to ask about that.

If it's not in the budget estimates of the department, Mr. Chairman, then my questions are where it will come from and why it was not included in these estimates. That leads me to another question, and that is essentially: when did this project and the decision to contribute to the feasibility study enter into the government's calculations, being that it's not only not in the budget, apparently, but also not in any of the Economic Development plans or business plans of the ministry?

Mr. Norris: Well, we can do this one of two ways, Mr. Chairman. We can have a discussion about something that is not in the budget in trying to help the hon. member become educated about this problem, or I could honestly say that it's not referred to in this budget year, and as a result I don't feel the need to answer it.

If you want to have a discussion about what the plan is, I can talk about that, but it's not referenced in this . . .

Chair's Ruling Debate on Estimates

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister and hon. members, the estimates pertain to what is before us. However, the chair has normally given a fairly open latitude for you to stray a little bit outside that scope. So while you're not obligated to respond to it, should you wish to, it is okay. Should you wish to provide a response in writing, that's okay as well. Should you decide not to deal with matters that are not in the estimates, that is okay as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: Mr. Chairman, you know, I would actually like to learn as much about this project as I can, so I would be happy to have the minister talk more broadly about the project, but I am particularly interested in the question that there is a government expenditure that's been announced by the Premier that doesn't appear to be in our budget. So I would submit that this is exactly the time that we should be asking about that question as well.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Well, all right. Fine. What we are involved in, to answer the hon. member's question, is a feasibility study. We do a number of them. I referenced them earlier to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. When industry comes to us with an idea or a concern or a problem and we believe it merits some government review because clearly we'll benefit from additional economic growth and new tax dollars, then we do it.

Where we're at now is a situation in northeastern Alberta with a vast amount of reserves that we want to access and a problem getting there because there's just so much activity. The road systems that were built some 20 years ago were not contemplating $50 billion worth of activity, the town of Fort McMurray booming from 12,000 to 60,000, and on and on it goes with pressures. So the department is working with a private-sector group to examine the whole transportation piece in northeastern Alberta, including surface roads, bridges, rail, et cetera, to look at what a solution might be. The solution may very well be an upgraded rail line, it may be work done to highway 63 or 881, but this is all part and parcel of the scope of the project.

Where we're at right now, hon. member, is we have committed to absolutely nothing, no dollars whatsoever in the go-forward of this project. The only money that is on the table that I can knowledgeably speak about is the $1.25 million that we've committed that's going to be matched by the private sector. That money is going into the feasibility study. At that point, like all other studies, it will come back to the government of Alberta and the appropriate ministers for review. We have no obligation whatsoever financially or factually to do anything after that report is given back to us. Nor as the minister who is leading the committee will I commit to anything here in the House tonight or outside the House.

So the answer to your question is: we've put $1.25 million into a study, which is nothing unusual. We've funded the Van Horne institute that operates out of the University of Calgary. We've worked with the petrochemical institute. We've worked with the forestry industry. We've worked with the tourism industry, the coal industry. And when they come to us and they say, "We've identified a problem; the government will be the beneficiary of this through additional economic activity and taxes," we sometimes lend our support financially and department-wise.

That's where we're at on this one right now, hon. member, and the government of Alberta categorically will never be in the train business or the rail business, I can guarantee you. That's not what this is looking at. This is looking at a comprehensive overall study of how to get northeastern Alberta where it needs to be with transportation links to access that vast resource that's up there.

Mr. Mason: I just want to indicate to the minister that, you know, I'm quite prepared to keep an open mind on this project. It seemed a little strange to me at first, but I'm certainly prepared to be convinced that it's economically viable.

My concern at this stage, Mr. Chairman, is more to do with the process that has been followed, because it does seem unusual. It seems like this has just come out of the blue. I noticed that the Premier had said in some of his comments that, you know, he's been thinking about this for 10 years. Nevertheless, it just seems to have very, very suddenly appeared on the government's agenda, and there's no trail of it if you look back into plans and budgets and so on.

So I guess I'm wondering if the government had not considered a preliminary feasibility study. Usually these are done before a full-scale feasibility study and are very much less expensive, probably a few tens of thousands of dollars. That stage seems to have been skipped, and we've gone right into a full-scale feasibility study. I'd like to know who's conducting the feasibility study and whether or not it's the private investors that are involved in the project and if the money is going to be given to them to conduct a feasibility study on their project. Then the next question is: once the feasibility study is done, I'd like to know when that might be expected and whether or not terms of reference for the feasibility study will be made public before the work is done.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Norris: Well, the fact of the matter is, hon. member, that this is not anything new. A brief bit of history. The hon. Member for Fort McMurray, the hon. Member from Vegreville-Viking, and myself met with a group of approximately 20 stakeholders. Department personnel were there to discuss the challenges that this group felt they faced as a consortium. It didn't represent a particular railway or trucking company or industry player. It was all members coming together to say: "Government of Alberta, we see a problem now, and we see a large one coming down the pike. With $50 billion worth of projects and more being approved all the time, there's an issue that not only exists now, but we have to deal with it." This was a year ago that this started.

Our department lent support in the form of strategic information and co-ordination with other government departments, and our assistant deputy minister who is with us tonight as well as the former deputy minister, who's now moved on to Innovation and Science, were involved with the project as well. The project has moved its way now, after a year, to the point where when the approach was made to us, we felt that there had been enough due diligence done and enough work done to get to the point where we could say: yes, this makes some sense to look further. So that's how we got to this point.

It's not unusual for our departments or mine specifically to get involved with industry on research and plans. There are budget allocations for that, some of them discretionary, some of them committed. But, for sake of example, an industry development branch, if we were to get a comment from the coal industry that they would like to look at the Grande Cache coal area and the feasibility therein – we don't have to do that now because, fortunately, Grande Cache coal is resurrected, and we're very, very grateful about that. But if it hadn't and we wanted to see what the opportunities were, then we would get involved in that as a study. This is no different.

You won't find a trail for any of these studies because throughout the budgeted year we have a general figure that we can draw on to say that if we have a budget that is required for a forestry survey, we'll find it. At the end of the year if that budget isn't used, the allocation is then returned. That's the way the process works. So you won't find a specific $1.25 million allocation, but you will find a general and industry, and that's contained in the documents that we're discussing tonight.

Mr. Mason: Just another question on this item, Mr. Chairman, and then I'd like to go on to a second item. If the $1.25 million for the feasibility study is not contained in this budget, will the minister then be making application to Treasury Board to fund that? If not, where will the money come from?

Mr. Norris: Well, again, I don't think the hon. member listened. We do have money in our budget existing for studies. If it goes outside the scope and the realm of what we have budgeted for, we may go to Treasury Board. That will come in due course, and then we'll all be able to discuss it at Public Accounts this time next year. The fact of the matter is – well, I presume you'll be here next year. I know we will. The answer is, again, that we do have money budgeted for this kind of research. If this falls in the scope of it, so be it. If not, we may go to Treasury Board.

Mr. Mason: I'd like to focus on the area of tourism. I did get an opportunity to ask the minister a question this morning in Public Accounts with respect to the tourism campaign that's currently underway. It's, I think, a Travel Alberta piece that has recently started to appear. The minister may want to respond to this in writing, but I would like to repeat some of the questions from Public Accounts.

I'd like to know the amount of this campaign and how much that relates to previous tourism advertising campaigns. I'd like to know if there's more than just the television component, whether it's a multimedia type of campaign, and what the objectives for the campaign are and whether or not they're going to be somehow measured. I'd like to know how the costs are shared. I understand from the minister's responses this morning that costs are shared with the private sector and that there may in fact as well be federal money as part of it. So I'd like a bit of a breakdown on that.

The other question, which I did raise this morning and that I'd like a little more detail on, is how the government makes decisions about engaging companies to provide this kind of advertising service. I understand from the minister that they do use – is it two companies?

– one for inside Alberta and one for outside, and they're separate. The minister is indicating yes, that I'm correct that there are two companies that they operate with. I recall that he said that it's a three-year rolling contract with a one-year sort of notice period, and again he's indicating that that's right.

I'd like to know a little bit more about that and whether or not other companies that are in the business have an opportunity to bid on this work and just what the process is with respect to that. Thank you.

8:50

The Deputy Chair: The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of questions there, so I'll try and address your overall concerns, and then if we don't get it, you can readdress the question to me. Does that sound reasonable? Okay.

The overall funding mechanism that we use for tourism is unique to Alberta, and it's called the STMC. The STMC was actually originally structured by the now Minister of Finance. The STMC is a model that the rest of Canada is now looking at with great envy.

What it does quite frankly is gets 14 members in the tourism business, whether they're operators of attractions or hotels or services, and puts them on a board, the same as the film advisory board we were referring to earlier. We then go back to them and say: as a government we have X number of dollars for you to spend; how would you spend it as industry experts? They come back with a plan that we have the final sign-off on.

The reason that we like the plan so much, hon. member, is because it engages the industry, it keeps us in touch with the people who are doing it day-to-day, and then we have the final say. So if there is a request for us to spend money on a $10 million balloon campaign over McMahon Stadium, we can say that doesn't make a lot of sense to us.

The answer to your question about the two contracts is that Economic Development Edmonton and Calgary Economic Development have formed a corporation called Travel Alberta International, or TAI. TAI is responsible for the marketing of Alberta outside of Alberta. They get some $6 million to do it. The contract was let – and I'm going to have to get exact numbers for you – some five year ago, I believe, and then renewed two years ago. The job that was being done was deemed to be excellent by industry players, i.e. the STMC, and our department. So that's fair because it involves the two major tourism players as well as the government.

The smaller contract you were referring to is called Travel Alberta In-Province. That's now held by a company called Parcom. I don't know how long they've had the contract for – and I'll get the exact details of it – but it is reviewed annually. It's a five-year contract, and I believe the review of that contract is coming up in one year.

So the answer to your question, hon. member, is that we will be reviewing that in one year. At that time, a decision will be made to (a) retain that company for the good work they've done or (b) go to tender.

When we go to tender, we'll have an RFP. The RFP will state: "The Alberta government has the desire to market Travel Alberta within Alberta, that we have about a $3 million budget, that these are what our requirements are. Please put your company's best assets together, and we'll review that." Not unlike any other contracts that are tendered. As a result, we keep it open and transparent. The documents are not available, I don't believe, to the public, but as to the exact dates of them I can get you those without any problem. I will get you those if you desire to see them. I gather from the indication that I'm getting that one year is left on the existing Travel

Alberta In-Province, and Travel Alberta International is one year as well. They're concurrent contracts.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to do a follow-up question on tourism. The minister knows that I've long supported changing the way the hotel tax is collected and having the industry itself have more control over that tax. I've spoken before about perhaps having that revenue designated to a delegated authority organization that takes the politics out of some of the decision-making and puts it back in the hands of industry, if not the entire tax then some portion of it. Does the minister support that idea? Is he looking at it? Where do we think this is going to go?

Mr. Norris: That is a very, very good question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora chaired a committee with the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and the hon. Member for West Yellowhead and others who are not here tonight, and they did come back to the conclusion that in order to get Alberta's marketing dollars to the level that would be competitive with our biggest competitors – British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec – we could look at using that as a method.

That proposal made its way through our caucus to Treasury Board. We were informed by Treasury Board, and rightly so, that it's a policy of the government not to dedicate taxes. So we were asked to come back with a different proposal, which we are doing now, that recognizes nondedication of taxes but some way to tie it to the amount raised by the hotel tax. So what you will have, I guess, is a benchmark generated by the hotel tax still going into general revenue and then money flowing to a department, perhaps mine or another, that is relative to that but not specifically dedicated.

The fear of dedicating taxes is that there are a number of different ways that could happen. The premiums on health care, for instance, now go to general revenue, et cetera. So we want the flexibility to be able to use that money in general revenue but recognize that the hotel tax has some role to play.

I thank the hon. member for her persistence on the question, because we will get to a solution. We do have a cross-ministry initiative working now. My deputy's dealing with the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Deputy Minister of Revenue, and the Deputy Minister of Community Development to look at that question. The answer will not come quickly because it's a very, very major policy shift, and as a result we need to examine all aspects of it.

So I think that I would ask the hon. member to stay tuned. The good news is that we did get another $5 million this year and for the next three years out, bringing our total to close to $25 million, that started at $17 million three years ago. So we're getting there. But with regard to the hotel tax converting to a marketing levy, we're not there yet.

Ms Carlson: I'll comment on that. Twenty-five million is less than half of what B.C. is spending, so, you know, while it's an increase, it doesn't seem very substantive to me.

There are a couple of examples in this province of where taxes have been dedicated, and I point you toward the hunting and fishing licences, which go to the ACA and also the tire tax. So I don't see any difference between that and the hotel tax. It was a surcharge that was levied at that particular time, and I see no difference between the need for dedicated revenues there as there are from the other areas. I would encourage him to continue to work on that and all members of the Legislature to take a strong look at that.

I have another question. That's in terms of what Economic Development's plans are to support and enhance the north/south corridor. That includes, perhaps, a train.

Mr. Norris: Well, before I answer the hon. member's question, I'm going to revert to the tourism question for a minute. The hon. Member for West Yellowhead has brought forward a private member's motion. I believe it's Motion 506. Motion 506 talks about that, so we'll have a very healthy debate in the House about that because that's the way we do things in this particular government.

But the B.C. example is a bit spurless, and I'll tell you why. They do things differently in British Columbia. There is a general funding that comes to the tourism ministry, which I believe in British Columbia is called enterprise, competition, and development. It's not a tourism ministry. They also allow jurisdictions to have a separate tax, a hotel tax, which is regionalized into four areas: Whistler-Blackcomb, Vancouver, Vancouver Island, and the interior. So money is generated in those areas and flows back to the municipalities.

Talking to my counterpart there as to whether it's a good or a bad idea, he said that it's a way to raise money, but he wasn't in favour of it, having tried it, because the messaging that comes out of the province is very fragmented. The interior of British Columbia is tackling entirely different markets than the coast, as is Whistler, and you end up with three or four different messages, whereas if you've seen – and you alluded to our messaging earlier, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. We have one message coming out about Travel Alberta. It's a remarkable opportunity and a great place to be, and we can control it the way we'd like to in partnership with industry, who take ads with us. So I think we're going to stick with our path and then, hopefully, get the funding equivalent up to where it needs to be.

Your question second to that was about the Edmonton/Calgary corridor, a remarkable story by any measure, the fastest growing economic region in North America, second only, I guess, to Luxembourg. So massive amounts of growth and success, massive amounts of challenges. What we continue to do through that KPMG study is try and identify with the cities of Edmonton and Calgary and Red Deer and our regional alliances what are the challenges. There are some fairly significant things coming out. Part of the way to tackle it is through regional economic alliances. In the capital area there's one called ACRA, which is the capital region. I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands and, I believe, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry are well aware of them because they both served on them, I think. Calgary has a similar economic development organization, and Red Deer belongs to CAEP, Central Alberta Economic Partnership. What these organizations do is tell the government on a regular basis what the growth challenges and the barriers are. So recognizing the massive amount of growth that's come out of that particular corridor, it does demand our attention, and we're giving it in that particular way.

9:00

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Is Economic Development hooked up to the SuperNet? If so, how much are you charged? How much do you pay your service provider, and who is it?

Mr. Norris: I'm not sure I heard the beginning part, but first may I inform the House, Mr. Chairman, of some remarkable developments tonight? The Edmonton Oilers have won 3-1. So now if they win their next game and Nashville loses the next two, economic development in Edmonton is going to go through the roof because we'll have the playoffs, thank God.

Your question about the SuperNet. I didn't hear the first part, but I believe you must know that the SuperNet falls under the Ministry of Innovation and Science. I see the minister here; he's probably going to discuss it when he has his turn at bat. We don't have an economic involvement in it, if that's what you're referring to.

Ms Carlson: Are you hooked up to it? That was my question.

Mr. Norris: To the SuperNet? Well, every municipality in Alberta eventually will be.

I want to say one thing. The Member for Wainwright and the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, who brought forward the rural development strategy, understand the SuperNet's vast potential for rural development. We will be attached to the SuperNet just by default, being in a municipal building.

Ms Carlson: That gets to the heart of my question there. As a municipal building then, does it come within your budget to pay for the hookup or at least the service provider? If so, could you tell me where I'd find that in the budget book?

Mr. Norris: No, I can't answer the question, so I will attempt to get it. The IT for the government of Alberta flows in a number of different ways. A lot of it goes through the Minister of Government Services, and a lot of it goes through the Minister of Innovation and Science. So the answer to your question is yes, we have a budget for IT within our department to provide for things such as personal BlackBerry computers, phones, et cetera. I don't know who our service provider is. I can find out, but I suspect it probably runs through the Minister of Government Services. Anybody up there want to offer something? Is that roughly the right idea? They're all shaking their head, no. You're supposed to say yes. Okay.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, if you could just provide some detail, then, for us, divide out some of the IT spending, that would be helpful.

I think my last question for the evening is going to be a little bit on rural development. We've talked before about your plans to expand tourism into rural communities as a way of looking at helping economic development in those rural areas. We all know in this Assembly that they've suffered some impacts over the past decade, and while the minister and I differ on the impact of having taken regional offices out of rural areas, certainly I still say that there was some impact there. So in addition to the possible potential for value added on the tourism side, what else is your department doing to help revitalize rural Alberta?

The Deputy Chair: May I just advise everybody that the one hour has elapsed. If anybody else wishes to participate in the estimates, they are able to do so now.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Norris: Well, seeing that the hour has lapsed, Mr. Chairman, I'll keep my answer brief. Very simply, yes. The answer to your question is yes. We understand that the biggest problem with tourism in Alberta is the migration west. People come to Calgary to see the Stampede or other opportunities there – the Calgary Zoo, Heritage Park – then they go into the Rockies. They tend to go west.

The same thing with Edmonton. We want to make them go east to Bonnyville or Lac La Biche to see the mission or to see the Drumheller badlands or to see the remarkable Iron Horse Trail in the Bonnyville-St. Paul area.

The rural development strategy, that the members for Wainwright and Innisfail-Sylvan Lake co-chaired, does speak to that. Part of the new money that we have, hon. member, in answer to your question, is to look at rural development in a different way of combining tourism, and that will be in product development. That may be in some strategic help for them to get their product ready to be marketed. That may be as simple as Travel Alberta travelling out and saying: here's how you market your product; here's how you do a newspaper ad. All those things are part of our plan, and I think that to date Travel Alberta has done some – how many road shows would you suggest? Five? Five to date. They go as far north as High Level and Fort Chip and anywhere else in the province that requires it to help with that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just thought of one more question, and it's with regard to tourism again. What has the impact of the Canadian dollar been on the tourism industry over the past year in terms of its relative relationship to the U.S. dollar?

Mr. Norris: Well, it would be very hard to quantify the American dollar. Suffice it to say that it has been a challenge; there's no doubt. That's why this industry to me is so particularly interesting. But we've also been faced with mad cow, SARS, a national airline that's in turmoil – a bankrupt national carrier doesn't help tourism; I can tell you that – and what you mentioned, hon. member. The American dollar is still advantageous to us, and we use it in our marketing to say, "Stay for three nights and pay for two," those kinds of things. It does go up and down, but it is still an advantage.

I don't know how to quantify that without taking out some of the other pieces, but I will give it some thought and get you a written answer.

Ms Carlson: Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the minister's answers to the questions on the issues that I've raised. I did want to take this opportunity, however, to make a brief statement with respect to the Fort McMurray rail project, which I continue to believe is a very curious development indeed.

First of all, I'd like to indicate that no mention is made in the three-year capital plan in Budget 2004 of a rail link to Fort McMurray or even a feasibility study. Further, there's no mention of the Fort McMurray rail link in the government's 20-year strategic plan, which was released two weeks ago. There hasn't even been a government news release put out with anything to do with a Fort McMurray rail link or a provincial contribution to a feasibility study. There's no mention of a Fort McMurray rail link in the three-year business plan for the Ministry of Economic Development or in the business plan of any other government ministry that I've been able to find. The contribution of $1.25 million for the feasibility study is not included in the 2004-05 budget estimates for the Ministry of Economic Development.

I found the minister's answers to be a little bit contradictory on that point, that he may find some of the money within existing programs. So the question that remains in my mind is: was this really anticipated in the development of the budget? If not, what's going to be cut in order to pay for it? There are no increases in the line items in the Economic Development budget estimates that would allow for a $1.25 million contribution. By funding the feasibility study, something else will be cut, unless it is expensed as a supplementary requisition. Suddenly, Mr. Chairman, we're committed to a $1.25 million feasibility study, and if statements by the government are to be believed, $300 million may be committed towards this venture, which may include a rail link or perhaps a toll road to Fort McMurray; perhaps both, I guess. Meanwhile, out of nowhere there's this company with clear connections to the Tories, including Mr. Rod Love, the Premier's former chief of staff, as a consultant. It really raises a question of why we have this project suddenly on the front burner.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, it would seem that infrastructure investment, including feasibility studies, are generally not within the purview of the Economic Development ministry. Since we're talking about rail, this ought to be within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transportation. So the question really arises: why is the Minister of Economic Development even handling the file? Even by the standards of this government all of this is rather strange and peculiar.

Another puzzling thing, Mr. Chairman. Normally when the government decides to undertake a major capital investment, a preliminary feasibility study is done prior to a full-blown feasibility study. A preliminary feasibility study is publicly tendered by the government and costs in the range of a hundred thousand dollars or so. The preliminary feasibility study for the proposed Meridian dam near Medicine Hat is a good example of this.

So why should it cost so much just to study rail and road links to Fort McMurray? We'd like to know what exactly is going to be produced for this considerable investment of public funds. Why wasn't this large expenditure of public funds tendered? Who is paying for Mr. Love's consulting services? Will any of the public funds directly or indirectly end up being paid in commission to Mr. Love or his consulting company?

These are all questions, Mr. Chairman, that over time will demand answers. Thank you.

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Chairman, I know that in the interest of time people wanted to wrap up, but there was so much of a drive-by smearing there that I am compelled to answer. I'm somewhat disappointed. I have to say that not 20 minutes ago the hon. member was suggesting that he enjoyed listening to the answers about the project and would keep an open mind, when clearly he came with nothing of the kind. So I could sit down and say nothing, but I'm not going to do that because there was so much damaging commentary in that that I'm going to address it. I'm going to address it for him to hear now, and I'm going to say that you've damaged the discussion and dialogue we had. From here on in probably I will just give written answers. So if that was the game plan, congratulations. You accomplished it.

Your comment is a number of different ones, so I'll start with: where does it fit in? I said earlier that our budget contains budgets for strategic initiatives throughout the year. We don't know throughout the year what's going to come up, so we have money budgeted for it. This particular project came to us in an interesting way, through private enterprise who wanted to look at us growing with it. It sped up faster than we thought because of the massive concerns about cost overruns, the fact that three new projects have signed up in the last three months, that some 14 billion dollars' worth of new investment is now on the books. As a government we said that it is imprudent in every single way, shape, and form not to deal with the concerns of the industry: why are they worried about that?

So where does it fit in in the overall government plan? Well, I'll tell you. Here's our document. It's the value-added strategy Securing Tomorrow's Prosperity. I'll just highlight a few of the ways that it fits in with our plan that don't relate to the business plan that you are looking at, which is a very technical document.

Our strategic plan has now been approved and will be released I believe on the 21st of April. The first one of many things that it calls for is that the Alberta government look at ways to improve ability to educate.

So are you interested, or should I stop?

Mr. Mason: I am.

Mr. Norris: No. You know what? I'm not going to bother.

The Deputy Chair: Any further questions?

After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Economic Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense $57,509,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Department of Economic Development and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sumnot exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Economic Development: operating expense, $57,509,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:17 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, April 1, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/04/01

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We confidently ask for strength and encouragement in our service to others. We ask for wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Ms Calahasen: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today on behalf of my colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly the Kikino Métis settlement council and Elders Committee. They are here today to observe the proceedings and to witness the introduction of Bill 30, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004, which will be introduced later by our Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. I ask that they stand as their names are indicated. Seated in your gallery are Floyd Thompson, the chairman; Denise White, councillor; Randy Hardy, councillor; Henry White, elder; Reuben Pruden, elder; Elmer Erasmus, elder; Harry Hope, elder; Harrison Cardinal, elder; Tyrell Erasmus, youth; Leslie Erasmus, councillor. I'd ask that they all stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly this afternoon my favourite high-energy alderman for ward 6, Craig Burrows. Would the alderman please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a former political opponent and now a solid political ally who is helping the area of south Calgary get much-needed infrastructure. He's also known on city council as Dr. No, a tight-fisted alderman on spending policies. He's the alderman for ward 12. Could I ask Ric McIver to stand and please receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to note a number of my friends and former colleagues here today, and I'm going to introduce one of them to you and through you to all members of this Assembly. He's the alderman for ward 11, which covers part of Calgary-Currie and immediately south of the ward that I used to represent. We worked on many issues together. He has one of Alberta's most popular radio talk shows, the Sunday morning gardening show on QR 77. He's our horticulture expert, resident green thumb guy on city council, and famous for his many environmental initiatives. May I ask Alderman Barry Erskine to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I have a second guest that I would also like to introduce here, also a friend and fellow elected official. He's no stranger to this House, having served as an MLA here for a number of years. He's now on Edmonton's city council. He's also on the provincial secondary suite building regulations review committee with me. May I ask Ed Gibbons, councillor for ward 3, to stand and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly as well.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you 40 members of the Girl Guides of Canada, Alberta council, and 4-H club who are participating in the Alberta Girls' Parliament. They are accompanied today by head adviser, Edie Jubenville, and leaders Sherry Gurjar, Claudette Vague, Bernadette O'Connor, and Vanessa Padoani. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure and a privilege to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly students and parents and teachers from the Ardmore school from the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency. There are 33 students that are here today, and they are accompanied by their teachers, Mrs. Jackie Wakaruk, Mr. Alan Middleton, and parents Val Buckingham, Charlotte Brosseau, Carol Gillett, Tracey Hofer, Gloria Pura, Sonia MacDonald, Therese Scott, Darryl Waterfield, Cindy Wilson, Lise Langridge, and Sylvia Lavoie. I'd ask that my guests please stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce today a graduate of Ardrossan high who is currently at the University of Alberta taking arts and thinking about moving into the political science area. She's also a vice-president of Students for a Stronger Alberta. I'd ask Julie Bohaychuk to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently it was my pleasure to visit and speak to a class of political science students at Augustana University College. Today those same students are with us to find out what really goes on in the Legislature and what really goes on in government. These 31 students are accompanied by Dr. Roger Epp, who is their instructor. Dr. Epp is also the academic dean at Augustana University College, soon to be the Augustana faculty of the University of Alberta. They're sitting in the public gallery, and I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly the Hanley family, who reside in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. They are seated in the public gallery. Michael Hanley is here because he's concerned about the long waiting lists for surgery in our province, and he's brought with him his wife, Barbara Hanley, and their three children, Miles, Marissa, and Aaron. I'm very pleased that it's spring break in Edmonton this week and the whole family is able to join him today. They're here to observe the proceedings. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a gentleman from the Grande Prairie-Smoky constituency who has served Albertans for a number of years, both in the Legislative Assembly and on numerous boards and in other municipal and regional authorities, and is currently the chair of the Peace regional health authority. I would ask Marvin Moore to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am really pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly members of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta who are in Edmonton for two and a half days for their quarterly meeting. The council's mandate is to communicate with seniors and seniors service providers in Alberta and then advise government through recommendations to the Minister of Seniors on what they have heard. As chair I really appreciate their commitment to the seniors of Alberta.

Jim Acton, from Edmonton and area; Diane Caleffi, Calgary and area; Ellen Kemp, east-central region; Dennis King, southern region; Leonard Olson, northwest region; Evelyn Onofryszyn, west-central region; Janet Tomalty, northeast region; Dr. Sandra Hirst, Alberta's universities; Dr. David Belcher, Alberta Medical Association; and our very valuable staff we could not do so well without: Dianne Laird, our manager, and Jackie Katan, our administrative co-ordinator. Please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Coal Bed Methane

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Coal bed methane could be of huge value to Alberta, or it could be an environmental and social disaster. Farmers and ranchers are nervous about its impacts on land, air, and water. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Given that over a thousand coal bed methane wells have already been drilled and that even as we speak many more are being drilled, how many wells is this government prepared to allow before proper coal bed methane regulations are in place?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, not only are appropriate regulations in place now, world-best regulations are in place now for the drilling of natural gas and the drilling of petroleum products and hydrocarbon products. The ability for us to work with a world leading regulator, a world's best regulator such as the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, has brought fabulous benefits to this province. With respect to discussions specifically of coal bed methane, or gas in coal, we're actually going to be in the process of consulting about this new type of product.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this new type of gas is found in the coal beds throughout Alberta. Alberta is literally covered with coal, from Manyberries to Keg River and Paddle Prairie. Inside those coal beds our early experience indicates that we are not going to have the issues that we have seen in the United States.

For example, Mr. Speaker, in Powder River basin in Wyoming there was a tremendous discharge of water associated with the production of natural gas. That is not occurring in our production of mid-level coal bed methane. In fact, we have invited, as has the industry, many people who are going to see this unfold and grow so that there's total awareness, total information, and total transparency as Albertans share in the benefit of yet another great resource.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given the commitment to total transparency, will the minister then confirm here and now that committee members in this consulting process will have full access to all relevant records kept by the EUB on coal bed methane drilling and production in Alberta?

Mr. Smith: Yes.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Finally, to the same minister: why is that same multistakeholder consultative committee prohibited from addressing the crucial issue of landowner compensation paid by the companies drilling these wells?

Mr. Smith: The member gets going so well on our last day here and then just kind of breaks down at the end. He knows full well that that's a commercial issue and is clearly covered in the rules that exist today. All he has to do is look at the process that's in place.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Emergency Preparedness

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Senate Committee on National Security and Defence released a report entitled National Emergencies: Canada's Fragile Front Lines. This report shed light on an emergency preparedness system in Alberta that, for all its strengths, is suffering from a lack of resources, a lack of support, and a lack of co-ordination. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What has the minister or his department done to address concerns from officials like Bob Black, director of the office of emergency preparedness for Edmonton, who claims that Emergency Management Alberta's policies are leading to, quote, poor co-ordination across the province?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad the Leader of the Official Opposition brought up this issue, because the comments that were made by the particular individual are a year and a half late, premature in terms of what it was that was said, misinformed, and simply incorrect.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How does the minister justify Emergency Management Alberta's policy of treating major cities like Edmonton and Calgary the same as small hamlets for emergency and planning purposes?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it was my pleasure right here in the city of Edmonton in December, where the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada joined myself and the Minister of Infrastructure in opening a model for all of Canada. I want to in fact quote, if I could, the Deputy Prime Minister when she says – and I will table this – that this Alberta model is the first of its kind in Canada, and it's a model for every other province in Canada to follow, and it's right here in the city of Edmonton. I'm very proud of it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why does this government provide funding for emergency services and preparation to small communities but none to cities, even though most Albertans live in cities?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, the preamble was simply not true once again. In fact, in this past year $1.8 million has gone to municipalities in terms of dealing with things to be able to plan for, respond to, and recover from. Just before the new year the American ambassador visited again the emergency operation centre that we host right here in the city of Edmonton, and his comment was: it is comforting to know that the province of Alberta is so far in advance in its good effort in emergency preparedness.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Appeals Commission

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a memo dated January 6, 2003, from Mr. George Pheasey, chief appeals commissioner, to all hearing chairs and appeals commissioners regarding MLAs appearing before the Appeals Commission, there is this quote: "At two previous Hearing Chair meetings, concerns were raised regarding MLA's and/or Minister's appearing at hearings." My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What are those concerns regarding MLAs or ministers appearing before the Appeals Commission?

Mr. Dunford: I think it was a letter from the chief appeals commissioner, if I heard the preamble right. If he's on a fishing trip, I guess that we'll see what the supplementaries bring.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. In this memo it states – and this is from George Pheasey, the chief appeals commissioner . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, we have no preambles. Get to the question.

Mr. MacDonald: "I will then advise our Minister with a request that he/she discuss the matter with the individual MLA." How can the minister be at arm's length from the Appeals Commission when this information is in this memo?

Mr. Dunford: I'm not at arm's length from the Appeals Commission. The Appeals Commission is part of our ministry. That was part of the reform that we went through, you know, in the last couple of years in terms of how workers' compensation would be administered in this province. The imperative was to move the Appeals Commission from WCB, so it found a home within Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why was this issue of MLAs appearing or not appearing before the Appeals Commission not discussed publicly in the last two reviews of the WCB act that were conducted in this province?

Mr. Dunford: I've just heard a little aside from one of the chairs of the committees: it simply never came up.

If he is trying to infer something, I wish he would be direct and just come out and say. What is on your mind, hon. member? We'll try to deal with it. But, again, this is the same hon. member that we've all gotten to know and some of us even love, I suppose, but with innuendo, inferences always around the little issue instead of dealing with it directly. You know, I don't know how many times I've heard from the opposition about coming clean. Well, maybe it's time that he came clean.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Rail Link to Fort McMurray

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A $1.25 million contribution by the ministry of economic development and trade to a company fronted by the Premier's former chief of staff isn't in the ministry budget. It's not in the government three-year business plan or in the 20-year strategic plan. Earlier today I wrote to the Auditor General about the apparent failure of the government to follow its own tendering rules. My question is to the Minister of Finance. As the minister responsible for the province's finances does she support the request for an investigation by the Auditor General prior to releasing the government's $1.25 million contribution to this new company?

Mrs. Nelson: First of all, Mr. Speaker, let's get the record straight. In the estimates that were up before the House last night for the Department of Economic Development, the minister clearly said that there's a category that allows them to go into feasibility studies under business development investment, under, I think, vote 4 in the estimates of that department. Was this a line item identified in there? No. They never are because these opportunities come up throughout the year and they're funded through that category.

Insofar as the Auditor General's review he will be beginning the audit process probably in the next few days of all departments, of all ministries of this government, and he will validate the appropriateness of the expenditures that have taken place within those departments.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister said last night that he may have to come to Treasury Board to find all of the money, will the minister tell the House whether or not rules that require public tendering of government contracts were followed in the $1.25 million being provided to the Athabasca Oil Sands Transportation Corp. and its front man, Mr. Love?

Thank you.

Mr. Norris: With all due respect to the hon. member opposite, if he has a question for the Ministry of Economic Development, he could probably look at me and ask me, and I'll tell him, and I'll give you the exact answer, Mr. Speaker.

In our department there are two methods of operating these kinds of opportunities that we're experiencing right now. One of them is if the department itself chooses to examine an opportunity for Albertans and Alberta companies. Then we would look for a company to work with us, and we would do a request for proposal.

The other opportunity, Mr. Speaker, is when a company comes to us and says: we believe that this is in the best interests of Albertans to create jobs, new revenue, new taxes. In that case, we have what's called a granting mechanism, which falls under our industry development department.

The hon. member asked last night, and he's asking again today

...

Speaker's Ruling

Oral Question Period Practices

The Speaker: We're going to go on to the third question. As I understand in reading the Hansard from last night, there are two hours available for each of the estimates. Two hours were not even spent on this department last night. We're not going to use the time of question period to go back to another department. I also understand that these estimates were passed.

The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. Will the Finance minister put a stop-payment on her colleague's $1.25 million cheque until proper tendering procedures are followed? If not, why not?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, for the third time the Minister of Economic Development has gone through the process of evaluation that they use within their department to determine whether they get involved in an assessment process that is not unusual. If the hon. member would like him to repeat that, I would ask the Minister of Economic Development to please rise and go through the process slowly so the hon. member opposite can get it.

The Speaker: No. You'll need the permission of the chair.

The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Cold Lake Fish Fry

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The infamous Cold Lake fish fries are known throughout Alberta and across Canada as a northeastern Alberta delicacy and a signature trademark of the city of Cold Lake. So it is with great concern that I question the future of the annual Cold Lake Chamber of Commerce fish fry. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Why are the organizers of this annual fundraising event being told that they cannot hold a fish fry this year?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, I know that this good MLA is not on a fishing trip. In fact, we are not preventing the fish fry from happening this summer. We're only trying to find how we're going to approve it, and you can be sure, hon. member, that you will get the approval.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly appreciate the response that I got from the minister, but I do have one last question for him. Given that the fish consumed is purchased from local commercial fishermen, can the minister assure me that as he reviews these regulations common sense will prevail so that not only this fish fry but other fish fries will not be jeopardized in the province?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, in this House, in this government we do operate with a lot of common sense.

Now, in this particular case it also involves federal legislation, so it is complicated, but we are within the process.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, are you finished?

Mr. Ducharme: Yes, sir.

Highway 3

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, in consultation with the municipality of Coleman Alberta Transportation endorsed a south route for highway 3 from the B.C. border to the Frank slide all the way back in 1977. Sometime in 2003, however, this government decided to conduct another functional planning study on highway 3 to determine whether a northern or a central route would be more suitable. As it turns out, the study has suddenly recommended the consideration of a very controversial northern route. To the Minister of Transportation: given that the south route has been gazetted since 1977, why has this ministry suddenly decided to revisit this decision?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, no decisions have been made on any changes in any corridor. There were various presentations from elected officials in that area in terms of safety, efficiencies, and as a result of their approaches to their MLA and to our department we are studying some of their proposals at least.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: why were area residents not informed of this study until an open house in January of 2004, which was so poorly advertised that few residents even knew that alternate routes were being considered?

Mr. Stelmach: I'm kind of perplexed here, Mr. Speaker, because there was not only an open house, but through the good help of the local MLA there was a large gathering at a chamber of commerce meeting, which was a headline for that week in the local paper, also discussions ongoing amongst elected officials and residents, and certainly a number of presentations made to the local MLA.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: given that this government has purchased much of the land for the south route and area residents have purchased land and developed homes where the north route has been proposed, why has this government suddenly changed its mind?

Mr. Stelmach: Again, Mr. Speaker, no decisions have been made. Perhaps the hon. member does realize that the province at times buys land in some situations as much as 30 years ahead of its time. One of the examples of that is all of the land we purchased for the two ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary, and that was the very visionary government of the day under Premier Lougheed.

Reforestation

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, Alberta's forests and forest companies are important to the provincial economy. In Whitecourt-Ste. Anne Alberta Newsprint, West Fraser, Millar Western, Weyerhaeuser, and hundreds of contractors are means of employment and investment. These same forests and the forest companies are being significantly impacted by a number of natural factors, such as wildfires. When wildfires burn through an area, they can have a devastating effect on existing forests as well as areas that were recently reforested by companies. Can the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development advise the House what funds from the department's budget are allocated to reforesting these areas?

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much. Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question. Reforestation is and will . . .

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Practices

The Speaker: Hon. minister, it seems to me that we've already approved the minister's budget earlier this week. Is this not correct?

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, we have.

The Speaker: Time was spent on determining what was in the minister's budget, and the Assembly has approved it?

Mr. Cardinal: It's approved, yes.

The Speaker: And all members can participate? And this is question period?

So let's go on to the second one.

Mr. VanderBurg: Forget it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

2:00 Inspection of Long-term Care Facilities

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the ways government can ensure high-quality, safe care for our seniors is to regularly inspect long-term care facilities. The state of Massachusetts takes this seriously, with unannounced inspections of all facilities done by a professional team of nurses, social workers, and dietitians. Inspections can take up to a week. All aspects are inspected, measured, and evaluated, and compliance must be met to have the operating licence renewed. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. When can Alberta seniors expect to have an independent body of professionals conducting thorough, surprise inspections of long-term care facilities?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it surprises me that the hon. member would bring an example from the state of Massachusetts and suggest that we bring it here. Maybe we're finally getting through to her with respect to trying to bring in ideas from other jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, we do have a facility review committee that does review facilities on a rotational basis. They enter facilities unannounced, and reports are provided. The work is capably done by individuals within the department, and the people that are appointed to this particular committee, I can assure you, do very good work.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. It's government requirement, Mr. Minister.

When will Albertans be able to access published inspection reports on these long-term care facilities, as the Americans already can?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, again I'm surprised that the hon. member would bring forward an American example to benchmark Alberta to.

When complaints are made, the review committee goes in. The review committee also goes in on an unannounced basis. Corrections are made with the facility operators. It's done with the cooperation of regional health authorities as well.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. There's nothing in place here that's the same.

Given that Massachusetts reviews every three months the prescription drugs that each long-term care resident is taking with the intent to reduce the use of unnecessary medication, when can Alberta seniors expect regular review of their drugs?

Mr. Mar: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I think this is quite a good suggestion. If the hon. member wants to bring forward the regulations or the procedure by which such drugs are reviewed for seniors, I'd be more than interested in seeing it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Ground Ambulance Services

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents in rural Alberta are expressing concerns about the announced program of transferring ground ambulance governance and funding from municipalities to regional health authorities. My first question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. How will this transaction affect the delivery of ambulance services to people who live on outlying farms and in rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, in Budget 2004 $13 million was announced for the ministry of health for ambulance service delivery; next year, $55 million.

Let me say this, Mr. Speaker. In many municipalities across Alberta the system is working excellently just the way it is right now. We want to build on that excellence in this way: provide money to municipalities through regional health authorities so that, in fact, it will give municipalities greater breathing room and, at the same time, the excellent ambulance service that they have been enjoying. I see this as an enhancement to an already very good ambulance service.

Mr. Jacobs: To the same minister: given that many rural services are fire/ambulance emergency oriented, how will this program change affect municipal delivery and administration?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, obviously, we're looking for a seamless approach. Once again, if the system is working well and it's not broken, I see this additional money going into helping RHAs. I see a contract from an RHA going to a municipality if the system is working well and it's efficient today. If there's a way to build on that efficiency, certainly we want to do that.

I do know that within Alberta, rural and urban, there are very good systems in place. This money, I know, is welcomed by municipal leaders in terms of helping them with some of the pressures they're facing within this province.

Mr. Jacobs: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: will there be rural grassroots involvement and representation on the implementation committee?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That type of consultation is so critically important. I'm going to ask the Minister of Health to supplement specifically on this point.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes. We, of course, understand the need to deal with regional health authorities and their representatives as well as the municipalities involved as we begin this transfer. Exactly how the transfer and implementation will take place has not yet been fully determined, but I can advise the hon. member in this House that beginning on April 6 there will be representatives of regional health authorities and municipalities working together to identify some of the opportunities and some of the challenges involved in this transfer.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Kingsway General Insurance Inc.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance: given that Kingsway General Insurance has temporarily discontinued writing new business in the portion of the province north of latitude 55 effective January 1, 2004, has Kingsway General alerted the minister that they will now resume writing insurance policies in Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member opposite knows, we've been in a legal situation with this particular company, so I'm reluctant to make comment on their operations.

Mr. MacDonald: Given that this has nothing to do with any legal situation, to the same minister: what effect does Kingsway General's action of failing to write new policies for consumers affect the auto consumers in Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray who are trying to insure a vehicle, whether it's for business or for pleasure?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, I'm reluctant to make comment on the relationship with this as it has been before the courts.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that on Tuesday in this House the minister stated that the insurance industry is "looking forward to the new structure," why isn't Kingsway General Insurance on board with your reforms? Why are they walking away from part of this market?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, clearly, 90 per cent or 97 per cent of the industry, in fact, are looking forward to the new structure. They're anxious to see a new go-forward plan come out of all of the deliberations and the consultations that have taken place over the last year. This has been a very difficult file for everyone concerned, and they'd like to see an end to it and a new beginning start. With the leadership of the Member for Medicine Hat at the helm of the implementation team that's exactly what is coming forward. We're very close to having the new system in place, and we'll be operational this summer. I have explained that to the hon. member opposite a number of times. The industry is looking forward to a new structure and an end to the controversy that we've had this last year.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Oil Sands Royalties

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of millions and potentially billions of dollars in provincial revenues hang in the balance because of a dispute between Suncor and the government over whether their proposed Fire Bag oil sands project or venture is a separate project or an extension of their existing operation. Oil sands projects already receive excessively generous royalty holidays on their capital costs, allowing them to pay few if any royalties for many years after the project construction. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Why would the government design a royalty holiday regime with so many loopholes in it that Suncor can take the position that their Fire Bag project is simply an extension of their existing operation?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it would only come from that side when someone would criticize $50 billion of capital investment in this province, attracting the largest migration of people to a province in the history of this entire country.

Particular to the details of this situation I'll ask the Minister of Energy to respond.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, again, the member's improper, inaccurate preamble that it's an excessively generous royalty structure – it is not. It is a fair and equitable royalty structure that, as the Minister of Finance has appropriately stated, has not only attracted the investment, but two things happen with a growing economy: one, investment pours in and, secondly, people go to work. In fact, there are over 470,000 new jobs since the Member for Calgary-Elbow became Premier Ralph Klein, or however I'm supposed to say that. Investment, has doubled. Retail sales have doubled.

With respect to the specific issue of the oil sands royalty and our discussions with the company those discussions are ongoing. They are an interpretation of the transition agreement and the interpretation of the oil sands royalty regulation. But I must emphasize that this government, this leader, and certainly this minister will take a very, very hard stand to protect and further the royalty interests of Albertans, as they own this great resource.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Finance again: how many billions of dollars could be lost to the public purse in forgone royalties should Suncor and other companies succeed in taking advantage of an obvious loophole in the government's royalty regime? The Premier yesterday acknowledged that there's a loophole there.

The Speaker: Well, there are about four speculations in that question. If the minister can find an answer to it, proceed. If not, we're going on to the third one.

Mrs. Nelson: Go on to the next one.

The Speaker: Please proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what steps is the government taking to ensure that Albertans don't lose $875 million in royalties, a figure quoted by the Premier yesterday, as a result of these loopholes which seemingly lie at the base of this dispute in the first place?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, a number of years back the government entered into a new royalty regime with the oil sands players, and that was to bring investment to this province. It clearly has worked. Over $50 billion of investment has come into this province to enhance and develop the oil sands, something we call the jewel of the north. It is the only place that we have such a situation. Quite frankly, only the members in the NDP caucus could be against this kind of development. The one thing I want to say – let's be very clear – is that this has been the jewel of this province. It is a good part of our future success.

I'm going to ask the Minister of Energy again to supplement the answer, please.

Mr. Smith: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. The question of $875 million is but one number. The exact amount of this is tied into a number of different factors: one, the continuing change in the value of the U.S. dollar; two, the disruption of heavy oil from Venezuela, that creates a marginal spread between light oil and heavy oil; three, the appropriate interpretation of the transition agreement. These numbers can change.

We are in material discussions with this company, Mr. Speaker, and we will continue to hold the line of protecting Alberta's interests in royalty calculations.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Acupuncture Regulations

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Quebec a person was discovered who practised illegally as an acupuncturist for 20 years and failed to use sterilized needles, resulting in 1,100 people now having to be called in for tests for HIV and hepatitis. So my question today is to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that acupuncture has become a very popular alternative treatment in Alberta, what assurances can he give Albertans that the same unsafe practices are not happening here?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In our acupuncture regulations there is a requirement that acupuncturists only use presterilized, disposable needles that must be discarded immediately. If a person has a concern that an acupuncturist is not following this practice, they should contact the registrar for acupuncturists. I've been advised by the office of the registrar for acupuncturists that a letter will be sent or perhaps has been sent to all registered acupuncturists reminding members about the requirement to use only presterilized, disposable needles.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. How are acupuncturists currently regulated in Alberta?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, acupuncturists have been registered in this province since 1988. In 1999 the Health Professions Act included acupuncturists as a regulated health profession, and in November 2003 we approved the regulation of traditional Chinese medicine under the same act. Accordingly, in the future acupuncturists and doctors of traditional Chinese medicine will both be regulated under the Health Professions Act.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Group Homes

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been complaints with respect to the work being done by at least one agency that contracts with the Department of Children's Services to operate group homes. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Are contracting agencies required to perform criminal checks before placing new employees in group homes?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, we are having a residential review of all of our group homes, all of our group home practices, and all of the circumstances surrounding those facilities. We also have had reviews through the Social Care Facilities Review Committee.

In response directly to the member opposite's question it is my understanding that those record checks are done.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: are group home employees allowed to vacation with the children in their charge?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any circumstance in which that permission has been given. However, I would be very pleased to be enlightened by the member, and we would check into the circumstances that were involved.

Dr. Massey: Again to the same minister: given that one group home was described as, and I quote, a pigsty, who is responsible for ensuring that group homes meet sanitation standards?

Ms Evans: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are certainly licensing requirements, and there are inspections that are done either at the request of the minister or from any directive through the director of child welfare in the region. The Social Care Facilities Review Committee will conduct an inspection. We will also provide staff from the department to inspect homes. I am disturbed indeed to hear the allegation that a group home was found to be a pigsty, and I look forward to getting the information so that we can follow up.

Mr. Speaker, for the most part, from the homes that I have visited and the staff contacts I have made, I am very satisfied that the standards are kept, but I am appreciative and will be appreciative of the hon. member's providing me the particulars so we can follow up on this one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, to be followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Agriculture Financial Services Corporation

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Interest rates are currently at an all-time low. However, many young farmers are concerned that the rates that they're paying to the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation for farm loans are significantly higher than current market rates. To the Minister of Agriculture, Food, and Rural Development: could the minister tell me exactly how current AFSC rates do compare to today's market rates?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, the interest rates depend on the particular program that is offered. Ag Financial Services offers a number of different loan programs to both producers and processors.

I will give an example on the beginning farmer program. The interest rate is based on Ag Financial Services cost of borrowing plus 1 and a half per cent. For example, Mr. Speaker, if the loan is for a five-year term, the interest rate is 5 per cent. However, an applicant may qualify for an incentive on the first $300,000, and then the cost of borrowing is 3 and a half per cent. Now, if it is on a long-term loan, the interest rate is 6.59 per cent.

2:20

There is a reason the producers, particularly beginning farmers, choose Ag Financial Services rather than more traditional forms of lending. One is the stability of the interest rates; two, the financial consulting and support that they get from Ag Financial Services. They can make lump-sum payments without any penalty, Mr. Speaker. They have business management advice for their clients, and it is well documented that the success rate in the beginning farmer program in particular is very, very high and the loss rate is very low.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how often does AFSC and the beginning farmer loan program review and adjust their rates?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, at one time Ag Financial Services reviewed their rates twice a year. Now they review them on a weekly basis to ensure that they're current and timely.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Future Energy Demands

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is for the Minister of Energy. According to the Canadian National Energy Board demand for energy will grow at more than twice the rate of population growth in Canada over the next 20 years. Population will rise 13 and a half per cent; energy demand will rise 34 per cent. My question: is Alberta capable of meeting future energy demands?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am always reluctant to believe any statistic or number that comes out of Ottawa, and I am always a little concerned about an organization called the National Energy Board. But knowing that that organization now has its head office in Calgary and is very well staffed, I've changed my opinion about the National Energy Board and welcome their forecast.

They talk of an energy component, and I think one of the most difficult times that we have right now is predicting the future of this great industry. What we've seen today, Mr. Speaker, was an announcement by Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, British Columbia that electricity prices are going up. These four are all hydro-power producing jurisdictions. So, in fact, what we've seen over the last three years – because we're the fastest growing economic jurisdiction in North America, we are the predictor of the future. If people want to know what's going to happen, they look to Alberta because that's the speed ahead of the curve that this province is.

With respect to other forms of energy and energy consumption,

Mr. Speaker, one has only to look at natural gas and the doubling of imports to the United States, the continual growth across Canada. We continue to grow in population, and as economic growth occurs, so will the demand for energy. Natural gas will continue to grow. Simply because of the question asked earlier on coal bed methane, it's estimated that there might be as much as 500 trillion cubic feet. That, basically, is 12-fold our present reserves that could be present in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, we've talked about oil sands at length at this table, and I think it would be a good thought for everybody to leave here on a two-week break thinking how blessed we are in this province for that wonderful resource.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Which leads into the next question: what percentage of this anticipated energy demand will be met by oil sands production?

Mr. Smith: That's an extremely important question, Mr. Speaker, and I don't know if I'll be able to supply all the answers in this short time.

The Speaker: Well, you will because what you're doing is speculating here right now. It has nothing to do with government policy, so go on to the third one, please.

Mr. McClelland: All right then. The third question is: will the royalties and the economic rent that Alberta gets from the oil sands be on par with the economic rent that Venezuela gets from its oil sands?

Mr. Smith: We only send into the rest of Canada about 200,000 barrels a day of oil. So this thought that's been around since the bleak days of the Liberal national energy program, that said, "Turn the taps off" – well, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't matter. You can't turn the taps off because, in fact, much of what's being purchased in eastern Canada is purchased offshore, from Venezuela, from Mexico, from the North Sea. So, in fact, Alberta is an offset to energy self-sufficiency.

That's why we have the Institute of Sustainable Energy, Environment and the Economy at the University of Calgary. That's why we have offered the federal government all the resources at our disposal to help make that notoriously inept body called NRCan a much better policy-making body.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Forest Sustainability

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Sustainable Resources: given that wildfires have devastated millions of acres of precious forested lands, can the minister advise the House how we can ensure the forest's sustainability in these burnt areas?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Of course, that is a very important area, and the member, I think, was going to address that in his question earlier. It is very important because, you know, in the last five years or so we've spent over $200 million on forest fires. A lot of those fires, of course, took place in areas where private companies had reforested already. We are developing some policies right now – they've gone through the process actually – and we'll be seeking additional dollars from this government in the future to ensure that we do continue the reforestation program.

Mr. VanderBurg: Given that the planting season is just around the corner, when will the minister and his department meet with my companies to advise them of the plan for this season?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Yeah, Mr. Speaker. We are available to tour all these facilities in Alberta. There are a lot of facilities. It's a very, very important industry. It's part of our economic diversification plan in Alberta. Thousands of people are employed in the industry.

Dr. Taylor: How many?

Mr. Cardinal: Thousands of people. Actually, over 54,000 people are employed in that industry, and about 50 communities depend on forestry as their major source of revenue and also job creation.

We are always available to meet with industry officials, Mr. Speaker, because they are very, very important to Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Graduated Drivers' Licences

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions this afternoon are for the Minister of Transportation. Last weekend when I was in my constituency, I met with a number of students in a social studies 10 class. One of the issues that we discussed was graduated licensing. Issues that were brought forward by those students I think should be addressed by the minister in the Assembly this afternoon. I would like to ask the minister why someone who has reached the age of 16 but does not yet have a learner's licence should have to wait until the age of 17 before he or she can obtain a standard driver's licence.

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the graduated driver's licence program in Alberta follows a bit of a different format than some of the other provinces. One of them is that there is no discrimination based on age, meaning that it doesn't matter if you're 65 with no driving experience and apply for a driver's licence or someone at 14 who would have a learner's permit for two years and then get their probationary licence at 16.

It varies from Nova Scotia, British Columbia, and there is also variance in that in this province there aren't any restrictions on the number of passengers in the vehicle and no time restrictions in terms of when probationary drivers can drive in the evening. Some provinces have restrictions on the number of passengers between 1 o'clock and 5 o'clock in the morning.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the same line of reasoning, why is it that we concern ourselves so dramatically with determining whether or not someone is capable of driving when they first get a licence, but then we never bother to find out if they are still capable of driving after they've had a licence for a number of years?

Mr. Stelmach: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member brings up a very important point. As one of the discussions that is coming forward from a number of different organizations – the Alberta Motor Association, the centre for injury prevention – they're looking at: is it necessary or would it improve Alberta's statistics in terms of the number of injuries and collisions and of course the number of fatalities on Alberta highways if we go to a measured, timely re-examination of every driver in the province of Alberta?

That is something that we are looking at, investigating, looking at other jurisdictions. We are doing a review of driver safety in the province at the moment, and if it's something that's proposed, we certainly will be looking at bringing it forward to standing policy for further consideration.

The Speaker: Well, congratulations, hon. members. That was 17 sets of questions and answers, the highest, I think, in years.

In 30 seconds we'll call upon the first of four to participate, but in the meantime can we revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very pleased to introduce to you and to all the Members of the Legislative Assembly some staff from Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. They're in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they stand as I introduce them: Cameron Henry, director of aboriginal relations; Thomas Droege, governance consultant; Linda Lewis, governance consultant; and Lona MacKay, researcher from the governance branch. So please give them a warm welcome.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Amber Alert Program

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As everyone in the Assembly is aware, a community's worst nightmare was realized when two little girls were abducted in Saddle Lake. In the aftermath I was very discouraged by the statements made by the members opposite critical of the effectiveness of Amber Alert during this alarming situation. On behalf of the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency I would like to take this opportunity today to applaud the collaborative efforts of the local RCMP detachments, local radio and television stations, and our local rural Crime Watch for their invaluable assistance in the kidnapping earlier in the week.

For the people in my constituency the Amber Alert system proved successful. The entire community is extremely pleased that these young children were returned safely to their family. Mr. Speaker, all local radio and television stations received the bulletin and broadcast the message. The local rural Crime Watch assisted in activating a telephone fan-out regarding the abduction. It is very likely that the reason why the children were released was because the kidnapper heard the Amber Alert and realized that he would be caught.

In Canada approximately 65,000 children are reported missing every year. Out of this number most children are runaways, others are lost, while some are taken by their parents in custody disputes. I would like to stress that it is an extremely small percentage of children that are actually kidnapped by strangers. For those who have raised concerns and criticized Amber Alert, it should be recognized that if the alert were issued after every child went missing, Amber Alert would become useless.

There are important steps that need to be taken before an Amber Alert can be released. People must first find out about runaways, lost children, and parent abductions. Mr. Speaker, it takes time for this process to be employed in a correct manner and work to the advantage of the case. I find it discouraging that critics are quick to find fault with the system without understanding how it works.

I firmly believe that the Amber Alert system was the key to the successful outcome of the situation in Saddle Lake, and I would like to congratulate all those involved.

Earned Income Tax Credit

Mr. Lord: Well, Mr. Speaker, today I rise to talk about an idea whose time, I think, has come. It has to do with helping people get out of poverty, and it takes a very different approach from what we do in Canada right now. It's called the earned income tax credit, also referred to as the incentive to work program or just the EITC program. Unlike raising the minimum wage, the EITC is targeted only to the poor.

Raising the minimum wage is really just a shotgun approach to spreading small business owners' money around, and I've even heard it estimated that it may only result in 10 cents on the dollar actually getting to people who live in dire poverty. Instead, it ends up in the hands of teenage kids living at home with their parents or hospitality industry employees who may also be earning significant tips, for example.

Worse, it may even increase poverty since minimum wage increases are mostly paid out by small business owners, who themselves are the poorest working group of Canadians, many not even earning minimum wages themselves, in fact not earning anything at all, with 4 out of 5 going broke in their first five years. Raising their expenses won't bring any more business in the door and, in fact, may only help them go broke faster, maybe throwing all their employees out of work instead.

The EITC alternative, on the other hand, is credited with literally lifting millions of people out of poverty in other jurisdictions. How it works is that instead of paying destitute people to sit at home on welfare and clawing back anything that they earn if they try to work and better themselves, you do just the opposite. If they work even a little but still don't earn enough money to get to the poverty line, we top up their paycheques each week for every hour they work with a few extra dollars per hour. We literally pay them a little to go to work instead of paying them a lot to stay at home.

Combining the money that they can earn from work with the money we're paying them, that we would be paying them to sit at home anyway, voila: a significant increase in their total annual incomes, enough to at least get them to the poverty line. It's simple. We target only the poor, and we encourage them to work instead of discouraging them. It's an idea that I hope we can study and, better yet, implement.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Rail Link to Fort McMurray

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to make a few comments on the proposed rail link to Fort McMurray. Over the past week I've had the opportunity to speak with industry experts regarding transportation links to Fort McMurray. All the experts agreed that both rail and road modes of transportation are vital for the future development and completion of approved projects in the north.

They're also quick to point out that the existing rail line already carries many heavy loads. It is my understanding that the current line has 120-pound steel rails that have a load capacity of 263,000 pounds. However, heavier loads can be hauled using multi-axle cars. The maximum width that can be hauled by rail is approximately 16 feet, and any loads wider than 13 feet, 6 inches require a special train service at a cost of $100 per mile.

A rail link with the coast is essential when transporting heavy components that are manufactured offshore and have to be transported to the Fort McMurray site. Choosing a new route for the line to Fort McMurray would be very expensive. Under normal conditions construction costs and a new roadbed are $1 million to $1.2 million per mile. With the additional cost of land purchases, the cost of bridges, trestles, and building the line over difficult terrain, the cost per mile will soar.

We look forward to seeing a cost-benefit analysis regarding any new proposed rail link to Fort McMurray. We feel that it makes more economic sense to use the present railway right-of-way. It would be much cheaper to upgrade the existing line, extend it from Fort McMurray to a point near the tar sands where spur lines could be built to the various sites.

While we support the improvement and expansion of the rail link to Fort McMurray, we call on this government to consult with all Albertans should it wish to use taxpayer money to fund any projects that put this government back in the business of being in business. After all, why should your average, hard-working Albertan subsidize a multibillion dollar industry?

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, I don't know if I'm being presumptuous, but I'm just guessing in my head that this will probably be the last opportunity for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to participate in this particular Legislative Assembly.

The hon. member has been a member for a number of terms now and advised all of us some time ago that she would be departing upon another venture, a venture with a certain degree of turbulence and rough waters and who knows what. But, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, we bid you adieu and wish you good luck, and the same message will go to the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East as well. [applause]

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your comments, and I'd like to say that it's been an honour and a privilege to work with all of you, a little more fun when we could keep your feet to the fire but always an honour and a privilege.

2:40 Student and Youth Day of Action for Clean Energy Solutions

Ms Carlson: Today, Mr. Speaker, April 1, 2004, is Student and Youth Day of Action for Clean Energy Solutions. Today thousands of students and youth from across Canada and the United States will join forces to demand clean energy solutions from our schools, universities, and governments. Students and youth have proclaimed this, April 1, a day to make a fool of fossil fuels as countries around the world are beginning to embrace viable renewable sources of energy such as wind and solar power.

Now these youth are challenging the overuse of fossil fuels and nuclear energy and calling instead for significant investment in pollution-free, sustainable, healthy energy sources. These students and youth will join with a diverse coalition of organizations to call for a future free from dependence on fossil fuels and short-sighted energy policy. They will be voicing their ideas and concerns at more than 120 campuses and communities.

Globally, wind energy has become the fastest growing energy source, and businesses, schools, and communities are making significant investments in both solar and wind power. However, the international push for cleaner, more sustainable energy has not been met with significant investment from any of our leaders.

In Alberta high growth rates have been both a challenge and a blessing in terms of reducing greenhouse gas emissions and pushing for the use of green energy sources. It is this very growth that must push us to adopt greener technologies in order to reduce the impact that we have on the environment. To reduce carbon emissions and to continue to see strong economic growth requires a great deal of innovation in terms of government policy, market innovation, and technological innovations. In addition to using 90 per cent green power at its facilities, this government must also increase its overall renewable and alternative energy capacity on both provincial and municipal levels.

In light of this awakening to green energy, North American youth and students are taking the lead in creating a brighter future. Let Albertans participate in this important event today and every day so that we can take the lead on this important initiative.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by 688 police constables and their loved ones from the capital region petitioning this Assembly to support Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act, which will provide more security and peace of mind for people working in occupations who have a higher risk of exchanging bodily fluids with a potential carrier of a blood borne disease.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: I'm presenting a petition today signed by 140 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta

1. To immediately withdraw the draft management plan for the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and revise it so as to disallow any further commercial or residential development of the Kananaskis Valley;
2. To redesignate the Evan-Thomas Provincial Recreation Area and adjacent unprotected public lands as a Provincial Park, with those parts currently undeveloped designated as Wildland Provincial Park;
3. To maintain Kananaskis Country in a natural state that provides high quality wildlife habitat and nature-based recreational opportunities.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) and also pursuant to Government Motion 6, agreed to on February 18, 2004, to give notice that on Monday, April 19, I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, and 59.

I am also giving notice that on Monday, April 19, I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 18, 19, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 146, 159, 160, 162, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 197, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, and 205.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Bill 28

Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 28, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004, for first reading.

Mr. Speaker, this bill expands the mandate of the act by allowing feeder pigs to be included under the act, providing Alberta's hog producers all of the advantages of feeder associations.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I would move that Bill 28, the Feeder Associations Guarantee Amendment Act, 2004, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

Bill 29

Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 29, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2004. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very small change in the act. It will amend section 29 in the act, and it will clarify the ability for participants in projects as to the amount that they may borrow and also clarify the number of borrowers that can participate in it.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to comments from members on this bill as it proceeds through the Assembly. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Bill 30

Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 30, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004.

These amendments will provide for more efficient and effective governance on Alberta's eight Métis settlements.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I would move that Bill 30, the Metis Settlements Amendment Act, 2004, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Bill Pr. 4

Northwest Bible College Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill Pr. 4, Northwest Bible College Amendment Act, 2004.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 4 read a first time]

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Bill Pr. 5

Brooklynn Hannah George Rewega Right of Civil Action Act

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill Pr. 5, the Brooklynn Hannah George Rewega Right of Civil Action Act.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 5 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a news release issued by the Athabasca Oil Sands Transportation Corp. dated March 29 of this year. The release announces "funding for a $2.5 million Oil Sands Transportation Initiative."

That's it. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first one is an information sheet put out by Edmonton's Food Bank. At this time, on behalf of the directors of the Food Bank I would like to say to anyone in this Assembly or anyone else who wants to visit the Food Bank at their new location at 120 Street and 115 Avenue that the directors would be delighted to see them and provide them with a tour.

The second tabling I have is a memo dated October 25, 2002, and it is from the hon. Justice minister to the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View. It concerns a question I asked earlier in question period.

I also have another memo dated December 16, 2002, and this is from the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment to the chief appeals commissioner of Alberta Workers' Compensation.

An Hon. Member: Isn't that old?

Mr. MacDonald: I can't help it if this was only leaked to me lately.

The fourth memo that I have is also from my question today, and it is dated January 6, 2003. I referred to that in question period as well, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a report compiling the latest statistics regarding qui tam whistle-blower reward legislative actions in the U.S., in which now over $12 billion has been successfully recovered through nearly 4,000 cases where state and federal governments had been defrauded by suppliers, which frauds only came to light as a result of whistle-blower reward legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. The first is from Stephen Legault, the executive director of Wildcanada.net. It's an open letter to the Premier. He's very concerned with the Premier's attitude towards callers with regard to the grizzly hunt that opens today.

The second is a letter from a constituent of mine, Janice Radloff. She's very concerned about how people other than the custodial parents who are involved in a child's life are treated.

The third set of tablings is copies of correspondence from constituent Anthony Hughes. He's involved in a WCB fiasco, if I could call that accurately, where he feels that he has not been getting proper recognition or treatment from anybody involved with WCB in this province.

Lastly, I have a tabling from the Canadian Federation of University Women in Edmonton, who are very concerned that "the federal, provincial and territorial governments of Canada . . . work collaboratively to implement the recommendations of the Romanow Commission."

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on behalf of the Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. I would ask at this time that the Government House Leader share with us the projected government business.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd be happy to do that.

Just before I do, I'd like to take a couple of seconds to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for her outstanding service over the 11 or 12 years and also to wish her well in her bid for a new career, and the same goes for the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Mr. Speaker, under Projected Government Business I'm pleased to report the following. On Monday, April 19, 2004, pursuant to Government Motion 6 agreed to on February 18, 2004, we will deal in the afternoon with private members' business, written questions, motions for returns, followed by public bills and orders other than government bills and orders, and that should include some private members' public bills if time permits. In the evening we will deal with motions other than government motions, and at 9 p.m. we will be in Committee of Supply for the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

On Tuesday, April 20, in the afternoon as part of Government

Bills and Orders we'll deal in Committee of Supply with Children's Services, as designated, and if times permits, second reading of bills 25, 26, 27, 28, and 29, depending, of course, on progress made in that regard today. In the evening in Committee of Supply we will deal with the Ministry of Transportation, and again depending on progress we may deal in Committee of the Whole with bills 22, 25, and 26, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, April 21, we expect to be in Committee of Supply for the ministry of agriculture, as designated, and depending on progress earlier possibly second reading on bills 25, 26, 27, 28, and 29, and otherwise as per the Order Paper. On Wednesday evening we will be in Committee of Supply dealing with the ministries of Finance and Revenue, and that's as per the unanimous agreement by the House leaders and consent having been granted by the Assembly to do so. We will then deal with Committee of the Whole for bills 22, 25, 26, again depending on earlier progress, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, we expect to be in Committee of Supply for the Ministry of Learning, as designated, and that'll be followed by second reading of bills 27, 28, and 29, again depending on earlier progress, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, over the next couple of weeks please have a rest, and will you please, as well, have a spiritual and happy family-oriented Easter.

head: Orders of the Day
head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05
Environment

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member who wishes to participate will be recognized.

The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'll keep my comments relatively short. [some applause] I love support from my own members.

First, I will just introduce some people I have in the gallery. We have Peter Watson, I think, up there. I can't see very well up there because of the light. He's my assistant deputy minister. Peter, stand up. We have Monica Norminton up there, who's our new financial officer. She's a lawyer as well, so not only does she keep the taxman at bay, but she keeps me out of jail. We have Robert Moyles, our communications assistant director. Then we have everybody's most beloved EA in the building, Ken Faulkner, most recently of the Krispy Kreme doughnut fame. So we're pleased to have all of these people here to watch the goings-on in this House.

I'm going to, as I say, keep my remarks relatively brief, Mr. Chair, because I know that the opposition has some good questions. I will say that if I don't have a chance to answer all the questions, they are recorded in Hansard, and we certainly will respond with appropriate answers to appropriate questions.

As you are all aware in the House, the province has experienced tremendous economic growth, and it's largely fuelled by our natural resources, as the Minister of Energy quite appropriately pointed out during QP today. Of course, with that growth in the province we have population pressures, we have growing expectations for public input into the process, and we have growing pressures on our environment, Mr. Chairman.

To meet these challenges, at Alberta Environment we have changed our approach. Rather than trying to put an environmental policeman on every corner, which is simply impossible in this day and age when we have this rapid growth, we've focused on identifying environmental outcomes we need to achieve. So what we're looking at is: where do we need to be? What does our environment need to look like? What is our future economy going to look like? What do we want for our children in the future in terms of a healthy environment?

So what we're doing is putting in place systems to achieve that future sustainability. Not only are we putting in place those systems, but we are committed to working with partners and empowering our partners and working with our partners to make sure that the outcomes are reached.

This upcoming year my department is going to focus on two core businesses, Mr. Chair. The first one we're going to focus on is assuring environmental quality, and secondly is sharing environmental management and stewardship. If you look at our business plan, if you look at our budget, they are focused on those two areas. Particularly, we are going to focus those two areas on areas of water – all of you are familiar with and I'll say just a bit more about the water strategy – climate change, sustainable resource and environmental management, information technology, and staff capability.

The big issue, I believe, Mr. Chairman, as we move forward is going to centre around water. Water will be the issue of the 21st century. You can see how it's impacting Alberta. There was in the press just recently the Capstone Energy hearings in the Red Deer area. I've met with the MLAs involved speaking on behalf of their constituents there. So we need this water strategy. As we move forward, we need to fund the water strategy. As we move forward, you'll see us spending a lot of time talking about water, developing our budget around water, and simply doing the right thing.

I encourage all members, if they're not familiar with our water strategy, to take a hard look at it. I spoke at the AMD and C yesterday or the day before about it and received warm regard from the AMD and C around our water strategy, what it is about. So we have people in Alberta that are very strongly supportive of this, and we need to move forward on it.

With that, I'll conclude my comments, Mr. Chairman, and look forward to hearing from members of the opposition.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank all of the staff who are here this afternoon. It's been great working with you for all these years. You haven't always given me all the answers I wanted, and the minister particularly hasn't given me all the answers I wanted, but most of the time they tried.

An Hon. Member: Ask nicely.

Ms Carlson: I always asked nicely for that particular minister, and sometimes he gave me answers.

Dr. Massey: All he does is monitor.

Ms Carlson: No, it's the other minister that always monitors. This one often will give an answer. Once in a while he's taken a good idea that we've put forward and incorporated it, so for that I have to thank him.

I want to start where the minister left off, and that's the water for life strategy. We're really pleased to see that this is still ongoing. It isn't ongoing nearly as fast as we would like to see it, but the initial investment of dollars that we've seen at least is a start when we talk about it being used for improving Alberta's drinking water supply and enhancing water management and watershed planning and all the other activities that the minister plans to do with this particular strategy. I'll ask a few questions, ask him to answer them, and then I'll go on to another issue.

The question really is: why is so little money dedicated to do so much? It seems like this could be the most important question we have before us for the next decade in this province, how to manage our water. We really feel that it's a priority issue, that we are in many regions facing a water shortage. It looks like it's going to get worse, not better. In the midst of all the planning that's happening around things like enhanced oil recovery, coal bed methane, the technology developments for CO<sub>2</sub> injection, all the studies and incentives and things like that that have to happen, why do you have so few dollars dedicated to what I see to be the top priority issue in environment in this province?

Dr. Taylor: I'll attempt this question, Mr. Chair.

I want, like other members, to wish the member the best in her future. It has been a pleasure sometimes getting to know you. So I do wish you the best, but I would think that on your last day you might have had a little sweeter disposition towards me.

But we'll go on and answer the question. I would point out that this water for life strategy is a cross-ministry initiative. There are nine ministries involved. If you go through the budget, I think it's about $46 million cross ministry that is involved in the water for life strategy.

As we move forward, if you'll look in my budget, Mr. Chair, my budget has a 100 per cent increase in the water for life strategy. That's what we needed this year because what we're going to do this year is start implementing. As I said, next year we'll need more money. We won't be able to operate it on the $5 million that we are granted this year. Next year we will need more money, and we will go forward to Treasury Board in the appropriate business planning process and tell Treasury Board how much money we need for the next year. As we go forward, I believe that we will meet success with our Treasury Board colleagues. As I pointed out, it is, I believe, $46 million this year across all ministries.

I would also say that a fundamental issue in the water for life strategy is conservation. We need to conserve, Mr. Chair, on both the supply side and the demand side. When I'm talking about conserving on the supply side, I am talking about more water storage. Because of the way we get the spring runoffs here, most of the water passes through, particularly the southern basins, early in the spring. Even in one of the most dry years in history, 2001, we passed on 57 per cent of the natural flow to Saskatchewan. We only need to pass on, by regulation and agreement, 50 per cent. This past year I would guess that we will probably have passed on someplace between 80 and 85 per cent of that natural flow.

So as we move forward, we have to do a lot more on conservation on the demand side. Mr. Chair, that means both on-stream and off-stream storage, and we will be looking at these issues as we move forward. On-stream storage will be, I believe, very important in the future. Of course, the water strategy also looks at technology development, a lot of technology. It looks at knowledge, and it looks at conservation on the demand side as well.

I won't comment any more because no doubt some of those questions will come up on the demand side.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would have thought that the minister would have thought it was pretty sweet that I was asking for more money for his department. But if he doesn't like those kinds of questions, I can ask tough ones on water management.

We've been waiting for the advisory committee to release its recommendations on the water being removed from the hydrological cycle, so we'd like to know: where are those recommendations? In the absence of them, then why are you still approving new licences for water diversion from watersheds that are already highly damaged? In particular, I'm concerned about the Red Deer River. Why do you continue to allow the use of fresh water for injection before the recommendations are out? Will we see any changes to your commitment to water conservation in terms of applications for use from businesses to divert water?

Dr. Taylor: A number of questions there again, Mr. Chair. Let me first talk about the committee she's talking about. That's the committee we established to look at water removal from the hydrological cycle, and 98 per cent of that, as she's correctly identified, is in the oil and gas industry.

We did establish a committee that was made up of various stakeholders. The Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers was there. That was one of the co-chairs. The Pembina Institute for Sustainable Development was another co-chair. We had members of the general public. We had irrigators there. We had other industrial water users there.

It's my understanding that they have prepared a preliminary report, and I will get that preliminary report either later today or tomorrow. We'll then have to take a look at that preliminary report. But it's only a preliminary report; it doesn't have final recommendations.

This was a consensus-based process, and in that process all members have signed off. So that means the green NGOs have signed off. That means CAPP, the association of oil producers, has signed off. That means the irrigators. Everybody has agreed, apparently, as we move forward, to these preliminary-only recommendations.

The next phase for that will be for them to go out and consult with their stakeholders. Certainly, CAPP will have to go out and talk to the various companies that it represents. Certainly, the environmental NGOs will have to go out and talk to the various people they represent. The irrigators will have to talk to the various irrigation districts that they represent. So that's the process. As I say, hopefully, we'll see those either later today or perhaps transferred to my office tomorrow.

In terms of allowing water licences, Mr. Chairman, we have a process that's governed by legislation. The legislation is in effect, and until that legislation is changed under the law, there is nothing really that we can do as a government to change the process. If we're going to change the process, we must change the legislation.

The member did mention the issue of Red Deer. In the Red Deer area – perhaps she knows – a decision of a director of mine was appealed to the Environmental Appeal Board. We have a very good system. We're one of the only jurisdictions in North America that has a system like this where if one of my directors makes a decision, it can be appealed to a quasi-judicial body that has nothing to do with the ministry, has nothing to do with the minister. It's quasi-judicial, and it holds hearings. The EAB did hold hearings on the Capstone Energy issue that the member referred to in the Red Deer area. They have a month from the date that the official hearings end to get a report with a recommendation to me. I believe the official date for the end of the hearings is March 31, and I expect that I will be receiving a report from the EAB, that quasi-judicial body, and I expect to receive that report legislatively by the end of April.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. One more water question. There's an appeal of an irrigation district licence amendment that I'd like to talk about. On October 31, 2003, there was an amendment to a water licence which allowed an irrigation district in southern Alberta to use water for purposes other than irrigation. The St. Mary river district can now allocate 12,000 acre feet annually for other uses such as municipal, agricultural, irrigation, commercial, industrial, management of fish, management of wildlife, habitat enhancement and recreational use. The Licence Amendment also states that the Licensee shall not deliver water under the Licence for the purpose of injecting water into the ground to enhance oil or gas production.

So the Southern Alberta Environmental Group, based in Lethbridge, with support from Trout Unlimited Canada, is appealing AB Enviro's decision to amend the licence. There are two key challenges as we see it in the appeal. One, it challenges the precedent which denies opportunities to restore health to the Bow and Oldman river basins, which have already been assessed as moderately to heavily impacted from massive diversion. Large irrigation districts should not be allowed to right off the rivers.

The second one is that it challenges the precedent of allowing a private irrigation board to make decisions about how water, a scarce public resource, will be allocated. These boards are comprised of farmers, who are not accountable to the public interest in reallocating water to benefit a growing urban population and a changing economy in southern Alberta let alone to the public interest in restoring rivers to health, which was clearly expressed in the water for life strategy.

So the questions around this are: in the face of a growing water scarcity in Alberta why would the minister approve a licence that allows an irrigation district to determine our water priorities? And what responsibility does the district have to protect the health of a river and to allocate water in a way that best serves the growing population?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Chairman, I did not approve the licence. One of my directors approved the licence, and that is presently in front of the Environmental Appeal Board, so I have to be very careful of what I say about that. But I can speak in general, Mr. Chairman.

Well, one correction I would make, too, is that the St. Mary River irrigation district does not affect the Bow River basin. It's way south of the Bow, and the Bow runs into the South Saskatchewan. St. Mary River irrigation district is largely Oldman – you were correct in that – and Belly River and Waterton River and a couple of other small rivers, and it affects the South Saskatchewan as well.

Once again, I'm proud of this province. It's one of the only jurisdictions, as I've said, in North America that has an appeal process like this. It's outside the political process. This group, as she has correctly identified, has appealed the decision of the director to the Environmental Appeal Board.

I would comment, Mr. Chairman, that basically all those river reaches in southern Alberta and the reaches of the South Saskatchewan have been frozen; that is, we will not grant new licences on those rivers simply because they're either overallocated or allocated at a high enough level. So if we get an industry coming or we get an agricultural value-added industry like a potato chip plant – we have two of them already in southern Alberta, but just take something like a potato plant. They need water, and we can't grant them any more licences because, essentially, other than for potable water, or drinking water, the system is frozen.

So where do they get their water from? What St. Mary's has done is said: okay; we realize that there are these issues and there are needs and demands for water, and because of those needs and demands for water we're going to change the nature of our licence somewhat. It was very clear that it does not include oil field injection, but it does allow for St. Mary's to take on, you know, being able to provide water to a potato plant, for instance. So that decision is being appealed.

I'll give you another very practical example, Mr. Chairman. There's the South East Alberta Water Co-op, and that's a pipeline that's going to run out of Chin Coulee all the way across southeastern Alberta. This was really ably financed by the Minister of Transportation, and I'd like to congratulate him for his fine vision – yes, Minister, fine vision – on financing this pipeline in southern Alberta, and I hope that he finances more of them.

But that water co-op could not get a water licence for the pipeline because everything has been frozen. So they went to the United irrigation district and said: can we have some of your water licence? So United irrigation district transferred some of their water licence to the South East Alberta Water Co-op. Without that ability to be able to move licences around in irrigation districts, South East Alberta Water Co-op would not have been able to get water, Mr. Chairman.

So as I say, it's a very practical example. It's a little different than what she's talking about, but in the broader sense it's an example of, if the appeal is unsuccessful, what will happen. [Dr. Taylor coughed]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, if you need a little break, that's okay. I'm sure that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie may have more questions that you can respond to.

Dr. Taylor: Okay.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This just points out how important water is for all of us. I hope you're okay over there.

Thank you for those answers on water. Certainly, they're helpful to us, and we'll be continuing to monitor your progress in this regard and hope that we can see some sort of a framework come out from the water for life strategy sooner rather than later. I'm really supportive of that strategy. In fact, I think it was one of our great ideas that you based your decisions on for setting that up. I wish it would go a little faster, but there are really good people involved in that strategy from all sides: from the department, from industry, from the environmental community. So I have every expectation that it will be progressive and meet its mandate, hopefully in a very timely fashion.

I would hope and encourage all members of the Assembly to support the recommendations that fall out of those meetings because I really do believe that they will bring forward ideas and initiatives that will work in the best interests of Alberta. I hope that they have got as a part of their mandate looking at the long-term sustainability of the whole ecosystem in Alberta because it's been something that's been missing from a part of the decision-making process.

Are you okay now? Can I ask you some more questions? Okay.

Now I'd like to change topics and talk about climate change for a few moments. I've a series of questions I'd like answered. We see in the budget that a total of $6 million is in the 2004-05 budget for initiatives related to implementing Alberta's action plan on climate change and ongoing support for Climate Change Central. Funding for Alberta's climate change action plan will increase to $13 million in 2005-06, including funding from Innovation and Science.

So my first question is: could the minister break down the budget for initiatives related to implementing Alberta's action plan on climate change and ongoing support for Climate Change Central? If you could just give us a little bit of an overview and then provide some of that detail in writing, that would be helpful. I'm still not convinced that we're getting a good bang for our buck from Climate Change Central. I'm hoping that you'll have some information to share with us about how they're doing more than just meeting, where we're going to see some outcomes soon.

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Chairman, certainly I can do that. You've got to remember that Climate Change is a relatively new organization. I think they've been only operating for two years. They have been ramping up. They have done, really, in the last year a lot of positive things. Some members, perhaps in my caucus, disagree with some of the things they're doing, like the furnace rebate program. I see some people disagree. I happen to think that is a very worthwhile program.

People are replacing their furnaces with very energy-efficient furnaces, and they are about $5,000 for a furnace. Through a partnership between Climate Change and the federal government they're getting a $400 grant from Climate Change on their furnace. So people are actually spending $5,000 to get a $400 grant.

I sit on the board of Climate Change, and I would also point out that Climate Change Central is governed. It's arm's length, again, from government and has its own board of directors. The chair of that board is a gentleman, the president of Nexen Energy, Mr. Charlie Fisher, and it has high-level people on that board, company people. Once again, it's got environmental groups on it, and the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake sits with that group as well.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

The board decided that they wanted to try this program. They had enough for 3,000 replacements, and there was some doubt with a $400 grant and a $5,000 furnace how much uptake there would be on that program. What happened, Mr. Chairman, is that they have already passed the 3,000 applications or requests; they've got over 3,100 requests. So they're going to go back to the federal government and once again ask if the federal government is interested in continuing the partnership with Climate Change Central on that furnace replacement program.

They've done a number of other programs, Mr. Chairman. They are the first ones in the province to model emission trading. They've a partnership with a group out of New York. Unfortunately, the group that they were working with was in the office towers that were hit. Some of the people that I worked with and were up here were killed in that terrible terrorist attack of 9-11. They have done workshops on emissions trading.

What I will do to provide more information to the member is I will see that she gets a copy of actions undertaken by Climate Change Central so that she knows exactly what Climate Change Central is doing. I'm sure that once she gets those actions, she'll be very aware of what Climate Change Central is doing and will probably feel much more positive in regard to Climate Change Central.

The Acting Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very much in support of the furnace rebate program. In fact, it's that kind of a program or other programs that encourage energy efficiency amongst homeowners that we've been promoting for a couple of years here. I was very encouraged when I saw that program come out. So as a follow-up question to that: what else do you expect to happen in the near future this next year either in Climate Change Central or within your own ministry to support both homeowners and industry to become more energy efficient?

Dr. Taylor: Well, certainly, Mr. Chairman, this government has taken the lead. We've actually spent more dollars in this area than any other government in Canada, including the federal government. So one of the things we'll do in the future is going to happen starting in 2005. Ninety per cent of the power utilized by this government will be either wind power or biomass power. Ninety per cent. It's the largest purchase of green power in the history of North America, and that was done by this government.

Another thing that's just starting to unfold is the municipal energy efficiency program. That's a hundred million dollars that this government has committed for municipalities to upgrade and make their buildings more efficient or build energy-efficient buildings as they're building new buildings, Mr. Chairman.

We actually have just a nice little booklet. It's very simple, and it's available, certainly, from my office. I think most MLA offices have these – I hope they do, anyway – to pass out to constituents. That gives you some more information, Mr. Chairman, on where we're going and what's happening in regard to the climate change action plan.

I would point out, Mr. Chair, that the government of Alberta is providing $27 million in funding for research into sustainable energy technologies. That's over the next three-year period. So we are certainly doing that as well.

We're part of the Canadian Clean Power Coalition, Mr. Chair. The Minister of Innovation and Science can probably do this better at this than I can, but we think that by 2007 or 2008 there'll be a demonstration plant up that burns coal with virtually zero emissions.

Once again, climate change is a cross-government initiative. The Minister of Energy has allowed for a royalty rebate program of up to 30 per cent for costs of projects that capture and inject carbon dioxide into oil and gas pools.

So I can go on quite a bit, but there are a lot of really good things happening and that will happen as we move forward on this climate change action plan.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. When will mandatory reporting of greenhouse gas emissions by large emitters be implemented?

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Dr. Taylor: That's in the process, Mr. Chairman. We're actually working with the federal government now to come up. We've agreed and industry in Alberta has agreed to mandatory reporting. Because we want to do it so that each jurisdiction doesn't have its own little reporting scheme, we're working with the other provinces.

I just got a letter two weeks ago signed by the Deputy Minister of NRCan and the Deputy Minister of Environment saying that they wanted to work with Alberta to develop a governance structure for national reporting. We took this as good news because the new Prime Minister has said that he wants to work with provinces on these issues.

The member quite correctly points out that there's an election coming, so the test will be: after the election does he behave in the same fashion? I hope he does, but we do have to remember, Mr. Chair, that he is a Quebec Liberal. We know how other Quebec Liberals have treated western Canada. But I'm hopeful that this Prime Minister will treat us differently and treat us with respect. You know, we're the only jurisdiction in the country that's going to be a net income contributor to the federal processes here. All the other provinces are basically living off Alberta. Last year we put in $9 billion more than we got back in services.

So we will stand up for our rights, but if the new government is prepared to treat Albertans with the respect that we deserve because we're the most knowledgeable province in this whole area of greenhouse gas reporting – we've already got a scheme – and if they are prepared to work with us, then I think the mandatory reporting will come in quite quickly because we've agreed and industry has agreed.

I think that if you're looking at a time frame, I would say that you're not going to get a lot of action till September. Our sense from talking to the federal government – they've certainly got an election coming some time. I'm sure the member knows quite well about that, and one might speculate on when that election will occur because of her recent actions here. Then you're into a summer break. Our indications are that we'll be talking about governance and how we manage that with the federal government as early as September. It could happen relatively quickly after that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It would be very nice to work with this minister in Ottawa on some of those issues, with any luck.

Mr. Chairman, my next question is on investment and research on sustainable energy technologies. I believe it's low, and I believe it's hard to access in this province.

When we talk about coal bed methane or fuel cell technology or enhanced oil and gas recovery or a new project that I was just recently introduced to, which is the ability of Alberta to actually build the windmills that would help support the wind energy industry in this province – right now that technology is not available in Alberta. They have to import those large windmills from Germany. The cost is about $1.5 million per windmill. The cost to transport it over here is about half a million dollars. They can be made cheaper here with advanced generation technology right here in Edmonton, and of course the transportation costs to get them on site would be significantly lower.

The company I was talking to doesn't have enough access to capital to develop a prototype. They have all of the various stages of the development ready but can't get that extra mile, which is a really important step for Alberta to take, I think. There is no reason why we can't be a leader in those kinds of technologies in this country.

So if the minister could talk a little bit about what he thinks we can be and should be doing and he is expecting to do to support research on the sustainable energy side in this year's budget and perhaps in the future.

Dr. Taylor: Well, once again, Mr. Chairman, that's outside my budget. As a department we don't support research. That would be more appropriately asked to the Minister of Innovation and Science. I will just make a couple comments if I might because I do have this excellent little document in front of me.

On sustainable energy, Mr. Chairman, we are investing $3.25 million into a project at NAIT. Apparently, the NAIT swimming pool is heated by fuel cell technology. So we are doing that.

In Medicine Hat, my home constituency – actually, the greenhouse is located in the Member for Medicine Hat's constituency. Microgenerators provided by Mariah Energy, if I can just read it, reduce carbon dioxide by 97 per cent, nitrous oxide by 97 per cent, reduce power costs, and create surplus energy. I happened to see Mariah Energy this past week, and they told me that they're working with the city of Medicine Hat now because this has been a very successful project at the greenhouse in the member's constituency. They're working with the whole city now to provide microgenerators and moving forward on it.

There's also the vapex field project. It's a $30 million field project, and it's funded by the Alberta Energy Research Institute. Quite clearly, once again the Minister of Innovation and Science – I don't want to steal his thunder – has done a yeoman's job. He's done an excellent job of stimulating the growth of the Alberta Energy Research Institute, and that's where the dollars will be. I know that the Alberta Energy Research Institute is looking at a major project at the University of Calgary. That will be a world leader in sustainable energy research.

It just goes on and on, but as I say, it's outside my ministry. We do not directly fund research, but I would encourage – well, she won't be here. I would encourage her caucus, perhaps, to get the Minister of Innovation and Science to respond when his budget estimates are up, and he'll provide much more detail than I can.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods will follow up with the appropriate minister.

Can this minister tell me if he is still working towards developing a carbon trading system, and if so, can you give us any details on what stage the development is at?

Dr. Taylor: We won't develop the system ourselves, Mr. Chair. What we want to do is create the environment for it to happen, create the regulations needed for the carbon trading system to happen as well as other trading systems. We need to trade in nitrous oxides, sulphur oxides, particulate matter, and mercury perhaps as well. So there's going to be a broad trading system developed.

But the government will not develop it. What we'll create is the right environment, set up the regulations, and we're in the process right now of working with other jurisdictions, working with the federal government on what a system like that would look like and then what regulations we need to develop to allow that to happen, and then the private sector will do that.

We actually have just located in Calgary a carbon management company from England. They do a lot of work in Europe, and they just located within the last two months in Calgary, and they're carbon traders. We just have to get our regulations right to allow the private sector to do it.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Those are great answers. Happy to have them.

The government has said that its 2003 royalty credit program offsets up to 30 per cent of the cost for projects that inject carbon dioxide into oil or gas pools to improve resource recovery and store the carbon dioxide. In addition to this $15 million program, the province has revised royalty deductions under the enhanced oil recovery program for carbon dioxide enhanced projects. Additional royalty reductions will be available to cover the higher costs involved in this type of enhanced oil recovery.

My questions are these. Since additional royalty reductions were made available for projects that use enhanced oil recovery, to what degree has this use increased? If there has been no increase, is the minister currently looking at other incentives for industry to adopt this technology?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Chair, as I pointed out, climate change, like the water strategy, is a multidepartment agenda, a multidepartment project. These two programs she's mentioned are run out of the Department of Energy, so I can't give her the details of those two programs any more than the general details that I've already provided. When the Minister of Energy's budget is up in Committee of Supply, that needs to be discussed with the Minister of Energy.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Okay. Thank you. Perhaps you can't answer this one either, but if you could give me any feedback on it because it's related. It's around the Alberta Energy Research Institute's energy strategy to reduce the cost of carbon dioxide capture and compression. I'm wanting to know how much closer it is to the goal of a 75 per cent reduction for new facilities and 50 per cent for retrofit operations. Do you have any information on that at all?

Dr. Taylor: That is out of the Ministry of Innovation and Science. The only information I would have is to say that it's ongoing. We believe it will be a successful program because we think that ultimately technology will solve the issues around emissions, not just carbon dioxide emissions but emissions of nitrous/sulphur oxides, emissions of particulate matter, and emissions of mercury as well. They will be solved through the developments of new technology, and that's what this program is about.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

3:40

Ms Carlson: Thank you. My next question, then, is about the Car Heaven Alberta program, which gets vehicles 13 years old and over off the streets. Do you have any information on how many have come off the streets, and do you have any plans to increase that kind of program to get old vehicles off because of the emission problems that they present?

Dr. Taylor: This is a program that's run out of Climate Change Central and has been quite successful. We did a pilot, and it got about 300 vehicles off the streets in Calgary. I was involved with the renewal of two Car Heaven projects, one in Calgary and one in Edmonton.

We're still, as I say, counting the cars that come in, but they have started again. As I say, the initial one got 300 of these older vehicles off the streets in Calgary. We expect that this will be an ongoing program of Climate Change Central.

I must say, though, that it does generate some controversy because many of these cars, especially the GM brands, have this 351 cubic inch engine, and that's an ideal engine, apparently, for people that build street rods. So they've actually been out at both the new openings of the programs, one in Edmonton and one in Calgary, with a bit of a protest. What happens to these 351 engines is that they come in, they get taken out, then they fill the cylinders with foam so that they can't be used any longer, and then they get shipped away.

Once again, this is a public/private partnership. We're working in particular with Pick-A-Part, one of the major partners of this in both Calgary and Edmonton. I know that Climate Change Central is looking at how it can expand more to rural Alberta, but the issue is getting the right people to be partners with. The issue is: will enough people bring them in?

But the program is operating again. It started this winter in both Calgary and Edmonton.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to ask a few questions with respect to the estimates. Can the minister tell us what the budget is for the government's project in partnership with BIOCAP Canada, which is examining the legal mechanisms for use with agricultural sinks? What are the most recent developments on these projects, and when are the projects expected to be completed?

Dr. Taylor: I'm not that familiar with that project. Again, I think it's being run out of Innovation and Science. But I'll make a commitment. This is in Hansard. Even if it is run out of Innovation and Science, I'll make a commitment to get you some information on that. I know BIOCAP. I met with some people from BIOCAP just last week, and I gather that they're just pretty much in a start-up stage.

One of the big issues is how you measure sinks. Now, it's easier to measure agricultural sinks than forestry sinks. I mean, how much does a tree this tall absorb in carbon dioxide compared to one this tall, and what is absorbed in the growth? So the difficulty with forestry sinks is measurement. I know that that's what our researchers are working on, how you get accurate measurements around sinks for forestry.

We'll get you some more information on that.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Yes. Thank you. And thanks for the answer. I can raise it with the minister when we do Innovation and Science.

A second question is: when will the government release its research analysis in key areas like the glacier response and the southern Alberta water supply and response of Alberta ecosystems to climate change? What was the budget for that research and analysis?

Dr. Taylor: Well, most of the research that we do, once it's completed, is put on our web site. Whether those two specific projects are on our web site or not, I don't know, but if they're not – we put absolutely everything on the web site. We actually are putting, you know, the air quality indexes on the web site.

Where we're moving to, where we want to move to and are working with industry on it, is actually having real-time monitoring, going right to the web site so that people can sit and look at the air monitoring around Inland Cement in real time, you know, 24 hours a day. That's where we're moving with our monitoring. Are we there yet? No. Will we get there? Yes. It's a combination of getting some money for technology and working with industry to have that happen. Certainly, we are moving forward, and as those projects are completed, the results will be put on our web site.

The one area of concern that we do have in particular is the glaciers that feed the Bow River. We have a good history on those glaciers, I think a 70-year history. The way the Bow works is that in the spring, essentially, the Bow is fed by the spring and summer runoff till typically, depending on the dryness of the year, about either August or September, and then it's those glaciers that feed the Bow River. We're in a situation, because of the history of those glaciers that we have – that is available publicly, and if it's not on our web site, if you want, I can get it for you – where the glaciers are shrinking.

We're in a situation where, depending on how dry the year is, those glaciers can provide up to 40 or 50 per cent of the water that Calgary needs. Depending on how dry it is, depending on how the climate warms or cools, we're estimating that in anywhere from 30 to 50 years those glaciers will not be able to provide that level of volume of water.

If you look at what's happening in urban growth, we expect that all major urban areas will double in population size. Growth, unfortunately, is going to be in urban Alberta and in the urban world all over the world. Urban growth is going to double all over the world in the next 30 to 50 years. So you're going to have a situation in Calgary where you've probably got 2 million or 2 and a half million people and not enough water if we don't do anything. Because water issues are long-term issues and they're long-term solutions, that's why it's so important that we move on our water strategy on the conservation side, both supply side and demand side conservation, and actually do something, don't just talk about it but do something. Well, you and I probably won't be here in 30 to 50 years, but our grandkids might well be, and if we don't do something and they're living in Calgary, it will be a horrendous problem. So we need to move forward on it.

We do have the data on those glaciers available. It is publicly available, and if it's not on our web site, certainly we can get it for you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again, what adaptation initiatives is the Prairie Adaptation Research Collaborative currently working on?

Dr. Taylor: Adaptation is part of our climate change program, and it is probably the least worked on because everybody has been working on the mitigation side. It goes the same thing as for water. Everybody has been working on the conservation, on the demand side as opposed to the supply side. Certainly, the adaptation, which is part of our climate change project, I will say, from my own personal perspective, has been lagging a bit. The ingenuity fund – and that's what we used to call the science and engineering trust fund – has committed about $7.5 million to the prairie adaptation centre over a three-year period.

In terms of specific projects I can't tell the member what specific projects they're working on, but once again I would be pleased to provide information from the prairie adaptation centre as to the specific projects they're working on.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to change the subject, then, if I could, to coal bed methane. Given the great emphasis, it seems that's this is going to be the province's answer to declining conventional natural gas supplies. However, we've heard from people around the province. I heard the Minister of Energy on the radio this morning talking to a group who are really concerned with respect to the environmental issues, land disturbance, their surface rights. They were concerned about surface and groundwater impacts, venting and prolonged flaring of noneconomic gas, and noise pollution. Each of these will have an impact on the environment. My first question to the minister is: will large-scale CBM projects be subject to mandatory environmental impact assessments?

3:50

Dr. Taylor: Well, once again that is a decision that will be made by experts in my department. It's not the minister that determines if an environmental impact assessment is required. Applications come in. They go to the scientists, the engineers in my department, and they will make the determination if an environmental impact assessment needs to be done.

This is a significant issue that the member has raised. I mean, if we're not careful, you could have a well site every 10 acres. So the issue is: should companies be allowed to drill a well site every 10 acres, or should they be required to slant drill?

Now, we don't have a policy on this, but certainly my personal opinion is that maybe you drill 10 well sites from one site. Because this is so new here in Alberta and, as the Minister of Energy pointed out today, we're just starting some hearings on this, whether or not there would be an EIA will be decided as major projects come forward, and that will be decided by the Department of Environment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again, then, on the same topic: how will the cumulative and social impacts of CBM development be determined? Who's going to look after it?

Dr. Taylor: These are big issues that the member is talking about. Actually, these are the kinds of big policy issues that fascinate me. I've just been in discussions with a professor at UBC by the name of John Robinson. What John talks about is a sustainable future. When he's talking about a sustainable future, he's not just talking about what the environment looks like. He's talking about what our economy will look like, what our cities will look like. I just quoted the figure in my last answer to you about cities around the world doubling in the next 30 to 40 to 50 years. That's John's statistic. I just got it from him. I was meeting with John Robinson yesterday.

I'm actually going to bring John into Alberta and have him sit down with some of our leading thinkers and some of our leading industrial people in the oil industry and talk about: what do we want looking forward into the future? John's group at UBC just got a huge CFI grant. It's too bad it didn't happen here first in Alberta, but it's just a really exciting project that they're doing. It talks about what the future looks like, not just economically but socially.

So to answer your question, I don't know, but those are the things that we have to figure out. We do have one model that is working I think quite well. It's called CEMA. It's in Fort McMurray, and it consists of native groups, of industry. They're looking at how they manage the huge development that's going to go on there. There are NGOs, environmental groups in that group as well. It's not a government organization. It's a local organization and is working very well with all the sectors. Now, is that a model for the rest of the province? We don't know yet. It's too early to tell. But they're trying to do some very creative and exciting things there as we get thinking more about these issues, about the sustainable future.

I don't think it's enough any more just to talk about a balance between the economy and the environment. When you say balance, it means that, well, if you get something on the economy, you lose something on the environment or that if you get something on the environment, you lose something on the economy. I think we need to start thinking past that to what sustainability actually means and look at sustainability in a broad sense.

So we actually are just starting to think about some of those issues. I'm just starting to think about them, and the department is just starting to think about them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. That is interesting, and it's encouraging that sustainability is being questioned as a concept and that the interpretation we have on that particular concept right now is being questioned. I think it's overdue.

May I ask what requirements are imposed on companies now to minimize the impact of CBM development?

Dr. Taylor: Well, I assume that you're talking about coal bed methane. Once again, that's largely driven out of the EUB, but we are very concerned in Alberta Environment about water and potable water being destroyed as we move forward.

I'm not a scientist or an engineer, but my understanding is that you cannot use the U.S. experience and generalize it up here. Apparently, there was a lot of potable water in U.S. coal beds, and quite frankly they've got an environmental wreck down there in some places. But in Alberta the amount of potable water in the coal beds, the ones that we know about – and we're just doing the initial research and initial test drilling – appears to be very little, next to nil.

As we move forward, we have to determine how we are going to handle potable water that is in those coal beds, and that's part of what the hearings going around the province are about. It's one of the issues that is going to be discussed. You yourself have watched the issue around Capstone Energy, so you know how sensitive the issue of potable water is. That's one area where I really believe that the local community is going to drive government on that issue.

If you look at our water strategy, what we're proposing in our water strategy is two local levels. We're looking at a local level that would manage the larger watersheds, for instance the Bow River. The best example I can think of is the Bow River Basin Council. Very effective. The Bow River is now apparently the third best river in the world for trout fishing, one of the cleanest rivers in the world, and that comes as a result of a consensus-based multistakeholder group called the Bow River Basin Council. But for that to be effective, government has to step up to the plate first, and we stepped up with 225 grand every year to them. Once we step to the plate first, you know, they can find private-sector money, they can find federal money, and they can find NGO money.

That's the model we're looking at at that basin level. Then when we get down to the even smaller level, we're looking at watershed user groups. The best example I'll give you on that is in my own constituency. It's called the Bullshead Creek water co-op. They might say in my constituency the Bullshead Crick water co-op. It's just a very little, short creek with maybe 12 ranchers on it. One of the licences on it is very ancient, from 1905. The person that had that licence – it doesn't run all season; it just runs in the spring – was capturing the water and not storing it, apparently, in a very effective way, so there was a lot of waste water. It was causing a lot of friction in that community amongst the ranchers.

What we did was we helped that group. We helped them establish the Bullshead water co-op. What it is is consensus based, and even the guy with the oldest licence got on board. Now, do they have issues? Yes, they do, but they're telling us as government how to manage that creek, and that's the way it should be. Our job is to provide them the science, to provide them the knowledge and say: here's the science and knowledge we have on the Bullshead. How do you want to manage it? It's working very well.

So that's another model on a really small level where the local guys are actually managing it and doing a very good job. I always think that the guys at the local level make the best decisions because they're there. This one rancher has a 1905 licence. His granddad started the ranch, and he's still there. Other ranchers have been there, you know, 40, 50, 60 years. They're going to be there, their families will be there, and they need sustainability in that watershed. So we provide knowledge, we provide science, and we provide a few dollars to help them to organize and so on. That's the way we're going to solve major water issues in this province, not by my department or the minister, whoever the Minister of Environment is in the future, mandating but actually asking the people.

We're modelling a lot of this on CASA. I'm sure you're familiar with CASA and what I did two years ago in asking them to come up with emission standards. It works. It takes time, and it takes somebody with some skill and some money to get in there and help them organize and manage. That's our role as the Department of Environment: to provide some money and some skill to help these people organize, then get everybody involved, make it consensus based, and it'll work.

The Deputy Chair: Any further questions? After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Environment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and
Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$123,352,000

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, we've already voted. You just want to add some . . .

Dr. Taylor: I just wanted to thank the members in the House and, in particular, the members opposite for intelligent questions. Thank you.

Mr. Zwozdesky: That was just an excellent testimony there from the Minister of Environment. Thank you.

In that spirit, Mr. Chairman, I would move that the committee now rise and report the main estimates for the Ministry of Environment.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Acting Speaker: Hon. members, before I recognize the hon.

Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan to report, I also wanted to add my appreciation and best wishes for the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie in her new career.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Environment: operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases, $123,352,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Concur.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 25
School Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and move second reading of Bill 25, the School Amendment Act, 2004.

First of all, I'd like to thank the hon. Minister of Learning, the MLA for Strathmore-Brooks, for giving me the opportunity to carry this important bill. Bill 25 balances the interests of our teachers with the interests of our children by improving the functioning of the board of reference to make sure that there is a process to deal with situations where an educator might not fulfill the high standards of their peers.

Mr. Speaker, in any profession there must be a process in place to ensure the highest quality of service by professionals, and this process has to be effective and fair. We're talking about someone's livelihood, and the board must make decisions regarding whether or not that teacher will continue in that livelihood. This is not a decision to be taken lightly. However, we must also safeguard the rights of children whom Albertans entrust to those in the teaching profession. The fact is that we're talking about the future of these children and the very future of this province, which will some day be built by those who are in our schools today.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has great teachers, exceptional teachers, and we have to make sure that all educators hold to the same high-quality standards and abilities that Alberta's teachers are known for. The changes in Bill 25 will set a framework in place that will facilitate the best decision-making process possible for the board of reference. The amendments also safeguard our children, ensuring that potential labour disputes do not negatively impact education, through the expansion of the professional responsibilities of teachers as recommended by Alberta's Commission on Learning.

Mr. Speaker, we previously announced that we want to establish a new practice review process for teachers that will enable the ATA to assess the professional competency of its members. The details of this will be discussed elsewhere, but it's an important reference because one of the things contained in Bill 25 is that this new amendment will diminish the need for the board of reference to be involved in reviewing teacher competence. However, more importantly, the legislative changes we are tabling in this act are designed to improve the way the board of reference functions.

Even though the board of reference will not have the kind of role it has now in terms of assessing the professional competency of teachers, it will continue to play a vital role in hearing matters on employment issues that are beyond the scope of the practice review such as cases of misconduct. This process is still going to be very largely driven at the local level by superintendents and school boards.

Amendments to section 61 mean that the boards would no longer be prohibited from delegating the power to terminate or suspend the services of a teacher. This is something the boards must be able to do. They should be able to decide whether or not the board will make the final decision regarding teacher termination or suspension or whether that responsibility will be delegated to a superintendent.

Under the proposed practice review process, superintendents will have the responsibility of determining whether a teacher should be referred to a hearing committee for a review of that teacher's practice. We're recommending that superintendents also have the authority, if given to them by their board, to determine whether a teacher should be suspended or terminated. The safeguard for the teacher is that the board of reference will still review the superintendent's decision.

I would also like to make a note of the changes to section 138 because I think these are important safeguards for students. Currently section 138 sets out the types of orders the board of reference may make, including confirming a teacher's termination or suspension, removing a suspension, directing that a teacher be reinstated, and directing the school board to pay an amount of money equivalent to the teacher's salary for a specified period.

What we're doing is adding a subsection that would prohibit the board of reference from reinstating a teacher when it finds that that teacher should not be teaching. The subsection also prohibits the board of reference from reinstating a teacher when it determines that just cause exists for the termination, despite any procedural irregularities or procedural noncompliance that may have taken place at the school board level. So, basically, what this does is restricts the board of reference's power to reinstate in these cases of, we could say, technicality. Now, this is vital. First and foremost, we need to protect students from the reinstatement of teachers who may be guilty of gross misconduct, neglect of duty, or other inability to perform his or her duties.

In addition to this amendment, we've worked with the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association to add wording in section 138 that sets out certain factors that the board of reference must ensure it considers in determining whether to reinstate a teacher. These factors include:

- (a) whether the teacher is guilty of gross misconduct;
- (b) whether the teacher refused to obey a lawful order of the board without justification;
- (c) the risk to the safety of students, co-workers and the teacher;
- (d) the ability of the teacher to perform teaching duties effectively;
- (e) the effect of reinstatement on the future relationship between the board and the teacher;
- (f) the possibility of recidivism;
- (g) whether the reinstatement would have the effect of undermining the confidence of Albertans in general in the public education system;
- (h) fairness to the teacher; and any other factor that the board of reference may consider relevant.

Mr. Speaker, the changes to these sections ensure that the board of reference has the ability to safeguard the best interests of the students once the school board and superintendent find that there is enough reason to bring it to the level of the board. This is not something that the board will take lightly, as can be seen from all the factors that the board must consider, factors so vital that they will now be set in legislation.

There are also changes being proposed to more effectively provide for an avenue of appeal. Changes to section 133 will require that the notice of appeal be filed within 21 days of the suspension or termination and set out the grounds for the appeal. An amendment to section 136 will facilitate the process by ensuring that both parties in an appeal have a full understanding of the case to be reviewed before a hearing commences. As well, it will require that a case be considered abandoned where no action is taken for a one-year period, similar to rules that exist with respect to civil cases filed with the Court of Queen's Bench.

Mr. Speaker, I'd now like to delve into the area of professional responsibilities. The School Act is specific in setting out what is termed the statutory responsibilities of teachers. There are a lot of vital responsibilities included in this list. Teachers are required to provide competent instruction to students. They're required to teach prescribed courses; to promote educational goals and standards; to encourage and foster learning in their students; to regularly evaluate students and periodically report the results to students, parents, and the board; to maintain order and discipline; and subject to the collective agreement to carry out duties assigned by the principal or board.

In recommendation 81 the Learning Commission suggested that there is a need to allow all key partners in education to sort out appropriate roles and responsibilities in a way that ensures that the best outcomes for students are recognized and achieved. Included in recommendation 81 are two subpoints: one, to maintain teachers' right to strike and, another, to expand the professional responsibilities of teachers. The government supported these two subpoints, Mr. Speaker.

The School Amendment Act will expand teachers' professional responsibilities to include not only teaching in the classroom but also participating in development and field testing of curriculum; developing, field testing, and marking provincial achievement tests and diploma exams; and supervising student teachers. The expansion of these professional duties will ensure that teachers continue to provide these critical education services during potential labour uncertainties. This is important for students. It's a change that brings essential duties into the scope of the statutory responsibility of teachers, where they should be.

As the Learning Commission found, in cases of labour unrest we have to be able to protect students from effects that could be devastating to their futures. If teachers withdrew from any of these services, it could have permanent effects on the future goals and aspirations of the students; for example, students who are patiently waiting for their results to get into a postsecondary institution or student teachers that are finishing their education degrees. With this amendment students, their parents, and the public can be certain that in the case of any future labour uncertainties, the basic needs and, in fact, the basic rights of students continue to be upheld.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, with the amendments being proposed in Bill 25, we're not simply changing pieces of legislation. We are defending the rights of Alberta students to go to school with the knowledge that their teachers are fair, just, and safe, and that it is their best interests that are kept in mind. This legislation also cements this government's commitment to yet another recommendation from the Learning Commission as well as our commitment to working with stakeholders to build an education system that is truly responsive to the needs of Alberta's children and youth.

I urge all members of this Assembly to support these important amendments outlined in Bill 25. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments at second reading of Bill 25, where the obligation is to look at the principles that the bill has been built on. I think that one of the important things that this bill and its companion piece, Bill 26, represent is a new era in terms of the teachers' association and the school boards and trustees and the ministry working together to try to come up with solutions that are in the best interests of, ultimately, the children and students in this province. So I think that the background for these two bills is extremely important.

One of the principles seems to be that the requirements of teachers have to be expanded, and I heard the mover just now talk about the new requirements that teachers have to participate in curriculum and field testing, have to develop and test and mark achievement tests, and supervise student teachers. His take on it was that that would stop students from being put in jeopardy by the withdrawal of those services.

There is another piece to that, Mr. Speaker. Being able to take that limited action has, I suspect, prevented total teachers' strikes in the province at times. As much as these are strike-proofing recommendations, I think it may be a gain in one area, but it may be a loss with respect to flexibility of teachers to be able to react to a dispute without taking full strike action. So there's something lost when we pass this, but it's something that's been agreed upon by the teachers and trustees. I respect that, but I don't think that it should go unmarked that that's possibly what could happen.

The designation of people who do and who do not belong to the organization has long been contentious. I think that there are some provisions in here that still raise issues with respect to designating teachers, and it's going to probably take some time once the bill is passed and in practice for us to see exactly how well that is working out. There's been that constant concern of the hiving off of people into administrative positions, breaking them away from the teachers' association and taking them out of the association.

I think the changes to the board of reference are changes that all agree are good changes. The board of reference has long been a bone of contention for trustees, and I think the teachers' association was wise in recognizing that and in agreeing to some changes and in being able to put forward a positive proposal that will go a long way to lessening the number of disagreements that arise from the operation of the board of reference.

So I think it's a move in the right direction. I'm sure that there are going to have to be adjustments in the future, but if one of the underlying principles of this bill is to try to help resolve disputes and to have a mechanism in place that is agreeable to both sides, then I think that is what it accomplished.

I look forward to looking at the particular sections of the bill when we visit the bill in committee.

Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

Bill 26

Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to rise and move second reading of Bill 26, the Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004, which deals with important changes to reflect the Learning Commission's recommendations regarding the teaching profession.

The success of our learning system is based in part on the world-class educators that are available to students to help them best meet their education needs and guide them toward a lifetime of learning. Through the guidance of our teachers students can belong to a vibrant learning community that supports their intellectual and spiritual growth, helping them excel in a number of areas ranging from academics to athletics. Mr. Speaker, that's the kind of support that will help our children become the leaders of tomorrow.

As the House well knows, this government recently conducted a broad, comprehensive review of Alberta's K to 12 education system, involving all the key stakeholders and interested Albertans. Mr. Speaker, prior to this review the last time Alberta conducted a comprehensive review of the learning system was in 1972.

To put that into context, the last time a review was done on our education system, Peter Lougheed was the Premier of Alberta, Pierre Trudeau was our Prime Minister, Richard Nixon was the President of the United States, and the Cold War was still many years from thawing. My point is, Mr. Speaker, that that was a while ago, and the world is a different place. Clearly, a review of our learning system was a project whose time had come.

Alberta's learning system is the foundation of our future. Its purpose is to help Albertans gain the skills and knowledge they require to actively participate in our communities and the economy. Alberta's learning system continues to be counted as one of the best in the world in many ways, and that's something we can be proud of. But the changes we've witnessed over the last 30 years have made it necessary to examine our learning system to ensure that it's relevant and sustainable and meets the needs of Albertans.

Last December the government announced support for 84 of the commission's recommendations because of the clear potential to improve student learning. We took the time to thoroughly and thoughtfully review these recommendations because of the potential impact on the learning system and on the stakeholders who are affected by them. In fact, we worked with the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association on those recommendations that affected them.

Bill 26 will follow up on some of the commission's recommendations and our commitment to those recommendations by accomplishing two things we've already promised to do. It will allow a new practice review process to be established for teachers whose competence is in question, and it will allow certificated, nonteaching central office staff the option to be members of the Alberta Teachers' Association.

I'd like to begin with proposed changes to sections 4 and 8 as well as some other sections that will deal with the practice review process. There is no doubt that it's vital that we set standards for our learning system to ensure that students are receiving the quality of instruction they expect. We want to make sure that our children are learning the kinds of things they need to know to succeed in the workplace and in the world. This is something that is recognized by society in general, of course, and it's something our postsecondary institutions continue to ensure through their quality training programs for our teachers.

There are certain standards that must be maintained when a student is studying for his or her teaching certificate. In fact, grades are one indication of these standards, and during postsecondary education they can easily be monitored and tracked by the postsecondary institution and the deans of the education faculties.

But once that student begins to work as a teacher, that concern for the quality of teaching must be maintained. That means that we have to have a mechanism in place to effectively monitor this practice.

Of course, the Alberta Teachers' Association has a vested interest in making sure that its teachers maintain quality standards, and we have worked with this organization on these amendments because, in fact, this was something they themselves asked for. This particular amendment to section 4 of the Teaching Profession Act will enable the ATA to assess the professional competency of its own members. We are establishing a teacher practice review with the ATA that will deal with teachers whose competence is questionable.

I want to be very clear that I believe, in fact I know, having been a proud member of the profession for more than three decades, that we have a great many exceptional teachers in this province. Our yearly excellence in teaching awards are just one way we publicly recognize some of the many outstanding teachers we have in this province.

Having said that, the reality is that it is also important to have effective safeguards and a fair mechanism to address the remediation or termination of teachers when there are issues related to competence. Teaching involves a high degree of judgment, knowledge, and skill, and professional educators should be the ones to formally review a teachers' practice to determine whether it meets quality standards. A rigorous peer review process is certainly the most effective guarantee of professional competence. It's in recognition of this fact that the ATA proposed and government supported this new teacher practice review model.

This is a process that will be monitored by the ATA with respect to its own members. It also parallels the current process that is used by the ATA to review the conduct of its members who are accused of unprofessional conduct. These changes will ensure that teachers whose practice requires improvement receive the assistance they need to upgrade their skills. This is perhaps the most important aspect.

But in extreme cases it will also ensure that teachers who are judged by their own profession as being entirely unskilled lose their teaching certificates and membership in the professional association. This amendment is a safeguard not only to ensure the quality standards of the teaching profession in this province but also to protect the education of Alberta's youth.

I should briefly note that the board of reference will also be retained to deal with employment matters outside the scope of the practice review process. I won't go into this issue because it's a matter that is addressed in Bill 25, the School Amendment Act.

I'd now like to go on to the second amendment that's being addressed in Bill 26, and that's the commission recommendation to allow non teaching certificated central office staff the ability to choose their membership standing in the ATA. As a government we supported the commission recommendation relating to the membership of certificated central office staff in the ATA.

Section 5, dealing with compulsory active membership, currently requires that all teachers who are employed by school boards, other than superintendents, must be active members of the Alberta Teachers' Association. The commission recommended that certificated central office staff who are not included in the collective agreement should not be required to be members of the ATA but should have the option of associate membership, as is the case for superintendents.

The amendments being tabled will remove the requirement for certificated central office staff to be members of the ATA and in section 6 ensure the continued option of associate membership. That doesn't mean that they won't be members of the ATA. It simply means that they will now have the option to decide whether or not to be members. This will affect only central office administrators who are not part of the collective bargaining agreement as well as other nonteaching administrators named in regulation.

I'd also like to note that this amendment has no impact on the government's support for maintaining the ATA as the single organization responsible for professional services and collective bargaining for teachers. This is something that the government supports maintaining.

I've touched upon some of the amendments we are pursuing in our effort to continuously improve the education system and the way our teaching profession functions within that system. These are not only improvements to the process itself. They are also a reflection of the commitment of our stakeholders to working to find innovative paths to the future of education. Our teachers are entrusted with the crucial task of building futures and building dreams. If we are to continue to build on our system's successes, ongoing collaboration between our teachers, school boards, and government will be vital to our progress.

With that said, I urge this Assembly to support these important amendments. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments about Bill 26, the Teaching Profession Amendment Act, 2004. At least one of the major principles that the act is built on is the principle that the professions have a responsibility to police and to monitor their membership with respect to professional practice, and I think it's a principle that the House has supported over the years with respect to other professions. I'm pleased that Bill 26 will allow the teachers in the province to have that same responsibility with respect to controlling their own profession.

The model that has been proposed is an interesting one. I think it's the kind of model that has promise in terms of assuring the public that should they have complaints about the practice of a teacher, there is a mechanism for that to be dealt with quickly and appropriately and for it not to be shuffled off and not dealt with in a timely manner. The fact that the government has worked with the association to make possible a bylaw that would put in place the professional practice board that's being proposed is, again, a good move, and I think it's encouraging with respect to relations between the government and the Teachers' Association, which over the past number of years have been troubled. I think all of us are happy to see that era end.

There is a section of the bill that there has been some question raised about, and that's with respect to the powers of the minister, but I think the more appropriate place to deal with that is in Committee of the Whole, when we start to look at the specific sections of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

So with those comments, I'll conclude. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Any further speakers?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark to close debate.

Mr. Maskell: Question, please.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been another very exciting week, and the city and the province are full of Juno excitement fever. You never know how the weather can turn very quickly in this province sometimes, and I know that safety is a concern for all of our members, who wish to get to their constituencies all across the province in a safe manner.

On that historic note, pursuant to Government Motion 6 agreed to on February 18, 2004, I would move that we call it 5:30 p.m. and adjourn until Monday, April 19, at 1:30 p.m., along with good wishes to everyone for a well-deserved break from the dome for a few days to work hard in our constituencies.

[Motion carried; pursuant to Government Motion 6 the Assembly adjourned at 4:34 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 19, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/04/19

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome back.

At the conclusion of the prayer, hon. members, would you please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. As we begin our deliberations in this sitting of the Legislature, we ask for the insight we need to do our work to the benefit of our province and its people and to the benefit of our country. Amen.

Now would you please join in the singing of our national anthem in the language of your choice. We'll be led today by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

Hon. Members:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

The Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 68 wonderful young students from St. Teresa Catholic elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Camille Kauhaahaa-Hamel and Mr. Charlie Stuart. Their parent helpers are Mrs. Julie Thulin, Mrs. Cindy Shearer, Mrs. Trish McGuinness, and Mrs. Marie Reitzel. We'd ask our guests to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Mrs. Fritz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very special guest. This guest was seated in your gallery on March 30, and that was to proudly witness her daughter deliver a member's statement in recognition of Tartan Day. I would ask that Mrs. Colleen Graham, who is the mother of my friend and colleague for Calgary-Lougheed, rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you 23 very bright grade 10 students from the Sturgeon composite high school. Accompanying them is Mr. Norman Zweifel, their teacher, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a great group of individuals from the Horizon Village in Glenwood. Twenty-three of the members are touring this afternoon, and I had a lovely visit with them before entering the Assembly today. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the people in the Assembly Mr. Albert Wagner, a grain and cattle farmer who resides in the constituency. Mr. Wagner, the past president of the Western Barley Growers Association, joins us along with some of his colleagues. Obviously, their interest is Bill 206. I'd ask Mr. Wagner to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you today five very distinguished guests from my constituency. I would ask them to stand – they're in both galleries – as I call their names: the president of the Western Barley Growers Association, Mr. Doug McBain; the Alberta vice-president of the Western Barley Growers Association, Doug Robertson; a past president of the Western Barley Growers Association, Gordon Reid, and his wife, Peggy Reid, from the Cremona area; and Jeff Nielsen, vice-president of the Western Barley Growers Association, from the Olds area. Would you please give them the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a visiting group from Terrace Heights school this afternoon. The group is made up of 34 visitors, 31 students, and the group is led by teachers Frances Stead, Jennifer Bagshaw, and program aide Marilyn Sloan. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm and traditional and gracious welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce Mr. Ed Armstrong from Dapp, Alberta, which is located in the Barrhead-Westlock constituency. Mr. Armstrong is with the Western Barley Growers Association and is seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I'd ask him to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly two ladies who will become constituents of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview when the new electoral boundaries come into effect at the next election. They are here to observe the proceedings of this Assembly and are seated in the public gallery. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly as I call out their names: Mrs. Zoria Grieve and Ms Belinda Pylypa.

Mr. Ouellette: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a very hard-working couple from my constituency, Mr. Roy Sparks and Mrs. Janette Sparks. Roy and Janette run a grain and hay farm east of Innisfail, and Roy is also a director of the Western Barley Growers Association. They came to the Legislature today to support Bill 206, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Amendment Act, 2004, brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Mountain View. I would like Roy and Janette to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Jonson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly several constituents that have travelled to Edmonton to meet with me to discuss education in Alberta. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they please stand as I call their names: Ron Labrie, Bryan Martin, Brady Teeling, Pauline Mercer, Lori-Ann Hudacak, Rob Haggarty, and Darren Josephson. I'd ask members to give them the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Learning Commission Recommendations

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Alberta Liberals said when the budget was introduced, this government's education budget falls far short of expectations. Instead of allowing school boards to implement the recommendations of the Learning Commission, classroom sizes will remain far below standards. Even the Learning Commission's chair said about the Learning budget, quote, I'm not sure this is transparent, open, and it's certainly not understandable, end quote. My questions are to the Premier. Why is this government letting down the children and parents of Alberta by failing to meet the benchmarks of the Learning Commission?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we are not by any stretch of the imagination letting down the children of this province. The hon. Minister of Learning is working through the recommendations. Some have already been accepted. Some, of course, have been rejected. We will work through the recommendations keeping in mind that we have identified learning in our 20-year strategy program as one of the key pillars and a commitment to learning. [interjection] Well, they can laugh like Santa Claus, but basically we have decided as a caucus that learning and education will be top priorities of this government, and we will commit ourselves over the next, well, few years anyway but certainly in the 20-year strategy to address the needs of those not only in K to 12 but in postsecondary institutions and those seeking to embark on a program of lifelong learning.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier talks about accepting and rejecting recommendations of the Learning Commission. Is it the case – because it appears to be – that they have rejected the Learning Commission's recommendation on classroom sizes?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth, and it's time this hon. leader started telling the truth. The truth is this. Now, listen. The truth is that the Learning Commission recommended that its class size guidelines be phased in over five years at an estimated cost of $138 million. We can't do it all in one budget. We never said that we would do it all in one budget, but we do expect boards to begin reducing class sizes this year with the $250 million budget increase and to continue to reduce class sizes with funding increases of nearly $400 million in the next two years.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is it the Premier's understanding that $250 million is actually going into the school system? Is that his understanding?

Mr. Klein: Of course it is. Mr. Speaker, it is going to Learning. It is going to the benefit of children in the school system.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you. As the Alberta Liberals have long been saying, the evidence continues to roll in that a strong public health care system is the best possible way to deliver health services. Recent information from the OECD, the federal government, and from Britain's National Health Service all show that private health care is more expensive and harder to control than public health care. To the Premier: how can Albertans be confident that the Calgary health region is providing value for money when a consortium in which they are a key player was disqualified from contracting with the British government because it could not offer value for money?

Mr. Klein: I have no idea relative to the situation as it relates to the Calgary health region and any contractual arrangements they might or might not have had with anyone, for that matter. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, relative to a part of the preamble that relates to health care reform, that Alberta is not alone in talking about the urgent need for reform. In February all Premiers wrote to the Prime Minister saying: "It is imperative that [you] understand that without real reform and renewal and an affordable foundation, health care as we know it will not survive the decade."

The Prime Minister wrote a letter on April 13 – I'll be glad to table copies of this letter – to Premier Binns, who is chair of the Council of the Federation. In that he says, and I quote in part: with regard to health funding the additional $2 billion to which you refer is over and above the commitment under the 2003 first ministers' accord on health care renewal for an additional $34.8 billion federal investment over five years. That's good news depending on how it is to be distributed. But the important part of this letter is that we are in agreement that the health care system requires not only funding but also structural reform and renewal.

So, Mr. Speaker, certainly the Calgary health region may have had a contract. I can only commend them for trying something new, trying something that possibly could have created revenue, but if it didn't work out, so be it. At least they tried.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Will the Premier admit that his government's health care privatization plans are out of sync with a recent OECD study which found that mixed public/private systems could not control costs as well as single-payer public systems?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal leader conveniently alludes to those things that create headlines and make for a good 15-second sound bite, and that's all the Liberals are good for, by the way. I don't know if they're good for 15 seconds, but sound bites they're good for.

Mr. Speaker, relative to health care reform and the whole issue of privatization, this idea or forms of this idea are only one small part of the puzzle. The true health care reform that we contemplate – and the package will be coming to caucus in the very near future – will be a broad process that might take years and must factor in the many complex challenges facing the system. These challenges include how we pay for new technologies, drugs, and infrastructure; how we recruit, train, and deploy health professionals; how we manage and administer the system.

1:50

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Albertans and most Canadians are ready for a change to the system. Notwithstanding what the Liberals say, they know that the system as we know it today is not sustainable. They know in their hearts that a system that requires annual budget increases of 7 to 10 per cent just to maintain the status quo is simply not affordable. The people of this province know; the Liberals don't.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. The Premier talks a lot about health care reform, but how can Albertans trust this government to reform their health care system when it tried and apparently failed through budget cuts in 1994, with the action on health plan in 1998, with the health summit in 1999, and with the Mazankowski report in 2002? What's next?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, all of these things will feed into the health reform. Relative to what took place in 1994, that was the first very significant step under the then health minister, who is now the Deputy Premier. It was a very significant step to take I forget how many health boards – I think there were something like 200 various health authorities – and boil those down into 18 and thus achieve administrative efficiencies. That was a very significant reform in itself.

Mr. Speaker, there have been numerous reforms since then. It's a work in progress, and we will have to continue to keep meeting the challenges of health care sustainability. But I don't apologize at all for what took place in 1994. I think it was very brave. It was a very bold and courageous step, and it achieved very significant administrative efficiencies.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Exports

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I wish this government would apologize for electricity deregulation. This government has created behind closed doors an electricity transmission policy that benefits power producers at the expense of Alberta electricity consumers. Last week the Premier overjoyed power producers by signing an agreement that could significantly boost Alberta's electricity exports to the United States. While the Premier's decision guarantees power producers even bigger profits, the Marthas and the Henrys in this province are still struggling with sky-high electricity bills. My first question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Premier. Why did the Premier not consult with Albertans before he went ahead and threw the switch opening this province to further electricity exports to America?

Mr. Klein: You know, I talked earlier and alluded to the 15-second sound bite. Throwing "the switch": you know, all of these things lend themselves to good headlines but have nothing to do with the truth.

The truth is simply a matter of co-operation with the United States. The hon. member should read the memorandum that was signed by Governor Richardson of New Mexico and myself, and he will find that there is absolutely nothing sinister in that memorandum, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to point out that Alberta's rules ensure that provincial consumers pay for transmission lines only to the extent that they use them. That policy has not changed. Exporters pay for the lines to the extent that they use them, and they also pay for any lines that are dedicated for export. That is the truth. Now, if this man, this person, had any sense of honour, he would stand up and tell the truth for a change.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the truth is in the Premier's own commission, the Bolger commission, which reports that increased exports will make electricity prices in Alberta higher at times. Why did the Premier sign an agreement that will increase the power bills of Alberta consumers?

Mr. Klein: The agreement, as I've said, was a very innocent memorandum. Well, Mr. Speaker, since he won't listen to me, perhaps he'll listen to the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Ah, Mr. Speaker, I've been speaking to this member for many years now, and let's continue to try because we'll never give up hope for the hopeless.

Mr. Speaker, when he refers to the Bolger commission, it's very clear that it says, "New supply was added by private sector companies rather than by government." That means no debt applied to the backs of taxpayers, unlike the hundred billion dollars worth of debt that stretches across the nation. Our "new electricity capacity is more environmentally friendly." You are in a province that has the largest amount of wind power energy in the Dominion of Canada. In fact, this government has signed the largest green power contract in North America. "The wholesale power market is working well." That's what the Bolger commission says. Don't revise it here in this room. Be honest.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that both Manitoba and British Columbia use the revenue from electricity exports to drive down the price of domestic electricity, will this government step up and do the same to protect Alberta consumers and pass those savings on to the consumers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, in one breath he's complaining about the whole notion of even considering the export of electricity, and now he's talking about sharing the benefits of export with Alberta consumers. Of course, we would love to do that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier signed a deal paving the way for increased electricity exports to the United States, as we now know. While the Premier's buddies in the boardrooms of the energy industry are no doubt looking forward to fattening their bottom lines, this deal will mean even higher power bills for Alberta consumers. Intertwining ourselves with the U.S. market will only put upward pressure on prices here in Alberta. My question is to the Premier. Given the fact that power in California retails at considerably higher prices than it does here in Alberta, how can the government prevent the further spiralling of costs in Alberta's electricity prices?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I stated quite clearly that an export market will only be developed if there is, first of all, a demand and if we can fill that demand.

Mr. Speaker, this energy conference that the hon. Minister of Energy and I attended in Albuquerque, New Mexico, dealt with all matters of energy: electricity, natural gas, oil, solar energy, wind-powered energy, hydro-powered energy. It talked about how we create a North American as opposed to a Canadian alone or a Mexican alone or a United States alone environment relative to the sharing of these resources. Basically, that's all the agreement that I signed alludes to.

An Hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. Klein: I'd be glad to table it. It's a public document. You can get it on the Internet. You don't have to go to www.lib.com or whatever it is. It's on the Internet. It's a public document. I'd be glad to table it if he doesn't know how to use computers. I'd be glad to.

The whole thing is about sharing and developing – sharing and caring and developing – a continental energy policy as it relates to all forms of energy, Mr. Speaker. There can be absolutely nothing wrong with that because like the cattle industry, as I say, we're all in this, and it is an integrated system.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the experience we've had with the natural gas industry and the Chicago prices we now pay, how can the Premier assure Albertans that we won't be paying even higher electricity prices when power companies can receive higher prices if they export to the United States?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how one conceivably relates to the other. First of all, the policy of this province is that we won't export any power that we need and that will be used in the province of Alberta. Any export of power would have to be on transmission lines paid for by the power companies. Any power would have to be absolutely surplus to our needs. So I don't see how by any stretch of the imagination this relates to the price consumers pay for electricity or natural gas or any other energy commodity in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Let me put it simply. If a power producer can get a higher price for their electricity in the United States than they can in Alberta, why would they sell it here?

Mr. Klein: They would have to sell it here because the policy states that they must meet the requirements of Alberta before any power is exported. So export power would only be power that is surplus to the needs of Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Beef Exports

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The United States Department of Agriculture has announced that all remaining conditions on the import of beef from animals less than 30 months of age have been removed. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What does this announcement mean for Alberta's cattle industry?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, certainly, the USDA announcement is a significant step in moving the agenda forward on the full integration of trade between the U.S. and Canada in both beef products and live cattle. What this means is that bone-in meat can now be shipped, that ground meat can now be shipped, that processed meat from animals that are less than 30 months of age can now be shipped.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is only about animals and product from animals under 30 months, but it's I think a very clear signal that the USDA is committed to moving this process forward in a very orderly, scientific, rational manner to the end that we want, which is the complete resumption of trade in live cattle and beef products.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. You mentioned that this announcement from the U.S. is a signal on fully reopening the border to cattle and beef trade. Can you tell us how soon you expect the borders to open to all live cattle?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish I could. However, we understand that the United States has a process that they have to follow, and of course part of the process concluded on April 7, when the comment period ended. In the discussions that the Premier and I had with Mr. J.B. Penn, who is the undersecretary of agriculture in the U.S., when we were in Washington some three or four weeks ago, it was very clear to us that they have a strong desire to review those comments that were received in this comment period and the one prior to Christmas expeditiously, that their desire is to move this process forward, and that their desire is to resume normal trade with this industry.

I should say, Mr. Speaker, that in the beef part of this industry this takes us to about 90 per cent of normal trade.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Government Expense Claims

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Taxpayers are angry about the lack of transparency on government travel and hosting expenses. While the federal government moves toward greater accountability, the Alberta government is anything but accountable. My questions are to the Premier. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. member does have the floor.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. When will this government require that all cabinet ministers and staff report every detail of their expenses on their web sites, just as the federal government now requires?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if that's the way we will go, but I would suggest that the federal government post those small, million-dollar-plus contributions to ad companies in Quebec. Maybe they aren't personal expenses, but certainly they come out of the taxpayers' dollars. I certainly hope these Liberals are not suggesting that we adopt the financial practices of their federal cousins.

Mr. Speaker, we are now evaluating whether we need to change the way that expenses are reported and how we need to do a better job or perhaps don't need to, but maybe we do need to do a better job in the future. Government expenses right now are reviewed annually by the Auditor General. He is involved in this, as is the Ethics Commissioner, and we will act on any recommendations of the Auditor General and/or the Ethics Commissioner. As well, the government's Agenda and Priorities Committee will examine all options related to further reporting on international travel by government members.

So it's a work in progress, but to say that we're going to adopt the federal model, no. We're not going to do it just because the Liberals across the way, these Liberals, say that that's the way we should do it. We'll come up with a plan that is open and transparent and . . .

Mr. Bonner: West Edmonton Mall.

Mr. Klein: West Edmonton Mall has nothing to do with personal . . .

The Speaker: Please, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Premier's Conservative cousins in Ontario brought in strict rules on expenses while they were still in government, what's stopping this government from following that set of rules? There's another choice for you.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're evaluating this whole business of expenses as we speak, and we want to have the best system. Now, I don't know much about the Ontario system, and I don't know much about the federal government system other than that we know there's a lot of coverage in the news media lately about the misappropriation of money. We want to have a system that is open, that is transparent, and that basically will hold all members of government, whether they're in cabinet or not, accountable for the expenditures they make. [interjection] And the opposition members, who also have expense accounts. You know, this whole thing, this holier-than-thou attitude, is a bit frustrating because they do run expenses.

That reminds me of the story one time when the NDs were in opposition. One of the hon. members criticized me for using a government plane from Calgary to go to Cold Lake when he drove up there and tried to let on that he wasn't benefiting when in fact he was getting 27 cents a kilometre to go up there and back. So he was making a lot more money than I ever made off that trip, I'll tell you that for sure, and these guys do as well.

2:10

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, Mr. Premier, for a government that wants Alberta to win the competition with other provinces, why is this government allowing Alberta to lose the competition on accountability? You don't want to do the federal system; you don't want to do the others.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as I said, we're going through this. This is a work in progress. We have absolutely nothing to hide. The payments made to MLAs are published in public accounts, including all MLAs. For instance, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar received reimbursement for travel expenses, $10,075. I don't know where he travelled to or what business he was on. If they want that kind of a breakdown, then we're going to demand that he account for every single kilometre that he travelled and what he saw along the way, where he was going, who he spoke to. [interjection] Well, do it. Do it. If you want to, stand up and report right now.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A tough act to follow.

Mr. Knight: Last week, as we have been informed, the Premier travelled to Albuquerque, New Mexico, for the western governors' North American Energy Summit. That's what the meeting was. On Thursday he signed an addendum to the 2002 transmission siting protocol. That's what he signed. My questions are to the Energy minister. What is the implication to the province of Alberta of signing the addendum?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, the question becomes so much more clear when the actual facts are stated as opposed to going to www.adlib.com. The addendum is to a 2002 original document. The export policy principles as established by this government are of May 29, 2002. So we do know that the Liberals are at least one if not two years behind.

I can say to the member that, as the Premier has stated and as we're more than pleased to table this protocol, this public document, it's a protocol amongst the Western Governors' Association, the U.S. Department of the Interior, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the U.S. Department of Energy, and the Council on Environmental Quality governing the siting and permitting of interstate electrical transmission in the western United States.

It goes on to say that it does help to facilitate the protocol of being able to establish transmission links and that the Premier hereby agrees to undertake best efforts to cooperate with the Original Signatories in meeting the objectives listed in the Protocol recognizing, without altering, diminishing, or expanding the existing jurisdiction, statutory and regulatory responsibilities and authorities or budget processes of the Province of Alberta.

Hardly a secret, profit-based document.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Energy: can the minister assure residential and small and medium industrial and commercial consumers that they will not pay for future export transmission capacity?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, if only the Liberals could take a page out of what I think is good question crafting and good fact basing.

Mr. Speaker, we can assure small business, we can assure every consumer in this province that they will be served first, that this addendum only serves to help lower their prices. It's very, very easy to see where the benefits can accrue to these individuals, businesses, and private persons with the amount of generation that this can attract and create.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The last question, again to the Minister of Energy: given the importance of this commodity, could you tell the Assembly why we would export electricity in any case?

Mr. Smith: Well, I think that's actually the question that those folks have been trying to put together all afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I will remind the House, and do that by tabling at the appropriate period, of the electricity export principles as crafted on May 29 of 2002. Number one of the five guiding principles: "Alberta's electricity needs will be met while also serving export markets."

Now, if you have, Mr. Speaker, new generation – and the 3,000 megawatts of new generation have given us an average wholesale power price this quarter of 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour.

An Hon. Member: How much was that?

Mr. Smith: Four point three cents per kilowatt hour, Mr. Speaker.

This new generation, if it is used completely in Alberta, can then move forward into other marketplaces. As long as people can know that they have a place to sell all their electricity, as Alberta grows, as other jurisdictions grow, we will have new generation, and the new generation is the fundamental underpinning to a good, positive, nonblackout, reliable supply of electricity at affordable prices.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Low-income Support Programs

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's decision to give Provincial Court judges a lower pay raise than they wanted was blamed on a commitment to other priorities. A cabinet document states: "Many priorities would come before increases to judge's salaries – seniors benefits, supplements to supports for independence and AISH issues, and other resources required in the justice system." My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Where are the increased AISH and SFI benefits that this order in council alludes to?

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, the business plans have been released with the budget. I'll be up for estimates I believe next week or maybe the week after. In any case, in terms of AISH we increased the budget line item that we had for AISH. We're going to go into a formal review of AISH this fall. As far as what we've done on the SFI side, we've gone to a more individually based, need-assessed system.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misreading the reasons that were given and attached to the order in council, and I might just expand for the benefit of the House what he's referring to and why what he's put before the House is a misread of what was said.

Judicial compensation commissions are set up every three years to establish salaries for judges. As a result of a decision by the Supreme Court of Canada relative to how we determine judicial compensation under the Constitution of the country and the need for judicial independence, we are obliged to follow that format. Once a Judicial Compensation Commission reports, Lieutenant Governor in Council then has to deal with the report of the compensation commission and if it varies from the recommendations of the Judicial Compensation Commission, must provide reasons. In those reasons that were provided and that the hon. member has taken one small piece out of and tried to misrepresent, essentially what we've said is that the Judicial Compensation Commission has said that the raises that they proposed were affordable because the government has an excess of revenue over expenditures.

What we've said in the reasons is that that in itself does not mean that a raise of a particular magnitude is affordable, because you have to look at all the priorities of government and all the things that government has to take into account in determining how to spend and how to be accountable for the public's money. Among all those other things could be included things like raises to SFI or Alberta Works, raises to AISH, raises to seniors. We could have put in the reasons funding for public schools, funding for health care, all sorts of other priorities of government and the people which need to be taken into account.

Therefore, a Judicial Compensation Commission has a very difficult job when it tries to say: there's a surplus; therefore, it's affordable. That's what the reasons said. That's what the reasons mean.

2:20

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Seniors: where is the increase to seniors' benefits that this document claims to be such a high priority?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, I don't know in the document specifically where it would refer, but I'll make a couple of statements here. In the last four years the increase to the seniors' benefits program has gone from some $128 million to $199 million. The number of seniors has not increased significantly. In the past three years I believe the payouts to individual seniors on ASB is about a 15 per cent increase. The number of folks helped on the special-needs program went from 7,500 to some 15,000.

I could go on and on and state where the programs to seniors in need in this province have improved, Mr. Speaker. When the estimates come up in May, they'll also see that there have been increases for the seniors' benefits program, for special needs this coming budget year.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, they forget to mention that Alberta is the leader – and I underline "the leader" – of all the provinces in implementing and matching federal funding in an area that's of national concern, one called affordable housing. So when they want to reference where the money is going within this department, I'd be more than pleased to answer. [Mr. Hancock rose]

The Speaker: We've already spent five minutes on this. Please. The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier this time: now that we have seen these massive increases in the travel and communications budgets of this government, when will the seniors, the disabled, and those on SFI benefits get a much-needed increase in their benefits from this government?

The Speaker: Whoa. I fail to see the relationship between that third question and the first question. We've spent five and half minutes, and I've got a long list.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Telework

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Teleworking represents one of the most important new employment and societal directions in our world today. Teleworking employment could revitalize struggling rural areas, reduce infrastructure demand and downtown traffic congestion, create employment for the disabled, improve the environment, but it could also steal our brainpower away if we don't provide competitive opportunities for employees here. My first question is for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given that productivity gains of 20 per cent average and as high as 50 per cent have been reported amongst large organizations that have introduced major teleworking opportunities, what sort of initiatives is your department involved in that will promote teleworking within Alberta and specifically within the government workforce?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Well, thank you for the question, Mr. Speaker. As far as the initiatives go, this is the kind of thing that we would look to for leadership from the private sector. As a government we are aware of the concept and, of course, always want to look at it and stay abreast of current thinking.

I agree with the preamble of the question in the sense of infrastructure, what it can do, and again for quality of life. What I haven't seen addressed in any of the research that I've been able to read to this point is: what is the impact or the downward pressure on wages by allowing people to stay at home? We haven't really had much discussion around those issues to this point but clearly less transportation expense required to get to work, perhaps wardrobe situations. Also, how is the issue of governance handled?

So there are many issues to this, and what looks on the surface of it always as a nice opportunity to provide another means of working – and I do recognize the member's concern about the disabled working at home. This is clearly important. But it's more complex than just a couple of articles out of a paper.

Mr. Lord: My second question for the same minister: given that an EKOS Research survey indicated that 55 per cent of 3,500 Canadian respondents wanted telework options, 43 per cent would switch employers to get telework options, and 33 per cent would choose telework opportunities over even a 10 per cent raise in pay, are there teleworking opportunities on the table in our labour negotiations with our provincial employees now?

Mr. Dunford: Again, as specific as the member would like me to be on this particular issue, the negotiations are going to be coming up later this fall. The demands that the employer will want at the next set of negotiations have not been established as yet, and of course we have no way of knowing at this particular point in time what the demands from the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees will be.

Mr. Lord: My third question is for the Minister of Innovation and Science. Given that the rollout of the SuperNet infrastructure could enable Alberta to become a world leader in teleworking opportunities, what initiatives is your department involved in to promote telework technology and telework opportunities to Alberta employers?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government is committed to a competitive global marketplace. Knowledge, skills, and innovation are important elements in a knowledge economy. What the Alberta SuperNet provides is the infrastructure to enable the opportunity for all Albertans to acquire the knowledge and skills to compete in the knowledge economy, and more importantly this infrastructure provides the opportunity for innovation that talks about the kind of initiative the hon. member is raising with respect to how we do work, from where it's delivered, because connected communities are all the same size.

Anthony Henday Ring Road

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, in its March 2004 inventory of major Alberta projects this government lists the southeast leg of the Anthony Henday ring road as costing Alberta taxpayers $270 million. To the Minister of Transportation: does this amount include the $75 million that the federal government will be contributing to the project?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, I didn't hear if he said southwest or southeast, but the federal government has made kind of a commitment to the southwest leg. They've said that they will give us $150 million: $75 million for Calgary and $75 million for Edmonton. But we haven't seen that money as yet because we're still negotiating on certain parameters of the agreement, and until those negotiations are done, I can't honestly say that that money is coming, although we are accounting for it in the total project cost.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: does the amount of $270 million include the annual lease payments and the principal and interest costs for the project?

Mr. Stelmach: Sometime ago when we made the announcement on the southeast leg of the Anthony Henday, we were asked: what do you think the cost would be? At that time we said about $300 million, but since then we have seen some pressures, mostly on bridge structures, and that's related to just a fast rising increase in the cost of steel. I believe it's gone up anywhere from 15 to 30 per cent, and in fact there are some that are only getting a seven-day commitment on the price of steel today.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if Albertans have to wait until a contract is signed before finding out the cost of the project, then how do taxpayers ensure that they are getting value for their money?

Mr. Stelmach: A number of points. One, Mr. Speaker, we've said in this House and continue to say that the request for proposal coming back from one of the three proponents has to make economic sense. We have to see value for the taxpayer dollar invested.

Secondly, I cannot say today on behalf of this government what innovation these companies will bring to their request for proposals. They may want to do that particular stretch of road because of the immense amount of traffic – concrete may be the way to go given the number of car and truck travel. They may have other solutions in terms of mitigating the cost of steel and maybe use more concrete on the interchanges. But I would think that at the end of the day every company will seek innovation and also look at huge amounts of cost savings by not allowing for the mobilization and demobilization of the equipment. Once they're on site, Mr. Speaker, they'll stay there till it's completed.

Health Care Reform (continued)

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two months ago today exactly I first demanded that the Premier make public the Graydon report, the government's blueprint for a two-tiered health care system in this province. For months the government has been working on a strategy to implement the Graydon report and its recommendations for user-pay health care, yet this strategy is being developed in secret behind the closed doors of the caucus and the cabinet room. My questions are to the Premier. Why has the Premier repeatedly promised to make the Graydon report public but consistently failed to actually deliver on this promise made to this House?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, there are some things in the Graydon report that undoubtedly will make for, as I said before, good 15-second sound bites. The problem is that when you feed this kind of material in isolation to the opposition, they say that that then becomes government policy. You know, it's that old saying that yes means yes, maybe means yes, and no means maybe. To them, anything that is mentioned, anything that is on paper becomes government policy.

Now, the Graydon report in conjunction with the Mazankowski report in conjunction with the survey of best practices in other jurisdictions, the national association of ministers of health, the annual Premiers' conference with the Council of the Federation: all of this information will be brought together, and we will consider it as a package. It won't be considered in isolation. That is one of the dangers.

Now, if the hon. leader of the third party will stand up and promise not to highlight and take out of context the Graydon report, then perhaps we'll give it to them, but they won't do that because they will use this for purely political reasons. They will take out the most dramatic and the most sensitive of all issues and they will say: folks, that's what the government is going to do. They will not use it to tell the truth. That is the problem.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has my promise. Will he table this report here tomorrow?

Given that the government has been planning radical changes to the health care system based on the Graydon report, how can the Premier justify keeping Albertans in the dark about that report? Albertans demand that it be released now.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding his yelling, he did promise. Well, I have no problems, you know, releasing the Graydon report, but I appeal to anyone, including the media, not to say that that report is the end-all and the be-all. That is like funding. That is like any other issue: one small piece of the puzzle. There are some good things in the Graydon report, some of which might be accepted, some of which might be rejected. But, for God's sake, don't imply or indicate that it's going to become or it is government policy, because it is not.

Now, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti did a commendable job, spent a tremendous amount of time working on that report, and that report will be given the utmost consideration along with a multitude of other information related to health care reform. So if the hon. leader of the third party gives an absolute undertaking that he will not politicize this and he will not use it for political purposes and he will not stand up and say that this is where the government is heading, if he will stand up and make that commitment, then he might – might – get the report.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, once again I give this promise to the House and to the Premier that I'll focus on the contents of the report.

Now I ask him: on exactly what date will he release this report to this House and to the people of Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I only have a promise relative to the contents of the report; I don't have a promise relative to how he intends to use it. I mean, notwithstanding the fact that there are only two of them, they are still politicians.

Mr. Speaker, it will be tabled, as they say, in the fullness of time, and it will be tabled in an appropriate manner so as not to be taken out of context.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven to participate.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Holocaust Memorial Day

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I was pleased to join you, our Minister of Community Development, the leaders of both opposition parties, and numerous colleagues to mark the anniversary of Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Memorial Day.

In 2000 the Alberta Legislature unanimously passed the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. Through this act we remember the senseless and systematic annihilation of 6 million European Jewish people as well as other victims of genocide.

Today I encourage Albertans to do more than remember. As global citizens we must be diligent in pursuing our responsibility to maintain a vigil, to stand on guard, and to defend others and ourselves against discriminatory behaviour and attitudes. We must listen to the voices of history and educate our children about the horrors of the Holocaust. We must honour those who fought and played an important role in defeating the evil of tyranny. Let's use this time to teach one another that those who live with us are our brothers and our sisters and that together we share the same short moment of life.

Mr. Speaker, as Albertans we will remember, for we must never forget.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Juno Week

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise to congratulate all the organizers and volunteers who helped make Juno Week in Edmonton, the first week of April, the most successful celebration of Canadian music this country has ever seen. Congratulations to all our nominees: Sandro Dominelli, Aaron Lines, Terri Clark, John Stetch, Amanda Forsyth, Jessica Linnebach, and in particular the Alberta-born rockers Nickelback, who took home two Junos for group of the year and fan choice award.

Alberta's music and recording industry is a vital part of what makes our province such an exciting and vibrant place to live. Thankfully, our Alberta Foundation for the Arts, which receives its funding from the Alberta lottery fund, actively supports our arts community.

I also extend a special thanks to our Minister of Community Development, who along with Mayor Bill Smith and Senator Tommy Banks worked so hard to bring the Junos to Edmonton and to showcase our city and our province to the rest of Canada.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Alberta Volunteers

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize some extremely important Albertans, our volunteers, and I would especially like to acknowledge the great work of the Wild Rose Foundation and all participants in Alberta's voluntary sector.

I know that throughout this week there are special recognition ceremonies taking place in almost all of the communities across this province. However, as the representative for the community of St. Albert I would like to recognize those five finalists in the volunteer citizen of the year for 2003. They are Lawrence and Doris Burt, Ferne Carignan, Michael Clulow, Gary Jurke, and Doris Lunn.

We also recognize at this time the leaders of tomorrow, who are the young members of our community who give so selflessly to other members within the community and beyond. They are Sara Hickerty from Bertha Kennedy elementary school, Briana Foster from Richard S. Fowler junior high, Jason LaChapelle from Paul Kane high school, Holli Lizée from the University of Alberta, and the youth group the Columbian Squires of the Brother Anthony Kowalczyk Circle 4759.

I'd like to recognize them and ask all members of this Assembly to recognize the wonderful volunteers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:40 National Volunteer Week

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to recognize April 18 to 24 as National Volunteer Week. I hope the hon. members know – and I'm sure they do – how lucky we are here in Alberta. We have a very high level of volunteerism: hours and hours worked with dedication, experience, and, may I say, professionalism.

Coming from the arts, I know that our arts and cultural sector is deeply indebted to volunteers. They work as ushers, build sets and paint them, sell tickets, help with fundraising, transport things. You name it; volunteers do it. Just think of where Alberta's summer festivals would be without volunteers.

I want to honour and thank volunteers that work in some of the other areas like police victim services, literacy, youth sports and recreation, the food banks, blood services, emergency and disaster services, Catholic charities, United Way, the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues, the SPCA and humane societies, child protection and assistance, the YWCA and the YMCA. The list goes on; I've only touched the surface.

To finish, I want to recognize the people who volunteer on various county, municipal, and government committees bringing the citizen's voice to the issues.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Smoky Lake Firefighters' Curling Team

Mr. Broda: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's great to rise today and recognize four individuals: Ken Osepchuk, Bill Smith, Larry LaFleur, and Jim Henderson. They represent the Smoky Lake fire department curling team. After winning the provincial firefighters' curling championship, they went on to compete at the 45th annual firefighters' Brier curling championship held in Valleyfield, Quebec, from April 1 to 11. This local team not only represented Smoky Lake but Alberta and competed against teams representing each province, one team from the Northwest Territories, two teams from Ontario.

I would like to thank the community of Smoky Lake for their support and congratulate our local team on winning the Canadian firefighters' championship curling bonspiel. Let's all give them a hearty congratulations.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Grande Prairie Storm Hockey Team

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to recognize and congratulate the Grande Prairie Storm junior A hockey team. The Storm captured their first ever Alberta Junior Hockey League title last Thursday by defeating the Fort McMurray Oil Barons – I see the member has vacated the Chamber; he couldn't stand it – in a dramatic 4 to 2 victory.

For the players, coaches, and training staff this accomplishment represents a moment that will be forever written in the team's proud hockey history. This particular team have only been in existence nine years. The journey continues as the team now moves on to compete at the Doyle Cup in Nanaimo and after that the Royal Bank Cup, which will be held in the city of Grande Prairie May 8 to 16.

On behalf of the members of this Assembly I extend congratulations to general manager and head coach Fran Gow, President Bruce Little, and all members of the Grande Prairie Storm hockey team on this accomplishment. Best wishes for continued success in the year ahead.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Millwoods Welcome Centre for Immigrants

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I rise today to recognize the Millwoods Welcome Centre for Immigrants. This centre is a joint venture of the Indo-Canadian Women's Association, Mennonite Centre for Newcomers, and Catholic Social Services and was established in 1997 after a study conducted by Dr. Laura Ho which demonstrated the need for such a centre.

The centre now assists approximately one thousand newcomers every year to overcome the challenges of becoming Canadian. In addition to offering classes to improve language and computer skills, the centre arranges for work placements for internationally educated professionals. This service is particularly important given the unacceptably high number of qualified professionals who continue to be underemployed and unable to meet their full potential in their adopted country, Canada.

In Alberta we are in desperate need of improved measures to integrate international professionals into our institutions and our economy. Albertans are truly privileged to live in a multicultural society that is enhanced by the contributions of diverse groups and individuals.

I am truly proud of the work performed by the staff and volunteers of the Millwoods Welcome Centre and thank them for the valued services that they provide to new Canadians.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition from Edmonton Police Service signed by 151 people petitioning the Legislative Assembly to "support Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act, which will provide more security and peace of mind for people working in occupations who have a higher risk of exchanging bodily fluids with a potential carrier of a blood borne disease."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise to table copies of the House leaders' agreement that was signed today by the Government House Leader as well as by the House leader of the Official Opposition and by the House leader of the third party. It's my understanding that it has to be photocopied and circulated to all members of this Assembly as soon as possible, so I will provide a copy now to the page for that purpose.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table five copies of the documents I referred to during my question today, and that is the federal government's new guidelines for ministers' offices on disclosure and accountability around personal travel and hosting expenses. It includes some sample pages from the web sites in which they go into layers of detail right down to the purpose of the meeting, how many people were at it, what the cost was, that level of detail. Most informative. I do recommend it to everyone in the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and that's a letter that I had written on March 31, 2004, to the hon. Minister of Finance, and this is in regard to credit scoring as an underwriting tool for the insurance industry in Alberta.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two documents today. The first is a letter from Elisabeth Ballermann, the president of the Health Sciences Association of Alberta. The second document is a news release from HIV Edmonton dated March 22 of 2004. Each of these documents expresses serious concerns that many Albertans have about Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have two quick tablings this afternoon as well. One is the Clearwater/Christina rivers management plan, and I would like to just have it noted that this is Alberta's first provincial/Canadian heritage rivers designation. It's intended to recognize the interests of everyone who lives along that river and uses it for recreation purposes, and it demonstrates the importance and the value of these partnerships in preserving and enhancing Alberta's wetlands and aquatic ecosystems.

My second tabling is on behalf of our Deputy Premier, who is also the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and it is responses to questions that were raised during interim supply estimates on March 17, 2004, in this House.

Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with the House leaders' agreement, which I just tabled and which was signed earlier today by the three House leaders and acknowledged by yourself I believe, I would move that the Assembly provide unanimous consent to give effect to this House leaders' agreement, specifically consent under point 5 of that agreement to waive Standing Order 34(2.1)(a) regarding an amendment in that agreement and to allow the removal of the motions for returns identified at 4(b)(iii) and 5(b) of that agreement and to waive Standing Order 34(2) to allow the Assembly to move on to public bills and orders following the Assembly having dealt with Motion for a Return 23 as outlined in that agreement.

The Speaker: The procedure today is very, very unusual, but I do want to compliment those who've worked together over the last several weeks in attempting to build a consensus with respect to this matter. It was not always easy on previous Mondays in terms of this.

The request is being made here today on the basis of a motion of the hon. Deputy Government House Leader calling for three items which are located on page 3 of 3. This is not all being read into the Hansard because we'll have it published anyway in the Journals of the House. The request is for unanimous consent to see three things moved, and all hon. members now have a copy of this document in front of them.

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: Unanimous consent having been given, as we move through the afternoon, additional comment will be made with respect to this, but again congratulations for attempting to unravel a little roadblock.

head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and may I just say thank you to all members of the House for allowing that unanimous consent, which will allow us to speed along and provide as much information as possible and get on with other business thereafter.

Mr. Speaker, proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 1, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 47, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, and 59.

[Motion carried]

Children's Services Contracts

Q47. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report to strengthen the processes used by the Ministry of Children's Services for awarding and managing contracts in order to save taxpayers' dollars?

Ms Blakeman: We have asked for this question in this format as we're not always able to examine every ministry before the Public Accounts Committee. We have put a number of written questions on the Order Paper in order to ensure that we're able to make public the questions and hopefully the responses from the government.

This is a fairly straightforward question. I'm expecting a positive response from the government and provision of the information that has been requested.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed to respond on behalf of the government and accept Written Question 47.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

[Written Question 47 carried]

Lottery Fund

Q49. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted.

Which reports, consultation groups, and stakeholder reviews have indicated to the government that money allocated to the lottery fund is best spent by the government rather than being returned to the local communities where the gambling revenues came from?

Ms Blakeman: This is an attempt on my part to ascertain the logic behind the dismantling of the community lottery boards. Now, that in fact happened some two years ago now. It came into effect at the beginning of last year I think, and there was a fair to-do when the community lottery boards were dismantled. In response to the concerns raised by the opposition and by the community, the government responded with a different program with different processes, limits, and requirements.

I have been unable to get a clear answer from the government as to why they decided to dismantle the community lottery boards of the time, in which money was allocated on a per capita basis and the decision-making process happened in the communities or on a regional basis very close to the communities. The process that's in place now is a centralized decision-making process, very close to government, does not have that same community outreach. Members of the community continue to make clear to me that they far prefer the other method.

I'm interested in receiving the basis on which the government made its decision. So I am looking for documentation. I'm looking for reports or consultation groups or the stakeholder reviews that did indicate to the government that people preferred to have those decisions made by government rather than in the local community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. There are two general areas that I'd like to cover by way of response. The first is that the Alberta lottery fund and the programs, generally speaking, that we have under that are as a result of listening to Albertans. There are specifically three reports – the Gordon report in 1995, called New Directions for Lotteries and Gaming; the gaming summit report in 1998; and the licensing policy review in 2001 – all of which are public and can be found on the ministry web site.

Additionally, I can advise that on an annual basis we in Alberta Gaming do poll Albertans to determine what level of satisfaction they have with respect to how the lottery fund revenue is used, and the most recent information is that 70 per cent or indeed a high percentage of Albertans are satisfied. That is reported in our annual report, and the annual report is also a public document that can be found on the ministry's web site.

The second general point that I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, is that lottery dollars are directly returned to Alberta communities through the fund. The hon. member refers to the community initiatives program, that was established in 2002. There were questions at that time as to why the predecessor was dismantled, and they were answered at that time. The answer with respect to the dismantling is that the previous program was eliminated because of lack of funds in the budget. That was the answer at that time, and it remains correct today.

The program that took its place was the community initiatives program, which over the past two years has had some $60 million allocated to the communities and the charities in those communities. In excess of 2,500 grants have been granted. The program is again in place for this year and likely will continue into the future.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that from my point of view the evidence is very clear with respect to this program. There has been no to-do. I do not receive letters from people saying that this program is not successful. Indeed, it seems that on a daily basis I receive letters from all areas of the province which, in fact, say that this program is overwhelmingly successful, that it is incredible.

In that regard, I do wish to file 16 letters directly related to the hon. member who has asked the question, letters of support that she had signed, three in number, and 13 letters from charities in her community which say that this particular program is outstanding. I don't have any letters from this hon. member's community that I'm aware of saying anything other than that. So I don't know who she's talking to, but I know that those people are not talking to me. Perhaps she can make that connection so that I do have some point of view other than one which is that this program is working very well indeed.

So the bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that I have referred to various public documents. I will be filing with the Legislature the requisite number of letters that I've referred to, which are reflective of the dozens and dozens and perhaps even hundreds of letters that we have received over the past two years that simply speak to the incredible success of this program. I therefore urge the Legislature to reject this question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm disappointed to hear that the minister is refusing to provide the information and, further, is making an end run around the accuracy of some of the reports that he quoted. In fact, if we're going to look at what came out of the gambling summit and if we're going to look at what came out of the Gordon report, they were very specifically recommending and, in fact, from those two flowed the creation of the community lottery boards, not the community initiatives program.

So to somehow refer back to them and say, "Well, no, that was the impetus on which the government decided to dismantle the community lottery board and institute a lesser program," it's hard to forgive that kind of use of the truth, frankly.

I'm wondering if he's referring to the recent use of proceeds and licensing around the casino and bingo reports as his third reference there, as a reasoning. Well, there's no connection at all to that report, to the information that I was seeking here, so I wouldn't accept that referral as any kind of information around this.

I'm curious as to why the minister does not receive copies of the tablings. Certainly, at the time the community lottery board was dismantled, I tabled dozens and dozens of letters from organizations. There were media conferences. There were long lists of people that signed letters of concern and petitions. So I'm concerned with the process that exists in the Conservative caucus if information like that is not shared with the minister that needs to be seeing it.

Frankly, to pretend that a letter that I would write in support of an organization in my community applying for funds is some kind of example of my approval of a given program is simply not accurate. To organizations in my constituency that come to me for a reference or a letter of support in order to be applying for community facility enhancement money or any of the other lottery grant, lottery-funded programs that are out there – Wild Rose Foundation, Alberta Foundation for the Arts – I'm not going to say: no, I'm not going to write you a letter of support because the Minister of Gaming might get up at some point in the future and use that letter of support to somehow say that I do or do not support the given program. That's ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. Of course I'm going to assist those organizations. That's who I'm here to represent and support.

But signing a letter that says that this organization, you know, is a well-known organization, has a good volunteer base, manages its money well, has a good project that is worthy of support does not, then, in turn say that I think the community facility enhancement program or the CIP program is a good or bad program. I'm there to support the organizations that are asking for support, and letters supporting them are not – you cannot extrapolate that to a specific support or nonsupport of a government program.

Finally, the minister makes reference to polls that he's conducted, but the polls themselves are not released. What we get is a little tidbit of information here, reference in a performance measurement there that says that there is a 70 per cent satisfaction, but we don't get to see what the polls are. We don't get to see who they went out to, what the polling number was particularly. So that's not useful information either.

I think that at best the minister has ducked around what's being requested here. He's flat out refused to provide the information that's been requested. Remembering well the controversy at the time, it just leaves me saying: what's the government hiding if they refuse to provide the information? So a most unfortunate turn of events in having the minister decide not to give us the information. From this we're only left to decide that they really didn't have any information. I'm disappointed in the decision of the minister.

Thank you.

[Written Question 49 lost]

Seniors' Housing

Q50. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report that the Department of Seniors improve its system for monitoring the performance of management operations that deliver social housing programs for the ministry?

Ms Blakeman: Now, this is one of the questions that I was specifically referring to with my opening remarks, Mr. Speaker, in that we don't get to see a full rota of the ministries during any given year of Public Accounts Committee meetings. We only meet while the Legislature is in session, which severely restricts the number of departments that we're able to scrutinize. In trying to make sure that we got some things on the record, I did put these questions through as written questions. Public Accounts has in fact met with the minister, but I look forward to his response to this specific question and his provision of the information that has been requested.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the government I'm prepared to accept Written Question 50.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: My thanks to the minister.

[Written Question 50 carried]

Business Resumption Planning

Q51. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report that the Department of Government Services make provision for appropriate recovery facilities and equipment to resume business operations if a service disruption occurs?

Ms Blakeman: We had discovered, in examining public accounts previously, that there was some disarray around business resumption after a disaster. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has answered some of those questions when appearing before Public Accounts, but in this case we're specifically interested in what the Department of Government Services has done and what plans are in place because this is the government department that handles so many of our legalities and technicalities, if I may, things like the motor vehicle registration, the registries, which have now been privatized. Nonetheless, they're still ultimately responsible for them. What plans are in place for resumption of business should a disaster strike?

So I'm interested in hearing from the minister whether he's willing to provide us with his response. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, thank you. We will respond and indicate that the government is pleased and prepared to accept Written Question 51.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: My thanks to the minister.

[Written Question 51 carried]

Licence Plates

Q52. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.

What did it cost the government to recall all licence plates issued with the letters BSE and issue new ones?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're prepared to accept Written Question 52 and also just add into the record, so that folks know, that the total cost of recalling the licence plates that had the prefix BSE on them comes to $715.10. To recall and actually replace those plates was $439, and the shipping charges around the province were $51, and replacing 31 plates that were returned by the public – we gave the public the opportunity, if they had already bought and secured a plate that had BSE as a prefix, to return it – cost $225, for a total of $715. We accept that we will send that information back to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in writing.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to just make a few comments in connection to this. I appreciate that the Government Services minister has given us the amount of money that's involved here, and I also appreciate that the amount of money is relatively small, but this particular question raises eyebrows, I think, when people hear that the government actually took the step of recalling licence plates issued with the letters BSE.

It is one of the, I guess, sillier actions of government, and I would really like to understand why the government felt it was necessary to withdraw these licence plates simply because they had the letters BSE on them and whether or not there's a policy around this if the three letters in a licence plate happen to coincide with some other unfortunate abbreviation. None of them actually spring to mind, but I'm sure there probably are a number that have been proscribed because of any unfortunate connotation. What's the policy with respect to this? When did the government make the decision and why?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for the breakdown in costs associated with licence plates that were issued with the letters BSE.

[Written Question 52 carried]

The Speaker: Now, just a second. There's a very interesting consequence of what happens here. Remember that it is the Assembly that has to give acceptance to the question. What would have happened if the hon. minister, as he did, gave the answer but then the Assembly turned down the motion? Would there then have been a point of privilege against the hon. Minister of Government Services for having believed that he was above the Assembly? This is one of those interesting little procedural questions that today was rather innocent but on another day could have been something else.

Construction Grants

Q53. Mr. Bonner moved that the following question be accepted. What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-

2003 annual report that the Department of Infrastructure require grant recipients to formally accept the terms and conditions of construction grants including roles and responsibilities, consequences for failing to adhere to the terms and conditions, reporting requirements, and the ministry's right to audit the grant recipient's use of taxpayers' money?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure we're prepared to respond and indicate that the government is prepared to accept Written Question 53.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: I'd like to thank the minister.

[Written Question 53 carried]

Regional Police Forces

Q54. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted.

Which communities is the Solicitor General working with to establish regional police forces?

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, this is flowing from the original draft report of the MLA committee that reviewed the Police Act. They came out with some initial concepts which the Solicitor General examined over the summer and fall, came back with some responses, and then we didn't hear anything more from them for two years until just recently when we had the government's acceptance and rejection in final form. This flowed out of that because I was interested in what work was actually being done and which communities were being actively worked with to achieve this.

I think there's still a debate around whether regional policing is the most effective, but I'm at this point very interested in it because I think that's a way for costs to be contained and services to be shared without getting into the more formal structure of a provincial police force, which I am not in favour of. I think this is an interesting proposal, and I'd like to see where it's being considered. So the question is on the Order Paper for the Solicitor General at this point, and I'm hoping that she will support my request and grant the information.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to propose an amendment to Written Question 54 if I may. I move that Written Question 54 be amended by striking out "regional police forces" and substituting "regional police services." So the question will read, "Which communities is the Solicitor General working with to establish regional police services?"

The amendment, Mr. Speaker, uses the term "police services" instead of "police forces" because that is in keeping with the legislation as well as the philosophy and role of policing in Alberta. This amendment has been approved by Parliamentary Counsel, and I believe it's been passed around. I know I have a copy. At this time I move that Written Question 54 be accepted with the amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to this. I appreciate the minister's comments, and I appreciate as well the minister's amendment, which I supported.

You know, it's an interesting question, Mr. Speaker, the question of regionalizing municipal services and particularly police. I happen to think that regionalization of services is a good step to take and one that we ought to support, and I'm pleased that the minister is going in this direction. It doesn't make sense to me, taking for example the Edmonton regional area, to have a number of police forces. In fact, what actually occurs is that we have RCMP operating in different communities and you have the city police.

When I was involved in the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and, as well, at Urban Municipalities Association meetings, I often heard the concerns by municipalities who had RCM Police about the lack of responsiveness to their local needs. It was very difficult, indeed, sometimes to have responsive policing. Particularly, the RCMP had lagged considerably behind. I don't know if they've made up lost ground since that time, Mr. Speaker, but they had lagged considerably behind the municipal police forces of Edmonton and Calgary in implementing community policing. This was very difficult in such a centralized body as the RCMP is. You can't have community policing if it's directed from Ottawa, and that presented a real difficulty.

I think there are very substantial cost savings that could be realized as a result of this regionalization, but the problem comes, Mr. Speaker, in that smaller communities are very concerned about any attempts to enforce a larger municipality's control over their services. They like to keep control of their local services. So that's a challenge, I think, for the minister. She needs to find ways in which local communities can actually increase a degree of local control in a regionalized police service, and I think there is lots of potential to do that with respect to regionalization if it's done in a sensitive manner.

Mr. Speaker, I guess in conclusion I would like to commend the minister for moving in this direction. I would suggest that there needs to be strong leadership if we're going to overcome some of the parochialism that does exist with respect to different municipalities jealously guarding their powers and authority.

I think there is a tremendous opportunity to improve policing, make it more sensitive, implement community policing more thoroughly, and indeed to save a considerable amount of money, and I would think that one of the first things the government should do is try and come up with some financial information that would indicate what savings ought to be realized. It's been said that there are too many municipal politicians, all of whom are able to, you know, draw a salary, require administrative support, and so on. How many police chiefs do you need? How many fire chiefs do you need? How many heads of sewer departments and so on do you actually need in order to deliver those municipal services?

I think the provincial government does have a leadership role here, Mr. Speaker. I think it's clear that if they do provide strong and firm leadership, they can save municipal taxpayers a great deal of money and at the same time can improve the service, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has suggested, correctly in my view, in avoiding going to a provincial police service, which I think would not be the best solution at all. There are lots of gains that can be made by co-operation between municipalities and by regionalization, and I'm sure that the Minister of Municipal Affairs would also agree with that type of statement.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would again just want to indicate my appreciation to the minister for accepting the question, to the hon. member for raising the question, and hope that this will in fact see the light of day and the citizens of Alberta will be the beneficiaries.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I look forward to receiving the information. It should be very informative. Thank you.

[Written Question 54 as amended carried]

Construction Grants

Q55. Mr. Bonner moved that the following question be accepted. What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report that the Department of Infrastructure protect the spending of taxpayers' dollars by strengthening its monitoring process for construction grants?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure I accept Written Question 55.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm pleased to rise to speak to this written question, and I appreciate that the minister has agreed to answer it. One of the things that I think is very important is that we do have a clear understanding of exactly how one might want to ensure that construction grants are well spent. The Auditor General did say in his recommendations in the 2002-03 annual report that the Department of Infrastructure should protect the spending of taxpayers' dollars by strengthening "its monitoring processes for construction grants." So I think it's a very pertinent question, and indeed I would urge all members to support the motion.

You know, the provincial government spends a great deal of money on this type of grant. The Auditor General makes recommendations, and usually these recommendations are well thought out, so it's important that we get an answer to the question. I do believe that the government should be taking strong action. I know that in my experience, again in municipal politics, there were oftentimes construction projects which were approved that were not the most effective use of taxpayers' money, and a good strong oversight I think is absolutely essential if we're going to continue to do that.

I remember one instance, Mr. Speaker, where a project to build a sewer was approved in the city of Edmonton. It was called the Highlands sewer, and since I come from Edmonton-Highlands I know a little bit about that particular project. It was an interesting project. There was an existing sewer that flowed from . . . [interjection] Absolutely. I'm using this as an example of what can go wrong, hon. minister. I'm not saying that it was your project at all, but you see that in the absence of really strong measures to make sure that these projects are well managed and cost-effective, this kind of thing could even happen in this minister's department, believe it or not.

In this particular case an outside company was brought in which looked at the existing sewer and said: "Well, you know, it's 30, 40 years old. We don't even know if it's a valid project. It might collapse. We can't test it. We can't examine it. So what we're going to do is we're going to build a brand new parallel Highlands sewer, the new Highlands sewer, because we don't know if the old one is in good enough shape."

What happened is that they went along and they started to build this sewer. They got most of the way through it, and they spent close to $50 million, Mr. Speaker. That's a lot of money. Then a problem occurred in Gold Bar park, and there was an eruption of sewage from this partially completed line because there had been a rainstorm and all of the water got into the sewer and it surcharged and it erupted. It wasn't quite finished. It hadn't quite got all the way to the Gold Bar Wastewater Treatment Plant.

So we got the city auditor general involved, Mr. Speaker, and he began to examine this project and interestingly enough came to the conclusion that there was a big problem with the design of the new sewer but, furthermore, raised questions about the old sewer. Then the department claimed at that point that two sewers were needed to handle expansion, but the auditor general pointed out that even if they were both completed, the waste-water treatment plant only had enough capacity for one sewer.

So they built a second line to double the capacity of the waste-water treatment plant. They would need millions and millions of dollars to expand the waste-water treatment plant, and that wasn't even in the plan. So the lack of oversight in this case ended up costing the taxpayers $40 million or $50 million, yet the administration and the construction and engineering firms wanted to forge ahead and finish the line for an additional $17 million.

Then it was discovered, Mr. Speaker, that in fact the old line could be inspected, and an engineer was put in charge of inspecting that line. Sure enough, the inspection showed that the old line was not in danger of collapse – in fact, it was in very good shape – and further found that the line could not only be inspected; it was designed to be inspected. If the outside firms had taken the time to actually look at the original plans for this sewer, they probably would've been able to determine that and save the taxpayers a lot of money.

So here's an enormous waste of taxpayers' money on an absolutely unrequired line when the first line could've been inspected all along. Had proper safeguards as proposed by our Auditor General been in place at that time, the taxpayers would have been saved a great deal of money.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that it is very important. This question is very, very relevant, and I think the hon. Minister of Transportation is quite right in accepting this motion because without these kinds of safeguards a great deal of money can be wasted. I know that all hon. members want to ensure that that does not in fact happen. So I am pleased to support the motion and commend the minister and the hon. member for asking and agreeing to answer the question.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like through the Minister of Transportation to thank the Minister of Infrastructure for accepting Written Question 55.

[Written Question 55 carried]

Natural Gas Rebate Program

Q56. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.

How much money in total was distributed to utility customers in January 2004 through the government's natural gas rebate program?

Mr. Bonner: Now, once again this is one of these essential questions whereby the opposition would like to certainly hold the government accountable in that we know where taxpayer dollars are going. So I look forward to the reply from the minister.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Energy and on behalf of the government I wish to indicate that we are prepared to accept Written Question 56.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I again am quite pleased that the government has agreed to this question because I think this is one of the most relevant questions that has actually been put in this session.

You know, we have seen government numbers with respect to this, Mr. Speaker. There were a variety of programs just before the last election. We do have a global figure for this, and it is $4.2 billion, but that includes a multitude of programs including the electricity rebate program, including the $150 down and $150 after the government is re-elected. All of those programs, I think, deserve a great deal of scrutiny from the people of Alberta. So I think the question is quite relevant.

The charge has been made that the provincial government essentially bought its way out of a very difficult position with respect to utility costs before the last election. As we know, just before this election there was a tremendous spike in electricity prices caused precisely by deregulation, and there were a lot of unanswered questions about that around the time.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

For example, there was participation in the energy market at that time by the American energy company Enron, and, Mr. Speaker, as we well know, there were a series of charges brought against Enron in the United States for manipulating electricity prices among other sins. Enron has been subject in the United States to prosecution and heavy penalties for their manipulation, but their role in Alberta has never been clarified. Certainly, with the high prices in electricity at that time the bottom line of Enron and other energy companies did not suffer. The question is: did that kind of manipulation of electricity prices take place in Alberta? This is a question the government, unfortunately, has been unwilling to ask or even to look into.

We've raised this issue before. The Minister of Energy has declined to order an investigation into that period of time. So then the government response was not to get to the bottom of the price spike and the high prices that people were paying both in gas and electricity but to order rebate programs. I just want to indicate that I think that the $4.2 billion was an outrageous amount of money.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, as well, that since that time the government has not spent anywhere near as much money on rebate programs. In fact, before this winter we were able to say that they had not spent a nickel on rebate programs since the election. They spent $4.2 billion – that's billion with a "b" – before the election, but after the election nada, not a penny, until, of course, finally, finally gas prices got so high and stayed so high for a sustained period of time that they actually reached the trigger that the government thought it had set outside the reach of the actual prices, and we actually did get some rebates in terms of natural gas over the past winter months. That was the first time that Albertans had seen any kind of energy rebate since the last election.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So the question really is: why would the government spend $4.2 billion on rebates just before the election and then cut them off, just cut them off, once the election was out of the way? What are the possible election – sorry; that was a bit of a Freudian slip. What were the possible reasons for that? Could it have been that they weren't needed? No. We found that prices for electricity and natural gas stayed high. They didn't quite spike as high in the electricity sector as they did just before the election, but they remained very high, and we saw continued increases in natural gas prices as well.

Certainly, in the area of electricity there was a considerable sustained increase. In fact, Mr. Speaker, Alberta now has the highest electricity prices in the country. That wasn't the case – that wasn't the case – before deregulation. We now have prices that are anywhere between 60 to 80 per cent higher than before deregulation. The government has not come up with rebate programs to help Albertans handle that nor have they been willing to change their mind on deregulation, which is really the source of it.

But, you know, there's still hope, Mr. Speaker, because we know that Bill 1, not the last Bill 1 but the first Bill 1 after the election, was a bill sponsored by the Premier. I can't quite recall the title of that bill, but it basically allowed the government to implement any energy rebate program for any amount, for any reason, for any period of time. It gave the government, in fact, complete freedom in order to create a rebate program for energy purposes.

So as we approach the next election, Mr. Speaker, I have some confidence that they may wish to revisit this decision to cut off energy rebates after the last election, and we may in fact see new energy rebates. I suspect, though, that that will have more to do with government polling, public opinion polling on their popularity, than it actually has anything to do with the price of electricity or natural gas.

Certainly, we've seen high and sustained prices for natural gas. They're continuing to rise as we run out of natural gas in North America and we continue to pump that natural gas across the border without taking any of the volatiles out of it thereby depleting our reserves to dramatic levels, exporting jobs, all as a result of the government's negligence with respect to this important resource. They would prefer to get as much money as possible for their unanticipated, in quotations, surpluses by selling as much natural gas at as high a price as they possibly can without regard to the future requirements of the Alberta economy or, indeed, the future requirements of people who depend on natural gas to heat their home or their business or their farm.

So, once again, Mr. Speaker, to conclude, I think that this particular motion is indeed relevant, and I think that the people of Alberta will be interested to know just how much money was spent by the government in order to pay the January 2004 natural gas rebate program.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you.

Construction Contracts

Q57. Mr. Bonner moved that the following question be accepted. What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report that the Department of Infrastructure protect the spending of taxpayers' dollars by implementing a process to ensure that contracts with construction managers protect the ministry's interests as the fund provider and are cost-effective?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Infrastructure we accept Written Question 57.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate to the Assembly that I appreciate the government's response to this written question. The written question specifies what measures the government has taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-03 annual report that the Department of Infrastructure protect the spending of taxpayers' dollars by implementing "a process to ensure that contracts with construction managers protect the Ministry's interests as a funder and are cost-effective." Once again, this is an important recommendation, and I think that it's a relevant question to be asking the government, so I'm pleased that they're going to provide an answer to it.

Certainly, contracts with construction managers need to protect the ministry's interests, and the ministry needs to make sure as the fund provider that these contracts are in fact cost-effective. I know that there are lots of members opposite that believe that providing contracts, or contracting out or outsourcing, is the most cost-effective way to deal with it, but certainly unless appropriate steps are taken and a process is established that would make sure that the ministry's and the taxpayers' interests are protected, this is not necessarily the case, and there are many examples of shortcuts that have been taken that have failed to really protect the interests of the government who has let the contract.

I remember there was a book that I read a few years ago called Reinventing Government. Reinventing Government strongly suggested that the best way to do it was to outsource contracts, but it also required that you use modern techniques to monitor the contract, monitor the efficiency of the contract, the cost-effectiveness, and make sure that shortcuts weren't taken that would undermine those things.

I think the principle that they used in Reinventing Government – and this was a text that I think the government used in their so-called revolution of the mid-90s – is that the government ought to be steering and not rowing. But, in my experience, Mr. Speaker, quite often when the government contracts out, it's actually quite rudderless and steps are not in place to ensure that these contracts actually do what the government department wants done and do so in a way that protects the interests financially and otherwise of the taxpayer.

So I've never really bought into some of the notions contained in Reinventing Government in the same way that this government has, but I would draw attention to the authors' contention that unless there are appropriate safeguards in place, you will not be able to ensure that contracts actually provide a more cost-effective means of accomplishing something than government doing it itself.

In fact, we've all heard the famous quotation about the consultant who borrows your watch to tell you the time, and I think we've all had experiences with that kind of consultant. The same thing applies in a general sense to contracts, whether they be directly for construction services or for construction managers to look after the projects, and so on. Their interests aren't necessarily the same interests as the government's. They have their own personal interests, their own businesses to run, and so on, and they need to make a profit on that as well. So they always have an interest, I think, in minimizing costs. That can be a good thing if we can benefit by it, but if we end up paying later for their omissions, it can in fact be a very negative thing indeed, and the result is, I think, that we need to make sure that these processes are in place, as the Auditor General has indicated.

I would urge members to support the motion. I know that given the minister's comments with respect to this, most members will no doubt look very favourably on this motion for this written question. I hope that it will in fact pass the Assembly. Again, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the member for bringing the question and the minister for agreeing to answer it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bonner: I thank the minister for accepting this question, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 57 carried]

Construction Grant Payments

Q58. Mr. Bonner moved that the following question be accepted. What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation contained in his 2002-2003 annual report that the Department of Infrastructure make all construction grant payments through the consolidated cash investment trust fund bank account?

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, again, I think this is an excellent suggestion by the Auditor General, and it certainly will enhance the process of openness and transparency that taxpayers do require and request with their taxpayer dollars.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to indicate on behalf of the hon. Minister of Infrastructure that he and the government are prepared to accept Written Question 58.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to indicate that I always . . .

Mr. Dunford: Filibuster. He's opposed to private members' bills.

Mr. Mason: Well, the hon. minister is saying that I'm opposed to private members' bills. Not in the least, Mr. Speaker. But I do think that we need to examine these written questions very carefully because I think they're very valid. I'm pleased that the government has indicated that it's going to support this particular Auditor General's recommendation.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Public Accounts Committee, and I certainly find it an immensely valuable experience for me as a Member of this Legislative Assembly. The opportunity to ask ministers questions in a less formal setting and in a less adversarial setting is extremely valuable. The Auditor General is always present at those meetings, and I think he, in fact, is a tremendous asset to our work on that committee. His recommendations, I think, are generally taken quite seriously by ministers. But we don't always get enough of an opportunity to ask questions in that committee. There's a significant number of members, and they are all active participants, so we often don't get as many questions as we would like, I guess. So these written questions, I think, have an important function, and they are indeed relevant.

Now, the suggestion of the Auditor General that the Department of Infrastructure make all construction grant payments through the consolidated cash investment fund bank account I think is an interesting one, and I for certain look forward to the answer of the government. The government often does respond very promptly, Mr. Speaker, to the Auditor General's recommendations. Most of them, in fact, are accepted by the department and are implemented within a year or sometimes two, but there are some that drag on year after year, and we often wonder why the government doesn't implement them, because they do seem to be very, very relevant.

Sometimes we're hard-pressed to know why the government is dragging its feet. Quite often in these cases, Mr. Speaker, the government is dragging its feet because of some centralized policy. The departments get individually blamed or named, at least, in the Auditor General's report for not implementing the recommendation, but it often comes back to a policy of the Treasury Board or the Finance department. I don't know if that's the case in this particular instance, but it may well be, and if so, I think the government ought to reconsider that policy. I think one of the big issues is to make sure that all transactions of the government are transparent and paid from the appropriate accounts.

So in this case, Mr. Speaker, once again I would urge all hon. members to support this motion and again give my congratulations to the hon. member who asked the question and to the government for agreeing to answer it. I will look forward to receiving the response to this written question in due course.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Yes. I'd like to thank the minister once again for accepting Written Question 58.

[Written Question 58 carried]

Jubilee Lodge Nursing Home

Q59. Ms Blakeman moved that the following question be accepted.

How many times has Alberta Health and Wellness exercised its right under section 12(1) of the Nursing Homes Act to inspect Alberta nursing homes in the last five years, how many inspections of Jubilee Lodge nursing home in Edmonton occurred as a result of this legislation, and when and why did inspections of Jubilee Lodge nursing home occur and what were the results?

Ms Blakeman: Given the number of concerns that have been raised particularly around two incidents at Jubilee Lodge, I'm hoping that the minister can see his way to providing this information. I hope he does.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Yes. In the interest of openness, transparency, and accountability the government accepts.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, I'm pleased to speak to this motion, and I'm pleased that the minister has indicated that they will in fact respond. You know, we . . .

Mr. Dunford: We didn't say we'd respond; we said we'd accept.

Mr. Mason: Well, the minister is making a distinction between accepting the question and responding to it. I guess I'd have to ask why he would accept the question if he has no intention of responding to it. I thought that we were going to get a response, but perhaps not.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there have been some very serious concerns with respect to the Jubilee Lodge nursing home, and when we've asked questions about this in question period to the Minister of Health and Wellness, we have been assured that the government regularly inspects nursing homes and so on. But what we don't quite know is how often and when this has occurred. In fact, you know, there's a real concern underlying it, Mr. Speaker, and that is that we know that the government has cut back on inspectors. It's cut back on these kinds of front-line staff in lots of areas.

One of them where it's most concerning is in another department altogether. That is the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development, where the number of inspectors has been cut back so far and the budgets have been cut back so far that they've actually complained that their budgets are so tight, they have to buy their own gas. So the real question is not that these places are inspected in theory—because in theory they are; the legislation requires that—but whether or not the government puts the resources behind their official legal requirements is a very valid question and one that I think we need a real answer to. So it would be very useful indeed, from our point of view, if in fact the Minister of Alberta Health and Wellness would respond and tell us exactly when this particular nursing home was inspected.

I'd like to go further. I'd like to know what's entailed by the inspection. I mean, how many people participate in the inspecting? What is inspected? What happened with the inspection reports? I think something that could be really valuable as well that is not included in this question is: what happened to the inspection report? Who dealt with it? What decisions were made on the basis of those reports? If, in fact, they showed that there were serious problems at this particular nursing home, then did everyone take that into account and act appropriately, right up to the minister? I'm not sure that this question actually gets at that, Mr. Speaker, so I would hope that the minister would go the extra mile and provide those kinds of details.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we need to protect our seniors. Seniors, especially those in the final years of their life in these homes, are extraordinarily vulnerable people. As we've seen, sometimes the neglect that can occur can have very, very tragic consequences, and it's important that the government take its responsibilities seriously to inspect these homes and make sure that our seniors are well cared for by trained professional people, that there are sufficient staff on duty at all times to make sure that people are not neglected when they need help or care.

So I would hope that this motion is in fact passed. I think people throughout the province have taken an interest in the tragedies that have taken place here, and they want to be assured that the government is taking its responsibilities seriously. If the government takes its responsibilities seriously, then we can be assured that the nursing home itself will be taking its responsibilities seriously, because the government will be making sure that they do. That's what we expect of our government, and that's what we expect from Alberta Health and Wellness, and we can accept nothing less, Mr. Speaker.

So again I would urge all hon. members to vote in favour of accepting this question. Hopefully the government will then respond to it in an appropriate and informative manner. I commend the hon. member for asking this question, and I also commend the minister for indicating that he's prepared to accept the question.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you.

[Written Question 59 carried]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been served on Thursday, April 1, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 18, 19, and 23 as modified by the House leaders' agreement, which was signed and which I tabled earlier today.

[Motion carried]

Office of the Premier IT Contracts

M18. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the office of the Premier on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

Ms Blakeman: Now, we have had some other ones for other departments on the same subject turned down by the government. I'm hoping that for this one we will get some information and that we will get it without amendments to it, which render the information more vague and less useful to us. I'm looking for exactly the request that's submitted here. So I'm hoping that the government will comply.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think the hon. member is correct in stating that similar motions were given considerable debate. As I recall, it was back on March 22 or thereabouts. So in actual fact this particular motion for a return at this point is redundant and unnecessary.

Motion for a Return 10, which was dealt with back on page 610 of Hansard on March 22, certainly referred to the same information being requested of the Health and Wellness ministry for contracts pertaining to information technology services, broken down by company and dollar amount and so on. Then the amendment, which was presented shortly thereafter, in fact removed the specific reference to one government department and/or ministry and made it clear that we were prepared to provide information showing the total dollar amount spent by the government of Alberta on contracts for information technology services, including a listing of vendors who were providing those services for the 2002-2003 fiscal year. So I think that adequately covers it, and as such we do not need this particular motion that is before us at the moment.

That having been said, we would be rejecting it because the amendment I referred to earlier accommodates this particular information that is being sought and is to be provided for the entire government of Alberta, and it will be broken down by company and by dollar amount. Again, I think it's therefore redundant, so on behalf of the Premier's office I'm recommending that we reject this motion for the reasons stated.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre to close the debate.

Ms Blakeman: Yes. I'm sorry; I was momentarily distracted and missed a few words of what the minister was saying. My concern here with the amended version that was discussed a few weeks ago, mentioned in the minister's response there, is that once again the government has changed the information that was being requested and made it less detailed, in other words more vague, and unattached. The suggestion that they had to provide an aggregate amount, a total amount spent on all information technology contracts for all of the government and then a list of vendors that are unconnected is the kind of unhelpful information that leads to misunderstandings, because from that you really can't tell if there was one vendor who was getting a disproportionate amount.

Perhaps they need to be looked at to make sure that all the tendering processes are as they should be. Perhaps a very reputable company is getting hardly any contracts at all. You can't tell when you get two separate lists where the information has been deliberately disconnected, has been torn apart, unlinked by the government.

I don't understand why the government is so reluctant to provide information like this. It's pretty innocuous information, and it does raise the hackles of people looking at government transparency and accountability. It certainly raises questions in their minds. What are they hiding? This is a very simple, innocuous question. Why can't they just deliver the information? Why this great need to disattach everything so that no clear understanding can be gained from it? As a result of that, you do end up with misunderstandings. You do end up with people making leaps of logic that are perhaps inappropriate, but how do you tell that when you can't find a clear trail of information?

So I'm disappointed to hear that the information will not be provided as requested. Thank you.

4:10 Government Out-of-province Travel Expenses

M19. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Dr. Massey that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total number and costs of extraprovincial and international trips taken by government Members of the Legislative Assembly who are not members of Executive Council between March 13, 2001, and February 17, 2004, broken down for each member, outlining the trip destination, the costs for meals, accommodations, entertainment, travel, telecommunications, dry cleaning, and gifts for each destination.

Dr. Taylor: How about including the Liberals in that?

Ms Blakeman: The Minister of Environment has suggested that the Liberals be included in that. I'm sure that he is more than welcome to take advantage of the written question process that's available in this House and put forward such a question, but the question before us today is asking for government Members of the Legislative Assembly who are not members of Executive Council.

Dr. Taylor: Why aren't you honest?

Ms Blakeman: Well, I am going to be heckled on this one; aren't I, Mr. Speaker? The Minister of Environment is questioning my honesty in bringing forward a request on behalf of my colleague for Edmonton-Mill Woods to get this information.

Earlier today I did table the information, that is now available to all members of the Assembly, on the rules that are now being used by the federal government and a good example there. Or, as I said, if the government members are not comfortable with that, then they're certainly welcome to look at those that were put in place by the previous government in Ontario, which would be their Tory cousins.

So that's the information that I'm requesting at this time, and I look forward to the response from the government. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate on behalf of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations that we would be prepared to accept this particular motion, albeit with some amendments, and I believe those amendments have been circulated and shared with all members of the House. If I might, I'd like to move this motion as amended and make a few comments as to why these amendments are required, and that may help address some of the concerns that certain members of the House might have.

First of all, by looking at the original motion called for, I want to indicate what I had heard referred to in question period today, and that is to suggest that there is currently some work being done on streamlining this whole process of reporting and doing it on a consistent basis and so on, beyond what is already being done, I need to say, because it is done consistently. So that will take care of part of this request.

Secondly, we're trying to make this fit within the government calendar year, which I hope no one would object to. In fact, we're expanding the time frame of that part of the motion so that it would read: from April 1, 2001, to March 31, 2004.

The third issue pertains to the breakdowns that are being requested. Mr. Speaker, in the original motion – there's nothing wrong with it, of course – there are all kinds of detail being sought. However, we need to keep in mind that if you accept a motion for a return with certain categories and certain undertakings, my understanding of that would be that you would be in breach of that particular acceptance if you did not specifically address every single one of those. In some cases some of those expenses may not be occurring, may not have been incurred, in fact.

So what I am proposing here is that we instead categorize them according to the categories that we ourselves use. For example, by grouping all of these expenses under accommodation, travel, hosting, and miscellaneous expenses, we will effectively be providing all of the information that's being asked for. So the amended motion for a return then will cater to that particular point. That having been said, Mr. Speaker, I think that the amendment has been shared with our main opposition colleague prior to 11 a.m. today as per requirements and procedures.

Mr. Zwozdesky moved that Motion for a Return 19 be amended to read that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total number and costs of international trips taken by government members of the Legislative Assembly who are not members of Executive Council between April 1, 2001, and March 31, 2004, broken down for each member outlining the trip destination and categorized by accommodation, travel, hosting, and miscellaneous expenses.

On that basis I would move that Motion for a Return 19 be accepted as amended.

The Speaker: On the amendment?

Ms Blakeman: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to this amendment.

There are a couple of issues that I want to raise here. There has been no explanation as to why the government is unable to provide the information on extraprovincial trips. They've just merely cut it off and deleted it, exempted it from the amended motion for a return. That basically takes away any trips that are taken out of province but inside of Canada, so any trips taken to any other provinces or territories. There is no explanation given by the government as to why they refuse to provide this information.

Secondly, we did ask for a level of detail. We did ask for cost of meals, accommodations, entertainment, travel, telecommunications, dry cleaning, and gifts for each destination, and for a reason. I don't understand where those expenses were incurred. Let's take dry cleaning as an example. Where a dry cleaning expense was incurred and reimbursed, then the government, in fact, has a record of it and can provide it. Where there was no dry cleaning submitted for reimbursement or as an expense on travel, then there's nothing to provide. But certainly in the cases where it, in fact, was paid for by taxpayer dollars, there is a record of it. I fail to understand – and the government has failed to convince me – why they cannot provide this level of detail.

So once again we see an attempt by the government to group things into a way of explaining expenses that makes it very difficult for people to have to tease out what actually happened, what actually went on. It does raise questions in people's minds including: if you had dry cleaning, why can't you just tell us? If you didn't, well, then it won't show up as an expense. The grouping together masks and hides what the expenses actually were.

So I understand. I've done expense claims. I used to have to do expense claims on behalf of the people that I worked for when I worked for government. I know what those categories are, but I also know that underneath those categories expenses like we're describing can in fact be stated, so I'm failing to understand why the government cannot provide this information. I mean, I'm assuming that perhaps what I'm being told is that ministers and backbenchers are not reimbursed for these particular expenditures, but I'm pretty sure that they are. If they are reimbursed, then they exist on a form somewhere, and they should be able to provide them to us.

When I'm looking at the federal examples of what's possible here, there are very detailed and extensive and vigorous policy statements on what is acceptable, what is not acceptable as an expenditure. I was saying: well, maybe dry cleaning is not allowed, and that's why it can't be provided here.

In Ontario they very specifically exclude alcohol, for example, and their policies lay that out. If you are going to have to try and reimburse for expenditures on alcohol, you have to provide very detailed reasons about why the government incurred expenses for alcohol as part of their hosting. It may well be reimbursed and accepted, but the details have to be there: you were entertaining someone from a particular culture that accepts this or expects it, et cetera, et cetera.

I would also like to note that, in fact, this motion for a return was accepted by Parliamentary Counsel. The reason for that in the number of debates and tries at this that we've now had over the last couple of weeks is because there was no attempt to group additional motions for returns underneath it. Therefore, it serves as a stand-alone. So as I try and seek this information from government, having been steered toward this particular parliamentary process to seek that information, in fact, by the Premier and other members of cabinet, I have not received a satisfactory explanation about why the information cannot be provided.

I'm now in the position as the person putting forward the request on behalf of another to say: well, do we accept some information which may not be as useful to us or reject it and get no information at all? At this point I'm willing to try the experiment and support the amended motion for a return and see what kind of information I do get. If it just becomes, you know, a one-line aggregate total of all of this and is deliberately delinked from all accompanying information, then I know that this is a game that's being played here, and I'll be seeking information in another way in the future. But at this point I'm willing to try the experiment. I'm willing to take the government on their good word and hope that they follow through in good faith.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 19 as amended carried]

Out-of-province Travel Costs for Energy Minister

M23. Ms Blakeman moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total number and costs of extraprovincial and international trips taken by the Minister of Energy between March 13, 2001, and February 17, 2004, broken down by the trip destination, meals, accommodations, entertainment, airfare/ground travel, telecommunications, dry cleaning, and gifts for each trip.

Ms Blakeman: Again, we are seeking a specific level of detail from the government, but I can see by the amendments that have been circulated that there already is an anticipation that they would be amending this.

Nonetheless, I will argue that the motion for a return as stated is reasonable. Particularly given that the Minister of Energy is our frequent flier on the government side, we would like to see the details of his trips. That's not to say that there will be anything untoward there. I fully expect that it will all be quite as it should. But the insistence of the government to lead us on a merry dance and withhold this information does raise questions in the minds of the opposition and the minds of the public that there is something to be hidden. I think that at this point it's important that the detail is provided so that that can be aired.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member opposite for her comments. She is correct in understanding that some of what is being amended and the way it's being amended here in Motion for a Return 23 stems out of the way Motion for a Return 19 was in fact amended. It's a similar set of circumstances virtually, and in this particular case I'm prepared to move that Motion for a Return 23 be accepted as amended and as presented and provided for in the House leaders' agreement, which was signed today and which I tabled today and which, I believe, all members have received a copy of. So that would constitute the notice required, and it had been shared, in fact, much earlier in the day in accordance with the time restrictions that are needed.

The essential comments that I made for Motion for a Return 19 actually do apply here for Motion for a Return 23 as well. I do note and understand some of the reluctance that has been expressed by members in the opposition, but I just want to assure them that due diligence will be followed through as much as is possibly possible to help ensure that they get as much information as it is possible to provide. That is the spirit under which all of this was done and under which the House leaders' agreement was jointly arrived at, and we'll deal with it in that vein.

Mr. Zwozdesky moved that Motion for a Return 23 be amended to read that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total number and costs of international trips taken by members of Executive Council between April 1, 2001, and March 31, 2004, broken down by the trip destination and categorized by accommodation, travel, hosting, and miscellaneous expenses.

So thank you for your anticipated support of accepting Motion for a Return 23 as amended.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the amendment.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I am speaking to the amendment. This did come about through a House leaders' agreement. It is an experiment to see whether, in fact, we are provided with the level of detail that we require. I also want to underline again that this is not a precedent in any way, shape, or form for grouping. This is an issue of trust. It is trying to see if we can get the information that we're seeking. Frankly, we don't get the information that we're seeking here, so right from the word go I'm having to bargain away the information that the Official Opposition was interested in receiving.

I have severe qualms about this process because, to my eye, the government continues to do what they wanted to do, and the opposition is not getting the information that we were looking for. From the top, all of the inside of Canada but outside of Alberta trips again have been cut off, with no explanation given, no reasoning for it, nothing. Just: we're not getting the information.

Again I say: why aren't we getting the information? We should be able to find out why those trips happened, what the purpose was, who went on it, how much did it cost, were those costs reasonable, all of that information. You're spending taxpayers' dollars. We should be able to get this information and have it shared with the public.

The attempt to group this motion is changing it from a specific question to the Minister of Energy to one of international trips taken by members of Executive Council. The reason that the opposition puts in a question that appears to be repeated for 23 more ministries is a lesson learned from bitter experience, frankly, where we have in the past requested information generally and what we got was one line or one figure, which was an aggregate figure. We couldn't tell how much of it divided for each ministry. We couldn't tell who was included in it or how many staff or any number of things, so we were being played with.

I don't think there was any reasonable attempt to provide us with the information. This was: how can we not provide the information? So we learned by bitter experience to separate it out and to ask the question for each and every ministry because some of them, frankly, provide us with the information and some don't provide us with the information. So it's worth our while to ask for it by each and every ministry. As we grow from 17 ministries, which is what there was when I was first elected, to 24 ministries, which is what we've got now, you get that many more questions on the Order Paper.

We lose the specificity when we go from ministry by ministry to an aggregate, which is what's being anticipated here by going to something taken by members of Executive Council. In this particular question – and this is why I allowed it – it is broken down by trip destination and then categorized further, so there is a way of us being able to determine who went on this trip and where did it go. So there is a level of detail to allow us to figure out what's going on here.

It's not helpful when things become aggregate to a point where we don't know which ministry provided what information, how many people were involved, where they went, et cetera, et cetera. It's become a bit of a game with the government not providing the information we've requested, and we have been forced into a position of having to separate everything out and ask for the detail one by one. That is happening again here. So we're going on trust that we're going to get the information that has a level of detail that's reasonable in it.

You know, we've been given quite the jolly runaround with this. Back on February 19 the Premier in response to opposition questions on expenses asked us to provide documentation on the expenses so that the questions could be answered. February 23 we were told to ask for the information through a written question. On March 1 we sent a letter to the Premier detailing all of the questions that we would like answered. As far as I know, we've never received a response to that, and we're now at almost a month later. March 22 and other times we had our first of many motions for returns voted down. So we're told to go to motions for returns and written questions, and then we're turned down for the information. In some cases we're told that this is an inappropriate way to ask for that level of accountability.

Well, what are we supposed to do, Mr. Speaker? This is the process that's open to us, and then we're told we're not supposed to use it. Then we do it, and we have it altered in such a way as we're not getting the information that we wanted to see. We've given up the clarity and the level of detail that we wanted to see. We'll see whether we are getting less than what we asked for. We'll see whether this experiment, in fact, was one that was worth taking.

I agreed, and in fact I proposed the House leaders' agreement that was signed here. It's in the form that I proposed it. I did want to see certain private member's bills get an opportunity for debate, so I'm the one that came up with this idea so that we could go forward with that today because I am interested in seeing it happen. But what do I get for that, Mr. Speaker? What I get is that I don't get the information that I was asking for. I'm not the one that's come out even-even on this one; I've come out behind on it. We've yet to see whether this will be worth it. [interjection] The Minister of Environment wants to get in on the discussion again.

You know, we're more than willing on this side for the few trips we take out of province to have people scrutinize the individual personal expense reimbursement claim forms. If people want to see them, I'm certainly willing to show you the one when I went to Texas last summer. I, in fact, had a clerk who submitted more money than I was asking for, and I had to go back and say: "Excuse me, but you do exactly what I said. I only want to be reimbursed for the money that I spent. I don't want to claim per diems that give me more money than I asked for." I insisted that it be redone. So I'm more than willing to give you that level of detail. That was the concern that the Minister of Environment was heckling me on previously. [interjection] Oh, someone else wants to heckle now too. Okay.

We'll see whether this works. I'm approaching this with trepidation, but we'll see whether this works.

Dr. Taylor: Approach it with good hope.

Ms Blakeman: I am approaching it with hope. I wouldn't have done this if I wasn't hopeful that there would be some kind of realistic information provided. But, boy, there's a hand of trust being extended here, and it better come back with some good detailed information in it, or all bets are off on this one.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 23 as amended carried]

The Speaker: What essentially will run then as a consequence of the agreement that the House provided unanimous consent to today – the House leaders' agreement has absolutely no merit unless all members of the Assembly agree to it, and that was very important. So motions for returns 65, 67, 68, 84, 85, 86, 87, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 181, and 182 will now be removed from the Order Paper.

It's also clear that today was a very abnormal day which required unanimous consent of the House to deal with what happened here. This date will not be referred to further in the annals of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, and what happened here today will not bind this Speaker or any subsequent Speakers in the future in terms of administrative matters related to any of these things. With all the denials and the reluctance contained in this document, it's like saying, "Well, I'll agree to get married for a one-day time frame, and we'll see how it works out, but tomorrow's another day, and I'm not going to be held by what I did yesterday" kind of thing. This applies only for today. There should be boxes put around the Hansard of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. This happened. It's ended and is not to be repeated again tomorrow.

Now, Clerk, let's move on.

Bill 203
Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes
Amendment Act, 2004

[Debate adjourned March 29: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West. I take it this will be to conclude the debate.

Ms Kryczka: Yes.

The Speaker: Okay. Clerk, how much time is left?

The Clerk: Nine minutes.

The Speaker: Nine? Five to conclude the debate. Okay.

Anybody else want to speak? Then the hon. member to conclude the debate.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the rationale for the merits of and concerns around Bill 203 have been addressed very well in second reading by speeches from many of my colleagues. I would like to thank these colleagues for their comments and support during second reading: the members for Spruce Grove-St. Albert, Edmonton-Manning, Edmonton-Meadowlark, Vermilion-Lloydminster, Redwater, Calgary-Buffalo, Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, St. Albert, Calgary-Currie, Calgary-Fort, and Edmonton-Rutherford. It is also very important to thank my researcher for Bill 203, Andrea Hennig, for her exemplary commitment to its preparation and all other researchers who have prepared speeches for my colleagues.

As we have heard, the purpose of this legislation is to give Albertans by law an informed, mutually agreed choice whether to split their Canada pension plan benefits following a divorce or separation. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to reiterate a few of the crucial arguments and major objectives of Bill 203, the Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. First, Bill 203 would allow divorcing or separating Albertans, upon being informed, to decide how to best divide their CPP pension benefits pertinent to their individual circumstances and personal situations. It will not force Albertans to opt out of the credit-splitting program but, rather, let couples consciously decide for themselves; that is, whether to opt out or not.

Second, Bill 203 will provide for consistent treatment of assets in the province as property division is based on mutual agreement. Most aspects of family property between spouses upon relationship breakdown are subject to agreement.

Third, Bill 203 would bring clarity and certainty to the decisions made concerning the splitting of CPP credits. If spousal agreements have been entered into and waivers signed, then Bill 203 would provide the appropriate provincial legislation to uphold these agreements.

Fourth, this legislation would prevent an ex-spouse or ex-partner from applying for the split of CPP credits without the other party's knowledge. Bill 203 prevents the effect of creating a future entitlement of pension benefits.

Fifth, Bill 203 will help to raise awareness of the Canada pension plan credit-splitting program. For example, it is little known that all credit-split decisions are permanent unless this decision is challenged through the courts. What is most realistic is that a federal decision is never returned to the ex-spouse even following the death of the applying ex-spouse. This legislation will bring a valuable understanding to all Albertans, especially low-income Albertans, about the possible division of their CPP pension benefit, and with that understanding Albertans will be able to plan appropriately for their future.

Mr. Speaker, with reference to financial planning, especially considering the future impact of an aging population, it is very important to underline that government and the private sector encourage and support Albertans wherever appropriate to be accurately informed and to plan for their retirement. As personal financial plans include a combination of pensions including CPP, RRSPs, savings, bonds, and other investments in residential and other properties, it follows, using common sense, that these same assets would be considered in preparing a divorce or separation agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I believe very strongly in the purpose of Bill 203 and in the advantages and benefits that will stem from giving adult Albertans the right and responsibility of informed choice in making decisions concerning their finances upon the breakdown of common-law and marital couples.

My thanks once again to everyone for their participation in the debate and discussion of Bill 203, the Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

Mr. Speaker, I now move that the question be put.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a second time]

Bill 204 Blood Samples Act

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, it is my pleasure to bring into debate in second reading Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act. The goal of Bill 204 is to protect good Samaritans, police officers, firefighters, correctional officers, and front-line emergency and health workers who in the course of their work exchange bodily fluids with someone who may have a communicable disease. The bill would create a process to allow a qualified medical practitioner to take a mandatory blood sample from someone who refuses to comply voluntarily.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, currently the rights of people who refuse to supply a blood sample in the event of an exchange of bodily fluids prevail over those of the infected worker. I have heard a story of a police officer who had a suspected drug user spit in his face. The suspect then yelled at the officer: welcome to the world of AIDS. This man could be charged with assaulting a police officer, but by law he cannot be forced to provide a blood sample to see if he really was HIV positive. His right to privacy prevails over the health and security of the police officer.

Imagine the emotions that went through the infected officer. How could he kiss his wife? The thought of possibly transmitting the disease would constantly haunt him. How could he play with his children without worrying about exposing them to the disease?

After exposure workers begin a grueling drug cocktail. The infected worker suffers numerous side effects caused by the drugs. The victims must also wait for signs of a disease to develop. Passing Bill 204 could alleviate these stressful circumstances. The results may allow the infected worker to end the medication earlier. The results may also offer peace of mind that they pose no threat to patients, victims, co-workers, friends, or, most importantly, family.

People working in firefighting, law enforcement, health, corrections, paramedics and ambulance service employees are subjected to dangerous and potentially fatal occupational hazards. Some of these hazards are avoidable through safety and training and improved safety equipment. There are also safety protocols for preventing the transfer of blood from victims or suspects to front-line emergency or health care workers. These protocols focus on prevention and compliance. The safety training and protocols do not properly address what happens after the exposure occurs.

Other Canadian governments have considered legislation similar to Bill 204. On May 1, 2003, Mr. Speaker, the Ontario government proclaimed the Health Protection and Promotion Amendment Act. This amendment gave authority to front-line emergency and health care workers to seek a blood sample. It also provided victims of crime the same right to seek a blood sample. The scope of Bill 204 is restricted to people who come into regular contact with someone else's bodily fluids.

Legislation similar to the Blood Samples Act has also been introduced in the House of Commons as a private member's bill on two occasions. Both bills would have amended the Criminal Code to force someone to provide a blood sample. In February 2002 the Standing Committee on Justice and Human Rights was advised that this legislation governing civil rights and health falls within the power of the provincial government. Using this technicality, the Liberal government has absolved itself of having to deal with this particular legislation, which explains many of the antics which are taking place in this Chamber.

There are implications of Bill 204 that do affect the federal government.

Ms Blakeman: Point of order.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Some have argued that forcing a blood sample . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, there's a point of order here. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. I'm afraid the member has not clearly been listening to what's been happening in this Chamber today in making – sorry; the citation I'm referring to is 23(h) – an allegation against another member or – I'm presuming that can also be used in the plural – against other members.

The member has no idea why certain issues were raised in this Chamber today. I thought I'd already been pretty clear that the very ability of this member to get up and debate this bill was because of the House leaders' agreement that I proposed. So I think he needs to withdraw that particular allegation that's been made against the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, no allegation was waged against any member, and if it offended anyone, I withdraw this comment.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 23(h) states that "a member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member . . . makes allegations against another member." To the best of my knowledge I did not hear an allegation being made against an individual. I think it referred to a group. However, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs has withdrawn those remarks, and I believe that that's acceptable, and we can proceed.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for that ruling. I shall continue.

Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court of Canada has said that the taking of a blood sample is a very intrusive procedure that can occur only when justified circumstances occur and where there is pressing necessity. I would argue that the results of the blood sample are a pressing necessity for the person most affected. Rights defined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms are not absolute, and the law infringing on them may be upheld if it is found to be within a reasonable limit. I would argue that Bill 204 is within the realms of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as outlined. I think it's our duty as legislators to spell out some of the responsibilities and obligations that come along with the rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Blood-borne diseases are a dangerous reality for front-line workers defined in Bill 204. Someone who knowingly transmits these diseases should be forced to provide a blood sample.

I think it's also important to stress existing legislation that protects the privacy of the individual. The results of the blood sample cannot be used for any reason other than those defined in Bill 204. The process for taking a blood sample for those purposes of Bill 204 already exists through Alberta legislation. The Health Information Act, the Public Health Act, and the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act set out the rules for collecting and disclosing health information. These acts also set out the penalties for breaking these laws.

It is true that most of the support for the bill comes from personal experience of officers and health professionals. However, this bill will help infected workers understand the severity of the exposure. I am confident that most reasonable, caring Albertans will support this bill. I am also confident that Bill 204 will help protect the people who help others.

This Assembly has an opportunity to provide peace of mind for workers exposed to bodily fluids. It's time to give our police, firefighters, prison guards, and health care workers more tools and more security. This bill brings a common-sense approach for balancing the safety of workers with the safety of private health information. I would encourage all members to vote in favour of Bill 204.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I rise today to speak in support of Bill 204 for my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. As Solicitor General I have supported this issue from the beginning. I have written the Federation of Police Associations supporting this issue. I have also been approached by various front-line emergency workers concerned about mandatory blood testing.

Bill 204 is designated to protect police officers, firefighters, correctional officers, front-line emergency workers, good Samaritans, and health care professionals. Without exception these workers are worried about the transmission of blood and other body fluids carrying diseases like HIV, AIDS, hepatitis C, and spinal meningitis. I support this bill because I believe it will protect and it will give peace of mind to emergency personnel. This bill would allow specified individuals to ask a medical officer of health for an order to take a blood sample from a third party.

In my contact with police and correctional officers I have learned about the many precautions they already take. Some wear special gloves; some wear soft body armour to protect themselves from gunshots, knifings, blood trauma, motor vehicle collisions, and aggressive behaviour. Just like anyone, correction officers, health, police, and other emergency personnel want to go to work each day with the knowledge that they are protected in the best possible way from all forms of danger. At the moment, Mr. Speaker, these workers are not protected against someone who accidentally or deliberately infects them with body fluids.

There are many ways these workers could be infected, such as when dealing with patients who turn violent and must be chemically or physically restrained, after being spit on, attending an accident scene where there are severe injuries, or being stuck with a concealed needle or syringe. In the United States some estimate that there are 600,000 accidental needle sticks every year.

Over the years I have spent countless evenings doing police ride-alongs. I have seen first-hand what police and other front-line emergency workers have to endure. Mr. Speaker, consider this situation: you're an emergency health care worker; you are accidentally pricked by a needle; the patient is a drug addict, but you don't know if they are infected. You have two choices: one, do nothing and hope for the best or, two, assume the patient is infected and begin extremely painful medical treatments that carry with them severe side effects and prohibit physical contact with anyone else for six months. All this would be unnecessary if the patient were required by law to submit a sample of their blood to determine whether they are infected.

We owe it to the fine men and women of this province who serve the public while providing emergency health services. Their job is already hard enough. This bill can reduce some of the risks they face and provide some additional peace of mind.

Mr. Speaker, this bill goes beyond protecting emergency workers. It also protects the good Samaritan and the victim of crime. Do we want to continue to have a situation where a person may be in desperate need of help and others simply stand, wait, and watch because they are afraid to help because of AIDS or hep C or some other disease?

Some will say that this bill will infringe on a person's right to privacy. Well, Mr. Speaker, I say that the protection of privacy and the release of public information has always been a balance between protection and disclosure. How can we protect the privacy of a known drug addict while increasing the risk for first responders? Often blood samples are given voluntarily, and people should be commended for that.

Mr. Speaker, the debate today is: what should the government do when someone refuses to give a blood sample to hurt someone else? This bill would only be applied on rare occasions when someone refuses to give a blood sample for testing. More importantly, this information would only be shared with the medical staff and the affected individual. The blood test analysis would only be used for medical purposes, with the highest level of confidentiality. I believe this provides an adequate balance between the privacy of a person's health information and the safety of good Samaritans, victims of crime, and emergency personnel.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and want to thank him on behalf of front-line emergency workers, health professionals, and good Samaritans.

The Acting Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, did you want to speak?

Mr. Mason: Sure. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak to this bill. You know, I believe that this bill has some merit, and I certainly appreciate the work that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs has done on this bill. However, I do have a number of concerns.

It's certainly the case that many front-line emergency workers are at risk from accidental or even in rare cases, I believe, deliberate infection from HIV, hepatitis C, and other viral blood infections. It is a concern, and it has I think been taken very, very seriously in all sorts of areas. It has radically changed how many services are in fact delivered.

It's clear that a number of organizations representing people in front-line jobs have expressed their support for this. For example, Michael Rennich, who is the chair of Alberta Union of Provincial Employees local 003, has sent the hon. Member for Edmonton-

Castle Downs a letter in support of this particular piece of legislation. Similarly, I understand that the firefighters' union and police association have indicated their support for it. Mr. Speaker, I entirely understand why this would be the case. These workers are faced day to day with the risk of being infected either accidentally or, potentially, even deliberately by people that they deal with, and if all of the precautions that have been taken – and they are considerable – fail, they want to know as soon as possible whether or not the person with whom they've had contact is indeed infected by one of these agents. That's something that is entirely understandable.

It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that not all associations or unions that represent people who are on the front line and potentially at risk support this position. We have done some research and have obtained some documents with respect to this issue. In November of 2000 the Canadian Nurses Association published a revised position statement on blood-borne pathogens. It did address the issue of compulsory testing, and here's what they said.

Mandatory testing for blood-borne pathogens either before or after significant exposure is not warranted because current technology cannot always identify persons infected with blood-borne pathogens. In caring for all clients, whether their status regarding blood-borne pathogens is known, the nurse is guided by the values of the Code of Ethics for Registered Nurses.

The nurse has an ethical responsibility to provide care that includes bringing good to the client, minimizing harm, and respecting the right of the client to accept or to refuse treatment.

So that's the position of the Canadian Nurses Association.

5:00

The Canadian Association of Nurses in AIDS Care also established a position relative to this. They stress the urgent need to collect and analyze data on needle sticks and other occupational injuries in Canada to identify the extent of occupational exposures and respond to them in a timely fashion. They have a number of those; for example, "examine current practices for invasive procedures, and design and implement protocols and programs to eliminate registered nurses' unnecessary exposure to bloodborne pathogens." They called on health care facilities to "implement work-practice measures, such as new safety devices, to minimize or eliminate the risk of occupational exposure to bloodborne pathogens." They also called for "comprehensive educational and training programs that address prevention measures and post-exposure management should be included in nursing curricula, employee training programs, and continuing education programs." However, they do say that they maintain that testing a patient without informed consent is unethical. These are the people that deal directly with patients with AIDS/HIV.

The Canadian Medical Association also has a position on this, and the information we have indicates that their policy on HIV infection in the workplace addresses HIV infection and AIDS in the general workplace and the health care workplace and discusses testing for the HIV antibody. It notes that any policy in this area should be based on scientific, epidemiologic and ethical principles. The primary purpose is the promotion of effective action to control infection among health care workers and the public and the safeguarding of human rights.

They say that in the health care workplace the nature of the health care workplace carries with it a greater risk of occupational exposure to HIV than the general workplace. A health care worker may be directly exposed to the blood or body fluid of an HIV-positive patient during routine work or through a work-related accident such as a needle-stick injury. Nevertheless, the occupational risk of HIV infection for health care workers, although not absent, is very low. The risk of transmission from an infected health care worker to a patient is also very low.

They go on to say that the risk of infection does not warrant refusal of services. That's fine. That's certainly not the point of the bill. The CMA policy observes that the prevention of exposure to HIV-infected blood or bodily fluids can best be achieved by the routine application of infection-control guidelines for all patients.

I just want to be absolutely sure, Mr. Speaker. When I reviewed this document earlier, I believe that it indicated that the Canadian Medical Association did not support – yes, they had a motion at their convention in 1999 dealing with mandatory testing, and these motions were rescinded by the general council of the CMA in the year 2000. So they are apparently not supportive of mandatory testing.

The Canadian Union of Public Employees, or CUPE, represents all kinds of people involved in the health care field and in particular does represent ambulance employees in many cities, including here in Edmonton. I'm not sure about Calgary, but they represent members in a number of health care or health-related occupations which are at risk of occupational exposure, including ambulance attendants, housekeeping staff, waste handlers, laundry workers, materials handlers, nurses aides, and laboratory technicians and technologists. [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired] Am I finished? I guess I am.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to join debate in the second reading on the Blood Samples Act, sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. Bill 204 creates a mechanism that would allow firefighters, police officers, nurses, doctors, paramedics, and correctional officers to know whether or not they contracted a blood-borne virus. I think that this bill creates an opportunity for this Assembly to protect these workers from an emerging danger in their workplace. Similar legislation was proclaimed in Ontario last year, and the concept was also considered on two different occasions as a private member's bill within the federal government.

Opponents of the federal and provincial legislation had several concerns about taking mandatory blood samples from people who refused to give their consent. Their opposition was based on the perceived violation of the right to privacy and security listed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. As previous speakers have pointed out, some people believe the Charter rights are absolute and can't be violated by others, including the government. However, lawyers, judges, and the Supreme Court of Canada understand that the parameters of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms are open to interpretation.

Charter rights are important, but they must be balanced with corresponding responsibilities. Some groups believe that a person has the right to refuse to submit a blood sample after contaminating a health or emergency worker. However, these people fail to understand the mental and physical effects that their refusal has on the affected worker.

We live in a society that places a high priority on mental health, Mr. Speaker, and there is no doubt in my mind that refusing to provide a blood sample under the conditions outlined in Bill 204 causes significant mental stress to the workers defined in Bill 204. My worry is that there's also the possibility of these workers suffering from long-term mental illness due to stress related to drug treatment and uncertainty, and exposure can cause significant anxiety because of the existing dangers related to blood-borne viruses.

Some argue that legislation forcing a blood sample is an extreme measure for a relatively small number of exposures, but I disagree. There is a great deal of fear felt by the exposed victim as well as their families and their coworkers. These concerns are not only related to the infection but how it may affect the personal lives of the people involved. We know that without a blood sample the infected worker must wait six months after exposure before knowing whether or not they have a blood-borne disease. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, the anxiety I talked about will not be momentary. It will last for that entire period of time.

Other speakers have pointed out that a blood sample will not cure the infected worker, but it will give him or her peace of mind. Knowing whether or not the test subject has a disease will reduce initial health concerns felt by the worker. The results from the blood sample will also reduce the fear and the distress of infection felt by the victim in the future.

There is also an important scientific reason to take blood samples. A blood sample allows the medical professionals to understand what disease, if any, they're dealing with. The prompt identification of infected source patients will allow the most appropriate and effective use of postexposure drugs.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, I'm very concerned about the safety of emergency workers. Paramedics, police officers, and firefighters put their lives on the line to protect others. I think it's our responsibility to respond whenever these workers are mistreated or a legal loophole leaves them suffering.

Mr. Speaker, to you or I the likelihood of contracting a blood-borne disease throughout the course of our duties is extremely low. I realize that this sounds obvious; however, there have been a number of people who have opposed legislation similar to Bill 204 because they don't believe that the number of officially recorded instances of exposure warrants such strong legislation. Most people would agree that there's a good chance that health care professionals will come into contact with people infected with a blood-borne disease. The chances are even greater for health care professionals working in emergency rooms.

5:10

Some opponents to this legislation claim that the vast majority of people infected with a blood-borne disease agree to a voluntary blood sample after exchanging fluid with a worker in a hospital setting. It's believed that patients agree to voluntary blood samples because doctors and nurses are trying to help them. The relationship between a health care professional and their patient is unique. However, I'm not convinced that doing nothing will help the few people who refuse to provide a blood sample. I believe Bill 204 is an important mechanism that must be in place for the few unfortunate times that this tool is really needed.

A potential carrier of a blood-borne disease may agree to a voluntary blood test if the infected person is a nurse or a doctor. However, outside the walls of hospitals and clinics, in the line of duty of police officers and correctional officers the rules are very different. We've heard other speakers talk about the important role front-line emergency workers play in society. However, these men and women are also subject to a different set of rules. The reality is that some people use their disease or the threat of having the disease as a weapon.

In fact, this was part of the logic for introducing similar legislation at the federal level. It was believed that using the threat of infection has become a new way to assault peace officers. This caused long-term mental health damage to the exposed officer. Inflicting harm on any other person in this manner was believed to have been dealt with through an amendment to the Criminal Code.

I think one of the reasons why refusing to supply a blood sample was considered appropriate for the Criminal Code was because of the hostile exchange between a suspect or an inmate and a peace officer.

There is a far more adversarial relationship between peace officers and suspects, and there have been instances where inmates in correctional facilities or criminal suspects wilfully bite or spit at workers as a way of taunting or intimidating the workers. Obviously, inmates and criminals are less likely to volunteer a blood sample after spitting at or biting a correctional officer.

I also understand that there may be a few interest groups who will oppose Bill 204, just like they opposed similar legislation in Ontario and at the federal level. I think it's a shame that some people would place a higher value on the perceived rights of an individual over the significant mental and physical damage caused by a person's refusal to provide a blood sample.

Mr. Speaker, imagine what would happen to an exposed worker's state of mind after the drug treatment finished and they were able to return to work. For six long months this worker would wonder whether or not they were carrying a life-threatening disease. Imagine the anxiety they would feel when called to an accident scene to help a victim bleeding from cuts from broken glass. I wonder if the worker would hesitate before assisting the victim, knowing that there is no legal way to know if that person has a disease. Right now these workers wear latex gloves and hope that they don't come into direct contact with another person's bodily fluid. If these workers are exposed, their well-being is at the mercy of the test subject.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the workers defined in Bill 204 have the right to know whether or not they have to undergo noxious medical treatment after being infected with a communicable disease. Currently front-line workers have fewer rights than the injured people that they help. This bill will correct the uncertainty felt by many workers, and I would encourage all members in this Assembly to vote in favour of Bill 204.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I forfeited my usual spot immediately following the sponsor of the bill because I wanted to hear some of the debate that was being brought forward. You know, I've had too many colleagues, friends, and acquaintances die from AIDS, so this is a bill that I'm very interested in and very interested in hearing the debate and the ideas that are being brought forward.

As has already been mentioned, this is not the first time that there has been an attempt at implementing mandatory blood sampling for people who might infect emergency workers. Ontario, in fact, as has been stated, did pass legislation in 2002. There was also a federal private member's bill that died on the Order Paper.

A couple of observations. The Ontario legislation requires mandatory blood samples from individuals who expose victims of crime, emergency workers, and good Samaritans to bodily fluids. Now, the former and the latter there are not included in this legislation. I'm wondering when the sponsor gets an opportunity if he can tell me why that choice was made not to include good Samaritans or victims of crime in the coverage.

One of the rationales is that it would reduce the number of preventative drug treatments that emergency personnel would have to take, and the previous speaker talked about that quite a bit, the drug cocktail over the six months and the emotional wear and tear that that causes.

I also note that Ontario's chief medical officer of health at the time, Dr. Colin D'Cunha, stated that the legal and ethical rules of sound public health practice respecting confidentiality and privacy issues involving patients are ignored under the bill. The bill I'm referring to is the Ontario bill there.

There were additional concerns raised by the Canadian Medical Association that knew Ontario law could force blood sample collection. The CMA's director of ethics voiced his concerns that it contravened that association's recently revised policy on HIV infection in the workplace, which reasserted that compulsory testing was unjustified.

I know that the sponsoring member here has already been quoted in the media as saying that since the Ontario legislation there has been a higher rate of voluntary compliance, and they've not had to compel anyone to be tested. I also heard the Member for Calgary-North Hill talking about, you know, even if it was just a few people, we should have this bill to protect those few people who flat out refuse to be tested.

I went looking to see how many people we'd actually be trying to protect here. What is the magnitude of the problem of people who flat out, absolutely, positively refuse to be voluntarily tested? The information that I have is that as of 2002 there have only been two probable cases of occupational transmission of HIV and one confirmed case. The two confirmed cases were lab workers, so they wouldn't have been covered by what's being anticipated in this bill, which is only emergency medical personnel.

The office of the federal Privacy Commissioner had a test that was very interesting. They had four tests. The first one was necessity. Is the bill necessary? I've already talked, so far, about two probable cases of occupational transmission, one confirmed case.

A second test of effectiveness. Is the bill effective? Again, I'm referring here to the federal legislation. The point raised is that it would take time to get an order and carry out the testing, and the results wouldn't be conclusive. Part of my concern around this is that a negative test result doesn't necessarily mean that the person isn't infected. That's part of what's causing me real concern around this bill, and it's been raised in a number of places. I'm not the first person to raise it.

But the Member for Calgary-North Hill was clearly saying that a big impetus behind this was peace of mind to the emergency personnel that may be put in a situation where they would have cause to believe that they had been infected, and my concern is that they don't get peace of mind out of this because those first tests can be false-positives or false-negatives and you still need a repeat testing to be absolutely sure that you've got the correct diagnosis. So if the purpose of this bill is to make sure that we're offering peace of mind to our emergency personnel, I've a real concern that this bill in fact does the opposite because it gives a false reading, if you want.

I would be more concerned that we would actually end up with someone who could contract one of these truly, truly horrible diseases because they believed in initial testing that was taken and in fact didn't follow up. That's part of what causes me to ask questions about this.

The third test is proportionality. How much of an invasion of privacy is this? I think we have to be very, very careful. If I can use the example of universality of programs and this government's attitude to universality of programs, there seems to be an understanding by the government on that level that: well, it's okay if you break the universality of something because it's just a little bit in any given example that I've ever heard, and it won't affect the way everything else operates. But it does affect the way everything else operates because the next program along they go: well, the last time it wasn't so bad, so we can expand this a bit more and take away more universal programs that are being offered.

That's part of what concerns me about this. As soon as you start to pierce the body wall, pierce that integrity of the person, I think we venture into very dangerous territory, especially when we're trying to protect someone else who is providing a service, an underpaid service in many cases and often an underappreciated service, to society as a whole, that being police officers, firefighters, emergency medical personnel.

So I am very cautious about that because I think it gets used as a precedent by others whether or not that was intended in the first place. It makes it easier to expand that. If I go back and go: okay; so we're looking at breaking that wall, breaking that level of understanding of privacy for how many people? Again, with the information I have – and please prove me wrong. Please come up with other information. I'm happy to get it. I have not made up my mind how I'm going to vote for this bill. I'm listening carefully to what people are saying. I don't know how I'm going to vote on this, but these are the concerns that I have.

The fourth test from the Privacy Commissioner is: are there less-invasive alternatives? Under voluntary consent I note that most people agree to be tested, and in fact we've had other people discussing that here. In Edmonton last year 19 cases were reported where police officers were exposed to bodily fluid, and in only two of those cases did the people involved refuse a blood test. So I think a lot of this is around improved prevention and management of occupational exposure. Those are the comments and issues that I wanted to raise.

I think it's important that we note that there are only two other instances where we take bodily samples without consent. One of them is testing for alcohol, for example, with drinking and driving, and second is DNA samples relating to prosecution of serious offences. The second one involves a fairly lengthy court process to prove the point. The first one is a less lengthy process. This one is involving going to a medical officer, and there is a time lag there.

So I think there are very, very serious issues that are being raised here, and I look forward to the rest of the debate.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Oh, I'm sorry. There's no question after this.

Is there no other speaker? Nobody else wishes to speak? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to close debate.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The members opposite have raised some very good questions. I would like to point out to the Member for Edmonton-Centre that she may have by error or omission not noticed, but good Samaritans are included in Bill 204, so definitely all good Samaritans will be covered. But, indeed, she is correct in the fact that victims of crime are not covered in the bill unlike in the Ontario counterpart of this bill where they are. There are a number of reasons for it, and I will perhaps get into that debate in committee to try to explain what the reasons for it are.

Nonetheless, all of the points brought forward by the members for Edmonton-Highlands and Edmonton-Centre are valuable, and those are considerations that ought to be taken in voting for the bill.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call for conclusion of the debate on Bill 204 and ask the question.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 19, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 04/04/19

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Speaker: Please be seated.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, introduction, if it's okay with everybody.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This evening I have the honour to introduce to you and through you a group of constituents of mine from the McClure United Church, and I'd like to ask them to rise as I call out their names: Miss Veronica Newsdorfer; Miss Hillary White; a lady that I know fairly well, Miss Rosemary Gamble; Ms Deborah Banks; Miss Elizabeth James*; and their nine Pathfinders that are with them this evening. I'd like them to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a number of young individuals accompanied by their parents. I'll ask them to rise as I name them: Taddes Korris, Lance Cooper, Scott Chan, Ian Nalbach, James Ryl, Kyle Parotta, Jonathan Luong accompanied by their parents Nejolla Korris, Monique Cooper, Linda Chan, Tony Chan, Joanne Nalbach, and Maggie Ryl. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

Tourism Levy

506. Mr. Strang moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take measures to establish a tourism levy to be dedicated to the province's tourism marketing framework to promote the tourism industry in Alberta.

[Debate adjourned March 29: Ms Carlson speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to speak to the Assembly today in support of Motion 506, sponsored by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Speaker, tourism is a cornerstone of the Alberta economy and is an industry which all regions of the province can share in and prosper from. As we know, Alberta offers spectacular breathtaking views of the majestic Canadian Rocky Mountains on one hand and rugged picturesque views of the vast rolling prairie countryside on the other. Our province is nationally and internationally recognized as a tourism destination. We offer everything from world-renowned outdoor activities to year-round entertainment at the world's largest mall in Edmonton. Alberta also offers five national and approximately 300 provincial parks, world-class cultural and historical sites, and our urban areas offer a wide range of attractions for tourists of any age.

Mr. Speaker, tourism is crucial to our economy. In a day and age of reducing pollutants and creating sustainable industries and other sectors of business in Alberta, the tourism industry is a self-sufficient, clean, and sustainable industry that the government could be marketing more vigorously. Unfortunately, I sometimes think that we have taken the wonders and majestic geographical landscape of our province for granted.

But we can't just presume that visitors will come and explore Alberta because we have the geography, because we hosted the 1988 Winter Olympic Games, because we have the world's largest indoor mall or our famous Calgary Stampede. This may have been so a decade ago, but with the competitive nature of national and international tourism we must work harder and smarter at attracting visitors just to maintain, let alone increase, our share of the market.

The need to sustain and increase tourist levels is directly related to the need of sustainable funding so that tourism in Alberta is not left behind by the rest of the world. With globalization and the numerous attractions afforded by the Alberta landscape, the potential to aggressively market and promote Alberta as a destination for global travellers is immense.

Our grandeur and beauty are obvious from the moment you arrive. The province's attractiveness lies in its diversity. Just some of the features which make Alberta an incredibly attractive tourism proposition include accessible wildlife, varied and impressive scenery, unspoiled wilderness areas, diverse cultures in our urban and rural settings, a well-developed infrastructure, and virtually unlimited opportunities for special-interest activities. Such activities include some of the best skiing in the world, fishing and boating, whitewater rafting, hiking, ice and mountain climbing, exploring captivating flora and fauna that is indigenous to Alberta, and unique world-renowned archeological sites located in Alberta's badlands.

Alberta is and should continue to be a holiday hot spot for a plethora of travellers and thrill-seekers alike for generations to come. However, Mr. Speaker, attracting tourists and sustaining our precious and natural tourist resources costs money. Our lack of initiative in allocating a revenue source specifically to promote tourism in our province is worrisome given the fact that tourism is and will be an ever-increasing industry in this province. In light of this, we should consider solely allocating the current revenue accrued by the existing 5 per cent hotel tax to the advancement of marketing, promotion, and sustainability of Alberta tourism rather than its current allocation in the general revenue fund.

Mr. Speaker, in 2003 over $50 million was collected in hotel tax with the province spending less than one-half of that on marketing. Our potential for increasing this $5 billion industry could be so much greater. Tourism development in Alberta has the potential to reap massive revenue, an opportunity for Albertans if properly structured and funded. Most importantly it would build upon the already existing 122,000 employees directly and indirectly related to the tourism industry and provide for challenging and diversified employment opportunities in other areas of our province.

Tourism is an ever changing marketplace. I believe that Alberta should be and can be a world leader in tourism if the proper financial steps are taken immediately to capture the natural and cultural essence that Alberta has to offer to the rest of the world. I believe that unlike the many horrific tragedies associated with unsustainable and excessive tourism exposure in many parts of the world, Alberta's commitment to sustainable and viable tourism could be fostered through a provincial levy used specifically for the marketing of tourism in Alberta.

Over the past several years many individuals, including the Economic Development minister, the Strategic Tourism Marketing Council, and our MLA tourism committee, have worked towards converting the hotel tax to a tourism levy dedicated specifically for the marketing and promotion of Alberta tourism. After carefully examining the options, this seems to be the logical choice regarding the allocation of funds towards increase in tourism marketing expenditure in the province. The $56 million accrued from the hotel tax in 2003 if allocated fully to the Alberta tourism industry could dramatically increase the already $5 billion revenue of Alberta tourism and could substantially impact revenues in other sectors of the Alberta economy.

Mr. Speaker, tourism as a viable economic industry will continue to climb in its importance in Alberta. Significant investing in tourism today will enable Alberta to lead the way in innovative and environmentally sustainable ventures in Canada for the future. It is now time for the Alberta government to reallocate the revenue generated by the hotel tax to be solely dedicated to the growth and sustainability of the tourism industry in Alberta. We only have to look at the experiences of some of our major competitors to understand the benefits of effective and significant marketing efforts.

I urge all members of the Assembly today to vote in favour of Motion 506 and ensure that Alberta's tourism future will be sustained for future generations to come.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

8:10

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure again to participate in the discussion this evening on Motion 506, the establishment of a tourism levy. Certainly, whenever we look at this, it looks like a good idea, but the language of Motion 506, in my opinion, is ambiguous, and it is unclear whether the motion is calling for a new tourism levy to be established on top of the current hotel tax. If that is the case, I would have a great deal of difficulty supporting the motion. I certainly hope that my interpretation is wrong. Further increases to the price of hotel rooms in Alberta, in my opinion, would ruin our competitive advantage and decrease the number of dollars collected from tourism.

We're going back a number of years to the introduction of the hotel tax, going back to 1987. It was at that time going to be used to address the provincial deficit. Well, fortunately, after the economic policies of one of our former leaders, Mr. Laurence Decore, were adopted by this government, not only has that deficit been eliminated, but the provincial debt is now also close to being eliminated.

So if we're not going to eliminate this tax – and my interpretation was that once the debt was paid off, the tax would be eliminated – I think it's a very sound proposal to take at least a portion of this money and use it as a source of cash for an extensive North American and European campaign to attract citizens from America and citizens from Europe to this province. The tourism industry certainly is going to be a significant pillar in our future economic prosperity, and we can't start too soon to promote, as the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane stated earlier, the attractions, the natural beauty of this province and some of the man-made attractions that have been developed.

Also, perhaps we could use a portion of this money to develop the tourism potential even further in the West Yellowhead area. I'm disappointed. All the development has happened around Kananaskis, and I, for one, was hoping that there would be some development around Hinton on the east side of the Jasper national park.

Whenever one adds up the total of this hotel tax that has been collected, it has in the last half a dozen years or so, Mr. Speaker, been in excess of $500 million. That is a lot of money. If we had surplus from the advertising campaign, perhaps it would be prudent to set it aside at least and develop some more attractions in the West Yellowhead area. A Kananaskis north so to speak. I'm not saying that we would go as far as putting white sands on the golf courses and things of that nature, but certainly a development that would be a destination for tourists.

I think it is much needed to diversify the economy in that area of Alberta, and I think the northern half of the province would certainly appreciate it because there has been talk for some time that there would be further development in the north part of the province. The highway from Edmonton – of course the hon. member would be quite aware of that – is twinned now, and it doesn't take that much time even doing the speed limit to get to the West Yellowhead constituency.

Certainly, I for one would not be disappointed if the revenue that was raised from the hotel tax was used for an advertising campaign at this time. Now, whenever we look at the province's tourism industry, there is an expectation that there will be a drop in visitors, in revenue. There was last year, in 2003. There was a loss of $250 million to $500 million, depending upon who you talk to, and this is despite the high-profile attractions of Banff, Lake Louise, and, as the hon. member stated earlier, here in Edmonton, the West Edmonton Mall.

Again, according to PricewaterhouseCoopers' 2003 Alberta tourism survey, Mr. Speaker, 91 per cent of operators, businesses, and organizations in the province's tourism industry stated that increased marketing and additional financial resources are the most critical elements for industry improvement. As a skier that likes to get down to the national parks, I'm astonished to meet skiers from other places and to find out from them that they usually find their information on Banff and Lake Louise and Jasper in ski magazines. I was of the assumption that perhaps they saw billboards or perhaps they saw advertisements in the travel section in their local Sunday papers, but, no, the majority of them tell me that they're getting this information mostly from ski magazines.

I have yet to meet one party on the ride on the chairlift that has been unsatisfied with either the snow or the service they're receiving from their hotel. They are quite impressed with the services provided at the cost, and of course they're very impressed by the natural beauty and the snow conditions. There's no reason why we can't promote our province, I think, with the use of this money.

The language of Motion 506 is ambiguous, and if it could be cleared up, then certainly I would be very pleased to support this motion at this time.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to another hon. colleague. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise in the Assembly this evening and add my comments to the discussion and debate surrounding Motion 506, the possible introduction of a tourism levy which would be dedicated to the province's tourism marketing framework. This initiative would be established in order to promote and enhance the tourism industry in the province.

The motion has a broad mandate that allows for flexibility to examine various models or initiatives in the industry. I support the idea of proposing a levy. This levy could be added on top of the existing hotel tax or, rather, replace the hotel tax and specifically dedicate the revenue to tourism spending.

The purpose of the hotel tax has run its course, as mentioned by the sponsor. The government of Alberta first established the tax in 1987. It was created along with taxes such as the fuel tax, insurance premium, and an increase in corporate taxes to reduce the deficit in the province. As all members of the Assembly are aware, currently the province does not have a deficit. Furthermore, there has not been a deficit in Alberta since 1994-95. The province has been fiscally responsible and is working to eliminate what little debt is left in Alberta. The objectives of the hotel tax have been met. Therefore, I agree with the sponsor that one possibility for this revenue or a portion of this revenue would be to invest it into the province's tourism industry.

8:20

As it stands, the money generated from the hotel tax now gets allocated to the general revenue fund. It has been argued both by industry and from within government that this money should serve to enhance the province's tourism efforts. This is not a new idea, Mr. Speaker, and it appears there has been a lot of support for this initiative. Many government MLAs have requested this type of strategy. As well, many in the tourism industry hold the view that by replacing the hotel tax and employing an industry-driven levy, it would bring consistency and predictability in marketing to the sector.

In 2002 the tourism marketing committee first recommended that the hotel tax be converted to a tourism levy and that the revenues be focused on tourism marketing. The idea was to gradually phase out the hotel tax while introducing a tourism marketing levy in its place.

Mr. Speaker, the tourism industry plays an important role in the province's economic base. I offered my remarks regarding this sector in my response to the Speech from the Throne as I believe this is an extremely important industry to the province and one that has great potential for the future. The province's tourist sector gains its strength not only from its exceptional scenery, but also this is complemented by the service excellence and the strong private-sector/government partnerships.

What is left now is for the province to promote this amazing resource and increase its ability to attract national and international visitors. We need to continue to encourage tourists to come and spend their vacation dollars in Alberta. During 2003 the Alberta tourism industry generated over $5.3 billion in annual revenue, Mr. Speaker. I acknowledge that the revenue estimates are expected to continue to grow over future years, but these projected numbers could only increase substantially with the marketing of our province.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the tourism effort should be promoting all areas of the province. It seems as though, as mentioned by my colleague from Banff-Cochrane, tourists view Alberta and focus somewhat on the Rocky Mountains and West Edmonton Mall, and if this is the case, then they are missing out on many great escapes that our province has to offer. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about a Kananaskis of the north. I would like to talk about the Kananaskis of the east. Lakeland has so much to offer.

There is so much more to Alberta. Its splendour ranges over all areas of the province. However, tourists need to be aware that these opportunities exist. We must ask ourselves why people do not know of these opportunities. Why are they not aware?

Mr. Speaker, my constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul is the home of Alberta's Lakeland region. Tourism is an important industry to the area. However, it could be greatly expanded if only more tourists were aware that these opportunities are present. It is not typically a location for international visitors. However, the region is appealing to many different types of visitors. It offers great diversity of boreal mixed forests; clean, clear lakes; sandy beaches; marshy wetlands; and prairie landscapes. The area offers many unique wilderness opportunities. The region has over 150 lakes, many with lakeside camping and cabin facilities. The fishing is exceptional, while the wetlands are a perfect environment for birdwatching, with over 230 different species.

The area of Lac La Biche-St. Paul consistently has over 175,000 visitors annually. However, I don't believe it is a hot spot for international visitors. I do believe the area holds great potential for the future and would be attractive to many different types of tourists. This area is not a hot spot, because we are not promoting these areas to our potential. We must ask ourselves what the positive economic impact as well as other benefits to my constituency would be if we marketed this area properly.

Alberta is fortunate in that tourism is supported by provincial, national, and international visitors. However, we need to raise the profile of the province and the tourist opportunities that exist for travellers, especially, again, international visitors. We need to continue to attract these types of visitors.

Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely critical to promote the province's tourism sector. How are we going to attract more visitors to come to the province if we don't inform them on what we have to offer? It is not a matter of tourist opportunities in the province but, rather, an issue of getting the word out.

Mr. Speaker, we don't need to go far to see how other jurisdictions market their areas and the attractions within these regions compared to what could be possible in our province. In the pedway across from the visitors' centre and our own Legislature gift shop there are stands filled with pamphlets. I am sure most members are familiar with the area I'm referring to. These stands are filled with information on all sorts of different activities. They offer flyers on golf packages, tours, camping, whitewater rafting, fishing excursions, and other activities. The stands break down into categories: information on Edmonton and out of the province. The information pamphlets in the Alberta section, while abundant, tend to be small flyers promoting specific activities. These look as though they are being produced by individual tour companies.

What I find interesting is the information available from the regions outside of the province. There are complete booklets on British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Yukon, Northwest Territories, and Idaho. There are also booklets on certain regions or areas within the provinces and states. What's more is that there is not just one booklet per province. There are separate information packages on camping attractions and accommodations among other things. I believe there are four separate booklets on Manitoba alone. Surely, if Manitoba can produce that many comprehensive documents, we can match their efforts to promote tourism in Alberta. Granted, there were materials on Alberta, but these were limited in their scope and mostly focused on specific attractions.

This is the same situation that I have encountered while in Jasper and Banff. The visitors' centre and hotel lobbies are filled with information promoting British Columbia and Montana. We might as well be telling people to leave the province and spend their vacation dollars in other locations. The bottom line is that if travellers don't know that these opportunities exist, it is not going to matter how great our facilities are and how incredible the scenery is.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise today and join the debate on Motion 506, sponsored by my dear colleague from West Yellowhead. I fully support the intent and purpose of Motion 506, which is to support and further enhance our province's tourism sector, which is increasingly becoming one of the biggest employers and revenue generators in Alberta.

As has been mentioned before, Albertans are fortunate to live in a province that's blessed with natural beauty and spectacular scenery. Alberta's natural habitat is not only diverse but truly unique. There are very few places in the world where you can find the rugged mountain ranges, the never-ending sea of prairie grasslands, rough badlands, and the flowing carpet of remote evergreen forests all in one location.

Over the past decades this unique setting has attracted millions of tourists from all around our country and the world who choose to come to Alberta in search of adventure in the great outdoors. Alberta's landscape and environment are ideally suited for backpackers, campers, wildlife enthusiasts, and all those who lead active lifestyles and appreciate the wonders and experiences of our backcountry.

Our two major urban centres of Edmonton and Calgary are great tourist destinations, as well, and offer visitors exceptional hospitality combined with distinctive western flavour. Over the years famous attractions like Calgary's Fort Calgary Historic Park, Heritage Park Historic Village, the Calgary Tower, Canada Olympic Park in Calgary-Bow as well as Edmonton's West Edmonton Mall, Northlands Park, and the Old Strathcona district have become some of the tourists' favourite destinations. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the Calgary Stampede, Klondike Days, the Calgary Folk Music Festival, and the Edmonton Folk Music Festival not only attract thousands of visitors from all corners of the globe each and every year, but they are also excellent showcases for our rich cultural heritage, identity, and tradition.

While these are all extremely compelling reasons for people to come, see, and experience our province, one of the major reasons why people choose to vacation in Alberta is Albertans themselves. Albertans and Canadians, Mr. Speaker, are known around the world for their tolerance, hospitality, kindness, generosity, friendliness, and warmth, and if we wish to further promote Alberta as a premier holiday and tourist destination, our number one priority should be to sell Albertans to the world.

The reason I say this is because while sightseeing is a very important criteria for a potential tourist, one of the major motives for somebody to come back and visit a place over and over again is the people that they meet and the experience as a whole. I believe that these key ingredients are present right here in Alberta, and furthermore I believe that they serve to provide us with a solid foundation upon which we can further erect the pillars of our tourist industry.

I fully support the intent of Motion 506, which calls for the expansion of this important industry sector through further government involvement and investment. The motion proposes to accomplish this through the establishment of a dedicated revenue source that would provide the much-needed investment funds necessary to boost tourism in Alberta.

As my hon. colleague from West Yellowhead alluded to earlier, one of the ways we accomplish this task is by converting the Alberta hotel room tax, whose proceeds are currently being funneled into the general revenue fund, into a dedicated tourism levy. According to the latest budgetary statistics, in 2003 the Alberta hotel room tax generated about $58 million in government revenues. If we were to convert this tax and invest its proceeds in the tourism sector, not only would we potentially be tripling the government investment in this sector, but our intake of revenues from this industry would increase substantially.

To put this into numbers, Mr. Speaker, if our tourism investment in 2003-04 was approximately $22 million, adding on the $58 million generated from the hotel tax will allow us to boost our tourism investment to about $80 million. This massive increase in funding would not only allow this sector to grow and become more competitive with tourism sectors in other jurisdictions in Canada but could also double its overall revenue from over $5 billion to $10 billion. This means that with the added financial boost, Alberta's tourism sector could potentially increase from contributing 3.3 per cent to 6.6 per cent of our total GDP.

For the purpose of comparison, if this sector were encouraged to double its output to $10 billion, it could potentially match and even overtake the output generated by our food and beverage manufacturing industry. This is highly significant if one considers the fact that our food and beverage sector is currently facing some extremely trying times as a result of the border closure to Canadian beef products.

Now, Mr. Speaker, some may disagree with the provisions outlined in Motion 506 on the grounds that funneling such a large amount of government revenue to only one sector of the economy is not only excessive but also an unnecessary government involvement in an industry that was privatized less than 10 years ago. Well, Mr. Speaker, I personally believe that in this particular case such arguments don't hold much value.

Tourism is the fourth largest industry in our province, which, as I said, generates not only $5 billion in revenues but also provides employment for over 120,000 Albertans. Now, Mr. Speaker, the potential for growth of this sector is enormous, and the return on investment ratio is very favourable. Therefore, if by tripling our tourism investment by converting the hotel tax into a dedicated tourism levy will mean that we can double the sector's output, I think that we would be committing a grave error by not considering this option. Furthermore, the idea of investing the funds generated by this tax into the tourism industry is reflective of the efforts of many government members, and it's also supported by the vast majority of the sector's operators, businesses, and organizations.

Further to this point, according to the 2003 Alberta tourism survey 91 per cent of those involved in the tourism industry indicated that they wished to see increased marketing and additional resources to increase the sector's market share. The survey also indicated that 59 per cent of the respondents believe that our government has a key role to play in the enhancement and further development of Alberta tourism. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, to argue that Motion 506 represents an unnecessary government involvement into a privatized industry sector is in my view invalid, and the majority of industry stakeholders will agree with me on this point.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, Alberta enjoys a vibrant and healthy tourism industry, whose potential for further growth is enormous. As I said in my opening remarks, Albertans are extremely fortunate to live in a province which enjoys breathtaking natural scenery and environment, thriving rural and urban communities, and energetic and friendly people. Alberta has all the necessary ingredients to become one of the world's premier vacation destinations. Introducing a dedicated tourism levy as suggested in Motion 506 will help us to accomplish this goal at a relatively low cost.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, this government has gone to great lengths to try to encourage the diversification of our economy. The latest BSE crisis has not only had detrimental economic effects on our rural communities but has also greatly compromised our overall diversification efforts. I am convinced that giving our tourism sector the necessary boost will help put us back on the diversification track and will also help make up for some of the potential losses our economy has experienced as a result of BSE.

With this in mind, Mr. Speaker, I urge all my colleagues to join me in supporting our tourism industry and vote in favour of Motion 506. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak to Motion 506, a very important motion, which, if implemented, would boost Alberta's very important tourism industry.

Alberta, as has been noted by my colleagues previously, is a really ideal place to visit and to live. By reputation alone millions of people come to visit each year. From the awe-inspiring natural beauty found in the Rocky Mountains to world-class events like the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede to mammoth attractions like West Edmonton Mall, Alberta offers a wide variety of experiences to people all over the globe.

The list of reasons to visit Alberta is long. The Royal Tyrrell Museum, Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, the Calgary Zoo, Lake Louise, Jasper, Banff, Fort Edmonton, and the oil sands are just a very few fantastic destinations that quickly come to mind. Alberta's very terrain means that the province is an ideal place to golf, ski, hike, cycle, snowmobile, fish, hunt, camp, and so on, and Alberta has shown that it is capable of hosting world-class events such as the Winter Olympics, the world track and field championships, the Commonwealth Games, the Heritage Classic, the World Police/Fire Games, and most recently the Mars 2004 Canadian juvenile alpine championships.

You might wonder why I happen to mention that. I do mention this event in particular because my oldest granddaughter, 13-year-old Stephanie Irwin, competed at these championships and did very well. Also, I know that when you have competitors, officials, and parents attending these national and international events, they also wear another hat, and it's the tourist hat.

Add these elements to the reputation Albertans have for being friendly and inviting and you have, as I've said, an opportunity for success when it comes to attracting billions of tourist-related dollars. I'm sure you would agree that Alberta truly has a great opportunity to grow tourism. There are literally thousands of reasons why people would want to spend their holiday time in this beautiful province, and by establishing a provincial tourism levy, we could unlock unlimited potential towards bringing more people into Alberta.

There is no denying the importance of marketing your product. Major companies all over the world have gone to great lengths to ensure that the masses are aware of their products or services. Nike, for example, signed golf sensation Tiger Woods to an endorsement deal worth $100 million over five years, about $20 million per year. This, indeed, is a large sum of money but is not a cost to the company. Nike knows that by having Tiger endorse their brand name, customers will line up to purchase its products. Paying $100 million in this manner is an investment which will lead to dividends of exponentially greater value.

I won't attempt to compare the amount Nike pays Tiger Woods to the paltry amount that this province allocates to its $5 billion tourism industry annually. I do feel, however, that the Nike example demonstrates the importance that successful companies have placed on marketing their product.

Investment is the key to growth. I believe that this statement is true when applied to Alberta's tourism industry. If we do the necessary work in promoting our geography, events, attractions, and people, we can make great gains in this sector. Also, if we use funds to develop initiatives in which we co-operate with other jurisdictions like British Columbia and Montana, not necessarily at the same time, hoping to increase tourism to a greater region, our province will benefit further from increased activity within the sector.

If we invest more in our film industry, we should see an increase not only in that industry but in tourism revenues. We all know how New Zealand has benefited in the billions by filming the Lord of the Rings trilogy in that country.

We have already seen that improving the way we manage our tourism industry can lead to increased value. In 1996 after significant restructuring to the tourism industry by this government, Travel Alberta was in charge of developing and expanding tourism in the province. Unfortunately, the industry began to dwindle, not necessarily because of poor work by Travel Alberta but because investment in the industry had dropped substantially. Consequently, the value of Alberta's tourism industry fell to about $3 billion at the time.

In 1998 the government switched from Travel Alberta and embraced a new approach in the new tourism marketing framework. The change has led to a 53 per cent funding increase to $16,589,000 in the '99-2000 fiscal year to promote the industry. As the industry is now worth $5 billion, we can see the value in marketing and investing in our product. In the end it will be Albertans who will benefit from increased tourism. It will mean that Alberta's hotel industry will thrive, restaurants will benefit from more out-of-country clientele, businesses will benefit with more money being spent in Alberta, and more jobs will be created for Albertans. These are all very important reasons why we should commit additional funds to tourism.

Mr. Speaker, it is tremendously important that our tourism industry remain healthy and grow. As I stated before, $5 billion flows into our province every year because of tourism, and 122,000 Albertans have jobs because of it. Some Alberta towns exist solely because of tourism dollars. We should strive to improve these numbers.

So what are our options in being able to pay for increased marketing of Alberta? How do we find the funds to grow, not just maintain, our tourism infrastructure? These are important questions to consider.

Alberta prides itself on low taxes for its residents, and initially it looks like an increased cost to the taxpayer. However, we are in a unique situation in Alberta in that the opportunities that are afforded to us exceed those that are found in other jurisdictions. As has been pointed out, in 1987 the Alberta government introduced the hotel room tax as part of a strategy to close the gap between what we were spending as a province and the revenue we were bringing in.

In conjunction with other taxes and premiums these funds played an important role in eliminating the province's deficit. Today there's no deficit, and we're nearing the end of the debt that Alberta accrued in the decades leading up to this present government. There are many discussions that revolve around what a debt-free Alberta will look like, and ideas are frequently put forward as to how we can improve the Alberta advantage even further when we are not handcuffed by debt pressures and responsibilities. I believe that establishing a tourism investment by allocating the funds collected through the hotel tax is one idea that we should seriously consider.

At the beginning of this session Alberta's Lieutenant Governor, Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole, read in the throne speech that one of Alberta's goals was to make the province the best place to live, work, and visit. Allocating additional funding to tourism would fulfill this goal. Alberta benefits from out-of-country visits, but Albertans themselves enjoy Alberta's splendour and spend their time and money within Alberta's tourism industry.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to just point out the importance of the timing of this motion. In the past couple of years there have been a number of critical events that have had a negative effect on Alberta tourism and tourism in general. Certainly, after September 11 fewer people were willing to fly, and tourism diminished across the world. That trend continued during the war in Iraq. Closer to home SARS, although never detected in Alberta, certainly negatively affected the number of people considering Canada as a tourist destination. Most recently we have dealt with two single cases of mad cow disease. While Albertans know that our beef is the finest in the world, uninformed travellers have been wary about coming to Alberta.

In a 2003 survey conducted by PricewaterhouseCoopers, 55 per cent of respondents said that they felt the Iraq war and the SARS outbreak had a significant impact on the Alberta tourism industry. Most importantly, 91 per cent stated that increased marketing and additional financial resources were the most critical elements for industry improvement.

So I believe this is a crucial time to be beating our drum. We need to let the world know that we are open for business and that Alberta is a very viable destination for people from all over the world. We need to do our part in attracting tourism to Alberta. No one else is going to do that for us.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that I am in favour of this motion and compliment the Member for West Yellowhead for bringing it forward. I believe it is very important to increase our efforts in promoting this very important industry to the world. By allocating revenues generated by the current hotel room tax for this purpose, we can ensure that tourism plays an even greater role in Alberta's future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. You have 40 seconds.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I am unable to support Motion 506 although I do believe it is well intentioned. I think a better idea to help the tourism industry would be to abolish the 5 per cent sales tax and allow hoteliers the option of either reducing the room rates by 5 per cent across the board or, alternatively, they could collect on their own and do for their own industry what they're expecting government to do.

Also, I'm not certain why it is incumbent upon the hoteliers to pay the levy when there are other industries associated with the tourism industry, specifically restaurateurs and amusement park operators. All benefit from marketing tourism, but only the hoteliers are asked to pay under this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead to conclude debate.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all hon. members who have spoken to Motion 506, establishing a provincial tourism levy. We need to urge the government to move ahead and bring this on stream.

We need to move away from the three Ms: moose, mounties, and mountains. Tourism marketing in Alberta is a lot more sophisticated. We need to move ahead and get this tourism levy moving, and then we can market all the different aspects of this great province of Alberta.

It's great to see the National Geographic rank Jasper and Banff as sustainable tourism destinations higher than the Grand Canyon and the Galapagos Islands. This shows how everybody else recognizes the great product that we have, but we still have to strongly sell this message. The big thing that I look at is that this is a sustainable resource as well as a renewable one. The travelling public is looking for more variety, more interesting places to visit, and we certainly have them in this great province of Alberta.

We have discussed the aspects of not having a dedicated revenue, but as I review the Community Development business plan for the 2004-2005 fiscal year, a new fee will be implemented in provincial parks and protected areas to ensure that such services as education programs, bus and auto tours, and grooming cross-country trails still remain available to the public. This is why I strongly believe in a dedicated portion of the hotel tax. We are looking at 2 and a half per cent and basically half of what we presently get from this tax.

Mr. Speaker, I have strong support from the chambers of commerce in West Yellowhead – the Edson and District Chamber of Commerce, the Hinton and District Chamber of Commerce, the Grande Cache Chamber of Commerce, and Jasper Tourism & Commerce – on moving ahead to bring in this tourism levy. We will be able to display to the world the products that we have so we can have a great centennial celebration. I strongly believe this will be a great kickoff so that tourism will move up in the ranks of our GDP in our province.

The Alberta Hotel & Lodging Association also supports this levy. They're looking at utilizing this dedicated levy as a strong investment. Statistics Canada indicates that for every dollar of tourism spending, the government raises 3.1 cents. For every dollar spent on tourism in 1998, the federal government raised 14.8 cents, the provincial/territorial government raised 13.6 cents, and the municipal government received 18.1 cents. KPMG indicated that every dollar invested in marketing would increase tourism spending by $20.

As a final note, I would like to thank the Minister of Economic Development for his strong dedication to this industry, especially moving ahead with his news release on April 2 that an additional $5 million per year for three year fiscal years has been directed towards tourism marketing and development in Alberta. Adding to the current base funding of $19.1 million, it brings the total annual government investment in tourism marketing and development to more than $24 million.

Tourism is one of Alberta's largest industries, generating over $5 billion annually and employing over 120,000 people. It generates over $620 million in revenue for the Alberta government through direct and indirect taxation.

Now that the minister has appointed a deputy minister of tourism, this is a great first step. Now all we need is the support of this House for the motion so that we can move ahead and be a stronger contender in tourism marketing for the 21st century.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 carried]

Game Conservation Fund

507. Mr. VanderBurg moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to add a fish and wildlife surcharge onto existing fines and penalties related to illegal hunting and fishing practices with the proceeds allocated directly to a conservation fund to support programs that restore and protect game species and species at risk in Alberta.

Mr. VanderBurg: It's a pleasure to begin debate on Motion 507. The intent of this motion is to create a pool of financial resources to complement and assist Alberta's fish and wildlife conservation programs. I think there should be a stronger focus on the environment, specifically on fish and wildlife species. A wildlife conservation fund would help maintain and improve healthy wildlife populations.

As you may know, there already is a surcharge on illegal hunting and fishing fines, with the proceeds dedicated to the victims of crime fund. I've been reminded on several occasions of this existing surcharge, and some have asked why the Alberta government should consider directing money into this separate fund. The current victims of crime fund works well to assist people by providing one-time funding to help people through the aftermath. However, I do not think that the current victims of crime fund effectively helps conservation officers. There is no doubt that the fund successfully helps human victims, and according to the Victims of Crime Act, the environment is classified as a victim whenever an illegal hunting offence occurs. This hasn't translated into financial assistance from the fund for conservation officers though.

Mr. Speaker, let me give you an example. Let's say that someone is caught night hunting and fined $2,000. On top of the fine the offender has to pay a 15 per cent surcharge with this dedicated to the victims of crime fund. The penalties listed in the Fisheries Act and general fisheries regulations as well as the Wildlife Act and wildlife regulations are subject to surcharge. The reasoning for this is that wildlife population is directly and negatively affected by illegal hunting practices. I think everybody would agree with this logic. However, this is where the logic ends.

If a fish and wildlife species is directly affected by illegal hunting, there should be an opportunity for people who carry out conservation and enforcement programs to access the fund. However, according to the guidelines of the victims of crime fund, provincial government departments are not considered eligible for funding grants. As a result, conservation officers employed by the Department of Sustainable Resource Development are not able to use any of the funds collected from the surcharges on fines related to illegal hunting. This part of the fund works against conservation programs because the people who need the money cannot access the grants.

Projects within another government department's funding mandate are also not eligible for a grant from the victims fund. As a result, any conservation education or enforcement programs spearheaded by a conservation officer could not use proceeds from the fund.

Under Motion 507 the government would either add a new surcharge on fines for illegal hunting and fishing or take the existing surcharge on these fines and put them into a separate fund. For some members the amount of money in this fund may not seem significant. I think that any additional funding, no matter the size, would help Alberta's economy. Rural areas are relying more and more on existing tourism attractions and building tourism opportunities. As a result, these areas rely heavily on sustainable fish and wildlife to attract tourism. The amount in the conservation fund may not be enough to solve all of the fish and wildlife issues, but it will help conservation officers address some of these problems.

I have several hard-working conservation officers in my area who dedicate a great deal of their time to conservation and promoting responsible hunting and fishing. At times they go above and beyond their required duties to make time for presenting to organizations and helping people understand the need to preserve wildlife populations. I think they do an incredible job, Mr. Speaker, although they tell me that they could do better with a little more help.

A few years ago, Mr. Speaker, a lake was netted in my area, basically wiping out the entire fish population. This caused extensive damage besides the obvious environmental damage to the lake's ecosystem. Any commercial fishing opportunities and the benefits to the local economy were lost. Access to sustainable fishing for native people was lost. Campgrounds, sporting goods stores, restaurants, boat rental companies suffered because of one poacher.

The netted lake is an example of how additional funding could have minimized some of the damage. An information campaign on the effects of overfishing could have been a proactive step. Also, funding for restocking the lake could have helped our lake recover faster. Neither task would have required a substantial amount of money. Conservation officers, especially those in my area, could benefit from a little more financial assistance to effectively carry out their duties. I've seen what they can do with the current funding they receive, and I can assure this Assembly that those funds would go a long way.

Mr. Speaker, it is safe to say that health care and education will continue to consume the majority of the government's funding. I realize that some of the reforms are underway and others are being designed. I believe that these reforms will stabilize funding so government can concentrate on other issues. However, I do not believe that the immediate problems with illegal hunting and fishing can wait. Furthermore, I think that conservation efforts do not require a major overhaul; they simply require more financial resources.

I see no problem in taking money from people who abuse and destroy Alberta's fish and wildlife and dedicating it to a conservation fund: abuser pay. The added cost to the government to administer this fund would pale in comparison to the benefits to conservation programs and the social, economic, and environmental spinoffs of maintaining wildlife populations. Some of the challenges facing Alberta's conservation officers do not have easy solutions. A conservation fund financed by poachers may help improve Alberta's fish and wildlife resources.

I would encourage all members in this Assembly to support Motion 507, and I look forward to the debate. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. I'm interested in participating in the time remaining on Motion 507.

Mr. Speaker, certainly, when the hon. member is describing this motion, I would like at some time to get clarified in debate what exactly is the use of the money now that we're collecting from fees or taxes on hunting and fishing licences. Is there not a portion of that tax being dedicated to the rehabilitation of streams, for fencing around mountain streams to protect them from cattle? This is perhaps a good idea, but is there not enough money now from the taxes on hunting and fishing licences to restore and protect game species and fishing streams?

Some of the finest fly-fishing in North America is in the eastern slopes of Alberta, and I'm of the understanding that that money is going to protect some of those gravel beds. Perhaps I'm wrong, and if the hon. member could clarify that.

The Speaker: Excuse me. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business is now concluded for today.

9:00head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development

The Deputy Chair: As per our Standing Orders the first hour is allocated to the hon. minister and members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate in the debate.

The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to present the 2004-2005 estimates for the Ministry of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

First of all, I'd like to thank my department staff for all their hard work, and I'd like to introduce them to you. They're seated in the members' gallery, so I'll ask them to stand as I call their names: my deputy minister, of course, Paddy Meade – most of you know her now – ADM Ken Boutillier; Neil Reddekopp; our senior financial officer, Lori Sajjad; and of course John McDonough, Thomas Droege, Gerry Kushlyk, Jay O'Neill, Judy Daniels, and Tom Baldwin.

My ministry's fourth business plan reflects our ongoing efforts to take on a challenging mandate. There is continuing pressure on the Alberta government to address aboriginal and northern issues in a timely manner and to work with a view to success over the longer term. My ministry's vision is "an Alberta that includes the full participation of self-reliant Aboriginal and Northern Albertans in the province's opportunities and prosperity." Our mission is to work with our partners, including aboriginal people and other ministries, to support an environment that promotes well-being and self-reliance for aboriginal and northern people and communities.

As a small ministry we are not in the business of program development. We are in the business of building and strengthening relationships. Our role is to be an entry point for aboriginal communities into government in that we provide advice and support to the other government ministries and other Albertans in addressing policy and service issues for aboriginal people and guidance in working with aboriginal governments and communities. We welcome the role of facilitating, co-ordinating, and advising on the development of cross-ministry policies, strategies, and initiatives.

In other words, our mandate is to work with aboriginal and northern people, communities, and organizations, other Alberta ministries, other governments, and the private sector to respond to aboriginal and northern issues. Therefore, our 2004-2005 estimates I believe reflect this mandate and other legislative requirements.

My budget is $35.7 million in 2004-2005, up $4.1 million from 2003-2004. A major portion of the budget is for legislative funding requirements or statutory funds provided to the Métis Settlements General Council or pursuant to the Métis Settlements Accord Implementation Act. This act requires payment of $10 million per year until April 1, 2006.

As well, under the legislation we provide funding to Métis settlements through the matching grants replacement agreement. Of course, this amount is $4.9 million in 2004-05. The total for Métis settlements legislative requirements and government efforts is approximately $14.9 million, leaving under $21 million for all other ministry responsibilities, which we have allocated as follows: Aboriginal Affairs, $17.8 million; NADC, $2 million. I know that the chair, the MLA for Peace River, will speak to NADC efforts shortly. The Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal receives $0.9 million. We have 79 full-time employees, including 57 in the department, 15 with NADC, and another seven assigned to the Métis Settlements Appeal Tribunal.

The 2004-2007 business plan identifies four strategic priorities that the ministry intends to focus on. On the aboriginal policy framework, which we always talk about and which everyone seems to understand, I hope, we will continue to lead implementation of the commitments made in the APF. This involves working with numerous external partners as well as leading the cross-ministry aboriginal and policy initiative, which is internally working within government.

Capacity building. We will increase our efforts with aboriginal governments to enhance the capacity to form effective partnerships and manage relations with government, industry, and other parties.

Consultation. We will continue to lead development and implementation of provincial processes for consulting with aboriginal communities in relation to land and resource issues.

On the fourth, northern development, we will work collaboratively with other ministries, northern stakeholders, and other partners to address challenges to co-ordinated and sustainable northern development.

Our business plan goals are linked to five goals in the government business plan, and of course the ministry is directly linked to goal 5, "Aboriginal communities and people in Alberta will have improved social and economic circumstances."

We have identified two core businesses, of course making sure to keep within the new government-wide business planning standards and alignment of our funding with core businesses, goals, strategies, and performance measures. The first core business relates to aboriginal people and issues. It is aimed at improving the participation of aboriginal people in Alberta's social and economic opportunities and facilitating resolution of significant issues.

Our first goal is to proactively collaborate with aboriginal governments and organizations, other ministries, and other parties to identify and resolve issues. We hope to achieve this goal through our ongoing efforts to of course do a number of things: one, enhance provincial relations with aboriginal people; two, facilitate inclusion of aboriginal issues in the development of government initiatives; and three, work with aboriginal communities, other ministries, and other parties to identify and resolve issues.

Strategies under this goal include participating in self-government discussions with Canada and First Nations, leading implementation of provincial consultation strategies and activities, assisting with the effective administration of Métis settlements legislation, and encouraging timely settlement of outstanding treaty land entitlement claims in Alberta.

The APF commits Alberta to a proactive, made-in-Alberta consultation process, and we are now drafting guidelines and implementation strategies with First Nations. We are also getting input from industry and other stakeholders. These guidelines and strategies will assist all ministries and industry to manage their consultations with First Nations.

Since 1986 Alberta has contributed to a total of 12 land entitlement settlements for Indian reserves owing under treaty, the best across the country, and we have the best people to do that. They're led by our legal team. I want to say thank you to them because without them it's not possible. We are also working with numerous partners and aboriginal community representatives in Edmonton and Calgary to address urban aboriginal issues.

Improving relations between the province and Alberta First Nations and Métis organizations is another strategy under goal 1. We have identified two specific initiatives under this goal: leading development of a government-wide aboriginal policy checklist to assist all ministries in ensuring that aboriginal issues are addressed in policy development and, of course, working with the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment to develop economic performance measures from the aboriginal-specific labour force survey.

9:10

Performance measures for goal 1 include the monitoring of Métis settlements' self-generated revenue, an indication, of course, of community self-reliance, and providing a narrative report on the development of the aboriginal policy checklist. This performance measure was developed through collaboration with the office of the Auditor General.

Our second goal is to "assist in development of strategies and initiatives to promote the well-being and self-reliance of Aboriginal people in Alberta." This goal includes leading implementation of the government's APF. The ministry also leads the API, otherwise known as the aboriginal policy initiative, and participates actively in the cross-ministry initiatives. These include health sustainability initiatives, Alberta children and youth initiatives, and the economic development strategy. My department's participation in these priority policy initiatives provides opportunities to co-ordinate Alberta's responses to aboriginal and northern issues.

Of course, another area of ongoing activity under this goal is working with partners, including the ministries of Learning and Human Resources and Employment, as well as industry and the private sector to promote lifelong learning and to increase aboriginal participation in the economy.

Other strategies under goal 2 include working with Alberta Learning and other stakeholders to address recommendations from Alberta's Commission on Learning. Ministry staff will also continue to work directly with aboriginal organizations to enhance their planning and performance measures as part of capacity-building initiatives. As I mentioned earlier, this is one of our strategic priorities, but we will also continue to engage aboriginal youth and industry advisory committees in setting youth directions as well as our aboriginal advisory committee. We will continue to be active participants in federal/provincial/territorial processes focusing on aboriginal issues.

Our performance measures for goal 2 include the percentage of targets achieved in the cross-ministry API. This is an indicator of cross-ministry progress in addressing aboriginal issues. We also report on the percentage of Alberta ministries addressing aboriginal issues in their business or operational plans. In addition, the ministry will provide a narrative report on the results of our efforts with Canada and of course First Nations to address regulatory barriers to economic development on First Nations' reserves, which seems to be coming quite quickly.

Goal 4 in our business plan is organizational excellence. As a relatively new ministry we have devoted considerable effort to this goal. For the coming year we intend to focus on human resource development, information sharing, and support for government-wide practices. We will be using results from the government-wide employee survey to monitor progress toward this goal.

Our second core business under goal 3 is to facilitate development of northern Alberta. Essentially, this means we will continue to work with other ministries and northern stakeholders to advance co-ordinated, sustainable northern development, such as with industry, municipalities, and anyone that we feel needs to be included and wants to be included. We will also implement the Northwest Territories MOU and of course be specifically involved with the Alaska/Alberta committee under IIR. We will continue to represent North America and northern Alberta in the area of the northern forum.

I will ask my colleague the Member for Peace River to provide an update as chair of NADC and to talk about issues where he feels free to do so. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and to the minister. As the minister noted, the government has to focus on strategic priorities. Northern Alberta contributes significantly to the economies of this province and Canada as a whole. In fact, a recent study demonstrated that on a per capita basis northern Alberta contributes two to three times the resource revenue compared to the rest of the province. This is a vital contribution to the sustainability of the Alberta advantage. In turn, we believe that we have to ensure the sustainability of the northern economy so that all Albertans can benefit.

The Northern Alberta Development Council and this ministry have focused on that goal. The oil sands development is fairly obvious, and most people have come to recognize its contribution. For a well-rounded economy we also have to be aware of the agricultural industry, the forestry industry, and northern tourism. NADC plays a key role in identifying how vital a good transportation infrastructure is in making it possible to exploit these and other industries. Good road, rail, and air links are essential if we expect people to develop these resources and get the products to market. Recruiting and keeping a skilled workforce is equally important. Training northern residents is the most assured way of keeping people in the area, but with such a huge demand for trades and professional people we have to find ways of attracting outside folks to where it's happening and to make it attractive for them to want to stay.

Mr. Chairman, there are many other programs that we work on such as capacity-building for northern communities, value-added developments, interjurisdictional partnerships, and so on, but I don't have time to elaborate on them in my presentation. I certainly will be glad to answer questions on any of these issues that may be raised, though.

Mr. Chairman and members, the north is an untapped frontier for development, and we are pleased to be playing a part in bringing the opportunities forward.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chair's Ruling Speaking Order

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, before I recognize the Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition, I just want to put some information out for the record. According to our Standing Order 58(3), as I'd indicated earlier on, the Committee of Supply shall consider estimates in the following manner:

- (a) the Minister, or the member of the Executive Council acting on the Minister's behalf, and members of the opposition may speak during the first hour.

The chair I guess did recognize the Member for Peace River to speak on behalf of the minister, but as per the Standing Order that is restricted to the minister and the members of the opposition.

Debate Continued

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I can accept that kind of switch to the rules.

Anyway, I listened with interest to the minister's comments and the Member for Peace River. I will mostly focus my comments, my own questions and thoughts, on the comments from the minister and on the business plan from her department.

It's interesting, I guess, in this Assembly that we use a lot of very bureaucratic language, and we talk in terms of monitoring and initiatives and frameworks and all these kinds of things. We in this room all generally know what those kinds of words mean, but when I sit here and look through the business plan and listen to the minister's comments, I'm inclined to want to speak in much more concrete terms and in the language that the ordinary people of Alberta who are out on the streets or in their homes would understand and the issues that I think they would be most concerned about. So my questions may not fit with the kinds of structure that the minister has for her department or her thoughts, but they are going to come her way nonetheless from me, and she can do her best to respond as we go along.

I've ended up making notes on eight different topics: on employment, education, justice, child welfare and children's services, housing, health, culture, and economic development. Those are the points around which I'll be organizing my questions to the minister.

I'm largely prompted to do so under point 1 on page 102 of the Budget 2004 business plans. The subtitle is "Aboriginal well-being and self-reliance." It says, "The Aboriginal population is growing faster and is younger than the non-Aboriginal population. The highest population growth is in urban areas." My questions really are intended not to focus exclusively but largely on urban areas. One border of my constituency is defined by Stony Plain Road in an area where there's a major program, a major agency serving the aboriginal population, and I'm thinking especially of those kinds of people when I raise my questions.

My first questions to the minister are around employment and job training. Now, it's a common saying that a good job is the best social program, and I think there's of course a lot of truth to that. Unfortunately, the unemployment rate in the aboriginal population is very high, far, far higher than it is in the rest of the population. That stems from many, many issues: cultural issues, education issues, and on and on.

When the minister talks about her department's role as being one of building relations and facilitating the work of other departments when it comes to aboriginals, I'd like some specifics, if she can give them, on the relationship building and facilitation that's going on concerning employment for aboriginals. What are we seeing perhaps in terms of job placement, if anything, and how is that work being facilitated? Are there placement positions or placement programs with private-sector employers? I'm sure there are. Are there placement programs with the provincial public service itself or with nonprofit agencies or other levels of government? Is there any support given to aboriginal small businesses, or what kind of facilitating occurs there? Are aboriginal small businesses encouraged to get involved in chambers of commerce or in perhaps obtaining funding from banks or from credit unions or from the Business Development Bank or something like that? So these are really issues around employment. What work is going on and will be going on this year under this budget to improve the employment prospects of aboriginals in Alberta?

The second topic I'd like to spend a few minutes on of course relates to the first. The second one is education, and this is key to all kinds of things. I'm sure we all know in here that good education is an excellent predictor of good employment, of good health, of minimum contact with the justice system, and generally of a happy and successful life. Again, the education prospects of the aboriginal population are not what I think we would all agree they ought to be. So what kind of facilitation is being undertaken by her department to improve the education prospects and opportunities of the aboriginal population?

Is there support for any kinds of special school programs? I know that in my constituency there's a special program at Sherwood school under the public school board. Is that something that is occurring on its own through agencies and the community and the school board? Is that something that the minister sees her department having a role in? Maybe it's not necessary in Edmonton, but what about in other parts of the province? I would like some comment on that, for if there's one thing that should be the ultimate priority of this department, I would think it would be improving the educational lot of aboriginals in Alberta.

Of course, that doesn't just apply to schools. It also applies to postsecondary learning institutions, so is there work occurring in this budget to facilitate the success of aboriginals in postsecondary institutions in Alberta, whether that's universities or NAIT or colleges? How are we encouraging aboriginals and supporting aboriginal people to go on after they finish grade 12 to become journeymen blue-collar workers or to become professionals or teachers or nurse practitioners so that they can serve their communities either in remote areas of the province or in areas like Stony Plain Road right here in Edmonton?

What about education support for adult aboriginals who are living on their own? I'm thinking, for example, of upgrading or encouraging adults to return to finish high school or even to get basic literacy and numeracy skills. How is your department reaching out to the community, reaching out to the colleges or to the special programs across Alberta that upgrade people so that they can complete grade 12 and move on to postsecondary education? How are you reaching out to the adults who never had the opportunity to finish schooling?

The third area is justice. I notice the Justice minister is here tonight, and I know he's got concerns and thoughts on the disproportionate number of aboriginals in contact with the justice system. Again, what is the minister's department doing to address the issues that aboriginals face in relation to the justice system of Alberta? Of course, prevention would be the very best thing to emphasize, I suppose, if we had a choice, preventing people from becoming incarcerated or ending up in court. That may well involve improving their education or ensuring that they have a job or giving them better housing and so on. What kind of prevention work is being facilitated through this department so that aboriginals don't end up in the justice system in the first place? Is there liaison going on with police departments or with the court system or with the support systems that are there for people once they're discharged from the justice system?

What about addiction treatment programs? What work if any is being done by this department to address the addiction issues faced by the aboriginal population? I'm not saying that you have to be involved in all of these areas. I'm just looking for the facts here. Is that something that is delegated entirely to AADAC, or is it something that your department has a special role in in terms of connecting the AADAC and other services to the aboriginal community? So those are the questions I would have on the minister's work on justice issues.

Children's services and child welfare were next on my list. I think back to work I did many, many years ago in child welfare in Edmonton and, again, the disproportionate number of child welfare recipients who were from the aboriginal community and the need to be really plugged into that community to intervene as early as possible and prevent small problems from becoming big problems. This would be work, of course, being done through the Children's Services authorities, but what role does the department of aboriginal affairs have to play in addressing children's services and intervening, for example, or facilitating other organizations to intervene in families at an early stage?

Does the department have a role to play in ensuring culturally appropriate family supports for aboriginal children so that if they do need to be removed from their family, they can remain connected to their culture?

Finally, of course, support for Children's Services agencies in urban areas, where we may have aboriginal families in predominantly nonaboriginal neighbourhoods or communities. They may be isolated. They may be needing support. They may be needing some kind of intervention in urban areas. Is there a role for this department to play to reach those kinds of families and the children either through the school system or through community agencies or through children's services agencies? Or perhaps, quite appropriately, the department has said, "No. We're leaving that to the children's services authorities or somebody else, the school board."

9:30

So I'll stop there. Just to recap, the four general things I was asking the minister about are job training, education, justice, and child welfare. If the minister wants to make some comments now on her department's role in those areas, I'd be quite interested. Thanks.

Ms Calahasen: Well, I can do that, Mr. Chairman. First of all, thank you for the questions. I think it's important to be able to address some of them. I'll try to hit as many as I can, and then we'll certainly write if there's anything that I missed that could deal with some of the issues of my budget.

I want to talk about a very important area which is the language, culture, and places that I feel very strongly about. I think it's important that no matter what happens, no matter where the kids are or where the people are, they should have those connections. So what we do in Aboriginal Affairs is try to make sure that we facilitate. We work with families. We work with individual organizations. We work with industry. We work with whomever we can to make sure that we continue to do that. That to me is really important no matter where we go. We work with schools as well. I want to go into the specifics that you're talking about.

As you were saying about unemployment and job training, unemployment, as we know, is very high in some communities. It's been getting better, and I think this is really important. When you look at the labour force statistics that Human Resources and Employment did – and this is where we were involved with them – just as an example, Alberta aboriginal people off reserve, working-age population by age and gender, all aboriginal people in March 2003 is 85.9 and March 2004 is 86.6.

Then when you look at the breakdown, you begin to see that there are different things that happen as a result of the working age and the population. Just to give you an idea as to statistics, in March 2003 all people in the labour force was 61,000 and in March 2004 it was 60,000. So there's been a slight drop. The unemployed and the employed is really interesting because in March 2003 it was 5.9 per cent and in March 2004 it was 6.1 per cent. That's all aboriginal people. So when you look at that, you begin to look at pretty high unemployment rates.

What we've been trying to do is get information that we never had before to be able to work from. So this was a very important document, and it will continue to work very well when we're talking about economic and demographic analysis so that we can begin to use this as we move forward. If you notice, even in some of our areas where there are measurements, it's really hard to come up with the data. What we need is the data because this kind of information is really important.

In terms of the job training, as you know, we have had really good success with partnerships with industry, and industry has certainly come to the table. We have something like over 50 partnerships that are happening. This is on an economic development side as well as on a training side. What we have is some 50-plus partnerships, and it's growing. I don't know the specifics in terms of the numbers as of today; however, it's growing. What we have are training possibilities that come about in each different area and each different sector, whether it's in energy or whether it's in environment or whether it's in forestry or whether it's in wind power, et cetera. So we've got different kinds of groups that are coming to the table wanting to bring job training and talk about training the people so that the young kids and the aboriginal community at large can come and be able to be trained for specific jobs.

We'll get the numbers. I don't know when those will come, but as soon as we can get those numbers, we'll certainly provide them to you. I think that's really important. You're right. To get out of poverty you need a job. You need the opportunities in order to be able to get a job, and that's what we've been trying to do.

So what we do in Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is we facilitate that within the community at large, not to say that you have to hire the people. What we say is that you have to work with the First Nations and the Métis and make sure that there are some training opportunities for them so that they begin to train for those jobs that are available out there.

We've also been looking at ways for us to work with industry so that they can begin to tell us an inventory of the kind of skill development they require for their businesses and their industry. So we begin to look at how we can work with Human Resources and Employment, and from that we can begin to look at training that Human Resources and Employment has and then try to measure and meet up with industry as well as with the aboriginal community so that we can begin to see how the jobs can be a result of that as we train them.

There's been a lot of job shadowing that has occurred. I've got to give industry a really good plug here. What they've done is they've said: we are willing to do this if we know what it is that we have to do. We've got people who have come to the table and indicated: we'll take people on so that they learn what it is that we're doing, and then that way they can move into those positions.

So we've been doing those kinds of things but not only with industry. We've also been doing it within government. We have been doing it within our department so that our department can also begin to see the possibilities of the training that could happen and make sure they understand maybe management or other kinds of responsibilities as well as working with personnel and being able to ensure that we can continue to work in that vein. That to me I think is one of the most important parts of making sure that we hire people that want to be there, that want to be trained for those specific areas and continue to move in that direction.

On education. This is one of my passions. Education to me I think is one of the most important keys to aboriginal people being able to get where they want to go. I know that no matter what happens, we have to continue to educate the people. We have to make sure that kids can reach grade 6, grade 7, grade 8, grade 9. As a person who has been involved in that and interested in that, you know that it is one of the most difficult times in aboriginal country to be able to overcome the grades 6, 7, 8 and 9 level and move on into high school.

I have to commend our colleague the Learning minister, who's been working on a number of different initiatives that will help students be able to overcome that inertia and move forward. As a matter of fact, there are some 15 recommendations from the Learning Commission that I'm very proud of, that were actually also to be looking at the First Nations, Inuit, and Métis education policy being adopted, which has a lot of recommendations. I think those are the kinds of things where we begin to see some real advances in terms of the areas of concern when we're talking about education.

In terms of connecting for the aboriginal people to become professionals or semiprofessionals, what we've been trying to encourage is work with the colleges and the universities. As a matter of fact, on a yearly basis I meet with the president of the University of Alberta, and we talk about initiatives that are specific to aboriginal communities and northern people. What we try to do is figure out how it is that we're going to be able to look at how they can begin to accommodate the aboriginal community coming in to make sure that they can become professionals as well and that they can be accepted into many of the different faculties. It doesn't just have to be education. There are other faculties that we've been trying to ensure that we work together with in getting there.

The other one, of course, is that we've been talking to NAIT, and of course SAIT has also been involved. How can we ensure that on the technical side and on the labour side and the technical development, we will work with them in terms of how they can also begin to go into the communities and make sure those communities can access the technical side, whether it's pre-employment or pretrades?

As an example, in Wabasca the Bigstone band just graduated some 12 people who were in pre-employment trades so that they would begin to recognize where it is that they want to go. Is it welding? Is it pipefitting? Is it those kinds of things? Then they begin to explore those areas of interest that they would like to see. That was a really great graduation. There were 12 individuals who kind of decided that, okay, some of them wanted to be welders, some of them wanted to be pipefitters, some of them wanted to be electricians, and some of them wanted to be carpenters. So we had a whole variety of people wanting to do different things.

But those are the pre-employment trade types of initiatives that my colleagues from Alberta Learning as well as Human Resources and Employment have been involved in as well as Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. We facilitate that kind of an idea. We work with the First Nations and the Métis to come to the table and bring not only the NAITs or the SAITs or the universities but the colleges as well to be able to provide that kind of information.

Maybe I'll go to the justice system now. As you know, the Minister of Justice certainly has been improving life in the justice area. I want to say that it's the first time that we've seen some aboriginal judges being appointed, and that's a result of a movement within this government making sure that we work in that direction. We want to be able to see how those kinds of decisions that come from those judges make application on the cultural side. So what they do is they work with the culture, see what they can do to work with the aboriginal community so that the decisions will be better in terms of making sure that we don't have as many people as we do have in the justice system.

The other one, of course, in terms of justice is that we had a few areas where we were working – I can't remember the project, but it was in the Fort Macleod area – to make sure that we can look at relationship building. The community and the friendship centre were working with the RCMP to be able to see how they can improve relations and make sure that they continue to work in that vein so that it doesn't become negative, and it's that whole area on the justice side. My colleague from Fort Macleod certainly knows that one and has been advocating for that.

This sort of ties into Children's Services as well, the family violence round-table. You know, like in most cases when there's anything of violence that happens, people are usually taken into custody or taken to jail. With the family violence round-table we want to be able to see if we can look at not just a punitive system but rather a way of dealing with healing of the whole community and the family. What we've done is we've encouraged the aboriginal community to be involved in our family violence round-table so that they can bring their views of what they see as a justice system that would work for them when it comes to any kind of issue like this. So we see that involvement, and what we do is facilitate that as Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. We encourage involvement, and we try to do whatever we can to encourage their involvement in all areas.

Children's Services. You're right; intervention is really important. It is really totally important. So how does Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development get involved? Well, we do a number of things. First of all, we organize meetings for people if they need it, First Nations as well as their agencies. We intervene for aboriginal families and children. We help ensure that there's going to be involvement of the aboriginal community when there are policies that could potentially affect them. What we do is we also make sure that we encourage a cultural component in things that will affect aboriginal communities.

As an example, region 10 exists as a result of the fact that the Minister of Children's Services wanted to ensure that there was an aboriginal component. We supported that, and we wanted to make sure that we were part of that. We've been working with my colleagues who are responsible for their areas because we're not program deliverers, service deliverers. What we do is we facilitate, we support, we encourage, we advise, we do intervention in some cases, and we certainly try to ensure that aboriginal families are going to be recognized in whatever happens and in any decisions.

So I'll leave it at that for now, and any other questions that I may have, I'll answer as we go through.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thanks. I appreciate those comments from the minister. I'm trying to picture myself being somebody who isn't normally in here, somebody who isn't normally conversant in the ways of government and is struggling to get along in the world and is attempting to understand what facilitation and monitoring and intervention and all of that means. So I really encourage the minister to be as specific as possible.

The next area that I find myself thinking in terms of is housing and the need for housing that is safe, housing that is accessible, located where people are living and they can use it, housing that is affordable, and housing that is healthy. Again, I know that this department doesn't provide housing services per se to aboriginals, but it's a pretty fundamental need, and I would be interested if the department has specific activities to facilitate better housing for the aboriginal population and how they might encourage a better quality of housing.

I'm thinking of problems that I hear about with, say, safe water, with fire hazards, with an issue that I've raised in other contexts in this Assembly: concerns around toxic moulds growing in aboriginal housing because of maintenance problems. So is there anything in this budget and its many millions of dollars that will facilitate an improvement in the housing of the aboriginal population?

The next topic I'm interested in is health. Of course, it relates, as I said earlier, to issues like education and employment and housing. The aboriginal population has a considerably shorter life expectancy than other Canadians, has a much higher morbidity rate, many more diseases, from diabetes to mental health issues; you name it. There's a much higher rate of health problems among the aboriginal population. Clearly, those are issues either addressed primarily by the regional health authorities or by the federal government, but is there a role in this department for facilitating an improvement in the health of the aboriginal people of Alberta?

Specifically, I'd be interested if she could comment or respond in writing about health initiatives in urban centres and health initiatives concerning mental health and, also, if there's been any thought given to encouraging the department of health to appoint a director of aboriginal health services or health issues within that department to bring a focus in the government's health system to aboriginal issues.

After health I want to raise the issue of culture. I think it's pretty evident that a strong and vibrant culture produces healthy and successful people, and the aboriginal community in this province and across this country is struggling still to maintain its cultural identity through pressure on its language, pressure on its customs. At the same time, as anybody who has gone to the powwows or other ceremonies has seen, there's a determination to preserve and develop the aboriginal culture and, I think, probably a renewed interest in that culture from the nonaboriginal population.

That culture is sustained through communities, through people coming together to share events, to share stories, to share a language, to share their customs and their food and their dances and their rituals and their music. What's the department doing to ensure a vibrant aboriginal culture in Alberta? Specifics on that would be helpful. You know, not just saying: well, we facilitate that. But some specifics. What are you doing?

The last topic I'll touch on tonight in this department is around economic development. I know that isn't just an issue for the minister; it's an issue for the Member for Peace River, who is the chairman of the Northern Alberta Development Council. Clearly, there is a lot of interest in resource development in northern Alberta, whether that's oil sands and petroleum resources, forestry resources, agriculture, and maybe even diamonds or other resources. There has been some real success in some of these areas. I know that some of the major oil sands companies are renowned for having excellent aboriginal employment programs.

But, again, I'm concerned about activities in urban areas. The reserves are primarily the concern of the federal government, but the economic opportunities for aboriginal people in urban centres, I think, are pretty limited. I'm particularly thinking of what's been in the news recently around the development of casinos on reserves and whether the minister or her department has any role or any view or policy on casinos as an economic development cornerstone for the aboriginal community because it looks like we're headed in that direction.

I personally have very mixed feelings about that development, and I'd be interested if the minister has comments on that or if there are any proposed activities in the department this coming year to address economic development issues in relation to casinos and maybe spinoffs from that, maybe tourism. Maybe there's an opportunity to do great cultural development or cultural activities and tourism with casinos. I don't know. But it seems like that's going to be a big issue. This is the department of aboriginal affairs. How does the department connect to that issue?

Thank you, and that will wrap up my comments for tonight on this department. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Calahasen: Well, you certainly have asked a lot of questions, and I want to make sure that we do give all your questions due consideration, and anything that I miss I want to make sure that we will provide that in writing to you. So I will make sure I do that, and the questions that I don't address, I will try to get to you as indicated.

I just want to go back to some of the questions that you asked originally, and I just wanted to talk about the aboriginal populations you were talking about. In all Alberta cities, of course, in 1996 there was 70,800 population, or 45.5 per cent of the provincial total. Of course, in 2001 all Alberta cities, 91,985 population, an increase of 21,185 people in five years that have moved from the reserves to the city.

I want to go back now to the housing component. As you know, one of the greatest concerns that I've heard from aboriginal communities is housing. They always are coming and talking about this. So what we did was we did take this to the western and territorial ministers. We wanted to make sure that we got this on the national agenda, and we want to address this through, of course, the homeless strategy and make sure that we do land claims and other settlements with First Nations to address some of the housing issues.

We've worked on, of course, a number of the fire safety issues on and off reserve. As you know, there's some disconnect there, and we've been trying to make sure that we do that.

We also want to ensure that on the provincial front – and on the FPTA area I've addressed that with the minister of INAC to ensure that we do deal with housing at that level, and most of my colleagues on the FPTA are certainly very supportive of us discussing housing needs all across Canada. So we have housing not only on the western front and territorial front but also on the national front. The First Nations are certainly bringing it to the table as well because they are really going through a housing crunch.

Of course, on the provincial front, as I was indicating, we have the remote housing, which now addresses some of the aboriginal communities, such as in the Grande Cache area and some of the northern communities in the Fort McMurray area and of course in my constituency as well as the constituency of Athabasca-Wabasca. We've got those areas beginning to be looked at in terms of housing. So we're dealing with those communities.

In terms of health, what I wanted to talk about – you said to be specific. What we're looking at is implementing 52 new aboriginal wellness initiatives which are really key to ensuring that we deal with the health issues of aboriginal communities. We are working with a wellness committee that has been established by Alberta Health, and that's the aboriginal component, looking at different initiatives within the health area. As a matter of fact, Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development initially, in my view, helped establish the aboriginal health strategy, in which one of my department members was involved. Those are the kinds of specific areas that I wanted you to be aware of.

You asked me about casinos. As you know, I was the chair when we were developing that casino policy, because the First Nations wanted to be at the table when it came to casino development. So what we did was work with Alberta Gaming as well as my department and facilitated that meeting so that we could develop the policy. It is the first of its kind in Canada relative to a First Nations policy that would deal with gaming. There are other policies across Canada, but this was very specific in terms of the agreement that was achieved. I believe that was really an interesting one because that sort of set the stage for them in terms of what they can do.

As a matter of fact, there was one just announced the other day, the Enoch casino, which they've been working on for a long time. My understanding is that as they begin to develop and know what to do, we're going to see a little bit more. It's their wish. They should be able to determine their own destiny as to what they want to do, and I think it's important as Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development that we help them achieve their goals and become successful no matter what they want to do. If it's their wish to be involved in casinos, then we help them get where they want to go. The casino policy is a very important policy for them. It's their wish to see things happen, and that's where we will be when it comes to determining what needs to happen.

On the health issue, as well, we've been involved in the diabetes strategy. We support the Mental Health Board and, of course, a number of other initiatives that are culturally appropriate in the health area. You wanted me to be specific on some projects here, and I thought that this was really important. In Edmonton my staff are working with the Eastwood community for the health centre project to include aboriginal-specific programming, looking at hiring aboriginal health workers, developing a more holistic core system that will be open to nonaboriginal people.

So those are the kinds of specifics that we're working with. I think that what we will do rather than name all the specifics here is provide you with all the necessary information that we can provide you with and ensure that you get the information.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. [interjections] I can only assume that Calgary scored, and I hope they did.

It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this evening on the estimates from Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. I've been listening with interest to the exchange between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the hon. minister and the hon. Member for Peace River.

10:00

My first question would certainly be surrounding the Northern Alberta Development Council. What role, if any, has the council played in the idea of the railway to Fort McMurray and beyond?

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

I know that Economic Development has put forward money to have a look at this proposal. What, if any, activity around the Northern Alberta Development Council has occurred? Does the Northern Alberta Development Council approve in principle the idea of either building a separate rail line or upgrading the existing one to Fort McMurray, and is any wood fibre from the north being considered as a potential freight for that development, if it were ever to be built?

Also, have there been any further discussions or studies done on an east/west road to connect the Fort McMurray region south of Wood Buffalo national park, of course, quite a bit south, across to the Peace country? What, if anything, is going on with that idea?

Now, certainly, you know, this department hasn't been without controversy in the last year. There have been significant discussions, Mr. Chairman, with the Northern Alberta Oilfield Contractors in regard to land claims and land claim settlements. Now, when we talk about the aboriginal land and legal issues within a section within the ministry, I understand that section helps identify and resolve issues surrounding land claims here in Alberta. Co-ordinates all provincial activities or just those within the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development? Or does that co-ordination mean also the activities within Alberta Justice, which I would assume represents Alberta's interests in the courts?

Now, I would think that whenever we're dealing with a lot of land claims settlements and a lot of land claims issues, there must be significant legal costs involved here. Where are those costs? Are they with Alberta Justice? Do you hand over all legal costs to Alberta Justice? If you do, what is the total of those costs? Do you handle them in-house? How many of those legal costs are contracted out to outside legal firms?

Certainly, I know there are over 35 land claims, but it would be interesting to get an update. In particular, I think it would be of particular interest to the Northern Alberta Oilfield Contractors, for one, to many of the First Nations bands. Could we get an update, please, on how many land claims are outstanding? There are over 30. Perhaps there are as many as 35. I think one or maybe two have been settled. What is the contingent liability for those land claims? Also, where would I find the commitment in the budget? I understand that over the next five years there is a commitment to pay out in excess of $14 million under a settlement agreement with a First Nations band. Which band is that, and where do I find that commitment in the budget estimates? I think it is of public importance.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked a little bit earlier, as did the hon. minister, about when we look at the employment rate, and we look at the percentage of population completing high school, the percentage of population completing postsecondary, or the life expectancy of First Nations people and other Canadians, and there is a significant difference. It's all fine, but it's not.

There is no reason why the employment rate in the aboriginal community should fall behind the nonaboriginal community. One only has to look at some of the public policies that are being discussed in this province. There's a shortage of labour. There's a shortage of cheap labour, but there's not a shortage of labour. I would encourage the hon. minister to look at the First Nations communities as a source from which we can train people for the jobs that have been created in this province. There is no reason for this employment rate to be so different between the aboriginal and nonaboriginal population.

As the north is opened up for development, this is a perfect opportunity to train First Nations people not only, as the hon. member said earlier, in the skilled trades but also in the health care professions, encourage an increase in the number of aboriginals that are attending university. This is very, very important. When we look at the entire population in this province that's between the ages of 15 and 24, over 10 per cent of them are unemployed. I don't know exactly how many of those are aboriginal youth, but we have to work at this. Before we start entertaining programs to recruit workers from other countries, we've got to make sure that we make every effort to train Albertans, and that includes Albertans from the aboriginal communities.

Now, my colleague talked about access to health care, but I would encourage the hon. minister to make every effort, again, to make training programs accessible for the aboriginal population. If that means working in partnership with groups, with trade unions, with community colleges, I don't know. But I know that the bursary program that was initiated has been accessed by First Nations students, and I think we need to see more of that. I would like to see, hopefully next year, a significant increase in the number of First Nations or aboriginal students accessing those available bursaries.

Mr. Chairman, with those questions, I believe I will take my seat. Those certainly are all the questions I have at this time, but I would be very anxious to get an update on all the land claims that are still outstanding and the legal issues surrounding them, because we certainly had quite an interesting debate in here last session in regard to aboriginal land claims and the Northern Alberta Oilfield Contractors, particularly around the Slave Lake area.

There are still, in my view, many outstanding questions. There are still many issues to be resolved. I look forward to hearing the hon. minister's answers. Thank you.

10:10

Mr. Friedel: Well, Mr. Chairman, the first couple of questions were directed at the activities of the Northern Alberta Development Council, and I'm going to be dealing with those.

The first question that was asked was: did the NADC or does the NADC have any role in the current proposed railway to Fort McMurray? At this point we have no direct role. I'm assuming that your question is related to financial involvement. We have no financial contribution. But we definitely are following this with a great deal of interest because there's no doubt, when you're dealing with the kind of freight that goes to and from some of these northern resource communities, that it takes a tremendous toll on the current highways. If this railway can be developed at a reasonable cost, as has been said, I think, a number of times in this Assembly, with the industry making the financial contributions, it could be quite a boon to the north.

Just as an example, the railway right now from Hay River down to Edmonton has been there for quite some years. It's been developed almost hodgepodge, piecemeal over the years through NAR and such, but I would hate to guess what the development of either that part of northern Alberta or the Northwest Territories would be without that facility.

If I can even stray a little bit, we're working very actively on an east/west connector from the greater Peace Country through B.C. to the port of Prince Rupert: you know, possibly containerization and such facilities. Getting product to tidewater right now is horrendously expensive, and a more direct and, I would suggest strongly, more efficient route could be by rail. I'm just making those comments because, you know, that should suggest why we would be interested in seeing some reasonable development of a Fort McMurray railway as long as it's feasible and reasonable.

As far as the east/west connector road, that's another project we have been working on very actively. We've been working with a consulting firm and a number of industry representatives from the area possibly to promote a P3, or if I can be so bold, maybe a P15 or P16 because of the number of industries and communities that want to get involved in this. Because of the terrain, some of it muskeg and that, it's an expensive road. Right now many industries build licence-of-occupation roads, LOC roads, at their own expense for their own purposes and typically lease right away to other companies.

If they could be on the right alignment to facilitate what could be a permanent public road, these companies, we believe, are more than willing to ante up financially, I would suggest, possibly more than half the cost of such a road. If through that kind of a partnership it could be made possible, we would definitely be putting our technical resources at the disposal of the minister and the department. In fact, we have met several times with the minister and some of the department officials, and in the next few days there are some community meetings to determine what the communities along the way would expect, how they hope to benefit, and what they might contribute. So this is definitely one of those stay-tuned, I hope good-news stories for the very near future.

I believe the minister might be talking about some of the other issues, but as far as the NADC bursary you did ask a question about whether aboriginal students had access to these. The answer is definitely yes. I can't tell you off the top of my head what percentage, but the bursaries are based on application by the students. It's a very good cross-section of the northern part of the province that the bursaries are distributed through. I think the short answer is the one I gave you. There is no distinction on race, certainly, and many aboriginal children have taken advantage of these. I shouldn't say just children because many students nowadays are adults returning to learning.

I might add that our bursary has been made a little bit more flexible not specifically, again, for aboriginal students but because of the nature of the remoteness. A lot of bursaries people would expect would be the kind that, you know, if you're going to university, you're a full-time student. We've tried to make it flexible so that even part-time students who have difficulty leaving home, you know, going to where the technical schools are and such and possibly even some skills upgrading programs, can take advantage of it. So it's very much fine-tuned to help people in the smaller remote communities.

I think those are the questions that you asked that specifically related to NADC.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. minister, you wanted to answer?

Ms Calahasen: Did you want me to answer, or do you want to continue?

Mr. MacDonald: I have one more question to the hon. Member for Peace River.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, and I appreciate the co-operation from the hon. minister.

Again for the hon. Member for Peace River in charge of the Northern Alberta Development Council: is the council working in any way with any other government departments in regard to this proposal that's coming out of British Columbia for another development on the Peace River on the B.C. side in regard to hydroelectricity? How does the development council feel about this proposal that's coming from the B.C. government to add another dam onto the Peace River on their side of the border of course? Is there any co-operation between other government departments in the province, and is there any discussion with the federal government in regard to this matter at this time?

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The news of, you know, a proposal from the B.C. government to expand their hydro dam network on the B.C. side is about as much news to us as it is to you. There hasn't been any in-depth discussion. We certainly are following it with some interest. The involvement we have probably would be more along the lines of the Glacier Power proposed developments on the Alberta side, the smaller weir-type dam, which has a lot of potential for the Peace River itself not just in that location but maybe even others if it proves to do everything that these people have suggested it will. But NADC has not had any direct involvement with B.C. Hydro on another dam on the B.C. side.

Ms Calahasen: I'll just answer a few questions, and then we can send you some information in written format. I think there have been questions relative to education and what we are doing with employment and pre-employment and trades, of that nature. I wanted to ensure that you understand that we are working with many departments through the APF and the API. What we've been doing is trying to make sure that we're involved in a number of the initiatives, whether it's through the federal ministries or whether it's through our own ministers or with the private sector and the communities, and we've been working in partnership with those communities to ensure that we look at the greater aboriginal completion and success in learning.

Just as an example, under the API we're supporting many initiatives – mentoring, early childhood development, school readiness programs, those kinds of things – to begin to look at the educational attainment that we were talking about. This year we'll have an aboriginal identifier looking at better-tracked school results to help address, I would say, the progress and make sure that we continue to work with those universities and colleges that I indicated.

On the issue of aboriginal people training, we'll train our own. That's one of the mottos we've accepted under the FPTA as well: to look at training our own. Then we'll work with the rest as we come forward, but it's very important that we train our own and employ our own. That's a message that we continually bring to the table, and we'll make sure that we continue to do that. So with your support I'm sure that we'll be able to get things done, because we need to continue to bring that message to all tables. I think that that's an important part.

Just so you know what kind of employment or labour – I never finished my comment relative to the unemployment rate. I just wanted to talk about that. It actually decreased 4.8 per cent, from 17.4 per cent in 1996 to 12.6 per cent in 2001. For the nonaboriginal population the decrease was 2 per cent. So we begin to look at the information that you are providing to me. That's why it's important that we continue to work with HR and E and many other departments to participate in what we call the aboriginal labour force survey, so that we can begin to see how we can improve in that area.

In the area of concern that you were talking about, the contingent liability issue, it is actually $129 billion in litigation. That doesn't include land claims. This is the amount claimed in lawsuits. In the opinion of our lawyers, of course, this does not represent a realistic amount. In land claim negotiations we co-ordinate all Alberta ministries. I don't know if you know that, but certainly we do that co-ordination with all Alberta ministries. Negotiation or legal costs are handled by outside legal firms. Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development pays about, I would say, $400,000 a year. Most litigation is handled by Justice, so we have to work with Justice there.

There are, in fact, three land claims – Lubicon, Bigstone, Fort McMurray – that are outstanding. Payments will be made over the next five years to the Piikani nation, and these are installments in my budget of $32.15 million that were reported in the year of settlement. That was 2002-2003, if you recall, when we talked about that. That was an important settlement.

Of course, we have a number of other areas that I think it's really important that we continue to work with the treaty land claims. As I indicated, we probably have the best group to be able to work with that. So in terms of why we are involved in the settlement of land claims or what is the status of land claims, as I indicated in my speech, we have done 12 treaty land claim entitlements since 1986. This is really a record. It's really absolutely wonderful. Of course, you know the benefits that the First Nations have as a result of this.

We continue to make sure that we do that, because in the natural resources transfer agreement, under which Alberta received administration and control of Crown lands and resources, the province agreed to assist the federal government to meet its treaty obligations by transferring unoccupied land and minerals to Canada for Indian reserves owing under a treaty. So we continue to do that, and that's directed under my department.

The Deputy Chair: After considering the business plans and proposed estimates for the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, are you ready for the vote?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Equipment/Inventory Purchases	$25,784,000
--	--------------

The Deputy Chair: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Hon. members, if you'll just give me one minute. The minister is indicating that the budget should have been $35 million. My records here show $25 million. We need to make sure.

Hon. members, according to the estimates that are before us, the amount requested is $25,784,000, and that is what we voted on, and that is what shall remain.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report the main estimates of the Committee of Supply for the Department of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, for the following department.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: operating expense and equipment inventory purchases, $25,784,000.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:28 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 20, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 04/04/20

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. In our mind's eye let us see the awesome grandeur of the Rockies, the denseness of our forests, the fertility of our farmland, the splendour of our rivers, the richness of our resources, the energy of our people. Then let us rededicate ourselves as wise stewards of such bounty on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to members of the Assembly a former high school classmate of mine and a former colleague of ours, Mr. Gordon Miniely. Mr. Miniely served the constituents of Edmonton-Centre from his election in August of 1971 to March of 1979. During his two terms as MLA he also served as Provincial Treasurer and minister of hospitals and medical care.

In your gallery, Mr. Speaker, with Mr. Miniely are his wife, Linda, and their grandchildren Alexander Youngblut, Rayne Davis, and Connor Davis. I would ask the Miniely family to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of this Legislative Assembly a very special young man. Mr. Réal Gauthier, who works out of Vegreville, is in the public gallery. He is a nephew of mine and my godson. I have had the pleasure of spending a lot of time with him and would like him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of students from Rosemary school. They are led by principal Mr. David Blumell and teacher Mrs. Carol Gibb as well as parents Shauna Deschamps, Joanne Fauser, Tammie Cage, Bev Johnson, Vanessa Plett. There are about 13 grade 7 students. I believe that number's correct. I would ask them all to rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 25 students, teachers, parents, and bus driver from the Mistassiniy school of Wabasca-Desmarais, Alberta. They are seated in the public gallery. I'd like you to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature a group of 22 students from College Jean de la Mennais in La Prairie, Quebec, which is near Montreal. They are accompanied by their teachers Mr. Jerry Johnson and Ms Monique Mainella as well as four students from l'école secondaire Beaumont composite high school and their teacher Mr. Gino Salvalaggio. So as I ask them to rise, I would ask that the Assembly extend to them the warm traditional welcome of our Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 27 of central Alberta's greatest kids. I'd also like to say that they come from the school that was featured on the Premier's address on TV, the school of Benalto. They're accompanied by their teachers Mr. Kevin Frey and Mrs. Betty Brassard and parent helpers Mrs. Shelley Lambert, Mrs. Angele Downie, Mr. Tom Moore, Mrs. Danielle Venardos, Ms Shari Neis, Mrs. Brenda Mahoney, and Mrs. Rhonda Vick. I'd like them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Premier. Given the minister of health's speech yesterday in Toronto, a copy of which I've obtained, can the Premier tell us if his government is considering taxing the sick by charging extra to people who use the health care system?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have the text of his speech, but following the speech, there was the usual scrum, and what I'm about to say alludes to what I addressed in this Legislature yesterday, and that is the propensity of the opposition parties to take something totally and absolutely out of context and use that as the 15-second sound bite because it sounds good.

The minister's comments, as I understand it, were given in the context of discussing health reform, and we all know that this government is embarking on a program of health reform. Now, I will say that the fact that the national media latched onto this one idea I think demonstrates quite clearly what I've been saying, and that is that people will focus on the easy, controversial sound bite rather than talk about health reform in the broader context. We just heard it from the opposition. He picks out one simple thing, one thing, one part of the puzzle. There are numerous aspects to this.

You know, I alluded to one time mistakenly – I will remember in the future not even to think, never mind think out loud, because if you think out loud, it becomes government policy. None of this has become government policy yet, but that's not to say that the minister can't think and can't mention and can't say: well, this is an example of what I'm talking about. Nothing wrong with thinking. The only people who are opposed to thinking are the Liberals and the NDs because they're not capable of doing it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that this government's policies have already led to higher health care premiums, higher electricity costs, higher auto insurance, higher tuition fees, how can this Premier justify policies that seem intended to charge people more for health care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, no policy has been developed relative to this issue, the issue to which the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition alludes, or any other issue. No decisions have been made about what steps will be taken in health reform other than to say that we will reform the system. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness has put out a program, a chronology of how he hopes to proceed in this matter. But let me be clear: as long as I'm Premier – and that could be for some time – no Albertan will ever, ever be denied needed health care because of an inability to pay. It's as simple as that.

Dr. Taft: Well, given that evidence from around the globe shows that user fees for health care are a failure, will the Premier do the courageous thing and rule them out as part of his government's health care reform?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, if we start ruling out one item after the other, then we won't have the ability to bring forward a package to consider in total context what should be ruled out, what should be accepted.

Albertans know that as good as the system is, we can do better. They also know that cost increases of 7 or 8 per cent per annum are not acceptable, and they also know that the system as we know it today is simply not sustainable. They also know that we need to address fundamental and basic things like reducing waiting lists. We need to make sure that people get the care they need when they need it, and that's what our goal is. But we also need to achieve sustainability. [interjection]

Mr. Speaker, we didn't break a thing. I hear some chirping over there about breaking something. No. As a matter of fact, this province is being touted by other jurisdictions across North America and around the world as being the leader in health care reform.

Just recently I read I believe it was in the Edmonton Journal that probably we have one of the best heart programs, if not the best, certainly in North America. We see tremendous research taking place in a number of areas. We have committed ourselves to developing centres of expertise for cardiac surgery and bone and joint surgeries. We have state-of-the-art children's care, pediatric care, in the Stollery hospital, soon to be in the new Children's hospital in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker, we are a leader in health care. The only people who don't recognize this are the Liberals, because they are by nature negative people.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Government Expense Claims

Dr. Taft: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On March 1 of this year the opposition sent a letter to the Premier asking basic questions about spending on travel and hospitality by him, his staff, and his ministers. Now, the Premier claimed it would cost $6,000 just to provide answers on only six of the 23 questions. In other correspondence from Economic Development it's indicated to us that it will take dozens of hours and thousands of dollars to get information on other government trips. This just does not make sense. My questions are to the Premier. When the Premier and his staff spend money out of their own pockets for travel, do they or do they not need to submit expense claims along with receipts so they get reimbursed?

Mr. Klein: When we spend our own money out of our own pockets, no. If it's for government business, I assume yes. I never do it. You know, I haven't done it lately. I can't remember in recent times. Someone else usually picks up the bill. I probably have used my credit card once in . . . [interjection] Well, someone usually picks it up, or else, Mr. Speaker, I just get a sandwich out of the cafeteria and I have a working lunch, which is usually the normal course. During lunch hour I try to have my workout and get a little briefing prior to question period, see what the Liberals will come up with in terms of ridiculous questions, so I can try to provide intelligent answers, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday I did say that the government is evaluating whether we need to change the law and change the policy relative to the way expenses are reported and how we might do a better job in the future. We will announce in the future what changes, if any, will be made, and as I said yesterday at the scrum, I hope that the Liberals will be happy with it.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the Premier and his staff use government credit cards on travel, does the government receive statements from the credit card companies?

Mr. Klein: We do receive a statement from the credit card company. My staff normally handles that, and I very seldom see the statements. Mr. Speaker, I'm sure that if my statement were submitted today . . .

Mrs. Nelson: Would you read this, please.

Mr. Klein: . . . to the hon. member, he would find nothing for at least the last 10 months on my statement.

I'm sorry; what do you want me to read? Oh, the Auditor General's recommendation. Yeah. Notwithstanding the fact that we are evaluating the system and we hope to do a better job in the future, we can only be better than we are already, and we are pretty good according to the Auditor General, who says in his report, "We did not find any evidence of inappropriate MLA expense reimbursement and we concluded that the systems in place would generally prevent inappropriate payments." Now, that comes from the Auditor General, an officer of this Legislature, Mr. Speaker.

But as I alluded to yesterday, you know, expenses apply not only to the government, the $27 jug of orange juice that worked out to about $2 and some odd cents a glass, but they also allude to the expenses of the opposition members. You know, a member of the media asked me yesterday and legitimately so, although we don't FOIP as a rule as government – I don't know what the rules are relative to the government's ability to FOIP. The media brought up: well, what about the $10,000 in travel expenses to go from Gold Bar to the Legislature incurred by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar? You know, that's recorded, but we don't get into the nitty-gritty as to what he saw along the way, who he was visiting, who he was meeting with and why. Only the Liberals want that kind of information, Mr. Speaker, but they don't want to give it themselves.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, the people of Alberta want this kind of information. So my last question to the Premier is:

why won't the Premier simply have his staff make photocopies of those receipts, expense claims, and credit card statements and make them public so that the Alberta taxpayers can see how their money is being spent? It's as simple as that.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we are doing a full evaluation of all this. [interjections]

The Speaker: Okay. The Premier has the floor.

Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Ontario government has frozen postsecondary tuition fees and provided compensation to universities and colleges for the lost revenue. That province is working with students, parents, and institutions on a long-term plan to provide adequate funding and affordable tuition. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Has the minister considered taking similar action to address funding and tuition concerns here?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I really do sincerely appreciate that question. I've taken a very close look at what has happened in Ontario. Ontario has frozen their tuition fees, but the Ontario postsecondaries are extremely worried about what is happening there because the Ontario government has not replaced the money lost in tuition fees. So what, in effect, we are seeing in Ontario is actually a decrease in the amount of funding that will be available for postsecondary institutions. Mr. Speaker, that is something that we do not want to see happen in Alberta.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: students here are clearly upset and concerned with yearly tuition increases. Why does the minister continue to dismiss their concerns?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, it is anything but dismissing their concerns. Over the past year I've probably had four to five meetings with the students associations, and as a matter of fact in Bill 43, as the hon. member knows, there was a clause put in that would increase tuition at a rate of the cost of living plus 2. This was actually a recommendation that came forward from the student groups in order to increase tuition at a rate that was manageable, at a rate that would not see any large increases. We still have the 30 per cent cap in place for those institutions that have not reached the 30 per cent.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. A cap that's no cap.

My next question to the minister: what solutions other than more student debt is the government seeking to keep postsecondary education in this province affordable? More debt doesn't do it.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, the student debt in Alberta has consistently gone down. We have increased the student loans that have been available, and it is very nice to know, actually, that for the first time the federal Liberal government is actually coming on board, saying that student loans are a priority, saying that the student loan program is something that they're worried about and wondering about. I muse publicly: could it be that they will actually get a remission program like Alberta has?

The Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in question period the Premier admitted that he didn't want to release the Graydon report because he was afraid of opposition from this corner of the House. The Premier went so far as to suggest that I pledge to not criticize the report in exchange for its release. To justify the fact that his government is developing radical health care policy completely behind closed doors, the Premier is telling the public that they have to choose between their right to know or having an opposition that does its job. So my question to the Premier: can the Premier tell the House if health care reform will be unveiled during the legislative session, or will he wimp out and wait until a quiet Friday afternoon in the middle of summer, perhaps before a long weekend, when no one is paying attention?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there are some advantages to doing that, but no. Quite clearly the Minister of Health and Wellness has laid out a chronology. I don't have it in front of me, but the chronology is basically thus: we will bring together all of the information available to us, including the Mazankowski report, the Kirby report, the Romanow commission, and, indeed, the Graydon report, plus we will review best practices in other jurisdictions and determine why those jurisdictions in studies commissioned by the OECD are better than Canada. We will assess all of that.

We will form some recommendations as a government. Then those recommendations will be taken out for public – underline public – consultation so that the public can comment on what ideas are being put forward, what should be rejected, what should be accepted. So there will be full and open public disclosure of all of these recommendations, Mr. Speaker.

What I'm afraid of – it is a political reality, and I alluded to it before in this question period and, of course, yesterday – is that they will take things out of various reports, various scenarios if we release them one at a time and highlight that as government policy when, in fact, it is not government policy. Mr. Speaker, they have no interest in telling the public the truth. What they will say is: the government is thinking about doing this, folks; are you ever going to get mad about this because this is what the government is going to do. That's what they will say, and that's unfortunate, and that's why we will not release these reports individually.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I wonder: when did the Premier develop this phobia?

Given the fact that this government has released other aspects of the Mazankowski report with dispatch and shared its position with the public, what is it about the Graydon report that is such political dynamite that it sends this Premier scurrying for cover and coming up with lame excuses for the delays?

The Speaker: Hon. leader, you've asked three questions there. You're only allowed one without a preamble, so the Premier will take the first one.

Mr. Klein: It's not a phobia, Mr. Speaker. It is a legitimate suspicion or a legitimate feeling, based on my many years in politics, that this is what the NDs and the Liberals will do. They will seek out what is sensational to get that 15-second sound bite. That's the way they operate, and I've watched them through this legislative session. I've been around for 13 or 14 years, and I've seen the way they operate.

The Speaker: The hon. leader.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Straightforward question to the Premier: given that the Premier has indicated his belief that a major overhaul of the health care system is needed, does he not believe that this Legislature is the place to debate major health care reforms?

Mr. Klein: Yes, and there will be ample opportunity, I'm sure, Mr. Speaker, to have that debate. I don't know what changes to legislation might or might not come about, but I'm sure that there will be some as a result of the reforms we are about to undertake. What those reforms might be I can't say at this particular time because I don't know. We haven't discussed them. We haven't brought the package together. There hasn't been the public consultation process. I'm sure that if any of those reforms require legislative changes, there will be ample opportunity, of course, to debate those changes in the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, that has been done in the past. I recall a very prolonged debate over Bill 11, for instance, which ended up becoming law. Nonetheless, there was a full and public debate and some misbehaviour, of course, that we witnessed in this legislative Chamber. Nonetheless, there was a full and public debate, and I imagine that that will take place if, indeed, the reforms lead to legislative changes.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Canadian Wheat Board

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Marketing choice for wheat and barley is an important issue for Alberta farmers. It seems inherently unfair and unjust that farmers in western Canada have no control over how they market their wheat and barley. I understand that the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development recently met with the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, the Hon. Reg Alcock, and I was wondering if the minister could advise us of the outcome of that meeting?

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Premier.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I did have the opportunity to have a face-to-face meeting with the hon. minister. We had exchanged letters prior to the meeting. It was an opportunity to talk to the minister, to put the facts of our case forward: the fact that the Alberta government is not calling for the demise of the Canadian Wheat Board. The Alberta government on behalf of the producers – the majority of producers are asking for fairness – is asking for choice for our producers. We're asking that our producers be treated the same as all producers in Canada or at least the ones in eastern Canada, that do have that option now.

I had an opportunity to discuss the performance of the Wheat Board with Minister Alcock. I had an opportunity to talk about the election process, the way boundaries were set, who the eligible voters were. I had an opportunity to question the board's role in wheat and barley marketing, particularly barley, Mr. Speaker, because they handle a very, very low percentage of barley and really control it. I did ask the minister to give a favourable consideration to our test market proposal, which I had forwarded to him previously.

2:00

We had the opportunity to talk about transportation, rail access, car allocations, and, Mr. Speaker, although no firm commitments were made on the specific issues, there certainly was an interest to discuss these issues further. I think we had a very fair hearing from a minister that is not locked in the past and is interested in fairness and choice.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental to the same minister: did Minister Alcock speak to the $85 million deficit last year and assure you that taxpayers would not have to cover the Canadian Wheat Board losses this year or share with you a plan to pay off their approximately $7 billion debt created by bad contracts?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, when we talked about the board performance, we did talk about the $85.4 million deficit payment. I found it interesting that one of the first tasks that the new minister had to do was to write himself a cheque as the chairman of the finance or revenue board to cover the deficit. We did talk again about the $7 billion debt that the Wheat Board carries in the concept of performance only.

Mr. Speaker, it is very upsetting to Alberta producers that last year when we saw some of the very best grain prices since 1996, somehow this board managed to run a deficit. Everybody should understand very clearly that taxpayers are on the hook for that deficit, and we should all be concerned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

BSE Testing Program

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government should consider a different BSE rapid test to boost the credibility of Alberta's cattle industry and improve and strengthen consumer confidence in the beef industry in light of concerns raised about the rapid test currently used by this province. My first question is to the minister of agriculture. Given that the Canadian Food Inspection Agency and other international bodies have indicated that tests susceptible to false positive results could seriously damage consumer confidence in the beef market, why did Alberta adopt such a rapid test for BSE, which unfortunately can indicate a false positive result?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, when I saw the press release or news availability or whatever was put out by the hon. member opposite, I was disappointed that he hadn't picked up the phone and called because I think I could have saved him a lot of time in giving him the information.

First of all, I will remind him that the Canadian Food Inspection Agency approved the use of the rapid test, the Bio-Rad test, in Alberta. They approved the laboratory upgradings that occurred, that this government expended to do with no assistance from anywhere else. They approved the level of training of our staff in that laboratory.

What I would have explained to him was that there is a very good reason for using that particular test in Alberta, whereas it may not be applicable in other parts of our country or others. The Bio-Rad test is capable of testing for chronic wasting disease, for scrapie in sheep, and BSE in cattle, and because it is capable of doing those three things and we test for those three things, we use that test in Alberta with the approval of the Canadian Food Inspection Agency.

Mr. Speaker, if there is a false positive, it is quickly run on the gold test, which is the standard test, that takes three or four days. We're not afraid of that. I have not seen where somebody is concerned that this is an issue in credibility. Everybody who knows the science of this understands the tests that we use, understands that when we use a rapid test, if there is a false positive, it is again tested with the gold test.

So next time you come upon something and you think, "Wow; have I found something here?" give us a call, because I'd be happy to give you the information.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that the New York Times in an editorial on Sunday – and this was and still is our largest trading partner in the export of beef – expressed a concern over the use of false positives in rapid BSE testing and what it can do to consumer confidence, why is this government continuing with the rapid test when there are better tests on the market?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, there is a distinct difference between this caucus and that caucus. There's no question. We don't use the New York Times or other papers' editorials. We read them; it's important to have information. But when you want to deal with the science of this, you go to the scientists.

We have the Canadian Food Inspection Agency in our country, that is respected throughout the world. They make the determinations. They do the studies on these tests. We studied three tests of the rapid variety. We did it in consultation with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. When the Minister of Infrastructure did the upgrading to our labs, we did that in consultation with our Canadian Food Inspection Agency. When we did the cross-training of our staff to ensure that they could read these tests appropriately, we did that with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency.

I would suggest to this hon. member that if he has questions on what we're doing, he should contact the Canadian Food Inspection Agency rather than the New York Times.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. I have contacted the Canadian Food Inspection Agency.

Given that we have in this country a standard identification system for cattle, why can we not have a standard system for rapid testing of BSE?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I answered that in my first question. If we could sort of go from question/answer, question/answer, and if the question that he was going to ask has already been answered, maybe to a new one.

I have explained that in Alberta we test for scrapie, for chronic wasting disease, and for BSE. In other provinces in the country they may not do that. We have a standard that is nationally set, and our test meets that standard.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Armed Forces Personnel

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is the proud home of many Canadian soldiers and police officers who are risking their lives and leaving their families behind while serving in high- and moderate-risk operational missions in the theatres of war. The list of turbulent places where our troops are present at this time is astonishing, and it includes Afghanistan, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Congo, Haiti, Iraq, Kuwait, Senegal, Sierra Leone, Côte d'Ivoire, East Timor, Guinea, and Jordan.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I'll be really patient, but you try and get to a question, because as far as I know, Alberta has no armed forces.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, Alberta is home to Canadian armed forces who are serving in these theatres of war.

While these brave Canadians are abroad, their families are not always as well taken care of as they definitely should be. To the Minister of Revenue: would the minister consider granting all Alberta-stationed military personnel and police personnel serving abroad in a recognized mission complete absolution from provincial income tax for the duration of such a mission?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to first state that this question is very pertinent with regard to today. We have many Albertans that do serve presently, right now, overseas, many of our military personnel. Even recently there was an announcement of another 600 troops from the Edmonton Garrison that'll be going overseas to Afghanistan shortly. Recently the federal government made some announcements.

But I've got to first state that it is important that we as Albertans, despite that it's the federal government's responsibility, are very proud of those that serve in the military from this area. They do a tremendous job in preserving the liberties that we enjoy right here in Canada, and we thank them for their tremendous service.

The federal government recently in their budget announced that they were going to provide an exemption in their personal income whereby they wouldn't pay any federal income tax. We are waiting for clarification on that issue as to seeing how that impacted our provincial income tax, and we are pleased to clarify that they automatically also qualify by that exemption to not pay provincial income taxes.

We actually have an agreement. The hon. Minister of Finance worked hard with the federal Minister of Finance with respect to a tax collection agreement. In that agreement we have complied with the definition of the calculation of taxable income. If their income is exempt for federal income tax purposes, it is also, therefore, exempt for provincial income tax purposes. So as soon as the federal government implements these changes, that will automatically flow through to those same military personnel now serving overseas.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: since many of the previously mentioned Canadians are Alberta reservists who also hold regular civilian employment, will the minister consider securing their civilian employment upon their return to Alberta in a manner similar to which we secure employment for maternity and paternity leaves?

Mr. Dunford: Yeah, I think that we would be prepared to take a look at that. Certainly, many collective agreements currently in place, Mr. Speaker, provide provisions for what happens in terms of a reservist when they're called into a theatre of war.

I might add – and I thank the hon. member for the question – that it was something like 17 or 18 years ago that I had an opportunity to change a policy within a company I worked for in order to provide just exactly what the member is asking for.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: No more. Thank you.

Stucco Wall Systems

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, Albertans are concerned that stucco wall systems are not being constructed in accordance with the building code, placing immediate and long-term health and safety risks on Alberta homeowners. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that the stucco and home-building industries freely confess that they have long been ignoring the minimum stucco wall thickness of 19 millimetres laid out in the Alberta building code, what is this ministry going to do to enforce compliance?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not aware of the particular situation, but I am aware of this: for those of us in this Assembly that have stucco homes, we want to make sure that our homes are at the highest standard. That is something that the Alberta safety code does certainly assure Albertans, and we continue to work towards that. So in answer to the hon. member's question, we are going to ensure that the safest and the best protection for Albertans is always there regarding the Alberta safety code.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why is this ministry allowing the stucco and home-building industries to implement their own industry standard despite the fact that there is no scientific evidence to prove that this practice will not harm Alberta homeowners in the long term?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Yeah. Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm not a carpenter. My wife tells me I'm not a carpenter, but I do know this. We want to ensure that whatever the product is we're using on our building, we want to do the best job possible. I can say to the hon. member that if there is a particular example where there is a relative concern, I'd be certainly willing to work with him to ensure that compliance of what we want to achieve in Alberta.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister: how many complaints of noncompliance has the ministry received in the last three years concerning the improper installation of stucco and the resulting water damage to condominiums and homes?

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, at this time I am not aware of any complaints that have come directly to my office, but certainly I will investigate further within my ministry. But to me personally I have not received any complaints.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Coal Bed Methane

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In March I had the pleasure to attend one of the natural gas in coal information sessions that are being held to ensure that the regulations guiding the development of natural gas in coal, or coal bed methane as it's often called, are the right regulations for the future. About 135 people attended the meeting in Wetaskiwin in my constituency to hear more about methane in coal development and to share feedback for the consultation. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. How will the information from these sessions be used in the consultation process?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that was an important seminar that was held in Wetaskiwin, and there was one held in Rocky Mountain House and in the south in Pincher Creek. They've been held throughout Alberta. In fact, we've had in excess of 700 people attending these seminars. It's part of our usual brand of transparency, open consultation, and the policy development process. This has been going on for some two to three years.

During that time, of course, coal bed methane, or natural gas in coal, has been treated under the existing regulations. Mr. Speaker, in fact, we will continue this consultation and will be going to Grande Prairie in a short period of time, on May 19. So even though there isn't a great presence of coal bed methane at this stage in that area, we want to ensure that that area is well represented.

What happens, Mr. Speaker, is that these working groups come together. They do provide us with recommendations. These recommendations are fundamental to policy input to the advisory committee and will be taken in as such. I'm actually thankful and appreciative that the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose would take time out from his busy schedule and attend this seminar.

Mr. Johnson: To the same minister: as I observe that many concerns about possible water issues could be associated with the development of coal bed methane, how many methane-in-coal wells are producing fresh, that is potable, water in the province, and where is this development taking place?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question. It's a question that, as Alberta has developed its important oil and gas resource, has been put into play. I remember the former member from Grande Prairie who used to talk about potable water and drilling in those areas. There are strict supervisory laws and regulations that prohibit open-hole drilling in aquifers. These wells must be cased. It is absolutely illegal to dispose of drilled fresh water on the surface.

As the water issue becomes discussed with respect to coal bed methane, firstly, I can tell you that the exaggeration of water presence in Alberta has been caused by the way the Wyoming example unfolded with their development of coal bed methane. In Alberta, actually, our coal structures are different, Mr. Speaker, to the point where we don't have fresh water associated to a large extent with our coal and with our methane inside the coal.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, thinking and anticipating that a question like this might indeed be asked in the House, we did some research. There are no wells today presently producing potable or drinking water in Alberta. In the only one that we do know of that made an application for fresh water, in fact, the water became saline or brackish. So there is no evidence of fresh water production to date.

Mr. Johnson: Final question is to the same minister. Would the minister consider a suspension of all drilling of natural gas, or methane, in coal wells?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is, as well, a good question. In fact, I don't believe a moratorium or a suspension is necessary. I would direct members to the latest land sale in Alberta. That land sale brought in some $95 million in land sale revenues. Some of that may indeed be coal bed methane acreage that is being assembled by different companies to drill.

As I said in my second answer, Mr. Speaker, the presence of water in coal bed methane is not very high at this stage. We want to ensure that wells are drilled and wells are tested with outstanding and world-class environmental practices just to find out: if there is water with it, how much? What could be the issues associated with it? So I believe it's important to continue to collect, assemble this data, and respond with an appropriate policy for Albertans.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Programs for Homeless People

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past winter the number of homeless people seeking shelter in Edmonton has outnumbered the number of shelter spaces available and forced the city to open the doors of a fire hall, a warehouse, and other sites to homeless people. Homeless people across the province are not having their needs met, such as in Lloydminster where a social action group hopes to have a six-bed shelter open by September to house some of that city's hundreds of homeless. My questions are to the Minister of Seniors and responsible for housing. What is this government doing to help Lloydminster help its growing number of homeless people?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I want to take issue with the inaccuracies in the preamble. This year we've kept a daily usage tally of the funded shelters in the province. Very pleased to state that the shelters in Edmonton had an empty ratio of about 20 to 25 a night, with the exception of people who have addiction or drinking problems. There was a shortage there. The Hope Mission through the Edmonton Housing Trust Fund opened up a second trailer to accommodate these people, so they were taken care of. In some extreme cases, yes, for two or three nights this winter in the city there was the need for more, and I am thankful to the city for picking up the slack. But to say that we have a shortage of spaces for the outright homeless in this city is inaccurate.

We have also embarked on opening up significant numbers of transition housing, of affordable housing. As a matter of fact, more units opened up in this province in the last couple of years than in any other province in the country under that program.

So with respect to Lloydminster specifically, I would have to get back on that because, quite frankly, there are specific problems. If they have any, I don't have that at my fingertips.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Then to the same minister: what, specifically, has the minister done to increase the transfer payments to the municipalities to deal with this issue?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be aware that through my budget, which will be coming up in May, we allocate in excess of $16 million to deal with homeless people in this province, the funding going to the shelters. We have a variety of arrangements with housing authorities throughout the province where multi-millions of dollars go into supporting people in transitional housing, in social housing, in seniors' lodges, in seniors' self-contained apartments, and the list goes on and on. Those obligations are made continuously, and we honour them. Specifically, we deal with the municipalities where appropriate and with the authorities which they appoint who are appropriate.

Ms Blakeman: Lots of information. No answers.

My final question to the minister: why does this problem arise year after year with no long-term solution being proposed?

Mr. Woloshyn: The member is correct that the number of homeless and our allocation to that have been increasing annually. We have embarked on several initiatives to see how to deal with the problem, but I might add that this problem is not unique to Alberta. It is not unique to Canada. It is a growing problem with a lot of concern.

We have made a lot of progress in getting people out of homeless shelters. A lot of the people in there have problems with substance abuse, have problems with incomes, have problems with addictions, and so on. The problem is not a simple one of just opening up a few more shelter beds. It's a very complex issue, and we are currently having a cross-ministry look to see what we can do to ensure that these folks in these shelters can be moved out and that the people in the province who require housing are housed appropriately.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Calgary Health Region

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week on Friday the British government cancelled a fast-track surgery scheme involving the Calgary health region and a well-connected, for-profit health care company called Surgical Centres Inc. Anglo-Canadian's contract to provide joint replacements and other nonemergency surgeries was cancelled because it would have cost more than those surgeries done by Britain's National Health Service. My question, I guess, is to the Deputy Premier. Why is the government allowing the Calgary health region to run around the world playing health care entrepreneur while at home Calgarians are facing overcrowded emergency rooms and long waits for surgery?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta isn't allowing the Calgary health region to run around the world. You know, rather than trying to make this some kind of a bad issue, which I know is the hon. member's wont in this, perhaps he should look at it from another aspect and commend the Calgary health region for getting out into the world. The Premier stated earlier today that Alberta is looked to in Canada, in North America, and indeed the world as one of the top-rated deliverers of health care anywhere, certainly in North America.

Mr. Speaker, instead of being bogged down in what was – I heard one of the hon. members say: you broke it. Surely that hon. member does not want to go back to the health system of 1990 or '91, where we had one or two MRIs, where we had none of these new drugs that are offering quality of life to people. They would not be available. It is time that this group started to look forward instead of living in the past.

There are some new realities in the world of health. I've said this many times, and I'll say it again here today: to play politics with a subject like health is absolutely irresponsible and should not be done by any party provincially or nationally. This is too important to the people of this province. They didn't appreciate it the last go, and trust me, they don't appreciate it now.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to two groups today, this morning and at noon, and I'll see another one tonight.

The Speaker: Thank you. Hon. Deputy Premier, we just may have an opportunity in the supplementary questions to hear about them. The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This government has been playing politics with health care for 15 years.

Given that the Calgary health region's mandate is to deliver health care to residents of Calgary, not residents of the U.K., will the government put an immediate halt to the CHR involving itself in any similar schemes in the future, and if not, why not?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, again introspective, absolutely introspective. Look for bogeymen; look for problems.

Let's look at celebrating moving forward and innovation. Calgary health region: first in North America to introduce the operative MRI, designed and built in Calgary; a bone and joint centre will occur there; the best cardiac care and research in Canada. Let's not stop with Calgary. Capital health region: two years in a row top deliverer of health services in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, let's be proud of what we have. Yes, let's look to improve it, but let's do it in a very positive way. This is something we should be proud of. We are moving forward, and I am very proud of the achievements of both these regions, that have dealt with huge growth.

Mr. Speaker, you talk about waiting lists. The fact is that we're doing more surgeries. It's not that we're not doing more. We are doing more surgeries, and we're doing more of them on the same people. Probably a dozen years ago one hip replacement was it. Today it may be three or four with the same person. That gives a quality of life to people. Let's realize that we're living longer. Let's realize that this province will continue to grow, the highest growth again in Canada, and that it will be the place of choice for people to live, and we'd better stay with it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that bidding on overseas contracts can be a very pricey proposition, when can Albertans expect to find out exactly how much the Calgary health region spent on this bidding process and how much the taxpayers are on the hook for this failed venture?

2:30

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, again, introspective. I'm sure the minister of health will be pleased to provide some further information.

But, you know, Mr. Speaker, if we had never left this province, we wouldn't have the innovation that we have here. I realize that philosophically and ideologically we're not ever going to agree on a lot of things, but in Alberta we will continue to strive for a higher bar and to be the best, not for the lowest common denominator.

Speaker's Ruling Cellphone Cameras in the Chamber

The Speaker: Before we move on to the next order in the Routine, I'd just like to make a comment on a matter that I've raised in the House on previous occasions, but with a large number of members here this afternoon I just want to repeat it again.

Our Standing Order 110 alludes to certain media being available in the Assembly. As an example, Standing Order 110(2) says, "Photographers may take still photographs of the Assembly, subject to conditions set by the Speaker." Further it says, "Persons in the galleries of the Assembly may take notes or tape-record the proceedings of the Assembly or of committees of the whole Assembly, subject to conditions set by the Speaker."

Standing Order 111 says that in the case of committees of the Assembly "the recording and broadcasting of proceedings by the broadcast media and the taking of photographs shall be at the discretion of the chairman of the committee and subject to any conditions set by him."

In the letter that I sent on February 12, 2004, to all members with respect to the decorum in the House, item 19 says that with respect to cellular telephones and pagers, "Cellular phones, tape recorders and pagers are not permitted in the Chamber."

We had an event on April 28 of 2003 when certain papers were read by other members of the Assembly, and we had a long discord with respect to a proposed point of privilege. I remember making such comments as that there's an old saying that gentlemen or in this case gentlewomen do not read other gentlemen's mail.

Now, if an hon. member in this Assembly wishes to have a photograph taken of himself or herself, kindly contact my office and we'll arrange to have the photographer located somewhere in the galleries where they might take a picture of the individual themselves. But in recent months there's been the infusion in this Assembly of cellular phones that also have cameras attached and pictures are being taken. That is an invasion of privacy, but more importantly that's an invasion of the privilege of the member in this Assembly. That is not an acceptable practice. There is no such thing with these unique little devices, whether or not they may be in pens or in telephones or anything else. But there's a privilege of being in this Assembly, and I'm asking all members of the Assembly to bear in mind what decorum is.

If you want a picture taken of yourself and you have a professional photographer, we can have them sitting up in the galleries and they'll take pictures of you in your place. But they will not photograph what is on another member's desk, and they will not photograph another member without that member being notified that he or she is being under somebody's gun. It may be a game for some. We're way above that. Way above that.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: In 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of several members, but before we do that, today is the ninth anniversary of the by-election conclusion for the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, who joined this esteemed group on April 20, 1995.

The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Calgary Booster Club Awards

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 25, 2004, I was very honoured to represent this government at the Calgary Booster Club's 51st sportsman of the year dinner.

As I have been involved in amateur sport organizations for 35 years, I have the utmost respect for the Calgary Booster Club, a unique organization which is dedicated to the development and encouragement of athletic endeavour. The club has a 51-year tradition of honouring people from all walks of life for their dedication and commitment to sport. From community-level sports programs that involve young athletes to national-level athletes, volunteer support is needed by parents, coaches, leaders, and administrators, and eventually through commitment many of these grassroots people become very valuable athletic leaders in the larger sports community.

So I was very honoured to join over 700 people at this year's Calgary Booster Club dinner to recognize a constituent of mine in Calgary-West, Stan Schwartz, as 2004 sportsman of the year. Described as a class act by the media, for more than 45 years Stan has made significant contributions to sport within amateur and development levels as well as the professional ranks.

Born and raised in the Medicine Hat area, Stan first became connected to football in Calgary as a player with the U of C Dinosaurs, followed by a career in teaching and coaching with the Calgary board of education with junior football, conducting training clinics, and building football practice equipment. Stan's 28-year career with the Calgary Stampeders included dedication to many critical roles that have earned him the admiration and respect of football players, officials, and fans in Calgary and across Canada.

Also, Calgary's female and male athletes of the year, Taryn Swiatek and Jeremy Wotherspoon, were recognized for their pursuit of athletic excellence, as were a number of athletic leaders.

Mr. Speaker, it was wonderful to be part of the Booster Club dinner this year to connect with many athletic leaders I know, such as Curly Hunt, club founding member, and many past sportsmen of the year: Doug Kyle, Keith Kendal, Deak Cassidy, Marg Southern, Dorothy Read, Tony Anselmo, Margaret Scott, Bill Warren, Eldon Godfrey, John Semkuley, and Frank King. It was truly a happy and memorable celebration.

The Speaker: The hon Member for Calgary-Currie.

Teenage Behaviour

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As someone who has had considerable experience, although not necessarily considerable success, in dealing with teenage kids, it has come as a relief to me to hear that there are now some possible scientific explanations as to why teenagers behave, or don't behave, and think, or perhaps don't think, the way that they do. It isn't necessarily our failures as parents at all, as many fear. It isn't necessarily modern society and too much TV either, as many have speculated. And it isn't even all those raging hormones that are giving teenagers a raging desire to go out and do something incredibly stupid, especially if you've just finished telling them not to. No. It seems that there may be a much better scientific explanation for it all.

It turns out that many teenagers may be, quite literally, a bit insane as the result of too much dysfunctional brain growth too fast from about the ages of 15 to about 20, particularly in the prefrontal cortex, which governs logic and regulates the ability to assess risk, as well as the amygdala section of the brain, which plays a leading role in impulsive behaviour. Probably none of this comes as any surprise to most parents.

But there is more. Further research is indicating that the teenage brain sometimes grows too fast for the skull bones to keep up, putting too much pressure on them or at least their brain, something they are often complaining about, actually. The bottom line is that they may not be capable of thinking or acting normally or considering consequences of actions the way we think they should.

Surprisingly, this biological oddity apparently plays a very valuable role in evolution. It might be a good thing overall. However, in the modern world it can also be very dangerous. Children between the ages of 15 and 19 are three times more likely to die from all causes as children between the ages of 10 and 14 are. There are lots of other implications to this finding, such as when we ponder juvenile rights and prostitution or the Young Offenders Act or adult courts.

The facts are that many very good kids really do go through a period of temporary insanity. Of course, the problem sometimes is that they tend to drive us insane as well, and unfortunately we don't have any similar defence.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: I think the chair is prohibited from making comment, but did the hon. member say between the ages of 15 and 19? Or did I misunderstand and did he actually say between the ages of 15 and 89?

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

2:40 National Soil Conservation Week

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and bring attention to National Soil Conservation Week, which runs from April 18 to April 24. National Soil Conservation Week helps promote soil conservation among farmers across Canada. Soil quality is the foundation for the preservation of agriculture. That's why National Soil Conservation Week is so important. It recognizes the producers and the industry organizations that are managing soils and improving sustainability. All week promotional events take place across Canada to highlight the importance of conserving vital topsoil.

Our producers have always been leaders in conservation. Over the past decade Alberta producers have more than doubled their direct seeded acreage. Nearly two-thirds of our province's acreage is now direct seeded. Certainly, more and more producers are realizing the benefits of conserving topsoil. Those who use direct seeding and other beneficial management practices can significantly improve their crop productivity. Some of the benefits include better water infiltration, increased seedbed moisture, enhanced organic matter, and less risk to soil erosion.

Alberta producers are fortunate to have a very diverse agricultural base: crops, livestock, dryland, and irrigation. This diversity allows Alberta farmers more choices in how they plan their field management systems to conserve their soil. For example, thanks to our sizable livestock industry, producers can choose to plant forage crops, which are better for building up soil quality. Better soil conservation increases soil organic matter, but there is also a larger benefit.

Sequestration of carbon results in reduction of overall greenhouse gas emissions in the province. The prairie region has 85 per cent of the nation's capacity to store additional soil carbon by using good soil management practices. This could contribute significantly to Alberta's climate change action plan.

In short, today's soil conservation practices mean a better environment and a better future for everyone. I applaud the conservation efforts of Alberta's producers, the best in the world, and I'm pleased and honoured to recognize National Soil Conservation Week.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and in all fairness, as two hon. members went nearly one minute over, you can go four minutes.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you. When car accidents do happen, it's a relief to know that your insurance company will help you obtain the medical attention or compensation you need to restore you and your vehicle back to preaccident condition without being unduly penalized. But ensuring that this process remains fair – it should not happen as a result of an accident, but the process should be fair.

This government claims that automobile insurance consumers will benefit from low premiums and reliable treatment under its auto insurance reforms, but its haphazard approach isn't setting Alberta auto insurance consumers on the road to fair and affordable insurance. This government should be charged with consumer neglect. Swift and decisive action was promised by the minister, but the response has been slow and indecisive as auto insurance premiums have skyrocketed.

Only when it saw elections being affected in other provinces did this government send out the automobile insurance reform implementation team to try and seek a solution, but it told them not to even consider public insurance as an option. In fact, this group of industry insiders did not even conduct any public hearings. When this crisis came to a head, this government froze insurance rates, but this freeze has so many loopholes that it didn't apply to all auto insurance policyholders. This government's only answer to high rates has been to limit the compensation an injured motorist is entitled to receive. Albertans are still waiting for this government to make affordable insurance changes. Albertans deserve peace of mind and relief in their pocketbook.

The Alberta Liberal opposition saw the crisis in automobile insurance coming well over a year ago and offered its research and findings to the government, but this government rejected a public model of insurance similar to the one in British Columbia without even studying it. The Alberta Liberal opposition believes a public system of insurance is the best way to guarantee affordable auto insurance to Albertans while maintaining fair compensation to accident victims.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition signed by 82 individuals from the Lethbridge regional police service petitioning the Legislative Assembly to support Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act, "which will provide more security and peace of mind for people working in occupations who have a higher risk of exchanging bodily fluids with a potential carrier of a blood borne disease."

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of many Albertans who petition the government, and their petition states:

We: the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to:

"Urge the government of Alberta to raise the minimum wage in our province and recognize that there is a connection between the low minimum wage and the housing crisis in Alberta"

"Urge the government of Alberta to recognize that our minimum wage is too low and that under these conditions our low income workers cannot afford the basic necessities of life, and urge the government to recognize that the minimum wage needs to be raised immediately."

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a document on behalf of my hon. colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. The tabling relates to a letter from Les Steel, president of the Alberta Federation of Labour, to the Minister of Health and Wellness as well as an accompanying press release dated April 20, 2004. These documents express serious concern about the priorities of the Calgary regional health authority and request a report on expenditures related to the Anglo-Canadian consortium.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a chart with all the provinces and territories in this country, and it's a chart comparing auto insurance systems and results by province.

The second tabling I have is a copy of an editorial from the New York Times entitled A Strange Ban on Testing Beef.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the appropriate copies of the 2003 College of Alberta Professional Forest Technologists annual report.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I will table appropriate copies of two memoranda today. One, from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs requesting early consideration at Committee of the Whole of Bill 204, the Blood Samples Act, was received in my office at 11:35 today.

The second is the appropriate copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Calgary-West requesting early consideration at Committee of the Whole of Bill 203, the Canada Pension Plan Credits Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. That arrived in my office at 1:21 p.m. today.

The manner in which we will deal with these bills will be in chronological order. Bill 203 will come first.

2:50head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2004-05

Children's Services

The Deputy Chair: As per our standing orders the first hour is dedicated between the minister and the members of the opposition, following which any other member may participate in the estimates.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you very much. It's a great privilege to rise today and deliver the opening comments relative to the Children's Services budget for the year 2004-2005.

I would just acknowledge at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. House leader from Her Majesty's Official Opposition has indicated an interest in knowing some other material, and I wondered if she was actually indicating that she wanted to have that statement made by herself prior to my statements or following that.

Ms Blakeman: You go ahead.

Ms Evans: Great.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, it's a distinct privilege to introduce some people in the gallery today, more than usual, some coming for their very first time to sit in this Assembly and view the actions in the House and view Committee of Supply and view the exemplary conduct of people in this House who are dedicated to listening to our estimates.

I would be pleased and privileged to ask them to stand as I introduce them so that you have the understanding of who is accompanying me today: the deputy minister for support services, Keray Henke, in whom the responsibility centres in preparing this document; assistant deputy minister Bill Meade, who also has involvement predominantly with child welfare, and we're pleased to have him here today; the person who is director of finance, Shehnaz Hutchinson, is here today, very integrally involved with the development of the estimates; also in our financial support area Don Boisclair and Larry Olatonade; also in support services the communications director, Lorelei Fiset-Cassidy, who is often viewed as she comes with me to the House on a daily basis; and for most of the members of the House the lady that looks after the problems that are received in my office and who is executive assistant to the minister's office, Alyssa Haulholter, is with us today.

Hon. members, it's I think a point of great pride for Albertans to know that among all of the places in Canada where you live and where we travel, Alberta has a Children's Services ministry that strives to nurture, cherish, provide homes for children in need and provide opportunities for families to feel supported no matter what their circumstances. When the rain falls, when the cracks develop in relationships, when there's indeed trouble in paradise, children always need supports, not only children but youth and senior citizens as well. Mr. Chairman, in our ministry we look after children of all ages, and I'd be pleased to explain.

The 2004-05 budget is a total of $742 million, including about $8 million beyond the transfers from the general revenue fund. It is up $33 million from last year, or approximately 4.6 per cent. The great bulk, or two-thirds, of this budget is spent on keeping children, youth, and families safe and protected. This area includes core programs such as child welfare services, resources for children with disabilities, and that represents 68 per cent of our overall budget. I want to take a minute and explain this area because it is the crucial area of child welfare delivery, and it is the area where we provide human and financial resources to support families in several ways.

First of all, we want to provide services that prevent things from going wrong in families. With the new Alberta response model, which means that we provide community capacity to support families that are fragile, we look first to preventing things from going wrong. We look at providing programs such as home visitation for the newborn, early childhood developmental programs, our new child accreditation program for daycares. All of these programs are geared to provide supports for parents, to provide watchful and caring eyes for people who might be undergoing some trauma or strains in their relationships, and to provide those services that prevent things from going wrong. Our whole emphasis there is from breaking up the family to making that family more complete.

The second part of this child welfare delivery system is really that heavy emphasis on preserving the family unit, where if there are vulnerabilities, a social worker, a caregiver may go in and provide respite, nurture the family, counsel the family, and give that family that extra support so that the child can remain in that family feeling safe and not vulnerable from any type of risk.

The third part of this delivery system is the protection, where we remove the child only because we believe there is a crucial protection issue, an issue of lack of capacity from the family because of drugs or alcohol or a combination thereof and an opportunity to make sure that that child is nurtured.

The fourth and final P of these areas, from prevention, preservation, and protection, is a permanency plan so that that child may return home. So that plan is in place, working to get that child opportunities for capacity back in their original home as well as providing a plan with a caregiver, a foster family, or group residential home that sufficiently looks after their needs. This is a very important area of expenditure and one which predominantly our 10 regional authorities are integrally involved with.

Mr. Chairman, we also spend approximately $220 million, or approximately 29 per cent of the budget, on services for young children, early intervention, and child care. This is an increase of $19 million, and it focuses on those areas of support to the community and a heavy emphasis on prevention. I like to look at this as the part where we're out in front of the game, helping families be resilient, helping communities know how to help themselves. In this area of expenditure we have significant support from our partners in the community: nongovernment agencies, local governments, and other people who have expressed a willingness to do the due diligence on behalf of children, youth, and families.

Mr. Chairman, I said that we look after children of all ages. It's no laughing matter that one of our biggest initiatives coming up in this coming year relates to the currently underway round-table on family violence. Elders who are abused receive services in our ministry through our elder abuse service delivery system, either in facilities such as the Kerby Centre in Calgary or in various communities where there's counselling support for elders who are either abused by their children or are abused while they are in a circumstance of a delivery system for their needs, and who feel that there's nobody else to turn to.

Mr. Chairman, our total ongoing activities this year and the ones that are going to focus a great deal of the public's prioritization are family violence prevention, resources for parents, children, and families, and resources for redefining and reshaping our child welfare and children with disabilities systems. Two years ago when we were heavily committed to consultations and bringing the best Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act forward, we were looking at what should happen. The thrust and engine that will drive child welfare will be one which talks about abbreviating the time where children are floundering in places outside the home and looks to re-emphasizing the stability of the home and making permanent solutions for children.

Well, Mr. Chairman, in this year's budget are the dollars to make sure that that new act is successfully underway, where training is provided, where technology supports that trained professional, where the multidisciplinary teams that assess certain complex cases are in place in child and family services authorities. All of these things have taken some additional provision of dollars, and those are part of the emphasis of what will happen in this year's budget.

I think it's been exciting that the legislation and the legislative framework that was introduced last spring by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North has become a lighthouse piece of legislation relative to resources for children with disabilities, supporting families to make better choices for supports for themselves. This legislation, too, with its regulations is being developed, refinements undertaken, reassessments of children who have needs are being done, and that's a good part of what this budget will cover.

Over this past year we've successfully launched the initiatives relative to family violence with the workshops. Through this next year there are dollars in this budget to support ongoing programs for all members of the family, whether they are men, women, or children. In this year's budget, as I've mentioned, the two pieces of legislation will be supported, the child care initiative for improving the quality of child care delivery to families who have children in daycare or day homes. We have successfully launched over 100 companies as partners in Alberta's Promise, a very small program but a program that while at arm's length from this ministry is bringing new partners on board, bringing ministry partners at the local level, businesses large and small that are committed to helping children in this wonderful Alberta.

We have established the very successful children's forums, Mr. Chairman, just this past week a very successful forum with 100 children in Hobbema who have come forward to provide their chiefs with a letter, a promissory note if you will, asking for a partnership between the children and the community and the First Nations that are in that region.

We've got some exciting initiatives underway in this year's budget which build on the resiliency of families and children, build on the community capacity, build on our supports to communities, and more closely monitor and evaluate the provision of contract services as per the notes in last year's Auditor General's report and look to new horizons, new beginnings such as the office of the children's lawyer, providing children ready access and government officials ready access to defining a lawyer for children who have been abused in care.

This year's budget provides even stronger fetal alcohol spectrum disorder initiatives and more incentives in communities for involvement. It provides for legal services protocols and independent review processes, all things which we believe will help us in our proper due diligence and accountability and improve the outcomes in Children's Services.

Mr. Chairman, many people have asked what the most important thing we do in Children's Services really is, and I believe our privilege is to support Alberta families in receiving those supports that they need to make their lives better, to make their lives more complete and their children ready to face a challenging world. I believe that what we've done by dedicated staff illustrates that commitment.

I believe that what we've done by new programs such as our bursary funding to youth in transition, enabling them to launch themselves in a new way in the world as they gain more education, are examples of lighthouse programs that will further assist us in developing the citizens of tomorrow. I believe that what Children's Services provides is a preventive health budget, preventing bad things from happening to children and youth and families, educating them on how to protect themselves and to go stronger into the workplace and in the workforce.

Mr. Chairman, I don't know how many of you know this, but every year Children's Services was budgeting with an anticipated increase in child welfare delivery of 10 to 15 per cent of new cases. Well, that's not happening. We have fewer cases of children in either permanent or temporary care today than we did two years ago, and it's because we're building the capacity of families. Even though our population is growing, even though last year we had 40,000 births in Alberta, we are making steady improvement in the resiliency of families. To me that is the best possible outcome of having a ministry such as Children's Services because ideally we're working ourselves out of a job; we're working ourselves to a place where families look after themselves.

Now, because I have had a small signal that there may be some request for information about services to sexual assault centres, I'm only going to make one reference here, and that is that we have provided training dollars this year in the sum of about $40,000 at the end of last year's budget plus an additional amount toward a group in Calgary involved with the family advocacy centre to make sure that there are supports for people that are nongovernment agencies that are trying to do the right thing, trying to engage community in supports for people affected in sexual assault centres.

They are partners with shelters in many communities. Every community has a different template, but we will be most anxious through this process of the round-tables – and they are very integrally involved – to see where that piece will fit in the future of government service delivery; in other words, not having them ignored like a foster child in our society but integrally involved in the way that we embrace these people.

These people, these children, youth, and families, are affected not in the same way that some are in the women's shelter system today but very definitely affected by violence in our society, by violence that is as important for us to recognize as the violence of any criminal attack. I know that the Solicitor General though not present at this moment shares my view that this is an important element.

I look forward to our discussion through the remarks of the hon. members that are in the House today. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The minister is correct. She is responding to an indication from me that I did want to raise and have some discussion around the funding of the operations of sexual assault centres in Alberta.

Off the top, the first question that comes to mind to anyone listening to this or reading it later is: well, what does the funding of sexual assault centres have to do with the provision of children's services? Indeed, the same question is often asked around battered women's shelters. In fact, the shelters are funded, operational funding is received through the Ministry of Children's Services. That's just sort of where they ended up when the government decided to hive off the Children's Services section from Human Resources and Employment. The battered women's shelters ended up going into Children's Services.

What I've been interested to find out as I've started to look into the whole issue of provision of services by sexual assault centres in Alberta is that, in fact, they do not get co-ordinated funding. They don't get operational funding from the government. What they get is very piecemeal, and what I'm trying to do today is to start that discussion with this minister, and I'll carry it on during the budget debates with the Solicitor General and any other ministers that we can pull into this discussion. Frankly, I'm astonished that we haven't gotten on top of this up to now, that we're in the year 2004 and we're still approaching this very much in a haphazard or piecemeal fashion, and it does seem that in many cases one ministry doesn't communicate with the other ministry.

Both the sexual assault centres and the battered women's shelters are providing services to people who are at that point in their life because they have been the victim of a prohibited action, in the case of a battered woman, a victim of an assault. That goes further to even an emotional assault, emotional abuse. Sometimes financial abuse, as well, is recognized. It is a prohibited action. We do not in this society approve in any way of beating on someone, especially an intimate partner.

The same thing comes up around someone who is the victim of sexual assault, but it seems a more difficult subject for people to grasp. I don't want to say that it's less fashionable, because that's putting too crude a spin on it, but certainly the sexual assault centres have more difficulty attracting funds, attracting sponsors, attracting guardian angels, if you will, and now, I discover, attracting reliable, predictable operating funding from the government. Because it is sexually based, there still tends to be a misunderstanding that somehow sexual assault is about sex. It's not. It's about assault. But there's still a reluctance to classify the services and the effect of sexual assault on people more closely aligned with what's happening with the battered women's shelters.

In talking to several shelters across the province and to the umbrella organization, this is what my understanding is. I may not have fully grasped this, but my understanding is that the funding is very piecemeal and their administrators end up spending a lot of time trying to figure out which different grant program to apply to this year to try and get them up to the level of funding they need to operate. Indeed, I'm aware that through the Solicitor General there is funding to cover costs around counselling, sort of precourt and court appearance, but there's a lot more to dealing with a victim of sexual assault than just around the actual court appearance.

In fact, we know that in many cases women choose not to go to court at all, or they may delay bringing charges for several or many years. So that sort of takes them out of the loop of being able to access any assistance if they're not directly involved in that sort of immediate precourt or court appearance activities. The Solicitor General seems to be funding the counselling around that specific activity, but if you get any distance away from that activity, that funding does not cover it.

So, you know, what kind of funding are we talking about here when we talk about operating funding? Well, we're talking about, you know, the administrative staff, the other staff that are involved there that maybe don't have their salary covered by this court-connected counselling, things like the office rent, telecommunications, your Internet hookup, resource materials that you have to buy, resource materials that you would produce to distribute to the public, outreach costs and involvements, and the non court related counselling that I referred to earlier.

I know that many of the sexual assault centres – the one in Edmonton here, SACE, Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton, has been really vigilant in building liaisons and partnerships with community organizations like the police services, the United Way, the medical profession; for example, doing special seminars for emergency room personnel and having them understand all of the issues around sexual assault and how they need to be working with individuals who have been victims of sexual assault.

I need here to clarify that in a lot of cases – and I don't have the stat at the top of mind – we are dealing with adult survivors of child sexual abuse, and that's a particularly difficult one for people to deal with. It's hard to understand what the circumstances were around that. It makes people very uncomfortable. As a result, that group of people, you see, is not imminently involved in the court process, so there's a perfect example of what I was talking about. If you're an adult survivor of child sexual abuse, you're left out of this loop and you don't really qualify for the funding that is detailed under the Solicitor General.

On Saturday night I was at the Jim Shewchuk banquet, the labour appreciation night, and they were honouring their twenty-four 2004 graduates from their union counselling program. What that really turned out to be is that these are 24 people from across the province who work for various unions who are trained over an extended period of time – I think it's six months or even a year – in all of the services that are available in the community that they can help plug their union colleagues into. So if they see someone on the job who's troubled, they can approach them and start to help refer them to a group in the community or to a service provider who can help this individual. One of the groups that was specifically mentioned was the Sexual Assault Centre of Edmonton that had been out and had done a seminar to help educate these 24 colleague counsellors.

So there was another example of how hard these groups work to build that partnership in the community. But, you see, that activity is not funded either by the government. So we have a group out there that's really struggling to keep up provision of services. This gets more complicated, not less complicated. We seem to have more people that are in need of the support, that are victims of sexual assault, whether it's child sexual assault, adults, and we don't have any kind of consistent funding program from the government.

So I'm bringing this to this minister at this time. She has acknowledged the involvement of sexual assault centres around the round-table on family violence. You know, as I was reading through some of the documents, over and over again it talked about the round-table on family violence, and it almost always said "and bullying." The bullying was attached to this round-table, and good on the minister. You know, that is something that's a form of violence. It's certainly an incubator for violence and the attitudes that people carry into adulthood that may well result in some of the other perpetrations of violence upon people. Bullying should be brought into that, but you don't always see "and sexual assault" tagged onto that as well.

So even though there has been some attempt to bring the sexual assault centres and those providers and workers under the umbrella of family violence, sexual assault, number one, is not always about family violence. It's often involved with strangers or with acquaintances, for example acquaintance rape – assault. You don't say that word any more; my apologies. So there's some struggle here with definition and with inclusion that I am just underlining so that the minister is aware of it.

Now, she mentioned that $40,000 had been provided at the end of the last fiscal year, and there was some amount of money around family advocacy, I think, or to a family advocacy group that was included in this budget. But, you see, I've just spent 10 minutes talking about the kinds of things that these sexual assault centres are not funded for, and nobody seems to be picking them up. The Solicitor General is picking up a piece that is directly related to the area she covers; that is, you know, policing, corrections, and victims' services. She's picking up just that one piece around court appearances for victims that are involved and close enough to court to be covered by that, but nothing else that I've described in the many costs that these organizations have is being picked up on a regular, predictable, sustainable basis by any government department.

I guess I'm starting my own personal campaign here to start to bring this issue up repeatedly until I can see some sort of threads being knitted together from the various ministries that are affected here. I would assume that the Minister of Justice also should have a piece of this pie, the Minister of Children's Services, the Solicitor General certainly, perhaps the Minister of Community Development in his role overseeing human rights and particularly issues specifically affecting women.

Again, that's not quite accurate either because, as we all know, sexual assault can be perpetrated on both men and women and is equally devastating to both genders. I'm not going to pick one out as being more affected than the other. Frankly, I don't even know how the numbers stand right now. It used to be overwhelmingly a crime committed upon women, but I don't know that that's true any more.

So what we have here is a very uneven approach to this. I know that it's an uncomfortable subject, but it is 2004. We should be able to, you know, be adults, be grown-ups about this, and be able to work with it. I'm really concerned about the lack of co-ordination and even awareness that the government is exhibiting around this issue and around the funding of these centres.

Now, perhaps the minister has a reason and she's been in cabinet discussions where there's been a discussion and there's a concrete, identifiable policy about: no, we will not fund sexual assault centres because . . . If so, fine; then let's hear it, and then we know where we stand on this.

But I suspect that that has not happened, and it's simply a matter of this being a group that has fallen through the cracks over and over and over again. They pick up a little bit of funding this year from a Wild Rose grant, a little bit of funding next year from some other kind of grant, a little bit of a CFEP, a little bit of a CIP grant, a little bit of court counselling from the Solicitor General, and every now and then something from the Minister of Children's Services.

I'm afraid that it's going to end up coming to rest on the table that the minister is responsible for, and I am looking to her to see if . . . I guess what I'm hearing is that there was no specific funding coming for these sexual assault centres in this budget. If there is, I'm delighted to hear it and, you know, please share the good news with me. If there isn't, then can I ask her to start looking for ways to support these groups? As I said, we're not ending up with fewer victims here; we're ending up with more victims. As we have learned, of all the lessons that we've learned around the effects of domestic violence and how much that costs society in very real terms – lost production, lost work days, hospital costs, effect upon children, the likelihood of the cycle repeating, all of those lessons that we've learned – most of those can be transferred into the sexual assault arena as well.

So I think that there's a fairly large human deficit that's been created by a lack of coherent policy and funding around sexual assault centres, and I'd like to start working with the minister to address that and move forward. I was hoping and I had heard, actually, a rumour that there might be some specific funding for sexual assault centres in this budget. It doesn't look like I had my rumours right, but the minister, I know, will answer me on that. If that's not the case, then we need to start to look to this.

I know that there are expectations and an idea that something will come out of the round-table on family violence that would capture the sexual assault centres under that umbrella, if you will. My concern is – I've already pointed out – that even as you look at the literature in the workbooks and in the explanatory notes around the round-table on family violence, the bullying is always added in; the sexual assault is not, and it's not consistently added in. So it's not top-of-mind to people. I think in a lot of the discussions and in the responses and answers back in the workbooks you don't get people going, "Oh, yes, and sexual assault centres," and adding in what all of that means and how people expect that it should be dealt with. What kind of services should be provided? What kind of funding should be set aside?

So, you know, there is an attempt to bring it under that umbrella. That's good, but I also think that you're not going to get a true picture of it just because it isn't always spoken of on equal terms, and it has tended to be hidden. I admit that there are historic reasons for it being hidden. Not good reasons, but nonetheless there are historic reasons for it being more difficult.
