So when I see this as a package, I do question the minister about the timing of the increase that was given. Why did they choose the 1st of August when it meant they were to come back? I'm basing this on a premise that it's not something to be proud of nor is it something to be taken lightly that the government has to come back and ask for supplementary supply, this being the second supplementary supply that we've had in this fiscal year.

I mean, ideally we have a plan and the government is able to stick to it. That's why we debate the budget at length and it's approved, and I expect the government to stick to it. So if they don't, then I'm expecting there's some sort of extraordinary reason for that; for example, fire prevention or fighting fires, fighting floods, or emergency services. That certainly can't be expected.

But in this case it was very expected. There was notice given. I would argue not enough notice, but there was certainly notice given for the increase. Why the choice about when it happened? So if I could get details around that, please.

The $5.5 million for increased provincial funding under the Calgary, Alberta, affordable housing agreement: is this flow through? Is this money that has come from the feds? It's passing straight through the province. They're not adding anything to the bank balance. They're just shooting it straight on out to the worthy projects. Can I just get confirmation on that? That's my impression: that, in fact, the province has received this and is now spending it. Yeah, there's no incoming revenue line shown here, but I'm presuming that's what is happening. So if I could get the minister to respond to that as well.

Could I know to what projects or to where the $4.5 million was directed? Who is the recipient of that?

Now, going back to the lodge costs. At the time the reasoning of a number of press releases and responses that we heard from various members of government around the increase for long-term care was that this would result in better: more staff, higher levels of staff, better food. I think one of the ministers was saying that this was about fresh fruit and good garden vegetables for everyone to eat.

What I'm hearing is that they really haven't seen any difference, and I think some people would argue very strongly that there has been less service, less of everything in long-term care. So when do we expect to see better? When do we actually see the fresh fruit? Is there some sort of time that I can pass on to those people that phone me and say, "When is this happening? We haven't seen any improvement at all."

I've gone through the Hansard. I did read the responses from the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the Attorney General. I don't see the answers to these questions. If somehow I missed them, my apologies. I hope I'm not repeating. But I'd like to know: what was the increase in the number of seniors that required assistance as a result of the long-term care fees increasing?

We've actually got two different kinds of people that would be requesting assistance through Alberta seniors' benefits or the special needs program. You have people that were already receiving Alberta seniors' benefits who now need the additional funds from the ministry to be able to pay the increased bill. The question I'm asking specifically here is: how many people slid below the line? In other words, they now require assistance that they didn't need before. So what's the increase in the number of people who've asked for assistance that's directly tied to the increase in the long-term care rates?

The Member for Edmonton-Whitemud did give some numbers. He was talking about that 48 per cent of seniors living in long-term care were eligible for supplementary benefits. That doesn't mean that they asked for them and took them. Later he's talking about a different number, with 57 per cent receiving supplementary assistance, which is actually a larger number. So I'll just ask for clarification there.

I'm also interested in how many more seniors requested Alberta seniors' benefits assistance citing increased power bills and increased insurance costs as the reasons that they now needed to come to the government for assistance. Has the government done any kind of analysis going back three years or going back five years to say that these are the pressures that seniors are experiencing? I've noticed that there's a new section in the budget document that the government is producing in which they talk about the pressures that they feel are particularly affecting them, environmental factors I think sometimes they call it. So what are the factors that are affecting seniors needing to come to the government for assistance? I think that's part of why we see the need for this additional 4 and a half million dollars.

I'm also looking to the minister for a discussion around efforts to reduce the need for funding from the government for homelessness; in other words, to find some kind of housing for them, affordable housing in the sense that it's low-cost housing. I had a meeting with members from the Edmonton builders association – I think that's who it was – and they raised a number of points. They're cognizant of the need for and their part in providing social housing. They were looking for some consideration from all different levels of government so that their costs were lower. If they understand what the need is, I'm wondering where the government is coming from.

There are always two sides to homeless funding. One is enough mats on the floor, and two is places that people can go and actually not need a mat on the floor, move into some sort of housing, even if it's a boarding house situation, someplace that they call home, where they go to over a long period of time. What I see is more and more and more need for mats on the floor. So we're not actually addressing the homeless problem. This was raised on February 25, but the answer that was given was inconclusive.

So I'm giving the minister an opportunity to shine here with the plans that he has around this so that we don't see him coming back next year looking for another $900,000 – it's almost a million dollars – in assistance. Maybe next year he'll be looking for that assistance for Edmonton, seeing as this year it went to Calgary. I hope that doesn't have to happen, but I'd be interested in what the plans are here.

I also have questions for the Minister of Learning, but if I could prevail upon the Minister of Seniors to answer those questions, I can sort of complete that package. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll try to address the questions as best as I can here. With respect to the homeless and the request for funding there, I don't play nor will I play the Edmonton versus Calgary game, so when I hear that Calgary got some and Edmonton didn't, there's something wrong. It's rather irritating, because we look at what is required. It's not only irritating; it's also very misleading. I guess that since Edmonton got more through our Alberta/Canada housing program by some $600,000 last year than Calgary, then I should reduce Edmonton's commitment there to keep it even, although the needs in Calgary, I'm sure, are equal to or higher than in Edmonton.

With respect specifically to the $900,000 Calgary hit a crisis, if you will, in the need for mats, as you put it, which I certainly find extremely difficult to deal with in terms of my acceptability of them, because a large number of mats on the floor is not my idea of how people should be accommodated.

We took over the operation of the Sunalta Shelter for a variety of reasons, which I won't go into now. That was a part of that money. I'm sorry; I don't have the figures in front of me. We can break that out for you, if you wish, at some point later. The other part was that we decided to be proactive in the case and made an arrangement with the Calgary Drop-in Centre for some 200 emergency mats – these will all expire on March 31 – which is a crisis, if you will, that I'll be looking at again.

Edmonton did not come into the equation, thankfully, and I repeat: thankfully. Other than for the people with addiction problems – and remember that Calgary Drop-in Centre takes in everybody; that doesn't apply for all shelters. In Edmonton we had a problem with folks with addictions who didn't have a place to stay. A couple of years ago a 30-person trailer was opened up at the Herb Jamieson Centre. I'm sure you're familiar with that. This year through a partnership between ourselves and the Edmonton Joint Planning Committee on Housing fund, we've added another trailer there, meaning that basically almost all the people who would appear on a basis with some sort of intoxicants and were not eligible in shelters did, in fact, have a roof over their head.

So that left us Urban Manor. Urban Manor is not a homeless shelter. Urban Manor is a transition house, and this is where we have all sorts of confusion between what is a homeless shelter and what is transition. All homeless shelters don't have homeless mats. They have transition beds. We're trying to rationalize this whole thing in terms of what their functions are, who they're serving, and how they should be funded. That's something that will take a while to sort out. I believe Calgary Drop-in Centre looks after 800 and some odd people. All of those are not mat people by a long shot. A good number are transition.

Getting back to the Herb Jamieson Centre, not counting the trailers, we fund Herb Jamieson for 265 spots, whether they're used or not. I've just got the numbers for the first three weeks of February here. Here are the numbers that used Herb Jamieson. Remember that 265 is the magic number. I'll just go through February 1 through 23, and that's the last number I have here. February 1 was 183, then 184, 182, 209, 202, 169 on February 6, 181, 198, 195, 194, 192, 192, 179 on February 13, 188 on February 14, 195, 218, 217, 206, 189, 160 on February 20 – that gave us, thankfully, 105 spots that could have been used – and then 166, 190, and on February 23 it was 202.

The same cannot be said for Calgary. You would see that they were loaded right up to capacity. If you wish – I'm not going to table this right now – sometime I can share these with you, because we get the report on a nightly basis.

So to answer your question, Calgary had the need. Edmonton, thankfully, has a need for housing, but we didn't have an urgent, immediate need for mat spots. I hope that answers your question with respect to the homeless and the request there.

We'll do the affordable housing now too. The $5 million, or $5.5 million I believe it is, is new money to match monies that were already in the budget from CMHC. So we had a choice of either increasing it to match that or had the possibility of letting some money lapse or negotiating with CMHC to see if they would bring it over to next year. I was very fortunate in the fact that Treasury Board agreed that we had the projects provincially on the books where we could prudently use this money. It's all allocated through projects. The projects, incidentally, as they're released, are on our web site. It's easy.

We do have a process that we have to go through because we are 50 per cent partners with CMHC. We have to agree on the projects; we have to agree on the funding per project. That system, quite frankly, has levered a lot of money out of other areas, unbelievable amounts of money, and I must say at this point that I'm extremely pleased that Alberta is a leader in actually getting through the program. We're the only ones that have matching dollars.

A few months back we were the only ones that had suites already occupied under this particular program. We've had arrangements – and they're all available to anybody. Some are not-for-profit, some are municipal, some with Canadian Mental Health, and in fact we have some private projects both in Red Deer and in Edmonton where people who have, I guess, a big heart have come forward and have guaranteed affordable rates for people in need for a 20-year period. The agreement that the other provinces signed was for 10 years. So we've stepped way ahead of the group on this whole affordable housing business, and so far it's working quite well. As you know, we have two more years to go on the program.

So that, hon. member, was new money, which would translate into $11 million, roughly, that would still come in this year, which would then end up being considerably more when you consider what the other partners, the municipalities or whoever, on the projects would put in. So it was a very good thing there.

With respect to long-term care there was far more than the 4 and a half million dollars to pick up the difference. I believe we have somewhere between – now, I'll have to verify these numbers at some point – 8,500 and 9,000 seniors who receive support from us. A good number of seniors which we did not assist – when the rates came through, they had changed their addresses from home to the long-term care facilities. We didn't know that because our cheques go through direct deposit. So they weren't actually accessing all of the funds that they could and should have and were entitled to.

The other thing that we did was implement at this time, as you know, the desire to have a $265 residual income in there. That also drove it up a little more than what we had anticipated. So the amount of dollars that went into picking up the long-term care rates was considerable, and we had a 4 and a half million dollar shortfall for the year. That isn't the total picture. It wasn't bad planning. It was a matter that we didn't anticipate that those folks would be there.

The other things that I might add. There are two comments. One, the money went out prior to their needing the increase, so they had it in their pockets. Secondly, if you're wondering why August, why not wait, that's a very good point to raise. The reality is that some not-for-profit operators were telling us – and I had no reason not to believe them – that they would be in fact looking at closing beds, and that's something that in this climate we really couldn't have, plus the fact that the rates went up to I believe $42 for a semi-private bed. It's not unreasonable for the services they receive.

In keeping with our philosophy of looking after the people in need, we have done just that, and my colleague from human resources, who also has people in there, has had to come up and work some things out there too. It was a good move. It was prudent. The timing I didn't like any more than anybody else. I'd have liked to give a longer notice, but I believe it was close to two months or whatever it was.

The point that you must remember is that anybody who had a need received the money beforehand, so in fact some actually ended up with a greater amount in their pocket than they had before the increase. We implemented the fact that they had to provide free cable, wander bracelets, incontinence supplies, which were all part of it, and the number of beds that were required. These were all surcharges that you didn't see, and that was bundled into it. So from that aspect I think it was done very well. As I say, we had the system going, and quite frankly the Auditor General will be looking at the involvement of seniors and ourselves, which we welcome.

We will be looking at some other things in terms of our ministry with respect to accommodation and responsibilities there. I believe the General hospital is in your constituency. If you take the trouble to go talk to the people there – Caritas operates it – you'll find that they anticipate through this increase about an additional $670,000. Now, I'm going from memory here, so if I'm off on a number, please don't hold me to it.

They have already committed to two things: one, getting more staff, which has been a cry there, quite a considerable amount more, plus they're looking at menu improvements – whether or not that includes the fruit that you mentioned, I don't know – as per the tenants' wishes, which will cost them an additional $300,000. As it pertains to the operators of the General hospital long-term care, all of the increase that they're receiving, they'll show you, is going right back into tenants' benefits, if you will. So we can't ask for a heck of a lot more than that.

I think that covers the questions. If there is something I've missed out, either give the office a call or drop us a note, and I'll try to cover it for you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I was interested in participating in the debate this afternoon on Bill 14 and certainly interested in the comments from the hon. Minister of Seniors.

Whenever one looks at the issues surrounding seniors, that the income does not necessarily meet the expenses at the end of the month, it is a double-edged sword. When one looks at, for instance, just what the third-quarter fiscal update said about seniors and seniors' expenses, certainly it had increased almost $50 million from the budget. That included $22 million for seniors' benefits to assist low-income seniors with increased long-term care fees, $12 million for the special-needs assistance program, $8 million for operation and maintenance costs of housing facilities, $5 million for affordable housing, and $1 million for homeless shelters. Well, that should certainly be an indicator, a signal that many seniors are having a great deal of difficulty whenever you see that expense increase.

To see here in Bill 14 that there is close to an $11 million allotment, $10.9 million in total for seniors' programs—I would urge the hon. minister and the government to have a look, have another close look in the next couple of weeks before the budget is printed at what is going to be coming next year for retired persons in this province. You look at energy costs; you look at insurance costs. There's no doubt they are high. We're not going to go into this in a great deal of detail, but the programs have to reflect those costs because those costs have certainly changed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the second supplementary supply request by the government in the current fiscal year. Last November 16 government ministries and one office of the Legislative Assembly, the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner – and I think that request certainly was centred around the fact that the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner had to be expanded to look after the new private privacy legislation. But this request for a total of $1.2 billion in supplementary supply for operating expense and equipment/inventory purchases and capital investment was made. It is a large sum of money to request especially since the government's new fiscal framework had just been announced seven months earlier.

We'll certainly have a budget in a couple of weeks, at least I hope we do, and the government will most likely be introducing an interim supply bill in the near future. I as one member of the Official Opposition am aware that there are always situations which arise, but the continued reliance on supplementary supply points to some real problems with the government's budgeting processes and their review/forecasting ability. Relying on supplementary supply to make up for budget shortcomings demonstrates a clear lack of effective management and long-term planning.

I thought that a lot of this would have been solved with the stability fund. The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East had been talking for, well, it seemed to be years about a stability fund, and I guess that in this case imitation is the finest form of flattery because the government finally listened to the hon. member and came forward with the stability plan. Now, many people, including this member, are surprised at how large it has grown, but it certainly makes fiscal stability stronger whenever we can smooth out the peaks and valleys in budgeting. But it can't be used as a re-election fund, and that's what my big fear is.

There is a lot of money. We have a lot of resource revenue. Maybe we should have more. Maybe our royalty collection system needs to be looked at because time is running out as the western Canadian sedimentary basin declines in production of both conventional crude oil and natural gas production.

I'm certainly not advocating that we spend all this surplus at once to get re-elected. I think some of it should be squirrelled away, squirrelled away not for the next election or the one after that but for the next generation. I would like to see something stronger put in place to prevent governments in the near term from getting at this money.

Perhaps we should have a benchmark there, Mr. Chairman. Let's say production of natural gas fell by 50 per cent from its current level by the year 2018. If the production levels fell and there was a reduction in government revenue, then and only then could we access this money that has been squirrelled away. We have to start saving money for the future, whether it is through the Alberta heritage savings trust fund or some other mechanism. These times, unfortunately, are not always going to be with us. We certainly have spending requirements with public health care, public education, and I think we can meet those. I think we could meet those. If we look after the pennies, the dollars will look after themselves.

If we had to reduce the size of cabinet, I think that would be a good place to start, and if I was doing that, I think I would have the hon. Member for Medicine Hat in the cabinet, not outside. I think the hon. member should be there, Mr. Chairman. I don't care who's in it; it just should be smaller. That's one place to start.

We have this new fiscal framework in place. Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act, came about in the spring of 2003, yet we have this amount of money to discuss this afternoon, Mr. Chairman. When you consider that this is a government that portrays itself as prudent and conscious of every dollar, I don't know what is wrong when we need so much money at once in supplementary supply for the second time. I can certainly see where there are emergencies. We've discussed those. But I don't know what signal this sends the Alberta taxpayers.

As you go through this, Mr. Chairman, you see Infrastructure, Innovation and Science, Learning, Health and Wellness, the Human Resources and Employment department, Revenue. Revenue is, interestingly enough, requesting $875,000 for the acquisition of an investment risk management system, and I for one would like to know if the minister could provide more detail on the investment risk management system. I certainly hope this is not what I think it is.

Now, Sustainable Resource Development. A total of $14.8 million is requested to provide for increased firefighting costs as a result of the severe drought conditions. This emergency assistance will be funded, as I understand it, from the sustainability fund. I like the word "stability" fund better.

This ministry requested a total of $113 million for firefighting in the first supplementary estimates last fall. Where were the forest fires during the last four months? Has the minister already spent all of the $113 million that the department requested in supplementary supply for firefighting just four months ago? I would have to question this ministry's budgeting skills because certainly there have not been many fires lately, at least not in the forest. There may have been some in this Assembly, but the forest has been spared.

Human Resources and Employment. Before I conclude, Mr. Chairman, I would like to note that the total amount requested here is $28.6 million, which can be broken down as follows: $14.6 million for supports for independence to address caseload and cost-per-case increases and $14 million for skills investments. How many Albertans are applying for supports for independence at this time? By how much has this number increased over the past year and the past five years? Hopefully, in the budget that is coming forward, there will be an increase in the supports for independence payments and also for those Albertans on AISH.

Now, is the ministry at this time planning on increasing SFI rates? Certainly, we know that inflation is squeezing the poor in this province, whether it is energy costs, whether it's rent costs, food costs. Many people are very, very concerned about the cost of living. There seems to be a reduction in constant dollars if one were to look at SFI benefits in Alberta. If you look at the period of time between 1992 and 2002, the purchasing power of the benefits that SFI clients have has fallen by almost 30 per cent in the last decade. Again, I think we can manage to finance these programs and set some money aside at the same time. It's going to take diligent and prudent management.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I think we can't forget the needs of those who cannot for whatever reason look after themselves with full-time employment, and I would urge the minister in a province as wealthy as Alberta, with the lowest minimum wage in the country, to stand up and, please, on behalf of those that have been budgeting on very little, look at their needs in the budget. This amount, hopefully, is a sign that the ministry finally acknowledges that those rates are not adequate, and hopefully we will see a permanent increase in those rates in this next budget.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to Bill 14 while it is in debate in committee. I was present last week when this House spent two hours looking at the supplementary supply request that was put before it. This was done on Wednesday evening, February 25, and I had a whole lot of questions that I raised and observations that I made at that time. Various departments, from Seniors to Learning to Human Resources to Health and others, were ones that I focused my comments on and raised questions with regard to the supplementary supply requests made by those departments.

In general, first I want to say that this is the second supplementary supply request that has come before this House during the current budget year. We had dealt with the first supplementary supply request in December of 2003 and at that time in the House approved, of course, extra spending, including $780 million in BSE assistance that was put through supplementary estimate number one. In the current supplementary supply estimates, number two that is, $35 million is being added on top of the money allocated for natural gas rebates last fall, totalling $216 million. In total, about $1.1 billion in excess spending was added to the budget in the fall sitting. Another a little over $120 million is being added in supplementary spending that this bill deals with so to a total of close to $1.3 billion in extra spending over the period of the current fiscal year.

Some of the requests deal with clearly unexpected events: the BSE, the forest fires and the disaster relief required as a result, the report of the Learning Commission and the government's response following the release of the report to reduce some pressure at the classroom level through the hiring of some teachers, 1,000 of whom had been let go just in September last year. So some of these elements in this request are quite justified because not everything could have been predicted, particularly dealing with natural disasters or the mad cow disaster that the province has been facing and trying to cope with.

Some others could have been avoided. For example, some of the increases in the seniors' costs were due to the shift in government policy requiring seniors to pay anywhere from 38 per cent to 50 per cent more for long-term care costs. That certainly is something that could well have been avoided and therefore need not have been included in the past year if only the government had cared to wait until the next fiscal year to bring in this policy. I'm opposed to that policy, but even if the government had chosen to bring it forward, it could have waited until next year.

So the route of the supplementary supply request to deal with unpredictables is an appropriate route, but to deal with other predictable expenditures that the government decides to undertake is such that the supplementary supply route is not a desirable route to take. It's much more prudent for the government to think through its policies ahead of the budget and build into the budget whatever resources those shifts in policy are likely to require. While I'm dealing with this general sort of pattern of the way in which government creates the need to seek supplementary supply resources and estimates from the House, it leaves something to be desired.

The unpredictable costs? Yes, we should be as a House always willing to deal with those through the supplementary supply route. But ones that are predictable, the result of deliberate changes in government policy, should not be funded through supplementary supply. I think the government should have the discipline and the foresight to plan properly and wait until the new budget is approved by this House. So that much for the general sort of comments.

One concern, Mr. Chairman, that I expressed during my participation in the debate in the House last Wednesday evening, February 25, had to do with the review of SFI and AISH rates that the Minister of Human Resources and Employment indicated he was going to undertake during this coming year. I had urged him at that time to start the review early rather than late in the year. He had indicated that he didn't think that it was possible for him to proceed with it until September or October this year.

I hear from my own constituents, many of whom are dependent on these government social programs, that they are desperate to see some increase take place in the rates because they are finding it impossible to pay their bills given the present amount, which has been frozen over the last five years now. On a daily basis I get requests from them for me to urge the government to expedite the review and to make changes in the rates so the payments go up as a result of this review, and the sooner this is done the better. Clearly, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment is not in a position to build it into the budget that will be presented here to this House in a couple of weeks, on March 22, I think, but I would like to urge him to advance the dates of the review that he is willing to undertake so that he can increase those rates as soon as possible and then use the supplementary supply route in this case to request the additional funds that will be needed in order to respond to the revised rates for AISH and SFI programs.

Mr. Chairman, the other question that I had on the evening of last Wednesday that I would like to return to had to do with seniors' programs. The Minister of Justice on that day presented, first of all, the supplementary supply estimates for that department and did his very best to respond to the questions and the inquiries that members of the House made to him, including myself. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Seniors to the Hansard issue 7 that includes the debate on the supplementary supply for Wednesday evening, February 25, in which I asked some questions for which the Minister of Justice was not in a position to give detailed answers, and he hoped that the Minister of Seniors would look at those questions that I raised and provide the answers.

For the benefit of the Minister of Seniors I want to draw his attention to the questions that I asked starting on the bottom of page 183, the left-hand column, and going on to about one-third or one-quarter of the right-hand column on that very page. There are several questions there if the minister would be so kind to address them for me.

Part of the question that I had asked, that I've just referred to, was in the form of a bit of a comment related to the concern that seniors and seniors' advocates have been expressing consistently over the last several months now following the death through a serious accident of Mrs. Nelson in this city with respect to the declining quality of the care that seniors receive in the long-term care facilities. That's happening at the same time as seniors are having to pay 37 or 38 per cent to 50 per cent more for the care that they receive.

So the question then is: when these increases were being introduced, they were justified in part, both by the government and certainly by the long-term caregivers association, a private, for-profit group, on the grounds that extra money is needed to increase the quality of care. What we have seen since the introduction of these increases is quite the opposite of what was argued in support of bringing in those extremely high increases all at once. So that was a comment on my part, and I think that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General appropriately called my observations comments to which only the Minister of Seniors can respond.

So I will conclude by asking if the Minister of Seniors would like to respond to my concern. I reiterated in a sense the concerns of seniors' advocates concerning the declining quality of health and, therefore, concerns about the safety of residents in long-term care facilities. And, secondly, to the minister of human resources: I hope he had some time to reflect on whether or not he can advance the date at which the review of AISH and SFI rates will start, if he can tell the House whether he, indeed, is in a position to start the review much sooner than he anticipated in his response to my question on last Wednesday, February 25.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I take exception to the hon. member's comments. There are some inaccuracies. For example, the Long Term Care Association includes most of the long-term care providers: for-profits, not-for-profits, and public providers. Public providers, I stress again. They're all in the association. So it's quite erroneous to say that it appears that it's just for the for-profits.

I think it's extremely inappropriate to judge a system on a sad incident that, indeed, should not have occurred, but to take that incident and say that that is a measure of what happened when the rates went up I think is very, very misleading and again erroneous. The rates did not go up 50 per cent. They went up significantly, yes, but they're still the second lowest in Canada, the second lowest in Canada at that rate.

Also, I would like to point out that in addition to what the tenants pay, there's an average of another $95 a day that the province through the health authorities puts forward to look after the health needs of these people. In my reply to the questions from the Member for Edmonton-Centre I indicated one facility – and granted, it's only one facility – where, in fact, they have indicated that these increased revenues are going to flow back for an improvement to the care that they are giving.

The long-term care provided for the vast majority of the residents in those facilities is excellent. Will you have complaints periodically? Yes. Will they be valid in some cases? Yes. But to say that the whole system is deteriorating on the heels of the increased rates is not accurate by a long shot.

Should we be monitoring the system? Yes. Are we going through and doing our due diligence to ensure that the system will be at the highest possible level? Yes. That's why the Auditor General is involved. That's why the two ministries responsible for housing, Health and Seniors, will be looking at this to ensure that we have the best possible care, the most appropriate care for the people not only in long-term care but in the lodges, in any facilities that we have and are involved with as a government.

So I'd ask the hon. member, before he jumps to conclusions, before he jumps on the bandwagon of people who have been looking for problems continuously and then indicating on one incident, one tragic incident, that the system is somehow all wrong, to reconsider the comments that he's making. If he has legitimate questions to ask, I certainly would be more than pleased to answer them.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that we adjourn debate on this matter at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm glad to get the opportunity in Committee of the Whole to comment on Bill 8, the Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. I believe that this act is in fact flowing from the Alberta Blue Cross Review Committee, chaired by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, that was established in August of 2002 to review the competitive advantages that it has, some governance and accountability. It's now reported back almost a year ago, in April of '03.

It seems that the Alberta Blue Cross Review Committee recommends that the Blue Cross exemption from paying premium tax be removed. There were no changes to the corporate structure of the income tax regime, but this is certainly going to cost that organization money, which will of course be passed on to Albertans, and I'm sure that they will certainly see this as an increased cost in health care.

So we've got a level of the playing field. This is always interesting to me when we get a nonprofit sector that's offering a service and then there seems to be agitation from the profit sector that this isn't fair, that somehow there's an unfair advantage that's given to the not-for-profit agency and, goll darn it, they should not be allowed to do this, and they've got the famous level playing field. I'd like to see this level playing field some day. I'd really like to see it because I've never actually seen all these changes result in a level playing field. Most importantly, they do not result in a level playing field for Albertans. It results in a fairly steep incline out of their pocketbook.

And what is so wrong? We had a nonprofit agency that was providing insurance for additional services closely connected to the health care sector. There was a reasonable premium. People could choose not to purchase it if they didn't wish to, although most seniors are involved in it because it's offered as a program through the government. What is so wrong with that service?

Health care – oh, maybe that's where it all falls apart. Here's where the Liberal opposition and the government members really part ways: whether health care is a commodity, something that can be bought and sold and subjected to supply and demand and market-driven forces, which seems to be where the government comes from, versus where the opposition comes from, that this is a necessary service. Access becomes a very important key component of it, and it needs to be as accessible as possible to all people.

The idea that we need to sell more health care or increase the demand for health care that somehow results in an additional payment – I mean, I don't think that health care is like selling hamburgers or running shoes. It's just not. We don't really want to create a demand for it. We don't really want people saying: "Gee, my neighbour had a hip operation. I want one too, and could I get it in blue, please?" It's not a situation that we want to see ourselves in. We want to reduce the demand on the system.

The other example I can think of with this was that we had seniors' residences, some of which offered a cafeteria-style breakfast and lunch, I think, not dinner. There was an argument from the nearby business community that this was an unfair business advantage, that these seniors' centres were offering food for a charge. It was a minimal charge, but it was a charge. The nearby restaurants wanted this unfair advantage removed. Either they had to charge so-called market rates or they had to stop doing it because the business community was at a disadvantage; it was not a level playing field.

Well, when you really looked at it, what was going on here? I mean, most of these were cafeterias that were housed inside high-rise apartment buildings that were filled with self-contained units for seniors. Part of what they were trying to do with the cafeteria was to get people out and get them socializing. This was part of a preventative health approach. If they could get people coming down into the cafeteria and socializing with other people, there would be friendship and support and better mental health, and this, in turn, would pay off in terms of overall better health and less cost to the system. In fact, the argument was finally won.

This was all taking place in the context of tax-exempt status, and this was another part of the unfair advantage that these little cafeterias had. So the fact that they were providing a service that was beyond that of simply food production or offering of food to be purchased was a determining factor.

I fail to see how the argument is different here. We have a nonprofit that was offering a reasonable service. It benefited Albertans. It was offered at a reasonable cost to them. I fail to see who was being incredibly disadvantaged here, except if you buy into the argument that health care should be available to those with the most money to pay and should in fact be moving towards a privatized system. Then this makes sense to me.

I don't see what was so wrong with the system that we had, that had been in place for some time, except that you've got certain industry interests that want a piece of the pie. They want some of the action. But I don't see that once you bring in those for-profit operators this is going to offer a better service at a better price to Albertans.

So once again we're bringing in a private sector here, and in some cases a private sector that is going to benefit from taxpayer dollars in that the government already offers Blue Cross to seniors at no cost. So these private operators are going to get taxpayer dollars. This isn't simply a matter of additional services that people either pay for and get or don't pay for and cannot access. It seems to me that the private sector is always interested in health care when they're going to get access to taxpayer dollars, and that's certainly what seems to be happening here. So I don't see this as an advantage at all for Albertans.

We have these amendments that are levelling the playing field between Alberta Blue Cross and the private health insurance companies, and part of the levelling of this I think is that it's now going to require Blue Cross to begin paying this 2 per cent premium tax like the private health insurance companies do on their private insurance programs. Now, I'm not sure why we have an additional tax in here, because one presumes these private industries are already paying business taxes as levied upon them. So what's the additional levy for, and why is it connected around the health program? If I could get an explanation of that, that would be helpful.

The bill is also introducing the payment in lieu of tax, the pilot program for net income from Blue Cross's operations excluding the government-sponsored benefits programs, and those were the ones for seniors that I was talking about.

I did try to review Hansard to see if the sponsoring member had responded to some of the points that my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview had raised. Unfortunately, the section that I downloaded just contains his comments. So if the member did respond, I'm not aware of it, and I apologize if I repeat here. In that case, feel free to refer me to Hansard and the page number, and I will quite happily read it on my own time and not take up the time of the member or of the Assembly.

My hesitation is manifesting itself in opposition to this bill. I don't feel that the changes that are proposed here ultimately are in the best interests of Albertans. I think what it does is put the interests of private health insurance companies ahead of ordinary Albertans, and frankly I never feel that large corporations, particularly insurance companies, really need my help as a legislator to do well. They seem to do just dandy on their own. But I do find that ordinary Albertans often do need my help in the form of legislation that makes it easier for them or more accessible to them or ensures that there is equal access to services. We have so-called ordinary Albertans – I'm not going to use that term any more; I don't think any Albertan is ordinary. They're left to pay for increased insurance premiums and, I think, decreased support from health initiatives.

Now, I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview has a couple of times referred to questioning the rationale of the sponsoring member for reversing what seemed to be the position of the committee that she was chairing, that the committee came out with one series of recommendations and then those recommendations got flipped around. As I heard the Member for Calgary-Mountain View say earlier: you must be reading the graph upside down; turn it the other way around, and you'll see. It sounds like there was one series of recommendations which were then turned upside down, and the reverse was in fact recommended.

If I could just get an explanation of why that happened. You know, was there information that the committee didn't see or didn't understand that would have caused the reversal in what the recommendation was coming out of the committee? I guess the argument is that if that's the basis for what this bill is proposing, then perhaps it's coming forward under flawed circumstances or with a flawed reasoning behind it, and it's not sufficient to uphold the bill.

We have the two so-called levellings, which are the 2 per cent insurance premium that would now be required of Blue Cross and then the removal of Alberta Blue Cross's tax-exempt status on its non government-funded business and making it subject to the same so-called pilot program, which does require Blue Cross to remit an amount equal to the combined federal and provincial taxes that would be applicable on income from its nonprofit business. We can certainly, without trying too hard, see how that's going to affect Alberta Blue Cross, and of course they're going to end up passing that on to Albertans.

This is not a victimless decision here. This is going to affect Albertans in their pocketbook instantly, and there's no question that's who ends up paying the difference here. What we've really done is give a huge advantage to the private health care companies by giving them access to government-funded programs like the seniors' Blue Cross at the same time as downloading increased costs upon Albertans. Given that rationale I find it very difficult to – well, no, I don't find it difficult at all. I will not support this bill under those circumstances.

There's not much more that I can say about the bill except for the regulations. Once again what we're seeing is a shifting, a creation, a furthering of these sorts of empty shell bills where there's really not much meat in the actual bill but where everything else is referred to the minister or to Executive Council to make changes a little further on. Those changes don't ever have to come back before the Legislative Assembly, so we don't hear what the comment is or what the rationale is from the members of the Assembly. It's impossible for their constituents to follow through and find out why their member was supportive of passing a certain bill. It's all done behind closed doors, and no minutes are kept. There's no Hansard recording of it. People have no way of understanding what the rationale was or what the arguments and thinking were behind the changes.

I protest this every time I see it, which, frankly, is every bill the government brings forward. So if the members opposite are getting a little tired of hearing this speech, I'm a little tired of giving it. If the government would kindly stop doing it, I could stop giving the speech. Then we'd all be a little happier.

So those are the points I want to make on this bill. I could see the member making notes as I spoke, and she's always very good about giving detailed explanations. We're in Committee of the Whole, so she can stand up and give me some answers right now, and that would be excellent.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to Bill 8 in the Committee of the Whole debate. The Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, Bill 8, is a very interesting bill. It's brought forward by a minister and by a government that's at the same time committed to reducing health care costs and to making health care in this province, and perhaps beyond, affordable and sustainable.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, is also a bill that runs against the recommendations of the government's own committee on Alberta Blue Cross, a committee that was chaired by one of the prominent Tory backbenchers, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. That committee recommended against what this bill is trying to accomplish; that is, to remove the exemptions with respect to taxation for ABC, Alberta Blue Cross, which is a creature of this Assembly's own statutes, to operate in this province as a nonprofit provider of health care coverage, particularly for supplementary health services.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, Albertans are curious why a government that on the one hand is trying to scare everyone into believing that our health care expenditures are unaffordable and that therefore the health care system in its present form is unsustainable and needs radical surgery, which, I guess, Dr. No is likely to spearhead in providing, then brings in legislation that will in fact add to the costs of health care coverage in this province. I think the government's own committee very clearly states that that will be the case, and in spite of the committee's recommendations against proceeding with this, the government has decided to go ahead with it nevertheless.

So Albertans are watching. They're curious and they're not pleased with the fact that this is what's happening here. The government's argument is a very specious argument, Mr. Chairman, in defence of removing some of the exemptions from taxation that this bill is trying to do with respect to Alberta Blue Cross as a nonprofit agency, which has served public interest and public good most effectively, in my view. Its argument is that it must operate under exactly the same conditions as the private insurance companies do. A strange argument to call it a level playing field. Why is it incumbent on this government to put first and foremost the interests of private insurance companies, who are doing well, thank you, without the help of this government and doing exceedingly well, and do so by sacrificing the interests of Alberta citizens?

That's what's so amazing, that the level playing field argument is used to justify the unjustifiable; that is, to increase the burden of seeking health care coverage to Albertans, many of whom are retired seniors, employers who provide supplementary health care through Alberta Blue Cross. The government is absolutely determined to nullify this part of the Alberta advantage that has been enjoyed by close to a million Albertans in this province.

The primary responsibility of government, Mr. Chairman, is always the protection and enhancement of public good and public interest, but this government simply does not seem to recognize this primary obligation of a government democratically elected by its own citizens. It seeks, rather, to enhance the advantage of private insurance companies, who have the right to operate, but they operate in the interests of their own shareholders, not in the interests of all citizens in this province or elsewhere.

An additional impact of this bill, Mr. Chairman, is on people outside of Alberta, particularly tourists who come here from outside of Canada. Many of them see Alberta Blue Cross as an insurer of choice because it provides out-of-country visitors to Alberta supplementary health care coverage or travellers' coverage of health care services at rates which are exceedingly good, enhancing the attractiveness of Alberta with respect to tourists. So the tourism industry itself benefits from the lower and most reasonable premiums that are offered by Alberta Blue Cross under present conditions.

This bill is set to change those conditions, thereby making premiums for the coverage presently provided by ABC, Alberta Blue Cross, more expensive not only for Albertans but also for out-of-country, foreign tourists and visitors to Alberta who find spending time in Alberta resorts, Alberta cities, Alberta's countryside as part of their vacation attractive because Alberta Blue Cross makes available to them coverage for medical purposes at rates which are most attractive.

The burden of meeting some of these extra costs that will result from the so-called level playing field argument which is embodied in this bill will have to be shared not only by individual subscribers to Alberta Blue Cross, who are more than a million in this province, but also by taxpayers in general. Any increased costs that will result from it will in part have to be paid for from our taxes.

So it makes no sense, Mr. Chairman, to proceed with this bill for the reasons that I have given. The question is: why is the government doing it? I think the chair of the Alberta Blue Cross government committee, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, in a TV interview two weeks ago admitted that the reason that the government is proceeding with it is because it was lobbied to make changes in Alberta Blue Cross by the private insurance industry. That is the only lobbyist, the only agency, the only entity that has sought changes in Alberta Blue Cross, changes that will make Blue Cross coverage more expensive for everyone who uses it.

So let there be no doubt that this bill reflects not the concerns, the demands, the expectations of ordinary Alberta families, regular Alberta families who benefit from the operations of ABC. It does not represent the concerns, interests of Albertans in general. It simply represents the interests of the insurance company with a powerful lobby, which apparently has the ear of this government. This government has found it appropriate to ignore the damage, the additional costs that these changes will impose on over a million subscribers who are Albertans, who pay taxes to this government, and it decided to proceed with this legislation, that will hurt the interests of these Albertans, so that a small group of lobbyists can be appeased.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, is a clear example of how this government sets its priorities. When it has to choose between the interests of its citizens as taxpayers, hard-working Albertans who work day and night to pay their bills and use the health care services, on the one hand, and the private insurance companies which are seeking to enter the field that is presently occupied by Alberta Blue Cross as service provider, it chooses the private, for-profit insurance companies' interests and proceeds with a piece of legislation that will do absolutely nothing – absolutely nothing – to reduce the cost of coverage of the services that ABC provides for over a million Albertans, who to this point have been beneficiaries of the operations of Alberta Blue Cross, which, as I said, is nothing other than the creation of a statute which was passed by this Legislature itself.

So in my view this bill, in essence, in addition to increasing the costs to subscribers who are Albertans, in addition to favouring the private interests of the stockholders of those insurance companies that want to sell supplementary health insurance in this province, is also a statement about how it deals with its own history. Institutions that Albertans have built over the years to serve them, serve them at low cost, serve them effectively, are the very institutions that are being undone one by one by the actions of this government.

Bill 8, Mr. Chairman, therefore does not merit the support of this House. It is a bill that needs to be defeated, and I will certainly be voting against this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Chair: Any further speakers to Bill 8? The Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm just going to take this opportunity to respond to the comments raised in Committee of the Whole by the members for Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton-Centre. Regrettably, I think there is a great deal of misunderstanding on the part of those two members as to what these amendments are designed to do. Particularly, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona does not perceive the purpose and intent of these amendments.

The discussion this afternoon has centred around two of the major amendments, which would require Alberta Blue Cross to commence paying the 2 per cent premium tax on its accident and health insurance premiums that it brings in during the year, as is required of private insurance companies that offer private insurance, as well as the requirement for Alberta Blue Cross to commence paying a payment in lieu of income tax, both provincial and federal, on its private insurance programs only.

I can't emphasize enough that there will only be 15 per cent of Alberta Blue Cross's customers affected by these amendments. Alberta Blue Cross has well over a million clients in the province of Alberta, most of which are served by its government-sponsored and government-paid-for or subsidized programs. So if my math is correct, there will be in the vicinity of approximately 150,000 Albertans who are receiving private insurance that are affected by these two main amendments.

At the outset, and I believe I made these remarks in second reading as well, it is our philosophy that when an entity which is a government entity – and Alberta Blue Cross is not owned by government; it is a creature of legislation. It isn't owned by government. It's not owned by shareholders. It is a nonprofit. It is certainly controlled by government, because government has the right to wind it up should that ever become necessary. It certainly has a connection to government, so it is our philosophy that whenever such an entity competes with private enterprise in the provision of goods or services, then it is proper that that government entity not have a competitive advantage which is built in and provided by government.

In this case, the status quo right now is that Alberta Blue Cross does not pay income tax, and it does not pay premium tax on its private insurance business where it competes with private industry. This is the competitive advantage that we are addressing and for which we are levelling the playing field to provide a fair market situation.

Just perhaps for greater clarification I'm going to go over what business is not affected by these amendments. Now, under the Alberta health care insurance plan we have three categories of coverage. We've got the basic health services, we've got extended health benefits, and then we have Alberta Blue Cross nongroup coverage, which is the 85 per cent of its business that is not affected by these amendments. I'm just going to give a description of what that is.

This Alberta Blue Cross nongroup coverage is available to all Albertans, and it is supplemental health insurance plans for drugs and other selected health services. These supplemental plans are funded by Alberta Health and Wellness and administered by Alberta Blue Cross for a fee paid for by government. Premium-free coverage is offered to seniors and their dependants, to recipients of the Alberta widow's pension and their dependants, and to people who have been diagnosed as being palliative and receive their treatments at home.

There is also a universal plan available to all Albertans under the age of 65 and for their dependants, subject to the payment of a quarterly premium. None of those programs will be affected, nor will any of the programs provided by a second government department, that being Alberta Human Resources and Employment drug benefit programs, which include these categories: supports for independence, AISH, and the Alberta child's health benefit. So none of those programs, representing 85 per cent of the business of Alberta Blue Cross, will be affected.

What will be affected are the prepaid supplementary health care plans to employer groups and also individual health plans for Albertans under the age of 65 who are self-employed and are without an employer-sponsored health benefit plan as well as individual health plans for Albertans 65 years of age and over which would complement or augment their government-sponsored seniors' coverage that they already receive. The third category is travel insurance, which Blue Cross has been providing.

The argument that there will be, potentially, an increase in cost that will be transferred to the subscribers of those types of insurance only stands to reason. However, Alberta Blue Cross has given its undertaking to pursue strategies, to find administrative efficiencies, and to be more appropriate in the reserve fund that they maintain so that they will limit the impact on their customers, their clients, their private insurance clients, and they're hoping to keep that increase to 1 per cent or less. By example, a calculation has been done for a family paying $140 per month for this comprehensive, extra private insurance, which could include for dental and glasses. Even if the premium increase was as high as 2 per cent, that would translate to $3 per month in increased premiums, so certainly nothing that is unmanageable.

I hope that that explanation has made it a little clearer, particularly for the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who has been stating in questions in question period and again this afternoon that this is going to impact over a million Albertans, for it is not going to do that.

One of the aims of the amendments is such that we will segregate the government business from the private business that Blue Cross engages in, and it will be very clear from an accounting point of view that one is not cross-subsidizing the other, which was one of the complaints that gave rise to this review.

Now, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has stated here this afternoon that I admitted in a certain TV interview that I personally was lobbied by an insurance company and that's why I changed my mind on one of the recommendations in this report. Well, I didn't see that TV interview, and I'll eat my hat if I said that. I have to assume that perhaps some of the comments that I was making were summarized in a way that led to that conclusion.

Now, I think members and the members opposite all have a copy of the report of the review committee, so I would refer them to pages 19 and 20 of the report for a full discussion on the issue of whether Alberta Blue Cross should be exempted from income tax. Three options were discussed. One was to maintain the status quo, which would leave Alberta Blue Cross tax-exempt. One other option was to introduce the payment-in-lieu-of-tax program on all of the net income from all activities of Blue Cross. The third was to introduce this program just in respect to the business that falls into the private insurer's category, and that was the one that was chosen by the majority of government members.

The reason that the members on my committee felt that there was perhaps a good reason for leaving the status quo in place was that as part of its legislated mandate Alberta Blue Cross is required to participate in programs which benefit the health of Albertans, and in fact Blue Cross does this by participating in the Alberta Tobacco Reduction Alliance and also the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research and a few other programs, which does involve an expense. The thinking was that private insurance companies don't have to do that and don't have that particular expense. But in the final analysis it was the conclusion of government that those requirements were not sufficient to maintain the status quo and that it was preferred that the playing field be levelled for both income tax and the premium tax.

So I hope those comments go some distance in providing clarification for the purpose of these amendments. Those are my comments, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chair: Is there any further speaking to Bill 8? The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise and return to my concerns about Bill 8, the Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. I have, I think, put before the House my reasons for why I am concerned about the bill. I just want to put on record a statement here which was posted at 5:24 p.m., Thursday, February 9, by CFCN.ca. The title of the statement is: MLA goes against own committee on Blue Cross. I want to read it verbatim because the Member for Calgary-Lougheed raised some questions about remarks that I made earlier. This is what follows, word by word, Mr. Chairman.

A Calgary MLA is admitting that she ignored her own committee's recommendations on Alberta Blue Cross. A committee studied whether or not the non-profit health insurance company should be allowed to keep its tax exemption. The majority of committee members recommended that the company should keep its tax-free status. But Calgary Lougheed MLA . . . says she went against that advice when it came time to write the report's final summary. "I personally felt that it was more consistent that they be required to pay income tax," said [the Calgary-Lougheed MLA]. "But that wasn't the consensus view." [The Calgary-Lougheed MLA] also admits the reason she looked into the issue of revoking Alberta Blue Cross' tax exemption was because private health insurance providers asked her to. The final committee report, chaired by [the MLA], predicts consequences for Albertans if the company loses its [exemption]. It says Alberta Blue Cross users would face fee increases and the company won't be able to provide the same level of service. It also points out that the company offers services to small businesses and rural Albertans that private insurers don't. But in spite of the recommendations, the province still intends to remove the exemption.

That's the end of the statement, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to put it on record to share with the House and the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed the basis of my comments there.

I have three different amendments. I'll start with the first amendment. I move that Bill 8, Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, be amended in section 1(9) by striking out clause (a). I would like the amendment to be distributed, Mr. Chairman, and I'll wait before I proceed with my remarks.

The Acting Chair: Okay. Amendment A1.

Dr. Pannu: You'll call it A1?

The Acting Chair: Right. We'll just wait a minute until the amendments have been distributed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The intent of the amendment, amendment A1, is to strike out that clause (a) of section 1(9). The rationale for that is quite clear. Section 1(9)(a) is proposed to be struck from the act because it allows the cabinet to place unnecessary restrictions around both the programs and services that can be offered, governing the nature and extent of those programs.

Surely, the board of directors of Alberta Blue Cross, an organization that has been providing services over the last 50 years under the direction of the board of directors, should be responsible for determining the nature and scope of Blue Cross's activities so long as those are consistent with the legislation under which it is established. The Blue Cross directors should be able to do so without the political interference of the provincial cabinet. The provision that I propose should be struck out could open the door for the cabinet behind closed doors to decide to limit Blue Cross activities, require them to divest of some programs which are deemed to be not to the liking of the private health insurance industry. So that in a nutshell is the rationale for amendment A1, Mr. Chairman.

I think that if the House votes for this amendment, it will certainly protect Alberta Blue Cross from political interference by the cabinet, which I think is an appropriate thing to seek to have in place. Alberta Blue Cross has worked without political control and political interference by the cabinets of this province for the last 50 years and done so faultlessly. There is no evidence, based on the past behaviour and performance of Alberta Blue Cross, which would justify the cabinet seeking these exceptional powers to be able to alter the mandate of Blue Cross.

If anything I think the cabinet needs to keep its hands out of the business of Alberta Blue Cross and allow Alberta Blue Cross to serve Albertans, as it has done with distinction over the last 50 years, without encumbering its ability to do so. I think the provisions of section 1(9) would encumber the Alberta Blue Cross and its board of directors' ability to continue to provide those valuable services at low cost to Albertans who seek to make use of those services.

So I would like to urge all members of the House to support this amendment, vote for it so that we can continue to enjoy the benefits that Alberta Blue Cross over the last 50 years has been so ably able to deliver. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Ms Graham: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to be really brief here. The purpose of section 1(9) of the bill is to provide a definition for what actually is the Alberta Blue Cross plan because there never has been a definition for the 50 years that the member speaks of. So for just the reasons that the member was talking about, it's important that we define what the program is so that it will continue in the form that it is in.

The other reason for wanting to get a definition is to limit the ability of the corporation to get into areas of insurance which could bring with it a high risk to the corporation, thereby adversely affecting other programs it provides. This is all about protecting what we have now, because all of the programs that it provides will be included in the definition, but it will protect subscribers from here on in so that they won't be subject to unnecessary risks.

So this is a good thing, and I would urge all members to defeat the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Acting Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Shall I proceed?

The Acting Chair: Yes.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, the next amendment that I would like to move is that Bill 8, Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, be amended (a) in section 1 by striking out subsection (8) and (b) by striking out section 2.

The Acting Chair: The amendment that is being distributed will be called amendment A2.

Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, please proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak to amendment A2. The bill in its unamended form requires Alberta Blue Cross to pay Alberta Revenue an amount equal to what they would have paid in federal and provincial corporate income taxes if they were a for-profit corporation. A2 would strike from the act an amendment to the Alberta corporate income tax that makes Blue Cross subject to paying the 2 per cent insurance premiums on its non government-sponsored programs.

In requiring Blue Cross to make payments in lieu of taxes, the government has disregarded the advice of its own Blue Cross Review Committee, which was chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, a committee that warned that this would drive up premium costs and possibly lead to its privatization or will be perceived to facilitate privatization.

It fails to recognize that Blue Cross has a public service mandate to be a not-for-profit provider of extended health and dental benefits. Taxing Blue Cross like a for-profit corporation will drive up costs for policy holders and transfer those benefits to companies like Great-West Life.

Again, it seems to me that there's no useful purpose to having Blue Cross pay the insurance premium tax. It is not the job of government to serve the interests of the private health industry. It is the government's job to keep extended health and dental benefits as reasonably priced as possible. That's why I would ask hon. members in this House to support this amendment and vote for it.

Thank you.

The Acting Chair: The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would now like to take this opportunity to present my third and final amendment. I have copies of this amendment ready to be circulated.

The Acting Chair: This will be amendment A3. Please just wait a moment until they are all distributed.

Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, please proceed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With your permission I'd like to move that Bill 8, Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, be amended in section 1 by striking out subsection (7). Now, to speak briefly in favour of the amendment, I just want to draw to the attention of the House, Mr. Chairman, that until now the Insurance Act has not applied to Alberta Blue Cross in recognition of the fact that it's not an insurance company but rather a nonprofit provider of extended health and dental benefits established under provincial legislation.

This amendment strikes out a provision that's completely unnecessary and possibly interferes with the board of directors of Blue Cross to run their business as they see fit. The Blue Cross legislation currently states that the Insurance Act does not apply to Blue Cross operations. There's no need, therefore, to further restrict the scope of Blue Cross's activities to provide whatever insurance products they see fit on a nonprofit basis to Albertans. The only test that should be applied to whether Alberta Blue Cross should be restricted in the range of services to be provided is whether or not it does that job efficiently, effectively, and in a cost-effective manner. No evidence has been produced to show that that is not being accomplished under current legislation by Alberta Blue Cross in the services that it provides.

Again, I want to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that Alberta Blue Cross works well. It is important to leave it to itself to continue to provide those most valued services at the lowest possible cost to Albertans. Therefore, I urge my colleagues in the House to support this amendment and vote for it.

Thank you.

Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments? The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks for the opportunity to speak to Bill 9, the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Amendment Act. What we're looking at here is that this is bringing in exceptions. The rules that we have on the books right now say that minors are totally banned from possessing tobacco, but that doesn't help for those convenience stores where you've got someone that's under 18 working at the front counter, especially in the mom-and-pop operations. So this is changing it to allow minors who are working in convenience stores to be able to handle those tobacco products as, sort of, point of sale.

It would also allow the stings that the government occasionally gets involved in where they send in under-age people to try and capture someone willing to sell cigarettes.

Mr. Hancock: They're not under age.

Ms Blakeman: I'm sorry. They're not under age? They just look like they're under age; is that the trick? Okay. All right. So the trick is they look like they're under age, but they're not. So really this is just affecting the store employees.

It's also giving us a wider definition of public place for the purposes of enforcement of the act.

My concern about this is that we keep coming back and sort of adding on pieces to what we're doing rather than having a comprehensive tobacco control legislation. You know, I raised the other day during question period that we're still allowing smoking in the Edmonton Remand Centre, and I get fairly consistent commentary from the staff that are having to be exposed to that second-hand smoke. So I would prefer that we saw one large comprehensive piece of legislation rather than the piecemeal.

I don't think that what we've had so far has been terribly effective. There seems to be some desire from the government to follow through on this but not enough to be forceful enough to make it happen. So we just are completely lacking comprehensive tobacco control legislation.

Our Liberal opposition MLAs are on record as speaking out against the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act not because we want youth to be smoking – no, that's not it at all – but because this focuses on the wrong part of the problem.

The Acting Chair: As per Standing Order 4(3) the committee stands adjourned until 8 p.m.

For the benefit of our visitors up in the gallery the committee stage is a very informal stage where you'll see people moving around and taking off their jackets, but if you were to come during the other session when the Assembly is meeting, it would be much more formal. Your MLA will be introducing you shortly. He's just trying to get some information about the group.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to introduce to the members of the Assembly the Boys and Girls Club of Red Deer. I believe it's called the Keystone Club, if I've got that right. You're going to have to help me with the names because I can't read this very well. I believe the adults that are accompanying the club are Gerald Laurin, Trish Gislason, and Veronica Stasiuk. These are fine visitors from the lovely city of Red Deer, the host of the 2004 Scott Tournament of Hearts and many other events in the past. We're delighted that you can spend some time visiting us tonight, and we hope you enjoy your visit. Would you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Bill 14 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity at Committee of the Whole to make some further comments about Bill 14. The bill asks for $120,672,000 in supplementary funding. It's broken down across a number of departments, and it raises a number of questions with respect, for instance, to the new fiscal framework.

Bill 2, the Financial Statutes Amendment Act in the spring of 2003, put in law several new fiscal rules that were supposed to protect Albertans from riding the energy roller coaster, and that new framework was supposed to put an end to stop-and-start program funding. It was also at the time touted as a bill that would reduce the government's reliance on supplementary supply, yet in less than a year we're back with a request in front of us.

It makes it difficult, I think, for Albertans to understand this kind of start-and-stop spending, and it's certainly difficult for institutions – for hospitals, for schools, and for infrastructure – for those people supplying services to be caught in a budget cycle that is unpredictable. It also makes it very hard to make sense of the business plans and to really take seriously the business plans when we see some of them modified. We've seen, for instance, in this past year budgets in some of those departments modified twice through a supplementary supply.

That's not to say, Mr. Chairman, that there are not legitimate reasons for supplementary supply for the government to have to respond to unforeseen circumstances. I don't think we'd be unreasonable enough to expect that that wouldn't happen. But it's the regularity with which it seems to occur that we find bothersome, and we find it difficult, again, to put credence into the kind of planning that's put before us at budget time and in the business plans knowing full well that before the year is out, those plans will likely, if past practice is any indication, be changed.

It's a practice that each time it comes before the House we've remarked on. We've been supportive of some of the supplementary supply requests, as I indicated, but we think the practice is one that has become incorporated into the way the government does its planning, and we think that that's an unfortunate turn of events. The stability fund was supposed to be in place to take up the slack and to give the government the kind of flexibility it needed, but it doesn't seem to work.

There is money here with respect to the Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development department and the costs attributed to implementing the Fort McKay First Nation land claim settlement, and it seems that this was a sum that could have been expected.

There are some I think defensible requests in Health and Wellness. I think the West Nile virus threat was something that was thrust upon the government, and some of the increased health benefits program costs couldn't be foreseen, but I think things like Alberta Wellnet for the pharmaceutical information network are more appropriately budget line items at budget time than requests at supplementary requisition.

Similarly, for Human Resources and Employment it would seem that there are legitimate requests there when you have additional caseloads and increased costs per case. Those are things that you can't predict. But with respect to the skills investments program, again that would seem to be more appropriate as a budget line item.

In Infrastructure the gas rebates are really, again, something the government can't control, although it's hard to understand why a sum wasn't put in the budget in anticipation of what might have been. It raises the question, because this is the second time this year we've been back for rebate money, about the quality of the planning that's being undertaken.

Innovation and Science. They raised the questions before about Imagas and the questions that the Auditor General has raised about that program and the shortcomings that seem to be associated with it and that still have to be addressed.

The Department of Learning. It's a curious sort of set of requests in Learning because at the time of the arbitrated teachers' settlement, the government's refrain was: there's no more money. The minister and the Premier went out of their way to make that abundantly clear, and they used that phrase over and over again: there's no more money. Yet we have in front of us a total of $14,600,000 in supplementary supply requested to alleviate cost pressures, increased costs.

So it's a little hard, I think, for Albertans and in particular for teachers and school boards to understand why at a point several months ago, when they were faced with increased costs, the government's reaction was no more money, yet here in front of us there obviously is more money, another $16 million, that's been put into the system. It seems that the previous statements could have been nothing more than political and had little to do with responding to legitimate costs that boards were facing as a result of the arbitrated teachers' settlement.

The $3,500,000 for future cost of student loans issued and the heritage scholarship money is understandable, but the other increases again seem to be arbitrary and put forth in a spirit that's not consistent with what the government said was the real situation just a few short months ago.

The request for Seniors, the need for additional year-round and seasonal beds in homeless shelters, the costs of long-term care accommodation fees: large dollars being put into those. It seems, again, that the planning that leaves those seniors facing huge increases and then requests coming along for this kind of injection this late in the year raises questions about the kind of planning that's going on with respect to accommodation for seniors.

Mr. Chairman, those are some of the comments that I wanted to make. I guess one last one, Sustainable Resource Development. Again it seems to be a legitimate request for a supplementary requisition. No one can predict the kind of firefighting situation that the province is going to face, and you do your best guess in terms of estimates. Obviously, no one could have predicted what was going to happen last year, so it does seem to be a legitimate use of the supplementary requisition process.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill 14, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2004. I have to start my comments with the whole idea that not too long ago in this Assembly we passed Bill 2, which was the highly touted new fiscal framework for the province. This occurred in the Financial Statutes Amendment Act in the spring of 2003. What this particular act did was enshrine into law several new fiscal rules that promised Albertans would be protected from riding the energy roller coaster. This new fiscal framework was supposed to put an end to stop-and-start program funding and the government's reliance on supplementary supply.

Yet here we are again in this Assembly less than a year later, and we are not following the framework that was in Bill 2. Bill 2 capped government resource revenue spending at $3.5 billion, but recently the Premier announced that new legislation would be introduced this spring to raise that resource revenue spending cap by $500 million, to $4 billion, most of which is earmarked for health and education. In that regard, I certainly know that both of these areas can use that money.

Now, then, as well, I had a call here last week from the Glengarry

Child Care Society. They've been in operation now for 32 years. Most of the children that are there, in fact 90 per cent of the children, are in single-parent families. They owe a tremendous amount of money for the cost of utilities. The single-parent families are now responsible for 68 per cent of all costs, and these costs range, just to operate the building, in the neighbourhood of $5,800 to as high as $6,500. They are a nonprofit society, and they certainly cannot keep going at this pace.

So what happens in that situation, where those people are certainly trying to take care of their families, trying to have an affordable place for them to leave their children when they are studying or working? In that case, I know that when they look at the supplementary supply that we are debating tonight, some assistance certainly will be of some help but, again, not enough to keep the costs reasonable for these people.

This Bill 14, the supplementary supply, is the second supplementary supply requested by the government in the current fiscal year. In November 2003 16 government ministries and one office of the Legislative Assembly requested a total of $1.251 billion in supplementary supply for operating expense and equipment and/or inventory purchases and capital investment. This was a considerable amount of supplementary supply to request, especially since the government's new fiscal framework had just been announced seven months earlier.

So we still have not in this province reached the point of stability. We are still coming back to this Assembly again and again for supplementary supply, and we still have not conquered the challenge of: how do we deal with our boom and bust economy? It seems that we have continual spending and continual extra demands for money.

Now, one of the areas that we have listed as some of the requests for supplementary supply is in the area of Infrastructure, and there is a total of $35 million requested to provide for natural gas rebates. The same ministry requested a total of $180 million for natural gas rebates in the first supplementary estimates, in November of 2003, so in this winter it brings the total amount requested by Infrastructure for natural gas rebates to $215 million.

One of the questions that have arisen because of the amount requested in total of $215 million, $35 million of which is requested in this particular set of supplementary estimates, is: how much money in total is the government expecting to distribute to Albertans as natural gas rebates? If, as well, we could learn how much money was spent on natural gas rebates for January and February and how much those rebates are targeted to be spent this March. Another question that we would certainly like to ask is: has the $180,600,000 requested by this ministry in supplementary supply four months ago been spent entirely?

So while I'm sure many, many Albertans are looking forward to the rebates, Mr. Chairman, and quite rightfully so, I think there are still some answers here that are required, and I look forward to those. Thank you very much.

Second Reading
Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move Bill 10, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, for second reading.

Mr. Speaker, it's almost a tradition in the House in the last number of years that there be a Justice Statutes Amendment Act to bring together minor amendments to a number of justice acts under a single bill for debate and amendment. This year is no different. Amendments to seven acts are proposed in Bill 10.

Perhaps the most significant change proposed is a new provision which will allow our courts to order monetary awards to be paid in instalments. Simply put, this change will help to protect current and future needs of Albertans impacted by injury or death. These changes are similar to the changes that were introduced last year in the Insurance Act Amendment Act for judgments in automobile claims.

Presently a court has no jurisdiction to award damages to be disbursed by periodic payments to a claimant rather than in a lump sum without the consent of the parties. Because the consent of all parties is needed to allow for periodic payments, most court judgments are made in a lump sum payable upon the judgment being made.

Courts and the legal community have indicated that lump-sum awards can present significant problems. Over the years this can create additional challenges for victims of serious injuries or for families who have lost an income earner. For example, lump-sum payments are subject to inflation and tax on investment income. The difficulties are greatest where there is a continuing need for intensive and expensive care and long-term loss of earning capacity.

Periodic payments provide protection from premature dissipation of awards by accident victims either spending their awards or greatly reducing them through investment choices. Mr. Speaker, I don't have the exact figures at hand, but in the global area research would suggest that when you have lump-sum awards, even of large magnitude, up to 80 per cent of the people who achieve those lump-sum awards have spent them, have no money left two years after the award has been received. So when you have a person who's been provided with a judgment to compensate for loss of future income or to compensate for expenses going into the future for care because of a catastrophic injury, you can see that a lump-sum award in those cases doesn't actually do the trick.

The structured settlements have proven to be a very good solution to many of the problems associated with lump-sum awards. A structured settlement usually consists of an immediate cash award and an annuity. If structured in the normal way through an annuity, payments to the plaintiff are not subject to tax. The initial cash award is usually in an amount to cover special damages incurred before trial including out-of-pocket expenses and legal fees, immediate capital needs to pay for items such as a specially equipped house or wheelchair van or prosthetic devices, and then the initial cash payment is followed by periodic payments.

Where damages are claimed in court for personal injuries, for the death of a person, or under the Fatal Accidents Act, any party may ask a judge to order that damages be paid in whole or in part by periodic payments. The judgment must identify the specific damages for which the periodic award is to be made. For each of those damages it must also set out the amount of each payment, the date or the interval between each payment, the recipient, any annual percentage increase in the amount of each payment, the date or event on which payments will terminate, and it can include other material provisions that the court considers appropriate. The court may order financial security to ensure that the payments will be made.

On the consent of all of the affected parties the court can order that there be a future review and changes to the award as the court considers appropriate. On the death of a plaintiff any remaining periodic payments will be paid to the estate of that person until the termination date unless the judgment provides otherwise.

Payments for loss of future earnings are exempt from garnishment, attachment, execution, or any other process or claim to the same extent that wages or earnings are exempt under Alberta law. Payments for the cost of future care cannot be assigned to anyone unless the assignment is to a provider of care for the cost of products, services, or accommodation provided and is approved by the court. These provisions would apply to all court cases whether commenced before or after the day that the amendments come into force.

Mr. Speaker, Ontario and Manitoba have general enabling legislation for structured settlements of this nature. British Columbia and Saskatchewan have provisions for structured settlements restricted to automobile accidents, similar to the provisions under the Insurance Act. These amendments with respect to structured settlements would be amendments to the Judicature Act.

Now I'll address changes to three justice acts that all involve the validation of rules of court. There is a Rules of Court Committee, which features representatives from the Court of Appeal, Court of Queen's Bench, Provincial Court, the Law Society, and Alberta Justice, and it makes recommendations for changes to civil court practices and procedures. It has been our practice to embody those recommendations through an order in council without change.

These changes, including those affecting substantive law, are forwarded by the Rules of Court Committee to the Minister of Justice for consideration, and as I said, normally we accept the advice of the Rules of Court Committee. To be clear, substantive law involves anything that affects a litigant's rights. For example, there is a rule that if a party does not take steps to advance a claim after five years, the action will be dismissed. Another example would be any change to policy or procedure which involves which costs may be recovered in a civil proceeding.

After the recommendations for changes are submitted by the Rules of Court Committee, they are implemented through an order in council and then validated in legislation at a later date through, usually, a Justice Statutes Amendment Act. A separate validation process is necessary because provincial legislation does not explicitly state that the Lieutenant Governor in Council can make changes that affect substantive law.

So with Bill 10 we are making three changes to address this issue today and for the future. First, with a minor amendment to the Judicature Act the Rules of Court will be validated for the first time since 1997 as per the process that I just explained. Second, amendments to the Court of Queen's Bench Act and the Court of Appeal Act will state that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make the rules of practice and procedure that affect substantive law as long as they do not conflict with federal or provincial laws. This will eliminate the need for a separate validation process in the future and remove any confusion as to whether or not the rules are valid between the time in which they have been approved by order in council and validated by statute.

From a public and a legal community perspective these minor changes will have no direct impact because the rules committee will continue to be the body which recommends changes that it deems appropriate to the Rules of Court, and those changes will continue to be affirmed, of course, through order in council.

The next area of amendment deals with the area of electronic documents. Alberta Justice is always looking to take advantage of new technologies to streamline the way we do business or to enhance existing programs to reduce costs. A minor change under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act will set the stage for us to do just that. This amendment will allow the courts to process tickets electronically.

Currently our court administrators are struggling to process the 1.3 million paper tickets that they receive annually, and it goes without saying that processing tickets electronically should be a much more efficient way of handling ticket volumes. This will allow enforcement agencies to file tickets with the court by transferring data electronically. This will generally apply to offences under the Traffic Safety Act. The change is expected to provide significant cost savings for court administration and the enforcement agencies, usually police, while having no impact on defendants who will still receive paper tickets by mail.

The amendment removes three barriers that have prevented the use of an electronic version of the tickets: the need for a ticket to be in a prescribed form, the need for a peace officer to sign an electronic ticket that's filed with the court, and the need for a justice of the peace to review the electronic ticket before a conviction can be entered. It's strictly an administrative change and will have no impact on a defendant's ability to plead guilty by paying a fine or to plead not guilty and have the case heard in court before a traffic commissioner.

Another minor amendment is proposed to the Court of Appeal Act which will allow for a judicial quorum, more commonly known as a panel, of fewer than three Court of Appeal judges to be used in situations as set out by the Rules of Court. This will allow the Court of Appeal to consider more matters than it does now. As part of this process, the Rules of Court Committee will recommend those matters which could be heard by panels of fewer than three. It's a relatively minor change which was specifically requested by the court, and providing this flexibility will help ensure the efficient use of Court of Appeal resources.

The next amendment that I'd like to raise is a minor amendment to the Jury Act. Currently if the amount in a civil case involving a personal injury or contract exceeds $75,000, either party has the right to have an action tried by a jury. The judge has limited discretion to limit when an action can be tried by a jury. Currently the courts may direct a civil trial to proceed without a jury in certain circumstances such as cases that involve scientific or highly complex investigations.

The amendment to the Jury Act under Bill 10 will give a judge discretion to direct, where appropriate, that parties use the summary trial procedure set out in the Rules of Court instead of a trial by jury. The summary process is quicker, less expensive than a jury trial, and recent case law from the Court of Queen's Bench has highlighted the need to give judges this discretion.

Another amendment under Bill 10 will allow that a Queen's Counsel appointment may be revoked where the holder has been disbarred or resigns in the face of discipline under the Legal Profession Act. For those who are unaware, Queen's Counsel, QC, is an honorary title that recognizes selected members of the Law Society or the Bar for both their professionalism and their contribution to the community. Every two years a committee made up of the judiciary and the legal community reviews nominations, and recommendations are made to the Minister of Justice. Criteria include competence, professional qualities, and contributions to the administration of justice but most importantly, from my perspective, the contribution that's made to the community.

Amendments to this legislation will provide that the designation may be revoked by an order in council. This is being done to ensure the integrity of this honorary designation while allowing us to continue to recognize members of the legal community who not only make important contributions to the profession but make very important contributions to our community as a whole.

Finally, we have a minor amendment to the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, which I'd like to briefly mention. The motor vehicle accident claims program provides victims of motor vehicle accidents involving uninsured motor vehicles or unknown drivers. The Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act protects both types of victims by ensuring that they have someone to recover personal injury damages from. This minor change under Bill 10 will simply incorporate the definition of motor vehicle from the Traffic Safety Act, which was brought into force last year, simply a housekeeping matter to have the same definition used under both acts.

The change will have no impact on claims already under consideration by the program or claims to be put forward in the future other than those things which people may have argued could be considered motor vehicles. Golf carts, for example, will no longer obviously qualify.

With that I'd like to encourage all members of this Assembly to support Bill 10, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. As I say, it makes some relatively minor amendments to existing Alberta legislation but helps to ensure that our laws are up to date and ready to meet the current needs of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, as Bill 10 was introduced for first reading yesterday, I have agreed with members of the opposition that we should adjourn debate to allow more time for preparation, so I would move that debate be adjourned at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2004

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my honour to move second reading of Bill 15, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2004.

Mr. Speaker, last year I introduced legislation in response to the report of the Financial Management Commission that amounted to new fiscal framework for Alberta. I am pleased to report to this Assembly that the fiscal framework, including its centrepiece, the Alberta sustainability fund, is working successfully.

The sustainability fund is fully funded, even though it has responded to forest fires that swept through our province and to the BSE crisis that has hit our agriculture industry and the rural economy. It has also cushioned Albertans from high natural gas prices by providing rebates.

The sustainability fund has also garnered us attention from the main credit and lending agencies. In its 2003 analysis, that confirmed Alberta's triple-A credit rating, Moody's credit research wrote:

Fiscal policy in Alberta has been very focused and effective for many years. The changes made this year with the introduction of the Sustainability Fund and Capital Account will only act to further strengthen the fiscal framework and help to ensure positive future outcomes.

Mr. Speaker, the fiscal framework is working. It provides a fund of $2.5 billion that will sustain our core programs in the event that revenues fall, to respond to emergencies and disasters and to provide for natural gas rebates. I would remind all members of the House that this money is not available for ad hoc program needs or to dip into at will. It is there to sustain our core programs in the event that revenues fall.

Part of the fiscal framework included a limit on the amount of nonrenewable resource revenues available for programs. Currently our new fiscal framework limits budget spending of nonrenewable resource revenues to the lower of $3.5 billion or the average of the three previous years. We propose to amend this to $4 billion. I said last spring in this Assembly and elsewhere in public that over the course of the first three years we would monitor that limit of $3.5 billion. I said that if it was a little too high or a little too low, I would come here and say that it should be higher or lower.

What's changed in the past year? Two things. Mainly, first, we're seeing strong forecasts of energy revenues in the medium term. These strong revenues give us the flexibility to address increasing costs. Secondly, the sustainability fund is fully funded. With that cushion of $2.5 billion available to protect our core programs such as health care and education, we are in a position to adjust the formula. Re-evaluating the amount that goes into the fund is appropriate at this time.

The second proposed amendment I wish to address is a new addition. It proposes a new clause that would allow for First Nations settlements to be paid through the sustainability fund subject to cabinet approval. In essence, it would be similar to the existing emergency and disaster clause. The reason for the proposed amendment is that we can't budget for these types of settlements because of the potential impact on negotiations. At the same time, a large settlement could easily erode the contingency fund that we have in our budget.

Mr. Speaker, the new fiscal framework instituted with Budget 2003 is working well for our province. It will provide predictability in funding and allow regional health authorities, school boards, municipal governments, and others the opportunity to plan for the future.

The amendments proposed today are reasonable and sustainable changes that will have a positive and lasting benefit to Albertans' priorities. I therefore urge all members of this Assembly to support Bill 15.

Mr. Speaker, I too would like to move to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 8, the Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, is based on the work and recommendations of the Alberta Blue Cross Review Committee, which reported to the Minister of Health and Wellness in 2002. In that regard, I would like to acknowledge and thank the members of that committee who worked with me in coming up with the recommendations. The committee consisted of Peter Hegholz, director of financial planning for Alberta Health and Wellness; Herb Schlotter, corporate counsel, Alberta Health and Wellness; Arthur Hagan, deputy superintendent of insurance and financial institutions with Alberta Finance; Carol Patrick, senior analyst of tax policy with Alberta Finance; Richard Whitehouse, director of risk management and insurance with Alberta Revenue; Bernard Rodrigues, external consultant, who was the former superintendent of insurance for the province.

I'd like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the subject matter of this review, which at first blush I thought would be fairly straightforward, ended up being a very complicated and complex investigation of the structure and the work of this organization, and I have to say that in my seven years of being in this Legislature and having participated in a number of different reviews and different subject matters, this was probably the most challenging one that I have participated in from a complexity point of view.

Initially, the main reason that this review was undertaken was because of concerns coming forward from a number of sources, including MLAs, that the Alberta Blue Cross corporation enjoyed advantages over private insurers operating in the health insurance field. So the main object of the review was to investigate this and see if in fact such advantages existed.

In the process of doing that, the review committee undertook quite an extensive review process, looking at Alberta Blue Cross from a thorough legal review, a document and historical review, a review of other provincial programs operating in the country, a financial review of the organization, an accountability review of the organization in terms of its governance, and a review of all of the types of business that it conducted. This formed the basis for the recommendations that were forthcoming to the minister. I can advise the Legislature that the investigation was very thorough, and it was done with the co-operation of Alberta Blue Cross.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, I can say that everyone on the committee was of the view that Alberta Blue Cross is an excellent organization and has been providing supplementary health care plan services to Albertans for over 54 years in a very positive way. It is an Alberta organization headquartered in Alberta, has always been governed by provincial legislation, and is bound, of course, by national rules governing Blue Cross organizations in Canada, but it has always operated on a not-for-profit basis and never had any shareholders. From day one it has always been exempt from the Insurance Act and, therefore, never paid premium tax nor has it ever paid income tax.

Alberta Blue Cross, Mr. Speaker, has over a million Albertans as its clients for its various products and services. Eighty-five per cent of its business is involved in the administration of government-sponsored programs, most of which are government funded. They are within the Department of Alberta Health and Wellness and within the Department of Alberta Human Resources and Employment. Fifteen per cent of its business involves employer group supplementary health care plans and certain individual health care plans as well as travel insurance. This 15 per cent of its business is where it competes with private companies operating in the province.

So the amendments that we see in the bill serve to level the playing field with private providers specifically in that area where Alberta Blue Cross competes with those providers in providing private insurance. The bill also provides clear rules for the responsibilities of directors acting on the board of directors for Alberta Blue Cross and also sets out responsibilities for the board, such as hiring auditors and the like, bringing the requirements of the governance of Alberta Blue Cross in line with that required for other corporations acting within the province. It also includes amendments which would define the various programs included in the Alberta Blue Cross plan which have never been set out specifically before. It sets out the ability for cabinet to set this out in regulation.

That in the main, Mr. Speaker, is the thrust of Bill 8. I think this bill has been quite thoroughly debated through the various stages in the Legislature, and I think it's good for Albertans, and it's good for Blue Cross.

I urge all members to support this bill in third reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to be able to make a few comments about Bill 8, the Blue Cross Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, at third reading. I think it's a first in the House that I can recall where a review committee makes the recommendations and the chair of the committee changes a major review. I guess it's hard to understand with respect to process how such a situation could come about. We just heard the member outline how thorough and comprehensive the review of the Blue Cross plan was.

One of the things that they looked at, of course, an important thing with respect to Blue Cross, was whether or not the nonprofit health insurance company should be allowed to keep its tax exemption. The majority of the members, as we understand it, said yes. They recommended in the report that the company should keep its tax-free status. When the final summary was written, the chair of the committee went against the consensus and recommended the course of action that the government now has adopted, and that is that Blue Cross lose tax-free status.

As disturbing as that is to Albertans and what's going to happen to them with respect to paying more, it's even more difficult in terms of Albertans understanding exactly what happened and what they can expect when review committees spend a lot of time looking at an issue and make a set of recommendations and use a lot of public resources in conducting their review to find that the recommendations can be arbitrarily changed and the recommendations go against the consensus of the committee.

It's a curious piece of work, Mr. Speaker, to say the least and one that, I think, people are still finding difficult to understand. Knowing the integrity of the chair of that committee, I find it really hard to understand how we ended up with the piece of legislation that we have before us this evening with such a contrary recommendation.

It does raise some questions that the opposition has raised in the past and maybe we should go back and work at again, and that's the whole notion of a lobbyist registration and some effort to get a handle on the role that lobbyists are playing in the drafting of legislation in the province and influencing decision-making. I'm not sure whether in this instance it would have made any difference, but it does raise that issue for those of us on this side of the House. The rationale that's used to indicate that Blue Cross shouldn't keep its tax-free status is understandable in one context but certainly not when viewed in the context of the work of the committee if, as I said, the review is as thorough as the chair has assured the Assembly that it was.

So it's a bill we won't support, Mr. Speaker, but it's a bill that's troubling in terms of the way that it's arrived here.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 8 on third reading. The New Democrat opposition identified this bill at the beginning of the session as one that was particularly troublesome and which caused us a considerable amount of worry. It is, as the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has said, interesting how the provisions of this bill were arrived at and how they evolved through the process of Conservative caucus decision-making.

But I think the real question is that there is some consistency in the approach to this bill with the government's approach to a number of other areas. One that comes to mind is electricity deregulation. When we have challenged the government repeatedly on the higher costs that consumers are paying for electricity as a result of deregulation, we get a variety of answers, things to do with debt load or it's just inflation or, you know, we can't do anything about it or any number of things.

One of the things that we do hear frequently when we spin the wheel for the answer of the week on electricity deregulation is that consumers now have choice. You know, choice is an interesting argument. It's used in a number of areas by this government to justify policies that would otherwise be completely indefensible because they increase the burden on the citizens of this province in any number of ways.

You have the same argument made with natural gas, you know, and you begin to wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether one molecule of methane is different from another molecule of methane or whether or not one flow of electrons at a certain voltage is any different from the flow of electrons from another company when, in fact, they're generated in the same places, carried along the same lines, and are in every way indistinguishable. But you have choice, and the choice comes with a significant increase in cost.

Normally what you get is a bunch of phone calls at 6 o'clock at night, when you're trying to have supper, from people trying to sell you their particular product, which is exactly the same product packaged in slightly different ways. With one you might get a set of steak knives, with another you might get a chance for a trip to Hawaii for a winter holiday, but the bottom line is that choice in this government's philosophy means paying more for precisely the same product.

We're going to have the same thing now with Blue Cross. Blue Cross is actually a tremendous organization that provides a tremendous service, and I recognize that some of its programs are not going to be covered by this so-called level playing field, but it has provided supplementary health care on a not-for-profit basis. There are member plans in Canada in B.C., Alberta, Northwest Territories, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nunavut, Ontario, Quebec, and the Atlantic provinces. They are members of the Canadian Association of Blue Cross Plans, and that association is responsible for maintaining and monitoring the standards of performance of its members and

Collectively, Mr. Speaker, Blue Cross plans cover approximately 7 million Canadians. The coverage represents 30 per cent of the supplementary health and dental market in Canada. The Blue Cross plans generate in excess of $2 billion in annual revenue. What they've done is given very economic and very comprehensive supplementary health care coverage to Albertans for many, many years.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed has indicated that this will only apply in areas where Blue Cross competes with private companies, and I'm not sure that she's putting it exactly correctly, Mr. Speaker. I think this applies to areas in which private health care companies would like to compete more vigorously with Blue Cross, and of course when it's offered on a not-for-profit basis, it can do so more cheaply.

For the life of me, Mr. Speaker, I can't understand what it is about more cheaply that this government doesn't get. More cheaply means that the people of this province get the product that they need, get the service that they need at a lower cost. In order to let private companies compete in this business, they will now have to pay more. So what? What is it about letting private companies in that makes it worth all of us having to pay more for our supplementary insurance?

Now, I know that hon. members have said and the government has said that the increase will be fairly minimal, but, Mr. Speaker, this government has been adding up a number of minimal costs in a bunch of areas, and it's beginning to cost a lot of money. The question that I can't understand is: why should we pay one penny more for supplementary health insurance just so some private companies can get in on the action? It doesn't make sense. It's not in the interests of the public of this province. It is only in the interest of private health care companies and their shareholders. So if that is who the government wants to serve, they should stand up and say so because they're not serving the public.

Mr. Speaker, we've seen a similar approach, I guess, in reverse with respect to the whole question of car insurance. Rather than adopt a public monopoly, which is suitable for that kind of service and which can deliver a much cheaper product, the government is insisting on retaining a bunch of small, multiple, and less efficient organizations competing, allegedly, with one another in order to provide the same service. The result has been considerably higher auto insurance prices in this province than in the other three western provinces, that have public auto insurance.

Now, there's a difference between a public monopoly – this is for the benefit of the Minister of Finance, who doesn't understand the difference, apparently. A public monopoly is operated in the public interest, is regulated, and is generally the most efficient way and the lowest cost way of providing certain types of services such as insurance and utilities. These are commonly the types of services that are provided through public monopolies.

It's very different from an unregulated private monopoly or near monopoly, as we have seen in the case of the packing industry for beef in this province, where two packing plants comprise 90 per cent of the business of beef packing in this province and, in the absence of an open border with the United States, have established a near-monopolistic position that allows them to fleece beef producers in this province while the government looks the other way.

Mr. Speaker, what we have here apparently is a government that is systematically favouring private interest at the expense of the pocketbooks of the ordinary voters who put them in power. Well, it won't be long before the people that put them in power – that is, the ordinary voters of this province – will realize what's going on, and with any luck they'll come to that conclusion before the next election.

So, Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that I am totally opposed to this bill. I'm disappointed, quite frankly, that the committee's recommendations were not adopted because I think there was some common sense there, but obviously there was an intervention of some private-sector interests between the time the committee made its report and the time this bill was put before this Assembly. I think that's too bad because the changes will only benefit those private-sector interests and will harm the interests of the vast majority of the Albertans who depend on this service for their supplementary health insurance.

Mr. Speaker, with that I will take my seat and urge all hon. members to follow the lead of the original committee report and reject the approach that is contained in this bill. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29?

Anybody else wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close debate.

Ms Graham: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess that for the members who have spoken tonight, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and the other hon. member, I would just recommend my comments and remarks that were made in second reading and in Committee of the Whole, which took place earlier today, which I think would go a long way to answering a lot of the concerns that both of you have raised this evening.

Lastly, I would like to say very specifically that to the best of my knowledge there was certainly no private insurer that intervened at the last moment, certainly not with me and to the best of my knowledge not with any other of my colleagues, to cause any change in our views. There was one recommendation that is being referred to, that being the exemption from the payment of income tax, and the consensus of the committee was that Alberta Blue Cross not be required to pay income tax or a payment in lieu of tax.

However, the position of this caucus, based on the philosophy of this government, was different. But I just want to make it very clear that that was not the result, to the best of my knowledge, of any lobbying effort from any company to myself or any other member of my caucus.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would conclude my comments and ask you to call the question.

Bill 9
Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use
Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 9, the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Amendment Act, 2004, makes certain specific amendments to a bill that was proclaimed almost a year ago, in April of 2003, the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act, which was the result of work done by the Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, who has been a big proponent of nonsmoking, along with the leadership also shown by the Minister of Health and Wellness. They have been very instrumental in assisting this government in implementing the overall strategy to reduce tobacco use in the province not only for youth but for adults as well.

Being someone who quit smoking five years, about two and a half months, and so many hours ago, it being the most difficult thing I ever did in my life, I wholeheartedly support anything we can do to stop people from ever starting in the first place. I wish I had been one of those people. I was silly enough to have started when I was 21 years of age.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, with the proclamation of the original bill, the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Act, last spring, it has come to light that there were some improvements that were needed in the bill to make it more effective and more enforceable. The amendments that we see in Bill 9 accomplish, it is hoped, three main purposes, and that is to allow for regulations to be developed to define necessary exemptions for when youth can possess tobacco for very limited purposes, those purposes having been described in the debate in second reading and Committee of the Whole; secondly, to provide a broader definition of what a public place is where youth are not permitted to be in possession or to be smoking; thirdly, to provide for evidentiary rules for the use in court of prosecuting infractions relating to the use of certain inferences and certificates of analysis.

So all told, Mr. Speaker, this bill goes a long way in helping us to advance our strategy to help Albertans avoid smoking or compel them to quit. I would hope that all members will see their way clear to support this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to make some comments at third reading of Bill 9, the Prevention of Youth Tobacco Use Amendment Act, 2004.

The World Health Organization a number of years back set forward an outline of what they thought a comprehensive tobacco control strategy might include, and part of their outline is a legislative component. It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, to see how comprehensive the legislative strategy that they propose is. One of the proposals they make is that "the accessibility of tobacco products should reflect the gravity of harm associated with their use," and they go on to list a number of things that that effort should include.

- a taxation law that reduces affordability;
- I think that the government has moved in that direction.
- an end to tobacco sales in health care, educational and athletics facilities;
  - an end to tobacco sales in vending machines and from self-service displays;
  - the effective elimination of tobacco sales and distribution to children.

Of course, this goes to Bill 9.

They also indicate that there should be full and free consent among users and potential users of tobacco products. This would entail the following:

- an end to all direct and indirect forms of tobacco advertising, because tobacco advertising is inherently misleading;
- an end to the misleading messages conveyed on tobacco labelling and packaging;

I think there's been great progress made in this area.

- prominent, detailed and frequently updated health information on . . . tobacco packaging and at point of sale;
- full public disclosure of . . . toxins and additives;
- mandated public health education efforts.

I think we've moved a long ways in terms of having some of these strategies in place.

Further, they recommend that there would be "guaranteed assistance to those who wish to cease using tobacco products and assistance for tobacco users seeking compensation for their harm."

They have a rather comprehensive legislative agenda. Part of it, that I don't think we've addressed here and that has been an issue in the province to our west, is "a guarantee of a smoke-free public spaces, workplaces and public transit." It's been an issue in British Columbia, and that's where workers in facilities who were forced to work in and deal with second-hand smoke have been successful in having that harm removed.

They also recommend that there be "guaranteed and simplified methods of redress for those harmed by environmental tobacco smoke." So, again, as I say, a comprehensive list, and we watch the government as it moves. We understood that there was a comprehensive strategy that was proposed, and the government for some reason backed away from it. Instead, we've had a more piecemeal approach. I guess that given the devastating effect of tobacco on people, we should welcome any progress with respect to curtailing it.

It's for that reason that we'll be supporting Bill 9 and encouraging the government to look at recommendations from organizations like the World Health Organization and to bring forward a comprehensive tobacco strategy that would be effective in curbing the use and penalizing those who promote the use and working to have in place effective public education programs.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to support Bill 9. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

9:30

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that most sections of this bill are certainly positive and acceptable to us. There is one concern, and that is the section that allows the creation of regulations which can exempt persons or classes of persons from the application of provisions of this act. I guess I could go along with that if the act specified, for example, ceremonial purposes in First Nations ceremonies and so on where tobacco is an important piece of the ceremony.

Where the concern comes in is the intention that the government has indicated to allow minors working in stores to vend tobacco products. That's not an exemption to this that we feel comfortable supporting, Mr. Speaker. I think that minors ought not to be selling tobacco products when there is such a strong emphasis on cracking down on selling tobacco to minors. If you go into virtually any store that sells tobacco products, they have signs there about IDing anyone that looks like they are underage, and there is a really strong focus.

I know that during the time I was on city council, we adopted strong measures in connection with stores that sold tobacco to minors. The federal government enforcement was very, very thorough and strong, and they would go in and do sting operations on a regular basis to stores, including corner stores and bigger stores right across the city. They would come before us with the convictions that they had obtained and ask the city council to enforce its bylaw, and we would lift the tobacco licence of any store thus convicted.

Now, what happens to that process when minors are selling tobacco themselves? They then have access to the tobacco, and the line is blurred. It becomes more difficult to enforce this direction. Both the city of Edmonton and the federal government were and still are quite vigilant with respect to this issue, and I think that this particular change when these regulations are brought forward will make that effort more difficult. It will introduce more ambiguity and perhaps potentially more opportunities for the law to be circumvented.

So on that basis, Mr. Speaker, I have to regretfully inform the House that I will be unable to support this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29?

Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed to close debate.

Ms Graham: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would you please call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

Senatorial Selection Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: On behalf of the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations I would move Bill 7, Senatorial Selection Amendment Act, 2004, for third reading.

As has been discussed earlier in the House, this is a very modest act. It simply changes the expiration date of the act from 2004 to 2010, thus keeping the mechanism in place for Alberta to elect persons to stand for the Senate of Canada in their continuing objective to encourage Senate reform.

It has been said in committee – but I'll repeat it now – that the extension of the act does not extend the terms of those people who were elected as Senators-in-waiting. Those terms expire this year, but it is useful to continue to have this act available to us to continue as part of the ongoing pressure, commitment, and lobbying to keep the issue before the Prime Minister and the government of Canada with respect to the concept that in this country provinces who do not have the population of Ontario or Quebec still need a voice in government, and that voice could be provided by an equal, effective, elected Senate.

If we have in some small way improved the selection process even as it stands now by having a Senatorial Selection Act – and, as I commented in committee, I believe that in terms of the appointments that have been made in Alberta, we have clearly surpassed the quality of appointments made elsewhere in the country, not being done so blatantly on a political basis but having been done on a meritorious basis. I refer to my own constituent, Senator Tommy Banks, in that category and Doug Roche as well, an excellent Senator for Alberta albeit appointed.

I truly believe that the Senatorial Selection Act has had two effects. One is that it keeps a mechanism in place for us to do a Senatorial selection process, one which did see the first elected Senator appointed, Stan Waters, which does continue to keep in the public eye and in front of the federal government the need to have Senate reform and one which puts a mechanism in place which forces the Prime Minister, when putting forward senatorial candidates and ignoring the wishes of the provinces in doing so, to be very, very careful about the appointments that he makes.

So I would encourage us to pass this bill and extend the act.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to close debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 6, the Income and Employment Supports Amendment Act, 2004, be now moved for third reading.

Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation is an enabling piece of legislation allowing the Department of Human Resources and Employment to pursue noncustodial parents with respect to enforcing child maintenance court orders.

I believe everyone in this Assembly would agree that definitely the thought behind the bill and the purpose of the bill are valuable ones. Unfortunately, in this province we have too many noncustodial parents who have absolved themselves of the responsibility to meet their financial responsibilities towards their children, having had their marriage dissolved. This bill will simply allow the minister and the department to more thoroughly investigate those noncustodial parents, finding out their assets, finding out their means of income, finding out perhaps even their whereabouts in order to successfully enforce child maintenance agreements to the benefit of those children who are now in low-income families and definitely could use those dollars.

Mr. Speaker, as such, I would encourage all members of this Assembly to support this bill and pass it into law.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the mover indicated, it's a bill that we'll welcome. I think all of us in our constituency offices deal not daily but at least on a weekly basis with individuals trying to gain the support for children that the courts have ordered and that those youngsters and those families need, and anything that will move that process along and will help those families gain the kinds of resources that courts have judged should be theirs I think is worthy of our support. It remains a huge problem, an unfortunate one in terms of individuals not living up to their responsibilities, and Bill 6 I think is one more tool in trying to rectify the situation and to bring some fairness to the individuals that are involved.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to close the debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a third time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:42 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Mr. Webb indicates that he is the one that entertains seniors up in the Peace country. He's accompanied by friends Dale Wells and Fran Wells. I would ask all three of them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise with great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House someone I've known for many, many years and very cleverly married more than 20 years ago. In the House I often speak about the importance of fathers, and this man is a very excellent father to our two children. If Dennis Beck would please rise to receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Ed DeJong, who is a resident of Fort Saskatchewan and a former employee of Dow. I'd ask Ed to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly some very special guests who are here this afternoon to observe proceedings. They are Mr. Phil Schwartz and Ms Sandra Manzardo, who are with the safe care implementation project in Victoria, B.C. Accompanying Mr. Schwartz and Ms Manzardo is Ms Kanuka, who is with Children's Services, Edmonton and area child and family services authority.

The B.C. government is in the process of developing new legislation and implementing a new safe care system to help sexually exploited youth similar to our protection of children involved in prostitution legislation. Mr. Schwartz and Ms Manzardo are visiting us to learn from our experience in this area as well as to co-ordinate support services for sexually exploited youth between our two provinces.

Our guests are in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you two very civic-minded members of my constituency. The first is Carole Oliver, who is a trustee for wards 6 and 7 for the Calgary board of education, and the second is Art Johnston, who is a retired sergeant of the Calgary police department and a fellow colleague of our Member for Calgary-Buffalo. As well, he's planning on running for MLA in the new riding of Calgary-Hays in the next election. Would you please rise, Art Johnston and Carole Oliver, and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Jennifer Krauskopf. Jennifer is a student in office and records administration at the Northern Alberta Institute of Technology. She is on a one-day job shadow mission with the Official Opposition. With your permission I'd ask Jennifer to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Cattle Industry

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this Assembly the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, in questioning the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development in regard to the BSE compensation package, like a lot of Albertans was also looking for answers. The hon. minister in response to that question stated, "There is no secret about where that money went." My first question is to the hon. minister of agriculture. Will the government provide the list mentioned yesterday by the hon. minister of who actually got money in this province under the BSE aid package?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday. Ninety per cent of the $400 million went directly to producers. The remaining 10 per cent went into increased surveillance and testing with the new level 3 lab, improvements to the level 2 lab to allow Bio-Rad testing, some market development money, and some export market programs. So that was the other 10 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I have said repeatedly, not just this week, that I have no problems releasing that, but I will release it when it is completely paid out. The program is about 95 per cent. Contrary to what objectives the hon. member might have in this, my objective will be to present it fairly and openly and in its entirety. I could stand here today and tell you how it will be used by others, but it will be every dollar, every cheque, every name accounted for when the program is complete. We're at 95 per cent. I don't think it's too much to ask to just finish the job.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: did the minister meet last week in Red Deer with the Alberta cattle industry to discuss further financial support?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I met with the four cattlemen's associations: the Feeder Associations, the feeder council, the Western Stock Growers', and the auction market and agent buyers' association. I was invited to attend their conference, to speak at their conference, and to take questions from the floor at that conference, which I did. I was able to stay for most of the rest of the afternoon, till about 4:30, 5 o'clock, and listen to some of the presentations, discuss many of the ideas that they were contemplating with individual members throughout the afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, for the member's information, I also spent three hours with them in this building the day of the throne speech, immediately after it, discussing the discussion paper that was presented at that conference. They asked if they could come. Some eight of them drove to Edmonton to sit down and have a discussion so that I clearly understood that these were discussion points, that the information wasn't as complete or conclusive as they would want. They wanted to make sure that this minister and this government, who have worked with them shoulder to shoulder for the last 10 months, were not blindsided by any of this.

It's unfortunate that they didn't invite – well, maybe it's not unfortunate. Anyway, it was their choice. I think the hon. member would have had an opportunity to be better informed about the contents of that paper.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how can Albertans be sure that any further aid package gets to every producer that needs it?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, that has occurred, and it's very unfortunate that the opposition members have seized an opportunity, they believe, not to help the industry but to try and discredit the government with the industry. That will not happen.

Every producer of fed cattle, whether they were small, feeding five head, or large, feeding 50,000 head, was enrolled in that program. Every cow-calf producer who registered their herd was eligible for payment under the market cow and bull program. Mr. Speaker, nobody was excluded.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Prices

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before the Minister of Energy discreetly tabled the embarrassing report from the Bolger commission on Tuesday, the Premier tabled information providing that monthly electricity bills have skyrocketed for all Albertans because of electricity deregulation. Clearly, the Premier's intention was to defuse a hot-button issue, but as we witnessed yesterday, he only succeeded in blowing his own fuse. Now, my first question is to the Premier. Given that the Premier knows that the only way electricity prices are going up, why didn't the Bolger commission report regarding the future forecast of electricity prices in this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond to the specific question relative to blowing my fuse.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity of listening to the radio on 630 CHED in the car on the way back to my condominium, and I heard the hon. member, and his tone and his style were nowhere like they were in the Legislature. The question was: why were you called an idiot? "Well, you know, the people across the way can't take the heat," and so on.

Let me refresh the hon. member as to the tone of his question and how, if I might use the term, idiotic it was.

Again to the same minister: given that this government led producers into a false sense of security by giving the impression that the borders would be open in the new year, is it not now your responsibility to share some of the financial burden currently being felt by the small cattle producers in this province?

That was so idiotic, Mr. Speaker, and that's what leads to the frustration. He gets on and he says: oh, they can't take the heat. Then the questioner says: well, what would you do? He didn't answer the question because he doesn't know. He doesn't have the answers. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the Bolger commission report states that electricity prices will be volatile when the province moves to a monthly flow-through price, how much more will consumers end up paying because of this volatility which is a direct result of electricity deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, he likes to blame Steve West, who will come on as my chief of staff, calling him the Eight Billion Dollar Man. He'll blame everyone. He won't acknowledge the fact that deregulation of electricity has brought on more power and stabilized prices.

I'll have the hon. minister elaborate.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, it is always beneficial to shine the light of truth, particularly in front of some of the students that are here from that group.

So let's talk a little bit about truth. Let's talk about a tabled report that says what is working well.

Alberta has a more reliable supply of electricity . . . New supply was added by private sector companies rather than by government . . . New electricity capacity is more environmentally friendly . . . Retail competition is fierce in the large commercial and industrial market . . . The wholesale power market is working well.

Mr. Speaker, I'd encourage the member, now that the report is tabled, to actually read it.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the Bolger commission report states that the price for electricity in Alberta may be higher at times because of exports, how much will Albertans pay for electricity during these periods, and how long will these periods of high electricity prices last because of electricity deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the question itself leads to speculation, but that is a tactic that the Liberals try to use: create suspicion, use innuendo, use speculation.

Relative to the question I'll have the hon. minister answer.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, if the member would just, please, take the time to read. It's pretty good-sized print, and it's well written. If you'd just take the chance to read it, it says that, you know, the commission declined to predict the future of electricity prices.

For example, if you take a look at an article from Ontario, the energy minister there is saying that Ontarians would be happy with increased prices. That's a Liberal minister, but I guess that's the kind of thing that the Liberals think of.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, what we do know is that we're getting accurate pricing in a competitive market, and most importantly we're delivering the supply to all-time record highs because of all-time economic growth.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Tuesday the Minister of Energy repeated several times that Alberta's electricity deregulation scheme is "pursuit of excellence," but everyone knows that the only excellence this government is pursuing is discriminating against Alberta electricity customers for the benefit of generators, retailers, and transmission companies. Consumers, when they read their power bill, see the big print, which is the high cost of electricity in this province. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. How does Alberta Energy's own research, which the Premier tabled on Tuesday and which shows that monthly electricity bills have skyrocketed because of electricity deregulation, fit into this government's pursuit of excellence?

Mr. Klein: Table your own bill. Table your bill. I want to see how bad it is.

Mr. Smith: That actually is a very good idea, Mr. Speaker. Members have suggested that maybe the member would want to table his last bills from living in the city of Edmonton. I think that would be a very good demonstration of what prices are. So let's see if he'll do that. [interjections]

The Speaker: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Energy has the floor.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I really believe that to allow competitive market generation into Alberta is the pursuit of excellence. We're going to continue on that pursuit, and we're going to continue to find the excellence. I think the biggest referendum on electrical deregulation was held March 15, 2001.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Energy: how does a complete void of retail competition for residential electricity customers in Alberta fit into this government's pursuit of excellence?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that's actually a very good question.

An Hon. Member: Well, I wouldn't go that far.

Mr. Smith: That's true, but I'm exaggerating for the purposes of emphasis.

There is a regulated rate option, Mr. Speaker, which offers individual consumers in Alberta a specific regulated rate or a protection of electricity rates that are filed and openly reviewed by the Energy and Utilities Board. This is the first time in the history of Alberta that this has ever been done.

So, yes, it is a pursuit of excellence. Are we there? We're a lot closer than what we were in 1998, and we haven't blacked out, even though this member says that deregulation caused the coldest month on record in January 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: if this government's pursuit of excellence is so obvious, why does this government need a $3 million propaganda campaign organized by the Public Affairs Bureau to sell Albertans a defective product they do not want, electricity deregulation?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't call it a propaganda campaign; I would call it a fact campaign. The reason we have to conduct a fact campaign is because of the Liberals and their propensity to come out with things that simply are not the truth. For instance, last week they came out and blamed deregulation for power outages in Calgary. They came out with a press release saying: this is deregulation. Then they had to pull back the press release immediately because they found out that it had nothing to do with deregulation at all.

Mr. Speaker, that's why we have to advertise: to get the facts out because this team over there are out busily amongst the people of Alberta spreading lies, propaganda, misinformation, and falsehoods. So we have to advertise to get the truth out.

The Speaker: I'm going to ask for temperateness here. There are words being used in this Assembly that will not inspire any teacher with his or her children in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Klein: I apologize for using the word "lies," Mr. Speaker. They are not telling the truth.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government is pulling out all the stops to discredit the New Democrat opposition in its efforts to get to the bottom of the BSE compensation program. There are no lengths that this government will not go to in order to prevent a real investigation into where the $400 million really ended up. They will even stoop to putting pressure on beef producers and their organizations to disavow their own report. My question is to the Premier. Will he tell this Assembly just what pressure the government used in order to get beef producers to change their tune and say wonderful things about this program?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, there was no pressure whatsoever. What happened was that a discussion paper was tabled. It was put into the hands, somehow, of the NDs and the media, who took it as gospel. You know, one of the dangers in politics – and the hon. member knows about it – is that if you think about it and you muse out loud, it becomes policy. You know, there's that old saying that yes means yes, maybe means yes, and no means maybe.

Mr. Speaker, the beef industry has been very close to this government in terms of working with the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development in coming up with programs to address this very serious situation. They understand that the bottom line is to get the borders open. That is the bottom line. They understand that the bottom line also is to explain to the international community the safety of our beef and how ridiculous the international protocols are with respect to BSE.

But they did discuss – and I underline discuss – some things that perhaps – and I underline perhaps – could – and I underline could – be done in the interim. The NDs, of course, took this as fact.

So they, in turn, issued a press release today because they said that this has gone too far. Saretsky states: "Our consolidated beef industry action plan talks about" – talks about – "better ways of helping the beef industry in the short and long term. We're trying" – underline trying – "to find ways to reduce government programs, restore market stability and address the growing size of the beef herd in this country." Their actions and their motives are commendable.

But what he says – and this is very, very important – is:

The real shame from this entire episode of finger-pointing is that the needs of the province's beef industry are being ignored by the provincial opposition parties. Time and energy are being wasted by looking at the past. It is better for everyone to spend our time and energies on helping the industry survive and move forward.

Indeed, their press release is entitled Rather than Debate the Past, Beef Industry Wants to Look Forward. That's what this government is doing. We are working with the beef industry.

The Speaker: We'll have a tabling as well.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, can the Premier tell the House why Mr. Bard Haddrell, executive director of the agricultural information division of this government, was sent down to browbeat cattle industry representatives and whether this official asked these beef organizations to issue that release attacking the New Democrat opposition?

Mr. Klein: No, they didn't. First of all, I'm going to have the hon. Deputy Premier respond. Mr. Speaker, sorry; what was the question now?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, did Bard go to browbeat them?

Mr. Klein: No, no, he didn't go down to browbeat them. But there was something else attached to that.

Mrs. McClellan: That was it.

Mr. Klein: Oh, fine. I'll have you respond then.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, Bard Haddrell is a member of executive committee of the department of agriculture. He has attended probably 90 per cent of the meetings with the industry. Mr. Haddrell, again, attends these meetings on the industry's invitation, as all of us do on this side of the House and as my staff do.

Mr. Speaker, in fact, I'm going to be meeting with this group again. This is a fairly common occurrence. I don't send out press releases because I'm meeting with them because sometimes it's two or three times a week. But I will be meeting with this group, and I expect that Mr. Haddrell will be with me, as he has been at most of them.

Mr. Speaker, the industry are upset not with this government; they are upset with the opposition parties. They're disappointed in the media because until this issue the coverage has been very, very balanced. They're disappointed. They're not upset. They're not angry. They're disappointed that what has been a very astute group of reporters missed the point at their convention that this was a discussion paper, missed the point at their convention, which was open to the media, that all of this work was being sent back to committee.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm not calling them; they're calling me. I'll turn them over to you any time, but they don't seem to want to talk to you. I don't know.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that hundreds of farmers are phoning the New Democrat opposition – all our staff are busy on the phones – can the Premier please tell us why they keep throwing dust in people's eyes about the real issue instead of ordering an independent investigation by the Auditor General into whether or not meat packers indirectly benefited from BSE compensation programs? Tell us why.

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question contains a number of allegations. I know what I wanted to say: that the Alberta Beef Industry Council did not point a finger or name specifically the ND opposition. The hon. member seems to be sensitive. He said that the council is picking on the NDs. Well, they aren't. They specifically said the opposition parties, which means the Liberals as well.

Mr. Speaker, there is a number. I've said it before: if the hon. member or his leader or any member of the opposition or any citizen has a complaint relative to how that money was used, whether in fact meat packers were making excessive profits, were doing anything untoward, there is a number. It's the number of the Competition Bureau. The number is 1-800-348-5358. If there are any problems, I would invite anyone to phone that number and lodge their complaint. Indeed, I heard on the CBC a spokesperson for the Competition Bureau saying that she wants and invites people to come forward with complaints and allegations.

Now, relative to the Auditor General, because this was specific to his question, Mr. Speaker, this is what is frustrating. It has been posted on the web site. It is public knowledge, and it's under www.oag.ab.ca, and it talks about the spectrum of operations for the Auditor General. It says, "We add credibility to the Government's financial reporting and improve the financial administration of the Province and more! We . . ." And there are a number of bullets. First bullet: we "do system audits (value for money) and attest audits (provide assurance)." They can do it already.

The Speaker: A reminder again: exhibits are not to be used in the House. We've had, actually, illustrations of people who have used exhibits in the House in the past.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The University of Alberta has recently released a study showing that sulphur dioxide from air pollution affects the health of cattle. With the effects of BSE already negatively affecting the cattle industry, this is yet another blow to the industry that many of my constituents will be very worried about. My first question to the Minister of Environment: what can you tell my constituents about the results of this study?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, let me say that this is a lab study done in a laboratory for a PhD thesis, and the results may not be relevant for a couple of reasons. First of all, the results may not be relevant because there were only 36 cattle tested in the lab, and they were exposed to sulphur dioxide at up to a hundred times the concentration of Alberta's air-quality guidelines. Our guideline for a 24-hour period of sulphur dioxide in Alberta is .05 to 1 part per million. These cattle were exposed to between 1 and 20 parts per million.

In hundreds of thousands of hours of monitoring Alberta's air quality, Mr. Speaker, we have never reached 1 part per million of sulphur dioxide. So I think the results were done in the lab, and we just simply can't put too much faith in them in terms of how it actually affects the environment, how it affects the cattle, because the concentrations were much, much higher, up to a hundred times higher, than you'd ever find in Alberta's air.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that our cattle industry needs accurate information about the possible health effects of oil and gas production on their livestock, what is the minister going to do with this information?

Dr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we've already taken action on this. About four to five years ago under the leadership of the former Minister of Environment, who is now the Minister of Infrastructure – and very forward leadership it was. He commissioned a study with three other provinces: Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and British Columbia. Four provinces are all working together on a study that's run out of the University of Saskatchewan, and the appropriate name for the group that's running it is the Western Interprovincial Scientific Studies Association.

This is a study that is peer reviewed from the start, the design of the study, to the end, when we start looking at the results, on the results of things in the air as they affect cattle or other animals as well. This study is looking at over 30,000 cattle in three western provinces – 30,000 in three western provinces – and the study, as I quite clearly pointed out, is peer reviewed. The study is costing in the area of $18 million.

We're at a stage in the study now, Mr. Speaker, where the field research is being done. WISSA, the western group, is doing the analysis of the data as we speak. That data analysis is being peer reviewed, the results will be peer reviewed, and we expect to have the final results of this study about a year from now or by the middle of 2005 at the latest.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question, to the Minister of Energy: what safety procedures are in place to prevent the release of sulphur dioxide?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. A very good question. Albertans are protected. Albertans are the best protected in the world with respect to a sour gas regulatory regime. We protect Albertans with a very disciplined, rigorous method that includes open discussion at the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, a very strong system that ensures that there's the appropriate equipment, a very strong system that ensures the appropriate emergency response. In fact, in the long-range effects with respect to flaring and sulphur dioxide in the atmosphere, the board and the Clean Air Strategic Alliance have moved ahead of schedule in reducing flaring in this province by some 62 per cent. Albertans are well protected with this industry. World class.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Government Expense Claims

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Four days ago the Liberal opposition sent a letter to the Premier politely asking him to answer 23 basic questions about government expenses. Despite claiming on several occasions that his government is open and transparent, the Premier has not provided any answers to these questions and, in fact, indicated in this House that it would cost thousands of dollars just to answer even six of the 23. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why he has not provided even one answer to any of the 23 questions contained in the Liberal opposition's letter?

Mr. Klein: That is a good question. I didn't say that it would cost thousands of dollars to address just six questions. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, all you allowed me to do was to read six questions of the 26.

The Speaker: Please. It is not the chair's fault. You may continue.

Mr. Klein: I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, four days, indeed, have elapsed since I received the letter. It's going to take some time to get the answers prepared. What I did suggest at the time was that this letter should be placed on the Order Paper as a written question because it demands a number of details in its answer, so I would suggest that the hon. member do that. In addition to that, we will do our best to get the answers in as timely a manner as possible.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, again to the Premier. We're not asking him to answer the questions now, and we did table them, so everybody knows them. Why, by asking us to use written questions, is the Premier forcing Albertans and the opposition to jump through another set of hoops in order to get the answers?

Mr. Klein: You know, Mr. Speaker, I find that her question is somewhat contradictory because in her previous question she said: why is it taking so long – understanding that the letter was given to me only four days ago – to get the answers to these questions? Then she says: well, I understand now that the Premier's office needs time, that Executive Council needs time. We will get the answers as quickly as we possibly can and provide, where appropriate, the answers to those questions.

But I would suggest again that the proper way, the parliamentary way, to do this would be not to hold a news conference five minutes before giving me the letter – right? – then sending me the letter. The proper way would be to place it on the Order Paper and have the questions come through the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Well, they still don't have to answer written questions.

Can the Premier, then, if he's agreed to give us the answers, give me a date now when I can expect to see them? I'm open. A month? A week?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can't give her a date right now, but perhaps I can answer one or two of the questions right now. What was the first question? You have the letter in front of you. The hon. member has the letter in front of her. Ask me the first question. If she wants to ask me the first question, I'll try and answer it.

The Speaker: Well, unfortunately, the hon. Premier will have to take his place. Our rules clearly prohibit any member from having one question and two supplementaries, and that would be a total violation of the rules.

The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Audit of Agricultural Relief Programs

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, there is no question in anyone's mind about the devastating impact of BSE on Alberta producers. Albertans know that the provincial government has provided roughly $400 million in compensation to help cattle farmers survive this crisis. Some of my constituents in Red Deer have heard speculation that this money didn't get into the hands of those who desperately needed it. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Given that our government has provided agricultural relief programs in the past, what is the standard audit process for programs such as the BSE compensation?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There is a process in place that we have adopted as a government. It's one that's been open and accountable and one that has been revered by our own Auditor General as being one of the most open in all of the jurisdictions in Canada. In fact, I think that was enunciated at a Public Accounts meeting a week or so ago.

Mr. Speaker, insofar as individual programs such as the current one that has been under debate here in this House, the process is that the accounting people within the department of agriculture will in fact have put in place processes to deal with this program. They will have already, as the minister of agriculture and rural development has already said in this House, a pre-audit function where they will make sure that applications that come through for this program are, in fact, in order before monies are released.

Now, in another few weeks we will hit our year-end. At that point the Auditor General's staff will come in and audit all departments of this government including the agriculture department. This program will be audited by the Auditor General in due course through the audit process that will be completed before his report is filed with members of this Assembly. If there are any difficulties, they will be identified by the Auditor General's staff and made known to the department of agriculture for rectifying.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what happens if this audit process identifies potential problems with any of our relief programs?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, through the audit process and working with the chief financial officer within the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, any adjustments that have to be made will be made, and in fact the Auditor General will make sure that there's a follow-up in that process and make corrections if there are any there. They will evaluate the system, they will evaluate the manual processes, and they will evaluate the reporting that takes place by that department back through this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Minister of Finance: what is the role of the Public Accounts Committee in this audit process?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, actually, the Auditor General performs the audit, and the audit function is his responsibility. What does happen, though, Mr. Speaker, is that once he files his report with this Assembly, that this year had 90 some odd recommendations, that is referred to a select committee of this Legislature called Public Accounts. They then meet with the Auditor General and review his report and the accounts that are presented, and each ministry is called before that committee to answer questions by the Public Accounts Committee. They're really not part of the audit process, but they review the Auditor General's report in detail, as all members should. In fact, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I believe, is the chairman of that committee, so I'm sure he's well aware of the process of Public Accounts.

Southeast Calgary Hospital

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government has a plan to construct a P3 megacomplex within the emergency planning zone of six proposed critical sour gas wells just southeast of Calgary. These wells will contain 36 per cent hydrogen sulphide, which is lethal in trace amounts. To the Minister of Infrastructure: why would this ministry consider planning such a large-scale P3 project in an area that could put the public safety at risk?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what portfolio the member thinks that I'm now covering. Yesterday or the day before it was Transportation. Today it sounds like it's Energy. I'm just not sure where he's coming from.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what steps has this government taken to co-ordinate surface and subsurface planning and development since October 2003?

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is talking about some P3 that I'm not aware of and mixing that in with sour gas. I guess it's gas wells that he's talking about. I just simply don't know what he's talking about.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will this ministry relocate the proposed P3 hospital project outside of the emergency planning zone in the event that sour gas wells are approved by the EUB?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we as Infrastructure or government have not even seen anything to do with this so-called P3 hospital. I think that what he's confused with is the fact that the Calgary health region has suggested that when they do get into building the south Calgary hospital, it probably – probably – would be a good candidate for a P3, but that's not something that we're doing, and it's not something that has even progressed to any extent. It's been talked about, but that's not this department.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, if I might provide some light to this subject. The Calgary health region has expressed some concerns with respect to the development of sour gas wells in the area, and they have made submissions before the EUB with respect to how wide a range the emergency planning zone should be. I'm not intimate with the details of what the nature of Calgary health region's submissions are, but I do have a great respect for them to place first and foremost the interests of patients and Calgarians and people who will possibly use a hospital that may be located there sometime in the future. I'm also equally confident that the EUB will take into account all the information, including the submissions of the CHR, in determining what is an appropriate emergency planning zone.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Last December federal government officials from Canada and the United States developed a proposed interim agreement on trade in softwood lumber between the two countries. My first question to the minister: has the minister discussed the softwood lumber issue with the federal government on our current status of discussions within Canada?

Mr. Jonson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did discuss the softwood issue with the federal minister in December and raised Alberta's concerns about the proposed interim agreement. As you know, other provinces and many industry groups shared our concerns, and subsequently the federal government indicated to the United States government that the interim agreement was not acceptable.

I think, though, Mr. Speaker, it's important to indicate that as a follow-up the Canadian federal and provincial officials met earlier this year to discuss ways to resolve our outstanding issues. Alberta remains open to considering a new proposal if changes are made to the agreement itself and to the federal quota allocation model. In the meantime we will work with the federal government and other provincial governments and industry to deal with the various issues involved.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. It is my understanding that we are still talking about a proposed interim agreement. What is the status of the negotiations with the United States on this softwood lumber dispute?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the Canadian government has informed the United States government that the proposed agreement is not acceptable, and there are a number of key issues involved in this overall matter. The federal government's and the provinces' concerns were quite numerous, but I'd like to just feature some of the key ones.

One was that in the proposed agreement there was a lack of exit ramps for provinces that decided to make forest management changes. There was a limit on the share of the U.S. market that was of concern. Also, the industry was very concerned that as a result of that agreement, if it had been put in place, only 52 per cent of the duty deposits that have been paid would be returned from the United States.

So overall that is the situation, but we continue to be poised to engage in further discussions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. In light of the proposed interim agreement where is your department with the changing circumstances pertaining to the community timber program?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The whole softwood lumber negotiations continue to be a very challenging area to the industry. I work very closely with the industry. Of course, the other ministry is the leader in the softwood negotiations, but I do work with the industry very closely here in Alberta, and through their executive and our government officials we'll continue working with the other ministry in that particular area.

But I just want to mention how important the forest industry is in Alberta. You know, it continues to be a challenging area. Of the overall economic diversification plan we have in Alberta, next to energy and the agriculture industry, forestry comes in third as far as job creation, purchases, and taxes and continues to be very important.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and Interim Leader of the Official Opposition.

Class Sizes

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Learning Commission first reported, parents on Commission Watch have heard much talk and seen little action. They are waiting for the promised changes to appear in the classes and the schools that their children attend. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. When will parents begin to see the smaller primary grade classes that were recommended in the report?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for that question because, as the hon. member fully knows, today we had another announcement on seven more recommendations of the Learning Commission. These were recommendations that were very positive. They were brought forward after in many cases about eight months of negotiations with the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association and arrive at what I feel is a very good compromise between all three parties: Alberta Learning, the ATA, and the ASBA.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked a specific question about the amount of dollars and the class size. This year alone we have already added another $110 million into the learning system, into the K to 12 system.

As everyone here knows, budget is going to be coming up very, very soon, and at that time I will make more announcements about the monetary dollars for the Learning Commission and for Learning in general. Mr. Speaker, I'm sure you would not look too well upon this if I were to break budget confidentiality and say some of the things that were in the budget here now.

Dr. Massey: Thank you again. It was more talk again today.

My next question is to the minister. How soon will parents see actual class sizes reported, as recommended by the commission, and not the averages used by the minister, which really hide the reality of 30-plus students in many primary grade classrooms?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, actual class sizes were used. Actual class sizes were used by the individual jurisdictions, and the individual jurisdictions put out their average class size. We then put out the average class size for the province. The hon. member has the average class size data that was given to him, and it was subsequently put on our web site.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, and again to the same minister: will the new business plans include a measure of class size so it can be monitored?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, we continually monitor class size, and again that will be something that we are looking at. As well, it will not just be in the business plan; it will also be in the accountability statement that school boards will have to put out to their own constituents. This is extremely, extremely important in the accountability back to the constituents, the accountability to those people who have their kids in the school divisions and under the school boards. This is a huge step forward, and it's a huge step in the accountability of the whole system.

So a long answer to the hon. member's question, but, yes, school class size will certainly be one of the issues that will be in the business plan, that will be discussed in the business plan and will be discussed even more so in the accountability statements from the school boards.

Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now we'll call upon the first of four members. In the interim, happy birthday to the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

2:30 Learning Disabilities Awareness Month

Mr. Herard: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this week marks the beginning of Learning Disabilities Awareness Month, a month that is proclaimed nationally to draw attention to the challenges and the many successes that people living with learning disabilities experience each day.

Up to 10 per cent of the population of Canada live with learning disabilities. These disabilities affect how people acquire knowledge, organize, remember, understand, and use information. We now know that learning disabilities are a neurological condition and they could be lifelong.

This month gives us a cause to celebrate and salute the many people and organizations that help those living with learning disabilities to reach their full potential. Three of these people are here with us today, and the hon. Minister of Learning appropriately introduced them. I'd like to recognize Catherine Walker and Greg Bishop from Alberta Learning along with Gordon Bullivant, executive director of the Foothills Academy of Calgary, who are recent recipients of the national excellence of education award.

Catherine's and Greg's awards were for outstanding accomplishments in the area of learning disability resource development, and we do have a lot of good people in the Learning department, Mr. Speaker. Gordon's award on behalf of the Foothills Academy was for the school's high-quality work with students with learning disabilities.

On behalf of the government of Alberta I'd like to thank the many individuals and organizations, including Alberta Learning, the Learning Disabilities Association of Alberta, and our postsecondary institutions, for working together towards a common goal. Because of your ongoing hard work and research we are closer to identifying specific factors that can predict successful life outcomes for those living with learning disabilities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Scott Tournament of Hearts

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, there's no bodychecking, no bump and grind, and no exhilarating speeds, but the 2004 Scott Tournament of Hearts hosted in Red Deer, Alberta, reached exhilarating attendance records and stopped hearts as fans focused on fatal shots that missed their mark by millimetres.

In 2001 the Scott Tournament of Hearts, the Canadian women's curling championship, won the Gemini award for the top live sporting event on television. So why would a curling championship beat out a hockey event in Canada? Well, in Canada there are 1.2 million people who curl every winter. In the rest of the world the total number of curlers is 100,000, including 17,000 in the U.S. Curling competes with hockey for popularity because there are 1.2 million people who actually play the game. In the book Burned by the Rock Jean Sonmor explains: "These Canadians are farmers, fishermen, stockbrokers. They run computers, hairdressing salons or supermarkets. The mix is as diverse as the country." Curling is a major winter pastime in Canada.

Scott Paper, a division of Kruger Inc, has sponsored the Tournament of Hearts for the past 23 years and has agreed to sponsor this tournament for another six. They are the longest national sponsor of amateur sport in Canada. So with toilet paper, facial tissue, and paper towels adorning the hallways and runways of the curling championship, 113,000 fans and 12 championship teams experienced the friendly faces and helping hands of over 700 volunteers from central Alberta.

Team Alberta made a valiant attempt but were knocked out in the round robin. The heart-stopping final game played on February 29 between Team Canada and Team Quebec was a final fit for Canadian fans. Quebec won the hearts of the crowd as they cheered for the young and tenacious team, but Colleen Jones and Team Canada with the experience of six national championships won the tournament.

Congratulations Team Canada. Congratulations, too, to Al Redel, chair of the tournament, and the 700 volunteers of central Alberta for demonstrating why I call Red Deer paradise.

May everyone in Canada look forward to next year's Scott to be held in St. John's, Newfoundland-Labrador, where I'm sure they plan to break the Red Deer record for sales in the Heart Stop Lounge.

Traffic Safety

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, traffic safety is an important indicator of the quality of life in any community. Now more than ever traffic safety is an important issue here in Alberta.

Even with education and enforcement programs designed to lower the rate of traffic collisions in the province, fatalities and injuries resulting from collisions are still unacceptably high in Alberta. In terms of population growth Alberta's fatal collision rate decreased from 2001 to 2002; however, 2002 saw the number of collisions on Alberta's roadways rise by almost 9,000 to over 116,000 total collisions.

In 2003 drunk drivers continued to wreak havoc on city roadways despite years of public awareness campaigns and efforts by police to catch offenders. Sadly, in a recent survey by Stats Canada Edmonton and Calgary ranked first in drunk driving offences among Canada's nine largest cities. The issue of drinking and driving becomes particularly predominant during the holiday season, when people tend to consume more alcohol. In cases like these we must ask ourselves why for some it is still considered socially acceptable to drink and drive and why so many people continue to make the choice to do so.

The issue of traffic safety is particularly important because it affects Albertans on a number of levels. Collisions, of course, cause great emotional trauma, but they can also have grave financial consequences for both individuals and communities. Victims and families of victims require emotional and financial support to cope with loss and medical bills and with vehicle repairs and higher insurance premiums. Communities must repair damage to public property caused by collisions as well as make programs and services available to those who have been involved in accidents. Based on estimations by the Alberta Motor Association the overall cost of collisions to society will be over $4.2 billion in 2003.

The government's recent announcement of an independent review into its current traffic safety program recognizes this. What is needed is a comprehensive review of the current situation in Alberta so we can better address the issues around traffic safety that continue to elude us. I look forward to seeing the results of the independent review in May.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Low-income Albertans

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We'll need to listen more carefully regarding the needs of low-income Albertans. We also need to listen to the Alberta Federation of Labour when they say:

Welfare is the income source of last resort for Albertans, the final strand in the so-called "social safety net." In theory, at least, welfare is supposed to protect each of us from becoming completely destitute in the event we lose all other sources of income.

In a society where many of us live from paycheque to paycheque, any job loss carries with it the potential, however slight, to become a financial catastrophe. But if you lose your job and you can't get Employment Insurance, or if you can't find a new job before your EI benefits run out, welfare is supposed to be there to prevent your family from losing everything and ending up homeless.

Of course welfare benefits in Canada are set at a level that means many recipients will, in fact, end up living on the streets. Certainly most Canadians wouldn't be able to keep up their mortgage payments or pay rent if they had to rely on income from welfare.

Welfare Incomes 2002, published by the National Council of Welfare, estimates the basic welfare income of four "household types" in each province of Canada. In three of the four categories, Alberta's welfare benefits are among the lowest in the country.

As we saw in the case of the minimum wage, Alberta treats its poorest citizens more harshly than do other provinces in Canada, despite the fact that it is the wealthiest province. While persons with disabilities, for example, may have their welfare income supplemented by other services, does anyone seriously believe that these Albertans can enjoy a reasonable quality of life on a cash income of $7,600 a year?

For the welfare households consisting of a single parent with a child, the picture is equally bleak. In this instance, Alberta ranks dead last among provinces. The typical single parent family is headed by a woman, who has been deprived of spousal income and support by either marital breakdown or the death of a spouse. What kind of upbringing, what kind of future, can these single mothers provide for their children on $11,600 a year?

I ask the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to please ensure that these people have an increase in their benefits in the next budget year. Thank you.

Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1, 4, 5, 15, and 33.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 21 and 43.

Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two quick tablings. One of them highlights the international spotlight that is going to be shone on Alberta's artists, specifically the music community. Today we released the first ever compilation CD featuring Alberta musicians, which will go world-wide to trade offices, government offices, consulates, and so on, around the world. So I'm tabling that news release for everyone's information.

Secondly, very quickly, the Alberta Magazine Publishers Association first ever Read Alberta Magazines Month, which will officially be launched tomorrow, is of great significance, and I'd like to table a letter of congratulations to Ruth Kelly of that association for that Alberta first.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice, and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today in question period the Premier referred to a media release from Alberta Beef Industry Council, and I think you requested that the release be tabled. So I'm happy to table for the benefit of the Assembly the Alberta Beef Industry Council's media release for immediate release March 4, which essentially says that the beef industry is deeply concerned that their recent draft report is being used by provincial opposition parties to pressure the Alberta government into conducting an investigation . . . Our council is thankful for the support that the provincial government has previously provided . . .

The Speaker: I just asked for tabling, not a reading of it.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, did you have one?

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure today to rise and table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from the Glenora Elementary School Council. They have outlined their support and priorities relating to the Every Child Learns; Every Child Succeeds report of the Commission on Learning.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the benefit of all hon. members of this Assembly an article from the business section of the San Francisco Chronicle dated Friday, February 27, 2004, that I received from Lucien Duigou of St. Albert, and this indicates that whenever deregulation is unplugged, the power prices in California decrease by 8 per cent.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a technology review article titled Recharging the Power Grid regarding new pilot projects on flow cell batteries and other new technologies enabling storage of vast amounts of electricity, thereby reducing the need for new transmission lines and boosting the usefulness of windmills for generating electricity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Projected Government Business

The Speaker: The Official Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Under Standing Order 7(5) I would ask the government to share the projected government business for the week of March 8 to 11, 2004.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, March 8, in the afternoon, which normally would be private members' business all afternoon, at 5:15 pursuant to Standing Order 19(1)(c) the question on the throne speech will be put. That would be Government Motion 10 called to engross the throne speech. At 9 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of the Whole we would anticipate speaking to bills 12 and 13; time permitting, second reading on bills 15 and 10 and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, March 9, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 16, the Residential Tenancies Act, 2004; Bill 15, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2004; and Bill 10, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. Time permitting, Committee of the Whole on bills 12 and 13 and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. in Committee of the Whole, bills 12, 13, 16, 10, 15, and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, March 10, under Government Bills and Orders for second reading Bill 17, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004, which we anticipate being introduced on Monday – it's on notice now – and Bill 18, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004, which is also on notice and would be introduced for first reading on Monday; Committee of the Whole or third reading on bills 15, 13, 16, 10 and as per the Order Paper. There are also, just for the advice of the House, three additional bills which we anticipate will be introduced for first reading on Tuesday, and we may move them for second reading in the afternoon on Wednesday so that they're on the table. That would be Bill 19, the Public Trustee Act. Bill 20, which is on notice, is the Minor's Property Act, and Bill 21 won't be available at that time, so I won't mention it. On Wednesday at 8 p.m. for second reading bills 17, 18, 19, and 20 and then in Committee of the Whole on bills 15, 12, 13, 16, and 10.

On Thursday, March 11, under Government Bills and Orders we anticipate Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor might attend to provide royal assent for those bills at that time awaiting royal assent, and we would proceed with second reading and Committee of the Whole as per the Order Paper.

The Speaker: Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day, I just want to clarify a few things and tidy up a little bit of business as we leave this week.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: First of all, three of the members who participated in Members' Statements went well beyond the two-minute time level which is in Standing Orders. Now, look; I know the way the game is played. You put on a boundary, and everybody then lives with the boundaries for a while. Then, all of the sudden they put one little toe over to see how far they can go, and then it's three feet. Well, we've got to stay within the time limit; okay? Please. It's your rule.

Speaker's Ruling Exhibits

The Speaker: Secondly, there was an exhibit used in the House today. That's a no-no, Government House Leader. I just want to say it by way of this example. We once had in this House a former Minister of Finance who used an exhibit. He was advised by the chair that that wasn't very good. He then left this House, and once he was involved in a national television debate, and he used an exhibit. And boy, oh boy, the people of this country thought that wasn't very good. So let's just remember what happens to people who use exhibits in the House so that nobody gets carried away with using exhibits.

Speaker's Ruling Intemperate Language

The Speaker: Some intemperate language was used periodically this week; there was such a thing. Yesterday we had a situation where the Speaker on page 298 of Hansard of March 3, 2004, said the following: "I'm not sure if Hansard caught the words, but there were some words echoed at about the same time as this question was being raised, something to the effect of: what an idiot." I heard that. Hansard did not, so it's not recorded in Hansard.

However, in going back to my office and doing my own personal research, it became clear to me that such a phrase was said in this House. At the time, I wasn't sure where it came from or who it was, what the intent was. But in the last 24 hours in the province of Alberta virtually every radio station and a whole bunch of others basically used this same play as well.

I know who said it, and I'm asking that person to rise and to withdraw such a comment in the House. Oh. The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, as you know, that would be myself. I used the phrase "what an idiot" during debate on a question as it pertained to the BSE issue.

I guess frustrations sometimes prevail as we hear questions come across and you know how terribly hard and diligently our Premier and our Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development have worked with the industry to get them through this devastation, an emotional – emotional – battle that rural Alberta has gone through in disasters in the last two years. When there are questions about things, it becomes difficult.

So I would like to remove the words, withdraw "what an idiot," and apologize to the House.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was another phrase that was used today. I've been an elected person since 1979, and should anybody ever say these words to me, I would immediately stop and there would be a real challenge. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry used a phrase several times on an elected person, basically: you're running away. Should anybody ever have used a phrase like that to me, it would have prompted a response and a reaction.

Words have meanings to various people at certain times, and for anybody to say: well, you shouldn't use "running away" – it's the context in which it's used that can prompt the response. So I'm not saying that you can't use "running away." I'm just saying that there's got to be temperance at the time that it's used because it will evoke a response and a reaction in the same way that the previous phrase, "what an idiot," was used. I have no idea to whom it was used. It could have been the hon. minister's neighbour, seatmate, anybody in this House. That was never identified and doesn't have to be. It's just that it's an intemperate thing to say.

head: Orders of the Day
head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Blind Persons' Rights Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise on this wonderful day to conclude this debate on Bill 4, that being the Blind Persons' Rights Amendment Act, 2004, and I want to say that it's been an honour for me to pilot this bill along. In that regard also, I want to thank other members of the House who have spoken to it and/or have supported it and in particular the representatives from the Canadian National Institute for the Blind who helped us develop it and have attended at this House often and with whom I have met on numerous occasions.

This is a very good bill that has been brought before the House after considerable public consultation, after considerable review, and after much discussion and debate with persons whom we are actually trying to serve through and with this particular legislative piece.

In that respect, Mr. Speaker, the Department of Community Development has been very pleased and proud to have received responsibility over the act as well as responsibility for visually impaired and/or blind and/or deaf-blind individuals in this province. That responsibility was transferred from the Alberta Department of Health and Wellness a few years ago, and we have done our very level best to work with that community to bring in this set of amendments to effect the changes that we need.

In sort of wrapping up here, Mr. Speaker, I just want to highlight once again that this has been truly a journey of change to affect thousands of Albertans whom we are trying to serve. It helps to close a gap in our legislation that will result in better protection for individuals who are blind and also for those who require a guide dog or a white cane. In doing so, the act will also resolve a difficulty that has been around for some time, and that is the definition of blindness. We know from the community we're trying to serve that the current definition does not serve the needs as well as it ought, and they would prefer to have a definition as determined by the medical profession come forward, and we will be doing that.

We are also well aware that in some cases there are abuses of law in all jurisdictions, and in this particular case in order to stem the flow of any further abuses, we are significantly increasing the fines in the various areas for various violations of the act.

A couple of other critical areas, Mr. Speaker, are with respect to the protection that we know needs to be provided to the persons who are training these dogs for use and employment in the community. So this particular act will provide that additional protection for certified dog trainers as well as for the dogs that are actually in training. They will be allowed to go where they need to go in order to experience what their new employment as dogs will be, and that's a very good improvement for everyone concerned.

The issue of identification cards I have commented on before, Mr. Speaker, and this particular act and the accompanying regulations will allow us to issue an identification card for the blind person/guide dog team. That, too, will be deemed very beneficial.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the minister in this case – I'm honoured to be so – will have the responsibility for making regulations regarding the qualifications required for guide dogs. I'm particularly excited that we might see the addition, in fact I think we will see the addition of other training facilities being added to the existing list of accredited facilities. I've indicated before that since there is only one official training and licensing school in Canada – and I believe it's in Ottawa – I think we should seriously consider how we might in fact have a similar facility right here in Alberta. We have many things that we as Albertans have done that have been of a first-ever nature, and this could well be another one of those.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to make those concluding comments. If there's anything else that needs attention or addressing, I'd be happy to follow up with individual members or for that matter with members of the community as we see this bill move forward and become law in the very near future.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and on behalf of the Official Opposition give our support in third reading to Bill 4, the Blind Persons' Rights Amendment Act, 2004. We've been pleased to support this bill with rapid passage, which I think is no small indication of our esteem for the persons involved here and our willingness and eagerness, in fact, to have this legislation swiftly passed and implemented.

We're pleased with those that it's able to help and the definitions that the minister mentioned, going to a medical model definition. The penalties and the fines that are increased in the act to show a seriousness of how offences are to be taken are excellent and of course the inclusion of trainers under protection along with those that are actually using the dogs: all excellent.

I continue to put on the record my disappointment that the minister has been unable or unwilling to give us some indication of when we could expect a companion bill; that is, a bill that will extend protection and rights to other kinds of service animals. I pressed for that answer while we were in second reading, in committee, and now I'm in third asking the same question of the minister: when can we expect to see the companion bill brought before the Assembly? It's my only hesitation about this bill at all. As I said, we've been very happy to give it swift passage, but we really were looking to see when we would get the second half of this.

So with those words of support I'm happy to recommend passage of third reading. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, would like to thank the minister for bringing this bill forward. I have received a number of phone calls and letters from people that are very, very pleased that this is finally before this Assembly. As my colleague from across the way just mentioned, I think that we have moved through this bill very swiftly.

I, too, would ask that you consider a companion bill that would see the use of service dogs by others. I recently talked to some people that said that the hearing impaired can very often use a service dog to help them in their day-to-day life. I think that any time that we as legislators can make someone's life a little easier, then let us look at doing so.

I cannot imagine the happiness and the encouragement that an animal can give these people. Many of us have pets in our own home, and we know how much they mean to us. Think how much these dogs mean to these people, that not only would be a pet but also provide them with many, many things that they haven't been provided with before. So if we can do anything at all, would you please, Mr. Minister, look at something in the future to help others where this could really make a difference.

I also am very encouraged by your words, that you would look at a training facility for these animals in the province. I think that would be marvellous, and I encourage you to do so.

Thank you to the members of the Assembly for supporting the bill thus far, and I know the people in the gallery will be very pleased when it is finally passed. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development to close the debate.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just with reference quickly to the previous two speakers I want to thank them, first of all, for their support for this bill.

With respect to the other issue of other assistive animals for other purposes I did indicate – I believe maybe it was during Committee of the Whole stage – that I will be looking at that issue, but let's not forget that individuals who are using other animals, including dogs, for other purposes than what Bill 4 is all about are already provided a fairly high degree of protection under the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. It doesn't mean that we can't do more, but I'm saying that there is some protection there already.

Nonetheless, we are reviewing the issues that have been raised in that regard, and I will communicate further with all members of the House as that process moves along. We're just not ready to move with it right now, and I didn't want to complicate the bill before us, Mr. Speaker, nor the important issue of what the bill serves. I didn't want anything else sort of interfering at this time. So I'm happy that we're able to move this forward.

With that, I'll conclude debate. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development has moved third reading of Bill 4, the Blind Persons' Rights Amendment Act, 2004.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a third time]

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwodzesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 14, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2004, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance.

I think, as previous speakers have already indicated on this matter and on this important bill, the record is clear as to why it is necessary to see it through to its conclusion, so with that I'll cede the floor to other speakers and other comments should there be any.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I don't think I have words to describe how much I disagree with the previous speaker, but let me try.

The Speaker: Well, actually, we're dealing with the debate on the bill.

Ms Blakeman: Absolutely. With the bill, which is the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2004, Bill 14.

When I look at the reason that we would get such a bill before us, it's additional money that's being asked, in some cases asked for forgiveness rather than permission to spend additional money beyond what was in the budget. In some cases, many cases, the money has already been spent; thus, we're being approached as the Legislative Assembly to give permission after the fact for the spending of the money.

I think that most Albertans would agree that there's a reason to go beyond your budget to request additional funds under a few very narrow categories, that there was a sudden and unexpected occurrence that would require the injection of money. In other words, if it could have possibly been foreseen that the money needed to be expended, then it should have been in the budget in the first place or it should go into the next year's budget, but to just kind of fling it about when you knew darn well that you needed to spend this money is not an acceptable reason to be putting it into a supplementary supply.

I think Albertans would also agree that in the case of an emergency there's good reason to be coming back before the Legislative Assembly and asking for supplemental supply. Fighting fires comes to mind. Emergency assistance for drought comes to mind. The issues around the plight of the farmers and the cattle producers come to mind. All of those we've actually looked at, I think, in the last year. In fact, this is the second supplemental supply that's been requested inside of this fiscal year.

So two reasons: it should not be expected that you would be spending this money, so if it's unexpected for some reason, it could be considered a request for emergency funds, and I think that's particularly true. You could have a subcategory under that that's around life and limb in some cases. I'm thinking of the homeless, for example. If we had an increased number of homeless people, we had no reason to expect that that was going to happen to us, so it was unexpected, but it's also life and limb. Then there is a responsibility of the government to in fact come forward and request the additional funds to make sure that we don't have people dying in the streets. All of those would be reasonable requests for additional sums.

So let us just go through the departments that are requesting additional monies here. Under the Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development we have a request for $1,750,000 "requested to provide for the Province's costs in implementing the Fort McKay First Nation land claim settlement." Well, this settlement has been in negotiation in the courts for some time. I don't think we could claim that this was unexpected, so this would not fall under my list of a reasonable request. It's clearly expected expenditures. Why is it coming forward as a supplementary? It either should have been in the budget in the first place or it will have to wait until the next one.

We're next looking at Health and Wellness in which we have a supplementary estimate of $6,167,000 requested. Out of that we've got two million and change, $2.1 million, "for the increased costs of the Non-Group Health Benefits program" and $4 million "to respond to the West Nile virus threat."

Well, I appreciate that the government is looking at doing the research and the work that needs to be done behind the West Nile virus threat, but I would question whether this was of such unexpected immediacy that it has to come through as a supplementary supply. We've been dealing with West Nile well outside of this fiscal year, so either it should have been in the budget coming into this year or it should wait, but this looks to me like: we've got extra money; let's chuck it in here now. That's not a good budgeting process, and I don't think it's particularly supported by people in Alberta when we see this sort of serendipitous taking advantage of additional funds.

There's also an additional $6.3 million "requested to provide for the enhancement and deployment of the Pharmaceutical Information Network. The spending in 2003-04 will be offset by funding provided by [the] Canada Health Infoway." Again, I question: was this expected spending? This looks again like there was extra money: let's throw it in here; it's something we always wanted to do.

Well, it raises a number of additional questions, then. Is there enough money to continue? Once you've started this program, will there be enough money to continue to pay for the program? This government likes to get into one-off projects, but the world does not operate on one-off. Things need to be continued, so will we now see this come partly to fruition and then be cut because we don't have the funds to continue to do it? Or if there are the funds to continue to do it, again, why do we have this under a supplementary supply?

Under Human Resources and Employment there's a request for $28,680,000. Out of that we've got $14.68 million "for Supports for Independence to address caseload and cost-per-case increases." Now, this is an interesting one. Could we have foreseen that there was going to be a requirement for additional monies?

I suspect that a good deal of the additional monies that are being requested here are to help offset higher electrical utility bills, which certainly could have been foreseen. But perhaps I am mistaken in it and, in fact, we have more people that are requiring government assistance. Well, larger question: why? Why do we have more people? What has happened in society that we have more people requesting this? This government is very fond of saying that they have decreased these welfare rolls, so what's gone wrong that there's an increase? I suspect that's not what the problem is here. I think this is about paying for the increased electricity.

There's also $14 million for skills investment, and under that there's "an increase in career and employment assistance services . . . an increase in enrolment in basic skills and academic upgrading, and . . . an increase in enrolment in apprenticeship and short-term skills training programs." Some of those I think could be argued under our increasing problems with a shortage of skilled labour. Although at this point next year is a matter of weeks, to say, "We've got to wait until next year before we start programs that will produce skilled workers for the labour force" – there may well be a good argument that could be made there as to why this needed to happen inside of this fiscal year with an additional request of funds for it, but I'm not sure that in fact is the case.

Then we have under Infrastructure a supplementary estimate request of $35 million "to provide for energy rebates pursuant to the Natural Gas Price Protection Act,” and “pursuant to . . . the Fiscal Responsibility Act, energy rebates are being funded from the Sustainability Fund.” Well, that one we certainly could see coming, but it’s an interesting way . . .

See, part of what’s happening here is that the Minister of Finance, in her third-quarter update, announced that we had a $3.5 billion surplus. In fact, I would argue that it was significantly higher than that, probably closer to a $5 billion surplus, but that’s really going to make the government look odd in that they didn’t budget for and spend that money as they came to it. That kind of thing, where we’ve got $35 million put into this particular fund, should have been added to the amount of the surplus. They’ve now managed to nip it off and account for it under a different place. They’re not going to have to count it in as part of their surplus money.

Then we’ve got Innovation and Science, which is requesting a supplementary estimate of one and a half million dollars “to provide for increases in operating and upgrading expenses for the Alberta Government Integrated Management Information System.” Imaxis is what we call it. I would hardly think this is unexpected. I clearly remember reading about this in the Auditor General’s report several years ago. Seeing as I don’t read those Auditor General reports until almost a year after we’re examining, this is far from unexpected, nor would I see it as an emergency or threatening life and limb.

Under the Department of Learning we have $14,600,000 to fund a number of different pressures. In fact, their pressures total $15,700,000, but they’re asking for an additional amount of money of $14.6 million. So they’re looking for money for separate and public school support, for “increasing numbers of grade 12 students returning to high school for upgrading,” for “providing learning programs to students in provincial institutions.” There’s quite a bit of money in here in a couple of different ways for early childhood support, particularly around children with severe disabilities.

I made the argument at a teachers’ forum last week that a child is only going to get one February in grade 2. You know, they only get one period of time. They don’t get to do grade 1 again with that teacher and that class, and they shouldn’t be penalized because the government is being tight-fisted with the money. So in most cases I would support what’s being put through here.

Finally, we’re looking at Revenue, which is requesting $875,000 “to provide funding for the acquisition of an investment risk management system.” Total cost of the system is estimated at $1.26 million. Half of the cost is recovered through charge-backs. Again I would argue that this was not unexpected. It is not an emergency, and it certainly is not solving any threat to life and limb.

Finally, under the seniors’ programs a supplementary estimate is requested of $10,900,000. This is $4.5 million for an increased number of low-income seniors with the costs of long-term care. Well, the timing of the long-term care increase was 100 per cent within the control of the government, and I’ve already raised this argument yesterday. And $900,000 supports “additional year-round and seasonal beds in homeless shelters,” which certainly falls under our life and limb category here, and $5.5 million for “increased provincial funding under the Canada/Alberta Affordable Housing Agreement.” Again I think that the protection of life and limb is an argument that could be used under this.

So we have a number of examples here. All of the money that’s being requested, which is $114 million in operating and an additional $6.3 million in capital investment, I would argue is a rather glaring example of a government’s inability to manage properly, to cast forward and manage projects that they know are coming, that are obvious. This is just a way of hiding the extra money so that they’re not too embarrassed at how far off they were in their predictions in their budget.

You’ve got to remember that the point of budgeting is not so that you can stand up at the end and go: see how much I have left over. The point is to actually spend the money, to go “How much is required in all of these areas?” and spend the money because those are the programs and the services that the government has agreed to provide and the people need. So you’re not to be congratulated because you are able to stand up and go: look how much we didn’t spend. That’s money that wasn’t spent on health, it wasn’t spent on education, it wasn’t spent on infrastructure, it wasn’t spent in a lot of places, and to come three weeks before the end of the fiscal year and chuck money at it is not an efficient way to manage. This government would be very critical of any company, of any nonprofit, indeed of any individual that managed their finances like this.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

So I continue to raise these issues every time I see one of them, and the government continues to give me ample opportunity to do that, seeing as we’re now looking at supplementary estimates, No. 2, for this year. I’m sure there will soon be interim supply requests coming because the government couldn’t manage its finances well enough to get the budget introduced and through before the fiscal year-end. Obviously, that’s not going to happen. We’re three weeks from the fiscal year-end and there’s no sign of a budget. So this government that has all the control in the world, that has all of those employees, that has all of that money cannot manage itself well enough to get a budget introduced and passed before the fiscal year-end. For shame.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

Bill 1

Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Premier to move Bill 1, the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, I would like to just comment briefly on my support for this particular bill. When rumours of similar plans surfaced a year or perhaps two years ago – I can’t recall now – I can remember a few people phoning me and indicating that they had some concerns about how a program like this might work. But I have to say that now that people have the bill in front of them and now that there has been considerable debate, persons who have been getting in touch with me are in favour of this long-term investment in education by the government of Alberta.

I also say as the father of two children and, hopefully, one day perhaps a grandfather as well that it’s a good thing. As with all good things they need a start. So while I respect some of the comments that I’ve read, I don’t want those negative comments that we’ve heard to be used as any reason to stop this particular bill from going forward to fruition. You have to begin a good program somewhere, so a beginning point has been arrived at, and I think the legacy that it will create will well be worth the investment and the decisions that we are making today.

The Learning Commission report, that has been the subject of some great discussion in this House, a report that I have looked through and for the most part support almost all of the recommendations in it personally, has brought into sharper and sharper focus the need for us to do whatever we can to support the education system in this province in a much larger way, and we will I'm sure be doing that.

There are other ways that we can help with education and provide postsecondary education on a larger basis, and that is specifically what this act will do by encouraging families with children who are born or adopted beginning January 1, 2005, to start setting money aside. We are helping to kick-start that program for the children involved.

Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat so that others can perhaps speak to this. I would hope that the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act, introduced by our hon. Premier, will receive the support it requires, particularly given that this government has indicated that education in all its forms is a number one priority for us.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to make a few remarks at third reading of Bill 1, the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act. Third reading is a chance for us to again reflect on the principles that underlie a bill after having examined it first at second reading and looked at the details of the bill in Committee of the Whole.

I think that it is important to again visit the principles that seem to set the framework for this bill. They're important principles, Mr. Speaker. I think that we have to encourage more high school graduates to pursue higher education. Whether that be a program at one of our postsecondary institutions, continuing education programs, or apprenticeship, there are a variety of ways that they can continue that education. It's a principle that I think should be acted upon as frequently as possible in terms of making high school students aware of the implications of not continuing their high school.

I noticed in a report from the New York City schools that that school board has actually moved to having dropouts or potential dropouts sign a sheet that indicates that by dropping out, they are going to face a future of unemployment and low wages, detailing rather graphically what happens if you drop out of high school and don't continue your education. It's been controversial, some parents indicating that it goes too far, but I think it does underline how important it is that we encourage young people to continue their education. That's one of the principles that I think Bill 1 has tried to support. Now, how well it's supported I think is another question.

Another principle, though not part of the bill, is one that we would expect to be part of the bill, and that is that it needs to be fair to all Alberta students. I don't think Albertans would expect any less from legislation that appears before this Assembly than that it would be legislation that is fair to all Alberta students. Again, I think it's a principle that the bill fails to support. This is going to be for many Albertans the bill that left them out, and I think that that's unfortunate.

It could have easily been otherwise, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of things that the bill could have done to make sure that it was fair to all Alberta students. There have been all kinds of suggestions with respect to that in terms of making sure that tuitions at postsecondary institutions were affordable, making sure that there was support in place not just for those students who are honours students but for those students who just make passing grades yet manage to go on and better themselves. So I think there are a number of ways and mechanisms that could have been used to make sure that it's fair to all Alberta students, and unfortunately the bill hasn't done that.

I think that the notion that it needs to be open to all Albertans is closely related to that principle. The studies that we've looked at I think are fairly conclusive that registered education savings plans are not participated in by people who have limited incomes, that they are accessed primarily by people who have middle and upper socioeconomic circumstances. They're the ones that are able to take advantage of this. So it's not really, truly open to all Albertans, just to a certain economic class.

Another principle that we looked at in second reading was that anything that is proposed not be used as a substitute for properly funding postsecondary schools. That's one of the fears that I've had about the bill right from the beginning, that somehow or other it may take the pressure off the government to properly fund postsecondary education.

I have to say with respect to this that I was disappointed earlier today at the press conference that the Minister of Learning didn't see fit to act on the recommendation from the Learning Commission that would have required a review of the postsecondary education system in the province, that that recommendation has been rejected by the government. Again, I think that that's unfortunate, because it's related to this notion of adequacy, of affordability, of providing adequate resources for those postsecondary institutions. It's a little convoluted, but I think that this has the potential to give the impression that the government has done its job by offering this and that there's a lesser obligation to actually look after those institutions.

We talked about the preamble before. I think the words are good. I like the notion that the government "recognizes the benefits of post-secondary education." My concern is that the kind of actions that one might expect to support that statement do not always follow. I'm again reminded of how badly devastated our institutions were in the 1990s, taking some of the biggest hits in terms of budget cuts. Those institutions haven't recovered fully from those cuts.

I think that those are the main principles. I think we've heard the objections to the bill not just from opposition benches but from government benches, the concerns about the bill. Again, the basic question, I guess, that arises is: is this the appropriate bill to mark the centennial of the province's beginning? I'm not convinced, Mr. Speaker, that it's fair and is as all inclusive as one would hope that a bill that was going to mark the 100th birthday of our province might be, so unfortunately I find myself not able to support Bill 1.

Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Herard: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to speak to the third reading stage of Bill 1, the Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act, an act that we hope will change the paradigm with respect to the culture of saving that Albertans do for the postsecondary education of their children and for their grandchildren. We hope that this will mean that more Albertans will graduate from our postsecondary institutions and be able to transition directly into postsecondary from high school, be able to perhaps better afford to go on to postsecondary with respect to having saved from the beginning of their life and perhaps also graduate from their postsecondary education with considerably less debt than they would have otherwise had.

I just want to say a few words of thanks to the Deputy Minister and Minister of Learning for their support and good counsel on the details of this bill and in particular to Mr. Steve MacDonald from learning transitions at Alberta Learning, who co-ordinated a number of departments both here and in Ottawa, and I thank them all as well.

But most of all I want to thank our Premier for allowing me to work on this idea and for the honour of making it his bill, Bill 1, in the Fourth Session of the spring sittings of the 25th Legislature. The Premier has made it possible for each private member to make a difference at every stage on every issue, and I think that's one of the hallmarks of this Premier, that as a private member you can make a difference in every stage of policy development. You can walk into his office with an idea and he says: go ahead, run with it; see if you can get it through. So I want to thank the Premier for allowing everyone to be able to take an idea and run with it and hopefully one day stand in this Chamber and see it come to reality.

I want to thank everyone who is in support of the bill and hope that everybody votes for it. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise and speak to Bill 1, Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act, in its third and final reading. This bill is the flagship bill of the session. The bill also comes, of course, during the fourth and critical year of the election cycle. That's the sort of immediate context of the bill.

I want to go over some of the recent developments, Mr. Speaker, with respect to postsecondary education culminating in the passage of Bill 43 in the last session, which drew lots of attention from postsecondary students – the Council of Alberta University Students, called CAUS; ACTISEC, Alberta College and Technical Institute Students' Executive Council – academics, parents, and others. The campaign that was run on Bill 43 by postsecondary students interestingly was named, sort of to catch attention, I guess, Deregulation Nation.

From the point of our postsecondary students the provisions of Bill 43 not only lifted the cap for postsecondary tuition from where it was and promised to stay by the government in previous years; the government sort of went back on its promise to keep that cap. Bill 43 was the mechanism through which that cap, therefore, was disposed of and lifted, thus opening the doors for unlimited, continuing yearly tuition rate increases which go far beyond either the rate of inflation or some other measure that would suggest that they are just meant to keep up with the costs. What the government's policy on tuition fee increases reflects and changes in their policy, as I said, you know, from a cap of 30 per cent to go beyond it as allowed by Bill 43, reflects the government's preference . . .

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

Mr. Herard: Yes. Relevance, Mr. Speaker. We're in third reading on Bill 1, and I think the hon. member wants to talk about Bill 43, which has already been passed in this House, which is another point of order that I sort of forget the number of, but once you pass a bill in this House, you don't bring it back into debate, especially on another bill. So I would hope that you could ask the hon. member to speak to the bill that we're currently working on.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the point of order.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is no point of order. I'm speaking to Bill 1, and in order to speak to Bill 1, I'm referring to the context in which we discuss Bill 1. The discussion on Bill 1 I hope doesn't take place in a vacuum. As legislators I think it's important for us to refer to the important elements of the context in order to make sense of what the bill is about and to make sensible comments about the bill.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Well, there are two points that one must first deal with, and that's perhaps to review for all of us debate on third reading. Procedures on third reading are very much like second reading except that reflections on third reading are the bill as it currently stands, not on what it might have been, what it could be, what it should be. That's all for second reading and to a certain extent in committee, when you make amendments. But when we're in third reading, Erskine May quite clearly says on page 544 that "debate on third reading, however, is more restricted than at the earlier stage, being limited to the contents of the bill." To that extent, the hon. member is quite right.

If we're talking about some other bill that should or should not have been passed, then we come into a whole new point of order which prohibits us from debating a bill for a second time in the same session. Anyway, I would think that if that's what the point of order is, then the hon. member would just guide himself accordingly.

Debate Continued

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My comments on Bill 1 are not at all intended to seek any changes in the bill. They are in fact reflect on the principles of the bill and what's, strictly speaking, the substance of the bill and how it will affect the concerns that prevail. That's why I just want to draw attention to those concerns and not just speak to another bill, you know, that had been previously debated and passed.

The bill that I referred to before is now government policy, so I'm referring to government policy rather than Bill 43. This bill, therefore, speaks to that policy, and that policy is based on the principle of user pay. This bill is very much driven by this principle that those who go to postsecondary education should be able to pay for most of the costs, and that's why, I guess, registered educational savings plans are a preferred option by some, by this government and by many of the members on the government side who have spoken to the bill.

There are problems with this bill because this very principle I think puts into question the significance of not only individuals and families investing in postsecondary education but communities, societies, provincial bodies such as the Alberta government seeing postsecondary education as a most important arena in which to make a social investment for their future. This bill is about investing in the future, as I understand it, and therefore I think it's quite germane to draw attention to the flaw in the bill, in that it really does not address the question of equity. It does not address the question of the significance of social investment and how investing in human creativity should be perhaps a guiding principle in how we spend our money on postsecondary education. Bill 1 fails to embrace that principle.

Earlier in the debate on the bill one of the hon. members from the government backbenches drew attention to its inequity, its exclusionary nature. Any bill that deals with educational savings and educational investments must necessarily address the question of equity, and this bill, Mr. Speaker, fails to do that. It leaves out children already born and not yet in school and certainly all of those children who are born and have started school, even though they're in kindergarten and beyond.

The other difficulty, Mr. Speaker, in terms of the principles of this bill is not just its exclusionary nature but its failure to in fact take note of the fact that educational savings plans have proved not an effective instrument of generating savings for children born in families, in particular where there aren't means readily available for those families to support those children as they move through the educational system and reach a stage where they have to make decisions and then pay for postsecondary education.

The experience with RESPs and the studies done on that experience clearly demonstrate that only about 42 per cent of families take part in those plans. So although we have Bill 1 before us, Alberta Centennial Education Savings Plan Act, it doesn't seem to factor in the serious limitations of registered education savings plans and how they leave out a majority of families which are unable to have sufficient income to save some to invest.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont did talk to a need for a paradigm shift, as he called it. I was quite intrigued by a reference to shifting paradigms here. He talked about a culture of saving as something that this bill will encourage. I don't think, Mr. Speaker, the problem is with respect to the absence of such a culture among the 58 per cent of Canadian families who don't have RESPs. I'm not entirely sure exactly what percentage of Alberta families have RESPs for their children. I think the problem is not the absence of a culture of saving; the problem is the impossibility for many Albertans to save for the postsecondary education of their children. I want to just make sure that this point is clear.

What's really needed is a culture of social investment that we as members of this House need to inculcate and nourish. If we looked at investment in postsecondary education from that perspective, from a culture of social investment, we would find that Bill 1 is therefore deficient. It doesn't really pay attention to that very important principle, an important guiding sort of notion that any money that we spend on education in general is driven by this belief in the significance and importance of social investment.

Mr. Speaker, it's difficult to not pay attention to some of the flaws of this bill when speaking to it, because it will require a decision either to vote for it or not support it.

A TD Bank report done very recently about the Edmonton/Calgary corridor draws attention again to the problem that Bill 1 presumably is designed to address, which is, first of all, that not enough Alberta students graduate at a level in order to be able to take advantage of postsecondary education and, secondly, even if they have the qualifications for postsecondary education, make decisions not to go there. The TD Bank report underlines the fact that it's a perception of unaffordability, not the absence of a culture of saving but the perception of unaffordability of postsecondary education in this province that's the problem.

So Bill 1, Mr. Speaker, falls short in that sense, is flawed because it doesn't really construct the legal, legislative arrangements that are embodied in it based on available, reliable knowledge and information about how to tackle the problem of not enough Alberta high school graduates wanting to go beyond high school.

Bill 1, I think, is clearly a sincere attempt to grapple with the situation, but I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, submit to the House that it's not an appropriate solution for the problem that it's trying to address. [The beeper sounded indicating that Dr. Pannu's speaking time had expired]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: It would appear that somehow there is a disconnect here, so you apparently have two more minutes.

Dr. Pannu: Yes. I will take advantage of it. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

So to conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to submit respectfully that this bill fails to put in place systems that will really cultivate either a culture of postsecondary educational participation which will encourage more Albertans to take advantage of postsecondary education or a culture of social investment. For several reasons I won't be able to support Bill 1.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments?

Seeing none, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill 1. I want to congratulate our Premier for introducing it and the hon. Minister of Learning and his staff for working on all the details and especially the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont for bringing forward the concept of the centennial scholarship.

I'm not in debate strictly about the bill now, but I just want to restate some facts here. Indeed, the facts in the long history of human existence have proven that education and skill training is vital to the progress of a society. The lack of education and knowledge brings misery to the lives of individuals, society, and nations. It is also a fact that our government's focus on education is the right thing. Our government has shown leadership in education, learning, and training of our fellow Albertans. Now our government has the right investment in developing our Albertan human resources for today and for the future.

So the focus is right; the target is right. The debate is circling around how to get to the target. There are people who say or even accuse us – if we do not follow their way, that means we destroy the target; we do not believe in the target. That kind of argument is false.

To get back to the bill, there are a few people who have told me that they don't want to pay school taxes because they have no children. Their children have grown up or are not in school any more. There are a few people who have expressed to me, I hope truthfully, that they don't want to spend their tax money on postsecondary education because they have no children or their children are not in postsecondary education. Now, these are some expressions.

But the fact is that this Bill 1 is proposing a registered educational savings plan of $500 for babies born in Alberta's centennial year and thereon. I agree with this concept because this is not a baby bonus like in other jurisdictions where the governments give out thousands of dollars in cash to parents for every baby born to encourage population growth. Now, in Alberta $500 is all they put aside if the parents register the infant in a registered educational savings plan, and if not registered in an RESP, no money is put in. Also, I notice that when the child turns 8, 11 and 14, another $100 is added to his or her RESP, which is great.

The money is not accessible to the parents to spend and can only be spent on post grade 12 education and training by the registered child. So the money cannot be available and used after 18 years. Now, after 18 years, graduating from high school, if the child does not go further with his study or training, the money is not given out.

An Alberta registered education savings plan encourages Alberta parents to think about their children's future, about Alberta's future. They also can capitalize on the federal matching dollars on the education savings. Even if they do not have their own money to put in at the beginning, in total the money doesn't go anywhere except spending on the education of Albertans, on paying the universities, colleges, in the construction of buildings, and teaching staff.

There is a question that people brought forward: why not every child, or why only starting in 2005? Well, I would say that it has to start at some milestone. The centennial year, 2005, is very appropriate. If given to all children 18 years and younger born before 2005, to me there is not enough funding, not enough money. Money is already earmarked for other expenditures, unless we cut back from those.

Also, there is a notion that there is no assistance to the children or students of today. I would say: yes, there is. All the children born before 2005 still have their own existing financial assistance which is available to them. Our universities, colleges, trade apprenticeships continue to grow, as usual.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to share with you a personal perspective. My wife and I put our three children through university through our own RESPs a long time ago. They all graduated. We would feel it unfair to fund other people's children's RESPs, but we live in and share the common Alberta society. Besides, I'm thinking about our grandchildren yet to come and our great-great-grandchildren, too, so the question here is: think big; think to the future.

I also have advice to those who have the feeling or the concept that: if I cannot have it, you cannot have it either. That is a terrible attitude. So I would say: we'll just look to the future, and I support this bill a hundred per cent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Questions? Comments?

Seeing none, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader to close debate on Bill 1?

[Motion carried; Bill 1 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 16
Residential Tenancies Act

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 16, the Residential Tenancies Act.

The Ministry of Government Services is responsible for this legislation. Government Services consulted a wide range of stakeholders on the proposed amendments incorporated into this legislation, and they support the changes that are being brought forward. The stakeholders consulted included landlords, tenants, consumer groups, associations, municipal landlord and tenancy advisory boards, and tenancy experts.

The proposed amendments are of several types. There are amendments to create an alternative dispute resolution process for landlords and tenants, amendments to improve rights for landlords, amendments to improve rights for tenants, amendments to clarify existing wording, and a few housekeeping amendments as well.

The key amendments: I'll go into those in a little more detail. First, the alternative dispute resolution process. We are proposing to add regulation-making power to establish an alternative dispute resolution process through which landlords and tenants can settle disputes outside of court voluntarily. Government Services will be working with Alberta Justice and other stakeholders to develop an efficient and cost-effective dispute resolution system.

The RTA, the Residential Tenancies Act, code of practice. Mr. Speaker, some disputes arise because landlords and tenants do not understand their responsibilities or they do not understand the legislation. Government Services plans to develop, separate from the Residential Tenancies Act, a voluntary code of practice for use by landlords and tenants. This voluntary code will not be legislated in the Residential Tenancies Act, but the code of practice will serve as a plain-language resource for landlords and tenants in interpreting the act.

Section 11, notice to terminate tenancy of employee. The tourism industry has approached government with a concern in the area of staff housing. The Employment Standards Code permits employers to terminate the employment of a probationary employee for just cause without requiring a notice period. The Residential Tenancies Act as it now reads requires employers to give these probationary employees a week's notice of eviction from their staff housing. The tourism industry is concerned with the prevalence of vandalism and abuse by these employees during the week after they've been fired and before they've been evicted from the staff housing that they're living in. Employees who live with these fired employees for that week also share the employers' concern.

The ministry of Government Services will take the proper time to consult with all stakeholders affected by this provision before making a change. Consequently, it is proposed that any new notice period for termination of tenancy for employees would go into regulation after this act has passed. It is proposed that these provisions mirror the Employment Standards Code.

Dealing with minimum housing standards, or the landlord's covenants. Currently the act requires landlords to ensure that the rental premises are habitable. That is a term that is open to interpretation. To be clear, that provision is amended to require landlords to ensure that their rental premises meet the minimum housing standards set out in the Public Health Act. These standards already apply to landlords and the rental housing.

Putting this provision in the act makes it clear now that this act and the Public Health Act interrelate. Since it is an offence under the Public Health Act if these housing standards are not met, there is no need for a duplicate offence under the Residential Tenancies Act.

Regarding the termination of periodic tenancy by a landlord, Mr. Speaker, there are two types of tenancy: fixed-term and periodic. Fixed-term tenancies end on a day specified in the agreement. A periodic tenancy they can renew or continue without notice. The proposed amendments will ensure that landlords cannot terminate a fixed-term or periodic tenancy when a tenant issues a complaint under the Residential Tenancies Act or the Public Health Act. The act is currently silent on this issue for fixed-term tenancies. So filing a complaint won't result in you getting turfed out.

Regarding the prohibition re the termination of tenancy. Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment to the act will also prevent landlords from punishing tenants, either financially or by other retaliatory means, when a tenant issues a complaint against the landlord under the Residential Tenancies Act or the Public Health Act.

Concerning the termination of tenancy for substantial breach by the landlord. If there is a substantial breach of the tenancy agreement, a landlord is able to terminate a tenancy by serving 14 days' notice to the tenant or by successfully applying to court for a termination order. The proposed new section in the act would give a similar recourse to the tenant if the landlord has committed a substantial breach by failing to meet the minimum housing standards under the Public Health Act.

Termination of tenancy for damage or assault. Currently if a tenant causes significant damage to the premises or assaults a landlord or tenant, they can be given 48 hours to move out. We are proposing that this time period be reduced to 24 hours because of damage to the premises or threat of assault to the landlord or a tenant.

Section 40, frustrated tenancies agreement. Provisions dealing with frustrated tenancies agreements are being clarified. An agreement is frustrated if the premises are destroyed or severely damaged. The amendment would provide for frustration of the agreement if the rental premises are dangerous to public health or safety.

Regarding the direction of residential tenancies legislation, one proposed amendment creates the role of a director of residential tenancies to oversee the management of the Residential Tenancies Act. The director will be assigned responsibility for inspection and investigations of potential breaches of the act.

Regarding offences and penalties, Mr. Speaker, this bill contains amendments setting out the department's authority to inspect the landlord's records, perform security deposit audits, and investigate potential offences. These provisions reiterate the department's current authority to inspect and investigate through the Government Organization Act. Department investigators have and use discretion in determining if an infraction warrants a full investigation.

The proper amendments will make it an offence if a landlord fails to keep proper records and if landlords fail to show these records to investigators if requested to do so. Currently if a landlord is successfully prosecuted for violating the act, the tenant needs to launch a civil action to recover any prepaid rent. It is proposed that if a tenant prosecutes successfully, the courts be allowed to award refunds of prepaid rent to the tenant. This will save time for both the tenant and the courts.

Limitation period. An additional proposal would increase the limitation period for prosecution under the act from the current one year to three years. This will result in consistency with other Government Services' acts, such as the Real Estate Act, which we amended last year, and the Fair Trading Act.

Regarding the ministerial regulation-making powers, the final amendment we are proposing to Bill 16 will provide the minister powers to make regulations for the fees a landlord can charge for late rent and NSF rent cheques. This is apart from adding regulation-making powers that would address notice of termination for employee tenants and the alternative dispute resolution process, which we talked about earlier.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has good legislation for landlords and tenants. With these few changes, which are supported by the stakeholders and have been checked out by them, it will be the very best landlord and tenant act in Canada.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with interest that I rise to participate in the debate on the Residential Tenancies Act this afternoon, as proposed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti. Certainly, I would like to express my gratitude to some of the individuals in the Ministry of Government Services, who provided a brief explanation of this legislation a couple of weeks ago and who have responded with some information regarding the questions that we had initially asked. This legislation, if passed, is going to, of course, come into force, and the Residential Tenancies Act from 2000 will be repealed.

Now, there certainly are some initiatives in here that are worth highlighting and I think are worthy of support from this side of the Assembly. Whenever we are considering giving tenants the same rights as landlords to terminate tenancy within 14 days' notice in the case of a substantial breach by the other party, that is certainly worthy of support. Allowing landlords to evict tenants with 24 hours' notice instead of 48 hours' notice if the tenant assaults or threatens to assault landlords or another tenant or causes substantial property damage, well then, that is certainly in line.

There is certainly a need here – and hopefully it's going to be addressed – to ensure that landlords cannot punish tenants if they make a complaint under this act or the Public Health Act. Perhaps in the course of the debate we can find out how many complaints are lodged now. How much of a problem is this? Certainly, another interesting proposal through this legislation, Mr. Speaker, is the provision for the alternative dispute resolution mechanism for tenant landlord disputes so that they don't have to go to court.

Now, I asked, and I appreciate the information that I received on this from a Mr. Jim Kiss from the Government Services department. I was curious about the volume of residential tenancy cases that presently go to the court in this province and how much of a volume that was. I have received information back from Mr. Kiss, and I would like to share this with the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, that there are approximately 6,000 cases per year that go through the court system involving landlord and tenant issues.

If this legislation, this proposal for an ADR, the alternate dispute resolution mechanism, is to go forward, we could reduce that by half. We could reduce that even by one-third, by 2,000 cases. I think that would be significant. I think it is certainly worthy, and let's try it. Let's see what happens. Perhaps it'll even be more successful than reducing court appearances by one-third. It would free up the courts for other matters.

This legislation is going to affect a lot of people. I'm going to be anxious to hear the comments from the hon. Member for Calgary-East and the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie. I understand that they have a committee, and they are discussing basement rental suites with citizens from Medicine Hat and Lethbridge, Fort McMurray, Red Deer, Canmore, certainly the city of Calgary, the city of Edmonton. It is also, I think, an endeavour that is worth noting that is, as I understand it, trying to improve safety and provide for more affordable housing across the province, to study this whole idea of what is a legal and what is an illegal basement suite. How will they be affected by this bill, Bill 16? I would be interested to hear what those hon. members have to say.

Also, there are some concerns that I have, and, certainly, I'm going to hopefully get an opportunity in the next couple of days to discuss any reservations that some Albertans may have towards this legislation, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti talked about the extensive consultation process, and we have not heard back on this side of the Assembly from anyone with any reservations about that legislation. Hopefully, now that we're having a discussion here, if there is anyone with reservations or concerns, they will bring them forward before this bill possibly could become law.

Now, when you're talking about striking a balance between the rights and the responsibilities of landlords and tenants, quite a few people will have an opinion. The Ministry of Government Services has stated that it did three years of consultations before drafting this bill, and I know that Alberta Justice is working very hard to put in place a framework for this alternative dispute resolution process that will be outlined in the regulations of this bill. I don't know if it should be in the legislation, but every work of legislation is a workin-progress. Any changes that we make here that are aimed at making the process more fair seem to be favourable.

I would like, and hopefully I will get the opportunity, as I said, to discuss this with a few groups. We've had some consultations, and the Edmonton Social Planning Council has indicated that they're in favour of these changes. The Edmonton Apartment Association indicates to date that they are also in favour of these changes. So we're going to have to wait and see.

There certainly are some questions that I have – and hopefully we can get to these in committee – in regard to how this legislation would affect boarding houses, where the landlord actually resides in those quarters. How are those tenants protected in this province?

Also, a social care facility licensed under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. What is the difference between what's being proposed in Bill 16 and what is currently in the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act?

Mr. Speaker, I also have some concerns – and we discussed these with the officials from the Ministry of Government Services. I understand that there has been a consultation process that went to Jasper and Banff to discuss with the tourist industry how this legislation would or would not affect them. Many of the operators at the ski resorts and many of the hotels in Banff and Jasper and Lake Louise hire large numbers of young people, some of whom are housed in residences owned by the respective enterprise. How are they affected by this?

Also, the oil field industry. Was the oil field industry consulted? Were the drilling contractors consulted? There are large construction projects occurring as we speak in Alberta's north and some, in fact, all across the province. There are a large number of Albertans who live in permanent construction camps. The city of Fort McMurray, for instance, would quickly come to mind.

How are those individuals affected by this legislation? There are thousands and thousands of Albertans who could be innocently caught up in this bill, and their employers could innocently be caught up in this. I would like to know who was consulted in the construction industry, what was said, and who was consulted in the oil and gas industry? A rig probably moves on a weekly basis in the southeast corner of the province. Up in the Peace country it could move on a monthly basis. It's hard to say. It depends on how deep you're drilling. Are those people affected by this legislation?

Now, I understand that there is additional consultation underway that will include the oil field industry and the construction industry as well as the tourist industry. I would like to know if this consultation process is going to be finished and if we're going to be able to have a report on this before we possibly make this bill into law.

I'm also told that the proposed legislation does not specifically deal with this issue that I have discussed at this time because consultation with all the stakeholders, as I said, has not yet been completed. Once this is done, I'm told, the resulting direction will be the accommodation as required. Before we go on, particularly beyond committee, with this bill, I would like to get some clarification on these issues. I think that in light of the number of Albertans who are housed temporarily under these situations who could be adversely affected by these legislative initiatives and also their employers, who are footing the bill for these camps – what rights do they have? We need to get this straightened out before we pass this bill.

Other than that, Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to say that overall this looks like it's going to be fair to both the landlord and the tenant. I'm looking forward to hearing from any interested Albertan, whether they own rental property or whether they're renting. Contact us at the Official Opposition if they have any reservations or any observations to point out in regard to this prospective legislation.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make a few comments at second reading of Bill 16, the Residential Tenancies Act. There seem to be three major principles that the act is built around. The first is fairness, the second is flexibility, and I think the third is obligations. I think they are three sound principles on which to build an act like this because the violation of those principles is the very area that results in grief both for tenants and for landlords. So I think they're sound principles to build the act upon.

I think the fairness principle is really one that is extremely important, and the act devotes a great deal of attention to fairness, centring on concerns such as terminations. How will the agreements be terminated, both by tenants and by landlords, trying to set out a process that makes it fair to both and to prevent some difficulties before they arise. I think fairness with respect to rent increases and how they're to be handled and the obligations that the landlord and the tenants have with respect to rent increases but, most importantly, the obligations of the landlord.

I think an area that hasn't been much touched on in the past is the conversion of rental units to condominiums, and I think people will welcome the provisions in the act that again set out the ground rules for landlords should they want to convert their properties to condominiums and also provide fair notice to tenants who maybe find themselves in the situation where the units that they occupy are going to be converted into condominiums.

It addresses security deposits and again attempts to set out a set of fair rules for how these deposits are to be treated by the landlord and sets out the provisions that must be followed with respect to that money while it's being held by the landlord and what the tenants may expect with respect to the deposits that they make.

An important area with respect to fairness – and anyone that's been involved with rental property will welcome the sections that do deal with the recovery of damages. It's often a very emotional area, where people become very excited in terms of how damages to property are to be handled. Again the thrust of the bill is to try to set out provisions that are fair to the landlord and to the tenant. Most importantly, I guess, in terms of fairness it sets out some remedies, the way that the disputes can be settled. I think the provision of a dispute resolution provision, even though it's voluntary, is new ground and a good way to proceed.

The obligations are rather extensive as they're set out for landlords. It makes it very clear how they are to act, how they are to involve their tenants, and what's expected of them in terms of their behaviour, as it does for tenants. What are the obligations of tenants? If you're going to rent a piece of property, how should you behave, and what is expected of you in terms of payments and in terms of treatment of property and in terms of working with the landlord to make it a good experience for both parties involved?

So I think that with those brief comments and, as I said, the focus on fairness and flexibility and the obligations of those involved, I'll listen with interest as the bill proceeds through committee stage. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions?

If there is no one further, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to close debate on second reading.

Mr. Graydon: Since there is no more debate, we will call the question on second reading then. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a second time]

4:30

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

[Adjourned debate March 3: Mr. Hancock]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the Official Opposition critic for Justice I'm pleased to have an opportunity to respond to this bill. I have to say right off that I'm pleased to see this coming forward as an amending bill rather than trying to put stuff through miscellaneous statutes, which is an ongoing complaint from me. So I commend the minister for having collected all of these smaller amendments. We are amending several acts here: the Jury Act, Judicature Act, Court of Queen's Bench Act, Court of Appeal Act, Provincial Offences Procedure Act, and, finally, the Queen's Counsel Act. So this becomes an omnibus bill, in fact.

I would object to this bill but for one thing, and that is that the request for the changes have come through the Rules of Court Committee, which is the group that generally does recommend these kinds of changes. Then they come forward and are validated in legislation exactly through this kind of Justice Statutes Amendment Act. What's being allowed here is that there's a shift allowing that the Rules of Court will be validated through a process that involves coming through the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is, in effect, the cabinet, but they are still being generated and requested through that Rules of Court Committee.

I have great problems, as the Speaker well knows, having heard me speak so often on this, with having any new permissions moved under the Lieutenant Governor in Council rather than coming forward as changes through legislation. However, in this case you've got a highly qualified group of people who are the generators of these sorts of requests to begin with, and any future requests for changes in how the courts operate would continue to be generated by this group, but now the less substantive changes will in fact be made by cabinet without having to come before the Assembly.

Since the people that are likely to be most affected by these changes work in a fairly close community, their access to the changes in the new information is not a concern to me. I'm sure that they will share the information with each other and that the lawyers and the court clerks and the members of the judiciary, of course, will be very familiar with what's possible here. Of course, the laypersons, the Albertans out there, are not likely to be aware of what those rules were in the first place, never mind what the changes are. There will be some people that are interested in this kind of thing and follow it, but in that case they'll have to be following the changes coming through an order in council.

The minister in Hansard, March 3, 2004, pages 315 and 316, has laid out fairly clearly what's being changed, but he is a lawyer and does use that lawyer language, so maybe I'll try it again in a bit more flat-footed approach to this.

Essentially, there's a very minor change in the Jury Act. What we have here is a trial involving an amount of money in a certain range. It wasn't clear whether a judge could restrict it to a judge-only trial, and there appeared to be an option that it could go to a jury or a judge. In a lot of cases in this day and age – sorry; I'm just going to stop here. We don't understand, because we watch so much American television, how few jury trials we actually have in this country. Usually, most of our trials are in fact decided by a judge alone, and that in some ways saves us a lot of money, because really what we're arguing are points of law, which is why, in fact, it's heard by a judge. It's really only when you get into the sort of bigger, sensational trials that you have a jury involved.

What this is going to do is allow for the most cost-effective and the most appropriate process to be used by the parties. This is providing that jury trials are not available in situations where the court has decided or determined that an expedited process as set out in the Rules of Court can be applied. Basically, because it's unclear right now, it's the ability to use an expedited process where one of the parties wants a jury trial. So that's the argument. Somebody wants a jury trial, and really it's not appropriate to have a jury trial. This will now allow the judge to say: no; it's just going to be by judge alone. There. That was the layperson's version of that.

The Judicature Act has two sections in it that are being changed here. There's quite a long section about periodic payment of damages. What's happened is that often where damages are awarded – for example, in a catastrophic accident where someone is permanently disabled – there will be a very large settlement that's awarded, and it tends to be given in a lump sum, which is not always the best idea. But it's given in a lump sum because you need agreement between the parties at every stage if you're going to break it into what they call periodic payments or we could call an instalment plan. But you had to go back to court and get agreement every time you did this, so people tended not to do it, and you ended up with a lump sum.

Part of the concern there is – and I don't know if this is just inclination from people. The idea of getting the big chunk of money up front was that you were supposed to take it and use it to, you know, make changes to your home, sort of those high-end expenses that you get into that are costly at the beginning, and then put the rest of it away and manage the money yourself. Unfortunately, what's happened is that people tend to spend the whole lump sum, and then they're coming back going: well, I still need more to live on. So what this is going to allow – and it lays out a lot of rules around how it will happen – is that you can negotiate for periodic payments up front instead of being stuck with just having no option, having to deal with the lump sum.

The second part of what's being altered under the Judicature Act is the Judicial Compensation Commission. This is about setting pay for judges. We, of course, in Canada have two levels of judges, the Provincial Court judges and the Federal Court judges. This is going to allow for a co-ordination. It's actually setting out the specific dates that the group that sets these amounts meets, and in the end it will all co-ordinate.

Essentially, for the year 2009 and subsequent years the provincial commissions will occur one year after the federal commissions. So the feds are going to set their rates; the province is going to follow along a year later. But it takes a bit of juggling to make that happen, so what we've got is commissions meeting every three years from now until 2009, and then they're held every four years, essentially. But it's just the juggling that you need to make that time all line up.

We've got the Court of Queen's Bench Act. This is another one where the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the cabinet, in other words Executive Council, will get the power to make rules of a substantive nature in order to avoid validating the rules periodically. So that's exactly what I was describing in the beginning.

We've got the Court of Appeal Act. The same thing. This is giving cabinet the ability to change the rules, which validates the rules, rather than having to come back before the Legislative Assembly.

Provincial Offences Procedure Act. This is the one around electronic documents. As we've moved more and more into the use of electronic documents, we've had to kind of update our rules because we had some very clear rules, you know, the ones about the parking tickets and the speeding tickets: the paper copy has got to be signed by the person that does it. Well, how do you do that with an electronic copy? Not possible. So that's stalled our ability to move into more electronic government, electronic business. This will allow electronic documents to come into more common usage through provincial offences, which I think is an excellent idea. That will save a few trees, I'm sure.

The last issue is the Queen's Counsel Act. There's an ability to appoint people as Queen's Counsel. Up to now there's been no ability to remove people as Queen's Counsel, and every now and then we have a respected member of the bar who is not really a very respectable person for their actions and needs to be removed, and that's allowing that to happen.

That's a very brief overview of what we're looking at with Bill 10, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

At this point on behalf of the Official Opposition I'm willing to support what's being proposed here in principle in second reading.

Of course, we have sent the bill out and asked for comment, and I'm sure that we'll hear back from anyone that has any serious questions, but this has come forward from the legal community, which tends to consult with itself a fair bit. If there are any concerns, then I'll look at bringing them forward under Committee of the Whole and making amendments then. So at this point I'm willing to support Bill 10 at second reading.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very productive week, as all members in the Assembly would undoubtedly agree, and on that basis I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until Monday at 1:30.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Tannas: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly three guests that are seated in your gallery. From Capital City Savings: Mr. Harry Buddle, chief executive officer; Ms Jacqueline Broverman, community investment adviser. Joining them is Tim Downey, president of Priority Printing Ltd.

Capital City Savings and Priority Printing are community sponsors of the School at the Legislature program. This program gives grade 6 teachers from all over our province an opportunity to relocate their classroom to the Alberta Legislature for an entire week. In the fiscal year 2002-2003 over 600 students from 22 classes attended the School at the Legislature.

They are standing in your gallery and would like to receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this glorious Alberta day to introduce to you and through you to the House two young ladies who are doing a tour of our Assembly today, Tracie and Darcie Matthiessen. Both young ladies are active in politics, and they are also heavily involved in the disabilities movement working with people for Alberta Disabilities Forum. They are seated in the gallery with Sasha Angus, who is no stranger to any of us. I'd ask that they all rise and please receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To you and through you to members of the Assembly it's my pleasure to introduce Mrs. Pat McCurdy, a resident of Edmonton-Rutherford, and she is accompanied by Mrs. Chris Tannas, a resident of Highwood and the spouse of our own Deputy Speaker. We'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to introduce three classes from a marvellous school in Edmonton-Castle Downs, the Caernarvon elementary school, run by a dynamite of a principal, Ms Julia Elaszuk. With the three classes today are teachers Mrs. Wendy Porteous, Mr. Jei Yin, and Mrs. Nadine Holden as well as a student teacher, Miss Jessica Lee, and a couple of parents, Anna Sawaryn and Kai Choy. I would ask all three classes to rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Mrs. Jacquie Hansen, who is the chairperson of Greater St. Albert Catholic school division No. 29. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two terrific groups here to introduce to the Assembly today. The first is a group of people visiting from Canterbury Court, and I would like to read their names into the record. Canterbury Court is a terrific facility in my constituency serving older Albertans. I would ask them to rise, if possible, as I call their names. Their names are Margaret Dewart, Connie Marsh, Betty Wilson, Ed Parker, Iris Newman, Hilda Williams, Peggy Salze, Vera Shuckburgh, Aileen Ledrew, Dorothy Fenske, Alice Fraser, Roy Zipse, Rhoda Cohen, Zena Frankel, Fanny Hersch, Maria Morin, and they are accompanied by two staff, Fred Czopek and Terry Kellington. Please, all MLAs, give them a warm welcome. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, the second group I have is from one of my very favourite schools in the whole province, Our Lady of Victories school. They are a class who are here for the week for the School at the Legislature. They are in the public gallery. I would ask them to rise. There are 18 of them altogether, and they are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Lorraine Williamson and Mrs. Margaret Petruk, and the parent helper is Mrs. Jeanne Bartosh. Please rise and receive our warm welcome.

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Cattle Industry

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal agriculture committee is calling on executives from Canada's largest packing plants to come forward and testify about allegations that they may have unfairly profited from the BSE crisis. My first question is to the Premier. What does it say about this government's commitment to openness and transparency when the federal government demands answers from the packing plants but your government won't?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the federal government is doing precisely what the federal government should do under the Competition Act and all of the hearings and procedures associated with that act. It is not the purview of the provincial government to review such matters.

There is, however, a review – and I would like to underline: there is a review – underway now by the Auditor General. As I understand it, he indicated to a meeting of deputy ministers in February of this year that he was going to undertake a review relative to food safety and financial assistance programs for BSE, or mad cow disease. So this government is doing what this government should do. The federal government is doing what the federal government should do.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why did the hon. Premier refer Albertans to the Competition Bureau last week given that the bureau has no power to investigate the $400 million BSE aid package?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I know that it is hard to get through to dense people, but I will repeat once again, and I would ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to listen carefully. The federal government investigates price-fixing and matters of gouging or alleged matters of gouging and alleged matters of price-fixing. The federal government does that, and that's what they are investigating as it relates to the packing plants.

Our responsibility is to make sure that money we spent on behalf of the people of this province was wisely spent. The Auditor General, as I said, indicated to a meeting of deputies on February 25 that he was going to investigate such matters. The hon. Deputy Premier has written a letter to Mr. Dunn, the Auditor General, asking him to fast-track that investigation or that probe or that review, call it what you want, in order that we may clear the air in this Legislature.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the Premier has stated that on March 22 and 23 there is going to be a delegation from Alberta going to Washington, D.C., and talking about how this BSE crisis has affected Alberta, will the Premier commit now to bring along some of the small producers from across this province so that they can tell their story directly to the American government as to how they have been affected by this crisis and how little they have received of the $400 million aid package?

Mr. Klein: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, it's not a bad idea if the producers want to come along and augment what we have to say. But what is not true and what is offensive is the statement relative to this government not helping producers.

Mr. Speaker, I have a letter here, and this is one of numerous letters I have received. While the Liberals sit back here in Edmonton and whine and complain and carp and spread misinformation, we're out and about in the country finding out from farmers and ranchers and beef producers and others associated with the cattle industry exactly what they think of this government's action. This letter from the Western Barley Growers Association, signed by Douglas McBain, says:

Dear Ralph,

Quick and decisive action by the Government of Alberta to deliver financial assistance to the beef industry, was and continues to be very much appreciated. Support by you and the Caucus of the programs put forward by Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Shirley McClellan, that were developed with consultation and endorsement of the beef industry, maintained the industry when it needed it the most.

That, to me, means more than all the carping we hear from over on that side.

The Speaker: That document will be tabled, and we'll try and remember that we're not supposed to use members' names in the House.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Critics of the government's botched electricity deregulation scheme refuse to remain silent. The Consumers' Association of Canada in Alberta would not sign off on the Bolger report because it painted too rosy a picture of electricity deregulation. In response Alberta Energy posted a version of the Bolger report on its web site that conveniently omitted this objection, then tried to correct it when challenged. My first question is again to the Premier. Given the unparliamentary language used last week in this Assembly by certain members in response to tough opposition questions, is it government policy now to silence all its critics?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, no one is trying to silence any critics, including the Liberal opposition, who, by the way, do not pose intelligent questions.

I will have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that report was the property of that committee, and the report that we received was the report that we tabled. So the question would be accurately posed to the chairman or any members of the committee.

Mr. MacDonald: To the Minister of Energy: given that there were so many consumer complaints around electricity deregulation, why did the minister not read the early draft reports of the Bolger commission?

Mr. Smith: Boy, you're right; they don't ask intelligent questions.

When the report is the property of that committee, Mr. Speaker, they don't send draft reports to the minister and say: "How do you like this one? How do you like that one? Would you like us to change this? Would you like us to change that?"

I mean, surely this member knows that all you have to do is go back to the committee and ask Mr. Bolger: "What are the details of the report? What happened?" Mr. Wachowich is but one member of 20, and in fact Mr. Wachowich has been around this business a long time. He was, in fact, the member from the Consumers' Association who signed off the negotiated settlement for EPCOR in the year 2000-2001, so he's, you know, very current with the file. Perhaps the member would seek clarity and information from that particular source.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the Bolger report calls for an independent, government-funded consumer advocate, why is this government ignoring that recommendation from the Bolger report?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not ignoring anything from the Bolger commission just as, as the member continues to talk about skyrocketing bills, we wouldn't ignore examination of his bill, should he choose to table it, to determine if in fact prices have gone up these last three months. Table your bill.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Sour Gas Well Emissions

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently there's a proposal before the Energy and Utilities Board to drill six new sour gas wells on Calgary's doorstep. Last Friday the Calgary health region called on the Energy and Utilities Board to reject the project application because, in the words of the chief medical officer, it in no way adequately addresses the potential health hazards that could result from this well if an accidental release were to occur. My question is to the minister of health. Will the minister join the Calgary health region in asking for the Calgary sour gas project to be rejected?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, as the minister of health I'm not competent to make an evaluation of the evidence that was put before the Energy and Utilities Board. It is the appropriate role, of course, of the Calgary health region to make its submission to the EUB. We trust that the EUB will take into account all of the evidence that is put before it and will properly make a decision, but it wouldn't be appropriate for the minister of health to intervene in such a quasi-judicial type of venue. Accordingly, it is properly the role of the regional health authority and properly the role of the EUB to make a decision but not for the minister of health.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, does the minister have concerns about a new hospital in south Calgary being built so close to potentially lethal sour gas wells?

Mr. Mar: Well, again, there were a number of submissions that were made before the EUB. My understanding and my briefing, although not my first-hand knowledge, is that one of the submissions was that there was the possibility of withdrawing all of the sour gas from this field before the hospital would even be built. Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether that, in fact, is realistic or is part of the proponent's submission before the EUB.

This is a hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker, because there is no hospital there at this time, but hypothetically if there were a hospital within a certain range of a sour gas well, I would presume that the Calgary regional health authority would make that point known to the EUB. I don't know if they have made that submission to the EUB, but I would presume that they would have.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Infrastructure. How has this minister addressed the dangers of sour gas in his negotiations with investors who might finance a P3 hospital in south Calgary?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated on Thursday to a similar question, if in fact this whole project should go ahead as a P3 – and that will be determined through a long process – I have no idea who the investors might be. Nor would the Calgary regional health authority at this time have any idea who the investors might be. So it's pretty hard to address imaginary investors when you have no idea who they might be.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I think it's important, as the member continues to spread suspicion and distrust, under the structures that we have for the appropriate and safe drilling and extraction of sour gas. This has occurred in Alberta since the mid-60s. We have a world-best record, we have world-best processes, and we have a practice of having complete and total transparency. Whether this hearing is in the city of Calgary or it's in the town of Rocky Mountain House or the town of Barrhead, it's all the same.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week Albertans witnessed the spectacle of Conservative MLAs refusing to support a motion to investigate just where $400 million of BSE compensation ended up and who benefited by it. By contrast, the all-party federal parliamentary committee on agriculture has decided that there are more questions than answers, and they've summoned three packers to Ottawa so they can get some answers. While Ottawa puts the matter to an all-party committee to deal with in full public view, this Premier asks his agriculture minister to investigate herself and her own programs. My question is to the Premier. Why is it that this government can't even meet the minimal accountability and transparency standards of the federal Liberal government?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I answered this question. The federal government is doing precisely what the federal government ought to do, and that is to investigate allegations of improprieties, I guess, and unfair competition as it relates to the packing industry.

That is not the role of the government. The role of the government is to determine whether the $400 million we spent on beef or BSE assistance programs was properly spent. I indicated to this Assembly that the Auditor General is or has committed – I don't know if he's undertaking the review right now – on February 25 of this year to undertake a review, an investigation, an examination, a probe, call it what you want, of the BSE funding program. So why would he depend on the Public Accounts Committee to do what he had decided to do anyway? That's what I can't figure out.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that provincial governments from Saskatchewan to Prince Edward Island have called for an investigation into the packers' operations in this country, why is this government just sitting on its duff and holding up 1-800 numbers for the Competition Bureau instead of standing up for the public of this province?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we are standing up for the public of this province, but there are two agencies. We have our provincial Auditor General. This hon. member has been sitting in this Legislature daydreaming, obviously, for the last four and a half years or five years, however long he's been here – too long, obviously – because he doesn't know the procedures and hasn't taken time to learn the procedures. We investigate things that are of concern to the taxpayers of this province; i.e., was the $400 million we spent on BSE assistance programs properly spent? The Auditor General is investigating that or has indicated that he will investigate that. That's done.

The federal government investigates issues of alleged price-fixing, gouging, unfair competition. That is their responsibility. That is their responsibility, the federal government's responsibility, and they are doing precisely what they are supposed to do.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, if the taxpayers of this province, the citizens of this province, are being gouged, why isn't it the government's responsibility to make sure that not only is government money spent properly but that we're paying the right price at the supermarket?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is a matter for the federal government to investigate. My God, how many times do you have to repeat that there is an agency in place? Why would we spend taxpayers' dollars to investigate something that the federal government is already investigating? Why would we do that? The Competition Bureau and the process now going on in Parliament is the right process, and I would suggest that if the hon. member has any problems – any problems – or any allegations or any proof of the kinds of things he's been spouting off here, go down and testify before the committee.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mental Health Services

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The stabbing death that occurred in Edmonton-Castle Downs over the weekend and the recent shooting of a police officer have many people concerned whether the province is doing enough for individuals with mental health illnesses. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell Albertans what the government is doing at this time for individuals with mental health illness?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't want to comment specifically on this particular case except to offer my condolences to the families involved, but what I do want to outline is what treatments are available for Albertans who are suffering from mental illness.

A patient in immediate need of help can go to an emergency department to be seen by a physician, and if the physician believes that hospitalization may be required, then that individual will get a psychiatric assessment. When a patient is discharged from the hospital, Mr. Speaker, there are contacts made with community mental health clinics to provide the follow-up care that such an individual might need.

Also, in major centres throughout the province there are available 24 hours a day seven days a week mental health crisis teams. Mobile mental health teams also work closely with the police in the event that an individual may be a danger to either themselves or to others.

Patients with less urgent need can seek help through their own physicians. They may get a prescription for medication. The physician may also recommend specific community mental health programs such as group counselling.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta does offer extensive coverage for prescription drug costs, including psychiatric drugs, under the Blue Cross benefit plan. Low-income Albertans, of course, also get full or partial subsidies for their drugs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental for the same minister: would the minister consider following the lead of B.C., Saskatchewan, or even Ontario by introducing community treatment orders in this province?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, mental health legislation is a complex and sometimes very controversial area of discussion. The purpose of such legislation is to try to balance the needs of an individual against the needs and rights and protection of society as a whole.

There are wide opinions, Mr. Speaker, as to whether community treatment orders are appropriate. There is a large gulf that exists between advocates for mental health. Even within the mental health community there is not a clear consensus. There are differing opinions from people: the individuals themselves who do have mental illness, their family members, physicians, and lawyers as well.

Our current mental health legislation took 11 years to develop, and that was because of these wide sets of opinions from various stakeholders. Our act does allow for the apprehension, admission, detention, and control of a person who is suffering from a mental disorder and who may present a threat to themselves or to others. But I have, Mr. Speaker, asked our Mental Health Board to look at the other jurisdictions, that the hon. member referred to, to see if community treatment options have in fact had an effect on reducing the number of these types of incidents.

I should say, finally, Mr. Speaker, that we are of course focused on integrating our mental health services into the community as recommended by the Premier's Advisory Council on Health and that regional health authorities are redoubling their efforts to ensure that this plan will be used as a framework to make improvements to mental health services in this province and their communities.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental, to the Solicitor General: are our police officers in this province afforded appropriate training rendering them competent to deal with mental health case issues?

The Speaker: We're asking for an opinion here. Solicitor General, proceed.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. When it comes to policing, dealing with mental health problems is part of officer training. The police in this province are well trained in all aspects of criminal behaviour. They come across people high on drugs; they come across people who are mentally ill; they come across incidents where people are extremely agitated. I have to say that the police in this province do a wonderful job in dealing with all these situations not knowing what's around the corner for them.

In cases of critical incidents the large municipal police services have emergency response teams with specifically trained negotiators with expertise in dealing with mentally ill or agitated people. There are four on Calgary's ERT team, five on Edmonton's ERT team, and four on Red Deer's ERT team. In the case of the RCMP, extensive training is provided to negotiators on their ERT teams for dealing with mentally ill patients.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Mental Health Strategy

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week when I raised a question about mental health, the Solicitor General said that she was appalled at the questions and said that I should "drop the crap." Well, this weekend another tragic fatality involving a mental health patient brings home the message that this government cannot wait any longer to implement a new mental health strategy. My question is to the Premier. When will this government release the new mental health strategy, that is sitting on the health minister's desk?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the mental health strategy is sitting on the minister's desk, but I will have the minister respond.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I think it's critical that we get this right as opposed to get it right away. The issue of mental health is one which is of great interest to Albertans. The consultations on this have been extensive. Right now it's in a draft stage, and it's out for discussion among stakeholders. The early response to it has been quite positive. There may be some changes that we may need to make to it, but the final of this plan has not yet been put before me or, in the words of the hon. member, on my desk.

It is not sitting on my desk, but it is part of an ongoing process by which we will develop a strong plan consistent with the efforts and the submissions of stakeholder groups ranging from psychiatric nurses here in the province of Alberta to the regional health authorities themselves; the Alberta Mental Health Board; the Alberta alliance on mental health; the Canadian Mental Health Association, their Alberta branch. These are all stakeholders that we've worked with extensively. I thank them publicly for the work and the time and the effort that they've put into it.

As I indicated in my response to the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, Mr. Speaker, the issue of mental health, while important, is a very complex and difficult and challenging one. That's the reason why it's important to get it right rather than get it right away. It will come forward in the spring, and if the hon. member wants more specificity on when in the spring, it'll be the spring of 2004.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, given that this government has been downsizing mental health institutions for years, indeed decades, why haven't they got it right? Why haven't they got mental health services right yet?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have in fact been moving in the trend from institutional care for such individuals to community treatment. But we have protected the budget. We have increased our commitment to this area. The hon. member will recall from my response to him late last week in this Assembly that we currently put almost a quarter of a billion dollars, $240 million approximately, into mental health this year. That's an increase of about 5 per cent from the previous year.

So, Mr. Speaker, again, while we have been making the move away from institutional care into community treatment, I think that this is a step in the right direction and one that has been lauded by the mental health community. We understand that there will be a continued need for some institutional capacity at, for example, Alberta Hospital Ponoka – they do provide world-class treatment at that facility – but the overall trend is to go to treatment in the community. We're doing that, and we're providing the resources so that we can make this transition from institutional care to community care.

To the Premier: given the long delays on other government reports like the corrections review and the Graydon report, how can we know that there won't be another long delay in releasing the mental health strategy report?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can't speak to the length of time it will take to complete the report. Perhaps the hon. minister can shed some light on that.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have been working on this a long time. I confess that it is a very challenging and complex area. To ensure that we have the full support of as many stakeholders as possible – these are the stakeholders who will actually make this work. That's the reason why we need to continue to work with them, so that we reflect the input that they've had in terms of how this program should be delivered.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said on a number of occasions – and I repeat it for his benefit and for the benefit of Albertans – that when we look at our health care system, there are two things that loom large on our health care horizon in the next 10 to 15 years. We often look at a shorter time horizon, but in the next 10 to 15 years two areas loom large. One is the area of diabetes, which we are working on with the provincial diabetes strategy, and secondly, mental health. Both of these are critical to helping ensure that our health care system is sustainable not just for the next two years but well into the future of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Crystal Methamphetamine

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recent TV news reports have highlighted the growing problem of methamphetamine manufacturing, trafficking, and addiction in Drayton Valley and along the Yellowhead highway. People in my constituency have been working hard to control the spread of this highly addictive drug. To the Solicitor General: what steps are being taken to control the substances used to make crystal meth?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate that question, and I want to assure everyone in this House that the Alberta government is well aware of the problem and that we're well ahead, we feel, on what we're trying to do.

Alberta is a leader across this country in dealing with meth, and in fact the hon. member's own mayor is part of our working group that we have established. We're attacking the problem, if I may say, in three different areas. First of all, I have established a cross-government initiative that has been very, very effective and working very hard on it.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I think that what is really important is that we've engaged the College of Pharmacists, and I have to really provide a lot of kudos to what the College of Pharmacists is doing to help us deal with this very serious situation.

Thirdly and, I think, most importantly, Mr. Speaker, is that we are pressing the federal government to tighten its laws controlling the materials used to make meth and would encourage the opposition to maybe get on the phone or write a letter to their federal relatives supporting our recommendations on making amendments to the Controlled Drug and Substances Act.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. What treatment options and facilities are available for individuals addicted to crystal meth?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, methamphetamine poses a serious threat to the well-being of individuals who use it, it poses a serious threat to their families, and it poses a serious threat to the communities in which it is being used.

AADAC, the Alberta alcohol and drug agency, is participating in the cross-governmental initiative that was referred to by my colleague the Solicitor General. AADAC does provide treatment to methamphetamine users as part of its comprehensive treatment of a whole range of different types of substances in 49 communities throughout the province of Alberta.

Specific to methamphetamine, Mr. Speaker, services include counselling, parent consultations, and referral to intensive or residential treatments. I think it's important to note that crystal meth, or methamphetamine, is often a drug that's used with other drugs, so sometimes varying types of treatment are required.

AADAC is also working very closely with the hon. member's community of Drayton Valley and also in places like Hinton, Edson, the Yellowhead corridor, and Camrose, among others, where methamphetamine has particularly been identified as being a significant problem.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is also to the same minister. Given that these seem to be the highly concentrated problem areas, are there any plans to build more treatment facilities for this growing problem?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we have no such plans at this time except to make the commitment that we will continue to monitor this particular situation and be prepared to take any additional action that's required. We are addressing the problem of methamphetamine use by offering treatment and support to those who need it and by working with communities to let them know about the dangers of this particular drug, which are significant.

AADAC data shows that amphetamine and stimulant use, which includes methamphetamine, is a concern to about 8 per cent of all the clients receiving addiction treatment by AADAC. Clients who access AADAC services for methamphetamine, again, as I said, Mr. Speaker, often experience problems with multiple use of drugs. Outpatient counselling services are available in 25 AADAC offices located throughout the province. Adults can be referred to AADAC detoxification residential treatment services in the cities of Grande Prairie, Edmonton, Calgary, and Claresholm.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane. [applause]

The hon. member has the floor.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank all members from all sides of this Assembly who helped me and supported me in this nomination bid, and for those who didn't, what can I say? Thank you.

Sour Gas Well Emissions

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, speaking of – and I quote the Minister of Energy from March 3 – “spreading confusion and misinformation and talking about something that they really don't know the effects of,” last week the Minister of Energy said, “Since the 1982 Lodgepole blowout . . . there has never been a civilian fatality from sour gas management in this province.” My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why isn't the minister aware that in January of this year a 35-year-old male worker employed as a contract operator was overcome by H<sub>2</sub>S gas resulting in fatal injuries and of the death of a Caroline man who was able to penetrate a sour gas facility in April 2002 and caused a high-pressure release of hydrogen sulphide?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member talks about people from or who are employed in the industry, and that's, in fact, who are at most risk. I admire all Albertans who work with sour gas and are able to make it the safe type of product that it is.

Mr. Speaker, I would direct the member to a very good article in the Calgary Herald this weekend by a gentleman by the name of David Yager, who is a veteran oil patch writer and safety analyst, who starts the article off with, “You can drill these wells in my backyard for all I care.”

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, both of those deaths were civilian.

To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: since the Minister of Energy speaks of Caroline as having “some of the world's best handling equipment,” how could it have taken six and a half hours to discover and contain a sour gas leak that occurred there as recently as March 2003?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that with the preamble relative to the information, the situation, it's important to note that every municipality in this province has an emergency operation plan that they execute. They work with the Ministry of Environment as well as with Energy and first responders, or local emergency officials. I want to say without any fear of contradiction that these first responders do an excellent job in representing and protecting Albertans at large.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. To the same minister: if the proposed wells in the Calgary region are approved, how can this ministry assure residents in the emergency planning zone that they won't be exposed to sour gas for hours on end, as occurred in Caroline?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was indicated earlier this afternoon, this is in front of the board. The board is hearing stakeholders' input from all walks, every particular stakeholder who has expressed an interest. I'm not in a position to evaluate the decision they will make, but I can assure all Albertans that every single effort in terms of protecting Albertans will be taken, is taken during these hearings that are a quasi-judicial body.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Smith: Well, you know, it's always good to do a little research on the application, Mr. Speaker, and actually do a little research on the past. The Sindre gas leak, the one that I believe the member is referring to, was known almost instantaneously, I believe. Secondly, there's a process called ignition. They make a decision to ignite sour gas fumes that start to escape, and that immediately ensures that no sour gas emissions are then spread to the individuals in the emergency planning area. Really, I think it's important to encourage the member to get up to date with the handling of sour gas in this world-best jurisdiction.

National Avalanche Centre

Mrs. Tarchuk: Mr. Speaker, during the winter of 2002-2003 29 people died in avalanches across Canada. Twenty-four of these occurred in British Columbia with nearly one-half of the fatalities Albertans and one-third foreign tourists. In the wake of these fatalities the Canadian Avalanche Association is recommending the creation of a national avalanche centre. My question is for the Minister of Community Development. Could the minister tell us what he is doing in response to this recommendation?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have received the proposal, and I am reviewing that. It arose, essentially, as a result of a review of avalanche safety programs in the province of British Columbia, and it was conducted by the British Columbia government itself. Unfortunately, no input was sought from the province of Alberta with respect to this particular development proposal. Nonetheless, avalanche safety is a very serious matter here for our government and for Albertans, and as soon as I complete that review of the recommendations, we'll see what possible further steps might be taken.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you. To the same minister: given that this centre would be located in British Columbia, will you be considering funding it?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would of course prefer to consider this from the standpoint of possibly seeing a commitment of funds made to some kind of a satellite office at least in the province of Alberta; in other words, funds of the Alberta taxpayer being used to fund something in our province for individuals. I should say, however, that I don't know yet what the extent of our involvement will be or if we will be making that commitment, because there are a number of ministries that this particular issue references and affects. We do spend approximately $90,000 already through Community Development monitoring avalanche safety programs in our province at this time.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Lastly, to the same minister, I'd ask if there's anything further that the government of Alberta can do to help increase avalanche awareness and safety.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, Community Development is actively involved in the Kananaskis area, which is provincially managed, and we have one of the very best provincial avalanche monitoring systems anywhere in the country. We're already doing a lot from the monitoring point of view, from the information and communications point of view, and also from our involvement with search and rescue missions. We're also involved, where circumstances warrant, with the safe discharge of explosives to trigger avalanches when there's no one around, obviously, and certainly more can and perhaps should be done. But we do have a partnership already with the Canadian Avalanche Association and with Parks Canada.

So as this proposal moves through the process here, we will continue to keep the member and all members and Albertans updated in that regard.

2:20 Reviews by Solicitor General's Department

Ms Blakeman: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General seems fond of the water torture method of releasing information, one drop at a time, but taxpayers, provincial corrections staff, police, and others would like to see the full corrections review, the complete victims of crime consultation report, and the standards for provincial policing with its implementation plan. Albertans have paid for all three reports, and we cannot monitor the government's progress without them. My questions are to the Solicitor General. When are taxpayers going to see the complete corrections review that they paid for?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've had that question before, and I would refer the hon. member to Hansard. The Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs asked me the same question.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to make excuses for the delay for my department or for the minister responsible. When you have people who have gone out and worked very hard collecting evidence and providing you with recommendations like the corrections committee did, there are budget implications to it. I will be proceeding after the budget is released later on this month.

Ms Blakeman: Again to the Solicitor General: given that the Auditor General stated in his report that "public safety could be at risk" until the Solicitor General implements the plan for provincial policing standards, when can we expect that plan?

Mrs. Forsyth: As I've indicated before, Mr. Speaker, the standards that the hon. member is referring to in regard to policing standards will be done at the end of the year. Our fiscal year-end is the 31st of March, and it will be done.

Ms Blakeman: In two weeks. Really?

The final question, again to the Solicitor General: why have we seen nothing at all about the victims of crime consultation headed by the Member for Calgary-Shaw?

Mrs. Forsyth: Again, Mr. Speaker, when you have a committee going out and doing a bunch of work for you, they come back with recommendations. In regard to the recommendations that they bring forward, there are usually budget implications. I felt that it was best to be able to deal with those when we could provide the recommendations with the dollars to follow them.

If the hon. member will be patient, we have got very good news for the people in this province in regard to the reviews that I've undertaken, and I ask her to be patient like the people who have worked on the committee and like Albertans have.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Cattle Exports

Dr. Pannu: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, last week's decision by the U.S. Department of Agriculture to reopen a comment period for resuming Canadian live cattle exports is a welcome development. However, for this government to put all its bets on a quick reopening of the border is a high-risk strategy, especially when it gets caught in the middle of American presidential election politics. That is why the Premier's recent admission that there is no contingency plan should the border remain closed is bad news. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given that political posturing could keep the border closed until after the U.S. election in November, why does the government have no contingency plan should the border remain closed to live cattle exports for an extended period?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, it's possibly a matter of semantics. As I've explained in this House, the round-table that covers all aspects of the beef industry, including trucking, packing, processing, primary, backgrounding, feeding, and so on, has indeed been working for some time on what is termed a beef recovery plan. This is maybe somewhat different than what might be called a contingency plan or a backup plan.

I'm pleased that the hon. member is aware that there are some uncertainties out there and that we have to look at those uncertainties. I'm not sure I concur with the full reasons for the uncertainties, but there are uncertainties out there. We're very pleased that the comment period has been reopened. We're very pleased that rule making includes all ages of animals, and we will be working with the federal government and, obviously, making a comment on our industry's behalf.

So, Mr. Speaker, the plans that we've had in place, which, in fact, have worked – we still have an industry, which means a great deal to every community in this province, not just the rural communities – I think state very clearly that the work that the industry has done with us in meeting this issue head-on for the last 10 months and some is continuing. The beef recovery plan that the industry has worked on involves the short term, which is the immediate, and it involves what they would want the industry to look like in five years or expect it to look like in five years, and I'm sure that's what the hon. member would want to see happen.

Dr. Pannu: Should the border not open until after the presidential election, does the minister have a contingency plan, and what is it and will she table it in the House?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are, as I said, a lot of ifs and there are uncertainties. I am, I guess, dealing from a more positive note. I have, I think, great reason to be optimistic. We have made significant progress in dealing with this issue. No other country that I know of in the world that has experienced BSE has had a border opening in seven months. That's what has been accomplished here, and that's what has been accomplished by working with what is our largest trading partner, particularly in the beef area but in others.

The work on the recovery plan, Mr. Speaker, is not at a stage that it could be presented. It is a plan that's being worked on by the whole industry, but I would be pleased to do that at the time that it's completed.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister, then, admitting that she has no contingency plan at this time?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know how I could make it any more clear. Since the first week of January we've been meeting with the industry, since the second BSE incident, which happened to be in the U.S., and with the industry have been developing a number of scenarios to deal with these issues. It is in a developmental stage. The industry is committing to do this.

There is a difference philosophically, I know, between the hon. member and this government and this minister. This is what the difference is. I would gather from the hon. member's comments that he would believe that government is the right vehicle to make decisions for the cattle industry. Well, you know what, Mr. Speaker? We don't agree with that. We agree with partnerships. We agree with working with the industry, and the success of that work is before us today. We have an industry, albeit under stress and duress, because the plans that we put in place to carry this industry through were made with the wisdom of the industry, not dictated by government.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds I'll call upon the first member.

Hon. members, before I call upon the first of six hon. members to participate in Recognitions, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: Well, I'm just delighted to see that he's okay after his exploits on the weekend. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me to be able to stand here. I'd like to thank the House for the unanimous consent on this introduction. We have some people in our gallery that I'm intimately familiar with, and so are most of the MLAs in this Legislature as well as every single Albertan that exists out there today, if not now, into the future. Unfortunately, I had occasion to use them last night, and they were fabulous, not these particular officers, but I would like to introduce them.

The first is Gord Colwell, the president of the Alberta Fire Fighters Association. I'd ask him to rise. The second is Dale McLean, first vice-president of the Edmonton firefighters association, as well as Greg Holubowich, who is also a first vice-president with the Edmonton fire association. The last person – we've met in the past – is a very nice lady who is the prevention and public educator. She's an EMT and a paramedic, and her name is Brenda Hardy-Reader. I'd ask that this Assembly give them a warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly the always curious and most welcome guests that we have with us today in the public gallery from NorQuest College. This group is always very curious about parliamentary process, and I know that they enjoy their tours through here. They're accompanied today by their teachers and group leaders Brenda Chwyl, Judy Dobbs, and Gordon Heffel. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

International Women's Day

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am a woman. [interjections] I know you don't believe it. I rise today to recognize International Women's Day as we celebrate the many achievements of women in Alberta and elsewhere. This year's theme, She's on a Role, recognizes the momentum behind women's issues and reminds us of the progress being made.

Last September our Minister of Community Development hosted his counterparts from across the country. As ministers responsible for women's issues, they released a document called Workplaces That Work.

Since 1977, when the United Nations established March 8 as International Women's Day, we have dedicated this day to address the challenges facing women and to consider future steps to enhance the status of women and to celebrate the gains made. I ask all Albertans to join me and our minister in acknowledging the achievements of women in Alberta and around the globe.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

International Women's Day

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As a feminist and an elected member of this Assembly, it is my pleasure to rise and recognize today as International Women's Day. We recognize women divided by ethnic, linguistic, political, and economic differences but united by decades of struggle for representation, equality, justice, and peace.

Sadly, women are not even halfway to equal when it comes to political representation. Today women make up only 20 per cent of elected officials. Seven years ago it was 27 per cent. In the next year Albertans will be called to the polls to elect representatives to three levels of government. A woman's place is at the table, in the boardroom, on the factory floor, in the Assembly, wherever she wants to be. Political parties, media pundits, politicians must work to create an atmosphere where women can visualize and then actualize their participation in politics and stand for political office. In 2004 decreasing representation for women in this Assembly, municipally, or federally is simply not acceptable.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Movie Filming in Wetaskiwin

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to congratulate the city of Wetaskiwin for being chosen as the site of a Hollywood movie filmed recently. Wetaskiwin was selected because of its historic downtown with its impressive old buildings. Film crews were particularly taken with the grandeur of the old courthouse with its amazing architecture and preserved courtroom. It was especially exciting for the citizens to see the filming crew use these old historic buildings in Wetaskiwin, especially the old courthouse. The city of Wetaskiwin is well known for valuing our Alberta heritage and working hard to retain it for future generations.

The movie Santa's Slay, directed by David Steiman and starring wrestling superstar Bill Goldberg, will be released sometime before Christmas 2004 in theatres across North America. My constituents and I salute Wetaskiwin for this latest exciting event of movie magic that took place on their historic main street in February.

Arctic Winter Games

Mr. Broda: Mr. Speaker, this week the 18th Arctic Winter Games in Fort McMurray came to an end. Held biannually, this international sport festival attracted 2,000 athletes, coaches, and officials from communities north of the 55th parallel. It was a grand celebration of participation in sports for northern athletes and a chance for them to interact with people from different cultures.

Today I want to recognize Team Alberta North and its 351 athletes, coaches, managers, and mission staff who participated. Team Alberta North had its best showing ever and finished first overall with a total of 137 ulus, or medals: 50 gold, 50 silver, and 37 bronze.

Our athletes impressed everyone, and in doing so, they continue a rich legacy of hard-working and determined young Albertans. I'd invite everyone to join me and the Minister of Community Development in congratulating the athletes, coaches, volunteers, staff, parents, and family members who took part in these games.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

University Volleyball Teams

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize two outstanding women's and one outstanding men's volleyball teams from Alberta. The University of Calgary Dinos women's volleyball team captured the 2004 Canadian Interuniversity Sport national championship, defeating the University of Alberta Pandas in the final in Saskatoon on Saturday afternoon three games to one.

Calgary's Amanda Moppett was named most valuable player of the tournament, and Calgary's Joanna Niemczewska was named CIS player of the year in women's volleyball. Moppett was the player of the game in both the CIS semifinal and championship final match. Moppett had a kill percentage of 32 per cent in the three matches during the tournament. Calgary was ranked number one the entire season except for one week and finished the season with an overall record of 32 wins and five losses. The team is coached by native Calgarian Kevin Boyles, who has committed himself over the last several years to building a championship team and organization.

Mr. Speaker, I would also congratulate both U of A volleyball teams that represented Alberta extremely well, bringing two silver medals back to the U of A. Congratulations to all three Alberta teams, the players, the coaches, and training staff on representing their schools and province so well.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Canterbury Foundation

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, Canterbury Foundation is a not-for-profit organization that in September of this year will be celebrating 30 years of providing supportive housing and care services to Edmonton seniors. Since 1974 Canterbury Court has been one of the city's leading seniors' facilities, providing a high level of service and care to its residents.

Canterbury Manor, a self-contained seniors' residence opened in September 1992, continues through this day to be one of Edmonton's most highly regarded and popular seniors' residences. In 1997 the foundation, in a bold and visionary initiative, opened Canterbury Lane, a 20-unit special care program for residents with Alzheimer's and similar dementia, the first of its kind in the city. Today over 300 Edmontonians call Canterbury their home.

This is a caring and visionary organization. Canterbury Foundation has a proud history, and its vision for the future continues to evolve as it strives to meet the changing needs of Edmonton's seniors.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Bill 17
Agricultural Operation Practices
Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to request leave to introduce Bill 17, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004, for first reading.

This bill and new amendments will add clarity to technical changes on how the Natural Resources Conservation Board administers the act, on the role of municipalities, and for confined feeding operations who are looking at changes to their operation.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 17 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Order.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move first reading of Bill 18, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004.

This new legislation will provide the Alberta maintenance enforcement program with additional tools to encourage compliance with court-ordered maintenance payments. The program, as all members know, provides an essential service to single-parent and low-income families by working to collect all of their court-ordered support payments. Many of the new provisions in the bill address debtors who continually fail to pay their court-ordered support, and we hope that with changes to the legislation the program will be even more effective.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Bill 207
Traffic Safety (Emergency Vehicle)
Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Magnus: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 207, the Traffic Safety (Emergency Vehicle) Amendment Act, 2004.

The purpose of Bill 207 is to reduce the number of injuries and deaths of police officers, firefighters, and emergency medical professionals on Alberta's roadways. The regulations set forth in this legislation will help to ensure that individuals operating a motor vehicle do not collide with a stopped emergency vehicle or endanger any person outside the emergency vehicle.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a first time]

Bill 208
Emblems of Alberta (Official Gemstone)
Amendment Act, 2004

Mrs. O'Neill: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 208, the Emblems of Alberta (Official Gemstone) Amendment Act, 2004.

This bill seeks to adopt ammolite as the official gemstone of Alberta.

[Motion carried; Bill 208 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Insurance (Demerit Offences) Amendment Act, 2004

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 209, the Insurance (Demerit Offences) Amendment Act, 2004.

Bill 209 would protect drivers from paying higher insurance premiums for having committed a demerit offence more than two years prior to the date, making it illegal for insurance companies to penalize drivers for demerit offences or demerit points which occur more than two years prior to an application for or renewal of insurance coverage. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it brings the Insurance Act in line with the Traffic Safety Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 209 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Bill 210
Matrimonial Property (Division of Property on Death) Amendment Act, 2004

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 210, the Matrimonial Property (Division of Property on Death) Amendment Act, 2004.

This bill would allow the surviving spouse of a marriage terminated by death the ability to bring forward a legal action challenging the terms of the deceased spouse's will if it does not provide the surviving spouse with at least a share of the matrimonial property that would be available to him or her if the parties had separated or divorced.

[Motion carried; Bill 210 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to file with the Assembly a letter sent today to the Auditor General of Alberta asking that his audit of BSE-related programs be fast-tracked as discussed previously with AAFRD department staff.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today on behalf of the Minister of Community Development to table an information bulletin dated today's date in reference to the accomplishments of women honoured on International Women's Day. The hon. Minister of Community Development had wanted this document to be provided to the House in order to further people's understanding of the nature of and extent of the accomplishments of women and in honour of International Women's Day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Linda Telgarsky with her permission; in fact, at her request. She attended a sitting of the Legislature last week and was unimpressed with our behaviour.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a policy resolution adopted at the December 2003 annual general meeting of the Alberta Beef Producers asking that the provincial and federal governments "investigate pricing practices of the packing and retail sectors."

The Speaker: Are there others, hon. members? Then I have the pleasure of making two tablings. First of all is a copy of a message from one of the most remarkable women in the world, Her Majesty the Queen, and it's her Commonwealth Day 2004 message. The theme of Commonwealth Day 2004 is Building a Commonwealth of Freedom.

Second, it is my pleasure to table the appropriate copies of the third School at the Legislature report card, 2002-2003. This is an educational program that we have here at the Legislative Assembly for grade 6 students sponsored by two community partners, Capital City Savings and Priority Printing from here in the city of Edmonton.

head: Orders of the Day
head: Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 4, I move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1, 4, 5, 15, and 33.

[Motion carried]

2:50 Provincial Veterinary Pathologists

Q1. Dr. Taft moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.
What increase in remuneration or salary and benefits is required for the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to attract and maintain sufficient numbers of veterinary pathologists to meet requirements for timely testing of animals since the discovery of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in Alberta?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. minister of agriculture we're prepared to accept Written Question 1.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to close the debate.

Dr. Taft: I appreciate the gesture, and we look forward to the information, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

[Written Question 1 carried]

Assistance for Elk Ranchers

Q4. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.
What programs are being developed to aid elk ranchers who have suffered economic losses due to shrinking markets as well as the recent case of bovine spongiform encephalopathy?

Mr. Stelmach: On behalf of the minister of agriculture we're indicating that we're prepared to accept Written Question 4.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for providing that information.

Elk Ranching Consultations

Q5. Dr. Taft moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.
What consultations are presently taking place between the government and game farm operators regarding the future of the elk ranching industry in Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again on behalf of the hon. minister of agriculture we're prepared to accept Written Question 5.

Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development Restructuring

Q15. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.
How much was spent on division and branch restructuring initiatives within the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development broken down by initiative for the fiscal year 2002-2003?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Once again, on behalf of the minister of agriculture we're prepared to accept Written Question 15.

Grandparents' Access Rights

Q33. Dr. Taft moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.
What measures has the Department of Justice taken to establish statistical measures to determine the number of grandparents who apply to the courts for access rights to their grandchildren, the number who are successful when applying for access, and the number who are unsuccessful when applying for access?

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Regretfully, I would indicate on behalf of the government that we'll reject Written Question 33. In doing so, I would just indicate that the question asks what measures we've taken, and the short answer to that might be none. That might confuse some people.

Some statistical information is available, historical information from January to December 2002. There were a total of 79 applications brought in Calgary, 60 applications brought in Edmonton, and 136 in the rest of the province, for a total of 275. However, information is not available on the number of successful versus the number of unsuccessful, and indeed it might be difficult to actually quantify which ones were successful and which ones were not successful because there are a number of variations in the middle and really it's in the eye of the beholder what success is in each of these cases.

It may also not be particularly useful, because each application for grandparents' access that is brought represents a unique set of strange family circumstances, and success or failure on any one application does not necessarily have a relationship to the success or failure of any other application. So a number count really is a questionable use of resources.

We're rejecting the question, just so that there's no lack of clarity around it, but the short answer is that we're not taking any steps relative to measurement, because measurement of this nature would not be cost-effective nor provide useful information.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to close the debate.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can say that we'll be disappointed with that response from the government. We brought this written question forward in response to inquiries and requests from grandparents who want more information about how the system is working, and it didn't seem like it was that much to ask.

The minister has provided some information, and I appreciate that. We'll review Hansard to see what it entails, but I would have thought that for the purposes of evaluating how the program is working, evaluating the effect of legislation, evaluating how we're meeting the needs of grandparents and families and children, this would have been information that was worth collecting, and it would have been well worth establishing statistical measures to determine these outcomes.

I would urge the minister to reconsider his position in the future. I can't imagine that there are so many variables that they can't be at least generally categorized so that we have some sense of how this is playing out.

I'm sorry to hear the response from the minister, and we may bring this issue back through other means.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 33 lost]

head: Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 4, I move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 21 and 43.

[Motion carried]

3:00 Kneehill Animal Control and Rehabilitation Centre Ltd.

Dr. Taft moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing any report received by the government from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in calendar years 2003, 2002, 2001, and 2000 regarding the well-being of animals at the Kneehill Animal Control and Rehabilitation Centre Ltd., GuZoo.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the minister of agriculture we are pleased to accept Motion for a Return 21.

Dr. Taft: I appreciate the gesture from the government and look forward to the information. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 21 carried]

Applied Research and Forage Associations

M43. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount allocated by the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development to applied research and forage associations, broken down by the amount given to each association, for the fiscal year 2002-2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. On behalf of the minister of agriculture we'll accept Motion for a Return 43.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Minister, for that information, and we look forward to getting it. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 43 carried]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 201
Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access)

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to rise today and speak to the Committee of the Whole regarding Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004.

Two weeks ago I was very pleased with the kinds of and the levels of support for Bill 201. It was and is very gratifying to know that the issues that the bill seeks to address have found a receptive audience in this Assembly and one that's also prepared to take action by passing the bill. In conversations I've had in the past couple of weeks, I've come to understand that there are a few concerns, a few questions about Bill 201 and what its impact would be. With this in mind, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to open my remarks by making clear a couple of things.

First of all, the amendments proposed by Bill 201 do not change the manner in which the Alberta building code applies to existing buildings and/or renovations. Existing buildings are only required to be compliant with the code that was in effect at the time that they were built unless they undergo some significant change or renovation. In such situations, then, only the actual renovations would be required to comply with the current edition of the Alberta building code, and that's the legislation today, and it would remain so after Bill 201. Then, as well, the compliance would only be to the extent determined by the nature of those renovations. Moreover, Bill 201 has never sought to effect any changes to the Alberta building code as it applies to private homes.

As stated in section 2 of the bill, Bill 201 amends section 2 of the Safety Codes Act by adding subsection (2.1) to the act as follows:

(2.1) This Act is to be applied in a manner consistent with the principles of barrier-free design and access to allow persons with physical and sensory disabilities to access and use buildings and facilities to which this Act applies.

Which buildings are affected, then, is spelled out in section 3.8.1.1 of the Alberta building code. There it's written that the requirements of the barrier-free design section apply to all buildings except houses and that the Alberta building code exempts all private residences, including free-standing houses, semidetached houses, duplexes, triplexes, townhouses, row houses, and boarding houses not used in social programs such as group homes or halfway houses or shelters.

Also exempt, Mr. Chairman, from the barrier-free design and access requirements are relocatable industrial accommodations such as high-hazard industrial occupancies. These would include but aren't limited to the following: bulk plants for flammable liquids, dry cleaning plants, feed mills, grain elevators, paint factories, and spray painting operations. Only requirements dealing with hearing sensory provisions would apply there.

Finally, buildings that do not need to be in compliance with barrier-free design and access regulations also include those not intended to be occupied on a daily or full-time basis. Some examples would be things like automatic telephone exchanges, pumphouses, and substations, where only the requirements of a person with hearing sensory disabilities would apply.

I hope that this lengthy list of buildings that are not required now nor will be required under Bill 201 to comply with the barrier-free design and access requirements helps to clarify the barrier-free requirements as they currently exist and will continue to exist after Bill 201. Put differently, Mr. Chairman, the common-sense exemptions already specified in the Alberta building code for such things as private homes or relocatable industrial buildings and other industrial-type operations, where the risks to persons with sensory and/or physical disabilities would preclude their working or being present in the building, will remain unchanged by Bill 201.

What's more, Mr. Chairman, section 4 of Bill 201 augments the Safety Codes Council by adding to the existing body of experts an entity with expertise in barrier-free design and access. Not only does it make good sense from the standpoint of equality, the importance of which was stressed by several members during second reading; of no less significance is the fact that by enabling representatives of persons with disabilities on the Safety Codes Council, we're setting the stage for recommendations being brought forward by persons with expertise in barrier-free design and access. That's why adding a 10th body of expertise to the Safety Codes Council not only makes good sense; it's also the right thing to do. It's right for the disabled community in Alberta, and it's right for Alberta's citizens in general.

Two weeks ago, you may recall, I mentioned the wheelchair ramp by the east wing entrance to this building. It's a good thing to have it there. If nothing else, the decision to put it there was really well intentioned. It certainly serves many other purposes besides just being a wheelchair ramp. If anyone's pushing a cart, perhaps with mail or one of those big blue garbage tubs or something like that filled with paper destined to the shredder, they are helped immensely by the presence of that ramp. Instead of manoeuvring the cart or the tub down the stairs, both of which could be quite difficult, quite heavy and awkward to handle at the best of times, they simply push them up or down the ramp, depending on their situation.

It took a wheelchair-bound person, however, to point out to me and to, perhaps, the rest of you, who are fortunate enough to be able-bodied, something that we have failed to observe all these years. Because the ramp is not properly aligned with the door, getting off the ramp and out the door or getting on the ramp once you're inside presents its own set of difficulties. The turning radius of wheelchairs is such that it's difficult to manoeuvre at the top of the landing and get down the ramp. In the same way, it may be difficult to bring some large object straight in the door and down the ramp because the ramp isn't aligned directly. A small change in that may make quite a difference for people with wheelchairs as well as for people using the ramp for bringing something in or out of the building.

Thanks to section 4 of Bill 201, which amends section 16(4) of the Safety Codes Act, this is the kind of practical knowledge and expertise I know the future recommendations and decisions made by the Safety Codes Council will benefit from, and as a result so will our province and so will all Albertans.

On February 28 I was at a gathering in the Legion in Fort Saskatchewan where a group of people had gathered together to honour one of their good friends, John Fisher, who was the next day, on February 29, celebrating his 20th birthday. This 80-year-old gentleman was having friends over, and conversations were going around, and some people in discussions were asking me what we're involved with in the Legislature currently. I got talking to them about Bill 201 that I was bringing forward and the challenges of access that some people are experiencing and some of the things that we hope to accomplish with Bill 201.

It was interesting that several of these contemporaries of John Fisher commented to me that mobility problems as you get a little bit older are something that is very important to them. The challenges of barrier-free access are important to them because those mobility challenges become very significant in their lives and impact them as they try to get around the community.

So certainly, Mr. Chairman, the community at large supports the ideas that are going to be brought forward by design experts that can help clarify the kinds of designs that will make barrier-free access more practical and more prevalent to the whole community.

Mr. Chairman, I'm looking forward to hearing comments from the rest of the members assembled. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am very pleased to be able to join this stage of the debate on Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004.

I'd like to begin my remarks by expressing my sincere gratitude to my friend and colleague the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. From his work as chairman of the Premier's Council on the Status of Albertans with Disabilities I know we can all take great comfort in the fact that this bill has come before us as a result of wide-ranging consultation, careful deliberation of the issues, and, certainly also, a great deal of knowledge of the issues upon which the bill would have an impact, whether directly or indirectly. It is, therefore, what I would call a truly sound piece of legislation. The phrase "common sense" comes to mind when I consider what impact this bill will have both in the short term and in the course of a longer period of time.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, is that rare breed of legislation that offers a set of solutions that are both reactive and proactive. Bill 201 is reactive in the sense that it addresses a variety of issues to which the hon. member has been alerted. On the other hand, the bill is proactive because having identified certain issues of concern to a particular segment of Albertans, once we take appropriate action, we will also initiate what otherwise is likely to be a major opportunity for the Alberta government over the next 15 to 20 years.

If we look at section 3 of Bill 201, we see that the bill states very clearly that "the Minister shall, in accordance with this Act" – and that would be the Safety Codes Act – "co-ordinate and encourage the principles of barrier-free design and access for any thing, process or activity to which this Act applies." Why is this important? Well, there are several reasons why it is so. As has been made amply clear, this bill does not seek to take action retroactively. Only new construction will be affected. Furthermore, in accordance with the Alberta building code with regard to renovations only when a refurbishment project is extensive and when it significantly alters an existing structure would the renovations have to be made in compliance with the requirements of the Alberta building code.

What we may refer to as practical or logistical aspects aside, Mr. Chairman, there's a seniors boom looming in the future that's a great deal less distant than we may want it to be. Yes, after the baby boom of the 1940s, '50s, and, I could say, early '60s must inevitably come a seniors boom. It may not have gained that official term, yet it makes sense. A person born in 1945 will turn 60 next year. We can therefore expect to see large numbers of people coming off the payrolls and retiring beginning in 2010. That's a mere six years away.

If we look at demographic numbers for the last six decades, we see that there were a lot of children born in the years following World War II, and although the baby boom generation was succeeded by Generation X, it wasn't really until the 1990s that the birth rate began to decline.

In fact, the number of Albertans who are to be considered seniors has grown at a steady rate throughout the last 30-plus years. According to Statistics Canada, since 1971 there's been a 171 per cent increase in the number of Albertans over the age of 65, and between 1971 and 2003 the number of seniors in Alberta rose from 120,500 to more than 327,000. During the same period Alberta's population as a whole increased by 84 per cent.

So as a result of the higher rate of increase among Alberta seniors, the population is aging, thereby placing a greater strain on resources. It's therefore imperative that we take action to address the impact that we can expect a rapidly aging population to have on our resources, and the sooner we do it, the better off I believe we will be.

Bill 201, by recognizing the need to remove barriers which hamper or prevent an individual's full participation in society, responds sensitively and sensibly to the problems being experienced by Alberta's disabled community. At the same time, the bill anticipates what lies ahead and prepares us as a society for a collective need to decrease and eliminate barriers where possible. To be both responsive and forward looking is no small feat, and this is further manifested in section 4 of Bill 201, which is poised to amend section 16 of the Safety Codes Act. This is accomplished by augmenting the Safety Codes Council to be inclusive of persons with expertise in the area of barrier-free access and design.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that those of us who are able bodied and who have the full use of all of our senses can really fully and completely understand what being disabled means.

True, we may see a person in a wheelchair as he or she struggles up a ramp, and we may feel a certain amount or degree of sympathy, but do we really know what hurdles mean to them? Likewise, when I see someone accompanied by a seeing eye dog, I wonder if we, once we've taken note of the dog, also tend to focus on the dog rather than considering the reason the dog is there in the first place.

We've heard accounts that showcase all too well that our society is riddled with barriers and how those barriers are ingrained in our attitudes not about how things should be but about how things are. For those of us to whom these barriers are little more than a nuisance, we are often blissfully unaware and unable to fully appreciate that for as many as 1 in 6 Albertans they are anything but nuisances. For 1 in 6 Albertans they are truly barriers.

I think it's wise not to underestimate just how instructive and enlightening any participatory experience can be, such as the experiences that a number of the members of this Assembly indicated they had experienced in order to fully appreciate what it means to be disabled. It can offer a glimpse of what a disabled person faces each day. For this reason expanding the Safety Codes Council to include persons with experience and expertise in barrier-free design and access and what they mean will be a tremendous asset to Albertans both today and in years to come.

So with this in mind I will close my remarks here. Once again I thank and congratulate the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for having the vision and sensibility to introduce a bill of such merit as Bill 201. I will of course continue to offer my full support, and I ask that all members do so as well.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise once again to speak to Bill 201, Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004, in the Committee of the Whole, and I certainly do also want to congratulate the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for bringing this much-needed legislation forward. It is legislation that will assist and aid those members of our community that do require barrier-free design and access. So from that standpoint I think this is an excellent bill.

I also was looking at part 4, which refers to section 16, which presently reads:

Among the persons appointed to the Council the Minister and the Committee shall include persons who are experts in fire protection, buildings, electrical systems, elevating devices, gas systems, plumbing systems, private sewage disposal systems or pressure equipment, and also adding "barrier-free building design" after "buildings."

I am very happy to see the inclusion of these people, but as well what I would have liked to see in the bill is something that would address what has happened in recent fires in Edmonton. One in particular occurred in Clareview at the Pointe North complex. There was some concern that we have to revise our building codes relative to light construction. Again, one of the reasons for that was that this particular fire spread very quickly and certainly consumed the whole building. I think we have to look, when we're looking at the construction of condominiums with lumber, that even with firewalls and sprinkler systems we do not get enough protection, particularly when we compare that construction with concrete.

The article in the Edmonton Journal which reported on this particular condo blaze – and this article was from Thursday, February 5, 2004 – went on to say that “there is a need in our building codes for structures larger than a 16-suite apartment to be constructed of a core material that will give fire protection similar to concrete.”

As well, I think that we do have to have some clarification, Mr. Chairman, in our building codes for the safety of the consumer. One of the issues that came up in this particular fire – and this was a larger condominium unit; it was a 63-suite wood frame condominium – and in an article from the Journal on February 8, 2004 – there was confusion.

But its lowest floor was considered a basement under the Alberta Building Code because the next level up was less than two metres above ground level. That means it was rated as a three-storey building, so sprinklers weren't required. At four storeys it would have needed sprinklers.

So I think that as we look at amendments to this bill down the road, these are certainly some areas of concern and areas, again, where we can strengthen this bill to the same effect as this current Bill 201. So I would urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill and certainly that we continue to review the legislation on safety codes to see how we can strengthen it.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and listen to further debate. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise in the Assembly this afternoon to offer my comments to the discussion and debate surrounding Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. As we've heard previously, Bill 201 would serve to provide a voice representing the disabled community in an effort to promote the principles of barrier-free design in the building environment.

Mr. Chairman, before I begin my remarks, I would like to take a moment to address a concern that was raised during the debate in second reading regarding the types of buildings that passage of this bill would affect. I would like to assure all members that this legislation does not apply to any private home in the province. Bill 201 states under section 2(2.1) that “this Act is to be applied in a manner consistent with the principles of barrier-free design and access to allow persons with physical and sensory disabilities to access and use buildings and facilities to which this Act applies.”

The Alberta building code specifies under section 3.8 that the code applies to all buildings with the exception of the following four categories. The first applies to all houses, including semidetached houses, duplexes, triplexes, townhouses, row houses and boarding houses which are not used in social programs such as group homes, halfway houses, and shelters. The second category exempts relocatable industrial accommodation. The third excludes high-hazard industrial occupancies; examples of these include grain elevators, dry cleaning plants, feed mills, and paint factories. The fourth category applies to buildings which are not intended to be occupied on a daily or full-time basis. Therefore, I reiterate that Bill 201 would not apply to any private home or dwelling occupied on a full-time basis.

Mr. Chairman, the Safety Codes Council includes experts from a variety of fields. These experts have been entrusted to recommend action and pass informed judgment on proposed code changes. By including another voice to this council, we are only adding to the knowledge base from which we can draw. This does not change the building code, but rather it brings another expert to the table and another realm of expertise to utilize.

Currently there are provisions in the Alberta building code which permit exemptions to be made under very specific and limited circumstances to barrier-free design requirements for buildings in the province. The current exemption process needs to be modified a little in order to better accommodate the views of a growing disabled community.

When reviewing exemptions, especially those relating to barrier-free design specification, it would be beneficial to have representation from the disabled community. The disabled community is in a position to provide a wealth of practical knowledge which cannot be offered through other sources. As a result, it would seem likely that common ground can be found more quickly in times of dispute seeing as how the presence of a disabled community on the Safety Codes Council may also have the capacity as a facilitator or mediator, finding solutions that are acceptable to all parties. By creating a seat at the table, so to speak, for the disabled community, we are providing essential design expertise in the development or renovation efforts on public buildings.

Mr. Chairman, I am beginning to notice on a more regular basis the international symbol of accessibility, and I'm sure all members are aware of the symbol that I refer to, the white wheelchair figure on a blue background. We see this sign or symbol in parking lots, on washroom doors, on the fronts of buildings, and in other public settings on a daily basis. However, what I'd like to stress is that just because there's an increased presence of the signs or awareness among the general public, this has not necessarily resulted in increased accessibility.

These signs and symbols do not directly relate to the ease of mobility. It has been brought to my attention, in fact, that the signs can be misleading. Many of the facilities and services identified with the accessible symbol are on the contrary. For instance, some handicapped parking spaces are inaccessible. Granted, they're reserved for persons with disabilities, but their size or location can work to hinder rather than assist an individual's ability to get in or out of a vehicle.

Access ramps are another area which causes accessibility concerns. Not all ramps meet practical requirements and, therefore, are not accessible. In some circumstances when the ramp slope is too steep, it can be potentially dangerous.

Another example to illustrate my point would be the perceived access to washroom facilities. Washrooms often provide larger stalls for mobility and accessibility concerns, and logically we'd assume that this would address the issue. However, there are other things to take into consideration such as the appropriate height of grab bars and seats. Washrooms need to be equipped with hand-operated controls that are easily accessible to a wheelchair user or can be automatically operable. The height of the sink and faucet handles need to be easily reachable. These are all important specifics that need to be considered but may be overlooked by someone who doesn't deal with these situations on a daily basis.

Mr. Chairman, as accessibility may appear to be increasing to the general public, these changes may not provide mobility solutions to those living with a disability. Furthermore, just because steps are taken to account for disabilities, it doesn't mean that the actions are the most beneficial to the disabled. This is why it becomes crucial to have a voice representing the disabled community on the council.

It appears to be beneficial to have the capacity to call on someone who can review designs in practical terms and provide valuable input. The process by which an engineer designs plans may seem logical from a building sense or from his or her expertise but may not make practical sense for someone with a disability.

One in six people in the province lives with a disability, and we are talking about a significant number of Albertans with a valid concern. This legislation promotes an initiative that takes a positive step toward addressing this concern. Bill 201 would help ensure that disabled persons have access to public facilities.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I just want to emphasize that Bill 201 is not about creating unnecessary regulation and additional cost for business owners. Rather, the legislation takes a proactive approach to increasing accessibility while promoting fairness and moving us towards becoming a more inclusive society.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for bringing forward this bill. I feel it's a very important initiative, and I encourage all members of the Assembly to consider the merits of the legislation and strongly support Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my privilege to rise to address Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. Like so many speakers here today I would congratulate the sponsoring member, the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, for bringing forward this bill. I think it's long overdue in fact, and I think it's an excellent idea that will have all kinds of spinoff benefits for everybody.

Twelve or 14 years ago I remember doing some research into the concept of universal design when I was doing work as a consultant. The idea of universal design is very much like barrier-free design: trying to make houses, appliances, automobiles, whatever universally accessible for people, whether they are able bodied or disabled.

One of the effects of that design is that everybody benefits. Whether it's a doorknob that's easier to open for somebody with arthritis or whether it's the ramp on the sidewalk that's intended for wheelchairs, everybody can benefit from those improvements. Whether or not you have arthritis, if your hands are wet, if your arms are full, having a doorknob that's easy to open is a good thing. Whether you're in a wheelchair or whether you're riding a bicycle or pushing around a baby stroller, the ramps on the corners of sidewalks are a good thing. So we all benefit from improvements to design.

As people with disabilities are often prepared to remind those of us who don't have disabilities, we easily could become disabled. In fact, those of us without disabilities are referred to as TABs sometimes by those who have disabilities, TABs standing for temporarily able bodied. It is often only a matter of time or circumstance before those of us who are able bodied develop disabilities, and to the extent that this legislation will facilitate easier living and facilitate independence for people who are disabled, it will also benefit those of us who are temporarily able bodied but may in the future need these benefits.

This is going to become more and more of an issue given the aging of our population. All of us in this Assembly are aware that the average age of Alberta's population and Canada's population is increasing, and if our houses, if our condominiums, if our buildings are designed to be barrier free, then that will allow us to age in place more easily. We will not have to move because the bathroom in our house is unusable. Properly designed, it will be usable for each of us as long as we want to live there. We won't have to move because the kitchen is inaccessible or because there are too many steps through the house. All of these issues can be addressed through proper design, and this piece of legislation should facilitate an improvement in building design and in appliance design and so on.

I think this is a good piece of legislation. The intent is good, and it is, as the previous speaker said, something that can achieve its goals without bringing in a whole load of bureaucracy and red tape. In fact, I think we'll find that builders and people working under the safety codes will by and large welcome this legislation.

So I for one will be endorsing it, and I congratulate the member for bringing it forward. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Like other members of this Assembly I am pleased that Bill 201 passed second reading, and I've enjoyed listening to the debate here in Committee of the Whole. It's clear to me that this is an issue that we have thought about a great deal since the sponsor brought it forward, and the thoughts of each of the members reflect that quite well.

I'd also argue that this government has over the years been instrumental in bringing forward and seeking out all sorts of legislation and regulations that would benefit disabled Albertans. Yet every new piece of legislation reminds us of the extra steps we need to take to ensure that the disabled are afforded equal consideration in our society, and that's what I'd like to centre my comments on around this legislation, Mr. Chairman, equal consideration.

I don't see this bill, by and large, as one regarding equal rights, as many members suggested in second reading. The bill does not take a rights-based perspective. It does not issue commands, nor does it push through suppositions of what rights we should or should not grant to others. What it does do, however, is make provisions for the consideration of different perspectives as they relate to the building and design of certain structures in our province, and that's quite a bit different than equal rights. This bill, to my mind, simply asks for a bit more in the way of courtesy and regard so that we may fully understand and accept the considerations of disabled individuals.

Today I'd like to discuss some of the particular amendments to the Safety Codes Act so that we can get a greater sense of what Bill 201 is trying to accomplish. I think most Albertans and most members will agree that what we're talking about here is a small change in legislation that will actually mean a great change in the way buildings are constructed in Alberta. The change is simple. As section 4 of Bill 201 indicates, an expert in the field of barrier-free design will be part of the Safety Codes Council. This expert will sit as an equal with experts in the fields of fire protection, buildings, electrical systems, elevating devices, gas systems, plumbing systems, private sewage disposal systems, and pressure equipment.

For some the difference between an expert in barrier-free design and experts in each of the other fields is that these experts are interested in safety whereas the expert in barrier-free design is an expert in providing access to those with disabilities. This is a division of safety and access with which I would disagree, Mr. Chairman. While some may suggest that this is solely a comfort and ease issue directed at disabled Albertans, I do not see how that is the case. After all, as the Member for St. Albert mentioned during second reading debate, providing barrier-free access and designing buildings in such a way that barriers are minimized is a safety issue. It may not be a safety issue for every Albertan, but it is a safety issue for some Albertans, and that needs to be recognized by this Assembly.

For instance, I can only think of a situation in which a blind man was trying to make his way around a building possibly with tighter corners and narrow halls and aisles. I'd imagine that the wider the aisles are or the smaller the steps are, the easier it would be for a blind person to get around without accidentally bumping into things or possibly running into other people. This is definitely a safety issue. When somebody is disadvantaged like this, it doesn't just affect whether or not the individual can see or cannot see; it affects every aspect of his life from things that the person is able to do with ease right over to the things that cause a great deal of difficulty.

If there is a greater degree of difficulty for a handicapped individual to get around, then that person risks injury. If these injuries occur repeatedly, we could be talking about serious damage to a person's body, not to mention the frustration that must accompany these sorts of occurrences. These are the sorts of things that most Albertans are hardly aware of without having their thoughts directed that way.

That actually gets me to another aspect of Bill 201 that ought to be mentioned. Many Albertans would not think about some of the issues that have been raised in relation to Bill 201 were Bill 201 not raised. Life is such that people cannot help but use their own experiences as a reference point. It takes a small shift in thinking in order to see things from a different angle, and often the best shift in thinking is caused by people who must see the world in that different way because that's how they live every single day. Accordingly, I'll bet many builders and the Safety Codes Council itself will be further enlightened by the inclusion of a barrier-free access and design expert on the council. Just as our discussion opens eyes, the future discussions around the council will open eyes as well. So I agree with section 4 of Bill 201.

Mr. Chairman, many of the sections of Bill 201 which follow section 4 stem from section 4. Section 5, I would argue, acts as an offshoot insofar as it gives the council the ability to take the recommendations of barrier-free design experts and use them in the service of making buildings more accessible to disabled Albertans. Section 5, in my mind, gives weight to the recommendations of the barrier-free design and access expert.

Section 6 of the bill allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to take these recommendations and use them towards making regulations which would have greater sensitivity towards the concerns of disabled individuals as they relate to issues surrounding access to buildings. Section 6 also allows for the relaxation of rules in cases where an exemption is deemed to be permissible. This is the section that allows for an appropriate balance between the needs of disabled Albertans and the needs of other members of the community, be they business owners, officers with community organizations, or other sorts of building owners.

This part is important. Not every building can be made accessible as easily as others. Oftentimes cost considerations are also important. It is important that we allow for some leeway so that the bill does not lead towards onerous situations in which the ability of Albertans to either serve the community or run successful businesses is overly restricted. Mr. Chairman, I believe this qualification is met in Bill 201. This bill passed second reading unanimously and with good reason. It takes that difference in outlook and finds a way to apply it judiciously to our legislation.

There is very little within the bill that needs to be tinkered with as I know that the sponsor and the associated departments worked together to make sure that it was in the best shape possible. It is a sound piece of legislation that underscores the difficulties of handicapped individuals as well as the ways that we can make their access to public buildings easier. The bill does not have any bearing on private structures, only on public ones, thus it strikes an appropriate balance between respecting the private rights of Albertans in their homes and respecting the equality of all Albertans in public.

Mr. Chairman, in 1952 Dr. Albert Schweitzer was awarded the Nobel peace prize for his selfless commitment to humanity. Dr. Schweitzer spoke to us when he said, "Whosoever is spared personal pain must feel himself called to help in diminishing the pain of others." Today we are called to diminish the pain of the disabled by passing Bill 201 into third reading and then into law. I therefore urge every member of this Assembly to support Bill 201.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I join a whole long list of members of this Assembly who have spoken very favourably about this bill at the various stages that it has been debated, and because of all of the debate, I have taken an interest in it. I know how hard my colleague the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan has worked in bringing this forward and ensuring that any problems with it have been overcome, and I have a great deal of respect for him and want to support him in his endeavour.

My interest in the subject matter of this bill was piqued, and I had occasion to read from the press release of the Canadian Paraplegic Association (Alberta) dated February 23, 2004. I would like to quote fairly liberally from that, Mr. Chairman, and I undertake to file this with the Assembly at the completion of my remarks.

It is my understanding, Mr. Chairman, that Bill 201 is presented in recognition of the Alberta Disability Strategy, a document published by the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, chaired by the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. This paper contained eight major recommendations, one of which is:

A commitment should be made to embrace the principles of universal accessibility and a process put in place to remove physical barriers from public spaces so that all Albertans can fully participate in all community, employment and business activities.

Mr. Chairman, in summary, it's my understanding that Bill 201 would amend the Safety Codes Act to achieve these ends: to clarify the applicability of the act to matters of barrier-free design and access, to also provide a proper voice for persons with disabilities by specifically enabling representation by persons with disabilities on the Safety Codes Council, and specifically enabling the making of regulations with regard to barrier-free design and accessibility, all of which are very laudable aims and have been spoken to at great length in this Assembly today and in the last two weeks.

In effect, Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 would, when passed, enable the creation of a new barrier-free design and access council as part of the Safety Codes Council. It would also allow for the consultative development of a new regulation regarding a participative barrier-free design and access requirements relaxation process, allow for the potential development of a barrier-free design code, and provide for an overall substantial improvement in the voice of persons with disabilities with regard to safety code issues that directly impact them.

So, Mr. Chairman, the results of Bill 201, when it eventually passes, hopefully, will be that people with disabilities will have a voice in a position to effect positive change with regard to physical accessibility, any confusion over what is barrier-free design will be clarified, and barrier-free design and accessibility will no longer be just suggestions that can be easily dismissed.

It is important to remember, Mr. Chairman, that the amendments proposed by Bill 201 do not change the manner in which the Alberta building code applies to existing buildings and/or renovations.

Existing buildings are only required to be compliant with the code in effect at the time they were built unless undergoing a significant change or renovation. So only the actual renovations are required to comply with the current building code and then only to an extent determined by the specific nature of the renovations.

Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned, I was impressed by the fact that the Canadian Paraplegic Association was very supportive of this bill, and I would like to quote a little further from their press release.

Bill 201, which deals with barrier free access to buildings for persons with disabilities, was introduced by . . . MLA for Cloverbar/Ft Saskatchewan and Chairman of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. Our Association believes this bill is crucial to ensure that persons with disabilities finally have a voice in determining solutions aimed at making our province's buildings and public facilities more universally barrier free.

"Bill 201 will make Alberta a better place to live, work and visit for people with disabilities," says Marlin Styner, Public Relations Coordinator for the Canadian Paraplegic Association (Alberta). "Improvements have been made in recent years, but there's still a long way to go."

The Canadian Paraplegic Association (Alberta) believes that one of the biggest barriers wheelchair users face is a lack of accessibility awareness by architects, contractors, building inspectors, and the public at large. One or two steps, a narrow door, a tight corner in a hallway or an inaccessible washroom mean very little to an able-bodied person, but any one of these obstacles can be insurmountable to wheelchair users. Often, it's simply a matter of lack of education, and the Canadian Paraplegic Association (Alberta) believes that is what Bill 201 will change.

"Bill 201 will mean that all Albertans, regardless of their physical ability, will be able to enjoy the Alberta Advantage," says Styner, who will be among Canadian Paraplegic Association (Alberta) staff on hand to answer media questions.

Of course, that was back on February 23.

Quoting further from Mr. Styner, the press release goes on to say:

"When I came home from the hospital in 1982 after my spinal cord injury, I was determined that my wheelchair wouldn't stop me from doing whatever I set my mind to. I soon realized that, in fact, my wheelchair gave me freedom and independence, but that lack of accessibility in the community could stop me in my tracks. Bill 201 will allow people with disabilities, and experts in barrier free design, to clearly demonstrate how a few minor, often inexpensive changes will make an incredible quality-of-life difference for a rapidly growing segment of our society."

Mr. Chairman, I don't think I could have expressed that any better than Mr. Styner from the Canadian Paraplegic Association (Alberta) on behalf of himself and all those represented by that association.

So as I mentioned at the outset, I too echo the support of other members of this Assembly who have given unqualified support for the passage of this bill.

With that, I take my seat.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Mr. Goudreau: Good afternoon, and thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to also rise and join the Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004, sponsored by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Aristotle once said: "If liberty and equality, as is thought by some, are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will be best attained when all persons alike share in the government to the utmost." This was true in the fourth century BC, and it is also true now. I find these words quite appropriate for the discussions taking place concerning Bill 201. After all, the main theme within this legislation is, in fact, equality, the equality of one in every six Albertans who is affected by a disability. This equates to over half a million Albertans whose lives are affected by a disability and who should be full partners in our society.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of Bill 201 is to amend the Safety Codes Act in order to provide the proper voice in the appropriate forum for the disabled community to effect positive change in the built environment. Currently, section 16(3) of the Safety Codes Act states that among the persons appointed to the Council the Minister and the Committee shall include persons who are experts in fire protection, buildings, electrical systems, elevating devices, gas systems, plumbing systems, private sewage disposal systems or pressure equipment.

The amendments proposed to the Safety Code Act through Bill 201 include the term "barrier-free building design" added to the list of those persons appointed to the council.

Mr. Chairman, section 16(4) currently reads: "The Minister and the Committee shall ensure that representatives of municipalities, business and labour are appointed to the Council from among the persons described in subsection (3)." Bill 201 proposes that this section be amended to include persons with disabilities as representatives appointed to the council.

Mr. Chairman, it is these two proposed amendments that I wish to further discuss this afternoon. I find the inclusion of persons with disabilities on the council to comment on barrier-free design and access of Alberta building regulations is critical to the equality of all Albertans. As Aristotle alluded to during the fourth century BC, equality will be best achieved when all persons share in the process to the utmost. I use this quote because I believe that it describes exactly what Bill 201 is attempting to do.

The proposed amendments to the Safety Codes Act, specifically the amendments proposed for section 16, ask that provisions be added to require the Safety Codes Council to include representation from the disabled community. Also, Mr. Chairman, the promotion of the principles of barrier-free design and access would be designated as one of the Safety Codes Council's specific duties. In accepting the proposed amendments, members of this Assembly would be accepting an equal voice in the proper forum for the disabled community, ensuring that future changes to Alberta's built environment include the consideration of over half a million Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, not only are these amendments necessary on the fundamental basis of equality, but they also follow the principles of universal accessibility and full citizenship put forth by the Alberta Disability Strategy, which was released in December of 2002 by the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. It is the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan who chairs this council. I know that it was brought up during the second reading debate of Bill 201, but I wish to refer to it again as it is directly related to the proposed 16 amendments. The strategy was devised in anticipation that its recommendations, if adopted in legislation, would enable persons with disabilities to participate more fully in all aspects of Alberta society. Mr. Chairman, the time has come to move on the goals and aspirations of the strategy to ensure universal accessibility and full citizenship.

The first recommendation deals with awareness and states that "Albertans should be made more aware of the rights, needs and aspirations of persons with disabilities." Mr. Chairman, the amendments proposed for section 16 are in line with this recommendation. By providing the appropriate stage within the Safety Codes Council for persons with disabilities, we would allow their voice to be heard. The same point can be made for the majority of the recommendations in the Alberta Disability Strategy.

The third recommendation deals with physical access and states that a commitment should be made to embrace the principles of universal accessibility and a process put in place to remove physical barriers from public spaces so that all Albertans can fully participate in all community, employment and business activities.

Again, Mr. Chairman, providing over half a million Albertans with a voice that directly effects change in Alberta's building environment would ensure that these needs are met.

Mr. Chairman, by supporting Bill 201 we are making part of the commitment recommended by the Alberta Disability Strategy. We would be embracing the principles of universal accessibility, and by giving Alberta's disabled community a voice on the Safety Codes Council, we would also be putting a proper process in place to help remove physical barriers for 1 in every 6 Albertans.

As a result of Bill 201 I am certain that many public spaces will have physical barriers removed should there be any in place, and in accepting the amendments to section 16 of the Safety Codes Act, we are vastly reducing the possibility for any future barriers to exist.

Mr. Chairman, as I had mentioned earlier and many other members have also stressed, Bill 201 deals with equality. By ensuring this equality, we would be providing Alberta's disabled community with the opportunity of full citizenship and universal accessibility. I ask that all members voice their support to ensure that Alberta's disabled community has the opportunity of full citizenship and a universally acceptable province.

I again thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to join in the debate on Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access ) Amendment Act, 2004, in Committee of the Whole. It is without a doubt that one of the major trends affecting the population of our country and our province is a steady increase in the number of Canadians and Albertans who are approaching the age of 65. While this is a perfectly natural development, considering the fact that our birth rates have been on a steady decline, it does, however, present a number of issues that will have to be addressed sooner rather than later.

In anticipation of this development, I believe that we as a government need to take all the steps necessary to ensure that the growing number of disabled and mobility-impaired members of our society are extended the same or similar opportunities and advantages that are available to able-bodied Albertans. This, Mr. Chairman, is not only a fair and just approach but also a fiscally prudent method to deal with the fact that more and more Albertans may suffer from some form of disability.

Consequently, Bill 201 provides a prudent way of dealing with physical barriers faced by disabled and handicapped Albertans at the present time and in the future. By amending the Safety Codes Act, Bill 201 would not only allow us to modernize the provisions of universal access outlined in the Alberta building code, but it would also permit us to accomplish this task well in advance of the fiscal costs becoming too high.

In my view, Bill 201 first and foremost reinforces the ideas of fairness and inclusion. It aims to accomplish this by amending section 16(4) of the Safety Codes Act and adding a new clause that would provide members of the disabled community with a permanent seat and voice on the Safety Codes Council, the agency that reviews the Alberta building code's rules and regulations. By creating a new entity, the barrier-free council, the expertise and experience of the disabled community would be brought to bear on the work and mandate of the Safety Codes Council. Furthermore, by being members of the council, it is quite conceivable that the barrier-free council would be able to offer new and innovative ideas of how to improve these codes in order that they better reflect the needs and aspirations of the disabled community as well as all Albertans.

I firmly believe, Mr. Chairman, that this is truly an enlightened approach to dealing with this matter. Who else but members of the handicapped community themselves could provide the Safety Codes Council with the most relevant, first-hand accounts of everyday physical challenges faced by those who cannot move around as easily as others? Their input and participation will not only provide solutions to the problems associated with barrier-free design, but it will also send a clear message that our province is serious about ensuring that all individuals have the opportunity to participate in all walks of life. Furthermore, their input will help ensure that they remain active contributors to and beneficiaries of the Alberta advantage.

It is important to clarify that Bill 201 does not look to update existing or establish new barrier-free standards in the Alberta building code. This would remain the responsibility of the Safety Codes Council. However, it is my hope that by being represented on the council, its recommendations and changes will reflect the needs and concerns of all Albertans both today and in the coming years. I also hope that at the same time any updated barrier-free regulations will remain realistic and flexible to circumstances when relaxation grants are deemed appropriate.

As I already mentioned, Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 is consistent with the principles of fairness and inclusion. Furthermore, Bill 201 is consistent with a number of government goals, objectives, and legislation already in place. By this I am referring to such initiatives as the Alberta Disability Strategy. The Alberta Disability Strategy report released in late 2002 represents a genuine effort by the government to create an environment where disabled individuals would be able to participate more fully in all facets of life within our province and enjoy a greater sense of independence, self-sufficiency, and self-reliance.

The strategy recognizes and justly points out the fact that disabled and handicapped Albertans still face a number of hurdles including not having ready access to buildings, offices, or public facilities. In order to rectify these inequities, Mr. Chairman, the strategy developed eight major recommendations, four of which are directly related to the objectives outlined in Bill 201.

The report's third major recommendation is particularly relevant to Bill 201 as it recognizes the fact that for many disabled individuals it is very hard and in some cases impossible to gain access to certain buildings or move inside them because they are not designed to accommodate such specific requirements as wider doors and hallways. Furthermore, the report cites that the current building codes and regulations are not always adequate to guard against those seeking unwarranted building exclusions and exemptions.

While the report recognizes the fact that not all environments can be made barrier-free, it does not recommend that the Alberta government could easily recommend some of the existing accessibility problems by ensuring that principles of barrier-free design are clearly defined and implemented. One of the ways this could be accomplished is by amending the Safety Codes Act and promoting greater representation on the Safety Codes Council, something that Bill 201 is suggesting. Such a measure would give disabled Albertans far greater input into how our society chooses to approach the problems and issues of universal accessibility.

If you read the remaining three major recommendations presented by the Alberta Disability Strategy, Mr. Chairman, you would find that the common theme covered in all of them is access. The idea of accessibility maintains that free and unrestricted physical access in buildings, offices, and other structures is absolutely necessary if we are serious about maintaining the strategy of universal access for all.

While Bill 201 does not aim to introduce new barrier-free rules and regulations to the Alberta building code, it does however aim to create an environment where existing regulations, especially those concerning exemptions and relaxations, can be amended and made more rigorous. This, Mr. Chairman, will undoubtedly cause concern among some Albertans, especially those working in the hospitality and construction industries, because stricter building codes usually result in increased building costs. However, I would like to point out that sooner or later we will be compelled to modernize our building codes as the greater portion of Albertans reach the age of 65. If we wait until a later date, the costs associated with incorporating barrier-free design into existing and new buildings are bound to be far greater than they would be at the present time.

4:10

I say this for two reasons, Mr. Chairman. First, if we wait to modernize our building codes until a later date, the future retrofitting costs will be much greater because of the sheer volume of buildings that would have to be constructed by that time and which would require design improvements. Second, as more and more Albertans reach the age of 65, there will be less time to modernize the existing buildings because the demand for barrier-free design will be high. Consequently, it would be much cheaper to address the issue now rather than wait and pay more in the long run.

There's no doubt that addressing this issue of barrier-free design is going to have its fiscal costs. However, I would also like to highlight the fact that providing disabled people with barrier-free access and presenting them with opportunities to realize their full dreams and goals will produce great benefits to our society and will outweigh any initial financial costs.

It has always been said, Mr. Chairman, that the secret behind Alberta's success story is not embedded in our abundant natural resources or vast geography but, rather, our spirit, our ingenuity, independence, entrepreneurship, and people. I firmly believe that having a disability should not preclude one from utilizing his or her resourcefulness, ambition, and hard work no matter what the cost may be. Furthermore, it should never prevent one from contributing to Alberta's future prosperity and success.

Bill 201, Mr. Chairman, is definitely a step in the right direction and provides us with a solid foundation to build on. I therefore invite all my colleagues present today to vote in favour. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my great pleasure to rise today in support of Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. I believe that the changes contained in this bill are significant and necessary, and I believe that this is an important and appropriate step that will help create a more inclusive society in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, I actually have a few personal experiences to relate in this regard that I'd like to just mention as to why I'm interested in this bill. Some years ago when I was still a teenager, my older brother, who was a University of Alberta law student at the time, was out riding horses at my dad's farm one weekend, and he was thrown from the horse into a corner post. If you know how large corner posts usually are, you can imagine the force he had to hit with in order to break it in half, which is what happened. Unfortunately, he also broke his back at the same time. It was a terrible ordeal for the family. In fact, he finished his last year of law school in a wheelchair.

I remembered all of that, and when I first became an alderman on Calgary city council, I received an invitation from the Calgary disabled community to spend a day in a wheelchair. Mindful of my brother's experiences I accepted that invitation to spend an entire day in a chair. Needless to say, it was quite an experience. It was a long, difficult, and challenging day for me, and I certainly learned a lot about the difficulties that disabled people often face in navigating around in a wheelchair and trying to actually keep up a job. So that's why I have a personal interest in this bill.

I'd like focus my comments on two of the main objectives of Bill 201. First, I'd like to explain how amending section 16(4) would provide the important representation the disabled community should be afforded on the Safety Codes Council and why that representation will become increasingly important, I believe, in the future. Second, I'd like to also address how designating the responsibility of barrier-free design to the Safety Codes Council's specific duties will improve the number of buildings in the province which are accessible to all Albertans.

I'd like to start my first point by addressing the changes that would occur in section 16(4) of the Safety Codes Act. Now, it is difficult to speak on behalf of a certain group of people, a demographic, when one is not really affiliated or involved a lot with the community in question. Even though I did spend a day in a chair myself and I do think I learned a great deal from that, the fact is that I only spent one day in a chair, and that doesn't even begin to start to teach you the full challenges of such a situation. Therefore, I believe that an able-bodied person simply cannot accurately represent the wishes, needs, and directions of Alberta's disability community despite his or her best efforts.

So in order to provide the disabled a proper voice, I believe we must allow disabled Albertans to have a place at the table where decisions are made. It is not enough to simply ask for an opinion or take actions that able-bodied people might think or might assume would be appropriate. Bill 201 will allow the disabled community an opportunity to have direct input on decisions made that affect them on a day-to-day basis. Members representing the disabled community will be able to put forward ideas relating to solving the problems of barriers attached to Alberta's public buildings.

It will also give the disabled community an opportunity to debate the merits of legislation and procedures and to be able to comment directly as to how these procedures would be applied to the disabled community. Establishing a voice for the disabled at a level where decisions are made has a lot of potential to do a lot of good. I truly believe that if this bill is passed and proclaimed, the disabled community will be able to take this opportunity and make great strides forward in creating a more inclusive society. In my mind, the potential of the good that can be achieved is enormous. For example, who would know more about the problems associated with wheelchair ramps in the wintertime than an individual who is confined to such a chair?

I did find it interesting to hear Members of the Legislative Assembly, colleagues, talk during second reading of this bill about getting into a wheelchair to learn about the barriers that disabled people face. As I mentioned, I did it myself and gained a whole new perspective of how difficult it actually is to do simple things that all of us take for granted. For example, just crossing a street becomes a challenge if you don't have the proper curbs and everything else formed there. So I believe that this truly points to the need to ensure that the disabled have a voice when dealing with issues involving the disabled population.

Now, in coming years it will become even more apparent why it is important to get a head start towards removing barriers in our current built environment and infrastructure because as our population ages, more Albertans will have trouble tackling staircases, more trouble accessing poorly designed bathroom stalls, more trouble reading traffic signs, and so on. Obviously, this means more people will be affected when trying to navigate a building that was designed with only the able-bodied person in mind.

Just some statistics here. As of April 2003 there were about 323,000 seniors in Alberta. By the year 2016 it is expected that that number will have risen to 493,000 people, and by 2026 Alberta will be home to more than 700,000 seniors. Now, that's more than double our current seniors population. So while these increases are not alarming per se, it does behoove us to start preparing for that future now. If we don't, we will be doing a large segment of the population a huge disservice, and we should remember that that segment will include many of us, in fact. So as the old adage goes, if we fail to plan, we plan to fail.

With that in mind, the monies will be spent on upgrading Alberta's buildings. It won't be so much a burden on our business owners, but rather we should look at it as an investment for the future. This trend may also speak to a need to have seniors represented in these types of issues either through the means that will be established by passing Bill 201 or through representation of their own.

Now, on my second point, Mr. Chairman, bestowing upon the Safety Codes Council the responsibility of promoting the importance of barrier-free design is an important step in ensuring that progress continues to be made in regard to removing barriers from our buildings. Currently the Alberta building code contains provisions for barrier-free design and accessibility. Section 3.8 of the code addresses matters of barrier-free design. Under this provision it is mandated that when a building to which the general public has access is renovated significantly, then changes must be made to remove existing barriers to the building. An example of that is if a storefront is renovated and there is not wheelchair access, necessary changes under 3.8 must be made at the time when that renovation is being made, and that only makes sense.

The code does not provide direction as to how buildings are to be made accessible to those who face mobility challenges, though. This leaves it open to interpretation. It also allows for flexibility. There can be and often is more than one solution to a problem. Giving the Safety Codes Council the opportunity to put forward solutions to problems like these may lead to solutions that work better for all parties involved. The council could help establish how, where, and in what manner section 3.8 is to be applied during upgrades or even during new construction.

This process is further strengthened by the disabled community's representation on the Safety Codes Council. Their voice would be critical in bringing clarity as to how the Alberta building code should be applied to Alberta's public buildings.

This is especially true when we look at the issue of relaxations. It was pointed out during second reading of this bill that relaxations are granted in special circumstances. That exempts a builder from having to conform to section 3.8 of the Alberta building code. But disabled representation should be part of that process when it comes to the issue of relaxations because they are the best people to speak to whether or not a relaxation is warranted. They are the ones in the best position to decide whether or not they would be significantly and adversely affected by a relaxation in the requirements.

Mr. Chairman, we could convey stories of the disabled's plight and the importance of removing barriers they face on a day-to-day basis. Dwelling on these stories, however, paints an unbalanced picture of this community. These people are full of ability. Stephen Hawking, Terry Fox, Rick Hansen, Christopher Reeve, Stevie Wonder, Helen Keller, and many others have proven on a world stage that a certain disability does not and will not limit them or define them as people.

I personally know of many people with varying degrees of disabilities who hold down jobs. They still provide for their families and for themselves, they are self-reliant, and they've put the skills they have to work for them. These people have ability, and our focus on an inclusive society should allow us to recognize this. I believe Bill 201 is a good first step toward making this so.

Mr. Chairman, I am supporting this initiative fully. Putting decision-making power regarding barriers faced by the disabled into the hands of the disabled will go a long way towards creating meaningful solutions and progress. I am urging all Members of this Legislative Assembly to vote for this progressive initiative.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I'd like to commend and thank the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for bringing such a valuable bill before this Legislature. It's difficult for us to speak on a bill when actually we can't personally relate to some of the difficulties that people with disabilities, particularly with physical disabilities, must face on a daily basis. Nonetheless, it is our responsibility as legislators to create an environment in which those individuals can flourish best to their maximum potential.

Mr. Chairman, the bill is drafted in such a manner that not only will it require any new construction to take into consideration any and all engineering amendments that would make the new building accessible to an individual with disabilities, but what it also does is breathe life into the legislation whereas it allows for ongoing consultation with the disabled community on further and ongoing improvements. As our understanding of disabilities, our adaptive attitudes towards disabilities, and our technology improve, the bill will allow for changes in regulations to reflect that and enhance the construction of the building, making Alberta's buildings more accessible to those individuals.

Mr. Chairman, very often when we talk about legislation that requires modifications to buildings or new building code adjustments, we think about the cost. What will the actual cost be to the proprietor that may be building the building or perhaps to our government if we're building schools or offices? But what we very often neglect to mention is how much actual economic benefit there is from doing that.

Imagine, Mr. Chairman, how many people simply a decade or two decades ago were not able to be productive members of our economy, of our society simply because of the fact that they couldn't leave their home, board a bus, or perhaps enter an office building and work. We had very well educated individuals with skills incapable of contributing to our economy simply because they were not mobile. They couldn't do that. They couldn't live their life to their maximum potential. Now, keeping those barriers in mind as we construct our new buildings, we will be able to allow more and more individuals in our society to contribute to our economy and to further evolve in their lives and have much more fulfilling personal lives.

Another aspect, Mr. Chairman, is education. I'm sure that still out there in this province and definitely in the world there are school facilities that are not fully accessible to individuals with disabilities. We don't have to go far. Let's enter some of our older schools here in Edmonton, and we'll notice that even though adaptive measures have been taken and ramps of some sort or perhaps an elevator has been installed, still those schools are not as accessible to individuals with disabilities as they perhaps could be. Now, it only stands to reason that if we're going to build new buildings, from now on we should be able to implement our newest, most recent understanding of disabilities into the design of the building and then adapt the legislation as time goes on.

Now, who is the best person to consult with us on what needs there really are, physical needs, if you're a disabled person? Mr. Chairman, you and I probably can discuss that at some level. However, we don't have the personal understanding, the actual experience of what it is like to experience the world with disabilities, and it is impossible to acquire that understanding unless you actually live in the body of a disabled person. So it only stands to reason that the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan would advocate that the people with disabilities be the ones actually consulted on future amendments and future development of the legislation governing our building codes.

Mr. Chairman, another realm of life that very often is hindering to individuals with disabilities is simply their participation in our social life. Again, as government and municipal governments and other societies and associations who manage public facilities try to be adaptive, very often we fail, and very often we don't do everything that possibly is in our power to make our buildings more accessible. Buildings like community halls and swimming pools are very often not accessible to individuals with disabilities. Now, this type of legislation would definitely encourage and require new proprietors to take those issues into consideration when they're developing these new buildings.

On the cost side it's important to note that this bill only addresses new construction and nonresidential construction. So it won't affect an average Albertan building his own home, obviously, unless he or she does have disabilities, but it addresses buildings that are nonresidential, nonprivate residential, and buildings which are being retrofitted to a large degree. It will not affect small renovations of a building that doesn't perhaps meet the new standards when there are minor renovations being made, but it does address buildings when a large-scale retrofit takes place.

That plays a very important role here in Edmonton, Mr. Chairman, and in Calgary as well as we're going through a phase right now of retrofitting old structures in the core of the city and trying to revitalize our downtown and encouraging seniors particularly and others to move into the core of the city. It doesn't take much to drive through our downtown and take a look around where old warehouses are being turned into condominiums. Well, those warehouses, as they stand right now, definitely would not meet any requirements for access for individuals with disabilities, but with the advent of this legislation, when those buildings are being gutted and now turned into residential complexes, definitely a developer would have to take into consideration the needs of their potential residents or visitors who may have disabilities.

Mr. Chairman, it would be difficult not to endorse this bill. Obviously, it's a good bill. Obviously, it promotes full participation of individuals with disabilities in the economic, educational, and social life of the province. It's obviously very futuristic. As our technology develops and as we are able to deal positively with more and more medical conditions which right now render individuals home- or hospital-ridden and allow them to be mobile, the more there will be a need for buildings and modes of transportation and all other public facilities to be conducive to those individuals' ability to participate in our province's life.

So, again, I'd like to commend the member for bringing forward such a fabulous piece of legislation. I'm sure that all members of this House will support this bill in passage into law. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I welcome the opportunity to speak to the committee today and join discussion in committee stage on Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. I believe the merits of this bill speak for themselves. I believe that the importance of this legislation and section 4 is fundamental to addressing the needs of those persons with physical and sensory disabilities in Alberta.

Therefore, I would like to address this committee on section 4 of the recommended Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. Section 4 states that "the Minister shall, in accordance with this Act, co-ordinate and encourage the principles of barrier-free design and access for any thing, process or activity to which this Act applies." Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 offers the opportunity to the minister responsible for barrier-free design and access principles for physically and sensory disabled Albertans to ensure their full access to all buildings in Alberta. The structural barrier-free design principles recommended in Bill 201 will afford persons with physical and sensory disabilities the capacity of accessing and excelling in their respective fields and communities.

Doing so would in turn result in further enhancement of disabled individuals with a greater sense of esteem and independence, ultimately strengthening their pride as being an active and contributing member of Alberta's society. Together with the physical self-sufficiency that physically and sensory disabled individuals will gain from Bill 201, the potential of creating a barrier-free mentality among Albertans of the predisposed limits of physically and sensory disabled persons is also heightened.

For decades, Mr. Chairman, people with physical and sensory disabilities have too often been pitied for their differences and categorized as a fringe of society rather than simply being seen as contributing to society and seeking inclusion on a level playing field. The potential for including these so-called fringe groups would increase dramatically given the opportunities that would be within their realm by way of the barrier-free design and access principles stipulated in Bill 201. The probability of breaking down disabled barriers would eventually be inevitable either in our schools, our workplace, or common social gathering places. This social commonality would offer disabled Albertans the opportunity of inclusion rather than the fear of exclusion in their respective communities.

Mr. Chairman, the community employment equity positive measures program offers workshops called Improving the Effectiveness of your Workplace: Universal Accessibility to effective employment co-ordinators and all managers and employees. This workshop is designed to raise awareness in the Canadian marketplace and to offer practical how-to suggestions on accommodating persons with disabilities in the workplace.

The community employment equity program has focused on the correlation between barrier-free design workplaces and the beneficial rewards of a productive employment environment where persons with physical and sensory disabilities can flourish and succeed. The study has also shown that if a workplace is designed to include people with physical and sensory limitations and makes them feel comfortable and part of a team, that's a significant competitive edge. This gives employers access to a larger pool of potential employees and embraces the principles of universal accessibility for all Albertans.

The benefits, Mr. Chairman, of ensuring that the structure of Alberta work areas and facilities is accessible for all Albertans will further limit the societal prejudice associated with persons with physical and sensory disabilities. Bill 201 will optimistically result in Alberta being a place of tolerance, inclusion, and forward thinking regarding those with disabilities.

The long-term effects of the implementation of barrier-free design will resonate to all facets of Alberta society and instill in our society that all individuals in Alberta shall be afforded the opportunity to succeed. Barrier-free designs and concepts, if taken as the norm in construction in Alberta, will offer those with disabilities greater opportunities to participate actively in community and cultural affairs in Alberta as full participants.

Mr. Chairman, from my own personal experience of suffering a stroke some months ago, coupled with my chair position with the Health Facilities Review Committee, I have witnessed and have come to understand and empathize with Albertans who feel that their loss of dignity is a double-edged sword when having to rely on the charity of others. For example, minor things require help. I need to use a handrail to go up or down a staircase now. I used to take them two at a time. I can no longer leap over a curbside snowbank. An individual's self-esteem and dignity can be quickly crushed with the inability for self-sufficiency.

From personal experience I can assure this committee that an individual loss of independence can be humiliating and emotionally unsettling. Having to cope with mobility issues myself, I have a newfound understanding with regard to persons who have lost their independence coupled with their dignity, having once been an able-bodied individual. I believe that Bill 201 will give those who have relied on assistance for a shorter or longer period to become more self-sufficient and improve their sense of self. With my own affliction I have now become increasingly aware of the plight of disabled individuals and what they have to gain, psychologically and physically, from regaining their independence and self-esteem.

Bill 201 offers a new lease on life for many of those who are disabled. I believe those with short- or long-term disabilities, regardless of age, will be afforded the opportunity of a level playing field because of the amendments brought forth in Bill 201 in amending the Alberta Safety Codes Act. Through the removal of barriers that may hinder the educational, social, and financial advancement of Albertans with physical and sensory abilities, Bill 201 would have a dramatic impact on the potential for opportunities available to Albertans with disabilities.

Opportunities afforded to disabled persons in a barrier-free workplace would encompass the ability to return to work more quickly after injuries or ill health resulting in disability. It would address accessibility needs that may be associated with an aging workforce and allow employers to retain the services of employees with disabilities over the long term, thereby potentially eliminating the societal stigma associated with disabled persons' limits in contributing to society.

Mr. Chairman, with barrier-free design implemented in the current construction of public buildings, those with disabilities would be given the opportunity to contribute as equals among nondisabled Albertans. I strongly believe that the intent and purpose of Bill 201 is consistent with the Alberta government's strategy to protect and nurture human rights and equal citizenship, to ensure accessibility and awareness for all Albertans.

For example, the Alberta Ministry of Children Services' strategy is to develop legislation and policies to refocus resources for children with disabilities on abilities rather than disabilities as this approach advocates a proactive rather than a reactive approach to issues of mobility and disability, as brought forth in Bill 201. Section 4 of Bill 201 will enable the minister responsible, in accordance with this act, the ability to co-ordinate and encourage the principles of barrier-free design and access for the greater good of all Albertans.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 is a step forward for safety code regulation in Alberta. I wholeheartedly believe that Bill 201 would instill a sense of confidence and self-esteem in those physically and sensory challenged individuals, ensuring all Albertans the opportunity to succeed and belong to the Albertan mosaic as contributing, independent, dignified individuals.

I would like to urge all the hon. members in attendance to vote in favour of Bill 201 at this committee stage. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to join debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004, sponsored by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. Speakers in second reading talked about the importance of barrier-free design for Alberta's growing aging and disabled population. One of the biggest reasons to pass Bill 201 is the idea that the input and insight provided by the disabled community today will save time and money for Albertans in the future.

Mr. Chairman, everyone agrees with the idea of improving the quality of life of the disabled. Developing this idea into a workable plan is the hard part. I believe that the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan has designed an excellent piece of legislation that will provide the proper voice for addressing some of the physical challenges facing the disabled community. Bill 201 is a relatively inexpensive but very sensible and effective way to remove some of the physical barriers that stand in the way of thousands of Albertans. It's easy to say: let's help the disabled lead normal lives. The real challenge is finding solutions that work for everyone involved.

I would like to talk about three specific sections in Bill 201 that will help connect the needs of the disabled with other aspects of building design. In second reading the Member for Highwood described a situation where input from the disabled could have improved the location and layout of barrier-free bathrooms. We all agree that the needs of people living with disabilities related to day-to-day living must be improved. One way to increase accessibility is changing the way we look at safety codes. We should also consider the possibility of a small number of contractors looking for a way around barrier-free designs in an attempt to save time and money.

Currently, section 2(2) of the Safety Codes Act states: "The Minister may, by order, exempt any person or municipality or any thing, process or activity from any or all provisions of this Act and attach terms and conditions to the exemption." This section helps builders avoid certain safety codes that do not apply to their construction project. These exemptions also help municipalities when a project simply runs over budget. The point to remember regarding exemptions is that they are only granted after the applicant has been turned down at every other stage of the process.

However, section 2 of Bill 201 reminds builders that the Safety Codes Act must be applied "with the principles of barrier-free design and access." Exemptions will still be granted under the right conditions, but exemptions will not be granted for projects if people with sensory and physical disabilities are unable to access buildings to which the act applies. It's important to keep the exemption in the Safety Codes Act for unforeseen circumstances. The exemption cannot be used as a loophole for a small number of builders who may try to avoid barrier-free designs.

As I mentioned before, Bill 201 creates a voice for the disabled without damaging the purpose and mandate of the Safety Codes

Council. For example, section 4 sets the rules for membership in the Safety Codes Council. I think that this is one of the most important parts of Bill 201. Adding the term barrier-free design to section 16(3) of the act expressly creates the seat at the table for the disabled.

The people sitting on the Safety Codes Council have extensive knowledge in specific areas, including fire protection, buildings, electrical systems, elevating devices, and plumbing systems. Each of these technical experts contributes important elements of building design. Section 4(a) of Bill 201 includes experts in barrier-free building design. I cannot think of a better group to devise practical, common-sense changes to the safety codes than the disabled community. In other words, empower them to be a key part of the solution. As the bill states in section 4, there is already a list of experts who use their specific skills and knowledge to improve building designs. The disabled representation on the council will add another important element to the construction of safe and accessible public buildings.

Previous speakers have talked about the social advantages of barrier-free access. I think one point that needs to be repeated is the valuable technical expertise that disabled Albertans can offer the council.

Section 5 of Bill 201 also discusses the Safety Codes Council. This part of the bill legislates the mandate to include barrier-free design in all relevant building construction projects. Section 5 provides direction for the council to always consider barrier-free designs in addition to other areas defined in the act.

I believe that the process created through section 4 and section 5 will add value to public buildings. Some would argue that retrofitting buildings to accommodate disabilities will become a major industry in the next two decades. Barrier-free design ideas provided by the disabled community will certainly improve the accessibility for more people. As Alberta's population ages, there will have to be significant changes made to accommodate their decreasing mobility. Making the changes to the Safety Codes Council in sections 4 and 5 will save this government money in the future.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk about the concerns from people who believe that Bill 201 also applies to their homes. Although I encourage people to consider barrier-free designs when building or renovating, section 3.8.1.1 of the Alberta building code clearly states what kinds of buildings are exempt. At the top of the list are houses, including semidetached houses, duplexes, triplexes, townhouses, and row houses. Boarding houses are also exempt unless they are used for social programs such as group homes, halfway houses, and shelters. The owner of a private dwelling is not compelled to follow barrier-free designs. If someone wants to renovate their home, they do not need to comply with any barrier-free designs unless they want to.

Other people may think of hypothetical situations of buildings that would have to needlessly follow barrier-free designs if Bill 201 were to pass. However, there are three other categories of buildings that are not forced to comply with barrier-free access. Relocatable industrial accommodations or mobile trailers, high-hazard buildings such as chemical plants, and buildings not intended to be used on a daily or full-time basis are also exempt. The structures listed in 3.8.1.1 should address the what-if scenarios on the minds of homeowners and the industrial sector.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 201 will help us achieve the goal of guaranteeing full access by all Albertans to all public buildings. Clarifying the exemption clause in section 2 reduces the chances of unethical builders looking for a way to skip barrier-free designs. Adding another set of experts to the Safety Codes Council in section 4 will add value for the owners of buildings and improve accessibility for the disabled using these buildings. Promoting the principles of barrier-free design as stated in section 5(a)(e.1) recognizes the importance to improve access for the growing number of seniors as well as disabled Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, these sections in Bill 201 will help create an important position for the disabled, allowing them to provide their insight and improve their quality of life. I commend the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for bringing this very important legislation forward, and I strongly encourage all members to vote in favour of Bill 201.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to be very brief. I again would like to thank the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for bringing this piece of legislation forward. I think it was time that we talked about this issue, and I'm very pleased that through the committee that he chairs, they had the initiative to bring it forward so that we could have a full discussion.

I have listened with great interest this afternoon to the discussion and the debate, and I'm very, very encouraged by what I hear. I'm not going to get into the logistics or the detail, how much needs to be changed in this bill at committee stage, but I just wanted to say that since we last spoke on this, I have talked to a number of people that are very pleased that it is coming forward. The disabled community want a hand up, not a handout, and they want to be part and parcel of the decision-making. What better way than to have another voice at the table with a full understanding of what is needed and how it can be achieved?

In January of this year I got a phone call from the executive director for the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada, the national chapter, and they asked me whether I would consider sitting on the Alberta provincial board, and I have agreed to do so. Though we have not had a meeting where I can discuss this particular piece of legislation, I'm sure that they would very much want me to support it and tell you that they are in favour of it.

Again, thank you very much hon. member, and thank you to all the members of this Assembly that have been talking about the good things involved in this bill. It sounds like it will pass committee, and I look forward to discussing it again at the next reading. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Mrs. Tarchuk: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. I feel that this is a piece of legislation that coincides with not only the goals and intentions of the government but also Albertans.

The safety codes amendment act, sponsored by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, is a bill that supports a very simple theory. This theory is that those persons most affected by a decision should have input into that decision. After all, changes to the regulations governing medical practices would not be made without consulting doctors or nurses, nor should decisions regarding issues of accessibility be made without input from persons living with restricted mobility.

This idea is simple, well thought out, and, in my opinion, long overdue. However, as in many other cases while the idea itself is without complications, the legislation and the regulations surrounding the idea are fraught with complexity. In the midst of technical jargon, lengthy discourses on the exact width of doorways, and regulations regarding the thickness of floor beams it is easy to lose sight of exactly what Bill 201 will achieve. There has been some confusion surrounding the issue. I know that I didn't understand exactly what was intended the very first time I read it, but now that I have reread it, I would like to try to clear up some of the areas that have proven somewhat complex.

Mr. Chairman, one misconception surrounding the bill is that universal accessibility will be applicable to all buildings including private residences. This is simply not true. Section 5(a) amends section 18 of the Safety Codes Act. There another subsection is added that promotes "the principles of barrier-free design to any thing, process or activity to which this Act applies." It does not expand the processes, activities, or things to which the current act applies. Universal accessibility is not required for all buildings in the current situation, and this will not be modified.

Section 3.8.1.1 of the code outlines the types of buildings that are not affected by universal accessibility standards. This list is very long, and there are some building types in there that I've never heard of. In the interest of brevity I will not attempt a reading of every building type; instead, I will merely list the four major types of buildings that will not be affected. These buildings are housing, relocatable industrial accommodations, high-hazard industrial occupancies, and buildings not intended to be occupied on a daily basis. These groupings are somewhat vague so a little explaining might be helpful.

The first type, housing, is fairly self-explanatory. Personal residences are not affected under the current version of the Safety Codes Act, nor will they be affected under the amended version. If a private-home owner wishes to make their home universally accessible, this is entirely their choice. They're under no obligation to do so.

The second type of buildings is relocatable industrial accommodations. An example of these are the trailers used as offices on construction sites that can be seen at any number of locations throughout the city.

The third type of buildings is classified as high-hazard industrial occupancies. They are heavy industrial plants such as chemical and fertilizer plants or a steel mill.

The final group of buildings that are not required to be universally accessible is buildings that are not intended to be occupied on a daily basis. Telephone exchanges, pumphouses, and electrical transformer stations would fall under this category.

The types of buildings that do not fall under the umbrella of universal accessibility are really just common sense. No one expects every private home to be accessible universally, and many of the other building types require the employees in the building to be fully mobile to be able to carry out the duties of their job.

Mr. Chairman, the second point that has attracted a good deal of attention is the granting of exemptions for buildings from the principles of barrier-free design. Section 2(2) of the current Safety Codes Act outlines the powers of the minister with regard to exemptions. In essence, the minister is empowered to grant an exemption to "any person or municipality or any thing, process or activity" from any of the provisions of the act. In the amended version of the act sponsored by the hon. member, this section reads exactly the same. The ultimate responsibility for this act lies with the minister, including the power to grant exemptions.

In addition, the procedure for contractors wishing to apply for an exemption remains the same. A builder can speak to the local safety codes officer regarding an exemption. The officer can recommend that the contractor make a formal application to the head office for consideration. It is during this phase that the amended act could be of added assistance. While the procedure remains the same, the expansion of the Safety Codes Council to include an expert in barrier-free design would allow for a new insight into the situation. In these instances the expert would be able to offer input that could lead to a compromise regarding the granting of an exemption.

Using real-world experience, the newest member of the council would be able to offer various solutions to difficulties encountered by contractors in fulfilling the requirement to ensure that a building is universally accessible. There can often be multiple solutions to a problem, and having a person with a wealth of experience in dealing with issues of accessibility would open the door to multiple possible solutions.

Mr. Chairman, those are two main areas of confusion that I experienced and witnessed some of my colleagues experience when considering the pros and cons of Bill 201.

I would like to turn my attention to other issues that the bill raises. Section 2(2.1) of the amended bill draws attention to the expanded goals of the act. The Safety Codes Council and through them the Alberta building code will no longer be responsible solely for safety issues with regard to construction. While safety will remain the highest priority, they will now incorporate the ideals of universal access into their duties.

This joining of safety and accessibility embodies the best ideals of the government. The government of Alberta is committed to protecting the safety of Albertans, all Albertans, and also ensuring that all Albertans are able to have meaningful participation in their communities.

Goal 10 of the 2003-2004 government business plan states that "Alberta will be a fair and safe place to work, live and raise families." The passing of Bill 201 will do much toward securing fairness and equality for all Albertans, including those who live with physical or sensory disability.

This bill will help to ensure that those members of our community requiring assistance in getting around are not excluded from places of work or recreation. This same logic can be applied to fulfilling goal 12 of the 2003-2004 government business plan: "Albertans will have the opportunity to participate in community and cultural activities and enjoy the province's historical resources and parks and protected areas."

Mr. Chairman, Alberta has a long and proud history of being an inclusive society, not an exclusive one. The safety codes amendment act will help ensure that all Albertans feel included in their communities and recognized for the valuable contributions that they make.

As was mentioned during the previous debate, this bill will affect a great number of people as many seniors find their mobility becoming limited as they age. The fact is that the seniors' population is growing at a rate that is outstripping other age groups. People are living longer, but their bodies are not holding up to the rigours of daily living, and they are finding themselves needing assistance to get around. By acting now, this Assembly will be preparing society for the not-too-distant future when 20 per cent of Albertans are age 65 or older.

There are already studies completed on the effect that the aging population will have on the health system and pensions, but the concept of universal accessibility cannot be overlooked. By acting now, plans will be laid for the future that will serve Albertans well as we look into the future.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan has brought forward a piece of legislation that will better equip Alberta for the challenges that lie ahead. The safety codes amendment act will ensure that Alberta will be open and accessible for all of those who live in this province regardless of any physical or sensory disability that a person may live with. Passing this bill will make Alberta a leader in rights for those persons with a disability and help to secure the Alberta advantage for everyone in the province.

I would ask all of my colleagues to stand with me and support Bill 201. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to rise today to speak to Bill 201 in committee. I want to focus my comments today on the reasonableness of this bill and how it fits into the government's overall approach to these sorts of issues.

First, as other members have mentioned during this afternoon's discussion, Bill 201 does not affect the status of private residences throughout this province. We should all be clear by now on that point. Through section 3.8.1.1 of the building code Bill 201 cannot impose itself on private homes. When we are discussing the impact of this bill, we are talking primarily about public buildings and facilities that the public access on a regular basis. Albertans need not fear that the status of their homes is somehow changed by this legislation. Every section of this bill speaks to that fact.

The purpose of this act is quite clear. It is an attempt to change the way we think about public access, Mr. Chairman. Many Albertans have difficulties accessing public buildings, and we must ensure that their voice is heard in the development of these facilities. Up to this point I don't believe that this community has been ignored. In many regards those that build public buildings make a great effort to accommodate a wide variety and range of needs to facilitate access to as many Albertans as possible. But it is a unique voice and perspective that only the disabled community and those Albertans who cope with these difficulties on a daily basis can bring to a discussion on development of our public facilities.

All members heard the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan discuss the wheelchair ramp here at the Legislature. That unique perspective of a person who uses a wheelchair could have further helped solve some of the difficulties of that ramp. Bill 201 would formalize that viewpoint for the entire province through section 4 of this bill. It is a subtle change, where an expert on barrier-free design would be appointed to the Safety Codes Council.

That is the really good thing about this bill, Mr. Chairman. It is a bill that is practical in its application. Albertans won't see a dramatic shift or change if this bill were to pass third reading and come into force on June 1 of this year, as outlined in section 7. No. What will happen is that the Safety Codes Council, when debating and developing new standards for our public buildings, will have to consider a new perspective and ensure that the principles of barrier-free design are considered. Over time these principles will become the new standard, and in many regards the changes that we hope to enact today will constitute a quiet shift in how we build buildings. They will become the norm and just in time too.

As many of my hon. colleagues have pointed out, Alberta's population is aging, and the difficulties that some seniors face with regard to mobility will continue to present themselves well into the future. They will become more and more prevalent as a greater proportion of our population ages. These issues will not go away, and it is important that we put ourselves in the position to respond to these sorts of issues now instead of being forced to do so when it's critical and expensive to do so in the future. With the gradual and common-sense application of this bill potential concerns regarding this bill should be alleviated.

Albertans who own or construct buildings will not have to fear massive new expenditures because of Bill 201. Quite simply, there is nothing in this bill to fear. When designing a new building from scratch or undertaking a renovation, architects and engineers will simply have to accommodate the principles of barrier-free design that will be incorporated practically into the standards of the code itself.

These new standards will be developed in time, and they will not be developed in isolation of other voices, Mr. Chairman. Under section 16 of the act experts in fire protection, buildings, barrier-free design, electrical systems, elevating devices, gas systems, plumbing systems, private sewage disposal systems, and pressure equipment will evolve the code together. All voices will equally discuss and develop new standards together. No one voice will be more prominent than another, but the key will be to ensure that all voices and all perspectives are heard.

We should be clear, Mr. Chairman, that the government retains the power to provide specific exemptions to the application of the code. So in instances where it would be detrimental to apply portions of the code to new construction, exemptions can be applied for, and if they are reasonable and they make sense, they will continue to be granted in a judicious and fair manner. In many regards Bill 201 can be seen in the broader scope of where the government and Albertans are moving.

For many years now the government through the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities has encouraged individuals in different aspects of our society to consider the needs and aspirations of the disabled community. For instance, it is part of the vision of the council and the government as a whole that all persons with disabilities are valued as full citizens in all aspects of society, with full participation in the social, economic, and political life of communities. Bill 201 will further this vision by removing barriers to buildings and facilities where the social, economic, and political life of our communities takes place. Furthermore, the principles of Bill 201 can be seen in this year's throne speech in the announcement of a new office for disability issues.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely believe that Bill 201 is a step in the right direction for this province. Thank you.

The Chair: Thank you. The time for consideration of this item of business has now been completed.

Health Care Premiums

502. Mr. Mason moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to eliminate seniors' health care premiums immediately and phase out premiums for all Albertans within three years.

[Debate adjourned March 1: Dr. Pannu speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand I have about five minutes left of my time, so I will try to make the best use of those five minutes. I wish to make a few brief arguments as to why Motion 502, which urges the government to abolish seniors' health care premiums immediately and phase them out for all Albertans within three years, is deserving of the support of all members in this Assembly.

Health care premiums are one of the most flawed taxes levied by this government. They are regressive, create red tape for individuals and businesses, and are a make-work project for collection agencies. Worst of all, health care premiums are, plain and simple, unfair to middle-income earners. A two-adult family making $35,000 per year pays exactly the same, $1,056, in health care premiums as a family making $350,000 per year. Everyone who now pays health care premiums would benefit from scrapping this tax, but middle-income families, including middle-income seniors, would experience the most relief.

The Premier had the gall to call the regressive health tax nominal. The Premier said last week, and I briefly quote: I don't know. Is it hurting you? A thousand bucks for what? For your whole family? That's not too bad, considering. I would say that it's nominal. Unquote. Perhaps for the Premier, who has a pay package in excess of $130,000 this year, $1,056 in health care premium tax would be nominal, but what about a family making $35,000 per year? This modest-income family would see their total tax load cut by one-third should health care premiums be fully eliminated. Why are my colleagues on the government side not in favour of tax cuts for the middle-income families? That's what I ask. That's a significant tax relief to hard-pressed families. It is definitely not nominal, Mr. Speaker.

So far the corporate tax rate for larger companies was reduced from 15.5 per cent to 12.5 per cent permanently, reducing provincial revenues by $400 million per year. The eventual goal is to go all the way to an 8 per cent rate, thereby forgoing yet another $600 million in corporate tax revenues. Cancelling the corporate tax cuts while retaining the small business tax reductions can more than make up for the revenue loss that will result from scrapping the health care premiums. The question must be asked: what should have the greater priority? Further corporate tax reductions or phasing out of health care premiums? I challenge the government to put such a choice before Albertans and let them decide what should have higher priority.

It is time for the government to change course and cancel the reductions in corporate taxes and, instead, phase out health care premiums along the lines of Motion 502. Businesses large and small, along with other employers, would also directly save the hundreds of millions of dollars that they directly contribute to paying health care premiums on behalf of their employees. This would offset in large measure any increases in corporate taxes that would result from cancelling them.

Collecting and remitting premiums on behalf of the government is an administrative nightmare for employers, an added cost of doing business in Alberta. The phased elimination of premiums would save additional millions in business costs that are wasted in designing systems to collect and remit this troublesome health care premium tax.

Albertans are already paying out-of-control power bills, unnecessary school user fees, and sky-high insurance rates. We deserve a break for hard-working, regular, middle-income earning Albertans. This plan to eliminate premiums as set out in this motion is a good start toward a better deal for middle-class families, seniors, and working Albertans.

The tax cuts to corporations benefit the few, but the money that is returned to corporations doesn't necessarily stay in Alberta. Tax cuts that we are proposing by way of Motion 502 will be a break for Albertans who will spend that money in Alberta buying homes, putting money in for supporting their families and kids in postsecondary education.

So I urge all members of the Assembly to support Motion 502, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to very briefly get some comments on record. I am, actually, on record as supporting the removal of health care premiums. However, this motion is very simple, and it's not very surprising that it is simple. If we're going to look at removal of Alberta health care premiums, we also need to look at how we're going to replace them, and the system that we're going to replace them with needs to have accountability from both the provider and the client sides. So to have a motion which simply says that we'll do away with it and not retain accountability in the system on either the provider or the client side is not, I think, a good direction for this government to go.

I think we need to look very, very carefully at how we're going to fund the system in the future, and we need to make some changes. On that basis, Mr. Speaker, I will not be able to vote in favour of this motion. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Mr. Vandermeer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to speak to Motion 502, sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I would like to begin by saying that I think this is a good and noble motion which attempts to alleviate some of the hardships that Albertans face while paying for health care premiums.

Mr. Speaker, I campaigned on this issue, and I handed out door-to-door information that said that I would sponsor a bill to eliminate health care premiums for all Albertans, and in 2001 I presented such a bill to this Legislature. This motion provides us with an important opportunity, and that is to debate this issue openly here. At least we can hear both sides of the argument, and we can hopefully understand how this issue is affecting each of our own constituents.

I think that the elimination of premiums is something that this government should very seriously consider. I think there are benefits from eliminating premiums that go far beyond the emotional arguments; that is, the unfair tax that people pay when they make over a certain amount of money and that if their income level is $50,000 or if it's $500,000, they pay the same in a tax.

Another point is the economic benefits that this would have for the province of Alberta. First of all, we must look at what we bring into our general revenue fund in the form of premiums. Premiums account for $913 million of our health care funding. This is quite substantial. However, even though we bring in $913 million, we must ask ourselves: how much does this government pay out as the employer? For instance, the government has a lot of civil servants employed, which means that as the employer the government pays a portion of their premium amount. So if we eliminate premiums, we would be cutting some of our costs back as well, which could be used to offset a bit of the amount that we would forgo by eliminating premiums outright.

We can delve further into this in that we give out money that goes to pay for a portion of premium costs for teachers, police officers, judges, prosecutors, even MLAs – and the list goes on and on – approximately $15 million a month. That's $180 million a year. Couple that with $20 million to administrate the premiums for collection of the money, add in collection agency fees for unpaid premiums, approximately $50 million in costs to the Alberta government – and the list goes on and on. I've already accounted for $250 million, and that's just at a glance.

What is important to remember is that we give these employees the money and then we collect it back, which I find a bit counterproductive and inefficient. For instance, there is an average of $3 million a month collected from school boards in health care premiums. We give the school boards the money, and then we just take some of it right back. I think there is a better way of doing this.

What I think we should look at first is how this will benefit the employer, who pays a portion or sometimes all of the premium costs anyhow. I see this tax break the same way I see the federal government not charging municipalities GST. We give money to school boards, municipalities, et cetera, and then they pay us premiums back on behalf of their employees. In this era of tax breaks for corporations and businesses eliminating premiums would in essence give some businesses a saving because they would no longer be funding a portion of the premium costs. I think that eliminating premiums would be a benefit on a larger scale, not just alleviating hardships for low-income Albertans.

The Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, but under Standing Order 8(4), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a motion to close debate, I'd now invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to close debate on Motion 502.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to conclude debate.

Mr. Speaker, this government, due to abundant oil and gas revenues, is flush with money. The most recent quarterly report says that the government is on track to record a surplus of $3 billion. The government budget plan will reduce provincial revenues by $161 million through a one-point cut in the corporate tax rate effective April 1, 2004, part of a multiyear plan to cut corporate taxes in half, permanently reducing provincial revenues by $1 billion. If it chose to do so, the Tory government could eliminate health care premiums with a pen stroke without in any way jeopardizing the province's bottom line.

Until six weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, it looked like the elimination of health care premiums might be actively being considered as part of the government's agenda. During his year-end interview this year the Premier openly talked about reducing health care premiums. The Seniors minister has repeatedly promised seniors' groups that he is pushing for the elimination of health care premiums.

What seems to have changed in the past six weeks is not the affordability of scrapping health care premiums but, rather, the political agenda of the government. It seems to have taken a considerable turn to the right. The Conservative government seems bent on creating a crisis in public confidence about the sustainability of health care funding as part of an agenda to soften up Albertans to accept user-pay and, ultimately, two-tier health care. Reducing or eliminating health care premiums seems to run counter to this new agenda of stoking public fear about the affordability of health care.

So Alberta seniors, who just a few months ago had reason to believe that the government might eliminate their health care premiums, are suddenly sacrificed to a new, cynical government strategy. Alberta seniors have had to pay more for dental work, eye care, and copayments on prescription drugs. They have seen changes in long-term care centres go up by more than 50 per cent. Cutting seniors' health care premiums will cost a modest $90 million per year. Cutting premiums represents immediate relief for seniors on fixed incomes coping with rising living costs and cuts to services.

Phasing out this regressive tax for everyone will put $1,056 into the pocket of each Alberta family. While an extra $1,056 may seem to be a nominal amount to the Premier, it's a lot of money for the average middle-class family. Middle-class families and working Albertans need a break. The Tory government has made them pay more for power, more for car insurance, more for tuition, more for long-term seniors' care, and more for a host of other public services. For less than the cost of the Tory corporate tax cut, which does nothing for middle-class families, we can scrap this unfair, dishonest, and regressive tax. It's time to end the tax breaks to corporations while middle-class families are being squeezed.

The plan set out in Motion 502 is good for families, and it's good for the economy. Albertans will spend the $900 million in yearly savings in their communities, which will boost economic activity right here in Alberta. It's time for government members to vote for what they themselves have advocated. I urge all members on all sides of the House to vote for Motion 502.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 lost]

Special Constables

503. Rev. Abbott moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation which would make special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board and require special constables to take enhanced weapons training thereby creating the appropriate conditions under which the province could consider allowing the option of arming special constables with better defensive weapons such as Tasers.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to open debate this evening on Motion 503, which asks the Assembly to consider making certain changes to the Police Act and the regulations surrounding the Police Act.

Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate it may be useful to separate this motion into its three distinct parts. The first asks that we make special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board, the second asks that we require our special constables to take more enhanced weapons training, and the third asks only that we consider the possibility of allowing special constables to carry other defensive weapons such as Tasers.

Before I go into each of those sections, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to provide some background as to why I've raised this motion. Everyone in this Assembly understands the increasing role that special constables are playing. In rural areas such as Drayton Valley-Calmar special constables are often the only police presence that some small towns ever see. As municipalities continue to take up a greater role in policing, especially as this role relates to enforcing municipal bylaws and some provincial traffic safety laws inside of municipalities, special constables are increasingly on the front lines of law enforcement.

When special constables are carrying out these duties, they do so with the protection of a can of pepper spray and a billy club, but that's basically about it.

During normal office hours at RCMP detachments special constables can call RCMP detachments to get a reading on a licence plate to find out if the vehicle that they've pulled over is stolen or if it raises any red flags, but after the RCMP office is closed for the evening, special constables have no backup aside from what everyone else has, a phone call to 911. Given the changing nature of policing in Alberta, I hardly think that this level of backup is appropriate. In my constituency there are several unpopulated areas where you wouldn't want to be left alone while enforcing traffic laws in the evenings.

So consider the situation of a special constable who pulls a guy over for speeding and then has to walk up to the car without having any clue about who is in it or without having any clue about whether or not the person is potentially dangerous or is potentially armed. These special constables often work alone, and when they do, they can be left in a lurch. It's not appropriate for any level of policing, Mr. Speaker, and this reality has sparked a wake-up call amongst many special constables. It's caused them to think: you know, I enforce the law, and there's a certain amount of danger in enforcing the law, and I should be able to adequately protect myself.

While special constables do understand that they are not full-fledged police officers or RCMP officers, many of them cannot understand why that should mean that it is acceptable that they have a lesser means of protecting themselves in dangerous situations. Creating the environment in which there would be an opportunity for special constables to greater protect themselves is therefore the thrust of Motion 503. But we do have to ask ourselves: what are the appropriate conditions under which this could happen?

This leads me to the first part of the motion, the Law Enforcement Review Board. As it stands, special constables are not accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board. The Solicitor General's department has set out appropriate guidelines for employers of special constables to follow if a complaint is made, but those guidelines are not law. This is, in my mind, an area of our legislation that is due for a change. As special constables are doing more and more, it's entirely appropriate that they be subject to greater levels of accountability.

Once that level of accountability is in place, then it's necessary to make sure that we increase the weapons training of our special constables. We need to ensure that the weapons that our special constables are using are ones that they are capable of using and, more importantly, capable of not using. Special constables would need to be trained to ensure that they were able to diffuse dangerous situations through tried-and-true methods of verbal and psychological force and persuasion. Once these two requirements are satisfied, we will then find ourselves in a better position to provide special constables with better weapons with which to defend themselves.

As for the third part of this motion, Mr. Speaker, let's be perfectly precise. There's nothing in this motion that says special constables must carry Tasers if this motion is passed. My own personal belief, though, is that we do need to start looking at weapons such as the new high-tech Tasers that are available, especially given the difficult and increasingly dangerous situations that special constables are now finding themselves in.

One can agree to this motion without agreeing to allow special constables to carry Tasers. One can agree that special constables ought to be accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board, and one can agree to the suggestion that special constables ought to take more enhanced training than they do now. If you agree to these two things, then by the actual wording of the motion you should agree with the entire motion. Perhaps you might not want to see special constables carrying Tasers, but note that this part of the motion is only an after-the-fact consideration. It's really not the meat and bones of the motion.

My own personal belief is that we need to start looking forward, and in that look forward, especially given the increased role that special constables are playing these days, we ought to consider arming certain special constables with better weaponry. I chose the Taser as the next step for special constables because it is a less lethal weapon that is not actually a firearm. Its purpose is to subdue, not to maim, to injure, or to kill.

I'd also submit that Tasers are far more humane than a billy club. Mr. Speaker, billy clubs are designed for the purpose of clubbing somebody over the head as a means of forcing their submission. Tasers are kind of the modern-day billy club, and I believe that they should replace this ancient and barbaric weapon.

Pepper spray is designed to burn someone's eyes and cause the skin around the eyes to swell so that that person cannot keep his or her eyes open. Now, a Taser, on the other hand, sends a shock into the person, causing that person to black out immediately. There's no beating. There's no burning and swelling. There's simply one quick shock which causes the person to become temporarily immobile. Officers, or in this case special constables, then have the ability to neutralize any threat that may have been posed by the person.

Another advantage of a Taser versus a billy club or pepper spray is that a Taser gives the officer far greater reaction time and distance in the event of a threat. With a Taser an officer can secure a distance of roughly 15 feet between himself and a potential threat. With that much room to work with, the officer is that much farther out of harm's way in the event that a threat is imminent.

Mr. Speaker, nobody denies that the best way to reduce a threat is to nonviolently ease the tension of a situation and talk a possible threatening person into submitting to the will of an officer. Special constables understand this as much as any other person involved in law enforcement. Nobody relishes the opportunity to pull a weapon on a citizen, and if they do relish that opportunity, well, they ought not be involved in any aspect of law enforcement. Nor should a person who enjoys threatening others with a weapon be allowed to carry pepper spray or a billy club. If we are willing to trust people with a billy club and with pepper spray, then we should at least be able to ask why we wouldn't allow these very same people to carry a Taser.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, nobody can look forward to being asked to enforce the law without having the proper backup protection. It is my contention that a billy club and pepper spray do not provide that proper backup protection.

So, again, before I close, I'd like to recap. In order to agree with this motion, all one has to do is agree to the following: that special constables ought to be accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board and, secondly, that greater weapons training is something that we should consider providing for all of our special constables across Alberta. If you agree with these steps, then you ought to agree with Motion 503. I guarantee you that special constables would definitely appreciate not only the support that you give them but also the next step towards greater protection that you would give them as well.

I know also, Mr. Speaker, from some of the meetings that I've held with my municipalities that this is something that they are more than willing to fund on behalf of their special constables just to ensure that they feel safer when they're out there on the streets enforcing the laws.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, it sounds to me like what the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar wants is his own Taser.

Ms Carlson: That's what I thought. He'd be the last person I'd trust with that kind of a weapon, I have to tell you. [interjections]

The Speaker: Let's not start violating Standing Orders about accruing to certain members what their beliefs are or are not. Only the hon. member knows what he or she believes. Please.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to speak to this motion. I don't agree with what the member has put forward.

Certainly, we have a great deal of respect for the work that special constables perform in our communities every day. They provide a very necessary and important assisting function to existing police forces, and they do do some of the work for which the higher level training that police officers have isn't necessary, things like enforcing municipal bylaws and running photoradar and dealing with public education.

But they truly are really an assist function, Mr. Speaker, and I think it's a very slippery slope if we start to look at giving them more power and more ability. What we enter into then is a real deskilling process that we've seen occur in other areas like the trades and like the nursing profession.

We've seen over the years how a lot of the work has been taken away from registered nurses so that lower paying staff can be hired to perform those functions. Well, that's exactly what's happening here. What I see is that the municipalities, who are very crunched for funding to provide their policing and the other necessary services, are looking at reducing their police costs and are looking at being able to incorporate special constables in a more active function in the police work. Well, that's a very dangerous place for us to go.

If the special constables receive more training than what they are getting now, as the member who introduced this motion would suggest, then they should be police officers. Police officer training is not years in nature; it's months in nature. With a little extra training then those special constables could be police officers. But that's not what this member is looking for. He is looking for a cheap answer to policing solutions, and this is not it.

To give them Tasers is a false sense of security in most cases. A Taser is a close-contact weapon. It does not protect special constables in situations that they may find themselves in if they've got this confidence of having a weapon with them. In my opinion and in my experience with policing, special constables, I don't believe, should be out in the cars by themselves. They are an assist function, and it's a dangerous precedent to start sending them out to do policing on their own. So I certainly don't believe that that's what we should be taking a look at when we take a look at how to solve the policing crisis in this province. What we need to do is adequately fund police services in this province.

The member talked about the special constables being accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board. Well, that's definitely a duplication of services, particularly from this member who is always so concerned about the cost of things. I wish he would have costed out this particular proposal and put it forward because it really does not make any sense at all to establish a whole different review process for special constables, which is what would be required here. They have a process in place now that seems to be working and an appeal process put in place, so that would be the way that we should continue to proceed with this, not duplicating any services.

So to give them enhanced weapons training when you don't give them the rest of the training that goes along with police officer training really puts them out on the street in an unsafe fashion for themselves and for the people that they might come into contact with.

Mr. Speaker, for all of those reasons I really do not believe that we can support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and join the debate for Motion 503, sponsored by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor. When I look at Motion 503, I see in some respects an idea whose time has come as accountability is something that will be important as special constables play a greater role in policing in the future. The issue of police force numbers in Alberta is one that has been raised a number of times in this House and one that many of Alberta's communities are concerned with.

Presently in accordance with the Police Act of Alberta, special constables are peace officers appointed by the Solicitor General. Each individual special constable has an appointment form signed by the Department of the Solicitor General. This form, drawn up by the special constable's employer, indicates which provincial statutes they are authorized to enforce and the geographical area that they are authorized to provide enforcement within. Should the special constable's employer require that he or she have the ability to conduct traffic enforcement on primary highways, the appointment form would need to be granted by the Solicitor General.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has close to 3,000 special constables who enforce provincial statutes. Of those, about 4 per cent are employed by municipalities and municipal districts to enforce highway traffic safety. The province of Alberta employs the majority of Alberta's special constables as conservation officers, transportation inspectors, or provincial constables, and their appointments reflect their individual duties. These individuals, although not classified as police officers, still play a valuable role within a number of Alberta communities. From rural municipalities to large urban centres, their presence helps to ensure the safety and the security of Alberta municipalities.

Motion 503, as has been mentioned previously, would increase the accountability of Alberta's special constables by making them accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board, and this is a part of the motion that I do agree with. Mr. Speaker, as of today special constables are accountable only to their employer. This means that should a complaint be submitted concerning a special constable, there's a possibility for a conflict of interest to exist. The complaint is left in the hands of the employer, and it is therefore his or her individual decision which decides the outcome of the complaint as well as the punishment should the employer find wrongdoing by the special constable.

What Motion 503 proposes is that special constables be made accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board. This would result in an independent, quasi-judicial body which was established under the Police Act, hearing appeals from citizens who filed the complaint regarding the actions of a special constable.

Increasing the accountability of special constables could improve public trust in these individuals. As of now they are only accountable to their employer. That can be perceived as a conflict of interest, and thus the possibility of distrust in those individuals could exist. However, Mr. Speaker, by assuring Albertans that special constables are held accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board, as police officers are, we would be relieving the current perception of conflict of interest, resulting in increased trust levels, and with trust comes respect.

Any peace officer that attempts to mediate a situation or confront an unruly citizen will tell you that if you do not have that individual's trust and respect, then the chance of a peaceful resolution declines sharply. Should the constable have the trust and respect of the individual they are in contact with, it is less likely that the situation could escalate into one that requires the use of self-defence.

However, Motion 503 also asks that special constables take advanced weapons training and that we begin to set the proper stage in which special constables, especially those enforcing municipal bylaws and traffic safety laws, could be granted Tasers. Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely comfortable with this suggestion, and put simply, my concern with this part of the motion is that it does not give this House the appropriate amount of time to truly consider the weapons aspect it suggests. After all, the motion suggests that we introduce legislation, and accordingly I think that we need more time to consider the idea.

That being said, the future of policing may demand that we look at these sorts of suggestions in greater detail. So while I am not entirely sure of granting Tasers to special constables, at the same time I don't want to say no to this motion. In speaking with some colleagues, I know that I share this indecision with many of them.

Accordingly, I'd like to introduce an amendment to the motion which allows us greater opportunities to consider the motion without being bound to introduce the legislation that the current motion suggests we do. I've brought the appropriate number of copies. I believe the House officers have them, and I'd ask that they be distributed now.

Let me know when you'd like me to proceed, Mr. Speaker, sir.

The Acting Speaker: If you're going to be reading the amendment for the record, you may proceed. Otherwise, wait for a few seconds.

You may proceed.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As all members can now see, the motion makes the following changes. Motion 503 is amended first by striking out "make special constables accountable" and substituting "provide the option of making special constables accountable"; second, by striking out "enhanced weapons training" and substituting "enhanced training"; and third, by striking out "thereby creating the appropriate conditions under which the Province could consider allowing the option of arming special constables with better defensive weapons such as Tasers."

The amended motion would then read:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation which would provide the option of making special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board and require special constables to take enhanced training.

I think that most members will agree that this motion retains the main intent of Motion 503, preparing our special constables for their future role in Alberta. At the same time, members will see that this motion softens the language around weaponry, which I believe is important at this time.

As many members in this House are aware, smaller municipalities often face the problem of meagre police presence, and it's in these situations that special constables play greater roles. However, the province cannot send these individuals into these types of roles without adequately preparing them for the task at hand. Currently they have billy clubs and pepper spray at their disposal. They're provided under the special constables regulations. What Motion 503 currently asks is that we expand that regulation to include Tasers.

Mr. Speaker, one argument against Tasers is that they have been known to cause death when used. It's a strong argument, and one that needs to be discussed in greater detail than this one hour of debate will afford. We cannot equip special constables with Tasers if we are not satisfied that they will be able to use them judiciously and properly given that they do have the ability to kill. Furthermore, we can't allow Albertans to carry with them the perception that the government will introduce legislation allowing special constables to carry Tasers without doing more homework and without consulting with Albertans to see if they're comfortable with this change in legislation and policy.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask all members to see the good in this motion but join me in helping to change the parts that need more study. The amended wording of this motion calls for increased training and safety for special constables and increased accountability. They're both important aspects to consider when discussing roles and responsibilities to ensure that our communities are safe and secure. Special constables need to be accountable to more than their employer, especially with these increased roles.

Mr. Speaker, by ensuring that they are given the proper training, the ability to properly defend themselves, and are held accountable for their actions to an independent body, they are better prepared to help fill the void that is present within smaller municipalities across this province. They're also prepared to take on more of a role within larger municipalities and, in doing so, will help to ensure that Alberta remains a safe and secure place to raise a family.

I'd encourage all members to support Motion 503 as amended to support the security of Albertans. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to speak to the amendment to Motion 503. I believe that if this amendment were to be passed, Motion 503 might be something that I could consider supporting.

Clearly, the whole impetus behind the original motion was to arm special constables with Tasers, and the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor was in my view being disingenuous when he suggested that all you had to do to support the motion was agree to having special constables be accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board. That was clearly not where he was going with the motion, and voting for the motion would have done a lot more than just saying that special constables ought to be accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board.

I think the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill has provided a thoughtful amendment that disarms the drive towards Tasers and disarms the motion. I think that it certainly brings the motion into something that's a little more sensible.

I appreciated the comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie with respect to the importance of having properly trained officers using weapons and not creating sort of a bargain basement version of police officers that have potentially lethal armament but not the appropriate level of training and skill to use it appropriately. I think that this amendment will short-circuit the drive for Tasers and pull the plug on what was potentially a dangerous idea, Mr. Speaker, which could potentially have had revolting consequences.

So I would be pleased to support the amendment to Motion 503, and if it passes, Mr. Speaker, I'll be prepared to support the main motion as well.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to the amendments to Motion 503 from the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor. The amendments concern two issues concerning special constables. The first deals with whether or not special constables in this province should be accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board. The second deals with requiring special constables to take enhanced training to eventually allow special constables to carry defensive weapons. I would like to speak to the accountability of special constables.

The Law Enforcement Review Board is an independent body established under the Police Act. The principal activity of the board is to hear appeals from citizens who have filed a complaint against a police officer and who are not satisfied with the way the complaint was handled. Police officers who have been the subject of discipline arising out of a complaint must also appeal to the board. The board also conducts hearings from special constables regarding the cancellation of their appointment or from private investigators and security guards who have had their licences refused.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 503 suggests that the government may enact legislation that would allow complaints against special constables and appeals by special constables to be heard by the Law Enforcement Review Board. Here are some of the reasons why I support the accountability to the Law Enforcement Review Board.

Currently complaints against special constables are handled by the employer, mostly municipal and provincial governments. If the complainant is not satisfied with the way the issue has been handled, there is no other avenue to pursue this issue. The public needs a formal, independent, and transparent appeal process to handle these situations. Some employers and police services have already come to us and requested this change. The bottom line is that special constables are an important part of the law enforcement community and should accept the same level of accountability as others in the law enforcement community.

The second issue that the amendment to Motion 503 raises is to require special constables to take enhanced training that would allow them to be armed with defensive weapons. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I believe it is important for this House to understand what we mean by special constables. There are about 3,000 special constables in this province. They range from court clerical staff, inspections and regulatory officers, taxi inspectors, provincial protection officers who handle court security, a number of municipal bylaw enforcement officers, and many, many others.

While I said earlier that special constables are part of the law enforcement community, they are not police officers. They are responsible for bylaw and provincial statutes enforcement. They are not a second tier of policing in Alberta.

While I appreciate the amendments to the motion to make it more general in terms of the training and equipment that special constables have, special constables must work within the very clear borders that are defined. I believe it is essential to establish clearly defined boundaries on the limitation of their duties consistent with their training, their standards, and their authority. I support proper and standardized training for special constables that is appropriate to the duties set out in their appointments.

Mr. Speaker, a policy manual is being prepared by my department as we speak to assist employers in determining the role of a special constable. Some – and I will repeat “some” – special constables have the authority to carry pepper spray, a prohibited weapon. Many others carry batons. Given the mandate, I believe these weapons are sufficient to provide a special constable the ability to tactically reposition and seek assistance from the police in this province, who are properly trained and who are equipped.

So, Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the intent of this motion to improve the training and functioning of special constables in our province, and I appreciate all the work that the special constables in this province do to keep our community safe.

In closing, I'm open to the notion of making special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board, and I agree that enhanced training is a necessary thing. We will continue to work on this with the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, the Special Constables Association and their employers, and the law enforcement community.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to join debate on the amendment to Motion 503, sponsored by the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. The concept proposed by the sponsor is of particular importance to me because of my work on the Police Act review completed last year. I'd like to talk about some of the changes to policing in Alberta considered by this committee and how these changes relate to the amendments proposed to Motion 503.

Two major themes arising from the MLA Policing Review Committee centred on levels of service and the cost of policing. Mr. Speaker, the amended motion has two important parts that could improve service and reduce funding pressure in some areas. Taken separately, these parts may be cause for concern for some Albertans. Taken together, both aspects of Motion 503 are consistent with the future of policing in Alberta.

Motion 503 addresses the need for common policing standards established and monitored by the province. This was also one of the key findings of the policing review committee. The first step is to pass legislation to make special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board. The board is a quasi-judicial, independent body legitimized by the Police Act. Having special constables answer to this board will help keep these officers accountable.

The next step is to provide special constables with enhanced training. This is an important consideration because the role of the special constable could dramatically change in the future.

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

    Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 12
Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. During the second reading there were a number of questions and comments brought up, and I undertook to have answers provided to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, which I have done in written form. For the record I would just like to indicate that with respect to a number of the questions that came up, we do have a couple of brief answers.

The transition from paper to electronics and whether or not information would be backed up and if there would be any savings was question number one. How the amendments would actually improve the efficiency in administering the investment opportunities as well as whether or not there had been a cost-benefit analysis done was the second question, Mr. Chairman. The final one was to point out that this whole issue of changes to the legislation was merely a technical one to basically bring the reporting system into the new age along with the electronic reporting.

Bill 12, as I indicated in second reading, simply streamlines the legislation and clarifies much of the wording and definitions, along with many technical amendments. The investments and how they're managed has not changed. The manner in which payments are made is not changed. We are, as I had indicated, Mr. Chairman, in this electronic environment, and this is a commonly held industry practice where the investment world is utilizing these same procedures on an ongoing basis.

The cost-benefit portion of the question from Edmonton-Riverview simply put is this. With the changes that are being proposed in the amendments, it's really hard to come up with finite numbers of savings on a cost-benefit analysis basis; rather, it's keeping up with the industry practice that's becoming very commonplace.

The amendments will also authorize Treasury Board to establish alternate controls and limitations respecting the making of certain classes of disbursements, including electronic payments, and it will also allow Treasury Board to ensure government's controls remain up to date with emergent trends that happen in the industry.

The electronic transactions will be documented in a backup in the computer system, and a paper backup will also be kept, where it's appropriate. The electronic processes provide for a speedier payment and faster settling of the transactions, which has become a standard industry practice.

So with those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I hope that's satisfactory to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and I look forward to any further comments. At the appropriate time I'd like to call the question.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think the comments from the Member for Little Bow are very useful. He's been prompt and co-operative in answering all of our questions, and this is a bill that seems essentially to be an administrative bill, as he says, making some adjustments to ensure that procedures within the government are in line with industry. So we have no particular further comments on this bill.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 12 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. An interesting debate for an interesting bill. That having been said, I would now move that the committee rise and report Bill 12, the Financial Administration Amendment Act.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 12.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2004

[Adjourned debate March 3: Mrs. Nelson]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unlike the previous bill we just dealt with, this one is considerably more substantive. It has the effect of raising the spending cap on nonrenewable resource revenues from 3 and a half billion dollars up to $4 billion per year, so clearly a bill that has an impact of some $500 million annually and well worth some significant debate here. As well as that change, which I think is the principal one and the most concerning one, the most worrisome one, there are some other adjustments in wording. But primarily this bill exists and is being brought to us because, frankly, the government wants to be able to spend more money from nonrenewable resource revenues, and I think we need to debate how that's being done and why it's being done.

I guess there is one particularly troubling aspect to this bill, and that concerns the government's inability to put in place a fiscal plan and to stick to it. I recall – I'm sure it was less than a year ago – sitting in this Assembly and debating Bill 2, which was an interesting bill, a reasonable bill. It was in line with some of the ideas of the Liberal opposition. It established the cap on how much nonrenewable resource revenue could be spent, and it helped set the stage for some other spending controls for the provincial government. It set that cap at 3 and a half billion dollars, and then when nonrenewable resource revenues went beyond that, anything above the 3 and a half billion dollars was either allocated to a particular government fund, the sustainability fund, or used to pay off debt or whatever. What we're seeing here now is that 3 and a half billion dollars being raised to $4 billion so that the provincial government can take that extra $500 million and use it for whatever pet projects it has.

The timing of this is troublesome for two reasons. First of all, the initial plan didn't even last a year, and I guess we have to really question and I hope the public really questions the government's commitment to any particular plan and its ability to plan in the long term when this bill changes last year's plan less than a year into its implementation. What sort of long-term plan is that? We need in this province to take a much, much longer view of how we handle our nonrenewable resource revenues, and this bill just violates that completely.

The other concern about the timing of this bill is the coincidence that we're in the lead-up to an election.

Mr. Mason: Surprise, surprise.

Dr. Taft: Yes. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands is saying, "Surprise, surprise," and I'm sure we're all surprised that in a lead-up to an election the government is arranging things to set aside an extra half a billion dollars for election goodies.

Now, it's interesting to try to imagine what those goodies will be. We'll find out in two weeks when the budget comes, but I'm told, I think by the Premier himself, that the new hospitals for south Calgary will not be in the budget. So we'll see what the election goodies are.

But that really undermines the credibility of the justifications for this bill. It does make it look very much, to us and I think to the general public, like the government is simply playing politics with the long-term financial security and stability of this province, and, yes, I'm afraid that they would do that.

Now, there are some other ways that this could be handled, and I put this forward to the government in case they want to perhaps take this bill back and amend it or bring forward amendments or otherwise consider these options. We have long argued that budgeting in the province should use a five-year moving average for its predictions of nonrenewable resource revenues, and that would help us smooth out some of the peaks and valleys that we see in budgets that are consistently coming in billions of dollars off target. It's a remarkable failure of accurate budgeting, and as a result we're always billions of dollars off in our fiscal plans. That would have been something I'd like to have seen in this kind of legislation.

We're keen supporters of the fiscal stability fund, but it looks like it's grown into yet another slush fund. In fact, this government, as a reporter was saying the other day, has more money than it has pockets to put it into. So the fiscal stability fund, which probably doesn't need to be worth much more than $1.2 billion, I believe now, from the third-quarter fiscal update, is over $4 billion. That money can be drawn down and may well be drawn down in the lead-up to an election, which would be a shame, but it could happen.

How about bringing in an infrastructure enhancement fund? We have very significant infrastructure problems in this province, and we need some way to predictably finance those, whether they're roads or hospitals or schools or public buildings. We need to build those at standards that are going to serve us well into the future. That would have been something good to see in here, and of course some proper, actual, hard three-year business plans with a real commitment to meeting those targets would have been good as well.

None of that is in this bill. Instead, we simply see an adjustment of the cap on resource revenues. So there's not much to commend this bill. It feels like the result of broken-down controls on public spending. It feels like it's coming from a government that's got lazy with public money, and that's disappointing.

I would've loved to have seen a value-for-money audit, for example, on the health care system. Why is it that we're spending as much on health care as most other provinces in this country, but we're getting about 20 per cent fewer hospital grants? Well, why is that happening? That would have been something to address in a value-for-money audit, but instead of doing that, instead of taking some of the challenging and interesting issues of good management, we simply see the government reaching into our nonrenewable resource revenues to spread more money around in the lead-up to the election.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm disappointed in this bill. I think it reflects, as I say, a laziness with public money that's descended on this government, and unless there are very significant amendments to it, I expect we'll be voting against it. Thank you.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Mr. Speaker, I was listening quite intently to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and I just have to make a comment here. You know, the intent of this bill is to increase the government's ability to fund some important programs, some of which exist and some of which might need to come into existence, and at the same time to address some of the pressures that we know have been referenced with respect to education, for example, by the Learning Commission.

That money has to come from somewhere, hon. members, and what this bill would do is enable another half a billion dollars to come into the system to address some of those kinds of pressures, not to mention what some of the other ministries are facing; for example, Transportation: roadways and bridges and so on across the province. [interjection] Well, of course Environment. I mean, that would be paramount in many people's books, I'm sure.

Similarly, with health care and this business of having a value-for-money audit, as laudable as the speaker's cause is in that regard, I'm sure some of that money will also make its way to some of the pressure points that exist, I'm sure you're fully aware, in the health care system. The primary concern, I'm sure, is going to be toward the government of Alberta's first priority, which is the education circle, and this simply allows that to happen.

So I'm not clear, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is complaining about the fact that we're putting more money into the system, which they and others have been asking for, or if it's just a question of them complaining about the timing of it all. Either way, I think it's a good move for us to make, because the time has come to address some of those pressure points. Infrastructure, Community Development, Justice: there are many departments in government that will put this money to very good use.

So I will be supporting the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions for the hon. minister?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Minister of Community Development. While I appreciated his defence of funding of these kinds of programs, I noticed that he was remarkably silent on the need to address these financial pressures, say, two years ago or even one year ago. What is different now with respect to those requirements?

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, I'm not sure which meetings the hon. member might have been at where I was supposedly silent. I'm sure my colleagues here would disagree with that.

But I think there are some fundamental differences, to put all the kidding aside, and one of the most fundamental differences is the Learning Commission report, which in itself has been evaluated at a cost of almost half a billion dollars or perhaps even more than that. There is information provided in that particular commission report that simply wasn't available a year ago or two years ago in the form in which it now exists. I think there were certainly all kinds of comments being made from many different directions that sort of seeded the way for the Learning Commission and helped it through-out its debate and its presentations.

Secondly, there are things which I know the hon. member is very familiar with that happened that are unpredictable, Mr. Speaker, such as the BSE crisis, such as forest fires, such as drought, which our farming communities and elsewhere are facing. So things happen and they need to be addressed, and this will provide that kind of necessary cushion, I hope, to address all of those points I've referenced and many, many more which I haven't got time to get into; for example, the provincial parks in my area. We know that we need to upgrade the water and sewage treatments in many of our provincial parks, and these monies will help to address that, and that's just one example. That condition, to the extent that we know it today, perhaps didn't exist two years ago, as referenced by the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker: Any further questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the hon. Minister of Community Development can assure the House that election timing has absolutely nothing to do with this.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Well, you know, if the Learning Commission had come out a year earlier, perhaps that comment wouldn't even be valid, but I haven't got any idea when an election would be coming. I'm aware of a federal election possibly coming this year. I'm aware of a municipal election that is coming in the fall, but I don't know when we might be having a provincial election, which I think is what you are commenting on. The mandate that was given to this government on or about March 12, 2001, gave it a five-year window. That would take us through to 2006, approximately March, by which time an election would be called. That, by my calculation, would be approximately five years from now, and I have the hon. Minister of Environment's concurrence with that.

Dr. Taylor: Two years from now.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Two years from now. Sorry. Thank you.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I listened very intently to the hon. Member for . . .

The Acting Speaker: Hon. minister, are you rising to ask a question or to speak to the bill?

Mr. Lund: To speak to the bill.

The Acting Speaker: Okay. Well, is there anybody else who wanted to ask a question?

There being none, I'll recognize the hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Mr. Lund: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened intently to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and quite frankly I was quite shocked, because obviously he's not aware of what exactly has happened over the last year. So I thought perhaps it would be useful to just walk him quickly through it because he made some comments that obviously he's not aware of.

The idea of the sustainability fund came out of the Financial Review Commission, and all of the nonrenewable resource revenue goes into that fund. We started out and said that we would see for one year; we would have a review at $3.5 billion that would come out and go into the operating side of the budget.

Because of events that have happened – and the hon. Minister of Community Development clearly indicated that one of them was the Learning Commission and the costs that are associated with the recommendations of that commission plus the ever-increasing costs of health care – the fact is that we're finding that the other revenue that would be available for operating is not sufficient. So we have to have a vehicle where we can take more than the $3.5 billion out of the sustainability fund and move it into the operating. That's what this is all about: increasing it from $500 million so that we can cover the operating.

You know, I find it really interesting that the folks over there voted to remove the health care premiums. That's about $900 million. That money is going into operating. I'd like to know how they figured they were going to backfill that money if you took it out without passing this bill that would at least see another $500 million going in.

Now, he made a comment that we should have a fund that would deal with capital. Well, we've done that. We do have a capital fund. As a matter of fact, if the member had been watching what happened in the second-quarter report and the third-quarter report, there was money above the $2.5 billion in the sustainability fund that went into paying down debt and went into the capital fund. So the capital fund has been growing through that very vehicle.

So those are the things that have been happening. Quite frankly, I'm very disappointed that they would even suggest that this had anything to do with an upcoming election because clearly when we set it up at $3.5 billion, we indicated that we would see how that would work, and if it wasn't sufficient, then we could revisit the situation. That's exactly what we have done, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Under Standing Order 29, Mr. Speaker. I think we're frequently on the record as having said that we would prefer to look after the loss of revenue from eliminating health care premiums by installing a progressive tax system.

I would like to ask the minister a question. My concern is that we are in this province living off the capital of this land, the natural capital of the land, meaning the nonrenewable resource revenues, and if we increase the amount we take from that capital by half a billion dollars a year, it seems to me to be long-term folly. I'm wondering if the minister sees us as also living off the capital of the land, a nonrenewable capital, or if he has some other interpretation of it.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, of course, it's been a concern of all of us that with a nonrenewable resource you only get the revenue from that resource once, so you have to plan for the day that it's not there. That is part of the reason that we are adopting a 20-year plan that will see a number of other initiatives flow out so that, in fact, future generations have other sources of income that are stable and that will backfill the reduction in the royalties.

However, we also have a huge resource in the tar sands up in the Fort McMurray area. That will yield a fairly substantial royalty over a longer period of time, but it won't be sufficient. It won't be likely as much as we're receiving today, but we are planning in the event that the royalties decrease.

Now, the beauty of the sustainability fund, Mr. Speaker, is that if the royalties fall down below the $4 billion, then you can take out of the sustainability fund so that there is that $4 billion available annually for operating. It's a cushion in the sustainability fund, but it also allows us to transfer money into the capital fund and to pay down debt, depending on the number of dollars that are coming in.

The Acting Speaker: Any further questions?

Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 15, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, which, as has been said, increases the amount of money which will flow from our nonrenewable resource revenues from 3 and a half billion dollars a year to $4 billion a year.

Now, you know, the hon. members opposite are suddenly champions of education and health care. This is a little bit like seeing the light on the road to Damascus, I think, Mr. Speaker, and we will see. It's important that these things be funded – I want to make that perfectly clear – and funded at an adequate level, and they have not been. They have not been adequately funded by this government.

It's fine to talk about the Learning Commission report, but I would point out to hon. members opposite that parents, teachers, school boards, and the opposition have been criticizing the level of funding for education for a number of years. The government and particularly the current Minister of Learning have consistently responded that we have the highest level of per capita funding of any province and that everything is fine – this predates the Learning Commission – and he stuck to that message and ignored the real situation, which is that Alberta has a fairly low level of funding if you calculate it on a per student basis, because Alberta has a young population and many children that need to be schooled.

We heard repeatedly from the Minister of Learning on that question, and finally, as a result of the chaos that took place in our learning system with a teachers' strike and a disputed arbitration process and so on, there was an agreement which was obtained by the Alberta Teachers' Association to create the Learning Commission. Lo and behold, Mr. Speaker, the Learning Commission confirmed what parents and teachers, school boards, and the opposition had been saying for one or two years before. So now it becomes a road map to re-election for the government, and we are going to see more increases in spending, particularly in capital funding for health care in this budget, unless I miss my guess.

So now we have this bill. The problem with the bill is not that there's more money which would be made available for health care and education. That is important, and that needs to happen and should have happened two or three years ago. The question is where the money comes from.

When the New Democrat opposition launched its campaign about two years ago on electricity deregulation, we did a little bit of research in terms of the natural gas issue as well. One of the things that we found – and this was two years ago – was that according to – I'm trying to remember, Mr. Speaker, the exact body – statistics provided by the Energy and Utilities Board, I believe, Alberta had at that time nine years' proven reserves of natural gas left. Now, I know that we all talk about oil and gas revenues as being a major revenue, but primarily the main source of the revenue comes from natural gas rather than oil. The reserves that have been mandated by the government have consistently been reduced.

Mr. Speaker, since the advent of the Alliance Pipeline and the change in government policy which no longer requires those volatile chemicals that are useful for a chemical industry as a raw material to be extracted and kept in Alberta, we now export our natural gas much faster than we are finding new reserves. The result is that we are rapidly running out of natural gas and, therefore, rapidly running out of the main resource that feeds this government's funding of many things including this.

So what we have in that situation is a government that, on the one hand, is increasing the amount of spending from nonrenewable sources and reducing its income from the general taxation system. We've seen that partially offset by the dramatic increase in gambling that's taken place in this province, and the government revenues from gambling have now gone up to about a billion dollars. We are really running on empty as far as natural gas revenues and royalties in this province. Speaking in a bit of a longer term sense, we're running out.

To increase this now and at the same time to follow through on a program of massive tax cuts for corporations is irresponsible, in my view, Mr. Speaker. The government was committed by Dr. West when he was the Minister of Finance to cutting taxes for corporations by a billion dollars, essentially cutting them in half. The government has been in a stage basis implementing that, and this year is no exception: there's another reduction in the corporate tax rate. So here we have a renewable source of money for the government – that is, the normal tax base – which is becoming narrower and narrower and is shrinking at the same time as the government is increasing its dependence on revenue sources that are about to run out.

Mr. Speaker, it's not right. It's bad planning. It's not even planning at all. It's planning for the next election. It's not planning for future generations of this province, that's for sure. I know the suggestion has been made that we're going to get along. We're going to replace this loss of resource royalty revenue from the natural gas and conventional oil with the tar sands, but I believe and I've seen articles as well in the business press that indicate that the government is underestimating the difficulty of doing that. Certainly, so far they've had to give royalty rates for oil sands extraction that are considerably less than that for energy revenues from conventional sources.

So the direction that the government is going is not sustainable, to use their favourite catch phrase. It is not sustainable. They need to either do something about their natural gas policy, or they need to do something about their corporate taxation policy because they are basically standing on two horses, and they're going in different directions, and the result is predictable and inevitable, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taylor: That hurts.

Mr. Mason: I know it's a bit of a stretch, even for you, hon. member.

I want to make the point here, Mr. Speaker, that the New Democrat opposition is the only party in this Legislature that stood up against this billion dollar corporate tax cut, and without that we would be unable to eliminate health care premiums. We've talked very specifically about what kind of tax cut we favour, and we favour cutting the premiums, which is a flat tax.

Mr. Speaker, just to conclude, I want to indicate that I will not be supporting this bill. I think that the financial direction of this government is irresponsible, unsupportable, and unsustainable, and we should reject this bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29?

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, as the representative for the area which consumes a great deal of the natural gas liquids and turns them into higher value commodities, I'd like to inquire of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands what policy the government implemented that allowed the liquids to be shipped out of province. There was no policy.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge under the Lougheed government – and I'm not referring to anyone here but the other guy – there was a policy that these volatiles had to be stripped so that only the pure ethane would be exported for heating purposes only, and that was the basis on which a lot of the industry in Alberta existed. That policy, to the best of my knowledge, has been rescinded some time ago, some years ago, and we just pump out the raw gas.

Mr. Lund: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can't leave that go on the record because it's absolutely false. We need to have on the record what is accurate. The member alluded to the Alliance gas pipeline, and I would love to know how shipping out an additional 30 per cent of the capacity of that line depletes our resource to the extent that the member talked about.

When it comes to the stripping of the liquids, the fact is that this government appealed the decision of the National Energy Board, which is a Liberal-run – you know, you're the left wing of that party. The National Energy Board ruled that we could not force them to strip the liquids out. That was not a policy of this government, and we actually intervened and tried to stop it.

Mr. Mason: I thank the hon. member for his correction, and I will withdraw it and go back and ask a few questions, but I take him at his word. I just want to indicate that it's sometimes hard to tell the difference between this government and the federal Liberals.

The Acting Speaker: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour I would move that we now adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

Introduction of Guests

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Dr. Glen Roberts, director of health programs of the Conference Board of Canada. Under Dr. Roberts' direction the Conference Board recently completed some very important new research on cost drivers and cost escalators in the Canadian health care system. The report documenting the board's findings was released this morning in Ottawa, and an overview was presented to the Standing Policy Committee on Health and Community Living earlier today. This project was sponsored by the Department of Health and Wellness, and the report will be made available to other provincial and territorial governments.

The report provides projections through to 2020 and looks at the impact of items such as home care and drug costs, which really puts health care sustainability as an issue in a new perspective and clearly makes the case that additional funding alone is insufficient to sustain our health care system in the long term. Major system reform including a close look at the best practices of other countries is needed if we are to ensure that health services of comparable quality are available to Albertans in the future.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Roberts is accompanied by Mr. Fred Horne, director of sustainability for my ministry. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce 55 of Alberta's brightest and best. They come from the Calmar school in Calmar. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Sue Biddell, Gerry Gibbs, Kathy Timmons, by parents and helpers Mrs. Ine de Martines, Mrs. Tammy Vandenberghe, Mrs. Kathy Nielson, Mrs. Dawn Fryk, Mrs. Alice Hager, Mr. Rick Fitzowich, Mrs. Kathleen Sikliski, and the bus driver, Mrs. Jeanette Deakin. I'd ask them all to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly three classes from St. Gabriel school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. There are 55 representatives from the school: 49 polite and thoughtful students, three teachers, and three helpers. The teachers are Ms Rita Sibbio, Mrs. Svetlana Sech, and Mrs. Joanne Friedt. The helpers are Mrs. Tammy Toronchuk, Mrs. Melanie Sinclair, and Mr. Ken Lettner. They are in both the members' gallery and the public gallery, and with your permission I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a gentleman who is trying my job on for size today, as I will be trying his on later in the week. He joined us this morning in developing our questions for today's question period and asked that we challenge the Premier with tough, pointed questions such as: what is the Premier's favourite colour? A supremely credentialed man in his capacity as a reporter, he has travelled all over North America, mixing and mingling with some of Hollywood's big names. He's interviewed Sylvester Stallone, Harrison Ford, Tom Cruise, and Jennifer Lopez and is today mingling with some much bigger names at the New Democrat opposition offices. He is Graham Neil from CFRN, and he and I are participating in the station's Trading Places feature. I would ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Oral Question Period

Utilities Consumer Advocate

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister of Energy has again picked the pockets of Alberta energy consumers. Through secret orders ATCO Gas, AltaGas, and the electricity Balancing Pool were commanded to pay for the Utilities Consumer Advocate. This is a far cry from the independent utilities watchdog that the Bolger commission recommended and the Alberta government promised. My first question is to the Premier. Given that the Bolger report stresses that a consumer advocate should be independent and government funded, why did the minister secretly order the gas and electricity sector to fund the office of the utility commissioner?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any secrecy surrounding this decision relative to the Utilities Consumer Advocate. You know, there are undoubtedly questions to be raised, as they have been raised by the media and the opposition, relative to the costs and source of funding for the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, but we think that it's entirely reasonable. The advocate's budget is paid for out of the fund that is contributed to by the utility companies, the Power Pool, and that fund is managed independently under government regulation. There's nothing wrong with that. Why would we pay for something when we can get the money elsewhere and make sure that there is an open, transparent, and independent adjudication of the situation?

Part of that fund is to pay for consumer advocacy information and awareness, which is exactly what the advocate's office does. It wasn't meant to stand alone. It was meant to create a voice for consumers within government. The funding is irrelevant.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that consumers will be made to pay an additional $2.6 million on their bills without any say, why weren't these ministerial orders made public?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if that, indeed, is true.

I will have the hon. Minister of Energy respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ability for us to put the cost of the consumer advocate in the hands of the Balancing Pool is an exact, appropriate position for this fund because it is focused directly on the consumer and on the utilities and on that particular market. Of course, as the Premier says, it's also responsible for a consumer awareness fund. In fact, if you go back to the gazillion press releases, well, the ones that aren't withdrawn, to the Liberal news release of October 4, 2002: "MacDonald says the government cannot pass the buck onto electricity retailers. It must act now to deliver a consumer education [plan]. . . . surely they can find the money."

Mr. MacDonald: This is not about a consumer education program. Again to the Premier: since 80 per cent of the budget of the Utilities Consumer Advocate now comes from the electricity Balancing Pool, will the Premier finally admit that 80 per cent of consumers' energy complaints are a result of this government's failed electricity deregulation scheme?

Mr. Klein: The answer to that, sir, is: absolutely not.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Cattle Industry

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glangarry and I attended along with 100 farmers a public meeting at the Rimbey Community Centre regarding BSE. An official from the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development announced that the federal government is contributing an additional $300 million in BSE support here in Alberta. My first question is to the Premier. Will the Premier now demand that the Auditor General, Mr. Fred Dunn, report on the $400 million Alberta BSE aid package before this federal program is rolled out so that if there have been mistakes, they will not be repeated?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, what the feds do is entirely up to the federal government. Our Auditor General, Mr. Dunn, as capable as he is, has nothing to do with the federal government programs and, as far as I know, has no authority to investigate programs entirely funded by the federal government.

Mr. Dunn on his own has launched an Auditor General's inquiry, I guess, or probe or investigation, whatever you want to call it, into the BSE issue and specifically into whether the $400 million in Alberta government money was properly spent and went to the right places and for the right reasons.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: what efforts is this government making to ensure that the federal program goes to the small producers, the ones that need the most help?

Mr. Klein: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I know nothing of the federal program and this additional $300 million. Perhaps the Deputy Premier can shed some light on this, because I know absolutely nothing about any additional funding coming from the federal government.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure where the hon. member gets his information on this subject or any other, because I spoke to Minister Speller last evening, and to the best of my knowledge, unless it came out very early this morning, there was no program announced. Three hundred million dollars is not a figure that I have heard anywhere. However, we do tend to deal more in fact than in fantasy on this side of the House. So if the hon. member would like to share his information, perhaps we can shed some more light on it.

Mr. MacDonald: I already have.

Now, again to the Premier: given that the official last night also admitted that strategic documents do exist regarding contingency plans if the border with the U.S. does not reopen, will the government table those contingency plans now?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, contingency plans are being prepared in the event that the border does not reopen. As you know, the U.S. is going through a comment period right now, and hopefully we won't experience the same thing that we experienced the last time around where another case of BSE was discovered, a case of mad cow disease in Washington state, where apparently the cow came from Alberta.

I know of no document that's lying around the department of agriculture relative to a contingency plan. I do know that officials in that department are working on a contingency plan with the industry, as I understand it, and will file that plan by the end of April.

Calgary Emergency Health Services

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, a year ago now the inquiry into Vince Motta's death found Calgary's emergency services in crisis and under siege and recommended that unless there was dramatic improvement, a public inquiry should be held. Tragically, things are getting worse in Calgary's emergency wards with wait times growing and patients left on the floor for lack of beds. While this government has tens of millions of dollars for new health care information systems, it doesn't seem to have the money for the emergency services Albertans need. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why his government allows emergency room wait times in his home city of Calgary to climb despite recommendations from the Motta inquiry for, quote, dramatic change?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we do recognize and understand completely the emergency situation in Calgary. What I would advise the hon. member to do is to stay tuned and work with us.

Dr. Taft: Will the Premier admit that a desperate bed shortage caused by his own government has forced the health region in Calgary to call more than twice as many code burgundies in the past six months as in all of last year?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the assertion that any bed shortage in Calgary was caused by this government is absolute blarney. Baloney, blarney, as they say as St. Patrick's Day is coming up.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of the closure of some hospital beds . . .

An Hon. Member: Boom.

Mr. Klein: Well, an implosion, yes. Absolutely.

As a result of the closure of some hospital beds and the closure of the Holy Cross hospital, we were able to open up basically the equivalent of a brand new hospital, about 500 state-of-the-art beds that were otherwise being mothballed. So that is basically a new hospital.

What has contributed to the situation in Calgary is the phenomenal growth that has taken place in this city due in part to the economic policies of this government. You know, it's one of the downsides, I guess, of success, of political success, of economic success. One of the downsides of economic growth and prosperity is that you have to meet the challenges of that growth. In Calgary the growth has been phenomenal, but we are working with the Calgary regional health authority to address those needs.

Dr. Taft: Will the Premier respect the advice of the Motta inquiry and call a public inquiry into Calgary's beleaguered emergency service before someone else has to die unnecessarily?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I speak with and I'm sure the hon. minister of health speaks with officials from the Calgary health authority on a regular basis. They apprise us of the problems relative to growth and the pressures it's putting on the system, and we work diligently with the Department of Finance, with the health department, with the region to address those problems.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement if he wishes.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the region has made significant changes to improve access to emergency care. They're planning this; they're doing it carefully. They want to add additional beds in hospitals. They want to use new technology to track patients according to priority. They are posting quarterly emergency performance reports. I would say that overall it's gone very, very well.

Now, the hon. member wants things done right now; he doesn't want it done right. He would prefer to have it right away as opposed to right. But that focuses on the difference between this government and the opposition. Mr. Speaker, our planning is cautious; it's not reckless. Our responses are thoughtful; they're not knee-jerk. Our solutions are comprehensive; they're not piecemeal. Our strategy is visionary, not myopic.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier was waving around the 1-800 number for the federal Competition Bureau in an attempt to divert attention from his government's failure to address concerns about monopolization and manipulation of cattle prices. The government has done nothing while giant U.S. meat packers lowered cattle prices and tripled their margins on each animal slaughtered. Later today I will table a letter from the federal Commissioner of Competition regarding her jurisdiction in this matter. My question is to the Premier. If the Premier is so sure that the Competition Bureau is able to deal with allegations of price manipulation and monopolization in the packing industry, can he tell Albertans under what circumstances the Competition Bureau can undertake such an investigation?

Speaker's Ruling Questions outside Government Responsibility

The Speaker: Hon. Premier, please. The purpose of question period is to deal with matters of administrative competence of the government of Alberta. The federal Competition Bureau is a federal agency. It's not incumbent upon any minister of the Crown in the province of Alberta to comment on federal jurisdiction. Now, if the Premier wants to proceed, he can.

The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Very well, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has been telling Albertans that his government does not have jurisdiction in this matter but the federal Competition Bureau does, is he aware that the federal Competition Bureau commissioner has indicated that it can only investigate if there is evidence of active collusion between packers to fix prices?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you that that makes a lot of sense: if there is evidence. You know, this hon. member is shadowing a news reporter. I hope he learns in the course of his journalistic experience the concept of journalism, the fundamental, basic concept of journalism, that says that you need to be fair and objective. He is neither fair nor is he objective, so I hope he learns something.

Mr. Speaker, evidence. That is a very, very strong word. Evidence as opposed to innuendo, evidence as opposed to vague allegations. I have said to the hon. member that if he has evidence that there is any wrongdoing relative to the packers – price-fixing, gouging, anything that's inappropriate – then he should bring that to the Competition Bureau.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, while the Premier waves around the 1-800 number for the federal Competition Bureau, the question that most Albertans have is: why has this government failed to actually ask whether or not a degree of monopolization has resulted in high prices at the supermarket and low prices for beef producers? That's the question, Mr. Premier.

Mr. Klein: Interesting question, Mr. Speaker. Again, there is testimony now being taken by a committee of Parliament, as I understand, to ask precisely those questions in that this is a federal government jurisdiction.

Relative to the issue of the $400 million program that was launched to assist farmers, beef producers in particular, as to whether that money was used properly, the Auditor General is rightfully doing an audit of that particular situation. So the bases, I would suggest, are being covered.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think it's unfortunate that for 10 months this opposition bench was totally silent on the crisis that was facing the beef producers in this province and has not been out in the country attending meetings of 100 or 1,000 farmers or ranchers or feedlot owners to deal with those questions.

Mr. Speaker, absolutely, the Competition Bureau has asked that if anyone has evidence, bring it forward, and that number has been made available.

Mr. Speaker, it is not helpful when this beef industry, which contributes the majority of the agricultural cash receipts and manufacturing in this province, is being, I think, vilified by this discussion. The programs that were developed in this province were developed in consultation and together with the industry, and while in this House it may be quite appropriate to call on government only, I take great exception for the fine people that have given up time from their own operations to work towards a plan that would keep this very valuable industry in our province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Pollution Standards

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government recently announced that it would be imposing new pollution standards on electricity plants. My main question is to the Minister of Environment. Why are you forcing industry to bear the extra burden of meeting these new standards?

Dr. Taylor: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must take a bit of exception to the final statement in his question saying: why are we forcing industry? I want to point out very clearly that we are not forcing industry.

The Clean Air Strategic Alliance, which consists of industry, consists of nongovernmental environmental organizations, consists of the federal government, consists of the provincial government, consists of many other organizations, actually came up with the new standards. About two years ago I asked the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, or CASA, to develop new standards because they work on a consensus-based model. So I know that when I get something from that model, everybody has signed off on it. That means that industry has signed off, the nongovernmental environmental groups have signed off, the federal government has signed off, and the provincial government has signed off on these new standards.

So industry is in agreement with these standards. It's a good step forward, and it gives industry security for the next 20 years as they move forward in developing new electrical generation that this province will need. It's a very positive step and a good step for our province and industry.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. Given that electricity consumers are extremely price sensitive these days, can the minister tell us how much these new rules will increase the cost of electricity?

Dr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can. But I think I should give some other information as well in terms of the reductions of the emissions from these various coal-fired and gas-fired plants.

There will be a 50 per cent reduction in mercury, Mr. Speaker. There will be a 46 per cent reduction in sulphur dioxide, a 32 per cent reduction in nitrogen dioxide, and a 51 per cent reduction in particulate matter. It's particulate matter that causes the yellow haze, and these are the things that cause the yellow haze over Edmonton and Calgary in the wintertime in particular and even now sometimes in the summertime.

Now, in terms of the cost, Mr. Speaker, there will be zero cost to the consumers until 2010, and after 2010 the cost will be about 2 cents a day, or $7.50 a year, which, I believe, is a small price to pay for these kinds of reductions in emissions.

Mr. Strang: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. Greenhouse gases are conspicuously absent from these new standards. Is the province stalling on implementing controls on greenhouse gas emissions for coal-fired generation plants?

Dr. Taylor: No, Mr. Speaker, we are not stalling. As you know, Alberta very clearly has an action plan on greenhouse gas reduction. We will continue with our action plan. We've led the way as a government in this action plan. By 2005 90 per cent – 90 per cent – of the power that this government utilizes will be green power, either wind generation or biomass, and it has created a whole biomass industry in this province. So, no, we haven't.

CASA continues to work within their framework on a consensus-based model on greenhouse gas reductions, and they will continue to work at that. Hopefully, in the future they will come up with a result and a solution to that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Seniors' Benefits Program

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Income thresholds for the Alberta seniors' benefits don't appear to be tied to LICO, the low-income cut-off, or the market-basket measures. My questions today are to the Minister of Seniors. Can the minister explain the basis for the income thresholds that are currently used by the Alberta seniors' benefits program?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, these thresholds come under constant review, and we try to ensure that the people who are getting assistance are looked after adequately. If you look at our thresholds, you will see that they are, in fact, as it pertains to support for health care premiums, much higher than any of the other thresholds.

Ms Blakeman: The question was: what's the basis?

Again to the Minister of Seniors: given that the government is moving to tie AISH and SFI rates to the market-basket measure, is the minister considering the same or a similar move for Alberta seniors' benefits?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, we do consult quite closely with the minister of human resources, and we would be looking at how the thresholds would best support the seniors.

I might point out that the hon. member should look at what has been done just very recently. For example, we've got a program that helps the seniors in long-term care whereby if they're on the seniors' benefits plan, they are guaranteed an income of $260. The same happened in the lodges. We have recently increased the lodge tenants' ASB contributions so that they could in fact have money left over after rent, and at the same time the lodge operators were able to continue. So on an ongoing basis, Mr. Speaker, we currently review the needs of the seniors and try to meet them.

I might also point out that if you're going to look at the thresholds, please factor in the fact that if any senior on our seniors' benefits program can show that they have an extraordinary need, they can claim up to $5,000 through the special-needs assistance program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: has the ministry done any studies to counter arguments from COSA and others that government policies are impoverishing middle-income seniors?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, we currently meet with any advocacy group. I've met with the SUN people. I've met with COSA. As recently as yesterday I met with the whole board of the Alberta Council on Aging, and I certainly respect their opinions, their input, and where it's feasible within the programming, we would respond to it.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have to point out that this province has the best programs for low-income seniors in Canada and probably all of the United States. So when we do have groups come forward who have concerns, I certainly do pay attention to them and I want to work with them to see if we can in fact, in whatever way possible, improve the state of the seniors.

I would like to point out again that when we had the budget adjustments due to the September 11 activities of 2001, the Seniors budget remained intact, and we were able to maintain and, in fact, improve our payouts to the seniors over the intervening years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the Interim Leader of the Official Opposition.

Out-of-province Health Care Services

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was surprised to learn that last year Alberta Health provided 130,000 services to non-Albertans, primarily through the Capital and Calgary health authorities. We understand that approximately $20 million in service costs has yet to be recovered. My question is to the minister of health. How many services were provided to Albertans by other jurisdictions over the same time frame?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Mr. Mar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm advised by the Department of Health and Wellness that over the past fiscal year other provinces and territories have provided approximately 72,000 hospital services to Albertans at a cost of roughly $23 million. The top three jurisdictions in which Albertans received hospital services were, first, the province of British Columbia, 37,000 at a cost of $10.8 million; Saskatchewan, 11,000 at a cost of $4.5 million; and the province of Ontario, 9,500 at a cost of $4 million.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you. My second question to the same minister: how many services in total were provided by Alberta Health over the same time frame?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that data in front of me, but my recollection – and I can correct myself at a later time if I am incorrect – is that over the same period of time there were 130,000 services delivered, but I can't say for how many Albertans that was.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. McClelland: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister, then, undertake to ensure that the health authorities affected by the lack of payment by the users are fully compensated, if not by the province or the province concerned, then by the federal government?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish that I could do that, but the fact of the matter is that the amount of money involved is relatively small in the whole scheme of the delivery of health care. One has to keep in mind that the Capital health region and the Calgary health region collectively have a budget of roughly $3 billion between those two health regions. I may stand corrected on the exact figures. But when we're trying to talk about the recovery of $20 or $30 million, it doesn't seem to be a particularly material amount in the overall scheme of how large those respective budgets are.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Education Funding

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health recently told University of Alberta students that the province won't be able to put more money into education until it gets a handle on rising health care costs. My first question is to the minister of health. Is the minister telling Albertans that even with recent billion-dollar surpluses there is no money for Learning budget increases?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I don't purport to speak on behalf of the Minister of Learning as it relates to the size of that budget.

Dr. Massey: That's exactly what you did.

My question now is to the Minister of Learning. Does the minister of health's statement mean that the Learning Commission recommendations will be mothballed?

Dr. Oberg: No.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Learning, Mr. Speaker: when will the government abandon this peekaboo funding game and finally provide schools with the dollars that they need to deliver the programs that this government mandates? Forget the peekaboo.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, in this Legislative Assembly we've got a very wonderful process called the budget process, at which point every year the budget figures for the upcoming fiscal year are made public. For me to talk about the budget in any other fashion would be against the rules of this Legislative Assembly. I can clearly say to him, though, that the Learning Commission recommendations have been taken into consideration in the setting of my budget and that people, I believe, will be pleasantly surprised when my budget comes out.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Child Welfare Services Accreditation

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week we heard that Alberta Children's Services is taking steps to improve services to Alberta children, youth, and families by enhancing the accreditation process for contracted child welfare service providers. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. What is the purpose of this accreditation?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, much like hospitals and postsecondary institutions accreditation gives a very thorough and comparable assessment so that the services delivered are of quality and are in fact delivered in the best way possible. We deliver accreditation services to foster homes, to group homes, to residential homes, and in total presently there are 8,411 children either in temporary or permanent care in such accommodation that deserve to know that they're in a place where they are safe and well looked after. Accreditation through a certified agency assures that we are building on that quality standard.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the accreditation for the welfare services already takes place, but also to the same minister: how is the advanced accreditation going to work, and which agencies are selected?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, in 1992 an Alberta Association of Services to Children and Families was formed to define an umbrella organization for certifying agencies. A hundred and forty-five agencies became part of that group. Last year in June we looked at the fact that one agency representing all of the agencies was not only doing the accreditation but was conducting member surveys and providing other training and learning expertise.

We believe that introducing the opportunity for other certifying agencies, people with organizational expertise, can not only improve the service but enhance the various agencies' ability to select services that will give them supports that they need, both for training staff, for helping them in their advocacy position, and most of all for providing us a wider selection of people to assess the scope of the service that's being provided to children.

Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is this. We want the very best possible service in giving quality standards and assurance to Albertans that their children are taken care of safely. We believe we'll get it with more agencies involved in the certification process.

2:10 Accessible Specialized Transportation Services

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, funding for accessible specialized transportation in rural Alberta is not addressing a minimal demand. Already in 2004 Innisfail has lost its handibus because it was so old that it failed a road inspection, and Lacombe has had to end its handibus program because of lack of funding, and it cannot find other organizations willing to take on the burden. Accessible transportation isn't so accessible for rural Albertans. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that rural Alberta has been expressing concerns around this issue since 1999, why has this ministry not addressed those concerns?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Municipal Government Act of Alberta discharges the responsibility to local authorities relative to the services they provide, and I'm very proud to say that transportation is one of them, dealing not only with just seniors but youth and others.

I would ask the Minister of Seniors also to supplement relative to many of the positive initiatives that have been launched in helping Alberta seniors.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: when will this ministry live up to its commitment made in 2001 to review the unconditional municipal grant program in order to address funding for accessible specialized transportation in rural Alberta?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you. The member is quite correct in that we took together, in fact, a trail system, a special transportation system, but also I would say that as part of the unconditional grant system we have policing in there as well. Of course, the budget is coming out where we're going to be dealing with some of the specific issues relative to policing. I know that the Solicitor General as well as the Minister of Finance will be making comments.

Regarding the issue of seniors and special transportation, clearly the local authority and the municipal councils are working closely with their government when it comes to unconditional grants, and I would like to be able to say that seniors are very important in terms of what we need and how we deliver service to them, which, I believe, we are doing very well here in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will this minister work with rural specialized transportation organizations and their stakeholders so that all of their needs can be addressed?

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, I want to compliment every municipal council in this province who worked very closely, as the hon. member mentioned, relative to special needs such as for seniors, but we want to compliment our local municipal authorities for the good work they do with stakeholders. Anywhere the province can be involved in working with our local authorities, we're certainly prepared to have done that in the past, the present, and in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Two recent tragedies bring into sharp relief gaps in Alberta's mental health care system. The executive director of the Alberta branch of the Canadian Mental Health Association said today that there are enough reports on what's failing in the mental health system that the reports, if piled up, would form a stack four feet high, and piled they are, he said, gathering dust on shelves. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Mr. LaJeunesse is asking what many Albertans are asking: why are mental health patients being deinstitutionalized and have been deinstitutionalized without adequate, timely, and appropriate supports being available for them in the community?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I have tried my very best to address this question to the House not only this week but in previous weeks and out in public venues as well. We do in fact devote significant resources to the area of mental health services.

We recognize that there is, frankly, a social stigma associated with mental health problems, but we ignore that. We believe that this is a very, very important area of health care to Albertans. We are well aware of what mental health advocates like the Canadian Mental Health Association and the Alberta alliance on mental health tell us about the rates of mental health issues among Canadians, and it is significant. It's the reason why we devote $240 million this year to the delivery of mental health services. It's the reason why we increased our budget from the previous year by about 5 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, we continue to work on a mental health plan, but this is difficult work. There are many different stakeholders out there with many different interests. I think I referred earlier in the week to our current legislation for mental health, which took 11 years to develop because there were so many divergent issues that needed to be consolidated into something that made sense in terms of our legislation.

We'll continue to work with groups represented by people like Mr. LaJeunesse, who has had great input into our mental health plan. We acknowledge that there is a need for community supports for individuals with mental health problems when they are deinstitutionalized. We also recognize that there are some people who will always need the services of good facilities like Alberta Hospital Edmonton and Alberta Hospital Ponoka.

So, Mr. Speaker, we're working on our plan. We want a consensus among stakeholders in the mental health community to move forward on this very, very important plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why do gaps in prescription drug coverage continue to exist for Albertans with a diagnosed mental illness, and what action is the government going to take to close those gaps?

Mr. Mar: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, earlier this week in this Assembly I did attempt to address this question by talking about our support for drugs through our Blue Cross plan, through drugs that are covered in hospitals, for programs that cover drugs for people who are of lower income in this province. That includes psychiatric drugs.

Let me say this. We have a good system, but by no means is it perfect, Mr. Speaker, and if we can say that we are delivering the right service to people 99 per cent of the time, we would say that that's a pretty good system. But, frankly, if 3 million Albertans each accessed the health care system just once in a year and we got it right 99 per cent of the time, which people would laud, the 1 per cent of cases still yields tens of thousands of Albertans who might have fallen through the cracks. We are striving to improve our system for the health care system and for mental health as well.

Dr. Pannu: My second supplementary to the minister, Mr. Speaker: why are so many of those diagnosed with mental illness homeless on our streets, including Whyte Avenue in my own constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona, and what is the government planning to do to make sure they have secure and adequate housing?

The Speaker: Well, there are about half a dozen questions in there, so take the first one, hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I've had the opportunity to answer a multiple-choice question.

You know, there are significant things that are being done with respect to mental health and its connection with other areas, be it the minister responsible for homeless issues or whether it's with respect to work that's being done with the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for dealing with these issues, but we recognize that there are a disproportionate number of people who are homeless who do suffer from mental health problems.

We do have crisis teams that are mobile. We're able to get to where people are. We recognize that they may not come to a particular locale for treatment, but we do have mobile teams that go out and reach where these people actually are. So, Mr. Speaker, again, we have a good system. We have a very good system. We have difficulty reaching everybody because there are some who avoid, frankly, our help.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors to supplement.

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very briefly, I might point out that we're fully aware that too many of our tenants in the homeless shelters are in fact suffering from some mental affliction, but we have to also appreciate that they have rights and they belong to the community.

In addition to that, we have through the Canada/Alberta affordable housing program opened up a significant number of spaces in conjunction with people such as Horizon Housing in Calgary, with the city of Grande Prairie, and some also in Edmonton. So the problem is being addressed, and we're trying to do it in a sensitive fashion with the people who can most help the program, in this case very largely the Canadian Mental Health Association.

2:20 Aboriginal Organizations

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development publishes a quarterly document entitled A Guide to Aboriginal Organizations in Alberta. The latest of these documents has been released this February, and it lists some 199 aboriginal community organizations. My question to the minister: are all of these groups funded by Alberta taxpayers?

Ms Calahasen: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the member is aware, this guide is a valuable resource, and we're very proud that we've been doing this since 1981. In fact, the lists of the organizations here are from Indian bands to tribal councils to national organizations and even private-sector organizations. We in the province of Alberta do fund some components of the various groups; as an example, the native friendship centres and the Métis Nation of Alberta and a few others. But most, if any, that we do fund are usually project to project.

Mr. Speaker, these are not government-run organizations, so our support varies. I think it's important to recognize that as we do whatever we can to build relationships, we do work with the organizations. The intent of this list is to ensure that people know which organizations exist in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Lukaszuk: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what types of services do these 199 groups provide, and is there any duplication?

Ms Calahasen: Well, for your information the list on this is really a good list, and I'll table it later. There probably are some, but we don't know that because these are not government-run organizations. We do try to work with them in order for us to be able to determine what services they do serve to the aboriginal organizations and aboriginal Albertans. So what we're trying to do, Mr. Speaker, is to make sure that people do know what exists and who they can contact and to make sure that they can get the necessary projects or programs that they will get out of these organizations.

Mr. Lukaszuk: My last supplemental to the same minister: are these groups accessing any other funding, perhaps from the federal government as well?

The Speaker: Hon. member, there's no way a minister can deal with that. If she indicates that she doesn't know if these have any provincial funding, how would she know if they have anybody else's funding? It's a list.

Sour Gas Wells

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Despite significant environmental and health risks, six new sour gas wells may go ahead near the proposed southeast Calgary hospital site. All the while Calgarians wait in desperate need for a new hospital. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given that Alberta already has over 5,000 producing sour gas wells, can the minister explain why, despite the health and environmental risks, these particular six are so important?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's actually a good question. If one were to examine the application by Compton Petroleum, the purpose of the new gas wells – and they're horizontal gas wells, using made-in-Alberta technology, new technology that Albertans have invented and created – is to extract the sour gas at a faster rate than what is in place right now. This means that if the project is approved and the sour gas is extracted, it will be all done, completed, and abandoned by the time a new hospital is in fact constructed in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister then: can he give the citizens of Calgary a sense of how many years they're going to have to wait for this to be accomplished?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we do know is that there are hearings for sour gas drilling and that they're being held by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, that has a record of being a world-class regulator, that has a process for hearings about sour gas wells and is in a position to be able to comment on the area of response, the ignition in case anything occurs, drilling practices, past experience, competency of the company. All of these factors are taken into account in an open, transcribed, fully transparent hearing process.

Mr. Speaker, all that one has to do is wait and watch the regulatory process unfold, and then at such time you'll be able to look at the record of production for each well, then look at the size of the reservoir, do a preliminary math calculation, that anybody could do, and then calculate the amount of time to extract all the gas that is left in that reservoir at a process much faster than what is in place now. That's the purpose of this application.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, my question was simple, and every Calgarian is interested in it. When you say that it's much faster, how long is this going to take: three, five, 10, 15 years? How long?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the question is simple because the member is not aware of what goes through the development of gas reservoirs in this province. At one time it was felt that Alberta was running out of gas, that we were down to the last nine years of gas reserves. Well, since that time we've been able to double our production. We now produce over 13 billion cubic feet a day. We produce it in Calgary. We produce it in Edmonton. We produce it in Grande Prairie, Manyberries, and Medicine Hat. The point is that the process is directed to be the same for every gas well that's licensed in this province.

The Speaker: Hon. members, in 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first member.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege and pleasure to introduce 66 visitors from the La Crete public school this afternoon. These would be very hardy students and, I would suggest, some very patient teachers, because they travelled more than 10 hours yesterday, almost 900 kilometres, in two yellow school buses for a visit to Edmonton and to the Legislature. The students are accompanied by their principal, Kathryn Kirby; teachers Morgan Coates and Steve Cole; and parents and helpers Kathy Reid, Tina Unruh, Mary Friesen, Liz Froese, Ruth Janzen, Henry Harder, and William Janzen. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Well, hon. Member for Peace River, unfortunately I do not think we have an award awarded to students for coming the greatest distance, but we should have one. So, Mr. Clerk, you have another assignment this afternoon.

Capsule of Life Program

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to promote an innovative new idea occurring in Calgary which is helping ambulance paramedics save the lives of patients who are having an emergency in their home. It's called the Capsule of Life program. It is designed to help people organize their pertinent medical information and store it in an easily accessible location for emergency responders. To date 25,000 of these capsules have been distributed with great success free of charge to Calgarians.

Let's face it, Mr. Speaker. No one wakes up in the morning thinking that they might have to call 911 and ask for an ambulance that day. Most people have not memorized the names of all the medications they may be taking nor the details of their medical histories and conditions, but these pieces of information can be absolutely vital in an emergency. In an emergency it is often even more difficult to try and remember all of these things, or the patient may even be comatose or unconscious.

How it works is that you record your own pertinent medical information in a simple little plastic capsule, which is then stored in your refrigerator. Why the refrigerator? Well, because every home has one, it is easily located in an urgent medical emergency, and people remember where they put it.

The capsule of life program is funded through the Calgary EMS Foundation. The Calgary EMS Foundation is an independent charity that operates and funds innovative programs designed to help keep Calgarians healthy and safe.

This program is a success story from many angles. It is a success for the lottery funding in this province as well as the EMS Foundation since the foundation received their initial grant to start this program from lottery funds. Since then, they have been able to acquire a major corporate sponsorship, which allows them to continue distributing these capsules free of charge.

I would encourage more Alberta communities, individuals, and even all of us to take a look at this program and see if we can't help implement or improve a similar program in our ridings. It works, it helps save lives, and it only costs a buck or two per capsule.

Congratulations to the Calgary EMS Foundation for their success with this program.

Seniors' Week 2004

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta I'm very pleased to inform Albertans that the 18th edition of Seniors' Week in our province is rapidly approaching. Seniors' Week 2004 is from June 6 to 12, and Alberta communities and seniors-based organizations are already busy planning special events to pay tribute to Alberta's seniors.

The theme of Seniors' Week 2004 is Seniors in Alberta: Building and Contributing. This theme speaks to the ongoing contributions of seniors in helping to shape the Alberta that we enjoy today. In the coming weeks Albertans will be seeing this theme and a new beautiful image on two posters and a Seniors' Week 2004 planning events guide.

These promotional materials are designed to build awareness of Seniors' Week and to energize all Albertans into learning more about Seniors' Week activities in their area. That can include taking in a Seniors' Week event, volunteering their time to assist with an event in their community, or begin developing their own community-based gathering that honours seniors. Over 3,000 promotional packages are being distributed province-wide, and as a part of this package the Seniors' Week planning events guide provides a number of handy tips and resources to help Albertans plan and design Seniors' Week events for audiences from five to 500.

Last year Seniors' Week 2003 was one of our most successful as close to 50 communities, towns, and cities officially proclaimed the first full week in June as Seniors' Week. Two hundred and thirty events were registered with the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta, and we knew that there were many more that were not registered but were occurring.

Over the course of Alberta's 99-year history seniors have made and continue to make an indelible difference in our province. Seniors are our family, friends, neighbours, volunteers, and community leaders actively working and involved to enhance the quality of life of all Albertans and leaving a legacy for future generations to follow.

I encourage Albertans young and old to contact local seniors' organizations and get involved, and to everyone in this Assembly today please join me in giving your support for Seniors' Week 2004.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

George Reitmeier

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday, February 29, 2004, at the Red Deer community sports banquet the city of Red Deer presented its most prestigious sports award to George Reitmeier, a man who has dedicated much of his life to helping Alberta's special athletes achieve their highest goals. George Reitmeier, who is 71 years old, is a two-time winner of the Alberta Special Olympics coach of the year award and was named Canadian Special Olympics coach of the year in 2002.

Except for swimming and snowshoeing George has coached every sport in the Special Olympics and is still coaching floor hockey in the winter and slo-pitch in the summer. George says that he will keep coaching as long as his legs hold out.

George got involved with the Special Olympics in 1984 because of his son Mike, who has won numerous speed skating titles as well as North American and world championships. George believes that doing not saying is the key for coaching Special Olympic athletes. George knows that demonstrating a skill is worth a thousand words and that these athletes learn more from seeing things being done than by being told.

George is happiest when he's coaching the grassroots athletes in the Special Olympics, those who aren't expected to excel on the provincial, national, or world stage. He believes that if given the chance, these special athletes can develop their athletic abilities to the highest degree. George says that the three most important things in coaching at this level are patience, patience, patience.

I ask the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to join me in congratulating George Reitmeier for his outstanding gift of coaching to our Special Olympic athletes and for receiving the city of Red Deer's sportsman's award for 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For the last two weeks my office has been flooded with phone calls, faxes, and e-mails not only from farmers and members of the cattle industry but from Albertans who are fed up with the disrespect this government shows toward taxpayers and their hard-earned dollars.

When the first case of mad cow was discovered in May of 2003, Albertans recognized the economic, cultural, and historic importance of our beef industry and rallied to show support for cattle producers and their families. Albertans supported the expenditure of 400 million taxpayer dollars to support the beef industry because they believed they were helping Alberta farmers.

Mr. Speaker, taxpayers had the right to believe that while the government was distributing short-term compensation, they would also be developing a contingency plan should the border remain closed or at least be fighting to get the borders reopened. Last week the Premier revealed that 10 months after the crisis began, there is still no contingency plan, and the government was too arrogant and self-assured to bother presenting arguments to open the borders during the American government's last comment period.

This isn't an isolated incidence of the abuse this government heaps upon Alberta taxpayers. Taxpayers willingly support postsecondary education only to discover that when their children are ready to attend university, the government has allowed ever-increasing tuition fees to put postsecondary education out of reach for many of their children.

This government continues to burden Albertans with high premiums for health care. Albertans are happy to pay taxes for their health care, Mr. Speaker, but they can't help but be frustrated at bearing a disproportionate amount of the burden while friends of the government in the oil and gas industry get royalty holidays and other giveaways.

Let me say this clearly and for the record: Albertans should not be forced to shoulder the burden created by the mismanagement of electricity deregulation, BSE compensation, auto insurance, health care, and the list goes on.

When it comes to the careless spending of taxpayers' dollars, this government is getting harder and harder to distinguish from the federal Liberals. In fact, the only difference is that the federal Liberals at least have the integrity to allow all-party standing committees to investigate program expenditures.

Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

Ms Graham: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 94 the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petitions that I presented Monday, March 8, 2004, and I can advise the Assembly that all but two of these petitions comply with Standing Orders 85 to 89.

The committee has considered the remaining petitions and recommends to the Assembly that Standing Order 89(1)(b) be waived for the petitions of Northwest Bible College and Brooklyn Rewega, an infant, by her legal guardian and father, Doug Rewega, for a private act that will grant an exception to the law that provides for maternal tort immunity for prenatal wrongful conduct subject to the petitioners in these two petitions completing the necessary advertising before the committee hears the petitioners.

Mr. Speaker, this is my report.

The Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report? All those in favour, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Speaker: Opposed, please say no. Carried.

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 19 Public Trustee Act

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 19, the Public Trustee Act.

This bill would replace the current act, which has been in force since 1949 with minor amendments. The Public Trustee, Mr. Speaker, provides essential services to protect the assets of vulnerable Albertans when no one else is willing or able to act on their behalf. This updated legislation is the result of a 2002 consultation with the legal and insurance industries, estate planners, administrators, and Albertans. The new act will allow the Public Trustee to serve clients in as effective and efficient a manner as possible.

This being a money bill, Mr. Speaker, I have a message from Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor indicating that "it is my pleasure to recommend for your consideration the annexed Bill, being Public Trustee Act." Signed March 9, 2004, by Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 20 Minors' Property Act

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also request leave to introduce Bill 20, the Minors' Property Act.

This is in some manner a companion act to the Public Trustee Act in that the Public Trustee also takes care of the financial interests of minors and vulnerable Albertans.

This bill replaces the existing act by deleting outdated provisions, updating provisions that are still important to protecting the financial interests of young Albertans. The underlying principle of the Minors' Property Act is that dealings with a minor's property, contractual claims, or legal claims should be made in the minor's best interests.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today five copies of a December 3, 2003, letter from the federal Commissioner of Competition to the House of Commons agriculture committee saying that the Competition Bureau will not be launching an inquiry because high prices and profits by meat packers are not contrary to the federal act.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table on behalf of my colleague the hon. minister of health a report the Conference Board of Canada released today entitled Understanding Health Care Cost Drivers and Escalators. This report sounds an alarm to be heard by anyone truly dedicated to sustaining public health in Canada and whose ears and minds are open to resolutions and solutions that will make it happen, because it will not happen with the system that we have today.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a number of members today referred to simply the minister of health. Actually, the correct title is the Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 17 Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to stand today and move second reading of Bill 17, Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004, the amendments to the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, known as AOPA.

As I said when I introduced this bill, it will provide more clarity for the Natural Resources Conservation Board, NRCB, who administers the act, provide more clarity to confined feeding operators who are looking at changes to their operation, and more clarity on the role of municipalities.

The Natural Resources Conservation Board became responsible for regulating confined feeding operations in Alberta on January 1, 2002. Since that time, it became apparent that there were several technical areas that needed clarification. This clarification has now been provided.

For example, existing municipal development permits and health authority permits for confined feeding operations are deemed approvals under AOPA. The Natural Resources Conservation Board has sole responsibility for enforcing and amending conditions on these permits.

With the exception of land-use provisions NRCB approval officers will not be bound by the provisions of municipal development plans. Ancillary structures other than residences will be considered part of a CFO, or confined feeding operation, and will not require a development permit from the municipality.

The AOPA will regulate the composting of agricultural materials at agricultural operations except for dead animals, which will continue to fall under the Livestock Diseases Act.

The NRCB will have the authority to take emergency corrective action and recover costs if an emergency order is not complied with and the situation poses an immediate environmental risk, a common approach also used in other jurisdictions in protecting the environment.

The NRCB will have greater discretion to determine what the minimum distance separation, or MDS, should be for a residence that lies within an existing operation's MDS when the operation applies for an expansion. Any landowner can waive the MDS requirements. Previously, only other CFO operators had this ability.

Residents and landowners located adjacent to a smaller sized CFO for which a registration is required will now be able to provide the NRCB with information pertaining to how they feel that the operation meets or does not meet the technical standards within AOPA.

A buffer will be required between residences and other public buildings when manure is not incorporated. As well, persons who apply or transfer more than 500 tonnes of manure per year will be required to keep records. This has increased from 300 tonnes.

Passage of these amendments will provide greater clarity for all concerned. These changes are a result of a stakeholder consultation from May to November of 2003. It was my pleasure to be the chair of the steering committee.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of the Legislature to give these amendments their full support.

I move adjournment of debate on second reading consideration of Bill 17. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 18

Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce Bill 18 and move second reading.

The Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004, provides the maintenance enforcement program with some new and essential tools. The maintenance enforcement program provides essential services to Alberta children and families. Among the program's clients are single-parent and low-income families, and simply put, if child support is not paid, it is low-income families and particularly children that suffer the greatest financial impact.

Currently the program administers over 48,000 files on behalf of 63,000 children. In fiscal year 2002-2003, the last full year for which figures were compiled, the program collected more than 78 per cent of maintenance payments that were due. While this is an impressive compliance rate, it translates, Mr. Speaker, to nearly 14,000 children each month who do not receive the financial support to which they're entitled.

With Alberta having the fastest growing population in Canada and a divorce rate of about 40 per cent, the program's caseload is expected to reach 60,000 files by 2007-2008. One of the goals of the Department of Justice, with the help of the tools provided in this bill, is to improve the collection of maintenance payments so that we can increase financial security for Alberta's children and families.

Improving the program's ability to effectively collect on all files is essential to ensuring that future generations of Albertans will live up to their full potential to become productive members of our society. Collecting the support that is due to these families will ensure that Alberta's strong economic and social fabric remains intact for generations to come.

Too often child maintenance is not being collected despite the best efforts of the program. I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that we have a very strong program, very strong staff, people who dedicate their time and energy to collecting on behalf of children, but notwithstanding the good efforts of the program too often child maintenance is not collected. Too often debtors find ways to avoid their responsibilities to their children. This bill contains several important collection tools designed to improve the program's enforcement authority.

Over the years the program has built strong partnerships with others, including employers and banks, to aid in the collection of maintenance. Now more want to come on board to help support Alberta's children and families. This legislation will require other government departments and private entities to notify the program when payments are being made to a defaulting debtor. Notification will allow for payment arrangements to be made with the debtor or for the program to intercept the payments.

Because the Western Canada Lottery Corporation is one group that wants to assist in the collection of maintenance, the regulations will allow the attachment of lottery ticket winnings in excess of $1,000. This will ensure that lottery winnings go to the support of the family of a debtor who has maintenance obligations. Manitoba is already doing this very successfully.

As they can with registered retirement savings plans currently, the program will also be able to intercept locked-in retirement accounts, or LIRAs, so that these funds can be applied to arrears and benefit the debtor's family now, when they need it the most. More details on these new partnerships will be in the regulations.

The program will also be able to restrict recreational hunting and fishing licences when a debtor is in default, in line with current procedures during drivers' licences. Debtors who make payment arrangements with the program will not lose their ability to hunt and fish. I want to stress in this area, Mr. Speaker, that what we need to have with maintenance enforcement is the ability to get the attention of those people who are not fulfilling their obligations to their children, and I make no apology for using every appropriate tool to get that attention.

No one can claim that they are denied a privilege in this province by virtue of the restrictions under the Maintenance Enforcement Act or under this amendment because they always have the opportunity to reobtain those privileges by taking care of their obligations to their families.

When a defaulting debtor is a member of a self-governing profession, like a lawyer or a doctor, the program will have the ability to report noncompliance with the court order to the governing body of the profession for resolution or action as that body deems appropriate.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I'd stress that debtors can avoid all or any of these collection actions simply by making and keeping appropriate payment arrangements with the program. It's as simple as making a phone call, sitting down and saying: "I'm ready to live up to my obligations to my children. Can we work out an appropriate payment plan so that I can meet my current obligations and pay some appropriate sum towards any arrears that have been built up?" It's the program's job to encourage compliance with court orders so that children and families receive the support to which they are entitled.

Another goal of the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act is to promote compliance and more effective use of the program's resources by its clients. This bill will help to achieve that goal by establishing the potential for deterrent fees. Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize that this is the first time that the program will be charging deterrent fees since its inception in 1986, but we feel that the deterrent fees have become necessary to encourage compliance with court orders and the efficient use of program resources.

In some cases it is difficult to get clients to comply with maintenance orders or to provide the program with information which it needs and which they are obliged to provide. This results in extra efforts expended by the program in terms of time and resources that could and should be devoted to providing better service to all of its clients. It's important to keep in mind that any charges will only be incurred by clients who refuse to comply with the court order or intentionally withhold information from the program. Again, these measures will be applied against those people who do not fulfill their obligations and who do not follow the requests of the maintenance enforcement program to provide information.

In June 1998 the MLA review committee released its report concerning maintenance and child access in Alberta after consulting with the public across the province. I might just reference again for the House that that committee was chaired by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed. The review committee initially proposed that debtors bear the costs that arise from the additional work caused by their default. Members of the review committee recommended this both as a tool to encourage compliance and to recoup enforcement costs for the Alberta taxpayer. Now under Bill 18 a default fee will be charged to defaulting debtors who are not complying with a payment plan. If debtors contact the program and make and keep payment arrangements, they will not be charged default fees. This will maximize the incentive for voluntary payment.

Fees will also be charged to debtors who bounce cheques to reduce the amount of valuable time spent by program staff dealing with following up on NSF payments. When debtors fail to complete a statement of finances, a tool for financial disclosure, the administration of the file is further delayed. A fee will be charged to debtors who do not comply with requests to file a statement of finances.

When a creditor fails to report payments received from the debtor, this could result in the program bringing unnecessary enforcement action against a debtor who is not in default. Consequently, creditors who do not report payments made directly to them by the debtor will be charged a fee. Parties requesting substitutional service of documents through the program will be charged a fee to help offset the program's cost in providing the service. Lastly, fees will be charged to clients who reregister their files after withdrawing them from the program. Closing and reopening files is a very time-consuming process.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that all the fees charged will be equal to or less than the program's actual cost of performing the required actions. Again, all charges are avoidable if clients keep their file information up to date, contact the program to make payment arrangements, and keep their payment obligations. Not only will clients avoid charges, but they will receive improved client service as the program can focus its time and resources on answering client inquiries and collecting on difficult files.

In terms of the collection of these charges creditor charges will be deducted from funds collected on their behalf only in those months when the program has been successful in collecting the full amount of ongoing maintenance due to them. Debtor charges will be collected in the same manner as maintenance.

Funds collected will be paid out first to the creditor in the full amount of the current month's support. If there are arrears, 90 per cent of the balance would then go to the creditor arrears and 10 per cent to the outstanding deterrent fees owed by the debtor. It's important to remember that the program does not collect maintenance from anyone that the courts decide cannot pay. These charges will be incentive for clients to decrease actions that tax program resources unnecessarily, resulting in increased service for all clients.

Again, I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the goal, the objective of this act and the objective of charging these fees, is so that we can have the resources in the program to raise the compliance level from the currently high 78 per cent to a number in the 80s or the 90s so that Alberta's children can have the resources they need to maximize their potential.

Service improvements which can be effected if we can devote resources appropriately will include reduced wait time on the telephone, the acceptance of payments at 226 registry offices in Alberta, increased networking and referrals to resources in the clients' communities, and staffing a direct telephone line for employers.

Other amendments will help the program gather the information it needs to enforce a court order for support. This includes expanding the number of organizations and the type of information that the program can access to locate debtors and their assets. Access to justice will be improved in cases where the parties reside in different jurisdictions, as these amendments allow the program to advise their clients which reciprocating jurisdiction is handling their file where the other party lives outside of Alberta. Clients will then know where to send their court applications to vary maintenance orders, and program staff can explain the reciprocating program's practices and legislation.

The program will also be able to provide the courts in Alberta and other jurisdictions with contact information for serving court applications. This supports the commitment made by all provinces to streamline processes and increase co-operation among jurisdictions. As well, the program will be able to share file information with police to promote public and client safety.

So, Mr. Speaker, Bill 18 is an important piece of legislation which will allow Alberta's maintenance enforcement program to work more effectively for Alberta's children and their families while at the same time ensuring the program's viability into the future. It will provide children and families with better financial support, and that is our main goal. I urge all members of this Assembly to give Bill 18 their full support. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 18.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: 3:00      Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Today I'm bringing forward amendments under the Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004, on behalf of my colleague the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The amendments that we're proposing are part of a continuing process to update our legislation to be more effective, to make it consistent with other legislation, and to reflect present practices in Alberta.

This proposed adjustment will update the wording in the legislation to reflect changes that have occurred in the department in the administration of the act. Previously, only forest officers could carry out duties in regard to the act. The proposed adjustment will broaden the scope of those who can administer the act.

In regard to acquisition of land, we're adjusting wording in the legislation so that it's consistent with the Public Lands Act. We've also deleted parts of the act that are duplicated in other legislation.

Mr. Chairman, we're proposing that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development assume responsibility for future regulations under the act. Now the Lieutenant Governor has that role, and it must be done through legislative changes. This change would make it easier to amend and update the regulations in the future by allowing the minister to do so without going through a formal legislative process.

The issue of noxious weeds was also raised. This government is very concerned about controlling the spread of noxious and restricted weeds, and it's also an international issue that governments everywhere are dealing with. We're proposing an addition to the legislation to be able to address the need for control and destruction of restricted and noxious weeds on forest reserve lands. This positive and productive approach to the issue can have a positive impact on the environment, the land base, fish and wildlife, and other land users.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we're suggesting a much-needed increase in financial penalties for violations of the act. These changes will further encourage compliance with the legislation and ensure sustainable use. The first change will increase the maximum amount that can be assessed for offences under the act. The fine for being charged with an offence under the act has been set at $5,000 a day. This is consistent with assessments for offences under other acts such as the Public Lands Act.

Another change will allow the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development the authority to assess administrative penalties for minor violations under the act and regulations. A maximum of $5,000 per day will be set for this purpose under the act as well. This change is being proposed to streamline the processing of minor violations. These changes will improve enforcement by ensuring uniformity when dealing with contraventions, act as a deterrent, and ensure consistency with other legislation such as the Public Lands Act.

Mr. Chairman, during second reading of this legislation a number of questions were brought up by members of the opposition, and I indicated at the time that I'd be pleased to respond in more detail during committee. Now I'd like to take the opportunity to do so. The first area that I want to address is the idea that this bill is giving sweeping powers to the minister with the suggested amendments. Another point that was raised by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was that the minister could use these regulations to usurp the authority of both the Forests Act and the Public Lands Act. This is clearly not the case.

As I've mentioned before, the last review of this legislation occurred in 1980. As a government we are being responsible in ensuring the legislation that governs us is up-to-date and reflects the reality of what is occurring in the landscape. There's nothing sinister about this, and we're not giving sweeping powers to the minister as was suggested by a number of the hon. members.

Any changes to regulations must be in line with existing pieces of legislation, including the Forests Act and the Public Lands Act, Mr. Chairman. We need to have current legislation that will allow us to effectively manage our public lands and forest reserves, whether it's making changes to how we administer the act or what penalties are in place for those that contravene it. The government needs to have effective legislation in place to ensure good stewardship of our public lands. That's the real intent of this legislation.

Also, for the record, when it comes to working through regulations, we certainly don't do this in isolation. We work with stakeholder groups and interested members of the community on these regulations. This is clearly the way we reflect what really needs to be said in law to manage our resources. Especially in this particular ministry, staff are out in the field talking all the time to disposition holders, community members, and industry about issues. To think that we're doing things without any attempt to discuss it with Albertans is simply not the case.

Regarding the questions that were brought up about expropriation, which is mentioned in section 6, the current wording is also found in the bill opposite section 6, and the power of that expropriation already exists in the act. Currently the Lieutenant Governor can authorize the minister to expropriate land if necessary, and that's not changed. Under the new act the Lieutenant Governor would still provide authorization if expropriation were necessary.

Although expropriation would rarely be used, the legislation will still allow for this option if necessary. Expropriation would only be used as a last resort, failing negotiations for the sale or exchange of land. Furthermore, any expropriations would continue to be governed by the rules of procedure and practice of the Expropriation Act.

The hon. member also asked why personal property is included under this act. Well, this section is consistent with the wording in section 13 of the Public Lands Act, and we're talking about section 6(b) of the Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004. Personal property could include improvements such as fencing or watering facilities or perhaps even portable corrals.

The hon. member also asked how the process of exchanging public land will be fair and whether the process would be made public. Under section 6(c) existing processes now used under the Public Lands Act would apply. Exchanges are done on a voluntary basis and normally done where there's a benefit to both parties. To ensure that the process is fair, private appraisals would be completed for both parcels to determine fair value of the land. I can say from my personal experience in my constituency where these types of things have taken place that other interested parties such as leaseholders or even trapline holders are consulted before that process takes place. Land exchanges are private business transactions, however, and are not normally made public.

Also, one of the hon. members asked about the establishment of fee for services. This is simply the enabling provision for establishing grazing fees under the act. Grazing fees are not new; they're currently allowed for in the regulations. The changes allow for the creation of new fees under the regulation, if necessary, to transfer grazing rights.

Right now there are no provisions for implementing fees for transferring grazing rights under this act. We've talked to permit holders about the issue, and they agree that there may be a need for such a fee in the future. The Public Lands Act currently has assignment fees for transferring grazing rights from one individual to the other, so this amendment would merely make it compatible with the Public Lands Act. No other fees are being contemplated.

New provisions have already been added to any provisions that already exist in the act today. We have in fact deleted one prohibition that restricted the use of firearms and air guns in forest reserves. This is already covered under other legislation such as the Wildlife Act, and there's also federal legislation covering the use of firearms. So that is amply covered.

Under section 8 the hon. member asked why the administrative penalties are the same as those given for an offence under section 10. This simply gives the department the option of enforcement actions for specific contraventions of the legislation. For minor violations administrative penalties would be used. For more serious or repeat offenders a court-imposed fine could be used under section 10. We need to remember that the penalty amounts that are specified are maximums, and penalty assessments in most cases would be less than the maximum allowed. The maximums would be reserved for the more serious offences.

The member also asked about the posting of signs. Again, this is a carry-over of an existing provision in the act. We want to ensure that appropriate signs are used to mark trails to alert the public to livestock grazing. We also want to limit posting of signs by other people for other purposes. We have to remember that this is the wilderness area and we don't want it cluttered up with a lot of unauthorized signs.

Mr. Chairman, another issue brought up yesterday concerned who the minister will appoint to administer the act. It was suggested that the minister would be contracting out this administration, perhaps to private companies. This is certainly not the case. Existing staff within the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development who are professional agrologists will also administer this act.

An issue regarding needed attention being provided to watershed management issues on forest reserves was brought forward in debate. Certainly as a government we, too, are concerned with protecting lands that are a major source of water for the North and South Saskatchewan River systems. That is one of the reasons that we have legislation in place protecting the Rocky Mountain forest reserve. All planning and land management decisions within the reserve are made with attention to good watershed management.

Mr. Chairman, another question was brought up regarding the use of pesticides for weed control. Pesticides are only one form of weed control. Weeds can also be controlled by other methods such as mechanical, manual, or other biological means. Various weed control methods have been used on forest reserve land for years. We simply want to clarify in the legislation the responsibilities for this activity. In regard to weed control the faster you can find noxious or invasive species of weeds, the better and the more effective you can be to control them and prevent their spread throughout the area.

One of the last questions or comments that was raised last time we debated this was the idea that these amendments would make it easier for business or industry to gain unfair access to forest reserves. These amendments clearly do not give industry any easier access to forest reserves. However, that being said, at the same time we will be maintaining the existing rights of users. For instance, the use of an area for livestock raising will not limit or restrict the ability of other users such as recreational users and access by the public.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, as I've mentioned, these adjustments that I have outlined will update the legislation to reduce duplication, provide consistent wording within the legislation such as the Public Lands Act, and we have added important new pieces to the legislation that will ensure continued access to public rangeland in the Rocky Mountain forest reserves while ensuring environmental integrity of the land base.

We have held targeted consultations with stakeholders, and they have expressed no major concerns.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I would like to thank the member for the responses he gave me to my questions that we had in second reading. However, I'm not completely satisfied with all the responses we got, particularly the one where you talked about SRD as a normal course of their business having consultation with people in the community. Random or periodic consultation is quite different than when you're taking a look at adding amendments and redrafting a bill, going out and consulting all stakeholders who are directly affected, including environmental groups, which in this case wasn't done to my knowledge.

Then there's the overall concept of this tinkering with this legislation. It's true that the Forests Act hasn't been overhauled for a very long time period. For many years now we've been asking for a complete overhaul of this act because it's archaic in many ways, particularly in the management styles that it puts forward. So we were expecting sometime soon, this year or next year, a process starting that would be like the CASA-like boards, where you bring people from industry and environmentalists and directly affected people like landowners and municipalities into the decision-making to talk about what's working with the Forests Act and what isn't working with it because there are any number of concerns.

We thought that when that happened, the ministry would be taking a look at it from the perspective of cumulative impact for the whole province because everything you do in the forest directly affects every other aspect of our life and our geography and our flora and fauna in this province from water to land management to herd management to people management to recreation management. All of those issues are directly affected and need to be talked about. As we see more pressures in our forest reserves, we need to make sure that the decisions we're making today can be managed and are sustainable for decades to come, not just a short while. It doesn't seem like any of that's being addressed in this particular legislation.

Now, we've got a great deal of concern from the environmental groups that we went out to consult on this particular bill. One of those for sure was section 4, where the change is to "all forest reserves . . . are set apart . . . for the maintenance of conditions favourable to an optimum water supply," the new addition being "in those reserves." What this talks about then, as we see it, is that SRD is interested in water quality inside the forest reserves but isn't taking any responsibility for impact outside of those reserves. I would like the Minister of Environment to respond to this because definitely managing our water supplies has an enormous impact on water quality across not just Alberta but Saskatchewan and Manitoba, who are also directly affected provinces.

So here we see a time when municipalities are taking a much greater interest in the management of land and watersheds than the provincial government is. The first government that should be taking direct responsibility is the provincial government, and it doesn't seem to be happening here.

A particular concern of the Sierra Club was that the amendments speak to the issue of the government allowing the forest industry to control access to the forest reserves. If you go back in history and take a look at what those reserves were initially set up to do, it was to ensure conservation and protection of water.

You know, the forests are the key to us being able to recapture some of the water that we have lost over time, and they are particularly an integral part of managing our water strategy in the future. We don't see any of this being addressed in this act, and I'm wondering why that is. As we see these proposed amendments coming forward, they look like they're trying to guarantee access to forest reserves for other uses like industry, and we may see future public access denied or management styles denied. So if you could respond to that.

The biggest concern in this bill still is the degree of change there is from taking these forest reserves from a public responsibility over to the private sector, and that really makes it impossible to coordinate an effective forest management strategy. We've seen the impact of some of those recently.

We've seen the kerfuffle there was at the Bar C Ranch Resort on the company that was going to go in there and do some selective logging but also some clear-cutting. Bar C fought that, and the community fought that, and ultimately that logging was stopped at least for the time being and for good reasons, most particularly what happens when you log on riverbanks, the kind of soil erosion that happens there, and how you lose your ability to capture the water on the land base and it dries out. It's not good for the forests, it isn't good for any of the users, and it certainly isn't any good for the long-term water management strategy in this province.

This is just for me another indication that SRD has to take back the management of the forests, that we need an overall strategy that focuses on cumulative impact, and that we cannot allow private companies to decide how these forests are going to be managed.

We're also seeing a great deal more interest month by month and year by year in the international market action against companies who are not certified with the forestry standards council, and I've talked about that before in this House. What happens then is that companies cannot compete in the global marketplace, and Alberta is a particularly hard place for companies to get that particular certification. We've heard the minister repeatedly say that he's encouraging the companies to go there, but it's not possible because there are some actual structural impediments in this province to getting FSC certification.

The reason why it's important to get that certification is because forest managers who live up to those principles – there are 10 of them and 56 different criteria – have well-managed forests. When they are unable to do them, then it's a real problem for the long-term sustainability of the forest.

In Alberta there are two fundamental barriers that forest managers face in achieving FSC certification. One is the lack of a scientifically defensible protected areas network in Alberta. We've said for a long time: make the decisions based on science not based on politics. The second impediment is the inability of the Alberta forest industry to manage forests due to the tenure rights and activities of Alberta's oil and gas industry. So we're seeing these forest industries and oil and gas increasingly come into conflict.

It is the government's responsibility, particularly SRD's responsibility, to take on that role and find some solutions. This is a government that always talks about how pro business it is. Well, they are actually acting as an impediment to successful business in the long term in this province if these companies can't get FSC certification, because many individuals and many other companies are refusing to buy from them. Having protected areas is really important for the certification.

We know and this government knows that the long-term maintenance of biodiversity requires an approach that combines both protected areas and ecologically based management of the industrial land base. When these approaches are integrated, they form the basis of a strong ecological forest management, and that's what's required in this particular case in order for us to actually be able to move forward in a progressive manner.

It isn't just the environmentalists that are complaining about this any more. Now we're starting to see other kinds of reports coming out. There was a scientific report that came out in the spring of 2003 that talks about the disadvantages we're facing in this province when we see the rapid drilling for oil and natural gas along with logging inflicting major damage to our boreal forest and threatening to destroy old growth stands and eroding the watershed basis.

This report is particularly interesting because who funded it was a timber company, Al-Pac. Unlike many of the other more narrowly focused scientific papers that we've seen, this one did what we were asking for, which was the cumulative impact, and it took a broad assessment of the combined impacts of human activity, including industrial activity there, on the boreal forest. The impact is severe and significant. It threatens the long-term ability of the forest to produce lumber and therefore jobs and therefore revenues for Canadians.

There's been a lot of controversy about this study since it came out in part because of the criticisms of the Alberta government policies that invite oil and gas drilling and logging on the same landscape but fail to co-ordinate them. That is the key piece. It isn't that you can't have oil and gas and logging; you have to co-ordinate those activities. For at least five years in here I've been asking for cumulative impact studies and for a complete comprehensive review of this Forests Act that would bring all parties who have a vested interest in this to the table to find some solutions, but this government is not prepared to do it.

Part of this report also talked about different industrial sectors continuing to be managed by different agencies using different policy instruments. Environmental protection is handled through piecemeal regulations. We truly expected this legislation to address that, but it doesn't. We hear more piecemeal regulation, and from those who are looking at this through an environmental protection filter, we see that it is negligent in many areas.

A final comment that I'll share from this study is that it stated: "The current system of forest management in Alberta is a relic of earlier times. Essentially unchanged from the 1950s, it was established to maximize economic returns from resource extraction in the north." So that's the key problem with this. It doesn't take a look at long-term sustainability.

As we see this unfolding, it certainly does predict some dire consequences for our forests. Certainly, old-growth softwood forests such as spruce and pine will disappear in 20 years, and we'll be totally reliant on tree farming. Old-growth stands of aspen will disappear in 65 years. Habitat, of course, is directly affected by this. Woodland cariboo, which is already a threatened species, will shrink from 43 per cent of the area to 6 per cent. A rapidly expanded network of roads will cause soil erosion, destruction of water and fish movements, and increased access by humans, which leads to more hunting and poaching. Certainly, within the next 50 years we can see timber shortages primarily because the annual harvest rates are currently based on the rate of tree growth without accounting for loss from fire and the activities of the petroleum sector.

So this government needs to wake up and smell the coffee in this regard because they are not taking care of business. [interjection] Well, it's true. They're not taking care of business in Alberta when it comes to managing our forests, and we want to see a complete review of the Forests Act.

I see the former Minister of Environment is just willing to hop to his feet and correct me on all issues, and I certainly hope he will. We've had this debate many times between the two of us over the years, and I'm certainly willing to continue it because out of that some good ideas were brought forward. I am hoping that he will lobby his colleagues in Environment and Sustainable Resource Development to ensure that we start to take a cumulative impact approach to managing the forests in this province and that we see that kind of legislation coming forward soon.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to take the opportunity to respond to some of the comments from the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I tried to listen to specific criticisms of what's in the bill. I did pick out a few, and I'd like to respond to them, but I think most of the criticisms were on what wasn't in the bill.

She is absolutely correct: this is not a major overhaul that is including everything that opposition members may want to see in the act. This Forest Reserves Amendment Act is merely updating the act to provide the livestock industry with access to long-term, secure, public rangeland grazing in the Rocky Mountain forest reserve and to reflect some restructuring in the SRD department. That's all. That's all we're dealing with.

The other thing, to suggest that no review was done except for what people hear out in the field – I'd just like to assure the member that we have completed a targeted review, as I mentioned before. I didn't mention the stakeholders that were involved in it. I will highlight them now. They were the grazing and livestock producers, the Alberta Outfitters Association, the Alberta Beef Producers, Alberta Fish and Game Association, Alberta Grazing Council, and the Western Stock Growers' Association, and all the grazing permit holders. Out of those consultations, as I said before, no major concerns were brought forward to us.

As I said before, we're not restricting or allowing more use or less use by other stakeholders through this act. So we're not affecting recreation users. We're not affecting the forestry with the permits or leases they have in the area or the oil and gas sector long-term commitments that have been made to them. This act is not dealing with that. It's not proposing to deal with that. It's merely proposing to deal with the changes in the department as well as long-term arrangements for grazing leaseholders.

With that I'll take my seat. I think we've addressed the situations that this act addresses, not other things.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much. In listening to the sponsoring members, there are two areas that are concerning me. One is around the addition of the words "and . . . personal property" to section 6(b). The member has talked about it and explained that this was anticipating possibly the need to incorporate things like corrals or sheds or watering troughs, that kind of thing, but to me this is just too loose and too large and too easy, I think, to misunderstand what's being intended.

Generally, when you get something that needs to be narrowly defined, it is in fact found in the definitions. There is no attempt here to add a definition of what's anticipated by this bill to mean personal property. I might suggest that it probably needs to go into a definition section here because this is just too large and could be interpreted to mean a wide variety of other things beyond sort of stationary property. It's certainly not what I would have thought of when I originally read this. So I'll charge the sponsoring Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills to look at that.

The second issue that's giving me some concern is the removal of the prohibition relating to behaviour and traffic in the forest reserves and the use of firearms and air guns. Now, the member has said: well, no problem; this is actually covered under some other related acts. My concern is: can the member reassure the House that the discussion of the use of firearms and air guns in these other acts – one, which other acts? Two, is the prohibition as strong or stronger than what was in this act prior to the removal of the prohibition that's anticipated in Bill 13?

So those are the two quick issues that I wanted to raise with the member. My thanks to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for allowing me to leap in on that one.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Marz: On the question of the compatibility – is the legislation as strong or stronger on firearms? The act that it's covered in I think I mentioned is the Wildlife Act. I don't have the answer right now whether it's as strong or stronger, but I would presume that certainly federal firearms legislation, according to what most Albertans feel, is amply strong enough to deal with firearms control in any part of the province, including public lands or forestry.

Section 6(b): I'll have to get that answer back to the member at a later date.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to Bill 13, Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004, in the Committee of the Whole stage of debate. I've been listening with rapt attention to comments being made by hon. members of the House on Bill 13, and I think the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills is right. Although it amends the existing Forest Reserves Act, it's really minor in the scope of what it amends, which in itself perhaps should be deemed as a bit of a problem. This existing bill has not been updated for a long time, and I think it did deserve more extensive updating.

So the narrow scope of the amendments being proposed by way of Bill 13 itself raises questions about whether or not there should be more regularized periodic updating of the bill that's part of the amendments so that the government is obliged every five years or so to return to it to see whether or not the bill works and works well and then can proceed with updating the existing legislation.

That being said, yes, it restructures the authority within the Department of Sustainable Resource Development. In my view, it gives far too much authority to the minister, moves it away from the council of ministers into the hands of the minister, so the minister gets, in my view, an unduly large amount of authority through this restructuring.

The second concern that's been articulated here I guess by several members of the House has to do with the arrangements with respect to who will be responsible for management and the ability of the minister to appoint whomever he sees fit to provide those services. The sponsoring Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has himself drawn to one of these concerns expressed earlier by another hon. member that the government might be thinking of contracting out, you know, such activities.

Although the member assures the House that that's not the intent, there is nowhere in the amendments that such assurance is contained. If that is, indeed, the case, then I think there's a need for clarification and a clear commitment on the part of the government that appropriately qualified members of the public service who do provide these functions will be the ones who'll be providing these functions.

It gives the minister, in my view, a free hand in the way he or she wants to deal with the question of who has that responsibility. Certainly, environmental groups have a great deal of concern about the downgrading of the protections that these reserve lands deserve if appropriately qualified personnel are not the ones who have that responsibility.

So that certainly remains a concern. The bill is rather ambiguous, to say the least, and silent on the issue of giving a clear undertaking or assurance as to who these people are who'll be providing those important services required for protection.

Another concern that's been expressed to us while we have been consulting with various groups has to do with the restricting of the penalties to administrative penalties. Regardless of the nature of the damage or the infraction, regardless of the seriousness of it, the administrative penalty doesn't leave concerned citizens or groups or parties the opportunity to seek damages through the courts, you know, that could be assessed. So the administrative penalties foreclose that possibility for Albertans to seek reparations for the damage that may be caused through the noncompliance with the provisions which the forest reserves are provided in the amended legislation.

Another concern, Mr. Chairman, has to do with the reference to streamlining of the process. I guess more in these news releases the claim is made that this is supposed to streamline the process. I don't think streamlining means giving more authority and discretion to the minister. I don't see how that can streamline. It certainly strengthens the powers of the minister, but it doesn't necessarily provide the kind of streamlining that Albertans concerned about the future of forest reserves and the protection of watersheds contained in them are really interested in.

So the bill is really quite open to interpretation by the minister and doesn't really give enough assurance to concerned groups and citizens about what the bill's scope is and how it's likely to strengthen, as a matter of fact, the provisions for providing conservation of wilderness areas in Alberta.

The one positive feature of the bill that needs to be mentioned I think is in 1(a), where the words "for the time being" are struck out. I think that's good. It takes the notion of the temporariness of the legislation, the transience out of the way, so that certainly is, I think, a good feature whereas the forest reserves status part of the bill seems to be diluted and weakened by allowing the minister to appoint anyone employed by the Crown rather than just forest officers to administer the act.

The bill also, of course, restricts maintaining favourable conditions for optimum water supply to the confines of the reserve thereby weakening watershed management. This change means any impacts on the water supply downstream from the reserve now can be disregarded. I think that's a concern that's been expressed to us as we consulted with the various groups, and I want to certainly put on the record that that, indeed, seems to be one of the serious weaknesses of the amendment. As a matter of fact, the amendment seems to weaken that aspect of the existing legislation.

We have received other comments, one of them actually from someone who has worked with the World Bank on related matters and has some interesting comments which the hon. member who is sponsor of the bill may want to address. It has something to do with the maintenance of optimum water supply. The comment that we are getting is that while it is important to maintain optimum water supply in those reserves, the other concern is that the primary purpose of our forest reserves with regard to water supply would be the maintenance of an optimal water supply for the areas well beyond the reserves for the downstream user areas. There is little if any use of the water resource within the reserves, and the main users and beneficiaries would be the downstream regions. So that's a concern.

Unless I misread or misunderstand the amendments proposed in Bill 13, this bill seems to display a lack of understanding of the purpose and function of forest reserves with regard to water supply, and if it's not lack of understanding, then it seems that there is an intentional sort of element there to downgrade the importance of the forest reserves with regard to water supply. So one way or the other I think that matter needs to be addressed. Even the Alberta environmental network's own plans under the water for life strategy, under the goal of healthy aquatic ecosystems, one of the medium-term actions is to "update water quality programs to support watershed protection and planning."

Now, although the water for life strategy is not necessarily a perfect strategy, there's a clear intention in it to improve the watershed protection, and the forest reserves are the most important watersheds for the water supply in southern and central Alberta, where most of the population is concentrated. So that, I think, is a problem with this bill. It seems to focus attention on water conservation just within the reserve and not downstream. The proposed change is of special concern at a time when oil and gas exploration and production, clear-cut logging, and largely uncontrolled motorized recreation are an increasing threat to the forest reserves and particularly to the maintenance of an optimum water supply.

Another concern is that the upland areas usually do not benefit from the awareness, stewardship, and engaged actions of local watershed stewardship groups since there is no local population. Therefore, the government – i.e., Sustainable Resource Development – should be the steward of the reserves and the protection of water supply.

There is a concern, I guess, from communities such as the city of Calgary. I think the mayor of Calgary, if my information is correct, last year had written a letter expressing his great concern over the impact of motorized recreation use in the Ghost-Waiparous area, which is in the forest reserve.

One last point that I want to make, Mr. Chairman, has to do with user fees. There's quite a wide latitude given here to the minister to impose all kinds of user fees on people: loggers, ranchers, campers, grazing contractors, tourist facility operators, who knows what. That really opens wide the opportunity for the minister to impose new user fees or to increase the cost to the users by the excessive power that the minister has to change or introduce those user fees at will.

So those are some of the concerns that I have and some of the concerns that have been shared with us during our consultation process with various interested stakeholders and parties.

I look forward to further debate and, hopefully, debate on the amendments that might be proposed here to Bill 13. With that I close my remarks for the moment, Mr. Chairman. Thank you very much.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments to the member concerned about contracting out. I believe he was referring to the administrative work. Well, section 3 clearly states that the Minister may appoint, from among employees of the Crown in right of Alberta, such individuals as the Minister considers necessary for the administration of this Act and the regulations, and may, in writing, specify their positions.

So it's clearly stating that it's employees of the Crown that he's talking about, not that I would see anything seriously wrong with contracting anything out if it's appropriate to do so. It's the end and not the means by which you do things.

The act doesn't refer to anything at all that would lead anyone to think that with this act the minister is looking to appoint someone from outside government or to contract out. Clearly, it seems like there's more being discussed about what's not in this act than what's actually in the act. It's pretty simple and straightforward.

Other than that and the administrative penalties, which I covered before, I'll go through Hansard and look at it very closely to see if there are any other questions that I've missed, and if there are, I'll address them in third reading.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this afternoon on the Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004, Bill 13. Certainly, when one looks at this legislation and listens to the debate that has occurred with the previous speakers, the whole notion that we are proposing to give much broader sweeping powers to this particular government with regard to forestry reserves in this province, I think that we should proceed with caution.

There are many questions, and I think the first one is: what are the forest reserves now? One hears conflicting reports; it sort of depends on whom you talk to. There are those who think that the forest reserves we presently have are not large enough to sustain the capacity we have now in the wood fibre industry.

We are hearing over and over again from this government not about stability but about sustainability. I believe they changed their buzzword from stability to sustainability because of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East's sound idea, prudent idea regarding the stability fund. So now we have this whole issue of sustainability, and whenever we look at Bill 13, we have to wonder: are forest reserves in this province sustainable? Can we rely year after year on the timber harvest? Is the timber harvest enough to meet the demand?

Now, we look at what has happened in other markets in other parts of the world. California certainly comes to mind. In California there was a heated battle in regard to certain wildlife, the spotted owl, and how it relied on old-growth forests to maintain its habitat. Now, the logging trucks in some cases in California have stopped. The chainsaws have been silenced, and in the last 15 years over 60 mills have closed.

So if the harvest of the timber was reduced – and in some places it was significant – who made up the shortfall? One of the places where suppliers came, of course, was to the eastern slopes of Alberta to what we fondly call the Subarctic boreal forest. This was a new area to harvest timber, wood fibre. Californians have changed their ways, and certainly there have been at least short-term significant economic benefits to Alberta along the eastern slopes and in the north.

When we're debating this bill, we're also debating the future of forest reserves and how much will be left. We can talk about having the heritage savings trust fund, but, in a way, having stands of harvestable timber is a trust fund too.

When we look closely at this act in committee, this act would now apply to all forest reserves in the province, not just those established after the year 2000. I said earlier that it gives sweeping powers. Well, it certainly does. It gives sweeping powers to anyone in government that the minister assigns to deal with forest reserves, not just to forest officers. This is in section 7, for those who are interested.

A question that I have again for the record is: why does section 6 reorganize the acquisition of land the way it does? Is it in order of preference: expropriation, purchasing or otherwise acquiring, or exchanging, being subsection (c)? We are also looking here at permitting the minister to "purchase or otherwise acquire any estate or interest in land and any personal property in conjunction with it" whenever it is of any interest to the administration of a reserve. That's pretty general, and if I could have some more details on that, Mr. Chairman, from the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, I would appreciate that.

Now, I have many other questions. Some of them have been addressed previously by the hon. member, and some of them have been asked by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. But in regard to the previous speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and his quest for information in regard to the minister and user fees for services, well, I have to correct that hon. member. User fees are taxes, another form of tax. How will these tax increases be implemented?

Now, certainly there are questions surrounding the administrative penalties in section 8. They are as high as the penalties for offences in section 10. An explanation of this I think certainly would be in order at this time, Mr. Chairman. When we look at the concern that has been expressed by many people, whether it be on the editorial pages of our daily papers, whether it be in various reports, we have to consider and question whether this bill is right for Alberta forests and right for those who make their living from the wood fibre in those forests. There has been, as I said, various expressions of concern about the timber shortfall and our annual harvest rates.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I think we have to make sure that there's a little bit of spruce for the moose. The spruce and the moose are part of Alberta's heritage, and the moose would have no place to hide if some of the forest practices were to continue and we were to clear-cut. I don't know where they would hide. [interjection] No, there wouldn't be much cover for a moose in the Drumheller-Chinook constituency; that's for certain.

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to any other hon. member of this Assembly who would like to participate in the debate, but I, too, would have to caution all members that we have to make sure that this amendment, Bill 13, will provide the sustainability not only for our forests but also for our environment. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 13 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 16 Residential Tenancies Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to answer some of the questions that were posed at second reading by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Just a couple of questions that were posed. I know he's been in contact with the staff and had some of his other questions answered, but I will answer the two that were on the record.

The first one dealt a lot with whether the Residential Tenancies Act applied to construction camps, camps that are sometimes set up out in the forest where people can stop in for a night or two nights if they're working on a seismic project or working on a drilling rig, that kind of thing, and other camps for bigger projects that might be located around Fort McMurray, for example.

Basically, the Residential Tenancies Act applies if the occupant is paying the bill himself. So if you check into one of these camps and you're paying on your own expense account or your own credit card, I guess, the cost of that accommodation and meals for the evening or two or three days, or whatever the case may be, then the Residential Tenancies Act would apply. If your accommodation costs are being paid for by your employer, then the RTA does not apply. That kind of answers that question.

The other question that was asked was around whether landlords do evict tenants for filing complaints to the department, whether there's been a history of that. Accurate figures are probably hard to determine because all evictions are not necessarily reported. There have been some, only a very few, mind you, but probably a few because if you felt that you were going to get evicted, that might temper your desire to file a complaint. Certainly, over the past year there have been at least three cases where people have come forward and said that they felt that they were evicted because they had filed a complaint against the landlord.

Hopefully, the changes that are in this act will remove that fear, and people, if they have a legitimate complaint, will feel comfortable in filing that complaint knowing that that won't result in an eviction notice coming their way.

So those are really the questions that I noted in second reading, and with that we'll see if there are any more coming forward in committee this afternoon. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to join in this debate in Committee of the Whole for Bill 16, the Residential Tenancies Act. Next to maintenance enforcement I think many of us serving in this House get a very high number of calls on renters and owners and the issues that come around this, so it's nice to see a revisit and an updating and a revamp of the Residential Tenancies Act.

This is an important act to a lot of people because it gives them a context for their homes and helps them gain some understanding and some stability knowing what the rules are about how everyone is supposed to conduct themselves, and that's critical. We're talking about where people live, where they need to feel safe, where they go after work. It's their sanctuary. So there needs to be an ability for people to feel that there's fairness in the system, that they can get a hearing, that the rules are such that they're there to protect them but that there are also some expectations, some responsibilities built into the process.

To be honest with you, I think both parties that tend to be involved in these, that being the landlord and the tenant, are equally capable of creating tremendous disruption in the other party's life. It can be very disruptive and certainly perceived as unfair, although it's perfectly legal, by a good tenant to get the three months' notice that they have to vacate. You know, they didn't want to vacate. They may have been perfectly happy to live in that location for an extended period of time, for years to come, but for whatever reason the landlord wants the space, and with the 90 days' notice on a monthly rental they're able to give notice to vacate and have the tenants get out.

On the other side of things are tenants that don't take care of the place. They vacate, and you go in and go: "Oh, my goodness. It's hard to believe anyone could make such a mess out of a place in such a short period of time." So each party can certainly create a great deal of disruption and heartache and financial difficulty for the other.

There are a couple of areas in particular that seem to come up for my tenants. One is the disposal of property. For many of them, often with mental health issues underlying whatever other issues are bubbling on the surface, it's very difficult for them to find another place to live. Disposal of their property, which, frankly, can be in a couple of black garbage bags – nonetheless, that's the only property they have. They need to know or want to believe that it's going to be cared for until they can come and pick it up. So any ability to do that is appreciated.

I do see changes that are contemplated here, but that's mostly around making it easier for landlords to dispose of property. I often get heartbreaking calls in the constituency office from people who found their belongings in the alley. They'd been put in the garbage. I wish there was some way that we could deal with that in a way that was a bit more helpful to people.

Part of what I like in this updating of the Residential Tenancies Act is that it is contemplating not forcing people to end up in court to resolve their disputes. The truth of the matter is that many people don't bother going to court. They just give up. They walk away and they say: "Okay. Forget it. I lost money there. I learned a lesson. I'll never make that mistake again." And hopefully they don't. It seems to a large degree that it's not the individual landlords, the people that own one house with a main floor suite and an upper suite, that tend to go to court. It tends to be the larger companies that have large apartment buildings or the walk-ups, and they're in the business of this. They have lawyers on retainer, and off they go.

I think there's an inherent problem in what's been set up here, and it's partly to do with the work that's being contemplated by the Member for Calgary-Currie; that is, if we are looking to try and resolve some of the housing difficulties that we have, particularly in the larger metropolitan areas of Edmonton and Calgary but also, I think, in some centres like Grande Prairie and Fort McMurray, Red Deer possibly, Lethbridge, where we're trying to get more housing possibilities for people, part of that is around the secondary suites. A lot of them exist; very few of them are legal and are acknowledged as legal.

As we try and draw these people out and get these suites to be legal, to conform to building codes and fire codes and things like that so that people are safe where they live – again, part of what I started out talking about; we want people to feel safe in their own homes – those secondary suites tend to be in individual houses. We're talking about what I would call the small landlord, not that they're small in stature in any way but that they're dealing with a small number or limited number of rental accommodations. We're not talking large companies that have, you know, hundreds or thousands of rental units. It's these smaller landlords that we're trying to I think offer the option of not having to go to court but trying to set it up so that they can make use of the mediation/arbitration service that is the new addition to this act and is contemplated by what's in this act.

There is a problem that has been transferred and brought forward from the other act that I would like to have the sponsoring member look at. A couple of issues here. One, if we're going to be setting up an arbitration/mediation service through the landlord and tenant act – "an alternative dispute resolution mechanism" is how it's referred to in the act, and this is under section 70, I think – I'm making a plea here that we pay the mediators and arbitrators a reasonable amount of money so that we get professional people doing this job.

Mr. MacDonald: I can't do it?

Ms Blakeman: No.

Let's face it. If we're trying to move this into a legitimate process that is to be regarded as an alternative to court, we have to take this seriously. At this point, given that it takes literally thousands of dollars to become qualified as a mediator in particular, to expect somebody to work for several hours for $50 is not reasonable.

Frankly, I think it shows that we're not taking this process seriously.

I know that in some of the other areas that have been set up and changed through amending legislation in this Assembly, recently coming through the Justice minister, there have been higher charges in small claims court, for example, hoping that people will shift over to a mediator. But, you know, it's two hours' worth of work for $50. People are supposedly being charged $100 for small claims court so that that'll pay for that service. Well, it's just not taking this seriously. So I'm putting in a plea that we pay these mediators what they're worth, and frankly at this point a going rate for a very reasonably priced mediator would be in the $150 an hour range because there is an expectation that they're coming prepared, so there is prep time that's considered inside of that hourly rate.

I mean, let's put this in context. If we're talking about going to court and the cost of the courtroom and the CAPS officers and the judge and the lawyers and the lights on in the building, we're certainly talking significantly more than $150 an hour. So let's balance this against what it could cost us if people end up in court, what it costs the taxpayers to support that system. If we're going to want people to use an alternative dispute mechanism, then we've got to be willing to invest at least a reasonable percentage of that amount of money into it.

What I see here is that there is a timing problem specifically. Where my concern arises is out of section 30 of Bill 16, and that's the carry-over. Specifically, it's section 30(3). It's talking:

If a landlord terminates a tenancy by serving a notice under subsection (1) and the tenant has not vacated the premises by the time and date set out in the notice, the landlord may within 5 days after the termination date apply to a court for an order confirming the termination of the tenancy and for any remedy that may be granted under section 26.

What happens here for most of these what I'm calling smaller landlords is let's say that they have a situation where somebody doesn't pay their rent. Okay; fine. By the time you get to them and say, "You haven't paid your rent," there's a good intention that people, in fact, want to stay there. Okay; fine. They're going to try and find the money, borrow it, get a second job, whatever. They'll try and come up with the money. Well, at a certain point it becomes clear that they're not, and you as the landlord go and serve the notice of the 14-day eviction notice on them.

This is where the timing problem starts to come in. At the end of the 14 days you go back to the individuals, and they go, "Yeah, sorry; we really wanted to stay, but we just can't come up with the money, and since we can't, we understand that we're under an eviction order, and we'll get out right away now." Okay; fine. Then you find out two or three or four or five days later that, in fact, they didn't leave. You may not necessarily live close enough or be able to go and visit to find out that the tenants did not vacate. You've now passed that five-day portion, and everything you've done up to now is null and void.

Well, you only make that mistake once. Henceforth you will always make sure that you get all the court documents in place and you enforce them rigorously right off the bat. That's where you create that animosity, that hostile environment that you didn't need to do.

I question why the five days is there. We've gone back and asked the department what the reasoning is behind it, and the reasoning we were given was: it was in the other bill. Well, that's not very helpful. But it had to do with the required three days' notice that the court requires plus the anticipation of over a weekend. That's giving you the five days.

My point is: why do you need the limitation of the five days at all? If the landlord has already gone to the work of getting the 14-day notice and they've served it on the people, at any point that they discover that the people didn't leave, they should be able to then go to court and make use of the court to force the eviction of the people. But when you enforce that five days, it just means the landlord has to go to court right away. They can't take advantage of any option to wait to try and work it out with their tenants and use any kind of alternative dispute mechanism. Why bother? They just immediately go straight to the court because they're not going to lose that money.

I mean, part of the other thing that's coming into play here is that as soon as you're going to go and file in court, it's going to cost you more money. So as a smaller landlord you're out the rent money at this point. Who knows? You may be out the damage deposit if there was, you know, substantial cleaning to happen or any damage that happened, and now you're having to consider an additional $100. So, of course, you're going to hesitate. Of course, you're going to work with the tenants and try and get them to leave or get them to come up with the money, which means they're going to continue their tenancy; right?

But as soon as you put that limitation of the five days on them, they have to act, and they have to act inside of that court system. It forces them into the court system rather than giving them the time to try and work it out with their tenant and take advantage of any kind of alternative dispute mechanism that can be made available to them.

I hope I've been able to lay this argument out. It does get complicated and tedious, and I apologize for that. But I think that if we are talking about a situation where we're trying to draw out people that have suites in their houses or own one or two single-family detached residences where there are some suites in there, we're trying to offer an alternative dispute mechanism to them, and we're trying to get these secondary suites legitimate, on the books so to speak.

We need to recognize the situations where we're forcing average Albertans into a hostile environment, where they will go to the courts first because they've learned their nasty lesson and they're not going to get ripped off that money again. Let's face it. For many smaller landlords that $1,000 or $1,500 is a significant amount of money, and they don't want to be out that money. But when you squish them in with that five-day requirement, they don't want to have to go back and start all over again, and if they don't act, then they lose the option of being able to have the courts help them. They're going to go for the courts. They're going to go for that more hostile environment.

I think that's not the attempt that's being considered here. It's giving those smaller landlords the option of being able to work with their tenant to give everybody the opportunity to take advantage of noncourt proceedings, using the courts as the last resort rather than as the first resort. But you only make those mistakes a couple of times before you start going, "I don't have any more options as a small business owner," if you want to call an individual landlord that, before they're going to be forced into that situation of using the courts first. Well, that totally takes away any possible option of using an alternative dispute mechanism because that's to come before they go into court.

So I'm asking the sponsor of the bill to have a look at the situation that's being created here because I don't think that's what, in fact, he was anticipating. I think the purpose of this bill is to try and promote an alternative dispute mechanism, not to reinforce a situation that's making it almost impossible to take advantage of it.

I think the government needs to understand that they're forcing people to be hard-hearted here. It's that situation I talked about where the landlord feels that they've been ripped off. They're not going to get into that situation again. They don't see any other possibility, and then they're forced into this: if you don't act within five days, then everything you've done is wasted and you have to start over again. At that point, you're contemplating losing another month's rent. Most people don't want to be hard-hearted. Individuals tend to avoid that kind of conflict wherever they can, and I'm sure they would prefer to.

Of course, tied up with all of this is the whole idea of being able to draw out those people that have illegitimate secondary suites and try and get them on the books and legitimize those secondary suites so that we can bring them under the building code, the fire code, and make more public the housing alternatives that are possible, especially in the larger cities.

So that's the issue that I wanted to raise at this point in this bill. I will look forward to a response from the member, and if he's willing to work with me, maybe we can return another day with some kind of an amendment to the bill, because I would certainly like to see that done. It's possible, and I think that it's following with what's anticipated in the spirit of what's being brought forward by the amending bill. I think there are lots of golden opportunities here, and I don't want to see them missed for timing, so I'm more than willing to work with the sponsoring member on this. Thank you for the opportunity to bring the issue to light.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In regard to Bill 16, the Residential Tenancies Act, this afternoon I would like to express my gratitude to the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for his answers to my earlier questions at second reading of this bill. Certainly, that clarified some of the questions I had in regard to this legislation, and I appreciate that.

At committee here I have a few more questions for the hon. member, Mr. Chairman. In regard to section 2(2)(c) what protection does a tenant of a boarding house have that's different than what's offered in this act, if any? I would be interested to get an answer to that. Certainly, those individuals have not been overlooked, but if the member could clarify that, I would be very grateful.

Now, Mr. Chairman, section 3(2):

If a residential tenancy agreement is in writing, the agreement must contain the following statement in print larger than the other print in the agreement:

The tenancy created by this agreement is governed by the Residential Tenancies Act and if there is a conflict between this agreement and the Act, the Act prevails.

That's in writing in the agreement if there is a written agreement. Surely that will not be overlooked or ignored by tenants or landlords.

But I think we would be better served – and I'm presenting this to the House and for the hon. member to consider. When we're discussing the appointment of a director in section 55, it reads currently: "In accordance with the Public Service Act there may be appointed a Director of Residential Tenancies and any other officers and employees required for the administration of this Act." Well, I would like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we strike out "may" and replace it with "shall."

Certainly, we're not creating a bureaucracy here, but I think this must be done if we are as concerned as I think every hon. member of this House is in reducing the number of individuals, whether they be landlords or tenants, that wind up in court. As we said earlier, there are about 6,000 cases annually that go through the court system involving landlord and tenant issues. We heard from the previous hon. member in regard to the alternate dispute mechanism that has been proposed. Well, I think this would strengthen that. If we had this director and that director were listed, if it was mandatory in the written agreement that the office and the contact information of that director was available, both landlords and tenants would be better served. Questions from both parties could be directed to this individual.

I certainly think that we can afford to provide this service to both landlords and tenants. Whenever we look at some of the other consumer advocates that have been proposed, they're now being financed through other measures for Government Services. I'm not suggesting in any way that there be some sort of fee to pay for this office, a tax. I'm saying that we should have this because there are significant savings to be had if we can reduce the number of cases that may go through the court system. That's just one example. I put this forward for the hon. members in the Assembly at this time to consider, but it certainly would be two amendments, an amendment to section 55 and a careful wording to direct consumers, or tenants and landlords, to this office for questions they may have not only concerning this act but their lease. I think those are improvements to this bill, and we can work together to make it effective.

Thank you.

4:30

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to take this opportunity to enter debate on Bill 16, the Residential Tenancies Act, while it's in debate in the Committee of the Whole.

This is a fairly extensive and important bill. Looking at the government news release on it, I certainly agree with the intentions that are outlined in the news release. This replaces the existing act, and the new act, of course, includes lots of amendments to the act that it replaces. It says that the changes – they shouldn't be called amendments – from the previous act to the new act strike a stronger balance between the rights and responsibilities of landlords and tenants and create a framework for voluntary alternative methods for them to resolve disputes, that the bill also provides clearer language. That's the claim that's made.

Now, with respect to using alternative dispute resolution measures on a voluntary basis, I think it's a good thing. I think that the relations between landlords and renters can become difficult and can be problematic. Certainly, the option of the voluntary alternative dispute resolution mechanism is a good way to bring the parties together and have a third party through arbitration or mediation help them to resolve. This will, hopefully, reduce the costs for any conflicts that need resolution and may also expedite the settlement of the dispute.

But the devil is in the detail. Much of the detail with respect to how these alternative dispute resolution mechanisms will work will not become clear until such time as the regulations are available. Those regulations at present are not available. They will be developed by the minister after the bill is passed. It's difficult to pass judgment on the degree to which this option that this bill opens for tenants and landlords to exercise for the resolution of disputes will work, but it's probably an improvement over what we've had available in the past.

I'm curious about the statement that it strikes a stronger balance between the rights and responsibilities of landlords and tenants. I wonder what the word "stronger" stands for here. We certainly need to improve the balance, and I don't know in which direction the balance is tilted. The balance either goes one way or the other or comes towards the centre, where things are appropriately balanced. So I'm not entirely sure how the provisions of this bill will strike a new balance which will be stronger on both sides.

That raises the question of what kind of balance the legislation that is in existence until this proposed legislation passes and replaces it strikes between the rights and responsibilities of landlords. It's an open question. It begs the question, actually, of whether the bill that's currently in place either sort of struck a weaker balance or had an imbalance in terms of how it provided for the rights and responsibilities of landlords and tenants. It would be helpful if the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti would address this question in his response to the comments that I'm making here.

I'm just curious as to what the problem was with the previous bill with respect to the balance in the relations between the rights and responsibilities of landlords and tenants as seen by the hon. minister responsible for the bill and its enforcement.

So those are sort of general questions.

The legislation that Bill 16 will replace is an act of this Legislature that has been in place since 1979, certainly a period of 25 years, more or less. It was amended in '92, but the amendment was never proclaimed for some reason, so the present bill will repeal the original act and replace it with Bill 16.

Many things have changed from the original act. First, it provides the framework for alternative dispute resolution, and, as I said, the details are not available at this stage. We'll have to await those details until the time when the regulations are made public.

The second element of it is that the landlord's right to terminate under breach of contract has a parallel for tenants – so that may be the reference to the balance – that both tenants and landlords now can give notice of termination under breach of contract provisions.

The third element in the bill is in terms of when a substantial breach happens. The definition of habitable is replaced with the minimum housing standards as per the Public Health Act. I think that's an improvement. It doesn't leave the whole question of the definition of what's habitable up in the air, and it ties it to the minimum housing standards as per the Public Health Act.

The fourth element, according to the government's own version of what this bill tries to do, is that it gives the landlord the power to evict within 48 hours in case of assault. Here the provisions of the bill, I guess, include not only the incidence of the assault itself but the threats of assault. It can be quite problematic whose word prevails. How does one prove the threat of assault or not and whether or not the threat of assault as legal grounds to seek eviction can work as and when the relations between a tenant and a landlord are themselves plagued by a history of difficulties?

So the bill, I think, has certainly some positive features to it. It will provide some improvements over what's been the case in the past. The difficulty is that some other provisions of the bill such as the terms under which a landlord can end the tenancy, which were problematic for tenants under the old act, are still problematic under this act. I by no means want to underestimate the difficulty that the landlords may have in some cases and, on the other hand, tenants may have with respect to the reasons that either side may want to use for dissolving the contract for purposes of eviction or for walking away from the contract.

There is a problem in the case of threat of assault. The difficulty with documentation – how does one ascertain whether or not a threat of assault was, in fact, real and can be determined to be real? – makes this area of tenant/landlord relationships problematic.

The alternative dispute resolution mechanism of this bill I think is a step in the right direction, but I wish the minister had provided some draft regulations for the House to be able to assess this provision. Unfortunately, that isn't there, so it's very difficult to continue to talk about it in the abstract, not being able to really sort of put one's finger on what may or may not work as part of the proposal to introduce these alternative dispute resolution mechanisms.

Some other observations, Mr. Chairman, have to do with some of the sections of the act. Section 28(2)(b) would provide that landlords can be noncompliant with the Public Health Act if they give notice in writing to tenants as to why they cannot do the necessary repairs to the suite. Perhaps now this could carry on indefinitely, and that's a concern.

Section 30. Damage, physical assault, and threats are criminal actions which should have to be documented by police at all times. This has never been the case, and now the threat of assault has been added to this. So this makes it a your word against mine kind of situation, and this bill doesn't change that very much.

So those are a few of the observations that I at the moment want to make, Mr. Chairman. I think the bill has some positive points to it but leaves unaddressed some other matters which have been contentious and difficult in the past. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity to add a few comments on the record in regard to Bill 16, Residential Tenancies Act. Let me premise my remarks by saying that I totally support this legislation and congratulate the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti for sponsoring it.

Mr. Chairman, early in my legal career I had the opportunity to practise in the area of landlord and tenant law, and I've represented both landlords and tenants. When it comes to disputes that revolve around these matters, let me say that it is quite a difficult area to practise in. There is an old adage that a man's home is his castle, and if you've ever attempted to disentitle a person of his residential premises, you know how difficult these matters can be.

So I applaud Bill 16 specifically when it comes to the alternative dispute resolution mechanisms. As a former practising lawyer I say unequivocally that the court system is not the right place for residential tenancy disputes to be aired. Mr. Chairman, the court system is time consuming, it's expensive, and it often results in little satisfaction to the parties to the dispute. Parties can spend thousands of dollars in legal fees arguing over a rental property when the subject matter might be a rental payment of as little as $500 to $700 per month. When you add on to that a $200 filing fee to file an originating notice of motion, it becomes very cost prohibitive to attempt to resolve these matters in a court of law.

I think the big highlight of Bill 16 is the alternative dispute resolution mechanisms. Mr. Chairman, I'm aware that extensive consultation took place with both landlords and tenants on how exactly residential tenancy disputes are currently resolved. I think both parties were quite unanimous that the courts can be intimidating and, as I indicated, costly and also very time consuming. Neither landlords nor tenants viewed the courts as an appropriate mechanism for these types of disputes that typically arise between them.

The reason was, as I indicated, the small sums of money that are often being fought over. Pursuing the cost of these in terms of legal fees, where you have lawyers charging in excess of $200 per hour, will easily exceed the amount of arrears that are owing when a tenant is in default of his obligations pursuant to a tenancy act.

This will leave the disputes unresolved and participants dissatisfied with their present dispute, and as a result alternatives must be offered to the court-based system to solving these disputes. Mr. Chairman, even when a judge rules, it not always clear how that decision was reached. Participants will have a more direct process if the process involves mediation than by the decision of a judge, which the participants will view as being arbitrary and often unfair.

Mr. Chairman, the residential tenancy disputes that go to court often make inefficient use of valuable court resources. They would be better used for other matters of disputes that are more amenable to the court process. I'm advised by Government Services that approximately 6,000 residential tenancy disputes appear before our courts in any given year. Clearly, I think we all agree that if we can divert many if not most of those disputes away from the court system, it will be for everybody's benefit.

It's important to note that alternative dispute resolution as proposed in Bill 16 is optional; it is not mandatory. The efficacy or the value of any alternative dispute resolution depends upon the willingness of its participants to participate fully and to go into the mediation process with a co-operative attitude, that they're going in there for the purpose of resolving their dispute, not just for the purpose of putting in face time. Often the mediation process in any alternative dispute resolution process will break down, Mr. Chairman, and on those occasions it is important that litigants or potential litigants still have access to the courts and still have access to court remedies.

Bill 16 allows both landlords and tenants the opportunity to pursue the courts for orders for possession or to get out of their tenancy obligations should mediation processes not work or for whatever reason not be appropriate. But based on research, Mr. Chairman, ADR, or alternative dispute resolution, mechanisms are typically cheaper, faster, and less formal than a court-based process. Alternative dispute resolutions as being discussed would be voluntary. Nothing would prohibit either party from choosing the court if they feel that is their best option. In fact, both parties must agree to opt for ADR.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Ministry of Government Services is working with landlords, tenants, and the court services division of Alberta Justice to determine the ideal ADR process for Alberta for residential tenancy disputes. Residential tenancy disputes are being addressed in other provinces and jurisdictions, including New Zealand, and the Ministry of Government Services intends to adopt a system of ADR that will best work both for Alberta and, specifically, for residential tenancy disputes. So I wholeheartedly endorse the ADR model for resolving disputes between landlords and tenants.

I think that a number of other items in Bill 16 warrant mention. The voluntary code of practice, I believe, Mr. Chairman, is a great idea. Most landlords and tenants are not familiar with legalese. They often find the act to be somewhat overwhelming in terms of technology and in the terms that are familiar to lawyers and judges. To have the voluntary code of practice written in plain language will be a benefit to both residential tenants and to residential landlords.

The term "habitable," which was under the old act, is a vague concept, and much legal dispute and argument has been written and argued about exactly when a premises is, in fact, habitable. The new definition that a premises meet minimum housing standards is necessarily a progressive and needed step. I think that more certainty of what is a minimum housing standard specifically as it relates to the Public Health Act is more predictable, and landlords will be able to determine what their obligations are with more specificity than the more vague concept of making a premises habitable.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I think the mirror provisions that allow a tenant to terminate on 14 days' notice for a substantial breach is also a positive step. Typically and historically landlords were able to breach for a substantial breach by a tenant, but now tenants are offered mirror provisions, and I think that puts landlords and tenants on a more equal and level playing field and provides more fairness and more certainty to the system of landlord/tenant relations.

So with that, I will take my seat, and I encourage members on all sides of the House to support Bill 16.

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to answer some of the questions, and then I would be adjourning debate to deal with another question that came up that we need clarification on.

Regarding boarding houses, maybe you might have to be a senior citizen like myself to even know what a boarding house is, but my definition of a boarding house would be no different than any other tenancy except that traditionally you're getting room and board or getting meals with your tenancy in a boarding house, I think. So I think that a boarding house is no different than any other residential tenancy, and the rules would apply, as far as I'm concerned.

The paragraph or the clause that deals with the act prevailing I think is self-explanatory and quite clear in that if you sign an agreement where the landlord says, "Well, just sign this; it says that I can raise your rent once a week if I want to," no, I'm sorry. The act prevails, and the act lays out very clearly the notification that you require to raise the rent and how often you can do that in a year, et cetera, et cetera.

The code of practice that will be developed will, as mentioned, be extremely useful to both landlords and tenants. In that code of practice I am sure that there will be much reference to the new director's position with web sites, phone numbers, 1-800 numbers, whatever, that will clearly explain to both landlords and tenants that if there's an issue that they need clarification on, the director will be available to give those answers, and there will be clear direction on how to get hold of the director.

The question on section 30(3), (4), and (5), dealing with court orders and five days' notice, et cetera, if someone hasn't moved out, is the question we want to deal with some more. I would ask for more time to answer that question.

With that, I would adjourn debate for today. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 13 and report progress on Bill 16.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports Bill 13. The committee reports progress on Bill 16.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 4:56 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 9, 2004

Date: 2004/03/09

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order. For the benefit of those who are in the gallery, this is the informal part of the Legislative Assembly. It's Committee of the Whole, where you're allowed to go through a bill item by item and members are allowed to move around quietly to other places and converse. So if you've got a map of where everybody is, they may or may not be in the place that they appear to be.

Before we begin, I wonder if we might have the committee's approval to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm very lucky tonight. I have two introductions to make, two different groups. First of all, I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Jay Ball, who is the president of Junior Achievement of Northern Alberta and Northwest Territories. He's here in the public gallery with nine visitors. They are the staff, volunteers, and students of Junior Achievement. I would ask them all to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

My second set of introductions – I'm always very excited when we have parents of students in our school systems come to see us. I have a number of parents to introduce. These are all parents from Lendrum elementary. First of all, there's Kathleen Marta, who's the parent of two children attending Lendrum elementary and the co-chair of the Lendrum parents school council. Greg Falkenstein is a parent of two children also at Lendrum; Sherri-Lyn Lane, also with two children at Lendrum; Kathy Okamura, with a child in Avalon junior high and a child in Victoria composite high school in my riding of Edmonton-Centre; and finally, Susan O'Neil, who's the parent of two children at Lendrum and also the editor of Commission Watch and an active member of Action for Education. All of these parents are present in the gallery as part of the Education Watch initiative. They're concerned about the quality of education their children are currently receiving and about funding for public education. Thank you very much. Please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. On behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members here in the Legislature the Connors Hill Boy Scouts. They are accompanied this evening by their group leader, Lee Loewen. They are seated in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask that they all stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this point I'm happy to support the government in the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, that's been brought forward. The minister and I went through it in a fair amount of detail during second reading, and I had put forward some questions which I'm hoping the minister will answer during Committee of the Whole. I'm fairly certain that he'll be able to answer those questions, and if all appears in order at the end of that, I'm happy to support this bill passing through Committee of the Whole. I'm pleased to see it, and I look forward to the comments from the minister.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would be delighted to answer the questions. I had actually gone through Hansard with respect to the speech made by the hon. member on Thursday at second reading to determine whether in fact there were things that needed to be answered. As I interpreted the comments, it was an interpretation of my legal language to her lay language, and I didn't find any questions to answer. So I'd be happy to answer them if she would put them again in clear language for me.

Ms Blakeman: It's not necessary. I'm now remembering. No, that's exactly what I did, attempted to unlegalize the language. I think that according to the feedback loop that we've had in the community, everything that's being proposed appears to be acceptable, and I'm happy to support the bill that the minister has brought forward.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise and add a few comments on the record as they relate to Bill 10, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

This bill, as sponsored by the Attorney General and Minister of Justice, amends a number of justice statute amendments including the Court of Queen's Bench Act, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, and the Judicature Act. I fully support all of the amendments that are being proposed to these respective acts, but I would like to focus on the latter, the Judicature Act, and make a few comments regarding what I think are some very much-needed and valuable improvements to that act.

As many of my colleagues are aware, prior to becoming a member of this Assembly, I practised as a lawyer and spent a lot of time doing insurance and automobile-type cases. So I have some experience with the issue of settlements and would like to make a few comments on the proposed structured settlements as they are proposed in Bill 10, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

The Attorney General in his comments on second reading quite accurately pointed out that large lump-sum settlements which are awarded following litigation can prove to be problematic in that occasionally an individual for a variety of reasons is unable to manage that large settlement of funds, and they find themselves after a not-too-long period of time to be completely without funds because the funds have been extinguished through poor financial planning or through poor investment choices or for a variety of other reasons. It is for these reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I submit, as the Attorney General said at second reading, that structured settlements can be very beneficial to the plaintiff following a successful court application.

But I submit to this House that structured settlements can also be favourable to the other side of the equation, that being the defendant or the person actually paying the settlement. When a large lump-sum payment is made pursuant to a judgment, that settlement or that award will ultimately be subject to taxation in terms of the income-earning portion of the large settlement, and it will also be subject to inflation. Now, in order to make these large lump-sum payments inflation proof and to index them for future taxation consequences, it's necessary to build in what we call a tax gross up as part of the ultimate settlement. This tax gross up is a cash payment that's paid by the defendant or, in most cases, the insurer for the defendant and actually increases the cost of the actual payment.

So by spreading out the payment over a period of years, the periodic payment or, as they're referred to colloquially, the structured settlement actually reduces the financial obligation of the defendant or, in most cases, his insurer.

Members will recall last summer and fall when amendments were being proposed to the Insurance Act that many options were being bandied about to try to bring down insurance premiums and costs to the insurers. Structured settlements, or periodic payments over time, was one consideration that was put forward. This is one of the considerations that actually received the endorsement of both the plaintiff bar and the Insurance Bureau of Canada. The reason for that is quite simple. By allowing defendants or in most cases their insurers to pay structured settlements or periodic payments over time, it ultimately reduces the costs that they will have to pay.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I certainly endorse Bill 16. I think the structured settlement addition to the Judicature Act will help plaintiffs who receive lump-sum settlements manage their funds in a responsible manner and will allow defendants and their insurers to plan for making periodic payments over time and, ultimately, at less cost to them.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 10 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2004

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise this evening to make some comments about some of the clauses in Bill 15.

It's interesting in the sense that the original bill, the Fiscal Responsibility Act, has been in place for about one year, and already we're seeing changes in the level of transferability of dollars in and out of the sustainability fund. I guess the question that comes up there is: are we going to be doing this on a regular basis? You know, when we discussed the idea of a stability fund, a sustainability fund, over the last two or three years, there was always this projection and this idea that the act itself should be almost self-modifying in the sense that it would not be subject to being changed one session and then go back the next session and go back the next session to meet the needs.

We had proposed that instead of having a particular dollar amount for that transfer, it should be based on a moving average so that it trended with the changes over time in our natural resource royalties, so that as they trended up, the amount we transferred into the general revenue fund would trend up. If it started to trend down over two or three years, the average would move it down so that we would end up reducing the amount that was transferred in and out of that sustainability fund.

The idea there is that it doesn't become a political issue, that you deal with changing it up one year and down the next either to suit expenditure needs or to suit expectations of change in the natural resource revenue. By using that average, you know, when it's going up, you've got more to put into because you're putting the residual into the sustainability fund. When you're going down, you're taking a little bit out of the sustainability fund so that the actual expenditures that you have on a year-to-year basis don't change quite as much.

So I guess what this really does is just say that the fears we had or the concerns we had about the bill last year when it was brought in – we said that we need to have a mechanism in there. Rather than just putting a dollar value in, you know, the 3 and a half billion dollars that was put into it, we need to have a formula built into it so that it does not become subject to political whims on a given year.

I have no problem with the idea that we're actually going to be moving more money out of the natural resource revenues into general revenue so that we can use it for programs, because we're seeing our natural resource revenues going up. So the fact that you're putting more money into the general revenue fund I think is a good idea. The concern I've got is that, you know, this leaves it open again to year-by-year-by-year guesses about what it's going to be rather than building it off a trend or a historic level of natural resource revenues.

So I think that it's probably too much to ask the government to approve something so complicated as that in an amendment, but they should be thinking about it so that we end up in other years not having to deal with those kinds of annual changes in the transferred amount. You know, we did suggest an amendment last year that would put in a formula. It was rejected, so there's no real reason to put it in again this year just to have it rejected again.

If we look at the next set of amendments, I guess I have some real questions for the minister on what is section 4(a), the amendment there. They're changing the wording of that section of the act to deal only with nonrenewable resource revenues; in other words, only our oil and gas revenues, coal, revenues from all of the natural resource that are nonrenewable. But in the act last year they had actual revenues.

Now, I guess what this does is lead me to question why they're allowing for variability only in our natural resource revenues. The way I read the act now is if, let's say, from one year to the next we have exactly the same natural resource revenue, there would be no change in the operation, flow in or flow out, of the sustainability fund. But if we're in a particular economic cycle – Mr. Chairman, I think we probably will see that this year because our agriculture income in this province is probably going to be down this year, whereas our oil industry is still sustainable.

So what we're saying is that that variability in the potential revenues of the province from changes in income tax or business tax or any of the other taxes that are associated with the non natural resource industries – if they go up and down, we can't adjust the sustainability fund to deal with those changes in revenues. Why not? To me, that's one of the critical things that was so good about the way the act was worded before, when we dealt with all of our revenues. What it did was allow for some counterbalance so that if natural resource revenues were up and the non natural resource revenues went down, they'd average each other out. That would help, you know, to mitigate the variability we have in our incomes and our revenues from one year to the next.

But here now we're only allowing the change in dollars going into the sustainability fund or coming out of the sustainability fund to be triggered by the change in the natural resource royalties. So, you know, with our downturn in the ag industry this year because of the BSE crisis, if we had revenue shortfalls this year, we couldn't take money out of the sustainability fund to support education, to support health care, to support our social programs. I find that unconscionable, Mr. Chairman.

We need to make sure that this act serves to sustain our expenditures in all of our programs, all of the commitments that the government makes in a budget at the beginning of the year through that whole year so that we end up with manageable, predictable, reliable commitments to our communities.

Here we're saying that if natural resource revenues don't change, it doesn't matter what happens to any other revenue; we can't take money out of the sustainability fund. That limits the flexibility that we need as a government to sustain our programs. What are we going to tell children out there in our schoolrooms when we have to cut the Learning budget? What are we going to tell individuals needing health care, waiting on a waiting list for an operation, waiting to get into emergency? These people will say: with all that natural resource revenue, why can we not sustain expenditures in our social programs?

So I guess I would suggest that amendment 4(a)(i) really puts a limit on the flexibility that was the whole purpose behind the sustainability fund. If we look at that section, we need to really think about it and figure out whether that's really what the Legislature wants in terms of the operation of the sustainability fund.

Clause 4(b) I think is a good amendment. I think everybody would support this one. Basically, what it says is that if there are increased revenues that come in targeted to a specific program, then we have the right to take those dollars and put them into the program rather than putting them into the residual that then goes into either debt paydown or to the heritage fund. The example we're going to see here probably this year is if there are federal dollars. A number of federal dollars came to support the BSE programs. They were not in the original budget, so if they didn't get included in an amendment like 4(b), we wouldn't be able to spend them. So I think 4(b) is a good amendment. Let's support that one so that when these dollars do come in, they can be used for the purpose for which they were directed.

Section 4(c). I think the way I read that and look at the operation of the fund, I don't really see a lot of problems with it.

Section 4(d) again, I think, is just setting a change in tone of the act, you know, because in effect it's changing "funds required to pay" to "amounts paid or payable". It's kind of saying that governments don't have to pay; they choose to pay. That's, I think, just a tone change in it.

I've got some other concerns that I'd like to raise about section 4(e). I like the intent of this amendment. This amendment basically says that if there's a settlement agreement to be reached with a First Nation community over a claim, whether it's a land claim, whatever it is, then we can take the dollars out of the sustainability fund for that claim. I think that's great because that's an unplanned contingency. We need to have dollars to do it.

But let me ask a question then, and we'll know this in a couple of weeks when we see next year's budget. Does that mean that the normal line item that's in the budget every year for land claim settlements will be removed? If we're going to have a line item in the budget under the ministry of aboriginal affairs, then why have this clause in the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act to deal with land claim settlements that are unplanned? So I think that this is something that we need to look at, because what we're in effect going to say is that we've got the option to pay them out of two different places in the budget.

Remembering back to our Financial Administration Act that a minister has the prerogative to move items from one line to another line within their ministry, in effect the Legislature passes a budget saying that so many dollars will be in the minister's budget for the cost of claim settlements with First Nation communities, and then if we get a claim and the minister wants to take that money and use it in a different program, that can be done. Then they can go to the sustainability fund and bring money out for the claim. So in effect there are two sources of money to settle that one demand. I think that we need to make sure that when the budget comes down – I think it's scheduled for the 23rd now.

An Hon. Member: The 24th.

Dr. Nicol: The 24th? Thank you.

We make sure that that line item is not in the budget so that we have those options clarified. We're either going to use the sustainability fund for these unplanned contingencies like land claim settlements or any other First Nation settlement agreement or we're going to use line items in the budget the way we have in the past. We shouldn't be allowing for either/or options to spend money as a government.

I guess the other thing that I just want to do kind of in conclusion is give an overall tone to how I see these fitting now with the Financial Administration Act and some of the other legislation that's on the books for our province. As I look through and read this new formatting for the sustainability fund, the separation of natural resource revenues from all revenues, and go back to our tax increase legislation where we have in the laws of this province that no tax increase will be enacted without a referendum, what I'm seeing here is a very limited amount of expenditure that we can make out of our natural resources royalties. We have fixed income coming from our non natural resources – in other words, our tax base – yet we have changes in our programs in terms of demand, in terms of budget allocations. Where are we going to get the revenues for those programs if we don't allow for that interplay between the non natural resource revenues and the nonrenewable resource revenues that are limited now by this new amendment 4(a)(i)?

I guess as I work through this and I try to figure out where we're going to get those additional revenues, it becomes quite obvious that the only source of revenue for health or learning or social programs or other expenditures that we have to have because of growth in the demand for those services that is not consistent with the growth of the economy – so if we have a 4 per cent growth in GDP but a 5 per cent growth in Learning, where do we get that extra 1 per cent? User fees? That's basically the only option available to us if we pass this act the way it's worded.

I think it's really critical that we review 4(a)(i) because that's the one that puts the limit on the use of these nonrenewable resources for support of programs. We need to look at that and make sure that it does have an option to move those dollars, because I don't think that we want to end up being a province where the only way we can support growth in our programs is through user fees, growth over and above the normal growth of the economy. Our tax revenues grow in proportion to the growth of the economy, but if any one of our programs grows faster than that, where do we get the money? I'll leave that for the House to decide.

I hope we get a chance to pursue this. I ask for clarification of it. We still have lots of time in this session to fix it up if we want to make a change in it, and I would hope that the minister would look at that as we go through and move forward in trying to make sure that this act really does provide fiscal stability yet allows for the sustainability of our critical programs like health, education, and our social programs for the people of this province.

I will have trouble supporting one of the amendments out of the five that are here. If we could separate them out, to four I'd say yes, but one leaves too many questions to support at this point. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just an opportunity perhaps to speak to some of these issues just raised by the hon. member. I didn't make note of all of them, but he started, I believe, by talking about the increase from $3.5 billion to $4 billion being allowed from resource revenue and the indication that there had been a couple of changes to this act. [interjection] This is the first increase, but it's the second change to the act, I believe.

That's an important note to make, because this Fiscal Responsibility Act, in fact, was brought in a year ago. It was brought in an attempt to provide some stability to fluctuating revenues and provide for the ability to flatten out that revenue stream on the volatile renewable resource side. As the hon. Minister of Finance pointed out in speaking to the bill in second reading, the number wasn't fixed in stone. It essentially was a target that was started, and it was meant to be adjusted over time depending on performance.

One of the things we found is that the sustainability fund has been fully funded more quickly than was anticipated, yet we do have some issues that need to be dealt with with respect to education funding and health funding. In the belief that we can maintain the sustainability over the long term with a $4 billion expenditure as opposed to the $3.5 billion expenditure and still have the sustainability fund in place, it was felt prudent at this time to increase that number.

So far from being a weakness of the bill that we've moved to make that change, it's actually one of the things that might have been contemplated in the Fiscal Responsibility Act when it was first brought in, that this has to be an act and a concept that can be worked with until we find where the appropriate levels are and, of course, working with the fiscal realities of the province over time.

With respect to the amendment that he more particularly referred to with respect to how you calculate nonrenewable resource revenue versus other revenues, this, I believe, is an amendment to actually more accurately reflect the original intention of the policy and the Financial Management Commission, which was embodied in the act before. That is to say that there is an expectation that as the province grows and as income levels grow, income from tax levels that is related to that growth should be available to help support that growth and help support the programs.

So the definition very clearly needs to isolate out the nonrenewable resource revenue as that being the revenue that one is trying to flatten out, not the revenue from other tax sources such as personal income tax or corporate tax. Those tax sources already lag behind growth in the province. It's very difficult already to meet, as the hon. member pointed out, the needs caused by the growth in the economy from the revenue that's derived from that growth. There is a lag time, so we need obviously to have the flexibility, not be constrained by a Fiscal Responsibility Act in tying up those revenues but really making sure that it just ties up the nonrenewable resource revenues that were originally anticipated and contemplated by the act.

I don't believe I heard the hon. member speak to the other provision with respect to First Nations settlements being paid from the sustainability fund, but again I would just briefly speak to that because it is an important section of this act. We already have the flexibility to pay for disasters as declared by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. We have the ability to use funds for capital plan purposes once the limit has been achieved, but one of the areas of difficulty in budgeting – and I know this from my previous existence as minister of intergovernmental and aboriginal affairs – is that you cannot actually budget for land claim settlements, and if you do, you may actually interfere with the negotiation of those settlements. So it is more prudent to have a fund of some sort.

Now, that fund could have been set up by paying monies into the fund over time, but a number of years ago, about 10 years ago, this government moved away from having specific funds for specific purposes. So this is one way of actually having a fund that you can use for that specific purpose, that can be allocated for that specific purpose, and that works better in terms of the accountability process and in the negotiation process. So I would say that that's a very good amendment, and I would ask members to look at it in that light.

The final comment that I'd make is that, really, by having the Fiscal Responsibility Act in this form, in forcing the government to come back to the Legislature if it wants to change the amount, is a good accountability framework in terms of: as this growth in government and, as I said earlier, the demands on government for infrastructure, for the growth that we've seen, whether its roads or hospitals or schools, exceed the supply of funds that is driven by the growth in the economy, there's always going to be that pressure to dip into the resource revenues. Putting in the accountability of having it come back to the Legislature if you ever want to change that number I think is a very, very good accountability structure to have.

So I hope that addresses some of the concerns the hon. member has raised.

Dr. Nicol: The points made with respect to 4(a)(i) in terms of the separation of total revenues from the nonrenewable resource revenues – in listening to the minister, I just realized that the philosophy behind his interpretation of the act and the reason that I assume that we have the act are too different.

He's using the act solely to stabilize revenue. I'm using the act to stabilize a revenue stream in order to sustain expenditures in programs. So I guess that until we come to an agreement over why we have the act, whether it's to sustain our programs as opposed to just smooth out our revenue by separating them out the way we're doing now in 4(a)(i), we in effect say that the only purpose behind this act is to stabilize renewable resource royalties and revenues and not to stabilize all revenues so that we can have stability to sustain expenditures which are locked in by budget.

So I guess that until we realize that there's a broader purpose for the act, we're going to be looking at two different interpretations of it, and we won't come to an agreement.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I'd have to fundamentally disagree with the hon. member. Of course, the purpose of having a sustainability fund is so that you can have the revenue in the future that you need to sustain the programs. That's exactly the purpose of the fund. You take the peaks in resource revenue, and you apply them to future valleys in resource revenue, and in doing so, you sustain the ability to pay for programs that Albertans have come to rely on.

So it's not just a matter of flattening out the revenue. That's easy to do: you just put a number and say that's all you're going to spend, and you put the rest in the account. But the natural consequence of that is either to build assets, which you do by spending those funds on capital, which is necessary to help build growth, or save it so that in the future when you get into the inevitable debt in resource revenue, you have the money to bring back in to sustain the program spending.

Obviously, we agree on the purposes of the bill. I don't understand why we disagree on the amendment.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Chairman, simply because if we truly wanted to do what the member just said, we would try to stabilize all revenues through the stability fund rather than just one component of the revenues. That's the simple interpretation of what the purpose is.

I gave an example in my previous discussion. We are going to see a downturn in income through taxation, especially in the agriculture sector this year, based on the history that we've had. So we're going to be short of revenue in our projections from tax revenue sources. Why not use the stability fund to stabilize that so we can sustain our programs as well?

We're not using the fund to the full extent that we can to create the stability that we want. We're relying only on one component, and right now because we've got an increase in that component from last year to this year, it's going to be easy for us to change from $3 and a half billion to $4 billion in our transfer. What happens if we would not have had the increase in renewable resource revenues that we could do that with? We need to look at all of our revenues as we try for stability, not just one component of them. The act would be much better if we looked at stability over all of our revenues.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, it becomes even more obvious as we listen that we agree more than we disagree, and it's simply a matter of interpretation now. Obviously, nonresource revenues are going to fluctuate as resource revenues do. The significant volatility has always been on the resource revenue side, not on the other side, but there is volatility on the other side as well, and that has to be managed.

Of course, it is the drop in revenue, not just from resources. It's not just a factor of looking at resource revenue in the future to pay for programs. It's looking at all revenue. To the extent that we at some point in time dip below in a three-year business plan in the third year out or as you roll it forward and your projections would show that you go down below the necessary income to sustain the programs, you then have to look at the sustainability of those programs. Instead of taking dramatic drops, you can measure that with the proceeds from the sustainability fund.

But as revenues start to go down, you have to start lowering your expectations and lowering your program spending, not dramatically as we've had in the past but in a measured and sustainable way, and that's what the whole benefit of the sustainability fund is.

So we'll have to agree to disagree on whether this particular section accomplishes that purpose, but it seems obvious to me that we're striving for the same purpose.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Chairman, just on what he said, I agree fully with it, but what's written here won't accomplish that, because it says that we can only trigger movements in and out. It says:

Within the General Revenue Fund amounts may be allocated to and from the . . . Sustainability Fund as follows:

(d) subject to subsection (3), if for a fiscal year.

Now, the amendment says:

(i) actual non-renewable resource revenue exceeds non-renewable resource revenue for fiscal policy purposes.

So the only time we can move money in and out of the stability fund is if there's a change in the renewable resource revenues, not if there's a change in the other revenues, and that's my issue. Why can't we bring money out of the sustainability fund if there's a change in the revenues from the other sources?

The Chair: Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm not quite sure yet whether the two hon. members agree that they disagree or disagree that they agree, but I'm sure that somewhere down the line they disagree about something.

Mr. Chairman, I have some questions for the government. I spoke to this bill at second reading last night and laid out a number of concerns. One of them was that the province's gas revenues were headed for a significant decline as we were faced with declining proven natural gas reserves. While I was contradicted by the Minister of Infrastructure on one point I made, I wasn't contradicted on that point. However, today in question period in dealing with a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, the Energy minister said, "At one time it was felt that Alberta was running out of gas, that we were down to the last nine years of gas reserves." Then he goes on to say: "Well, since that time we've been able to double our production. We now produce over 13 billion cubic feet a day."

The question I have is whether or not, in fact, the proven gas reserves in this province are declining. Perhaps somebody can say what the government's best estimate is and at the current rates of production how long they expect gas revenues to hold stable.

Gas revenues provide the lion's share of the natural resource revenue with which the Alberta government has been blessed, but it should be obvious to anyone that by simply doubling production without changing the rate of discovery, you will increase the depletion of your gas reserves rather than the other way around. So the minister's comments today were quite confusing.

The reason I ask this is because it's apparent to me that this bill, which will increase the amount of nonrenewable resource revenue the government can use for programs by half a billion dollars, from 3 and a half billion dollars to $4 billion, will increase the government's reliance for year-to-year program spending on, essentially, natural gas royalties.

So at a time when we appear to be running out of gas reserves and they provide the lion's share of the nonrenewable resource revenue, the government has instituted two financial policies. One is to decrease the ongoing tax base of the province by over a billion dollars through staged cuts to the corporate income tax, which I believe goes from 15 to 8 per cent, and we are about halfway through that process. As I've mentioned earlier in the House, we were the only party in this Assembly to oppose that direction. At the same time, the government then increases its expenditures by half a billion dollars from resource revenues, from nonrenewable sources. That might be a reasonable approach if, in fact, natural gas revenues were going to be around for the foreseeable future.

So the question is relevant to this bill, and I would really like to know what the government is projecting with respect to its gas reserves and the revenues that they expect to get from them over, say, the next 10 years or so.

The question of land claims came up in the earlier discussion, and I want to ask about the potential liabilities to the fund which might arise out of significant land claims settlements. Is the government expecting to have to dip into this fund in a very substantial way over the next period of time? What's the risk to the fund from land claims settlements? I think we should know that before we vote to use this fund as something that they can dip into to settle those.

With respect to infrastructure has the government considered various options, I guess, apart from P3s to finance infrastructure? Is nonrenewable resource revenue the best place to go for these needs? Has the government considered capital borrowing for that?

That brings me to my last question, which is: what long-term projection does the government actually have for this fund, taking into account all those different aspects? So given the various sources of revenue for the fund, the dependence upon natural gas revenue, the reserves, and then looking at things that will draw on the fund such as land claims, infrastructure, and so on, has the government produced a long-term plan for the fund? Can they predict in a general sense how the fund is going to grow based on what gets put into it and what gets taken out of it? I'm thinking of a five- to 10-year projection.

So I wonder if the hon. Justice minister and Government House Leader could share some responses to those questions.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, with respect to capital and land claims settlements it should be clear that by making it possible to allocate funds from the sustainability fund to pay for capital in the capital plan or to pay for land claims settlements, it doesn't either put an obligation on the fund to do so nor does it make it necessary for government to do so. In other words, if there were a land claims settlement that could be accommodated out of the normal budgeting process or the general revenue fund, it's still open to government to do that. So, presumably, one could do that in the manner that it has been done in the past, which is to normally bring it through as a supplementary estimate in the House.

By settling land claims, one has to look at the ability to pay, and by voting this amendment, one isn't making the fund automatically liable for all future land claims settlements. One still has to go through the affordability process, and one still has to understand what's available to pay the land claims settlement before the land claims settlement is negotiated.

I think I can perhaps say, though, on behalf of the minister of aboriginal affairs that Alberta has had an exemplary record in land claims settlements, so a good number of the claims that needed to be settled have in fact already been settled. There are a modest number of future claims available to be resolved, but there are some. It's not possible, I would submit, to know what obligation may have to be paid.

Remembering that the province's obligation on land claims settlements is the transference of land and the monetary portion that accompanies that is usually a question of clearing up title to land, clearing up leases relative to land, we're not normally talking about huge sums of money in the context that most people would associate with land claims settlements. Hopefully, that clears that particular issue for you.

In terms of the capital borrowing issue the Minister of Infrastructure may wish to speak to this. We have, in fact, three different processes relative to capital now in the province. First of all, we'll have a balance sheet, which we'll be able to put capital assets on, and we have a capital plan, which is a three-year plan, with respect to capital projects, a five-year plan, actually, but three years for business planning purposes. The capital projects in that three-year capital plan can be funded by directed voted capital spending, voted through the budget process, or by allocation of funds that are in the capital fund portion of the sustainability fund or through capital borrowing either in the traditional sense of direct borrowing or through some other alternative financing process such as a P3 or a lease process or others.

So there's the capital plan, there's the capital fund, and there's the capital vote. I think one has to look at them all in context and look at the balance sheet of government to understand that this is a very significant step forward in terms of the capital planning process to make sure that the infrastructure of this province keeps up with the demand of both the economy and the necessity to develop human capital.

Mr. Mason: Thank you for those answers, Mr. Chairman.

I would wonder if the minister did want to tackle the question of declining gas reserves and the impact on nonrenewable revenues flowing into the fund.

Mr. Hancock: Well, that one is actually out of my purview in terms of knowledge about the actual detailed number of gas reserves and gas supply. I am here responding to questions on behalf of the Minister of Finance with respect to this act, so I wasn't anticipating talking about gas supply.

However, I think it is common knowledge that conventional sources of gas and oil are at or near their peak capacity, so we're moving into an innovation age both in our traditional economy and the new economy. In the traditional economy that means that we're looking for gas embedded in coal. It means that we're looking at tertiary recovery. We're looking at a lot of different ways to enhance recovery in the province.

I think we're in good shape for the long term to come with respect to gas production, with respect to oil, whether it's conventional or synthetic or bitumen, and with respect to other ways to extract the natural resources in the commodity basin and enhance them in this province. We can expect to receive a royalty stream from that for a good time to come.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you. I wonder if the minister would undertake to ask his colleague to provide some sort of answer, a little more specific, like one that had numbers in it, for example, perhaps in writing. I think it would be most helpful.

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Chairman, I will certainly undertake to approach the Minister of Energy with respect to a publication that I've seen and that I think is in the public domain and ask him if he would send it over to the opposition.

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that we rise and report bills 10 and 15.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 10 and Bill 15.

The Deputy Speaker: All those who concur in this report, please say aye.

Hon. Members: Aye.

The Deputy Speaker: Those opposed, please say no. The motion is carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 8:56 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 10, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/10

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. From our forests and parkland to our prairies and mountains comes the call of our land. From our farmsteads, towns, and cities comes the call of our people that as legislators of this province we act with responsibility and sensitivity. Grant us the wisdom to meet such challenges. Amen.

Please be seated.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly nine individuals from Ontario participating in the Ontario Legislature internship program. They will be in Edmonton from March 10 to March 13 to meet with government officials, opposition members, and the business community. With us today are eight interns: Michael Acedo, Sarah Baker, Holly Bondy, Melanie Francis, Amanda Mayer, Kate Mulligan, David Myles, Chris Shantz-Smilely. They are accompanied by the director of the program, Dr. Greg Inwood. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them now to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly four Albertans that I had the pleasure of having lunch with today. The lunch was an auction item at the Royal Alexandra Hospital Foundation's Night of Laughs charity event. The Royal Alexandra Hospital Foundation does incredible work to benefit Albertans. It has raised, as I understand it, over $14 million for hospital programs since 1991 and is truly a worthwhile organization.

I'd like to thank each of these gentlemen for their generosity in purchasing this lunch and for the pleasure of their company this afternoon: Barry Stewart, president and owner of Igloo Building Supplies Group; Ravi Kumar, vice-president of finance, Igloo Building Supplies Group; Burke Perry, an owner and partner of Burke Perry Homes; and Bill Davidson, also an owner and partner of Burke Perry Homes. I would like to ask these gentlemen to rise – I see they're already standing – and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly 21 students from the NorQuest College Westmount campus who are studying English as a Second Language. They're here today along with their teacher, Ms Barbara Penner. They're seated in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly David Cournoyer. David is a staff member in the Alberta Liberal Party office. He's a Young Liberal, and he's an enthusiastic student of politics. David is accompanied today by Amanda Caddy. They're in the public gallery, and with your permission I'd ask them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of students. Can you tell me if they're up there in the visitors' gallery? No kids up there? [interjection] Okay. Well, then, that must be my group of kids from the River Glen school in Red Deer.

You know, a lot of MLAs have said: the brightest and the best. Well, we have the brightest and the best in Red Deer as well, and of course that's also known as paradise. So with us here to visit today are eight adults and a class from River Glen school, and I would like to introduce their group leaders Mrs. Janice Dempsey, Mr. Bob Irwin, Mr. Kenton Biffert, Mrs. Gwen Pozzolo, Mrs. Barb Vold-Bowd, Mr. Bill Bowd, Mrs. Derilee Zeibart, Mrs. Monica Janzen, Mrs. Lorraine Irwin, Mrs. Karen Ritchie, and Mrs. Sherry Brock. I'd like to have you join me in welcoming them here today.

The Speaker: Hon. member, I do not believe that they have attended yet.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature a constituent of mine, Mr. Allan Jobson. Allan has worked hard to help injured workers, and he's up in Edmonton to take a course on evidence-based judgment or arbitration or whatever. He told me that that's really a good course. He suggests that probably all MLAs should take evidence-based courses before we say anything. I'd ask him to stand and receive a warm welcome.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I think the honour of having the brightest and best students is mine. We're joined today by 29 students from Ellerslie elementary and junior high school. They are accompanied by teachers Bill Hetherington and parent helpers Mrs. Juanita Bain and Mrs. Gloria Spooner. I would please ask that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Dave Colburn. Mr. Colburn is part of the group People for Education, which supports the Education Watch initiative. He has a daughter who attends Delwood elementary in my constituency, and he is concerned about our public education system. I would ask that he rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Calgary Emergency Health Services

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, in response to concerns I raised yesterday concerning Calgary's emergency services, all the Premier could say was, "Stay tuned," and all the minister could say was: things take time. Well, according to the Motta inquiry, which is already almost a year old, there is no more time. While this government continues to dither, Calgarians have seen wait times increase and services deteriorate. My first question is to the Premier. Given that Calgarians have seen five years of deteriorating emergency services, can the Premier tell us how much longer they will have to stay tuned before the situation improves?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member first of all that we're not dithering, secondly, that we're in constant contact with officials from the Calgary regional health authority and that we take their concerns very seriously.

Mr. Speaker, I have met with the chair, David Tuer. I've met with the CEO, Jack Davis. I've discussed their needs with them. This has been passed on to Treasury Board, certainly to the department of health. We are dealing with the situation as best we possibly can. As the hon. minister of health put it yesterday, these people – and I'm talking about the Liberals – want things done right away; they don't want things done right.

As I explained yesterday, this is a manifestation of economic growth and prosperity. There's no doubt about it. The phenomenal growth that has taken place in Calgary due to the economic policies of this government has put pressure on roads and schools and hospitals. We're dealing with the situation as best we possibly can, but you don't snap your fingers and produce a new hospital or a new emergency ward. These things have to be planned, they have to be financed, and they have to be done properly in the right places and for the right reasons.

So instead of listening to the Liberal carping, we will listen to the officials of the Calgary regional health authority. We will continue to work with them, and we will continue to do things right and for the right reasons.

Dr. Taft: To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that the Motta inquiry indicated a year ago that there was no time to waste, that the alternative to immediate and dramatic improvements was to wait for another death, why has the minister allowed the situation in Calgary to worsen?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has left the impression with this House and in the minds of those who may be listening to this that no action was taken as a result of the Motta inquiry, and that's simply not correct. The Motta inquiry resulted in a number of recommendations made both to the provincial government but also to the regional health authority specifically. There were also recommendations made that would find general application in regional health authorities throughout the province. Recommendations were made with respect to the operation of STARS, the air ambulance service.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the regional health authority has continued to add beds to their facilities in the city of Calgary. They've placed more doctors who are now working in emergency rooms during peak times. The region recently approved a plan to continue to increase the number of beds in the facility. The code burgundies are an internal management tool used by the regional health authority for ensuring that the people who most need a bed in fact get a bed. I think that when people go to emergency, they acknowledge and they recognize that it's not on a first-come, first-served basis. It's based on one's medical need for care. There is, of course, a growing need for these types of services because Calgary is growing at a rather dramatic rate.

Mr. Speaker, the province, regional health authorities throughout the province, STARS, and the regional health authority in Calgary have all responded very positively to the recommendations in the Motta inquiry, and it's because we are concerned about making sure that we have the best health care system that we can have for Albertans. If the hon. member were concerned about the same thing, then he would be addressing his mind to, frankly, matters of less political nature rather than relying on the anecdotal evidence of a letter that he happens to have.

Dr. Taft: Shameful.

Again I ask the same minister: will he do the right thing and call an independent public inquiry into Calgary's emergency services?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we've had an inquiry into the unfortunate circumstances surrounding Mr. Motta's death. One of the recommendations that came out in that inquiry was that when an individual decides to leave an emergency room, they ought to be informing somebody so that they know that they've in fact left.

I don't wish to politicize the unfortunate circumstances surrounding Mr. Motta's death. They were unfortunate. But again to assure the hon. member and all members of this Assembly and Albertans, we are taking every reasonable step necessary to ensure that our emergency services are, in fact, there when Albertans need them.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The draft plan of the government's mental health strategy has been leaked to reporters, and to no one's surprise it reveals serious problems with mental health services in this province. The people of Alberta and especially those with mental illnesses and their families need action from this government. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given the serious problems identified in this draft, is this minister still claiming, as he was earlier this week, that mental health services in Alberta are adequate?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't wish to comment on a draft report, and let me say this: it wasn't leaked. This report was released to the stakeholders who had input into it. We've asked those stakeholders to provide their input to ensure that the comments they have made on a provincial mental health plan, in fact, are reflected in this report. I believe that was about three weeks ago.

So, Mr. Speaker, again, our interest is not in politicizing this issue. We recognize the importance of mental health delivery in this province. We've taken the right steps, and groups like the Canadian Mental Health Association, the Alberta alliance on mental health, regional health authorities have all agreed that our plan to move mental health services into the regions has been a positive step in the right direction. We want to make sure that individuals don't fall through cracks. We're concerned about issues like medications for people who suffer from mental illness and need help.

So, Mr. Speaker, we're moving forward on this plan, but again this is a draft report. I'm not going to comment on the contents of it until it's a final report as established by the stakeholders who had input into it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. To the same minister: given that this government has been transferring patients out of mental health institutions for years and indeed decades, how much longer must Albertans wait for this government to implement its mental health strategy?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the hon. member is referring to when he says that for decades we've been transferring patients. I'm not sure from where to where.

The point is that we are moving forward on a significant mental health plan. We recognize the importance of this to Albertans and particularly those who have mental illness. We don't wish to politicize it yet one more time.

I mentioned earlier this week in answering the hon. member's question, that we devoted some $240 million to the operations of the Alberta Mental Health Board, which was a 5 per cent increase from the previous year. But that, in fact, is only a part of what we devote in terms of dollars to the services for people with mental health concerns. Over and above that $240 million, Mr. Speaker, the regional health authorities have identified that they spend an additional $100 million. Over and above that, from our medical services budget, out of which physicians are paid, there are some 100 million dollars plus paid for the services of psychiatrists. We pay for drugs. These are all significant contributions to dealing with this very, very important issue.

Let me finally say, Mr. Speaker, that because we did have services that were provided through our regional health authorities and our Alberta Mental Health Board, that's exactly the reason why we wanted to consolidate our programs, not to spend less on them but to spend better on them, in a way that's more co-ordinated. That's the whole purpose of providing a mental health plan that works province-wide.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can this minister tell us what investigations his department is undertaking to ensure that the two recent tragedies in Edmonton involving the mentally ill are not the result of failings in the mental health system?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, those matters are currently before respective inquiries. I'm reluctant to speak specifically to them as a result of that. I understand that to be the rules of this House.

However, I can say that we are interested in the whole area of mental health. It's, again, exactly the reason why we are moving forward on preparing a provincial mental health plan, Mr. Speaker. We think that this is important. As I've said in this House and on many other occasions, when you look at the burden of illness that will be the responsibility of the Department of Health and Wellness in this province 10 and 15 years out, I've identified that diabetes and mental health issues are the two most important ones. I would challenge the hon. member to find another province anywhere in this country that is taking the kind of bold steps that we are in this province for the delivery of mental health services.

1:50 Electricity Deregulation

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I never thought I would see a former member of the Deep Six Progressive Conservative committee, that used to advocate less taxes and less government waste, secretly raise taxes once he became a member of the Crown. The Minister of Energy has passed secret orders commanding energy consumers to pay for the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate and now, we find out, also pay for parts of a $3 million pro-electricity deregulation propaganda campaign. These secret orders are taxation without representation. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. What authority does the minister have to levy this tax on energy consumers without approval of this Legislative Assembly?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'd encourage the hon. member to read the Electric Utilities Act, one that he's talked about for the last four years. It's always good to read them. They are tabled in the House. They're also subject to an amendment. Last year it was Bill 3. I would encourage the member to examine that information.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the specific charges through to the Balancing Pool and subsequently to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board for the collection of funds to sponsor the utilities advocate, in fact this is the most transparent method that can be found in the government today. The charges are absolutely levied at the area where the source is, and through fully transparent and transcribed hearings those charges are made known to the public in advance, and that's where this member gets his information. So he's getting secret information from public documents.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that these secret orders are not appropriate uses of this legislation, specifically section 148 of the EUA, why is the minister levying extra taxes on utilities to be paid by their customers when he does not have the legislative authority to do so?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the policy is clearly a matter of the record.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, to the same minister: how many more times will this minister force customers to pay for a significant error in this government's judgment, which is electricity deregulation?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the most important thing is how much Albertans will save from having a competitive electricity system and not being subject to blackouts that we've seen in other jurisdictions across the world today, whether it be in Ohio or Ontario or Italy. In fact, the ability for this competitive market generation to function puts us in a position that's far ahead economically of any other jurisdiction in Canada. We have provided the electricity, record loads, record economic growth, the fastest growing economic jurisdiction in North America. It's a good system, it's a competitive system, and it's an open system.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Cattle Industry

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Information tabled at the House of Commons agriculture committee shows that in the last four months a whopping $227 million in extra profits have been made by the meat-packing industry. In October of last year this surged to $82 million in just one month on extra profits for processing beef, which corresponds to the period when most of the payments were being made under the BSE assistance plan. While the representatives are being grilled in Ottawa, this morning Tory members of the Public Accounts Committee outdid themselves as the Keystone Kops of cover-up.

Speaker's Ruling Committee Proceedings

The Speaker: Hon. members, there was some anticipation by the chair with respect to this. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is the third party House leader, and he has been provided with all of the rules associated with question period. Might the chair just read from Marleau, the Canadian House of Commons, the following: "Questions to the Ministry or a committee chair concerning the proceedings or work of a committee may not be raised." Further, "When a question has been asked about a committee's proceedings, Speakers have encouraged Members to rephrase their questions." The business of a committee is the business of a committee. It's not the business of the House until a report has come to the House from the committee.

So would the hon. member proceed on a different basis.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much for that, Mr. Speaker. My question, indeed, is: how does the government explain the $82 million in extra profits made by meat packers last October on beef sales during the same time that BSE compensation monies were being paid out by this government in large amounts? That is to the Premier.

Thank you.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Deputy Premier supplement. But what is happening in the House of Commons is, in my mind, what should happen in the House of Commons, and these questions should be asked.

Mr. Speaker, there is no cover-up whatsoever involved in this situation. As a matter of fact, I can't think of an issue that has been more investigated and more scrutinized than this issue of BSE. No. BSE has not been. That's the issue that should be scrutinized: the stupidity of BSE and the international overreaction to this affliction and the absolute minimal . . .

Dr. Massey: Is that what you're going to say to the Americans?

Mr. Klein: I will say to the Americans that there is minimal risk relative to BSE and that our beef is safe and it is of the highest quality. That's what everyone should be saying. It seems that in the whole issue of whether the $400 million that we provided to help beef producers was being spent properly, the issue of BSE seems to have been lost completely and how we get the international community, along with the Americans, to gain confidence in the quality and the safety of our beef.

That's why I've suggested that a strike force be established, so that we can tell the international market first of all that American and Canadian beef is safe and it's of the highest quality and, secondly, that the international protocols need to be changed. This is not 1985. This is the year 2004, and the protocols relative to BSE have changed dramatically.

I mean, I've eaten more beef in the last year – I may be mad from time to time, but I'm not a mad cow. The risk of getting this is 1 in 10-billion meals, and that's if you eat eyeballs and brains and spines and ganglia and the other things.

The Speaker: Before my lunch is moved, the hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the Premier talks about BSE, he tends to drop the E.

How can the government remain silent when, according to information prepared for the House of Commons agriculture committee, beef packers have generated $227 million in extra profits since last October at the expense of consumers and cattle producers? Doesn't the government care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should drop the E because I've been listening to a lot of it from that side, I'll tell you.

First of all, you have the House of Commons committee undertaking its review of the situation as it pertains to packing houses and packing house profits and whether there was any gouging or any misrepresentation by the packing plants of the money that was being used or whether they were making excessive profits.

First of all, tomorrow the minister of agriculture will release a full accounting of where every dollar of assistance went. Then we have the Auditor General, our Auditor General, doing what he is entitled to do, and that is to conduct a full audit of the programs. There are no restrictions, no restrictions whatsoever, placed on the Auditor General on how he chooses to conduct that audit. The only thing that he has received from this government is a letter from the hon. Deputy Premier asking him to fast-track it so that it doesn't linger and give more grist for the ND mill.

You know, the opposition, in my mind, are attempting to sow distrust and discord amongst the agricultural community. They meet with one small segment of the agricultural community, but they are trying to create discontent and discord among the agricultural community in regard to the effectiveness of the BSE assistance programs.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would ask the Premier if he will accept a challenge to come with me to Vegreville tonight and meet with about 200 beef producers, who would be no doubt thrilled to hear his arguments there.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't go across the street with this member.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I travel the province, and the hon. Deputy Premier travels the province, and we don't need contrived and set up meetings to hear from the beef industry. We hear from the beef industry each and every day from all segments of the community. We don't pick and choose one segment of the beef industry.

I was in Vulcan just last week, and there were cow-calf operators, there were feedlot operators, and there were people from all components of the industry and not one complaint. Nothing but praise for this government and the way it has handled the BSE issue, particularly the assistance program, Mr. Speaker. Nothing but praise.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Registration of Real Estate Documents

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the real estate business plays a vital part in Alberta's economy, contributing billions of dollars and tens of thousands of jobs, and given that there are millions of transactions taking place each day, a day of delay costs a lot. I have brought to the minister responsible the issue of too long a turnaround time in document processing: 11 days of waiting, as one of my constituents told me. My question today is to the Minister of Government Services. What has the minister been doing to address this matter?

Mr. Coumts: This is a very good question. The hon. member is acting on behalf of his constituents, people coming to this province, moving here, building houses, folks renegotiating their mortgages, Mr. Speaker, through the economic activity in this province.

We've had record volumes of land titles and mortgage registrations in this province over the last six to eight months, and, yes, we were as high as 18 days' turnaround. But the hon. member has brought it to my attention, as well as other members of this House, and we embarked immediately to get our staff in both Calgary and Edmonton to work some overtime, and they worked Tuesdays, Thursdays, and all day Saturdays. As well, we hired extra staff to get the turnaround times down to three days in Calgary and two days in Edmonton. The turnaround time has been improved.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, in order to communicate that to the real estate industry and to lawyers, we post the turnaround times through the Internet. They can get a hold of us through Service Alberta, the home page, at gov.ab.ca to make them fully aware of the situation so that the realtors and lawyers can control their times and take them into account when they're doing their transactions.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. Why are the turnaround times longer in rural Alberta than in Edmonton and Calgary?

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, this is a really good question. For those lawyers and realtors that do not have the opportunity to go directly to an office downtown in Edmonton or Calgary, where they have to rely on mail, where they have to rely on courier services, there will be a couple of days extra to look after transportation of the documents.

However, once they get into the Calgary office, once that documentation gets into the Edmonton office, they are put in the same order as every other registration that comes in. The turnaround times for the rural people are exactly the same, once it gets into our Calgary office and Edmonton office, as for all other registrations. The documents are done precisely in order so that everyone gets treated the same way.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Victims of Crime Fund

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. People convicted of an offence and sentenced to a fine pay an additional surcharge which goes to the victims of crime fund. In addition to compensation and funding the Criminal Injuries Review Board, the fund also allocates dollars to victims' programs, but in Alberta the victims of crime fund continues to have millions of dollars in surplus every year. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Given that there remain such large surpluses every year, why aren't all the groups that are eligible to receive funding getting the full amount that they've asked for?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have made significant progress on supporting victims in this province. I was pleased to announce two years ago that the MLA for Calgary-Shaw would do an in-depth report in regard to a consultation with victims and organizations across this province. I have received her report and have spent a lot of time reviewing it, and I don't make excuses for that. There are some financial implications to that, and we're working through the process and will be announcing something shortly.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Did the consultation on the victims of crime fund done by the Member for Calgary-Shaw contain any recommendations for what to do with the surplus that's in the fund?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. The report done by the Member for Calgary-Shaw made many, many recommendations, and it made very, very good recommendations. There are several recommendations that are well done that are going to benefit all of the victims in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. My final question to the Solicitor General: why is the Solicitor General allowing the victims of crime fund to hoard money that could be going to benefit victims' programs in this province, like funding for sexual assault centres?

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not true.

Ms Blakeman: Yes, it is. You've got a surplus; you're hoarding that money. Answer it.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, you're yelling across the hall. You're so rude.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Hog Producers

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Today I would like to reference another good meat source, Alberta pork. Lacombe county raises more hogs per acre than any other area in this province. Many of my producers have concerns, having experienced drought, increased input costs plus prolonged low market prices, and now the talk of tariffs. Thus, their questions, hon. minister: will the Canadian agricultural income stabilization program, CAIS, help both the small operator as well as the large operator; for example, those who manage up to 5,000 sows farrow to finish?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that the CAIS program, the Canada agricultural income stabilization program, will assist our hog producers, our grain producers, our cattle producers, in fact all aspects of production in this province. To make sure of that, we've spent a lot of time with the industry, and of course I've outlined in the House some changes that we've negotiated in that program to deal with some of the issues that the hog industry are dealing with, and one is negative margins.

It also affects the grain industry if you have prolonged periods of drought, and it has affected the cattle industry with the significance of the BSE. This program is designed to respond to perhaps small changes in income, but with the additional changes dealing with negative margins, payment caps, and accrual or inventory, it will deal with the others.

To make sure that it would work for the industry, Mr. Speaker, what we have done is bring in a group of hog producers who have very kindly brought their records from their operation in, and we have worked that program with their actual on-farm records to ensure that we haven't missed anything else in the program. So I'm firmly convinced that this will be responsive to them.

Mrs. Gordon: Will the recently announced deadline changes to this program affect my producers, possibly to the point that you have given serious consideration to deferring the deposits for CAIS for 2003?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the deadline extensions that the federal government have announced don't apply to Alberta because we are going to administer the program in our own province. We have found that our producers prefer the ability to contact a person to have a hands-on opportunity rather than going through a telephone system that is difficult at best. One of the reasons that we don't have to worry about one deadline is that the federal government have changed their deadline to December 31; ours always was.

Now, the deadline for actually selecting your level of income protection is March 31. We have asked Ag Financial Services to review that deadline and ensure that with all of these other things that our industry is facing, they can meet that deadline.

Mrs. Gordon: Hon. minister, what is the reality of this situation if the U.S. indeed does add a tariff to Alberta's live hog exports?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, as far as I understand the latest information I have, the U.S. government has not at this point made any motions to impose a tariff. However, we do know that the U.S. pork producers have filed a petition demanding that a tariff is instituted. We're very disappointed that this petition has been filed.

Alberta does not in any way unfairly subsidize its hog producers, and in fact the CAIS program, that we just discussed, was designed very carefully to ensure that it would not cause countervailing actions. I can tell our hog industry that we'll be working with them and our federal government very hard to ensure that the interests of our hog producers are protected.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I think this does again point to the weakness of antidumping laws as they apply to agriculture in particular, and I hope we can rectify that.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, the Interim Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Alberta SuperNet

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are many private companies working with the government on the development of the SuperNet. Nearly $200 million have been committed to this venture. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. When companies buy computer parts for the SuperNet, is it mandatory that the full discount that they receive be passed on to the government?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the construction of the SuperNet is a contract with, primarily, our major contractor, Bell West, to construct and roll out construction throughout not only the base network, in which they've committed money, but also into the extended network that will connect every school, hospital, government building, library across this province.

The specific question is something that I will take under advisement and provide the member with a more complete answer after review of the question.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what role does the department play in inspecting work that is currently being performed?

Mr. Doerksen: To deliver the kind of broadband capability that we have put into the contract requires certain electronic components to be installed in locations right across the province. The department ensures through the inspection of those electronic systems and the characteristics that they meet the standards that are set out in the contract so that we can deliver the kind of service to the schools and the hospitals and the libraries that is set out in that contract.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: what checks does the department perform to ensure that the amounts charged to the government for the hours worked are correct?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, again that's a very important question. As you roll out any kind of contract in government, you want to make sure that you are getting value for the money that you have spent, and we do undergo a rigorous process to make sure that the standards as were set out in the contract are in fact met and that the money is accounted for. But, again, I will look at the specific question there and provide the member with a more detailed explanation upon that consideration.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Beef Slaughter Facilities

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As many in this Assembly know, provincially inspected cow slaughter facilities have waiting lists, some as long as two to three months. Many of my cattle ranching constituents have been calling me about using mobile butchers, or mobilers, to kill their cattle and then send them to a provincially inspected slaughterhouse for cutting and wrapping. My constituents tell me that provincial inspectors are being too hard on producers who attempt this. My questions are all for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why in a time when our cattle industry is dealing with unprecedented challenges are provincial inspectors being so hard on small slaughter facilities trying to use mobile butchers to help relieve the backlog?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, quite simply put, we're not prepared to reduce our standards and call into question our procedures in the safe handling of meat. Let me make it very clear. Mobile butchers are allowed to slaughter cattle on the farm for the immediate use of the family or persons that would be on that farm. They can have an animal slaughtered on the farm. There is a way to do that and then take it to a slaughterhouse. However, I'm having a hard time understanding, if the backlog is two to three months, how killing the animal and then getting it to the abattoir is going to help that a lot, but I'm willing to accept that that may be the case.

There is a way to do it on a farm. First, you bring in a veterinarian, and you inspect that animal. Then the animal would be tagged by that veterinarian, and that veterinarian would identify if there were any preslaughter signs of illness. This would be on a form that would be presented to the provincial inspector at the provincial abattoir or the slaughter facility they're taking it to, and then a postmortem investigation would occur there. The producer has to assume those costs of having that veterinarian come in and fill out those forms and send them on, but you can do it.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why are mobilers required to skin the carcass prior to sending them to a slaughter facility even though this is potentially harder and more dangerous to do on the farm than in a slaughter facility?

2:20

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, you can leave the hide on before you take it, or you can kill the animal and take it in with the hide on, but the place that you take it to has to have a separate room for skinning, and not all do or not all will provide that. So the slaughter facility would have to apply to Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. They'd have to have their dedicated room inspected, and barring any complications, this will allow mobile butchers to leave the skinning to the slaughter facility. Again, you could do it, but there are rules around it.

Mr. Speaker, we have examined this extensively at a policy level over and over and over again, and food safety and the quality and safety of our product have to remain paramount.

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are many Albertans who would buy beef directly from a producer even if they had to sign a waiver, would the minister consider allowing producers to sell beef that's been slaughtered by a mobiler?

Mrs. McClellan: No, Mr. Speaker. We wouldn't consider allowing this to happen, and there's a good reason why. Because the person who signed the waiver would have to eat all of the beef. Otherwise, we'd have to have a waiver from anybody else in the family that was going to consume that. So the person couldn't feed it to his family. He couldn't feed it to his friends. He couldn't feed it to his neighbours. How useful is that? It's an if. We assume that all food is safe, but if there was an incident, the liability would be incredibly high.

Mr. Speaker, we're fully aware of the pressures that our industry is feeling, and I have to say that my colleagues have brought these issues to me. We've debated them through a policy area, and we're trying everything we can to alleviate the backlog, but we've made a decision as a government that we will not compromise Alberta's quality food safety system in this or any other issue.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

VLT Payout Rates

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Gaming Research Institute released a report on VLT gambling in Alberta recently which indicated that there was significant player confusion over VLT payout rates. The report indicated that this was "startling and runs counter to the precept of 'informed consent' that undergirds consumer protection legislation." Signs in VLT locations read: the video lottery network in Alberta has been designed to pay out approximately 92 per cent. My questions are to Minister of Gaming. Given that signs promising a 92 per cent payout are misleading, when is the minister going to correct the signs or change the payout?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, thank you, and thank you to the hon. member for the question. I think it's important for those who are listening to recognize that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is the Gaming critic for the Liberal Official Opposition, and the fact that the last question she asked me as Minister of Gaming was a year ago speaks volumes to the quality and substance of our gaming policies. Indeed, I think that a lot is to be said of the men and women who implement those policies through the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission.

Now, with respect to the particular question the fact is that each and every one of these machines has a gaming chip, and each and every one of those gaming chips is verified by a certified organization, and the information with respect to those gaming chips has been available to players for a very long time. The information that the hon. member referred to is exactly right.

Ms Blakeman: I think the minister assumes too much and misunderstands the question.

What steps has the minister taken to make Alberta less susceptible to the same legal action that Quebec is experiencing over similar signage?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the work that the AGLC and Alberta Gaming do with respect to informing the public and with respect to responsible gaming.

I think it's fair to say that the initial question that the hon. member put to me referenced a report that had this particular matter in it, and one of the things about that particular report was that it was published on the Internet on February 12, one month ago. One of the comments I made at that time was that the report had not been peer reviewed and that there were some issues with respect to it and that I was looking forward to a scientific verification of a substantial portion of that report.

One of the things I would like to do today, Mr. Speaker, is to table with you a letter that I have received from the Population Research Laboratory, which is well known to the opposition – it's a very credible research component at the University of Alberta – that comments on the limitations of that particular report. I think it's important that that be put on the record given the general line of questioning that this hon. member is taking based on comments in the report.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Given that the minister constantly touts the new responsible gaming features on the VLT machines, how can the government expect these to work when, at the same time, the new VLT machines you spent so much money on are filled with all the new flash and dazzle that incites people to come and play them?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, the responsible gaming features, which we call reality checks, are based on some work that was done in Nova Scotia a couple of years ago. That was the first provincial jurisdiction to introduce these reality checks into the gaming machines.

Essentially, what they are are things like a clock. There's been a criticism that people lose sense of time, so there is now a clock. There's another feature which has both credits and dollar value. There have been suggestions that people, when they see only credits, don't have a sense of the value of what they are playing for, so that particular feature is now there. There's also a pop-up which says: "You've been playing for 30 minutes. Do you wish to continue?" You have to engage that particular message in order to continue. A criticism was that people had lost the sense of time, and that addresses that issue. Another one is a responsible gaming banner which indicates information with respect to where people can get help on problem gambling matters. That has obviously been an issue, so that is there.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when this came forward, we said that what it will do is it will help players manage their time and money. The full impact of that particular program is not known. The research has not been done, but I can tell you that we have embarked upon research that, hopefully, will provide us with some assistance in determining the value of those particular features. Admittedly, we do not know in full what they will be, but the fact is that the general consensus is that it is a good first step.

The Speaker: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of seven members to participate.

Well, hon. members, I'm not sure if this Assembly can handle this twice in one day, but is the Assembly prepared to allow the hon. Member for Red Deer-North to redo her introduction?

head: 2:30            Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to see that the students from Red Deer have arrived safely, and it is now my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 43 of the most enthusiastic and energetic kids in Alberta. They're here with some of their teachers and some of their parents, and I'd like to introduce them: Ms Janice Dempsey, Mr. Bob Irwin, Mr. Kenton Biffert, Mrs. Gwen Pozzolo, Mrs. Barb Vold-Bowd, Mr. Bill Bowd, Mrs. Derilee Zeibert, Mrs. Monica Janzen, Mrs. Lorraine Irwin, Mrs. Karen Ritchie, Mrs. Sherry Brock. They are in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

head:                            Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Kids Help Phone

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a phenomenal service, the Kids Help Phone. This is Canada's only national, bilingual, 24-hour, toll-free telephone counselling service for children and youth who are experiencing difficulties or situations of personal crisis. The phones are staffed with professional counsellors with backgrounds in social work, education, and health care, who provide confidential counselling information, education, and referral services.

The Minister of Community Development and I were at a launch for the Bell Walk for Kids, which will take place in 35 communities across the country on May 2. Anyone interested in participating can sign up on-line or pick up a brochure at Bank of Montreal for the Bell walk, which will support this worthy cause for children and youth, Kids Help line.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Multicultural Health Brokers Co-operative

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to recognize the work of the Multicultural Health Brokers Co-operative. Their mandate to support immigrant and refugee individuals and families in attaining optimum health through relevant health education, community development, and advocacy support has been a great asset to Edmonton. Their services are available to anyone at no cost. As the MLA for Edmonton-Centre, many of my constituents are immigrants and new Canadians. The Multicultural Health Brokers can offer services in over 16 languages including Spanish, Eritrean, Kurdish, Persian, French-speaking African, Somali, or Sudanese.

Emerging from health initiatives in the early '90s, the co-operative is now a registered workers' co-op and has since 1995 been providing culturally and linguistically relevant prenatal and postnatal outreach as well as parenting support. The Multicultural Health Brokers will do home visits or counsel by phone. They organize hospital tours, do community education, consult and advise concerning crosscultural issues, and provide advocacy support to individuals and families.

I'm so grateful that this group of dedicated multicultural professionals make Edmonton better by helping all cultures to achieve wellness and to thrive.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Gloria Miller

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to recognize Gloria Miller, a constituent of mine in Calgary-West who was recently awarded a Lifesaving Society rescue award by the Lifesaving Society, Alberta and Northwest Territories, for her immediate reactions to a situation at hand on July 20, 2003.

On that day Riley Minue dove off a cliff at Nature's Hideaway along the Sheep River near Okotoks. He hit the water the wrong way and was knocked unconscious on impact. Gloria Miller, who was in the area with family and friends, noticed Riley's body face down in one and a half feet of water. She immediately pulled him to shore, had someone call 911, and applied CPR until he was breathing again and until emergency medical services arrived. Riley was airlifted by STARS air ambulance to a Calgary hospital and has since recovered from his extensive injuries. There is no doubt Gloria's quick actions saved Riley Minue's life.

Congratulations on your rescue award, Gloria.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Arthur Bruyere

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 12, 2003, Percival Meruena was working on a boat near a pier in Hawaii when he fell overboard and got caught in the propeller of a tender boat. Coworker Arthur Bruyere of Grande Prairie, Alberta, was on the beach when he received a radio message from security requesting immediate assistance. Arthur ran to the pier, assessed the situation, and without any thought for his own personal safety dove into the water to help safety manager Billy Gilbert in keeping Percival's head above water. His pants were wrapped around the propeller shaft, so he was unable to move.

Arthur knew that time was of the essence so he obtained a mask from a bystander and went underwater for long periods of time, working as quickly as he could to untangle Percival's pants. His efforts met with success. With the assistance of Billy they removed Percival from the water to safety.

There is no doubt that Arthur Bruyere's quick action and disregard for his own personal safety saved the life of Percival Meruena. It is for this reason that Arthur Bruyere from Grande Prairie was the recipient of a life-saving rescue commendation award and the Lifesaving Society medal with the bar of merit, and it's for his heroic action that I'm recognizing Arthur Bruyere today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Sheri McDougall
Kyle Blocksom
Brent Miller

Mr. Hlady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, March 8, it was my distinct pleasure to attend the annual life-saving investiture ceremony organized by the Lifesaving Society for Alberta and the Northwest Territories. Three of the recipients are from my constituency of Calgary-Mountain View, and I'm proud to recognize them today. Sheri McDougall and Kyle Blocksom were presented with the M.G. Griffith certificate in recognition of their heroic efforts in the execution of two separate life-saving endeavours.

On August 9, 2003, Sheri McDougall drew upon her life-saving and lifeguarding skills when she came upon a motor vehicle collision near Stettler. Sheri was instrumental in assisting both drivers involved in the accident until police and emergency response personnel arrived.

On November 30, 2002, Kyle Blocksom drew on his bronze medallion skills to rescue Wayne Thomas, who had fallen through the ice on Bow Lake. Along with help from others they got his friend Lori off the ice to safety as well.

Brent Miller of my constituency received the Commonwealth certificate of thanks for his dedication and commitment to the society's drowning prevention program known as Canadians Water Smart.

I would like to extend my sincere congratulations to all of these brave and dedicated members of our community.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Matthew Rice
Lee Chambers
DeeAnn Daniels

Mr. Ouellette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the Member for Rocky Mountain House to recognize Matthew Rice of Rocky Mountain House, who was awarded the Royal Life Saving Society's M.G. Griffith certificate on March 7 by the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. This award is the second highest national rescue award of the Royal Life Saving Society and is presented for demonstrating significant personal bravery in an outstanding rescue attempt.

On August 9, 2003, Mr. Rice came upon a motor vehicle collision near Stettler and using his acquired life-saving skills was able to immobilize the semiconscious driver, thus saving her life. Two other constituents, Lee Chambers and DeeAnn Daniels, were awarded the bar to the Commonwealth service medal and the certificate of thanks, respectively.

I would like to ask members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing the bravery of Matthew Rice and the outstanding volunteer service of Lee Chambers and DeeAnn Daniels.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Preserve Garneau

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to stand and recognize Preserve Garneau, an organization that's been, along with many residents of the Garneau community, striving to protect Garneau's unique historical character.

In their ongoing efforts to stop the encroachment of the University of Alberta into the Garneau community, residents have had some notable successes. Last September I had the pleasure of attending the dedication of Adair park, named in honour of Joseph and Dorothy Adair. Among the many accomplishments attributable to this remarkable couple, I would like to note that Dorothy Adair was a founding Alberta member of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, the forerunner of the party I'm privileged to lead. Community residents and groups have also been able to obtain historical designations for many of the houses in the area such as Rutherford House and the Cecil Burgess House.

So congratulations to Preserve Garneau and other groups and residents for their successes. My thanks for their efforts and my best wishes as they continue their work. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, I hereby submit five copies of the Report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts for the Third Session of the 25th Legislature covering the committee's activities in the year 2003.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to give notice that I plan to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 40 at the appropriate time.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table the required number of copies of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee annual report for 2001-2002. As you know, the Member for Calgary-Shaw chairs this particular review committee. During that year the committee visited 103 foster homes, 37 child and youth social care facilities, 17 women's emergency shelters in 11 of our regional authorities. During those 157 visits the committee interviewed more than 750 service recipients, foster parents, and staff members. There's been huge work done in these reports, and I commit them to the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies of documents tabled in the House of Commons Committee on Agriculture and Agri-Food showing that meat packers have made an extra $227 million in profits since October 2003.

The Speaker: Are there others?

The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order
Allegations against a Member

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I raised a point of order during question period today when a question was being posed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. My point of order is raised under Standing Orders 23(h) with respect to making an allegation against another member and 23(j), using abusive language. I'm going to be very straightforward and brief with respect to this point of order.

The hon. member clearly made an allegation against the Minister of Energy when he indicated in the preamble to his question on numerous occasions that the minister was making secret orders with respect to secret taxes. I think that's clearly an allegation that's outside the scope of question period. He could have asked his question in an appropriate manner relative to the issue with respect to the sum of money which was purportedly being paid by consumers, but instead he was suggesting – more than a suggestion, making a direct allegation – that the Minister of Energy contravened the law and imposed a secret tax without telling anybody. That is an allegation which should be ruled out of order, in my submission.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to answer the point of order raised by the Government House Leader. I'm going to approach this in two parts. One is the question of whether something was secret or not, and the choice of the word by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was not arrived at lightly. It was some effort to find a ministerial order, and in fact it was not gazetted; it was not available through sessional tablings. When I looked at a dictionary definition of what secret is, it's kept from the knowledge of others, a mystery, kept hidden.

So, certainly, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar felt that the information was kept secret. It was not available through the usual processes that this House is accustomed to using, that being the tabling or the Gazette. In fact, he had to get it through a third source, so it was kept hidden from here.

As to the allegation that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was somehow saying that the minister had contravened a law, he says quite clearly – I was not able to look at the Blues; I'm going off the question from the member – and does repeatedly talk about secretly raising taxes, which was the anecdote he was using to describe the money that was being asked for, and that he passed secret orders commanding energy users to pay for the office of the Utilities Consumer Advocate.

In fact, that appears to be a reality. There are no allegations involved there about doing something that's contravening the law. I would argue that in fact the minister did pass a secret – that is, kept hidden – order that was asking for payment for the Utilities Consumer Advocate. That is backed up by the information that in fact is available through this ministerial order 82/2003. The member did not make an allegation that he contravened the law. He very clearly said that the Minister of Energy had passed a secret order, and in fact an order has been passed, and it was kept hidden, which would make it secret.

So I would argue that there's no point of order. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, are you involved?

Mr. MacDonald: No. Thank you.

The Speaker: Most of what we do in this House is based on the temperance of the language in the time in which this would happen. So this is during question period. Well, of course, everybody knows that the motivation in question period is to pin somebody's shoulders to the wall. So one takes every available kind of opportunity within the squares given to them, i.e. the rules, to try and get there.

In this case the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar uses the phrases “secretly raise taxes”, “secret orders”, “secret orders.” Well, I'm sitting here saying: my lord, if this is secret, why are we talking about it here today? If it was secret, how could it have been kept so hidden? Obviously, I mean, if it was secret, we wouldn't be talking about it today. So there had to be motivation for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to cast some form of aspersion on another member with respect to this.

So I think this is a dutiful point of order, dutifully raised, and we should not use language like that. I cannot believe – I just cannot believe – all the hard work that the chairman of the Members' Services Committee does to ensure that in the research facilities for all the parties in this Assembly people are actually studying documents to try and find words to do this. I can't believe that I've spent all this time on behalf to try and find that.

Why don't we use tempered language, which civilized people would use, on all occasions? We'd be much happier, wouldn't have to do this, and we'd be able to move on, and I would feel much better.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview under Standing Order 40.

Calgary Emergency Health Services

Dr. Taft:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to appoint an independent, nonpartisan commission under the Public Inquiries Act with a broad mandate to review the financing and delivery of health services as it relates to emergency services in Calgary as per the recommendation made by the fatality inquiry of April 2003 into Vince Motta's death.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a Standing Order 40 application to present a motion to the Assembly. I've got the appropriate copies here for distribution. As you know, Standing Order 40 applications are to be made “in case of urgent and pressing necessity.” I can think of no matter more pressing than addressing the mismanagement of services that Albertans rely on when they are sick and in desperate need of medical attention.

The problem with emergency health services in Calgary is not new, but it is urgent because the situation is only getting worse. Almost one year ago the fatality inquiry into Vince Motta's death found that the Calgary health region's emergency services were quote, under siege, end quote, and quote, in crisis, end quote.

In light of this situation, the Motta inquiry called for dramatic and immediate change. In the words of the inquiry's final report, quote, a system under siege or in crisis requires dramatic change, not incremental change, end quote. In fact, the Motta inquiry recommended very clearly that without dramatic changes, an independent, nonpartisan commission be appointed under the Public Inquiries Act with a broad mandate to review the financing and delivery of health services as it relates to emergency services in Calgary.

Well, Mr. Speaker, here we are almost an entire year later, and things have not gotten better. They've only gotten worse. In the past six months the Calgary health region has implemented 14 code burgundies, as compared to six in the entire previous year. Code burgundy refers to a situation where the region is so desperate for beds because of emergency admissions that they re-evaluate patients who otherwise would not be discharged to determine if they can be safely sent home.

I've been receiving letters from patients waiting unreasonable amounts of time in emergency, leaving without seeing a doctor, and some even being left to lie on the floor because there are no beds. Last week I raised questions in the Legislature about Kathy Briant's mother – and I used her name with permission, Mr. Speaker – an elderly woman suffering from a stroke, spending over eight hours in emergency at the Foothills. I raised the issue of an elderly man being forced to lie on the floor for hours in emergency at the Foothills hospital because of a lack of beds.

These stories of unacceptably long waits and the lack of resources in emergency are more and more the norm. The Calgary health region's own numbers show that the length of stay for admitted patients in emergency has grown at all four of Calgary's hospitals while many other statistics on emergency services have improved very little.

Mr. Speaker, this matter is urgent not because I say it is but because the thousands of Calgarians who use Calgary's emergency services say it is, because the inquiry into Vince Motta's death says it is, because we can't afford to have the recommendations of the Motta inquiry ignored or forgotten. Too much is at stake.

I ask you and this Legislature to heed the words of the Motta inquiry when considering this motion. The inquiry stated that if the situation in Calgary's emergency services did not improve dramatically and if a public inquiry was not held, and I quote, the alternative is to wait until another death becomes the subject of inquiry in the context of beleaguered emergency services, end quote.

To you, to all members, don't let that happen. Let's vote to change things for the better. For the health care workers who work tirelessly every day in Calgary's emergency rooms and for the thousands of Calgarians who rely on this service, we must do this. We need this debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, under Standing Order 40 a motion such as this requires unanimous consent of the Assembly in order to proceed.

Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to move third reading of Bill 15, the Fiscal Responsibility Amendment Act, 2004.

There's been good debate on this bill in the Legislature. I believe that it meets the needs of the people of the province of Alberta. It is the result of the first year of operation under our new fiscal regime that was recommended by the Financial Management Commission.

I would encourage all members in the House to approve third reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just rise again to re-emphasize the points that I made during committee in the sense that, you know, we need to check and make sure that this new amendment to this act really, truly lets us use the flexibility that's intended by the fiscal stabilization fund.

The interpretation that I have on it says that the only time we can actually take money out is if there is a deviation in the nonrenewable resource revenues. If we have a reduction in other revenues, other than the nonrenewable resources, and if that creates a shortfall in the middle of the year, can we still trigger the stabilization fund to support programs with that? I haven't had a clarification on that concern from last night, and I would still like to put it on the record.

Other than that, as I said, the other amendments to this bill are very supportive and improve the bill, and I look forward to hearing an eventual clarification on that. Thank you.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member opposite that the bill is reflective of his concern, and it is there, and it does meet the needs, I believe, of the fiscal framework for this province.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of the Forest Reserves Amendment Act, 2004.

We've updated the legislation to reflect changes in the department, to delete obsolete parts that were covered elsewhere, and to make the wording consistent with other legislation. We have added more responsibility for the minister to broaden enforcement of the act and to introduce a streamlined process to update the legislation as situations change. As well, we've included a provision to be able to address the control of restricted and noxious weeds, as required under the Weed Control Act.

There were a number of other questions that arose from Committee of the Whole, and I'd like to address those now, Mr. Speaker. During committee the question of who will administer the legislation was again raised. I did address this yesterday, but I'd like to explain it again. This legislation simply gives the minister authority to appoint the appropriate staff to administer the legislation. Government has always had the ability to contract services out, and where appropriate it has done so, but that is not the intent of this amendment.

When this legislation was originally drafted, forest officers primarily administered the legislation. As a result of some department and broader government reorganization, professional rangeland agrologists mostly administer the legislation these days. These are very well trained and well-educated professionals employed by the government. In the same way that forest officers are governed by legislation, so, too, will these agrologists be under this act. They are obligated to adhere to professional standards and guidelines. This change to the legislation was made simply to reflect what is currently happening on the ground. Alberta continues to have trained professionals administering the legislation. These changes to the legislation will not change that.

Mr. Speaker, one of the other members also suggested that people charged under the new administrative penalty won't be able to appeal. I'm not sure how the member can interpret the legislation that way. In fact, the opposite is true. Section 8.3 clearly states: "Subject to the right to appeal a notice of administrative penalty."

Section 8.4 goes even further, indicating that the minister may in fact create regulations that deal specifically with appeals.

Moreover, there's absolutely nothing in this legislation that says that a person charged under an administrative penalty cannot appeal. In fact, under the administrative penalties and related matters statutes amendment act an appeal process is being developed. This process will apply to several pieces of legislation including the Forest Reserves Amendment Act. Addressing appeal processes with one act ensures consistency and ensures that the appeal process is the same across the board. A more effective and a more efficient process will result. To me that makes sense.

The size of the forest reserve was another issue brought up. These comments were around the management of the forest reserve. Some suggested that this legislation would shift responsibility for this area from the government to the private sector. Some even went so far as to question the area's sustainability. The reserve is about the same size as it was originally in the early 1990s. If the member wants me to show him some pictures from that period of the 1990s compared to today, there's even more forest in some of those areas than there was back in the 1990s due to forest fire control and that sort of thing.

So this act continues to address the many uses in the area today, and these amendments will not change that. They're simply needed to update the legislation and bring it in line with other pieces of legislation like the Public Lands Act.

Again I'll say that this legislation will not change the way in which the forest reserve is managed. It will not change the current land uses in this area or impact the area's other values. It will continue to address the important environmental values of the area, and it will continue to be managed sustainably for a variety of uses, as it always has been.

As I said before, the changes proposed are required to update the legislation and ensure consistency with other legislation. They allow for continued sustainable grazing in the Rocky Mountain forest reserve, which is an Alberta heritage practice dating back to the early 1890s. We continue to protect the integrity of the land, the environment, and respect for other land users.

With that, thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a third time]

Bill 10 Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to move third reading of Bill 10, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004.

We've had a discussion in this House on Bill 10 previously, and I think it's common ground that the bill, which amends seven statutes, is one which has been relatively well consulted, such that members of the opposition have not heard back, as I understand it, from anyone with respect to any concerns relative to the proposals that are being raised.

In brief, the act amends the Court of Appeal Act, which allows for the empanelling of fewer than three judges on certain specific items to come before the court, and that is done at the request of the Court of Appeal to allow it to be more efficient in hearing matters which don't actually require the full panel of three.

The amendments to the Court of Queen's Bench Act and, I guess, further amendments to the Court of Appeal Act allow for changes to the rules. I explained, I think, earlier in the House that we amend the Rules of Court from time to time on recommendations from our Rules of Court Committee, which has representatives from the bench, the courts involved, a representative from the Department of Justice, and a representative from the Law Society.

Generally, we get the Rules of Court amendments as proposed by that committee, their recommendations, which are given to the Minister of Justice and then brought before Executive Council for an order in council, but periodically we have to come back to the House and actually verify or approve those rules because there may be an argument raised from time to time as to whether the rules actually impact substantive law rather than just procedural law. What we're purporting to do with this act is not only to actually verify the rules that have been passed from time to time since the last time this was done but also to put in place a process which would actually substantiate those rules as and when they're passed without the requirement to come back to the House.

The most substantive portion, of course, of Bill 10 is the amendments to the Judicature Act which put in place on a request by one of the parties the proposal for the use by the courts of the concept which is colloquially known as a structured settlement. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this will be a major step forward. Up to this point or at least until mid-December of last year structured settlements would only be put in place with respect to any personal injury action if both parties to the claim agreed. We had some comments in committee from the Member for Edmonton-Calder outlining, I think, some of the benefits of a structured settlement.

It is pretty clear, when you look at the available information, that lump-sum settlements and major damage awards relative to personal injuries can be problematic at times. Statistics will show, at least to the extent that there have been studies available, that some two years after a major lump-sum award is made, in the vast majority of cases the award has been spent.

We have to keep in mind that these awards are made not only for the current costs – for example, making adaptations to houses or purchasing a special vehicle or those sorts of expenses which are immediate – but also for long-term living expenses. In other words, the awards tend to replace income, and the awards also tend to be in place for longer term payments which may be needed for particular specialized medical services which aren't necessarily covered under health care.

So the concept of a structured settlement would allow for the payment of an upfront lump-sum damage award sufficient to cover expenses that have already been incurred and expenses that may be incurred to deal with issues that are immediate but then provide for, in essence, periodic payments over time, perhaps with lump sums built into it, to take the place of the income that was lost on a periodic basis so the person who was aggrieved can actually have the benefit of those payments when they need them throughout the course of their life. The act purports to set out specific rules relative to how that might apply and how that could be done in a fair and beneficial manner to the parties.

The act also provides for an amendment to the Jury Act which would, where a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench considers it appropriate, allow for the judge to indicate that a proceeding be tried pursuant to summary trial procedures set out in the Rules of Court. In other words, where the matter is of such a nature that it should be tried under the summary proceeding rules, it ought not be allowed to be tried before a jury.

Under the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act the amendment is simply to align the definition of motor vehicle with that in the Traffic Safety Act. Again, this is just simply to make sure that our acts are consistent and that people making claims under the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act are in fact those who would have been covered by public liability insurance of an individual operating a motor vehicle who was in an accident with them if, in fact, they had complied with the law and had insurance. So that definition change merely aligns with the Traffic Safety Act and makes it clear that it's those people that the motor vehicle accident fund is there to protect.

Under the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, as I explained to the House earlier, we are simply moving into the electronic age even more so than we have before to allow for the movement of huge volumes of paper – I might say with respect primarily to traffic tickets that are written – each time a traffic ticket is written and then is moved through the various processes. This will allow us to use some of those processes electronically.

Mr. Speaker, the last item I address only briefly, and that is with respect to the Queen's Counsel Act. We have, in fact, in this province a Queen's Counsel Act. Some other jurisdictions have actually abandoned the opportunity to award Queen's Counsels. I am, in fact, a very, very strong supporter of the concept of awarding Queen's Counsels. I think that there are far too few ways in our society today that we can actually acknowledge service, that we can actually acknowledge the contributions that are made by people.

In this case under the Queen's Counsel Act every two years we're acknowledging the service that lawyers provide both to their profession and to the community. As I say, we don't often have that opportunity to say thank you in that way, and the Queen's Counsel Act allows us to do that every two years, to say to a certain number of lawyers in our community that we recognize the service that they've provided in enhancing the rule of law in our society and, most importantly to me, to make a contribution to the community.

Just for the record I'd like to say what I often take the opportunity to say in public meetings when lawyers are there and, obviously, often helping to organize the event. As we look around in community organizations, we often find that there are lawyers there that have helped set up the organization, helped put together its constituting documents, helped provide the order and structure for the organization, volunteering their time on a pro bono basis to help societies get up and running, to help community organizations get up and running. I find very often, when I'm involved with community organizations or attending a community function, that lawyers, in fact, members of the Law Society, are there behind the scenes doing a lot of good work to help make our community a better place.

The Queen's Counsel Act allows us on a periodic basis to say thank you and to acknowledge that and to hold out those who do give exemplary service and are of exemplary character as models and as examples to others in our society. It's for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that we need the amendment that we're proposing here.

The amendment, as it indicates, will allow us to also remove the designation of QC from a person who no longer exemplifies that model of conduct, in particular somebody who has been disbarred or is deemed to have been disbarred by virtue of a resignation by a member in the face of discipline pursuant to section 61 of the Legal Profession Act. In other words, if a person has committed a criminal offence for which they've already been convicted but also have lost the opportunity to practise law – they've been disbarred – then they ought not to continue to carry around the designation of QC, which is a designation which says that we respect and honour that member for the contribution that they've made to society.

So those are the amendments that are proposed to various justice statutes in Bill 10, and I would ask for the support of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 10, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, in its third reading. I'm pleased to extend the support of the caucus of the New Democrat opposition to Bill 10. I also want to compliment the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for providing good, thorough briefing to us before the bill was introduced. That really is very helpful for me and for our staff to respond appropriately to the bill.

The bill is in part housekeeping, and parts make some substantive changes, and I think they certainly have our support and deserve the support of the House in general. The only questions are some concerns that I have with respect to the flexibility that's built into the alternative, the lump sum payments, to people who win these court awards. There may be cases where some lump sum payments are necessary, although the minister has indicated that such provision will be made, but I guess it's going to be outlined in the regulations. There's perhaps not enough detail in the act itself with respect to that.

That said, I'm happy to take my seat, Mr. Speaker, and indicate our support for the bill.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to rise to briefly summarize the Official Opposition's position on the bill. It's great that occasionally we do update the laws that relate to the workings of the court, the workings of the judicial system.

One of the really good aspects of this bill is the ability to take and review the QC designation for individuals. I think this is something that in my travels across the province we've been really encouraged to do on a number of different occasions, so I think it would be a good addition to the process and the procedure that's available.

I hope that we do move forward on this because it really helps to bring the laws that relate to this aspect of our legal system into current expectations, the use of more of the electronic age components. That all helps. It makes things work easier.

I commend the minister for making these changes. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only to add something which I forgot to say, which is that I wanted to thank the critics for both parties opposite for making themselves available to discuss these aspects, and I also wanted to mention that in bringing forward modernization to various justice statutes amendment acts, there's a lot of work that goes into that, even though it may be simple provisions. That work is obviously done by members of the Department of Justice, but also we look to the Law Reform Institute for its guidance from time to time on matters. Often matters which are brought forward in the justice statutes amendment acts are, in fact, an attempt to implement what we've been advised by the Law Reform Institute.

With respect to the structured settlement process I would advise the House that there's still some discussion around the appropriate mechanisms and processes, and I may in fact be back to this House at some point in time asking for slight changes to the process or amendments if we get further advice in that regard. I brought it to the House this spring in order to ensure that our law with respect to personal injury was aligned with the law which we passed in December relative to insurance.

Public Trustee Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to move Bill 19, the Public Trustee Act, for second reading.

I will just indicate that having moved it and spoken to it, at the end of my comments I will move that we adjourn debate in order to allow my critic from the Official Opposition to speak to it later in the day.

The office of the Public Trustee, part of Alberta Justice, administers over $400 million in assets for nearly 14,000 clients. Most Public Trustee clients fall into one of three groups: minors, vulnerable adults, and estates of deceased persons. The Public Trustee also holds property for missing persons.

Bill 19 repeals and replaces the current Public Trustee Act, which has been in force in this province since 1949. Although the bill modifies many details of the legislation governing the office of the Public Trustee, the core functions of the office remain the same under the new act.

The modifications are intended to allow the Public Trustee to serve clients in as an effective and efficient manner as possible. Organizational aspects of the office of the Public Trustee are mainly unaffected by the bill. However, the existing requirement that the person appointed as a Public Trustee be a lawyer will not be continued.

I have mentioned that one of the Public Trustee's functions is to hold property belonging to missing persons. The new provision will make it clear that the Public Trustee may make expenditures out of such property to try and locate the owner.

The bill contains a provision dealing with unclaimed property in the hands of the Public Trustee. The current rules in this matter are unduly complex. In some cases the Public Trustee must hold the property for at least two years. At the end of two years the property or the proceeds of its sale may be transferred to the general revenue fund. If a person later establishes a claim to the property, they can get it back along with interest. The claim could in theory be asserted many decades after the money was transferred into the general revenue fund. If the claim was established, interest would be payable for the entire period.

In some cases—namely, where the public trustee cannot determine whether anyone is entitled to the deceased person's estate—the rules are different. Again unclaimed money is paid into the general revenue fund, but here a person only has six years to start legal proceedings to establish a claim to the property. If they do establish their claim, they will not get interest on the amount that was transferred to the general revenue fund.

Under the proposed new act the same rules would apply in all of these cases. The Public Trustee must hold the property for at least 10 years. Only then could the Public Trustee transfer the property including any accumulated interest to the general revenue fund. There would be no cut-off date for a person to start proceedings to establish a claim to the property, but if someone establishes a claim, they will not be entitled to interest on the money that was transferred to the general revenue fund.

In a typical year, Mr. Speaker, the Public Trustee takes on the administration of several hundred deceased persons' estates. The Public Trustee sometimes administers an estate to protect the interest of a vulnerable person who is interested in the estate. The vulnerable person might be a minor or an adult for whom the Public Trustee is acting as a trustee under the Dependent Adults Act. In other cases the Public Trustee becomes the administrator because no one else is able or willing to do it. The changes in this area are intended to allow the Public Trustee to administer estates where needed in as cost-effective and efficient a manner as possible.

The circumstances in which the Public Trustee has priority to administer an estate will be broadened slightly. Currently the Public Trustee may administer the estate of a deceased who has not left a will if no one else steps up to do so. The bill extends this to cases where the deceased has left a will but no one has taken steps to administer the estate.

The bill also broadens the scope of an expeditious procedure that applies to estates of modest monetary value. Generally, the Public Trustee must apply to the court for a grant of administration to acquire the right to administer an estate, but if the deceased has not left a will and the estimated value of the estate is below a prescribed amount, another procedure is available. Instead of applying to the court for a grant of administration, the Public Trustee may file an election to administer the estate. The bill extends this procedure to cover smaller estates where the deceased has left a will.

With respect to minors the new Minors' Property Act, which was introduced as Bill 20, deals with how property of a minor gets into the hands of the Public Trustee for safekeeping. The new Public Trustee Act being proposed addresses how the property is dealt with once it's in the hands of the Public Trustee.

One of the changes in this area relates to the Public Trustee's discretion to make expenditures out of property held for a minor. The current act gives the Public Trustee varying degrees of discretion depending on the value of the property held for the minor. This bill eliminates the distinctions based on the value of the property held by the Public Trustee. The Public Trustee will have broad discretion to make expenditures out of property held for a minor. The main criteria is that the Public Trustee must be satisfied that the expenditure is in the minor's best interest.

The bill contains new provisions that clarify the Public Trustee's role in monitoring trustees of minors' trusts. Currently there's very little legislative guidance regarding the Public Trustee's role in this area. The new act states that the Public Trustee must monitor in two situations: if the creator of the trust appoints the Public Trustee to monitor or if the court directs the Public Trustee to monitor. In either case, the bill defines the scope of the Public Trustee's duties when appointed or directed to monitor.

The Public Trustee also plays an important role in protecting the financial interests of vulnerable adults by acting as trustee under the Dependent Adults Act. The bill does not make any substantive changes to the Public Trustee's role in this area.

The investment provisions under the current act are focused on two related funds: the common fund and the special reserve fund. Money held by the Public Trustee may be invested in a common fund held and controlled by the Public Trustee. The current provisions relating to the common fund are somewhat convoluted. However, upon close inspection the following points emerge.

The amount of the client's claim against the common fund is determined much as you would determine the balance outstanding on a bank account. Clients are paid interest on their common fund balances at the rate prescribed by the Public Trustee. The amount of clients' claims against the common fund is unaffected by fluctuations in the market value of its assets or by realized gains or losses. If the common fund's earnings for a period exceed the interest payable to clients for the period, the excess is paid into the special reserve fund. Conversely, if common fund earnings fall short of what is required to pay interest at the prescribed rate, the shortfall is made up from the special reserve fund. The amount outstanding on clients' common fund accounts is fully guaranteed by the province.

The Public Trustee may invest the common fund and special reserve fund only in securities listed in a schedule to the Trustee Act, the so-called legal list. Clients whose money is invested in the common fund benefit from an unconditional guarantee of capital, including capitalized interest. Whether you're looking at a period of a month or a decade, clients never incur negative returns. The money in the clients' common fund account is always available to the client. Clients may expect generally higher returns than could be expected if the Public Trustee had to invest each client's money individually.

The current act's investment provisions also have their drawbacks. They provide almost no guidance as to when the Public Trustee should invest a client's money in the common fund or invest it separately for the client. They provide no guidance as to how the Public Trustee should set the interest rate on the common fund. They are not as clear as they might be in describing how clients' claims against the common fund are quantified.

The legal list approach may preclude the Public Trustee from adopting optimal investment strategies. Some long-term plans would benefit if the Public Trustee could establish pooled investment funds that are more like mutual funds. The Legislature will recall that we passed amendments to the Trustee Act last year which allowed for the prudent investment rule to be applied, and that would be a similar concept that we're talking about here.

The new act's investment provisions are designed to build on the current act's strengths while addressing its drawbacks. The common fund and special reserve fund will be merged into a single common fund. The Public Trustee will still maintain reserves within the common fund, but the purposes for which the reserves are maintained are not advanced by maintaining two legally distinct accounts.

The new act introduces the concept of guaranteed accounts to clarify how clients' claims against the common fund are quantified. The government guarantee will continue as a guarantee of the amount outstanding on the clients' guaranteed accounts. The Public Trustee will continue to set the interest rate payable from time to time on clients' guaranteed accounts. In setting the interest rate, however, the Public Trustee will be governed by criteria to be established by regulation.

The Public Trustee will be governed by prudent investment principles, not the legal list, in investing common fund assets. The Public Trustee's application of prudent investment principles will reflect the objectives of the common fund.

It needs to be kept in mind that the common fund supports the Public Trustee's obligation on accounts that are fully guaranteed as to capital, including capitalized interest. This entails that the common fund will remain heavily weighted towards high-quality, fixed-income investments. The common fund will be the appropriate destination for most money of most clients.

However, the bill recognizes that the common fund will not always be the appropriate destination for a client's money. Long-term clients with assets of substantial value are a case in point. They could benefit if some of their assets are invested in a manner which accepts moderate short-term volatility in exchange for higher expected returns over the long haul. The bill authorizes regulations that would specify conditions under which the Public Trustee may make separate investments for a client.

This bill also authorizes regulations that would allow the Public

Trustee to establish pooled investment funds. Pooled investment funds would differ from the common fund in that money placed in such a fund would not be guaranteed. Pooled investment funds would be analogous to mutual funds in that a client's return would directly reflect the return on the fund's investments.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 19, the Public Trustee Act, is a complex act, but it's essentially a modernization of the act that was passed in 1949 and has not had any significant review since then. We've engaged in a process over the last two years to consult primarily with the people who are affected; that would be the legal community, the investment community, the insurance community, and clients. While it's not a broad community consultation, that opportunity was available for members of the public, but as you might expect, not too many people afforded themselves of the opportunity to comment.

However, we believe that we've done a thorough job and the department has done a thorough job of reviewing the Public Trustee Act, modernizing it, ensuring that we're in a position to deal with the concerns that have been raised from time to time by the Auditor General with respect to how the common funds and reserve funds are handled. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House will support Bill 19.

I would move that we adjourn debate.

Minors' Property Act

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise to move Bill 20, the Minors' Property Act.

In many ways it's a companion to the Public Trustee Act, as I referenced. Again, at the conclusion of my remarks I will move to adjourn debate to allow the opposition critic the opportunity to speak later in the day.

Following consultation with the public, Bill 20 was introduced and will update and replace the current Minors' Property Act. The bill omits obsolete provisions in the current act while simplifying and again modernizing the provisions that remain relevant. The bill also deals with a few subjects that are not addressed by the existing act.

The common thread that runs through the bill is the protection of minors' financial interests. The bill attempts to strike a balance between two objectives: ensuring that minors' property is administered and used in their best interests and acknowledging the important role of parents and guardians and, indeed, of minors themselves in looking after minors' property.

One of the ways the law protects minors' financial interests is by curtailing their ability to deal with their own property or to bind themselves to contracts, but there are circumstances where it is in a minor's best interest if there is a mechanism to facilitate transactions involving minors' property. This mechanism has long existed for certain types of transactions, and application may be made to the Court of Queen's Bench for approval of a transaction. The court will confirm the transaction if it's satisfied that it is in the minor's best interest. Court approval makes the transaction binding on the minor. This bill consolidates and streamlines provisions that allow the court to authorize the sale of a minor's property where the court is satisfied that this is in the minor's best interest.

The bill also retains a provision of the current act relating to settlement of minors' legal claims; for example, a claim by a minor who has been injured in an accident. Under the current law and under this bill a settlement of a minor's legal claim is binding on the minor if and only if the settlement is approved by the court.

To reinforce the importance of obtaining court confirmation of settlement of minors' claims, the bill contains a provision making it clear that an indemnity given by a parent or other guardian of a minor in connection with the settlement of a minor's legal claim is void. A new provision based on legislation in force in British Columbia will make it clear that the court may confirm any contract entered into by or on behalf of the minor if the court is satisfied that the contract is in the minor's best interest.

I've already mentioned that the law attempts to protect minors' financial interests by limiting their ability to deal with their own property. One aspect of this is that a person who holds property to which a minor is entitled cannot necessarily discharge their obligation by handing over the property to the minor.

A problem with the current law is that it is not always clear how the person who is under the obligation to the minor may actually discharge that obligation. Can they safely turn the property over to the minor, hand it over to the minor's parent or guardian, turn it over to a trustee who is authorized by a will to receive the property, or deliver it to the Public Trustee? These are all questions to which the existing law does not always provide a clear answer or may provide what seems to be a stranger impractical answer.

I'll provide an everyday example to illustrate the point. Suppose a 15 year old takes her bike into a bike shop for repairs. When the repairs are completed, she pays the bill. What should happen next? You might think the answer would be simple: the shop should return the bike to the 15-year-old customer. It's her bike, and she's paid the repair bill. But if you were to read section 6 of the current Public Trustee Act, you would find that the bike shop's apparent legal duty is to deliver the bike to the Public Trustee, not to the owner, the customer.

In fact, if you were to take the current provision at face value, any property, including money, to which a minor is entitled must be delivered to the Public Trustee except in three cases: where the money is due as wages or salary, where someone has been appointed by court order as a guardian or trustee of the minor's estate, where the property is worth less than $4,000 and the Public Trustee exercises a discretion to allow the property to be turned over to a responsible adult.

None of the exceptions to section 6 accommodates the reasonable expectations of the parties to the transaction involving the bike that I mentioned or a host of other similar transactions in which minors are involved every day. So one of the objectives of the bill is to clarify how persons who owe money to a minor or hold property to which a minor is entitled may discharge that obligation.

The bill deals specifically with three situations. The first is where a minor has entered into a contract that calls for the other party to deliver property to the minor. Subject to the regulations the other party to the contract may discharge their obligation by doing precisely what the contract requires them to do, hand over the property to the minor. The regulations might exclude contracts involving a very large amount of money or property of a very high value.

Second, the bill provides for situations where a trustee has been appointed by a trust instrument such as a will or by a court order. The bill provides that the person who is holding the property may discharge their obligation by paying the money to the trustee appointed by the instrument or the court order.

The third scenario dealt with by the bill is where the value of the property to which the minor is entitled is relatively small. The new provision is similar to the provisions of the current Trustee Act that give the Public Trustee the discretion to allow a third party to deliver property with a value of $4,000 or less to a responsible adult. However, under this act the Public Trustee will not be involved at all. The new provision will apply where the value of property involved is less than an amount prescribed by regulation. The person holding the property will be able to discharge their obligation by delivering the property to a guardian who has responsibilities for making day-to-day decisions affecting the minor. Alternatively, the person could deliver the property to the minor if the minor has a legal duty to support another person.

The three situations I've described cover the majority of everyday situations in which someone owes money to a minor or holds property to which a minor is entitled. But they don't cover some of the less common but significant situations such as the following: a minor is entitled to property of considerable value from the estate of a deceased person and no trustee has been appointed by the deceased person's will or by a court order, a minor is entitled to a large sum of money under a life insurance policy that does not appoint a trustee of the money, or a minor is entitled to the money under a court judgment or settlement and no trustee of the property has been appointed by the court. In situations like these, the person obligated to pay the minor may discharge their obligation by delivering the property or money to the Public Trustee, who will then hold it for the benefit of the minor.

Mr. Speaker, the bill also clarifies the process for the court to appoint a trustee of a minor's property. The current legislation assumes that if the court appoints a trustee of a minor's estate, the trustee will automatically be entrusted with all of the minor's estate. The bill will allow the court to appoint a trustee of specific property; for example, money payable under a settlement or for a minor's property generally. Existing legislation provides the court with no guidance as to the matters the court should consider when asked to appoint someone as a trustee of a minor's estate.

This bill emphasizes that the best interest of the minor is the fundamental issue when someone asks the court to appoint a trustee of a minor's property. It also identifies specific matters for the court to consider when deciding whether to appoint the proposed trustee. The current legislation creates a presumption that the proposed trustee must provide a bond. This bill retains the presumption but is framed as a requirement to provide a bond or some other security approved by the court. The bill provides for forms of security other than a bond because bonds may be very expensive and difficult to obtain.

The bill also encourages the court to consider whether safeguards other than the provision of security might be in the best interests of the minor. Security will not be required if the appointed trustee or one of them is a trust corporation.

A new provision gives the court a power to direct someone who is in possession of a minor's property to deliver the property to the Public Trustee for safekeeping. It is anticipated that this provision would be rarely used but would be of value in situations where a minor's property is being placed at risk.

The bill requires the Public Trustee to be given notice of any application under the act. This provision is new to the Minors' Property Act, but it is based on a similar provision in the current Public Trustee Act.

The bill requires the consent of a minor who is over the age of 14 to any application under the act unless the court allows the application to proceed without the minor's consent.

Mr. Speaker, that gives a general overview of the Minors' Property Act, Bill 20, that's being proposed. It replaces an existing act, again as I indicated with the Public Trustee Act. The intent is to modernize a provision that is there to allow the Public Trustee to act on behalf of the vulnerable and disadvantaged, in this case children. It updates our existing act, but most importantly it adheres to the guiding principle that all decisions affecting a child's property or legal rights are to be made in the child's best interest.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 20.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Ms Haley: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 3:40 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 10, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/10

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I would now like to call the Committee of the Whole to order. For the benefit of those in the gallery this is the informal part of the Legislature. In this part members are allowed to move quietly about the Chamber and even to talk quietly with one another, take their jackets off, that kind of thing. In the debate part it can go back and forth between the sponsor of a bill and the members that wish to ask questions about it. One person may speak more than once to the same topic, which is unlike, usually, in the Assembly.

Before we begin this evening, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly this evening seven young ladies. I believe I see them up there in the members' gallery. They are Girl Guides in grades 4 to 6, and they are from the constituency of Edmonton-McClung. They meet every Wednesday night in the Westridge community hall in the constituency of Edmonton-McClung. One of their teachers or group leaders is Janine Kolotylyuk, and the other one up there, as you can see, is Shannon Dean, who is our Senior Parliamentary Counsel. I would ask these young ladies and their teachers to please rise and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure indeed to welcome and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Legislature 39 air cadets tonight. They're from the 699 Air Cadets Squadron Jasper Place, and they're accompanied by four adults: Lieutenant Paul Alberto—Lieutenant Alberto is the nephew of Tan McAra, our Sessional Parliamentary Counsel here in the middle of the room—also Second Lieutenant Trevor Strome, Dr. Ted Greenaway, and Mr. Dennis Lehar. Dr. Greenaway reminds me that I worked closely with him in the days when I was at Jasper Place and provided space to the group. Guests, would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

Bill 16 Residential Tenancies Act

The Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be made with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have an opportunity to respond to Bill 16, the Residential Tenancies Act. I've listened intently while the debate has occurred about this bill over the past couple of days and look forward to the amendment that I believe is forthcoming, which will strengthen it.

In general, I can say that I support the provisions of this bill. I think that it moves us in a direction where we need to go, giving tenants the same rights as landlords to terminate tenancy, which has been often the problem with constituents in our constituency, and the new changes with evictions ensure that landlords can't punish tenants if they make complaints about them.

However, there does seem to be a discrepancy in this bill, Mr. Chairman. I have a letter from a constituent who has intently watched what has happened over the years with the landlords and tenants act. This fellow, Jim Sexsmith, is a senior. He is keenly observant of what happens in politics and is quite quick, and rightfully so, to express his opinion in writing and in person when he likes or doesn't like something that any level of government is doing. He had a particular concern with this bill and changes that may have been made to it, given that he is a tenant himself, and acts really, I think, as a community captain for seniors in the area who have these and other kinds of issues.

He wrote to me on February 24 of this year in anticipation of this bill having come forward.

In the February 6/04 Edmonton [Journal] the enclosed write-up appeared, Keep Interest on Deposits.

This letting the landlords make money off our deposits. These monies are the property of the tenants.

The interest on $500.00 is $45.00. A landlord with ten thousand tenants would be getting $450,000.00. The . . . government thinks this is not much to mention.

What right has . . . the Justice Department to set the interest rate on our deposits. When money is put into a trust fund in a chartered bank the interest rate is decided by the amount of interest they receive on their investing the deposits.

The Alberta certificates are one of the worst to invest our monies on. And further the government of Alberta is not a trust company. They are the last I would entrust my money to.

I ask that the honorable member bring this matter up in the Legislature and put a stop to this shameful system of cheating the elderly and low bracketed pension earners.

So he is referring to a situation where a set rate for the interest on damage deposits is established, and the interest paid on the Alberta savings certificates then is subtracted by 3.5 per cent. That money is held by the landlords, and if the average interest rate for the year is not greater than 3.5 per cent, then tenants get no money back on their deposits. So it's three years that tenants have had no money back on deposits that they've held. Mr. Sexsmith feels that this is very much an unfair practice.

We do not see anything in this legislation that addresses this particular issue. I would hope that we would get some response from the sponsor of the bill on this particular issue: whether or not it was under consideration, whether or not it could be under consideration in the next little while. He believes that landlords should return the full amount of the interest to the tenant. They've had the ability to hold that money for some time and earn additional interest off that, so he feels that people should be getting their money back.

I will, Mr. Chairman, table the appropriate number of copies of this particular letter so that they can be a part of our permanent record on this bill.

With that, I'll take my seat because those are my concerns. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to make a few comments about Bill 16 at the Committee of the Whole stage. I'd like to focus my comments on section 70, if I might, and that's the section that outlines the areas in which the minister may make regulations. The regulations that concern me are those in section (k), the regulations that will be enacted with respect to alternative dispute resolution mechanisms.

If you read through that section of the bill, Mr. Chairman, it outlines that the minister may make regulations respecting the establishment of alternative dispute resolutions and then talks about

- (i) providing for the establishment of one or more dispute resolution bodies,
- (ii) providing for all matters relating to the appointment of members to a dispute resolution body,
- (iii) respecting the kinds of disputes that a dispute resolution body can deal with.

This is all very formal, Mr. Chairman. Make regulations respecting the proceedings that come before that body, authorizing a dispute resolution body to make rules governing its proceedings, and it goes on at some length to section (x), even talking about levying fees. As I read those regulations, it did seem to me that it was very, very formal, and I wondered if we wouldn't be better off with a mechanism that was more community based and one that was made up of people involved more directly in the neighbourhood, one that would be far less formal.

8:10

I looked again at the growing number of mediation efforts on the continent. We find attempts to resolve conflicts through mediation panels everywhere now: in grade schools to resolve conflicts among youngsters and students, in high schools, and in neighbourhoods in this area. I know that there's a neighbourhood disputes board in Beaumont that helps neighbours there when they have conflicts with their neighbours over noise and property lines and other kinds of disputes that often arise between neighbours. The board out there is extremely busy and extremely successful.

There are examples elsewhere of less formal boards working. The Bellevue neighbourhood mediation program is a program that is designed by the city and neighbourhood, but it's able to help citizens with any civil disputes. They assist with the resolution of disputes involving landlords and tenants, just what this bill is about, business partnerships, elder care, consumer conflicts, in addition to neighbourhood concerns. But what is so striking about the Bellevue program is how it contrasts with what's proposed in the bill.

I have to admit that the bill doesn't fully explain how this is going to be set up. It lays out some of the parameters, but there seems built into it this fairly high, centralized, paid group of individuals who'd be involved in disputes resolution, although it does say that they can create other boards. It seems to me that if we could have a more local, more neighbourhood, more community-based disputes resolution mechanism for landlords and tenants, we might solve a lot of problems before they could get to the point where they're carried on into court or into some more formal body for resolution.

I noticed that the Bellevue model had trained 47 volunteer mediators and counsellors. They worked in eight different languages. They were community based, and they had a very high success rate, Mr. Chairman. Their success rate was 80 per cent with respect to solving disputes that included landlord and tenant disputes.

I would ask the mover of this bill if consideration was given to a more community-based disputes resolution mechanism, one that could refer disputes from police officers, from bylaw enforcement officers. One that would be more neighbourhood oriented and one that would be seen in the eyes of citizens as much more user friendly than the central body that I think is being proposed here. I would be interested in hearing from the mover of the bill.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude. Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll try and answer a couple of the questions that were raised just this evening.

Firstly, on the return of the full amount of the interest: I think the amount of the interest that is retained is in recognition of the administrative work that's involved. Just checking through the bill, I see that there are four pages dedicated to security deposits, interest on security deposits, return of security deposits, obligations of the landlord regarding security deposits, obviously a lot of red tape involving security deposits and where the money has to be deposited, the records you have to keep. All of this doesn't come without some kind of cost. So I think that as long as the costs are reasonable, it's reasonable to expect that the landlord would be able to retain a small amount of the interest in order to cover those costs of administrating that part of the act.

When it comes to the alternate dispute resolution process, it's very much a work in progress. Lots of work to be done on that yet. I can assure the hon. member that his comments are recorded, and they will be taken into consideration as the more definite rules are developed around this alternate dispute resolution process.

There are two real purposes for the alternate dispute resolution. Those are, one, to reduce the time that people have to spend getting disputes resolved and, secondly, to reduce the expenses that could be incurred. The minute you start going to court, you start involving lawyers and time and court time and running up the bills. If we can come up with an alternate resolution process that is satisfactory to both landlords and tenants – and that is the ultimate goal – then we will reduce the time and the expenses involved. I think that should be the goal of all of us.

Thank you.

The Chair: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have an amendment I'd like considered. I've left it at the table. If it's possible to get that distributed, then I can discuss it.

So I'd like to move the amendment that I have put forward, and I guess we'd be calling this amendment A1. I am asking that the Residential Tenancies Act, that is, Bill 16, be amended in section 30(3) by striking out "within 5 days" and substituting "within 10 days."

The Chair: Hon. member, I think most people have it by now, or almost all members, so we'll note that the amendment here as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre will be amendment A1.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is the suggestion that I was making last night, so I've turned it into something concrete by way of an amendment for the committee to consider.

The issue that I was raising last night is that particularly where we have landlords who are what I was calling small landlords, meaning that they were people who were renting a suite in their house, or perhaps they owned one or two properties in which there were a couple of suites, or a house with a main floor and an upper suite or a basement suite, something like that. I wasn't particularly intending this for larger landlords, because they don't encounter the same kind of issues. The situation that I was finding was that people that aren't professionals in this but are doing it to help pay their own mortgage or to build a nest egg for themselves or for whatever reason tend to be pretty normal folks – they're not lawyers – and they, generally speaking, don't like to get into . . .

Oh, I'm sorry. That wasn't a dig against lawyers. It just came out that way. Oh, dear. I'm just going to keep moving on here. [interjection] Yup. Can't get out from underneath that one. Sorry to the lawyers in the crowd. But, essentially, people I think generally avoid conflict.

Often when you get to a situation that would require the use of section 30(3), you are pretty close to a conflict situation as a landlord with your tenant. In all likelihood, at that point you have given them a 14-day notice to vacate. The five days comes into play here, and you have five days after they have failed to vacate at the end of that 14-day period or during a 14-day period in which to take your failure to vacate to court, pay your $100 fee or whatever the regulations deem it to be at the time – but it's $100 right now – and get the court involved with this, get a court notification, in other words.

A couple of things here for the individual landlord or the smaller landlord. One, they're not keen to fork out another hundred dollars if they're already in a situation where they've had to issue the notice to vacate because somebody didn't pay their rent. That just puts them more money out-of-pocket, and I'm sure they're not very keen to do that. Also, it's usually involving some kind of conflict directly with the tenant that's failed to vacate, and people tend to avoid it. What happens is you end up with your five days going by and you haven't in fact gone to court. Now, if that's the case, you have to start all over again with the 14-day notice.

Most small landlords will only let that happen to themselves once, and the next time they won't bother being nice. In other words, the process that's in place right now with the five days really does force people to be hard-hearted, and it forces the process towards the courts rather than towards an alternative dispute resolution process. I'm trying to remove the barriers for a successful alternative dispute resolution process with this new Residential Tenancies Act.

So that's why I've brought forward this motion which would expand the amount of time you've got from five days to 10 days. That's giving you a week and a half. That should give you enough time to in your normal schedule as a smaller landlord be able to get by your rental property and check it out, see that in fact your tenants have not vacated. Now you've got a problem. You've still got time to get to court and act on it, or you can then go to them and say: "Okay, this really isn't working. You guys didn't get out. We've got to make something work here, either, you know, one more chance to pay the rent or we can go to this alternative dispute process," which, I think, most people do want to take advantage of, particularly if it's not going to cost them the $100 that the court fee is going to cost them.

From our point of view as legislators it will steer people away from that expensive and time-consuming court process. Let's face it: having the lights on in a courtroom with all of the protection services there, the lawyers in place, the judge in place – that's a lot of money that's sitting there that one way or another we're going to have to cover the cost of. So the alternative dispute processes are certainly an economical way and also a less hostile, a less adversarial way of dealing with some of these landlord and tenant issues.

So that was the set-up that I was working with, and as I looked through it, I realized that there's another part to this issue. I mentioned it last night, and it involves the Member for Calgary-Currie and his MLA Review Committee on Secondary Suites building regulations in that we are trying to draw people out and make use of the secondary suites that already exist but that are not legal. In other words, they're not legitimate. People are not fessing up to actually having them. Well, what's part of the reason about fessing up? Well, you then have to participate in legitimate processes, which some people may be avoiding till now, and of course there's also the building codes and fire codes issues that the member and his committee are looking at at this point.

But part of my hope with this motion A1 that I brought forward is that, again, it would make it easier for those individual landlords that have in all likelihood secondary suites. It would help them to be on the right side of the legal blanket, so to speak, to become legitimate and help to draw them out so that they could be more up and up with their suites and more involved in the processes and following all the rules that we need them to follow.

I think my suggestion here is giving room to allow for human nature. That human nature is to avoid direct, one-on-one adversarial conflict and to ease people towards the use of these alternative possibilities. This is a situation that I've run into a number of times, and this was my solution to it.

I did give a copy of the wording of the resolution to the sponsoring Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti last night in the hope that he would bring it through his internal legislative process. I've heard some rumour that it's not going to be accepted, so if that's the case, I'm really hoping that the member is going to get up and tell me why, because I think this is one of those rules that gets in place, and then it just tends to stick there. Not that there's a really good reason for it to stick there, but nobody else – they kind of go: well, we had it, and we don't really remember why any more, but we can't really remember why we'd want to change it either, so we're going to leave it as it is. I think we've got an opportunity here to start moving in the direction that we say we want to move in. I see the government put that up as a standard. They say that they want to go there, and then they don't follow through with the rest of the things that make it possible.

One of the things that we have to remember as legislators is that human nature causes us a lot of work. If people did what they were supposed to do, we could save ourselves an awful lot of legislation, but the truth is they don't. They do tend to avoid conflict. They do tend to stall and procrastinate. They do tend to not do the things legal paper-wise that we need them to do. So we end up with things like intestate succession laws because people won't write wills because, of course, they're putting it off and delaying and hoping it won't happen. Well, that causes us a whole other raft of problems.

So I'm hoping that the government members will be able to support this amendment. In my research I can't see any reason why we can't do this. We're not totally abandoning the time limit that's in place here; we're just expanding it to allow for human nature. I don't think it would be fair to remove that time limit completely, but essentially that leaves a landlord with the ability to wander around with a 14-day eviction notice hanging over somebody's head ad infinitum. The point of this was to give people enough room to manoeuvre so that they wouldn't have a bad experience, which is what tends to happen, and the next time they get into this situation, they wouldn't be going straight to the courts without passing go. The idea was to encourage people to explore other possibilities.

So I think I've laid out my arguments, and I certainly did at length last night. I'm going to take my seat now, but I'm certainly willing to answer any other questions or engage in any other debate that people feel necessary. If they need it in order to support the amendment, I'm more than happy to help them out with that. Otherwise, I'm hoping I can engage the Member for Calgary-Currie maybe from his point of view with the work that he's trying to do on the secondary suites, if this sort of thing would be helpful, and as well the sponsoring Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti on whether or not the government is willing to accept the amendment.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to respond and to speak, unfortunately, against the amendment, but I think I have good reason to do so. As we reported several times during debate on Bill 16, there has been very extensive consultation with both landlords and tenants on this bill, and I must admit that this particular issue, this particular clause, did not come up in any of that consultation. That's not to say that this was not a big issue. If we go back a couple of years in history, at that time if you had this situation, you had to appear before Queen's Bench to get this order removing the tenant from the property, and that tended to be a lengthy and very costly process.

Approximately two years ago the Provincial Court Act was changed and allowed this type of action to proceed through the Provincial Court system, which is much quicker and not as costly. In fact, the way it's set up now, you do not need a lawyer. It's basically a fill-in-the-blanks form. You can print it right off the web site if you are at home with the computer and you want the form to fill in before you head down to the provincial courthouse. You print it off, fill in the blanks, take it down there – no muss, no fuss, no lawyers' fees – and you proceed.

I can appreciate the arguments about extending from five days to 10, but I think that those people who procrastinate and don't make the five-day limit will probably be there on the ninth day or the 10th day with the same list of excuses: gosh, I was out of town, or I was ill, or whatever the situation may be. But an extra five days probably isn't going to cut it, so I think we should stick with the five days that is in the bill. As I said, it has not been an issue with landlords or tenants that were consulted in working on this bill, and the changes that were made two years ago did address the concerns that were around at that point in time.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. When I looked at the calendar, I noticed that there in fact is a five-day period across the last Christmas holidays in which the courts were not open. What does the member suggest is the remedy in that case? Had one gone to the courts after about 11:30, I think, on the 24th, you would not have been able to have filed your notice for a five-day period. What was the remedy that was available then?

In other words, I think my argument for an extension beyond five days is a good one. It didn't take me very long at all to come up with one very recent example of a five-day period when someone would not have been successful, even if they were trying to stay within that five-day limit.

Mr. Graydon: I would look, maybe, for some direction from the Justice minister. There must be other situations where if the court's not sitting for five days, there are some allowances made of some sort. So I'm not sure if anyone else can enlighten me on that or not.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Well, just because I was asked. I'm not sure that I could help on that point. I think there's a fair point to be made, actually, that in five days you may end up, the way it's written here – it would be subject to the Interpretation Act whether these days are calendar days or business days, but it says "days," so I would have to interpret this, on the face of it, to be calendar days, which would mean that you might have, for example, a weekend, which would limit your available court days to three, and if you were on a holiday like a Christmas holiday, you might in fact not be able to have access to an open court within the five-day period.

So I would have to agree with the Member for Edmonton-Centre. In some circumstances if a landlord was not alert in providing the termination notice and wasn't alert to the rules, they might get themselves into a bit of a jam on that particular point.

I'm going to keep talking because I understand that they're consulting over there a little bit.

I have to say that the amendment is not wholly helpful in this regard, because you would not only have to amend section 30(3), but you would also have to do a corollary amendment to 30(5) because in 30(5) you're also talking about that five-day period. The effect of this section is that if the notice of termination is served and the 14 days expires and the person fails to move out of the suite or the rental premises, then the landlord has five days after the termination date to apply to the court for an order confirming the termination of the tenancy or any remedy that might be granted under section 26. Then sub (5) indicates that if the landlord has not applied to confirm the termination, then the termination is in effect void. So, essentially, the landlord is in a position where they have to start over.

If this bill were to pass with this section as it is, then what that would mean is that a landlord would have to be on his toes or her toes, as the case may be, and would have to be alert to those time frames in serving a notice of termination and then be alert to the five-day period.

So it's workable, but I tend to agree with the Member for Edmonton-Centre that it puts a fairly tight time frame on a landlord to be precise and make sure that they know what their time frames are and know what their time frames are when they prepare and serve the notice of termination so that they don't fall into that holiday trap.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In speaking to the minister involved and listening to our minister there and to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, it has certainly brought up some compelling arguments to accept this amendment, so at this point I am going to recommend to our caucus that we do accept the amendment she has brought up. This business of the Christmas break is a very important issue and one, I must admit, that I hadn't thought of. So if we put something in that's impossible to meet, we should be flexible enough to change that.

Thank you.

The Chair: We have a variety of individuals standing, and the Government House Leader is the one that is recognized first.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if it would be in order to propose an amendment to the amendment. I would hope that it would be a friendly amendment. It would be to be amended in section 30(3) and 30(5). It would just be adding "and 30(5)" after "30(3)" so that you'd change both of the five-day periods to 10 days, and in that way the amendment would actually be an effective amendment.

The Chair: The Government House Leader has moved a subamendment to amendment A1 to extend this to "30(3) and 30(5)." I would want to check with a couple of people here before I hear further. We now have a subamendment on the floor.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the subamendment.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. On the subamendment. I'm willing to accept the subamendment as a friendly amendment being as it's simply after the number "30(3)" inserting "and 30(5)" and then carries on with "by striking out," et cetera, the rest of the amendment. Yes, I'm willing to accept that as a friendly amendment.

Thank you.

The Chair: Now the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on the subamendment.

Mr. Lord: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This is a bit unusual this evening, but the committee that I co-chair with my colleague from Calgary-East was brought up. I do think that some of the arguments that have been put forward previously on the amendment and now on the subamendment do make sense to me, so at this time I would certainly be speaking in favour of the subamendment and the amendment that gave rise to it and would urge my colleagues to support it as well.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti on the subamendment.

Mr. Graydon: Just speaking in favour. It makes complete sense. Thank you.

8:40

The Chair: We'll go through this slowly so that I understand it, and correct me if I've not got it right. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has moved amendment A1, to which a subamendment has been offered and moved by the hon. Government House Leader. This subamendment is really a consequential subamendment because 30(5) would have to be the same as 30(3). They'd have to be in agreement. So we'll need to vote twice on this thing to get it all right.

[Motion on subamendment carried]

[Motion on amendment A1 as amended carried]

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Calahasen: She's so excited.

Ms Blakeman: I am so excited.

Thank you very much. I know that there are others who wish to discuss this in committee, and I would now move adjournment of Bill 16.

Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report progress on Bill 16.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 16. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly. I would also like to table copies of a document tabled during Committee of the Whole this day for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? The motion is carried.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 12
Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2004

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to move on behalf of the Member for Little Bow Bill 12, the Financial Administration Amendment Act, 2004.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to speak to third reading of Bill 12. We've had a good look at this bill, and we agree with the government that it streamlines and clarifies how government manages and invests funds by clarifying words and definitions and making some other technical amendments.

The part that we particularly like is that it updates the legislation to allow the province to use electronic fiscal transactions within its investment portfolio. That's a very smart move to have made. I'm on the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee, and we repeatedly ask the question with each quarter update about why we're paying such high fees to the investment companies who are managing the funds, and in fact this is part of the answer. Beforehand, everything had to be done on paper, which is not a very efficient way to manage investments in today's world.

The money paid out in investment management transaction fees I believe will be lower in most instances as a result of this bill having been passed. Liberals aren't just about taxing and spending; we're also very much about being fiscally responsible. This bill moves this government's position into a more responsible position, so we do support it, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a third time]

Second Reading

Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004

[Adjourned debate March 9: Mr. Hancock]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in second reading on Bill 18 and follow the minister's comments on the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004. Well, sometimes it's good, and this is one of those times.

The point of the maintenance enforcement program is that the court is ordering maintenance payments for children, and I think a lot of times we get knocked off kilter here with a lot of personal arguments about, you know: "I'm not giving money to the custodial parent of the child. Nuh, nuh, nuh. Nope. We're not going there." This is about maintenance payments for the children, and that's what we always have to keep in mind. The point of this is for the children.

Since this program was put in place in Alberta, we have actually increased our collection numbers to the point where they're not bad. They're not too shabby; 78.4 per cent was the collection rate in the 2002-2003 fiscal year. But that does still leave us a bit more than 21 per cent of $187.4 million that we're not collecting on behalf of children in Alberta. Often that has to do with people who are chronically avoiding this court-ordered payment.

8:50

Over the years the maintenance enforcement program, often with this member's support, has strengthened its enforcement arm. It's given itself teeth to pursue these chronic nonpayers or chronic debtors. What we see in this legislation is a bit more fine-tuning, some more enforcement teeth, and some minor administrative cleanup, just the lessons we learn as you administer a program over a long enough period of time. You learn to fine-tune it, and I think the minister is taking the opportunity to do that at this point.

Let's be clear here. When we're talking about chronic nonpayers, we're not talking about someone who occasionally misses, or perhaps they are a seasonal worker and sometimes it's a bit tough for them, and that always seems to roll around in the spring of the year. No, no. That's not what we're talking about. And we're not talking about somebody who, you know, accidentally leaves the cheque near the back door, and it blows out the door, and they forget once. I mean, that's not what we're talking about.

We're talking about people here that change their jobs so they don't have to pay. They hide their assets under somebody else's name so they don't have to pay. They move around often enough that we can't locate them, and they don't have an address that we can track them through. These are people that are taking deliberate action in their lives to avoid making these payments.

We need to be able to get at them and get these payments because these are children that we are talking about. These are children that are owed this money, and the courts have said that's reasonable that these kids get this money to live their lives.

It's not as though they're living high on the hog for the most part, by the way, folks. This is to pay for their participation along with their classmates in all the things that Albertan kids hope to be able to and usually can participate in, things like school sports and field trips and some kind of extracurricular activity and some entertainment and movies that you don't have to wait until they come out on video or DVD. You want to be able to go to the movie theatre and see them. This is reasonable, and we have people that are being unreasonable.

The tools that we're talking about using here to encourage, if I can put that in quotation marks, these chronic debtors are things like being able to take lottery winnings, which seems perfectly reasonable. That's a windfall to begin with. This legislation is contemplating that any lottery winnings over a thousand dollars could be picked up here. Again, we're talking chronic nonpayers. These are people who have a long history of not doing this, and then they default for six months in a row, which then allows the director of maintenance enforcement to open the door and a number of these enforcement possibilities become open to them. But it's only after that six consecutive months. So this is a lot of messing up that has gone on prior to this.

We were able with recent legislation to cancel driver's licences, which would make them have to appear, and in order to get their driver's licence again, they would have to make arrangements to make payments on the arrears that they owed. The other thing that's been added to that list now is hunting and fishing licences. For those people that are really keen on those activities in the summer or in the fall, they're going to have to settle up their maintenance arrears before they're going to get their hunting licence, and I have no problem with that whatsoever.

There's also the ability to report noncompliance with a maintenance order to the governing body of one's professional association, and that's an interesting way of reminding us all that people who choose to not pay maintenance enforcement cross all socioeconomic lines. Sometimes in order to get somebody to pay up, you've got to embarrass them a little, and if that involves going to the pharmacists' or the dentists' or the engineering technologists' professional association and reporting that you have a significant noncompliance with a maintenance order and that will result in the debtor paying up, so be it. Good. Another tool to use.

This legislation is also adding in municipalities, utility and insurance companies, nongovernment organizations, and cheque-cashing companies to the list of groups that are required to provide information if they have it. Remember I was talking earlier about people that hid their assets and changed their home address or their mailing address so you couldn't find them? Well, usually somebody somewhere along the line knows they're paying for a phone or a cell phone or utility bills in their name. It's another way of tracking them and finding them to be able to get hold of them and get the payments from them. So this is a good way of being able to gather more information there.

It also adds in other government departments. There was a situation where when we were trying to garnishee people's cheques, if they were with the credit union or Alberta Treasury Branches, you had to serve the garnishee on the correct branch of Alberta Treasury Branches or the credit union. This is changing it now so that the Treasury Branches or the credit unions will designate one central location that their garnishees will go through, and that again is helpful as an administrative process to try and collect the monies.

The legislation is also requiring proof from debtors. They have to provide proof of the facts necessary to administer variable orders, or the maintenance enforcement program can charge the highest amount. In the past the onus has been on maintenance enforcement to run around and get the proof on that. Often it's not possible to do so, and it also costs maintenance enforcement money, which costs taxpayers money, and/or it's money that's not going to children. So this is a good update.

It also allows for a fine for failure to provide the statement of finance, which is another sort of point of argument that chronic debtors will often do: you know, claim that their circumstances have changed but then they won't provide that financial information. So this is saying: fine, if you're going to do that, then you're going to pay a fine for it.

It allows MEP to get at the locked-in retirement plans, the LIRAs, another way of accessing money for children.

Then there are a number of sort of administrative adjustments that have been made, things like the liability for the maintenance enforcement program, the ability to explain how the reciprocal programs work, streamlining the interjurisdictional support orders, which was a piece of legislation we had in here last year, I think, or the year before, but it's allowing all of those processes to be explained to people, which we haven't had previously.

Clarifying the whereabouts: when we talk about the debtor's whereabouts, we mean the whereabouts of their assets as well as of the individual themselves.

The program can charge a fee for serving documents. In maintenance applications now it can be for any documents.

The debtors can request that there be direct withdrawals from their bank accounts, which again is another really simple administrative thing that can be done that makes it all easier.

So nice work from the maintenance enforcement program to work through all of this and to keep an eye on the ball at all times. We are trying to make sure that if you're going to parent a child, then you are going to support that child. If it has to be court ordered, so be it, but this gives the province the ability to secure those funds on behalf of those children. I am very supportive of anything that can be done there.

I'm not saying that, you know, we need to take debtors and turn them upside down and shake them until every last penny comes out of their pocket, but frankly if the last penny was part of the maintenance order, I'm willing to go there. Congratulations to the minister and to the program for following through and continuing to uphold the maintenance enforcement program with this kind of legislation.

Thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a second time]

9:00

Bill 19
Public Trustee Act

[Adjourned debate March 10: Mr. Hancock]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak in second reading to Bill 19, the Public Trustee Act. I think the original Public Trustee Act has been in force since 1949. I believe this has been the first major update and overhaul of the legislation, so it's quite overdue.

I have gone through what's being suggested here, and it breaks down into a couple of categories. One is clarifying the legal status of the office of the Public Trustee. A number of things have changed over time where we regard, you know, corporations as legal persons and things like that, so it's important to clarify that changing legal status so that we keep up with the times. There are a number of sections in there that are dealing with the ability to hold legal title to property and things like that.

Another area that's updated in the bill and cleaned up, really, is the whole area of the trust funds, because the Public Trustee does hold money on behalf of people, whether they're a missing person or a person that's been deemed a mentally incompetent adult or a minor or someone that dies without a will. It's adding in some newer things like even if they weren't designated the executor, they can do that over the estate under certain circumstances. It also really cleans up the way they hold the trust accounts.

Before, there were two different accounts, basically, that had to do with the investment of the money, and that's been cleaned up and turned into one account. For people that have significant estates that need a different treatment for their money over the longer term with larger amounts of money, it still allows for that to be dealt with appropriately. Basically, the people whose money is being held always come out ahead, and that's fine.

We are looking at a new Minors' Property Act, which is Bill 20 this year, but in some cases the minor's property may well fall under the purview of the Public Trustee, in which case it has to be built into the legislation what's going to happen so that it's all clear. That's the third part of what's happening here. It's adding in how to deal with missing persons and clarifying that, and I think it's also updating the mentally incompetent adults.

Now, as far as I'm aware, I've had no negative feedback from this in any of the feedback loops, stakeholder groups that I tend to put this legislation out with to see if they've got anything to say about it. It's been out there for quite a while. I've had no negative feedback on it. I sometimes get feedback once we've commented in second reading, so I may well be back here in Committee of the Whole with additional things to say. But from what I've seen, I have no problem supporting this act in principle in second reading. To my eye it appears to be the modernization and updating of the act that we need as we are now several years into the new millennium.

So I'm happy to support this new Public Trustee Act in second reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:06 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 11, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/11

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. We give thanks for our abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask for guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'm pleased today to introduce a distinguished Canadian and former resident of Alberta who has just completed a challenging and often dangerous mission in Kabul, Afghanistan. In the Speaker's gallery is Major General Andrew Leslie. He's a former deputy commander and the senior Canadian officer in the International Security Assistance Force.

He and his fellow soldiers brought peace and order within their area of responsibility. Beyond that, they laid a strong foundation for an increasing respect for the rule of law. This was achieved at some cost. Canadian soldiers were killed during the course of their duties with the ISAF in Afghanistan.

He has served his country at home and abroad for nearly 25 years. While on his disembarkation leave, he has undertaken a speaking tour of Alberta and British Columbia in order to acquaint Canadians with a better understanding of the complexities of operations in Afghanistan and to raise the awareness of the superb work that men and women of our armed forces do on our behalf.

General Leslie and his wife, Karen, are in the Speaker's gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the men and women representing the people of Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly guests who are touring the Legislative Assembly. Six of these guests have just completed their 2003-2004 municipal internship program, which is a valuable program sponsored by Alberta Municipal Affairs in partnership with Alberta municipalities.

I'd ask the members to stand when I call their names. These are municipal managers of the future. From the town of Whitecourt we have Hong Liu, from the city of Spruce Grove, Sarah Robbins. From the town of Innisfail we have Carey Keleman. From the town of Taber we have Angie Keibel. From the town of Bonnyville we have Crystal Kwiatkowski. From the county of Grande Prairie we have Bryce Stewart. Also joining them today are members of the Municipal Affairs staff: Terry Brown, Wendy Peters, Mary Jo Lauder, and Helen Chow. Again, I'd ask them all to stand and to receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a great group of students from the Trinity Christian school. I'd like to welcome the students, teachers, and parents, in particular their teacher Mr. George Graffunder, parent helpers Kent Blanton, Chris Mellenberg, Carol Nudd, Susan Kist, Barbara Barwich, Michelle Karperien, Kathleen Lefevre, and last but not least, Pat Lagore, who is a former EA in the Legislature, as well as her husband, who was instrumental in helping our Speaker actually enter politics. So if they would rise, I'd like them to receive the special welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce 35 grades 5 and 6 students from Dr. Elliott school in Linden, Alberta. They've taken advantage of a beautiful day to make the trip, and they are accompanied by quite a number of parents.

First of all, I'd like to introduce the teachers, Mrs. Sherri Hempel and Mrs. Mary Hughes. The parents that are accompanying them are Mr. Ken Boekema, Dan Colyn, Mrs. Arlys Davis, Mrs. Caroline Dyck, Mrs. Dorothy Edgecombe, Mrs. Donna Esau, Mrs. Irene Griesbrect, Mrs. Char Howe, Mrs. Caroline Kung, Mr. Ken Leinweber, Mrs. Helena Ratzlaff, Mr. Darryl Toews, and last but not least and also a municipal councillor with the county of Kneehill, who ended up taking a job I used to have, Mr. Murray Woods. So I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Mr. Maskell: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature 15 friends of mine seated in the public gallery. They are members of the West End Seniors Activity Centre, an organization nearly 1,000 strong helping seniors remain active and vital. My guests include group leader Pearl Figol, Lila Lougheed, Laverne Filips, Rose Boucher, Edna Jolly, Joan Jackson, Gloria Campbell, Phyllis Krucik, April Eltom, Elizabeth Clare, Derek Clare, Dorothy Chester, Jean Miskew, Marie Prezanowsky, and Linda Klassen. They're seated in the public gallery. Please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two constituents from St. Albert. The first, Lorie Veldhuis, is a parent of three children in grades 2, 3, and 4, a very busy lady. One is attending J.J. Nearing Catholic elementary, and the other two children are attending Catholic French immersion at l'école Father Jan.

The second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is Wendy Battenfelder, who is also a parent of two children who are also attending J.J. Nearing Catholic elementary school in St. Albert.

They are with us today as part of the Education Watch initiative and because they are very concerned about the quality of education their children are receiving and the funding for separate public education in the province. They are seated in the public gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you some very special friends who are visiting us today and who are working with the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. They are here primarily to show their support for the Blind Persons' Rights Amendment Act, for which we are anticipating royal assent later this afternoon from Her Honour.

These individuals have worked very closely with me and my department on these important amendments, and I would ask them to rise as their names are called so that we can salute them jointly: Mr. Bryan O'Donnell, chair of the board for the CNIB; Mr. Bill McKeown, executive director of the CNIB; Ms Ellie Shuster, director of communications for the CNIB; Mrs. Roberta Wilmott, director of finance for the CNIB; and Diane Bergeron and her guide dog, Polar. Diane, of course, worked with the city of Edmonton as a co-ordinator on the Advisory Board on Services for Persons with Disabilities, and she's also a board member of the CNIB. They are accompanied by a member of my staff who worked on this particular act, Mr. Andrew Turzansky. Would you please all rise and be welcomed by our Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of the Assembly a constituent of mine who is very active in a parent volunteer group called Education Watch. He's an active participant in this initiative. Dr. Wilson has a child who is in grade 2 at McKernan elementary school. He is also accompanied by Preet Sara, who is co-ordinator of the Education Watch initiative. Both of them are seated in the public gallery. I'll request them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to the Assembly Mr. Gerry Russo. Gerry is a parent of a child attending grade 1 at McKernan elementary junior high in Edmonton-Riverview. He's here, as many parents have been, as part of the Education Watch initiative, and he's seated in the members' gallery. He's concerned about the quality of education that his child is receiving, and he's concerned about funding for public education. I'd ask him to please rise and receive the warm welcome of all members.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, seven years ago today, on March 11, 1997, 21 members of this Assembly were elected to this Assembly for the first time, so I thought that today I would introduce them on their seventh anniversary: the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, the Minister of Gaming, the Minister of Children's Services, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, the Minister of Revenue, the hon. ### Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Review of Pricing in the Beef Industry

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier stood in this House and said: tomorrow the minister of agriculture will release a full accounting of where every dollar of assistance went. Today the minister of agriculture released this report, which is just a whitewash. Beef producers and consumers are still asking: where did the money go? My first question is to the Premier. Why less than 24 hours later have you broken your promise? This is not good accounting.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I didn't break my promise. If I created confusion, I apologize.

The report relative to all the dollars spent, the breakdown of how the dollars were spent – and I've said this publicly many times – will be released when the program is finished. I understand the program is not yet finished, and the hon. minister has given a commitment to release that information once the program is finished.

What was released today, Mr. Speaker, was a report that indeed was not a whitewash. This is the terminology that has become so typical of the Liberal Party: "whitewash" and all kinds of very descriptive but misleading adjectives that lead people to read innuendo and wild accusations based on no evidence at all. Today's report regarded the beef industry pricing practices in the wake of BSE. The results of the study indicate that there was an overall average, not a monthly as the NDs pointed out, decrease in the price of beef – it was about 20 per cent – and that packers didn't engage in unfair pricing practices. The study showed also that our assistance programs were effective in keeping prices higher than they otherwise would have been.

The report, of course, was released today at 11 a.m., and as I understand it, the minister will be available with me at 3 p.m. again today to answer questions relative to this issue.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Premier: given that the hon. minister of agriculture sits right next to you, why did you not know what she was investigating in this report?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I did know, and I have stated publicly that the information relative to where every dollar went will be released once the program is complete. What more can I say? I already said that if I've confused the opposition members, then first of all that's not difficult to do, and, secondly, I apologize if I did.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the cow-calf operators that I had the privilege of meeting with in Vegreville last night demanded to know, "Where did the money go?" why does this government continue to ignore the interests of small farmers?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, how many? Who did they represent? We paid out to 1,534 feedlot operators totalling $359 million. I don't know who he was talking to. Who was he talking to? Will the hon. member tell us how many were at that meeting and who they represented? He won't because he knows that they are a special-interest group that are not sympathetic or supportive of this government in any way, shape, or form.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate that the hon. Premier didn't accept my invitation to Vegreville. I would easily have given him a ride.

Again to the Premier: in making this report, why did the government not ask the meat packers to open their books?

Mr. Klein: Again, this was an investigation conducted by officials in the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development – officials – and this hon. member is questioning the integrity of those officials, those government employees, those dedicated government employees. This member is questioning their integrity and their ability to conduct an investigation or a review to report to the minister. Mr. Speaker, that is sad. That is sad for this so-called hon. member to pick on public service employees who cannot be in this Legislature to defend themselves.

Mr. Speaker, relative to the question that was asked, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is right. The packers were not compelled to open their books to us. That is highly competitive information. He may not understand that, but it is highly competitive information that we have no authority to ask them for. We wouldn't ask an individual producer for that information, we wouldn't ask Safeway for that information, and we did not ask them. However, there are authorities that can and will ask for that information if they believe it's pertinent to this discussion.

The hon. member knows full well – he was at the news conference – that this was not an investigation. This was a report that I asked my officials to deliver to me, done in-house at no cost to taxpayers other than my talented, hard-working, dedicated civil servants provide every day of the week to us. They were asked to provide three things to me. One, was there a change in retail price? Is there evidence of change in how packers have to handle materials that would affect pricing? They brought that information back to us. The third thing was: did the programs work for the intention that they were put in place for? Indeed, in fact it showed that that happened too.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that we had a list of industry members interviewed, what information did this government get from the packers to formulate this report?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. minister respond. It was her officials who conducted the review for the minister – her officials – the same officials who are being questioned relative to their integrity and their capabilities by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out while I'm on my feet that it wasn't this hon. member who invited me. He offered to drive me to Vegreville, but it was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands who invited me to go. It just goes to show that the Liberals will go to any lengths to hijack the NDs' agenda, and the NDs should be offended.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: why did your government yet again overlook small farmers when this report was made? You're continuing to overlook small farmers. Why?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, again, I forgot to ask the hon. minister to respond to the actual question. I was just responding to the preamble and throwing in a little editorial comment.

But to respond to the questions, I'll have the hon. minister reply.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, small producers in this province have not been overlooked. As was indicated, 1,500-plus feedlot owners received to date $359 million. I can assure you that many of those feedlots are small. They may be 50 head; they may be 100; they may be 500. In fact, if the hon. member moved out of the city and got out in the countryside, he would understand that there are not 1,500 and some odd large feedlots in this province.

So, Mr. Speaker, small producers have not been overlooked. However, I think this issue of the small family farm being overlooked is one that we should address here because this is a fallacy and it is being promoted for all of the wrong reasons. In fact, the small cow-calf producer, whether he had 50 cows, 20 cows, 100 cows, or 500 cows, was addressed in this program in the way that the majority of cow-calf producers want to be addressed, not by receiving a cheque from government but by receiving a fair return in the marketplace, which they did in the fall of 2003. In July of 2003 those producers told me that it would be 50 cents a pound for steer calves. In fact, the average was more like $1.26 and a high of $1.45.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Drug Abuse Treatment

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A Lloydminster detox centre admitted that it had turned away 90 patients last month. Last year the government made $588 million from liquor and related revenue but only spent $48 million on direct services and treatment for alcohol and drug addictions. In Alberta crack cocaine and crystal meth use are increasing problems for both urban and rural youth. My questions are to the Premier. How does the government justify huge liquor sales profits while people with addictions go untreated?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, that is not true. Taxes from liquor go into general revenues and are used for a multitude of services including services for those suffering addictions and those suffering other forms of abuse. So you can't tie any specific program to any set of revenues.

You know, I can tell you where 7.2 billion – billion – dollars of that money went. It went to health care generally and . . .

Ms Blakeman: Travel?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the amount that went to travel can't even . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

The Speaker: Please, please. You know, the tradition of this House is that you speak through the chair. I recognize somebody to ask a question. Then I recognize somebody to respond. In the meantime, then, there's all kinds of stuff happening. Well, it doesn't work. That's why I have to stand up, and I don't want to stand up. This is your question period. This is your answer period; it's not mine.

So the second question, please.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the government refusing to cover the cost to send youth addicted to crack cocaine to secure treatment facilities?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that question under advisement.

I see that the hon. Solicitor General is not here. Perhaps the Attorney General can shed some light on it.

Mr. Hancock: Actually, it should be AADAC.

Mr. Klein: Oh, well, maybe I'll have the hon. minister of health respond because this could be a matter related to AADAC.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, in answering a question earlier this week, we were talking about crystal meth or methamphetamines, and I indicated at that time that there were a number of different drugs that we actually covered with respect to their treatment. I would refer the hon. member back to my response to it at that time. I don't have a complete list before me at this time.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: why is the government not doing more to assist rural centres with youth drug problems, especially detox centres?

Mr. Klein: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we're doing all we can do in light of trying to strike the right balance, but relative to the specifics of the question I'll have the hon. minister respond.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, again, earlier this week when we were talking about methamphetamine, which is a serious issue – I believe that the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar asked this question – we indicated at that time what we were doing in places like, for example, the Yellowhead corridor in treating young people and adults who have these difficulties with these very highly addictive drugs. So I again would refer the hon. member to my earlier response.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Review of Pricing in the Beef Industry (continued)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister of agriculture released a report today claiming that beef prices are down by 20 per cent over the last six months. However, figures on her own department's web site indicate that the store price of beef has only dropped by 3 and a half per cent over the past three years. This discrepancy is just one reason that Albertans are already calling this report a joke, a farce, and a whitewash. To the Premier: how can this government look Albertans in the eye and claim that grocery store beef prices are down 20 per cent when Alberta Agriculture's own figures show that that's not true?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I'm just quoting from the study that was conducted for the hon. minister by dedicated and committed public service employees with no axes to grind. The results of the study indicate that there was an overall 20 per cent decline in beef prices last year. That's what the report states.

Now, the NDs can post what they want on the web site. Different things are posted on the web site for different days or different weeks or different months. But what we are doing is taking an overall price over one year, not one month, not one week, not one day, not one hour but a year.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how does the Premier expect Albertans to buy into a study that simply asks the packers, "Are you fixing prices?" rather than actually look at whether or not there's evidence one way or the other?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I've said time and time again that there is a process for determining whether, in fact, packers are engaging in inappropriate activities. One of those activities is going on right now in Ottawa, where the all-party committee on agriculture is now calling evidence relative to the pricing practices of packing houses.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I have said time and time again that if this hon. member or any other member has evidence that there is something inappropriate going on relative to packing plant prices, then pass that information on to the proper authorities. Now, you can pass that information on to our own Auditor General, Mr. Dunn, and I'm sure that he will do what he's able to do with that information. You can certainly pass it on to the all-party committee. You can certainly pass it on to the Competition Bureau.

I don't know if the hon. member has done any of those things, because I suspect that this hon. member is more interested in grandstanding, in trying to get the ink, to create fear, to create misapprehension, to create concern in the minds of the public than he is in getting to the bottom of this issue and getting the facts.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier says that this report and his government's responsibility is not to look into these kinds of allegations against packers, then why does the government news release say, "Ag report shows no unfair packer pricing because of BSE"? Why are you putting this out, Mr. Premier? Why?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister indicated that she would prepare a report, a report that would cover three things. One, what is the price of beef, generally? The report did that, and her dedicated and committed employees did the best they could to come up with an average figure relative to beef prices.

Number two, the report would indicate to the minister whether or not the program, the combined federal/provincial program, worked to assist farmers, those involved in the beef industry, and, number three, whether there was any surface evidence, anyway, to indicate that price-fixing was going on amongst the packing industry.

The report concludes that overall the price of beef has dropped over a one-year period by 20 per cent, that generally the assistance program put in place was beneficial to producers, and, thirdly, that there was no evidence, at least on the surface, of price-fixing by the meat packers. However, a more detailed investigation will be undertaken by the Competition Bureau and by the all-party committee of Parliament.

One more thing, Mr. Speaker. I'll be very, very brief. There is another component to the report, and that is the component relative to the breakdown of where the dollars went, and that will come once the program has ended.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As earlier mentioned, numerous times I would say, this morning the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development released a report prepared by her department entitled Pricing in the Beef Industry. Now, given recent allegations of price-fixing and other wrongdoings in the beef industry, I'd be pleased to share this report with my constituents. However, as answered by the minister, officials did not have access to the financial records of packers in this province. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can she elaborate on what the report did accomplish, seeing that only half of the financial picture was available?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I think we have to put this into perspective. There were a lot of accusations being hurled around hither and thither, and this disturbed me, disturbed me at a time when this industry is facing the worst crisis in the history of the industry. So I asked my department. Essentially, the first request was: do a carcass evaluation and give me an indication of what's changed.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's useful if we can just take half a minute and outline what has changed for the industry. Today they have to separate SRMs and contain them differently. There are no automated deboning devices used any more. You have to segregate cattle under and over 30 months, which means mouthing those cattle if there's a suspect animal, which means you have to check to see if their incisors are coming through or in. You have increased rendering costs today. You have no market for a large part of the carcass, that previously went to offshore markets.

You have stranded product that was left out there en route to a market that was no longer available. That was short term but something that's just not talked about at all, and if you followed the Canadian dollar, you also know that there have been some very wide swings in that. Anybody who understands the export market knows what the impact of a cent of change, let alone 5, 6, 7, or 8 cents, can cause.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, when the border opened to boneless, we have to understand that for the first period of time the discount on Canadian beef went very high compared to what it was originally, which was sort of in the grading system and maybe 4 to 6 cents and went as high as 25 cents. That's what the report told me, and that's what I wanted to know, and it was my report.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister and in reference to the contents of the report itself: did the report examine why cow-calf producers – and I stress: cow-calf producers – hadn't received any actual money from the BSE support programs?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, yes. It was asked. Supplementary to the first request, on carcass evaluation, was to do an evaluation to see if the programs did what they intended to. In fact, the first four, five, six programs that this government put in place, that were designed with the industry, did exactly what they were designed to do; that is, to move product through the system. I remind all members of this Assembly that we had what we thought was 650,000 head of fat cattle on feed in Canada, 50 per cent of which no longer had a home or a market, which subsequently came to be 1.2 million head. Indeed, those cattle moved through the system, and the cow-calf producer enjoyed a higher price for his calves than he would have seen.

The other thing that the cow-calf producer has seen, will see, and is seeing is some assistance on their market cows and bulls, in the terminology of the industry, culls. If they have applied for that program, they had two options, a one-time payment or a price differential, which would bring them back to more normal. They also have access to a federal program. So while the cow-calf producer may not have yet received a cheque, the cheque they will receive from this government will be on the cull cows. The cheque for their calves came from the marketplace.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the same minister to further clarify. My constituents are asking: why haven't we seen the beef price decrease in the grocery store in comparison to the decrease that has taken place for producers themselves?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we've discussed this a number of times over the last months. It's well known in the industry that about 24 to 25 per cent of the carcass is high end, which is steaks, roasts, et cetera, which is primarily what we buy as Canadians. The lesser cuts of chucks and fronts and grounds we buy some of but not as much. We had a very high offshore market for that. Offals we virtually didn't use. Tallow primarily was shipped to other markets.

Mr. Speaker, when BSE hit, we had to consume that whole animal and use all of those parts. There's no question that the high-end priced steaks, roasts did not come down. But it is a fact, and it can be demonstrated that when you take everything into account, including in-store specials, in the last half of 2003 retail prices were down 20 per cent.

Health Care Funding

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, on two separate days earlier this week when answering questions on out-of-province health care services, the Minister of Health and Wellness said that it wasn't worth fighting the federal government over $20 million or $30 million because "it's not really a material amount." That is the attitude of a government that has become lazy, lazy, lazy with taxpayer dollars. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: since the minister considers $20 million or $30 million to be immaterial, is it his department's policy that when they prepare their budget, they also consider amounts of $20 million or $30 million to be immaterial?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, $20 million or $30 million in the context of a $7.2 billion budget strikes me as being something that, while a significant amount of money, is what we will spend in one day in the health care system. So let's put this in context. Now, of course, a $7.2 billion budget is made up of a whole series of $10 million, $15 million, $20 million, $30 million slices, so when dealing with the federal government, provinces and territories are talking about billions of dollars. So if we're going to get some significant dollars from the federal government, let's talk in the billions with a "b," not millions with an "m."

Dr. Taft: Since the minister considers $20 million or $30 million to be immaterial, does he also consider the 500 nurses that that money could hire to be immaterial?

Mr. Mar: Not as immaterial as his question, Mr. Speaker.

Dr. Taft: Since the minister considers $20 million or $30 million to be immaterial, can he tell us how many community-based mental health programs could be funded with that amount of money?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview speaks with an aggressive certitude that's normally reserved for people that know very little about what they're talking about. By comparison this government speaks with optimism, not with pessimism. We seek to inspire people with hope; we don't traffic in despair. And finally, we persuade the public with passion tempered by reason; we don't do it with innuendo wrapped around in fear.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Funding for Homeless Shelters

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the homeless shelters in Calgary, two of which are in my constituency, the Drop-in Centre and the Salvation Army Centre of Hope, reported over 14,000 occupying 1,500 beds in emergencies, a movement of a thousand individuals per month showing a 29 per cent increase over two years, and also given that I participated in the Calgary biannual homeless count, in which we took a snapshot of the number of homeless in Calgary in one night in May, at the rate of increase we'll need about 450 beds over the next two years. Also, the news is saying that the homeless shelter operators are concerned about the funding from the province for their current operation. The question is to the Minister of Seniors, responsible for homeless shelters. What is the status of provincial funding in Calgary homeless shelters?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm fully aware of that report, and I have to point out a couple of things. There are 1,500 beds in Calgary for emergency usage. A lot of the 14,000 counted were on a one-night basis, fully 6,000, or 55 per cent, of the count have been counted. The names have been identified in 2000 as well as 2002, which means that we have to address how to move people through and out of the shelters on a permanent basis.

With respect to the question on the funding, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Seniors has full intention of meeting our obligations to the shelters in Calgary as well as the rest of the province. For the funding arrangements the contracts expire on March 31. We're currently looking at streamlining and improving these contracts, and the shelters have been or will be told that their funding will continue uninterrupted until the contracts are put in place. This applies to Calgary as well as the rest of the province, and my officials have already spoken on a couple of occasions with the operators of the Calgary Drop-in Centre, the largest centre in Alberta with that particular information. I might want to point out that we invest, if you will, through Alberta Seniors alone over $8 million in shelter operations in Calgary on an annual basis.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: I have used up my time in the preamble, so I don't have further questions. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Sustainable Resource Development

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Logging occurring in the provincial forest reserve northwest of Cochrane has been the source of an ongoing battle between area businesses and loggers and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development. Yesterday the Court of Queen's Bench made a precedent-setting decision to revoke SRD's logging permits for the area and to award all costs and damages to loggers and to a local ecotourism business. My question to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: given that the judge cited poor consultation and lack of integrated planning as a reason for revoking the permits, what does this ministry have to say for itself?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, when you manage over a hundred million acres of public land in Alberta on behalf of Albertans and when there are multi-uses, including recreation, grazing leases – we have commercial operations, we have industrial operations, and of course we have just general use of public land – it's always a challenge.

But in relation to the particular question, Mr. Speaker, the process is in the court system right now, and if anyone should know that you do not bring up questions in the House when they're in the court system presently, that member should know that.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the decision was completed yesterday.

Why does it take the Court of Queen's Bench to teach this government's SRD department what is sustainable and what is not? The decision is over and done with, sir.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, again the member knows better than to bring up issues like that.

But in relation to the whole issue of forestry itself forestry is a very, very active industry in Alberta. It's a challenge to maintain it the way it is because there are really multi-use areas in those areas. It's a $9 billion industry. In fact, over 54,000 people in Alberta are employed in forestry. So it's very, very important and continues to be a challenge for us.

Specifically on that issue, Mr. Speaker, the member darn well knows that you cannot bring up issues once they're in the court system until the final decisions are completed for the process.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General on the sub judice aspect.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just for the purpose of adding to the point that the hon. minister just made, the hon. member indicated that the last word has come out, and in fact there is an appeal period after a Court of Queen's Bench decision. The final word doesn't come out until after that appeal period has expired or, if an appeal is filed, the appeal has been heard and the decision taken.

So one should be very careful in language around a decision with respect to a matter. That consultation is obviously important. One does not want to have questions in the House which might affect the ongoing discussion of this in the courts if, in fact, an appeal is filed, and it is sub judice until the appeal period has in fact expired or the appeal has been heard insofar as questions that may be raised that might affect the matter before the court.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, when will this government actually commit to sustainable resource development and conduct appropriate environmental impact assessments and public consultations whenever they need them instead of relying on outdated information from the late '80s to make these forest decisions?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, we do have proper processes in place to deal with issues like this. Like I said, you know, we manage over a hundred million acres of public land. There's oil and gas activity. There are grazing leases. There are recreation leases, and there's general usage in that area. The way our province has grown, with the strong economy in Alberta, including southern Alberta, the demand for public land use is increasing. We're trying our best to ensure that we keep a balance between the economic development that's required and also the environmental protection.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, we just recently, in the past year or so, finished the Bighorn backcountry, which covers, I believe, over 5,000 square kilometres, access management plan, which is ongoing. We have the Ghost-Waiparous plan underway now, which is in a similar area, that will develop a balanced approach in how we use the public land. So we are doing things.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alberta's Electricity Policy

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Deregulation remains controversial for some of my constituents. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Minister, once you take government debt incurred into account as well as system stability and supply, how does Alberta's electrical system stack up against other Canadian provinces?

Mr. Smith: Extremely well, Mr. Speaker. There's no question, and I think that it's important for members opposite to maybe have a little review.

In British Columbia there are some 11,000 megawatts, Mr. Speaker. Their taxpayer guaranteed debt is about 7 and a half billion dollars. If you move over to Saskatchewan, which has about 2,300 to 2,500 megawatts for a million people, their debt is in excess of a billion dollars. Manitoba, which has 5,300 megawatts and right now with drought conditions can't supply all the power that it's contracted to export, has $7.2 billion against it. We now go to the granddaddies of all, Ontario and Quebec hydro. Between those two jurisdictions there's in excess of $75 billion worth of taxpayer guaranteed debt. This means that in the electrical system across Canada, there's just about a hundred billion dollars' worth of taxpayer guaranteed debt in order to bring prices that are in the neighbourhood of what they are today in Alberta.

Just for more elucidation, I think, yesterday New Brunswick was converting their only power plant, besides the nuclear power plant, to something called orimulsion, which comes from the Orinoco heavy oil fields in Venezuela. That conversion is about a billion dollars. Now the company in Venezuela has reneged on the contract, and taxpayers are on the hook for a billion dollars. There's a steel plant in Hamilton that's gone bankrupt. There's a 7 and a half million dollar charge on their electrical bills. This is not happening in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, because there's a competitive market system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is again to the same minister. Considering system stability and supply, how does Alberta's electrical system stack up against North American jurisdictions?

The Speaker: Well, I hope we're not going to go through 50 different, separate states.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only thank you for the confidence you have in my intellect, that I would be able to do that. Would you like to go alphabetically from Alaska?

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that in the United States the eastern seaboard because of its congestion actually does have higher prices, much to the tune of twice to three times as high as what Alberta does. In areas where there are more bountiful supplies, such as Arizona and those areas, the prices are naturally more competitive. As we watch what happens in California, I think that's going to be a key indicator of what goes on in the United States.

What has been proven certainly through the Ohio blackout situation is that there is a lack of market design that allows areas where there is excess power to move to areas where there is a shortage of power, thus giving rate stabilization across the continent.

Mr. Lord: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is: how does Alberta's power system stack up against the rest of the world considering the importance of global competition?

The Speaker: Same advice, hon. minister.

Mr. Smith: So Albania, Afghanistan – it's difficult, Mr. Speaker.

We do know that across the globe countries and jurisdictions have been struggling with how to provide economic growth because they know that adequate electricity generation is a key underpinning for economic growth. Probably the most visible one is China. China, which manufactures over 13 per cent of the world's goods and uses over half the world's cement production, is, in fact, in a power deficit, and that's given the Twin Gorges project of some 22,000 megawatts.

In effect, Mr. Speaker, if you go to Japan at, I believe, 23 cents to 25 cents, Denmark at 22 cents, and particularly the United Kingdom, which is a competitive market and which has seen prices drop, there's ample evidence to realize that competitive market generation is a compelling economic alternative to fuel economic growth in those areas that need electricity.

Edmonton Southeast Ring Road

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, one of the companies shortlisted to bid on the Anthony Henday P3 project, Borealis Infrastructure, has been involved in some very controversial P3 projects across Canada. To the Minister of Transportation: why has the ministry shortlisted a company whose P3 schools were such a financial disaster for the Nova Scotia government that it had to abandon the remainder of its P3 plans and is now stuck with costly 35-year leases?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, this question you could just plan. I was kind of waiting for it over the last week since we did our news release to the public of the province of Alberta. This is a situation which is quite serious.

In this House we are awarded some certain privileges. We are protected in terms of the kinds of names we bring up in this facility, in this House, in this Legislature, in terms of saving us harmless from those names that are brought up here that could be erroneously brought forward by the opposition, simply by the fact that they have something against public/private partnerships. There has been a whole process and one where we were quite open and transparent in this particular House. [interjection] He asked the question; I'm giving you the answer. Do you have any decency in you at all? Can you just listen? So what happened is there's a very open, transparent process in terms of the adjudication of all of those companies that put forward their requests for qualification.

Now, if the hon. member has something beyond what he brought up in this House, information that he might have that nobody else has that is of very important consequence, and wants to make an accusation against anybody other than some company, make it outside, put it in writing, and send it to me, and we'll review it. But make the accusation. Note it. Just don't get up in the House and start throwing around company names.

The reason I say that, Mr. Speaker, is because this province is open to investment. We want to attract as many investment dollars as we can. We don't do that when people want to do business in this province, spread this news around the province like there's something clandestine here: oh, there's something behind this company that nobody knows. Why do it? If you're not happy with the policy, change the policy.

Mr. Bonner: Well, I think we touched a raw nerve.

Mr. Speaker, given that Borealis is currently involved in a P3 project in B.C. where the costs have doubled and the government is facing pressure to abandon the project, what evidence has the company produced to make this government believe that the same won't happen for the Anthony Henday project?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, as far as our department is concerned and as far as this government is concerned, we will make the evaluation on the applications and requests for qualifications based on the very thorough process we have in this province. What other provinces have done in terms of public/private partnerships – I don't know what process they use, although I do know that we have listened to others that have endeavoured into public/private partnerships, learned from their errors and mistakes, and have brought that information forward to the province of Alberta. I firmly believe that we've put together an excellent process and one which others can learn, including those across the other way.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Taxpayers want to know: why would this ministry shortlist a company whose track record on P3 projects is so poor?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member makes an assumption, an accusation. All I'm saying is: back it up. If that's the issue, send me a letter, put your name to it, and I'll take it over to the adjudicators. Otherwise, don't bring up some company name, because this will never come to an end. If you're not happy with the public/private partnership policy of the government, criticize the policy, but don't start criticizing individual companies.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, do you know that after the request for qualifications and then the request for proposals ends, this city, by 2007, quite frankly, will have two-thirds of its ring road completed? And here they're doing everything they can to drive investment away.

head: Members' Statements

The Speaker: Hon. members, 30 seconds from now I'll call upon the first of four to participate.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul

Canadian Agricultural Safety Week

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and bring attention to the Canadian Agricultural Safety Week campaign, which began March 10 and runs through the 17th.

This year's theme is Farm Safety Makes Sense, and it examines the physical, social, economic, and possibly legal costs of farm-related injuries and fatalities in Canada.

Agriculture producers spend all year planning for their operations: cropping alternatives, animal husbandry and dispersal, fertilizer and herbicide selection, machinery repair, revitalization, and new investments. But planning for safety is sometimes an afterthought. In 2003 there were 1,376 farm-related injuries and 14 farm-related fatalities in Alberta. That number is much too high.

We invest in our farms, so we should invest in our safety because safe agriculture is a sound business practice that pays off. Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development takes an active role in providing farmers with information that promotes farm safety year-round.

This year Alberta Agriculture is launching a CD-ROM that will help producers assess the safety of their operations. The CD-ROM is available to the public free of charge thanks to the generous sponsorship of corporations such as ADFarm, Agricore United, Bayer CropScience, and the Royal Bank of Canada. Their commitment demonstrates just how important farm safety awareness is to agricultural communities.

With more than 50,000 farms in Alberta many Albertans are already aware of the importance of safe farming practices. Canadian Agricultural Safety Week aims to increase awareness for people working and visiting farming operations because we, Alberta farms, want to be a safe place to grow.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Easter Seals March of Dimes

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in 1951, motivated by the polio epidemic sweeping the continent, a group of mothers gathered and marched to raise funds for services needed by physically disabled children. As a result of their efforts and the efforts of other Canadians the research of Dr. Jonas Salk was well funded, creating the historic made-in-Canada cure for polio.

Yesterday Mary Hanley Catholic elementary school in Edmonton hosted the official launch of the 53rd Annual Easter Seals March of Dimes campaign in Alberta. This campaign raises funds for children with physical disabilities, which in turn will ensure that these children obtain necessary equipment such as wheelchairs, communication aids, vehicle adaptations, wheelchair ramps, and other equipment in order to be as independent as possible and to have an improved quality of life. The March of Dimes also funds the Easter Seals Camp Horizon project in Bragg Creek, which supports children with physical disabilities and serious illnesses. Another important project is the March of Dimes McQueen Road residence in Edmonton, which is Canada's first accessible group home for adults with disabilities.

The government of Alberta is a proud supporter and co-sponsor of these initiatives primarily through the ministry of Human Resources and Employment and the community initiatives program within Alberta Gaming. That is why I am pleased that, along with the Minister of Community Development and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, numerous children, parents, supporters, and staff members attended these ceremonies to officially launch this year's campaign.

Congratulations to the volunteer president of Easter Seals, Ken Bagnell, and his board, to executive director Jodi Zabłudowski, to principal Joanne Ritcey-Devaney and her staff and students at Mary Hanley school, and particularly to our Easter Seals kid ambassadors Joanne Picard and Todd Davison for all their efforts in promoting such a worthy cause. I ask all members of this Assembly and, indeed, all Albertans to join me in thanking and congratulating everyone involved with the Easter Seals initiative and in wishing them a very successful campaign.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Public Accounts Committees

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My private member's statement this afternoon is not necessarily reflective of the opinions of any other members of the Public Accounts Committee or of government members or of members of the opposition.

There is a global trend towards greater openness in government finances. This is based on a belief that transparent budgetary practices can ensure that funds raised by the state for public purposes will be spent as promised by the government, while maximising the benefits derived from spending. One crucial component of a transparent system of resource allocation involves an independent assurance of the integrity of public budgeting through an audit process, and the scrutiny of its outcomes by the representatives of the people, in the form of parliament.

This is the opening paragraph of the 2002 report by the Association of Public Accounts Committees in South Africa entitled Best Practices of Public Accounts Committees.

It is with interest that I first note that the very first public accounts committee was formed at Westminster in 1861. From that point forward, Mr. Speaker, almost all parliaments and Legislatures have established their own public accounts committees or public audit committees. The job of these committees is to effectively exercise parliament's oversight responsibility over the government's spending program.

Some would note that governments today publish quarterly and annual financial statements and business plans. This is true for the majority of provinces, including Alberta and the federal government. What I would like to see as chair of the Public Accounts Committee is a more active committee here in Alberta.

The Canadian Council of Public Accounts Committees was established in 1979 to share best practices so that the quality and practices of public accounts committees throughout the country could improve. In 1981 a report entitled Improving Accountability was published by the Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation that contained 69 recommendations on how public accounts committees could improve their effectiveness at probing the government's spending. In 1989 the Canadian Council of Public Accounts Committees published guidelines for public accounts committees which contained a further 59 recommendations.

The Speaker: Time.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I apologize. I didn't hear it.

The Speaker: Forty-five seconds ago.

Mr. MacDonald: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Care Funding

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, the value of a dollar. One of the most important duties of government is to ensure that ordinary citizens, Albertans, are receiving value for their taxpayer dollars. This requires the attitude that every dollar is important, that every dollar is taxpayers' money.

On two separate days this week in this House we heard the Minister of Health and Wellness refer to $20 million or $30 million as an immaterial amount. At a time when provinces are screaming for federal money, when this government tells us that health care is too expensive, when this government cries poverty, this reflects a lazy attitude to public money. This minister says this because he claims that in the scheme of regional health authority budgets in the billions, tens of millions don't really matter.

Well, I say that $20 million or $30 million do matter. With $30 million we could hire 500 new nurses. That doesn't seem immaterial. With $30 million we could build six new community health centres. That also doesn't seem immaterial. With $30 million Alberta Health could fund over 170 family physicians. With $30 million we could pay for 632 long-term care beds for an entire year.

Who knows what else it could buy, Mr. Speaker? Maybe it would have funded better emergency services in Calgary so that Kathy Briant's mother, suffering from a stroke, didn't have to wait eight hours in emergency only to leave without seeing a physician. Maybe it could have bought a bed for the gentleman left lying on the floor in emergency that night.

What Alberta has is not a money problem; it's a management problem. It's a matter of mismanagement: mismanaging our dollars and mismanaging our resources.

Mr. Speaker, the greatest challenge facing our health care system today is not whether we're spending too much or too little; the greatest challenge is how to best spend the dollars we've got. It's clear when the Minister of Health and Wellness refers to $20 million or $30 million as immaterial that this government doesn't know how best to spend the money we've got.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

The Speaker: I'd like to remind all members once again that there is a time limit to this.

Now, the Standing Orders provide for members' statements. It was quite a debate for a great number of years to have the Members of this Legislative Assembly agree to have on the agenda an opportunity for members to give members' statements. As I was at that time the negotiator on behalf of the government who negotiated with the then House leader of the opposition party, we agreed that there would be a number of things. We would give as wide latitude as possible with respect to members' statements. We would ask the Speaker never to interfere and accept a point of order about anything said in the members' statements. One third thing we also stressed very, very strongly: that these would be opportunities for members to speak on policy and not bring in personalities.

If anything, I fear as the Speaker of this House that every time we deal with personalities and individuals, it just gives leverage to those who never, ever believe in having on the Routine something called Members' Statements.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Community Development and Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 32.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 20, 22, 32, and 33.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to give notice at this time that I plan to rise and raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 40 at the appropriate time.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have today 710 pages out of 10,000 pages that I am tabling as a result of a freedom of information request by the opposition party with respect to the power purchase auction of 2000, the Balancing Pool legislation of May of '99, the market surveillance administrator's regulation of December of '99, and so on and so forth. This is only one copy. The other copies have been delivered appropriately to the Clerk's office. It shows the lunacy of their actions, and I will be seeking to offer them a data room where they can come in and peruse this information at their leisure.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development in accordance with a commitment that she made in the House, she's pleased to file with the Assembly copies of the report Review of Pricing in the Beef Industry as well as the news release issued today in that regard. The main conclusion of the report is that the overall price of beef at the retail counter had declined 20 per cent, the BSE program has worked as intended in moving cattle through the system, and from information available to the department there was no evidence of unfair packer profits.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of information from the Alberta Agriculture web site showing that retail beef prices have gone down less than 3 and a half per cent in the last two years.

Thank you.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, yesterday in question period I indicated to the Interim Leader of the Official Opposition that I would provide more detail to the questions that he asked, and today I'd like to table those responses.

BSE Assistance Program

Mr. MacDonald:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly express its opposition to the way the government handled the crisis surrounding bovine spongiform encephalopathy particularly for cow-calf producers and backgrounders and that the Assembly hereby establish a special select standing committee which must report to the Legislative Assembly no later than May 31, 2004, and which has the power to send for persons, papers, and records, sit jointly with other standing committees, and print evidence to examine the BSE aid packages and to determine who received the money.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I rise on a Standing Order 40 application to present a motion to this Assembly. As you know, Standing Order 40 applications are to be made in cases of urgent and pressing necessity. Well, over the past two weeks Albertans have been asking the government to provide details about the BSE compensation packages that were handed out and who got them. The farmers and the ranchers that I've spoken to at several meetings have indicated to me that they haven't seen a cent, didn't see a trickle-down, and are in real financial trouble if the border with the United States doesn't open soon.

The response of this government has been to stall, avoid the issue, and keep the light of day from shining on the books. This must end now, Mr. Speaker. This motion is urgent and pressing because Albertans want to know where the money went. They want to know now. They want to tell us their story, and they want to help all of us to make better decisions.

The government has continually shuffled this matter off to someone else. Government members won't let this matter be discussed in Public Accounts. The Auditor General has indicated that it will take months to look at this, and yesterday we were told that this matter should be taken up in the Assembly. Well, Mr. Speaker, here we are.

It's time to get to the bottom of these BSE aid programs. Our farmers and ranchers deserve better from us. I urge all hon. members of this House to grant unanimous consent for the motion and to establish this committee today so that it can begin its work immediately.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent denied]

The Speaker: A point of order, hon. Government House Leader?

Point of Order

Notice of Motion under Standing Order 40

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My point of order with respect to the last notice of motion is that it was out of order and ought not to have been put at all. Standing Order 40 allows motions to be brought without the usual notice, but the notice that was given today on the Order Paper – and I raise it only for the benefit of your direction for the future. I have not received nor to my understanding did anyone else receive early notice of this, which is normally delivered prior to the House sitting.

Also, in giving notice earlier today in session, the hon. member just rose to say that he was giving notice that he was bringing a motion and gave absolutely no notice of the content of the motion, in which case it's not notice of a motion.

As well, the notice of motion itself is constructed in such a manner as to ask the House to actually pass certain activity levels. My understanding, without having had the opportunity to research it because I hadn't seen the notice until just now, is that under a motion brought under Standing Order 40, the House normally would debate for the afternoon the matter of urgent pressing necessity but would not, in fact, pass a motion requiring the establishment of a committee. That would come under a motion brought more properly to the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader on this point of order.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. If I may respond, I would argue that the Government House Leader has failed to prove that, in fact, the actions of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar contravened any Standing Order that's written. Standing Order 40 clearly says that it can be made "without notice having been given under Standing Order 38." Therefore, there was no notice requirement. I believe that it was in fact furnished to the Speaker's office. [interjection] Oh, okay. But the process was followed. There's no requirement that that happens. Read Standing Order 40.

The same process was used yesterday, and there was no objection raised at that time. So following exactly what's put before us, it says very clearly that "a motion may, in case of urgent and pressing necessity previously explained by the mover, be made by unanimous consent of the Assembly without notice having been given under Standing Order 38." Therefore, notice was not given.

Additionally, a motion can require action of the Assembly, which is certainly what's called for in the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's Standing Order 40 motion, that the Assembly take some action. Motions often ask that the Assembly take some action or accept a report or accept a budget or agree to proceed with Committee of Supply in so many days of debate. So I would argue that it's accepted that a motion, in fact, can request action from the Legislative Assembly, and that, in fact, is what the member's Standing Order 40 has done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, let's be very, very careful that we do not confuse the intent of Standing Order 30 with the intent of Standing Order 40. No one makes a decision with respect to an application under Standing Order 40 other than the House. It is not the chair; it's the House. The Assembly must provide unanimous consent. The chair is not involved in it. Under Standing Order 30 the chair is involved in it.

In terms of the requirements of notice, that has been discussed on previous occasions in this Assembly. In fact, the chair did make a statement with respect to this on November 29, 2001. At that time the then Government House Leader, the current Government House Leader, rose on a point of order, and the then Opposition House Leader, now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, also rose, and the chair made it very clear how we would deal with this. I'd refer this as weekend reading for all hon. members.

Agricultural Operation Practices
Amendment Act, 2004

[Adjourned debate March 9: Mr. Klapstein]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make a few brief comments on this particular bill because it does have quite an impact on rural Alberta, and I'd like to preface my comments first by mentioning that I've had a little bit of experience along this line, being in local government for 17 years. I'm not sure if I mentioned that in this House before, but it was during a time where the . . .

The Deputy Speaker: Hon. members, the chair does have difficulty hearing certain things, but now that I turn my volume loud, I find that I have many voices. Of course, the rules of the House are only one, and that's the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, please.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that everybody would be interested in listening to what I have to say too.

It was during a time that I was involved in this where the confined feeding operations, what we called intensive feeding operations at the time or intensive agriculture operations, were going through quite a process, and there was a patchwork of land use bylaws across the province and not a whole lot of rules. My colleague from Lacombe-Stettler knows what I am talking about because she's been around long enough and has experienced some of the drama in rural Alberta that played itself out and the problems that arose between neighbours on this whole thing.

I can tell you that back then there were a lot of problems within neighbourhoods. Some municipalities took it upon themselves to improve their land use bylaws with the interest that the industry would not move forward unless it moved forward in a very responsible manner. No longer would people put up with having dead animals cast into waterways to get rid of them and letting the coyotes eat them up at will while they smelled and rotted.

So some municipalities took the bull by the horns, and my municipality was one such municipality because we had a lot of intensive operations happening at the time, so we were faced with doing something. My record shows that I have been an advocate of value-added agriculture. I've been an advocate of advancing agriculture in a very responsible manner. Some of the things we did in our county were the first. First time a direct injection of liquid manure was a condition of development. I believe we were the first ones to, as a condition of development, have lagoons fill from the bottom instead of from the top, so it controlled the odour and the nuisance that it caused.

It did disturb some farmers at the time, and they got the Farmers' Advocate office down, and they basically told us we were against agriculture. We had a far greater vision than that. We knew we weren't against agriculture, and if it was going to survive, it had to change and continue in a very responsible way. So we did that.

In two short years the same Farmers' Advocate office at a regional conference had a model bylaw that they suggested all municipalities in the province go to because there was such a patchwork, and it was almost a carbon copy of what we had developed in Kneehill. I guess they did that because they discovered that it worked.

So I'm going through here. I recognize that since the NRCB took control of confined feeding operations back two years ago, there's been more consistency in the province. I think the standards overall in the province have increased, and I think that's a good thing. In some areas where the standards were higher, I don't believe provincial standards have come up to those in a few areas, and I happen to be a representative in one of those areas. So as a result of that where people were used to a high standard and now see something a bit lower, they have some concerns about it.

I'd like to thank the Member for Leduc for actually improving some of these things in this amendment act by bringing clarity to quite a number of areas in the act that was brought forward in 2001. I think that makes it better.

I do have some concerns that perhaps the member could address when this bill gets to committee, and I'll briefly go over them. The first one is on giving the NRCB discretion to determine what the minimum distance separation, or MDS, should be for a residence that lies within an existing operation's MDS when the operation applies for an expansion. There may be some reasons to have that happen if, for example, you want to put a residence for hired help on a place next to a confined feeding operation or something like that, but where are the controls on the NRCB that they don't apply it to some unwilling or unwanted neighbour to have that reduced? Perhaps the member could make note of that and provide that answer for me.

The other issue I see in going through the bill is giving the minister additional discretion to deny requests for the establishment of a practice review committee. I'm not sure in the last two years how many practice review committees have been established. Could you maybe justify why we're doing that, if that's the only way of doing it to achieve that end or would perhaps putting a deposit down that would maybe be refundable if the complainant was found to be legitimate? So that's the other concern I have there.

Another one is neighbours that have had manure spread next to their residence, and when I say manure, I mean manure, composting materials, or compost as defined by the act. Adjoining neighbours were always considered in my memory, both in municipal bylaws and since the NRCB took over, as affected parties, and I'm just wondering why that is changing in this particular act?

I remember a story of a fellow spreading manure that was going right over the road and actually was hitting cars. They were probably not affected neighbours, but I would say that they were certainly affected drivers. So if you can spread it across the road and hit cars, I'm sure you can spread it across the road and be in someone's else's yard, and someone probably would be affected if it ended up on his lawn and he was going to have a barbecue that night. [interjection] Yeah. It could start rusting the barbecue prematurely.

The act deals with changing the short-term manure storage from six months to seven months. I think that that's a good thing and certainly support that because it does provide for spreading manure over a period of time when there's no snow or you're not spreading on frozen ground. So you can store it over the winter and spread it at a more opportune time when you can actually incorporate it into the ground. I see that as a huge improvement, and it gives a little better window for spreading.

I just wonder, though, where the corresponding sections in the act are that restrict manure spreading in the wintertime? Or is that in the regulations? And is there some way we can maybe ensure that manure is not spread on snow or frozen ground as it does create problems in runoff periods, especially if you get a quick thaw, and that can create some problems. So if the member could make a note of that as well.

The other thing regarding manure storage: it also allows for manure storage facilities to be constructed with less than nine months' capacity if the NRCB approves the applicant's manure-handling plan, and that seems to in my mind perhaps contradict the first clause of increasing it from six months to seven months unless it's for moving product off the farm to some other location like to a mushroom plant or something like that where you wouldn't need nine months. If that's the case, I would like clarification on that. If that is the case and those contracts are discontinued, what happens then? Is the NRCB going to ensure that a storage facility is established at that time? What happens in a case when perhaps a market for that product dries up?

The other thing is that manure can now be applied on saline soils. For those that don't know what saline soil is, it's a shallow water table, and the water comes up and has minerals and salts in the water, and then as it goes down, it deposits those salts and minerals on the top, leaving a kind of white surface. I'm wondering if the member could provide the science maybe in his comments either in second reading or in committee. If the science has changed, what is that science to show that that water table is going to be protected from those effluent materials going down in the water as the water recedes in the water table.

Other than that I believe the bill does provides some clarity to the act of 2001, and I'll conclude my comments, Mr. Speaker, with that and appreciate the member responding when he's able to research those answers.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this afternoon and make a few comments on Bill 17, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004.

Mr. Smith: You're an expert on manure.

Mr. Bonner: Certainly, we get a lot of opportunities with what comes out of the hon. Minister of Energy's mouth to deal with these types of issues, and I thank him for that opportunity.

I would also like to thank the Member for Leduc for sponsoring this bill, Mr. Speaker, because it is a bill that has caused a great amount of concern to many municipalities throughout this province and is certainly a bill that I think a lot of municipalities are looking for clarity in. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills has mentioned that he has a number of concerns and questions that he would like answers to further on, and I have a few here as well, and I certainly look forward to the answers that will be provided by the hon. Member for Leduc.

With this bill there are several objectives, and we have a number of concerns with this bill or, if not necessarily concerns, certainly questions. This particular bill adds in a provision which allows the minister to refuse to consider establishing a review committee to look at a person or an operation that is creating "an inappropriate disturbance." If the minister finds a claim to be without merit, then they can refuse to look at it, and again this would be one of the areas that begs the question: what does "without merit" mean? How can this be judged? Will there be a set of guidelines that can be followed to determine what is with merit and what is without merit?

A second objective of this bill is that it deals with amending approvals for an operation. The bill allows the approval officer the discretion to determine if it is a minor alteration, and then they can waive notification of the affected parties. Once again, one of the questions that this raises is: what is a minor alteration? As well, will there be objective standards in place, and if there are, when could we expect to see those?

A third objective of the bill is that it allows approval officers to ignore any provisions respecting tests or conditions related to the construction of the site of a confined feeding operation when it comes to alterations or expansions of an operation or for a registration of an operation. It also allows them to ignore provisions respecting the application of manure, composting material, or compost.

Again, one of the questions that I'd have here – approval officers should not be ignoring anything that is relevant to the establishment of CFOs, be it environmental, health-related, spreading manure, whether the people in the municipality even want the CFO. It should not be up to the approval officer to override municipal concerns. I think that when we look at our local levels of government, particularly those in which the CFOs are going to be established, certainly they have a better handle on what is happening in their particular area, and they should have the option of making those decisions and not be overridden by an approval officer.

Another objective of the bill is that it allows multiple amendments and expansions of approvals, registrations, or authorizations of CFOs. The Society for Environmentally Responsible Livestock Operations wants the expansion factors limited to one at a time, not in bundles. I think that this is a wise recommendation, Mr. Speaker, in that if we are trying to deal with multiple issues at once, certainly it is very easy for the water to be muddied and for us to end up with a decision that isn't in the best interests of the municipalities.

Those are some of the concerns that I had.

One of the things I like in this bill is that there is a process called emergency orders which is being brought in, and these will allow inspectors of CFOs to issue orders to the operator to deal with the release of manure, compost materials, or compost into the environment. The government has the power to initiate an action for the costs, so I think this is one of the good things about this particular bill.

Another thing is that they're updating the definition of a CFO to be less about the activity on the land and more about the land itself, and the Society for Environmentally Responsible Livestock Operations is quite okay with this definition.

So I will certainly look forward to the responses from the hon.

member when the opportunity does arise. I will take my seat and listen to further debate from the members of the Assembly. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few comments at second reading of Bill 17 when we're looking at the principles that have been established for the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004. It's an issue that concerns I think all Albertans, there being concerns with those operations over the health impacts, over water contamination – odour, of course, has been a huge, huge concern – issues of dust, and even some questions about the impact of the operations on the meats produced. So there's a wide range of issues related to the operations, and they have raised questions in a number of communities. For those of us who remember the previous debate, in 2001 I believe it was, that we had with respect to ILOs at the time, some of the same issues are raised with the bill in front of us right now.

I stand to be corrected, but in reading the bill, it seems that there's some loosening of the process for approving confined feeding operations, and I wondered if that was the intent of the bill drafters. It seems to me that there are principles in three major areas that the bill addresses, and the adequacy, I guess, is something that we'll have to determine when we move to Committee of the Whole.

Certainly, health concerns. The regional health authorities in the province have been recommending a two-kilometre radius around those operations. Some groups have asked for even larger areas, up to five kilometres, but it seems that there is a need for a good area around them to be established and to be held to.

We've heard from some areas of the province where there's difficulty with land that has been designated for residential development but with no buildings on it being allowed inside the radius and not being taken account of. The federal Health department, as I understand it, has asked for a moratorium until the effects on health can better be determined, but it's, again, part of the issues that are being raised with respect to those operations.

Environmental concerns. There are some sections of the bill that address environmental concerns, and those principles I think are sound. There's a principle in the bill that seems to be an important principle, and that is that neighbours should be protected and their well-being considered when those operations are being established.

So it's a bill that's certainly very important in some rural parts of the province and is of interest to all Albertans. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Under 29 do we have any comments or questions?

If not, then the hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been desperately trying to look through the bill to be able to make some observations or ask some questions and have been listening intently to what hon. members have had to say to this point on Bill 17, Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004.

I want to note as well the lengthy debate that we had on a similar bill in 2001, I think it was. Lots of questions were raised. Lots of Albertans expressed concern about the intent of the bill at the time to facilitate the further expansion of the confined feeding operations in the province and the relaxation of the conditions to so do and the removal of the local powers that at that time still did exist so that it was within the powers of local municipal authorities to say yea or nay to the establishment of these and that theirs was the last word. I remember that debate. Additional concerns had to do with the impact on health and contamination of air, water around those communities, noise, dust, whatever have you. Public health and related concerns were certainly part of the debate at the time.

Reading quickly through the bill – and I must confess that I have not read it with the care that it deserves because of the problem of time available at the moment. My general impression is that Bill 17 would seem to relax the conditions for expansion and establishment of confined feeding operations in the province. If that is the case, I would like to obviously hear the hon. Member for Leduc, the sponsor of the bill, address some of the questions that have already been posed in this regard to see what his views are as to whether the bill before us will in fact further relax the conditions for the establishment or expansion of the confined operations for livestock. If that is the case, then I would be concerned because I know lots of Albertans would be very concerned.

Add to that the more recent commitment of this government to prevention aspects of the health care delivery system as distinct from the clinical, curative side once the illness has happened. I think we need to be cautious and careful if this bill relaxes the conditions and allows either the practice review committee or the approval officer to overlook or overrule the Public Health Act requirements related to the development of these kinds of operations in neighbourhoods and communities and districts where this might occur.

One other comment, Mr. Speaker, that I would like to put on record has to do with, it seems, the grandfathering of these operations which had been in place and had the licence to operate before January 1, 2002, I think is mentioned here. I think the section that I noted is on page 5. Yes. “Deemed approvals, registrations and authorizations.” I think that if my read of that new section being added here is accurate, it would suggest that that corresponds to the concern expressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods a few minutes ago and which I can also share, that the nature of the act, the legislation before us that we are debating, would lead to relaxing the conditions under which these operations can be operated in the province.

That section on grandfathering under deemed approvals, registrations, and authorizations, rather than requiring that facilities licensed prior to the coming into effect of the act that this bill is amending, they should in fact be required to meet the new conditions, the new conditions related to pollution, a consequence on health of the activity that they undertake if they are not up to par. If they don't meet these standards, they should be tightened. The grandfathering here would suggest that they are exempted from any such obligation, and if that is the case – and I certainly stand to be corrected with respect to this intent of the bill – then that's another concern that I'd like the hon. member, the sponsor of the bill, to address.

So at the moment I would just conclude my remarks and take an opportunity later on during the next stages of the debate on the bill to make some more comments based on a closer study of the text of the bill. Thank you.

3:40

The Deputy Speaker: Comments? Questions?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon to participate in the debate on the amendments to the Agricultural Operation Practices Act. Certainly, it's not long since the original bill was discussed in this Assembly, with its proclamation on, I believe, January 1, 2002.

But here we are after the consultation process that was very ably done by the hon. Member for Leduc, and here we have in this bill some of the changes that were the result of that consultation process. It is noteworthy at this time, Mr. Speaker, to recognize the role the hon. member played in this and the work the hon. member has done. Regardless of whether one is accepting or speaking against this legislation, one can't doubt that hon. member's commitment to this issue.

Now, it is interesting to note – and maybe the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills can help us out here – that one of the things that we're contemplating doing with this legislation is that any individual who applies less than 500 tonnes of manure per year will not be required to keep records or conduct soil tests. Also, individuals who transfer less than 500 tonnes of manure per year will not be required to keep records of the transfer. What size of operation are we talking about here that produces less than 500 tonnes of manure on an annual basis?

Certainly, at one time – and many hon. members of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, may be astonished to know this – it was a tradition, I'm told, in the spring of the year, and this was a tradition that came, apparently, from the Premier's office, that at the last of the snow, when the frost was starting to come out of the soil, the groundskeepers here were told to use manure to fertilize the grass. It was Premier Manning's theory that all the rural members would smell that aroma of the frost coming out of the ground and the chemical reaction of the manure and decide that the session should be over in May and that they should get back to their farms. This was Premier Manning's theory. Apparently it was a tradition around the grounds here for quite a few years, because that man was . . .

Mr. Marz: Maybe that's why he's not here any more.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, he was Premier for 25 years. I may stand corrected, but that's one-quarter of the history of this province. He thought it was a way that if the session was lingering, the rural caucus would want to get home to their own farms. But enough of history.

An Hon. Member: What has this got to do with this bill?

Mr. MacDonald: What does this have to do with this bill? Well, we are looking at a provision, and 500 tonnes of manure on an annual basis is the requirement so that we do not need records or need to conduct soil tests.

Now, when we talk about changing the definition of the confined feeding operation, this is certainly a big issue in the province. Many people are not happy with this whole idea of a CFO, as it's called. These details regarding manure handling, I don't know how they will be received. I'm sure the hon. member has reasons for that requirement.

We are looking at changing the complaint and review processes in this bill. We are also looking at changes to the process for approvals and restorations, and we are also looking at changing the powers that we give approval officers to decide if a confined feeding operation fits within the municipal development plan.

Hopefully, in committee we will get an opportunity, and if not, I could review Hansard because I haven't had a chance to review Hansard in regard to previous statements from hon. members. When any landowner can waive the minimum distance separation which is between a residence and an operation, as I understand it, why is the landowner being allowed to waive this minimum distance separation? What exactly is the purpose of that waiver? If I could have that information in due course, I would be very grateful.

So, there certainly are, Mr. Speaker, many objectives to this bill, but there are concerns as well. The concerns that the Official Opposition has have been outlined by previous speakers, but we need to have a thorough discussion on this. We can do that in the Committee of the Whole. There are many individuals and there are some groups that have contacted the Official Opposition in regard to this bill. We are going to have to have further consultation with them, hopefully, if we get time tomorrow. If the initial response is any indication, we will have some amendments to propose for this bill at the committee stage.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Any questions or comments?

If not, then the hon. Member for Leduc to close debate.

Mr. Klapstein: I will respond in Committee of the Whole, but I can make a few comments here. The discretion on the MDS that the board will be given is a limited discretion. If you draw a perfect line and a very rigid MDS, it's sometimes impractical because you take a look at the topography, the prevailing winds. If there is a residence a hundred feet from the line, do you have to say no, or can you have some discretion on what you're doing? The NRCB is being given quite a bit of trust, and we hope that that'll work.

On ministerial discretion to not allow a review, that would happen if there had already been a review shortly before or if that operation is under an NRCB order. There's not much point in having one review after the other after the other after the other. If you look at the legislation, the minister has the discretion as to whether or not that review can happen anyway.

The question with regard to spreading manure and neighbours being affected. When there is an application, the applicant will show the lands to cover that application, but there's nothing preventing him from using different lands the very next year and affecting people that are adjacent to those lands. So what we did is we said: okay, we're not going to make people that are neighbours to the lands on which manure is spread be affected parties, but we are going to make more stringent restrictions as to what you have to do when you spread that manure, how close you can come to a residence and those sorts of things.

Short-term storage from six to seven months: that was to encourage people not to spread on snow or on frozen ground. We did not want to extend it to nine months because then they say, "Why do I have to construct manure storage capacity?" The intention is that if it's temporary storage, it has to be stored in such a way that it does not affect the environment.

The NRCB and the manure management plan. In other words, if you can show to the NRCB's satisfaction that the manure will be handled in such a way – and the example would be: if you have a contract with a mushroom producer and all the manure is going to leave the site, why would you force him to build a nine-month storage capacity?

Manure and saline soils. Well, the information we've been given is that it's actually an amendment to the soil, and it helps rather than hinder. So I will try and get some further information on that one.

Again, someone had asked about the review committee. The minister will only deny a review committee if there is no merit or it's vexatious, for those kinds of reasons. Perhaps I'll leave it at that and get some more detail.

I move second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a second time]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Acting Deputy Government House Leader.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There's been a lot of talk about things going through fields this afternoon in this House. I think it's time to get out and have a look at them.

I would like to move that the House now stand adjourned until Monday at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; at 3:54 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Introduction of Visitors

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly His Excellency Georgiy Mamedov, ambassador of Russia to Canada.

Alberta has a long-standing relationship with Russia that dates back over 30 years in both the energy and agricultural sectors. Alberta and Russia share common challenges and opportunities because of our shared northern geography, wealth of natural resources, and unique aboriginal populations. The government of Alberta has special twinning relationships with three subnational areas in western Siberia. Mr. Speaker, the number of Alberta companies active in Russia has increased substantially since the year 2000. This increase is due in part to the Russian government's legislative reform.

Mr. Speaker, this is the ambassador's first visit to Alberta. I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head:

Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise on this glorious Alberta day to introduce to you and through you some constituents of mine who are visiting the Legislature today, the grade 6 class of Callingwood elementary school. They are here with their teachers, Mr. Wilcox and Mrs. Eastman, and their parent helpers, Mrs. Elniski and Mrs. Gillard. I'd ask them to rise and please accept the warm welcome of this House today.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature an honoured constituent of Vegreville-Viking. He's seated in your gallery. Born in 1929 and raised in a trapper's shack in the St. Paul area, one of 14 children, great-great-grandnephew of the missionary Albert Lacombe and great-grandson of Edmonton pioneer Laurence Garneau, he served in the Canadian army from 1949 to 1973, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, peacekeeping in various trouble spots – Cyprus, Gaza, Egypt – during the 1950s and '60s. He was Alberta's Sergeant-at-Arms for 13 years, five years' overlap doing both, the first Métis ever appointed to that position anywhere in Canada. Honoured by a special resolution of the Legislature as honorary Sergeant-at-Arms for life, I would ask Mr. Oscar Lacombe to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed a pleasure to rise today and introduce to all members of this Assembly Mr. Andrew Brown, a devoted constituent of Edmonton-Castle Downs who has been an employee of the Alberta government in various departments and ministries for a number of years. Now he is redirecting his efforts in making our community a much better place to live. I would like Mr. Brown to rise and accept the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly a visiting delegation from Hardisty school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. This delegation of students and parents is led by their teacher, Mrs. Sharon Loughheed, who is the spouse of the very distinguished hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. They are visiting the Legislative Assembly this afternoon. They are seated in the public gallery. Before I ask them to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly, I would like to introduce the parent volunteers: Mrs. Lucie Zuidhof, Mrs. Ivonne Ortega-Gaete, Mrs. Joan Geisterfer, Bonnie Bjornson, Corinne Knop, and Mr. Craig Hutschal. Again, they're in the public gallery, and I would ask them now to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to my colleagues in the Assembly 30 grade 6 students from Garneau elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona. They are attending the School at the Legislature this week. Garneau elementary school has many achievements to its credit. I'll just give you one example. Last year all grade 6 students had either met or exceeded the provincial achievement test average. The guests from Garneau elementary are accompanied by their dedicated teacher, Jeanne Commance. They're all seated in the public gallery, and now I ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: Are there others?

Mr. Norris: Well, I'm not sure whether this gentleman is going to welcome this introduction, but I see an old friend sitting up in the gallery, so, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you Mr. Link Byfield, one of the publishers of Alberta

Report. Mr. Byfield's father is a constituent and a good friend of mine. I'd like to recognize him and have the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alongside Mr. Byfield there is also a great Albertan, one of the people who works for the citizens centre. His name is Craig Dockstader, and I'd ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After the broken promises of electricity deregulation, the failures to fund public education, the failures to adequately fund public health care, there's now more evidence of another broken promise from this government, this time on auto insurance. According to a letter that was mentioned in Thompson's World Insurance News, a very respected industry newsletter, from Dominion Insurance CEO George Cooke, 80 per cent of Albertans won't see savings from this government's auto insurance reform package. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Is this government setting up auto insurance consumers in this province for a colossal letdown?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, if this hon. member would get current, the article that he's referring to was published over three months ago, and the letter was written well before that, and there's been an awful lot of work done on the implementation of the new automobile insurance reform within this province. Quite frankly, I have been a little surprised that he wasn't aware of some of the implementation processes that have taken place because we've certainly been public about it. We've been open about it, and the implementation team has been very, very thorough at communicating with the industry as well as consumers.

Mr. MacDonald: But prices haven't gone down in the last three months.

Again to the same minister: given that the hon. minister heard the Premier state that he considered his insurance package a failure if 60 per cent of Albertans didn't see savings, does the hon. minister now agree with Mr. Cooke that the insurance plan is doomed to failure because there are no savings?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I now go through a chronology of meetings that occurred with Mr. Cooke through not only my ministry but also with myself and other members of the implementation team.

On November 5 Mr. Cooke did in fact write to the Premier. We responded. On November 11 the Deputy Minister of Finance along with the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance met with Mr. Cooke and the other Insurance Bureau of Canada representatives in Toronto. On November 25 there was a letter from Mr. Cooke that went to the Deputy Minister of Finance. On November 27 the Deputy Minister of Finance and the assistant deputy met with Mr. Cooke and, again, other IBC representatives in Toronto.

On December 11 and 12, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the ADM of Finance met with Mr. Cooke again in Toronto. On December 16 the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance met with the IBC representatives. On December 19 I personally met with the IBC representatives. On December 12 Mr. Cooke wrote to the Premier.

On January 27 and 28 the ADM of Finance met again with the IBC representatives. On February 26 the minister responded to Mr. Cooke in writing, and on March 3 the hon. Member for Medicine Hat met with the IBC representatives.

Mr. Speaker, we've come a long way on automobile reform, and that has been because the people involved – the industry players, the legal community, and the public – have come together to realize that a reform had to take place. Status quo was not acceptable. We're moving down that path very well. We have some regulations to sort out. We told this House that we would take our time and do it right, and when they're ready, we'll bring them back. But we are committed to a reform package, and we're not going to do the ready, fire, aim scenario that that hon. member wants us to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will the hon. minister agree to release Mr. Cooke's letter as well as all other documentation on insurance so that Albertans can see for themselves what's going on? Let's have an informed public debate on this matter.

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has mentioned in his press release that he read this in Thompson's World Insurance News dated December 15, 2003, on page 5. It's already out there, so I would suggest he read the article.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the same letter Mr. Cooke warns that under the government's plan insurance companies will be forced to find ways to subsidize young drivers. Again to the hon. minister: does this mean that rates will go up for the rest of us? Is that the best that this government can do?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been paying attention through this debate over the last year and a half, he would realize that the new structure, the made-in-Alberta structure, focuses on rewarding good drivers and penalizing bad drivers. We want bad drivers off the roads, quite frankly. We're not so focused on whether they're male or female or where they live but that good drivers drive at a reasonable price, with accessibility to insurance. Bad drivers are going to be penalized. That's what we've been saying from day one.

Mr. MacDonald: This debate is going on behind closed doors. Insurance rates are going up. Consumers have no choice, and they want a public debate here. Now, will the Premier confirm . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, this being Monday, the start of a new week, remember the rule that you agreed to: no preambles on the second question. Remember that? Okay; proceed. The question.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, again, if the hon. member would pay attention, we've had a freeze imposed on insurance rates in this province since October 30, and that was for 18 months. That's given us the latitude and the time frame in which to work with the industry and to put this framework in place. The industry has co-operated. Were they happy initially? Probably not. But have they come on board? You bet they have. In fact, over 90 per cent of them have complied and put in place the refunds and the credits to their customers as we speak.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: given that the government's plan is doomed to failure, will the government now consider a plan for public auto insurance as outlined under liberalopposition.com? Why don't you go there for a policy?

Mrs. Nelson: I'm not going to say what to do with the liberal.com edition or whatever it is, but the doom for failure is, in fact, their own web site. If they'd pay attention to what's happening in this program, they'd see that Albertans, the consumers, the people we represent, come first, and we will put a structure in place that will serve the people of this province that's accessible, affordable, and comparably priced.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Long-term Care Accommodation Rates

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A government news release states that last summer's 42 per cent increase to long-term care fees was the result of its work with the Alberta Long Term Care Association to help its membership improve services to residents. Seniors, however, continue to express their concern over this increase. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How did the Alberta Long Term Care Association twist the arm of the minister to give them such a staggering increase? Will he now table the information they used to convince him?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we looked at long-term care rates across the country, and we looked at the real costs associated with providing the type of care that is being done in our long-term care centres throughout the province. It had been some number of years since there had been a meaningful increase in the long-term care rates, the contributions by the seniors who actually use this service. Again, when we looked at our rates and compared them across Canada, we found them to still be, even after the increase, in the lower tier of costs to the individual seniors who use this very important long-term care system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: given the number of concerns that are still being raised by groups such as FAIRE and the Elder Advocates of Alberta, they question whether any independent audit was conducted to ensure that accommodation fees were being spent properly before this increase was brought in.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, long-term care operators have contracts with regional health authorities. We ask our regional health authorities to ensure that there are certain standards put in place and to monitor those. We, of course, do such monitoring ourselves, and when problems arise, we're certainly very aggressive in our attempts to look into these issues to determine whether there are legitimate concerns. Sometimes there are, but we move very, very quickly to rectify them.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: given that the minister said that the increase in long-term care rates would result in better food, why didn't this government make improvements to food and accommodation a requirement when this fee increase was granted? They're not tied together.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly have the Minister of Seniors supplement this answer, but my understanding is that that's exactly what was done.

The Speaker: The hon. minister to supplement.

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think it's important to note that before these long-term care rates went into effect, the increases, a few things were done to ensure that the people who were in these facilities would be looked after. First of all, we added a provision for folks on our seniors' benefits program where they would have the same take-home residual income after paying their fees as folks in lodges. Other ministries who have tenants there looked after their tenants.

There were some stipulations put on. For example, there would be no charges for bathing; there wouldn't be any charges for wander bracelets; there wouldn't be any charges for cable TV; there wouldn't be any charges for incontinence supplies. At the same time, individual places that may have had – and I stress: may have had – some menu concerns were addressed; for example, the one right within this city where the operators committed to putting over half of the increase into wages and the other half into meeting menu requirements as identified by the tenants.

Cattle Industry

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans will be shocked to learn that millions of their hard-earned tax dollars went to the bottom line of two multinational giants, Cargill and Tyson. The minister of agriculture confirmed last week that the Alberta government provided provincial BSE money to meat packers who own cattle on their own or other people's feedlots. Tyson Foods was just fined $1.2 billion in the United States for manipulating cattle prices in that country. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. In the dysfunctional market Alberta has had since last May, what would have prevented Tyson, Cargill, and other meat packers who own feedlot cattle from buying their own cattle at artificially low prices, thereby putting extra BSE aid in the pockets of their feedlot divisions?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what basis that question is phrased under. I mean, he's asking me to explain what a packer who owned cattle might have done. Let me say this. It is not against the law in this province for feedlot divisions of packers to own cattle. They bought the cattle; they took the same risk as any other feedlot owner in buying those cattle. There was a discussion around this issue, and the industry determined that the fair thing to do was to protect that risk for those people who had invested in those cattle as for any other feedlot.

Mr. Speaker, the packer-owned cattle in this province range over time from 12 per cent to a high of 18 per cent, from what I've been able to find. There are at least two states that I know of in the United States that limit packer-owned cattle to 10 per cent. That's been discussed here, but it is not against the law for them to own cattle. They bought the cattle, they took the risk, and they were compensated on the same basis as everyone else.

Mr. Mason: Again to the same minister: what would have prevented packers from selling their own cattle to themselves at artificially depressed prices in order to pocket more assistance from this government?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, the market function, which, obviously, during this time wasn't operating the same as it might have at other times, allowed packers to buy cattle out of their own feed yards, cattle from some 1,500-plus feedlots across this province, which they did, and process those cattle and move them.

The hon. member seems to have missed a very important point. We had an incident of one animal contracting BSE, being found with BSE in this province. That totally changed the way we market cattle and the way we move cattle. Mr. Speaker, there was no market as we understood it after May 20 because we were confined to domestic buying. Cattle were bought by packers in the east, by packers in the west. The industry in this province did a phenomenal job of working with government to move over 1 million head of fed cattle through the system. We should applaud the ability to do that rather than trying to find holes in something that was so wholly successful.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, when the minister tables her account of the expenditures made under the BSE compensation programs, will it specify exactly which recipients received exactly how much money?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'll say it one more time very slowly. When we conclude these programs – we're 97 per cent paid out as of Friday – I will present a list of every recipient. It will have the name of the recipient, the number of cattle, and the amount of the cheque. To date, as I indicated last week, we have distributed $359 million to 1,534 feedlots.

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated last week, the unfortunate part of this debate is that we're losing sight of the fact that this industry still has some very critical issues in front of it. I don't know whether to thank the hon. member or not, but I can tell him that I have had a deluge of calls from producers, feedlot owners across this province over the weekend thanking this government for the programs that it put in place that were successful and their annoyance – maybe that's a mild way – at the discussions that have I think sidetracked the really important issue, which is the recovery of this industry.

Health Care Reform

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, last week the Conference Board of Canada released a report detailing why health care is not fiscally sustainable in any province – I repeat: any province – in Canada. The Premier and minister of health have been commenting that Alberta will introduce health care reforms in the next couple of months that may include user fees and the delisting of services and moving Alberta out of the Canada Health Act. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: can the minister tell Albertans how a province with an estimated budget surplus in excess of $3 billion is unable to sustain health services at their current level?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, let me say, first of all, that this government supports the principles of the Canada Health Act both in spirit and in law, and this support is part of the province's Health Care Protection Act. But we also recognize that maintaining our health care system cannot – and I say again: cannot – be about just spending more money. It's not just the province of Alberta that's saying this. All the Premiers of territories and provinces across Canada agree that the Canadian health care system is in need of urgent reform, and on March 9 of this year the Conference Board of Canada in its report echoed this sentiment.

The Conference Board projects that the total provincial/territorial public expenditures on health will more than double – more than double – by 2020 to over $170 billion, up from $72.5 billion in the last year, 2002-2003. This means that the province of Alberta by itself would have to spend an extra $600 million a year just to maintain, not to improve but to maintain, the system that we now have, and at that rate, Mr. Speaker, by the year 2020 the province of Alberta will spend 53 per cent of its budget on health care alone.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Many Albertans understood that the reforms undertaken in the Mazankowski report over the past two years would make the system sustainable. Why is the government starting another series of reforms?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, this province has implemented an aggressive agenda for reform that's making better use of technology, delivering better services, improving access, but these by themselves are insufficient to slow down the rate of growth in health care costs. This province and other provinces across Canada are experiencing cost drivers that are largely outside of anyone's control, such as population growth, aging, and inflation.

The Conference Board of Canada's report indicates that there's a difference between cost drivers and cost escalators. Cost drivers in this case, Mr. Speaker, include a population growth in this province that's set to be at about 1.5 per cent, aging at 1 per cent, both of which are exceeding national projections. Our current health reforms attempted to address some of these concerns. For example, our focus on staying healthy has been an important part of this.

But what we now also need to do in addition to dealing with the cost drivers is deal with cost escalators. The escalators include non Canada Health Act-related things like drugs, which have been growing on average, Mr. Speaker, 17 per cent a year for each of the last five years. So what we need is flexibility in how the Canada Health Act is interpreted so that unilateral decisions by the federal government do not impact how Alberta delivers its health care system to Albertans.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Graydon: Thank you. My second supplemental is to the same minister. The Conference Board reported and pointed to drug costs as one of the major drivers in the health care costs that we're facing right now. What is the minister doing to contain drug costs in Alberta?

Mr. Mar: Well, we've done much, Mr. Speaker, to try and maintain costs, but as I indicated, notwithstanding all of our efforts costs went up by roughly 17 per cent a year for each of the last five years. Efforts that we've made include the introduction of the provincial drug list, mandatory generic substitution, and the increased use of special authorizations for high-cost drugs. The Conference Board of Canada highlights a variety of techniques to manage drug costs, and

I've instructed the people of the Department of Health and Wellness to review the Conference Board's report and develop a plan of action accordingly.

Emergency Services in Calgary Health Region

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, Calgary's head of emergency medicine in a letter to Kathy Briant about her mother's long stay in the Foothills emergency admits that bed shortages are leading to increased risk for patients in Calgary's emergency rooms. In fact, the head of Calgary's emergency medicine has been publicly quoted as saying that the future is a little bit scary. Despite government denials the situation is worsening in Calgary thanks to this government's mismanagement of the health care system. My questions are, first of all, to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that it was four years ago that the Calgary health region termed their emergency room services to be, quote, under siege, end quote, can the minister tell us why this situation only continues to worsen?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. member review Hansard from last week. He asked very similar questions last week. The answer remains the same, and that is that the regional health authority in Calgary has moved on a number of different actions including recommendations established in the Motta inquiry to improve access, to improve the triage system, to ensure that patients who leave the emergency room certainly notify people of their intentions to depart.

Mr. Speaker, people from around North America come to see how the emergency room system works in the city of Calgary. It's a good system. It is not perfect. In my recollection last week I indicated that the number of visits to emergency rooms in the city of Calgary was something in the range of a quarter of a million visits. The fact and the reality is that the overwhelming majority of people of those 240,000 to 250,000 visits a year get the service that they need in a timely way.

There are, of course, exceptional circumstances. We know that there are times in the year when perhaps an early flu arrives and emergency room visits go up. But, again, things like Health Link have helped to dramatically reduce the number of unnecessary visits to emergency rooms. This has been a very positive step in the right direction. During peak times in emergency rooms the regional health authority in Calgary has also put in more emergency room physicians.

So all the right steps are being taken, Mr. Speaker, and I have full confidence that the regional health authority in Calgary will continue to improve an already good system.

Dr. Taft: The minister mentions the Motta inquiry. Well, given that the Calgary health region told the Motta inquiry almost two years ago that changes were being made to improve the system, how does the minister explain that the number of code burgundies has quadrupled?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, again, the use of code burgundies is a management tool put in place by the regional health authority in an effort to try and move people around where necessary. We recognize that, again, it's not an exact science to be able to anticipate with perfect knowledge how many people will come into an emergency room on a given night or even in a given month. So it is a management tool that they use.

The regional health authority has put in place its capital requests for improvements, for example, at the emergency room at the Foothills medical centre. It has also put in place what it believes to be its needs in a 10-year capital plan for the city of Calgary. The government has accepted those plans and is in the process of reviewing them. Will we be able to fund the almost billion dollars of capital that the regional health authority has requested? Not all at once, but over time we will address the real and legitimate needs expressed by the Calgary regional health authority because of the growth of the city of Calgary, a dramatic growth. I'm confident, again, that the regional health authority will meet the legitimate needs of Calgarians.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. This time to the Minister of Infrastructure: given that the head of Calgary's emergency medicine also says that, quote, developing a new southern hospital will greatly alleviate the capacity issue, end quote, why is the government refusing to provide funding to build that hospital?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to recognize that the Minister of Health and Wellness and myself and the Premier have met with the Calgary regional health authority. We have heard their need for additional facilities, and of course we are working on those. I sure don't want to have the impression left that we have done nothing. In fact, if the member would visit the site in Calgary, the Children's hospital is under construction. That is a very necessary facility. Also, if the health clinic within the south part of Calgary is not open yet, it's very near open. The regional health authority has been purchasing land for the south Calgary hospital that's going to be constructed.

Mr. Speaker, we have to also remember that there are other needs around the province. As a matter of fact, over the last three years we have approved just about a billion dollars' worth of health care facilities in the province of Alberta. That's over the last three years.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Dunvegan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Report on Rural Development

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In July of 2002 the Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development announced the creation of a steering committee to examine rural development in Alberta. This committee, which was chaired by the members for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and Wainwright, was given the responsibility of examining why the Alberta advantage had not appeared to create much growth outside the Edmonton/Calgary corridor. My question is for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. With many individuals, especially our representatives from municipal governments, anxiously awaiting the release of the report, when can we expect this report to be made available?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, first, let me acknowledge the great work done by the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and the Member for Wainwright. These two members of this Legislature travelled the province and listened—listened—to individuals, elected officials, and anyone who chose to come to the meetings as to how they envisioned rural development in their communities and took careful note of what these individuals felt were barriers to rural development and to their communities growing.

Mr. Speaker, this report was presented to me in the fall, and because of the multifaceted issues in the report we determined that we should share it with other ministries. A lot of the information in that report requires other ministries' responses. They talk about economics.

Speaker's Ruling
Questions regarding Unreleased Report

The Speaker: Hon. minister, please. There's a bit of a dilemma here. A question is being raised about a report that has not been made public yet, and there is discussion going on in the Assembly. I think that to the privilege of all members of this Assembly, should questions be addressed on a report, it would be to their advantage to at least have access to such a report.

The hon. member.

Mr. Goudreau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question was: when can we anticipate the release of that particular report, and how will that report help our rural communities?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but I was getting to the reason that the report has not been released yet, and it is because of the complexity and because of the number of ministries that would be involved in the implementation of that report. We felt that to do justice to the work that was done by these individuals and by the people that participated in these meetings – and I must say a great turnout right across this province – we would spend some time doing that. It is my anticipation that we will release this report in the next short weeks or even days because the majority of that work has been done, and I know that many, many communities are anxiously waiting for that.

The Speaker: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Forest Stewardship Council Certification

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The demand for Forest Stewardship Council-certified wood products is increasing rapidly. Earlier this year Weldwood of Hinton was dropped by IKEA because its forestry practices did not meet IKEA's wood purchasing standards. This is merely one example that shows how Alberta's forest management strategy is becoming a target for market action. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: given that the FSC certification standards were finalized last fall, when will this ministry finally work with Alberta conservation groups to identify areas for protection so that Alberta forest companies can become FSC certified?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's a very, very good question because forestry continues to play a very important part of our overall economic diversification plan. In fact, there are thousands of people employed in that industry. I'm sure a lot of the members' constituents also work in that industry, so this is a very, very important part of our economy and industry in Alberta.

The issue of certification is only one challenge amongst many challenges, such as the softwood lumber agreement, the endangered species legislation that the feds are proposing, the Kyoto agreement that the feds are proposing. All those areas, Mr. Speaker, are a challenge. This international certification, of course, is another process, and we are working very closely with the Alberta Forest Products Association, the industry, and the users out there in relation to working toward proper certification for industries in Alberta.

Some of the challenges we have, of course, are that a lot of the small operatives – there are about 125 in Alberta – produce less than 5 million board feet. Some of those industries, of course, may not have the capacity and the finances to be able to meet some of those certification standards, so it is a challenge and continues to be a challenge. You can be assured that we will meet those standards as required when the time is right.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, the minister misses the point of the question. When will the ministry stop industrial development in the most endangered areas of the boreal forest so that conservation planning can be completed?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, the Liberal way would be to stop everything. Fortunately, they're not the government and probably will never be the government, so we don't need to worry about that.

Mr. Speaker, we do have a good balance in Alberta with industrial development and environmental management, and that will continue.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister needs to take into consideration that their forest management strategy is affecting Alberta businesses, when is he going to show some commitment to improve forest management and to the Alberta forest industry and trash its policy of no more protected areas in Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, you know, we probably have the most efficient mills in North America in relation to harvesting our resources, but that also goes along with the forest management. A lot of our FMA holders have won international awards in relation to forest management and harvesting. Of course, the Liberals would never see that because all they see is the negative side.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

West Nile Virus

Mr. Renner: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, last summer the West Nile virus arrived in Alberta, and the Palliser health region in southeastern Alberta reported 131 of the 275 West Nile infections reported province-wide. The Minister of Health and Wellness recently announced a mosquito control program for the coming summer. Medicine Hat and the surrounding municipalities will receive about $350,000 in funding to implement or adapt municipal mosquito control programs to combat West Nile virus. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that almost one-half of the West Nile virus cases occurred in a region that accounts for only about 3 per cent of the total population of Alberta, how can the minister be confident that this funding will be adequate to minimize the risk of further outbreaks of West Nile in this region?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, prior to the summer of 2003 we had no evidence of West Nile virus in this province, nor did we know with any certainty at all which of the 43 species of mosquitos which live in this province might actually carry the virus, nor did we know where they would lay their eggs. So it would have been premature to implement a broad larvicide program last year.

We did work in the past year, Mr. Speaker, with municipalities and our colleagues at the ministries of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development to determine from mosquito surveillance where these mosquitos might be, and we did that on the basis of incidences of bird and human cases province-wide. What we found is that communities and counties like Newell, Forty Mile, and Cypress had been assessed to have the highest risk, so our program for larvicide this year will target our dollars at those areas that are at highest risk.

Now, I need to say this, Mr. Speaker. I cannot guarantee that this will entirely reduce the risk of infection to human beings. No mosquito control can kill every mosquito, but it is important to remember that this will be a very important part of supplementing the most effective means of reducing the risk to human health, and that is every individual taking the proper steps, like wearing DEET and wearing the right kind of clothing, to avoid the risk of being bitten by a mosquito.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Renner: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have only one supplemental question. To the same minister: how will the minister ensure that municipalities within the region use the funding in the most effective way?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, this department has worked very closely with Alberta Environment to develop the program. Alberta Environment is enforcing the guidelines around the use of pesticides in the province of Alberta. The insect and pesticide specialist responsible for this mosquito control program will be working with municipalities to ensure that their staff are properly trained to find and identify the correct species of mosquitos and certified to apply the chemical agents that are used to kill the mosquito larvae.

Municipalities participating in this funding formula are required to provide detailed plans for their mosquito control programs for approval, and any funding that is unused at the end of the season will be returned to the Department of Health and Wellness.

Intermodal Traffic Safety

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, despite a shortage of approximately 5,000 qualified workers CN Rail continues to send traffic in and out of intermodal terminals. This has led to complaints by striking workers that inexperienced drivers are leaving the yards here in Alberta with containers that have not been locked down properly, compromising safety for both the workers and for Alberta drivers. To the Minister of Transportation: is the minister currently working with CN Rail to ensure that traffic safety here in Alberta isn't compromised during this time of shortage at CN Rail?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the member is referring to a matter that is totally under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

Mr. Bonner: Given that these trucks are travelling on Alberta highways, Mr. Speaker, and that at least three accidents involving intermodal truck traffic have occurred in Alberta in the past 21 days, what steps has the ministry taken to ensure that adequate inspections are taking place and that violations of safety standards are being appropriately punished?

Mr. Stelmach: When it comes to truck traffic, that is under the jurisdiction of the provincial government. In terms of load restraint the fines have been increased rather significantly, and also any violations of the current Traffic Safety Act will go on the company profile. So those are quite serious allegations.

Mr. Bonner: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what is Alberta Transportation doing to work with companies to ensure that traffic safety standards aren't compromised when there are shortages of experienced workers?

Mr. Stelmach: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talks about a shortage of experienced workers as a result of the strike. Actually, there is a shortage of experienced drivers right across Canada. In fact, a number of larger trucking firms are bringing people in from other provinces. Some are actually training people from Yugoslavia and other countries in Europe, because when it comes to the spring run in terms of fertilizer, anhydrous ammonia, et cetera, all companies want to do the best they can in terms of the proper training of the drivers and also to ensure that all safety standards are met. As I mentioned before, it is very crucial that all trucks on Alberta highways operate as safely as possible.

The other is that through co-operation with the Department of Learning we've actually put together a course that will be starting soon where companies can send their drivers for additional training, but this is quite in-depth. It is not only the standard driving practices on Alberta highways, but this would be load restraints, crossing borders, proper waybills. At the end of the period the driver will actually have a certificate. They can then present their certificate to other trucking companies when they're either seeking employment or to show their expertise in this particular area.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Mental Health Services

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. About a week ago in this House the Minister of Health and Wellness gave the government a grade of 99 per cent when it came to Alberta's mental health system. By contrast, a leaked government report on mental health gives the government a failing grade. The report states that there are significant capacity and service gaps across the entire spectrum of mental health services and that Alberta's spending on mental health is far below the average of the percentage of budget that other provinces spend on mental health. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What immediate action is the government taking to address the deplorable gaps in services, the insufficient funding, and the tragic lack of strategic vision outlined in the leaked report on this province's mental health services?

Mr. Mar: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, let me say this. This was a draft report. It was not leaked to anybody. It was released to stakeholders for their input. We asked stakeholders throughout the province: where are the areas that we can improve our mental health services, what are the visions and the strategies that we should put in place in order to ensure that Albertans have access to the right kinds of services that they require, and what are the kinds of community services that are needed by people who have needs in mental health? We are taking steps to address these even now, even in advance of the plan being finalized.

As an example, Mr. Speaker, fairly recently we announced that four psychiatrists and five other mental health workers have gone into an arrangement with 44 general practitioners in the city of Calgary to better identify and help those patients of the 44 general practitioners whose patients need mental health services. So we are taking steps in the right direction.

I would also say, Mr. Speaker, that it would be false to suggest that there's a conclusion that we're not spending the right amount of money on mental health, because you need to know first what services you need before you can tell how much you need to spend on it. So this comparison with other jurisdictions, saying that expressed as a percentage, it's lower than other parts of the country – I've yet to see any evidence that backs up that assertion. But even if it were true, I'd say: what does that tell us? It doesn't tell us anything, because until you know what it is that you need in the system, you cannot say how much it will cost.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how long will Alberta families have to wait before meaningful action is taken to not only make the plan that the minister talks about public but to meaningfully address the critical gaps in mental services and funding identified in the report?

Mr. Mar: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, there were a number of false assumptions in the premise of that question. We've indicated that health care, particularly mental health care in this province, is critically important. It's the reason why we've asked Albertans and asked stakeholders how we should proceed on a province-wide mental health plan. It will be done in the fullness of time, and it will be done in a way that makes sense, where there's a consensus among stakeholders as to the direction that we move forward.

But, again, Mr. Speaker, to reiterate what I said in my response to his first question, I wouldn't want the hon. member to think that there is nothing happening in the meantime. We are taking appropriate steps to close gaps. We have increased our funding for mental health. I spoke about the dollars involved last week in this Assembly. I invite the hon. member to refer to Hansard. We do spend some $240 million or $250 million with the Mental Health Board. That's over and above the hundred million dollars that regional health authorities estimate that they spend. We know that many visits to a doctor's office, general practitioners, involve matters of things like depression. We cover the cost of that. We cover the costs of drugs in this province, including psychiatric drugs.

So, Mr. Speaker, we do devote enormous resources to this area, and I wouldn't want the hon. member to leave Albertans with the impression that we don't do anything with this area of mental health, because it is very important.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the same minister: given that the minister is proposing to act only in the fullness of time, how can he justify pushing Albertans with mental illness into the community without providing the community supports necessary for successful treatment?

Mr. Mar: Again, Mr. Speaker, there are so many false premises to the question asked by the hon. member. I want to emphasize that we do provide community supports for those suffering from mental illness in the community. We are asking our stakeholders: are there other things that we can do to improve this? They indicate to us that the answer is yes, so let us wait for this report to be responded to by stakeholders in the province, and we will move forward with our plan from there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Film Development Program

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of Community Development. Constituents in my riding were very excited when Wetaskiwin was recently the production location for a new movie, Santa's Slay. Usually it's the major cities and the mountain areas that attract the film industry. Can the minister tell us what impact the Alberta film development program is having on our province?

Mr. Zwodzesky: Mr. Speaker, the impact of the Alberta film development program throughout this province has been and continues to be absolutely enormous. I can tell you that within the last four years and since the introduction of this program the number of persons involved in the film industry has grown by 220 per cent. The number of actors alone has increased by about 195 per cent, and as a result of those couple of increases, the dollar value of production in this province has increased about fivefold. So we know that the program is working and working well.

From an artistic, creative, and technical point of view it is having an enormous impact on the personnel involved in that industry. It also fuels local economies in places such as Wetaskiwin, Bruderheim, and Edmonton, which is where Santa's Slay is currently being filmed. It is a production with which a local producer has a coproduction arrangement and, obviously, one with which we have a record of association.

Two other quick points, Mr. Speaker. The taxation coffers of the province of Alberta are directly impacted also because these individuals involved in this industry pay corporate, private, personal taxes, so that's helpful there. I think, finally, the impact is being seen in the promotion of Alberta as a go-to or a come-to location with incredible scenery, tremendous support crews, and staff who can help out with these films. So we see a great deal of benefit to the tourism industry, and we know that this is a multimillion dollar industry, and we hope that within a few years it will become a billion dollar economic generator in this province.

Mr. Johnson: My first supplemental is to the Minister of Economic Development. What role did Economic Development play in attracting the Santa's Slay production to Wetaskiwin?

Mr. Norris: Well, thank you very much to the hon. member for the question. At the outset I don't think I can add much more to what the hon. Minister of Community Development said about the impact on this industry. But I do think certain thanks should be given to our colleague for Airdrie-Rocky View, who has been the chairman of this film commission for so long and has fought passionately for it.

Mr. Speaker, the answer to the hon. member's question is yes. We took a mission to Los Angeles, we met with the producers of Santa's Slay, and we, I believe, convinced them to come to Alberta to do so. We have some 17 other films that are going to be produced here in the next year, we believe. One of them, entitled My One, My All, My Everything, I'm told is a love story, which should lend itself very well to the beautiful Alberta west that we have here.

Mr. Speaker, I would also echo the comments that the hon. Minister of Community Development said. We have targeted this industry in particular for what it does for tourism. If one looks at what happened with New Zealand and Lord of the Rings, they've generated some 3 and a half billion dollars in new tourism opportunities because of that remarkable film sequence. So in Alberta we've targeted that as well.

Again, my thanks to the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View for all her hard work in continuing to promote this remarkable industry.

Mr. Johnson: My last question is to the same minister. What role is your ministry playing to specifically attract more film production opportunities to the rural area?

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the absolute delights of this job is that rural Alberta is already built. It has everything that people are looking for. So our job in our two missions to Los Angeles that we undertook with producers was to let them know that if they're looking for badlands, we have it, that if they're looking for an old western town such as Lacombe, we have it. We have everything. The sets are already built; they're here. God made them for us. We just have to utilize them. As a result, we want to let them know what's going on also in northern Alberta, as my colleague says, in Medicine Hat. A beautiful province, a remarkable province.

The other thing we're doing, Mr. Speaker, is working with our regional economic alliances, of which we have 12 in the province, to let them know how to promote this remarkable industry and how to get the message out that production can take place not only in Edmonton and Calgary but also in rural Alberta, which is very important.

The Speaker: Hon. members, prior to calling on a number of hon. members to participate today, I'd just like to make a follow-up comment to something I said in the House the other day. On Thursday last I indicated that last Thursday could have probably have been a remarkable day in the history of the Legislature of Alberta. That was day 15 of the session, and Her Honour came in and gave royal assent to 15 bills. That was a productivity of 15 bills in 15 days.

Well, weekend research shows the following. In 1944 on day 14 of the Ninth Legislature 20 bills received royal assent, and in 1941 on day 16 of the Ninth Session 21 bills received royal assent. However, the record is in 1913. In the Second Legislature 87 bills received royal assent on day 29 of the session.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce people from Special Olympics. We have the group leaders visiting today in the gallery accompanied by athletes. Group leaders include Louise Suru, Corey Coldwell, Gary Lefleur, Michael Daly, Sarah Lavin, and Michelle Deering. Several athletes are accompanying them, among them Ambyr Lindon, Adam Faulkner, Robin Friesen, Andrew Rys, Steve Rabeeh, Joe Knorr, Calvin Webster, Warren Pattison, Randal Thurston, Najden Ciric, Geoff Yuzyk, Jack Ringdahl, Tammy Royan, Shilo Sutton, Steven Weigelt, Randy Royer, Wayne Poloyko, Edward Busch, Kevin Shoenberger, Jim Combs, and Chris Stoikopoulos. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Recognitions
Alex Girvan, Aidon Girvan, Willie King

Mr. Goudreau: Mr. Speaker, on the third of May 2003 one-year-old Cameron Girvan was playing with his brother, two-year-old Aidon Girvan, and his cousin, three-year-old Willie King, at his grandparents' farm. The boys were playing around the slough when Cameron decided to chase a beaver wandering on that slough. Cameron broke through the thin ice and fell into the water. He was not able to get up or breathe as he had fallen through the ice into mud and water that was approximately three feet deep.

At the tender ages of two and three both Aidon and Willie had enough sense to immediately run the 70 metres back to the house to get help instead of trying to help Cameron on their own. In response Alex, the father of Cameron and Aidon, ran out of the house to the slough. He found Cameron lying on his back, his head stuck in the mud with the water washing over his face, kicking his feet trying to get up. Alex was able to grab Cameron out of the water to safety. Cameron was conscious and crying, but his lips were blue in colour. Alex immediately carried Cameron back to the house and administered first aid.

Aidon Girvan and Willie King responded wisely to the situation. It is for this reason that the Lifesaving Society awarded Aidon Girvan, Willie King, and Alex Girvan with the rescue commendation award.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Spain

Mr. Lukaszuk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 11, 2004, the world was horrified once again by the terrorist bombing in Madrid, Spain. This cowardly act extinguished the lives of 200 innocents while injuring more than 1,000 other citizens who were merely going from one place to another, unsuspecting parents, children, and elderly.

I have had the opportunity to spend time in Spain, and she is very dear to me. One of the most splendid features of this unique country, Mr. Speaker, is her people, who are some of the most friendly, hospitable, and peace loving I have ever encountered.

March 11, 2004, will be a day that I will not forget soon. Although it will be remembered as a day of grief and tears, I hope that it will also be the start of a new unity in Spain and in the global community in our collective resolve to rid ourselves of terrorism.

To all our Spanish-Canadian citizens and especially to those of Spain, my deepest condolences on your tremendous loss. May God bless and keep Spain in her great time of sorrow.

Thank you.

Special Olympics Canada Winter Games

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today in this Legislature to acknowledge the 72 athletes and 28 support team members from Alberta who attended the 2004 Special Olympics Canada Winter Games recently in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. These athletes braved the near-record snowfall in Prince Edward Island to compete in events such as alpine and cross-country skiing, figure skating, floor hockey, curling, snowshoeing, and speed skating. The Alberta contingent did quite well this year, placing third overall, receiving 28 gold medals, 29 silver medals, and 24 bronze medals. In fact, the Strathcona Strikers, a floor hockey team from my constituency, won a bronze medal in their division.

But the Special Olympics is more than winning medals. The athletes' oath for the Special Olympics is "Let me win, but if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt." I have heard, Mr. Speaker, that all the athletes from Alberta were brave in their attempt and were fine ambassadors for our province.

I'd ask all members of the Assembly to join me in recognizing the athletes and coaches who represented Alberta this year at the Special Olympics.

Beef Consumers

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Alberta beef consumer. After the single case of a BSE-infected cow was detected in this province, hundreds of community groups, industry groups, producers, the government, and the Official Opposition hosted different events in support of Alberta's beef producers. The response to the crisis by Albertans has been tremendous. Across this province at community halls, parking lots, the Saddledome in Calgary, and in many, many other places Albertans lined up to show their support. It is not a rare occurrence, by any means, to be driving down the road and see a bumper sticker that states, "I love Alberta beef" or "I still love Alberta beef."

I want to thank those who have purchased Alberta beef and have helped keep the industry afloat. Let's keep it up and work hard to open the borders to our world-famous product, Alberta beef. Alberta prime rib belongs on all fine restaurant menus around the world.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

2:40 Clear Vista School

Mr. Johnson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize the Clear Vista school in Wetaskiwin, which held the official opening of its new school last week. It was the pleasure of the Minister of Infrastructure and myself to participate on behalf of the government of Alberta.

Clear Vista dates back to the late '40s and '50s in Wetaskiwin. It was originally established as a school for the children who lived outside the city in neighbouring municipalities. The school remains an important part of meeting the needs of county students as well as being open to students within the city of Wetaskiwin.

With the growth of the community around Wetaskiwin a new school building was desperately needed to house the students at Clear Vista. What began as a small school over 50 years ago has grown to a student population of 517, offering a wide range of learning opportunities for both city and county students from kindergarten through grade 9 in the Wetaskiwin-Camrose constituency.

The students, teachers, and staff are extremely excited and proud to move into their beautiful new facilities, that will continue to serve the educational needs of the Wetaskiwin area for years to come. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Toni Ingram Constable Jeff Fox

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All of us at times take emergency workers – police, firefighters, and EMS – for granted because we know that they'll be there when we need them. Last Sunday on highway 2 near Leduc was one of those times for me. After hitting a patch of ice, my vehicle lost control at highway speed and rolled off the road. I called for assistance and was met on the phone by dispatcher Toni Ingram, whose calm and presence of mind kept me calm and under control until Constable Jeff Fox arrived on scene moments later.

Constable Fox spent two hours helping me pick up my belongings and generally kept me safe in this traumatic time. The most danger I felt was not during the accident but afterwards on the side of highway 2 with vehicles passing at highway speeds only feet away despite the flashing emergency lights.

My thanks go out to Jeff and Toni for their professionalism and kindness, but the best thanks of all would be to help make Alberta roads a little bit slower and safer for them. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Yellow Ribbon Gala

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, last Saturday evening the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills and I attended an exciting and special evening hosted by the Military Family Resource Centre. Many months of hard work and planning went into the yellow ribbon gala benefit dinner and silent auction. This very successful event is a major annual fundraiser for this nonprofit charitable organization.

Padre Laurelle Callaghan, Global's woman of vision for April 2003, was the featured speaker. Major Callaghan recounted her experiences as senior Canadian chaplain during Operation Apollo in Kandahar. Her presentation was a highlight of the evening as she skillfully wove humour and wise advice into her presentation on her experiences.

The proceeds for the benefit dinner and silent auction are reinvested into the Military Family Resource Centre to assist in providing programs and services designed especially for military families. Their mandate is clear: supporting the heroes behind the heroes.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask all the members of this Assembly to join me in recognizing the outstanding work and contributions the Military Family Resource Centre makes in the lives of military families. Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 176 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government "to invest a portion of the multi-Billion dollar budget surplus to properly fund education, thereby avoiding layoffs of teachers and staff, ballooning class sizes, program cuts, and closure of schools."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am giving notice that I will be rising later this afternoon at the conclusion of the daily Routine to move a Standing Order 40 application.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Bill 21 Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce Bill 21, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004.

These minor amendments will clarify wording and ensure that the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003, which received royal assent last spring, is aligned with the Family Law Act and the Vital Statistics Act. These amendments will also allow for a smooth transition from the existing legislation.

I'd like to move first reading of the bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 21 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 22
Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, for first reading.

This bill makes numerous amendments to four acts: the Election Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, and the Alberta Corporate Tax Act. These changes are primarily the result of recommendations made by Alberta's Chief Electoral Officer to ensure that our legislation is up to date prior to the next provincial election. Changes range from minor housekeeping to important changes that ensure the accuracy of elector information, help protect elector privacy, and improve flexibility in the use of special ballots in advance polls.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Bill 23
Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2004

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 23, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2004, for first reading.

This bill amends the existing act to align it with the government's recent decision to eliminate the 1 and a half cent per litre aviation fuel tax on eligible international passenger and cargo flights effective March 1, 2004. Eligible flights include those to the United States. This will enhance Alberta's aviation industry's ability to attract additional international passenger and cargo air service to Alberta. Other amendments to the bill strengthen controls and address administrative concerns.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to table the appropriate number of copies of Albertans & Climate Change: Key Actions to Date. This is a nice little booklet that shows what Albertans and Alberta have done to take action on climate change. We have taken more action than any other government in the country. It talks about our green power for government operation, our municipal energy efficiency loans, technology and innovation to maximize energy efficiency, as well as the royalty credit from the Department of Energy for sequestration of CO<sub>2</sub>. It's an excellent little report, and I encourage all members to get a copy of it and read it.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development I'm very pleased to file today with the Assembly copies of a letter received from the Canadian Council of Grocery Distributors with their reaction to the Review of Pricing in the Beef Industry report. The letter acknowledged that beef pricing is a complex issue. There's one sentence in this letter that I think is very important for all members to hear. It says, "What is most important is that prices went down, tonnage went up and consumers benefited from very aggressive feature pricing right across the country."

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am today tabling from 22 firefighters in the Grande Cache fire department support for private member's Bill 207, the Traffic Safety (Emergency Vehicle) Amendment Act, 2004, sponsored by the Member for Calgary-North Hill. Also, the Hinton fire department, with 20 firefighters plus one firefighter/EMS worker, are supporting this bill.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table in the Assembly today the requisite number of copies of a request signed by a number of my constituents that asks for the Minister of Learning to undertake a cost-benefit analysis to examine the merits of a new Calgary inner-city public school board pursuant to the School Act and also asks for a moratorium on school closures until such a study has been done.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm tabling five copies each of 135 letters that state that cancer is now the leading cause of death in Alberta, that 30 per cent of these deaths are caused by the use of tobacco products, and that at least 300 nonsmokers die each year from lung cancer due to exposure to second-hand smoke. These letters all request support for a provincial law to make all public places and workplaces smoke free.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon. It's an article from the December 15, 2003, edition of Thompson's World Insurance News, and it quotes from the letter from Mr. Cooke we talked about in question period today.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I table the required number of copies of a letter that I sent today to Mr. Randy Ferbey and his curling colleagues congratulating them on their fourth appearance at the Brier. The letter reads in part: "I wish to thank you for the outstanding skill you displayed on the curling rink, for the sportsmanlike behaviour you modeled for all who watched, and for being such excellent ambassadors for Alberta and Canada."

The Speaker: Hon. members, I wish to table the appropriate copies of a new pamphlet called Seniors' View: Your Guide to Alberta's

Legislature. It's outlining a new educational research program that we've developed tailored to seniors. In the next number of days this documentation will be sent to all senior citizen organizations, community residences, and affinity groups throughout the province.

Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a Standing Order 40 application.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. MacDonald:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to establish a series of public debates surrounding automobile insurance which would include the disclosure of future government plans to implement the new automobile insurance system, industry comments and all objections, any reports which would assist the public to fully understand the changes to automobile insurance in Alberta, the KPMG report on automobile insurance, the letter to the Deputy Minister of Finance from George Cooke, and all polls dealing with automobile insurance conducted by the government since January 1, 2002.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As you and all hon. members of this Assembly are well aware, Standing Order 40 applications are made in cases of urgent and pressing necessity. Over the past year or so Albertans have been calling for some form of relief from skyrocketing automobile insurance premiums. Albertans who hadn't been involved in any at-fault collisions were being asked to pay higher-than-usual premiums, and others were unable to find a company to insure them at all, and this is a mandatory financial services product.

The response from this government was no response as the issue grew. Finally, when they could ignore it no more, this government responded with an automobile insurance reform process that they have yet to reveal in its entirety. Both Alberta insurers and drivers are wondering how these reforms will help control rates while allowing insurance companies to make a profit, and they are wondering how this government arrived at the reforms it is committed to implementing. It is time for this government to make the process of developing and implementing changes to automobile insurance clear and transparent and give all affected parties the opportunity to make their opinions heard.

I urge all hon. members of this House to grant unanimous consent for the motion and to establish these public debates today so that any necessary adjustments to insurance reforms can be made quickly and without major disruption to insurers and the insured.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: Hon. members, a Standing Order 40 application requires unanimous consent.

Written Questions

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 11, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, and 32.

[Motion carried]

Coal Bed Methane Consultation

Q2. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What public consultation on coal bed methane development in Alberta is currently underway?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be very grateful for that information. In my travels across the province I have been amazed to find that some landowners are not aware of any plans whatsoever by this government to develop this potentially very valuable resource. Certainly, there have been public meetings held, and I understand that there are going to be some more public meetings in the future.

Whenever we consider the potential amount of water that can be produced from these wells and what can be in those water samples, that could, hopefully, and should be tested – like what's the content of arsenic, beryllium, mercury, other elements? – I think this question is certainly in order, and I do hope that we receive the information from the government.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the member actually knows that there's an extensive amount of public consultation in process in the parts of Alberta where coal bed methane is in its most prevalent state. The member also knows through answers in this House that coal bed methane in this province actually happens to be very dry and that mid-level coal – the Edmonton coals, the coals that are in and around the 600-metre level – simply produce under depressurization when the well is drilled. Those coals in the 900-metre or deeper zones, the Mannville coals, in fact have salt water, and they are reinjected. But I want to certainly disabuse the member of any perhaps what he would consider secret public consultation to be going on, as he has said earlier that we've issued secret orders from public documents.

In our usual brand of openness, total transparency, and accountability, Mr. Speaker, we'll be accepting the question.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I would just like to thank the hon. minister, and I look forward to the information.

[Written Question 2 carried]

3:00 Orphaned Wells in Parks and Protected Areas

Q3. Mr. MacDonald moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

What is the total number of orphaned wells, pipelines, and facilities in provincial parks and protected areas broken down by category as abandoned, decontaminated, and reclaimed?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie instructed me to express gratitude to the hon. Minister of Community Development for providing the Official Opposition with an amended version of this written question. She is grateful for that in advance and is fine with it. She certainly can work with this.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to respond that I'm going to be accepting Written Question 3 with amendments. In a moment I'd like to provide some rationale around the changes proposed by those amendments, and then I will move Written Question 3 be accepted with the amendments.

As has been indicated by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, I did share the amendment with my opposition colleague prior to 11 a.m. today, as per procedural requirements, and I note that the amendment has now been circulated to all members for their review.

Mr. Speaker, in coming to the conclusions that I'm about to, I want to indicate my thanks to the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for posing the question and also for understanding that in order to respond to this question accurately, I have to propose some amendments that are basically nomenclature-type in nature. With the amendments, then, the new Written Question 3 would read: "What is the total number of active, capped, abandoned, and orphaned wells and the number of linear kilometres of pipelines in provincial parks and protected areas?"

I want to explain that just briefly, Mr. Speaker, if I could. First of all, active, capped, and abandoned are the categories used by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board for identifying the status of well sites. Secondly, orphaned well is a category used by Alberta Sustainable Resource Development that relates to the surface land disposition issued for a well site and refers to a well site whose licensed operator has ceased to exist either voluntarily or through bankruptcy and where there is no company that has assumed responsibility for the well site.

Pipelines are identified by length of pipeline in kilometres. These data would include all commercial pipelines that currently exist and also those that no longer exist but were part of the pipeline network at one time. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board does not break down the data into more specific categories such as type or status.

Now, with reference to the term "facilities," as was proposed in the original motion, by facilities I assume that this probably refers to infrastructure on a well site. However, this is not separately identified. The number of well sites should cover the intent of this reference in any case.

The word "decontaminated" is not a category unto itself that is used in relation to well sites or pipelines, but the process of abandonment requires decommissioning. Decommissioning, just for everyone's quick elucidation, means including capping and cementing of the well and removal of all infrastructure, so in that regard abandonment also requires the reclamation of the well site.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the word "reclaimed" of course relates to the land disposition for a well that is abandoned for which a reclamation certificate has been issued. However, the information is not separately maintained on an historical basis. In fact, a reclamation certificate is issued five or more years after an abandoned well site has been reclaimed and represents the final land inspection to assess effectiveness of the reclamation work completed after infrastructure has been removed. An ongoing historical record of abandoned well sites is maintained, which would correspond to the number of reclaimed well sites plus well sites that are at some stage in the reclamation process.

Mr. Speaker, I do hope that these further explanations will clarify the proposed rewording of the question as it applies to provincial parks and protected areas within my jurisdiction, and I hope that this requested information will meet with the requirements or at least the intent of the original question.

So I would like to move that Written Question 3 be accepted as amended. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate on this question as amended.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. Minister of Community Development. I believe that the hon. minister's definition of "decontaminated" and "reclaimed" were self-explanatory. I believe that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was concerned about soil reclamation as well from some of those leases in the area immediately surrounding the wellhead or the gas well. So that would apply in the "reclaimed" definition hopefully, but again thank you.

[Written Question 3 as amended carried]

Property Theft in Energy Department

Q6. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Energy for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Hopefully, the amount is zero, but in the interest of accountability and openness that the hon. minister described earlier, I am anxious to see exactly how much money, if any, has been lost.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Sure.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I assume that that "sure" was that we're going to get the information straightaway, and we look forward to getting it. Again I would express gratitude to the minister.

[Written Question 6 carried]

Property Theft in Government Services Department

Q7. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Government Services for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, I hope the amount is zero. Certainly, the Minister of Energy has shown some leadership here and has agreed to be open and transparent, and I would urge the hon. Minister of Government Services to do the same.

Thank you.

Mr. Coutts: We accept Written Question 7, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and again we look forward to receiving that information.

Thank you.

[Written Question 7 carried]

Property Theft in Human Resources and Employment Department

Q8. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Human Resources and Employment for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of written questions 6 and 7 certainly I hope that the answer is zero, and we will wait and hear the response from the hon. minister.

Mr. Dunford: Accept.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, that was an affirmative from the hon. minister?

The Speaker: It was affirmative.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, and we will look forward to receiving that information in a timely fashion.

[Written Question 8 carried]

3:10 Royalty Tax Deductions

Q9. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the projected amount of royalty tax deductions for the 2003-2004 fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is again to the Minister of Energy. This is a very important matter. It comes up in discussions across this province. There seems to be some concern with the taxpayers that many of these royalty tax deductions are just netted in the provincial budget. They are not described in any detail. Written Question 9 would provide not only the opposition with some answers in regard to the royalty tax deductions that are being projected but the taxpayers as well.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hate to interrupt a roll, but the member in fact is not accurate when he says that there are many discussions around Alberta with respect to royalty tax deductions, because there's actually no such thing. It's a great Liberal problem, and it has been since 1974.

Mr. Lund: Lack of understanding?

Mr. Smith: The lack of understanding that both the provincial Liberals and, of course, the federal Liberals have with what in fact a royalty is. A royalty is a measure of economic rent. A tax is something a government imposes as a fee or a levy or a revenue collection on the broad base of the population.

So because of the extremely inept wording and because of the fact that this does not exist, the government is compelled, although it would wish to answer all questions in the affirmative, to therefore reject this one.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my disappointment in that response, and hopefully if there is, as the minister has indicated, no such thing, taxpayers will be delighted to read about his gracious response in Hansard.

Thank you.

[Written Question 9 lost]

Royalty Tax Deductions

Q10. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What was the total amount of royalty tax deductions for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is the same as Written Question 9 in the eyes and the ears of taxpayers who have asked about this, and if we can't ask in the Legislative Assembly to the minister directly, I don't know where else would be appropriate.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that in keeping with the spirit of the fact that if, in fact, the item on which the question is centred doesn't exist, then how can one break with the logic of rejecting one and not the other? Therefore, we are compelled by both logic and inaccurate wording to reject this Written Question 10.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Energy why he wouldn't have amended this written question and followed the leadership of the distinguished Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek, who was quite anxious to provide an amendment to Written Question 3. Follow the leadership of this hon. minister.

Thank you.

[Written Question 10 lost]

Carbon Dioxide Projects Royalty Credit Program

Q11. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount of royalty credits that has been dispensed under the carbon dioxide projects royalty credit program for the period May 16, 2003, to February 17, 2004?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly there must be a lot of information from this time period in regard to the carbon dioxide project royalty credit program. There was also reference made to this program in the recent throne speech. So, again, that information would provide valuable insight to the citizens of this province in regard to that project.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do accept the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much. I would like to thank the hon. minister for that, and we look forward to getting the information.

[Written Question 11 carried]

Carbon Dioxide Projects Royalty Credit Program

Q12. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What are the names and the number of oil and gas companies that have applied for royalty credits under the carbon dioxide projects royalty credit program for the period May 16, 2003, to February 17, 2004?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This follows along the lines of Written Question 11 and, again, this information would be appreciated. It would shed some light on this entire program.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of light already existing around this program. Of course, it is all so very, very difficult, even as an elected member of this Assembly, to predict the future, so not knowing the final outcome of companies that will receive approval in this program, it is very difficult to publish those names at this juncture, although as the program unfolds in its entirety, we will make the appropriate revelations, if I may say, or the appropriate tablings known to everybody.

So, again because of timing, Mr. Speaker, I'm compelled to reject the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In light of that, I will look forward to the hon. minister tabling those lists in the Assembly here at the appropriate time, hopefully in the fall session.

Thank you.

[Written Question 12 lost]

Enhanced Recovery of Oil Royalty Reduction

Q13. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount of royalty reductions under the enhanced recovery of oil royalty reduction regulation from April 1, 2002, to March 31, 2003?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, that information would be appreciated. There is significant interest in the general public, as I said before, in regard to our total royalty reduction programs and our regulations. There is a perception that we are not getting enough royalty. If the minister could provide that information at this time, myself and taxpayers would be grateful.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's presumptuous to speak for the taxpayers out there, so in fact I'll simply address the question that he has read into the record. The enhanced oil recovery program is critical to Alberta. I would encourage anybody here to read the Alberta Energy Research Institute's paper Spudding Innovation, which really talks about another Alberta waiting for technology to discover more oil and gas that is cached or secreted in reserves throughout this province that we have not done a complete job of recovering. So in order to ensure that the House is better off – and certainly I find that this member is particularly better off when he is better prepared – we will be accepting this question.

3:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: At this time I would just like to thank the hon. minister.

[Written Question 13 carried]

Enhanced Recovery of Oil Royalty Reduction

Q14. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the number of oil and gas companies that were eligible for royalty reductions under the enhanced recovery of oil royalty reduction regulation between April 1, 2002, and March 31, 2003?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, that follows along the same path as Written Question 13, and hopefully we will receive the same gracious response as we had previously from the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Graciously accepted.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: I would just like to acknowledge my gratitude to the minister.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Ho ho. A love-in today, hon. members.

[Written Question 14 carried]

Utilities Consumer Advocate Budget

Q16. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total budget for the Utilities Consumer Advocate for the 2003-2004 fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you. There has been a lot of information provided already in regard to the Utilities Consumer Advocate. We see a special committee of advisors from all over the province for that office. It would be very interesting to know what the total staff is, the staff requirements for 2003-04, what these individuals are going to be doing in regard to the electricity market. The utilities office will be obviously divided between questions on electricity and questions on natural gas delivery. In light of the fact that this budget is being provided by industry, I think that a very important question at this time is to know exactly what the total budget is.

Thank you.

Mr. Coutts: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of openness and accountability of this government we accept Written Question 16.

The Speaker: The hon. Member of Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is a new spirit of openness and accountability, and I appreciate it. I look forward to getting the information and thank the minister.

[Written Question 16 carried]

Advisory Council on Electricity Report

Q17. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total cost of the 2003 report from the Advisory Council on Electricity?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There have been a lot of reports issued or sanctioned by this provincial government in regard to electricity deregulation, and no one knows the cost of all these reports. I can imagine that if we had a list and the total cost of these reports going back to, say, the year 2000 . . . The minister is shaking his head over there. He must be amazed at the total cost. I'm sure that at some point he has asked his department to look into the total cost of all these reports, but we're only asking at this time for the total cost of the 2003 report from the Advisory Council on Electricity. Electricity ratepayers would also be interested to know that information, I'm sure.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, when the member speaks – and his preambles, similar to what they are in question period, are such nose stretchers that I feel compelled to correct the information prior to moving on to the business at hand. There has not been an endless group of reports published by this department with respect to the subject of electricity deregulation. There have been some. They are posted on the web site. They're all transparent. They all involve consultation. They, in fact, are not all that expensive, as the member will see when the cost for the Advisory Council on Electricity comes forward, because we are graciously accepting the question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would like to at this time on behalf of all Albertans thank the minister, and I look forward to getting the information.

[Written Question 17 carried]

Advisory Council on Electricity Report

Q18. Mr. MacDonald moved that the following question be accepted.

What is the total cost of the 2002 report from the Advisory Council on Electricity?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am quite confident that the minister is going to provide that information also in a timely fashion.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Sure.

The Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, I would like to thank the hon. minister.

[Written Question 18 carried]

Department of Health and Wellness Conditional Grants

Q19. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that the following question be accepted.

What measures has the government taken to implement the Auditor General's recommendation that the Department of Health and Wellness improve its control processes for ensuring accountability for conditional grants?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The purpose behind this is to see whether or not the government is actually carrying through on the recommendations that are made by the Auditor General. If the Auditor General is going to truly serve his function by making recommendations, we need to know what the departments are doing when these recommendations are made, so we're asking the minister to let us know what he's doing to implement that.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness we are prepared to accept Written Question 19.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East to close the debate.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you.

[Written Question 19 carried]

Property Theft in Sustainable Resource Development Department

Q20. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.
What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Sustainable Resource Development for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's just imperative that we find out what's going on and how these are reported and whether or not we're keeping track of them, so we'd ask the minister to provide us with that.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government is prepared to accept Written Question 20.

Dr. Nicol: Thanks to the minister.

Property Theft in Revenue Department

Q21. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.
What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Revenue for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the same reasons I did on the previous question, if they could.

3:30

Mr. Melchin: Mr. Speaker, the government's prepared to accept Written Question 21.

Dr. Nicol: I thank the minister.

Property Theft in International and Intergovernmental Relations Department

Q22. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that I am prepared to accept Written Question 22.

Dr. Nicol: I would like to thank the minister for providing us with that information.

Property Theft in Finance Department

Q23. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Finance for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, we accept.

Property Theft in Environment Department

Q24. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that the following question be accepted.

What is the total dollar amount of public property lost due to theft in the Department of Environment for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

Dr. Nicol: Again, same rationale we had: we need to know how this is being tracked.

Dr. Taylor: We are accepting the same rationale as the previous question. We're glad to accept that.

Dr. Nicol: Thanks to the minister for helping us with that.

[Written Question 24 carried]

The Speaker: Just a note, hon. members, before we go on to Written Question 25. As Speaker I asked the administration of the Legislative Assembly Office of Alberta if we had any thefts, and the only one brought to my attention was that a chair belonging to the deputy clerk had left her office mysteriously, and that was in room 315. So if anybody is aware of where this chair might have been relocated, it would help us in dealing with this type of question as well. It was just probably inadvertently mislocated.

Health Care Premium Accounts

Q25. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted.
As of April 1, 2003, what was the total number of employer health care premium accounts and the total number of individual/family health care premium accounts, and of the individual/family accounts what percentage were seniors' accounts?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness we are prepared to accept question 25.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to conclude the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for offering the good news.

Thank you.

Health Care Premium Arrears

Q26. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. For each of the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03, and April 1, 2003, to February 17, 2004, what is the total number of health care premium accounts that were in arrears that were forwarded to collections agencies, and what was the total value of these accounts for each of these years?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness we are prepared to accept Written Question 26.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for conveying the information.

Thank you.

[Written Question 26 carried]

Health Care Premium Arrears

Q27. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. For each of the fiscal years 2001-02, 2002-03, and April 1, 2003, to February 17, 2004, what is the average length of time between a collection agency receiving a health care premium account that is in arrears and the payment of those arrears in full?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness we are prepared to accept Written Question 27.

[Written Question 27 carried]

Fatality Inquiry Recommendations

Q32. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that the following question be accepted.

In which correctional facilities has the Department of the Solicitor General implemented the recommendations listed in the fatality inquiry of Reginald Grant McLeod for the prevention of drug-related deaths in all of Alberta's correctional facilities?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We need to know whether or not the government has been following up on the recommendations that have been made out of these reports and to what extent they're actually doing this. So we'd appreciate this kind of information from the minister.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is prepared to accept Written Question 32.

Dr. Nicol: I thank the minister. This will help Albertans keep informed on the progress.

[Written Question 32 carried]

Motions for Returns

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 11, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 20, 22, 32, and 33.

[Motion carried]

Access to Crown Lands

M1. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of all reports and documentation issued by the Aboriginal Affairs facilitator, John McCarthy, to the government between January 1, 2003, and February 17, 2004, inclusive pertaining to the discussions between First Nations bands and oil field contractors regarding access to Crown lands.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Ms Calahasen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hate to break the roll that they are on; however, due to the fact that there was no additional information or paperwork pertaining to the drafting of this document and only receiving the final copy of the paper, we are not recommending that we accept this. Further to that, the McCarthy document is only for cabinet and Treasury Board confidences and, therefore, is a mandatory exception, thus not releaseable. So, no.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, with the public debate that went on surrounding this, I think it's imperative that Albertans be informed of the degree to which both the First Nations communities and the contractors were in discussion, both between themselves and with government. So I find that basically not helpful to this whole situation by not having those documents released. Thank you.

3:40 Automobile Insurance Consultation

M2. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of individuals and organizations that were consulted and provided input on automobile insurance to the Automobile Insurance Reform Implementation Team.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it would be in the best interests of the public and, certainly, of certain insurance executives if this information were made available. We heard that this was an open and transparent process earlier in debate this afternoon in this Assembly, and this gives the government an ideal opportunity to back that up.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am prepared to accept Motion for a Return 2 with an amendment. Numerous companies, organizations, and citizens of Alberta have provided significant and valuable input to the Automobile Insurance Reform Implementation Team. I am prepared to list the names of the companies and organizations that have been consulted and provided input to this team.

However, I should note, Mr. Speaker, that half of our freedom of information legislation is the protection of privacy, so I'm not prepared to release the names of individuals providing comments. I am willing to provide the aggregated number of individuals that have provided input to the team.

Therefore, I move that Motion for a Return 2 be amended as follows, and it would read that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a list of companies and organizations and the number of individuals that were consulted and provided input on automobile insurance to the Automobile Insurance Reform Implementation Team.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment and this notification have been provided to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar prior to 11 a.m. this morning as per our procedure. I would ask that the amendment be circulated to all members. I believe that's the case.

So, Mr. Speaker, I move Motion for a Return 2 be accepted as amended.

The Speaker: On the debate on the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, on the amendment. Just for the record I would like to express my gratitude also to the Minister of Finance for providing this information in advance. As the Rolling Stones would say, you can't always get what you want. But this is a good start, and I look forward to the list as provided and described by the hon. minister.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate on the question as amended.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on the question that has been amended. I look forward to getting the information.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 2 as amended carried]

Participation in RTO West

M4. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all documents, including but not limited to letters, faxes, e-mails, meeting materials, memos, reports, and notes, pertaining to Alberta's participation in the Regional Transmission Organization, RTO, West from December 1, 2000, to February 17, 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much again, Mr. Speaker. These documents, it would be my view, would be very instrumental in getting more information on how this government plans to link our electricity grid with the electricity grids of the Pacific northwest, California, and Nevada.

Now, as we can see, there has been a consultation process for some time. We look at the Bolger commission. There was an indication in there that we could see price increases domestically if there were exports of electricity from this province. It is apparent to this member that the government is going ahead with a policy of electricity exports from this province without an adequate public consultation process with the consumers of this province. This Motion for a Return 4 would help everyone understand the role that the Alberta government is playing not only currently in the Regional Transmission Organization West but what the future plans for the province's electricity grid in relationship to the Regional Transmission Organization West are.

This motion for a return is very important, and I certainly hope the hon. minister agrees with me because many consumers of electricity in this province are very concerned that we are planning to link ourselves very closely with the electricity grids of the Pacific Northwest.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you. I guess, Mr. Speaker, this motion would be best entitled Looking for Mr. Gold Bar.

It's important, Mr. Speaker, that we again look at what the member said after he talked about the motion. The policy for electricity export from Alberta into other jurisdictions has been a clear, publicly documented record for two years. There are nine tenets to the export policy. They're very clear, they're very obvious, and they're very public.

In fact, we have corresponded with this member on the subject. He knows that there is third party confidentiality involved, and he knows that he is also entitled to pursue this under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act as well.

So, accordingly, Mr. Speaker, we'll be compelled by rule to reject this motion.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Well, I'm disappointed that this Motion for a Return 4 is going to be rejected. Certainly, as I said earlier, all this information would be vital to the consumers of this province when they make their decision on whether their economic interests are being served or not in regard to increasing our exports of electricity. And I'm disappointed.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 4 lost]

Participation in RTO West

M5. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of all expenses, including but not limited to travel, accommodation, food, and registration fees, associated with Alberta delegates attending Regional Transmission Organization, RTO, West conferences from December 1, 2000, to February 17, 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, again what is all this costing Albertans? Who is paying for it? Is it the Department of Energy? Is it some other government department?

Certainly, there have been conferences. I know that there are routine conferences held in Portland, Oregon, that government officials attend along with AESO officials. It would be very, very important to electricity consumers to know the breakdown of all the expenses that have occurred between these time periods in regard to plugging into, shall I say, the Regional Transmission Organization West.

This motion for a return is in my view self-explanatory, and I can't see why the minister would reject this motion. I just can't understand why he would reject it.

Thank you.

3:50

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, there continues to be an aroma of conspiracy wafting from the member at every turn with respect to RTO West. So I would ask the House for some direction, guidance on this. I have two choices. I can either reject the motion, or I can accept the motion.

Now, if I reject the motion, Mr. Speaker, it will be because Alberta delegates have not attended any RTO West conferences because RTO West is not an operating entity. It exists only on paper. As such, there have been no RTO West conferences.

Mr. Speaker, on the other hand, I could also accept the motion, and then reply that I'm accepting the motion because there is no conspiracy; there is no conference.

So may I ask the House, or is there a way that I could follow this through on a more appropriate basis?

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly there is information available, and if the Minister of Energy is too busy to have a look, perhaps some of his staff could do it for him. There are web sites where there are delegations, as I said earlier, from this province listed. Of the four people from the Alberta delegation there would be at least two from the Department of Energy.

Now, precisely how all this works I don't know, but this is the place again where these questions should be raised, on the floor of this Legislative Assembly. There are two individuals from the Department of Energy who routinely go to these meetings, and I think this question is quite appropriate.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, this matter is very, very clear. Once a question is on the Order Paper, it becomes the property of the Assembly. It is no longer the property of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar or any other member. Regardless of what any member says about it, it's the decision of the Assembly that will determine the procedure with respect to this question.

[Motion for a Return 5 lost]

Workers' Compensation Board Appeals Commission

M6. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the voting record for each member of the Workers' Compensation Board Appeals Commission for the calendar years 1997 through 2002.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We hear all the time from injured workers and we hear all the time from the industry about the Appeals Commission, and it would be of a great deal of interest if one could have the voting record. I understand that in the last year and a half that record has been made public on the Appeals Commission's web site. When the commission hears a case and determines whether they're going to rule in favour of the injured worker or they're going to rule in favour of the employer or whatever happens in those cases, that information is public for those who want to go to the Appeals Commission web site and have a look.

So, in light of that, I think it would be very important if all members of this Assembly and the public could have a look at the voting record for each member of the Workers' Compensation Board Appeals Commission for the period going back to 1997. I'm very interested to hear the hon. minister of human resources and enjoyment in regard to this matter. If it's good enough for the period after the WCB reforms, let's go back to the period to 1997.

Thank you.

The Speaker: I believe the hon. member meant the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Dunford: Well, I do forgive his comment. I do enjoy this portfolio. I wasn't sure, though, whether it was a slip of the tongue or whether he was being playful, because he's certainly being mischievous with this motion for a return. He knows full well that the Appeals Commission operates as a quasi-judicial body.

So we will be rejecting this motion for a return on the basis that the concept of a voting record of course does not apply to the Appeals Commission. There's no distinct subject matter on which a voting record could be based. Maintaining actual and perceived independence is critical to the operation of the Appeals Commission. Given that the concept of a voting record is artificial, it would be not appropriate to respond further.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm disappointed in that – I certainly am – in light of the fact that one can go on the web site and check out all the hearings and what happened at those hearings before the Appeals Commission. I guess we're just going to have to now look at the period between the implementation of the Workers' Compensation Board reforms that were initiated by the hon. minister and the current time. I thought that it would be important to go back to 1997, but in this case I will just have to express my disappointment.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 6 lost]

Department of Energy Performance Measure

M7. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the data survey referred to in the Ministry of Energy's 2002-2003 annual report under the performance measure Albertans' Understanding of Alberta's Energy and Mineral Resources and their Economic Significance.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This data, I think, would be of a great deal of interest to all Albertans, and hopefully the minister will agree through this Assembly and through this motion to provide that data.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's precisely in the interests of all Albertans that we used this as a performance measure, and any data and any survey and any information that I can give to this member to help make him a better Member of the Legislative Assembly, I will most willingly do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: There are all kinds of surprises in this world, Mr. Speaker, and the minister's response certainly would be in that category. With that, we will wait and we will look forward to the response.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 7 carried]

Electricity Deregulation

M8. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing all documents, business plans, performance measures, and statistical data regarding the government's deregulation of electricity from January 1, 2001, to February 17, 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, this information, again, is vital. Consumers certainly are confused. Consumers don't think that electricity deregulation has reduced prices, and this information would be very interesting for them.

Certainly, the government has promoted the idea that deregulation of electricity increased choice and would reduce prices. The more choice we have in our options for the purchase of electricity, the better off we would become. But we all know that that hasn't happened.

This information would shed a lot of light on what data the government is using to continue to cling to the policy of electricity deregulation when we know that instead of reducing prices as was promised, we have gone to some of the highest prices in North America. Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I feel compelled to speak on the member's argument simply to correct the inaccuracies put forth in that argument. He knows full well that since the year 2000 electricity prices have gone down in this province. He knows full well that in the last three months electricity prices have gone down even further. Of course, we continue to seek guidance and clarity from the member by offering freely and openly to examine his own bill in this Legislative Assembly.

With respect to the motion itself, Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the member that this information is vital. In fact, it is so vital that it has been made public since 2001 and continues to become public throughout the process. So this information is all in the public domain. We know that they have ample resources for research and for crafting questions and looking for correct information, so I would direct the member accordingly into that vast array of information that exists in the public domain.

Therefore, because of the abundance of public information already available on this topic, we'll accordingly be compelled to reject the motion, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister knows full well that power bills in this province have not gone down as a result of electricity deregulation. Certainly, there are many, many Albertans who after question period daily phone this side of the House and question the government in their responses because their power bills have not gone down either.

When one looks at what we had before electricity deregulation on a power bill, Mr. Speaker, there would be two line items: one for energy cost, and there would also be one for distribution. Now all that has changed, and we see prices that go up, up, and up. Regardless of whether it's for energy charges or it's add-ons to the bills or it's distribution or transmission charges, nothing has gone down, and I'm disappointed.

If the minister feels so strongly that prices have gone down, why doesn't he accept this motion and back it up with the facts that his government obviously has? If the facts indicate that electricity prices have gone down, well, show us the proof by accepting this motion for a return. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 8 lost]

Department of Energy Performance Measures

M9. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the Environics West surveys commissioned by the government referred to in the Ministry of Energy 2002-2003 annual report under the performance measures Industry Satisfaction and Information Management.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, this survey, again, would shed a lot of light, so to speak, on this department, and I would urge the government and particularly the hon. Minister of Energy to accept this Motion for a Return 9.

Thank you.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, when a member refers to a business plan, I think that's certainly a sign in the right direction. As the minister for this important department we take our business plan very seriously and the components of that business plan, not only in terms of who does something, why you do it, and how you measure it. The how you measure it is an important piece.

We would be most pleased to, again, continue to help make the member a better MLA. Accordingly, in that spirit we will be accepting this motion. Interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, if I could just add, because he does feel so concerned about the cost of some items, that the cost of this survey is not included in the question. I'd just add that maybe when he crafts the next question, he could add the cost too.

So we'll be accepting Motion for a Return 9.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to conclude the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to say that the Minister of Energy is now a better Minister of Energy for accepting this motion for a return, and I look forward to getting the information.

[Motion for a Return 9 carried]

Kneehill Animal Control and Rehabilitation Centre Ltd.

M20. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Carlson that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the zoo plan for the Kneehill Animal Control and Rehabilitation Centre Ltd., GuZoo.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This motion is so that we can look at the operational plan of that zoo and see what it's actually doing and whether or not it's following the guidelines. So I'd ask the government to release that business plan.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Yes. On behalf of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I'm pleased to reply. Unfortunately, I have to reply that it will be rejected.

The reason for this, Mr. Speaker, is that this information requested is not publicly available in the Wildlife Act. As a result, it's governed by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. When something is governed by the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, then we must release it under the conditions of the FOIP Act. So we would ask that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie please make this request through the FOIP process. That way, we can be sure that it's appropriately handled and that third party information will be protected.

Thank you.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Speaker, I guess the question that we'd raise is that if this is a business plan – it's a zoo plan – they should be public documents as they submit them. This is not disclosing information that would necessarily be reflective of their competitive position, so I don't see how it can be passed off to the FOIP Act. It should be just a normal business plan under the government and should be released.

[Motion for a Return 20 lost]

Provincial Police Force

M22. Dr. Nicol moved on behalf of Ms Blakeman that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the cost-benefit analysis, any literature reviews, comparative reports and studies, and timetable for the implementation of Alberta's provincial police force.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This helps us and members of the public to understand where they're at, what the positioning is, and the rationale for or against the formation of this police force, so we'd like to see the member release that information.

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are rejecting this motion for a return.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, there's no real plan for implementation of the Alberta provincial police force. We do intend to review provincial policing alternatives in the next few years as we approach the end of the current RCMP provincial police service agreement in 2012. Our review, in keeping with the recommendations of the MLA policing review committee, will look at a variety of policing alternatives from the perspective of cost and service benefits to Albertans.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the MLA Committee on Strengthening Alberta's Role in Confederation, chaired by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, is looking into this issue as part of their mandate. I look forward to hearing the results of their committee's consultation.

4:10

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre I'd just say that it's too bad that they're not releasing the other parts of the information just because they don't have a timetable available. This is the only reason that was given for rejecting this. It would be helpful to Albertans to fully understand the ongoing status and position of the discussions if they could get any kind of cost-benefit analysis or the literature reviews, the comparative reports and studies that would be available, that the government is using currently to make their decision. It's inappropriate that it gets rejected just because there's no implementation plan at this point.

[Motion for a Return 22 lost]

Alberta Career Computer Centre Inc.

M32. Dr. Pannu moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the report prepared by Don Logan of the audit and special investigations unit of Alberta Learning completed in 2002 on complaints by students and former students of the Alberta Career Computer Centre Inc.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Dr. Oberg relative to the motion I would like to propose the following amendments: (a) striking out "copy of the report prepared" and substituting "summary of student concerns gathered" and (b) striking out "completed in 2002 on complaints by" and substituting "after meeting with." The amended motion for a return will read as follows:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a summary of student concerns gathered by Don Logan of the audit and special investigations unit of Alberta Learning after meeting with students and former students of the Alberta Career Computer Centre Inc.

I understand that the wording has been circulated to the hon. member opposite and due notice provided by 11 a.m.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Minister of Children's Services for presenting the amendment on behalf of the Minister of Learning and want to thank the Minister of Learning, who provided this information on the amendment this morning to my office. I thank the minister for this courtesy. In addition, the minister shared with me the briefing that he received from his department for the reasons for the amendment that he's proposing.

I do accept the amendment, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to conclude the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank the Minister of Learning for sharing the information with me and extending the courtesy of sharing his reasons for the amendment. I accept the reasons, and I look forward to receiving with the rest of the members of the Assembly the information requested in the amended motion for a return.

[Motion for a Return 32 as amended carried]

Report of Task Force on Health Care Funding and Revenue Generation

M33. Dr. Pannu moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of the report of the government MLA Task Force on Health Care Funding and Revenue Generation, Graydon report, submitted to the Minister of Health and Wellness in 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To speak briefly to the motion, with your permission, it is exceedingly important for the citizens of this province to have access to the report, the response which was given by the Minister of Health and Wellness towards the last part of January 2004, which indicated that the government was not going to proceed with the implementation of the recommendations of the report. Then within a week after that announcement the Premier reversed the decision and indicated to Albertans that he was going to move right ahead with the implementation of this report.

This whole matter caused a great deal of confusion, Mr. Speaker, for Albertans and, it seems, the government ranks as well. So the sooner this report is tabled here in the House and shared with the members of the House, the better it is, because Albertans then will know what is awaiting them. The Premier has of course gone beyond the report and indicated and threatened that he's ready to withdraw from the Canada Health Act, which is quite an ominous statement from the point of view of Albertans who are concerned about the future of public health care in this province and this country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again, on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness this government has agreed to release the Graydon report shortly and, therefore, would not wish to pre-empt that release by agreeing to Motion for a Return 33. Therefore, on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness I respectfully reject this motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to conclude the debate.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm obviously disappointed by the decision of the Minister of Health and Wellness to reject this motion for a return. The use of the word "shortly" begs the question, you know: how soon? The report has been around for a long time. The report deals with some of the recommendations made by the Mazankowski committee. That report is now more than a year and a half old. So the question is: how much more time does the Minister of Health and Wellness really need?

So the reason for my disappointment lies in the very use of the term "shortly." Months and months have gone by, yet Albertans don't have access to the recommendations of the report, which they know are going to immensely put them in a very difficult situation if those recommendations are accepted. To continue to keep this report secret, to keep it away from the gaze of Albertans I think is denying the principle of transparency that this government so strongly claims it is committed to. So I'm very disappointed that this right of Albertans to transparency and access to information that rightly affects their concerns is being denied to them.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 33 lost]

The Speaker: Might I express appreciation to the Deputy Government House Leaders for ensuring that all members of Executive Council abided by Standing Order 34(1), (2), and (2.1) today. This, I think, allowed us to be more effective in Motions for Returns and Written Questions than normal. So that's good. Thank you.

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading
Bill 201
Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access)
Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure I rise in the Assembly this afternoon to move third reading of Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

As has been mentioned by so many speakers during both second reading and while in committee, by enhancing existing legislation and regulations, Bill 201 will enable a vast number of disabled Albertans to either remain or become more self-reliant than they are at present. This, I believe, is how most Albertans like living their lives: independently and without needing to rely on others, either family members or friends or the government, for their everyday needs.

Furthermore, this is in keeping with a variety of government goals. For instance, Bill 201 fully reflects government goal 3, "Alberta's children will be supported in reaching their potential." Data from the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities shows that disabled Albertans continually lag behind Albertans without disabilities in a wide range of areas, such as education, social status, and other opportunities.

Among the most interesting and desirable opportunities that Bill 201 brings about is perhaps the notion that by enhancing existing legislation and regulations in terms of barrier-free design and accessibility, Bill 201 will enable a greater number of disabled Albertans to be self-reliant. By ensuring access and by paying more attention to issues of design, many Albertans will become less dependent on others, including government.

Bill 201 is also fully consistent with the goals of several government ministries. For example, core business 2 of Alberta Community Development states that the ministry's mandate includes protecting human rights, promoting fairness and access, and supporting the protection, inclusion, and participation of all Albertans.

Similarly, among the goals of Alberta Children's Services we find a commitment that our children and youth will have a healthy start in life and the supports they need to reach their potential. Bill 201 is consistent with the ministry's strategy to develop legislation and policy to refocus resources for children with disabilities on their abilities rather than their disabilities. In doing this, the ministry advocates taking a proactive rather than a reactive approach to issues of mobility and disability.

Bill 201, therefore, has dual motives. On one hand, it aims to give Alberta's disabled community a greater voice in matters of access and design of buildings in our province. By taking advantage of the expertise of the disabled, expertise, I might add, that they have gained the hard way each and every day, we'll be in a better position to design and build buildings that will be able to accommodate all Albertans without regard to whether they are able bodied or not and without regard to whether they are young or not.

This, Mr. Speaker, leads me to the second purpose of the bill. It allows us to prepare ourselves for what some have labelled the seniors boom, the first wave of which we can expect to arrive in five or six years. As the first of the baby boomers reach retirement, every demographic forecast indicates that we are facing a dramatic increase in the number of seniors in our province. We all know that as we age, our bodies have a tendency to become less co-operative than we once took for granted, when we could do things without any difficulty at all. Now, instead, we require sometimes the utmost of effort and perhaps a great deal of pain to do what came easily previously. It's, therefore, in our own best interest that we now start taking steps to prepare ourselves for what inevitably and unforgivingly is coming our way, and that's old age.

If the forecasts are correct – and there's no reason to believe that they aren't – the segment of Albertans who can call themselves seniors will grow rapidly in the course of the next two decades. Currently 10 per cent of us are 65 or older, but by 2016 that number is expected to reach 14 per cent. By 2026 it's expected that more than 700,000 Albertans will be 65 years of age or older, and that's roughly, at that time, 1 in 5 Albertans.

With this in mind, Bill 201 is a pragmatic initiative to help set the pace for what is coming. By starting to take action now rather than later, we'll be considerably better able to face the challenges that having an aging or maturing population is going to bring. That maturing population will make it necessary for government to take a lead role in preparing workplaces, the labour force, and communities, both large and small, for the increasing number of seniors. Initiatives and programs that recognize the diversity of the elderly population must be developed in a wide range of areas, including but not limited to health and wellness, independence and vulnerability, financial security, and education. Bill 201 will of course not be the only manner in which we prepare ourselves for the impending seniors boom, but making our buildings accessible is an important aspect of this preparation.

Equality is another significant component of Bill 201. To summarize the matter, having and creating access are issues of basic fairness in our society. To purposely or systematically, albeit most probably also unintentionally, deny a particular group of people in our society access to buildings is wholly inconsistent with our values. Bill 201 thus places a great deal of emphasis on the high priority the Ministry of Community Development has given to fostering equality, strengthening community, inclusion for persons with disabilities, and supporting the reduction of discrimination and barriers to full participation in society. As well, Bill 201 would go a long way toward realizing the ministry's goal to ensure that Albertans with disabilities have the opportunity to be fully included in the social, economic, and cultural life of the province.

This isn't just a matter of making sure the disabled community gets to participate with those of us who are fortunate enough to be able bodied. No, Mr. Speaker. This is very much a two-way street. By removing barriers and increasing access, those of us who are able bodied will have the opportunity and the privilege to increase our interaction with the disabled, many of whom will be our family members in the future.

Here I'd like to take the opportunity to stress once again that Bill 201 will not change the manner in which the Alberta building code applies to existing buildings and/or renovations, nor will the bill change the Alberta building code and how it is applied to private homes.

To summarize, Bill 201 amends the Safety Codes Act to clarify the applicability of the act to matters of barrier-free design and access. As well, the bill provides a proper voice for persons with disabilities by specifically enabling representation of persons with disabilities on the Safety Codes Council.

Lastly, Bill 201 specifically enables the drafting of regulations with regard to barrier-free design and accessibility. As we have heard, the bill calls for the addition of a 10th technical council, tentatively called the barrier-free council, to the Safety Codes Council to work alongside and together with the nine councils that are already in existence. Through this newly created entity, access and design concerns relating to barrier-free issues would have an opportunity to inform and be informed about issues regarding elevators, fire, plumbing, gas, boilers, among others. By establishing a barrier-free council, Alberta would really take the lead in advancing many of the issues that will be part of the next building code cycle, which is expected to begin around 2009.

What's more, by taking this step forward for the disabled Albertans, Alberta will continue to do what we have done for so long, and that's leading the way in building safety and accessibility provisions that enable persons with disabilities to achieve independence by both contributing and sharing in the opportunities and responsibilities of our society. This is something we take a great deal of pride in, I think, and passing Bill 201 will serve only to re-emphasize our commitment to the principles of universal access for all Albertans. With this in mind, I'll end my comments until such time as other members have concluded their comments and I have opportunity for some closing comments.

I would encourage all my colleagues to vote in favour of this third reading of Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure to rise and speak on Bill 201, Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004, in its third reading. I'm pleased to support this bill, and I'm also pleased to have this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for bringing this bill forward.

Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan has just stated, this bill, though very brief, makes some important changes in the existing legislation. One of those changes has to do with the representation of persons with disabilities to be represented on the barrier-free council. I think it's a very good addition or change to the existing legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have spent lots of time at the University of Alberta both as a student in the '60s and then starting in the late '60s as a faculty member. The University of Alberta and other public institutions like the University of Alberta have already done a great deal of work to facilitate changes in the design of buildings and to in fact bring in changes in existing buildings to improve access for persons with disabilities. I know that many hospitals have done the same.

I think it's important that this legislation be passed and implemented in all buildings and public facilities or residential places which are used by, frequented by persons with disabilities or begin to make adaptations in conformity with the intentions expressed in this bill, and those intentions are being legislated as we speak.

Mr. Speaker, I have a fair number of disabled persons who are my constituents and who live in buildings, and when I visit those buildings, I notice that those buildings could probably benefit from some improvements in their design so that the use of those buildings and access to those buildings becomes easier for my constituents who use them.

I also want to mention that the city of Edmonton, as we know, has changed its sidewalks and street crossings to facilitate movement by Edmontonians and other Albertans who need to use wheelchairs to get across various intersections and move from one place to another using public access and facilities.

So it's a good bill. It deserves the support of the House, and the New Democrat opposition is pleased to extend its support to Bill 201.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure to rise today to support Bill 201 in third reading. It is a bill that I believe will be of great service to disabled Albertans and one that will provide a new vision for how we look at the construction and renovation of publicly accessible structures in our province.

Mr. Speaker, I can see many areas where this bill will have a positive effect on Alberta's disabled individuals as well as for all Albertans. As members have stated and as is noted in the bill, this bill is not a heavy-handed one. What the bill does is provide room on the Safety Codes Council for a representative of disabled Albertans.

If Bill 201 is passed, this representative for the disabled will have the mandate of increasing the safety and accessibility of publicly accessible buildings in our province to ensure that all Albertans can use the services provided within these buildings with safety and ease. Just as important, as disability representatives make continued recommendations to the Safety Codes Council, the wealth of knowledge of all contractors and experts in the field will grow, ensuring that newer buildings are constructed in innovative and safe ways that increase accessibility for everyone.

Further, we see built into the bill qualifications that are designed to make public structures more inclusive for disabled individuals. We also see a balance in that a review and appeals process has been put into place to ensure that nobody is unduly affected by the new changes this bill seeks to effect.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 201 is truly a bill built with the best intentions of all concerned parties and, indeed, all Albertans, and we would do well to support it here in third reading.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a rural perspective and talk about the way this bill fits into and affects smaller rural communities in our provinces. I understand that when this bill was first contemplated by the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, a lot of my rural colleagues were apprehensive about the effects this bill might have. For those of us who come from smaller communities, our focus lately has been on the rejuvenation of our rural economies.

The effects of drought, BSE, and migration to larger communities mean that many communities are facing economic problems at rates unseen in their history. The fear was that on top of the problems we already face, this bill may be one more financial hurdle for our small businesses to jump over.

For years migration to larger centres has been a concern. Our young people often go to Edmonton, Calgary, or Lethbridge for university or to other regional centres for college or trade school. Our hope, of course, is that they will return with the expertise they gain and use it in their hometowns. While this does happen, often the reality is that these students stay in the city in which they go to university or migrate to other cities as a means of finding profitable employment, and not a single one of us here faults our young people for doing that. They, like young adults from all over the world, have to make a life for themselves, and oftentimes the opportunities just aren't there in our smaller communities.

Our goal as rural MLAs is to take steps to ensure that the Alberta advantage doesn't just occur in larger communities but in rural Alberta as well. So, of course, there was apprehension when this bill came forward.

Many local businesses are built in older buildings, and many of them are barely surviving. As many members know, renovating older structures can cause a great deal of difficulty, especially considering that some of the structures are made with older materials and were built with older methods. Providing the appropriate planning for renovations or placing an addition beside the original structure could prove to be quite a daunting and expensive task and could increase the costs of renovation beyond what they may be already.

The questions were many. Would all of these businesses be forced to install wheelchair and disabled-friendly measures tomorrow? Would any of these businesses looking to expand be unable to expand due to the increased costs of barrier-free access? What are the cost differences between ordinary access and barrier-free access? Are the costs truly more significantly onerous? In short, in our efforts to provide for the needs of disabled individuals would we be taking steps which expand the need for restimulation of Alberta's rural economy?

Mr. Speaker, to many this question may be somewhat impolitic, but that doesn't make it illegitimate. The concerns of our rural communities are real, and they do need to be considered in this type of legislation. After all, to pass a bill that would significantly damage the prospect of economic recovery in the rural Alberta business sector is nothing that this government would care to do.

Mr. Speaker, during debate many of the above questions have been answered, and the bill has received the favour of the House. Fortunately, Bill 201 is structured in such a way that it will not harm the prospects of economic recovery in rural Alberta. The bill is crafted in such a way that both appeals processes and reasonable requirements exist. The most reasonable part about this legislation is that it applies only to new structures and new renovations. I can think of other more intrusive ways that this legislation could be put in place, but again this sponsor has struck a balance, showing genuine concern and consideration for the practical challenges this bill could pose.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we need to be clear on another aspect of Bill 201, and that is the inclusiveness it fosters for disabled individuals. This inclusiveness does not just concern those who have become disabled at a young age but those whose disabilities are the result of the aging process as well. As a result, we're not talking about a small subset of the province's population but a group of large numbers. We're also talking about a group of individuals who are part and parcel of the community fabric in rural Alberta.

As this relates to my discussion on rural economies, it is safe to say that strong economies are those that allow everyone the opportunity to get hold of or purchase the things they need. If business structures are designed in such a way that people are not able to patronize the business, well, that's just one more customer lost.

I mentioned at the outset of my speech, Mr. Speaker, that as our young people move away, rural communities are on average becoming home to populations that are older. These older Albertans often find themselves with disabilities which force them to either use a wheelchair or walker or cane or some other assisting device. Our community businesses must be able to accommodate these Albertans. It will not do for them to not be able to do this, because in the end their businesses will suffer if certain customers are unable to access the services within. So we must stress to business that accessibility is an important issue, not only for the purpose of economies but for the needs and participation of disabled individuals as well.

Mr. Speaker, I support the bill wholeheartedly, and I am anxious to see it implemented so that we may quickly provide disabled Albertans with a voice on the Safety Codes Council. Therefore, I urge all members to support this bill. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure this afternoon to stand and speak in favour of Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. One of the things that we have to look at is the approach that we take to making sure that every Albertan, every Canadian has access, that basically are given a sense that when we do things, we're doing it in an inclusive way.

Bill 201 points out that we have to recognize the need of all Albertans, all Canadians to in effect be considered when we're dealing with safety issues, be considered when we're dealing with building codes, be considered when we look at how they can participate in our society. That's important. That sends a real message out to Albertans and to individuals who have disabilities that we are considering their needs and we're considering what they need to participate.

I want to also recognize that the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan has not only said that these are important things that we need to do; he's taken an initiative here to make sure that individuals with those disabilities are involved in the process by creating a council to allow them to be part of any discussions that would affect new regulations, would affect changes in the direction that we go.

I support the Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner when he talked about the fact that there's a beneficial part of this bill in the sense that it's talking about new construction or renovations to existing constructions so that it doesn't become a burden when we look at struggling businesses in many parts of Alberta. The Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner referred to rural Alberta, but I know that in my constituency in Lethbridge there are a number of businesses that couldn't undertake a significant capital project at this time.

We need to be looking at these projects and this accessibility over the long run, and the fact that we're building this into redesign, reconstruction, remodeling, renovation, and new buildings is really an important part of it. I think that if we look at it from the point of view of "Is construction of an accessible building any more costly than construction of a conventional building?" that is really something where we're going to recognize in the future that, no, it doesn't cost a lot more to in effect build in accessibility and consideration for individuals with disabilities.

You know, Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions you've been going through hotels or other buildings, and you come to the sign in front of an elevator that says: in case of a fire don't use this elevator. How is an individual in a wheelchair to get out of the building if they can't use the elevator? You know, these kinds of things. This is a new process of thought that we have to enter into when we start designing not only buildings but also safety codes, in the sense that if there is somebody with a disability there, are there provisions within the evacuation procedures and within the fire safety procedures to in effect make sure that that individual can get out from their place in the building if an emergency happens?

To the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan: thanks; this is a great bill. I think all Albertans should respect the intent of it and look forward to the future when all of our buildings are fully functional and fully accessible for all Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise and speak at third reading of Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. I would like to begin my remarks in the time allotted to me this afternoon by congratulating the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for sponsoring Bill 201.

Introducing an initiative like this shows two things to me. First of all, it shows a great sensitivity to the needs of a group of Albertans whose particular needs in many instances have been addressed as an afterthought rather than anything else. So through the introduction of Bill 201 Albertans with disabilities have not only found a strong advocate in the government, but their collective voice has also been heard loud and clear by those of us who have the great privilege and responsibility of representing our fellow men and women in this esteemed Assembly.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, given the impending seniors boom that will occur not just in Alberta but around much of the world in a few short years, it is imperative that we begin to address many issues that we'll have to confront on a daily basis. The median age of the province rises, and more and more people will be in a position to call themselves or, at the very least, be considered by others as seniors, with their abilities becoming more and more limited. So for most of us as we age, our body gradually becomes somewhat less cooperative. Although we may be loath to admit it, each and every one of us will eventually have a series of realizations that will cause us to say something like this: "Whoops, this requires more effort than it used to," or "I don't remember taking quite so long to walk up those stairs."

So planning ahead will therefore be tremendously important as our population ages. Whatever effort we put in today will have many-fold benefits in the course of the coming years and decades. It seems fairly obvious that to best realize such an effort, we must have a co-ordinated approach. Mr. Speaker, it's in everyone's best interests that there be a few overarching guidelines that help us as we prepare ourselves and our society for the needs we will face in the years ahead.

When it comes to buildings and construction, the Alberta building code will quite obviously remain the standard it has been over the last 30 years. As we all know, the safety and the technical specifications to which builders and contractors in our province must adhere are set forth in great detail in the Alberta building code. By using this document, which is really about a three-inch thick binder, a benchmark against which the quality and safety of Alberta's many buildings are judged, we can be assured that there is some consistency in the construction industry, that buildings in our province, regardless of where they are built, are subject to the same standard.

Having a co-ordinated approach like that can be very helpful in ensuring adherence to the accepted standard. No building is treated differently from others. What's more, home builders and contractors in any part of Alberta are subject to the same regulations. We don't cut slack for some and none for others. There is no slack for safety consideration – no slack, period. Everyone is subject to the requirements and the specifications of the Alberta building code.

One of the things that has been the source of some concern is the so-called relaxation clause found in section 3.8 of the Alberta building code. Section 3.8 governs barrier-free design issues, common-sense exemptions already specified in the building code for such things as private homes, relocatable industrial buildings, and other industrial operations where the risk to the person with sensory and/or physical disability would preclude their working or being present in the building anyway.

4:50

In addition to this common-sense exemption, builders and contractors have additional options for a situation where they think that compliance with a barrier-free requirement might prove cumbersome, costly, or otherwise not necessary. They can still apply for a relaxation of this requirement. Bill 201 does not affect the relaxation clause. It is still an option for those who think that they would have something to gain from filing the appropriate application with the director of the building code for a relaxation of the barrier-free requirement.

What is of considerably greater significance here, however, is that Bill 201 does not abolish the relaxation clause. It does strengthen its importance and its usefulness. First of all, by having a centralized process for assessing the merits of each and every application for relaxation, we can be assured that the manner in which the applications are processed is even-handed and fair. All applications receive the same level and kind of attention, and all are subject to the same interpretation and application criteria. While there is no reason to fear that such would not be the case in the centralization process, the variations and the differences, however subtle they may be, the assessment would increase for the purposes of our discussion here and during the preceding weeks.

The most important point with regard to the relaxation clause is this. By retaining the option of applying for relaxation rather than removing it, Bill 201 provides for the creation of a regulation to govern the relaxation process which could specify the participation of persons with disabilities in the application process. Thus far an application for relaxation has tended to be a matter between the director of the Alberta building code and the petitioner. With few, if any, exceptions the petitioner has always been a builder or a contractor or a building owner. In other words, when it comes to having had input to the process, the disabled community has had almost none.

With Bill 201, however, this will change. Just like the bill makes it possible for the addition of a 10th entity in the Safety Codes Council, so it makes possible enhancing the application process for a relaxation. From now on applications for relaxation will benefit from the input of the disabled community. At first glance this may not seem particularly appealing to either contractors, builders, or operators, on the one hand, or the disabled community, on the other hand. I think that there are certain different views from the two camps. While I am not suggesting that all members of either side feel the same this way or that way, I think that there is a perception that all contractors, builders, and operators want to have as few barrier-free designs and access requirements to contend with as possible. Conversely, there is a view held by some that the disabled community wants everything to be accessible without regard for the usefulness or utility of doing so, not to mention regard for the cost of removing every single barrier in society.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I know from experience that the two sides are not quite as far apart as people perceive. While there are always those who in a dispute will assume the most extreme positions imaginable, the vast majority of those involved tend to congregate in the middle. As a result, they are quite close to one another. This is, of course, something that bodes well for compromise.

For this reason I support the bill, and I encourage all the members to support the bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act. We've heard that this act proposes to promote barrier-free design and access for persons with physical and sensory disabilities to all buildings and facilities. It certainly is something that I think we should support. I think that with some of the barrier-free designs and access for people with disabilities this province is leading the way. One can venture to other jurisdictions, and you can see just exactly how we compare. Now, that's not to say that improvements cannot be made or that this is not an improvement, because it is my view that it is.

Now, this amendment, as has been described, I believe applies to fire protection and to the design, manufacture, construction, installation, operation, and maintenance of buildings and their electrical systems, elevating devices, their gas distribution systems, plumbing systems, sewage disposal, and pressure equipment. As I said before, this will be an improvement, but people with disabilities should be able to access any building that an able-bodied person can. However, I would like to caution or state that this legislation seems only to encourage barrier-free design.

I know that there have been remarks made earlier in reference to how great the Safety Codes Act is, but certainly I think that there can be improvements made to the Safety Codes Act. I'm not sure that this was such a good idea now that we've almost had a decade of the Safety Codes Act. There was certainly a common belief among government members that all government regulation was bad. We got those initiated; we got to remove regulations. As a result, one of those initiatives created the Safety Codes Act, or the safety codes system.

Has it worked? Well, I don't think so. I don't think it has improved conditions for consumers. When one looks at the condos that are being built, some of the issues around condominiums, we have had spectacular fires. We have had fires while construction was occurring. We've had spectacular fires after condo owners had purchased the units and moved in.

There's a great deal of dissatisfaction in regard to this bill, Mr. Speaker. This would be a very good time, after this legislation has passed, for this government to consider a complete review of the Safety Codes Act and the system of inspection that is the result of that, to look at this entire system and see if it's working in the interests of consumers. I don't think it is, but this amendment certainly is a good idea. Whenever one endorses this amendment, it's not an endorsement of this entire process. I was talking about fires in the condominium complex. As well there was a serious fire in 2001 in Fulton Court, which is a 70-unit, three-storey structure in Edmonton-Gold Bar.

In the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar there was an over $5 million fire in the spring of 2001. There are still, unfortunately, issues to be resolved in regard to this fire and how all this is going to work. There are alleged reconstruction deficiencies. Mould and the discovery that the building needed upgrading to comply with the building code have led to a number of lawsuits and counter claims, and that's why I think we should consider again looking at our entire safety codes system. If the hon. member is looking for a job after he finishes doing such a good job on this one, well, we could maybe, Mr. Speaker, put him to work.

When you consider, whether it's Calgary or Edmonton, that whenever you have a situation such as the fire that I have described, that puts a strain on the entire condominium community. It also reduces the confidence consumers have when purchasing a new condo. You don't have to go by any road in this city or in Calgary or in a lot of other communities to see how many condominiums are being built. Unless we want more problems, I would urge this House and its members to have a good, close look at our entire safety codes system.

Mr. Speaker, with that I will cede the floor to another member of this Assembly. When I say that I'm supporting this bill, it does not mean that I have a ringing endorsement of the entire safety codes process, the permitting process, nor the inspection process, because I think there are too many deficiencies in it, and there is not enough protection for consumers, nor is there protection for individuals who are considering or have purchased a condominium recently.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take great pleasure in rising to share my thoughts on Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004. If passed, the bill, sponsored by the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, will serve to amend the Safety Codes Act. In its current form this act concerns itself with protecting the safety and well-being of Albertans by setting and enforcing building standards. The Alberta building code, as we know, concerns itself with the structural integrity of buildings, along with ensuring that certain safety precautions and building standards are met.

Unless you are directly involved in the construction industry, this topic might not be something that is thought about on a daily basis. However, this topic is one that concerns all Albertans because it affects everyone in our province. In order to construct a new building or make structural changes to an existing one, it's necessary to obtain a building permit. There are several reasons for this, but the one that most concerns us is that this places controls on who is constructing our homes, shopping centres, office complexes, and apartment buildings. It also notifies the proper authorities so that the proper system of checks and balances can be put into motion.

Our province requires that every aspect of structures built here is inspected by qualified professionals to ensure that it meets the standards set out in the Alberta building code. These standards apply to a range of items, including the types of building materials used, the thickness of the foundation, fire escapes, and electrical breaker panels. Safety code officers physically visit and inspect buildings, and it is this function that is most important. By having the resources to send experts to the construction site, it is possible to ensure that the contractors are adhering to the Alberta building code.

A lack of inspectors on the ground can lead to tragic consequences. For example, the standards laid out by the building codes in Turkey are very high in part because of the frequency with which the region is affected by earthquakes. However, these codes are not well enforced, and this can lead to tragedy such as the one that struck in mid-February. An 11-storey apartment block collapsed, resulting in the deaths of 92 people.

The reasons behind this accident centre around the failure of the contractor to adhere to the standards that are laid out in Turkey's building codes. In this situation the contractors used substandard building materials coupled with poor workmanship and made alterations to the original blueprints. These factors combined to seriously compromise the structural integrity of the building.

The fault for this tragedy lies directly at the feet of the contractors. However, they felt that they could cut corners and make more money because there is a lack of enforcement of their building codes. While this is an extreme example for sure, it illustrates the importance of the work that is done by the Safety Codes Council and the inspections officers that ensure that the standards set out in the building code are adhered to.

Mr. Speaker, as we have heard in the previous stages of debate, Bill 201 aims to expand the role of the Safety Codes Council. The council is primarily concerned with one task: the structural integrity of buildings to ensure that they are safe for those that inhabit them. Currently the council is composed of members considered to be experts in their chosen fields. These areas of expertise include fire protection, buildings, electrical systems, elevating devices, gas systems, plumbing systems, private sewage disposal systems, and pressure equipment. Bill 201 would serve to expand this council to include a member who is an expert in barrier-free design and access.

The building codes governing universal accessibility are already in place, and contractors must adhere to them. Public buildings must be laid out in such a manner that they're navigable by any person, whether they live with limited mobility or not. Why is it important to expand the council to include a member that has practical experience in dealing with barrier-free design and access issues? The answer to the question is simple: the current members of the Safety Codes Council are not experts in the field of universal accessibility.

The other major facets of construction are represented on the council except for an expert in this field. The exclusion of a representative with the expertise in the field of universal accessibility represents a significant omission, an omission that will be corrected by passing Bill 201. The inclusion of an expert in the field of universal accessibility will improve the council's ability to apply the Alberta building code in this area.

In many cases persons who do not live with reduced mobility do not fully understand the implications that come with using a wheelchair or a walker or a cane. The example of the ramp at the east end of the Legislature Building has been discussed previously and with good reason. Those of us who are not confined to a wheelchair are unaware of the mechanics involved in travelling in one. The distances that are necessary to turn the chair and the types of corners that are not easily navigated are not familiar unless you have actually used a wheelchair. The addition of a member from the disabled community will expand the council's expertise to encompass this area. This expert would be able to offer advice that's grounded in real-world experience that other members of the council may not have had.

While the Alberta building code does stipulate that universal accessibility is a necessity, the details of applying these provisions are not specified. By giving suggestions on the details of how to implement the requirements set out in the code, the expanded council would become more effective. The design of components that make a building universally accessible would over time become less of a secondary concern, and these components could become more user friendly.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to remember that passing Bill 201 will not change the existing requirements that must be met by contractors regarding barrier-free design and access, nor will it expand the types of buildings that would be required to meet the current standards. I realize that both of these points have been made numerous times previously, but I feel that it is important to mention them once again.

Another argument that I feel cannot be stressed enough is the steadily growing population over 65 years of age. Before long all those present in this Chamber will become seniors. The reality of this situation is that for a significant number of older persons, reduced mobility becomes a fact of life. This can be due to a number of reasons ranging from a bad back to a hip that needs to be replaced. It is important for this Assembly to act now to start the process that will build the infrastructure that will become increasingly more important as we look into the future.

By acting now, there will be significant financial gains to be made in the long run. If a building is made universally accessible at the time of construction, there will be an added cost of roughly 4 per cent to the base building price. If a building is constructed without accounting for universal accessibility, the cost of retrofitting the building to meet these standards is roughly 10 to 15 times more.

I know that using percentages such as these makes the costs seem vague; however, I agree with using percentages, so I would like to illustrate this using a hypothetical situation. The cost of making a $500,000 building universally accessible at the time of construction would be roughly $20,000. The cost of retrofitting this building at a later date to make it universally accessible would be estimated to cost anywhere from $200,000 to $300,000. Mr. Speaker, the math of this situation speaks for itself. By acting now, we will be preventing large costs from haunting building owners in the future.

Passing Bill 201 will show other jurisdictions the steps that can be taken to ensure that their communities remain open and accessible to every member of the community. Hopefully, this will prompt other areas to follow where this province will have led and choose to utilize the expertise that resides in their communities on the subject of barrier-free access and design.

Bill 201 is a sensible and well-thought-out piece of legislation that will act to ensure that those of us who live with limited mobility will not have their options for work or recreation limited by disability. I fully support the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004, and I would ask that all of my colleagues today support it as well.

Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to join the debate in third reading on Bill 201, the Safety Codes (Barrier-free Design and Access) Amendment Act, 2004, sponsored by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. I have no doubt that the disabled will benefit if this Assembly passes this bill.

Through Bill 201 this Assembly has an opportunity to ensure that the basic needs of the disabled related to daily living are met. This legislation can remove physical barriers from public buildings and allow disabled Albertans to become full participants in community and employment opportunities.

I like this bill because there's no direct involvement from the Alberta government other than establishing a position on the Safety Codes Council for the disabled and enshrining the need for barrier-free access. Improvements to barrier-free designs will come from the experts on the Safety Codes Council. Disabled Albertans are the best people to improve accessibility by offering practical ideas for consideration by the Safety Codes Council. It's likely that further changes may be added to the safety codes as a result of the input and experience from the disabled representation on the Safety Codes Council.

I'm confident that the changes proposed to the Safety Codes Act in Bill 201 will have a negligible impact on the construction industry. The money earmarked for barrier-free designs already exists.

Mr. Speaker, it could be argued that a great deal of progress has already been made toward the goal of barrier-free access without Bill 201. Many examples of physical barriers to accessibility could be remedied through minor adjustments to current provisions. For instance, some speakers mentioned wheelchair ramps that were not placed in the most convenient location. These could be moved or easily rebuilt to accommodate the disabled. The private sector would be in the best position to make these changes, not the Alberta government.

I realize that improvements to barrier-free access will not occur overnight. This bill is not retroactive and will only apply to future renovation and construction projects. The changes proposed in Bill 201 will only apply to certain buildings, and the exemption clause will remain in place. That being said, if the previous work of the Safety Codes Council is any indication, then changes to barrier-free designs will happen as fast as possible, and they will be consistent and even-handed.

The new representation for the disabled will ensure that resources are used correctly the first time. Again, as previous speakers have mentioned, these changes would add to the value of the building. The need for innovative and improved barrier-free designs will increase. These changes will allow the growing population of disabled Albertans to use public buildings more freely and with less difficulty.

I'm supportive of this bill because it will bring about effective changes to better help disabled Albertans rather than creating another commission or funding some sort of review. This bill addresses the issue of accessibility up front and proposes a realistic, common-sense solution for improving accessibility.

I, too, would encourage all members to vote in favour of Bill 201. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I conclude my remarks.

The Deputy Speaker: Under Standing Order 8(5)(a)(iii), which provides for up to five minutes for the sponsor of a private member's public bill to close debate, I would now invite the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan to close debate on third reading of Bill 201.

Mr. Lougheed: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would first of all like to thank all those members who have spoken so well in favour of Bill 201, stating the examples that they were aware of and were advised from their constituents about.

Many people worked on this bill. Certainly, the research department started off working in many different areas in looking at issues and how to work through that, led by one of our researchers, Frank Ostlinger. I'd like to thank him for that. Legislative Counsel was involved in helping to draft it, and that was after Municipal Affairs had had a great deal of input. Under the leadership and support of the minister they advised which directions to go with this that would work out the best for the Safety Codes Council.

Many organizations were involved. The Canadian Paraplegic Association, the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, and the Multiple Sclerosis Society were also in there giving advice and talking about situations that they felt needed to be remedied.

There were other people; David Pinney, for example, who was involved in barrier-free design and access architecture. People like that were very beneficial in giving me advice about what was important.

But, Mr. Speaker, most important and the reason that this bill came forward was because of many people passing along information to me in my role as chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. They talked about challenges they faced and how design improvements could be made.

I'd like to read a couple of short sentences from a letter I received from a lady who perhaps is the best example of the challenges that can occur when one becomes paralyzed. Her name is Barb Gulka. She lives in Lloydminster. She advised me that I could use her name and read a little bit from her letter. She was a businessperson, a successful businessperson, had a business in Lloydminster. One day, shortly after the noon rush she had a little bit of pain in her hip, and 40 minutes later due to a blood clot of some sort she was paralyzed and in a wheelchair.

The circumstances for her were such that her store wasn't accessible to her as a person who had just finished building it and had been advised that it was, according to code, barrier free. She was unable to get into the building, into her business because the incline on the ramp was a little too steep. The bathroom, which she was told was accessible and built to code, wasn't useful for her as a person in a wheelchair. She makes several comments with respect to this that the code was there. She was told that it was built to code. But perhaps there could be some small changes in the code requirements, because it was her intention to build it completely barrier free, but in fact it wasn't in the end.

These kinds of comments were important in bringing this forward so that we can address those kinds of issues in the future. So I thank the members that spoke in favour and those other members who I hope will support this bill. I would ask for the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 201 read a third time]

5:20

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted with the passage of Bill 201, and I, too, just wanted to say thank you to the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan for what he's done for the disabled community. I thank all members in the House for their rather unanimous support today.

Mr. Speaker, in view of that excellent progress, I would move that we now call it 5:30 and reconvene at 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:21 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 15, 2004

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/15

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Special Constables

503. Rev. Abbott moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation which would make special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board and require special constables to take enhanced weapons training thereby creating the appropriate conditions under which the province could consider allowing the option of arming special constables with better defensive weapons such as Tasers.

Mr. Magnus moved that the motion be amended by (a) striking out "make special constables accountable" and substituting "provide the option of making special constables accountable" and (b) by striking out "enhanced weapons training" and substituting "enhanced training" and (c) by striking out "thereby creating the appropriate conditions under which the province could consider allowing the option of arming special constables with better defensive weapons such as Tasers."

[Debate adjourned March 8: Mr. Cenaiko speaking]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current special constable requirements need to be altered to recognize the difference between those involved in supplemental policing and those performing specialized duties.

The policing review committee saw a way to improve service levels throughout Alberta by creating deputy constables. The committee proposed legislation to create a supplemental level of policing that would be part of the local police service. These officers would perform specialized duties such as traffic enforcement, responding to low-priority calls, delivering prevention programs, or acting as school liaison officers. These officers would also have to meet provincial recruiting and training standards. Establishing a second tier of law enforcement would be very helpful in rural Alberta, where the population is small and spread over a large geographic area.

The concept of deputy constables supports the changes proposed in Motion 503. A two-tiered police service will improve the response times to provincial and local priorities. The growth of organized crime, drug production, and drug trafficking are major concerns for police services in all areas of Alberta. Creating a responsible and accountable supplemental level of policing will help police officers effectively tackle larger crime issues. I think these new positions would also be effective as a developmental program for future police officers.

The role of the special constable will change if recommendations from the policing review are implemented. Currently special constables fulfill their duties and do an incredible job assisting Alberta's broad law enforcement initiatives. In the future some of these special constables may be elevated to the new position of deputy constable.

The second part of the amendment to Motion 503 asks the government to require special constables to take enhanced training. As the responsibilities of this second tier of policing expand and evolve, the minimum requirements may change for the deputies with more responsibilities. Motion 503 would not hand over the use of lethal force to special constables without any strings attached. The Solicitor General may decide that a policing diploma from Grant MacEwan or Mount Royal College may be a minimum requirement.

The second statement in the amendments to Motion 503 regarding enhanced training for special constables will generate the most controversy, but it should be noted that the amendment takes out any mention of weapons. As a former police officer I'm fully aware of the consequences of discharging a lethal weapon. Police officers are trained at length during the recruit phase and qualify three times a year for their entire career in law enforcement. I believe that this philosophy can also be taught to deputy constables before they are armed with lethal force.

Their responsibilities will most likely increase, and their importance to law enforcement initiatives will be more prominent. I support the idea of equipping constables with better defensive weapons, but I do not think we should do this overnight.

Some may argue that the original wording for Motion 503 would needlessly arm special constables with a potentially fatal prohibited weapon; this would give too much power to untrained personnel. As other speakers have pointed out, special constables are already equipped with nightsticks and pepper spray. These weapons can cause severe or permanent injury. It's also been pointed out that special constables aren't even supposed to be in situations that would require the use of a restricted weapon.

In fact, I believe the amended wording for Motion 503 is consistent with the future of policing in Alberta. The face of policing in Alberta is changing. Recommendations from the policing review give more prominence to special or deputy constables.

Financing in law enforcement is also changing. A new funding formula for policing between the Alberta government and the municipalities was referred to in the 2004 Speech from the Throne. If funding for policing becomes a provincial responsibility, then introducing legislation making special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board would also seem to be a reasonable amendment to the Police Act.

Mr. Speaker, the public's expectations for law enforcement have increased. The government should seriously consider new initiatives and alternatives to raise the level of service and enforcement to meet these expectations. Making special constables accountable to the government would be the first step. The next step would be deciding which special constables or deputy constables would require additional tools.

I agree that special constables should avoid dangerous situations. This may be easier said than done in some circumstances. For example, what are special constables who stumble upon poachers supposed to do? According to the Solicitor General's department they are supposed to tactically reposition. In other words, they are supposed to leave the area as fast as possible and contact the local police service.

In this case, these criminals are armed and likely in a remote location, and I find it hard to imagine how special constables are supposed to tactically reposition themselves when they're in the middle of nowhere and in very real danger. In these circumstances enhanced training would be required. This enhanced training may allow constables to arm themselves with better defensive weapons. Sometimes the mere presence of a weapon can be enough to avoid confrontation.

The amended wording considered in Motion 503 points out that officers would have to complete enhanced training and under the Police Act would be accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board rather than their employer.

As the face of policing evolves, the new level of law enforcement will require additional training and stronger educational requirements. As I mentioned earlier, deputy constables could be responsible for enforcing traffic laws and low-priority calls. These situations could be very dangerous for any police officer.

This amended motion, Mr. Speaker, is a reasonable consideration for the Alberta government as we reform law enforcement in Alberta. I believe that the proposed amendment fits better with the Alberta government's vision for the future of policing, and I encourage all members to vote in favour of Motion 503.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. We are on an amendment, hon. members.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think context is really important when we examine proposals that are brought before this Assembly. In fact, I was going to refrain from commenting on the motion that's been proposed, but the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo raised an issue that reminded me how important context is because he referred to the MLA policing review committee. That's the context that I think is missing from the discussion which I as a member of the Assembly think I need in order to understand where the member's proposal would fit and, in fact, the amended proposal would fit.

Two very different things have come before us in connection with this Motion 503: the original motion, which had three parts to it, including arming special constables with Tasers, and then the amended motion, which has removed the part about Tasers and retained the part about accountability to the Law Enforcement Review Board and enhanced training.

What we're missing here is the final response from the government on the recommendations from the MLA policing review. Originally that report was produced by the committee in July of '02. By October of '02 we had a response from the government that they were considering some things and sending the rest back out into the community for an additional feedback loop, and that's the last we ever heard of it.

So I don't have any idea, and I'm listening carefully to the member, who I believe was a member of that policing review, and I'm thinking: am I getting dropped hints here? Is there something that I am supposed to be gleaning from what the member is saying that's in context or not in context? I really don't know, Mr. Speaker, because we don't have that final report and the government's final response to it before us in which to consider this recommendation.

That's not the only part that's missing from this discussion. The other part is the police staffing levels and the implementation plan for that. Now, that's something that's been asked for by the Auditor General, and he's made it very clear that, you know, he can't sort of pass any kind of comment on value for money around policing in Alberta because we don't have any idea. Well, he said, actually: we have no idea whether we're safe in Alberta right now because that plan is still not forthcoming from the Solicitor General.

It's not that I haven't tried, Mr. Speaker. I've tried a number of times to ask the Solicitor General to provide not only the final response to the MLA policing review and the police staffing levels and the implementation plan but, in fact, the corrections review that was done and, finally, the report that was done on the victims fund. So very difficult to comment on the motion that's before us while we're missing that information.

8:10

In response to my most recent set of questions to the Solicitor General, we were told to hold tight; the budget's coming, and somehow that would answer all questions. Well, I hope that's coming with the tabling of those four reports or studies because without those I don't know how we can be discussing this motion here tonight. It's completely without context. It's not tied to anything. We can't tell whether we've got more policing, less policing, who's funding it, who's not funding it. It's just floating out there in space and it's to my mind not a terribly useful exercise without understanding where it might be fitting inside of some plan, which we have yet to get from the Solicitor General.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and contribute to the discussion regarding Motion 503 and the amendment that's currently before us.

Now, in the original motion my colleague the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor proposed that two courses of action be taken. The first suggestion was to make special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board, and secondly, special constables would be required to take advanced training. This training would better equip special constables to carry out their duties.

I am prepared to fully support the general direction of the hon. member's motion provided that this amendment passes tonight. I do feel that special constables should be made accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board. Special constables are being given a greater level of enforcement powers, and this should be balanced with greater responsibility to a governing body. I think this idea holds great merit, in fact, and that it should be investigated further.

So if this motion passes in its proposed amended form, I would then be able to support the second part of the motion as well. In the original wording I had reservations regarding the second goal of the motion as I am very reluctant to consider arming any person other than a police officer with a weapon capable of delivering a lethal charge. I'd like to take this opportunity to outline the reasons that I feel that only police officers should be armed with weapons such as Tasers.

Now, a Taser is often regarded as a nonlethal weapon; however, that's not always the case. These weapons are capable not only of temporarily incapacitating an individual but also of delivering a lethal charge. In certain cases Tasers can be lethal weapons, and I feel that this Assembly should be aware of that and be wary of arming any person who is not a member of a police force with a lethal weapon.

Mr. Speaker, special constables provide an invaluable service for a variety of employers, including municipal governments, police services, and the SPCA. They are charged with the enforcement of city bylaws, patrolling our provincial parks, and recently the Solicitor General has granted special constables a greater level of authority to enforce traffic laws in certain circumstances and situations. The functions that special constables perform serve to alleviate the burden of enforcement that is felt by regular police forces and do it in a far more cost-effective manner.

It is more cost-effective for several reasons, but one of the major ones is that the duration and therefore the expense of training for a special constable is actually quite a bit shorter than for a normal police officer. Special constables receive one month of training at the Alberta Justice Staff College as opposed to a five- or six-month training course that regular police officers are subjected to. This level of training gives special constables the knowledge necessary to perform their specific duties.

The enforcement provided by special constables allows organizations such as municipal police forces and the RCMP to put greater focus on areas of major crime such as drug trafficking and theft. While special constables do perform certain tasks that regular police officers perform, it is important to note that special constables are not police officers, and this is reflected nowhere more prominently than in the selection process and the level of training that applicants are subjected to.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to briefly outline the selection and training regimen of applicants looking to become an RCMP constable, for example. The selection process is divided into roughly six steps. The first is comprised of writing the RCMP police aptitude test. This exam measures candidate skills in areas such as logic, reading, comprehension, written communication, mathematics, and use of personal judgment. This test is used to screen the usually very large number of applicants by determining whether they possess the basic core skills that will allow them to succeed during the training program. If a candidate is successful at this stage, he is then allowed to officially apply to the RCMP. It is during this time that candidates need to pass the physical abilities requirement evaluation, or the PARE test, which tests a candidate's physical strength, stamina, and agility.

Provided they meet the requirements for the PARE, candidates will then move on to a formal interview, which is composed of two parts: suitability for the job and a security component. This interview is conducted by an experienced RCMP officer who uses the interview to get the most accurate picture of the applicant's abilities and assess their potential to function as an RCMP officer.

The suitability portion of the interview measures applicants' aptitude in eight areas including oral communication skills, integrity and honesty, leadership and interpersonal skills. All of these competencies are necessary to be able to carry out the duties of an RCMP constable. Many candidates are screened out at this stage and not necessarily because they're ill-suited to be a police officer but because they do not yet have the life experience necessary that allows people to make good judgment calls.

Now, if the applicant has the skills and life experience necessary and he or she passes both the suitability and security portions of the interview, then their medical and psychological health would be assessed through a battery of tests to ensure that they are also physically and mentally fit for the rigours of police work.

While this is happening, RCMP constables are conducting an extensive background check on the applicant's entire life. This is to ensure that he or she has not been giving false information during the interview and that they would not pose a security risk if they were to eventually become an RCMP officer.

After successfully passing all of these screening procedures, the candidate is then engaged as an RCMP constable and goes to Regina for training, which lasts for a full 22 weeks. During this time, trainees are barracked with their troopmates and start at 6 in the morning and finish at 6 in the evening. It's a rigorous training process that covers not only the basics such as law and how to handle a firearm but also gives officers the skill they need to assess situations they might encounter.

It is these skills that I believe to be of utmost importance because they determine when an officer feels it is necessary to use any of the weapons they are equipped with. Teaching someone just to fire a gun or a Taser is a fairly basic endeavour and can be accomplished with relative ease. What is of greater importance is to make sure that that person possesses the skills that will allow them to evaluate a situation to determine whether it is necessary to use a weapon and to have the diplomacy and leadership skills to be able to defuse confrontations before they happen.

Mr. Speaker, police forces utilize a rigorous physical and mental training program to prepare their constables for police work. In addition to this, the trainees are screened to ensure that they not only have the necessary skills but also the necessary life experience that leads to better judgment calls and decision-making in high-stress situations. The training that Alberta's special constables receive simply does not compare to this. If we are to arm them, we would need to expand training to a level that is on par with that of regular police constables, in which case they may as well just be members of the RCMP or municipal police force.

Additionally, the physical requirements and conditioning would need to be expanded as well. Police services demand a high level of physical fitness for their applicants and their officers. This physical training serves police officers well for chasing down and apprehending suspects, but it actually serves another important purpose as well. It ensures that the police officers are strong enough and that they have enough combat training that they will not have their weapon or weapons taken away from them and consequently used against them or other innocent bystanders.

If special constables are armed with a weapon that is capable of causing death, we would be derelict in our duty if we didn't train them physically as well as mentally to deal with that level of responsibility. Again, this would require expanding training for special constables to a level that is on par with that of regular police forces, and this is simply not necessary for special constables to be able to fulfill their duties.

Mr. Speaker, special constables play a key enforcement role in our society, but the fact remains that they are not given the same level of training that regular police forces receive. In addition, special constables are not subjected to the same mental, physical, and ethical screening standards that police candidates endure. As the Taser can be a lethal weapon, I feel that it should only be issued to police officers. Members of Alberta's police forces have the training, experience, and judgment skills to ensure that a weapon of this aggressive nature is only used in the proper circumstances.

It is for these reasons that I feel unable to support the original motion's wording. That's why I will be supporting this amendment. Having said that, in its amended form I feel that this motion will do much to assist special constables. I would urge all my colleagues to stand with me in support of Motion 503.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

8:20

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mr. Masyk: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to speak on the merits of Motion 503 tonight. By introducing Motion 503, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor has raised two very important issues: first, whether or not to make special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board and, secondly, whether or not doing so is something that should require these special constables to take enhanced training.

Mr. Speaker, special constables are a part of our everyday lives. We may not fully be aware of who they are and where we might interact with them, but I can assure each and every one in this House right now, today, that all of us have dealt with at least one special constable. For those of you who are a bit puzzled, the several gentlemen and ladies who are stationed at the various security checkpoints here in the building as well as over in the Annex are all special constables. While we may think of them as security guards or simply by their names, their official title is special constable.

One can find special constables working in a variety of locations and situations from the bases of the Canadian Forces to the SPCA. There's no question that what they do is valuable work, and they certainly contribute to our collective safety and the efficiency with which a variety of organizations and agencies are run.

Mr. Speaker, I think that part of the reason for the great value inherent in the work and efforts provided by the special constables can be found in the fact that many but not all of them are former police officers, whether with the city police department or the RCMP. As a result, they have extensive experience dealing with the public. They have knowledge of police procedures. They know how to handle potentially volatile situations with grace and professionalism, and they know how to remain calm even under adverse circumstances. This may be one of the foremost attributes for special constables as a group. Many are former police officers whose training received during their time in the police academy prepared them for careers in policing and serves them well also in their careers after policing.

Standard police training, Mr. Speaker, is both rigorous and extensive. I think most people are aware that police officers must meet minimum physical standards with some regularity and some similarity. There are some stringent psychological standards that police officers must pass. Also among the standards that police officers must meet are those of certain weapons. Officers must routinely demonstrate that they maintain their adaptiveness at properly using their weapons. In fact, they are only granted permission to carry a gun, let alone be police officers, after meeting very strict weapons standards.

Mr. Speaker, under Motion 503 special constables would become accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board, and they would also be required to undergo and pass an expanded training regimen. In my view, an enhanced training program can only result in better special constables, making this yet another attractive feature of this motion. It is one thing to give anyone a weapon but quite another to show him or her how to use it properly and, perhaps even more importantly, when not to use it. It is, after all, a well-known fact that one of the primary functions of any kind of weapon is not that it can be discharged or used, but it's the ability to deter someone from doing something undesirable.

And so it is, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes the very knowledge of the presence of a weapon may be quite sufficient to give a would-be perpetrator pause before he or she, as the case may be, decides to disturb the peace and engage in some other kind of behaviour warranting more aggressive intervention short of detention or arrest. But what if that's not enough? What if the special constable finds himself or herself in a situation where discharging or otherwise using some weapon or other is deemed necessary? Then what?

Whenever we deal with would-be perpetrators and other potential criminals of whatever stripe or calibre, we have to consider what we may call "what if." I understand that at the present time special constables are under order to tactically reposition themselves whenever a what-if situation arises. That is, whenever a special constable finds himself or herself in a situation he or she considers threatening to life or limb, the sanctioned response by the Alberta Solicitor General is to leave the premises to call the police. As much as that may be the only mandatory response, it seems to me that that opens up the possibility that the perpetrator or perpetrators can get away quite easily while the special constable calls for assistance from the police or RCMP.

We have a motion before us that seeks to strike some sort of middle ground or middle link in the road of compromise between the current mandated response to tactically reposition themselves and call for back up, on one hand, and the prohibition on the use of firearms by special constables, on the other hand. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see that the motion has been amended.

In its previous form I would have not been able to support it due to the lack of emphasis on the enhancement of all training rather than just the weapons training for special constables. At the present time special constables undergo a four-week training program before they are considered ready for the job. Not only are the physical and psychological standards they must meet considerably less stringent than those their counterparts in regular police forces and the RCMP must meet, but only one of the four weeks of training is devoted to weapons training.

Mr. Speaker, members of this House who have any experience serving in the armed forces know how extensive and rigorous the weapons training is that soldiers must undergo. It is, to say the least, a rather lengthy and involved process. Before you get anywhere near a firing range, you learn the various parts of your weapon and how they function, how you take them apart and put them together, and how you properly clean and maintain your weapon. That's before you even get to use bullets. Once you graduate from blanks to live ammunition, the rigours and the emphasis on safety border on the extreme. By this time, several weeks or even months may have passed, but the soldier is still in training.

I would strongly suggest that any increase in arsenal availability to special constables must be preceded by a significant increase in the length of training that any special constable recruit must undergo. However, even though the amended motion calls for increased training, I agree with concerns about providing special constables with more weapons than at the present time. It has come to my attention that the policing review committee raised concerns about the difficulty of providing weapons training to deputy constables, as would be the official title of these new and improved special constables. As these deputy constables would be performing a variety of functions, their weapons training would have to be rather comprehensive to offer what could be called the one-size-fits-all approach to the said training.

A willingness to serve does not equal immediate street readiness, Mr. Speaker. One thing that we can all agree on is that it is never a good idea to place weapons of any kind in the hands of those who have not been rigorously screened and adequately trained, particularly so if the weapons in question are intended to be used to maintain peace. Mr. Speaker, I have no reservations about how or that we would properly screen special constable trainees as well in the future . . .

The Speaker: Excuse me, hon. member. I hate to interrupt, but our Standing Orders do provide for five minutes for the sponsor of a motion other than a government motion to close the debate. I now invite the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor to close debate on Motion 503, recognizing that we have an amendment to the motion before us.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great honour to be able to stand here and close debate on Motion 503. In fact, I do fully accept the amendments that have been put forward by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill. In fact, I think that what the amended motion does is basically stress the two main parts of the motion.

By making special constables accountable to the Law Enforcement Review Board, amended Motion 503 brings added accountability to the special constable level of policing and, thus, should improve public trust in special constables. Also, amended Motion 503 requires special constables to take greater training for the position. This would result in better prepared special constables.

So, Mr. Speaker, I see this as a win/win. Like I said, I accept these amendments, and I think that they will really help the special constables of Alberta. I really like what the Member for Calgary-Buffalo talked about with regard to deputy constables, and certainly some day that may be the direction that this province decides to go. But there's no question that these men and women are a very valuable part of Alberta's peace officer force. As we said earlier, there are in the neighbourhood of 2,400 of them in the province, so I know that accountability and training are something that they certainly need and look forward to.

I'll just close by saying thanks to everybody that participated, and I do appreciate your support on this motion.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 503 as amended carried]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: May I ask for unanimous consent first, Mr. Speaker?

The Speaker: The hon. member would like unanimous consent so that he may proceed to Introduction of Guests. Would anybody be opposed to having introductions?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

Mr. Hutton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions to make this evening. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a constituent of mine and a parent, Barb Strange. Barb is a parent of a child in grade 2 at the Child Study Centre, and she also has a four year old who is entering kindergarten this coming September. Barbara is present in the members' gallery and is part of the Education Watch initiative. I would ask her to please rise and accept the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

I'd also like to introduce someone who helps me daily with my research in my office and does it effectively, efficiently, and with a smile on his face. I'd ask Emir Mehinagic to please stand and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder

504. Mr. Hutton moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to (a) continue to develop and implement strategies to reduce and ultimately eliminate alcohol consumption prior to and during pregnancy, (b) develop and implement initiatives to support Albertans affected by fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, FASD, and (c) continue to work with all levels of government, partners and stakeholders, and members of the public to create an environment that would address the systemic problem of women consuming alcohol while pregnant.

Mr. Hutton: Now, Mr. Speaker, I would very much like to introduce Motion 504, which aims to address an issue that is increasingly becoming more systemic and more prevalent not only in certain communities within our province but our country as well. It is a problem that bears not only a heavy human cost but fiscal ones as well.

The purpose of Motion 504 is to support existing and encourage new strategies to combat fetal alcohol spectrum disorder, more commonly referred to as FASD. In my remarks today I would particularly like to applaud the Minister of Children's Services and the Minister of Health and Wellness, as they are partners and stakeholders, for all their efforts to educate the general public about the dangers of the consumption of alcohol during pregnancy and also for their support of those individuals who have the misfortune of being affected by FASD.

My personal involvement in the area of FASD began when I became directly involved with the Glenrose rehabilitation hospital, which provides care to children and adults suffering from the effects of this disorder. Over the years the Glenrose has provided care to thousands of patients and families who are affected by FASD, many of whom have come from communities in northern Alberta, Nunavut, Northwest Territories, and Yukon.

Many of the children that find their way to the Glenrose tend to come from low-income families and in many cases from First Nation communities. These are children who due to unfortunate circumstances will never have a chance to lead a normal childhood or a happy and productive life. The regrettable fact is that while hospitals like the Glenrose can provide these children with diagnosis and care services, they cannot provide them with effective treatment as there is currently no cure for this disorder. The effects of FASD are permanent, Mr. Speaker. At the end of the day all that the hospitals and treatment facilities can do is ease some of the suffering and pain experienced by some of these individuals.

When I became an MLA in Edmonton-Glenora, I soon became keenly aware of the fact that it is false to assume that the occurrence of FASD is more prevalent in lower income than in middle and higher income families. As a matter of fact, research seems to indicate that the disorder is just as common and potentially more common in prosperous communities as it is in lower income families. According to a national population health survey conducted by Stats Canada, researchers found that 25 per cent of all women in Canada with children under the age of five admitted to drinking while pregnant. The surprising figure is that 29 per cent of those women came from higher income families.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this is an issue that transcends all social boundaries and whose effects are felt as much in the city of Edmonton as they are in communities in northern Alberta. However, before I discuss some of the social impacts of FASD, I would like to provide the House with a bit of background concerning this particular type of condition.

Mr. Speaker, FASD is an umbrella term used to describe a range of disabilities and diagnoses associated with parental exposure to alcohol. The development of such disabilities is directly related to a range of factors including the timing and the amount of alcohol consumed by a mother during her pregnancy, the use of other substances, the genetics of the mother and her fetus, and the mother's overall health. Furthermore, other aspects including economic, social, and physical status of the parent can also play a role in the development of the disorder. Consequently, FASD includes such diagnoses as fetal alcohol syndrome, partial fetal alcohol syndrome, fetal alcohol effect, fetal alcohol-related neurodevelopmental disorder, alcohol-related birth defects. Those all go under the heading of FASD now.

While being the leading cause of developmental disability among our children, FASD is one of the most poorly understood medical conditions in Alberta and across Canada. Children born with this disorder face a number of physical and social challenges which in turn prevent them from functioning in similar manner and settings to those born without the disorder. According to the last statistics, 9 in every 1,000 babies born across Canada are affected by this disorder. In Alberta 3 to 6 out of a thousand are born with FASD, while 1 in 3 is born with FAS. To put this into perspective, experts claim that in North America alone approximately 1 per cent of the population suffers from some form of FASD, which is four times more than those affected by HIV or AIDS.

Unfortunately, at the present time we have no way of knowing exactly how many individuals living in Alberta or Canada are affected by this condition. This is largely a result of the fact that there are currently no set standards for detection of the disorder and because of the negative stigma associated with women who are known to have produced a child with FASD.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, while this scientific community has been able to determine the prevailing factors that contribute to the development of FASD, they have not been able to determine exactly what amount of alcohol is healthy for the fetus. The reason behind this lack of understanding is partly due to the fact that not all mothers can metabolize alcohol at the same rate. In other cases doctors have found that mothers who drank heavily during pregnancy have produced perfectly healthy offspring who show no signs of brain damage. Therefore, while we do not know exactly what quantity of alcohol consumed will end up hurting a child, we do know that alcohol does dehydrate and destroy brain cells, which tend to be extremely vulnerable during the development of the fetus.

We also know that of all the substances that can cause birth defects, which includes heroin, cocaine, and certain medical substances such as codeine, alcohol tends to be the one most dangerous for the fetus. As a result, some of the most common physical defects associated with babies affected by alcohol and, consequently, FASD include small birth weight, small head circumference, small, widely spaced eyes, flattened mid face with a short upturned nose, thin upper lip, and no noticeable curve between the nose and mouth. It is important to note that these particular physical defects occur usually if the mother was drinking within the first trimester and may not show up at all if she consumed alcohol within the second or third trimester.

The most common mental problems and challenges faced by individuals with FASD include attention deficit, memory deficit, hyperactivity, and difficulty absorbing concepts. While many of these children and adults suffer from certain behavioural problems, it would be incorrect to assume that the majority of them enjoy lower intelligence levels. As a matter of fact, recent data seem to indicate that only 15 per cent of the children with FASD have IQs under 70, while the vast majority enjoy IQs of normal or above-average range.

However, Mr. Speaker, this statistic is a bit misleading because while many children and adults who are affected by the disorder can perform well on tests and execute tasks that are repetitive or familiar in nature, they are unable to use their knowledge gained in the tasks to adapt to new situations or environments. Unfortunately, this means that many of them who have difficulties absorbing new concepts do not possess the ability to solve new problems and challenges.

On a more serious note, Mr. Speaker, their mental disabilities also tend to hamper their capacity to learn from mistakes and the consequences of their actions. Many of them display immature social behaviour, display poor social judgment, lack the capacity to control their emotions, and some tend to be inappropriately friendly to strangers. Consequently, many of those who suffer from various forms of FASD tend to be socially unfit, unemployable, and even worse, vulnerable to high-risk behaviours and situations including crime.

Research done across Canada seems to indicate that a high percentage of homeless people and juvenile and adult offenders suffer from undiagnosed FASD. While there is no hard data available, some researchers estimate that as many as 1 in every 4 inmates found within our correctional institutions suffers from the effects of this disorder. This not only places a great pressure on our criminal justice system but also places great social and financial burdens on our society as a whole. The sad part about this situation is that if circumstances had been different, these people would have had the opportunity to lead perfectly normal lives.

While we are on the subject of costs, Mr. Speaker, I would like to highlight the fact that since there is no known remedy for FASD, individuals affected by the disorder require lifelong care and treatment. This, in turn, means that the costs associated with FASD treatment are very, very high. More specifically, Health Canada reports that without taking into account the lost potential and opportunity of these individuals, direct costs associated with FASD over a lifetime are estimated at $2 million per person. However, the figure includes costs related only to medical care services.

I fully support the government's approach in dealing with the problem and pursuing the strategies. With this in mind, I urge all members present tonight to support our future generations and vote in favour of Motion 504.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

Mr. Stevens: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I rise to speak to Motion 504 as presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora. In Alberta research suggests that anywhere between 19 to 113 children for every 1,000 are born with fetal alcohol spectrum disorder each year. Fetal alcohol syndrome and related disorders are the leading causes of developmental disabilities in Canadian children today. What gives us hope is that it's entirely preventable.

As the minister responsible for the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission I'd like to add my support to this Motion 504. With the introduction of this motion the sponsoring member is asking this government to renew its commitment to this very important issue. At the outset I'd like to commend the Minister of Children's Services for all her department's valuable work to date and her continued dedication to educate the public on FASD.

This evening, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to highlight the contributions being made by my ministry including our participation on provincial and national FASD committees and other initiatives as well as contributions of the liquor industry. Alberta Gaming and the AGLC will continue to support efforts to combat FASD. My ministry is committed to addressing this issue. In fact, one of our guiding principles is to ensure that liquor policies reflect a commitment to social responsibility.

Just recently we created a social responsibility division within the AGLC. The newly formed division will enhance our focus on social responsibility including new opportunities to increase awareness about responsible alcohol consumption. This includes monitoring emerging issues and trends and developing policies to address the social and economic implications of those issues and partnering with the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission and the liquor industry to develop and deliver programs related to the responsible sale and consumption of alcohol and ensure that consumers of alcohol are aware of the prevention and treatment programs for alcohol abuse. As well, the ministry will continue its investigation into warning labels on alcohol beverages. I'm confident the efforts of the social responsibility division will serve to strengthen our commitment to FASD reduction strategies.

Alberta Gaming is also a member of the recently established Alberta FASD Cross-Ministry Committee. This committee supports a collaborative approach to planning and delivering provincial government programs and services. The AGLC also represents Alberta on the Social Responsibility Committee of the Canadian Association of Liquor Jurisdictions. As the provincial representative we put Alberta's initiatives on the table and bring back useful information on other jurisdictions' liquor-related programs and campaigns including those relating to FASD. At the annual meeting last fall Alberta announced that it will develop a new strategy for fetal alcohol spectrum disorder to be led by Alberta Children's Services.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased that the liquor industry shares our view that FASD is a serious issue and is proactive in promoting responsible consumption. A very good example of this is the Brewers Association of Canada, which considers FASD among its top three social issues along with drinking and driving and minors accessing liquor. Through its funding of FASD initiatives, the association is helping to raise awareness about this disorder. According to a recent survey by Ipsos-Reid, 98 per cent of women in Canada understand that drinking alcohol during pregnancy is harmful. In other words, awareness appears to be generally very high.

Once you build awareness, the challenge is to help direct behavioural changes. An example of this is the mother that has given birth to one FAS child. It's my information that the likelihood that she will have another is an alarming 776 out of 1,000 live births. Because of information like this, the Brewers Association has indicated that they will take a more targeted approach to future allocation of funds for education initiatives.

The Brewers Association will continue to promote the message that drinking responsibly during pregnancy should mean not drinking at all. Together with the College of Family Physicians they are promoting this message through the alcohol risk assessment and intervention program. This program gives physicians the tools they need to identify at an early stage those most likely to have a problem with harmful drinking. Currently it's used by 4,000 health professionals and all 16 medical schools across Canada.

A spinoff of this program is the Caring Together initiative developed with the Native Physicians Association. This initiative focuses on education about drinking during pregnancy within the aboriginal community. Most importantly, the program is culturally sensitive in that it combines western medical practice with aboriginal healing methods and native spirituality to promote responsible consumption of drugs and alcohol.

Mr. Speaker, education and information go hand in hand. Industry is committed to making sure Albertans get educated by improving the availability of FASD information. Over a three-year period with funding of $350,000 the Brewers Association has supported the Motherisk program at the Hospital for Sick Children in Ontario. The most significant advantage of Motherisk is its toll-free help line, especially helpful for remote communities in Alberta where FASD information is hard to access. This along with FASD community programs and articles in magazines like Canadian Parent is helping Albertans and families affected by FASD.

Another key industry leader, the Alberta Liquor Store Association, is also making sure that Albertans get the facts on FASD including partnering to run the Your Baby Doesn't Need a Cold One campaign in liquor stores throughout the province. This pilot project included FASD promotional displays and nonalcoholic beverages.

8:50

This April the annual ALSA conference and trade show will provide another opportunity for the liquor industry to find new ways to deal with FASD. I encourage the liquor industry and its associations to continue these and all other important efforts to prevent FASD.

Mr. Speaker, I support Motion 504, and the Minister of Children's Services can continue to expect support from Alberta Gaming as we explore new partnerships through our ministries and with industry stakeholders. Of course, I encourage all members to vote in favour of the motion. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Ms Evans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with a great deal of pleasure that I rise in support of Motion 504. I'd like to give a bit of brief background and then tell you about some of the exciting initiatives that Children's Services and our partners are undertaking with FASD.

I reflect the pleasure of learning so much about this from the now Minister of Learning, who, when he had this portfolio or this responsibility centre, pursued avidly and aggressively the issue of putting FASD on the map of the Alberta government. We owe him a great debt, and I say thank you. He is possibly the only one that drives a truck in his neighbourhood with a sign on the bumper sticker saying, "Don't spoil your child," and for that advocacy and that continuing support I am also grateful.

It's astonishing to know that right from biblical times, when in the Bible there is reference that a mother should not consume wine or alcohol or spirits because it might make the baby to turn out to be silly, throughout the ages at different times there have been whole societal structures that seemingly have ignored FASD. Today with our knowledge of the permanent brain injury of FASD, I think it's important to pursue the results of this motion and carry one step further every program that would accelerate education to absolutely everybody.

Tonight we've heard references to supports for people who have a disposition to diabetes and to effects of alcohol abuse, namely some of our native population. But today at the Glenrose they will tell you that it's most frightening to contemplate the martini moms, as they're known, who will sit in fancy neighbourhoods in fine houses and drink and then just pray at the time of that birth that the alcohol will not be demonstrated in any tangible way on either the face of the baby or on the resulting imprint of the brain. I find it astonishing that people can still believe that it might not have an effect: oh, well, it doesn't affect everyone. Well, why take the chance, Mr. Speaker?

This year we had a mocktail contest between a number of the media who on two separate days in Calgary and in Edmonton put together cocktails that were mixtures of juices or milk that were safe for a pregnant mom to consume, and through that we have been working to energize the media to be very aware of FASD/FASE. I think that to their credit they have done quite a fine job of putting articles in periodicals and talking about it with more knowledge than we had seen previously on this subject.

But, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to reflect on something that for me is a cruel disappointment, and that is that when we ask for leadership from our federal government on this issue, we're met with platitudes and no money. We continue to ask for an allocation of funding which has been promised under the FASD initiative federally, especially concerning our on-reserve funding formulas. Repeatedly we say, "Please provide us the support," and repeatedly it is not delivered.

We believe that women who continue to drink alcohol during pregnancy have many complex needs. Some do not want to confide in their partner that they have been indulging in alcohol, and we know from our discussions with addiction experts that many would have undertaken treatment if they weren't so conscious of the shame that that intervention might bring forward.

Frequently women who divulge that they have had an addiction or drank alcohol during their pregnancy will lose a male partner, and the partner will leave them alone to face the situation by themselves. As a result, Mr. Speaker, often they are unsupported women who have the babies and then turn them over to the province to take care of. I think that that's one of the most tragic circumstances of all because often that is an impediment for people who may wish to adopt a child. So we've given somebody a life sentence that is completely preventable, one hundred per cent preventable, and we should in fact as Albertans do everything we can to be aggressive in providing people with the information so they'll stop drinking.

Mr. Speaker, I'm going to relate for the record an astonishing circumstance I find myself in when I go into schools. That is that I tell grade 6s about FASD. I tell them the effect of it. I draw the picture of the mother on the blackboard. I draw the picture of the brain, their beautiful whole brain, and then a brain that has had that compounding injury of FASD.

Now, during this period I look at the children, and I say, "How many of you pour alcoholic beverages for your parents?" I can guarantee you, Mr. Speaker, that if you could go to any part of Alberta and put 52 kids in grade 6 in a class and ask them that question, you'll get over 80 per cent that will put up their hands. They, in fact, either pour their dad a beer or get their mother a glass of wine. The implication of that is that kids that are too young to know the effects of alcohol are pouring alcoholic beverages for their parents.

So then you ask them, "Well, you know, have you heard about fetal alcohol spectrum disorder if a mummy drinks when a baby is in her tummy?" And, believe me, they all know how it got there, and they may be on the threshold of making those decisions themselves.

Dr. Taylor: I didn't know that until I was 20.

Ms Evans: And I'm not surprised, Mr. Speaker, that some wouldn't have known that.

But, Mr. Speaker, when you tell them that if the mummy drinks alcohol, the brain on the blackboard that looks like Swiss cheese might actually be the result, and when you look back at the kids and you don't let them put their hands up, I'll tell you what you see: you see at least half a dozen kids that look sick to their stomachs. I think the reason they look sick is because they know full well they've been asked by somebody who's pregnant to pour them an alcoholic beverage.

So, Mr. Speaker, we've got a long way to go on the education of FASD/FASE in the province. We've made a good start both with the resources and the awareness, but I think this activity, this motion, and promotion of this can only accelerate it. I challenge hon. members on both sides of the House to contact our office, and we'll be pleased to provide you materials for your constituency offices and, what's more, a bumper sticker so that you too can join the wave started by the hon. Minister of Learning and carry the message.

Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be here tonight to offer my thoughts and speak in favour of Motion 504. I'd like to begin my remarks by commending my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora and also the Minister of Children's Services for bringing forward this motion and for the work that she's done around FAS and FASD.

Before coming into office, I don't think I was aware that such a condition existed. I don't think I'd ever thought I knew anybody that had the condition. I wasn't even aware that it ever happened, and I'm not certain how that happened or why that happened, but I'd never felt like I'd had exposure to it. Shortly after coming into office, I was made the chair of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee, so as I began to interview kids out there, I ran into the condition for the first time.

What was really surprising to me was that I actually did know about the condition. One of my good friends back at home had adopted a child. They had never been able to have children, and they were very excited when they got this little baby girl. She was a beautiful baby, but by age five and six they began to notice deficiencies in the child. We weren't certain what those deficiencies were, and as a church community we worked very . . .

The Acting Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business has concluded.

Second Reading

Bill 20
Minors' Property Act

[Adjourned debate March 10: Mr. Hancock]

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and comment on Bill 20, the Minors' Property Act, that has been brought forward by the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. This bill is really a companion bill to Bill 19, which is the Public Trustee Act, and they need to be viewed together because they do refer to one another, but also they're both bills that are updating and consolidating and clarifying long existing pieces of legislation that need that update. They need to move into the 21st century.

So a couple of things that are changes to the existing act. Some of them I think might in fact be carried forward but are expanded. We've got the court confirmation of contracts, situations where minors have entered into contracts or people have entered them in, parents or guardians have committed them. Often that needs to have an overriding confirmation from the courts, and in fact that is anticipated and brought forward in Bill 20.

There's also a clarification of discharging a contractual obligation to minors, and I believe that the Minister of Justice had given the example of a minor taking a bike into a shop to be fixed and then trying to claim it back again. Under the existing legislation it was so broad that, in fact, strictly enforced and strictly interpreted according to what we had in the old act, the youth wouldn't have been able to get their own bike back even if they'd paid the bill for the repairs.

So this makes it clear where there's already a sort of contractual or implied contractual relationship how things can proceed there, especially around money – and that's money including wages and benefits but aside from that as well – and also goods like the example that was used in the bike being fixed.

The bill is careful to always put forward the concept of best interests and that any decision that is made around a minor's property or money that's owed to a minor be contemplated in that context of best interest. The bill includes some reciprocal agreements back and forth between the Public Trustee Act, and it also looks at court appointment of a trustee, especially around the scope where they can appoint a trustee for just specific parts of a minor's property. In other words, mostly what this is anticipating is a large settlement that needs to be given full protection under the law, something like a settlement from a traffic accident or perhaps a large amount of money inherited through a will, for example. There might be other parts of the minor's property that don't need to get that kind of thorough safekeeping that's offered here, but in some cases it does need to be put under a trustee.

With the feedback loop that I've used, I haven't heard any concerns that have been raised thus far, but often once the minister speaks and we have a response from the opposition, people start paying attention. I may well hear some additional things over the next week or so, but given what I knew about the bill and had asked around about, I haven't heard any concerns raised thus far.

This is an update, a consolidation, a clarification, so I really wasn't expecting any great objections. I'm pleased to see the concept of best interest that is incorporated into it. At this point I'm willing to support Bill 20 in second reading, and I look forward to a more thorough examination of the clauses in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 18
Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 18, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004. We've been waiting for this bill for some time. It makes some proposed amendments that we're very happy to see on this side of the House.

Certainly, maintenance enforcement continues to be an ongoing issue in our constituency office. It's sometimes the number one, sometimes the number two, and sometimes the number three issue. Custodial parents continually have a very difficult time in gaining access to the funds that are rightfully due to the children that they are trying to raise in a supportable fashion, and for years we've been asking for some strengthening of the rules that maintenance enforcement has at its fingertips.

Some of the things that we see in this bill are really good. I like the raising of the bar for the restrictions that we see in the different kinds of licences that noncustodial parents can be restricted in getting if they haven't kept up with their payments. There's no doubt that having the restrictions on the driver's licence has been a positive step. Further, restricting hunting, fishing, and outfitter licences when debtors are in default is a good idea.

It's a new idea to me that lottery winnings of over a thousand dollars should go to support the family of a debtor who has maintenance arrears, but I think that's a good idea too, although certainly it's going to, I think, as some of these other ideas in this bill, increase the amount of paperwork, but it's a really good plan. If a noncustodial parent has a windfall, his children should share in that benefit if he's in arrears, I believe.

Some of the consistency that we see lining Alberta up with some of the other provinces is also supportable. The increased access to information sharing between banks, releasing information to police, providing addresses to courts, identifying reciprocal programs are all very good, I think. Deterrent fees are also very good, but those two, sharing the information and the deterrent fees, bring up for me the two still outstanding significant issues around maintenance enforcement, and those are the lack of co-operation and co-ordination we have between interprovincial jurisdictions.

It's still really difficult to find noncustodial parents who skip the province and try and hide. We have a great deal of problem dealing with other provinces in trying to find those folks. We've had some good co-operative efforts with B.C. and Saskatchewan, but other provinces farther away seem to be increasingly difficult, not increasingly easy, to work out situations with noncustodial parents.

So I would very much like the Minister of Justice to take this under advisement and to bring forward legislation soon that works at interprovincial co-operation in this issue. If we could get the other provinces to share information with us similar to the proposed amendments that we see in this bill, then we would put the money in the hands of the children and for their care in a much faster and far more appropriate fashion.

The other absence of information that I see here that I think is very necessary for us to talk about is the constant reduction we see of outstanding arrears for noncustodial parents. They let their arrears build up for months or years and then go to court and declare themselves to be under duress and have those arrears wiped out or significantly reduced and often then apply for a reduction of the monthly support payments that they should be making.

That penalizes the children, Mr. Chairman, and that rewards an offending parent. I think that that's just plain bad, and one of the most abhorrent things we do when we treat children badly in this province is to let those noncustodial parents get away with that. That's, to me, a crime and should be treated accordingly. Instead, we're letting them off the hook in these particular cases, and I don't see anything in this particular bill addressing that.

So I would again urge the Minister of Justice to take a look at that situation and to make it impossible in this province for noncustodial parents to weasel out of paying the money that is due to their children that those kids need in order to really live the lifestyle that they should be in terms of just generally being well-fed, well-educated, well-dressed, and available to participate in community activities. It's a real burden that we place on our future generation, and I think it's the wrong thing for us to do.

With those two points that I hope the minister takes a look at, if he'll take those under consideration, then I'm quite happy to support this particular bill. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 18 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 19
Public Trustee Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I think I spoke in second reading to this bill last week, March 10. As I mentioned during an earlier debate, after second reading I often do hear from people who seem to become alert to the fact that an issue is being discussed, and they now want to make comment on it. I had not had any concerns raised with me about the Public Trustee Act prior to my second reading comments, and I have heard no concerns raised between that time and this.

I had gone through fairly thoroughly what was being contemplated before in that we were looking at clarification of the legal status of the office of the Public Trustee. There are a number of sections that deal with cleaning up the trust funds, their rules of operation, and how trusts could be maximized for the use of the intended person. The sections that have been put in around the minor's property: those are reciprocal references back and forth between public trustees and the Minors' Property Act. There are additional sections on incorporating issues around missing persons and also around the mentally incompetent.

Those are really the new pieces to this legislation. The rest is merely updating, getting rid of some of the archaic language and some of the no longer in use statutes. I think it's a good idea that we revisit legislation on a fairly regular basis. This one was not regular. I think it was originally in place in about 1959, if I'm remembering the right one, and hasn't been updated since then.

I have no concerns at this time with what's being proposed, and I'm happy to support it in Committee of the Whole. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 19 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report Bill 18, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004, and Bill 19, the Public Trustee Act.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Lougheed: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 18, Bill 19.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a productive evening, and I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 9:18 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 16, 2004 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 2004/03/16
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Grant that we the members of our province's Legislature fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all of the people. Let us be guided by our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Mr. Ducharme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the privilege of introducing to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a number of guests from the Bonnyville-Cold Lake constituency. They are seated in the members' gallery and are special guests who attended this morning's celebration in the rotunda to mark the sixth edition of Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie and International Francophonie Day, coming up on the 20th of March.

I am pleased to first introduce a group of students from l'école des Beaux-Lacs, a francophone school in Bonnyville. This group of students is part of the school band that played for us this morning, and they are accompanied by two teachers from the school, Mme Yvonne Veraart and Mme Nicole Jodoin. They did a wonderful job for us this morning. I ask them to stand and please be recognized by the Assembly.

Joining them on this special day at the Legislature is a group of senior citizens from Bonnyville, and I want to add that I'm very pleased that they were able to make the long bus trip to be with us today. I would like them to stand and be recognized as I call their names: M. René Dallaire, Mme Yvonne Chartrand, Mme Irène Plourde, Mme Marie-Claire Champagne, M. Réal Croteau, Mme Carmen Croteau, M. Jean-Claude Lajoie, Mme Monique Lajoie, Mme Denise Husereau, M. Paul Husereau, and M. Denis Tardif, the director of the Alberta Francophone Secretariat. Je vous invite à vous joindre à moi pour leur souhaiter une bienvenue chaleureuse. I would invite the members of the Assembly to join me in extending them a very warm welcome and, of course, a safe journey home.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. O'Neill: Mr. Speaker, I do recognize a resident of St. Albert who is seated in the public gallery, and I would introduce Ms Ireen Slater. My eyesight doesn't tell me whether there's anyone else from St. Albert there or not, but I would like to introduce her to the Assembly and ask everyone to give her the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a number of people who are representing seniors' organizations in Alberta. They are all sitting in the public gallery, and I would ask them to rise as I say their names. First of all, I'd like to introduce Jerry Pitts, who is the chairperson of the Coalition of Seniors Advocates. With him is Stan Nykiel, who is a director of COSA, the Coalition of Seniors Advocates. They've both travelled up from Calgary today. I'd also like to introduce Ireen Slater, who is the chair of the St. Albert branch of SUN, Seniors United Now; Albert Opstad, who is the president of the Edmonton branch of Seniors United Now; and Ron Ellis, who is a director of Seniors United Now and their chairman of the communications committee. They're all standing. I would ask the Assembly to please give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I again have the privilege of introducing parents who are taking time from their day to watch our proceedings here as part of the Education Watch initiative. They're in the members' gallery, and I'll ask them to rise as I mention their names. First is Ray Benton-Evans. He's a father of a child attending grade 9 at Avalon junior high, and he's the chair of the parent school council at Avalon. Next is Linda Climenhaga. She has four children; two are at Windsor Park and two are at McKernan. Finally, Karen Ferrari, who has three kids, two of them at Windsor Park, and one is too young to go to school yet. Well, thank you for standing. Please give them a warm welcome. They're watching our proceedings carefully.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a gentleman who has travelled all the way from Calgary to be here today to watch the proceedings of the Assembly. He has dedicated a good deal of his time in recent months to strongly advocating for Alberta's seniors and currently serves on the board of the Coalition of Seniors Advocates association, known as COSA. Mr. Arthur Clements is sitting in the public gallery. I'll ask him to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The year 2003 was a very good year for the insurance industry, which announced a windfall net profit of $2.6 billion, but 2003 was a very bad year for Alberta consumers who saw their auto insurance premiums continue to skyrocket. It's no surprise that 60 per cent of Albertans told this government in a poll that they want public auto insurance. My first question is to the Premier. Why has this government done nothing to bring down auto insurance rates for consumers while we see insurance industry profits soar by 775 per cent?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, it's not right to say that he doesn't tell the truth. Well, I guess it is right to say that he doesn't tell the truth. I mean, the hon. Minister of Finance will explain and outline exactly the legislation that was brought forward to address the insurance situation. That legislation focuses on fairness, fairness to the consumer, and it doesn't focus on individual company profits, but if the hon. member is willing to stand up and say that profit is dirty, then let him stand up and say so. Say it. The reason he's not telling – well, I don't know the reason he's not telling. I know the reason he's not telling the truth. It's because he's a Liberal. That's the reason.

The insurance industry profits are based on a number of factors, and those factors include not just auto insurance – and that’s all the hon. member alludes to – but they’re based on factors related to fire insurance, home insurance, life insurance policies. They are also national. They are national in scope, not provincial. So they affect provinces that have so-called state or socialist insurance that the Liberals favour such as Saskatchewan and Manitoba and British Columbia. Well, I’ll include, because it was brought in by an ND government . . .

The Speaker: Let’s not get involved in a debate here.

Hon. member, second question.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why has this government continued to disregard the opinion of Alberta consumers who want public auto insurance because they know it is fair, affordable, and accessible to all?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, alluding to his previous question, this has nothing to do with insurance profits. Again, our legislation that was introduced I think maintains the spirit of free enterprise yet protects good old and young drivers from being treated unfairly as long as they are good drivers. Now, bad old drivers will be treated with penalties, and bad young drivers will be treated with penalties, but good old drivers and good young drivers, along with good middle-aged drivers, will be treated with fairness. That’s what the legislation is all about, and that’s good legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: can the Premier explain why this government, which has been so quick to impose extra costs on Albertans, especially students and especially those seniors in the gallery, has been so slow to give them a break on their auto insurance premiums?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the legislation that was enacted specifically addresses young and old good drivers. It also addresses young and old bad drivers. It serves to punish the bad and reward the good. What’s wrong with that?

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government’s insurance reform implementation committee has failed and failed miserably. Consumers were left out. There was no public consultation. Costs for consumers are going up, not down. Even the industry doesn’t know what the future holds. To the Minister of Finance: why did the president and CEO of Wawanesa Insurance resign last December from the Alberta auto insurance reform committee?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member asked me about an article that appeared three months ago, and today he’s all of a sudden come to realize that we have an automobile insurance reform process underway in this province. Last summer the implementation team took forward a program to implement a policy for automobile insurance that clearly would provide Albertans with a fair approach to having automobile insurance because it is the law in this province that you must carry automobile insurance. We said: let’s have one that’s fair, that’s accessible, affordable, and comparably priced across Canada. That’s exactly what they brought forward and are bringing forward in this whole program.

To all of a sudden say, “Wow, we’ve all of a sudden discovered that there are huge profits in the insurance industry in Canada,” well, no kidding. That’s why this program said that we had to have a reduction in costs of insurance, and that’s why over $200 million in this province alone has to come out of the premium base to make this insurance program affordable for all Albertans. He’s finally coming to grips with this. Thank you for coming on board, because that’s supporting the reform that the Member for Medicine Hat has been leading with an implementation team. You’re just about six months behind.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why is it that even the insurance industry has very little confidence in this government’s auto insurance reform package?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don’t know that to be true. As a matter of fact, I don’t believe that at all. There is one insurance company that has a problem. I understand that a lawsuit has been launched, and I can’t speak to that particular situation because it is now before the courts, but generally the insurance companies are supportive of the program.

You know, it was very difficult to strike the right balance between the injury lawyers, various groups representing injured people, the insurance companies, but I think the Minister of Finance did an outstanding job along with the able assistance of the hon. Member for Medicine Hat, who did an outstanding job, Mr. Speaker, travelling the country, consulting with other provinces, and consulting with Albertans about the insurance industry. So for this hon. member to say that there was no consultation, he is not telling the truth. His nose is growing.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: will this government finally admit that this policy is not going to work for Alberta consumers? It’s going to drive up premiums even higher. Will you cancel it immediately?

The Speaker: There are about four questions there. It’s multiple choice; take which one you want.

Mr. Klein: Well, multiple choice. I’ll give a multiple answer. Like what? Like Saskatchewan? You know, Saskatchewan insurance can come in here and compete with insurance companies. B.C. insurance can come here and compete with insurance companies. Manitoba insurance can come here and compete.

Mr. MacDonald: You own your own bank.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, owning a bank has nothing to do with insurance. We’ve gotten out of just about every kind of business, and by cracky if we ever suggested selling the ATB, these people would just go through the roof. “How can you do that? My God.” You know, they would have Ernest Manning turning over in his grave and Aberhart too.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Seniors’ Benefits

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last month members from the Coalition of Seniors Advocates – and some of them are here in the gallery today – met with the government’s Calgary caucus and the chair of the Seniors Advisory Council and were frustrated by the response. At a time when seniors are facing additional hardships due to electricity deregulation and high automobile insurance costs, all they want is for their seniors' benefits to be restored. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the COSA members felt that they were ridiculed and cut off, is this the government's idea of meaningful consultation with seniors?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I take very strong exception to the hon. member's remarks relative to insurance costs. Good older seniors are rewarded, as are good younger seniors. Good older drivers are rewarded.

Relative to the situation that the Liberals are alluding to – and that is calling on the government to reinstate universal optical and dental benefits for seniors – I understand that they had a news conference just before this session. The previous program, the program that the Liberals are asking to be reinstated, offered limited assistance, in the minds of the government. Only 30 per cent coverage was provided with the balance being paid by the senior, and only basic dental procedures were covered. As a result, less than half of all seniors accessed the coverage each year.

What we decided to do was to focus on those seniors who needed it the most and provide full coverage. So the current program provides much better coverage, in our minds. We focus that coverage on seniors who need it. I believe that the majority, not all but the majority, of Albertans support that approach. The special-needs assistance for seniors program provides up to 100 per cent, not 30 per cent but 100 per cent, coverage for optical and dental expenses for those eligible seniors and, furthermore, has no restrictions on procedures.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that the cost of dentures for a senior couple can be as high as $8,000, beyond even middle-income seniors, when will this government restore the universal, not the paid-down but the universal, optical and dental benefit plan for seniors that the government took away? When will you restore a universal plan?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the program that the government took away was the previous program, which offered limited access. As I pointed out, only 30 per cent coverage was provided with the balance being paid by the senior.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that in 2003-2004 approximately 14,000 seniors received financial assistance under the special-needs assistance for seniors program. As well, the government has undertaken a pilot project with the dental school at the University of Alberta, one of the only dental schools, I believe, in western Canada to assist low-income seniors with the costs of dental services. This includes all forms of dentures. This pilot project, as I understand it, has been extended for a year.

1:50

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that the recent Alberta Council on Aging poll shows that seniors are having to cut back spending on food and transportation, why does this government persist in policies that create hardships for seniors, particularly middle-income seniors?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that that is true.

Ms Blakeman: It is.

Mr. Klein: No. Would you stop the chirping from that other side, please.

Mr. Speaker, what they say is not true, and I'll have the hon. Minister of Seniors respond.

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important to point out that over the past 10 years we have chosen to focus our resources on the people who truly need them and can show the need. Although the number of seniors is increasing significantly in the province, I'm very pleased to say that a lot of the increase is people who are quite self-sufficient, shall we say.

To indicate that we are out and hurting middle-class seniors is totally erroneous. We have an ongoing review of things such as the threshold. We look at those to see when they can be adjusted, the costs of them. We've reacted at every turn to the needs. For example, I'm pleased to say that when the seniors were under considerable stress on utilities about a year ago from now, the special-needs program cut in and helped them out on that end of it. Yes, for seniors close to a threshold who may be suffering, we're having a look to see if we can address those issues also.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Despite a budget surplus that the Parkland Institute at the University of Alberta earlier today forecasted will top $4 billion, the Premier seems bent on undertaking an expensive PR campaign to scare Albertans into swallowing the bitter medicine of delisting and user fees stacked on top of health care premiums. While the true magnitude of this radical surgery will no doubt be kept hidden from Albertans until after the next election, the PR strategy so far seems to be based on strategic media leaks while keeping Albertans in the dark. My question is to the Premier. Why do national columnists like Jeffrey Simpson from Toronto-based Globe and Mail get an advance peek at the Premier's radical proposals while the Graydon report, the secret blueprint for two-tiered medicine, remains locked in the government's vault?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, Jeffrey Simpson did not get a peek at our plans, which are under development as I speak. But he understands what has to be done because it has been talked about at Premiers' conferences, it has been talked about at finance ministers' conferences, at ministers of health conferences. It's been the topic of discussion at what is now called the Council of the Federation – before it was the Premiers' Conference – for at least the past seven years. The Premiers have been talking about achieving sustainability. They've also been talking about more cash from the federal government, which would be nice to close the so-called Romanow gap. But they all understand that money is not the only answer. So our caucus, this government, with the guidance of the Minister of Health and Wellness is preparing a plan to achieve sustainability.

Now, the hon. member likes to pick out those things that provide for a good 15-second sound bite, you know, user fees and this and that. Mr. Speaker, there are a multitude of things, even things that don't involve the kind of education that this person has; in other words, looking at what works in other countries and why it works and what's bad in other countries and how to discard that. You know, nothing wrong with that. Nothing wrong with looking at ways of allowing health jurisdictions to generate revenues as long as they provide for the sick and injured, that they don't lose their homes and their dignity and other things because of illness or injury.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that even his mentor the late Tommy Douglas said that when you talk about user fees, which is – could be, could be, might be, maybe – one small component, one little wee, teeny, teeny component of the whole thing, you know, people should pay something to recognize the value of medical services. Tommy Douglas said that. He likes Tommy Douglas; he liked Tommy Douglas. He would agree, I'm sure.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is this Premier refusing to consult with Albertans before advocating snake oil remedies like delisting, user pay, and further privatization that far from saving money will only drive up the cost of health care?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it is a big fib, to say the least, to say that we will not consult with Albertans. You know, stay tuned and see how the plan unfolds because I can tell you – and I don't think I'm spewing out any secrets – that consultation is one of the components of the plan.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the Premier: then why have this Premier and his government kept the contents of the Graydon report secret and not made the report public?

Mr. Klein: A very, very good reason. It's to prevent the hon. leader of the third party and his friends in the Liberal Party from picking out little pieces and using them for those 15-second sound bites. That's what it's all about. It's to prevent them from spreading misleading and false information. We will release it very, very shortly, but it will be released in its entirety, not only the Graydon report but other reports as well, and the plan will be released at that particular time.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

The Speaker: Actually, hon. members, we've spent a lot of time in this section here. We're going to move on. I've got a whole list of members.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Family Violence and Bullying Round-tables

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm aware that a family violence and bullying workshop will be held in Calgary this week. The workshop is being held as lead-up to the family violence and bullying round-table in May. In the past two weeks there have been numerous incidents of domestic violence across the province that have resulted in serious injury and death. My question is for the Minister of Children's Services. Can the minister tell us how the information from stakeholders in Calgary will be used?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, throughout Alberta we will have a total of 13 regional round-tables and separate focus groups including the aboriginal community, the faith community, the disabled community, the victims, the men's group. Like all of the other regional round-tables a coming together of those solutions that have been proposed will take a very broad look at the issue on May 7 in Calgary at a province-wide round-table complete with experts' opinions and other data. So, in fact, it will be one piece of all of the information we are gathering to make sure that we have a full range, a full spectrum, of views from every single solitary member of the Alberta community including youth that will come forward and provide their views on what should be done to eradicate bullying and family violence.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplementary question is also to the Minister of Children's Services. How have Albertans been included or how have they been heard regarding being involved in the round-table process?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, right from the time we put our web page up on the family violence round-table, we have had the views of Albertans on what we should do for process. As well, today on familyviolenceroundtable.gov.ab.ca you can register and complete a questionnaire. You can respond if you're a youth by entering a My Alberta contest that was announced in order to give those artists and writers an opportunity to talk about what they see as a young person, what Alberta should look like in the future.

By the time we have finished all the regional round-tables, a total of 2,000 people will have participated. Today, as we speak, at the Fantasyland Hotel we have over 200 people in the Edmonton area that are responding. There will even be an additional round-table in Slave Lake that has been added so that aboriginal people will have an opportunity to come forward and express their views as well.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cenaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary question: can the minister tell us what is going to be done with the information coming out of the round-table?

Ms Evans: Mr. Speaker, although Children's Services is co-ordinating the round-tables, there are a total of nine ministries involved in the Alberta children and youth initiative. We also have the Gaming ministry, which has frequently been involved in funding supports for construction of shelters and so on. So every single ministry will take a look at the recommendations, get integrally involved with the Alberta community, whether they're police, mental health workers, social workers, counsellors, schoolteachers, and so on. We will look at the strengths we can build into the program areas of delivery in support of the communities and the neighbourhoods where this violence takes place, in the homes of the Albertans that are affected, and try and provide them with ways of getting help before they desperately need it and ways to encourage a positive outcome for our children and grandchildren.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Electronic Health Records

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The main problem facing Alberta's health care system is not out-of-control costs. It's mismanagement of the money we have. Recently this government unveiled plans for an electronic health records system. While the idea of an electronic health records system is seductive, the minister is in danger of sending Alberta taxpayer money into a virtual black hole. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the minister announced $59 million in October for health information systems and then provided the Alberta Medical Association with $65 million in November and RHAs are spending untold millions more, will the minister tell us the total expected cost of establishing the electronic health records system?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I want to first elaborate a little bit in responding to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and that is to say that consultation will be a very, very important part of what we do as we move forward into recognizing that our health care system in this province is not sustainable. Albertans can be assured that we will seek their input, as we have at all steps of our policy development, and they will have an opportunity to have their voices heard with respect to what it is that they want to do. Now, Albertans may want to say: we want the existing system, but we're prepared to pay a lot more money for it. If that's what Albertans say, then I suppose we can do that.

I think, Mr. Speaker, to suggest, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has suggested, that there isn't a problem, that it's simply an issue of better management of health dollars, if that's the case, then apparently every province of every part of this country has exactly the same problem. I don't understand how the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview can suggest that it's merely a management problem when the Premier of New Brunswick, Bernard Lord, is talking about how the system will not be here 10 years from now on its current track.

I need not refer only to Conservatives. Premier McGuinty from Ontario, Premier Campbell from British Columbia, Premier Calvert, an ND from Saskatchewan, Premier Doer of Manitoba: without exception, Mr. Speaker, they all agree that this is the biggest policy issue in Canada today, that we need to get our system to be sustainable.

Dr. Taft: I guess he doesn't know the answer.

Mr. Mar: You don't even know the question.

Dr. Taft: You can read it in Hansard, Gary.

Given the staggering amount of health information generated every day in clinics and labs and hospitals and doctors' offices, what cost controls are in place to ensure that costs for the health information system don't escalate into the hundreds of millions of dollars?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there may come a time when we find that spending tens of millions or perhaps even hundreds of millions of dollars over the next 10 years will make sense for our health care system.

Imagine this, Mr. Speaker. Imagine being able to call up an electronic health record with a diagnostic image on it by referring to it on your computer instead of sending your patient off to yet another unnecessary diagnostic test. Imagine that transaction being repeated hundreds or thousands of times today and tomorrow and the day after. There are tremendous advantages that are recognized by health care systems in other parts of the world and in other parts of Canada as well of the importance of having electronic health records and the appropriate infrastructure being put in place to ensure that these types of efficiencies can be developed.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister table for us or give us verbally any cost-benefit analysis that was done to justify spending $124 million on information systems when the same amount could essentially resolve our long-term care crisis?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, it sounds like the perfect sort of question for a written question. To simply suggest that you can take this money and apply it and fix long-term care, the simplicity of that demonstrates the simplicity of the analysis conducted by the hon. member.

Labour Relations

Mr. Rathgeber: Mr. Speaker, Edmonton-Calder is the home of many small and medium-sized construction and electrical firms. Recently many of these reported that they have been targeted by salting campaigns, where union organizers target a job site and thereafter leave once certification had been accomplished. My questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. When will we see amendments to the labour code to deal with this practice known as salting?

Mr. Dunford: Some time ago, Mr. Speaker, there was a call from many Albertans to have a look at the current Labour Relations Code as it related to those matters of discussions between our organized employees here in the province and employers, so we had put together a group of people to take a look. They came back with recommendations that indicated that here in Alberta we had, generally speaking, a good labour climate and really did not recommend that a full-scale review of the labour code take place at that time.

However, as minister there was concern expressed to me regarding an issue that's referred to as salting, and I believe that the hon. member in the question explained that particular practice. So we've had a committee looking at that situation. I am in receipt now of the report from that particular committee. We had our last meeting on Monday of this week with the members of that committee. It is now in my shop for me to determine a government response, and we'll be doing that within the next little while and then take it through the internal system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Rathgeber: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of the same firms report that they have lost bids due to competing with unionized contractors whose bids are subsidized using market enhancement recovery funds, or MERF. To the same minister: why does the labour code allow unions to contribute to employers while it prohibits employers from contributing to unions?

Mr. Dunford: This is a practice, Mr. Speaker, known as MERFing, and this has been in consideration for some time here within the province. There is currently a disagreement amongst people that look at these kinds of matters as to whether or not this is an issue that can be addressed or should be addressed by the Labour Relations Code here in the province or whether, in fact, it is something that is more in line with free trade or competitive trade, in which case one then might make the argument that perhaps it's the people in the federal government in Ottawa that ought to be looking at it.

Now, as much as some folks have tried to make an issue of this particular situation and even though the Competition Bureau is there to look into these kinds of matters, it is my understanding that they have yet to receive a request.

Mr. Rathgeber: Finally, Mr. Speaker, when will the report that the minister referred to be released to ensure that this process moves forward?

Mr. Dunford: I've been contemplating how to deal with this matter, Mr. Speaker, and there are really two ways in which to do it. One, of course, is to release the report, again then to the public, and to provide for a further stakeholder response. The other way is to do it in a way that would release the report at the same time we release the government response. I'm not sure as I stand here today what the best approach would be, and any guidance that the hon. member wants to provide to me in this matter would be appreciated.

Long-standing WCB Claims Review

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, this government has been dragging its heels for years with the promise of a tribunal for long-standing, contentious Workers' Compensation Board claims. Many injured workers are being prevented from getting on with their lives while they wait to learn if their cases may be reviewed. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: when can these workers expect a decision on whether such a tribunal will be struck?

Mr. Dunford: I've been saying publicly for some time – and I guess the hon. member has missed it. It was always contemplated from early days in the discussion around this topic that the government of Alberta would be responsible for the administration of the tribunal, but whatever outcomes within that tribunal, whatever payments were due or if actual decisions were reversed, those payments then would be the responsibility of the Workers' Compensation Board.

We have various estimates as to what the administration of this program would be, but I can tell you that my priorities at the current time rest with other members of our client base that fall within our mandate, and that is the poor and the vulnerable here in the province. Until such time as we are able to fully enact the kind of reform that we feel is necessary in that particular area, we're not willing to invest our money in second and third chances.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, given that many of the poor and vulnerable are those injured workers waiting for the tribunal, can the minister tell me if changes to the Workers' Compensation Act passed in 2002 have corrected the complaints filed by injured workers against the WCB?

Mr. Dunford: As far as my reference to the people that need the help of this government, there is no wall that is drawn, wherever they come from. If people come forward to us for assistance and they need that assistance, then we stand there prepared to look after those folks.

Dr. Massey: It's a pretty high wall.

Mr. Dunford: I happened to hear from across the way about a pretty high wall, and in fact the member is right. One of the things that every jurisdiction in this country is trying to do is reduce the size of welfare walls. As a matter of fact, if the Liberal opposition will stay tuned, they will see in the next few months, of course, the kinds of reforms that we'll be bringing forward to in fact reduce that wall.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, given that we're not talking about welfare, that we are talking about settlements for long-standing, contentious claims that these workers are entitled to, will the minister commit today to striking a tribunal to hear those long-standing, contentious claims?

Mr. Dunford: I object to the use of the word "entitled". It is not an entitlement. The injured workers that the hon. member is purporting to represent today have in fact had their issues dealt with by the rules and by the people that were in responsible positions at the particular time.

I'm here to report to you, Mr. Speaker, that we are very proud of the changes that have been made to the Workers' Compensation Board, of the fact that since the years 2000-2002 we've been able to see where there's been effective change within the situation and how workers' compensation deals with injury claims. If people want to get anecdotal, we've got anecdotes we could stand here and talk about for the rest of the day.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

WCB Premium Assessments

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today go to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. A constituent of mine operates a small construction company in Calgary and received his WCB premium assessment for 2004. He learned his premium rates will go up actually from $3.70 per hundred dollars of insurable earnings in 2002 to $6.91 per hundred in 2003 to $10.26 per hundred in 2004 even though he hasn't had a workplace accident in some five years. This is a 300 per cent increase, and I'm wondering if the minister can explain how such an increase can be justified to this small businessman.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, there is some background that will be necessary for this question. First, I want to say this to the hon. member so that he can relay it back to his constituents and so that, in fact, any member here in the House, if they are running into that kind of a situation, can take this back as well that we tend to focus on the appeal system inside workers' compensation as somehow being there solely for injured workers. The appeal system is an appeal system, and any employer is entitled, then, to use that particular appeal system should they have a concern about their particular rates.

This is a very tough one not only for the member and his constituent, but we're finding that we're having this throughout the province. What happened was that at one time we had a huge category that included basically all of the construction activities. Representations were made to the Workers' Compensation Board by general contractors and by others, and they were successful in getting a new definition or, I guess, a new division amongst the construction trades, and what happened was that it put roofers and framers basically into a category by themselves. Now, anyone that has followed the lost-time claim rate in this province knows that that is an area of particular concern because of the incident rate that is happening in that area. So there's going to be constant pressure until the number of injuries in that area is reduced.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Magnus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the same minister. Given that my constituent has had an increased cost to his bottom line that is challenging to absorb, are there any ways in which the impact of this large increase over the span of two years can be mitigated?

Mr. Dunford: Well, I thought I heard the word "mitigated" as the last part of his question. Again, I would urge the member to consult with his constituent and to make sure that they have gone through the appeal system at the Workers' Compensation Board. I would further urge the member to talk to his constituent about certificates of recognition where we show, then, a commitment in writing by employers that they will in fact reduce the incident rate within their particular company.

Now, if the incident rate has been zero, then it's difficult to talk about any sort of reduction, but the very fact of being recognized with a certificate, of course, immediately enacts a 5 per cent reduction in the WCB assessment leading to a maximum of a 20 per cent reduction on that assessment.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

2:20 Fish and Wildlife Management

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Fish and Game executive are very concerned about fish and wildlife management in Alberta, and particularly they are concerned about how the Alberta Conservation Association has been handling the over $7 million that they have under their control. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can you tell us why there's a duplication of services with that $7 million? It should more rightly be under your control.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, there's no duplication in that process. This organization was set up as an arm's-length operation and given the delegated authority to be able to work and plan along with the interested shareholders. There is no duplication.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister could tell us why those in the employ of the Alberta Conservation Association have access to up-to-date, modern equipment and vehicles and your own staff members don't.

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, of course, the member wouldn't know what the Department of Sustainable Resource Development has or doesn't have, and you can tell by the questions. We do have over a hundred fish and wildlife officers. The budget has increased in that department. We spend close to $38 million in that particular department. All we're trying to do is make sure that we operate efficiently within that department, and once that happens, once we do have the restraints in place, that will ensure that some of the jobs we do are necessary.

I can give you a good example, Mr. Speaker, in relation to travel because that has come up in the House before, where I suggested that, you know, when meetings are held in Edmonton that require staff, say, to come from Slave Lake and other jurisdictions outside of Edmonton, the meetings start at 10 in the morning rather than 8 in the morning so that those people do not have to leave a day earlier and travel the night before to come to Edmonton. Those types of activities are taking place.

The other area is the number of people sent sometimes when they have checkstops. I've seen cases where they have a checkstop where our department and the RCMP were involved in it. They had 20 vehicles doing a fisheries checkstop on a Father's Day south of Calling Lake, where I come from. You know, they did not need 20 staff or 20 vehicles to do a minor checkstop of that nature. I said: surely, we can do a better job than that in managing our resources within the department.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why has there not been any priority or focused spending for hunters and anglers so that they can conduct necessary fish and wildlife surveys and better manage the resources in the province?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, we have a fisheries strategy. Of course, that member would not know of it because she's not part of the government. She's the opposition. The sky is always falling on the opposition. In fact, they don't even listen to the answer when you try to answer after they ask a question. But that's fine. I'll channel it through you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Thank you. I want the minister to know that I am listening.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Energy minister knows no shame when it comes to spinning the fact that power prices are way up since deregulation. Now the minister has taken to calling Manitoba a communist jurisdiction to deflect questions about why Manitoba's power rates are stable while Alberta's have increased 60 per cent since 2000. The minister has gone from being the Baghdad Bob of energy deregulation to the Joe McCarthy of high power bills. To the minister: how can the minister justify his position that the 60 per cent . . .

The Speaker: Okay. We have a question. We have a question. [interjections] Please, please, please. Just a second. I'm going to recognize the minister.

Mr. Mar: Okay, Bob.

The Speaker: Whoa. We are exuberant today with all those personality things.

Okay. We've got a question.

Mr. Smith: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We justify those statements by the very careful use of the facts.

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to restate my first question, and that is: how does the minister justify his position that the 60 per cent hike over four years with bigger spikes in between is nothing more than a simple cost-of-living increase?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member knows full well that the cost of electricity has dropped 24 per cent in the rural areas of Alberta in the calendar year 2004, and he knows that his own bill has dropped 20 per cent. Why don't we have a look at his own bill, and we'll just have a discussion on that?

Mr. Mason: Mr. Speaker, given that the New Democrats have tabled hundreds of power bills that have gone up and thousands of names on petitions calling for an end to deregulation, when will the minister table even one single residential bill that has gone down since deregulation began, not just in the last year when these riders came off?

Mr. Smith: Well, all I can say, Mr. Speaker, is stay tuned.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Petroleum Reserves

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the livelihood of ordinary Albertans and the strong economy of Alberta depends a great deal on confidence in the petroleum industry and resources, given that the natural resources in Alberta belong to Albertans – my question today is to the Minister of Energy – could the minister tell Albertans how Alberta's petroleum reserves are categorized and estimated?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is very much a question of information. I think that I can start by talking about the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. This organization on an annual basis publishes a document called Alberta's reserves, and through careful analysis and the use of skilled individuals in reservoir technology and the core analysis and in volumetric calculation as well as economic forecasting and economic use of price models, they are able to come up with specific reserve numbers.

Just for an example, Mr. Speaker, the 174 billion barrels of the Alberta oil sands that have been put forth with the U.S. Department of Energy last April and accepted by them as well as the world Oil and Gas Journal – that data comes from over 56,000 wells that have been drilled in the area of the oil sands, analyzed, as well as from over 6,000 core samples that remain in the possession of the Alberta government through the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board in a building directly adjacent to the University of Calgary.

Mr. Cao: My supplemental question is to the same minister. Mr. Speaker, given that there is recent news about unethical business cases in other parts of the world allegedly delaying the release of petroleum reserve estimates that may have negative impacts on their own companies in the financial market, how does the minister ensure that Alberta natural resource estimates, including reserves from oil companies, are consistently and correctly done and released?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've heard comments, particularly from this side, saying that it's a very good question. It is a good question because we've seen what occurs with specific companies that get into difficulty about how petroleum reserves are stated. Although most shares of oil and gas companies are traded on price-earning multiples and on cash flows, the statement of reserves reflects the net worth of that company. So from a macro basis we use the numbers from the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, because anybody who's a resource developer in this province must submit a core sample. The well logs, the information about the various wells themselves – and I may even recommend a great publication called the Canadian Discovery Digest that outlines these logs – will tell us about the reserves. But we do not take the word of the individual oil companies. We use the EUB to calculate a gross quantity of our reserves.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. My last supplemental question is to the same minister. What are the latest estimates of Alberta petroleum reserves in comparison with the major producing area in the world?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, we're number two in the world, which I think is very important. Number one is Saudi Arabia, which pumps right now about 9 million barrels a day. Last year, Mr. Speaker, Saudi Arabia, for the first time in 20 years, balanced their budget. They have produced some $74 billion worth of oil, and that allowed them to balance their budget. The budget of this province has been balanced since 1995, and the royalties that have been collected this year should be in excess of $8 billion.

2:30

The Speaker: Hon. members, very shortly I'll call on the first of four to participate today, but just a couple of comments because of the equity in the question period. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, your second question had a preamble, but I let it go by. So I compensated to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry with the length of his third question, which was almost as long as the continuous length of the questions provided by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, however.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie

Mr. Ducharme: Merci, M. le Président. Aujourd'hui c'est un plaisir pour moi de présenter à la Chambre une explication d'un événement Canadien qui s'appelle Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie.

Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie se déroulent à la grandeur du Canada sur une base annuelle. Durant cette période de temps on célèbre les communautés francophones afin de promouvoir la langue et la culture françaises tant par ses activités sociales et ses célébrations que par sa dimension humaine et communautaire. Les Rendez-vous contribuent à renforcer les liens entre les anglophones et les francophones du Canada et favorisent un plus grand respect entre ces deux communautés.

De plus en plus nos municipalités Albertaines se joignent aux Rendez-vous en tenant des cérémonies pour reconnaître leur communauté francophone. Parmi ces municipalités cette année on compte Edmonton, Lethbridge, Calgary. Félicitations à ces municipalités.

Ce matin à la rotonde de la Législature le Président de la Chambre était hôte d'une belle célébration dédiée à la reconnaissance de la contribution des francophones à notre province. C'est un geste que la communauté apprécie beaucoup, si on en juge par la participation importante de la communauté. Je tiens aussi à remercier mes collègues de l'Assemblée qui se sont dérangés pour assister à la célébration.

Cette sixième édition des Rendez-vous revêt une signification spéciale parce qu'elle marque l'ouverture des cérémonies du 400ième anniversaire de l'établissement du premier établissement permanent français en sol Nord-Américain. Plusieurs activités se dérouleront au cours des mois qui suivent dans les provinces maritimes pour mettre en évidence cet anniversaire.

En terminant, j'aimerais remercier le groupe d'étudiants et d'ainés de ma circonscription qui sont venus de Bonnyville pour célébrer avec nous.

Merci, M. le Président.

[Translation] Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my pleasure to provide the Assembly with information on a wonderful Canadian event called Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie. Les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie are held throughout Canada on a yearly basis, and this year they run from March 5 to March 21. During that period of time attention is focused on francophone communities with the idea of promoting French language and culture, as much through community and human relations as through social activities and celebrations.

Les Rendez-vous contribute to the reinforcement of links between francophones and anglophones in Canada by fostering greater respect between the two communities. More and more of our municipalities are joining in Les Rendez-vous by holding ceremonies to recognize their francophone communities. Edmonton, Lethbridge, Calgary are some of the municipalities that held flag-raising ceremonies to mark the launch of these celebrations. Congratulations to all of them.

This morning the office of the Speaker hosted a wonderful ceremony in the rotunda to recognize the contributions of the francophone community to our province. It was very much appreciated by the francophone community judging by the large attendance. I also want to thank my colleague MLAs who took time off their busy schedules to stop by.

The sixth edition of these Rendez-vous takes on a special meaning because they mark the beginning of a full year of celebration to recognize the 400th anniversary of the establishment of the first permanent French settlement in North America. A large number of activities are planned in the maritime provinces over the course of the year to celebrate this anniversary.

Once again I want to thank the group, composed of students and seniors, from my constituency who have come all the way from Bonnyville to celebrate this event with us.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [As submitted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Sour Gas Well Development

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to address an issue that is naturally of deep concern for my constituents. That is the application by Compton Petroleum that is currently in front of the EUB.

Mr. Speaker, Compton Petroleum is requesting permission of the EUB to drill an additional six wells into a site that has existed on the southeast corner of the city of Calgary for the past 30 years. They will argue that with new technology and additional wells they'll be able to remove the gas in approximately 11 years instead of 30. They'll also argue that it can be done safely.

As you can understand, my constituents have concerns about that argument. However, Mr. Speaker, there is a purpose, and the EUB is going to hear with their application whether that can be done. It will give those who disagree or have legitimate concerns about public safety the opportunity to intervene.

I've been working with the EUB, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that my constituents have an equal opportunity to voice those concerns. Whether they're the city of Calgary, the fire department, the Calgary health region, community groups, they all have a role to play. If the EUB is not convinced that an energy project can be constructed and operated safely, it will not allow that development to proceed.

For example, in December 2003 the EUB denied an application by Polar Resources to drill a critical sour gas well near the Whaleback area in southwestern Alberta because the company did not convince the EUB hearing panel that it could drill the well safely. Companies are responsible for understanding the natural risks and hazards associated with what they propose, and if necessary, as in this case, there's a transparent and impartial EUB hearing.

Last week Compton Petroleum of Canada requested that the EUB postpone the hearings on the development of these wells. The EUB is expected to respond to Compton's request in the next while to postpone the hearing until late summer or early fall in 2004. I want to reassure my constituents that the EUB will give them a fair hearing.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Seniors' Benefits

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Seniors feel that their programs have taken the brunt of this government's budget cutting over the last decade. A recent Alberta Council on Aging poll shows that this government has forced seniors to take from their food and health budgets for services that were once covered by the province. Forget having money for social activities and transportation; that was the first to go for many seniors.

Increases due to energy deregulation and mounting automobile insurance coupled with the elimination of seniors' exemption from health care premiums, the loss of universal funding for dental care, dentures, and eyeglasses, and the elimination of the education property tax exemption up to $1,000 have made merely existing a hardship for many Alberta seniors.

Seniors were willing to make some sacrifices for the good of the province, but they never counted on being left with virtually nothing. Now they're mobilizing through groups like the Coalition of Seniors Advocates, COSA, in Calgary and Seniors United Now, SUN, in the Edmonton area, and the Canadian Association of Retired Persons, CARP, now has an Edmonton branch.

Seniors want the same benefits they had before this government started paying down the debt on their backs. Middle-income seniors are being impoverished by this government. The Alberta Liberal opposition believes that seniors make a valuable contribution to the quality of life in Alberta and deserve our respect, and that's why we've developed an alternative.

The Alberta Liberal opposition wants to see universal dental and optical benefits for seniors reinstated, health care premiums eliminated, people in private health care facilities and homes included within the Protection for Persons in Care Act or similar stronger legislation, consistent capital funding provided for seniors' lodges, and a body set up specifically to investigate complaints of elder abuse, among others. We believe there is an alternative to forcing seniors to take food off their tables to pay for dentures and eyeglasses. We have a better solution.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Long-term Care Industry

Ms Kryczka: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As an MLA I've heard about the challenges facing the long-term care industry in Alberta from constituents in my Calgary-West office to representatives of the Alberta Long Term Care Association at the Standing Policy Committee on Health and Community Living. Quality of life for residents in the long-term care centres has improved due largely to the 2003 accommodation rate increase, but there are still quality-of-care needs that need to be addressed by government by additional funding through the health regions.

What is rarely reported on or spoken about, though, Mr. Speaker, are the many good-news stories that exist, such as Carewest's dementia care training program, supportive pathways, that will be offered to 3,000 front-line health care workers in Alberta. The benefits of this program will be far reaching as close to 75 per cent of long-term care residents in resident facilities have Alzheimer's disease and other related dementias.

Another story is that of the Capital Care Group celebrating 40 years of caring in 2004. Their well-known reputation has been built on visionary leadership, excellent management, education, and resources, as well as dedicated staff. Capital Care staff are a big reason why residents and families choose this organization for continuing care services.

Mr. Speaker, the truly unsung heroes, who care for over 14,000 residents in Alberta's long-term care facilities, are the staff, who are dedicated, skilled, and compassionate professionals who want to care for residents to the best of their ability but are frequently challenged; for example, when resident care needs exceed staffing levels or when resident behaviours prove almost impossible to contain or control.

I have met residents and staff in many long-term care centres and have come to fully appreciate the challenges to which I refer. Families and friends do a wonderful job as caregivers, but there comes a time when one spouse or parent needs the level of care provided in the long-term care centre. Who better to care for them on a daily basis than knowledgeable and caring staff?

I suggest to this Assembly today that we all make a serious effort to walk a mile in the shoes of our long-term care staff and award them the recognition and respect that is truly deserved.

Thank you.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a graph from the Parkland Institute report released this morning showing that provincial health spending is at about the same level as 1993 once inflation and population growth are factored in.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the appropriate numbers of correspondence referred to yesterday in question period. It's a letter from the regional clinical department head of the Calgary health region to Mrs. Kathy Briant relating to concerns in emergency wards in Calgary.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of Women and Non-Standard Work: A Grassroots Approach. This is a project of the Womanspace Resource Centre in Lethbridge, Alberta, released in November 2003, written by Jane Barter Moulaison and researched by Barter Moulaison, Lisa Lambert, and Jackie Woodworth. It has been partially funded by the Alberta Community Development human rights, multiculturalism, and citizenship fund.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter from Marianne J. Murray to the hon. Premier. It is in regard to the devastation of electricity deregulation and how it has affected a business.

My second tabling is a letter dated March 16, 2004. It is a letter that I've written on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition for Alberta in regard to the opening of the border with the Americans so we can ship live cattle.

Thank you.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a Standing Order 40 application.

Seniors' Benefits

Ms Blakeman:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to reinstate the universal optical and dental benefits program for seniors.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I rise on a Standing Order 40 application to present a motion to this Assembly. It has already been distributed to the members. Of course, Standing Order 40 applications are to be made in a case of urgent and pressing necessity, and it is asking for the Legislature to take a specific action.

Regarding the urgency, over the last few years I've been receiving increasing numbers of letters and phone calls from seniors groups urging the government to reinstate their benefits that were taken away a decade ago. In recent months the calls for the reinstatement of seniors' benefits from groups like COSA, the Coalition of Seniors Advocates, and Seniors United Now, also known as SUN, have become even more urgent as the people they represent have become more desperate.

Over the past decade Alberta seniors have seen the universal benefits they had enjoyed dwindle away to almost nothing. Middle-income seniors were hit the hardest since they now qualify for virtually no seniors' programs yet still bear the burden of increases to utility rates, car insurance, and long-term care. This was illustrated by a recent Alberta Council on Aging poll that showed that after social activities and transportation seniors were cutting into their food and health budgets to pay their bills. I believe that it is urgent that we address that concern.

The response from the government has been to reduce seniors' benefits by allowing the increase of other user fees that seniors have to pay and increasing health care premiums and soon likely Alberta Blue Cross.

I urge all hon. members of the House to grant unanimous consent for the motion and to reinstate the universal optical and dental benefits programs for seniors.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent denied]

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received a certain message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

The Sergeant-at-Arms: Order!

The Speaker: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits interim supply estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, I now wish to table the 2004-05 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority to the Legislative Assembly and the government for the two months ending May 31, 2004. By that date, it is anticipated that spending authorization will have been provided for the entire fiscal year ending March 31, 2005. As announced previously, we are tabling Budget 2004 on March 24.

When passed, these interim supply estimates will authorize approximate spending of $5 billion in operating expense and equipment and inventory purchases, $133.5 million in capital investment, $66.4 million in nonbudgetary disbursements, and $313.6 million in lottery fund payments.

Interim supply amounts are based on department's needs and fund government programs and services until the end of May. While many payments are monthly, other payments are due at the beginning of the quarter and fiscal year. Some payments are seasonal.

head: Government Motions

11. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2004-05 interim supply estimates, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 11 carried]

12. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2004-05 interim supply estimates shall be two days.

[Government Motion 12 carried]

Second Reading

Bill 21 Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Cernaiko: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill 21, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004.

This bill proposes a number of minor amendments to the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003, which received Royal Assent last spring.

The need for these amendments arose during the process of drafting regulations and preparing for the implementation of this new child welfare legislation. The amendments in Bill 21 are largely a matter of housekeeping. They will clarify wording in places where there are inconsistencies or ambiguities and will also ensure that the act is aligned with the Family Law Act and the Vital Statistics Act. This means making the wording consistent between the acts and allowing for the consolidation of some of the regulations. The amendments will also ensure that children receiving services under the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act will have access to services provided by the child and youth advocate.

These amendments, Mr. Speaker, will also allow for a smoother transition between the existing and new legislation by, for example, providing sufficient time for facilities to apply for licensing under the new provisions. Other amendments include clarifying that a foster parent or someone with a very close relationship with the child can apply for a review of a director's decision and represent a child's wishes during a review and appeal process.

Mr. Speaker, the amendments in Bill 21 will fine-tune Alberta's new child welfare legislation. This is important legislation that will help us better support and protect Alberta's children, youth, and families.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 21.
Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to the member speaking about Bill 21, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004. The number of bills and amendments to the original Child Welfare Act are becoming numerous, and when I saw that this was on the Order Paper, it really made me wonder if things are being thought out as thoroughly as they should be. If they are, why do we keep finding ourselves back here with more and more amendments? Each time we're told that the amendments are minor, and that's only a prelude to a set of amendments that will be tabled the next session.

I think that some of the departments have managed to put up the draft regulations before we have to consider the bill in the Legislature. If I heard the member correctly, he indicated that these amendments are a result of changes needed after the regulations had been drafted. So, again, maybe it would be better if the department followed the lead of other departments like the Department of Justice, where we get a look at the regulations and, more importantly, where that department gets a look at the regulations and can make the adjustments needed in the bills before they appear in front of us in the Legislature.

That having been said, Mr. Speaker, I doubt if things will change, and I predict that we'll be back here next session with another amendment to the Child Welfare Act because something else has been overlooked.

There are a number of changes in the bill. It redefines the job of the child advocate and includes the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. It allows the advocate to delegate his duties to people within the sphere of the youngster's life.

We have always had difficulty with the positioning of the child and youth advocate, Mr. Speaker. We believe that it should be a legitimate officer of the Legislature and that answering to the minister is an inappropriate position for the advocate to be placed in. As far as the amendments don't deal with that, we feel that it's a mistake, and that's a position we've had over the past number of years.

The changes in the alternative dispute resolution are going to be again defined by regulations, and I would ask if those regulations have been drafted. I guess there are some other questions with respect to the disclosure of documents created by the alternative dispute resolution. It's being broadened to include any documents that affect the development of a child, and when you think of it, Mr. Speaker, that really almost opens the door to anything.

How do you determine what isn't going to affect the development of a child? I guess the question it also raises is: who's going to protect a child's personal information after the dispute is settled? So there are a number of questions around this particular provision that I think need to be clarified before we proceed.

The bill removes the financial contributions that the family may have to provide when their child goes into the service and allows the court to demand treatment for both the child and guardian. It seems to give the court the ability to make decisions without regulated control on what is required to bring the family back together. At least that's the impression that we're left with.

The bill further changes the amount of time for which a court can make a secure services order from 10 to five days. It forces the family guardians to be notified by any means necessary within one day if this secure services order is given by the courts. They may apply for five days to stabilize the child or assess the child and prepare a plan for services. There's also a set of information that is supplied to the child when a secure services order is passed. Some minor changes: change in the amount of time from two to three days for the review of the secure services order.

The bill also repealed all the information about how Children's Services would obtain child support and allows a director to apply for child support to the courts. I think this is a section that we have to look at carefully, Mr. Speaker. It deletes a large part about child support from the original act, and it removes the process by which directors would act to obtain child support. The question it raises, of course, is: what's going to be done now? Does the child support law handle this?

The act repeals the law that requires a native child to be registered under the Indian Act and removes the requirement for all documents to be sealed that are used to require a consent of the minister or the court. Again, it raises the question: how are these children going to maintain their treaty status after adoption? And why was this particular change brought in?

There's now an 18-month wait before residential facilities will have to be properly licensed, and the minister may also vary the terms and the conditions to which that licence is subject, Mr. Speaker. I guess the question is: why? Why does the minister need this control? And why was this considered an appropriate time period?

Another provision is that the court may direct a child to have legal representation if the court believes the views of the child are not being adequately represented. It further allows the court to ask for records from Children's Services if required in a case, but they still can't reveal the client or guardian. The bill has spelled out exactly what would be required to get a record and how that information would be treated once before a court. It gives the director licence to publish the name and personal information of a client if they deem it in the interest of justice.

The bill is, as the mover indicated, an amendment. Many of the clauses are housekeeping clauses, but there are some larger issues that I think we deserve an answer to before we proceed with the bill. Hopefully, we'll receive those answers from the minister or the mover of the bill.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

One final provision that I think again deserves some explanation is the change in the amount of time you can sentence a parent or guardian who causes a child to be in need of protective services from 12 months to 24 months. While we sympathize with that provision, Mr. Speaker, two years is really a long period out of the child's life, and that's particularly true of a very young child. Again, some explanation of why there has been this extension of that provision would be of interest.

I think those are the comments I have at this stage, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to just raise a couple of questions and concerns briefly touched on by my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Mill Woods. I'm particularly interested in knowing the history and the reasoning behind section 15 in the bill, which is – here we go again – really amending the old sections 57.2 and 57.5 to 57.9. Now, I know that we're not to be going into word-by-word and clause-by-clause analysis of a bill at this point. We're really talking about the principle of the bill, but I'm struggling to approve of the principle of this bill when I don't understand why these actions are being contemplated.

Specifically what's being considered here is that the sections talking about support orders – we would usually call them maintenance orders – are being eliminated from the originating act, the Child Welfare Act, and a very short section is being left in which essentially says that if the director of child welfare has a child in custody or has a temporary guardianship order or a permanent guardianship order, I suppose, or the director has entered into a family enhancement agreement, the director can enter into an agreement whereby the guardian of the child agrees to pay child support. The only other section that's left in here is that that doesn't prevent the director of child welfare from also applying to the courts for child support. That's it.

Now, what's being removed from the bill with this amendment is everything else. Well, what does that mean? Just let me briefly go over some of the things that it means. It's taking out the set-up, you know, if a director of child welfare takes over guardianship of the child. They, obviously, have been able in the past to go and seek an agreement or an order or apply, according to the form prescribed in the regulations, to the court for basically child support. Traditionally what we've had is the situation with maintenance enforcement where the maintenance is usually paid through the custodial parent. I'm struggling to see how this is still going to work out in this new arrangement.

Traditionally, if the custodial parent is receiving benefits from the government, the government has set it up that they have a right to claim the maintenance money that would usually be flowing through the custodial parent to the child, especially if there are arrears. Then we say that the government has subrogated that money; they've claimed it for themselves. They've repaid themselves the money that they are offering in assistance, and nobody seems to have a problem with that at this time.

When the government goes to chase down that money, they've been pretty vigorous in doing it mostly because they're getting it for themselves. That has had a lot to do with their tenacity in trying to get the regular payments established and also in pursuing any arrears, any debt that has built up as a result of this. We have a maintenance enforcement program to do that, and it also, of course, has been expanded and now will assist people whose maintenance orders are not subrogated to the government. That was the genesis of it.

So we have a child welfare agreement here that is now removing all of the other rules around how the director of child welfare goes about establishing support orders or obtaining money from a guardian in support of a child. It's striking out sections like an order of the court can be retroactive to the commencement date of the child coming into the custody of the government. If the court is going to make an order requiring a guardian to pay, they have to consider certain things like the income or the earning capacity and the financial resources of the guardian or the parent. They have to consider the value of the estate, if there is an estate that's being held in trust for the child. They have to take into consideration the needs of the child. That whole section is now being taken out and another whole section around review.

We traditionally have had a system where someone is always able to appeal a decision. They can go to a higher level or a different level and appeal a decision that's been made. That's being removed in this section. So what we have in this amendment act is that it's proposing to strike out all of these things that I'm talking about. It would be striking out the ability of a guardian or a parent or a trustee that has been ordered to pay child support, their ability to apply to the court for a review of the order. That's now being removed.

The court when looking at an order under this section can decide to “vary, suspend or terminate the order or may reduce or cancel [any] arrears.” That's being removed. So everything to do with support orders is being taken out except for the first two sections that I talked about; that is, that the director of child welfare can seek an order whereby a guardian would agree to pay child support – it doesn't say to whom; I'm presuming to the government – also that that doesn't stop the director of child welfare from going to the courts to seek a court order for child support. All the rest of the set-up, the rules around how we usually deal with child support are being removed, and I've already listed quite a few of them, including that review process and the ability of the courts to vary the order that's in place.

It sets out that an agreement or an order that was under this would terminate, and then it gave the conditions under which it would automatically terminate, like if the child is adopted or if the child died or if the child, you know, reaches the age of majority or if the child married, for example. All of those would be reasons that the court order would be deemed fulfilled or null and void. That section is being removed.

We also have a section where it sets out the responsibilities of the director of maintenance enforcement under this arrangement. It makes me a little nervous that all of this is going away, and I'm seeing two pretty narrow sections being left in place without all the rest of these supporting rules. So I'm looking to the sponsor of the bill to explain to me on the record why this is being removed. There may well be a very simple explanation, but I get a little nervous when I see things like this happening and I'm not hearing why being articulated.

Those are the concerns that I'm seeing because I'm a proponent of the maintenance enforcement program and of court-ordered support for children. I'm not sure why I'm seeing the government abolish all the rules that we have been operating under or what we understand has been the relationship we expect to have there, why it's all being taken out, including avenues of appeal, when the thing starts, when the thing ends, how one appeals it, how one buries it. All of those rules are now struck, and I would like to know why. How does the mover of the bill anticipate all of this is going to be handled? I sure hope I'm not going to be told that this is going to be under regulations now, because that will make me really unhappy, and you know that when I get unhappy, I get wordy, usually late at night.

So if I could hear from the mover of the bill why that is happening, it would make me more interested in supporting this bill in principle at second reading. At this point I will have to reserve my opinion. Well, actually, that probably means I'll have to not support it in second reading until I can hear some sort of explanation for this. There's something wrong here, and I'd like to hear the answer for it.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a second time]

Bill 22
Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, for second reading.

Like last year's electoral boundaries commission act, the responsibility for carrying this bill on behalf of government rests with the Department of Justice and hence the reason I'm bringing it forward, although it deals with acts which are really the purview of the Legislative Assembly itself.

The bill makes amendments to legislation based primarily on numerous recommendations made by the Chief Electoral Officer. This will help to ensure that our legislation is up to date prior to the next election. I must say off the top, Mr. Speaker, that I'd like to recognize Alberta's Chief Electoral Officer, Brian Fjeldheim, and all of the people who work with him. The staff at Elections Alberta had a busy year last year with the whole redistribution process and working with the commission on that behest. Their efforts on behalf of all Albertans ensure that we can be proud of our electoral events, that they're conducted fairly and in an unbiased and impartial manner, that all parties and stakeholders, regardless of political party or viewpoint, have a set of rules and can abide by those rules. Albertans can be proud of their democratic experience.

Tabling this bill does not, I hasten to add, indicate anything with respect to an early election call, as was suggested by the Member for Edmonton-Centre following the press conference that we had about the agenda for this year's session when I mentioned the Election Act. The question of an election call is not in my purview. This is simply a bill to update and improve the Election Act, based primarily, as I said, on input from the Chief Electoral Officer.

For the most part the bill contains minor housekeeping and updating of the legislation. It makes several important and significant changes, however, and I'd just like to highlight a few of them for the Assembly. Bill 22 makes numerous amendments to four acts: the Election Act, the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, and the Alberta Corporate Tax Act. I'll go through the key amendments in each of these acts.

There are more than 150 amendments being made to the Election Act. That may seem like a daunting task, but most of them, as I say, are amendments of a housekeeping nature that reflect needed changes recommended by the Chief Electoral Officer. Because the act is very specific and quite codified, small details that one might not otherwise expect to find in an act, like allowing the authority to hire and delegate certain responsibilities to an executive assistant, those sorts of things, are included right in the act.

Dr. Taylor: Is one of the changes an election every 10 years?

Mr. Hancock: The hon. minister from Cypress-Medicine Hat has advocated 10-year terms in the act, but I can assure him that most of us are quite happy to go back to the electorate and get our mandate renewed on a regular basis.

The bill will update and clarify a description of the duties of the Chief Electoral Officer and his office, amend several definitions such as the poll book, official agent, and seniors' lodge to ensure that they're up to date and deal with more current terms. Existing legislation also addresses how candidates' names appear on the ballot, updates the format of how names appear on the ballot. The change will basically boost the font size.

As you can tell, Mr. Speaker, some of the things that we're dealing with in this act are very, very detailed, not like you'd expect to find in most acts but for the clarity of ensuring that electors, candidates, parties can look at the act and see all the rules clearly spelled out.

Other changes of significance in this act include amendments that will improve accessibility to apartment complexes and mobile-home parks for enumerators as well as for candidates and campaign workers. Again, we're trying to ensure here that Albertans have every opportunity to participate in their elections, so making sure that they're on the voters list is absolutely essential, of course, and making sure that they have access to information so that they can be informed prior to voting is also essential. In keeping with the tradition of the act, making sure that access is available for enumerators and candidates and campaign workers is essential. Enumerators will also be required to visit a residence at least twice more after an unsuccessful first visit.

Other amendments will help to ensure the accuracy of the register of electors, also known as the list of eligible voters, as well as control access to that personal information and protect the privacy of voters.

One very significant change will significantly improve the flexibility of the way we use advance polls. Under existing legislation advance polls can only be accessed by a select group of people under very specific circumstances. Eliminating the limitation will make this option available for even more Albertans who may wish to vote but for whatever reason are unable to get out to the polling station.

Mr. Speaker, we're always concerned about the turnout of voters and making sure that people have every opportunity to vote, and I think this change is a significant one, because while you're not encouraging everybody to vote in the advance polls, often people don't vote simply because of inconvenience. Opening up the advance polls so that people can vote at them without having to sign a declaration saying that they're going to be absent from their normal residence on election day makes it available and perhaps will encourage even more people to get out to the polls.

I would indicate – this is not an amendment – that in the Election Act there's a provision for a person to vote at the returning office any time during the writ period, I believe, after nominations have ceased. Again, the key here is to ensure that all Albertans have the opportunity to participate and are encouraged to participate in elections.

I wouldn't suggest that this is the final solution to that broader issue of encouraging a higher turnout of voters, but I think anything we can do to encourage Albertans to take advantage of their right to vote is a step in the right direction.

Along this line, the rules that govern the use of special ballots are also clarified under Bill 22. A new change to this area of the act will allow secure voting for those Albertans who feel that their personal safety may be at risk if they appear in person at the polls. Again, this will not necessarily be used by a wide number of people, but in keeping with the concept of protection of privacy and in keeping with the concept that there may be people who do not wish their location to be disclosed or do not wish to be accessible because they fear that they're at risk either from a family member or some other threat, this change will make it possible for them to participate without endangering themselves.

Special ballots that are cast by mail are requested throughout the election period in writing, by phone, fax, or in person and have traditionally been reserved for special circumstances such as physical incapacity. This amendment will extend these circumstances to those people who feel that their safety may be at risk. With our co-ordinated efforts, as I was talking about, to address family violence, including the work being done by the Minister of Children's Services, this is but another example of how we can help to ensure the safety of those people that feel that they are at risk.

With that, I'd move on to the other major act that's being amended by Bill 22. The Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act helps ensure the transparency and accountability of candidate fundraising and party finances. One amendment will allow the office of the Chief Electoral Officer to publish candidates' expenses on the Internet. Another amendment will clarify that donations raised at a fundraising function are considered contributions and are therefore subject to disclosure. Other changes will clarify that public institutions and their subsidiaries, such as municipalities, regional health authorities, school boards, are prohibited from making political contributions. Another amendment will allow the Chief Electoral Officer to cancel the registration of a political party if it fails to run a candidate in a general election or senatorial election.

Other changes are significant in that they increase the maximum contribution limits to a party's constituency associations and individual candidates for the first time since 1980. These amounts are being increased by 33 per cent, which I believe is significant. However, it's been nearly 25 years since the numbers were first put in place, so the increase is not, in my view, unreasonable.

Just for the record I'll go over each of the changes. The maximum contribution for individual candidates will be increased from $1,500 to $2,000 and from $7,500 to $10,000 in total for candidates of each of the registered parties. The maximum contribution to individual constituency associations will rise from $750 to $1,000 and from $3,750 to $5,000 in total for a party's constituency association.

One other item which I should've mentioned perhaps under the Election Act is the increase in the deposit. I believe the increase is to $500 from currently $200 or $250. The purpose for the increase is to give the Chief Electoral Officer a tool to encourage candidates to file their financial statements on a timely basis under the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act.

Formerly a candidate would put up a deposit, and if they achieved 50 per cent of the winning number of votes, they'd be entitled to the return of their deposit. Now that the deposit is doubled, they still get the first 50 per cent, the first half, back if they meet the first test; that is, 50 per cent of the winning candidate's votes. They get the second half of the deposit back regardless of the number of votes they get if they file their financial statement on a timely basis. This is a tool that was asked for by the Chief Electoral Officer just to encourage candidates to make sure that those filings are made.

Obviously, the Alberta Income Tax Act and the Alberta Corporate Tax Act have to be amended in a corollary fashion with respect to the maximum contributions and donations. These amendments increase the political contribution tax credit for both individuals and corporations. Like the maximum contributions named above, the amount has been $750 since 1980. Under Bill 22 it will be increased to $1,000.

In conclusion, the changes under this bill are primarily those that were brought forward by the Chief Electoral Officer. Obviously, he didn't make comment on the amount of the contributions, but with respect to the operations of the Election Act those are primarily concerns that he's put forward to modernize and improve the act and improve his ability to work with his staff in running fair elections in the province. So I would encourage support from members of the Assembly.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with interest that I rise and participate in the debate this afternoon at second reading of Bill 22. I certainly was a keen listener to the hon.

Minister of Justice and Attorney General's remarks in regard to Bill 22.

We are looking at changes to four acts, 150 amendments. It is, as it was described by the hon. minister, an update and an improvement in some areas, but I don't know if it is an improvement in all areas. Certainly, there was a discussion with the Chief Electoral Officer of the province, but I wonder what other consultations went on in regard to this legislation. [interjection] Now, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar seems interested in participating in debate, and I will be anxious to listen to his comments in regard to this bill as well.

If one were to look at this bill and think that if there was one purpose and one purpose only and it was to increase voter turnout rates in the province, then this bill would certainly be worthy of support. We need to improve voter participation in elections in this province; there's no doubt about that. It astounds me. Some communities which have the most to gain and the most to lose from good or bad public policy have very low voter turnout rates, and anything we can do to improve that should be supported.

Now, I believe the hon. minister stated that Albertans should be given every opportunity to participate in elections, and I agree with that. But I do have some questions at this time in regard to this bill, and section 13 certainly comes to mind.

The Chief Electoral Officer may assign, in respect of each elector whose information is contained in the register, a unique and permanent identifier number consisting of numbers or letters, or a combination of numbers and letters, to be used to assist in distinguishing an elector from another elector or verifying the information about an elector.

On first glance this whole idea of having a UIN, or a unique identifier number, to me would be a form of branding. It is, in my view, at this time, unless there's further explanation from government, Orwellian, and it certainly would be unnecessary.

What is precisely the purpose of this unique identifier number? Why is it necessary to have a series of letters and numbers to identify each voter in this province on an electoral list? What's going on with this? Are there problems that we don't know about with the current system, where all the information is in the poll book? I don't think there is. Is this government at some time contemplating going to on-line voting or Internet voting? Is that why we're going to brand Albertans with one more number?

We have a driver's licence number; we have a social insurance number. Now we may be assigned by the Chief Electoral Officer this UIN. I think members of this House and certainly Albertans are owed an explanation as to why this branding may occur.

We can look at some of the attempts at Internet voting in other jurisdictions, and one would have to say that to have confidence in this process would be stretching it. I'm privileged, I believe, to have read in the recent past an editorial observation by Adam Cohen in the New York Times dated Sunday, February 29. Mr. Cohen writes an interesting piece on electronic voting. If we are setting up in this bill the foundation for future attempts at this in Alberta, then we have to have a much broader debate, and there has to be a much broader consultation than the one that was done in regard to this bill.

Certainly, there are both sides to the story in America. There are both sides to the story in Canada. Many organizations, including the political party that I'm a member of, have tried successfully and unsuccessfully various methods of voting. Mr. Cohen writes:

But modern technology is creating a whole new generation of conspiracy theories – easy to imagine and, unless we're careful, impossible to disprove. The nation is rushing to adopt electronic voting, but there is a disturbing amount of evidence that, at least in its current form, it is overly vulnerable to electoral mischief.

There are a growing number of electronic voting skeptics. There are a number of widely reported election results that some pundits have said have been a surprise.

Now, I would urge all members of this Assembly and all members of the public who have Internet access to check out www.blackboxvoting.org and see for themselves one side of this issue, because we have a lot of debate that has to occur if this is the intention of adding this UIN to the voters list. Is this what the future is? Or should we remain with our traditions, particularly in this democracy, where you go, you get your ballot, you mark it to the candidate of your choice, and you put it in the ballot box?

I don't think schemes such as this are going to increase voter participation. In fact, I think it would be the other way around. There would be fewer people interested in voting. Mr. Cohen has a lot to say about electronic voting, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to read his article. In fact, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will table that for the benefit of the Assembly tomorrow.

Now, we're also looking in section 17 at adding the unique identifier number, and the same questions would apply there, Mr. Speaker.

We can go further on, and we can see where we're going to increase the amount that a candidate has to pay to enter the election, whether or not they are successful or whether or not they reach the threshold to have their money returned to them. We are increasing the amount from $200 to $500 to file papers.

I wonder why that is necessary. Why did we more than double that amount? Democracy is apparently getting expensive in Alberta. I don't think we can prevent candidates who want to enter an election or participate in an election campaign from doing so, and I'm afraid this fee will do exactly that. It will reduce the number of candidates in an election.

I think that in a parliament, in any parliament, the more voices and the more views that are expressed, the better government you have and the stronger democracy you have. There are some political parties – I'm not saying the one that I'm a member of; others would say that – that certainly would have a great deal of difficulty with the $500. There may be a candidate or a person in any constituency across this province who may want to run as an independent and may not have that $500 and may have some excellent views on some very important issues, and I think their voice should be heard. I don't think we should be putting a price on democracy and making it unaffordable with that amendment.

Now, further on here – and perhaps this question, Mr. Speaker, will be addressed during committee – in section 116 as amended, an application for a special ballot. We are now allowing that to occur by electronic mail, or e-mail. Is a signature going to be no longer required as a result of this to get a special ballot? Certainly, the hon. minister talked about this idea of having a special secure ballot. I believe that's how the hon. minister addressed that issue. How many special secure ballots does the minister estimate will be issued during an election? I think that's a good idea. I think that's a really good idea in case there are people who for one reason or another do not want to be identified at a polling station or do not want to come near a polling station for obvious reasons. That is one amendment that I certainly at this time would support.

I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is going to have some questions or some concerns around the repealing of section 158 and the interference with the right to access. There's going to be a penalty if one is found guilty of an offence and "liable to a fine of not more than $1000." I, too, have been limited or banned from certain premises.

Mr. Hancock: It's a small wonder.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. minister says that it's a small wonder.

In a democracy during an election everyone should be allowed free and easy access to the voters, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is going to talk about that. But I think that in this case the fine should be increased. Everything else seems to be going up in these amendments. Why is that fine not going up?

An apartment manager, for instance, may not take particular pleasure to one party – let's say that it's the Progressive Conservative Party – and prevents that candidate from accessing that building and repeatedly throws out the candidate. So I think we need to have a look at this. This has to be enforced vigorously. Not only is it the responsibility of the respective campaign teams to know the law and present the proper documentation to building managers in this case, but I think the electoral office has to make more of an effort to ensure that managers of buildings know what the law is and that each and every candidate has the right to canvass there between the hours of 9 in the morning and I believe 9 in the evening.

Again, I'm sure there is good reason for this from the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, but in section 163 why are we instituting under this act that no prosecutions will take place without the consent of the Chief Electoral Officer? Now, the Chief Electoral Officer is going to have the final say in this matter. Would not in some cases perhaps a Crown prosecutor? Why is that amendment in there, "consent to prosecute"?

Now, the hon. minister spoke about this earlier. In my view, this is wrong because it's less public notice. It looks like we are attempting to repeal here the amount of the expenses in total based on the financial statement submitted by each candidate pursuant to section 43 to be published in a newspaper circulated in the electoral division of that candidate within 30 days after the date on which the financial statement is approved by the Chief Electoral Officer.

Why are we repealing that? As I understand, this information will be published on the web site of the Chief Electoral Officer. Well, I would like to see, in fairness to those Albertans – and that's roughly half. This would be the repeal of section 4 under the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, part 2. Why could we not have both Internet access and have that published in a newspaper as well, particularly for seniors who don't have access to the Internet?

If we're going to put these fees up from $200 to $500 and we're going to collect other fees for distribution of information, surely it shouldn't be a matter of cost. If we're going to put these fees up, we can still afford to rent a little space in the Edmonton Examiner, for instance. I don't think that is in the interests of openness and transparency; I'm sorry.

We're going to increase donations to political parties. The federal government is changing their laws regarding campaign donations, changing their laws significantly, yet here we are increasing campaign donations. Certainly, there are those political wags who would say, "Well, that should benefit the Alberta Liberals," because we have a lot of outstanding debt. But what sort of presentations were made to the chief electoral office to urge the office, as I understand it, to recommend that we have these changes and that we increase significantly what can be donated to a respective political party?

Certainly, there are many issues, but in my first look at this bill, Bill 22, Mr. Speaker, I would have to say that there are improvements. But I'm not convinced that this update is going to improve Albertans' voting participation rate. I can't understand why we need this UIN, this unique identifier number. People are regulated enough in this society, and I can't understand it unless at some time in the very near future there are plans to implement electronic voting.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that I can put a couple of comments on the record in second reading on Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. I am glad to see this coming forward. There are a number of issues that have been long-standing problems, which, I believe, there is an attempt to address in this proposed legislation.

There are a couple of other, more global issues I want to address around this bill before I get to the specific issue of so-called free access. I've been saying for some time that we must as legislators bite the bullet, take the big step, do the right thing, all of those clichés. But what it boils down to is that we have an increasing distance between the electorate, between citizens, and the democratic process. They don't feel engaged in it. They don't feel that it's fair. They don't feel that their vote counts or that they're able to effect any change if that's, in fact, what they're seeking. That's problematic.

I mean, at the outset people laugh and say: oh, you know, come on; it's just because you're in the Official Opposition and you want everything to go your way. But I think there's a larger problem here. In Alberta we now accept as a given that we're dealing with a 50 per cent voter turnout. That's bad, and we know it's bad, but at what point do we say: can I get the government, can I get my colleagues in this Assembly to admit that there really is a problem? At 40 per cent voter turnout? At 35 per cent voter turnout? At 30 per cent voter turnout? How much moral sway, how much right to be there does a government have if they've been elected by only 30 per cent of the people that are eligible to vote?

I think at a certain point it's sort of the opposite of critical mass. In a critical mass situation you're trying to get enough people in place that they affect the outcome of what you're trying to do. We talked about the representation of women and getting enough women elected into political office to start to affect the policies and procedures of government. What I'm talking about is the opposite. At a certain point I think we lose the moral authority to be legislators when we can't attract enough people at some percentage to support us being elected into official office.

So we really need to address this. I think there needs to be wider change than what's anticipated in this bill, but I'm willing to say okay for the small detail stuff and in some cases for the larger detail stuff that is being looked after in this bill, and I am glad to see it.

We still need to go back and look at things like the first past the post system that we're using right now and the electoral boundary system that we have in place. It does make some votes more valuable. It particularly makes rural votes more valuable than urban votes, for example, and since we have two-thirds of Alberta's population now living in the metropolitan areas of Edmonton and Calgary, that becomes significant. When those people get angry enough that their vote isn't counting the same, we have a problem here.

So there is a need to address that larger democracy challenge here. I think we do need to be looking at things like probably a hybrid or mixed system of proportional representation and first past the post to sort of ease into it, but we have to make some major changes in what we're doing.

The second sort of overall contextual thing that I want to talk about is younger voting, youth voting. I think, again, this is about being able to attract a different generation of people to what we're doing. It's quite common that younger people don't vote. I mean,

I couldn't wait to get to my 18th birthday and be able to vote. It was important to me, but it wasn't to most of my colleagues at the time, and I think that's still true.

The difference is that up to now we knew that people would learn to vote. Maybe they weren't interested when they were 18 or 19 or 20, but when they started to get into their mid-20s or their later 20s, they started to realize the effect that government legislation has on their lives. They maybe get married; they start a family; they buy a house; they get a car loan; they get involved in the stock market. There are all kinds of other places where what we do in this Assembly affects people's lives. They start to realize that, so they would start to vote.

What we know now through the work that's being done by the council for unity in Canada and some other groups that are working on this kind of democratic reform is that the current generation of younger voters is not learning to vote. If we can't get them to vote now, they don't seem to be learning to vote. Whatever is happening in their lives, it's not convincing them to start voting as they get a little older. They're just not.

That is problematic for us. Refer back to where I started when I was talking about the 50 per cent voter turnout and what we are going to do when that starts sliding below 50 per cent towards 40 per cent. So just hearken back to all the things that happen there.

I believe that my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar raised a number of really good issues around electronic voting, and I support him in everything he's saying there. At the same time, I'm looking at the younger people that I'm working with, and they have an affinity with the Internet and with computers that we do not have. They get it; they are there; they think that way. Somehow there's a connection between them and that electronic machine. I think we do have to start looking at the idea of electronic voting and other citizen participation initiatives to start to capture those younger voters because they're not captured; they're not energized by what is in place right now.

Our voting system has changed. I mean, we tend to go: oh, no; it's always been the same for us. No, it hasn't. Come on. You know, women weren't allowed to vote at one point; aboriginal people weren't allowed to vote at one point. At one point it was only property owners that could vote in certain elections. So things have certainly changed and moved on, and for us to claim that no, no, it's always been this way, it's just flat-out wrong. There have been changes that have brought more voters into the system or made it more attractive for people to vote, so we need to think about stuff like that.

Now, I want to specifically talk about a couple of sections here, and that's about this concept of free access. As we get more and more security buildings in the province – that is, a multiple-unit building, whether it's a gated community, whether it's a security high-rise building that is either apartments or condominiums or any other building that you can't walk freely into – we now create two different levels of citizens as far as their access to information about political campaigns and candidates.

Generally speaking, most people can walk up to the front door of a single-family detached house. Yeah, there are things you've got to be careful of, the dogs in the front yard and all of that kind of thing, but essentially there's nothing barring you from being able to walk up and knock on that door. The person can come to the door, look out, and go, "Oh, it's a candidate. I'm not going to open the door and talk to them. No, thank you." That's fine. They are entirely within their rights to do that. But the candidate managed to get to the door and was able to present themselves, and the individual can still make up their mind as to whether they wish to open the door or not.

The situation that's developed with security buildings and gated communities where there is a secure electronic barrier preventing candidates from being able to even get to the door is that we have two kinds of people: those that can open their door and engage with a candidate if they wish to and those that never even know that a candidate was trying to present themselves to them. That becomes problematic right now for those that are seeking political office in larger urban centres, but increasingly those security buildings are turning up in every centre in Alberta; therefore, it becomes a problem, eventually, for everyone.

So we need to make sure that there is the same level of access to the voter, that the candidates can present themselves equally to the voter. If the voter still chooses not to open their door, that's fine. My point is that you've got to be able to get the candidates to the door, and then the voter can decide if they're going to open their own door or not. That's what's important here.

People are allowing this in that they say, "Well, I moved into a security building, and I mean that I don't want anybody knocking at my door. I'm afraid when people do because this is a secured building. There shouldn't be anyone in here that I don't know who they are." Some of them are fearful, in fact, when you're in an election campaign and people start getting access into these security buildings and, in fact, knocking on the doors.

I think we were setting ourselves up for a whopping challenge, a court case where we end up with a challenge because one candidate was able to get access to a building and another candidate was not able to get access to a building. If we end up with a difference in a final vote of a couple of hundred votes, that could be that building. That's where we're likely to have court challenges happen.

In this bill we now see that two sections have been adjusted to make it clear that in multi-unit buildings the person that's in control of the building is responsible for ensuring that the candidate or the candidate's worker or the enumerator is able to get free access, unencumbered, uninterfered with, to every door in the unit. I'm hoping that that's going to help the problem that has arisen in the past where, in fact, somebody decides to take it upon themselves in these secure buildings and has been allowing one party's candidate access or the workers access to drop flyers or to door-knock but not another party's access. You cannot have that. It must be free and equal access for all candidates to the voter.

I still insist that it's important to be able to get to that voter, get to their door. The voter doesn't want to open it; fine. They don't want to open that door; okay. But they need to know that the candidate is standing on the other side of their door and they did make it that far, and that's the important part of this.

There's been some tussling from these very large rental owners, large companies that own a number of apartment buildings, thousands of rental units, in cities like Edmonton and Calgary, saying: no, we interpret what free access means as different. I actually got into a position where I was told by one very large company: "Sorry, but free access means that you can buzz the buzzer on the outside of this building. If the person lets you in, you can go into the building, go directly to their apartment, talk to them. When you're finished, you have to leave the building, go back outside again, and buzz the next door."

Well, at that rate, as any of us that have worked in apartment buildings or multi-unit buildings know, it would take you weeks to door-knock your way through one apartment building. I have apartment buildings that have 500 apartments in them. I mean, this is just simply not accessible for the candidate. In fact, those people in that building don't even know that they didn't get to see a candidate because it's been taken away from them.

So that's one area that I wanted to see addressed and that I felt could be very problematic for us in Alberta if it wasn't addressed. I'm glad to see that it has made it into this. I know that there are a number of other issues that we will be talking about that are of great interest to people. Therefore, at this point I would ask that we adjourn debate. [interjection] I'm sorry. Is he adjourning debate? I'm sorry. I take that all back. There are people eager right now to speak to this bill, and I'm going to take my seat and let them speak to it.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill 22, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. It's a very important piece of legislation, one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before this House here in this Assembly in this session. At least, that's how I see it. In my judgment this is perhaps the most important bill. So I appreciate the opportunity to enter debate during the second reading of this bill.

The bill was introduced just a little while ago, a few days ago, perhaps yesterday. I haven't had, I must confess, the chance to give it a close reading, but I've got some general observations to make based on a quick perusal of this bill.

The election statutes deal, Mr. Speaker, with one of the most important elements in the democratic process which modern democracies have adopted to follow the will and reflect the will of the citizens, who are the constituents, who are the real masters of democratic politics. I see this as a major attempt to amend, to augment the democratic nature of the legislation dealing with elections. Elections are very, very important events. Participation in elections is an exceedingly important concern, the level of participation by voters, by citizens, and the ability of political parties to enter the electoral arena and have a fair chance of competing.

I think competitive political systems such as the one that we have should have election legislation which encourages competition. Competition is always I think helped and encouraged if there is a level playing field, so any election-related legislation should be judged on the basis of whether it meets the requirements of the basic principle of a level playing field for political actors, political candidates in elections, and political parties, which are key elements in an electoral system and the democratic process in the modern political system.

So I think that in order to judge this bill and its strengths and weaknesses, one of the principles that needs to be kept in mind, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not it furthers the principle of levelling the playing field, a term that is used in this Legislature quite often in different contexts. I would like to see us pay some attention while we're discussing this bill to this principle of levelling the playing field when it comes to election rules and election-related legislation that we debate and pass.

The second principle that I think needs, Mr. Speaker, to be kept in mind all the time when debating a bill such as this one, Bill 22, is whether or not it will encourage and enhance the interest of citizens at the time of an election to turn up at the polling booth and vote. We know that one of the patterns or trends that's a matter of concern to lots of Canadians, Albertans, citizens in our province and other provinces, is the sort of declining level of voter participation in elections.

In this province the rate of voter turnout has been in a steady decline over the last two or three elections. In the last provincial election we had, I think, close to 55 per cent or less voters that decided to cast their votes. The other 45, 47 per cent stayed away from the polling booths. That's certainly a matter of great concern to the New Democrat opposition, and I think it's a matter of widespread concern to Albertans in general. So that's the second principle when debating the changes in the various statutes related to elections that are being proposed in Bill 22.

Bill 22, Mr. Speaker, attempts to amend existing pieces of legislation, existing statutes. The first statute that's proposed to be amended by this act is the Election Act, which is part 1 of this bill. The second piece of existing legislation, the second provincial statute, that will be amended by way of Bill 22 is the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act. The third important existing provincial statute that will be amended by Bill 22 is – the tax statutes amendment has two parts: the Alberta Corporate Tax Act and the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act.

In the first part of the bill I think the changes proposed to the Election Act are intended to empower the administrative staff of the provincial Chief Electoral Officer to seek greater access both in terms of preparing voters lists and, once the election is called, greater access to various kinds of residential accommodations, buildings, be they apartments, be they condominiums or gated communities, which are beginning to become an instant feature of our urban landscape. So it's increasing access by candidates, political parties, their canvassers to the residents of these residences for the purposes of canvassing their support for the respective candidates and political parties and their programs.

There are some good features, I think, in the amendments being proposed with respect to the Election Act, those amendments that will facilitate such access. We'll have an opportunity to look at those proposed amendments to see if we can improve them during Committee of the Whole stage of the debate on this bill.

Other matters that this bill tries to address, of course, are the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act and the tax statutes amendments, which deal with changing the amount of the maximum limits of donations to political parties, to constituency associations, to individual members, and to political party campaigns. The changes that are proposed in this respect would seem to me to sort of not be addressing the concern that Albertans have with levelling the playing field for different political parties, many of them small, some fledgling and new, and others that have in the past not been able to compete in elections effectively because of their relative weakness in terms of ability to raise funds.

Federal legislation that's come into effect as of the 1st of January 2004 has addressed that issue and, in fact, has provided a minimum of public funding based on a formula agreed to by the political parties represented in the House of Commons and then legislated, of course, at the federal level, which I think is an important step forward in terms of levelling that playing field and encouraging citizens and voters to take elections more seriously and providing a more competitive arena for the election of Members of Parliament. I think similar sorts of steps need to be taken when we are changing the election statutes in this province to achieve very similar objectives.

I am not sure if I see any reference to making such changes in Bill 22. I haven't come across any such changes, changes that will commit this House and this province to at least partial public funding for registered political parties based on some reasonable formula that will help them take part in provincial elections. If we did that, I think we would increase voter interest in voting. We would certainly open up the system, make it more democratic for parties to be able to compete.

The other step that I think would help increase voter interest and voter participation and voter turnout in elections would be some sort of a move towards proportional representation, Mr. Speaker. Alberta New Democrats have as a matter of policy supported proportional representation. Since we are in the business of debating and amending existing election statutes to improve the system, I think that to take this opportunity to take a close look at introducing proportional representation as a way of increasing and enhancing voter interest and voter participation and voter turnout would be another important issue that I hope we'll have the opportunity to debate.

The one feature of Bill 22 that I think will not encourage candidates to come forward to take part in elections is the increase in the election deposit, you know, from $200 to $500. I think that's something that I . . . My time is over?

The Acting Speaker: Hon. member, your time has run out.

Dr. Pannu: So I would like to adjourn debate at this point.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 23 Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2004

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Melchin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to move second reading of Bill 23, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2004.

The main amendment in Bill 23 will align the legislation with government's recent decision to eliminate the 1 and a half cent per litre fuel tax on eligible international passenger and cargo flights including those to the United States. The purpose of this change is to enhance Alberta's aviation industry's ability to attract international service through a competitive tax environment.

When you look at surrounding areas, even Seattle and Vancouver still have better tax environments for international flights. To be competitive with those jurisdictions, we felt it was important that we ensure that we strive to see that we have transportation hubs, more direct connecting flights internationally. That will help substantially with industry and shipping and containers if they have more direct flights throughout the world and also will facilitate individuals both on personal and/or business travel if we can get more direct flights into our international airports in Calgary and Edmonton.

Furthermore, to accomplish this, the amendments provide for rebates of tax in situations where aviation fuel purchased in Alberta is transported to another jurisdiction and the applicable tax is paid in that jurisdiction.

Other amendments also provide the Minister of Revenue with the discretion to refuse, cancel, or suspend a registration if an individual or anyone related to that individual has contravened tax laws in any jurisdiction. This is to help facilitate and ensure good compliance with all of our tax laws, including the fuel tax collection.

There are a number of administrative concerns addressed in this bill. One is strengthening controls by requiring fuel exporters to register with tax and revenue administration, thereby permitting tracking of fuel movement. The second is to provide an expedient method of notifying persons by allowing demands for information to be served by fax. Third, provide legislation to support the tax and revenue administration policy to apply amounts payable under the act, any amount owing to that person, to the Crown so that we can offset them if there are amounts owing under other legislation. Fourth, extend liability when corporations have made assignment under the insolvency act, the federal act, to the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act. Fifth, provide for the waiver of interest in penalties in situations where the circumstances warrant relief. This is similar to provisions that we already have in the Alberta Corporate Tax Act and the Tobacco Tax Act. Sixth, safeguard taxes in situations where collectors are at risk of becoming insolvent by requiring trust accounts to be established. Finally, it provides for extending liability for tax collected to corporate representatives where they have drained the tax funds from business.

Mr. Speaker, those are the main elements of Bill 23, and I'd urge all members to support it. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This bill and the timing of it has presented a conundrum to me. What we had was that the announcement of the elimination of this 1 and a half cent per litre aviation fuel tax was made in Calgary, I believe, on February 13, 2004, to be effective on March 1, 2004, and here we are on the 16th of March with the first introduction of the bill before the Legislative Assembly which would actually change the act, which would allow all of this to happen.

Seeing as the government is completely in control of this legislative agenda – when we sit, what bills come forward and in what order, and drawing all of its many backbenchers into place here – I'm having a bit of trouble with having that kind of announcement and having the effect of the program put in place before it's even been brought before this august Assembly to debate and in fact pass it. Although I'm sure that with the enormous numbers that the government has, they had every expectation that they would pass it. [interjection] Once again we have the Minister of Environment chirp, chirp, chirping away back there. He loves to heckle but never gets up and gets on the record.

Dr. Taylor: I'm trying to help you.

Ms Blakeman: Perhaps he could get up and get on the record if he wants to help me. Then he can go on the speaking list. I'm sure the Speaker will keep one for him.

The point is: what is the situation that we're at in this province, Mr. Speaker, when we have these announcements being made? Once again, the government is in total control of when they make the announcement, where they make the announcement, when they make the program come into place, when they put it on the legislative agenda, how they run it through, how their backbenchers are all going to vote for it. So what does that say about this government's attitude towards this Assembly when it so blatantly disregards the legislative process and six weeks ago makes the announcement not even in Edmonton, the seat of the Legislative Assembly, but in Calgary? I just wanted to raise that before I got into the other points that I think are significant about this bill. [interjections]

Dr. Massey: The Minister of Environment agrees with you.

Ms Blakeman: And I'm pleased to have the support of the Minister of Environment. Even if he is heckling me, I'm still pleased to have it.

Dr. Massey: Maybe he'll raise it in caucus.

Ms Blakeman: Perhaps he'll raise it in caucus with his colleagues and maybe get a bit more support about this because I think this timing is very suspect and frankly quite naughty on behalf of the government. Seeing as they've got all this power and control, you'd think they would use it for good and not for evil, Mr. Speaker.

4:20

Dr. Massey: The evil empire.

Ms Blakeman: That's right. The evil empire. Okay.

You know what? I don't really have any significant problems with this bill, except for one section, because it seems to be a reasonable business decision to make to align us with other areas so that our carriers are not at an unfair disadvantage in competition, particularly for cargo, I understand, but also for passenger flights. So a fairly simple adjustment. It looks like it's costing the government $3 million a year. What I'd be interested in hearing is what they expect will be the ancillary dollars. What do they expect will be the amount of payback that is gained by the province from this forgoing of $3 million worth of revenue.

The minister and I have had too many conversations in this Assembly now about forgone revenue and measurement of forgone revenue, and here's another one. It must be another spring session. What is the measurement that the sponsoring minister has in place here for this forgone revenue? Essentially, he's saying: I'm not going to get this $3 million. Okay. What benefits do you expect to get, then, when you forgo that $3 million? It's very similar to saying: I'm going to pay out $3 million, and I expect to have a program that gives me thus and so, and it will benefit X number of people, or it will put money into so many people's pockets, or whatever. So what is the expectation from this forgone revenue?

I note at the same time that there was some musing out loud about reducing the domestic fuel tax on aviation fuel, which is worth another $9 million a year. One, I would ask that the government with all of its power and control please manage to get that before the Legislative Assembly prior to making the announcement and having the program go into place. Since you do have the power of good and evil here, use it for good. Secondly, under what circumstances would the minister be doing this? Thirdly, what does he expect to get from that forgone revenue? What is the flow through or the flow out or the trickle-down that he's expecting to see? He must have crunched the numbers. Please share them with the Assembly.

The other thing that I noticed about this is that it is intended to attract more air traffic to Alberta but also to assist our local carriers in competing, so overall creating beneficial economic activity. If that's the case, the Official Opposition is standing ready to support the initiative.

An Hon. Member: How much money are they going to save?

Ms Blakeman: I asked that one already.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I know that the Calgary airport was very vigorous in lobbying for this, and I can understand. That's the base of this government's power, and that's where most of them live, and they all like it very much. But, you know, there are two major cities in this province, and I'd like to know what the government is going to do to promote the Edmonton International Airport. What concrete plans does the government have to promote Edmonton and increase air traffic in and out of the Edmonton International Airport?

It's not that I begrudge anything happening for the Calgary International Airport. I wish them well. But I'd like to press this government on being a bit more fair and understanding.

Dr. Massey: More balanced.

Ms Blakeman: More balanced. Thank you.

What plans do they have for working with the enhancement and increasing air traffic and cargo traffic in and out of the Edmonton International Airport?

Now, the section that the minister was talking about where the minister can withhold making a payment which would otherwise be made under the act to a person who owes a debt to the Crown: I'm going to ask him to expand on this. Exactly what other programs is he thinking of here. I, of course, am wondering about maintenance enforcement, and I'm wondering if he's intending on capturing that kind of program in what he's saying here. He's probably not, but let me try. I just want to find out how he's doing this.

How does that bookkeeping process work? I mean, if he has money that he would be remitting, a rebate or a refund that he could be remitting to someone, if he has money that he's withholding because there is a debt owed to the Crown, under what programs is this debt owed? Are we only talking fuel tax? Are we only talking about a program that comes under the Minister of Revenue's department? Are we anticipating tax payments? Are we anticipating maintenance enforcement payments? Hunting licences? What? Under what circumstances? Also, how exactly does the bookkeeping work on this? Where do we see it turn up in the government books? If he could just give me some clear answers about that.

Finally, the primary concern that I have about this bill. Section 11, I think, is even worse than the usual: let's have a shell bill and give everything to the minister here. Oh, I love this. It's always done in so few words, with such clean economy. We hand everything over to the minister to do whatever he needs to do behind closed doors. Once again, that power of good and evil. Oh, here we have it. Well, this always concerns me. It's placing too much power in the hands of a minister, and this clause is letting a minister "at any time waive or cancel the imposition of or liability for any penalty or interest payable under this Act." Whoa, that's covering a whole lot of possibilities there. So it's allowing the minister absolute discretion over the payment of penalties.

It's also insulating the minister's decisions from review or appeal. There always needs to be an appeal process or at least some reasonable appeal process, but that is not being considered here. Why is the control over the penalty and interest payments being concentrated in just one person, in the minister. Now, the minister here anticipates that there's support staff and things like that, thinking of it as an entity. [interjection] Well, the Member for Calgary-Shaw is suggesting that somehow all ministers would be good guys.

Certainly, I know that that's where the government starts out thinking, but we have examples in other provinces, probably in our own history – in fact, I know in our own history – where people have not always been good guys. You've invested a lot of power in someone that you're hoping is a good guy here.

An Hon. Member: Or a good gal.

Ms Blakeman: Or a good woman. Exactly. Now, perhaps that would solve all the problems. Anyway. I'm focusing here, Mr. Speaker.

What I'm looking for are the checks and balances, and that's what I'm not seeing here. It's concentrating the decision-making power in the hands of the minister. There is no avenue of appeal. So where are the check and balance? If something goes wrong, where's the responsibility of the government here? They abdicated it, and I think that's problematic. I know that this government sees itself as superior in administration, but they make mistakes. Everybody makes mistakes, and you've got to have a fail-safe, and that's not being built in here.

When we're looking at a waiver or a cancellation of penalties or interests, is there any public body that the minister is forced to consult with or air this in any public way? No, it's not being anticipated in the changes that are brought forward under section 11. No other party is able to review or appeal these ministerial decisions. Very problematic. It places the minister in a very uncomfortable position and doesn't give him or her a lot of protection, and I think that's unwise.

The question I would like an answer to is: will the decisions be made through orders in council? How, specifically, will they be documented, and how will they be published? How are we going to find out when these decisions have been made? Or are we once again in FOIP purgatory, where we don't know how a decision was made, we don't know who made it, we don't know under what auspices, and there's no paperwork? How is anyone, whether it's an Official Opposition member or a member of the public, to find out where this happened? So I'm making a specific request. I'm sure there are staff somewhere reviewing the Hansard that are going to pull this out and help the minister answer the question I'm putting to him. So where will this decision be documented and published? I need to know that.

You know, overall when I look at this, it's not a bad idea. I'm certainly willing to support it for all of the good things that it does. I really don't like that section 11 and everything that is entailed there. I really don't like the fact that there's no appeal and that it, once again, can be secret, behind closed doors, that nobody can find it. I really don't like that.

I have problems with this government flaunting its power and being so arrogant about what we are doing in this Assembly. I know that they've managed to move most of the decision-making outside of this Assembly, but I don't think that's right, and I don't think they should flaunt it so blatantly by, you know, making announcements six weeks ago and putting a program into effect two weeks ago and we haven't even debated the darn bill here.

So with those comments, I appreciate the opportunity to speak freely in this Assembly, and I will let others speak to the bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Speaker: Seeing no further speakers, the hon. Minister of Revenue to close debate?

Mr. Melchin: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 16
Residential Tenancies Act

Mr. Graydon: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and move third reading of Bill 16, the Residential Tenancies Act, this afternoon.

History has shown that relations between landlords and tenants can become strained at times. This bill will hopefully reduce the number of issues that arise, and it will certainly simplify the process for resolving a lot of those issues. This bill treats landlords and tenants fairly and clearly outlines the responsibilities of both parties. It's for this reason that I support third reading and ask for the support of the members of the Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Bill 16, the Residential Tenancies Act, at third reading is, I think, in need of further discussion, certainly from the correspondence by e-mail and also by fax that we on this side of the House have received. Last week it was noted by the Speaker in the Assembly that a large number of bills had passed in record time, but it was not the single-session record. This bill, I think, is a case of moving too far too fast in this Assembly. I will leave this at the discretion of the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, but I think this needs further discussion, and it almost warrants at this time a hoist amendment back to committee because some things may have been missed.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and myself have received an e-mail from a property manager from Cambridge Investments in Medicine Hat, and this is an alert in regard to the revisions of the Residential Tenancies Act, Mr. Speaker. This property manager has concern in regard to the cost, the new cost, of returning the security deposit and goes on to say:

Apparently delivery will now mean that it is delivered by personal service or by registered or certified mail. It is my opinion that this is an unnecessary addition to the Tenancies Act. This change would cost the landlord approximately $6.50 per item returned along with the additional time and inconvenience caused and if anything this might have a negative effect on the timely return of security deposits to tenants. These costs will, in turn, be passed on to the tenant bringing about a small overall increase in rents and in an already stressed market this would not be good.

This is another example of the nickel and dime increases in cost to both the landlord and the tenant that are eating away at the fabric of our economy and slowly making it harder and harder for individuals to survive. It is happening in every sector of the economy – from a postage stamp to bank fees, a dollar here and a dollar there, and it is an increase usually done by a government or government related department/business from which there is no shelter. This forces us to cut back somewhere else in order to cover all the “fixed” costs that living in this day and age entails.

I would [encourage] you to reconsider this addition to the Residential Tenancies Act.

Now, I don't know how many rental units Cambridge Investments Ltd. would have in Medicine Hat or anywhere else in the province, but certainly at this time I think this Assembly should take notice of that. I don't recall – and I stand to be corrected, Mr. Speaker – any discussion of this matter in committee or at second reading, and I would like to know if this matter was brought up in the consultation process that occurred.

Also, in regard to the Residential Tenancies Act, Mr. Speaker, we have been contacted on this side of the House again by an individual from the Medicine Hat landlord association, and this group represents about 2,500 rental units in Medicine Hat. Now, I think we need to take this group's view before we go any further with this bill. This group has reviewed the proposed Bill 16, and they state this.

I am compelled to write and ask you to make some changes in the Committee of the Whole, before some big mistakes are made. While stake holders were consulted before the draft, none have been consulted or asked to review Bill 16 as presented in the Legislature. You need to ensure that this legislation is thoroughly reviewed before it becomes “bad” law. Here are a couple of serious problems that we have found after only a brief review. They will be very embarrassing for the government and damaging to the industry if Bill 16 is passed in the current form.

1. Section 29 of the new RTA (It was Section 26 in the current RTA) titled Termination for Substantial breach by tenant Subsection (4) A notice to terminate under this section is ineffective if before the termination date given in the notice, the tenant

- (a) pays all the rent as of the due date of the payment, if the alleged breach is a failure to pay rent, or
- (b) serves the landlord with a notice in writing objecting to the termination that sets out the tenant's reason for objecting.

Note: the current RTA finishes (4)b with “, if the alleged grounds is for other than failure to pay rent.”

4:40

This group goes on to say, Mr. Speaker:

The proposed Bill 16, the new RTA removes this very important clause. This is a fundamental and dangerous change. It has always been clearly stated that a tenant may not object to an eviction for non-payment of rent. Removing this clause in the new RTA, seems to indicate that a tenant may now file a notice of objection to a notice of termination for non-payment of rent. This represents a huge change in the philosophy of landlord tenant relationships. A landlord has always clearly had the right to receive the rent agreed to on the due date. This change seriously erodes that concept and this clause must be replaced in this section to confirm this principle.

2. Section 46 of the new RTA Bill 16 . . . titled Return of security deposit.

That's the end of the quote. This group also has concerns about the changes and the added cost to returning the security deposit.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, I was of the impression that an extensive consultation process had gone on, but obviously that process missed out in the southeast corner of the province or somehow was overlooked. In light of this correspondence from this group – and it's a large group – I think that an explanation is due not only to hon. members of this Assembly but also to the people who have brought forward these concerns. If there is a reason why section 29 has been drafted in this manner, certainly I would appreciate an explanation from the hon. member in regard to this notice of objection which was sent to this member.

Now, until I get answers to these questions or an explanation as to why we're going ahead in this fashion, I at this time cannot support this bill. I would urge the hon. member that if there has been something overlooked, let's use the parliamentary technique of a hoist and place this bill back in Committee of the Whole and see if we can repair this legislation and make it suitable for everyone.

In conclusion, this group has reviewed these sections of the bill that I talked about and are concerned about what other improvements could be made. Now, there's no need speeding this through the Assembly, and I would urge caution to all members in regard to these matters that I have presented to the House. Let's contact these individuals and see what improvements can be made and what we can do to alleviate their concerns.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Sometimes I assume things, and I shouldn't. I assumed something around something I read in this bill, and I suspect now that I shouldn't have. So here we are in third reading, in which I'm to be talking about the anticipated effect of the bill once it's passed, and I'm still raising some questions. I'm coming closer to agreeing with my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar that perhaps we should be recommitting this bill back to Committee of the Whole to deal with some of the issues that have been raised. But I would like an answer from the sponsoring member, and he is able to do that as he closes off debate in third reading, or barring that, perhaps he could send me a response in writing, which I would appreciate.

One of the new things that this bill is doing that was in fact offered up by the sponsoring Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti when he introduced the bill is this whole alternative dispute resolution mechanism that is considered under section 70, Ministerial Regulations. Once again, all of these regulations being made by ministers behind closed doors, but I won't go into that debate. You can just quietly repeat the one I did earlier today in your head but substitute Bill 16 instead of Bill 22.

What I'm more concerned about here is the assumption that I made. This is specific to section (k), and then there are a number of subclauses inside that, 10 of them actually, and it's "respecting the establishment of an alternative dispute resolution mechanism for the purpose of resolving disputes in respect of matters under this Act including, without limitation . . ." and on we go into the regulations.

Now, we have a system that's long been in place around landlord and tenant concerns, and if they are not resolvable given the various processes that are already available, people end up in small claims court, now called civil something. I'm sorry; I'm just not getting the words right. But often we have mediators involved in this process now, who are paid very badly, I might add. I think what happens is that first of all they have to prove themselves by working for free for 10 cases or something, and then they get paid $50 for a two-hour mediation, and that has problems in itself. I'll come back to that, the two-hour mediation.

What I'm concerned about here is that, in fact, as I reread this section, it's not really talking about mediation or even a restorative justice model. It seems to be talking more about arbitration, and that's what I'm trying to check. If what's being anticipated here – and why would we move from a system where we've been able to bring in and use community mediators in a civil sense in what we used to call small claims court when there are landlord and tenant disputes, especially over money obviously? That system is working not too badly except the mediators are paid so badly. Why are we now anticipating putting in place an entirely different dispute resolution mechanism that seems much more focused on arbitration, not mediation? This could be a whole bunch of other money that's set up and, in fact, a whole quasi-judicial process being set up.

Now the Minister of Justice and Attorney General is looking unconcerned as I speak these words. I'm not really getting a reaction from the sponsor of the bill, but I'm wondering: why is this here? Perhaps it wasn't going to be used until many years in the future if the current mediation system and small claims court didn't work, I suppose. But I would like to know why it's here. When we look at a whole new system that could be quasi-judicial, that seems to be setting up essentially an arbitration process right down to the fees people are paid.

We start talking about how the members are going to be appointed to a dispute resolution body, the kinds of disputes that it can deal with, the proceedings before it, what matters it would consider when dealing with a dispute or a class of disputes, authorizing the dispute body to make rules governing its proceedings, respecting the kinds of orders that this dispute resolution body is authorized to make to resolve a dispute, and that includes making an order that a court would be authorized to make in the same circumstances.

This is what's starting to make me think quasi-judicial, Mr. Speaker: "Respecting the effect of an order of a dispute resolution body and how it may be enforced," again "including . . . regulations authorizing an order to be filed in a court." Hmm, sounding even more like a quasi-judicial process here.

So we're starting to sound more like the Labour Relations Board or possibly the Human Rights Commission, which are not inconsequential bodies and not an inconsequential budget to support them. Now, they're very effective in their own way and not one that I'm recommending getting rid of in any way, but that's not what was contemplated here.

We're down to things like "providing for the appeal of a decision of a dispute resolution body to the Court of Queen's Bench and governing the manner in which the appeal is to be taken."

Finally, governing the fees. Now, if you could manage to get the fees up to the Queen's Bench level, that would make me a bit happier. Let me talk about that a little bit here. You know, we've been very keen and this minister in particular has been very forward thinking in bringing in alternative methods of dealing with people's disputes and trying to get it out of the court system so it isn't so adversarial, especially with models like restorative justice, where we really are trying to say: everybody take responsibility for what you're doing, and work this out with trained people helping you.

My problem is that we're not adequately compensating the trained people that we're now putting in place around this. I know that we were looking for sort of cheaper ways of having things move through the court system or, alternatively, not move through the court system, but we really, really, really are underpaying these mediators. I think you have a whole body of experienced people out there that won't even bring themselves forward and offer themselves into, like, the civil mediation process because the pay is so bad that they just don't want to get themselves involved in lowering that standard to that level.

I think that has to be addressed on behalf of all of these different systems that we're now putting in place: restorative justice and mediation and, I suppose, even arbitration. We want to make sure that people are adequately paid. There's no point in setting up an alternative system from which eventually people withdraw because they're just paid so badly to do it. That doesn't get the government anywhere.

What kind of money are we saving here? Substantial money. When we talk about having a court and a judge and the lights on and CAPS officers in the hallways and all the rest of that, that's a significant amount of money. So it just seems really short-sighted – and I'm being polite there – in offering to pay, for example, the mediators in the civil system $50 for a two-hour mediation. That in itself is saying: get the mediation settled in two hours. The mediation may not settle itself naturally in two hours, so once again you're forcing the process there that you don't need to be forcing. The mediators will happily invest more time in it to get to the resolution, but, for heaven's sake, don't put that kind of short time limit on it and really cheesy pay.

So I'm wondering why this whole process has been tacked onto the end, and I do want to hear from the sponsoring member about it because it's really causing me some concerns that we've now set up essentially a duplicate process that is a lot more expensive than what we have in place here even given an increase in the mediator fees that I'm advocating. Why are we doing this, and what's being anticipated here, and who would be expected to pay for it?

If this gets downloaded onto the municipalities again, I'm going to be right irate about it because right now the municipalities, for the most part, pay for the landlord and tenant advisory boards, that people make such use of. If this gets downloaded on them and they have to pick up the full freight on it, that's really unfair and not anticipated, by what I've heard in the discussion so far around this bill.

You know, there are lots of great possibilities in this bill – it's something that I think we all really wanted to see – and lots of great possibilities for making people's lives better. Maybe we have to see amending acts brought back again, but I would prefer not to. So maybe we do have to agree with Edmonton-Gold Bar and recommit the whole bill back to Committee of the Whole later and resolve some of these issues that have been raised.

I mean, these bills are progressing through the House at an astonishing rate, but we don't get participation from the government members, so we have no idea how the government members feel about this. In fact, this concern came from southern Alberta, and it wasn't brought forward by one of the MLAs from there. So things are proceeding very quickly here, hardly giving people time to react. Maybe we do need to consider that recommit, but I'm interested in what the sponsoring member can answer.

Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29. Any questions?

There being none, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make brief comments on Bill 16 in its third and final reading. This bill is a sort of mixed bag. It has some changes that it makes, welcome changes which will certainly help both tenants and landlords in negotiating their relationships.

It provides certain protections, and those proposed changes are of course welcome, and I'll give a few examples here. It certainly gives greater clarity to the awards a court can provide when there's been a breach of the contract between a landlord and tenant. It also will require a longer period of advance notice for tenants when the rental property is being changed into a condominium. That certainly is very helpful.

In section 5 it provides some sort of protection for tenants who wish to make a complaint against a landlord either for reasons of concern that they may have about safety and security or public health concerns. Given that rental housing has been fairly scarce – the vacancy rates have been rather low in many urban areas in particular, big and small – this provision will reduce the concerns that Albertans have and the fearful sort of stance that they take when they have to make a decision about whether or not to lodge a complaint with respect to a landlord who's running a rental accommodation in ways which raise either concerns about the public health side of the issue or concerns with respect to the tenant's personal security and safety.

Those are some good features of the act, but there also are some problem areas in the legislation which are difficult to support. Section 19, for example, allows the landlord to provide only two options of times when an outgoing inspection for damages can be completed. If the tenant is not able to make either of these appointments, then the report will be completed by the landlord alone. This puts the tenant's security deposit at risk because they will not be present to challenge damage claims made by the landlord based on assessment in the absence of one of the two parties to the contract. So that remains a problem with the bill.

Again, under section 31 the landlord is given the power to dispose of property or goods that the landlord believes are abandoned and are worth less than a certain prescribed amount. However, the prescribed amount is not stated in the bill itself. It's left up to the regulations, and I feel very uncomfortable leaving these definitions, such as the prescribed amount, to regulations yet to be drawn up and to have no opportunity to examine what this prescribed amount is.

Similarly and related to this, a fair number of tenants, you know, who live in rental accommodations move fairly frequently, have to move away sometimes from where they live for reasons of work, may be away for a week, 10 days, and so on and so forth, and may not have many valuable possessions. Nevertheless, what they do have is very valuable to them because that's all they can afford. To put these goods, abandoned possessions, which are of great value to low-income tenants, in jeopardy by giving this power to the landlord to dispose of them, I think, is a step backwards. It doesn't give much comfort to tenants who already live on the edge in terms of their incomes and their work situations, and then they are put in a position where they worry about the security of their possessions which can be deemed abandoned for whatever reason.

What happens, for example, if a tenant gets hospitalized? If a single person gets hospitalized and is not able to communicate to the landlord about the reasons for her or his absence, I think this bill makes it easier for the landlord to label these possessions as abandoned and throw them in the trash or send them to an auction house or whatever. So that's not very good. People to whom it could happen are people who by definition are not likely to have the economic resources to replace the goods lost in this way or to fight for compensation through the courts.

So these are some of the relatively minor concerns that I have with the bill. The most important one is the one that the minister is seeking by way of this bill having to do with the authority to make regulations with respect to the alternative dispute resolution mechanism. As I said before in an earlier reading and debate on the bill, this bringing in of this alternative dispute resolution mechanism is an important step forward, yet how this is going to be implemented is simply beyond our ability to debate those arrangements because they're not outlined here. They'll be outlined by the minister in the privacy of his office or by the deputy minister who works for the minister, but it certainly will not be open for examination by this Assembly.

There's no explanation of how the alternative dispute resolution mechanism will be triggered, no indication of scope, no indication of timelines within the resolution process. There is no indication of the overall authority to run the system and no indication of who will oversee the process and by whom this oversight will be funded. Without some answers to these questions related to the most important element of what the bill is proposing to do, I think it's very difficult for the New Democratic opposition to simply write a blank cheque to the minister to go ahead and do what rightly should be done by this Assembly; that is, examine carefully the arrangements surrounding the alternative dispute resolution mechanism that will be put in place.

I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that because of the problems that I've outlined and especially the concerns I've expressed about there being no details, no information about the alternative dispute resolution mechanism implementation, we will not be able to support the bill. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Standing Order 29?

Anybody else wish to speak on the bill? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti to close debate?

Mr. Graydon: No. Thanks.

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 20
Minors' Property Act

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much. I'm actually pleased to be able to rise in Committee of Whole and say that I have heard nothing further from the stakeholder groups that I've consulted with raising any concerns with the details of what's being contemplated with the Minors' Property Act.

Of course, this bill is not new, but there are some updates to it and a few new sections. I did go through them in a bit more detail yesterday when I spoke in principle in support of the bill in second reading. The bill needs to be considered with its companion bill, the Public Trustee Act, which is also being updated and a number of sections changed for clarification. But at this point I've heard no additional concerns raised, and I don't have any additional concerns from my reading of the bill, so I'm happy to support the bill in Committee of the Whole.

[The clauses of Bill 20 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report Bill 20.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. VanderBurg: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 20.

The Acting Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 p.m., at which time we'll reconvene in Committee of Supply.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:08 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 16, 2004 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2004/03/16
 head: Committee of Supply
 [Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

For our first item this evening I wonder if we might have consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to introduce tonight in the members' gallery a former member of this Assembly that you all know. She used to be the Member for Calgary-Currie, and she is now the special adviser for public affairs for the Calgary Chamber of Commerce. She spent many a night in here with us. I think many of you recognize her: Jocelyn Burgener. As well, we have Tom Palak. He is the policy analyst for the Calgary Chamber of Commerce. Would you both please rise. Last but not least is Cassandra Litke, who grew up in Calgary-Shaw, and actually her younger brother ran around with my older son. They were friends. Her name is Cassandra Litke, and she's the senior policy analyst for the Calgary Chamber of Commerce. Give them the warm and wonderful welcome of the night crew. I mean the House.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to introduce to you and through you, actually, five people that are sitting in the members' gallery. They're having a little tour this evening. They are a group of folks that get together. They're the class of '75 from Ross Sheppard high school. I went to Jasper Place composite high school and used to go to their football games and give them a hard time.

Mr. Snelgrove: You were from the class of '65.

Mr. Hutton: Yeah. Much, much older. But I married a girl from Ross Shep.

I would just like to introduce this crew that are sitting up in the members' gallery. We've got Darcey-Lynn Marc. We have Chris Bradbury, Leslie Ellis, and David McKay. We also have Diane Thomas, who is their guide and coconspirator this evening. I'd ask you all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Mr. Yankowsky: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to introduce to you and through you Mr. Ken Chapman, seated in the public gallery. Besides other things he is involved with the workshops happening right now on family violence leading up to the round-table on family violence in Calgary on May 7. If you would please stand and receive the warm welcome of this House.

The Chair: Okay. For the benefit of those who have been introduced and those who have not been introduced in the gallery, I want to explain that this is a less formal part, and hopefully we can keep the exuberance down to a level such that we can all hear the one and only person that's allowed to speak out loud at a time in the House. If you have a guide for the floor plan of where the members sit, only the member that is standing and speaking is likely to be in their position. The others can move around, hopefully quietly, in this informal session of the Legislature, the committee session.

head: Interim Supply Estimates 2004-05
 Offices of the Legislative Assembly,
 Government, and Lottery Fund

The Chair: The first question really would be as to the method of procedure. Do you want to go department by department, or do you want to talk in generalities about all of them. What is your agreed wish?

Mr. Hancock: I will give a brief introduction to it, and then members of the House can go wherever they wish with respect to questions or discussion.

The Chair: Okay. Let us proceed. Are you the first minister up? The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just briefly the overview. For the benefit of members the Minister of Finance introduced the interim supply this afternoon. It really is just in the nature of making sure that government continues to operate while we debate thoroughly in Committee of Supply and appropriations the budget, which is scheduled to come down on March 24. I think the hon. minister this afternoon put it into a context that for the most part, when you're looking at supply, you're really looking at a portion of the year's expenditures to be voted.

We can expect, of course, under our Standing Orders that 20 days will be spent in Committee of Supply, so if the budget comes down on March 24, presumably one could foresee that we might have completed the budget process by mid-May. Obviously, employees of the government wish to be paid for the month of April and for the month of May, so one would assume that we should make provision for that. As well, there are other grants that go out to organizations which go out at the beginning of the year and should not be held up waiting for the vote on full supply.

The interim supply numbers for each department are not an exact science but rather an estimation of the first quarter or so of expenditure plus whatever grants are normally paid out in that first quarter. So it's not exactly a quarter of the budget or half of the budget but really a number which is determined to cover the first few months of expenditure for each department plus the expenditures that might be expected to be made on grant programs or to other organizations or in some other manner paid out in the first six months of the year.

Speaking specifically to the Justice estimates, there's nothing in the Justice estimates of $70,500,000 that stands out in particular. It meets exactly the formulas that I was just mentioning.

So that's just a brief overview of the rationale for the numbers as is, and we're looking forward to the real discussion on a department by department basis as we go into Committee of Supply following the budget on March 24.

The Chair: I wonder if the committee would agree to a brief reversion to Introduction of Guests. The chair apologizes; I missed one hon. member.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you for consideration there. I'm rising on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to introduce a group of women who are here as part of a group called Women Supporting Women. I would ask them to rise as I read their names: Fay Stalker, Gladys Honey, Bea Berke, Doris Pettit, Rae Ehrman, June Dixon, Coral Bellerose, and Mert Shapka. They are here to see what happens in the Legislature in the evening as I'm sure we're all curious about. I'd ask everyone to give them a warm welcome. Thank you for coming out.

head: 8:10 Interim Supply Estimates 2004-05
Offices of the Legislative Assembly,
Government, and Lottery Fund

The Chair: Okay. Now the hon. Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Here we are again with interim supply estimates for 2004-2005. I'll start, as I think I've started almost every year that this comes before the House, with the question: why?

Dr. Taylor: Because my staff wants to get paid, Don, to pay their mortgages and buy groceries.

Dr. Massey: Well, then, why don't you plan better?

The Chair: Hon. minister, you will have your chance as soon as the hon. leader steps down. I'll put your name on the list, but in the meantime, hon. leader.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The question that's asked is, you know: why does this happen? Those of us who come from municipal politics will remember the pressure that was put on us by government to have our budgets in place and passed before we started spending the money. It seems to me that's still a requirement that was a sound requirement fiscally. It was the responsible position to take. If it's good for the goose, it should be good for the gander.

The government has complete control over the sitting of this Legislature. We could sit earlier in the year if timing is the problem. There's no reason why we should be going through this exercise and then really talking about a third of the money in the coming month, after it's already been spent. So it's again a matter of process and a questioning of the government as to why they haven't seen cause to change the process so that they, too, are not spending money before they have the approval of the Legislature.

Mr. Chairman, it's a lot of money. If you look at the departments, the Department of Learning is asking to spend close to a billion dollars before this Legislature takes a look at even one budget line. You have to ask how responsible it is of this House to engage in that kind of a procedure. It just does not make sense.

A number of the departments, Mr. Chairman, obviously are doing some work to try to reduce their reliance on interim supply. If you look at the Sustainable Resource Development budget in 2002-2003, the interim supply request was $101.915 million, and this year it's down to $52.3 million. It seems to me that it's a department that is moving in the right direction. Fifty-two million is still a lot of money to ask for when the Legislature doesn't know how you're going to spend it, but I think it shows some effort to address the problem and to decrease the reliance on interim supply.

On the other hand, there are departments, as I said, where it just seems to be more and more the way they operate. Learning moving from $615.5 million in fiscal year 2002-2003 to this year, when the department is asking for almost a billion dollars, seems to be, as I say, a move in the wrong direction. A number of other departments have similar large increases. If you look at Children's Services, from $121.9 million to $184 million this year, a $60 million increase in the request for interim supply. Some of the other departments are much more modest but, again, moving in what I think is the wrong direction, Mr. Chairman. Aboriginal Affairs from $11.005 million in 2002-2003 to $13.8 million this year. Better but still growing.

So those are some initial comments I have about the budget. There are a number of departments represented. The document raises a number of questions about the kinds of controls that the government has on spending, and I'd be interested in hearing some of the ministers' defences for having this item in front of us.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Dr. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel compelled to rise and speak to these issues. As you're aware, I might not be the most expert here on parliamentary procedure, because you often correct me, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hancock: That's the chairman.

Dr. Taylor: Oh, chairman. The House leader has already pointed out that I've made a mistake here. You're not the Speaker tonight; you're Mr. Chairman. And occasionally you point out my faux pas.

But I do feel compelled to speak because, you know, we have a budget coming down next Wednesday, and after that budget the way the process works – and that member knows – we have 24 days of budget discussion. I think that is the correct number: 24 days of budget discussion, Mr. Chairman. As you know, we sit four days a week, so you can figure out how many weeks that is, and the budget will not be passed and approved by this House until those 24 days of budget discussion are done.

So I want to ask this member: over that time period does he want the schools to close? Does he want teachers not to be paid? Does he want his colleagues at the university not to be paid? Because without these supplementary estimates those teachers will not be paid. Without this supplementary estimate his colleagues at the university will not be paid. Without the supplementary estimate my staff, approximately 900 people, will not be paid. Mr. Chairman, all of those people at the university, the teachers, my staff all have families. They've got mortgages to pay. On top of that, I would just point out: I won't get paid, you see. The member won't get paid.

Now, the member can afford not to be paid because he's a double-dipper, Mr. Chairman. He's collecting a big academic pension as well.

Mr. Bonner: And you wish you were.

Dr. Taylor: I wish I was as well. But collecting an academic pension as well as sitting here and making money, Mr. Chairman.

So the issue is that we have to do this. All of these items in here, including my budget of $30 million, will be discussed after the budget of next Wednesday. In fact, the Liberals have put me on notice that my budget will be discussed next Thursday afternoon. They've called the Department of Environment to sit here in this House and have them question me about my budget next Thursday for hours and hours, Mr. Chairman.

Now, does that make sense that they're up in this hypocritical manner and saying . . . I agree with you. You're right, Mr. Chairman. It does not. I'm glad to see that you're shaking your head in agreement with me.

It makes no difference, Mr. Chairman, whether this is discussed tonight or it's discussed next Thursday. I think, Mr. Chairman, it's high time that these people realized that these people – teachers, MLAs, university professors – need to be paid and quit trying to play politics with something as significant as this.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: The hon. Interim Leader of the Opposition.

8:20

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've never heard such garbage. That minister sits in a cabinet that could fully call this Legislature back into session January 15. Count the time from January 15 to the end of March 30, and how much time do we have for a budget? Plenty of time. This budget could be passed before a dollar of it is spent. And to turn around and try to indicate that people aren't going to be paid is just . . .

An Hon. Member: They won't be if we don't pass it, Don.

Dr. Massey: This one. But you've had how many years – 10 years – to change the process?

The Chair: Through the chair, hon. member.

Dr. Massey: I'm sorry.

They've had 10 years to change the process, and every year they come with exactly the same excuse: you've got to pass this or people aren't going to be paid. That is ludicrous, Mr. Chairman. We could have in place a process where we did look at the items and have the entire budget scrutinized. It could be scrutinized in a meaningful manner, knowing that not a dollar of it was going to be spent until it was passed. So for the minister to get on his high horse and to accuse us of politicking is deception of the first order, Mr. Chairman, and I don't accept it for a moment.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to interim supply in the Committee of Supply. I think one of the things we have to look at here is, first of all, that we have to start with comments by the Premier where he's in charge of a somewhat $20 billion-plus budget every year. Now, if we were to compare that to any business that operates with a $20 billion budget per year, then certainly I think we can make some very valuable comparisons.

One of those comparisons would be that nobody, absolutely no business, would vote this amount of money based on a single line requesting so many millions. And this is not a one-time occurrence. This is an occurrence that happens year in and year out in this Assembly. When we look at $5.56 billion being voted on here in the next few days, that's enormous compared to our budget. This represents over 20 per cent of the budget that we are being asked to vote on.

We're being asked to make some sort of analysis based on one line. There is no breakdown at all for where these dollars are to be spent. Certainly, Albertans deserve better, Mr. Chairman. We realize that, yes, we do need money to operate, but as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has pointed out, we have every opportunity to meet in this Assembly long before we get to this point, long before we get to a year-end, to request those monies, to study those monies, and, if we as an Assembly desire to, to pass the allocation of those monies.

I look at these expenses, and they are to cover three major areas: operating expenses, capital investment, and nonbudgetary disbursements. The total amount of interim supply, as I said earlier, is $5.56 billion. Now, this $5.56 billion is broken down in the following way. We have $5.05 billion for operating expenses and equipment and inventory purchases. We have another $133.5 million for capital investment. Of that $5.56 billion, we have $66.4 million for nonbudgetary disbursements, and we also have $313.6 million in payments through the lottery fund.

Mr. Chairman, the $5.05 billion to be spent on operating expenses can further be broken down in the following manner. We have $19.2 million which will be spent by the Leg. Assembly, and the bulk of that, $5.029 billion, will be spent on the various government ministries where they have indicated, with one line, what the comparison is going to be. This comparison is for the fiscal year 2002-2003, for the fiscal year 2003-2004, and for the fiscal year 2004-2005. So we do get to see, in the various departments, which departments have increased their requested amounts for interim supply, which have basically remained stable, and which of those have decreased.

There obviously are some flaws in this process, and I think one of the major flaws in this whole process is that there is a serious lack of disclosure within the supply votes. In other words, how can we question huge increases when we have no breakdown of where those huge increases are going?

This troubles me because we continually hear this government through its Executive Council members talking about openness and accountability. We hear the word thrown around here quite often, that it is a transparent operation. But this certainly isn't transparent. It is one lump sum, and we don't have transparency here, we don't have accountability, and we certainly don't have openness. We've heard these same arguments used quite often in question period in recent weeks regarding government programs for BSE and, certainly, how we're going to have a full accounting of those. Yet here we are asked to allocate over 20 per cent of this year's budget based on one line.

Again, it makes the taxpayers of this province wonder what is happening to their money. Here we have a situation where contrary to any measures of openness and accountability we see something collapse together that can only obscure clarity and can only hide transparency. Providing a global figure for each department under the interim supply vote as requested here this evening without a breakdown by program and subprogram I believe shows this government's utter contempt for the process of accountability.

In the interest of ensuring openness, accountability, and transparency and imposing rigorous fiscal discipline, it is necessary, Mr. Chairman, to ask all ministers during appropriation on interim supply to provide to this House a breakdown of the interim supply by individual program within each department and then relate that appropriation by individual program to the performance and outcome targets established in their own business plans.

I have further concerns on the size of the request that we are being asked to approve in interim supply. The $5.56 billion requested here is more than some provinces have for a budget for the entire year, and to do it in this fashion certainly doesn't follow best practices for business or for government as far as the transparent and open spending and accountability of taxpayer dollars.

I certainly have enjoyed the opportunity to put some of my concerns on the record tonight regarding interim supply, Mr. Chairman. In conclusion, I look forward to the comments of many members in this House because this is a huge amount of money. I know that every constituency in this province has constituents who are deeply concerned about spending and how we have increased the amount of our budget each year in this province, yet we don't after 10 years of going through this process seem to have improved upon it. It is still a very flawed system.

So I would hope not only that other members will speak regarding the interim supply, but I would also like them to question and provide answers to their constituents on how we as the Legislative Assembly of Alberta can spend over $5 billion of taxpayer money and do it only on the basis of a one-line request.

8:30

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and certainly listen to the comments by other members of the Assembly. Hopefully, we can through our discussions here this evening not only get more answers in regard to $5.56 billion but, as well, certainly improve this process, which is flawed.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. These debates on interim supply have a special place in my heart because the first point of order that was ever called on me was called on me as a rookie MLA by the Government House Leader during these debates. We were debating billions of dollars in expenditures, and there was nobody from the government side speaking a word to it, and I was frustrated and made some unparliamentary comment about how remarkable it was that we could pass billions of dollars in spending and nobody on the government side seemed to have any questions or points to make or any statements to make at all. So when I said something unparliamentary, a point of order was called, and I was reprimanded.

However, the point I was making then remains the same today. This is 5 and a half billion dollars.

Mr. Dunford: So you haven't learned a thing.

Dr. Taft: I'll just choose more parliamentary words.

Five and a half billion dollars is a staggering amount of money. I don't suppose we'll have any discussion at all about it from the government members, and that really disappoints me. I think that if their constituents realized it, they'd be a bit surprised as well.

I also concur with the comments of my colleagues that if we had a budgeting process that worked on a normal schedule, we wouldn't be in this situation. There's no reason in the world that the budget can't be introduced in January, debated fully, and be voted on and settled by the time we start spending money on April 1. The way we handle it now seems completely out of sync. We introduce the budget so late that we'll be debating the budget well into the next fiscal year and spending money by the billions before the budget is even approved. This should not happen. You know, in a proper budgeting process there's just no excuse for this to occur. I take this as a real sign, frankly, of weak management, and I see weak management spreading throughout this government.

As far as I'm aware, the most extreme example of budget cycles getting out of whack in this government occurs in the Department of Health and Wellness, where the department in turn passes on money, as it will in this bill, to regional health authorities. The regional health authority fiscal year starts April 1, and I had it on excellent source and was able more or less to confirm it with the minister that the regional health authority business plans and budgets were not signed until the fiscal year was nine months old.

So we were nine months into the spending year for the regional health authorities and they still hadn't had the budgets for that year signed off. Now, that's terrible management. How do you hold your regional health authorities accountable? How do you manage your money when you're that far out of sync?

So I just find the entire budget process of this government to be undisciplined in the extreme. Of course, given that we only have a few words on each line of the budget, it's virtually impossible to know what value we're getting for the money at this point. We're expected to cross our fingers or hold our breath in hope that this money is going to be well spent. There's no plan that we see. It's just voting in the dark. That's pretty frustrating.

So I think it's time that we tried to take some action on this legislation, Mr. Chairman, and I have an amendment I would like to propose at this stage—I've got the appropriate number of copies here—approved by Parliamentary Counsel. Do you want me to read it now?

The Chair: Move it, and then we'll continue.

Dr. Taft: Yes, I'll read it and move it. Thank you. I'll just wait for the pages to distribute it. I'll wait for a minute.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to move that "the Executive Council estimates for 2004-2005 interim supply estimates be reduced by $3 million so that the operating expense to be voted is $3 million." As you can see, that's approved by Parliamentary Counsel.

The Chair: Many of the members now have it. This amendment, Edmonton-Riverview, will be known as amendment A1. You may proceed.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am through this motion proposing to reduce the budget allocated to Executive Council, and there's a specific reason for this. Under the office of Executive Council, which is basically the Premier's office and the cabinet, there is an allocation in this legislation for $6 million, and we are wanting to reduce that by half. The objective here is in fact to propose a reduction in the size of the Public Affairs Bureau.

Now, many people don't realize that the Premier is not only the Premier, but in the case of this government he's also the minister responsible for the Public Affairs Bureau. His actual title is Premier of Alberta, minister responsible for the Public Affairs Bureau. The Public Affairs Bureau is a very substantial branch of the government. It's not well known, but it's basically the propaganda wing of this government. I've been able to obtain a staff list for the Public Affairs Bureau, which is really quite remarkable.

Mr. McClelland: Point of order.

The Chair: You have a citation, hon. member?

Point of Order
Parliamentary Language

Mr. McClelland: I think it's under Standing Order 23. It's the use of the term "propaganda." I don't think that the use of the term "propaganda" is parliamentary, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Standing Order 23 is close. There are a whole bunch of subsections that we usually quote from.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the purported point of order.

Dr. Taft: Well, if the term “propaganda” offends the member, I will substitute “spin.” Would that be okay? Would that offend the member if I called it the department of government that does the public relations spin doctoring?

8:40

The Chair: The chair would observe that the word “propaganda” in some contexts can be considered a pejorative term and in others a descriptive term, so it really becomes very subjective. I guess if we’re talking in terms of Dr. Goebbels of 60 years ago, then “propaganda” had a hateful turn to it, but many people refer to the publication of government or opposition platforms as propaganda, and it’s not deemed in that sense to be offensive. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has already afforded us another word that, hopefully, is less offending, should it be offending.

So, hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, I would invite you to continue.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your always wise comments. The thin skin of the backbenchers will have to thicken up here. Or is that offensive too?

Debate Continued

Dr. Taft: What’s remarkable about the Public Affairs Bureau is its size and its budget. When you go through the staff list for the Public Affairs Bureau, you learn that the Premier has working for him about 260 people, spin doctors of one kind or another. Actually, that’s not fair. There are 260 staff in the Public Affairs Bureau.

Now, that includes a number in the Queen’s Printer, so we can take them out, and it includes a number in the government’s telephone system, what I call the RITE system or whatever it’s called today. Take them out, and you’re left with about 230 public relations spin doctors working for the Premier. Two hundred and thirty. Now, that’s remarkable. That includes a large number of directors, public affairs officers, web site managers, graphic designers, secretaries, and support staff. It is, I’m sure, the largest public relations organization in Alberta, and its got a huge budget.

My ambition here is to reduce the size of this Premier’s Public Affairs Bureau to something equivalent to what I understand is the size of that for the President of the United States. A recent New Yorker magazine article wrote at length about public relations out of the White House and identified the President of the United States as having 55 public relations staff. Now, in Alberta, a much smaller jurisdiction, we have 230, and in fact, of course, that’s not the full story, because as many members of cabinet will know, their departments have communication staff of their own.

So the ambition of this little amendment here is to bring the size of the Public Affairs Bureau in closer line with what we might find in other governments and in the process save the taxpayer a bit of money and perhaps even improve the direct accountability between the citizens and this government.

Mr. Chairman, I can see some people flipping through, looking for responses to prepare, and I look forward to the debate on this. I mean, here we are trying to reduce the size of government, increase accountability, save taxpayers money. So why not do it? I look forward to the reasons.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had a moment there when I was really exhilarated, and that was when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview indicated that his ambition was to reduce the size of the Public Affairs Bureau. I thought his ambition was much larger than that and, indeed, even to be leader of the Liberal opposition, but actually perhaps the ambition of getting an amendment passed in Committee of Supply might be ambition enough. I’m not sure.

I listened intently to some of the earlier comments about Committee of Supply and interim supply and whether or not interim supply should be a necessary procedure – and, yes, I will be speaking to the amendment with respect to this, Mr. Chairman – whether interim supply was an appropriate tool in a parliamentary process, and of course I would indicate that interim supply is clearly provided for in the rules and is clearly a part of parliamentary tradition not only in this province but in this country and in parliamentary systems around the world. It’s clearly contemplated that there will be provisions for interim supply, and it’s clearly contemplated that budgets and appropriation acts will be brought down at appropriate times. It’s not just a question of when the Legislature opens; it’s how you determine appropriate times.

Mr. Chairman, I see you wondering and puzzling how this relates to the amendment itself. It relates to the amendment itself in this way. By making an amendment to cut interim supply in half for the Public Affairs Bureau, it doesn’t achieve any of the lofty ambitions that the hon. member opposite has put forward for it. It doesn’t in fact reduce the Public Affairs Bureau at all. It just means that you pay them for a month less or two months less in time.

The question about cutting down the size of government is one appropriately addressed when you’re actually dealing with Committee of Supply and the estimates. Passing this amendment, as lofty as the ambition is that the hon. member has put forward, doesn’t achieve the objectives he is trying to attain. So I would suggest that he save his ammunition for a week or two.

The Chair: The hon. Interim Leader of her Majesty’s Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Speaking in support of the amendment, I guess I have another reason for supporting the amendment, and that’s because Executive Council has to bear the responsibility for continuing the completely unacceptable budgeting process that we’re involved in tonight. So I think that for that reason alone the budget should be cut as, if nothing else, a signal to them that the budget arrangements are not acceptable.

I think it’s also germane to the amendment that there is a huge increase in the Executive Council budget, because one of the first things that the Premier did was to move the Public Affairs Bureau into his purview under Executive Council. It’s part of what’s caused this huge increase in Executive Council over the years.

With respect to the Government House Leader’s comments about parliamentary tradition, I don’t understand how the because-they’re-doing-it-elsewhere argument means that we should do it here.

So I think it’s a good amendment and should be passed, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed an honour to stand and speak to the question of the interim supply. I want to indicate just for the record that I do believe that the Public Affairs Bureau is in effect the propaganda arm of this government.

An Hon. Member: Are you reading the same speech?

Mr. Mason: No. Actually, Mr. Chairman, it's not. It is not the same speech. It is just self-evident to any objective observer that this is so. It is no surprise, really, that any fair-minded person would come to this conclusion. I think it is absolutely important that we take account that this area . . .

Point of Order

Parliamentary Language

Mr. McClelland: To be fair, Mr. Chairman, after having risen earlier and asked the chairman's indulgence that perhaps the term "propaganda" is not parliamentary, again I would cite our Standing Order 23(j) or (i) perhaps. The fact is that the term "propaganda" imputes motive, which is certainly not appropriate. Having raised the issue with the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, it's only in keeping to raise the issue with my honoured friend from Edmonton-Highlands.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: Edmonton-Highlands on the purported point of order.

Mr. Mason: Yes. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the purported point of order is invalid. In fact, it is quite silly in my view. Propaganda is simply the propagation of ideas and concepts by government, and all governments engage in it. It's just that most governments in Canada do not engage in it quite so much as this one.

But, you know, to suggest that it is an improper term or is in some way unparliamentary is to try and take a legitimate criticism of government, which this is – this is a legitimate criticism of this government, and it would be legitimate in any province or in the federal government. All governments have been known to engage in propaganda from time to time and saying so ought not to be considered unparliamentary.

Pending your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I will indicate that I use the term advisedly and would continue to use it unless it were ruled out of order. I think it is a legitimate criticism by members of this Assembly against this government. It is, in fact, true.

The Chair: Okay.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thought that as I had a dictionary handy, I might bring to the House's attention what propaganda means, not what the hon. member thinks it means. It has, in fact, two meanings. The second is "a committee of Roman Catholic cardinals responsible for foreign missions." I'm sure that if that's what he meant in using the term, he clearly was misusing it and abusing it, and it wouldn't be in context.

But the other definition is "information, especially of a biased or misleading nature." Biased or misleading nature. And to suggest that there are public servants in the Public Affairs Bureau who work every day as hard as they do to make sure that Albertans get good information about what's happening in their province and what the government is doing for them – to suggest that that is propaganda and is biased and misleading surely must be unparliamentary.

The Chair: The chair is unable to locate anywhere in our references that propaganda as such is unparliamentary, because there are words in Beauschesne and elsewhere where a given word (a) is against the rules in this setting and the same word (b) is granted as being parliamentary.

The chair is also in charge of a dictionary not quite as large as the hon. Government House Leader's. Very often a good quality dictionary will have four or five or six popular definitions. But the first one in the Oxford dictionary to which I refer says, "Propaganda . . . association or organized scheme for propagation of a doctrine or practice; . . . doctrines, information, etc., thus propagated." Surely it's part of all political parties to enunciate that, hopefully not just the government.

So does it meet the test that is referenced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder"? It doesn't say controversy, which we've had, but disorder. I don't think that this one under the context as used by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands would, in fact.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is probably cautioned to not use the language that he was drawn up to question on, and that would seem to the chair to be reasonable.

Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and I appreciate your fair and unbiased ruling. It certainly would not meet the test of the hon. Government House Leader's definition, which would be to be unfair or biased.

Debate Continued

Mr. Mason: I just want to indicate that when I used the term "propaganda," I did not mean that the government was always misleading in its statements through the Public Affairs Bureau or was biased at all times, but I do believe that sometimes the releases that are issued through this particular branch of government are misleading in the sense that they would have Albertans believe that they have a good government, and in my view that is not the case.

So I think that it is an interesting apparatus that this government has set up and one that seems to grow with each passing year.

9:10

You know, I have noticed, while I'm on the subject, Mr. Chairman, in some of my travels around the province at some of the meetings involving hundreds of very hard-pressed Alberta beef farmers that there are government officials present in the panel. There are a number of people at these meetings. There's the National Farmers' Union. There is the Alberta Beef Producers, which is a state-sponsored union of beef farmers where membership is required and dues are mandatory, compelled by the state. Also present at these meetings are representatives of Alberta Agriculture, and I'm very surprised just how far they will go in terms of a political defence of the government and the government's record in this matter.

It brings me to another concern that I have, which is related to this one, and that is the politicization of our civil service by the Progressive Conservative government. The ideal, in my view, has always been a neutral and professional public service, one that is not political and does not venture to defend the political actions of the government but, rather, just to simply give statements of fact with respect to policy. So I want to place on the record my concern that officials of Alberta Agriculture have crossed the line, in my view, at these public meetings in terms of making what I would consider to be political comments in defence of the government's record in the matter of BSE.

Getting back to Public Affairs, recently one of the newspaper columnists reported on a document which they had obtained from the Public Affairs Bureau relative to statements to be made about the New Democratic Party caucus on the BSE issue, and, Mr. Chairman, I might say that that document was highly political. It advised politicians, the minister and so on, to make comments sharply critical of the New Democrats on this issue and to make what were essentially political statements. So it's clear to me that the Public Affairs Bureau operates in a highly political and partisan fashion on behalf of the government. The documents are available that would give some evidence of this, so any suggestion that it is not a propaganda bureau I think is misplaced.

I want to ask, I guess, a number of questions aside from the Public Affairs Bureau. First of all, I want to indicate that the fiscal plan outlined in Budget 2003, which was last year's budget, indicates that the general corporate tax rate will go down from 12.5 per cent to 11.5 per cent, which would be a 9 per cent reduction which is going to permanently reduce provincial revenues by $161 million. The question I have for the government on this matter is why this would be a higher priority, for example, than eliminating health care premiums for Alberta seniors, which only reduces revenue by $90 million.

The question with the government, as with all governments, is: what do you do with almost infinite demands for services and very finite finances? It may be that Alberta has much greater financial capacity than some other provinces, but it is nonetheless true that this province has still a finite amount of revenue, and the revenue does not meet every demand which is placed on the provincial treasury. So you have to make choices, Mr. Chairman, and in this particular case I think the choice has been to reduce corporate income tax while permitting the continuation of a substantially increased health care user fee.

I know that when this issue is asked in question period, government ministers, including the Premier, are wont to quote back at us the words of Tommy Douglas, something to the effect that everybody has to pay a little bit or they won't quite understand that health care actually has a cost. That is no doubt a correct quotation of Tommy Douglas, but it is taken completely out of context and used to justify something that the former Premier of Saskatchewan and the father of medicare in this country would never have accepted. It is about the only quotation from a New Democrat Premier or any other New Democrat politician that this government seems to have, and it is completely misleading to suggest that the policies of this government would in any way have been endorsed by Tommy Douglas or other New Democrat Premiers, who have always acted as staunch defenders of our medicare system.

So that's a question that I have for the government: why would they want to reduce corporate taxes and at the same time jack up health care premiums?

Another question that comes to mind, Mr. Chairman, is that in the last couple of budgets school property taxes have been allowed to increase alongside the increase in Alberta's property tax base, thereby breaking a promise made by the Finance minister in April 2001 to freeze school property taxes at a constant $1.2 billion.

Again, when we've asked this question, the minister has dodged and ducked the real issue by saying that the rate has remained frozen, except that her promise was that the total amount accruing to the government from this source would be frozen at $1.2 billion, and allowing an increase in the total amount taken because of an increase in the value of the total property in the province at the fixed rate is not in keeping with her own commitment. The objective, as I understood it, was that the education property tax would gradually be allowed to wither away because the total amount would be frozen and against inflation it would be a declining amount in real dollars.

So a question really needs to be answered from the government side: why did they break the promise, and are they going to continue to allow increases in property taxes? Are they going to continue to be invading this level of municipal taxation, and why don't they think they have enough revenue, given all of the resource revenue, the taxes that they collect, and, of course, the massive amount of money they now collect from people who are addicted to gambling? So those are important questions.

We'd like to know whether the government intends to break this promise a third time in this spring, and we would like to know how the government intends to respond to the motion which was passed last week phasing out school property taxes.

Another question we have, Mr. Chairman, is how much more gambling revenues are expected to rise next year. This has become a serious problem for the government. They've become in fact as addicted to this source of revenue as any gambling addict, and they can't get out of it. They need to bite the bullet and find some way, get some help if they need to, to get away from the dependence on gambling revenues. They are creating havoc among a significant number of families in this province, and it's just not right. The government needs to have the political will to find a way out of the problem that they're in.

Another question that we have is the horse racing subsidies. Now, the government promised many times, particularly early on in its tenure, that it was going to get the government out of the business of being in business. That was a constant refrain we heard, Mr. Chairman, in the early days of the revolution of he whose name starts with a K, yet they're still in subsidizing one particular industry, and I don't understand it.

Why is this particular industry more important than the taxi industry, for example? Why is it more important than the forestry industry or the beef industry or whatever it is to have a constant, ongoing, unjustified, and unjustifiable subsidy for horse racing in this province? This, of course, is money that comes at the expense of other priorities, as it always does.

The next question I'd like to raise is just how the government plans to allocate the $500 million in additional oil and gas revenue that is being transferred to program spending this year. As we know, the Assembly has been asked to pass a bill which increases the amount of natural gas and oil royalty revenue that can be transferred out of the stability fund and into program spending. I've spoken on that bill a couple of times now in this Assembly, but what hasn't been answered is just how the government plans to allocate that additional $500 million a year.

When the opposition raises this question, the normal response from the government is: we thought you wanted to spend more on all of these different things, and now that we're transferring the money to do it, you're kicking and screaming, and isn't that just like the opposition. The question here is: is it the most appropriate source of the $500 million? I guess that's the question for the debate on the bill, but the question for here is: what exactly is it going to be used for? I think it's important that the government give us an indication whether or not it's going to go to schools or hospitals and other priorities and in what amounts.

I want to indicate as well, Mr. Chairman, that the allocation of $500 million at this time is not the little adjustment in the fiscal stability plan that the government talks about. It is in fact a part of the ongoing theme of this government's financial management of the affairs of the province, and that is that the real cycle in revenues and spending in this province has nothing to do with oil and gas prices, which have remained fairly steady. Except for one year, they've remained higher than budgeted in almost every year. In fact, I think there's been about a $2 billion unanticipated surplus on average over the last eight years. The real cycle in government spending, Mr. Chairman, is election cycle spending, and this government is famous for that.

We know that before the last election year after year there were cries of poverty, and we can't afford it, and the opposition wants to bankrupt us, and so on. Then, lo and behold, just before the last election there was a significant increase in spending, and in particular there was an enormous torrent of money that was poured into various subsidy programs for electricity and for natural gas. In fact, Mr. Chairman, believe it or not, the government spent, according to its own figures, approximately $4.2 billion on natural gas and electricity rebate and subsidy programs before the last election and, until just the last few months in the case of natural gas, has not spent a penny since.

Nothing could be clearer than that this government has decided on a policy of spending enormous amounts of public money just before election time only to promptly turn off the tap as soon as the election has passed. That does not meet the smell test, Mr. Chairman. We have seen some natural gas subsidies in the last few months as the continuing high price of natural gas has actually finally hit the government's trigger. So there has been a little bit of subsidy for gas since then, but by and large the whole thing was a cynical election scheme to spend enormous amounts of money directly on problems that the government had itself created, and the prime example of that is, of course, the electricity deregulation issue.

Now, I want to ask a little bit about P3s. We would like to know whether or not the capital cost of the P3 projects, such as the Calgary courthouse and the southeast Edmonton ring road, will be included in the capital estimates, or does the government plan to hide the debt from these projects to keep it off the balance sheet? This is an important question, because the government has again set this policy that it is going to try and be debt free by the centennial of our province. [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired] If no one else wants to speak, Mr. Chairman, then I will continue.

The Chair: Actually, hon. member, it is a thought, though you could only continue after receiving unanimous consent from the committee or after someone else has spoken and then sat down. Then if no one else speaks, you could go. So if you wish to ask for unanimous consent, feel free.

The hon. Interim Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There's a great deal to be said and question in the interim supply estimates, but unfortunately we don't have the details that would allow us to ask those questions and to make judgments about the soundness of the requests before us.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for your most excellent guidance on the matters at hand. [interjections]

The Chair: Hon. members, one person speaking at a time. Thank you.

Through the chair, hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

An Hon. Member: Remember that you don't get paid by the word though.

Mr. Mason: No, I don't, and lucky for you.

Mr. Chairman, the question of P3s is a very interesting one because there hasn't been, really, a case made that P3s are effective, and usually what happens is that P3s end up costing more and producing poorer results than if the government had done it itself.

9:30

That is for several important reasons. First of all, usually the government department involved has the expertise that the private sector needs in order to construct a particular project. That's one thing. Secondly, government can usually access money at a cheaper rate than the private sector can. Thirdly, there's no incentive to cut corners and otherwise produce less of a quality product. So as a general rule P3s cost more and produce a lower quality product than if the government had just carried on and built the project itself. So why, then, do you want to get into P3s other than that it is a popular conservative panacea for government spending albeit about 10 years past its prime?

Does this help, then, in the government's objective of eliminating all of the debt? There's a huge infrastructure gap. There's a tremendous demand for new infrastructure, and with the election coming, it's just perfect timing for the government to meet that demand. So they want to spend a lot on infrastructure, but they've also committed themselves to making Alberta debt free by the year 2005. If they spend billions of dollars on infrastructure, then the provincial debt will rise again, and they'll never reach their objective.

So how, then, is the government going to solve this conundrum, Mr. Chairman? Well, one of the ways that they're going to do that is to go into the question of P3s, build expensive projects worth billions of dollars, and make sure that the debt appears on someone else's balance sheet. So the question I have then is: is there a responsibility on the part of government to indicate how they are going to meet their obligations under the P3s? Because as surely as the sun rises in the morning, the government will have to repay these private companies, and they will have to pay for these projects with a little extra added in so that the companies can make a profit.

So it's more expensive, but the question I would like answered is whether or not the P3 projects are going to appear as debt on the government balance sheet or not. I would also like to know why the government is not being in any way transparent about the tendering process for this.

Now, on Energy I'd like to ask a little bit about the natural gas rebates for next winter. Is the government going to put upfront money into gas rebates into the budget next year, or will they assess their political needs first and wait until the election is closer before deciding just how big the rebates will be? This could be a multiple-choice question, Mr. Chairman, or a true or false – I don't know – but it would be nice to get an answer on that.

Now, with respect to the Learning budget I'd like to know how much more funding school boards can reasonably expect. How will the funds be allocated to implement the Learning Commission recommendations?

In the Department of Health and Wellness I'd like to know how much is going to be spent on the government's upcoming two-tier campaign. How much is going to be spent on the public consultation that we heard so much about today? How much is going to be spent on propaganda on behalf of the government with respect to that? How does the government plan to address the looming budget deficits by a number of health regions, Mr. Chairman? How will the government address gaps in mental health services?

I could go on at some length about these matters. In the interests of time I'm just going to run through the questions only.

In Human Resources and Employment will the government adjust social assistance, shelter, and AISH rates, which have only gone up once in the last 10 years? Does the government plan to tie rates to the cost of living, and if not, why not?

In the Department of Seniors, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to know what government initiatives to fight homelessness might be contained in upcoming spending. Why has the government seemingly backed away from earlier promises to eliminate health care premiums, which I talked about a little bit at the beginning?

Those are my questions, Mr. Chairman. I would appreciate answers in whatever form the government finds convenient.

I just want to say in closing that it ought to be unacceptable to members of this House to be voting interim supply at this time. It is not beyond the capacity of even this government to produce a budget in a timely fashion and allow us to debate a full and complete budget at this time of year. The fact that the budget is again late indicates serious problems. I don't exactly know what those problems are, Mr. Chairman, but it certainly indicates that there is some failure in the government as a whole or in the Finance department or with the minister.

In no way ought this Assembly to allow the government to continue to get away with these interim supply bills when their own budget is just a matter of being brought forward within a few weeks. It just doesn't strike me as evidence of a government that is fully competent in its management of the public funds and public affairs, Mr. Chairman, and I find it, at least for myself, a completely unsatisfactory state of affairs.

Thank you very much.

The Chair: In the momentary silence I would remind all hon.

members – and if you would take responsibility for your seatmates who may not be here or may be in the outer precincts – that tomorrow morning the MLA for a Day students will be here in the Assembly. So tonight after we leave, whenever that might be, if you could have your desktops cleared and whatever you want to place in the drawers placed in there. The other material that's normally left underneath can be left there, but if you'd have the desktops cleared and your drawer ready for locking, it'll be locked tonight but will be reopened before the Assembly starts at 1:30 tomorrow afternoon. I think probably even the chair needs to go to his own desk and do some tidying.

We are in Committee of Supply.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Chair: There actually isn't a question in front of us; it's not until tomorrow.

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Chairman, if you were to confirm that there were no additional members wishing to speak at this time, I would move that we call it a day and adjourn debate.

The Chair: Okay. I think there are two parts to that. Is there anyone, then, who wishes to speak further to the interim supply estimates? There being none, then we'll take the second part of your instruction.

The hon. Government House Leader has moved that the committee do now rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

9:40

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The Deputy Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of Supply has a number of considerations pertaining to interim supply resolutions for the 2004-2005 interim supply estimates of the offices of the Legislative Assembly, the government, and the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2005, reports progress thereon, and requests leave to sit again.

I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of Supply on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

The Deputy Speaker: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Speaker: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:42 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 17, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/17

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon. Welcome.

Let us pray. We give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Georges Farrah. He's the parliamentary secretary responsible for rural development. Mr. Farrah is very well aware of the changing needs of rural Canada as he represents a very rural Quebec constituency that has some particularly unique challenges. I know that he is a very strong champion in the federal government for a strong rural Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is very appropriate and timely that I introduce Mr. Farrah to the Assembly today because earlier this afternoon we released the MLA steering committee report Rural Alberta: Land of Opportunity along with our report coauthors, the members for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and Wainwright. We know that a strong rural Alberta is essential to the economic picture, to the culture and environment of our province, and we know that the province of Alberta will lead the way in finding solutions for our rural areas. So we are very pleased that Mr. Farrah is here to see how highly we regard the sustainability of rural Alberta and to discuss opportunities for co-operation between the federal and provincial governments and our rural communities.

Mr. Farrah is accompanied by Donna Mitchell, who is the executive director for Rural and Cooperatives Secretariats, as well as a number of staff. I would ask that our honoured guests rise and receive the very warm welcome of our Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Royal Canadian Legion's Alberta Northwest-Territories Command takes a keen interest in promoting the values of good citizenship among young people throughout the province and the Territories. The Legion is in partnership with the Legislative Assembly Office in a program that reflects that good work. It is Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day program. We are very appreciative of both the Legion's financial support and their involvement in this annual event. In your gallery are Mr. Bob Hannah, the Legion's command president, who is accompanied by Jean Clark and Lenore Schwabe, command vice-president. I would now invite our guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

I'm also pleased, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to you and through you to all members the 30 student participants in your MLA for a Day program. Our shadow colleagues are seated in both galleries. They are accompanied by their Legion chaperones, Dutchy and Diane Enders, Cecile Boyer, and Gord McDonald. I would ask them now all to rise and receive, again, the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Mr. Dunford: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Part of our activities within the personnel administration office is the attraction and retention of employees to work in the Alberta civil service. I'm pleased to report to all members today that our civil service has won, in the past, national awards. One of the things that we do to enhance our recruitment prospects is run an intern program. So today we have with us 35 interns. They are from all parts of our government. These 35 interns have just recently graduated from postsecondary education. The interns are in their first and second years of employment here with the Alberta government, and of course, as mentioned, this has been co-ordinated through the personnel administration office. So I would ask them to rise and receive the warm greetings of the members of the Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Friedel: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure and privilege to introduce some special guests today. I have 45 visitors from the Peace River high school attending at the Assembly today. They're down for a field trip to the Legislature and to other points in Edmonton. They're accompanied by teachers Dania Hill and Aaron Dublenko and a parent, Jerrold Lundgard. Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the fact that you invited them to join your MLA for a Day event this morning. I'm sure they enjoyed it. They're seated both in the members' and the public galleries, and I'd ask them to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly our guests from the Covenant Christian School near Leduc in my constituency. We have teacher Michelle Fisher, parent helpers Linda Goltz, Elly McGowan, Bruce Moore, Nynke Miedema, and Grace Deunk, and 18 students. So I'd ask the Assembly to extend to them the warm traditional welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Ms Tara DeLeeuw, who lives in the farthest northeastern part of the Lacombe-Stettler constituency bordering on Ponoka-Rimbey. Tara tells me that she is a strong advocate in rural Alberta, particularly for women and youth, focusing her time and energy on the need for equal access for all to law and justice. I would ask Tara to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Marilyn Corbett, who is sitting in the public gallery. She is a member of Education Watch. She's also a recently retired librarian and a grandparent who's very concerned about education funding of K to 12 and the postsecondary system. I would ask Marilyn to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and a happy St. Patrick's Day to you and all the Irish in the building and everybody else. It is a great day for the Irish, and it's also a great day for rural Alberta because today in our midst we have the mayor of Breton, where I lived for 11 and a half years. His name is Darren Aldous. He's also the vice-president of the rural municipalities, small towns, and villages on the AUMA. I've introduced him before, but I know he was meeting today with the rural secretariat, so I'd like him to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Junior Hockey League, of course, are experiencing playoffs right now. Many members in this House, in fact, are cheering for their teams. It's my pleasure today to introduce the voice of the Fort McMurray Oil Barons, which I had the pleasure last night to provide colour commentary with for three hours on radio. He's seated in the members' gallery. It's Jeff Henson. He's with KYX 98, the home of the Barons. I'd like to ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Mr. Cardinal: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly five members of my department that make up the fire weather team: Nick Nimchuk, Paul Kruger, Lisa Avis, Zygmunt Misztal, and Betty Herzog. I'd like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

1:40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you to the House a parent who's an active member of the Education Watch initiative, a parent organization which is very concerned about and advocates for adequate and stable funding for public education. Ms Marilyn Covello has a daughter in grade 3 at McKernan elementary junior high school. She's seated in the public gallery. I would now ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Mr. VanderBurg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a long-time constituent of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, Mrs. Vera Michalchuk. Vera is a lifelong educator who grew up on a homestead near Drayton Valley and taught in many towns west of Edmonton for 40 years before retiring from the Wildwood school. Vera is not only a mother of five and a great long-time Conservative, but she's had so much positive influence on each and every one of us through her wise son David Michalchuk, our caucus director and, I'm told, her favourite. She's very proud of him. She's sitting in the members' gallery, and I'd ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I'd like to introduce to you and to all of the people who may be listening and watching seven members of the Alberta Legislative Assembly who 15 years ago this week, on March 20, 1989, were elected to the Alberta Legislative Assembly for the first time. I'm going to ask the head page, as I mention their names and introduce them to you, to deliver to each one of them a special 15th anniversary Mace pin of the province of Alberta.

So, first of all, to the hon. Member for Highwood, the Deputy Speaker, 15th anniversary; the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, the MLA for Lesser Slave Lake; the hon. Member for Athabasca-Wabasca, the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development; the hon. Member for Stony Plain, the Minister of Seniors; the hon. Member for Rocky Mountain House, the Minister of Infrastructure; the hon. Member for Calgary-Foothills, the Minister of Finance; and, 15 years ago, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, the hon. the Premier.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While the government fiddles, auto insurance rage continues to burn. Drivers from across the country and in this province are outraged by a net profit of $2.6 billion dollars from an industry that has been just recently pleading poverty. Shamefully, the Premier defends this 673 per cent increase in profits. To the Premier: how can you defend these obscene profits?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we don't involve ourselves with the profits of insurance companies. What we do is involve ourselves with the protection of the consumer. The hon. member should be pleased with the program we put in place because, actually, we took profits out of the insurance industry. We took about $250 million – million dollars – out of the insurance industry so that young, safe drivers can be rewarded through lower insurance premiums and older, safe drivers can be rewarded through lower insurance premiums and those in between won't experience extreme rate increases. The program is a good program. Again, I have to commend the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Member for Medicine Hat for the outstanding work that they have done to stabilize insurance rates in this province.

Mr. MacDonald: Again to the Premier: when will you stop tinkering, put people before the profits, and consider the plan for public auto insurance on www.liberalopposition.com?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, relative to the first part of the preamble we have put people before profits as I outlined. We have taken about $250 million out of the insurance industry to make sure that insured drivers in this province are treated fairly regardless of age or gender.

Relative to going to a socialist system, I don't think so. That may be fine for the NDs and the Liberals, who are socialist thinking people, but the majority of people in this province are free thinkers, really respect and understand the entrepreneurial and the free enterprise system and want to see it stay that way.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how can you reject a plan for public auto insurance when that plan would reinvest profits into road safety, programs that reduce accidents, and further reduce drivers' premiums? How can you reject that plan?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we don't reject a plan that reinvests money into road safety. I'll have the hon. Minister of Transportation speak to that issue.

Our main concern relative to the insurance legislation that we passed – and we’re now working on the regulations associated with that legislation – is to make sure that people in this province are treated fairly. That is the main point. That is the point that we wanted to emphasize and the point that we wanted to address, and we have addressed it very successfully indeed.

Relative to the amount of money that goes into road safety, whether that comes from insurance or whether it comes from general revenues, it is significant. I’ll have the hon. minister comment.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta invests in excess of $2 million annually in road safety programs. Together with what the government invests in road safety, other participants like regional health authorities, enforcement agencies, the centre for injury prevention, the Alberta Motor Association, and including insurance companies, all pool their resources and look towards focusing on safety on provincial highways.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Complaints to Utilities Consumer Advocate

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government’s credibility continues to decline. The Utilities Consumer Advocate received over 800 complaints from angry Albertans in his first four months on the job, mostly about high bills and confusing bills and high prices, but this disaster of energy deregulation continues. These concerns are being ignored according to the so-called utilities watchdog, who said, quote, 800 calls in four months is not a huge number, end of quote. Yet just last month the Minister of Government Services, who is also in charge of the Utilities Consumer Advocate, terminated a contract with Imperial Parking after receiving the same number of complaints over 18 months. My first question is to the Premier. Why won’t this government take the concerns of Albertans seriously and admit that the only solution to high prices and confusing energy bills is unplugging energy deregulation?

Mr. Klein: We will not unplug energy deregulation, because insofar as electricity is concerned, it is working, with the generation of about 3,000 megawatts more of power each and every year. Relative to gas, Mr. Speaker, gas was regulated long before the hon. member was a Member of this Legislative Assembly and long before I was a Member of the Legislative Assembly.

What the hon. member fails to point out and purposely fails – because it is their intention to mislead and misrepresent. What he intentionally – intentionally – fails to point out is that 37 per cent of those complaints to the consumer advocate were on natural gas bills, had nothing to do whatsoever with electricity. Now, Mr. Speaker, he intentionally left that out of his preamble because intentionally he wants to mislead and misrepresent the case to Albertans.

Mr. Mason: Point of order.

The Speaker: I gather that there’s an intervention on a point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a point of order, and to the Government House Leader, be prepared.

Let’s remember: parliamentary language. And it applies to everybody in this House.

The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier:

given that 18 per cent of the complaints received by the Utilities Consumer Advocate were from Albertans who could not afford to pay their utility bills, why won’t this government guarantee lower bills by unplugging this $8 billion boondoggle?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, I don’t know any other phrase to use other than “intentionally mislead” because again we heard this hon. member allude to a figure that is not correct. We heard him allude to an adjective that is certainly not correct. Boondoggle is not correct. A good program would be a correct definition. It is not an $8 billion boondoggle. It is a program that has brought 3,000 megawatts of new energy on the market. It is a program that has stabilized electricity prices, and by the way it is a program that has brought about a consumer advocate.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on my hat as a journalist again and ask this hon. member as a journalist: how can he one week criticize the whole notion of a consumer advocate, saying that this person is just a puppet, or something to that effect, of the utility industry because he’s paid by the utilities, then get up and quote eloquently and wax eloquently about what the consumers’ advocate says?

It’s unparliamentary to use the word “hypocrisy,” but I can’t think of another word. Maybe “unprincipled.” I don’t know if that’s unparliamentary or not . . .

Speaker’s Ruling Parliamentary Language

The Speaker: But in this Assembly the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow is not a journalist. He’s the leader of the governing party and the Premier. And parliamentary language is the decorum that will be used in this House.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that energy deregulation is not correct, did the government appoint an industry-funded consumer advocate in order to silence other consumer advocates who have stood up and spoken out in opposition to this government’s failed energy deregulation scheme?

Mr. Klein: It’s not a failed deregulation scheme, and I would remind the hon. member again that 37 per cent of the complaints that the consumer advocate dealt with were related to gas prices and not electricity prices – 37 per cent – something the hon. member fails to mention. But he does mention a lot the unplugging of electricity deregulation. Well, Mr. Speaker, if I could make a suggestion – it would be helpful to all Albertans – that would be to unplug www.liberalopposition.com.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Long-term Care Beds

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently almost 4,000 of Alberta’s long-term care beds are in private rooms, 8,800 are semiprivate, and almost 750 are in wards. Subsidies for low-income seniors and AISH recipients only cover the cost of semiprivate and ward long-term care beds, but it appears that new long-term care facilities will consist primarily of private rooms. My first question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Is the minister allowing a situation to develop where the already limited stock of semiprivate and ward rooms is depleted even further?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that there have been changes over many years with respect to long-term care, and what seniors are telling us is that they actually prefer to get away from the idea of wards and semiprivate rooms. They prefer private rooms, so we let the marketplace operate as it does to respond to the needs of what seniors actually want.

Ms Blakeman: My next question is to the Premier. Is this some misguided circular logic where the government stops building the only kind of long-term care beds for low-income seniors that it's willing to subsidize?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, we are committed to building as many seniors' units as we possibly can, both for long-term care and for assisted living and also lodge accommodation for those who can care for themselves.

But relative to the situation I'll have either the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness or the hon. Minister of Seniors respond.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Woloshyn: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to clarify a misconception. The support that we're giving to seniors in long-term care goes up to, in dollars, the semiprivate rate. That is correct. However, we have taken upon ourselves to advocate on behalf of seniors who are under our program to ensure that they get the private room at the semiprivate rate, which is a darn good bargain. We advocate for them by putting the families together with the individual facilities. In addition to that, any senior who was in a private room on our program would not be moved out of that room unless it was within the same facility and to a semiprivate.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to point out very strongly that we did look after all of the people on our program, that they're not suffering unduly, and, in fact, that we did insist that the people in our program do for the most part receive the same kind of residual income of $265 that the lodge people do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Then to the Minister of Seniors: if the seniors or their families are not able to convince the owners or operators of long-term care facilities to give them the private room at a semiprivate room rate, where exactly are these seniors to go? Is the government going to cover the additional cost or not?

Mr. Woloshyn: Mr. Speaker, very specifically, like I indicated, the people who were in the private rooms would not be moved out against their will, would not be forced to pay more. Quite frankly, we have been able to resolve through consultation on behalf of the residents virtually every case that they presented as hardship, and the operators have been very co-operative.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Special Duty Audit by Auditor General

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been flooding our offices with calls, demanding to know if the $400 million in BSE aid was well spent or if it all ended up in the hands of U.S.-owned packing houses. The government has insisted that the Auditor General would investigate, but yesterday we learned that this investigation would be as deep as a slough in a drought. The Auditor General now says that he will not follow the money beyond who got the initial cheques and that he will not table the terms of reference or an audit plan. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier now admit that the routine audit asked for by the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development is insufficient to answer the questions that Albertans are asking and, instead, use cabinet's authority under the act to request a special duty audit, which can follow the money?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding and it should be the hon. member's understanding as well that the Auditor General is an independent individual who is appointed by this Legislature. He doesn't take direction from government. To have him take direction from government or any other member of the Legislature, for that matter, could be dangerous, very dangerous indeed. If one were to direct the Auditor General, for instance, to ignore something, that would be dangerous.

The Auditor General, as I understand it, works with his legislative mandate and conducts his work as he sees fit. That's why we recently amended the legislation with the support of at least the Liberal opposition to give him wide-ranging powers. As always, this side and that side of the government will co-operate with the Auditor General as fully as we possibly can as he conducts his work.

I tend to put more faith in the Auditor General and his assessment of what he needs to do than the NDs' opinion of what they think he needs to do.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Premier is unfamiliar with the provisions of the Auditor General Act that clearly give cabinet the power to order a special duty audit, how can he claim that the Auditor General will get an answer to the question of why packer margins have increased by 200 per cent, when the Auditor General writes that the flow of money after it is in the hands of those entitled to receive it . . .

The Speaker: Hon. member, it's a question. There's no way a 45-second question is a question.

Mr. Mason: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Auditor General has ruled out following the audit and given that the government is refusing to get to the bottom of this, when will the Premier stand up and ask Executive Council to order a special duty audit so that we can follow the money?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, first of all, as I pointed out, I don't think that it's appropriate or wise for any member of Executive Council to order the Auditor General to do anything. Now, if the hon. member or if this legislative body wants the Auditor General to do what he probably is doing anyway, then I have no problems with that being a legislative motion or anything else.

Mr. Mason: Will you vote for it?

Mr. Klein: Fine. I don't care one way or the other. It's just that I don't feel comfortable as an individual and as the Premier asking Executive Council to order the Auditor General to do anything, because if you can order him to do something that the opposition wants, then it stands to reason that you can order him to do something that the opposition doesn't want.

Mr. Speaker, he is an officer of the Legislature; therefore, it should be the Legislature that directs him. Having said that, I do believe that the Auditor General has the powers to investigate whatever he wants, whenever he wants, notwithstanding the direction of the opposition or this Legislature.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Oh, I get a third one. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. member, you always had a third one. It's just that you abused the second one. So please proceed carefully with the third one.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that Albertans will not see terms of reference or an audit plan from the Auditor General, how is this government going to assure Albertans that his investigation will be a thorough analysis of the program and who received the money from it?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, you know, if I were the hon. member, I'd be very careful, because what he is doing is questioning the investigative authority and, indeed, the integrity of the Auditor General. The Auditor General has said that he will conduct – and I don't know if I'm quoting him correctly – a thorough investigation of this matter relative to BSE. I would suspect that that matter relates to whether the money under the assistance program that we launched, the $400 million, was spent properly, whether the packers made excessive profits, a matter that is already being investigated by a parliamentary committee and, as I understand it, the Competition Bureau.

The Auditor General I believe has indicated that he will submit his report by the end of June, and it remains to be seen at that time whether or not he has done a thorough job. But I have every confidence in the Auditor General to do a thorough job because that's what he is mandated to do.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Cheviot Creek Coal Pit

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There was an announcement yesterday by the Elk Valley Coal Partnership that they plan to go ahead with a $50 million development at the Cheviot Creek coal pit near Hinton. As the Member for West Yellowhead, where the development will take place, I have been asked by my constituents about its economic impact. My main question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Could the minister tell the Legislature what the economic impact of this development is expected to be?

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Speaker, before I answer the hon. member's question, a couple of things have to be said. In light of the continued questions that come from the opposition that point to nothing but an economy that's on a downward spiral, this particular piece of news along with hundreds around the province every day clearly prove that that's incorrect and that it's been what we've said all along: the Alberta advantage is alive and well.

I would also like to offer compliments to the MLA for West Yellowhead. He and I have been working on this for quite some time. The bottom line about this particular project is that this region has been very hard hit, Mr. Speaker, in a number of different industries, not only forestry and coal and agriculture but in tourism, and this member and I have been working together to try and secure new opportunities, of which this is one.

This plant, obviously, will generate an initial introduction of about $50 million of new business into the community in the retrofit. Mr. Speaker, 120 new jobs, that were slated to be lost when Cardinal River Coals shuts down, will be saved. More importantly, it's an ongoing opportunity for the West Yellowhead region, and I think all members of this House, including the opposition members, should be grateful to the Member for West Yellowhead for trying so hard to build a better Alberta.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first and last supplemental question is to the Minister of Energy. What process and approval are needed before the Cheviot Creek coal pit can be producing its coal resource?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the bringing into play of a mine of this calibre is going to be a significant achievement in Alberta. Importantly, this Cheviot mine has already been approved by a joint federal/provincial panel, so much of the legwork and the bull work has already been done, and that's important. Now we're going into individual licensing processes with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board and with Alberta Environment.

Mr. Speaker, I can point out that the Member for West Yellowhead is in charge of a committee that works with royalty review. He's updating the 1976 coal policy in this province and looking for a long-term vision so that, in fact, not only will the Cheviot mine open, but we will start to exploit and develop these resources, this coal that allows us to build new, better burning, more environmentally acceptable coal-fired generators and allows us to move into new markets.

2:10

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that we note that a lot of this credit actually goes to China. China today, in fact, uses 50 per cent of the world's consumption of cement, which they use coal to fire with. They use 30 per cent of the world's supply of coal and 36 per cent of the steel. China is our third largest trading partner and one that will be extremely important to the Member for West Yellowhead as well as to this economy and to the creation of new jobs in Alberta.

Private/Public Partnerships for Hospital Construction

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health and Wellness has recently indicated that this government is open to learning from the practices of other countries and provinces. I hope this is true because if this government paid attention to the evidence and learned from other jurisdictions, they would know that using alternative financing, like P3 hospitals, doesn't work. To the Premier: given the example set by Australia's P3 Port Macquarie base hospital, that cost taxpayers three times what a public hospital would have cost, will the government rule out P3s as a way to build and maintain health care facilities in Alberta?

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that is no. We will not rule it out. It will be ruled out, however, if it doesn't make economic sense. That's why there is a very thorough process that has been put in place to adjudicate a P3 proposal, whether it's for a hospital, a roadway, a school, or any other public institution. Basically, that process involves a thorough review of the initial proposals, then a separate request for qualifications, then a request for proposals. At each stage of the process there is a thorough review of the proposals not only in terms of the physical qualities relative to the project but the finances and whether the taxpayer will benefit in the long run. So we will not rule out P3s, but as I said previously, we will rule out a P3 if it doesn't make sense.

Mr. Bonner: To the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given the example set by England's P3 Cumberland hospital, where an independent commission found that management problems led to poor patient care, will the government rule out P3s for Alberta's health care facilities?

Mr. Klein: No, Mr. Speaker. We will not. I think it would be folly to rule out a P3. For instance, I know that the Calgary health authority is now considering a P3 proposal for a south hospital. Now, that will have to go through the process.

There have been some failures relative to P3s, and there have been some successes. You know, we want to focus on the successful projects. Hopefully, they can work and work for us and work for the taxpayers of this province, but if they don't work, they simply won't happen. I've been to the U.K., and I visited a P3 project where the proponents and the United Kingdom National Health Service say that it's working quite fine, thank you. Now, there may be other projects in the U.K. that were built under P3 that are not working as well.

You know, it's so common for the Liberals to cherry-pick, and usually the cherries they pick are the bad cherries.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: can the Premier explain why his government is refusing to learn a clear lesson from other jurisdictions that P3 hospitals are a failure?

Mr. Klein: Quite the opposite, Mr. Speaker. We are learning from other jurisdictions, but we're learning from their successes, because we believe in looking at what works well in other jurisdictions and why it works well and implementing those policies. So relative to health reform generally, for instance, it's our plan to look at those jurisdictions, those countries where the health system is deemed to be better than it is in Canada. We're saying: let's look at what works, and perhaps we can incorporate what works into our health system, and let's reject what doesn't work. The same with P3s: reject what doesn't work and take the best of the components and put that into our process. In that way, we come out with a quality project at a price that taxpayers can afford and something that may in the long run or probably will in the long run benefit the taxpayers of this province.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Portable Classrooms

Mr. Shariff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most of the elementary schools in my riding use portables for classrooms, and many of these portables have been designed for 24-student capacity. However, it is very common to find 30 to 31 students in these classrooms, which means there are 31 winter coats, boots, jackets, and so on. Quite often teachers have to move desks and chairs around to accommodate student activities, making the rooms very, very congested and unsafe. My questions today are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Could the minister please explain what his department's guidelines are for portable size and capacity?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure which portables the hon. member is referring to. Of course, in the past the construction of the portables has been at the discretion of the school board, so you could get varying sizes. For our standard, as far as the department is concerned, we've now moved to an area per student as opposed to the old class of 25. Under that, the situation is that in a permanent structure it averages because it changes with a number of factors: the age, the grade level, the number of students that have special needs, and a couple of other smaller factors that figure into it. Normally the average would be about 80 metres square. Portables normally are about a hundred metres square, so they, in fact, are usually bigger than the old 25-student class size.

Now, with the policy, as far as into the future, we are looking at trying to standardize and to try perhaps even the government building and then leasing to school boards as opposed to the school boards doing it. However, we are going to look at the standard construction as well so that there is a more uniform standard throughout the province.

When it comes to health and safety, Mr. Speaker, as far as air quality is concerned, we do have in place the standards that must be met in all classes. Of course, as far as health and safety the school board working with the school would deal with things like the exits.

Mr. Shariff: My first and only supplementary is again to the same minister. Given the safety of our children in such situations, what is the departmental safety policy, and when was it last reviewed?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, for the safety as far as air quality is concerned, we have those standards. The size of the portable, the amount of room, is governed under the area utilization formula. That formula is extremely important to us not only in situations like the hon. member has mentioned but also when we are building new schools and to size the classes and to size the overall school to fit with what is necessary in that area.

Also, when we look at the utilization factor – and this is really important. As we move forward, we have a policy that we will not – we will not – build new schools in a jurisdiction until the utilization is up to 85 per cent. That is really critical, because if you go below that, you end up then having difficulty with the operating and maintenance side, and you end up with a lot of space that is not necessary. We can't afford to continue to do that.

However, having said that, we do recognize – and the Minister of Learning and I have talked about it on many occasions – that where you have K to 4 children that are being bused for a long distance, we must take another look at that, but we've got to stick with the 85 per cent utilization.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

SuperNet

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta taxpayers have paid almost $200 million for SuperNet, but with the downloading of costs, for many communities it's going to become NoNet. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Why is the government allowing companies involved with SuperNet to charge struggling communities, like the village of Heisler, a $4,000 hookup fee and $3,000 a year just to maintain one connection to the system?

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta SuperNet will in fact connect almost every community in Alberta. Any community that has a library, a school, a hospital, or government building will have SuperNet access located in that town.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the minister. SuperNet is in the village. Hooking it up is going to cost them $4,000 and another $3,000 a year. How are they going to incorporate that into their budget year after year?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Municipal Affairs may wish to supplement. When we started this process, it was quite clear to the municipalities that our obligation was to take the point of presence for this high-speed optical network into that community. That, in fact, gave the opportunity for the municipalities to connect to the SuperNet because the base network or the main connection across Alberta was being put in place to let them access that high-speed optical network. So, in fact, it is an advantage to them.

The Minister of Municipal Affairs may wish to talk about some discussions that he has been having with the municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you very much, and I would like to supplement, Mr. Speaker. As the minister of innovation has indicated, we've been working very closely with our municipal partners, both rural and urban. I want to say that the annual convention for the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties is coming up within the next two weeks, which, I know, many members from this Assembly are going to be attending. I'd ask the member to stay tuned, because we've been working very closely with this ministry in terms of how every single municipality in this entire province will be hooked up. SuperNet is a program that is unmatched. No other province in Canada has anything even close to it.

Dr. Massey: My question is again to the Minister of Innovation and Science. What solution does the minister have for cash-starved communities like Heisler who simply can't afford SuperNet? Downloading the costs onto them isn't the solution.

Mr. Doerksen: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I might ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs to supplement the answer. I know of no other jurisdiction, frankly, in the world that makes this opportunity available to all Alberta citizens. It is unparalleled, and in fact a recent article out of IEEE magazine, which is a highly respected technical magazine, gave the Alberta SuperNet an innovation award for the vision of that network.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, to follow up from the minister of innovation, every single village, small town, municipality, all 360 of them – I don't want to scoop myself here, but I can say that we have some very important news, because we're working with our partners within municipalities.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Employment Training

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Mr. Minister, it was reported in Red Deer that you said that there is a fierce demand for skilled workers in northern Alberta's resource industry and that employers are made to think that they have to hire high school graduates for every job. Are you suggesting that it is not necessary to graduate from grade 12 or to finish high school and that students can drop out of school to get a job? [interjections]

Mr. Dunford: Pretty spicy stuff, eh?

Let's be clear. If the people that are listening to us now and the people that will be reading Hansard are in school, stay in school. If you are about to graduate, get yourself into our excellent postsecondary system right now or just as soon as you possibly can. If you're under I'm going to say the age of 25, get yourself back into school.

But there's a time for clear talk, and I think this is it. What I'm meaning is that we have a whole generation of folks out there that are older than 30 and have not completed high school, and if we have employers and if we have governments myopically saying that you have to have grade 12 in order to enter the workforce, then we are subjecting a whole generation of people to poverty.

What I was suggesting in the public meeting where I was quoted – and it appears almost misquoted – is that we have to look at the individual person, and we have to determine what is best for them in terms getting them into the workforce. We need flexibility on the part of the training institutions. We need flexibility on the part of the employers. With that flexibility we can get everybody productive in Alberta, and that's what we want.

Mrs. Jablonski: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister: what jobs can people who don't have a high school diploma get?

Mr. Dunford: Yeah, there are lots of them there. There'll be a string. The thing that we need to know and understand is that we have people over 30, we have people that have not completed high school that are trainable and can work into our workforce.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Electronic Health Records

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The main problem facing Alberta's health care system is not out-of-control costs; it's mismanagement of the money we have. Yesterday I asked reasonable questions of the Minister of Health and Wellness about whether his department did due diligence on the electronic health record system. The answer I got didn't address the question, so I'll give the minister another chance today. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that the minister announced $59 million in October for health information systems, then provided the AMA with $65 million in November, and RHAs are spending untold millions more, will the minister tell us the total expected cost of establishing the electronic health record system?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of St. Patrick's Day I feel compelled to answer in the following manner.

There once was a man from Riverview
Whose opinions were respected by few.
He said: it's so grand to have your head in the sand;
Our health system we need not renew.

Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to sit down with the hon. member at any time that he'd like to educate and edify him on the subject of the importance of Wellnet. We have invested over $130 million from 1997 through to March 31, 2003, on information technology. It has been for the following purposes. It has been to improve patient safety, and it is to improve quality of care. The electronic health record, pilot programs leading up to the EHR, the seniors' drug profile program, the pharmaceutical information network, and the newborn metabolic screening system are only to name a few. I would like to point out that that last program recently won a prestigious national award.

Mr. Speaker, $59 million was allocated to develop the EHR, including its implementation up to 2004. The Department of Health and Wellness is pursuing other sources of funding, including the federal government's program under Canada Health Infoway. So far Wellnet has received $16 million in funding from CHI, Canada Health Infoway, to implement the pharmaceutical information network.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given the staggering amount of health information generated every day in clinics and labs, in hospitals and doctors' offices, what cost controls are in place to ensure that the costs of the health information system don't soar?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, Albertans can be assured that there are sophisticated financial systems in place and controls within the Department of Health and Wellness including Alberta Wellnet. Also, of course, the Department of Health and Wellness is subject to the financial scrutiny of the Department of Finance, and all of Alberta Wellnet's reporting controls include documentation providing specific details before a project begins. This includes issues of deliverables, milestone dates, details on resources needed to complete the work, and, finally, monthly status reports on the work that's been completed. Alberta Wellnet is audited by the provincial Auditor General. The contracting process adheres to the policies and the procedures set out by Alberta Finance.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. Will the minister, instead of waiting for a written question, table for us any cost-benefit analysis that was done to justify spending $124 million on the new health information system?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to send me a letter on that, I would be happy to prepare him a written response accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 22, 2004, the Minister of Health and Wellness said loudly and clearly that the government had decided not to accept the Graydon report recommendations because Albertans do not support user-pay schemes. After no doubt being read the riot act, the minister is now falling in line behind the Premier and Steve West in advocating snake oil remedies that will inevitably lead to a two-tiered health care system in this province. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is the minister championing the very two-tiered health care system that the Graydon report recommends after categorically rejecting the same report's recommendations?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, there is no such report, that I'm aware of, that recommends a two-tiered health care system.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the government misleading Albertans with spin about the nonsustainability of the health care system when the minister knows and the government knows from the government's own public accounts that health spending in Alberta has been stable over the last dozen or more years once inflation and population are factored in?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the sand that is running in the ears of the Member for Edmonton-Riverview seems to be running in the ears of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona as well.

I refer the hon. member to the report that was tabled earlier this week done by the Conference Board of Canada. This is the most important public policy issue, not just in Alberta but across Canada. There is a remorselessness to the arithmetic that you cannot have health care spending growing at 8, 9, 10, or 11 per cent a year when government revenues are only growing at 2, 3, or 4 per cent a year. Mr. Speaker, that is the remorselessness of the arithmetic.

It matters not whether you're a Conservative in Alberta, an ND in Saskatchewan, a Liberal in British Columbia; this is the reality across Canada. It's the reason why it's the subject matter of important debates currently going on among ministers of health across this country, the reason why first ministers have asked ministers of health and ministers of finance to get together this summer. It's the reason why this is the most important public policy issue that we will deal with in the next 10 years.

It's not just us that are saying it, Mr. Speaker. Premier Lord from New Brunswick would say that on the current cost tracking that we're undergoing right now, the Canadian health care system will not be here in 10 years' time. We are taking active steps to avoid that consequence.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among all the provinces of Canada why does Alberta stand alone in advocating the two-tiered approach of the Graydon report, which the minister less than two months ago said would not be accepted by most Albertans?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, this Assembly is filled with people who know what they know, it's filled with people who know that they don't know, but it also has a few members that don't know that they don't know.

Recognitions

The Speaker: In 30 seconds I'll call upon the first member.

Hon. members, I have seven hon. members who want to participate in Recognitions today, and I'm not sure that any of the seven are of Irish heritage. Well, if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is of Irish heritage and if there's something about St. Paddy's Day, you're first.

Mr. Mason: It's not about St. Patrick's Day; I'm sorry.

The Speaker: You're not Irish?

Mr. Mason: Half.

The Speaker: Well, that's not good enough.

All right then. Okay. The closest that I can see to an Irishman in the Assembly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Mr. Cao: Thank you. I'm wearing some green here today.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

Mr. Cao: Mr. Speaker, March 21 is the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, proclaimed in 1966 by the United Nations, calling on all nations to redouble their efforts to eliminate all forms of racial discrimination such as xenophobia and related intolerance; discrimination based on culture, nationality, religion, or language; and racism resulting from official doctrines of racial superiority or exclusivity such as ethnic cleansing.

To me, eliminating discrimination must also come from individuals at home. Individuals must reach outside their own ethnic and cultural zones of comfort. I challenge every Albertan, every Canadian to make it their living routine to invite a person of different ethnic and cultural heritage into their own homes.

Mr. Speaker, in Alberta the human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism law recognizes that all persons are equal in: dignity, rights and responsibilities without regard to [the protected grounds of] race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income or family status.

I feel blessed to live and raise our family in Alberta, in Canada.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

U of A Pandas Hockey Team

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 14, 2004, the number one ranked University of Alberta Pandas hockey team claimed their third consecutive national championship and fourth in the last five years with a 2-nothing victory over the Ottawa Gee-Gees in Montreal, Quebec. The Pandas got two goals from CIS player of the year Danielle Bourgeois for the second consecutive game as Alberta dominated the game throughout, outshooting Ottawa 28 to 5 through two periods and 49-11 overall. CIS coach of the year Howie Draper suggested that March 14 culminated a stunning season for the Pandas, who ran their undefeated streak against CIS opponents to an unbelievable 81 games.

Congratulations to the U of A Pandas hockey team.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Alberta Rocky Mountain Parks

Mr. Hutton: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I stand to recognize the Alberta Rocky Mountains. Recently Alberta Rocky Mountain parks were acknowledged as a premier world destination for sustainable tourism. National Geographic surveyed 200 specialists in sustainable tourism, destination stewardship, and related fields, and the results reported in the March 2004 issue of National Geographic Traveler ranked Alberta's Rocky Mountains sixth out of 115 locations around the world. It is notable that Alberta's parks ranked ahead of the Bavarian Alps, the alpine regions of Switzerland, and even my Scottish highlands.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the tourism operators in Banff, Jasper, and Lake Louise on their excellent work to earn this tremendous recognition.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Art Smith

Mr. Amery: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 19 of this year the hon. Minister of Seniors and myself attended the grand opening of a transitional residence in my constituency that will provide a safe and comfortable home to eight people requiring housing assistance. This project was the result of a partnership among Horizon Homes, the community facility enhancement program, Calgary Homeless Foundation, Alberta Seniors' homelessness initiatives, and Human Resources Canada.

This house, Mr. Speaker, was dedicated to an outstanding Canadian who devoted most of his life to serving his fellow citizens as an alderman, a member of this Assembly, a Member of Parliament. In 1998 he founded the Calgary Homeless Foundation. This gentleman is the hon. Art Smith. I would like to ask all of my colleagues to recognize Art Smith for his commitment and dedication to those most in need.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Alberta Schools' Athletic Association Curling Championship

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to recognize the girls, boys, and mixed division winners and all of the teams who competed in this year's Alberta Schools' Athletic Association provincial curling championships, which took place in Drayton Valley this month. The winning rinks included in the mixed division Beaumont composite high school, in the girls' division Stony Plain's Memorial composite school, and in the boys' division Lamont high school. As well, Frank Maddock high school, the host team from Drayton Valley, finished third in the mixed division.

Mr. Speaker, curling is a sport that captivates the Canadian imagination. Everyone knows great competitors like Alberta's own world champions Randy Ferbey and Kevin Martin as well as Canadian champions such as Colleen Jones and Sandra Schmirler.

It is at high school competitions where the next Alberta champion and the next Brier, Scott, and world champion makes his or her mark. It's also at these competitions where new friendships are forged, many of whom will continue to compete against each other as they move up the curling ranks.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, let me say a huge congratulations to all of the volunteers from Frank Maddock high school and the Drayton Valley community. Many students, staff, and volunteers worked very hard to make the Alberta provincial high school curling championships a huge success, and each volunteer deserves a warm round of applause.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Great Kids Awards

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday, March 14, 2004, the Premier, the Minister of Children's Services, and Mrs. Colleen Klein presented 16 children and youth with the Great Kids award. These young people between the ages of five and 18 have made great contributions to their communities, their schools, and their families. From collecting books for children to raising $76,000 for cancer research, these Great Kids have already made a difference in this world.

With thanks to the corporate sponsors each Great Kid will receive a computer from IBM, an education bursary from TransCanada, accommodation at Fantasyland Hotel, and attraction passes to West Edmonton Mall.

Mr. Speaker, the 16 Great Kids that were selected from 257 outstanding nominations are Jazlyn Wiebe, Sherwood Park; Helen Cashman, Edmonton; Mikyla Sherlow, Jasper; Keiran Sawatzky, Okotoks; Paul Zimmerman, Wetaskiwin; Katy White, Banff; Candy Squire, Vulcan; Jacqueline Luhoway, Edmonton; Rodrick Mwemera, Youngstown; Jaylene Norris, Red Deer; Nolan Sleeve, Medicine Hat; Carlia Schwab, Sylvan Lake; Kelsey Trach, Vermilion; Jayden Madsen, Hinton; Taryn Penrice, Red Deer; Megan Fester, Calgary.

I ask that all members of this Legislature join me in congratulating Alberta's Great Kids 2004.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Tooker Gomberg

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On March 4 Albertans lost a true champion for social justice and the environment. With the passing of Tooker Gomberg we have lost a formidable environmental advocate and a visionary activist who inspired many. No one walked the talk like Tooker. It takes a unique personality to do so in everyday life and far more so to do so in political life. He was a straight talker who always told us what he thought we needed to hear even if it wasn't what we wanted to hear.

Tooker saw the environment as necessary to the world's life and to our own. He placed huge value on that life. He didn't only want to preserve our natural environment; he wanted it to thrive. In trying always to think of better ways to do things, his uncompromising approach sometimes led to strong opposition, but his values never wavered. Tooker took on the toughest job of them all: trying to change the world.

Losing Tooker is a loss for me, for our province, and for all Canadians. In fact, it's a loss for our planet. I would like to express my condolences to his wife, Angela, and to his family.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a point of order.

Point of Order Parliamentary Language

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would refer you to the list of expressions which are considered unparliamentary, and it included statements made by the Premier today in question period that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was deliberately misleading the public and the Assembly on certain matters in his question. In the expressions ruled unparliamentary by Speakers and chairmen of the Alberta Legislative Assembly, on page 9 it says that mislead deliberately or deliberately meant to mislead the House and misleading intentionally were ruled to be unparliamentary.

I would request that the hon. Premier withdraw the remarks and apologize to the House.

2:50

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on this point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Certainly, one of the things which we must aspire to in this House is to use parliamentary language at all times and to treat each other with the utmost respect. There are, in fact, in Beauchesne's pages and pages of words that have been used in houses of parliament which have been either ruled to be in certain circumstances allowable and parliamentary and in other circumstances to be ruled out of order.

The measure of whether a word or use of words or context of words is parliamentary or not parliamentary, of course, comes out of Beauchesne's 491.

The Speaker has consistently ruled that language used in the House should be temperate and worthy of the place in which it is spoken. No language is, by virtue of any list, acceptable or unacceptable. A word which is parliamentary in one context may cause disorder in another context, and therefore be unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker, I of course, knowing full well that you've meant us to memorize your memo of February 12 and attachments, would refer to page 2, where again you deal with the question of unparliamentary language: "The Speaker takes into account the tone, manner and intention of . . . the person to whom the words were directed; the degree of provocation; and most importantly, whether or not the remarks created disorder in the Chamber."

So it's clear that in terms of language spoken in the House and words used in the House, the question really is: have they created disorder? That seems to be the common theme in both of them: "May cause disorder in another context, and therefore be unparliamentary" according to Beauchesne's or "whether or not the remarks created disorder in the Chamber" in the context of your own remarks in your memo.

Clearly, first and foremost, the member to whom the response from the hon. Premier was directed made no comment, raised no issue with respect to the question of whether or not it was unparliamentary. Members of his own caucus didn't raise any objection, and in fact as I recall the circumstances at the time, it was one of the quieter times in the House. So disorder was clearly not provoked by use of the word.

Then to go further, of course in the 11th question in the House this afternoon the leader of the third party used the word "misleading" himself in the context of his question. [interjections]

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader has the floor.

Mr. Hancock: The question of whether one can use the word "misleading" in the context of debate in the House or in answering questions in the House in this context, whether one can use even the term "deliberately misleading" clearly has to come from the context. In the context in which it was being used and in answer to the question where the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had used certain information but had left out certain other information, the words "misleading" and "deliberately misleading" apply to the description of what was actually happening and, in fact, caused no uproar in the House. As I recall and I think other members recall, it was a very quiet time in the House. The only person who jumped up somewhat belatedly was the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would request that you take into account the context of the question and the answer, the context of the word used, the context that "misleading" has been determined both parliamentary and unparliamentary, the fact that subsequent to that you clearly admonished the House to utilize parliamentary language, and, I think, the fact that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona thereafter used the word "misleading." Surely he took it to mean that that was not something which had caused such a degree of uproar in the House as to be unparliamentary.

I think we have a clear understanding of what happened and what ought to happen in the future, and we should leave it there.

The Speaker: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, there have been some interesting points raised, and if I may be allowed to join in the debate that is occurring right now over the comments, I too would also refer to the document provided by the Speaker on February 12, 2004.

The Government House Leader refers to something on page 2, but when I actually look through those phrases which the Speaker has asked us to please have a look at – in fact, we are cautioned to be careful in their use – in fact, "mislead" is quite clearly spelled out a number of times, whether you wish to take it in the context of continue to mislead, mislead the House, deliberately mislead the House, deliberately meant to mislead the House. There are three different citations there, three different examples. A "deliberate attempt to" mislead the people, "misleading": four different examples of that. A "misleading statement," "misleading the Assembly," misleading the House, misleading Albertans: there are half a dozen examples of where that was not acceptable. "Misleading information," intentionally misleading.

I think it's quite clear based on the document the Speaker provided that he intended that we understand that the word "mislead" in any of its many possible combinations was not a word that was particularly considered parliamentary in this Assembly.

An interesting point raised by the Government House Leader seems to be trying to establish precedent, saying that if the member who it could be argued had the insult upon them doesn't raise the point of order, somehow that's not worthy of being considered for comment or for citation. I would argue that any member of the Assembly has the right, indeed the responsibility to rise in the House if they feel that decorum is being breached, that there is unparliamentary behaviour taking place in the House, or even that the tone that we're all working on is being deliberately lowered in the House. I would think it incumbent upon any member of the Assembly to rise and to bring that to the attention of the Speaker and, in fact, to ask for the House to be brought to order.

I would also argue against the Government House Leader's assertion that an uproar needs to be demonstrated in order for the words to be considered unparliamentary. I don't believe that's the case at all. I think, again, that the whole tone of the House can be lowered if comments are made repeatedly and left to go unchallenged. I don't think that there needs to be people rising up in arms or taking to arms for something to be pointed out to the Speaker and brought before this Assembly as being unparliamentary, unprofessional, and frankly disrespectful.

Those few comments I may offer up mostly in response to those raised by the Government House Leader. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I want to make this very clear at the outset. Question period and the functioning of question period I really truly believe should have the fewest possible interventions by the chair to be most successful and effective, and I decline as much as I possibly can to interrupt question period. There were two times I intervened today with comments, and they're in Hansard, and all members can refer to it.

Now, here today we have a point of order. First of all, let me make it very, very clear that any member has the right to rise when they feel that unprincipled parliamentary conduct is underway in the Assembly. That is not only their right; more importantly, it is their responsibility to do that. So just because a particular member does not, does not mean that there isn't an opportunity for others to do it.

In the case of what we're dealing with today in the point of order from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, basically it has to do with language. Well, here is what was said, and I quote directly from Hansard. This is part of the response given by the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow, who happens to be the president of Executive Council, who happens to be the Premier of the province of Alberta.

What the hon. member fails to point out – and purposely fails, because it is their intention to mislead and misrepresent. But what he intentionally – intentionally – fails to point out is that 37 per cent of those complaints to the consumer advocate were on natural gas bills, had nothing to do whatsoever with electricity. Now, Mr. Speaker, he intentionally left that out of his preamble because intentionally he wants to mislead and misrepresent the case to Albertans.

Now, we have documents, that we have circulated in the past, from me about when it is unparliamentary to use such phrases, such words, and what have you, and they have been quoted too. I need not go through them again because I've dealt with them in Hansard before, but clearly anything like "mislead," "misleading," "misleading statement," "misinformation," "intentionally" had been ruled unparliamentary. The document I've circulated before gives you the time, the dates when the interventions were. I also provided to all hon. members occasions and dates when such words as "misleading," "misleading statements," "misleading the House," "misled," "misrepresentation" were ruled not unparliamentary. That is part of the dilemma, and that is part of the difficulty in hearing some of the arguments.

What is not part of the difficulty in understanding this, however, is the intent of accusing someone else of uttering a deliberate falsehood, and that is unparliamentary. That is not a debatable point, and there is no context. The member stands up. There are opportunities for members to have different views, different opinions, and that's part of what debate is all about. To suggest that another member is dishonest is not an appropriate policy for any member in this particular House.

One can deal with a whole series of authorities and go from Erskine May, the 22nd edition, page 387, Marleau and Montpetit, page 525, and Beauchesne's sixth edition, section 492, listing the words that I've provided, listing the words Beauchesne has in it, and on and on and on. Then we can go to our own Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j).

Members should simply not accuse other members of being less than honest. This is a place of integrity. It should be a place of integrity. Members can have different views on certain things. We have led ourselves to believe, in fact, that we can hear one statement that says it's this and another statement that says it's that, and we know what the statement really is. But we've been conditioned to believe in the integrity of members, that when they speak, they speak with integrity.

So I don't like what happened here today at all, and I don't think that it keeps with the tradition at all. I did make two interventions in the Assembly when this was done. I'm concluding that this is a point of order. It's a recognized and a legitimate point of order. I did make some comments to the Member for Calgary-Elbow about tempered language in the House before.

Now, the other day I ruled on a point of order against the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and a number of members sent me notes and said: well, you ruled on a point of order against the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but you didn't make him apologize. I said: well, I think that I used enough language in giving the ruling that that probably wasn't required.

I'm going to maintain the same policy with respect to this matter today in the case of this particular point of order because it is tainted by one other thing that is true. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in his second question in his set used similar language. You know, what's good for the pot should be good for the kettle or something to that effect, whatever the heck it is. But the point of all of this is that we can all be better than we are at some time, and I encourage all of us to please remember that.

There are a lot of young people up here today. Certain people are going to get e-mails and memos and letters from people across the province who saw question period again, and they're going to be making accusations against hon. members who utter disrespectful statements. They often send me copies. My list is getting pretty thick, in fact. Pretty thick.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, we'll call the committee to order.

Bill 17
Agricultural Operation Practices
Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise once again to speak to Bill 17, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act. After second reading of this bill I was pleased to hear that there was general support for the amendments, and I appreciate the comments that were made. This gives me further confidence in the fact that these amendments will provide further clarity for the Natural Resources Conservation Board, which administers confined feeding operations in Alberta, for the livestock industry, and for other stakeholders. I am confident that these amendments provide the clarity needed by all stakeholders as they are based on consultations with them last year.

I would like to respond to the questions and comments that some hon. members raised during second reading to clarify the intent of the proposed amendments. As I have stated on many occasions, further clarity is what these amendments are all about.

I agree with the comments from the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills that prior to the amendments to AOPA in January of 2002 there was a patchwork of municipal land-use bylaws and rules across the province related to confined feeding operations. This patchwork and uncertainty caused many problems within neighbourhoods and between neighbours. I would like to thank the hon. member for his comments that since the NRCB was given responsibility for regulating CFOs in Alberta, there is more consistency across the province, and the standards for these operations will allow the livestock industry to move forward in a responsible manner.

Further to my original response last Thursday the NRCB is being given further discretion to determine the minimum distance separation from an existing residence when an operation is applying to expand. The amendments are intended to give the NRCB the ability to look at the specific circumstances surrounding the proposed expansion and make a decision based on the facts of the matter and common sense or judgment.

As I mentioned in my response last week, the site-specific topography, prevailing winds, and other factors need to be part of the decision on appropriate MDS rather than an inflexible line on a map. As the hon. member knows, the NRCB has been given a lot of discretion in administering AOPA to make the right decisions based on the unique situations surrounding each operation. We need to continue to trust that they will make the right decisions.

Over the past two years the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has established two practice review committees. One of these committees has completed its review, and the other is ongoing. In regard to the member's concern with giving the minister more discretion to deny the establishment of a practice review committee, this discretion is limited in that it only gives her additional discretion to deny a request if a practice review committee has already dealt with the issue or if the request does not have merit or the NRCB is already dealing with the concern.

3:10

We do not want to re-create the tactics that some opponents used in the past by requiring the CFO operator to spend considerable time and money defending an unsubstantiated claim. For that reason I would also not support the suggestion of a refundable deposit. The establishment of a committee should be based on the merit of the request, not the ability of someone to force an operator to defend an allocation because someone is prepared to lose a small deposit.

The hon. member also expressed concerns with removing the affected-party status from neighbours of lands on which manure from the operation is intended to go. From our experience over the past two years these manure spreading lands often change, in some cases the day after the application is approved. As well, manure application usually only occurs once or twice a year, and in some cases manure is not applied on the same land for several years.

As I mentioned during second reading, we'll be adding more stringent restrictions to the regulations with how close to a residence or public building like a community hall you can spread manure if it is not incorporated. The example that the hon. member used of manure being spread across the road and hitting cars is an issue of improper manure spreading. It is not an issue of a neighbour not being an affected party. The NRCB currently has authority through AOPA to deal with problems of the improper application of manure.

As well, proposed amendments to AOPA will give affected-party status to neighbours of new and expanding registration-sized operations. These are smaller operations. Previously this status was limited to the municipality and the applicant.

I thank the hon. member for his support in changing the term for short-term storage of manure from six to seven months. This will help avoid the need for the spreading of manure on frozen or snow-covered ground. The regulations deal with the spreading of manure on snow or frozen ground. I am proposing that operations that have nine months of permanent manure storage not be allowed to spread manure on snow or frozen ground without the NRCB approving a manure handling plan. There are unique circumstances, such as prevention of wind erosion in southern Alberta, that may benefit from a winter application of manure.

As far as the NRCB having discretion to not require nine months of permanent storage, as I mentioned during second reading, the NRCB would have to approve a manure handling plan that identified why nine months of permanent storage would not be required. The example that I used was selling manure to a mushroom grower so that he would not need to store manure on his own operation. If the situation changed and the operator needed to store manure on his operation, they would be required to have adequate storage.

Regarding the hon. member's comments about the use of manure as a soil amendment for saline soils, a recent study completed by Alberta Agriculture showed that saline levels in soil would only be increased with large additions of manure being applied on a continual basis. These application rates would far exceed the limit specified in AOPA. The use of manure to improve the organic matter and structure of these soils is meant to encourage plant growth and improve these soils. A management plan would be required by the NRCB to ensure that application did not create a risk to the environment.

Regarding the concerns raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry, the minister will determine the merit of an application when considering the establishment of a practice review committee based on the facts included in the request. The determination of what is a minor alteration to an existing building or structure that will not require notification of neighbours will be at the discretion of the approval officer. This discretion will be limited to those minor modifications that will result in improvements or minimal change in the risk to the environment or disturbance from the operation. Any increase in the capacity of the operation to house animals is not considered a minor change. An example would be a change to a manure storage lagoon from top to bottom loading, which would reduce odour.

Regarding the hon. member's concerns with approval officers not being bound by all provisions that municipalities include in their municipal development plan, the original intent of AOPA was to encourage municipalities to identify where they did not want CFOs to be located. Approval officers will continue to be bound by these provisions. However, some municipalities have started to include technical requirements in their municipal development plans that are over and above or contrary to the provisions of AOPA. Previously an approval officer had to automatically deny an application simply because these provisions were included in the plan. This would require an appeal to the NRCB by the applicant, creating unnecessary costs and delays. Again, this is a clarification of the original intent of AOPA amendments two years ago.

There are many issues that have to be evaluated and dealt with in considering establishing or expanding a CFO, just like the establishment or expansion of an operation in any other industry. It would not be prudent to deal with one issue at a time as in most cases they are linked to others and, therefore, need to be addressed collectively in order to make the best decision.

I appreciate the hon. member's support for the proposed emergency order provisions. It is also encouraging to hear that the environmental groups we consulted with through our process last year support the direction we are taking regarding the definition of a CFO.

Regarding the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, I certainly agree that the environmental principles of AOPA are sound. One of the fundamentals of AOPA continues to be that the neighbours of these operations are protected and their well-being considered when these operations are established or expanded. The main purpose of the minimum distance separation in AOPA is to provide some distance between these operations and their neighbours to reduce their impact. These distances increase as the number of animals on the operation increases. The NRCB works closely with the regional health authorities when considering an application for a new or an expanding CFO.

Regarding the comments made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the intentions of these amendments are not to relax standards in the legislation. Although AOPA does not require existing operations to meet all the standards in AOPA, if these operations are causing a risk to the environment or an inappropriate disturbance, the NRCB can require them to fix the problem. The same principle applies when the building code changes. The province does not require all homeowners in the province to upgrade their homes to the new standard. This principle also applies to operations that were previously approved through the municipal development permit process.

There is certainly intent to look at the specific circumstances surrounding a CFO and balance the needs of the operation, protect the environment, and minimize the impact on neighbours. There are no provisions in AOPA or in the proposed amendments that allow the NRCB to override the Public Health Act. As I mentioned a moment ago, the NRCB works closely with the regional health authorities.

In regard to the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar two examples of size of operations that would produce 500 tonnes of manure per year are a 35-sow farrow-to-finish operation or a 21-head herd of dairy cows. In AOPA manure also includes associated bedding and feed spillage. As one can see, these are very small operations.

Regarding the hon. member's concerns with amendments to allow neighbours of CFOs to waive the requirements for MDS, experience has shown us over the past two years that an operation could not expand because a neighbour was within the MDS, even though they supported the expansion of the operation. This amendment would allow these supporters to waive the requirement and allow the operation to expand.

Mr. Chairman, this government recognizes that by making these changes to the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, the original intent of the legislation will be clarified for all those concerned: confined feeding operators, municipalities, the public, and the Natural Resources Conservation Board, which administers the act. Passing Bill 17 will clarify a number of technical and policy changes that were brought up in a review of the act during the stakeholder consultation last year. The amendments enhance the province's ability to deal with nuisances such as odour, noise, dust, smoke, or other disturbances resulting from an agricultural operation. They also continue to provide producers and other stakeholders with a one-window process for siting of new or expanding confined feeding operations.

With those comments, Mr. Chair, I will conclude by encouraging all members of this Assembly to support this bill. Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

3:20

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 17, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004. We've been waiting for this piece of legislation for quite a long time. Over the years that I've been in this House, I've had the opportunity to visit many intensive livestock operations and hear about their concerns and visit many of the communities that they reside in and hear about those concerns.

So we've been looking forward to some of the necessary amendments. For the most part this bill addresses the easy ones; let me put it that way, Mr. Chairman. What we see it not addressing are the health impact assessments that we expected to be in this legislation. I don't see any serious addressing of environmental concerns. What we don't see here, I don't think, is help for area farmers surrounding the operations considered to be directly affected persons. Well, the health impact and the environmental impacts are very important issues to be dealt with, but what is most pressing to people who live in these communities is the decision of who is and who is not directly affected because, of course, there are some real impacts for people who live in these areas in terms of smell and quality of life.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I'll be introducing an amendment that deals with that particular concern.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, you may proceed now. We shall refer to this as amendment A1.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. As members can see before them, what this amendment does is amend section 12 in the proposed section 21(a) by striking out "of ½ mile or the minimum distance separation, as determined in the regulations," and substituting "2 miles."

So if you were to go to page 8 in the bill and take a look at point 12, section 21 is amending what is now designated to be an appropriate area to deem people to be directly affected. It says by adding and in the case of an application for a registration or an amendment of a registration must notify the owners or occupants of land within the greater of ½ mile or the minimum distance separation, as determined in accordance with the regulations, of the parcel of land on which the confined feeding operation is located or is to be located before "within the time period."

For anyone who's visited these areas, you can clearly see that a half a mile is not enough space, that people farther away than half a mile are significantly directly affected by the confined feeding operations, particularly by smell and by the impact on their road system of the trucks travelling back and forth, also the impact when manure is spread, whether it's composted or spread as a liquid. For anyone upwind or downwind of these particular locations it can have a significant impact. There's no doubt that at certain times of the year the last thing you'd be doing if you were within even a two-mile radius of a confined feeding operation is having a barbeque on the outside patio of your home because the smell is such that it will certainly put you off your food and impacts everything in your life, including the smell being pervasive and getting in your clothing.

We're saying that as laid out in this legislation a half a mile is just not enough space. Certainly, people at a further distance than that are directly affected, and we've chosen two miles because that seems to be a reasonable compromise. We know that in some of the areas I visited, people feel that they are directly affected within a five- or 10-mile radius. All this is asking for is to expand that particular distance so that more people can have some say, pro or con, on any changes in the area.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I'll cede the floor to anyone else who wants to comment on this amendment.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak in favour of the amendment. This is basically an amendment that is going to in some ways achieve some of the things that were requested in the rural development strategy that was released today by the government, in the sense that it talks in there about the stronger rural community voice. They talk about the fact that the lifestyle, the commitment of the community, the sense of community that's so relevant in rural areas is one of the things that's attractive about the development potential of our rural communities. If we have an opportunity for individuals to get more involved in discussions about what's going to happen to their communities, what the ambience of their community is, then they, in effect, will achieve some of the things that are being asked for in the rural strategy.

The other thing is that by increasing this separation a little bit, what it does is it really brings in an opportunity for a lot of the residents in those rural areas that are going to be impacted, not so much by the direct facility but by the waste management activities associated with that facility.

There have been a number of times this winter as I've driven around southern Alberta and through central Alberta when you would see manure being spread that can't be worked in because the ground is frozen, and people are saying: "How long is that going to sit there? Is it going to sit there now till spring thaw? Is it going to sit there till something else happens, till they get another snow to cover it up?" And in most cases, Mr. Chairman, that's what has happened. We've had a little bit more snow, and it has covered it up, and it looks nice and white again.

But if we open up and allow for people to have a say, it gives them buy-in. It gives them a sense of ownership. It gives them a sense of community. I think that's one of the things that we really need to start looking at and talking about as we go through this whole process of what is appropriate discussion when activities are going to go on in a community that have a direct effect on that community.

I think that having two miles instead of the half mile or the minimum distance separation gives us a much better approach to looking at how the whole thing fits into the sense of community that we're trying to create in Alberta and that comes out with the philosophy that was behind the rural development strategy report that was released today. I think that if we're going to really make a statement that we're buying into that report, that we believe that the focus of that report is important, in effect, we will support this amendment and give more people a chance to have input. You know, this is one of the things that we need to look at in terms of making sure that communities feel that they have some control and some say, not necessarily absolute but input to the direction their community takes. So I would encourage everybody to look at this and accept the two-mile amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to briefly comment on the amendment. I'm going to speak in support of the amendment, but before I do that, I also want to compliment the hon. Member for Leduc for taking the trouble to systematically address the concerns and points that were made by somebody on this side, by some members of the House, including some comments that I made. So I want to thank him for paying attention to the concerns. We may or may not agree on the matters that are under debate, but at least to pay attention to and take seriously in debate those points made I think is a very refreshing sort of thing.

3:30

As to the amendment I think it does try to address one of the flaws in Bill 17. I think it is important to increase the distance between the nearest communities and the CFO location. Half a mile is not enough. Some of the smells have strong odour. Malodorous conditions prevail in and around those operations, so half a mile limit is not good enough. To increase at least by two miles would help at least in part to alleviate some of the concerns surrounding the problems that residents or communities surrounding these operations face on a day-to-day basis.

I would certainly be happy to support this amendment and urge all other members in the House to support this amendment as well.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else?

Mr. Klapstein: Well, we did go through a lot of consultation, and I think we made a fair judgment call. I don't think it's the time to make it more onerous for producers at this time.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments on this amendment. I'm not certain what is the exact right number of miles because that can be tremendously affected by the management practices of the individual operation. It can be affected by topography. It can be totally out of view because it would be separated by a hill.

Certainly, there have been some things that have happened in the last year in my constituency that would provide a little bit of insight into what effect some of these operations do have. It's been argued, and argued successfully, that there is a negative impact on the values of neighbouring properties, especially residences. The owners of these properties appealed their assessment to the Municipal Government Board, and their appeal was upheld. They had their assessments reduced because it was recognized that their assets had actually decreased as a result of someone else developing a confined feeding operation within that area.

So whether it's a half mile or one mile or two miles, I'm not certain. I think the management practices have a lot to do with the individual operation. I would like to repeat again that those management practices make the difference between how easy it is for a new development to take place somewhere in the province or not. I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that these things are judged by the poorest operators and what the poorest operators are allowed to do through the standards rather than what 90-plus per cent of the operations actually are, which are very good operations.

I think it behooves us all in here to make sure that these standards that are put in place are to ensure that the poorest amongst them are brought up to a standard that people can be comfortable with and trust that it's not going to have an adverse effect on their property values.

Thank you.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to add a couple of comments to this. I appreciate the hon. member's input. No question; it's been an area that we've been interested in for some time and we've had a number of conversations about. However, I think that the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills made the comment that is really germane to this discussion. We introduced the Agricultural Operation Practices Act a year ago and committed at that time to do a review of it when it had been in place for a year. The hon. Member for Leduc has conducted that review and spent a fair amount of time with industry, with communities. The crux of the matter is that management practices are really the key to this.

Like any industry the majority of the people who are in this industry practise very good management practice, do their best to be good neighbours, good corporate citizens. But you will have – and members opposite know because we've worked on a couple – instances where the rules were right; the practices were wrong.

Maybe rather than making it so onerous for the 90-some per cent of good operators, we make it a heck of a lot tougher for those who aren't. I will give you my commitment that we will do that. We will enforce this act through the proper channel, which is the NRCB. This act gives them the authority to go in and do it, and sometimes it takes a little longer than we want, but eventually we get there. So I would recommend that we don't accept this amendment in the letter that it was written. But in the spirit of what I believe was intended by the member who submitted it, we'll make that commitment that we will do everything that we can to ensure that those rules are enforced and good management practices are practised.

There are so many good projects out there now, and there are so many advances in technology. I give the example of the Iron Creek colony with their biogas project that has reduced odour, emissions so significantly. We have other examples of that occurring in the province.

This industry does for the whole want to be a good community partner and wants to contribute to their communities through the jobs and opportunities that are there. Let's deal with the ones who don't under the rules and regulations that we do have in place and the legislation that we have in place and let this industry grow appropriately, not unfettered, but appropriately, and make sure that those who are in the industry follow the good legislation and regulations that are in place.

So, Mr. Chairman, as I say, I don't accept or recommend that we endorse this amendment in the letter of it, but certainly I will take the spirit of it and ensure that our authorities uphold that spirit.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments from the minister of agriculture and certainly also support, as she does, those operators who are taking a look at biomass operations, where they're using the gasses for other purposes rather than just having them exposed to the air. Those are areas that we've looked at extensively over the years, particularly as they have developed in Europe, and are very much supportive of them.

I also agree with her that the big concern is for those few operators in this province that are poor operators. I agree that most of the operators do an excellent job, but it's particularly because of those poor operators that we scrutinize this kind of legislation carefully and bring in amendments to try and improve it wherever necessary.

In that light, I have another amendment, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to bring forward at this time.

3:40

The Deputy Chair: Hon. members, the amendment is being distributed. For the record we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you may proceed now.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This amendment reads that this particular bill, Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004, be amended by striking out section 10. So if people will go to page 7 in this piece of legislation, and we go to 10:

Section 19 is amended by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) Despite subsection (1), if in the opinion of the approval officer the proposed amendment is related to a minor alteration to an existing building or structure at a confined feeding operation or manure storage facility that will result in a minimal change to its risk, if any, to the environment and a minimal change to a disturbance, if any, notification is not required under subsection (1).

So this amendment proposes to strike out that section. As we see it, the problem is that the section allows an approving officer to waive notice about amendments, and we want to know what is being considered as a minor alteration. It's not defined anywhere, and our concern is that it may be misused and that if anyone is amending an operation, people close by and affected parties should know about it. This is primarily a concern when we're talking about poor operators and the number of approval officers that are out there available to inspect these facilities.

We have seen in other departments where the number of people actually on the road inspecting has been greatly reduced over years. This can be such a critical function that we really believe that this leaves the ability of operators to change or make alterations to their structures or buildings too open. We just believe that this should be deleted and that those alterations should go through the regular approval process.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

Mr. Klapstein: Well, there is a lot of discretion left with the officer. Can you imagine what would happen if somebody wanted to change a gate on a feedlot, if somebody wanted to repair a wall or change a wall inside a building and you had to go through the whole application process for something that common sense would tell you is minor?

That was the intention of it: that if it's going to make a significant change or have a significant impact, yes, go through the application process, but if it's something minor, then give somebody some discretion to deal with it. That was the intent of it. If an officer is not exercising the proper discretion or judgment, that can soon be dealt with. But to make a minor change in an operation and have to go through a lengthy, costly application process, I can't support that.

Dr. Nicol: Mr. Chairman, I just rise to ask for clarification, then, on what constitutes minor. We dealt with a case with the minister – both ministers, in fact – where minor was a matter of interpretation as well. It was a matter of whether or not going out with a shovel and digging a little ditch to drain water was minor versus using a BobCat or using a tractor. Those three different levels of activity eventually occurred within that facility, and, you know, once you start and say, "Well, it's just a minor drainage problem," it ends up being a major earthmoving activity by the time you get to the end of it. This is the kind of clarification that needs to be put into this section.

If we're going to deal with minor alterations, I fully support the idea that changing a gate, changing a wall, moving this or that for better animal movement, that kind of thing, is quite all right.

One of the operational aspects of section 19(1.1) says: "a minor alteration" – and I'll skip down – to a "manure storage facility that will result in a minimal change to its risk." That becomes too subjective. You know, back to the example that I was talking about, everybody in the community looked at it and said that that was significant, yet the operator said that it was minor, and the inspector who was there said: well, the operator says that it's minor, so it is minor. Who gets to judge that?

Let's have this clarified; that's the intent. Let's not allow these things to go on before we can clarify how much of a change is a minor change. That's why this amendment needs to be supported.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm speaking to amendment A2. To preface my brief remarks in support of amendment A2, I just want to draw the attention of the House and remind the House that a couple of years ago – well, three years ago maybe, in 2001 – when the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2001 was debated, the New Democrat opposition heard a great deal from concerned residents of rural communities and small towns about what was wrong with what was being proposed in that bill at that time. The bill passed in spite of widespread opposition to this and concerns expressed across the province and particularly in rural areas. We certainly were most sympathetic to those concerns, but the changes weren't made in the bill to fully address those concerns at the time.

Two years since the proclamation of the bill we are now seeing amendments being proposed to the bill from the government's side, but I think the amendments as proposed in this 2004 version of the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act don't go far enough to address even the minor concerns that have remained on the table during the last two years.

This amendment which proposes to strike out section 10 on page 7 dealing with the amendment of section 19 I think is a good amendment. It will go at least some ways in improving the legislation, which is flawed in other ways as well. Certainly, if this amendment A2 is accepted, it will help address some of the concerns with the proposed bill and with the existing legislation which this bill tries to amend.

I speak in favour of the amendment, and I urge other members to do the same.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have another amendment, and I'll just start talking about this one as it's being distributed because it's very similar to the last amendment. This time if you go to page 8 of the bill, you'll see that what we're asking to be struck out is in section . . .

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, let the amendment at least arrive at this desk first.

Ms Carlson: Okay.

The Deputy Chair: It's my job just to make sure that I have the right copies.

Okay. You may proceed now.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. This is a very similar amendment to the last one. If you go to page 8 of the bill, we're taking a look at section 21 and striking out clause (b), which is the same wording as the last amendment that we dealt with. Once again, given the debate on the last amendment, I'm still not satisfied that we have defined the difference between significant and minor changes. The discretion is left too much in the hands of the landowner as compared to the approval officer, particularly when we're dealing with environmental impact issues.

I agree with the sponsor of the bill when he says that minor changes to gates or doorways or minor structural changes aren't significant, but when you deal with any of the environmental impact issues like the processing or moving or handling of the manure or the water contained within the operation and that which needs to be drained or added to the facility, we start to talk about significant impacts that really need to be considered within the environmental impact of the operation and the region.

So I would suggest that those are not ever minor in nature. I don't see them defined elsewhere within the act, so this looks to me like the only place where we can make an amendment that those kinds of issues will be dealt with with the weight that they need to be dealt with for the long-term viability of the operation and the community.

So I would ask all members to please support this amendment.

Mr. Klapstein: Well, once again I'm not going to support the amendment. I know it's putting some trust in the approval officer in specifying a minimal change. I think that an approval officer that's experienced and has been on the job and understands what his responsibilities are is going to know when something exceeds what is minimal.

Mr. Marz: I'd just like to make some brief comments on this. One of the concerns I raised in second reading that's relative to this is giving the NRCB more discretion than they currently have. It's been my experience in my own constituency that it's that discretion and how it was handled that has caused a lot of problems in my particular area and provided for a lot of increased complaints to the field officer, and the field officer's responses – I have copies of them here, how they claim to have responded to their concerns. The record hasn't been good.

I'm not going to go through them, but when the complaints stopped going to the approval officer and started coming to me, I went out and checked for myself and called the field inspector. I didn't get the same response because it was a different question, but I got a similar type of response, that water doesn't run off that quarter. Well, I was out last weekend, and water was running off my quarter, that was a lot flatter than this one, and filled up the dugout and ran over.

There are communities and there are probably field inspectors that do different things in different ways and interpret the act differently. In the particular case I'm dealing with, I've had nothing but problems since the development, as far as complaints go, and people stopped complaining to the NRCB because they're not getting any response.

So I think that this particular amendment has some merit, not necessarily eliminating the whole thing but providing some clarity to what is minimal risk. How many minimal risks can you tolerate before you have a major risk? How many minimal or minor changes can you have approved before you end up with a major change?

So if the mover would like to address how you would otherwise go about addressing this particular issue other than accepting this particular amendment, I would be happy to hear it.

Mr. Klapstein: The choices really are to force an operator through the entire approval process over something that is minimal or having some trust or some confidence in an officer of the NRCB that he will exercise some sound judgment on small things. If I have to choose between the two, I will choose to not put that operator through a full-blown application or approval process over something that's minor. I will trust the officer to do what's right, and if he doesn't, we have ways of addressing that.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, then my question to the sponsor of this bill is this. Why didn't you define "minimal" within the act? As we have heard first-hand, there have been some experiences where the judgment of that person out there in the field wouldn't pass scrutiny in other areas or in other circumstances. So tell us exactly why there were no definitions provided in these changes for that issue, particularly where it deals with the environmental issues of manure handling and water management.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Yeah. Well, what is minimal can be a whole range of things that might happen or that a person wants to do on their operation. The spreading of manure, the environmental risk, that applies to everybody. Regardless of the size or regardless of the changes they want to make, they have to comply with what the rules are in terms of protecting the environment. Even the small operations, that we try to treat differently and in a less demanding process, still have to comply with all the environmental rules and regulations. So I don't think that changes.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I just want to put on the record that I find that answer completely unsatisfactory.

The Deputy Chair: Okay. Anybody else wish to participate in the debate? Is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands drawing my attention, wanting to speak?

Mr. Mason: No, I did want to speak on the bill, but I'm not yet familiar with the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

Ms Carlson: Mr. Chairman, I have one more amendment on this bill, and I'll have it distributed now.

The Deputy Chair: We shall record this next amendment as amendment A4. Please give a few minutes for distribution.

Hon. member, you may proceed now.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This particular amendment amends section 9 by adding the following after the proposed section 18.1(5). I would refer people to page 6 of the bill if they want to follow along. We're adding here:

18.2(1) In this section "health impact assessment" means an assessment conducted by the medical officer of health, or designate, of the health unit or health region under the Regional Health Authorities Act in which the proposed or operating confined feeding operation or the proposed amendment to an approval, registration or authorization is located on the potential impact of the operation to the health of humans.

(2) Any approval, registration or authorization that is deemed to be provided under section 18.1 must, within 6 months of the coming into force of this section, be submitted for a health impact assessment and must comply with Part 2, Division 1 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment speaks directly to the comments made by the mover of this bill to the previous amendment when he said that issues must comply with current legislation around environmental impact. In fact, for the most part, these operations are not required to either have health impact assessments or environmental assessments. That is something that has been missing in this legislation and is missing in the amendments to this particular act. We're trying to put some definitions and some clarity into this amending act, which are missing and which the mover of this particular bill seems to be unable to specify directly in terms of what definitions should be.

We truly believe that the future of this industry is contingent upon these operators being operators that will pass inspection for health impacts and environmental impacts. For those operators who operate efficiently and effectively, this will be very minor in terms of consequence, but for those who do not, then it has a major impact not just on the operators and those people working within that facility but all their surrounding neighbours.

As we look at this province opening up its borders to more operators in this industry, we must significantly look at how we assess the impact on the environment and the health of anybody affected. This is the step that we need to go for these operators and for all Albertans. It's a necessary, critical step to put in place in this legislation. If we don't do this, when we think about the volume of manure created yearly by these pigs – it's significantly greater than anything that humans could contribute to in a year – the health impacts and the environmental impacts are significant and serious.

We've seen all kinds of issues develop over the years with regard to this in terms of heavy metal deposits when manure is being spread, in terms of what it does to the soil if not properly processed, particularly with regard to waterways. We heard one story about dugouts running over. It happens. It happens frequently in this province when we have operations not far enough back from waterways, when we see that the containers that they have are not properly sealed and we get contamination into groundwater. All of those are instances that have happened. We must stop those kinds of processes immediately.

Also in terms of the impact on those people employed in these confined feeding operations – we have to take that into consideration. That's what this particular amendment puts forward and takes a look at doing.

I sincerely hope that the mover of this bill will have just seen this as a minor oversight on his part when putting this legislation together and will support this amendment, which will make this bill much stronger. Thank you.

Mr. Klapstein: Well, once again, I'm not going to support the amendment. When AOPA was done a couple of years back, it was designed to have a one-window approach so that you went to one place to file an application to have it dealt with. Along with that, provisions were made for consultation with the health authorities, and to the best of my knowledge that's working pretty well.

We were in the Lethbridge area. You talk to the health authority people there, and they seem to be very pleased with how it is working. As far as I know, the consultation with the health authorities and NRCB has worked very well, and those recommendations are taken into account when the decision is made, similarly with the environment. There's a linkage that was designed into it when the act was brought in in 2002.

I still support the one-window approach. I agree that health and environmental considerations have to be taken into account when that decision is made, and the provisions are there for it to be done.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

Mr. Mason: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do want to enter a few general comments with respect to this bill and to raise a few other specifics, and I just want to talk a little bit about the direction of the government with respect to this industry. This morning there was an MLA committee who, together with the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, released a report on rural Alberta and what needed to be done.

You know, it was interesting that the report painted I guess by implication a rather gloomy picture of rural Alberta and came forward with a number of very general strategies for dealing with the problem. The problem, I think, is simply stated as a continuing decline in population in rural Alberta and a decline in the population of many towns and villages in Alberta and serious problems that arise for municipalities as a result, financial problems, problems with a declining tax base, potential bankruptcy of towns, and so on.

I guess the concern I have is that rural Alberta is in decline partly due to the policies of the government itself. I would say that the shrinking of population in rural western Canada is a historical trend that has gone on for decades, in fact probably over an entire century. That is not something that one could hold this government or any government accountable for, but it's my view that government policies in terms of agriculture have accelerated the decline. They've done that specifically by encouraging the concept that bigger is always better.

Going back a number of years, the Conservative government of Alberta provided incentives for large meat-packing plants to come into Alberta and as a matter of policy helped create the situation we now have in this province where two large meat-packing plants dominate the beef industry, in fact have 90 per cent of the capacity in Alberta, and in Canada as a whole they still have about 70 per cent of the capacity. Those plants were enticed here by the government, and what happened is that they put a lot of existing plants out of business, and they shut down.

This has certainly affected my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands, where the Maple Leaf plant was shut down just a few years ago – before that it was the Gainers plant – and has been vacant for a considerable amount of time. So these plants, which were considered inefficient and small scale, closed down, laying off thousands of people, and they have a similar effect in rural areas.

The government has encouraged ILOs and large ones to boot, and this legislation is about the rules that will be placed around the operation of these plants. This direction in agriculture will kill small farms. It will put them out of business, and it will lead to a further decline in the rural economy and in the rural population base.

So at the same time that the minister is releasing a report full of vague strategies for dealing with the crisis in rural Alberta, we're dealing with a bill here that is part and parcel of a government policy in rural Alberta that bigger is better. Bigger is better is a very dangerous doctrine for our rural communities because it means the loss of the family farm; it means the loss of the small town. The bank closes, and the grain elevator closes. And it's all a result of the same policy.

4:10

Similarly, the government's opposition to the single-desk selling of the Canadian Wheat Board is something that favours larger grain farmers who hope to be able to sell their grain directly and benefit by eliminating the single desk, but it's the small grain farmer who will be disadvantaged. And the margins in farming are paper thin and have been since the middle '70s in almost all areas. So small farmers need every advantage they can possibly have just to survive, but I would submit, Mr. Chairman, that it's the government's policy to accelerate the bankruptcy of small business and small farmers in rural Alberta because they believe that large-scale and possibly massive-scale operations are superior and are more competitive, and they don't care if they're owned by foreigners. They don't care if Albertans lose their own land and have to work for low wages for some of these foreign companies. We become tenants in our own province.

So I have opposed the direction of the government on ILOs for that reason and also for health and environmental concerns. We did some calculations when the last bill went through this Assembly about the amount of manure that would be produced if the Premier had his wish and we went up to 17 million hogs in this province. I don't have the actual calculations, Mr. Chairman, but the amount of pig manure that will be produced will be absolutely enormous, and it is a particularly difficult manure to deal with in terms of its ability to create health problems, nuisances such as odours, and pollution. In those volumes I believe that the provincial ecology and public health will be threatened.

Now, I'd like to know what would be done to ensure that all facilities which do process manure as part of their operations are legally required to ensure that their activities are not damaging the health of people in nearby communities. I think, Mr. Chairman, that that needs to be in place regardless of how long the operation has existed.

I'd like to ask the question: why are operators such as racetracks explicitly excluded from the bill? Are they not capable of causing health risks to the nearby communities? I'd like to know how the peer review will ensure that fair hearings take place to the complainants, and I'd like to know how committee members would be chosen under the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard from a number of Albertans who have very strong concerns about the questions that we've raised. There was a situation in the town of Bentley which was reported to us. An expansion went ahead there, and there has been a serious problem with odours, and it has been a contentious issue in the community. There have been reports of respiratory problems that need to be dealt with. One person contacted our office and said that the people of Bentley are being bombarded with these toxic chemicals. There's nothing in the act to cover this other than that the odour is a nuisance. It's the only way that it's looked at.

We have other concerns that have been raised about the impact on surface water from these lagoons and so on, and there remain questions that I don't think the government has adequately answered about the potential threat to our aquifers. I'd just like to indicate, Mr. Chairman, that we do have a lot of concern with this bill and would like to hear a lot more from the member who has proposed this and from the minister in order to allay our concerns.

Generally, however, the direction of having large-scale industrial agriculture operations involving livestock is not a direction that we would endorse, and we don't believe that there are sufficient protections in terms of nuisance odours and public health to continue with this policy. We believe that the policy of large-scale operations in general, industrial operations, is transforming the countryside and is a key factor in the continuing crisis in Alberta's rural communities. These need to be addressed at the source, not with a bunch of vague strategies as we saw in the MLA report that was released this morning.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Mr. Snelgrove: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. How appropriate that we're dealing with manure management after that speech.

I come from a family farm, a small farm, the kind that apparently the hon. member thinks the government is out to do in. I can tell you that my neighbours just down the road in Saskatchewan would love to have that attitude from their government surrounding farms that this government has looked after.

There are so many inaccuracies. I just have to put this: it is a huge investment now in any type of farm. There's no question – the member is absolutely right – the margins are extremely tough. To make an investment, whether it's in a feedlot or a cow-calf operation, can literally run into the millions of dollars, and as a businessman that farms, I have to know the rules around the investments I'm going to make. I can't even pretend to think it's a wise investment if someone who pretends to understand agriculture, who knows what's right for me, moves in down the road and says, "I don't like that smell. I moved to the country for some fresh air, and now I have to smell that cattle farm or that hog barn."

So I have to be protected, and as much as I'm certainly not a promoter of legislation, I also need protection from people who don't understand agriculture, and it's quite obviously what's come out of that speech.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I, too, am utterly amazed at the self-proclaimed expertise of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Perhaps he would gain a far broader, useful knowledge of farming if he started farming some of those highlands.

You'd think that this government was responsible for the small margins. The fact of the matter is that the small margins that farmers do have in agriculture are based on world markets. A lot of that is based on the subsidies: our neighbours to the south and our European neighbours constantly are competing against us with larger subsidies.

This government has been there for the Alberta farmers more than any other government in any other jurisdiction in Canada, not just once, not just twice, but every time there's a crisis, absolutely every time. I know because I am a farmer. I have farmed all of my life, and I talk the talk, and I know how to walk the walk. I can walk it in high boots, as the former leader of the Liberals wears quite often. There's a reason that sometimes you have to wear those high boots, and I'm starting to think that I'd better wear them in here. Some of the stuff you have to listen to in here is absolutely amazing.

Whether it's low grain prices, low feed prices, grasshoppers, the BSE situation, this government has been at the plate first up every single time and will continue to be whenever this industry is in crisis. We have developed markets for all these products in a way that no other province has done. How come this feeding operation hasn't established in Saskatchewan? Lots of wide open spaces there. They could raise cattle there just as easily as they could here. More water in the north than we have here. So I don't buy the argument from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands that this is all this government's fault that there are low margins in agriculture.

I do have some concerns about this bill. I'd like to start off by thanking the Member for Leduc for taking the time both in the House in addressing some of my concerns but outside the House and sitting with me for hours combing through this stuff, this pile on my desk here, trying to work with me to address those concerns. I'd like to thank him for that.

I think most of the concerns I've raised can be addressed in regulations if there's a will and a commitment from the member to do so. I think I've already got that commitment from the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. However, there are a couple of outstanding issues that were raised as a result of the comments that the Member for Leduc made.

In second reading I asked how many practice review committees were established, and I believe the answer was two. If there were only two in the last year, it does cause me to wonder yet why we need to change the rules and give more discretion to perhaps not hear some of these complaints that are construed to be vexatious or without merit.

I'd like to remind the member that vexatious actions can work both ways. I've got a number of examples that I could give, that I have talked to the member about before. I classify these operations into the good, the bad, and the ugly. The ugly is a very, very small percentage. They're the ones that cause the most problems, and they can actually go out and be very vexatious to anyone who raises a complaint. We have to have protection against that sort of thing too. I'm hoping that the member and the minister will look at those particular instances and look at addressing those in the regulations.

The other thing I'm concerned about that probably can't be addressed in the regulations is the issue of giving the NRCB more discretion or more power, because in my particular situation in my riding regarding one particular development – I'm not going to put a classification on that; I'll let the neighbours do that – I think there's no trust in that community with the NRCB. The NRCB has not earned their trust and certainly currently does not have that trust, and to give them more discretion is not going to increase that trust in that community.

So I'd like the minister's comments on that particular issue, and with that I'll take my seat.

Mr. Klapstein: I will respond to the Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills in this way, saying that there is a process under which regulations are developed, and I'll certainly work with him through that process, but I can't make that decision myself today.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to participate in this debate?

The Deputy Chair: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chair: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 21

Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a few comments on Bill 21, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004. I look forward to speaking to the bill in committee today. When we look at this bill, we are looking at the third attempt at amending the Child Welfare Act within three years. I certainly hope that on this particular occasion the amendments that have been proposed will satisfy everybody and that we can move forward from this position.

What we are trying to do with the amendments in this bill is align this bill with the Family Law Act and the Vital Statistics Act. Certainly, the major goal is that we have a smooth transition when we do go forward with this legislation. So this, Mr. Chairman, is certainly more of a housekeeping bill. What we are doing is making the wording consistent between the Family Law Act and the Vital Statistics Act.

Some of the things that we look at when we do our sectional analysis – I'm looking at subsection (3), which redefines the job of the child advocate and also includes the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act. This allows the child advocate to delegate his duties to people within the child's life.

I know that our party has always supported the advocate, that the advocate be a separate office from the government. Yet this bill in its form still has the advocate reporting to the minister, so certainly we feel that this is one of the areas that we'd like further clarification as to why the advocate is not a separate office from the government.

Section 4 changes the alternative dispute resolution to be defined by regulations. It also changes the disclosure of documents created by the alternative dispute resolution to include any documents that affect the development of a child. Our questions here are: what documents don't affect the development of a child, and who in this situation is going to protect the child's personal information after the dispute is settled?

Section 7 removes financial contributions that the family may have to provide when their child goes into service, allows the court to demand treatment for both the child and guardian, and also finishes with the clause: "any other terms that the Court considers necessary." This gives the court the ability to make decisions without regulated control on what is required to make the family come back together.

Section 11 changes the amount of time a court can make a secure services order from 10 to five days, and it forces the family or guardians to be notified by any means necessary within one day if a secure services order is given by the courts. They may apply for five more days to stabilize a child or assess a child and prepare a plan for service. There is also a set of information that is applied to the child when a secure services order is passed.

One last area that I would like to comment on is section 15, which repealed all the information about how Children's Services would obtain child support and allows the director to apply to the courts for child support. This particular section, Mr. Chairman, requires a careful looking over for it deletes a large part about child support from the original act. This removes a process by which directors would act to obtain child support. What is going to be done now in this instance? Does the child support law handle this?

So those were some of my concerns with the bill at this particular time, Mr. Chairman. I thank you for the opportunity to put those on the record at this time.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Mrs. Jablonski: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hope to be able to answer some of the questions that the Member for Edmonton-Glenarry has just raised. I'm pleased to stand in Committee of the Whole and speak to Bill 21, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004. The intent of this bill is to make minor amendments to the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003, legislation that received royal assent last spring and that is vital to the protection and preservation of Alberta's children, youth, and families. The purpose of the amendments, although there are many, is straightforward: to clarify the act, to ensure that the original intent of the act is carried out, and implementation.

I want to thank the members of the Assembly for their questions at second reading and in the committee as they provide an opportunity for clarifying a number of points and misconceptions. I welcome the opportunity today to clear up any confusion and create a greater understanding about these amendments and how they will help to ensure that the legislation is applied in practice in the manner that was intended.

I would like now to address each of the questions and points in detail to aid in that understanding. First, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003, as passed last spring in this House is significant legislation that will enhance services to children and families and will be renamed the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act upon proclamation. The Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004, is making minor amendments to that act to ensure consistency with the Family Law Act, the Vital Statistics Act, and the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act.

The amendments were identified as work began on preparing the draft regulations. This is consistent with the usual process of preparing legislation for implementation. The draft regulations are now in the process of being drafted. The ministry has been consulting with stakeholders throughout the process. In keeping with this consultation, an open process, both opposition parties received a letter dated December 1, 2003, that provided a postregulatory framework and invited questions should further clarification be required. The offer to meet and discuss the framework was and continues to be extended to all members.

Regarding the Interim Leader of the Official Opposition's concern about the child and youth advocate, Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendments not only retain the role of the child advocate but also enhance that role by authorizing the advocate to meet the needs of children and youth involved in prostitution.

Changes in the alternative dispute resolution have been made so that a family feels comfortable sharing their situation while at the same time ensuring their confidentiality and the safety and well-being of the children. Information and records from alternative dispute resolution processes are highly confidential, but there are instances when its disclosure may be "necessary to protect the survival, security or development of the child." The Leader of the Official Opposition raised a concern about including "development of the child." It is important to keep in mind that above and beyond this specific point, any disclosure is limited to situations where a child is in need of intervention under the act.

A question was raised about who was going to protect the child's personal information after the dispute is settled. Mr. Chairman, confidentiality provisions of the Child, Youth and Family Enhancement Act as well as FOIP are in place to protect those privacy interests.

Changing the duration of an initial secure services order from 10 days to five days will ensure that Charter rights are protected. This change will also ensure consistency with the confinement provisions in PCHIP legislation. The requirement that parents be notified of an application for a secure services order is a due process issue. Notice will provide parents with an opportunity to make representations to the court regarding an application for a secure services order.

We can assure the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods that the amendments do not repeal any requirements regarding children's treaty registration.

Regarding the time for licensing residential facilities, the ministry has consulted with operators impacted by the new licensing provisions. The 18-month transitional period will ensure that both operators and the ministry have sufficient time to implement a smooth and effective transition.

The act currently provides authority to the court to direct legal representation for children with child welfare status. The amendments enhance that authority by also giving the courts the ability to direct legal representation for children who are the subjects of a private guardianship application.

The change in maximum sentencing time for a parent or guardian who causes a child to be in need of protective services holds parents and guardians accountable, Mr. Chairman. It is consistent with the maximum sentencing time under our Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act.

During second reading the hon. members for Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Mill Woods referred to a number of sections that were being removed from the Child Welfare Act. The most pressing questions from the Member for Edmonton-Centre were in regard to the sections around child support orders.

Concern was expressed with the following points: the elimination of sections talking about support orders or maintenance orders from the act; concern about removing rules around how the director of child welfare goes about establishing support orders or obtaining money from a guardian in support of a child; striking out the ability of a guardian, parent, or trustee ordered to pay child support to apply to the court for a review of the order; removal of the rules around dealing with child support, including the removal of the review process and the ability of the courts to vary an order that's in place.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was right when she supposed that there might be a simple reason for this amendment. The process for obtaining court-ordered child support for children in the care of the director is addressed in the new Family Law Act, which was introduced last spring and passed last fall. The removal of these processes from the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2003, is a simple matter of streamlining Alberta's legislation by avoiding duplication and striving for consistency. By removing these provisions, we haven't lost anything. In fact, we've ensured consistency, ensured that there's only one process for courts to follow, and avoided unnecessary duplication.

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, these amendments are housekeeping. They are minor, but they're still important. I appreciate this opportunity to speak to the concerns and questions that have been raised. The Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004, is vital legislation. It is essential that it is clear as we prepare for implementation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to make some comments with respect to Bill 21, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2004, at this time. I just want to indicate that some of the changes are of interest.

The main intention of section 3, which amends section 6, seems to be the inclusion of matters pertaining to the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act as part of the jurisdiction of the child and youth advocate, and that seems to be something worth supporting.

However, there does seem to be another change which is of a somewhat more dubious quality. In the proposed subsection (3)(b) the authority of the child and youth advocate is being extended to include PCHIP legislation, but instead of the advocate being able to receive, review, and investigate complaints, the advocate will now only be able to receive and review complaints. If this power is somewhere else restated, then hopefully the minister or the mover of the bill can direct us to that. Otherwise, I believe that it needs to be amended.

Section 4, Mr. Chairman, sets out some basic guidelines for an alternative dispute resolution mechanism. Now, we're not opposed to that in theory, but there are some concerns about the fact that the mechanism depends almost entirely on the regulations.

Alternative dispute resolution mechanisms are useful insofar as they reduce the workloads of courts and appeal panels and insofar as they are able to foster a more amicable and less confrontational atmosphere for resolving disagreements. The courts and appeal panels do, however, have a role in ensuring that intimidation, threat, and subtle forms of duress are minimized. They're meant to counter power differences and level the playing field. One hopes that the alternative dispute mechanism will also do this. In the case of parent/teen conflicts or abusive situations there are unavoidable power imbalances, and we can't expect negotiations or compromise in these situations to necessarily be fair or appropriate.

The minister may well have thought out plans for how to make this alternative dispute resolution mechanism work, but we cannot know because once again the bulk of the matter is left up to regulation. It would be much preferable if we could see the details or even the framework in the Assembly and thereby have a better idea of what we are discussing.

Further, we need assurances of a strong commitment from the minister to provide adequate resources for these alternative dispute processes. It's not enough, Mr. Chairman, to create a program. It must be adequately funded. Some of the people we have contacted have raised this as a very real concern.

Now, under section 7, which amends section 32, page 5, it appears that this amendment gives with one hand and takes with the other. It adds a provision under which the court may authorize or mandate participation in treatment and/or remedial programs, and that is certainly worth supporting. Hopefully, the minister or the mover can explain, however, why the clause in the original act is being dropped that would allow the court to prescribe financial contributions to the maintenance of the child.

When a child or youth is in danger of harming himself or herself or others or if the young person has severe substance abuse problems, then often secure treatment is an important resource for introducing some stability and the context necessary to be brought out of immediate danger. This is an important resource but is one that must be used very carefully. I've had at least one young person come into my office terrified that she would be put back into secure treatment. She felt that secure treatment was as much a prison as it was a treatment mechanism. So we must understand that a balance is necessary between the loss of certain rights and freedoms of young individuals and the need to strongly intervene to restore the youth's safety.

Mr. Chairman, when the Child Welfare Act was passed, the length of stay in secure treatment was radically reduced. The reasoning behind this was never fully explained. So I think it's good that this legislation is shortening the time allowed for the director to communicate with youth about their secure treatment and their ability to challenge a situation, but there still are questions about the length of stay of youth in secure treatment.

With those comments, for the moment, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat. I am particularly interested in the question of whether the child and youth advocate will not have the authority to investigate complaints but only to receive and review them. Pending the answer, I may have an amendment.

Thank you.

The Deputy Chair: Anybody else wish to participate in the debate?

Mr. Mason: Well, that being the case, Mr. Chairman, I will propose an amendment.

The Deputy Chair: Hon. member, I guess somebody else will have to speak before I can recognize you.

Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2004

The Deputy Chair: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Dr. Nicol: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just commend the Minister of Revenue for introducing this act, that in effect is going to bring Alberta aviation in line with the framework that's available for airlines around the world. The more we move into trying to be part of the world industry, communication strategy, even our tourism, both the people who want to come here and Canadians and Albertans who want to travel – we have to have access to air carrier capacity.

As we look at the airlines around the world with limited capital, limited investment, they make choices on where they're going to put in new flights based on the relative cost-effectiveness of their dollars. This, in effect, now will take out a factor for them that was discriminatory against new flights, new routes being established into either of our major international airports, in Edmonton or in Calgary.

So now that that deterrent is gone, this will give our airport authorities a chance to go out and negotiate on a more even basis with other airports and countries to get increased capacity to serve Albertans both in terms of our wish to travel and our wish to have tourists come and businesspeople come and others to participate in the traffic flows in our airports.

Just in conclusion, this is something that we've been hearing from the airline industry, from the airport authorities for years. The fact that the minister now is making the commitment through the budgeting process and this act to bring us in line with other airports and other authorities I think is good, and we should support this act.

Thank you.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have spoken at introduction, second reading, and again in committee with respect to Bill 20, the Minors' Property Act. I move it for third reading.

The Acting Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to this particular bill, Bill 20, the Minors' Property Act. It seems that as we review what has been said in Hansard over the last few days on this bill, we are satisfied with the answers that we have received. Generally, we support this particular bill.

I think those are really all the comments I have at this time because, generally speaking, this bill is a step in the right direction. Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 17, 2004 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 2004/03/17
 head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The Chair: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

Before we recommence our debate on the interim supply estimates, I wonder if we might have permission to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

The Chair: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure this evening to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Catherine Ripley. Of the many hats that she wears, she's first and foremost a parent of two children, one attending Harry Ainlay and one attending Strathcona composite high school in the city of Edmonton. Catherine is here this evening as part of the Education Watch program. She's here out of concern for the quality of education and funding for public education.

But I want to recognize Catherine Ripley as chair of the Whitemud Coalition, an organization that I've had the opportunity to work with over the past number of years to learn more about education, about the needs of education in our community, who has what I consider to be very positive input and critique with respect to what the current situation is in each of our schools in the area, someone who has put heart and soul into the education system and is also an author of children's books. Catherine Ripley is in the members' gallery. I'd ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of our Assembly.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Mr. McFarland: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This evening in the public gallery we have a couple of people who are amnesiacs. They're masochists. They work all day, and then they come here to watch us work all night. They're celebrating St. Patrick's Day. I would like the members who provided a lot of food to some of our colleagues today to please rise. Their names are Evelyn Oberg and Fran Cuglietta. Would you please rise and receive the warm welcome. We enjoyed your lunch.

head: Interim Supply Estimates 2004-05
 Offices of the Legislative Assembly,
 Government, and Lottery Fund

The Chair: Are there any further comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this set of estimates? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and put some questions on the record before I vote on the proposed schedule of interim supply amounts that the government has brought forward. I know that in the previous debate, on day 1 of the two-day debate – we're now on the second day – there was quite a bit of discussion about the timing of the budget, which leads us always to the requirement or need for an interim supply. We even had participation from the Minister of Environment, which is always a special moment for us in the House. But tonight I'm just going through, raising some questions for those departments that we have not had an opportunity to examine in Public Accounts.

I would like to put some of the questions on the record when they are asking for money to be approved without any information attached to it, which tends to happen with interim supply. You literally just get a sheet with a figure, an amount next to the name of the department.

In this case I'll start from the top with Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. There's a request there for $108,200,000. Of course, there's never any information that goes with that, so we don't know what they want to spend it on except for the sort of a blanket statement at the beginning saying: well, you know, salaries and . . . Here we go.

Operating expenses includes salaries, supplies, grants, amortization of capital assets and debt servicing costs. Equipment/inventory purchases consist of consumable inventories and movable capital assets, which are routinely moved or which may be installed as a service level improvement to existing facilities.

Then it goes on with some details about what they mean by that, but we don't actually know what's going to happen in each department.

So for those departments that we are not likely to get a chance to examine in Public Accounts, I just wanted to ask some of those questions to see if any issues that have been raised by the Auditor General have been addressed, and therefore can we move forward with confidence in approving another sum of money to be allocated to that same department?

I notice that thus far in Public Accounts this year, which only meets while the Legislature is in session, we've examined Municipal Affairs, Justice, Seniors, and this very morning Infrastructure. On the agenda upcoming is Community Development, Learning, Gaming, Health, and Finance.

The Chair: Hon. members, even with this aid it's getting harder and harder to hear the hon. member. I wonder if we could move the audible level down considerably so that whispering would be a matter of course instead of the louder conversation.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. A valiant job as always. Oh, Wednesday nights. Yeah.

Okay. When I examine Agriculture, Food and Rural Development in the Auditor General's report for the previous fiscal year, there is a recommendation that this department improve its performance measurement by "reviewing its goals and performance measures to ensure that they reflect the results that the Ministry wants to achieve" and "strengthening the process that the Ministry uses to compile its performance measures."

The implications and risks of not following through on this particular performance measurement – and I'm quoting directly from page 51 of the Auditor General's report, Implications and Risks – are:

If goals and measures are not carefully designed, readers will not be able to assess progress and staff may not understand critical directions. Executive, stakeholders, and the general public will not receive relevant, accurate, and timely performance information until the measurement processes are improved.

This, in fact, is sounding very like a previous Auditor General's comment on this same department, so perhaps this is sort of an ongoing working version of this, but I'd like to know where the ministry is on achieving that goal.

There's also a numbered recommendation, number 4, appearing on page 52 of the Auditor General's report recommending that "the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation award insurance benefits in accordance with its lack of moisture insurance contracts." In addition, on page 53, an unnumbered recommendation recommending that the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation improve control over its information technology (IT) by:

- obtaining assurance on technical aspects of its computer control environment; and
- implementing appropriate controls for two of its commercial loan systems.

I believe those are the numbered and unnumbered recommendations appearing for the Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mrs. McClellan: I missed the second one.

Ms Blakeman: The second one was numbered recommendation 4, appearing on page 52: "Agriculture Financial Services Corporation award insurance benefits in accordance with its lack of moisture . . ." Okay.

Mrs. McClellan: What was the one before that?

Ms Blakeman: That was performance measurements before it, and after it was another Agriculture Financial Services Corp.

Okay. Children's Services. On page 59, then, of the Auditor General's report in the Department of Children's Services, recommendation 5, that "Children's Services improve the Authorities' strategic management information systems." In Children's Services the amount being asked for as an interim supply is $184 million, not an amount of money to be sniffed at in any way, shape, or form. But we do need certain controls and processes in place. I'm interested in hearing from whoever's speaking for Children's Services tonight whether there has been progress on addressing that concern raised by the Auditor General.

8:10

The implication of not following through on that is considerable. "Without good strategic management information, Authorities risk making improper decisions and not achieving their goals." Well, yeah, we'd like to know how well they've done on that before we approve for them another $184 million.

There's also a key recommendation, which is sort of the gold star on the top 10 hit parade of the Auditor General's concerns. There's a key recommendation, recommendation 6, appearing on page 66 of the Auditor General's report for Children's Services recommending that the department "improve monitoring of services provided by the Delegated First Nation Agencies." The implication of not meeting that is that "the Department's review of each DFNA's compliance with standards set by the Department is not comprehensive; therefore, non-compliance with standards may occur."

I have notes in my book which tell me I probably have already asked the other recommendations that are raised here. Oh, no, I haven't. Okay.

Recommendation 7, appearing on page 68, recommending that the Ministry of Children's Services "improve its systems to recover expenses from providing services to children and families ordinarily resident-on-reserve." That's a repeated recommendation, Mr. Chairman; it also appeared as recommendation 7 in 2002. Of course, the implications there are that "inadequate cost recovery processes could prevent the Department from recovering all eligible costs."

Contract management systems. There's an unnumbered recommendation that the Department of Children's Services "strengthen the processes used to award and manage contracts." Again, that's a repeated recommendation. So there is some struggle in this department that is requesting $184 million for three months of operation to achieve this if we have repeated recommendations being made.

Another unnumbered recommendation, appearing on page 75, that the ministry "ensure that the Authorities' business plans are approved before the start of the year." Mr. Chairman, what a concept, truly what a good concept to have business plans approved before the start of the year.

I'm sure that as I move along, I will find that that same recommendation is likely appearing in the Department of Health and Wellness, where we know that the regional health authorities might have just had their business plans approved for the fiscal year that is almost done, but it's also possible that that didn't happen yet. Maybe the minister can address that.

Under the next department that I'm not likely to be able to examine in Public Accounts, we're looking at Economic Development. We have recommendation 10 recommending that the Ministry of Economic Development "revise its business plan to clearly demonstrate the desired results each core business is to achieve, and ensure its performance measures demonstrate the Ministry's contribution to results."

Now, Economic Development is requesting $14.4 million. Last year it requested $11.445 million, and the year before that $8.56 million. So I'm detecting a trend here, Mr. Chairman. It seems to be that not only do we keep coming back and asking for interim supply, but every year this particular department asks for more money and with no description of what they're going to use it on other than a sort of blanket one. They seem to be having some trouble with their business plans, which is a little frightening considering that we're talking about the Department of Economic Development, which is I think supposed to be all about business plans.

Another unnumbered recommendation, also appearing on page 89, recommends that the department "expand its business plan discussion of significant environmental factors and risks, including setting out their relationship to the strategic priorities stated in the plan."

On page 90 another unnumbered recommendation, that the ministry "streamline its operational planning process and improve guidance on operational plans provided to divisions/branches."

Another unnumbered one, on page 91 of the Auditor General's report, recommends that the Ministry of Economic Development accelerate the implementation of its internal performance measurement framework for each division and branch, including developing logic models or similar tools, and improve its internal reporting process.

The implications of not doing that are that the "business plan may not be fully achieved unless, and until, the Ministry's Managing for Results systems are more effectively implemented."

Examining the Department of Energy, Mr. Chairman, another department that just seems to want to get more, have more, spend more, in 2002-03 this particular department requested an interim supply of $40.5 million, last year $47.13 million, and this year $50.2 million. Hard to rein this minister in, I tell you.

All right. We're looking at the Auditor General's comments for the Department of Energy, which, I regret, we will probably be unlikely to scrutinize through Public Accounts because, of course, the committee limits itself to only sitting . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Would you like to see the budget for Public Accounts increased for this?

Ms Blakeman: Well, Public Accounts can in fact meet outside of the sitting, but the government members continually vote not to allow the committee to do that, so we only get through a limited number of departments every year. I feel it's incumbent upon us to make sure that we keep these very considered requests and concerns from the Auditor General top of mind as we examine any requests for future allocations of money to a department.

So on the Department of Energy I would like the minister to answer the question, please, appearing on page 95 regarding whether the recommendation that "the Department of Energy assess whether the royalty reduction programs are achieving their intended objectives" has in fact been dealt with. The implication and risk of this is that without timely reviews, the Department cannot assess whether program objectives are being met and if royalties need to be adjusted. Timely information assists in resolving any uncertainty about the results of these programs.

A numbered recommendation appearing on page 96, Mr. Chairman, again for the Department of Energy, recommends that "the Department of Energy document and communicate the objectives of the Alberta Royalty Tax Credit program and develop measures to assess whether the program is meeting its objectives." Well, I'd like to know whether that has in fact happened. I'm sure the minister, given the amount of heckling he's doing, is going to stand up and speak, and I'm looking forward to him answering the questions.

Appearing on page 97 of the Auditor General's report is another unnumbered recommendation. It recommends that the Department of Energy

- improve the communication of its needs for assurance on well and production data to the EUB
- evaluate the extent of audit work done on well and production data by the EUB in relation to its needs.

The implications and risks of not implementing this recommendation, Mr. Chairman, are that the department "cannot be sure of the completeness and accuracy of well and production data that it uses to calculate Crown royalty revenues. Royalties may be foregone if the data used in royalty calculations is inaccurate." That means that the government does not get revenue that it was expecting, and it's going to have to get that revenue from somewhere else, probably out of the pockets of Albertans. So it's important that we have accurate data and that we get every single royalty penny that we're entitled to.

The Department of Environment, one of my best hecklers. I'm hoping he's in tonight to be able to answer the questions on the record. A numbered recommendation, recommendation 12, appearing on page 103 of the Auditor General's report, especially for the Minister of Environment, recommends that "the Ministry of Environment implement an integrated information system to track contaminated sites in Alberta." Under Implications and Risks the Ministry has a variety of business needs for contaminated site information. Making information accessible to those who need it will enhance the management of individual sites. Individual employees with site-specific, accurate information will make better decisions about new approvals. Without a complete, accurate, integrated information system, the Ministry can only summarize or report the status of contaminated site files with considerable manual effort.

So I'd like to hear from the Minister of Environment whether he's been able to implement that recommendation.

Appearing on page 105 of the Auditor General's report under the Department of Environment a numbered recommendation, recommendation 13, recommends that the Deputy Minister of Environment, working with the Sustainable Development Coordinating Council:

- plan and report against Alberta's Commitment to Sustainable

Resource and Environment Management annually to Standing Policy Committee; and

- complete the legislative and regulatory regime review required by the Commitment.

The implication of not implementing that is that to realize the benefits of IRM in Alberta, the undertakings in the Commitment must be implemented.

Well, that makes perfect sense, Mr. Chairman.

Without annual planning and reporting against the Commitment,

- accountability for the IRM initiative is diminished
- key stakeholders' awareness of and interest in IRM may erode
- support decreases for the public service as they design and implement integrated and innovative solutions.

We are anticipating being able to examine Executive Council and the Premier in Public Accounts, or at least we're still hoping.

I believe that although the Finance minister was to appear before us on the 31st of March, she has rescheduled, and I will assume that we, in fact, will see her before this spring session rises. There are some really good, key recommendations in here, Mr. Chairman, some juicy, key, top 10, gold star ones, so I'm looking forward to seeing her.

Gaming we are going to examine shortly, which I'm looking forward to, of course.

Mr. Chairman, I will have to stand later and continue my scrutiny. Thank you very much.

Mrs. McClellan: I am going to just give a couple of brief responses to the hon. member's questions on the interim supply on Agriculture.

At first when I was listening, I thought: I've heard this before. "You have interim supply; what's it for?" Well, you know, we all know what it's for. In the time period between the end of this fiscal year and the budget being passed, we have wages that have to be paid. I don't think it's an unreasonable expectation that our valued civil servants get their paycheques, and I think everybody on all sides of the House agrees with that.

It's a bit hard to give detail because these are general expenses that we're talking about in ours, and I will say that in Agriculture it is primarily wages, although we do have programs that are important to be carrying out such as water programs, pumping and so on, that don't wait for anything but timeliness. We're on a season in this industry.

Then I listened carefully to the comments in the Auditor General's report, and I thought: well, you know, where are we going here? Then I thought: no; that's a very valid question because if you're going to have recommendations from the Auditor General and you're asking for money for a new year, it's a natural question to ask whether you've dealt with those issues. I'm going to deal with just a couple of them, and as always I'll give written answers with more detail.

The one that intrigues me the most is the one on performance measures. The Auditor General asked a question that is difficult, I think, to answer because of the very much a partnership relationship between our department and industry. When you look at our goals, are they actually met by the industry or by the department? Well, actually they're met by the industry in the main, so we will reflect that better in our new business plan, where the goals and performance measures that we set out are more specific to the actual department's place in that goal, which may be, for example, our value-added strategy of going to $20 billion in value-added by 2010 or $10 billion in primary by 2010.

It will actually be the industry that will achieve the final goal, but I think that what we have to do is measure how effective our part in that achievement is, which is laid out in the value-added strategy, as to where the department support is to the industry to achieve that goal rather than the $20 billion being the goal that we measure. It really will not be done by government; it will be done by industry. But we have a role in assisting the industry in getting there. So what I think the hon. member is saying and what the Auditor General said is: make sure that the performance measures you put in to measure your performance are actually your performance that is geared to assisting the industry to reach a certain goal.

We take all of the Auditor General's comments very seriously and I think to date have been very successful at implementing the changes that he's requested. We'll do that on the issue of insurance benefits and contracts. I'm trying to recall, but I believe the discussion was around a pilot project, and I will give you some written clarification on that. I'm sure that what the Auditor General is saying there is: don't make corrections, even in a pilot. The same with the technology on the commercial loans. I think that will be better answered for you in writing, where I can give you some detail.

But I did want to make some comments on performance measures and goals because I think that is an important part, and it's one that we're going to try and address much better in our new business plan. I'll look forward to the opportunity of having this discussion when that business plan is presented with our budget, and I know that we'll have a good amount of time to talk then.

Thank you.

Ms Blakeman: Thanks very much to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. I appreciate her attempts to answer some questions when we consider granting her department $108.2 million. I appreciate it.

Just to continue on, then, with some of the other departments that we will not have an opportunity to scrutinize. That includes Government Services. There is an unnumbered recommendation appearing on page 139 recommending that "the Department of Government Services make provision for appropriate recovery facilities and equipment to resume business operations if a service disruption occurs." The background here is that there's a computerized registry system for land titles, motor vehicles, personal property. All are critical for the department, and these systems support the delivery of core programs. The department has contracted out the operation and maintenance of these to private service providers.

The implications and risks if this recommendation is not implemented are that business operations could be severely affected in case of a service disruption. The Department could also incur significant legal liability if land title and personal property registrations are not processed promptly during a service disruption. Law enforcement across Alberta can be impaired if the motor vehicle registry is not available.

Mr. Chairman, very exciting. We have a key recommendation in Government Services. That's recommendation 19, one of the gold star, pay attention, blue ribbon, top 10 hit parade kind of key recommendations. That's recommending that "the Department of Government Services complete and approve a project management plan for the Registry Renewal Initiative." Now, that's a project to renew the systems for the land titles, motor vehicle, and personal property registries to ensure that they are capable of meeting the future growth in demand, and it's about moving to new technology. The project will cost approximately $100 million and will take place over eight years. The department has spent approximately $13 million on the project in this fiscal year alone.

The implications and risks of not implementing this key recommendation: "Lack of established project management processes and understanding of it by all participants, could cause significant cost overruns, time delays and missed project objectives." That sounds kind of dry and dusty, Mr. Chairman, but in fact what it really means in layperson's terms just for people following along at home is that lots of money could get misspent if this is not implemented.

Oh, this is really an interesting department, Mr. Chairman, because in fact on page 143 of the Auditor General's report we have another key recommendation, and that is recommendation 20, recommending that "the Alberta Corporate Service Centre clearly define its performance measures and improve its processes to track and report results." Now, Mr. Chairman, this is important because this is the second time that this exact recommendation has been made, which means that there has been unsatisfactory progress on it and the Auditor General feels that he needs to bring it up again. It's so important that it's one of the key recommendations. So tsk, tsk, tsk to the Minister of Government Services for not being able to implement this.

Now, when I look at whether we, you know, should really be alarmed about this, in fact in the fiscal year 2002-03 the Government Services department requested $48.9 million in interim money; in other words, to operate for three months. Lots of money, folks at home. The following year, last year, 2003-04, they requested $58.2 million, $10 million more than they'd asked for the year before. And where are we this year? Well, they're trying to rein in. They're only asking for $59.3 million in interim supply, and that's once again for three months of operation.

The fact that we have not one but two key recommendations is significant. I think this department needs to work a little harder.

Key recommendation 20 talks about the Alberta Corporate Service Centre and performance measurements. The implications of not implementing that: "Without adequate performance measurement systems, performance information may be unreliable or lacking and may lead to poor management decisions." Implications for Alberta taxpayers: more money, money wasted, money not spent effectively, not value for money. So we need to look carefully at that.

We are expecting to examine the Health and Wellness department.

The one following that would be the Department of Human Resources and Employment, a minister who when he appears before the Public Accounts is usually very helpful in explaining where his department is going, and he does know his stuff. I am looking forward to hearing what he has to say because I don't think we're going to get a chance to see him this year.

I note that on page 168 there is a numbered recommendation, recommendation 24, recommending that "the Department of Human Resources and Employment ensure the Contract Management Administration System meets user requirements." Now, given that this department was – well, actually, they're getting better. No, not quite. In the '02-03 year, Mr. Chairman, this department requested $318.4 million. Last year they requested – and kudos to them – less money. They only asked for $274 million for interim supply for three months of operation. This year they weren't able to rein in quite so much. They're asking for $286.9 million. You can see why, then, the Auditor General is trying to "ensure the Contract Management Administration System meets user requirements."

The implications and risks, of course, are that other departments are planning to implement CMAS to improve their contract management processes. It is therefore critical that inefficiencies, instability, and inability to produce management reports be corrected before CMAS is implemented elsewhere.

There is an additional recommendation in this department, I believe, Mr. Chairman, appearing on page 175, regarding the Workers' Compensation Board. Yes, I'm right. Recommendation 25: "We recommend that the Workers' Compensation Board . . . strengthen controls in its claim management system for economic loss payments." The implications and risks there are that if [economic loss payments classification] and calculation are not accurate, the WCB may pay inaccurate benefits to injured workers and charge incorrect costs to employers.

That doesn't help especially our small business people.

The processing of ELPs also impacts the assumptions used to determine the claim benefit liability. The actuary needs a consistent history of the ELP program to make reasonable assumptions in determining claim benefit liabilities.

We were able to see the Department of Infrastructure today, in fact, although I was very disappointed in the information about P3s and no reports or cost-benefit analysis forthcoming there.

The Department of Innovation and Science. Oh, Mr. Chairman, SuperNet. Oh dear. All right. Such high hopes. First of all, we will note that this Department of Innovation and Science is restraining itself. In '02-03 Innovation and Science requested $64 million as interim supply. Last year they only requested $55 million, and this year going for a record. Can we do it? Yes, we think so: $52.2 million. So the most restraint shown so far. We'll give a little gold star and send it over there to the minister.

But let's have a look at the recommendation: "We recommend that the Ministry of Innovation and Science prepare a plan for testing completed components of SuperNet." Now, what is the implication of not doing that? Well, "without an adequate plan for testing the completed network, the Ministry risks implementing a system that does not function as [needed]." I'm pretty sure I heard that little voice saying: I told you so. That would be, hmm, yes, my little voice saying: I told you so. I'm sure if we check Hansard, we'll find it in there a number of times, annoying and squeaky no doubt, but in there definitely on SuperNet. That one is going to come back to haunt you.

All righty. Page 199 of the Auditor General's report is recommending that the Deputy Minister of Innovation and Science work with other deputy ministers to optimize the use of IMAGIS . . .

Implementation of IMAGIS began in 1997 and by 2001 ten modules were in use in government. However, much of the business of ministries that could be processed through these ten IMAGIS modules is processed through other applications.

So it starts and stops there, Mr. Chairman.

The implications and risks of not implementing this recommendation: "Without a structured approach, the government may fail to obtain full benefits from the IMAGIS system."

Now, on page 201, we have a numbered recommendation. The Auditor General is very thorough and predictable, which is a good thing in an Auditor General, and you do get sort of escalating kinds of recommendations from the Auditor General. The unnumbered recommendations are sort of the amber light, the flashing amber: slow down; caution, please pay attention. The numbered recommendations are much more of a full amber light, really: warning, warning. Then the key recommendations are honking big, red stop signs with full flashing lights and sometimes those little blue and white ones flashing right behind them indicating that there is serious trouble coming. So you pay attention when you get numbered ones.

8:40

The numbered one here is recommendation 29, recommending that "the Ministry of Innovation and Science formalize and implement an effective accountability framework for IMAGIS." Now, Mr. Chairman, sadly, I note that this is the second time this recommendation has been made to this ministry, was in fact also made as recommendation 32 in the previous fiscal year's Auditor General's report.

The implications and risks of not implementing this are that without an appropriate accountability framework in place, IMAGIS may not reflect the Ministry's requirements for controls, expectations and needs.

The Ministry will be entering into a new contract with a service provider in the next fiscal year.

That would be now.

It is important that management resolve this concern before finalizing the new contract with a service provider.

So a direct question to the minister: was this implemented before there was a new contract with the new service provider? It's important that that be reconciled. I'm looking forward to having the Minister of Innovation and Science respond to that.

We also have another unnumbered recommendation appearing on page 204 recommending – oh dear, "again" recommending. Oh dear, this ministry really is struggling. So this was a recommendation from 2002, and it's being repeated. They "again recommend that the Ministry of Innovation and Science coordinate reviews of control environments at service providers."

Implications and risks: "Unless the Ministry coordinates reviews of service providers, unnecessary waste and duplication of reviews will occur." What does that mean to Alberta taxpayers? More money, a waste of money. We don't want these things to happen. So did the Ministry correct this?

Another key recommendation. Is that two in this department? Oh dear, that would be bad. No. This is the first key recommendation here. So this is recommendation 30. It is a key recommendation, one of only 14 for the entire government. They "recommend that the Ministry of Innovation and Science, with the cooperation of other ministries, implement a systems development methodology." This as well is a repeat. It was number 33 the previous year.

Implications and risks are that without an approved set of systems development criteria, flawed systems may be developed. In some cases, they may even pose a security risk. The government will have unnecessary administrative overhead from using poorly designed and inadequately tested systems, as well as additional costs to fix the systems on an ad hoc basis.

Now moving on to International and Intergovernmental Relations. Oh dear. Well, we were doing so well with Innovation and Science. I'm sorry. That's totally reversed itself. For this small but interesting department we have a very disappointing overturn of the excellent work that had been done by Innovation and Science.

When we look at International and Intergovernmental Relations, we had in 2002-03 a request for $1.8 million, last year $1.9 million, and this year – I'm sorry; it's true, Mr. Chairman – $2.3 million. That's for three months of operations. Do we have issues that need to be resolved? Do we have issues, Mr. Chairman? Yes, we do have issues, and the Auditor General has issues as well. That issue would be appearing on page 210 of the Auditor General's report recommending that "the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations enhance its intergovernmental agreements systems to comply with section 11 and schedule 6 of the Government Organization Act."

Well, what does that really mean?

Section 11 requires the Minister to approve all intergovernmental agreements. Schedule 6 requires the Ministry to "be a party to the negotiation of all proposed intergovernmental agreements" and to "conduct a continuing review of all intergovernmental agreements."

All of that is in quotes.

The implications and risks of not implementing that recommendation are that without effective systems at the Ministry to manage the intergovernmental agreements requirements of the Government Organization Act, government entities could enter into agreements that do not reflect the Alberta government's goals and principles.

So I hope that the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations can give us some answers about why that is appearing.

Public Accounts was able to examine the Minister of Justice and will be examining the Ministry of Learning, I'm happy to say. So we're moving on. Oh, my goodness, that's going to be a heavy day. That's a lot of pages. Oh my. Municipal Affairs we've also been able to scrutinize. Revenue is I hope going to be coming.

So now we're looking at Solicitor General. It's that alphabet thing. Okay. Under the Solicitor General – holy mackerel. Well, Mr. Chairman, this could be a record. I can't do the percentages fast enough in my head, but here we go. In the year 2002-03 the Solicitor General requested $46.5 million for three months worth of operation. Last year – whoa – $66.8 million. So a $20 million increase for three months of operation. Where are we this year? This year the Solicitor General is requesting $84.1 million. Whoa. This is out of control here. We're just running amok, they would say.

Seriously, Mr. Chairman, that may well be warranted spending, but when I look at recommendations from the Auditor General, I am seeing on page 272 of the Auditor General's report – oh, Mr. Chairman, it's a repeat, and it's a repeat from a long time ago, which means that they've had a long time to implement this and have not done it or have not been successful.

This is from 1998, Mr. Chairman, recommendation 34, appearing this time around on the marquis as recommendation 40: "We again recommend . . ." Now, that's kind of secret code language from the Auditor General saying tsk, tsk, tsk with all capital letters. When they say "we again recommend," it's like underlining and bolding; it really means they're serious. "We again recommend that the Department of the Solicitor General implement the plan for provincial policing standards." I will be delighted to come back to this one when I start again.

Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. MacDonald: I do have questions and lots of them.

At this time in light of the fact that the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has answered some questions previously, perhaps I could ask her, Mr. Chairman, about the money that we're voting on here, the $108 million. I can understand where she's coming from, the need to continue to finance government in an orderly and timely fashion. I can understand that, and I can live with that, but certainly I'm with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods that perhaps the session should start the middle of January, and perhaps this wouldn't be necessary.

Mr. Chairman, of the $108 million that the ag department is going to spend, is some of this earmarked for this new lab, this new level 3 lab that Alberta Agriculture is going to build? Certainly, there are monies set aside for renovations for the current level 2 lab, and it's all done, and I'm very glad to hear that that's all done. But I understand that plans are currently being developed for a new 30,000 square foot building that will house an 11,000 square foot level 3 lab. I understand that this is going to be state of the art, and it should be. It will allow Alberta Agriculture to move into higher levels of disease monitoring and allow research to be conducted on biological agents that require a higher level of containment.

Now, this level 3 lab is obviously needed to increase the province's testing capacity for TSEs. Now, what is the state of this project? If the hon. minister could update the House on that. Certainly, I hope that this lab is handy to the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud, somewhere down around the university so that the veterinarian pathologists would have a place to practice while they go to school perhaps. But I would like to certainly hear from the minister that it's going to be in the city of Edmonton.

Thank you. I would be delighted to hear her response.

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, I'd be pleased to respond to the hon. member and appreciate his interest in the initiatives taken on testing. The level 2 lab improvements have been completed. The level 2 lab, in it's refurbished form and with the training of staff and some additional staff hired, has been completed. It has been operational – I'm trying to remember – for three or four weeks and now has the capability of doing up to 1,000 tests using the Bio-Rad tests. That was the test that was determined would be used here after they reviewed two or three of the rapid tests that are used around the world. So that is in place.

Actually, the improvements and renovations to that lab were done very efficiently by the Department of Infrastructure. We had to wait for formal approval of the lab by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency; they do those approvals. We received verbal go-ahead, and then we had to wait for the test kits. This is another issue, but we have those, and we're in operation.

The level 3 lab groundbreaking will occur as soon as weather permits. It will be located in the area of the Longman Building, which is our present lab facilities, which is of course close to the university. There was a great deal of consultation done as to the best location because, of course, there are some laboratory services of Ag Canada's in Lethbridge. We have some at the research park as well as at the university. It was determined that for all of the purposes of this lab the location chosen close to the Longman Building was the best.

You asked whether some of the $108 million was for that lab. The lab actually will be built by Infrastructure, as all government projects are, but certainly operationally those responsibilities will be with Alberta Agriculture. Those will be, obviously, a part of our business plan and budget as it becomes operational. The level 3 lab is not expected to be operational until the spring of 2005. These are very complex buildings; this is a very high-level lab. But I can tell you that the design work is done, the location has been determined, and it's moving along very well. We expect to break ground as soon as weather permits. It'll be a great addition to our province, and I am extremely pleased that it does have space for research. I think that's incredibly important.

With the great research that occurs over at the University of Alberta in agriculture and in health sciences, this has an opportunity for us to attract more top scientists to our province and, again, play a leadership role in research in some animal health and, in fact, related to human health, crossover research. Whether all of that would occur at that lab, every research capability that we increase gives us opportunities for more.

So thank you for your interest. That's the best information I can give you at this time.

The Chair: The hon. leader of the third party.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and ask some questions about the 2004-2005 interim supply estimates before the Assembly since last night. We've spent almost three hours to this point, I guess, on discussing these estimates.

I read with some considerable interest the Hansard from last night, Mr. Chairman, and I find in Hansard that lots of important questions have been asked from the opposition side, both by the New Democrat opposition and by the Liberal opposition, but very few answers are forthcoming. Certainly, from last night's records I notice that there are no answers provided for any of the questions that were raised then.

Today it seems that one notices a little improvement. A few questions have been answered very briefly. Very briefly. The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has been particularly generous in answering some of these questions. The rest of the government continues to be silent.

Mr. Chairman, I didn't have a calculator at my disposal, but I noticed that for the two months of the next fiscal year, for the months of April and May, until May 31, close to $5.5 billion are being asked for by way of this interim supply estimate. Now, if you sort of prorate it on a yearly basis, $5.5 billion for two months multiplied by six, I think it would bring the budget to more than $32 billion. I'd like to ask the government whether or not it's appropriate to base our estimate of the overall budget for the next year on the request that's been brought before us for two months of the next year by way of this estimate here.

If that is the case, then surely the important question to ask, I guess, from my side is: what's the revenue picture? Thirty-three billion dollars of projected expenditures based on the two-month estimates presented to the Assembly that we're debating tonight is close to, I believe, $10 billion more than the 2003-2004 budget. So the question is: where are the revenues going to come from?

I know that $500 million have been requested by the government to be transferred by way of a bill on which I've spoken before from the sustainability fund over into the general revenues for the government to spend. But $500 million won't pay for the implementation of the Learning Commission's report, which I believe this government is seriously committed to implementing. Also, it will need some revenues to meet the expenses that it's going to incur to give the tax cut gift of $106 million starting April 1 to corporations of this province.

So it has an interesting sort of balance sheet. It wants to spend more and at the same time wants to tax more in some areas but also spend more on tax cuts to certain entities and corporations in this province. It's a confusing picture. I'd like to have some answers to it. Where are the revenues coming from in order to meet, according to my estimate, $33 billion, a budget that seems to be, by implication at least, being rejected for 2004-2005?

Mr. Chairman, then, of course, there is the question of priorities of the government. If the government is going to spend $161 million on corporate tax cuts in the new fiscal year, why would it not consider in fact using some of that money, rather than spending it on this gift to corporations, to provide relief to seniors by eliminating their health taxes, which are called premiums in this province? Seniors certainly would greatly appreciate this. The cost would be much less, and a lot more people would be served by that. So that's one question there.

I'm curious about one item here. The Department of Finance is asking for $18.5 million in operating expenses and/or equipment inventory purchases. Compared to that, the next department on the list, Gaming, is asking for $50.5 million for the same item. My understanding is that the Gaming department is much smaller than the Department of Finance yet is asking for almost three times as much in interim supply estimates. Maybe the Minister of Finance can solve this riddle for me.

The Department of Finance is clearly one of the most important departments. I'm sure they've got lots of staff, lots of salary bills to pay, yet the Gaming department is asking for three times more money in these estimates. I hope I'm not just asking the government to satisfy my idle curiosity about it. It's a real, substantive question: why this discrepancy between these two departments? One tiny one, which doesn't really produce any goods other than to encourage and promote gambling in this province to make more Albertans addicted to this what I call social disease, asking for more money from this Assembly for the next two months just doesn't make much sense.

Also, Mr. Chairman, there is some answer on page 1 of this little booklet that we have here before us, lottery fund payments. The Gaming department is asking for lottery fund payments to the tune of $313,600,000. There is some attempt to explain where this money will go. On the first page it says, "Lottery Fund payments consist of the transfer of lottery proceeds to departments for selected projects."

So I'm sure that the government knows, the Minister of Finance would know, what these selected projects are. Would it be impossible for the Minister of Finance to simply list these projects for the attention of the Assembly by way of justifying the request for $313,600,000 in lottery fund payments under Gaming? Again, I think it's a legitimate question. I am sure that the Minister of Finance will consider it an appropriate question and do her very best to provide this simple, factual information that's absolutely essential for the Assembly to have before it votes on these estimates.

In the same manner, Mr. Chairman, I again find on page 1 under Capital Investments some reference to oil, gas, and electricity transmission facilities for which, I think, capital investment funds are being asked. I wonder if the Minister of Energy, who is asking for 50 plus some million dollars in interim supply estimates, would please share with the Assembly some information with respect to where some or all of this money is going to be spent. Is some of it going to be spent on these oil, gas, and electricity transmission facilities? If that is the case, then I think surely this Assembly is rightfully in a position to ask what amount of that $50 million would be spent on oil, gas, and electricity transmission facilities.

So these are some of the general questions, Mr. Chairman, and I have some other questions here which I would certainly like to have addressed. I'm sure that the ministers and the government are anxious to answer these questions as best they can and do so with the utmost earnestness. The Minister of Justice is surely asking for some money, so I'm sure he'd be happy to address some of these questions related to his own ministry and perhaps to other departments as well.

But here is the question for the Minister of Finance that I believe is certainly her bailiwick, her territory. In the last two budgets school property taxes have been allowed by this government and by this ministry to increase along with the increase in Alberta's property tax base, breaking a promise made by this Minister of Finance in April 2001, as a freshly-minted Minister of Finance at the time, coming out of the election, to freeze school property taxes at a constant $1.2 billion. We're talking about freezing the absolute amount of taxes to be collected from property tax. But the minister broke that promise last year. Does the minister and the government plan to do the same all over again this coming year?

What about the motion that was passed two weeks ago to phase out property taxes by this Assembly? The motion was sponsored by and shepherded through this Assembly by government backbenchers, and it passed. I'd like to hear what the Minister of Finance's position is with respect to the Assembly's decision to vote for that motion. Is the minister now going to be guided by the passage of that motion by this Assembly and stop levying any property taxes for school funding purposes?

Another set of questions, Mr. Chairman, in the area of the Ministry of Learning. How much more funding can school boards reasonably expect?

How will funds be allocated to implement the Learning Commission recommendations?

What priority will be given to fixing classroom conditions in the existing K to 12 system?

Within what time frame will the government implement the class size guidelines from the Learning Commission report, especially those in kindergarten to grade 3, where in the big metropolitan, urban areas of the province existing class sizes are much, much higher than the 17 students per class recommended by the Learning Commission?

With respect to K to 3 class sizes or class complexity, on the other side of the issue, in areas outside of the major metropolitan centres, the greater Calgary/greater Edmonton regions, the problem is not so much in terms of the class size as such but the class complexity, which poses just as difficult challenges to school boards, to teachers, to parents when they are trying to provide the very best education that they can to these very young children who are in our schools going through kindergarten to grade 3. So those are some of the questions on the K to 12 part of Learning.

Then, of course, the question is: what funds are going to be allocated as part of these interim supply estimates to postsecondary institutions?

Is the base funding formula going to be changed for colleges and universities and technical institutes to help fill the gap that they have been suffering from in terms of their ability to pay the bills, the costs that are going up for providing the very essential educational experience and services that they do, and the money that is available to them from this government? There's no indication here, Mr. Chairman, how these interim supply estimates and the budget that's going to follow next week are going to address these questions. So those are a few of the questions here.

One or two other questions here, given the time I may have. Oh, yes. The tax giveaways that the government is planning to continue with to the corporate sector. How are the expenditures related to those gifts going to be paid for, and from where are the revenues going to come to do that? Through increase of service fees? Increase in health care premiums? Decreases to the services that are provided to seniors, or through cutbacks in the other social assistance programs?

I would like to ask questions about the AISH programs. Lots of Albertans depend on those. Is the government by way of these estimates going to allocate some money which will be used to increase the amount of money that AISH recipients receive starting the 1st of April? I know that the corporate sector is going to be receiving its gift of $106 million which will kick in as of the 1st of April. Are the AISH recipients likely to be treated with any degree of similar kindness and generosity on the part of this government, or are they going to continue to be ignored and, in fact, going to be asked to wait for another year or two while the government meets its promises to the already wealthy in this province in the corporate sector, who do not need any of those gifts in order for them to remain financially viable and competitive?

Another question is on P3s, Mr. Chairman. P3s, in my view, are something that is causing lots of people to ask serious questions about the real intentions of this government. Is this a way of doing catch-up with respect to the huge deficits in infrastructure?

The Chair: Hon. member, we've run out of time.
The hon. Minister of Finance.

Mrs. Nelson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. The hon. member opposite has asked a number of questions on interim supply. Some of them I think are very valid questions, and I appreciate his inquiring into a number of areas. As you know, next week I will be bringing down the budget for the government, and a lot of those specific questions will be answered in that budget presentation on a department-by-department basis, so I have to be careful not to go too far into the specific details.

However, all that being said, I know that it was debated last night as to why we have interim supply, and it was part of the introduction that I gave when I filed the documents with the Legislature, to see that the government continues on over the year-end and, in fact, while we go through the department-by-department debate on the budgets when they're presented in the Committee of Supply on the budgets themselves.

All that being said, I know that some ministries have got up and talked about where dollars are needed. The obvious, of course, are the ongoing operations of their departments: their salaries, et cetera, their expenses. But a number of the departments clearly deal with other front-line groups that deliver services on behalf of the government, and their arrangements do begin at the beginning of the fiscal year, as of April 1. They need to be in fact advanced dollars so that their operations again continue on so that there isn't a disruption while we debate budgets within this Legislature, and that's important.

What I can say is that you've talked about a number of things that are near and dear to everyone's heart, health care being one of them, which is a very important aspect of any budget document that comes forward. Clearly, it is an area that affects every household in this province and is a focus and a priority for our government. You've heard the Minister of Health and Wellness on a daily basis talk about the sustainability of the health system and the renewal of the health system as a key focus for our government, and I believe that over the next number of months you'll see him focus his attentions on that sustainability and the road map that will get us to that.

You heard the Premier today talk about the Minister of Justice coming out with a release of the strategic plan that will be part of the budget document in the next few days. Again, that too will be a key element of the long-term road map of the vision for the government that takes us well beyond the four- or five-year time frame that normally is presented within a budgetary document.

This, of course, Mr. Chairman, came about as a result of the recommendations from the Financial Management Commission, recommendation 12, which to me was one of the most fundamental recommendations, I believe, that any government in Canada could ever accept. That was to be thinking strategically and thinking beyond the normal political mandate so that you could do some long-term planning and strategizing as you move forward and that would give focus to people not only within the Assembly itself but in the front-line areas such as the school boards, the universities, the health authorities, the municipalities so that they could in fact work on a long-term strategy that would deliver the objectives they have laid forward and the vision they have laid forward, and it would be in sync instead of in contradiction or waiting to see so there wouldn't be surprises. There could actually be long-term strategies laid out. It's not an unusual function; it's just unusual for governments to do that. Here in Alberta we haven't been afraid to take those new paths so that we could provide that kind of critical path and structure.

So that will be coming out, as the Premier said today, in the next few days from the Minister of Justice.

You've heard our Solicitor General talk about the importance of policing, and those announcements will be coming out as part of the budget process. These are initiatives that we've heard from people. We've heard people tell us that they're critically important and they have to be dealt with, and the Solicitor General has talked about that already.

One of the biggest items coming forward in the budget, of course, is in the Learning portfolio. You've heard the Minister of Learning talk about the recommendations from the Learning Commission and how those recommendations will be implemented over the next few years and that the focus on learning will be key for Alberta, and we've accepted those as a government. So those, too, are very important reflections of the priorities for our government, and they're all part of this.

Again, life doesn't stop because of a date, and we found that in the capital plan this year. We said: let's not be tied to a date in capital, that because of March 31 everything has to stop; let's continue on. And we changed that in the capital planning process, which I think was wise.

I did try to find out where the rule came in that everything had to be spent before March 31 or you lost it, and that's why we made the fundamental change in structure this year that you could carry that capital forward and spend it when it made sense to do it. Again, the front-line delivery folks would have that evaluation and that expertise in their own shop. So it was a fundamental change, and I think it was very important.

So what we have here in the interim supply estimates are quite clearly the things that sustain us through those debates and the particulars of the budget that do come forward to maintain the ongoing programs so we don't put those programs in jeopardy. I think it's important to proceed on with it, and next week, as I say, I'll be bringing down the budget.

One of the things that you also mentioned was P3s. I know it was an issue, Mr. Chairman, that came up today again. Well, we've been very, very careful in our P3 process and very, very thorough, I believe. We even have a special advisory group with expertise in that area to make sure that when we look at projects that may qualify or be selected for a P3 concept, they in fact make sense. Some jurisdictions have gone off and I think got caught in the concept of P3 without the real evaluation. One of the key elements of a P3 project is the ability to transfer risk, and that's one of the key elements that has to be evaluated and associated with those kinds of projects.

Today someone asked the question about all the ones that have failed and have been wrong. The key is to make sure that you recognize where some of the weaknesses have been and make sure that they're not within our structure, and then we protect ourselves from those kinds of structures.

So that is one vehicle that can be used by governments, but it isn't the only vehicle because you do have to do an evaluation. You have to do a cost-benefit analysis. You have to do a long-term evaluation as to whether it makes sense to have someone else get involved in the project or to do it as we have done all along, and we've said in this government that the vast majority of our projects will continue to be financed in the way they have traditionally, that we will pay for them as we go along.

But there is an opportunity to use alternative financing. We've built that into the capital structure. We've left that door open, and if ideas do come forward, we will seriously evaluate them and look at them, but we will only go forward if it makes sense to do that. We're not prepared to just do it because it's the popular thing of the day.

Insofar as support, we could go through these. We have support, again, for the offices of the Legislative Assembly that have to carry on beyond March 31: the Auditor General, the office of the Ombudsman, the Chief Electoral Officer, the Ethics Commissioner, and the Information and Privacy Commissioner. These are all functions, Mr. Chairman, that must continue on as we go through a budgetary debate, once the budget is submitted next week, and of course the departments of the government.

The realistic side of the situation is that things progress on, and they must be secure. That's all this is doing. This carries us on for two months and satisfies those agencies or groups that have to receive their operating up front to continue on. Nothing more, nothing less. So there's no magic to this. The real debate will come as we go through the budget documents and go on the elements within each vote and debate line by line in those votes the details of the expenditures on a department-by-department basis. I would hope that we would proceed with passing these interim estimates and proceed, then, next week with the budget and have the detailed debate at that time when we have the departments' estimates before the House.

I haven't answered all of your questions – some of them will have to wait until after the budget – but I fully intend to make sure that your questions are answered as you ask them through Committee of Supply in the budget debate. As I've told you on many occasions, if I haven't answered them all in committee, we will undertake to get answers back to you, and we will go through the Hansard for the questions. I think the vast majority of this debate needs to take place after the budget comes through.

Thank you.

The Chair: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. I just had to continue on because, of course, I'm on one of those issues that I just feel very strongly about. What I had been talking about was recommendation 40 from the Auditor General's 2002-2003 report appearing on page 272. I'll note that it is a repeat recommendation as well. It's recommending "that the Department of the Solicitor General implement the plan for provincial policing standards."

Now, seeing that this ministry is requesting $84.1 million, I think it's more than reasonable to ask how the ministry is responding to the recommendations that were made regarding the ministry's operations, particularly with this minister. She is the black hole of space as far as reports are concerned, loves to commission them and have MLA committees running around there. [interjection] Oh, I'm sorry. He commissions them. She doesn't implement them and doesn't publish them. We've got three of them that are outstanding that are coming from her department which taxpayers have paid for, Mr. Chairman, and have not been able to see.

This is a fourth one actually, because what's still out there is the MLA review of the Police Act. That, in fact, did report, but then the minister looked at it for a while and said: "Well, you know, we're going to accept some and reject some. We want to do another feedback loop, and we'll get back to you." That's the last we heard of it. So we don't really know what was the end result of all of that, and that was July of 2001. Then in the fall of 2001 was that sort of first feedback loop, and we've never heard anything since.

The second thing that's outstanding completely – we've never seen it again; it disappeared into the wormhole of space – is the review of the Corrections Act. Again, a number of backbench MLAs went around the country looking at corrections: no published report; nothing happening there. With the victims' fund, which was a consultation that was chaired by the Member for Calgary-Shaw, a report was done. Poof, Mr. Chairman, no sign of it. Gone.

When I asked in question period for the Solicitor General to please release all of these reports that taxpayers have paid for, I got told: "Well, I'm going to do something. Just wait for the budget, and then I can release all of these." I say: excuse me? Some of these are outstanding and, in fact, existed. We've actually seen parts of them, the policing review from 2001 anyway. So we don't need to wait until the 2004-2005 budget to be released to get these reports released. She can do them at any time.

9:30

The fourth unimplemented, unpublished, unfinished piece of business from this department is this plan for provincial policing standards. Now, the Auditor General notes that the Ministry had drafted a policing standards manual but had decided not to issue the manual because it wanted to . . .

Wait for it.

. . . review the report of the MLA Policing Review Committee . . . issued on July 10, 2002, to assess its impact on policing standards.

Now we're waiting on a provincial policing standard, which is waiting on this MLA policing review, which does not have to wait for the budget. So let's have it. What is the problem that everything is being kept behind closed doors and under cover of darkness there?

What are the implications and risks of this? "Until the plan is implemented, the Ministry does not know whether police services meet the province's minimum policing standards. Public safety could be at risk." Now, the Auditor General doesn't run around making wild statements, so I've got to take him seriously when he says, "Public safety could be at risk," because we don't know what is supposed to happen here and we can't measure it. So this is very serious.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

You know, one of the things we keep getting from this front bench around everything we ask now is: stay tuned. Well, if I can send a message back to the Public Affairs Bureau: come up with another one because that isn't working for us. I mean, this whole spin about: "Oh, gosh, you know, we've got to pay the salaries of the civil servant, and that's why we need this interim supply." Well, of course that's why you need the interim supply. Of course it's going to pay all of those salaries. And, no, the opposition is not saying that bureaucrats shouldn't get paid here.

What we are saying is that the timing of all of this is 100 per cent under the control of the government. The government calls us into this sitting; the government decides when the budget is going to be prepared and be released; the government decides when the throne speech is going to happen. The government is perfectly capable of calling this House back in on the 15th of January, the 25th of January, the 1st of February, or whatever. Lots of time to give us to get the throne speech done, to get a budget brought in, and to debate the full budget and pass it before the fiscal year-end, which is the point.

We were at a time once when special warrants were used only under extraordinary circumstances, when for some, you know, major reason, good reason we couldn't have the budget passed before the fiscal year began, which is the 1st of April. Now, what could be a circumstance there? Well, an election, for example. If the election were very close to the end of the fiscal year, then it wouldn't be possible to get the House in and get the budget passed in time, so that would be the use for a special warrant, or what's now called interim supply.

This has now become – and I actually heard someone say this last night – traditional. It's traditional that it would be this late, and that's the reason for it being this late. That's ridiculous. The government has total control about what they're doing here, so it's the government's choice that they're going to be that late with getting the budget in here that we would have to have an interim supply budget brought forward. This is not about tradition; this is about choice.

The other excuse I've heard brought up by the government is, "Well, we have to wait for the federal government. We can't do our budget until we've heard from the feds." Well, I think out of the eight budgets I've been around for, the feds have actually produced a budget in the spring that was even close to what this government would be waiting for once. There's no need. The province is not tied to the federal budget. It doesn't have to wait for it, and most years it can't wait for it because the feds don't produce a budget anywhere close to this.

So, you know, go back to Public Affairs and get another spin on this one because this one ain't cutting it. It's not working. It's entirely up to the front bench how this goes, and obviously the choice is that they want an interim supply. If anybody's going to start yakking off about how bureaucrats aren't being paid, I will direct their attention to the front bench, whose choice it is to have an interim supply and to have us begin the budget debates so late that we cannot get a budget passed prior the beginning of the fiscal year.

Looking at Sustainable Resource Development, which is a ministry that is requesting . . . Oh; okay. This is good. Mr. Speaker, this is encouraging. This is why the minister wanted me to look at his department in particular, because I'm afraid, minister of science and technology, you've lost first place here for most reduced requests in interim supply. The new award is now going to, probably temporarily, the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, who in 2002-2003 requested $101.9 million, last year requested $92.9 million, and this year, Mr. Chairman – and truly he is moving to the head of the line – is down to $52.3 million as an interim supply for, once again I'll remind you all, three months of spending. I commend the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development for his austerity program here.

Now, when I look at what the Auditor General is looking for, I would be questioning the minister on whether he's been able to implement these recommendations, because they're concerns raised by the Auditor General. On page 277 an unnumbered recommendation requests that the Department of Sustainable Resource Development "follow the government's best practice guidelines for contracted services and grants when undertaking major capital or long-term lease projects."

The implications and risks of not implementing this are that the department manages contracts totalling millions of dollars each year. Following the government's best practices will help the Department acquire cost-effective services with less risk. For example, in the "decision to contract" stage, a business case should identify risks, clarify estimated costs, and analyze lease vs. buy options. In the "review/approval process", the Department should consider the financial stability of its bidders. In the "continuous improvement" stage, the Department should consider how to improve its contracting practices.

So I'm looking to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development as to how he is progressing in implementing that.

Finally, when we look at Transportation, which is a budget that is – holy mackerel; that's got to be the biggest jump. In the year 2002-2003 the Department of Transportation requested $139 million as an interim supply. Last year, Mr. Chairman, this department requested $220.3 million and this year $367.3 million. Yowza, says I. That's a lot of money for three months.

Mr. MacDonald: How is Hansard going to spell yowza?

Ms Blakeman: I have every faith that Hansard will figure out how to spell yowza. And there's an exclamation mark in there in case anybody was wondering.

All right. When I look at page 282 of the Auditor General's report under the Department of Transportation, there is a numbered recommendation, which means that we should take this seriously, recommending that the Ministry of Transportation strengthen its monitoring of and audit processes for driver examiners by:

- preparing annual plans for monitoring and auditing examiners
- promptly monitoring and auditing driver examiners, and reporting the results to senior management
- training driver program administrators to identify the risk factors of unethical behaviour and to investigate problem examiners
- making the license renewal process as rigorous as the application process.

The implications and risks of not implementing this would be that there is a risk that the Ministry will not identify and investigate examiners who are not conducting examinations in accordance with legislation and policy. This could result in unqualified drivers obtaining driver licenses, risking the safety of the travelling public.

Very serious, and I commend the Auditor General for having raised the concern. I'm interested in how the minister plans on implementing that or, in fact, if it has been implemented, especially since he's asking for an astonishing $367.3 million for three months of operation.

On page 285 we have the recommendation that the Ministry of Transportation "implement a process to mitigate the risk of examiners being affiliated with driver training schools or registry agents" and also recommending that the ministry "enhance its code of conduct and require examiners to reconfirm compliance with the code of conduct and conflict-of-interest requirements." Implications and risks are that "there is a risk that the Ministry will not identify or prevent unethical practices, which could result in issuing licences to unqualified drivers."

So I look forward to hearing verbally, or if not verbally then, please, in writing as soon as possible because, of course, I am not going to be able to support this request for interim supply until I am satisfied that these recommendations have in fact been implemented. Now, following the Committee of Supply examination of the interim supply requests, we will have an appropriation bill before us that goes through second reading, Committee of the Whole, and third reading, so we do have until the beginning of next week for ministers to reply to this member in writing with the answers to the questions that I have put before them.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring forward an amendment.

Some Hon. Members: Ah.

Ms Blakeman: That would be the sound of cheering that I hear. Thank you so much for the support. I'll keep talking while they distribute the amendment for Committee of Supply.

Essentially, what I'm asking is that "the Department of Justice estimates for the 2004-2005 interim supply . . . be reduced by $12,250 so that the operating expense and equipment/inventory purchase to be voted is $70,487,750."

Now, what is this connected to, you say? Well, what this is connected to is the standing policy committees and the pay for the Standing Policy Committee on Justice and Government Services, which covers goings-on in the departments of Justice, Solicitor General, and Government Services. These are committees that I view, in fact, as unparliamentary and as essentially committees of the Tory caucus because in most cases these meetings are not open to the public. They're not open to the media. There is no Hansard recording kept of the proceedings of these meetings, and very rarely are other members of the House able to obtain, and certainly they're not allowed to participate in, the proceedings of these committees.

I do not believe that taxpayer money should be funding these committees. This is just one; there are four other committees that exist that are these standing policy committees. I don't believe that the taxpayer should be paying for these essentially internal policy committees.

Mr. MacDonald: Does SPC stand for special progressive conservative?

Ms Blakeman: Well, I'm asked if SPC stands for special progressive conservative, but it doesn't. It stands for standing policy committee.

I continue to argue that these, in fact, are internal Tory caucus committees, certainly not committees of the Legislative Assembly, and I would argue that they are not government committees and should not be paid for by the public dollar. They should be paid for by the partisan funds that the government caucus has access to.

Now, I believe that the amendment has been distributed, and I believe that I may call this amendment A1.

The Acting Chair: That would be fine. This amendment will be A1.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I think that it's important, especially when today we had Mr. Speaker's MLA for a Day youth participants in the building and watching our proceedings.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

I went up and spoke to a group of them this afternoon on the role of the opposition, and they were very interested in parliamentary process and, in fact, in their involvement. We talked a bit about democratic deficits that existed and why they feel disconnected from the proceedings of this particular House. I think these standing policy committees are in some small part responsible for that distancing that people feel. What this government has done over the 10 years that they've been in under the current leadership is move the business of this Assembly behind closed doors into internal workings of the government Tory caucus.

Dr. Massey: I think you got the attention of the Deputy Premier.

Ms Blakeman: Did we indeed? Okay.

So we don't have members of the backbench debating government bills in this House, for example, and when we say, "Well, you know, why don't you?" we're told: "We've already done it. We did it through this standing policy committee. We've already vetted it there." But we have no idea what questions were asked, who participated in the debate, who supported something, who didn't support something.

Part of what happens in this House and part of the reason that it's open to the public, that the galleries are open to the public, that there is a transcript kept of what we do, is so that our constituents can in fact look up what we've said and find out what we're saying on their behalf or, perhaps, not saying on their behalf. Then they can take issue with us and say, "You're not representing me."

We have no idea of what those government members feel about various bills. They don't debate the bills in this Assembly. They heckle. They love to heckle the opposition, who are in fact taking the time to prepare and look at what's being said in the bills and get up and speak for their constituents. But I never know what the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar actually thinks about these issues. He's more than willing to heckle me from the backbench there, but he doesn't get up and speak on the record for government bills.

Who are the other ones that we love to hear from here? West Yellowhead, Vermilion-Lloydminster, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, Edmonton-Castle Downs, Calgary-Fish Creek, Edmonton-McClung: all of them are really keen on heckling opposition members when they're up to speak, but we have no idea of what they actually feel about bills. And what's one of their primary excuses as to why they don't debate when the bill is being debated on the floor at the Legislative Assembly? Because they've already talked about it in the standing policy committee. How do we know that?

I hope you'll support this amendment. Thank you so much.

The Chair: The hon. Government House Leader on amendment A1.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm delighted to rise and speak to this amendment if for no other reason than that the hon. member has targeted the Department of Justice estimates, and if there is any department in government whose estimates should not be reduced by $12,250, it's got to be the Department of Justice.

The Department of Justice works so hard to make our community safe in this province. The Department of Justice, Mr. Chairman, has the maintenance enforcement program. The hon. member, herself, on a daily basis talks about how important that program is to Alberta's children, raising money, collecting money that is ordered by courts so that Alberta's children can be properly taken care of. The hon. member should be ashamed, trying to lower the Department of Justice's budget by $12,250. Alberta's children deserve better from that hon. member.

Mr. Chairman, I am absolutely shocked and appalled, to use a term that often was used by the predecessor from Edmonton-Strathcona as Leader of the Official Opposition some years ago – shocked and appalled – that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre would even dream of reducing the estimates for the Department of Justice by $12,250. How many children does she want to go without their maintenance enforcement payments because the Department of Justice doesn't have the money to go out and collect?

The Department of Justice, Mr. Chairman, has the Public Trustee's office. [interjection] The Public Trustee – the hon. member obviously doesn't know – takes care of those vulnerable Albertans who cannot take care of themselves. The Minors' Property Act, which we've debated in this House, the Public Trustee Act, that we've debated in this House – the Public Trustee is responsible to take care of the assets of those people who aren't able to take care of themselves, to handle decedents' estates when there is no one else in place to take care of those decedents, to take care of the unfortunate in this province. And this hon. member brings forward a motion to reduce the budget by $12,250.

The court system. We have a very strong court system in this province, but it can't do the job that it ought to be able to do or could do if it were provided even more resources, not less resources. So we need to try and reform the court systems by talking about single-trial courts, which can make more effective use of the resources.

We talk about the domestic violence court in Calgary. Her Liberal cousins have removed the support for domestic violence court because it's a pilot project that's ended, and in typical federal Liberal fashion they start things but then withdraw your money and let the province carry the ball when it's successful.

Dr. Massey: Through the municipalities.

Mr. Hancock: Well, they were partners with us. The municipalities do have some concerns in that regard, and we work and the Minister of Municipal Affairs works very closely with them to try and make sure that we can achieve something. They're going to be very excited after the next budget.

But I can tell you that no one is going to be excited if this hon. member achieves her dream of reducing the Department of Justice estimates by $12,250 because it takes away from the very thing which makes this community, this Alberta, a safe place to live, a safe, caring community, which is fundamental – fundamental, Mr. Chairman – to any just society.

Now, she uses as the pathetic excuse for taking away money from these very, very important roles of government, the standing policy committees. She says that because those are not committees of the Legislature involving all parties, they're not valid committees. Well, nobody has ever said that they were committees of the Legislature; they're committees of government. Each department of government consults with members of government with respect to government policy before it's brought to the Legislature. What could be more appropriate than that?

When it comes to the Legislature, members of the opposition and all members of the Legislature get to comment on it. But in developing government policy, we consult with the public. We have a thorough consultation process with the public, and members of the opposition aren't precluded from that process. They can be involved in the consultation processes with the government that go on on a regulation basis before any new public policy is brought to this Chamber. They can participate in that way. But when you're talking about developing government policy, obviously you consult with government members.

Now, government in our system of parliamentary democracy consists essentially in the truest form as members of Executive Council, but just because that's what is defined as government, it does not mean that members of Executive Council cannot create committees and consult more broadly. That's precisely what a standing policy committee is. In fact, this jurisdiction, Mr. Chairman, has, I think, the distinction of involving private members on the government side in policy development, budget development, and legislation development in a far greater way than any other parliamentary democracy that I'm aware of. That's after the public consultation and before it comes to the floor of the Legislature, leaving in the Legislature more time and opportunity for members of the opposition to raise any concerns that they might have.

The irony of it, Mr. Chairman, is that the bill that's had the most debate in this House is about agricultural operations, but if they read it, it's about spreading manure. That's the irony of it. The bill that's had the longest debate in the House so far and the most amendments from the opposition side is a bill about how we spread manure. It's manure management.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would encourage this House to turn down this ill-founded, ill-thought-out amendment because the effect of this amendment, even if it's only on interim supply, is to take away dollars from a department which needs those dollars, which, in fact, has been able to prevail upon Treasury Board, as they would know because they debated supplementary supply . . .

Dr. Pannu: Small change.

Mr. Hancock: Small change. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona calls $12,250 small change. All I can say, Mr. Chairman, is that I have no idea what his pension is, but it must be a heck of a lot more than any pension I would get.

If $12,250 is small change, I can tell you what we can do for $12,250. Let's see; a quick calculation here. We can probably collect $100,000 for children in Alberta with $12,250. I'm guessing at that. I'll have to go back and remind myself. Maybe you'll raise the same type of amendment when we bring in our full supply. But with that kind of money, Mr. Chairman, we can do a lot. It's not just a modest amount. It's not a modest amount of money to the Department of Justice; I can tell you that.

I can tell you – and I'll get back to the concept that the hon. member raised about standing policy committees – that the standing policy committee that I report to that's chaired by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler does a phenomenal job. A phenomenal job. What does it do?

Ms Blakeman: That may well be. It's taxpayers' money.

Mr. Hancock: Darn right it's taxpayers' money, and it should be taxpayers' money because they're getting value.

Ms Blakeman: It's an internal government committee.

Mr. Hancock: Well, all committees of government are internal government committees. It's not a committee of the Legislature; it's a government committee. It's not a partisan committee; it's a government committee. Well, I shouldn't say that it's not partisan because, of course, it's all members of the governing party that are on it. [interjection] Would you rather that I stopped now? Is that what you're suggesting?

I was making a point about the efficacy of standing policy committees, I believe. Standing policy committees perform a phenomenal function, and I can tell you what they do. You know, I have another committee that perhaps you want to tack onto this agenda, the dollars that are spent on the Justice Policy Advisory Committee. Perhaps the Justice Policy Advisory Committee's budget should be cut as well.

Maybe my travel expenses should be cut. Maybe I shouldn't travel anywhere. The hon. member in Public Accounts asked where I travelled. Well, I think she was surprised to know that I have gone to Nova Scotia for a meeting with justice ministers from across the country. That was on September 10 and 11 of that fatal year.

I went to Nunavut, as a matter of fact. Iqaluit, again to meet with justice ministers. The hon. member would probably look at the bills from that and suggest that it was way too high. Well, I can tell you: it's expensive to travel to Nunavut. But it's also expensive not to travel to Nunavut when justice ministers are meeting and talking about the Criminal Code and talking about amendments to the Criminal Code that might protect children by enhancing the laws against child pornography. Now, how do you value that? Are you going to check and see whether I spent $15 on juice when I was at a meeting when we were talking about passing laws with respect to child pornography, and are you going to try and determine the value of that?

But back to the Justice Policy Advisory Committee, which is a committee of government. I meet with all sorts of people to talk about justice issues. The amendment just talks about taking $12,250 out of my budget. That could affect all sorts of different things. It doesn't specifically say: with respect to standing policy committees.

But I'd like to come back to standing policy committees because they are one of the most effective tools of government, and I'll tell you why. When we develop policy in the Department of Justice, we've gone out and talked to stakeholders about what barriers to success are, what things are getting in the way of having safe communities. We bring those ideas together; we develop a policy framework; we talk about being a policy-driven organization and policy outcomes for government. Then we bring them back in, and we frame those into a policy discussion. We can take them to a standing policy committee, which has representatives on it from all across this province, something we wouldn't get, actually . . .

Dr. Massey: None from the opposition.

Mr. Hancock: No, but we do have representatives from Edmonton on that, and the only representatives you have are from Edmonton except for one from Lethbridge.

So the standing policy committee does have representatives from all across the province – all across the province – and they can provide meaningful input from each of their communities about the proposed justice policy initiatives. Then we can take those initiatives back with the benefit of that input and refine it and do a better job of bringing forward better initiatives, and then we can put it in the form of a policy decision with recommendations. We can go back to that standing policy committee, and coming back to that standing policy committee, we can then refine that policy idea and get approval for it. It's the first stage, in fact, before it goes to cabinet. It can have broader input.

Many other governments in the parliamentary democracy don't have the benefit of that. They just have cabinet ministers who take policy ideas – I think the federal Liberal government operates in this way. They take their policy ideas, but at the initial stage of policy development they just drop their bills on the House without the benefit of any input from even their own private members.

Ms Blakeman: And then they all debate it, yes.

Mr. Hancock: Sure, they all debate it but after the decisions are made and the government has determined that it's part of its agenda and it's going to pass the bill.

Dr. Massey: How often are bills changed in here?

Mr. Hancock: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods asks: how often do bills change in here? I can respond to him honestly: every time a good idea is brought to the floor of the House to change that bill. Every single time a good idea is brought to the floor of the House to change that bill. [interjections]

Well, Mr. Chairman, obviously, they don't want to hear any more. They keep interrupting and heckling, so I will cede the floor to someone else. But I hope that hon. members would not acquiesce to the request from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, who so often purports to support maintenance enforcement and other initiatives taken by Justice to help the poor, the unfortunate, and those that need help, the children of this province, and who would want to take $12,250 out of the Department of Justice so that the Minister of Justice couldn't go to federal/provincial/territorial ministers' meetings and ensure that the Criminal Code of Canada is amended to raise the age of consent, if we're ever successful in that, or to deal with things like conditional sentences or child pornography. She wants to take that out of the governance of this province.

I would ask that members do not support this amendment.

The Chair: Hon. members, I have a couple of words to say. I hesitate to even acknowledge the next speaker because Standing Order 58(4) provides for the vote on an estimate before the Committee of Supply to be called "after it has received not less than 2 hours of consideration." This being two hours and pursuant to Government Motion 12 agreed to March 16, 2004, I must now put the following questions for the 2004-2005 interim supply estimates for the offices of the Legislative Assembly, the government and lottery fund for the next fiscal year ending March 31, 2005.

But first we must deal with amendment A1 as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

The Chair: Now for the votes. Hon. members of supply, please realize that we will go through each and every line item, which may take us to the time in which we could have proposed one, which is quarter to 11.

Agreed to:

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 18, 2004

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2004/03/18

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

The Speaker: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our energies with thanks so that we may continue our work with the people in the constituencies we represent. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Mrs. Gordon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very fortunate today. I have two school groups visiting. First, I'd like to start by introducing to you and through you to members of the Assembly 61 students from Lacombe upper elementary school. I asked them earlier whether they were glad to be here, and they said that they were very happy, that they were enthusiastic, and I know that they're very bright. With them today are teachers Miss Heather MacKay, Mr. Derek Rankin, and Ms Sasha Krivoshein and parent helpers Tim and Moira Ellen, Mr. Darren Woodford, Ms Lynda Baker, Mr. Dave Helmer, Mrs. Pat Wilson, Mr. Scott Derwanz, Mr. Darrel Johnston, Mrs. Cathy McEachem, Mr. Kelvin Rieland, Mrs. Margje Van Giersbergen, and Mrs. Barbara Webb. I would ask the 61 students to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Thank you.

My second students are from Lakeview Christian school, and there are 13 students and nine adults here today. I would welcome these students as well to the Legislature. Joining them are teachers Miss Goossen and Miss Isaac as well as group leaders Ray Unruh and Ralph Wiebe. I would ask the Lakeview Christian school students, who I'm sure are also bright and enthusiastic, to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Mr. Strang: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I introduce the students from St. Mary's school on behalf of the MLA for Cardston-Taber-Warner. There are 29 great students along with their teachers, Mrs. Gay Lagler and Mr. Pat Pyne, and their student teacher, Miss Kendra Bailey. They're also with 10 other people that are either parents or helpers. At this time I'd appreciate it if they'd all stand and have the Assembly give them a great warm welcome.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a couple from Linden, Alberta, Tom and Carrie Courtney. They're seated in the public gallery. If the name sounds familiar, it should be because they were the owner-operators of a very successful business, Courtney Berg enterprises, for a number of years in Linden, and the business is still successful, still growing, still expanding and being operated by their son and son-in-law to date. But their real claim to fame is that they are also the very proud grandparents of our own researcher, Richard Westlund, who's also seated in the public gallery. I'd ask all three to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a former constituent of Edmonton-Centre. We like to hang on to them for as long as we can. Marilyn Burns is joining us today in the gallery, and she's very interested, particularly in auto insurance reform. So, Marilyn, I would ask you to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly a constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Dr. Ryan Dunch. Dr. Dunch has children in three public schools in Edmonton: in the Chinese bilingual program at Meyonohk school, at Victoria school, and at Strathearn school. Dr. Dunch is concerned about the quality of public education and the lack of adequate funding for public education in this province. I would like Dr. Dunch, who is in the public gallery, to now stand and receive the traditional warm and gracious welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am delighted to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly one Edmonton-Strathcona constituent, Dr. Robert Wilson. Dr. Wilson has two young children attending grades 2 and 3, I think, at McKernan elementary junior high. Dr. Robert Wilson is very active in the Education Watch initiative, a parent organization very concerned about the lack of adequate funding for public education in this province. I believe he is seated in the public gallery. I would ask him to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

Mr. Coutts: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and through you a visitor to our country but more importantly a visitor to Alberta. Her name is Mika Hirano. She resides in Anpachi, Japan. Mika has just finished four years of university in Japan, and she graduated just last week as a teacher. She decided to take a couple of weeks off and come over here and visit with her friend and be our guest in our home for the next couple of weeks, but the nice thing is that Mika has just received word that she has got a job in her own school in her own town starting the 1st of April. So we wish her the best of luck. Mika is seated in the members' gallery. I ask her to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Dunford: Mr. Speaker, there are two people that are actually working with Mika, and we shouldn't ignore the other partner of that beautiful relationship, and I'd like Phyllis Coutts to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head:

Oral Question Period

The Speaker: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Automobile Insurance

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The auto insurance rate freeze is just a political tease by this government. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Have any major players in the Alberta auto insurance market refused to date to issue a credit or rebate since this freeze was initiated by the Premier last fall?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say that from the latest report I've had, about 95 per cent or more of the industry have complied with the freeze. In fact, I've had numerous people, even in this Assembly, say that they have actually received not only a credit from their insurance company since the freeze was put in place, but they've actually received refund cheques if their insurance came up for renewal after the October 30 freeze date. So there has been a compliance by the industry.

As you know, we are in a situation of a legal action right now, so I do know of one company that has taken us to court, and that, I believe, is the extent of it, but I believe all others have complied with the freeze that was put in place on October 30.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why is Meloche Monnex, the fourth largest player in the Alberta auto market, with over $150 million in direct written premiums in 2002, not listed on your web site as agreeing to issue either rebates or credits? They're the fourth largest player in this market. Why are they not there?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get into individual companies. It is my understanding from the latest briefing that I've had that the companies have, not always happily, agreed to the freeze that's been put in place and have complied with the ruling that we put forward. Whether it comes through the broker or through the insurance company depends on the relationship that's there.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: will the hon. minister order those insurance companies to issue interest on the amounts of rebate or credit that consumers in this province are owed, particularly after the large profits that have been just announced?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, we asked the industry on very short notice to put a freeze in place and to co-operate with us to work to get a reform program going forward. We said that from October 30 forward for up to 18 months there would be a freeze in place, and under the fair practices regulations that we put in place, there are other rules there as well. We asked the industry to comply with it, and we asked them to work within a tight time frame to accomplish that. We didn't legislate that tight time frame because we learned very quickly that some were experiencing some difficulty with their computer systems and were having trouble complying if their systems weren't as modern as the others.

But I can say that even with all those difficulties the industry did come forward and has co-operated on the credits and/or refunds that we requested that they put in place. I can say that, in fact, they are today, as we speak, continuing to co-operate. We aren't always agreeing on every regulation but are continuing to co-operate to try and put forward a new structure, as are the other proponents that were against this. The legal profession is also working with us.

So people are coming together to realize that this plan, Mr. Speaker, was clearly geared for the consumers of the province of Alberta. Once that realization was recognized by both sides, they decided to be part of the solution and not stay as the problem.

The Speaker: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Rural Gas Co-ops and Electrification Associations

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Divisions in this Progressive Conservative government continue to grow larger and larger, wider and wider. Now, a recent report on rural issues states – and this is the report that was put out yesterday by the hon. Member for Wainwright and the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake – that “policies regarding gas and electricity utilities need to respect the work of Rural Gas Co-ops and Rural Electrification Associations . . . They gave rural areas quality utilities at affordable prices.” However, in the next breath this government plans a $3 million propaganda campaign to convince rural Albertans to abandon their rural electrification associations and gas co-ops in favour of so-called competition. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why is this government trying to break up the rural gas co-ops and the rural electrification associations?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, as has chronically been the case, we are compelled to correct the member's preamble. I would state to him that there is less division amongst these 74 than there is amongst those seven. The reason is because this government works very closely with all the members that are a part of this government.

One of those important parts, the parts created by government, are rural electrification associations, that out of 9,000 megawatts deliver some 87 megawatts of electricity efficiently, reasonably, and with good service across this great province.

Mr. Speaker, the rural gas co-ops are a model. They are such a model that I took the book on rural gas co-ops and gave it to legislators from Alaska and said: if you want to prosper, gasify your rural areas; here's how you do it. The rural gas co-ops serve as a template. Those organizations shall remain strong, will remain strong, and will withstand any malarkey that comes from that member.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to that minister: given that there is no competition in Alberta's energy market and rural electrification associations and gas co-ops have provided rural Alberta with something that really works, affordable utilities for decades, why is this government spending $3 million on a propaganda campaign that rural members do not want?

Mr. Smith: I guess that because there's no preamble in a supplemental, I can't correct the preamble that we didn't hear, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the ability for us to continue to deliver affordable electricity and affordable gas prices in this marketplace, whether it be rural Alberta, whether it be northern Alberta, whether it be southern Alberta, is something we've worked very hard on since 1996. I don't care which jurisdiction you look at across Canada, whether it's New Brunswick, that has just spent $750 million retrofitting an oil-fired generator to an input product that doesn't exist or they can't obtain, to the $40 billion debt in Ontario and a decision to spend billions of dollars to go nuclear, I'll tell you what. If he wants to see trouble, all he has to do is leave Alberta.

Mr. MacDonald: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that this government plans by 2010 to provide all customers choice with electricity, how can this minister say that this government is not planning to dismantle the rural electrification associations that Albertans rely on? It's a tradition that works.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, if there's any proof that when the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness was the hon. minister of education and he introduced early reading competencies into the school system it was very important – because this member is not displaying a reading competency. If he goes through the report that was put together by the Member for Wainwright and the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, he will see that there is an Alberta that thrives on the oil patch out there, there's a rural Alberta that has endless opportunities that are nowhere else in Canada. We look forward for this government to capitalize on those rural opportunities, and the oil and gas industry intends to be a part of it.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Health Care Labour Negotiations

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The compulsory arbitration board assisting in negotiations with Alberta's nurses wrote the Minister of Human Resources and Employment on Tuesday asking him to extend the deadline for negotiations. In the letter the board requests: "It is in the public interest that we ask you to extend the Board's mandate." While nurses have said that they want to continue negotiations and avert a crisis, the provincial health authorities remain silent. My questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Will the minister encourage the provincial health authorities to continue negotiations as the compulsory arbitration board requests?

Mr. Dunford: Yes, certainly we will. We've contemplated for some time that in putting the compulsory arbitration board together, they would be able to find a way to provide an agreement for the parties, and we've talked about a date on March 31.

Dr. Taft: Is the minister prepared to use his power and unilaterally extend the deadline past June 15 if the provincial health authorities do not continue negotiations?

Mr. Dunford: The question is hypothetical. We have the letter, as the member has indicated. As is my normal method of operation, we're analyzing it carefully, and we'll make a decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you. What steps does this government have planned in the event the provincial health authorities walk away from the negotiations?

1:50

Mr. Dunford: Well, again hypothetical. Does the member not understand that as an hon. member in this House he, like me, should be encouraging this group to come to an agreement and not all of a sudden start to provide shadows and innuendo that maybe they can't come to an agreement? What he's asking is not right.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Health Care Reform

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

There once was a minister of health
Who often acted with stealth.
His plans were carefully hidden.
He had to do as he was bidden,
For the system's objective is now wealth.

To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that the Premier has stated that he doesn't want to release the Graydon report because the media and opposition will pounce on it, is the government admitting that Albertans will find his recommendations unacceptable?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm impressed. I can only reply by saying:

An intelligent question I will not dodge
If asked by the hon. doc named Raj.
But if the question is inane,
From answering such I will refrain.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say this. We have made a commitment that the report the hon. member refers to will be part of the overall discussion of health care reform in this province. It's an important discussion not only in Alberta but throughout the country, and in the due course of time we will be releasing the Graydon report that he refers to.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time marches on.

Is the government that scared of the contents of the Graydon report that it needs a communications plan before its release?

Mr. Mar: Well, Mr. Speaker, with all matters of government policy and government discussion and appropriate consultation that takes place, we always have a communication plan. We're not as haphazard as the members opposite.

Dr. Pannu: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: isn't it insulting to Albertans to suggest that they can't make up their own mind about health care reform without passing a report through the filter of 200 or more spin doctors in the government's Public Affairs Bureau?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, that falls in the category of inane questions.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition.

Highway Signs

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a tough act to follow, so I won't try.

My question today is to the Minister of Transportation. The Department of Transportation has recently announced a new highway signage policy which would phase out community business signs on highways over the next two years. This concerns many businesses that rely on tourism to supplement their income. To the Minister of Transportation: what impact will this new policy have on local businesses in small rural communities?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Stelmach: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The impact on the small businesses in rural Alberta will be very positive. We've heard from Albertans that it's time to renew our signs in the province of Alberta, and as we head to the celebration of our centennial, we recognize that something must be done to add a little bit more colour and newness to all our destination signs. As a result, there was a cross-ministry initiative – Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Community Development, Economic Development, and Alberta Transportation – that came together and offered a policy that was accepted by government. We are now going to be in the process of implementing that policy.

There are, of course, two stages to it. First is the logo component. Logos really are the food, the lodging, and the gas that tourists or other Albertans want to locate in the province. That will be the first component of the change.

Then it will be followed with tourist-oriented destination signs as well. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that those signs will be international in terms of the criteria and the colour. You'll see the same colour of signs in our neighbouring provinces and also in the United States, and our intent here is to provide the best possible very pleasant experience for the thousands of tourists that visit this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second and last question to the same minister: what options are available for businesses to make the public aware of the specific services they have to offer?

Mr. Stelmach: A very good question. That's phase 2 of the policy. We will immediately, with the departments that I mentioned before and with the help of all government members, move to the next stage of open houses and discussions of how we will deal with the kind of community business signs that the hon. member is mentioning.

There are, of course, a number of schools of thought in terms of how many signs we require, should they be the same across the province, and what would be the rules in terms of who can put up a sign and when and at what location along our provincial highways. That, Mr. Speaker, is the next stage, and I welcome input from all members of this House.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

SuperNet

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The rural development strategy released yesterday is critical of the SuperNet. Individual access, lack of technical support, and prohibitive costs are listed as barriers for rural residents. The SuperNet will remain NoNet for many rural Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Why would the government build the network to a town but not hook up the network to the users?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Doerksen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Interim Leader of the Opposition referred to the jurisdiction of Heisler, and as a matter of note Heisler names its roads and its streets after the Premiers of Alberta.

But on a more serious matter – that's just a little bit of trivia for the House – I think the people responsible for the report that was released yesterday, the Member for Wainwright and the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, understand full well the importance of rural development and understand the opportunity that having the availability of high-speed broadband networks brings to rural communities to enable them to look at opportunities for additional development in their places.

Dr. Massey: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that hooking up to SuperNet costs from $3,000 to $10,000 per year for every public building, how are cash-strapped communities ever going to afford to join up?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. When the contemplation of the contract with our providers was being worked on, municipalities were not part of those discussions. As we moved along in the process, we actually engaged with the AUMA and the AAMD and C to talk about how we could help to facilitate their connection to the network. As a result, we included in the contract a provision that lets the municipalities have the same connection at the same rates as the other government of Alberta entities. That was added after those discussions.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we also helped to facilitate an agreement which allows the municipalities for a fee – I think it's about $4,000 – to be able to provide that connection to their buildings. But the municipalities still have to make a decision as to whether that, in fact, is something that they desire. That's a decision that they have to make.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: how many more tax dollars will be needed and should be added to the $200 million cost of the project thus far before rural Albertans can be hooked up?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, the contract we have for building the SuperNet, particularly as it relates to the rural communities, the extended network, is $193 million. If there are any overruns on that bill, that is the responsibility of our major contractor, Bell West. So our commitment through the SuperNet construct is to make sure that libraries, hospitals, government buildings, and schools will all be connected to this high-speed optical network, which will allow us to do more things like distance delivery of education, a remote diagnostic and imaging that is unique in the world.

With respect to some specific issues around municipalities I would ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs to supplement.

2:00

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Boutilier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that the hon. members for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake and Wainwright have done excellent work on rural development. What we have heard in this report, though, is quite simply this. There's no other program like it anywhere in Canada, number one. By the end of this fiscal year, March 31, every single municipality in this province will be hooked up, so that really says that we're working in partnership.

Let me just give you one other small example. There are rural communities that may not have a town hall or an administration building. In fact, they're using professional accounting firms where they enjoy that service. Do you know what? What's happening is that the rural municipality doesn't want to put that money into a private accounting firm to have that service for them. So what we're trying to work out with the ministry of innovation is a partnership that can serve very well every rural and urban municipality by the end of the fiscal year. It's going to happen. I know that the hon. member may not like it, but it's very good news for every single municipality in this province.

Electricity Generation

Mr. VanderBurg: The discussion on power has caused debate; some even say that things aren't going great. But, Mr. Speaker, during the past few years the province of Alberta has enjoyed a building frenzy in electrical generation. I understand that the industry participants in Whitecourt-St. Anne are looking to new, innovative ways to bring power production and new generation to the Whitecourt area. Many jurisdictions are now considering nuclear plants to generate power and choosing to close down coal production. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Given Ontario's power generation report released today by John Manley's review committee, it appears that there's increasing support for nuclear power in Ontario. Can a nuclear power facility be built here in Alberta?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a good question. The question surrounds the issue of competitive market generation. The same competitive market generation that the opposition ballyhoos as a bad principle has in fact delivered some 3,000 new megawatts, has delivered downward pressure on electricity prices to the tune of moving from 16 cents a kilowatt hour down to some 4 cents to 5 cents a kilowatt hour.

There's an extremely robust business-to-business, or wholesale, marketplace, and in fact more power generation is welcome in this province. We have in fact structured through export policy principles, market policy principles, and transmission policy principles an area that is warm and conducive to new generation. That generation is not limited to biomass, wind, natural gas. It can in fact be anything that the investor, who has the risk, chooses to put forward. What the investor, or the proponent of the plant, must do is come before the environmental process, and he must come before the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board process. It is that strong regulatory system that regulates the permitting of power generation in this province.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, given that answer, are we contemplating creating debt, as other jurisdictions have, to further expand electricity generation?

Mr. Smith: Well, to quote another famous conservative, that being Mrs. Nancy Reagan, Mr. Speaker, I think we'll just say no.

Mr. VanderBurg: Well, then, could the private sector possibly put in nuclear generations maybe in the oil sands area?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, a long-time recipient of multiple aid and subsidy from the federal government, particularly in the time of the corrupt Liberal government that we see today, has put forward certain studies that would indicate that there could be substantial replacement of natural gas as an input resource to steam generation in the oil sands.

There is a process, as I outlined earlier, and then I think Albertans also have a concern. That concern would be with the fact of the horrific activities of 9/11; secondly, the extremely tragic bombing in Bali; and thirdly, followed by the incidents in Madrid 911 days after 9/11, that in fact having a nuclear facility so close to a most precious and most prized asset of the government of Alberta would be quite risky for Alberta's security, Mr. Speaker.

Private/Public Partnerships for Hospital Construction

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier said that we Liberals like to cherry-pick when it comes to P3s, picking out the worst examples and ignoring the good ones. Perhaps he would be more likely to listen to the concerns of a prominent group of economists including a former director with Canada's Auditor General. They state in a report that, quote, the P3 model for public hospitals is likely to lead to significantly greater costs, diminished accountability, and a deterioration of universal service, end quote.* To the minister of health: given that this report clearly states that the P3 model for public hospitals is likely to lead to a deterioration of the quality and extent of universal service, how can this minister condone the P3 experiment for hospitals?

The Speaker: Hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, the chair is having a little difficulty with the question. There's no identification of whose report, where it comes from. Is it an Alberta government report or the like? I don't know how a minister can deal with something that is not identified.

The hon. minister.

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, simply by associating myself with the comments that the Premier made in this House yesterday.

Mr. Bonner: To the Minister of Infrastructure: given that this report states – and this report was tabled in the House – that “it is reasonable to expect P3 hospitals to be at least 10% more costly than their public sector equivalents,” what actual proof can the minister provide that Alberta will be the exception?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, as you clearly indicated, we know nothing of the report, if in fact it even exists, but that won't stop me from making some comments about P3s. The fact is that the hon. member across the way obviously doesn't have a clue what a P3 is. I've said it in this House more than once, the process that we go through and the fact that a P3 project has to be able to show that it is good for Albertans or it won't proceed.

To demonstrate that he doesn't understand anything about P3s, he keeps on saying that the quality of health care, for example, in a P3 hospital is going to be less than in a publicly owned one. I would like to know how on earth the bricks and mortar that happen to be owned by the private sector are going to deteriorate the health care that is provided by the regional health authorities in that building. How is the ownership of the building going to affect the quality of care in the building? That demonstrates how little he understands about the whole P3.

Mr. Bonner: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has never been able to provide to the House one example of a P3 hospital that has been successful, why is there a process for approving P3 hospitals when the evidence shows that the entire concept of a P3 hospital is flawed?

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, we haven't in this province yet had a proposal come to us for a P3 hospital, but I'm certainly not discouraging anyone from bringing one forward. First, the business case has to be presented; it has to show that, in fact, it's good for the province. That's internally within our department that we do that. Then before it can go any further, it has to go to an outside committee that has not got any government people on it, that is in the private sector, and they do a complete analysis of the project. Coming out of there, it has to show that it is going to be beneficial to Albertans to go with that kind of a project. Then it has to go before Treasury Board and cabinet before it can get approval.

Mr. Speaker, we have built in all kinds of checks and balances, and I can assure the member that if a project goes ahead, then we will be able to show that, in fact, it's good for Albertans. All he's got to do is go and look at the Confederation Bridge and then come back to this House and tell us that that's a bad P3.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

2:10 BSE Testing Program

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since last May the government of Alberta has assisted the Alberta beef industry as a whole with more than $400 million to successfully sustain itself during this still ongoing BSE crisis. It is still not out of the woods. This week the U.S. Department of Agriculture announced changes in their BSE testing regime, expanding it to about 220,000 animals, 10 times the number tested last year, and they will also conduct random tests on about 20,000 older and healthy animals. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. How does the Alberta BSE testing program compare to the USDA's?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, we're pleased that the USDA has announced its enhanced BSE surveillance. Their planned level of surveillance certainly is taken from the recommendations of the international panel for a very aggressive North American surveillance plan, which is exactly what the government of Canada did when we received the recommendations from the international committee. The difficulty in testing a percentage of healthy older animals is minimal. It would be about .003 per cent of our herd. We could do it, I think, relatively easily. It's certainly recognized internationally that the higher value in testing is in older animals in the high-risk area.

BSE is a national priority. There's no question. Ministers of agriculture will be meeting in Ottawa, I believe it is, in early April. This will be a subject again of our discussions and deliberations because the testing protocols that are accepted would be accepted for all of Canada in order for them to be useful to the international community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: are there any programs to ensure consumer confidence in the safety of our beef given that the probability of humans contracting mad cow disease by eating Alberta beef is so minute?

Mrs. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, since the first case of BSE was reported on May 20 last year, the Alberta government and the Canadian government have been completely open and transparent about what is occurring and what is being discussed here. I would also say that because of what I think has been pretty fair and comprehensive media reporting on this issue, the Canadian public have understood the minimal risk in consuming the product, and of course that was demonstrated, I think, first in our province, led by our province but certainly across Canada, in the increased consumption of beef, unparalleled by any country experiencing BSE.

Mr. Speaker, there is something that I think we all have to keep in mind. Testing of animals is not about human health. It is a practice for disease surveillance in a herd. Human health is protected in this area by the removal of the specified risk materials, which takes the risk to about 99.96 per cent. I believe that Canadians understand that, I believe they support it, and I believe they would want our resources put in ensuring that SRMs are removed from all animals from that group, and that should be audited. That's what I believe Canadians would want.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Cao: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what are the Alberta government's current efforts in working with other nations to open their borders to our beef?

Mrs. McClellan: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been very aggressive in working with other countries through a number of ministries: the Ministry of Economic Development certainly in marketing, our ministry in explaining what we do in our province as we are the major beef-producing province in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think what has maybe been lost in some of this is the importance of the work that Minister Speller has done with other countries with the minister's office and CFIA. Japan has agreed to work with us on equivalency of testing animals. So rather than us testing every animal, which, when you've had a feed ban in place since 1997 – since the majority of animals that we slaughter for consumption are under 18 months, certainly under 24 months, they have agreed to have our scientists work together to look at what protocols we have in place, what precautionary measures we have in place that would meet the equivalency, in their mind, of testing every animal. That's a very important point that has to be recalled.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Granting of Liquor Licences

Ms Blakeman: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the past number of years Cathedral Close seniors' residence in downtown Edmonton has had to contend with loud late-night noise from a rock and roll club across the back alley. The old club closed, but the new owners are trying to open a club in the same location. Recognizing the historic problems, the city of Edmonton would only grant a private club licence to minimize noise and activity in the surrounding area. My questions today are to the Minister of Gaming. Why is the AGLC granting the club a class A public liquor licence, totally undermining the efforts of the city and the nearby residents?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, with respect to liquor licences the first step necessarily is to obtain zoning and a business licence from the municipality in question before the application can be made. While I'm not familiar with the particulars of this matter, I can say that the city of Edmonton will have granted a business licence which allows for the applicant to proceed for a class A licence. If that is the case, then the rules that have already been established by the AGLC regarding such applications will be followed.

But if a municipality wishes to curtail such licences in their community, they have the power to do that. For example, we have jurisdictions within Alberta that are completely dry. That is perhaps an extreme example but a very good example of where a municipality has the control to say: we don't want that in our community.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the same minister: is it the policy of the AGLC to have staff aggressively lobby the managers of the seniors' complex and the nearby hotel, who are opposed to the granting of a licence?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I didn't hear the beginning of the question, so I'm not sure which particular group the hon. member was referring to, but I can say this. Business members in the community will proceed to do what is in their interests in talking to adjacent facilities to have them buy into applications. That is something that is within their purview.

Certainly, the AGLC takes a neutral role relative to all of this and receives the applications. If parties from the public wish to contact the AGLC with respect to information on liquor licensing, they may. In certain situations members of city councils in Calgary, in Red Deer, in Edmonton, indeed, have contacted AGLC to say: we would like you to come out and participate in a public fashion to discuss the rules of liquor licensing so that we as a community can be informed as to what our options are. That is something that the AGLC does when asked, and it's something that the communities value.

Ms Blakeman: Given that the residents of the Cathedral Close Apartments have been denied access to the information for this new club, will this minister now make these applications public?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, I have no particular familiarity with this application that the hon. member is referring to. I would suggest that if there are members of the public who wish information regarding the process for licensing, they contact the AGLC, be specific about what they are talking about, and I am sure that the AGLC will provide them with good information so that they will understand what options are available to them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Health Care Labour Negotiations (continued)

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. All three members of the mediation panel in the negotiation between Alberta's nurses and health authorities have written to the minister of human resources asking for his intervention. They have asked the minister to use his good offices to encourage the parties to extend the time deadline so that a settlement can be reached. My question is for the minister. Will he do so? Yes or no?

The Speaker: We've had that exact same question earlier in the question period.

Minister, go ahead.

Mr. Dunford: Well, it's not quite that simple, yes or no. We have to analyze the situation and make a decision.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier recently threatened to put nurses in jail if they broke this government's unjust laws, won't the minister accept his responsibility and allow the mediation process to have the time that it needs to work effectively?

Mr. Dunford: Again, there's a process. We're analyzing the request.

Mr. Mason: Can the minister tell us when he will have gone through his careful process of analysis and have made a decision? When will he inform the House, and will it be before it's too late?

Mr. Dunford: Well, a colleague mentioned here a number of days ago that it was better to be right than right away.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

School Auditory/Verbal Therapy Program

Mr. Lord: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a great deal of concern about the future of a very important and innovative program in Calgary involving a P3-type partnership between the Calgary board of education, the Alberta Children's hospital, and parents. This one-of-a-kind program in Canada deserves national recognition as a model for others to copy, but instead it is being threatened because it is located in the Knob Hill school, which is being threatened with closure and is vitally tied into the professional staff from the Alberta Children's hospital, located right next door, which is also slated for closure. This amazing program effectively cures deafness in children. It involves cochlear implants and auditory/verbal therapy training. It allows deaf children to be able to hear and communicate normally but if and only if they get this training at an early age. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What will happen to this program?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, let me say first of all that I can't speak to the issues as they might relate to the Calgary board of education's decision on whether or not this facility will be closed. I have been advised by the Minister of Learning that Knob Hill school is one of two facilities being considered for closure.

But I will say this, Mr. Speaker. Cochlear implants and their associated therapy, an intensive speech therapy which is required, are fully funded by Alberta Health and Wellness. The students who are at Knob Hill school who are in the midst of their therapy will continue to receive their therapy. What I am advised about this program is that intensive speech therapy is an integral part of receiving a cochlear implant, and my Department of Health and Wellness has been in touch with the health region to ensure that the needs of these students continue to be met. I don't know where though.

Mr. Lord: My second question, to the same minister: does the newly planned Children's hospital incorporate an auditory/verbal training classroom within their new premises?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, the details of the new Children's hospital are still in development, so it is too early to be able to say with certainty what facilities and programs it might house. Again, I will simply reiterate that the important needs of these students will continue to be met, but I cannot say with certainty at what facility they will be delivered.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Lord: That's my final question.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Woodland Caribou

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Woodland caribou populations have been threatened in Alberta since 1985, and there is still not adequate protection in the province. The government's own scientists state that if industrial activities continue, Alberta's woodland caribou population will be threatened with extinction. While the Ministry of SRD initiated a woodland caribou recovery team, that is scheduled to deliver a recovery plan this year, industrial activity in caribou habitat continues unabated. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: does this ministry not see the contradiction in working towards the recovery of a species while it allows a core part of the woodland caribou's range to be significantly altered by forestry activities?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. Of course, like I always say, what the Liberals would do if they were the government is they'd close everything down, but we don't. In this area we have more responsibility than that.

We have to ensure that the economic development that happens in Alberta continues, because that's what makes Alberta strong. We have one of the best forest industries in North America, with thousands of people involved in that industry and the other industries, the oil and gas industry and the agriculture industry. We have a strong economy in Alberta. We have strong environment policies in place and wildlife management also. So we do maintain a balance, and you can be assured that this ministry will not neglect the responsibility of ensuring that the animals are protected while we develop and harvest the resources we need to develop.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, will the minister then call a stop to new industrial development in caribou habitat until caribou populations have been restored to historic levels?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, only the Liberals would stop everything in a situation like this. We don't do that. That's why we are the government. That is why we have a strong economy, a good environment, and good wildlife management, and we'll continue doing that.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, well, then, will the minister at least conduct an assessment on how much industrial development can continue while still maintaining a healthy caribou population?

Mr. Cardinal: Of course, Mr. Speaker, it's always a challenge to keep the balance, and you can be assured that we can do that. I am a resident of northern Alberta. I have been out there all my life, and that's a long time, and I know for a fact that we have a good balance at this time. I invite the member – and the member has probably never been in northern Alberta – to experience first-hand what is out there. I challenge her to come out there.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Natural Resource Revenues

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the enormous profits that oil and gas companies are making in this province have been widely reported. My constituents continue to ask if we're getting the value for their natural resources. My questions are for the Minister of Energy. What is the rate that Albertans get for their oil and gas from these companies, and are we giving away our natural resources to others?

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question: is Alberta giving away its natural resources? The answer to that question is no. The answer to the question is absolutely not. Furthermore, the royalty system ensures that the people of Alberta, who do own this resource, receive a fair financial return.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, just in terms of numbers, that between 2001 and 2003 for conventional oil, the oil that is now produced at a lesser rate than what comes from the oil sands, that rate averages at 16.75 to about 17 and three-quarters per cent. That continues to encourage conventional drilling, and it continues to encourage optimum development. For natural gas it's in the neighbourhood of 19.6 per cent to 20 per cent to a low of about 17 per cent. What we have found is that as we approach the end of this fiscal year, it looks very closely like the royalties of the last four years will equal the previous 10 years combined.

2:30

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Are we getting the return for our natural resources compared to other producers of oil and gas such as Alaska or neighbouring provinces, and should we be reviewing our royalty structure?

The Speaker: Two questions. Take the first one please, minister.

Mr. Smith: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is an extremely good question. There is an international forum headed by Dr. Pedro Van Meurs and Daniel Johnston. They've rated Alberta as one of the toughest fiscal regimes in the world in terms of the high share of nonrenewable resource revenue received by government, and that's, I think, absolutely critical. I mean, if you take a look across the world at how organizations, countries, collect their royalties, we have a great deal of oil and gas, but it's in very small areas and in very diverse areas stretched over some 660,000 square miles. We have probably done the best job in the free world of developing an important resource for the benefit of Albertans.

Mrs. Ady: My last question is: is there benefit for us to be doing refining and upgrading in this province of those natural resources?

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, one of the great things that Edmonton depends on – Edmonton – is its refinery infrastructure. With the oil sands that refinery infrastructure will be around for the next 50 to 75 years.

If we can just take a second and talk about the forecasted production from the oil sands, yesterday the posting at the Edmonton Hardisty oil terminal was about $52 Canadian per barrel – $52 Canadian per barrel of oil. Today that posting is just under $50, at $49.83. Mr. Speaker, by 2017 it's estimated that we'll produce about 3 million barrels a day from the oil sands. Now, at $50 a barrel and a $10 lifting cost that delivers a 25 per cent royalty when the projects are paid out. That means that we get about $30 million per day out of the oil sands. If you project that forward, that's very close to a billion dollars a month, and a billion dollars a month over 12 months puts $12 billion a year in the hands of future Albertans. Are we giving away our resources? I don't think so.

The Speaker: Hon. members, there is a policy in the question period, if a member of Executive Council chooses to clarify an answer given earlier, to allow the member who raised the question to ask a supplementary question. I've received a request now from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to rise on a point of clarification with respect to something that was said when he addressed a question. So if I do permit that, then it would only be right, not knowing what this clarification is going to be, to permit a member of Executive Council to make a comment as well.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Private/Public Partnerships for Hospital Construction

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for this opportunity. I did neglect to mention the name of the report earlier in my questions. The name of the report was Funding Hospital Infrastructure: Why P3s Don't Work, and What Will. It was prepared by some very well-known people: Lewis Auerbach, Arthur Donner, Douglas D. Peters, Monica Townson, and Armine Yalnizyan. This was tabled in the House on November 26, 2003.* Thank you very much.

Mr. Lund: Mr. Speaker, from the contents that the member used, it would almost sound like this came out of the Parkland Institute, and I'm just wondering if all of those people that he mentioned are part of the Parkland Institute. I guess it's not fair for me to ask the question, but . . .

The Speaker: No, it isn't fair, hon. minister. In this case you don't get to ask a question under that.

Hon. members, before we move on to the next item that the Clerk will call, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Highwood, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Mr. Tannas: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 23 bright and enthusiastic students from Edison school, which is located in my constituency of Highwood. They are accompanied today by teacher Mrs. Lonnie Antal; parents Ms Cindy Clark, Mrs. Barb Cameron, Mrs. Barb Murray, Mrs. Pearl Figol, Mr. Rick Festa, Mrs. Marcie Hamilton, Mrs. Elly Singer. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Rev. Abbott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly 19 of Alberta's brightest and best students. They are from Saint John's School of Alberta in my constituency. The school is located near Genesee, Alberta. It's an all-boys school, and it's been visited quite often by Her Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor as she's had a relative that went to that school, and there have been some other famous people go through there. They are accompanied today by their headmaster, Keith McKay, and also their social studies teacher, Larry Sherwood. So I'd ask all 21 of them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Qui Tam Legislation

Mr. Lord: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about how Canadians and Albertans might take some proactive steps to avoid any of the scandals we now see unfolding within the federal government these past few months and how we could help ensure that nothing like that ever happens in Alberta. An ounce of prevention is always worth a pound of cure, and one of the best ideas that I have seen to prevent such problems for government is called qui tam legislation.

Qui tam legislation is also known as whistle-blower reward legislation, and it is an innovative new approach to prevent fraud against the government. It has the great benefit of not costing the government any net dollars, it requires no new bureaucracies, nor does it suffer from some of the drawbacks associated with whistle-blower protection legislation, which can be problematic. I expect some people may be familiar with qui tam because it is now sweeping the United States and is an astounding success there.

Qui tam legislation was first initiated by the U.S. federal government in order to catch unethical suppliers selling shoddy goods at inflated prices to the government or to catch outright fraud through phoney invoicing, for example. It promptly recovered over $5 billion that had been paid out to fraudulent suppliers, found money for the government that they didn't know they had, therefore providing windfall budget increases for government departments and helping keep taxes and deficits down. Since then 13 states have enacted qui tam legislation, and eight more are pending.

Initially opponents to this legislation state that there is no need for it. It was thought that there was little or no fraud occurring that the government accountants weren't already catching, and in the first year there were actually only 33 cases in the entire U.S. brought forward. Now, however, as word has spread, there have been 483 cases of major fraud reported. In California each case netted the state $100 million in recovered funds. In fact, one case currently before California right now is actually looking at a potential $2 billion recovery for fraud against the government. These are not small cases. In Florida the largest successful case to date, involving health care fraud, recovered for the state $875 million, and that's in U.S. dollars.

Mr. Speaker, clearly it is time for qui tam legislation in Canada. The solution is before us. I urge this Assembly to start the process in Alberta and once again lead the way in Canada. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Neglect of Infrastructure

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier stated yesterday that retiring the last of the province's $3.7 billion debt in 2005, Alberta's centennial year, would be a wonderful legacy. However, the Premier will also leave another legacy, an appalling legacy of deteriorating roads, run-down schools, and neglected hospitals.

In the government's 10-year obsession to be debt free for its burn-the-mortgage party in 2005, it has racked up an immense infrastructure debt. The government would need to spend $7 billion just to catch up on badly needed infrastructure projects it has ignored over the years. This backlog includes outstanding requests for infrastructure from health regions, school boards, postsecondary institutions, and government facilities.

The government's neglect of infrastructure affects the lives of all Albertans. A good government provides stable, predictable, and reliable funding for schools, roads, and hospitals, ensuring that infrastructure needs are met now and in the future. It is simply bad financial management to double up on the mortgage payments when the roof over our children's heads is leaking.

So while the government congratulates itself on making the last payment of the $3.7 billion on the province's debt, I hope they remember that it was at a cost of withholding $7 billion from schools, hospitals, and roads.

Thank you.

Great Kids Awards

Mr. Strang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to stand and acknowledge the Great Kids awards program and the two recipients who live in West Yellowhead. Since 1999 the government has worked hard to recognize outstanding children throughout Alberta who day in and day out exemplify the best qualities of our province. To be eligible, a nominee must reside in Alberta, be five to 18 years of age, demonstrate considerable effort in school, contribute to their community through volunteer services, and contribute to the quality of home life by willingly assuming responsibilities within their family.

I am proud to say that the constituency of West Yellowhead has two young Albertans recognized this year. Mikyla Sherlow, age 8, of Jasper saved up her own allowance to buy books for children in the local hospital. Not only that; Mikyla helped organize a successful fundraising campaign to buy a new $7,000 wheelchair for a local boy. Jayden Madsen, age 17, of Hinton is a musically talented honours student whose dedication to others is truly remarkable. Jayden worked all summer to pay for one year of education for an exchange student from Belarus whom his family had hosted previously and who could not afford to pay her own expenses.

This is just two examples, Mr. Speaker, of remarkable Albertans who even at such a young age exemplify the spirit of this province. I would like to congratulate Mikyla and Jayden on their awards and wish them all the very best in their future endeavours.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Seniors' Programs

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I received a series of phone calls from seniors who complained about being badly treated in their meetings with Tory MLAs. At recent visits to seniors' residences in my constituency I heard the frustration felt by seniors whose pocketbooks are being picked by health care premiums, health user fees, and reductions in home care services.

Seniors are terrified that they will lose their homes because of unaffordable utility costs and lose their vehicles because of sky-high insurance premiums. This government robbed seniors of universal optical and dental care and reneged on a promise to not increase health care premiums. Perhaps worse, with almost no advance notice the government increased fees for long-term care facilities. The majority of the residents in such facilities are seniors, and even seniors who do not currently require such care are very conscious of the fact that they might have such a need in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge the Premier and the health minister to scrap health care premiums for seniors in next week's budget. This would be an important first step in scrapping premiums for all Albertans. Indeed, the government needs to go further and restore universal optical and dental benefits for seniors.

Ensuring dignity, respect, and good quality of life for Alberta seniors should be a priority for this government, but it's not. Instead, seniors are left feeling betrayed. They feel as if their hard work and lifetime of paying taxes and of building this province has been left by the wayside.

The unconscionable stress these financial burdens put on seniors and their families is tantamount to elder abuse, so it is no surprise that groups such as the Coalition of Seniors Advocates and Seniors United Now have begun challenging the government. I'm truly proud of their work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 22
Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004

[Adjourned debate March 16: Dr. Pannu]

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 22, Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. It is time that we started some form of reform in this Assembly about how elections are run and organized, and I'm happy to see this bill coming forward at this time. Certainly, there are some parts of the bill that I like quite a bit and some that I'm not quite so fond of, although, generally speaking, I think that it does make some progress in some areas that we will support, and subsequently we'll likely support the entire bill.

Some of the parts that I like about the act are in section 3, where the Chief Electoral Officer is required to take an oath of office and to be impartial and not disclose any information. I'm surprised that this wasn't something already in the act. It seems to me just good common sense that that person does that, as all of us have and all of our staff have in our offices, because of course in dealing with elections, there are always some confidential pieces of information that come before them that need to be treated as such. So I think that that's a good part to have in there.

Section 17 talks about clarifying the right of access for enumerators. It deals particularly with apartments and condos and other multiple-residence buildings. It just means that the enumerators will have access to these buildings to enumerate. We all know that access to these buildings during a writ period, pre writ, or for the enumerators – we have a very difficult time getting into some of the buildings. Even when you take a photocopy of the piece of legislation that entitles you by law to enter, we particularly find ourselves blocked time and time again from that kind of access. The same goes for the enumerators.

I find that it isn't as hard to get into the high-rises as it is to get into the walk-up apartments. Often the residential managers have jobs, so they are not always available, and then they are not at all interested in whatever piece of paper you put under their nose. They'll arbitrarily decide whether you can have access or not. So whatever we can do to share that information and to ensure that anyone who needs access to those buildings can in fact get it is a good thing because it is a big problem now.

At least in buildings where you can get in the front door, you can often leave some piece of information in the lobby, if you can't gain access to the apartment manager, via their mailbox or the collecting point they have for unaddressed mail. But in many areas of the city, including my own riding, there are a number of walk-up apartments that have the buzzer system on the outside of the doors and the mailboxes on the inside of the first set of security doors. You just literally have to repeatedly come back and try and find a time when those people are in residence and answer their buzzers. So it's an ongoing problem and certainly a problem for enumerators as much as it is for politicians and their teams.

Section 43 allows each of the candidates to have scrutineers at the registration officer's station while the electors are being sworn in. From our perspective this will allow candidates to raise objections to people who are being enrolled. Now, traditionally that hasn't been a really big problem for me in elections, although we certainly did at one time find someone who had voted more than once, but it is an issue. We need to tighten up the rules in that regard, and I'm glad that this particular piece has been put in here.

Section 63 deals with access for individual candidates who are campaigning in multidwelling units. This is the same argument that I had in section 17. We see this always as an issue. It's going to be an issue again even with this piece of legislation in there, but hopefully we can try and see if this doesn't speed up the process. So I'm glad to see this in here.

Section 94 talks about the candidate not being able to be appointed as a chief financial officer during a campaign period. I have no idea why any candidate would want to also be their own chief financial officer. It seems a completely insane parameter to work within. But I definitely believe that they should not be, and I'm certainly supportive of this piece of the legislation that's come in.

One of the parts of the act that I don't like quite as much, Mr. Speaker, would be section 34, that talks about increasing the amount that a candidate has to pay in order to become a registered candidate. It goes from $200 to $500. Well, to most of us that is not a large sum of money. There are certainly some people and some parties who would find that to be onerous, particularly when they have no expectation of getting their money back at the end of the election.

In our first past the post system, which I find not to be a very democratic system, we have to encourage as many people and as many parties as we can to be involved in the electoral process. So even those with little access to funds should be entitled to put their name on the ballot and to be heard and to have their views heard and to have their supporters have someone on the ballot to vote for.

This is part of this section that I don't like, and it doesn't wash for me when you make the argument that we have to look at some form of cost recovery. We all know that $500 is a drop in the bucket when it comes to the amount of dollars involved in organizing elections and that the costs of adding one name to ballots and to information pieces is really neither here nor there when it comes to registrations.

I have heard the argument that people want the dollars increased so that you just have serious candidates at the table, but I say: what's wrong with having candidates who aren't so serious? They are the ones that often bring up the most interesting issues during a campaign and stimulate good debate, and that's really what we're looking for in campaigns, I believe. So I certainly encourage people from parties like the Rhinoceros Party and some individuals . . .

Mr. Bonner: The Green Party.

Ms Carlson: Well, I like a lot of the Green Party policies, so I don't see them as a fringe party. I support what they're doing even though I know their funds are limited. They have something to say, Mr. Speaker, and they have as much right as any of the rest of us to say it. So I don't like that part.

Section 56 talks about allowing a returning officer to appoint "additional electors to assist in counting the votes from the advance poll." Now, I think I understand why they're doing this. In recent years we've seen larger numbers of people vote at the advance poll, so it takes some time to count them, and often that's the last poll that's reported on election night. But I don't like the idea at all of them being able to appoint people. I think that is a decision that needs to be made prior to the writ being dropped because once again it's an area where there could at least be perceived abuses in the process, so I don't like it.

I wish that this piece was not in here worded like this. If they need additional staff, then that has to be dealt with in another way, not just give them the arbitrary ability to appoint additional electors to assist them. So I'm hoping that we see some amendment to that at some point in time in this Assembly.

Section 89 talks about the transfer of election money held in trust for a party or candidate, and it talks there about if there is no registered party, no registered constituency association, or registered candidate, the Crown can annex the funds. Well, I haven't heard a satisfactory reason for that happening, and I certainly hope that I do, Mr. Speaker, because as it stands, it doesn't sound to me like a very good idea. I particularly wonder how this affects independent candidates who may be running. So I'm hoping that at some point we get an explanation for that.

Section 90 talks about increasing the donation limits to a registered constituency association by $250, in aggregate totals to registered constituency associations by $1,250, $500 for individual candidates, and $2,500 for aggregate amounts to registered candidates. Our policy on democratic renewal objects to the increasing of donation powers for corporations and unions.

On a personal note I have to say that that actually increases my ability to raise money because, being in opposition, many companies and many individuals don't want to hit the list, Mr. Speaker. So they'll ask me specifically what the limit is where they're listed, and they'll give me $1 or $5 less than that. I think it's the wrong way to run elections, but it's the way that it happens out there. While I don't like that particular section, it actually helps people who are not in government to raise funds. So by doing that, it makes the process more democratic.

Section 91 I think is unusual because it considers the price paid at a fundraising event in excess of the market value to be considered a contribution. This is falling in line with some of the changes we've seen at the federal level for how much you can contribute. I don't mind seeing this at all. However, it does make it a little harder for corporations to make contributions in a year, particularly an election year. I don't think that's a bad thing. I think that that's probably a good thing, and I guess we're going to see how this plays out. I wouldn't mind hearing the minister talk about that and respond as to why this has been put in there.

I think the last question I really have is the part in section 8 that talks about establishing the new permanent identifier numbers. On the one hand, that has a bit of a Big Brother concept to me. You know, we've got a social insurance card number, we've got a driver's licence card number, and now we're going to have a voter number. So I'm wondering if that's a very good idea.

It looks to me like this is a set-up for the government to move to some sort of electronic form of voting. I wish that before they would go there, we would have a more open debate on how we should handle elections in the future with the people of this province.

There is no doubt that people are busier and busier. We find this on election days. It's harder to access people by telephone or at the doors. It's harder to get them out to vote, because while in theory people are supposed to have time off from work to vote, it doesn't happen in practice.

We see people trying to squeeze in their voting between taking the kids to school, getting to work, buying the groceries, organizing the soccer and hockey and other recreational activities of their kids, and running in to mark their ballot one minute before 8 o'clock. Some of them are not getting there at all, or some of them, walking in and seeing the long lineups, say, "I really don't have time for this," and they just leave, and they don't vote.

As we see over time, the voting percentage is dropping across the country, particularly in the younger crowd. [interjection] Well, no. In fact, we're seeing the numbers in many cases increase for Liberals, in opposition to what the Minister of Economic Development has just said. So that's not my biggest concern. I have a greater concern with how we ensure that everyone who wishes to enjoy their franchise can do so. I think that's part of a larger debate that we should be having before we start to see legislation being changed.

It may be that electronic voting or some other form of participation in the democratic process is the way to go in the future, but I don't think that it's up to any government to arbitrarily decide that. In the absence of having had that discussion, I am quite opposed to being assigned a particular voting number.

I want to know what that information is being used for. Now it's secret. When you're assigned a number, then people know whether or not you've voted, and I want to know how that information will be handled, how you can protect the confidentiality of it, and what the expectations are for the future. It's far too early, I think, for us to have been considering that kind of participation for voters.

So I think with that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and see what kind of responses we get from the government. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) provides for a five-minute question and comment period should any hon. member choose to exercise this option. The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Renner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: On the Standing Order 29?

Mr. Renner: Yes. I'd like to ask the member to comment on a situation that I think we've all experienced. She made comment about the importance of candidates having access to apartment buildings and trailer parks and such, and I couldn't agree more. The concern that I think I have and others have is not so much: do candidates have access, but are the residents aware that candidates have access? It doesn't do you much good to have access and you're unwelcome at the door because no one realized that you're supposed to have access. How would the member suggest that that might be rectified?

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, yeah, that's a very good question. I've often thought about what would help that process in terms of educating voters on what the rights are. I think that it would be something important for the government to take a look at in terms of a pre-election advertising campaign at all levels – federal, provincial, and municipal – so that people are aware of what their roles, their responsibilities are and what the undertakings are for all of us to be a part of the democratic process.

I'm certainly thinking that that's an interesting question for debate in this House and that between all of us we could come up with some very great solutions.

3:10

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I assume that when the hon. member said that it would be a good idea for the government to undertake an advertising campaign, she actually meant the Chief Electoral Officer given that we're talking about an election campaign.

But my question to the hon. member is: if she were to be assured that there have been no discussions that I'm aware of as the promoter of the bill with respect to going to electronic voting and that the concept of the unique identifier number was put forward by the Chief Electoral Officer solely as a method of ensuring the accuracy of the lists so that you could differentiate between Mike Smith Sr., for example, and Mike Smith Jr. – I'm making those names up – at a given residence and know which one was moving where and could track those people so that you were always able to be sure you had the right people and that that unique identifier number was for the sole use of the Chief Electoral Officer in doing so and I believe even in the act not to be made public but to be a private identifier number and also to use interchangeably, for example, with other sources of data relative to the name . . . [interjections] It's a question and comment period I believe, and they can take it as a comment if they want.

If she were assured that that was the indicator, would she have some more comfort with the concept of a unique identifier number?

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, I just love it when I get to answer a question. The answer would be, yes, that does help. I was looking for some qualifiers, but I would also like to point out that it's a very slippery slope, and it's something that we have to keep an eye on because today it's to track those people in that fashion, and tomorrow we have to wonder what it could be.

I really appreciate the answer, and that helps with my concerns.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. We're still in the question and comment section, hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Oh. I'm sorry.

The Speaker: No additional members wishing to participate? Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few observations about Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004. There has been some concern expressed about section 63, the right of access for campaigning. I, like all other candidates in the House, have experienced that difficulty of getting into some units even if you do have the appropriate documentation. But I think this maybe needs a harder look.

We have a senior citizens home in our constituency. One of the candidates last election appeared at the residence with the documentation and a couple of workers with him and proceeded to thunder through the residence, knocking on doors and in general disturbing and frightening those residents. Many of them are in those homes because they are dependent on others, and it was a major disturbance in the residence.

I know it's difficult to deal with, but I wonder if there isn't a need for some provision for residences like that where there could be a central meeting place set up and people informed. It just seems that allowing free access to that building was really not in the best interests of the voters.

So as sympathetic as I am to section 63 and the need for candidates to get into multiple-family dwellings, I really think there has to be some caveat and some sensitivity to residences where there are seniors who have gone into those residences because they want privacy. They don't want to be disturbed and find themselves upset by some overenthusiastic candidate and campaign workers. As much as I support and think that section 63 is important, I think it needs to be applied with some good common sense and some sensitivity on the part of the candidates.

Section 90, the section that deals with finance, Mr. Speaker, I think is important. The increases that are being proposed are modest increases. One of the things that I think we've been extremely fortunate with is that you can run for political office, you can run for this Legislature and be successful without requiring huge, huge fundraising efforts. You can run a campaign for $18,000, $20,000 and be successful.

I think that it's important that that be able to happen, that we don't go down the road that our counterparts to the south have gone where fundraising becomes sort of the major activity of the candidate before and during the election. The cost of running for public office in some cases has become so high that people are discouraged from seeking office.

As I said, I think that we've been fortunate here in keeping the lid on costs and making sure that those who want to run for the Legislature or for municipal office can do so without having to spend an inordinate amount of time trying to raise money or trying to raise sums that just seem inappropriate for someone seeking public office.

I'm pleased that they're there, and I thank the minister for pointing out to me that the limits for candidates and for constituency associations have been raised, but the amount that may be donated to a party, $15,000, remains the same. That hasn't been changed in this particular section of the bill.

The other section that I wanted to mention, Mr. Speaker, was section 34, where they struck out $200 and replaced that with $500, the amount that registered candidates have to put up before they can run. I can't help but think that this is a backward movement. I think that we have to make it as easy as possible for people to run for public office. Many candidates run knowing that they don't have much chance for success. I'm not sure that we should be putting this kind of a barrier in front of those individuals, who I think, as the previous speaker indicated, sometimes bring a different perspective to campaigns, in my view a welcome perspective. It seemed to me that $200 was an appropriate sum for candidates to put up.

There are a number of other issues in the act. I think most of us agree, Mr. Speaker, that it improves the electoral process in the province, and for that I think the government deserves credit. There are some sections, and I think I've indicated a couple of them, that I have some questions about, but we're pleased to support the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:20

The Speaker: Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available.

Then we'll proceed to the next speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to speak to Bill 22, the Election Statutes Amendment Act, 2004, this afternoon. Certainly, for the most part I think this is a good bill. It makes required housekeeping changes to the act and certainly will make the whole process of elections run smoother and clarify some areas.

Now, one of the areas that this particular bill deals with is access to multi-unit dwellings. As other speakers today have already said, this is a difficult situation. In Edmonton-Glengarry we have a number of walk-up apartments where you don't have access. You have to ring for access, and on many occasions when you go by, it's very difficult to get in there, first of all, when nobody is home and the caretaker isn't in, and secondly, if they are in and they deny you access. Then certainly you don't get the opportunity to show them any identification that you are a candidate and, as well, speak with them on how we are allowed access to those buildings. So this is one area that I think is addressed in this particular bill, and it is a good change and, hopefully, will make access to those multi-unit dwellings much easier.

It also addresses some very important issues such as better scrutiny of elections. After my experiences in the last election I certainly welcome these changes. During the last election when we were phoning some constituents, they were indicating that they thought they'd already voted, yet they didn't really think they had. We asked them why, and it was because somebody had come by with a special ballot that they had signed, but they couldn't remember whether or not they had written in the name of a person or a party or what had happened from that point of view.

We certainly brought this to the attention of the returning officer. It was quite interesting when our scrutineer was there and that particular ballot box was opened. The deputy returning officer that was in charge of that box certainly indicated right off the bat that there were somewhere in the neighbourhood of 12 ballots that were all filled in with the same handwriting. As well, he continued to empty that box and again found another pack of ballots all filled in with the same handwriting.

Even after the election was complete – and because it was a very close race, we did have an official count – there were some concerns brought to the Chief Electoral Officer by sons of a constituent whose father had experienced the same type of thing and had really not ever indicated which candidate he was voting for, yet his ballot had been taken. When we are looking at special ballots, I think that this bill will help address some of the concerns that I had in this particular case.

As well, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar today tabled a letter that he was forwarding to the Information and Privacy Commissioner, and again this was dealing particularly with section 8(c) and (d), which allows the Chief Electoral Officer to assign unique and permanent identification numbers to electors. Again, I do have some concerns, along with other members in our caucus, regarding this particular practice. It would appear to me that this certainly is a precursor to electronic voting and that we are preparing the way.

I have some concerns when it comes to electronic voting, as we all do. I think just the recent increases in the number of thefts from people that have bank cards and are having their PIN number swiped and then the thief using those PIN numbers to withdraw money from their account. Again, if we are looking at this whole idea of electronic voting down the line, I think that we have to have some very, very stringent controls on how these numbers are issued so that they don't fall into the wrong hands and people are having votes registered when they're in Hawaii and have no idea that they are voting.

As well, I think what we also have to do, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to electronic voting is think of that segment of our population that today will not use an automatic teller or banking machine, for example, just because it's too confusing for them. These are the same people that if they go, for example, for a test on their competency as a driver – some insurance companies are requesting this now, and there is a company that does that type of service here in Edmonton – these seniors get very confused when they have to have their reflexes tested on a machine, and they find the whole process very confusing.

So I would hope that in this whole process, if we do go to electronic voting, there will also be some opportunity where seniors who certainly have no desire to work with computers or to use them would have a very accessible, easy type of situation where they can vote as they always have.

As well, many Albertans have deep concerns when it comes to their protection of confidentiality in regard to electronic information and how we've had too many examples of where this information has fallen into the hands of the public, whether it be by hard drives that were not properly erased or break-ins at companies or establishments that have this type of information on-line, and with a theft certainly all this confidential personal information can fall into the wrong hands.

So those are some of my concerns with Bill 22, Mr. Speaker. Overall, as I say, I think it's a very good bill, and it will certainly improve the voting process that we do have in the province. Thank you.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available, should hon. members choose to participate.

Then back to the debate.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 17
Agricultural Operation Practices
Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to stand today and move third reading of Bill 17, the Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act, 2004.

Last spring the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, responsible for the act, requested that a government steering committee conduct a review of AOPA. It was my pleasure to chair the steering committee that conducted the review of AOPA with key stakeholders between May and November of 2003. These amendments will provide further clarity for technical and policy changes to the way the Natural Resources Conservation Board regulates confined feeding operations in Alberta. This includes further clarification of regulating manure management standards for all operations and compliance monitoring and enforcement of province-wide standards.

3:30

The changes proposed in this bill make it easier for operators to make changes to their operations as long as the changes are environmentally responsible. At the same time, the roles and responsibilities of the Natural Resources Conservation Board and the municipalities with regard to confined feeding operations are more clearly defined.

I encourage all members of the Assembly to support Bill 17 in third reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ms Carlson: Thank you. I'm happy to have one last opportunity to speak to this bill. We did a fairly intensive review of it yesterday in Committee of the Whole, and I have to say that I was quite disappointed that none of our amendments were accepted by the government. We didn't make those amendments up, Mr. Speaker. They came from stakeholders across the province who were very interested in seeing this particular piece of legislation strengthened and very much looked to having greater protection for people who live in surrounding areas. That was the intent of the amendments that we had brought in and that were subsequently defeated.

There are many people who, while they support intensive livestock operations, or confined feeding operations, in this province, are very concerned about the health impact and the environmental impact in the regions and to those directly affected. The greatest debate we had here over the amendments was who, in fact, was directly affected. The government and the sponsor of the bill say that only those parties within half a mile of the operation can be so considered.

We're putting forward a case that people up to two miles away should be considered to be directly affected. I stand by that position, Mr. Speaker, as a result of having visited many of the operations and as a result of having talked to many people who live in those communities. So we are hoping that at some point in the future that particular position will be revisited.

So we're torn in terms of whether or not we should support this particular bill. There are many members of my caucus who don't like it and who will be voting against it. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Mr. Marz: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make a few concluding remarks as well on the bill. For some of the people I heard from, I think some of their complaints were as much regarding what wasn't in the bill as what was in the bill. Some of the things that they told me related to the grandfathering of existing operations and that there's no mechanism to bring those bad operations into compliance in the future or even phase them in, that there should be, or look at this in the future, some type of mechanism of bringing all operations up to a reasonable standard, especially those that are causing environmental concerns and unnecessary nuisances.

One of the things I'd like to also say is about what's not in there, comparable administrative penalties similar to what's found in the Public Lands Act and the Forest Reserves Act that could be applied by field people to bring enforcement up to par and give properly trained personnel in the field the authority to eliminate some problems by having the power to enforce. Giving the NRCB more power or more discretion if it's in the field of enforcement I would support, but at the present time they haven't totally earned the trust of Albertans across the province in the way they have enforced the act to date. Whether it's due to improper training or not having the will to do it, I'm not sure. But this is something that I would encourage the member and the minister to look at in the future and do whatever we can in regulations to achieve that.

So with that, I'll take my seat.

The Speaker: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2)(a) is available for five minutes. Comments or questions to the last speaker?

The hon. Member for Leduc to close the debate.

Mr. Klapstein: No. I'd just ask that the question be put.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

Bill 18

Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: We need someone to move this bill. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move Bill 18, the Maintenance Enforcement Amendment Act, 2004, on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice at third reading.

The Speaker: The hon. Interim Leader of the Official Opposition.

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 18. It's a good bill. I think that many of us, most of us, I'd even dare say that all of us deal in our constituency office day after day with people who are having difficulty with securing the maintenance payments that they rightly deserve, and usually the people who suffer from that are children.

So a number of proposed changes, and I think that at third reading it's useful to look back at just some of the broad strokes, the kinds of things that the bill does. It specifies what's going to happen with lottery winnings over a thousand dollars. They're to go to support the family of a debtor who has maintenance arrears. That, I suspect, is not going to happen very often, Mr. Speaker, but again the message is clear that maintenance payments are to be seriously addressed and not to be taken lightly.

There's a section now that will restrict the fishing and hunting licences. There's already a provision for restricting drivers' licences, but this will broaden the sanctions that can be brought to bear to encourage debtors to live up to their obligations.

There's some provision for protecting individuals from liability, and the bill now protects the maintenance enforcement program from being found liable for decisions made in good faith or for delays in processing documents. That seems to be a logical move, Mr. Speaker, that there should be protection for the maintenance enforcement program from that kind of action, and the new bill provides that they won't be liable for action to be taken against them.

There are provisions with respect to reciprocal agreements. This is often a difficulty as people, individuals move from jurisdiction to jurisdiction. This, again, will not allow people to escape from their obligations simply by moving.

There are provisions with respect to releasing information and who the information can be shared with. This bill will allow the maintenance enforcement program to co-operate with police to promote public and client safety, and that's an important concern, Mr. Speaker, for many of the people that are involved in these programs. The situations that arose for them to be in the position of receiving payments are often ones where there's been great animosity and conflict, and I think this is a good provision with respect to police and allowing more information to be shared in the interests of those who are seeking payments.

The provisions with respect to garnishees have been broadened and made more efficient by having a central information place for Treasury Branches and credit unions so that it's clear where those payments are to be made or, if there's a garnishee, where it may be served.

There are provisions, Mr. Speaker, that affect deterrent fees. The maintenance program can but doesn't at the present time charge service fees and charge chronic debtors for costs of enforcement. It's a change in that provision that I think is a good change. The MLA review committee recommended that debtors bear the costs that arise from their default, and those fees will encourage debtors to keep payments. Of course, that's the thrust of many of the provisions of the act, that everything is being done, that every kind of pressure and force is being exerted to make sure that individuals who have obligations under this legislation live up to those obligations.

There are other provisions with respect to making inquiries, voluntary support deductions, the jurisdictions of the courts, and promoting financial disclosure, again, Mr. Speaker, all of those provisions designed to make sure that the maintenance enforcement program works and that the families that depend upon that support and really suffer if they don't get it are more likely to be paid.

So we're pleased to support the bill, Mr. Speaker, at third reading. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Bill 23

Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2004

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to third reading of Bill 23, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2004, and also to move it at third reading stage of this particular process.

As has previously been mentioned in the House, the proposed amendments in this bill will align legislation with the government's recent decision to eliminate Alberta's aviation fuel tax on eligible international passenger and cargo flights. Bill 23 also includes a number of significant administrative changes. I think we're all well aware of the impact of these decisions and the need for a bill like this to round out all of those previous decisions in a very formal way, so to speak.

Mr. Speaker, amendments in this bill were a collaborative effort, in fact, between the ministries of Revenue, Finance, Economic Development, and Transportation. I wish to thank all of those ministers and their staff and all members in their departments for their contributions. Given that there were no further points raised during the discussion when this came up during Committee of the Whole, I'm hoping that this particular stage of debate will see equal support for this bill.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to add a few comments on Bill 23, the Fuel Tax Amendment Act, 2004. It certainly was a welcome announcement for many different reasons when the government decided to eliminate the 1.5 cents per litre aviation fuel tax on international passenger and cargo flights, including flights to the United States.

This abolishment came into effect on March 1 of this year, and certainly the initiative is going to help attract more flights to Alberta from outside the country. This has many spinoffs not only for people travelling here for tourism, but I think it's also something that will be welcome considering the increase of the Canadian dollar in comparison to the U.S. dollar. That was also giving us other spinoffs as well, such as the Oilers have just announced or are thinking of announcing that they will drop ticket prices next year, and that would be a first in pro sports.

Eliminating this tax, Mr. Speaker, allows Alberta's two international airports to compete on a more level playing field with other jurisdictions. While Alberta's aviation fuel tax is competitive within Canada, it does not compare favourably to tax levels in the U.S., Europe, or Asia Pacific markets. So the elimination of the aviation fuel tax will result in an annual loss of $3 million in provincial revenue. At the time of the announcement the Revenue minister said that the province is also considering reducing the domestic fuel tax on aviation fuel, worth another $9 million annually. Certainly, I hope that these will increase air traffic in Canada.

With Bill 23, Mr. Speaker, there certainly isn't anything contentious, and I can only see that there will be many benefits as a result of this bill, such things as I mentioned earlier: creating beneficial economic activity and, certainly, the jobs that are created around it.

This legislation also, Mr. Speaker, will bring us into line with other jurisdictions that do not charge aviation fuel taxes on international flights. In most U.S. states air carriers providing international services are either exempt or eligible for a full refund on fuel taxes. B.C. offers cargo shippers a refund on fuel taxes for international flights, and the U.S., Quebec, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland have exempted taxes on all international flights.

This is a change that is welcome. It is a change that has been lobbied hard for by the Calgary Airport Authority. I certainly welcome the legislation, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to support it. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a third time]

3:50

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very productive week, and we've gotten through the agenda as much as we had hoped to get through, and I understand that there may be another snowstorm coming. That's what the forecast is. That being the case, I know that all hon. members will be anxious to get out to their own constituencies to do the important work that we do on behalf of all Albertans, and therefore I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday next.

[Motion carried; at 3:51 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period
Calgary Health Region

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, Calgarians can't trust the Calgary health region. The region has become a political patronage playground while two more people die needlessly. This government responds as it did in the case of Vince Motta, as it did in the case of Maren Burkhart: don't worry; the Calgary health region will handle it. Well, I am worried, and Calgarians are worried. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How can Calgarians trust the Calgary health region to get to the bottom of these deaths when the Motta inquiry just one year ago said, quote, the CHR appears to view the inquiry process as a public relations exercise, end quote?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, let me say first of all that there were tragic deaths that occurred as a result of a medical error. I want to express my deep condolences and sympathies to the families involved. Not because I know who these individuals or who their families are; it's because I use the system in exactly the same way as these families use the system. I want to say that this could be my father, this could be my child, this could be my wife, this could be somebody that all of us know personally, and I am deeply committed to a health care system that helps people and doesn't harm them or in this case kill them.

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we are fully committed as a government to independent reviews that are currently being conducted by the medical examiner, who is not an employee of the Calgary health region. We are fully committed to work that's being done by outside groups like the pharmacists. The College of Pharmacists is interested in reviewing what happened here. There are many who are interested in getting to the bottom of this.

Yes, there are individuals that must be accountable for what happened in this circumstance, but just as important we have to go beyond that. Merely finding accountability for the individuals involved is not sufficient. We must go further. We must understand how we can change the system so that we can take human error out of the system.

Will our health care system ever be perfect? It cannot because our system is always subject to the frailties of human judgment and human activity. We need to look at this from a patient safety perspective and ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker: what can the system do from its point of view so that as much as possible we can take the frailties of human error out of the picture?

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, how can Calgarians trust the Calgary health region when just one day after the region claimed that similarly labelled chemicals were to blame for the medical mixup, the company producing the chemicals said that the labelling is very different?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, we again are still allowing the process to be completed, the process wherein the region itself looks with a critical eye as to how this happened. They want to get to the bottom of this, and their motivation is exactly the same as, I would suggest, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview's or mine or yours or any Albertan's. The motivation is this: we want a health care system that protects people, that helps them, that saves their lives, not one that harms them. So it's for that reason that I ask the hon. member to put himself in the shoes of somebody with the regional health authority. Is he suggesting that in fact people want to harm people in our health care system? The answer is of course no.

Mr. Speaker, we are allowing this process to take place. If the medical examiner recommends to the Attorney General's fatality inquiry board that one should be constituted, we'll fully participate in that.

I can say that in speaking with Greg Eberhart, the registrar of the College of Pharmacists, he too is interested in this, and it's the reason why we will be having a review, also an independent review by the Health Quality Council of Alberta, in collaboration with the national patient safety institute, getting to the issue of how we can deal with products that have potassium in them. I expect that the best practices from across the country will be reviewed so that we can help prevent this from happening again in the future.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, how can Calgarians trust the Calgary health region when this recent dialysis solution mix-up occurred four years after the Calgary health region assured Patricia Evans' family that steps would be taken to prevent it from ever occurring again?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I don't wish to bring the individual cases before the floor of this Legislature and make a political statement out of it. I can tell you that, again, the people who work in the health region in Calgary, as they are throughout this province, are committed to a health care system that helps people, not one that harms them. I think that Albertans and Calgarians who look at the circumstances here will understand that that is their motivation, and they seek not to correct something that may have happened in the past but to make sure that that correction is there for the benefit of people in the future.

Dr. Taft: Mr. Speaker, Calgarians cannot trust the Calgary health region. Despite warnings from employees that the new central production pharmacy could lead to errors in the system, the Calgary health region publicly touted the new cost-saving facility as a safer way of dispensing medications. We need to shed light on this issue. The public needs to know. Again to the same minister: how were employee concerns with the central production pharmacy and the tech-check-tech policy addressed by the Calgary health region?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, of course, we always look for efficiencies in the operations of our system but not at the cost of quality. I can assure you that Mr. Eberhart from the College of Pharmacists is interested in finding out the bottom of this: how did this happen, and how can we make changes to the system to prevent it from happening again? The regional health authority, as I indicated, is also equally motivated in this.

But I point out, Mr. Speaker, that at the outset, in answering the hon. member's first question, I talked about the fact that our system is subject to the frailties of human error and human activity and that as long as we have people making judgments and people doing things in the health care system, our system is necessarily subject to errors a person may make and that there's an enormous difference between a human error and a professional error. Such a human error could have been made by any one of a number of people. It could have been made by a pharmacy tech; it could have been made by a pharmacist; it could have been made by a doctor.

So let us allow the system to go through the review so that we can find accountability for the individuals involved, but let's also look at the bigger picture of how we actually make our system safer in the future.

Dr. Taft: Will the minister immediately make public all written records of warnings and concerns raised by employees of the Calgary health region about the central production facility, including memos, e-mails, and minutes of meetings?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that question under advisement. I don't know, personally, of any particular documents that the hon. member refers to, so I'll have to take that under advisement accordingly.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What reassurances will this minister offer employees of the Calgary health region who want to speak up on this issue but are frightened to do so?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, again, everybody is motivated by the right thing. I would say this. If the hon. member is suggesting that this should be an exercise simply in naming and blaming and shaming individuals, then it will have the exact opposite effect of what he's trying to accomplish, which is to bring this out into the full fullness of light.

Mr. Speaker, what I've suggested to you is that we are interested in getting to the bottom of this. There will be a complete, full, and frank disclosure of what's happened. It think that it's important we do that from a patient safety initiative. If the hon. member wishes to go on this name and blame and shame route, all it will do is the next time somebody dies, there might not be such full and frank disclosure that in fact an error was made. He will have the exact opposite effect of what he's trying to accomplish, which is to make our system safer.

The Speaker: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

SuperNet

Ms Blakeman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The SuperNet boondoggle has already cost taxpayers $193 million, and despite promises that any cost overruns would be paid for by Bell West, just last Friday the government had to provide $1.2 million to municipalities who could not afford the hook-up fee. The tab for hooking up the SuperNet to the remaining 4,400 schools, libraries, and public buildings is $17.6 million. My questions are to the Minister of Innovation and Science. Where is the $17.6 million coming from? The province? Or will it be downloaded onto the municipalities?

1:50

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, there are some things I can accept. One is where people might have a difference of opinion with respect to a value of a particular project. In the case of the SuperNet, a project that connects libraries, schools, hospitals, and government buildings, that is provided for in the $193 million. That means that all 4,700 locations are hooked up to the door.

What I cannot accept is a press release that, frankly, is incorrect, because municipalities were never included in the hookup and are not included in the contract. Mr. Speaker, I'm going to ask the Minister of Municipal Affairs to supplement, but I would ask the Alberta Liberal opposition to withdraw their press release and the facts that I think are recorded on their web site.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday a member of the opposition berated the government for doing nothing to help municipalities. On their web site on Friday they're criticizing the government for doing something.

What I find interesting – and I take the quote from Thursday's Hansard – is the “prohibitive costs [creating] barriers for rural residents” when it comes to access to technology. The member then went on to say – and I quote from Hansard – “how are cash-strapped [municipalities] ever going to afford to join up?”

I said: please stay tuned. We announced on Friday that every municipality in this province is hooked up now, and they're saying no. So I am encouraging every Albertan to go to www.liberal.com so they can see the untruths that are on their web site.

Ms Blakeman: Can't even get the web site right.

To the same minister: given that to service each SuperNet hookup costs the user from $3,000 to $10,000 a year, will the taxpayers also be on the hook for those costs, which could be as much as half a billion dollars over the next 10 years?

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, again this is an example of trying to confuse the issue. There is the build cost of the SuperNet. That's in a contract of $193 million. In this case the municipalities are responsible for the connection charges, and the fact that they have approached us to help them get connected tells me that they're very interested in being hooked up and having access to that service.

As far as the schools are concerned, there is a provision already in their budget and has been for a number of years to have them pay for the connection charges to a certain level so they can continue to deliver the programs that people in larger centres are used to, so students in Rainbow Lake can have access to the same kind of quality of education that we're used to in the major centres.

Mr. Boutilier: Mr. Speaker, in the Hansard last Thursday members from the opposition said: how are you helping “struggling communities, like the village of Heisler”? The hon. member did say that they're not receiving help. They're part of the program that was announced on Friday. We're helping them. The president of the AAMD and C is quoted as saying: the government listened, and they're acting. They thank us for that. The president of the AUMA, Mr. Patterson, said: this is terrific for helping Alberta municipalities.

In fact, what they're saying on their web site is shameful.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Innovation and Science: given that the Minister of Economic Development believes that wireless technology is the future, how much more will this government spend before the SuperNet is rendered useless by wireless technology?

The Speaker: Well, now we're getting into a real debate about the future. All I know is that we're in the present. Be very, very brief. I don't know where the crystal ball is here.

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to answer that one because there have always been wireless solutions as part of the original intent of the Alberta SuperNet. Wireless makes a whole lot of sense for short-haul distance so you can get connected to that base network, which will carry the huge amounts of traffic and data that are required.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

Calgary Health Region (continued)

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since day one the Calgary health region has been a laboratory for Tory privatization schemes. It's been turned into a retirement resort for recycled Tories like Jim Dinning, Rod Love, and current CEO Jack Davis. Whether it's the decision to blow up hospitals and start building new ones, the Vince Motta fatality inquiry, or the recent tragic deaths in the Foothills intensive care unit, the fingerprints of this Tory government are all over the long-standing problems at the Calgary health region. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. How many more tragedies have to take place before cabinet orders a full public inquiry into deep-seated systemic problems of the Calgary health region?

Mr. Hancock: Mr. Speaker, there have been in the health system across this country, across North America situations where deaths have occurred accidentally, where serious incidents have occurred and need to be investigated and need to be learned from. We have a process in this province as all provinces do and, I think, most jurisdictions do.

Under the Ministry of Justice in this province there's a medical examiner's office. The medical examiner has the job of an independent review of any unexplained death outside of hospital, any unexplained death in hospital, any death in custody. The medical examiner does a thorough review of the circumstances of the death to find out the cause of death and the circumstances around it to determine whether there's anything which can be learned from it. If in the course of that investigation the medical examiner discovers information which ought to be brought to the attention of other investigating authorities, such as the police, for example, it's his obligation to do that.

Once he's completed an investigation, he may report inappropriate circumstances to the Fatality Review Board. The Fatality Review Board is a board of citizens of this province consisting of a lawyer, a doctor, and a citizen who's not a lawyer or a doctor. Those three people look at the public interest side to determine whether further information is needed or whether it's in the public interest to have a public fatality inquiry, and if they believe that it is, they recommend to the Minister of Justice that a public fatality inquiry be called. I know of no circumstance where they've recommended a public fatality inquiry where one hasn't been called, but that decision obviously does remain one for the Minister of Justice to bring forward.

So we do have a process, a public Fatality Review Board, and a process for inquiry to learn from unexplained deaths, whether in or out of hospital or anywhere else in this province.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given the most recent deaths in the ICU at Foothills hospital, how can the government continue to ignore Judge Manfred Delong's call for a public inquiry into the culture of denial at the Calgary regional health authority?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would answer the question this way because I think the hon. member goes far beyond what we have at the current time. What we have at the current time is the medical examiner . . . [interjection] The hon. member says, "Culture of denial." There's no denial involved in this. The medical examiner is doing his job as he's tasked to do, to do an independent review, to do a thorough examination of all of the circumstances surrounding those deaths, and when he has completed his investigation, he will make recommendations. There's no denial in that. It's a question of having the facts before you jump to conclusions.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the Pharmacists Association of Alberta has been warning for months that a shortage of hospital pharmacists was endangering patient safety, why is the government refusing to support their call for a public inquiry into whether a shortage of qualified pharmacists may have contributed to the two tragic deaths in the ICU at Foothills hospital?

Mr. Mar: Mr. Speaker, I humbly apologize, but I couldn't quite get the question that was being asked by the hon. member. I'm not trying to avoid it, but perhaps he could repeat it.

The Speaker: It doesn't work that way. There's supposed to be total decorum in the House.

The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Rural Economy

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the past year Alberta has been hit by BSE, forest fires, extensive continued threats of drought, global security concerns, and a number of other issues. My constituents are concerned about the possible erosion of the Alberta advantage. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Can you please tell us how Alberta's economy, particularly the rural economy, is expected to fare this year?

2:00

The Speaker: Hon. minister, we're going into the future here. If the hon. minister has a crystal ball that the rest of us don't have, he should share it. Go ahead.

Mr. Norris: Well, I don't think it takes a crystal ball, Mr. Speaker, to see what's going on in Alberta; I mean, drive down any highway or go visit any town or city in Alberta.

I would like to answer the hon. member's question in this way. There's a massive amount of focus in this House about negativity and finding and identifying problems. However, Mr. Speaker, in Alberta we have been challenged more than any other jurisdiction. [interjection] The hon. member likes to make light of it because he'll probably never be over here talking as a government member. However, we are very, very sympathetic to what's happened in Alberta not only through forest fires that caused massive devastation and the BSE, not only one but two mad cows – while they make jokes about it, we take it very seriously because it's the livelihoods and the jobs of Albertans that are affected.

As a result, to answer to the hon. member's question, there have been a number of initiatives that have taken place for rural Alberta. As all members will know, the hon. Member for Wainwright as well as the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake with the minister of agriculture recently released the rural development strategy, which speaks to the importance of rural Alberta. [interjections] You know,

Mr. Speaker, it's ironic. When they ask questions, they don't want to have answers. They just sit there with grins on their faces.

It's time to start listening about what's building Alberta. It's not negativity. It's not comments about how bad everything is. It's understanding what the future holds, and what the future holds for this particular province is a healthy rural Alberta, healthy agriculture, healthy forestry.

The outlook for the future, to the hon. colleague's question, is that Alberta once again, for the 10th year in a row – so listen to this – will lead the nation in growth at 3 and a half per cent, and the Conference Board of Canada says that for the next five years Alberta will continue to lead the nation.

So the Alberta advantage is in place. We're going to keep working on it. I thank you for the question. I'm sad that the sensitivity to the other Albertans who have struggled so much doesn't seem to resonate with the hon. members opposite.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Griffiths: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental question to the same minister: what exactly is the Department of Economic Development and the minister doing to encourage economic development outside the Edmonton/Calgary corridor?

Mr. Norris: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will try and be a little more brief. The question that's posed by the hon. member is an excellent one. The Calgary/Edmonton corridor has been ranked the number one growth area in North America, second only to Luxembourg in the whole world. So, clearly, there is an awful lot of economic activity happening down highway 2 from Calgary to Edmonton.

What we're concerned with as a department and we've worked very, very hard with the hon. Deputy Premier is to identify opportunities for rural Alberta, and one of the ways we do it is through regional economic alliances. Now, these alliances identify strengths and weaknesses of particular regions, rather than cities versus cities and counties versus counties. In our province we have 12 of them, Mr. Speaker. We signed two of them most recently. The hon. member for Lethbridge was at that signing.

What they do is take the region and talk about the strengths, because the global site selectors, that everybody covets to come in and set up a new plant or a factory, do not have time to come visit any more. They want to talk very, very briefly on web sites, et cetera. So we've worked very hard with that, and we're continuing, for the hon. member's edification, to promote tourism as a great rural development tool.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Occupational Health and Safety

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2003 124 Albertans died as a result of their work, compared to 98 in 2002 and 106 in 2001. Fifty-seven of last year's work-related deaths were attributed to occupational disease. We need to reduce this frightening statistic. We need to reduce health care costs, and we need to improve the health of Alberta workers. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Given that the minister has done some excellent work as far as reducing workplace incidents, will he initiate now a public information campaign for employers and employees to ensure that proper respiratory equipment is supplied and worn on every dangerous job site across this province?

Mr. Dunford: Well, that's something that certainly we'll take a look at, Mr. Speaker. We've tried to use this WorkSafe initiative on all fronts. We've tried as best we can to approach every work site here in Alberta and all of the different activities that are involved. We've had a long array of different subinitiatives inside WorkSafe Alberta. I certainly would agree with the hon. member that the number of deaths in this province is still too many, and we have to do everything we can, working not only with the Department of Health and Wellness but also the Department of Transportation and other ministries, to get these numbers down.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: what effort is the minister making to reduce workers' exposure to toxic substances, that over a number of years can slowly kill that worker?

Mr. Dunford: Well, without the details actually in front of me, Mr. Speaker, I think I can say that with the legislation that we put in place, with the regulations, and with the most recent publication of the safety code, we've looked at all aspects of activity at the work site. I can take it under advisement if he's looking for actual technical details, but for the time being, I want to assure the hon. member that something as important as the environment in which we breathe will not and cannot be overlooked.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that in the last four years there has been an increase of more than 70 per cent in the number of workers dying from occupational diseases on an annual basis, does the minister consider that the occupational disease reserve fund, which sits at $220 million and is held by the WCB, is adequate to meet the needs of future claims?

Mr. Dunford: Well, again, I believe the hon. member is on an important topic here. I believe he's already stated in perhaps the preamble that for many of these occupational diseases that he's talking about, it's taken many, many years for the actual symptoms to come to light. Certainly, we expect and would want to monitor that the Workers' Compensation Board, under its chair and all of the members that represent the employers, the employees, and the public, would be cognizant of what future costs will be. They have, as I would understand, actuaries that they'll be able to work with. So it'll be very important that they keep an eye on that fund.

Now, where the challenge always comes, Mr. Speaker, is that we must be aware that we're not talking about taxpayers' dollars here. We are talking about contributions that have been made to the fund by employers. So it is very, very important that any board for workers' compensation that's put in place be very, very judicial and meet their obligations that they have under the legislation.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Funding

Mrs. Ady: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government recently announced additional funding for education. In spite of this, my constituents continue to ask me why they are being asked to raise money to purchase textbooks and other learning resources for the classroom. My questions are for the Minister of Learning. Are parents required to purchase textbooks?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question, because last spring we responded to this concern by adding $20 million to the Learning Resources Centre. This was money that the school boards could utilize to do things like purchase textbooks. In essence, it was a line of credit with the Learning Resources Centre. By spending the Learning Resources Centre monies, it would actually free up monies to do other things. So about a year ago we did make an announcement of $20 million. That money subsequently went in to allow them to purchase textbooks, things like that.

Mrs. Ady: I have one supplemental. If this extra $20 million dollars was put there to address these concerns, what has Alberta Learning done to ensure that school jurisdictions don't miss out on this opportunity?

Dr. Oberg: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question as well, because what we found out is that up until about six weeks ago, 25 per cent of that money had not been used; $5 million of the $20 million had not been used by school boards to purchase the textbooks that, indeed, each and every member here had heard were so critically important to the school system. That was why we had put in a $20 million line of credit. But only $15 million of that had been picked up to date. So what my department did was send out almost an emergency signal to the school boards saying that there is $5 million still available and they should use it. To date they are working quickly and heartily to ensure that that is being used.

The whole point of this is that I find it very interesting that when we put out the money, we all heard about not enough textbooks in the classroom, but the school boards, in effect, did not utilize the dollars that were there to purchase the textbooks.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Mathematics Curricula

Dr. Massey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mrs. Adachi, a parent who's been in contact with the Learning department, is completely frustrated with the continuing mess that the department created with the introduction of pure, applied, and transition mathematics programs. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why are parents still in the position of trying to sort out different sets of rules offered by the Learning department, school districts, and secondary institutions with respect to these programs?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, first of all, when it comes to pure math and applied math, there were certainly some questions when it was first brought in about five or six years ago. One of the questions, in general, was that students would have a much more difficult time with pure math, that students were having a very difficult time with applied math.

One of the things, as an aside to the hon. member, that I will say is that in this last set of diploma examinations, we had more students than ever taking pure math. We had more students than ever succeeding at pure math. More students have succeeded at pure math than succeeded at math 30 in the old system, so I will say that pure math has been a success.

Where there has been some issue with applied math is in getting into postsecondary institutions. All the postsecondary institutions have made abundantly clear in their catalogues that go out to each and every school to each and every student what will or will not be accepted. This is not necessarily specific to each and every institution, but as a general rule applied math is accepted for the non science-based faculties, Mr. Speaker. For example, my daughter is in grade 12, and she has just been accepted at the University of Lethbridge with applied math, without pure math.

So as a general rule what I would suggest to parents is that they get the catalogue from the postsecondary institutions, that they take a look at each individual application that they want to do. It is all laid out there very, very nicely for the parents and students.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Dr. Massey: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why are transitions between applied math and pure math almost impossible given the course sequence requirements and the lack of course offerings? They can't get the course.

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, a couple of things have happened with respect to this. It soon became very apparent that there were students who would be enrolled in applied math that wanted to proceed into pure math. There have been bridging courses put in at the postsecondary institutions. So you could have applied math, go into the postsecondary institution and take a bridging course to get into the pure math program, and subsequently go on if, for example, you wanted to change from an arts-based faculty to a science-based faculty.

Again, I'll return the question by saying to the parents out there: make sure that you take a look at the postsecondary institution catalogues and make sure that you know that before the students apply.

Dr. Massey: To the minister, Mr. Speaker: why were the changes introduced before problems with acceptance of the courses by postsecondary institutions and sequencing were ironed out?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, what happened was that initially when we talked to the postsecondary institutions – and I will draw the attention of the House to the fact that this was about two to three years ago – and prior to the acceptance of the programs, the universities and postsecondary institutions had told us that they would be accepting applied math. What then happened about two months prior to the start of applied math 30 is that the University of Alberta said that it would not accept it. This started a cascade of events where other institutions joined in.

We subsequently sat down with the postsecondary institutions at that time and determined that the rationale and reason behind what they said was that there was not enough I believe it was geometry – I may be corrected on that – involved in the course. We subsequently made some minor changes to applied math, and at that time they said that the applied math would be accepted when it came to the arts faculties. The majority of the postsecondary institutions in Alberta now have applied math and accept it for the arts faculties. To the science faculties though – and I completely concur with this – it should be pure math; it needs to be pure math.

The other key component to this is that there has to be the bridging. The hon. member did speak one very important phraseology in my department, which was "transitions." As a matter of fact, we have established an executive directorship position that deals specifically with transitions, Mr. Speaker, which is a very important element of my department.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Drug-sniffing Dogs in Schools

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Solicitor General. Last week the Solicitor General announced a canine sniffer program to help detect illegal drugs in our jails. Would the minister also consider randomly using these canine units to help ensure that our schools are also drug free?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mrs. Forsyth: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you. The hon. member raises a very excellent question. As he indicated, last week I did announce entering into an agreement to have drug dogs randomly search our jails at all of our correctional facilities and remand centres. Over the year we would like the opportunity to evaluate the program to determine its success and whether or not to expand our own agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I want to let the hon. member know that I do not have the authority to set up an agreement with the RCMP to search the schools, but it's a very interesting idea, and I'll be happy to share our findings with anyone else that's interested in the program.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Herard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary is to the Minister of Learning. Mr. Minister, do school boards have the necessary authority and protection under the privacy laws to avail themselves of drug-sniffing canine units to help ensure that their schools are drug free?

The Speaker: The hon. minister.

Dr. Oberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question as well. I do not as Minister of Learning have the authority to allow a drug-sniffing dog at a high school, for example, or a school of any sort. I will say, though, that the principal and the school board do have the ability to do that. As a matter of fact, in 1998 a Supreme Court decision upheld the right of having drug-sniffing dogs go in and randomly sniff lockers.

So, Mr. Speaker, in direct response to the hon. member's question, if the principal and the school board do say that they wanted to go ahead, yes, indeed it can go ahead, and the concerns about privacy are secondary to the concerns about finding illegal substances in the lockers of school-age children.

Mr. Herard: Well, that's good news, Mr. Speaker.

My final supplemental to the Minister of Learning: would you consider, then, funding a drug-sniffing canine program and make it available to Alberta school boards to send a message that illegal drugs will not be tolerated in our schools?

Dr. Oberg: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. Certainly, the Solicitor General and myself will be talking about this. Over the past two to three months it's become very apparent that such drugs as crystal meth have been appearing in our schools at a very alarming rate. It is also very apparent that something needs to be done. I think that this certainly is one element that we can act on, but I think there are many other things that need to be done, and we do need to pursue this a significant ways further. The Solicitor General and myself will be looking at this very important issue. Our schools cannot be places where drugs are being sold.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Protection of Wildlife

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A number of wildlife biologists and organizations for the protection of wildlife in Alberta have raised concerns about wolf and elk populations in and around our national parks. Low wildlife populations mean less biodiversity in our parks, indicating that our wildlife and our natural areas are not being properly cared for. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: will this ministry conduct a proper species count in order to determine what action needs to be taken to ensure that we have healthy wolf and elk populations here in Alberta?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, because the member is referring to wildlife, to parks, the Minister of Community Development will no doubt supplement my question because he is the person in charge of the parks.

In relation to the wolves and also the elk population we do have many challenges when it comes to the animal population out there. The animals are getting urbanized. We have more wolves going into hamlets and towns and villages across Alberta. We have deer and elk and moose and coyote populations coming into town. They are getting very urbanized and we have a real challenge.

I know that we have to work together to ensure that there is a balance, Mr. Speaker, because it's also not healthy for the animals to be too tame so that they start moving to urban centres and depending on urban areas for their survival. I'll give you an example. Last year there were over 16,000 accidents between vehicles and elk, moose, and deer, and, in fact, five fatalities.

So we do have many challenges, and the Minister of Community Development may want to supplement in relation to the parks themselves.

The Speaker: I think we should move on with the next question because of the time element today.

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what plans does this ministry have to ensure that healthy prey/predator populations are maintained?

Mr. Cardinal: Mr. Speaker, part of our plan, of course, is to sustain a balance. Again, the Minister of Community Development may want to supplement after. My ministry manages over a hundred million acres of public land, and there are multi-users on that public land, including the oil and gas industry, including the forest industry, including agriculture, tourism, and recreation users, and, of course, the wildlife users also. So it is a challenge, and you can be assured that we won't be shutting down the economy and sacrificing the economy unless we can put a balance in place.

Ms Carlson: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what is this ministry doing to regulate human interaction with wildlife outside of park limits?

Mr. Cardinal: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the challenges we have. When you say 16,000 accidents, the cost of that alone – and then we had five fatalities, which is nothing to be proud of. We do have a challenge out there. It will continue to be a challenge in the future.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Federal Aid to Cattle Industry

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. After spending $400 million in provincial taxpayers' money, much of which seems to have gone to the fattening of the profit margins of U.S.-owned meat packers, it remains to be seen whether the latest federal government program will be any more effective in helping small and medium-sized cattle producers, yet the Premier can't resist the temptation to trash the federal initiative by calling it a pre-election ploy. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Is the government not concerned that such statements may jeopardize federal government aid to beef producers now or in the future?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't matter what seems to come out; this hon. member has to be negative about it. Someone mentioned that negativity was in this House constantly.

This was a positive today for our producers, that the federal government came forward, albeit we've been waiting for this initiative to culminate and come forward. But today, clearly – let's be very clear – in Lethbridge the Prime Minister did announce that there was a $995 million project coming forward; $680 million was going to be dedicated towards BSE relief. Today he announced this. There would be $250 million in income support payments for all producers. This is part of the bridging process for the CAIS program that would be coming forward, and then there would be a top-up of the Canadian farm income program of $65 million. This is welcome news for Alberta's producers.

I can't say how much they have suffered, Mr. Speaker, because our minister of agriculture and rural development has expressed that far better than I, but I have been able to experience some of the meetings with her and seen the devastation that has occurred within the province of Alberta and realized that all the help that can come forward is absolutely necessary.

We've been waiting for this federal announcement for quite some time, so we're delighted that it has come forward, and I'm sure that our producers today are happy. Even though you are negative about the whole program, everybody else in the province will be happy that it's finally come forward.

The Speaker: Just a second here. Hold on. The chair is not negative, and the member speaks to the chair, so I sure hope that there are not people out there saying that the Speaker is negative. That would be wrong.

Mr. Mason: We on our side consider you to be very positive indeed.

I would just like to ask the Minister of Finance how she can reconcile this apparent support for this federal beef program with the Premier's statement that this is simply a pre-election ploy by the federal Liberals?

Mrs. Nelson: Mr. Speaker, let me clarify. My comment was not to suggest the chair was negative. You've been absolutely supportive.

Mr. Speaker, the key message on this whole program from the federal government is in fact that they have recognized that they have a national responsibility to come to the table to bring aid and assistance to the devastation within the cattle industry, and clearly they have done that.

Clearly, everyone knows that today, as we are sitting here, our Premier and minister of agriculture and rural development are in Washington working to have the borders opened. Mr. Speaker, our Premier and our minister of agriculture and rural development have led the way for Canada to a resolution of opening the borders and getting this market back into a working situation. So to have any kind of indication that there's some negativity here attached to their efforts is wrong, and once again the member opposite is wrong.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the apparent support for this federal BSE program by Alberta beef producers, is the government not worried that it will undermine the beef industry when it plays politics with this issue?

Mrs. Nelson: Well, Mr. Speaker, if anyone read the member opposite's news release today, you'd know who was playing politics and not very smart politics – I can tell you that right now – because rural Alberta supports this government, not that caucus.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Family Violence

Ms DeLong: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As we focus on the obvious needs of women in domestic violence, we must be careful that we do not demonize men in the process. Recently, after consultations with the Human Rights Commission, the Lethbridge police department removed an anti male police manual. My first question is to the Solicitor General. In light of the Human Rights Commission recommendations will she direct all Alberta law enforcement agencies to review and eliminate all gender-biased training and public information materials?

The Speaker: The hon. Solicitor General.

Mrs. Forsyth: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that about a year ago the Lethbridge Police Service published a booklet on domestic violence in the community. A complaint was made to the Alberta Human Rights Commission about the absence of gender-neutral language in the booklet. The booklet contained words like "he" and "him" to describe the offender. The issue was resolved very quickly when the Lethbridge Police Service withdrew the publication and stopped distributing it.

Mr. Speaker, I think this shows how important it is for all of us to remember that domestic violence affects everyone: the husbands, the wives, the children, and the grandparents. In terms of gender bias in information from law enforcement agencies at this point this is one case in Lethbridge, over a year ago, that was addressed immediately. If the member has information about other cases, I would be glad to hear about them and take the appropriate action.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. This positive step will not end family violence but may result in better law enforcement.

Will the Solicitor General take steps to ensure that all law enforcement officers are properly trained to deal with domestic violence in a fair and unbiased way?

2:30

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will. My department participates in the provision of family violence training to police members. We're working currently in consultation with Alberta Children's Services and Alberta Justice to enhance police training in this area.

The Speaker: The hon. member.

Ms DeLong: Thank you. To the Minister of Justice: Alberta Justice is preparing new procedures to assist in dealing with family violence without gender bias. Will women's and men's advocacy groups be consulted in this work?

Mr. Hancock: Well, Mr. Speaker, any time we engage in consultation, we deal with all of the stakeholders that are involved in the area. We're very happy to be working with Children's Services, the Solicitor General, Health and Wellness, and many other government departments with the family violence round-table initiative to talk about family violence. It's an issue that's very, very important to Albertans, and it shouldn't be swept under the rug. It should be brought out and discussed.

We should understand that if we want to feel safe in our homes, we have to talk about the problem of domestic violence, family violence. We shouldn't get sidetracked in that discussion with respect to the question of whether it's violence by men against women or violence by women against men or, for that matter, violence by men against men or women against women. What we're talking about is violence, and we need to deal with the violence. We need to deal with the violence through our processes.

We have some very wonderful initiatives in this province. The domestic violence court, or HomeFront as it is now known, in Calgary, a wonderful community-driven project to deal with domestic violence in a most appropriate way, to get people into the system and out of the system as fast as possible, and to get treatment where it's appropriate so people understand the effect of violence on children, the effect of violence on families. The recidivism rate in that HomeFront project shows that we can and will do something about domestic violence in our homes and in our communities and that we can do that if the community pulls together.

But let's not get sidetracked on issues of gender. Violence can happen in any number of different ways, and while the majority of reported instances are instances of men initiating violence against women, we need not get into the bias of that discussion, because violence is violence regardless of whether it's perpetrated by a man, a woman or whether it's in the house or in the community.

The Speaker: Hon. members, today there will be seven members participating in Recognitions, and we'll start in about 30 seconds from now following your approval for Introduction of Guests if that's given. Okay?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Mr. Knight: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It certainly is a great pleasure for me to rise today on behalf of myself and my colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly 28 energetic and talented students from the Sexsmith/La Glace schools junior high band. They're in Edmonton for the Alberta International Band Festival today, and they are accompanied by Mr. Duane Paulson, Mrs. Liz Good-Gerow, Mr. Greg Sandboe, and Mr. Bill Lappenbush and Mrs. Tina Lappenbush. I would ask them all to please rise now and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Recognitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

L'école La Mission

Mrs. O'Neill: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Tuesday evening the entire school community of l'école La Mission in St. Albert celebrated with their usual joie de vivre the official opening of the first francophone school in Alberta built exclusively for Charter section 23 students.

I wish to congratulate chairman Claude Duret and the trustees of Le Conseil Scolaire Centre-Nord on the official formal opening of this beautiful and highly functional building. It is truly a facility designed to embody and encourage a high-quality learning environment. I would especially like to commend the parents of l'école La Mission, who have worked so hard over the past 10 years and who have held onto their dreams so tenaciously for a proper school building with all its amenities for their children.

I am very pleased that the constituency of St. Albert that I'm proud to represent in this Assembly has a truly francophone school the environment of which enlivens and enlightens our broader community.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Zicki Eludin

Mr. Danyluk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in the Assembly today to recognize an extraordinary individual from my constituency. On Saturday, March 13, Zicki Eludin was the recipient of a volunteer award granted by the Land Stewardship Centre of Canada. These awards recognize exemplary environmental stewardship efforts by Canadians.

Zicki was awarded this honour in acknowledgment of his leadership excellence with the Lac La Biche Fisheries Enhancement Group and the Lac La Biche Watershed Steering Committee. He has played a key role in the success of both groups. Zicki's leadership abilities, hard work, enthusiasm, and commitment to conservation have greatly benefited the fisheries ecosystems in the Lac La Biche region.

I congratulate Zicki Eludin and would ask all members of this Assembly to join me in commending his accomplishments and his dedication to land and water stewardship.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

St. Peter the Apostle Parish Choir

Mr. Horner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in the Assembly today to acknowledge the outstanding performances of the St. Peter the Apostle parish choir, who have been recently recognized in my constituency for their inspirational and compelling dramatic performances and for the sincere generosity and charity that they have shown towards the St. Albert-Sturgeon community.

A couple of weeks ago I had the opportunity of attending the musical play Mary's Veil at the St. Albert Arden Theatre. This is the second year of performances to sellout crowds.

It was written by the community's own Sandra Brenneis, who also performs along with her sister the former MLA for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and chairperson of the West Sturgeon Aging In Place Society Foundation, Ms Colleen Soetaert, who, I might add, gives a compelling and heartfelt performance along with the rest of the parish choir performers.

These performers' depiction and commitment in Mary's Veil was poignant and riveting. They displayed a wondrous ability in their craft as well as a sincere generosity, which has been immense considering that all proceeds from the musical will go towards the West Sturgeon Aging in Place Society Foundation.

I would like to congratulate Ms Sandra Brenneis and the entire cast of community volunteers for their service to our community.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

World Water Day

Ms Carlson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. March 22 is World Water Day, and this year's theme focuses on water and disasters. We have seen our share of floods and droughts in Alberta, and in a province that has grown so quickly over the years, water has become an issue of grave concern. The water scarcity crisis we are facing has the potential to disrupt the economy, weaken the poor and vulnerable, and impede sustainable development and the reduction of poverty as it has done in so many other countries.

The message imparted by this year's World Water Day theme is to be informed and be prepared, which is precisely what Alberta must do in order to avoid a severe water scarcity crisis. For years now I have advocated the proper stewardship of our water, but questions continue to arise over the government's long-term plans to ensure that our water is safe, clean, and in healthy supply.

We must prohibit the use of fresh water for oil injection and focus on other choices. We must also ensure that our drinking water is being treated and handled with the utmost care and the best technology. We must take action now to ensure a healthy water supply now and in the future. I urge the government to take on this challenge.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Wamer.

Cardston High School Lady Cougars

Mr. Jacobs: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise in this Assembly today to recognize the Cardston high school Lady Cougars, who on Saturday, March 20, won the 3A girls provincial basketball championship. The team is comprised of Haley Fox, Joni Low, Lindsay McMurray, Julie McMurray, Megan Nelson, Alisha Nelson, Kenzie Sheen, Sadie Thomas, Katelyn Toone, Brandie Walburger, Kim Young, and coaches Tim Court and Jason Janisko.

The tournament took place in the newly modernized Cardston high school gymnasium and consisted of the 12 best 3A girls basketball teams in the province. The championship game took place in front of 1,200 fans. The Cardston Lady Cougars faced the Magrath Pandas, another southern Alberta team from the Westwind school division, in the final match.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Cardston Lady Cougars on their achievement in winning this year's provincials and on an outstanding season of 16 and 0. This team has displayed remarkable talent and skill during an exceptional season of basketball.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Black Gold School Division

Mr. Klapstein: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to recognize the Black Gold regional school division for establishing its healthy hearts program. The program is being developed to increase physical activity among staff and students in 14 schools in the division.

Alberta Learning is funding the project through the initiative for school improvement program. The University of Alberta has partnered with the Black Gold school division to provide the necessary cardiovascular health assessments needed in the program.

The project is certainly a commendable undertaking, particularly because of its emphasis on a healthy lifestyle for staff and students, and I thank the Minister of Learning, the Hon. Lyle Oberg, for his support of the program.

The Speaker: And the hon. member knows he's not supposed to mention members by name.

Mr. Klapstein: Sorry.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

2:40 Tegler Trust and Tegler Foundation

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Tegler Trust was established in 1921 on the death of businessman Robert Tegler. The trust has supported charities ever since.

In June 1981 the trustees of the Tegler Foundation made a decision to fund a major project, a senior citizens' high-rise apartment building named Tegler Manor. In 1993 the Tegler Trust opened another major project, the 83-suite Tegler Terrace, located in the Edmonton-Riverview constituency at 9918-149th Street. Its construction carries on the Tegler tradition of red brick and stone pillars.

The Tegler Trust is presently working with the John Janzen Nature Centre in Edmonton on their revitalization project, and they're having discussions with the Alberta Safety Council for funding towards a safety village in Strathcona county. The Tegler Foundation has also acquired additional properties for residences for low-income people.

Part of the foundation's philosophy is to provide a safe, secure community while encouraging volunteerism from its residents. I commend the trustees of the Tegler Foundation.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to present a petition signed by 99 Alberta seniors petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to recognize and value the contributions and sacrifices the seniors have made in building the Province of Alberta, and treat them with due respect and dignity by reversing those policies that cause unnecessary financial hardship for them and undermine their quality of life.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition signed by 202 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to "return to a regulated electricity system, reduce power bills, and develop a program to assist Albertans in improving energy efficiency."

head: Notices of Motions

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm giving notice that at the appropriate time I will rise under Standing Order 40 to propose a motion. The contents of this have been already distributed to members in the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings. The first is a copy of a memorandum directed to yourself from myself but signed by myself as Government House Leader, the Official Opposition House Leader, and the New Democrat Party House Leader. It sets out the schedule which has been agreed to by all three party House leaders with respect to the schedule for Committee of Supply.

Under Standing Order 58(6), of course, it provides that the Leader of the Official Opposition may, by giving written notice to the Clerk and the Government House Leader prior to noon on the day following the Budget Address, designate which department's estimates are to be considered by the Committee of Supply on any Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday afternoon.

Our normal course is to discuss these matters and come up with an agreed-upon schedule, and that's the schedule which I'm tabling today.

I've tabled five copies of that schedule, but I would also note that in the memorandum it indicates that the departments of Revenue and Finance are both scheduled for the evening of April 21, and that requires unanimous consent of the House under 58(2) because under 58(2) of the Standing Orders the number of sitting days that it's called to consider shall equal the number of members of Executive Council. Having two on that one sitting day would require unanimous consent of the House, so I would request the Speaker to ask for unanimous consent of the House for that particular matter in accordance with the schedule as agreed between the House leaders.

The Speaker: Hon. members, I have a question, though, first of all. Not all hon. members in the Assembly have a copy of this particular document. Would my assumption be correct?

Mr. Hancock: Yes.

The Speaker: So I will wait until all hon. members have a copy of such document, and I will deal with the question as we proceed with the point of order and the Standing Order 40 application this afternoon. I think that in fairness to all hon. members they should have in their possession such a document.

The hon. Minister of Community Development.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the appropriate number of copies today of a communiqué that I issued on March 19 on behalf of the government and, I hope, all Albertans saluting and recognizing the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which, of course, was yesterday, March 21. In it we are just all reminded that we have a responsibility amongst us to ensure that all fundamental rights and freedoms are safeguarded for Albertans and others in this great world.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Ms Blakeman: Thank you. I have two tablings today. The first is from Chris Callaghan, who's writing to me and making note that this senior couple can afford insurance premiums no longer. Their insurance will not be renewed. They're also having to curtail other small pleasures "in order to pay for the rising costs of utilities, property taxes, etc." I have the appropriate number of copies to table.

Also, I would like to table five copies of a general notice from Morgex Insurance to members of the Alberta Teachers' Association in which they note that "the Government imposed Rate Freeze of Auto Insurance premiums is not applicable to policies that are being issued with a new insurance carrier." That, in fact, Morgex did in the summer of 2003.

Thank you very much.

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table in the Assembly today on behalf of the Minister of Finance the requisite number of copies of the Report of Selected Payments to Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly for the year ended March 31, 2003.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Pannu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. I'm tabling five copies of a letter dated January 5, 2004, from Ms Bev McKay, president of Families Allied to Influence Responsible Eldercare, addressed to the Premier. Ms McKay is drawing the Premier's attention to the Toronto Star's "recent investigative report on the political neglect of Ontario's long-term care system." She is alerting the Premier to the declining quality of long-term care in Alberta and urging him to take action.

My second tabling is a New Democrat opposition document titled Scrap Health Premiums: It's Good Medicine.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: Hon. members, we have a request from the hon. Government House Leader to deal with a motion, but I'm not going to call that until, first of all, hon. members have a copy. Mr. Clerk, were such copies being made available? Okay.

Then we'll deal with the point of order by the Government House Leader first because if the House approves the Standing Order 40 application, there will be no opportunity to deal with such.

The Government House Leader.

Point of Order Referring to Nonmembers

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is a relatively brief one in nature, and I would refer yourself and members of the House to Beauchesne's 493(4) and 493(3). Beauchesne's 493(4) indicates that "the Speaker has cautioned Members to exercise great care in making statements about persons who are outside the House and unable to reply."

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona in a preamble to his question referred to the Calgary health authority as being a place for retired Tories and named a former provincial treasurer and a former member – I won't speculate on the constituency because I don't remember it right now – personally but then also went on to name the CEO of the Calgary health authority, Mr. Jack Davis. Now, Mr. Jack Davis was not a member of this House and was a senior deputy minister, in fact, Deputy Minister of Executive Council in this government. While it may be a very honoured designation for many Albertans, it was not appropriate for him to include that person as a retired Tory in his preamble.

I would suggest that the hon. member should be requested to withdraw the reference to individuals not in this House, particularly when he's suggesting that a former civil servant and someone who was the most senior civil servant in the province is a retired Tory.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on this point of order.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much. I'd like to respond to that briefly, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Government House Leader is quite correct in pointing out the suggestion, but the wording of this section gives quite a bit of latitude to the Speaker with respect to this matter.

I would submit that the people involved – also the former executive assistant to the Premier was mentioned – are all very closely associated with this government and its policies. The point being made is that there is a certain amount of patronage related to the Calgary health authority. I believe that all people who are mentioned were in fact very closely associated with the government and its policies and have been put in various positions with the Calgary health authority in order to carry out the policies of this government with respect to health care, with which we respectfully disagree.

So I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that it's not a valid point of order. It's simply stating what to us is clearly the case.

Thank you.

The Speaker: Well, hon. members, there are two citations here that should come into play. One thing I sincerely hope is that members will not start to believe that there's considerable latitude given to the chair to be subjective about these things because that would put the chair into a horrendous position.

Let me just quote, first of all, from House of Commons Procedure and Practice, Marleau and Montpetit, page 524.

The Speaker has ruled that Members have a responsibility to protect the innocent, not only from outright slander but from any slur directly or indirectly implied, and has stressed that Members should avoid as much as possible mentioning by name people from outside the House who are unable to reply and defend themselves against innuendo.

I might also point out Beauchesne paragraph 493(4), which essentially has the same thing.

Today here is what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona said; this is the second statement in the question: "It's been turned into a retirement resort for recycled Tories like Jim Dinning, Rod Love, and current CEO Jack Davis." Now, I do know that at least one of these individuals is certainly a former member of this House under the political term Progressive Conservative, the other one never was elected, and the third one certainly didn't fall in that particular situation.

Out of interest over the weekend I was reading something, and it had to do with an interview in one of the major urban papers about one of the current members in the House today. There's a paragraph in there about the hon. member basically saying that he had been an adviser to a former Premier of the province's government – this is not a correct quotation; it's not a disservice, but it sort of sums up to the same thing – and the hon. member said with a big smile on his face: wow, if they'd only known that I'd been a sleeper Liberal for 18 years as an adviser to them. So you can never really be sure what the politics of anybody are.

In the case of the naming of this one particular individual, Jack Davis, former deputy minister, the fact that he may have been a Deputy Minister of Executive Council could not suggest for a moment that he was in fact one. I found that article rather elucidating.

Certainly, from what I've just quoted from Montpetit and I've quoted from Beauchesne, that basically we have to protect, it is a valid point of order, Government House Leader, in my view. A valid point of order. In fact, one should be very careful not to bring into question individuals who cannot defend themselves. It's not a good thing to do by innuendo.

I don't know if we want to quarrel and draw the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. He knows better. He'll stand up and say he knows better, and I'll ask him to say that, and then we'll move on.

Dr. Pannu: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I certainly respect your direction, and I won't err next time around. Thank you.

The Speaker: Okay.

Request for Unanimous Consent Committee of Supply Schedule

The Speaker: Now, the pages are going to circulate the document that the hon. Government House Leader referred to. I think that it's important that we deal with this one now. In the event that you give Standing Order 40 application approval, then we would not have a chance to deal with it. So I'll wait a second here to make sure that everybody has this.

Opposition House Leader, do your members have a copy of the document we're talking about? Third party?

So as I understand this – pages, just continue doing as I talk – the Government House Leader, the Official Opposition House Leader, the third party House leader have gotten together, done what they're supposed to do in trying to bridge all the gaps and deal with everything, but there's a requirement now to waive Standing Order 58(2) where it says: "The number of sitting days that the Committee of Supply is called to consider the main estimates shall equal the number of members of the Executive Council with portfolio." This particular scenario that's been agreed to by the three House leaders would have us not really needing that intent.

So the question here is: is the Assembly prepared to waive Standing Order 58(2)? Is there clear understanding? Opposition House Leader, clear understanding? Third party House leader, clear understanding? Okay. Then I'll call the question. Is the Assembly in favour of waiving Standing Order 58(2) so that we might proceed with the 2004 spring sitting of the legislative Committee of Supply calendar as tabled in the House today?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Mr. Hancock: Just on a point, Mr. Speaker. I noted that on the document that circulated, the date is March 23, and obviously it should have been March 22. I wonder if the official document could be corrected in that regard?

The Speaker: Actually, in the question that I gave, it didn't have the date of the document.

Mr. Hancock: No, no. I'm just talking about the document that was tabled.

The Speaker: Yes, I know. But I didn't say that in my motion.

Mr. Hancock: No, you didn't. Okay.

The Speaker: It should be okay. But officially this document is March 22, not March 23, for all intents and purposes. Anybody opposed to that? Okay.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Calgary Health Region

Dr. Taft:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to appoint an independent, nonpartisan commission under the Public Inquiries Act which shall

- (1) inquire into the circumstances and the effect of government policies, procedures, and practices in the Calgary health region that led to incorrect dialysis solutions being given and subsequently resulting in the deaths of Kathleen Prowse and Bart Wassing,
- (2) examine any issues the commission deems necessary to ensure that health services are being appropriately managed and delivered by the Calgary health region and the government, and
- (3) make findings and recommendations to ensure the appropriate management and delivery of health services in Calgary to protect the health and safety of Calgarians.

Dr. Taft: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a Standing Order 40 application to present a motion to the Assembly.

As you know, Standing Order 40 applications are to be made in case of urgent and pressing necessity. I can think of no matter more pressing than addressing the mismanagement of services that Albertans rely on when they are sick and in need of medical attention.

Mr. Speaker, if this sounds familiar, it's because I asked this Assembly to consider a similar motion less than two weeks ago for a public inquiry into Calgary's emergency health services. This Assembly turned that motion down. Well, here we are two weeks later, and after learning of two more needless deaths in the Calgary health region, I'm again asking this Assembly to consider a public inquiry. This time I'm asking for a public inquiry to look into the circumstances and the effect of government policies, procedures, and practices in the Calgary health region that led to the incorrect dialysis solutions being given to Kathleen Prowse and Bart Wassing.

As well, this public inquiry would examine any issues they deem necessary to ensure that health services are being appropriately managed and delivered by the Calgary health region and this government. This public inquiry is necessary, Mr. Speaker. It is necessary because only six months after the Calgary health region vowed that recommendations made by the fatality inquiry into Maren Burkhart's death would be carried out, Vince Motta died under similar circumstances.

This public inquiry is necessary because the fatality inquiry into Vince Motta's death found that the Calgary health region provided information that, quote, lent itself to confusion or was capable of misleading the inquiry, end quote. This public inquiry is necessary because the Calgary health region assured us after Vince Motta's death that they would take action to make things better in Calgary's emergency rooms, but things have only gotten worse.

This public inquiry is necessary because just one day after the Calgary health region claimed that similarly labelled chemicals were to blame for the recent medical mix-up, the company that produces the chemicals said that the labelling is actually quite different. This public inquiry is necessary because this recent dialysis solution mix-up occurred four years after the Calgary health region assured Patricia Evans' family that steps would be taken to prevent this sort of error.

Most importantly, Mr. Speaker, this public inquiry is necessary because Calgarians no longer trust the Calgary health region. The Calgary health region is the largest government body in Calgary, and it is charged with managing and delivering health services. It has proven that it can no longer be trusted to do this.

It's time to end the practice of political patronage appointments in the Calgary health region. It's time to end the Calgary health region's preoccupation with saving face over saving lives. It's time to shed light on the management of the Calgary health region and the role that this government has played in allowing it to deteriorate.

For the health workers in Calgary who work valiantly to keep the system afloat and for the hundreds of thousands of Calgarians who rely on the health services that the Calgary health region provides, Mr. Speaker and all members of this Assembly, I am asking this House to vote to change things for the better.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Zwozdesky: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, March 18, it is my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 3, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 100, 101, 102, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 159, 160, 162, 164, 165, 166, 167, and 168.

Expenses for Minister of Energy

M3. Mr. MacDonald moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of the Minister of Energy's expenses, including but not limited to airfare, food, accommodation, and conference fees, from March 1, 2001, to February 17, 2004.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think it is very, very important that we have a look at these expenses and a breakdown of the Minister of Energy's travels. They have been, to say the least, extensive. We're looking at least at 22 trips, and the minister has certainly gone beyond Wetaskiwin. There are undisclosed locations in California; Texas with other members of Executive Council; New York City, of course; Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan; Washington, D.C.; Anchorage, Alaska; Dawson City, Yukon; Texas again, this time Dallas; Halifax, Nova Scotia; Kansas; the capital city, Ottawa; again to Washington; San Francisco, California; Portland, Oregon; back to Halifax; Rome; Tucson; back to Texas; Olympia, Washington; Portland, Oregon; Washington, D.C.; Casper, Wyoming; Chicago, Illinois; New Orleans, Louisiana. There are many different places.

Certainly, there is even a trip – and there was quite a famous speech made by the Minister of Energy – to Rio de Janeiro. I believe it was an energy conference. The text of that speech was put on the Department of Energy's website, and it was an interesting read.

So a lot of information would come from this motion for a return in light of, you know, the expenses by this government, by Executive Council. There has certainly been an increase in the level of travel. The taxpayers have every right to know the breakdown of the Minister of Energy's expenses. Certainly, the taxpayers could be of the impression that the hon. minister was travelling extensively looking for a new energy policy because the current one is not working. All these conference fees, accommodations, airfare – I think it's a good idea.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General stated two weeks ago in this Assembly, I believe, that he believed that the government was open and transparent and accountable. So now is this government's chance to back that up.

Thank you.

Mr. Jonson: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Energy I'd like to recommend that the Assembly reject this motion since the information sought by the member is available to the general public.

Travel is part of the job of any government. Alberta is an exporting province and relies heavily on capital investment from outside the province. Ministerial missions occur in order to promote Alberta businesses, products, and services to international customers, to attract investment to the province, and they serve also to encourage new businesses to move to Alberta. So it's a given that we have to have contacts. We have to take the initiative in attracting this economic development to this province.

Mr. Speaker, ministers also participate in federal/provincial/territorial ministerial meetings with their counterparts. These meetings are valuable intergovernmental forums to advance the views and priorities of Albertans. There have also been over 130 provincial, territorial, and federal meetings over the time period that is in question. More information on those meetings is available through the Canadian Intergovernmental Conference Secretariat website at www.scics.gc.ca.

Prior to embarking on any foreign mission, ministers are required to issue a news release which includes itineraries, a list of those travelling, the estimated cost, and the reason for the trip. As well, each year the Minister of Finance tables the report of the selected payments to members and former Members of the Legislative Assembly and persons directly associated with the Members of the Legislative Assembly pursuant to section 37(4) of the Legislative Assembly Act and section 16(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to payments being required by legislation to be reported, this report includes other payments to MLAs such as remuneration, benefits and expenses, and payments to former members under the Members of the Legislative Assembly Pension Plan Act and the public service pension plan.

Mr. Speaker, energy-related missions have been very successful lately. They've led to face-to-face meetings with the vice-president of the United States to talk about how Alberta can contribute to the new U.S. energy strategy. They've also led to literally thousands of key decision-makers around the world learning a great deal about the energy sector in Alberta and investment opportunities.

Finally, because the Auditor General of Alberta annually reviews the records of government departments as part of his ongoing responsibilities, if there were any issues concerning inappropriate expenses, they would be identified by the Auditor General's review. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I would like to speak in favour of the release of this information. I was quite surprised when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar itemized the various destinations of the Minister of Energy. That was a tremendous travelogue, I would say.

I reject the arguments put forward by the minister of intergovernmental affairs that we don't need to know this information because they were all valuable and important conferences and meetings. That's not the question. The question is not whether or not these were worth while. The question is: how much was spent in which areas on these trips? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has asked that question, and there is no good reason in my view for a lack of complete transparency on this question, and I really wonder why the minister – I've got to get his title right.

Ms Carlson: Intergovernmental . . .

Mr. MacDonald: Affairs . . .

Mr. Mason: Intergovernmental affairs. That's it?

Ms Carlson: International and intergovernmental affairs.

Mr. Mason: International and intergovernmental affairs. Thank you very much, hon. member.

The Speaker: Actually, it's International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Mr. Mason: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that. [interjections] I can imagine what would happen if we had a motion for a return on that.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, you know, the fact that the Auditor General will look at it is not a good argument either because the Auditor General will have a look at it and he will just make sure that everything is in order; that is to say, that it's within the policies and so on and that all things are properly expensed.

The question is whether or not the public would approve of these expenditures. That's the question. It's a political question, not an accounting question. As a result, I would suggest that we ought to reject the hon. minister's proposal and accept this question.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make a few comments with respect to this matter. I think it's fair to say that this Assembly has a procedure with respect to accounts. The question here is with respect to expenses, and expenses are accounts. Both of the members who have spoken from the opposite side are very familiar with these procedures, namely that we do have a legislative committee dealing with account matters. Indeed, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is the chair of that committee, and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I believe, is a member of the committee, and that has been so since the last election in March of 2001.

I note that the time period for this particular motion for a return starts in March of 2001, and by my reckoning one of the years in question, the year ending March 2002, would have already been before this committee for questioning. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the procedure is that the minister appears, together with the accounts for the year in question, to answer those questions posed by the members of the committee, and the Auditor General, who has reviewed the accounts of the particular ministry, is available also to answer questions. The purpose of that particular procedure is specifically to allow members of this Assembly to inquire into matters relative to the accounts.

It seems to me that both of the hon. members opposite, perhaps in hindsight, have felt that they have not done all that they should have done in reviewing this particular minister's accounts for that year, but the fact of the matter is that that likely is not so because I know that they are both very, very diligent.

The fact is that the Auditor General has a role. The Auditor General's role is to review accounts. The Auditor General has done that. The Auditor General has commented on it, and he has indicated that there is absolutely nothing untoward.

As it relates to the information of the Minister of Energy and his travel, we have a procedure in this House relative to international travel where press releases are set out before the travel takes place indicating when the travel takes place, where the travel will go, who the minister will meet with, the expenses associated with that travel, who is travelling with the minister, and so on and so forth. There is a great deal of information that is available as you go forward from day to day, from month to month, over the years.

But the short of it, Mr. Speaker, is that in this particular case there is a process. There's an Auditor General who looks into this. This Assembly has a process to look into it. Both of these hon. members have been part of that, and the time that is available to review accounts can be used to specifically ask questions of both the minister and the Auditor General relative to these matters.

Ms Carlson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to participate in speaking to this particular motion and to respond to the Deputy Government House Leader's participation in the royal runaround, which is what we've been getting from the government since we first started asking these questions about getting details on these particular travel expenses for the minister in question here and other ministers.

The Deputy Government House Leader talked extensively on our ability to access Public Accounts information as if at any point in my history with this Assembly that would have ever resulted in any kind of full disclosure or details. It doesn't, Mr. Speaker, as that member very well knows. Not only are details never made available on expense accounts, Public Accounts only has an hour and a half to examine all details of those particular ministries who, in fact, choose to appear before them. Never in the history that I've been here have all ministries actually made it through the Public Accounts system in any given year. So some are always not available to be scrutinized.

In the first few years that I was here, I was on that committee. We never could get that kind of detail from the ministers. The ministers always say that this is not the most appropriate place to disclose that information; send in a written question or a motion for a return.

Well, we do that, and what do we get? No information. When we ask for the information in question period, what do we get? Once again they say to go to Public Accounts or go to a written question or go to a motion for a return.

My question is: what do they have to hide? If there's nothing to hide here and they're not afraid of the public scrutiny of these expenses, which is truly a political scrutiny that needs to take place, then why don't they just disclose the information?

The Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations stated that perhaps we should be going to the report of the payments made to the members on the trips they've taken. I have before me, Mr. Speaker, the Report of Selected Payments to Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly, year ended March 31, 2003.

When I go to this particular Minister of Energy that we're asking for the information for, what do I see? I see his remuneration for the year, and then, under the area that you would think we would be able to look and see the details of the expenses for all these conferences and trips and meetings that he went to out of the province, what do I see? I see travel expenses as a minister of the Crown. His kilometre reimbursement. That came to $48,815. That was for government business for the stuff that he paid for. Then I see kilometre reimbursement as an MLA, $10,207. Then I see the subsistence allowance to cover the cost of meals while maintaining a temporary residence around session, so once again not on these conference duties, $20,020.

So the portion of this that's related to his travel as a minister only discloses that amount of money that he put on his credit card. We know full well from the information that we've gotten around these trips that a great percentage of these monies are not paid directly by the ministers themselves. They're paid by aides or other people along on the trip. So we want a full public scrutiny, a full political review, of how much these ministers are spending on these conferences and these trips.

I'm not saying that it isn't well spent in some cases, but let the people decide whether or not they think that these guys are 'snorferling' at the trough or whether we're getting value for money in this province. So it's worth while to ask this question, and it's politically astute for this government to provide the information, and they are once again stonewalling.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member opposite raised a number of points which I think need a response. First of all, she indicates that not all members of the Executive Council choose to go to Public Accounts. Well, my understanding is that Public Accounts summons ministers of Executive Council and summons the ones that they want to examine. Certainly, I know that I've recently had the opportunity to have been summoned and to appear before Public Accounts, and I didn't understand that I had an option. I understood that when Public Accounts asks a minister of Executive Council, you try and negotiate a day that makes sense, obviously, but if they want you to go, you go.

The other thing that I wanted to mention that wasn't mentioned by the members opposite: sometimes I think members of this House don't realize that every time a document is tabled in the House, it becomes a sessional record, and then it is stored forever as a record of the session. We've tabled documents in this House as though they're important documents – they may have some relevance and importance to the people who have written them or have sent them in or want their viewpoint on the record – but once they're tabled, they get a sessional record number and they go into the archives and they're stored forever.

So the more things you ask for on the record and the more documents that are tabled, the larger and larger amount of sessional records in storage, and, you know, in many cases, although, as I say, they may have been important in the context in which they were written, they're not an important long-term record for the House.

Now, we have on the Order Paper today 180 motions for returns, and if all of those were answered in the positive, there would be boxes and boxes and boxes of material that will be then numbered as sessional records and stored forever as sessional records of the House. That is not the most appropriate place for those records, Mr. Speaker.

In fact, those records are in the appropriate place for them, and that is in the hands of the financial people. They have been reviewed and can be reviewed by the Auditor General on behalf of the public to make sure that policies have been followed and monies have been expended appropriately. But to bring in a hundred and whatever it was number of questions asking for all the financial records of government to be brought in and marked as sessional papers and then stored forever in the archives of the Legislature is just nonsensical.

The hon. member opposite talked about the filing that was filed to date for the year ended March 31, 2003, and indicated that the minister in question in this particular motion for a return had $48,800 worth of expenses as a minister of the Crown: kilometre reimbursements for use of personal vehicle for government business, vehicle rentals, airfare, accommodation, meals, taxis, parking, et cetera. So $48,800, Mr. Speaker.

I don't have the exact number at hand, but I think the revenue from oil and gas, which comes as a result of that particular minister's department and the policies that that particular minister has to take responsibility for and the networking with respect to energy councils and other energy producing states around the world and all of those issues, is close to $8 billion in the last year, if I recall correctly, and I stand to be corrected whether it was 7 and a half billion dollars, but in order of magnitude a phenomenal amount of revenue.

To suggest that a minister of the Crown ought not be able to spend $50,000 in travelling, or even more if there's some that hasn't been appropriately accounted for here because somebody else paid for it, although in my experience that's attributed to the member . . . That's a rather modest amount of money for the responsibility and the income that comes to this province from oil and gas revenues.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question is really one of accountability. The hon. members opposite are suggesting that members of Executive Council ought to be held accountable, and that's absolutely true. The public is entitled to have accountability; they're entitled to know that their money is being spent appropriately. We have policies in place to ensure that that happens, and we have auditors in place to ensure that that happens.

Now, members opposite, I think – and I don't want to attribute motives – the vast majority of these questions seem to have come onto the Order Paper after the federal Auditor General discovered that a senior civil servant was spending money inappropriately. The Auditor General, doing her job, found that there were some places where the policies were not being appropriately followed or where there were inappropriate payments and brought that to light. Mr. Speaker, that's precisely the way the system ought to work.

How it cannot work is for individuals to be held accountable for minute or relatively small expenditures on a case-by-case basis because the first thing that happens when you table these expenses is that somebody is going to, as we've seen in this House, come back and say: on October 3 you spent $300 on a dinner; can you tell us who was with you and what you were talking about? Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an inappropriate way to have accountability because what you're doing is suggesting that there's a finite result from every meeting. What you're doing is suggesting that there ought to be absolute disclosure of every single person that's met with and every single topic that's on the table. That can't happen. That would restrict the operation of government in such a manner that you would not be able to actually make good policy.

Ministers of Executive Council and other members of government meet all the time with individuals. They meet within the province; they meet without the province; they go to appropriate conferences. Sometimes you can tell in advance what results you're going to be able to get; sometimes you go in the hopes of getting a result. But you cannot judge appropriate accountability by coming back three years later and saying: you spent $500 on a conference fee; was that an appropriate expenditure?

Those are judgments that are made in the course of doing business. Whether you are in the private sector or whether you are in government, you have to be in a position to make those judgment calls on a day-to-day basis as you're doing your business and you have to be held accountable to the appropriate policy structure that's in place and you have to be held accountable by an Auditor General reviewing the statements and saying: have you operated within the confines of policy and within the monies that have been voted to you by the Legislature to do your job?

So asking for accountability of the specifics of this nature, asking for records of food and accommodation and airfare to go on the records of the House for time immemorial is an inappropriate way to ask for accountability. There are, as the Member for Calgary-Glenmore pointed out earlier, appropriate ways to do it. The hon. members opposite just haven't found those yet.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make a few comments in regard to the motion for a return as brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Certainly, one of the tasks as opposition is accountability. It is a major task of opposition, and it is one of the things that makes democracy work.

Now, we've heard the hon. member across the way say that we shouldn't have to have a breakdown on $48,000 for kilometre reimbursement for use of a personal vehicle for government business, vehicle rentals, airfare, accommodation, meals, taxi, and parking, et cetera while travelling on government business, that there are people that do this for us.

Certainly, the Department of Energy is responsible for billions of dollars of revenue for Albertans. But at the same time if we were to ask seniors in this province who are on fixed incomes what they could do with $48,000, they would have to give you a very detailed account of all their expenditures. This is quite a bit. [interjection] That's exactly right. Another example was the forensic audit we had on the Edmonton public school board that was ordered by the minister.

3:30

If we have seniors who wish to apply for the Alberta seniors' benefits, then certainly their expenditures are put forward. They are very detailed, and they are scrutinized to make certain that they qualify. So are we doing anything out of the ordinary; for example, the audit that took place on the Edmonton public school board? No. We also have, Mr. Speaker, the audit that's done on our seniors when they apply for the Alberta seniors' benefits, and that certainly isn't anywhere in the neighbourhood of $48,000.

So I think that Albertans not only want to see the breakdown of these expenses; they're entitled to it. As we go through the process in this House and as we continue, whether it be in question period or whether it be in written questions or whether it be in motions for returns, as we follow through this process, every time the question is asked, we get directed to another process as to how we can find answers to these questions. So, yes, this is definitely a case of accountability here, and it is just another dodge by this government to not allow Albertans to see the breakdown of these expenses.

So with those comments, I will take my seat, and I will certainly listen to the comments from other members. Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to close the debate.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I listened to all the speakers with a great deal of interest, and certainly I must say that I'm disappointed that Motion for a Return 3 is to be rejected.

I listened, first, with a great deal of interest, as a matter of fact, to the hon. Minister of Justice. The minister stated that it's just not possible to look at the Order Paper, to look at the motions for returns and the written questions that are on here, that we can't possibly respond to all these questions, these motions because the legislative process would be overloaded with filing, that we would have official responses on each one of these requests, and that somehow there's something detrimental if these responses were to become part of the permanent record of this Assembly.

Well, it's only in the last month, if one were to take a quick review of Hansard, that the Minister of Finance said in response to a question from this hon. member: well, put it on the Order Paper; have a written question. The same day during the same question period, on February 24, 2004, the Minister of Government Services also told this member to put it on the Order Paper in the form of a written question. There was no concern about the records of the Assembly being overloaded on that day. On March 4 the Premier, in response to a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, said: it's a written question. There was no concern about overloading the records of this Assembly.

On March 16 the hon. minister of health made a similar statement in response to a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and just last week, on March 17, the same minister of health made the same request to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. So to make the argument a week later that it's going to clog up the records system of the Assembly is, to say the least, lame and does not have any merit.

Now, certainly no one on this side of the House is arguing that all government travel is bad or wrong. I would agree with the hon. minister of intergovernmental relations, his department, that certainly travel is important and necessary not only at the national level but at the international level, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mason: Moose Jaw?

Mr. MacDonald: No. Moose Jaw was a trip that the Minister of Energy took.

We're not saying that all travel is bad. We want a process that is open and accountable for the expenses and what goes on on these trips and who goes. If there is nothing untoward, as an hon. member across the way said, well, why not release all the documents? We need to know.

Now, if this information is publicly available, as the hon. minister stated, where is this information? Where is it publicly available? I had a FOIP request on some other trips because not all trips are on the itinerary. Not all trips are listed there. I had a FOIP request on three trips, and I received back a request that was in the hundreds of dollars: come up with the cash; we might give you the information. That is against the spirit and the intent of the FOIP Act.

Mr. Speaker, this particular minister likes to travel more than the others, and these are trips that we know about. Certainly, the hon. Minister of Justice always seems to be at home doing his homework. Two trips are listed here. As I said earlier, I don't know whether the hon. minister is in search of an electricity policy or what the quest is, this Holy Grail – for a good alternative to electricity deregulation he only has to go to www.liberalopposition.com to see what a real electricity policy looks like. He wouldn't have to travel to all these foreign, exotic destinations to find it. He can just click on the Internet, and there it is.

Mr. Hancock: At www.opposition.com.

Mr. MacDonald: No, you're missing it. It's www.liberalopposition.com. You have the habit of missing that "opposition." [interjection] No. This is a travel log. It's not a fairy tale. Twenty-two trips is certainly not a fairy tale, to the Minister of Infrastructure.

Many of these trips are over budget, and if we're to determine how many of them are over budget, we need to have the information that is outlined in Motion for a Return 3. This is only part of the process.

You know, departmental policy seems to be to rack up air miles. The total reported cost of all of the trips that we are aware of was supposedly $1.1 million, but the government did not publicly provide costs for 26 of the trips, so the actual total may be much higher than that. Whenever these itineraries are made and these press releases are put out on the destination, the cost, and who is going, maybe there are trips that are not officially discussed.

Ms Evans: Not likely.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, the hon. Minister of Children's Services said, "Not likely." Well, the government, our research indicates, failed to provide itineraries for 79 trips. Taxpayers have the right to know who went on those trips and how much money was spent.

I'm sorry. This is incomplete. By responding to this Motion for a Return 3 the government could really be open, really be transparent, and could really be accountable to the citizens, Mr. Speaker.

That pretty well concludes my statements in regard to Motion for a Return 3, but I would have to say that I'm disappointed. There is a joke making the rounds in the coffee shop at Capilano Mall, and it goes something like this. How do you get eight Tory cabinet ministers into a four-seater Cessna? The reply is: tell them that you're going to open a trade mission in Mexico. That's the public's perception. You can correct that perception by agreeing to this Motion for a Return 3.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[The voice vote indicated that Motion for a Return 3 lost]

Department of Health and Wellness IT Costs

M10. Mr. Bonner moved on behalf of Dr. Taft that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the Ministry of Health and Wellness on contracts for information technology services broken down by company and total dollar amount for each for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

Mr. Bonner: Once again, Mr. Speaker, we are requesting information that deals strictly with the Ministry of Health and Wellness, and again it's an opportunity for Albertans to get a detailed look at information regarding technological services. We are quite concerned as an opposition with exactly how many dollars are being spent in this particular area and not only how those dollars are being spent. We also are looking forward to some answers as to which companies were used and how many dollars were used for each.

Like so many other things in today's world where we start dealing with technology, it can become a black hole. There's no doubt that in order to first of all introduce systems, to get them up and running, to iron out the bugs, to constantly keep updating your equipment so that you can stay abreast of the latest technology, these are extremely expensive propositions. Certainly, we have to have this information in order to compare whether or not Albertans are getting full value for the dollars being spent. We have debated in this House on numerous occasions different bills regarding health information, the collection of health information, how it is used, who it's shared with, who it can be shared with, and certainly with Motion for a Return 10, by allowing us this information, we will have the opportunity to do that type of analysis.

So with those comments, I look forward to hearing debate on both sides regarding Motion for a Return 10. Thank you.

The Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

The Speaker: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

Mr. Woloshyn: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two gentlemen that I had the privilege of meeting with. The first one is Norm

head: Motions for Returns

Mr. Doerksen: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness to address Motion for a Return 10. This government is open to providing information on information technology services. In fact, the type of information sought in this motion for a return and in a number of other motions before the Assembly is made available annually through a document released by Alberta Finance entitled General Revenue Fund: Details of Grants, Supplies and Services, Capital Assets and Other, by Payee.

Mr. Speaker, given the number of additional motions for returns requesting similar information from all other government departments, I move that Motion for a Return 10 be amended as follows and would read that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing the total dollar amount spent by the government of Alberta on contracts for information technology services and a listing of vendors providing these services for the 2002-2003 fiscal year.

The amended motion will provide the Assembly with the total amount spent by all government departments on information technology services and a list of vendors utilized to provide these services.

This amendment and its notification have been provided to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview prior to 11 this morning as per procedures, and the amendment has been circulated already to the members of this Assembly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the amendment.

Ms Carlson: Yes, on the amendment. Mr. Speaker, this is an unacceptable amendment, completely unacceptable. We do not want the government to provide the information on all departments lumped together. We want to be able to examine department by department the questions that are coming before the Assembly this afternoon as motions for returns.

So for them to strike out "the Ministry of Health and Wellness" and substitute "government of Alberta," first of all I thought it was a sneaky way to get around taking a look at each of the departments, but really it's just blatant that they refuse to provide the information. So I don't agree with that first part, part (a). And part (b), striking out "broken down by company and total dollar amount for each" and substituting "and a listing of vendors providing these services" – well, the minister who just explained the amendment clearly told us that the listing of vendors is available in another document, so they're duplicating their own services here, which is what we hear repeatedly from this government that they don't want to do. It doesn't help Albertans to scrutinize the government activities if they don't see a dollar amount of those monies paid out to vendors.

This government continually, on a day-to-day basis, talks about the rising costs of health care, but we have little way to determine which parts of those costs are attributed to administration and which parts of those are attributed to direct delivery of services. Now, anyone who has watched the American system over the past decade knows that the greatest rise in cost for them and the greatest reason why their costs are higher than our costs is administration. That is exactly where vendors providing services come into it.

So we need to start to get to the root of the issue about why health care costs are increasing. This is one piece of that puzzle to start to give us those answers. This government should be accountable and should be quite prepared to tell us who's getting the money and how much they're getting.

4:00

As my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry stated, we all know that technology services really can be a black hole. We've seen that with other discussions we've had in this Assembly. We need to know that we're getting value for money. The only way we get to see that is by seeing how much money they're actually spending.

So I urge this government to defeat this amendment and to stop ducking the issue and just put their cards on the table and let people see what they're spending.

The Speaker: On the amendment.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Point of Order

Admissibility of Amendment

Mr. Mason: Point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I may. I'm looking at Beauchesne's on page 176, and it's section 579, which states that "an amendment setting forth a proposition dealing with a matter which is foreign to the proposition involved in the main motion is not relevant and cannot be moved."

It would be my submission that by lumping all government departments under this motion by way of this amendment, the government is attempting to introduce other matters which are not directly the subject of the motion which has been moved. Each department may in fact be treated differently by individual motions, and to try to lump them all together is simply an attempt to introduce matters that were completely outside the purview of the original motion which has been moved.

Therefore, I believe that it should be in fact out of order to introduce such an amendment since it is introducing matters that were not considered in the original motion.

Thank you.

The Speaker: The hon. Government House Leader on the point of order.

Mr. Hancock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, the proposed amendment is in order. It doesn't go outside of the purview of the motion at all. The purview of the motion is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has requested a motion for a return from this House returning to this House information with respect to technology services broken down by company, et cetera. The amendment essentially recognizes that at least some members of the House would like the same information on other government departments.

In fact, there are 15 government departments for which the identical information is requested. Those departments are reflected in motions for returns 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 61, 62, 70, 71, 72, 73, 103, 122, 123, and 146. If we wait a few more days, I assume the other departments of government for which the information hasn't been requested will be on the Order Paper.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of amending the question is so that all the information which is being requested of the House through a motion for a return can be dealt with. It's the same information with respect to each of those individual departments, and the purport of the amendment is to say that that information for all of government should be provided. That way we don't deal with 15 different questions on exactly the same topic differentiated only by department but we deal with the one question.

If the members opposite want the information provided in a certain way so that they can differentiate between departments with respect to how much is being spent in each department, I'm sure that that won't be too difficult to discern. I can't speak for the hon. member, but I think that type of information would be readily ascertainable when they get the information.

Mr. Speaker, it doesn't make sense to have the House deal with 15 different motions on the same topic separated only by different departments in each case when the amendment would provide quite consistently with the import of the motion in terms of getting information on information technology services by just saying: provide it for all of them.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the point of order raised by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Ms Carlson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I certainly agree with the point of order raised by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. As he pointed out and as the Government House Leader just confirmed, we did not ask for information on every department of government. In fact, barely more than half of them were requested.

It is impossible for us to do the analysis which we are asking for, which is to compare the administrative costs within a particular department with regard to technology as compared to other operating expenses, if we get all of that information lumped into one. According to this government's amendment we will never get that dollar value, so we would concur that it defeats the original intention of the motion.

The Speaker: Others? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on this point of order.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would have to concur with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who just raised that point. When I look at the point of order and we look at amendment (b), what they wish to insert here is: "a listing of vendors providing these services." There's absolutely no dollar amount indicated in this particular amendment. Therefore, we would not be receiving the information that we have requested, so I do support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on this particular point of order.

The Speaker: Okay, hon. members. I want us to be very, very clear on this. There's a point of order raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, which I am going to rule against. As far as I can see in terms of looking at this and following the process and our Standing Orders, we basically have an amendment brought forward to be reviewed by Parliamentary Counsel and then to be sent to other members prior to 11 o'clock this morning.

So I'm ruling the point of order out, but I want everybody to strike from their ears everything else that was added to this debate which has nothing to it. I have no idea of what intent is or anything else. I'm simply looking at a document that has words on it but nothing else.

All we're talking about now is the amendment. Further participation on the amendment? Proceed on the amendment.

Debate Continued

Mr. Bonner: Thank you. On the amendment, Mr. Speaker, striking out "Ministry of Health and Wellness" and substituting "government of Alberta." Again, we have a situation here where the information that we would receive would not be open and transparent. It would not be in the detail that we would wish where accountability in the ministry of health could be determined. Certainly there's broad overview for the government of Alberta. It's not the specific information that was requested in the original Motion for a Return 10.

As well, section (b), striking out "broken out by company and total dollar amount for each" and substituting "a listing of vendors providing these services": we are not as interested in the vendors providing these services as we are with the dollars that are being spent and how they are being distributed. So I certainly cannot support this amendment to Motion for a Return 10, and I urge my fellow members to vote against this amendment.

Thank you.

The Speaker: On the amendment.

Mr. Hancock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. Cognizant of your comments relative to the discussion on the point of order I feel it necessary to reiterate, then, on the debate itself that, first of all, the amendment proposes a listing of vendors providing these services. The hon. member in moving that indicated that how much is paid to each individual vendor is a question that is an amount that's published every year by Alberta Finance in general revenue fund details of grants, supplies, and services. It's not that difficult if you know who the vendor is to find out how much a vendor was paid in a given year. So that information is available. This amendment doesn't take away from the opposition or anyone else the ability to find out how much any particular vendor receives in any given year.

By doing this amendment in this fashion, the first and most important part is that there are, as I mentioned earlier, some 180 motions for a return. Mr. Speaker, under any analysis of that we won't deal with all of those motions for returns in this session.

If the hon. members really want the information that they are requesting, they ought to support this amendment because by supporting this amendment, the motion would then provide for the information to be provided with respect to all government departments, and that would delete the need to deal with motions for returns 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 61, 62, 70, 71, 72, 73, 103, 122, 123, and 146, which are identical motions but with respect to different departments. So by supporting this amendment, we encompass all government departments; the information is there with respect to all government departments.

I would urge people to support the amendment.

The Speaker: The amendment in front of me is the document that I have, and it's very clear that there are no numbers in it. There's a vote on an amendment.

[Motion on amendment carried]

The Speaker: Now we go back to finish the debate on the motion as amended. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness I recommend that we accept the motion as amended.

The Speaker: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry to close the debate.

Mr. Bonner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's still very unfortunate that we cannot support the amended Motion for a Return

10. This amendment certainly takes the heart out of the motion. It takes out the specificity of dealing with one department only, and as well it doesn't allow us to have a detailed look at the numbers that we have requested in the original motion for a return.

As well, we are informed day in and day out in this House during question period when we ask questions to try and get specific information that they would be better handled under Written Questions or Motions for Returns. To amend Motion for a Return 10 in this fashion certainly takes the thrust out of the question and the importance of informing all members of the House as to where the dollars are going in the most expensive department that we deal with in this government.

This amended motion certainly is a travesty when it comes to looking at openness and accountability. It seems that we have a double standard here, Mr. Speaker, that on one point we have minister after minister getting up in this House and saying that we have an open and transparent and accountable government, yet when we do put forward motions for returns in this particular fashion, then we have amendments which cloud the accounting.

Motion for a Return 10 in its original state was a very legitimate request. It was one that all Albertans would have been happy to see unless, of course, they were on the other side of the House. It certainly would have given them an opportunity to see where these very valuable tax dollars are going, and it also would give them an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to analyze comments and statements that are being made by the minister of health, by the Premier that costs for health care continue to escalate.

This original motion for a return would certainly have given Albertans the opportunity to look for themselves to determine if these costs are out of line or whether they're not out of line. It would also give them the information they require to support or not support the Premier's notion that we are pulling ourselves out of the Canada Health Act and going to go it on our own and say goodbye to the over a billion dollars, from my understanding, that the federal government provides towards our health care system here in Alberta.

So this definitely is an amended motion that I can't support. I would hope that all members of this House would reconsider what this amended motion is really doing; that is, not allowing Albertans to see the specific breakdown of where dollars in the largest department in this government are being spent.

Thank you.

Speaker’s Ruling
Amendment to Motion for a Return 10

The Speaker: Hon. members, before we call the next question, I have to make a comment here. We need some clarification with respect to what happened.
